MEDICAL CARE ACT

AMENDMENT TO LIMIT ANNUAL INCREASE IN PER CAPITA COST OF INSURED SERVICES UNDER MEDICAL CARE PLANS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lalonde that Bill C-68, an act to amend the Medical Care Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to apologize to the House and to members of the opposition who have pointed to my absence from the House this afternoon. I have been in and out, doing some telephoning in connection with the event that is keeping the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) from the House, that is, the federal-provincial conference of welfare ministers which begins tonight. I regret, and the minister very much regrets, that he cannot be here, but I can assure all hon. members that we look forward to this bill proceeding to committee, at which time all the points raised and the suggestions of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) can be gone into.

My observation is that there are so many accusations being made that it is hard to know where to begin. It has always been that way with medicare. It has provoked a lot of charges and criticisms which later turn out to be false. I should like to look at a couple of accusations associated with the history of medicare and show how wrong the opposition has been and how wrong the criticisms of the program have been. It was widely predicted, for example, that Canada would cease to be an attractive country for doctors to practice in once medicare was adopted, that the immigration of doctors from abroad would dry up. It was felt that our doctors would emigrate to other countries in droves, and that medical students would be less interested in going to medical school because the practice of medicine would be so unattractive. This was heard from critics all over the place when medicare was introduced.

What are the facts? The immigration of doctors from abroad has more than doubled. It increased from an average of 600 per year to about 1,400 per year several years after passage of the act. The emigration, or movement of Canadian doctors to other countries, particularly to the United States, has gone away down from previous levels. For the first time ever, the universities of Canada cannot accommodate all of the absolutely first-class students who wished to enroll in medical school. How wrong can critics be?

Another common prediction was that without patient financial participation at the time of or in direct relation to the medical service, doctors would simply be swamped, the public would go wild and the quality of medical care decrease. What happened? When medicare first came in there was some increase in demand for service in most parts of the country, largely because previously uninsured people and those who had inadequate insurance now had the same financial access to health care as the more affluent.

It is impossible to measure the extent to which this took place, because no comparable data exist for the pre-medicare period. There is no doubt that the magnitude and duration of this increased demand varied inversely with the level of meaningful, pre-existing insurance coverage and also with the previous availability of doctors, as might be expected. The people who needed medical attention began to use the system once we had it. More recent data indicates that utilization rates are levelling off and, in fact, in most provinces the increase in the doctor supply has occurred more rapidly than the increase in the demand of the public for their services. The result is that in many provinces the number of services being rendered per doctor, on average, is going down, not going up. Furthermore, the rate of increase in medical costs since medicare has been rather less than it was for physicians' services prior to medicare. On an annual per capita basis, the rate of increase has been running, on average, almost one-third less than it was in the several years leading up to medicare.

A few weeks ago we were pleased and honoured to have Senator Edward Kennedy visit Canada for a look at this country's medicare system. At every meeting he drew to the attention of the American people, through Canadian journalists, what our system had achieved; the right for all Canadians to have good health care. He pointed out something that amazed Canadians wherever he went; that the cost of medical health service in the United States, although it is provided by the private sector, whereas ours is provided by the public sector, is greater as a percentage of gross national product than ours. The cost in the United States, as a proportion of gross national product is higher, at 8.3 per cent, whereas in our own country our medical care service accounts for less than 7.5 per cent of gross national product. So, the allegation that making the program available without charge to people would push up demand and push up costs beyond all reason was wrong. That is another example of how wrong critics of a program can be.

Throughout the world there is a tendency for utilization to increase at a modest rate from year to year because of technology, population shifts from rural to urban regions, and so on. We are experiencing that phenomenon in Canada, too; we see, after the first year or two in each province for which we have data to date that the initial spurt, as the poor are brought into the system, definitely levels off and utilization comes down to a relatively predictable rate of increase.

Medical spokesmen had predicted that the financial involvement of the patient at the time of service must be a feature of the program to protect the doctor and the public purse. What happened? Only one provincial medical care insurance plan tried this, Saskatchewan, which imposed a utilization fee on visits to the physician's office from 1968 to 1971. Prior to 1968, Saskatchewan had the lowest rate of cost increase and utilization increase in Canada. After they brought in the utilization fee, they had a drop in utilization the first year, following which utilization began to increase again but at a higher rate than ever before. In other words, there was a rebound phenomenon and for several years they had one of the highest rates of increase in the country.

The medical care program began nearly seven years ago; complete figures are available for the first six of those years. In five of those six years, costs turned out to be lower than estimated, as did the total for the six years.

An hon. Member: You are not defending this bill, Bob.

Mr. Kaplan: This experience should dispel the nonsense about the impossibility of escalating costs of a universal public program. Finally, it was commonly predicted in certain quarters that government-sponsored medical care insurance would be much more expensive than if health insurance were left to the commercial carriers. Nothing could be further from the truth. In 1972, the private insurance companies in the United States collected $25.7 billion in premiums and paid out only $21 billion of this. In other words, the consumer paid more than 20 per cent above the amount required for benefit payments. On the other hand, in Canada, in 1973, 97.7 cents of every dollar appropriated to medical and hospital care was paid out in benefits. Our state-operated system has been an efficient system.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), when criticizing medicare in Canada, stated that the federal government had imposed universal health insurance on the provinces against their will. He admitted that he was not premier of Nova Scotia when hospital insurance came in; possibly that is why he failed to recall that hospital insurance was implemented in Canada under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Also, that is probably why he did not recall that the former premier of Ontario, the Hon. Leslie Frost, for one, insisted in 1955 that the subject of health insurance should be considered at the 1955 federal-provincial conference of first ministers. May I quote Mr. Frost's own words, spoken at a preliminary meeting when the agenda was being settled:

It is generally recognized that any health insurance plan of a broad nature should have both federal and provincial participation.

I also remind the Leader of the Opposition that the Medical Care Act was based on the recommendations of the royal commission on health services, the Hall Commission, which also had been established by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. This commission undertook the most detailed analysis ever undertaken of health services in Canada. When the Medical Care Act received third reading, only two members of parliament voted against the legislation. Both were defeated in the next election.

The hon. member stated that when he was provincial premier one of his concerns was that the federal government would pull out after the program had become established. I think that is a most remarkable interpretation of what the government is doing. How can one call this bill a pulling-out by the federal government from medicare? The federal government expects next year to contribute $124 million more toward the cost of provincial medical care plans than it will contribute this year. That represents a big increase in the size of this enormous program. In addition, we expect to be paying an additional $340 million or so toward the cost of provincial hospital plans which, incidentally, include the services of most of the radiologists and pathologists in this country. I cannot understand how members opposite can refer to such a tremendously increased contribution as being a cutback in any way, shape or form. I will come back to that in a moment.

We are accused of not having negotiated with provincial governments. In fact, negotiations regarding the revision of health insurance legislation and cost-sharing have been going on with the provinces more or less continuously since 1970. The provinces have long been aware that the federal government felt it was necessary to put some sort of cap on the open-endedness of our health programs. They were also aware before the 1975 budget that a commitment on their part to restrict higher cost services would be a condition of the federal government's sharing in any additional areas. These negotiations have not produced universal agreement on the continued increase in the medicare program, that is true; however, we must remember that it is very difficult to expect 11 governments to agree as to the specifics of any kind of program of restraint. To claim that we have not had any honest, open negotiation with the provinces is totally unfair.

I mentioned that controlling measures are needed, and controlling measures are being introduced. However, those tremendous increases that I referred to indicate that the proposed ceilings are not out of line with actual experience in recent years. Nor should there be any unfavourable effect on the quality of care provided or the level of coverage enjoyed by the people of Canada.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

Some fears have been expressed that the capping of federal contributions will have a relatively greater adverse effect on some provinces. This is not so during the period covered by the definitive ceilings. The capping applies to the national average per capita cost and not to the cost of individual provincial plans. The present characteristics of the Medical Care Act remain; contributions will continue to take into account the varying annual rates of population growth among provinces. The implicit equalization of the national average contribution will continue. The incentive to control costs in each province in order to increase relative federal contributions will remain. The resulting variable rate of federal share in provincial medical care costs will also remain.

Allow me to illustrate. This fiscal year, the national average per capita cost of medical care will be about $74, ranging from a low of about $50 in Newfoundland to a high of $84 in British Columbia. Of this, the federal government pays $37, or half of the national per capita cost. This means that Newfoundland recovers about 74 per cent of its costs from the federal contributions, while British Columbia recovers about 45 per cent of its cost. As a matter of interest, Nova Scotia currently gets about 45 per cent, New Brunswick 74 per cent, and Prince Edward Island 67 per cent. In 1976-77, the proposed ceiling will raise the per capita contributions by 13 per cent, from $37.50 to over $42. Next year, the range of provincial recoveries under medicare will again be from a high of around 74 per cent in two provinces to a low of about 44 per cent in the highest-cost province. Without ceilings, the cost-recovery range would be about 1 per cent higher on both ends.

Let me say again, the provinces that keep their costs below the national average, which includes the less affluent provinces, will continue to receive a larger proportional share of their costs than the provinces that are less careful about their costs. True, it all comes from the taxpayer, but the federal share comes from the whole country while the provincial share has to be raised locally.

One of the peculiar features of this debate has been the fact that opposition spokesmen have quoted many arguments which contradict each other. For example, while the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) and a number of other spokesmen for his party have pointed out that the costs of the medical care program have not been excessive, and indeed have declined in relation to gross national product, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) claims that the difficulties that led the government to introduce Bill C-68 were predicted by the medical profession and other opponents of the program some ten years ago.

I would challenge the hon. member for Oxford to show evidence that the opponents of universal medicare ever predicted that the costs of the program would be very much in line with estimates, that the doctor supply would increase at almost four times the rate of population growth following the introduction of medicare, or that there would be a need to restrict immigration of physicians from abroad in order to avoid an absolute oversupply despite a very marked expansion in the capacity of our own medical schools.

I must make it quite clear that the need for introducing Bill C-68 was not related to the cost experience of medicare in Canada since its introduction in 1968. Nowhere did the opponents of universal medicare predict the situation of stagflation which exists throughout the world today, even in countries which have not introduced universal health insurance programs. Bill C-68 was only one of a number of very tough federal measures taken in the June, 1975, budget in an effort to deal with a very dangerous economic situation which was by no means limited to the health field alone.

While the provincial governments generally reacted negatively, and some very strongly, to the news of the original Bill C-68, one province in particular seemed to be particularly dismayed. This was Ontario which claimed that it would lose some $200 million in federal sharing over the next few years because of the original Bill C-68. In the Ontario budget which was announced before the anti-inflation program, it was estimated that medicare costs would rise in the three fiscal years 1976-77 to 1978-79 by 22.6 per cent, 20.7 per cent and 18.6 per cent respectively. The same province, it must be recalled, had during 1974-75 granted a 50 per cent increase in hospital nurses' salaries and another substantial increase was due to come in 1976.

The Leader of the Opposition and many of his supporters have emphasized his view that the federal action as represented in Bill C-68 was arbitrary and unilateral as well as without justification. Perhaps he is unaware that the minister of health of the province of which he was formally premier has repeatedly indicated at federal-provincial meetings and in discussions with the minister that one of the greatest problems that Nova Scotia has in the health field is caused by the wage, salary and fee settlements arrived at in the province of Ontario which lead to demands by the health workers in Nova Scotia for comparable treatment.

I must point out to the hon. gentleman that the wage and salary settlements in Ontario were taken without consultation either with the so-called federal partner or with other provinces. They were taken without any regard as to the effect that these settlements would have upon the costs of other provinces and the difficulties which those other provinces might experience in matching them. I feel confident that if the hon. gentleman were still premier of the province of Nova Scotia, he would feel very grateful for any measure taken by the federal government which might give pause to provinces such as Ontario before they rushed into fee, salary and wage increases which would increase the pressure on other provincial governments to match.

I might say that I understand that the combination of Bill C-68 and the anti-inflation program has lowered substantially the expectations of the Ontario Medical Association in respect of a fee increase this year and should have some effect upon wage and salary increases in the hospital field in Ontario as well. The hon. member claims that the provinces do not heed any additional incentive to save costs, but I think he would probably agree that some provinces have more incentive to save costs than others, and can find themselves considerably embarrassed by the actions of their fellow provinces.

I want to pause at this time, having replied to the more substantial points raised in criticism of the bill, and I look forward to the bill proceeding from here, perhaps today or hopefully tomorrow, into committee for consideration in detail.

Mr. Johnston: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) would not wish to have his not particularly tidy speech clouded by so gross an error as to suggest that the two members who voted against the original medicare bill had been defeated. The former member for Red Deer, Robert Thompson, was re-elected subsequent to that vote and served four more years in this House, not being defeated until 1972 when he contested the riding of Surrey-White Rock, where the work he did in that campaign contributed substantially to the election of the present hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). I myself am here, rather living proof that the other member who voted against it has also subsequently been re-elected to this chamber. If that Statement was supposed to be any justification for the bill that is before us at the present time, I think it fails rather sadly.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to acknowledge that the hon. member is here and living among us, but the point I wanted to make was that the party suffered that adopted opposition to medicare as their political philosophy.

Mr. Yewchuk: We are not debating medicare in this bill.

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat something I said in my remarks on the budget speech in the debate on July 2, 1975, because I think it is relevant to our thoughts on this bill so far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned. It is also relevant not only to the bill but in the context of the policies already enunciated by the government in other bills that affect the Atlantic region, as well as policies proposed for the future. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan) tried to show how favourable this bill might be to the Atlantic region, but I want to put it in the total context of the government's policies as they affect the Atlantic region.

On that occasion of July 2, 1975, I mentioned that what I called, perhaps in too hyperbolic language, the other "economic crime" against the Atlantic region—though I still think there is some justification for such strong language—besides the relatively high increase in unemployment that the Atlantic provinces will get as a result of that budget planning for more national unemployment to fight the cost of living, there is farther down the road—I went on to say, as reported at page 7191 of Hansard for July 2, 1975:

> I refer, of course, to the proposed amendments to the Medical Care Act which came into force on July 1, 1968. We know that since then Ottawa has contributed half the national cost of medicare. It now intends to put a sliding ceiling on its contribution by limiting the federal increase, calculated on a per person basis, to 13 per cent next year, 10.5 per cent the following year, and 8.5 per cent in all subsequent years.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has now pulled in the reins a little bit so far as the figure of 8.5 per cent for all subsequent years is concerned, and has stopped at the ceiling of 13 per cent for this year and 10.5 per cent for 1977-78,

During the budget speech I also said that we were concerned about what the government intends to do with our national hospital care plan. I said:

Medical Care

Under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act of 1957, the government has also paid half the national cost of hospital care. The act requires that the federal government give five years' notice before renegotiating its agreements with the provinces. This government gave that notice during budget week. Why? Because it wants to do the same thing as with the Medical Care Act—place a ceiling on its commitment. As well, it announced it will reduce by 35 per cent its payments to the health resource fund.

The parliamentary leader of our party, in the debate on June 25, asked why these measures were being imposed upon the provinces unilaterally. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare tried today to imply they were not imposed unilaterally because there have been discussions about them with the provinces over the last few years. Although we realize this, and also realize that in a federal state it is very difficult to get a consensus on many policies, the fact is that a substantial number of provincial ministers stated publicly, not privately, that they were imposed by the government unilaterally upon the provinces. I think only one province dissented from that view, or not so much dissented as kept silent, and we can suspect that this was for political reasons.

As our leader pointed out at that time, it will be very difficult for the poorer provinces to cope, even though the parliamentary secretary pointed out today that some of the measures may not appear to be so bad for the Atlantic region. I remind him—and I underline this—that put in the context of other policies already enacted by the government, as well as proposed policies that affect the Atlantic region, as a total package it will have very severe ramifications for the Atlantic region. I will try to show that, despite what he said, there will be a substantial probability that either the quality of medical care in the Atlantic region is going to be cut or the level of services will have to be cut down.

Alternatively, if we try to meet the increased costs, other necessary services for the people of these provinces will be severely affected, at a time when we are subject to an anti-inflation program which, whether designed to do so or not, will have a severe impact on employment in the Atlantic region. Indeed, the statistics are already coming in. If the parliamentary secretary would care to look at them he will discover that already the anti-inflation policy of the government is doing what we predicted it would in light of historical experience, namely, falling more heavily upon the people of the Atlantic region.

The other day the Newfoundland Premier, I would not want to say caused a near riot because that would be going too far, had to withdraw proposed increases in the cost of electricity in the province because the people of that area were so up in arms about them. Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick announced certain cutbacks on television the other night. The finance minister for Nova Scotia, Mr. Nicholson, also announced cutbacks which, coupled with the government's anti-inflation program, will bring about a 2 to 3 per cent increase in the rate of unemployment in the Atlantic region, in my opinion, over the next two years. Again, we are the ones who are going to feel the brunt of these policies most severely. Regardless of what is said by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare about negotiations, these unilateral decisions are becoming a detriment within a federal state.

Among the things I am concerned about within the context of total policy, not only this policy which I will return to later, is the question of how this relates to the Atlantic region. I refer again to the anti-inflation policy. Time alone will show, and as mentioned it has begun to show already, not only that the anti-inflation policy will increase unemployment but will increase it most severely in the Atlantic region, and amongst all low income groups across the country. There is no possible way that these low income groups can even come close to anywhere near the minimum allowed under the anti-inflation bill. In regions like the Atlantic provinces they have no marketing power because they are, for the most part, unorganized. Only a small percentage of the Atlantic region as compared to the national average is organized. They have no marketing power when they live in a society which suffers from great unemployment.

The low income groups in unorganized areas must accept what the employers offer. For this reason they are going to fall far behind. For these reasons the people in the Atlantic region and in other low income areas of the country will suffer proportionately more from this anti-inflation policy, and there is no way out for them.

I criticized the last minister of finance and I criticize this minister and the government for emulating United States policy too closely and not looking closely enough at the economic policies of other western world countries such as West Germany, Austria, Sweden, and the Netherlands. Admittedly most western economies are in trouble, but the economies of those countries have kept far ahead of ours in the last five years, particularly with respect to their balance between the rate of unemployment and the rate of inflation. This government and the last minister of finance slavishly followed the dictates of the United States. We have not reached the unemployment rate which exists in the U.S. at the present time, but I predict that as a result of our present policies we will ensure a catching-up to theirs or close to it, this winter.

In addition to the anti-inflation program and the way it falls so much harder on the low-income groups, such as in the Atlantic region, I am concerned also about the effect of the present bill on the same low income group in the Atlantic region, with particular reference to the level of services and the quality of health care our governments will be in a position to offer.

I am also concerned about the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the regressive nature of the premium tax. It will also have an adverse effect on low income regions such as ours. We know that regressive taxes hit the lower income groups proportionately harder than they hit other groups. Again I appeal to some of the more progressive thinkers on the other side. There are not many in the cabinet. There may be a few but they keep themselves well hidden. I have said three or four times in the House of Commons and elsewhere that, if we are going to make this structural change, we must change the regressive tax structure of our country which hurts the working poor and low income groups so severely.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare is meeting today with provincial welfare ministers to see how they can rationalize the welfare system of the country in order to provide a decent guaranteed annual income to the low income and poverty levels in our economy. Here again, I repeat that if we are to effect a reasonable distribution of the wealth we must change our tax structure. While it is important to have a guaranteed annual income, unless we remove regressive taxes from our tax system we will never accomplish that fact of suitable redistribution. Those of you who will be here ten years from now will be facing the same difficulties we now face with respect to the lower income groups unless fundamental changes are made in our tax structure.

Some 20 per cent of the population is receiving about 4 per cent of the gross national product pie. This is the same bad situation that existed back in 1951, when that 20 per cent was receiving 4.4 per cent. I am sure there are people who are getting tired of hearing me and other members in this party repeat the same things over and over again. Those people suggest that we have forgotten about the changes which have been made in favour of the middle income groups. We have not forgotten those things, but we are concerned more about the low income groups.

Although I have little respect for the other place, I have a great deal of respect for some of the individuals who sit there. One of the more eminent ones, among a half a dozen or more, is Senator David Croll. He was appointed by one of the leaders of the party which sits opposite. He was head of the committee which studied poverty in Canada in 1971. Senator Croll said that unless we count down on regressive taxes such as property taxes, excise taxes, sales taxes, and other such taxes, these people will not change their relative position in our economy. He said this will be the case because our progressive income tax system has too many loopholes at the top and does not offset the regressivity of sales taxes and other forms of indirect taxes which fall so heavily on the poor.

Let me also refer to the proposed reduction in oil import subsidies, particularly as such a reduction would affect the Atlantic region. Someone will suggest I am jumping the gun because these reductions have not yet been announced. I have been told by people in Nova Scotia associated with the Liberal government, in relatively important positions, that they are running up against a stone wall in their opposition to this proposed reduction.

We are grateful for the import subsidies we have received along with all those east of the Ottawa Valley line. These import subsidies were designed to make up the difference between the cost of Canadian oil and the cost of imported oil on which we are so dependent. We are now told that by 1980 we will be faced with a fourfold increase in the cost of energy in the Atlantic region, because of the increase in the cost of foreign oil and the reduction in the subsidy. A province like Nova Scotia will be terribly crippled by such an increase unless something is done very quickly. Our industrial capacity in Nova Scotia in relation to that of other provinces in the Atlantic region is more substantial and such an increase in oil cost will have a relatively higher impact.

At the present time our area is faced with extremely high costs of electrical energy, and if the price of power oil is even to double in the next four years we will be in real trouble but the experts at a recent Atlantic Provinces Economic Council seminar projected a quadrupling of costs. This government can stop that.

Then again we have the reduction in the transportation subsidies that were imposed before Christmas. This will not help the Atlantic region in respect of markets in Central Canada at a time when we have high unemployment because of other government policies. This in fact will increase unemployment.

Finally, I wish to refer to the policy implicit in this legislation before us today. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Railton) in this debate on Friday said that in Canada our main unserviced areas so far as medicare is concerned are on the frontiers. On this matter of medicare—and I could include hospital care but I shall not—may I say I come from a frontier area of Canada. In the industrial area of Cape Breton where we find 19 per cent or 20 per cent of the people of Nova Scotia there are not sufficient specialists. In spite of what the parliamentary secretary has said, if our people are to obtain expert treatment they must be placed on a plane in Sydney and flown to Halifax because there are no facilities in our area.

The federal government has not gotten together with the provinces in order to help such areas where there is slow growth, much chronic unemployment, and substantial density of population. It is no good to ask why the people do not leave the area, and sometimes we hear they have done this for years and years. They have gone to Toronto, and before central Canada was developed they went to Boston. They leave every year. However, they cannot all leave. Something must be done not only in the way of providing jobs as I shall be arguing again tonight during the adjournment debate, but also in terms of these services they are not receiving. Therefore I want to remind hon. members that when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs talks about frontiers, there are frontiers other than those about which he speaks that are unservices so far as medical services are concerned.

If we talked about dental care I would point out that school nurses in my area tell me that the teeth of many of the children are almost as bad today as they were during the depression. I can tell you, having lived there during the depression, that many of us lost our second teeth between the ages of 12 and 13. That type of thing is occurring there because of the lack of facilities and dentists.

It was interesting to hear the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare talk about how the percentage of medicare costs in Canada was 7.5 per cent of the gross national product.

Mr. Kaplan: Less than 7 per cent.

Mr. Hogan: Yes. In fact it is 6.9 per cent and was 7.2 per cent the year before. One of the interesting things is to see how this member's remarks compare with the remarks of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs who, on Friday, said that it is quite irresponsible to let total medical care costs absorb more than 6 per cent or 7 per cent of the gross national product which they now absorb. Who gives him the right to say that? If the funds are being spent efficiently and is providing effective health care to the country, it may be the best expenditure of all; it may be far better than having increased spending for defence and some of the other nonsensical things such as consultants' fees and feasability studies in respect of Mirabel airport the costs of which are shocking to anyone who comes from the Atlantic region where people have to scrape and beg to obtain a few million dollars in order to keep certain programs going.

The parliamentary assistant to the minister of health spoke of the percentage of the gross national product spent in this way being 8.2 per cent in the United States. As I listened to him I said to myself that the hon. member was arguing against his own bill. I asked myself if it is the case that the Americans are spending 8.2 per cent, and Senator Kennedy comes up here to see how well we are doing when we have it down from 7.2 per cent to 6.9 per cent, why is there a necessity for introducing the ceiling?

Again I should like to refer to something the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs had to say. He said in this respect that one thing which worries doctors in Canada is the role of government in medicine. He went on to say:

> Our government has a tendency to point to the improving infant mortality and longevity tables as if it were due to medicare. However, these same improvements are present in the United States, where there is no universal medicare.

He does not agree with the assistant to the Minister of National Health and Welfare that things are done more efficiently through the public sector with regard to medicare. There is a series of articles now running in the New York Times from which he could learn if he read them.

I believe the United States ranks tenth or thirteenth in the world so far as infant mortality is concerned. Despite the well trained doctors and so on, they have a very inefficient way of delivering medical services. Relative to that point, of course, is the whole matter of the role of government today.

We know people are concerned about cutting down government expenditures today. It is the vogue now on the other side of the House. There is much scampering around to do this, because in respect of government expenditures they believe they must show themselves to be very responsible people. We have heard this again and again in the House, and we have read it in the newspapers. No one can argue against the control of government expenditures. But the main thing is not the level of government expenditures. Perhaps in the short run the rate of government expenditures has been a little too high, but the actual problem is in respect of the efficiency of government expenditures and whether there are built-in controls in order to protect the public purse.

One would think that by now the government which has been in power so long, especially in the post-war period, instead of waiting for the Auditor General in 1976 to come along and suggest types of controls to make expenditures more efficient and better suited to the needs of the Canadian people, would have done something about this. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Hogan: Mr. Speaker, before the supper adjournment I summarized the ways in which the legislation before us this evening goes back to the June budget, and I described it as seen through the eyes of a member of parliament from the Atlantic provinces. I suggested that although the provinces had been consulted, the ultimate decision was a unilateral one by the federal government. I tried to put this in the context not only of the bill before us but of the policies that have been enunciated by the government.

I suggested that this policy is detrimental to the development of the Atlantic region, and that it is not in the general interest of that area. This policy should be viewed not as a separate policy but in the context of other government policies and in combination with them.

I said that I think I will be proven correct when I say that the anti-inflation proposals of the government are affecting most the lower income groups, and since we in the Atlantic provinces have relatively more people on low incomes, the anti-inflation legislation will result in more unemployment and, what is just as bad, underemployment, which is never shown in official statistics. I went on to refer to the fact that if you take away the cost of living adjustment from the family allowance, as was done by the government before Christmas to meet some of the criticisms that were made regarding overspending in other fields, then it is the people in low income groups who will be hurt relatively more than people with high incomes. The same applies to unemployment insurance. I spoke about the legislation before us today in the context of the other policies I have mentioned, which are regressive and which hurt lower income groups proportionately more.

Everyone knows that if you are making $17,000 per year or $6,000, and if you are paying unemployment insurance premiums, you pay the same amount, and likewise with respect to the proposed reduction of oil import subsidies. The Atlantic region, especially Nova Scotia, is more vulnerable than any other province to the importation of oil, and the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council had a seminar recently in which it was projected that in just four years there will be a quadrupling of prices. I am told by prominent Liberals in Nova Scotia that the federal government is not going to increase the subsidy or hold it at the same level. Again proportionately, we in the Atlantic region will pay a higher cost, a higher penalty, for this national policy. We are used to doing this through tariff policies in the past, which excluded us from the potential Central Canadian market, prevented us from building a manufacturing base in our region, and made us more dependent on transfer payments, unemployment insurance, and all the other things than the rest of Canada.

I said that the reduction of transportation subsidies announced by the government before Christmas was another left hook, as it were, to the ribs or to the underbelly of the Atlantic region. I said that if all this were put into the context of the policy we have before us enunciated in this legislation today, all of these combined with this legislation, which was undertaken unilaterally, that means that the Atlantic provinces will be hurt even more. Despite what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare said, the quality and level of medical care in the Atlantic region will go down unless there is a change, and we cannot hope for one in this legislation.

I also tried to bring out the contrast between what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs said on Friday and what the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare said about this legislation. One was saying that we have a relatively low infant mortality rate, but he said that the same thing is happening in the United States without universal medical care, and that therefore the system under private enterprise in the United States is just as efficient as ours. As hon. members know, 8.3 per cent of the GNP in the United States goes to medical care, while here, as the parliamentary secretary admitted, the figure is only 6.9 per cent. That is a reduction from last year of 7.2 per cent. Before the recess I was asking why it is necessary to impose a ceiling in light of these facts. Talking about this comparison, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs said that the private system of the United States as against the public system in Canada, which was inaugurated by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) when he was head of the government in Saskatchewan—and we are glad to see that the federal government picked it up—is more efficient, or just as efficient as our Publicly controlled system.

I wish to make some comments about government expenditures generally, about the efficiency of the public sector as opposed to the private sector, and then to relate it to some of the shortcomings of medical health care in Canada and why I think the government is now anxious to put a ceiling on it. This is very topical, and there is much being written about and discussed with regard to the pros and cons of government expenditures, the level of government expenditures, and the rate of government expenditures. When I have been in the House hon. members opposite have never adequately defended their own federal government's expenditures in the light of the increase in provincial and municipal government expenditures in the 1970's. They have allowed themselves to be clobbered over certain things that were probably outstanding, some of which I mentioned myself. By and large they have never made an adequate defence of the government expenditures which have done so much good in the public sector and have done so much to improve the economy over the last 20 or 25 years.

With regard to medicare I should like to refer to a statement made recently comparing the public sector with the private sector. The statement was made by Professor Jack Weldon of McGill University, a very well respected economist in Canada. I apologize that I cannot put a date on the article, but I read it in the Toronto Star and shoved it into my pocket. Fortunately today I came across it, and it reads as follows:

The government is providing public goods which, if they passed through the market place, would be badly provided.

If the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) had read this article before he gave his speech before the Canadian Club he would have been much more sophisticated in his approach.

There is a whole range of pretensions in our style of living which is going to ensure the growth of government, quite apart from ideology.

Professor Weldon also said:

You can't run a police force through the market system efficiently, or an art gallery; and the roads can't all have tollgates.

The government does things best where one person's actions affect another man. The market is best in many things where it affects you but not the rest of society.

Some of the right wingers in the Tory Party running for leadership should be here to listen to some of this. Professor Weldon talks of education, and he should know because he is involved with education, just as I have been; we all know it is one of the most subsidized industries in Canada, but that's a healthy thing. Professor Weldon said:

Take education. In an educated society, the education of the individual confers benefits on the whole of society. That is why traditionally one of the first things a developing society does is to provide free education.

Take the field of health. It would be absurd to let the market look after vaccination. The rich people couldn't ensure their health just by having medical services for themselves, because the diseases of the poor wouldn't spare those with money. They have to get rid of the rats and fleas of the poor to spare themselves from bubonic plague.

The real problem isn't so much that government grows: on the contrary that is inevitable, and it's silly to call it bad. The real problem is that the apparatus for controlling the efficiency of government and its ability to make decisions is terribly lacking.

That is the point I was making just before the dinner recess.

We have a 1900-style government running a 1975-style public sector.

We are probably wasting 30 to 40 per cent of our medical resources because they didn't change the structure of the industry when they introduced medicare.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to quote Geoffrey Stevens of the Globe and Mail and to remind hon. members opposite of the following:

Yes, medical and hospital insurance are expensive. Yes, there are people who abuse unemployment insurance and health insurance. Yes, it is important to control costs as tightly as possible.

But is the government really controlling costs? Or is it merely shifting the burden—in the case of unemployment insurance, directly to premium-paying workers and their employers; in the case of health insurance, to the provinces. The provinces will do what they can to economize, but in the end they will have to pass the burden on to the public—in the form of inferior health care, higher premiums or deterrent fees.

That is going to happen in the Atlantic region under this legislation.

Liberal governments have given Canada a social welfare system to be proud of.

We on this side and our predecessors were the originators of that, and we are glad Liberal governments copied it. Now the government wants to stop it.

It's been money well spent (says Stevens). Now a Liberal government is trying to limit its liability. It's immoral.

To which I say, appropriately, Amen.

● (2020)

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill and it has become quite a controversial one as well because we are into the fourth day of debate. When I first read the bill I thought it showed a very peculiar priority to cut down on grants for medical care. I meet with many doctors and people from medical faculties and listen to their problems. It seems that the Liberal government is leading us into an era of cutbacks on medicare.

This afternoon the parliamentary secretary said there have been many accusations levelled against the bill but, Mr. Speaker, when it was first announced in the budget of June, 1975, that was done without any consultation with the provinces. Normally a bill of this type would only have two or three people speaking on it, but this bill obviously has aroused very great concern. I should like to suggest that it be withdrawn until there has been further consultation with the provinces.

The parliamentary secretary challenged the remarks of some hon. members who have already spoken, and offered us statistics. But at times he was really not on track, and subsequent speakers have corrected his statements. He suggested that in the past members had been defeated because they voted against the original act. I know that the hon. parliamentary secretary was once defeated, so I wonder which bill he voted against.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You will never know; he is not going to tell you.

Mr. McKenzie: We will find out. It is not very often that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) becomes involved in this type of debate, so when he does it is with good reason, and I shall cover that in a moment.

Another former provincial premier, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), also spoke against the bill, so I think more thought has been given to the subject by this side of the House than by hon. members opposite.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You cannot see very far, that is why.

Mr. McKenzie: I can see. I only need glasses to read with. I can see through you.

I think it is fair to say that most members of this House agree the government should take action to keep health care costs down to a satisfactory level. When the federal government is dealing with the provinces and discussing legal and binding federal-provincial agreements it should remember that changes in this agreement should be made through a process of negotiation with the provinces. Instead we have had what amounts to a unilateral and arbitrary withdrawal from the commitment made to the provinces—which was against the will of the provinces in the first place.

This was stated very well by the Leader of the Official Opposition in his speech to the House last Friday. He pointed out that the federal government was unilaterally and arbitrarily trying to alter the 50-50 cost-sharing formula set out in the present legislation. He made his point in strong language, and when the Leader of the Official Opposition uses that kind of language I suggest hon. members opposite had better sit up and listen. He is an honest man and does not make such statements without justification. He said that this conduct is shabby and treacherous, and that the rules of parliament really prevented him from saying what he thought of the minister and his colleagues.

He pointed out that when he was premier of Nova Scotia he was concerned that the federal government would get the program under way, ministers would go around the country pounding their chests, and then later pull out of the program. I have heard this sort of complaint in other provinces at the municipal level. It is one of the specialties of the Liberals to get municipalities and provinces into these programs and then withdraw. As the Leader of the Opposition said, that is precisely what happened.

When the federal government was negotiating health care with the provinces it insisted upon the 50-50 formula if it was going to participate. As the Leader of the opposition said, the federal government imposed this plan on the provinces. He stated that while he was not involved in the negotiation of the plan he knew it was dictated by the government of the day. He said, "Surely treachery is not too strong a word to use", adding that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) had not justified the federal spending limits and they were not related in any way to inflation costs and spending increases.

This ties in with the concern of universities and faculties of medicine involved in research. We are now receiving mail from them, so it looks as if medical research is not a priority of the government. We cannot ignore the letters and statements received from these professional people. I do not think they exaggerate, but state their case very well.

Because the budget of the Medical Research Council is already so small, because it has not kept pace with inflation in the cost of research for some years, and because it supports a very high percentage of all medical research in Canada, the budget freeze will cause inordinate damage to Canadian medicine. Medical research is a prerequisite to good medical teaching and is basic to medical practice and the delivery of health care. The development of young teacher-scientists and of clinicians with skill in investigative medicine must remain a high priority for a government interested in the future welfare of the Canadian people.

Here we have the provinces, doctors, and the faculties of medicine in different universities all in a quandry in regard to cutting off grants to research and different medical plans across the country. Canadian researchers are in general agreement that government spending must be controlled. They do not ask for special treatment, but only that the guidelines of limited increases be applied to extramural research as they are to all government efforts.

The Official Opposition has pointed to a number of areas where excessive government spending can be cut. There was an excellent article in the Financial Post two or three weeks ago which named a dozen government corporations that could be phased out. Another example is Information Canada. It took about four years for the government to waken up and realize that Information Canada was not a priority. Dropping it means a saving of $6 million which is just a drop in the bucket, but when it started out we said that expenditure was unnecessary.

I should like to emphasize the disastrous effects of the freeze in medical research funding. While I fully recognize the need for an aggressive and equitable federal policy of wage and price controls to combat inflation through economic restraints to be borne by all Canadians, I genuinely believe that the recent decision of the federal government to freeze the funding of medical research at the 1975-76 level would result in grave and lasting damage to the research establishments in our medical schools and hospitals. The main source of funding for health research in Canada, which is essential for the welfare of the nation, is the federal government through the Medical Research Council. This funding has amounted to less than $50 million for 1975-76.

In recent years the progressive slowdown in funding, well below the increasing cost of living index, has had a gradual eroding effect on medical research activities, resulting in the phasing out of some programs with a concomitant decrease in the number of clinical research trainees and of employment opportunities for highly qualified research technicians. The recent decision to freeze research budgets for 1976-77, that is, not to provide even a 10 per cent increase which is permissible within the anti-inflation guidelines, will result in further elimination of some programs which are vital to the maintenance of our health care standards, in mass lay-offs of specialized technicians who have been trained at great cost to the Canadian taxpayer, and in the migration of some of our best clinical investigators, particularly among the young ones, to the United States.

The parliamentary secretary mentioned the great influx of doctors to Canada; but, as the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. Hogan) said, in certain areas of Nova Scotia people cannot get a doctor. We face the same situation in Manitoba. I hear all the time of people being flown into Winnipeg from the north, because there are no doctors up north. I heard this was also the situation in Saskatchewan. There might be an influx of doctors to this country, but in some areas there are no doctors. Although the parliamentary secretary might be correct in saying that there has been an influx of doctors into this country, his statement covers only part of the picture and does not deal with the medical care problems encountered by many Canadians.

It must be emphasized that about 66 per cent of the budget allocated for medical research is used to generate technical jobs and to provide salaries to graduate students and post doctoral trainees. Without a continuous presence of these people there can be no research program. The research capability of a country in any given area of science—like that of any other human activity, including sports and the arts, necessitating the continuous nurturing of certain talents—is not developed overnight. It takes from 12 to 15 years to build up cadres of competent scientists and this can be achieved only in an appropriately developed milieu. By contrast, it takes very little to destroy productive groups of competent research workers and to dismantle the training centres for our future generations of scientists.

I have talked to research people who are very concerned. They train young people, begin a program, and then find that funds are cut off. Some of them are involved with intricate medical research, to do with the liver, heart, and other organs. They find the cutbacks most distressing as, in most cases, they are making progress. I have spoken to some of them. I say, "Are you watching your budget, and the expenditures of your program in general?" Many tell me that they do not need fancy buildings most governments, including provincial governments, are erecting; they could make do with temporary buildings and do not need the marble Taj Mahals governments like to build. The parliamentary secretary could bring their thinking to the attention of the minister.

The maintenance of our health care industry, which is based on a highly sophisticated technology and comprises all the medical and hospital services, amounts to $2,628 billion for 1975-76. In line with accepted practice for any other efficient industry based on continuous innovation, at least 5 per cent of this amount, $131 million, ought to be provided for research in the health care industry.

While we do not advocate the increase of the research budget from $50 million to this level under today's economic circumstances, we believe that sound business judgment requires that the federal government reconsider its decision to cut back its support of medical research. The infusion of an additional sum of the order of between $5 million and $10 million at this critical time is most essential to prevent some of the research programs from grinding virtually to a standstill in the coming years. I am sure that we could find between $5 million and $10 million in the Department of Public Works. It would mean one less skyscraper going up to house another government department.

I think medical research should be given a far higher priority than some of the programs undertaken by the federal Department of Public Works. An example which comes readily to mind is the Bank of Canada building not far from the House of Commons. The government erected just about the most expensive type of building it was possible to put up. It will cost a fortune to heat and a fortune to cool and, as far as I am concerned, represents a waste of money.

Both parliament and the Canadian public must continue to encourage the efforts of the dedicated and idealistic biomedical scientists and technicians in their attempts to unravel the intricate mechanisms responsible for some of the crippling diseases. Without this knowledge, there is no chance for developing better and more economical treatment. In biomedical research one is confronted with some of the most complex mysteries of nature, and no government committee can provide any lead to follow, much less the answers. For work of this nature we are totally dependent on the insight and imagination of our research workers and young trainees.

I suggest to the parliamentary secretary that we need to do much research in connection with certain operations. For example, it is possible to perform an operation with regard to lung cancer. The operation may be a great success but the patient dies of infection or pneumonia. In Winnipeg a limited amount of research has been done into this problem. Our research people are concerned about such problems. The operations involved are expensive. It takes a tremendous staff to care for an individual who has undergone lung surgery, but patients die of pneumonia or infection. Research in this type of field is of top priority, so far as I am concerned.

It is absolutely essential to the success of our biomedical research that we provide for our brightest young people the appropriate milieu to develop their talents; these are among the best dollars we can spend in terms of the value received. Clearly no investment in research can be expected to yield its full harvest by an on again and off again policy. This sort of policy worries medical people. They begin a program, secure staff, and then discover that funds are to be cut back or cut off. I cannot think of anything more frustrating to those involved in research. Such a policy puts the whole research establishment in a state of chaos and does not allow for long-term planning.

Neither parliament nor the Canadian public can expect to reap the promising harvest of medical research by discouraging potential research workers from entering a research career, when the continuance of research activities by existing medical scientists is being threatened.

Thus there is an urgent need to increase the funding of medical research in order to salvage some of the valuable and essential ongoing research activities. Without these additional funds, projects which are considered worth while by the expert consultants of the Medical Research Council will be terminated before their completion, and many research laboratories will close down entirely.

For the past several years biomedical research in Canada has been operating in an environment of continuous crisis. The crisis results from a level of financial support inadequate to meet rising costs and from the failure of government to realize that research units can remain productive only when investigators are assured of some degree of stable, continuous funding. How can the parliamentary secretary say anything to the contrary? I should like to hear some explanation from him if he thinks he can counter that statement.

The result of inadequate funding on research in Canada have been disastrous: a large percentage of researchers are without funds; most laboratories have been forced to reduce personnel and activity drastically; morale among investigators is being continuously depressed; few young people are choosing research as a career. Efficient research cannot be performed when the availability of an investigator's tools and assistants is being constantly reduced. Indeed most researchers are beginning to wonder whether or not they will have the resources, from one year to the next, to continue in the work for which they have been trained and to which they have dedicated their careers.

Most biomedical research in Canada is supported by the federal government. The current annual budget of the Medical Research Council is less than $50 million, approximately equivalent to the operating budgets of two large metropolitan hospitals. Annual support over the past several years has failed to keep pace with inflation. The result has been a progressive decline in the number of laboratories engaged in research and in the level of research activity by investigators who do have support. And yet the budget for the next fiscal year will be frozen at last year's level, thereby not even approaching the inflationary guidelines recently established by the government.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

From a purely practical aspect it should be pointed out that most of these grant funds are used to employ people; individuals who gain skills and competence at a high level. Adequate funding of research could, if nothing else, provide stable, long-term, and more rationally directed employment than do the greater resources available, for example, from certain federal make-work programs.

Medical research should be regarded in the same light as other highly creative fields essential to establishing national identity and fulfillment. Equally important is the fact that the calibre of biomedical research activity inevitably determines the quality of health care. Biomedical research has already contributed much to the betterment of society. From a practical cost-benefit analysis alone, biomedical research is a good investment. In addition to the alleviation of human misery, billions of dollars have been saved over the years in medical services and in earning power of afflicted individuals. Consider only a few of the past accomplishment in areas such as poliomyelitis, tuberculosis, measles and other childhood diseases, Rh disease, viral hepatitis, kidney transplantation, hemophilia, retrolental fibroplasia blindness, Parkinson's disease, the Pap smear, and the identification of many genetic defects.

Our present society has an obligation to provide continuity in the search for knowledge and the fight against disease, because future generations will inherit our failures as well as our achievements.

As I said earlier, I have met with these medical people. I am not just going to take a blanket statement from them that they are spending all their dollars wisely. I put this to them on a number of occasions. They assured me that they are watching their budget and spending their dollars wisely. I do not know if the parliamentary secretary has met with any of these little groups in the area of Toronto he represents. If not, I suggest that he meet with some of them, question them, and look at their facilities.

Mr. Kaplan: That has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. McKenzie: Medical research is a concern all across this country. We are receiving letters of complaint from the provinces and the universities. This is a package deal. We want to know where the priorities are. That is why I raise this tonight. It cannot be sloughed off because it is part of the bill.

I do not know whether the parliamentary secretary has had any of this type of illness in his family. I have. It is the sort of thing that alerts you. Possibly his family has been most fortunate. Maybe he has not been to hospitals and has not met with these people who are doing research. It does not sound like it.

When I first started, I did not want just to run here asking for more grants. I asked to meet with these people and to see their facilities. I questioned them in detail. I have been back a number of times. They presented a very good case to me. Apparently the parliamentary secretary has not spent any time with them. If so, I would like to hear what he thinks about the case they presented.

I have met with some representatives of the provinces and two former premiers of provinces who are speaking out against this bill. They are not doing that because they have nothing better to do. This is why I suggest that the bill be withdrawn and that the government take another look at it. We have some serious problems. I am getting a little wound up, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude.

The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) has a very important hospital in his constituency, St. Boniface Hospital. It has been there for over 100 years. I am sure they will be very disappointed to learn that he will be voting against increased grants and this sort of thing. I get letters from St. Boniface Hospital too.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) is, as usual, making broad statements that he cannot substantiate. He has not done what we asked him to do with regard to transport. Neither will he do so for the St. Boniface Hospital.

Mr. McKenzie: The hon. member's answer clarifies that point of order. It is a point of nothing.

The infusion of an additional sum of the order of $5 million to $10 million at this critical time is most essential to prevent some of the research programs of entire groups from grinding to a standstill.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will take note of my remarks this evening, give serious consideration to withdrawing this bill, and enter into further discussion with the provinces and universities. He has made a note of it.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, many members have already spoken. I certainly do not wish to be redundant and cover this bill several times. Most of us agree that through our two major national health schemes we experience comprehensive coverage which is available to everyone in Canada. I do not believe the coverage is an issue, but the cost certainly is.

Hospital costs accelerated 25 per cent in the last fiscal year, and according to estimates will accelerate another 20 per cent during the current fiscal year. I ask the House to consider 45 per cent in two years. In my opinion that is a very large increase, one that we cannot expect to have year by year and keep our budget in reasonable form.

You do not have to be a mathematical genius to comprehend that changes are required to keep these costs from swallowing up our entire federal budget. We must also consider our partners in the provincial form of government because they too cannot afford these accelerating costs.

The question is not whether a change is required, but what form that change will be. The government has proposed ceilings on the rate of growth of the federal per capita medicare contributions over the next few years. The minister has said he will make accommodations over the next two years. The increase for 1976-77 will be 13.5 per cent and, in 1977-78, 10.5 per cent. That will give a breathing period to come to some sort of agreement with the provinces in order that we can have a rational system.

I do not wish to belabour the arguments for or against the proposal of the minister; what I should like to contribute to the debate, if possible, are some positive recommendations, not on how to share health costs with the provinces but on how we may cut down cost not only for the federal government but for the provinces as well. I think we should zero in on preventive, new methods for getting Canadians to be health conscious at an early age.

I think it is a fair statement that more adult Canadians spend more time on their cars than on their health. I believe that the educational job we are doing in our society on the subject of health and its problems can only be described as second rate. I refer to teaching people about things like drugs, alcoholism, smoking, and the improper use of foods which we know are detrimental to our health.

Let me give the House an example. We all realize that grain is a very nutritious part of our diet. But what do we do with it, Mr. Speaker? We coat it with sugar, advertise it like mad, and end up with a product that is actually detrimental to the health mainly of our children.

The hon. member from Winnipeg who spoke just prior to me talked about scientific research and the need for more money for such research. May I suggest to the House that we have done the scientific research. We know, for example, that sugar in its refined form is detrimental to our health. We do not require any more research on that subject. What we need is to follow up the research we have already done. If we were to do so, I am sure the health of this nation would improve to a very considerable extent.

The key to any new approach to good health in Canada is education, and that education starts, of course, with our children. We have one of the most sophisticated communication networks in the world. Besides television, films, and graphics we have the means to implement a health conscious approach not only in our children but in the whole spectrum of Canadian society.

Yet what are we members of parliament doing in this regard? In this debate we are arguing about how we are going to share health costs. That is the same sort of argument that we had during the inflation debate. When we brought in the anti-inflation board legislation we realized it was not the cure-all but a stop-gap. As with the anti-inflation board and the guidelines, what we have to do during the next two or three years is to find some permanent solutions.

I do not feel that we have addressed the problem we are facing in Canada of mounting health costs. It is not a question of how these costs are to be distributed or whether we can carry on for the next 20 or 30 years with escalating costs; it is a question of what we are going to do as Canadians about the various food substances, for example, that contribute to bad health. We know that honey is a much better substitute for sugar. The trouble is, we do absolutely nothing with this information. I believe the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has a very important job to do in making sure that this information is brought to light in its most cogent form. In the same way the provincial governments and, if I may say so, the medical profession and the teachers also have an important role to play.

Being from the province of British Columbia I should now like to touch on a subject very dear to my heart, namely, damage done to our health by drugs such as heroin. We know that heroin is a very dangerous drug, yet all we hear are pious sermons about why we should not take such a drug, about its evils and ravages. What we should do is to get down to the nub of the matter and take people to see drug addicts in hospitals. Are children in their most formative years, children in junior high school or in high school when impressions that are made last a long time, taken to alcoholic or cancer wards to see the ravages of alcohol or smoking? I think that is not the case. Is this too sensitive a subject for these children? Must they only be shown film slides illustrating that drugs, smoking, and so on are bad for health, or should we not be actually bringing them into contact with those people who suffer from the ravages of smoking? I am sure this would be a much more intelligent way of addressing ourselves to the problem.

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, the solution to the problem is education, not only of our younger people, which is where basically we must put our emphasis, but of all segments of our society. I do not think members of parliament are keenly aware of the benefits of exercise and of what lack of exercise does to one's heart. Perhaps I can have the finger pointed at me because this is not one of my strong points. But my point is that we are deviating from the true course by not using the information that we have already obtained. I think it is fruitless to continue more and more scientific research; we must start to apply some of the things we have already learned. Until somebody shows me that we are ready to use the knowledge we already have, I despair at pouring more and more millions of dollars into research.

Mr. Benjamin: Hogwash.

Mr. Anderson: This seems to me to be pouring money down the drain with no return. The hon. member opposite says that is hogwash. I defy him to give an example of where we have used the information we already have in regard to some of the more important aspects of health that give us cause to despair in society. I do not think we are using one-tenth of that knowledge, and I defy the hon. member to contradict me.

Mr. Benjamin: We don't have the money for it, that is why.

Mr. Anderson: The hon. member says we do not have the money for it. I do not think we need any more money to tell us that we need a substitute for refined sugar. Obviously the hon. member is either not thinking, or perhaps being facetious and suggesting the government should spend more money.

The point I want to get across in this debate is that we should put the emphasis where the emphasis should be, not on squabbling between political parties as to where the money should be spent and how it should be shared, each year looking for more and more money to take out of taxpayers' pockets. What we should do to create a better, healthy climate for Canadians is to start educating our children, and work our way through society.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) a few moments ago called this debate squabbling between political parties.

Mr. Symes: How would he know?

[Mr. Anderson.]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I don't know how he would know, but let me say to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, through you, Mr. Speaker, that there is a greater issue at stake than mere squabbling. In this bill we are debating a fundamental reversal of a policy that was implemented with hope over a number of years by a government headed by a former prime minister, now dead, on the basis that there would be equal supply of medical care to the people of this country, regardless of what area of the country in which they lived.

● (2100)

Mr. Blais: How has that changed?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): If the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) will stay quiet for a minute, or go back to sleep, I will wake him up when I come to that point in my speech. That was a principle of the late Lester B. Pearson, that there would be some measure of equality of medical care across this country.

What we have now in this bill is an arbitrary, unilateral approach to health care in Canada. This is much more than just merely a change of burden in the cost-sharing of medical care across this country, although that is a part of it. What is happening as a result of this bill is a fundamental change in direction. What is happening is that the government unilaterally, without consultation, has decided to make a change in a program which in the first place was urged, cajoled, pushed, and kicked on to the provinces. The provinces, having accepted the program based hopefully on some principle of equity, are now faced with this government pulling the rug from under them and the provincial taxpayers. The government is shifting the burden to those provinces and off its own back, all in the name of restraint.

I begin to wonder sometimes where in the name of restraint the criteria are to be found. What rationale is behind this red-pencilling of projects? This is a very serious thing when it deals with established services of government and what, in the present philosophy of our times, was meant to protect people against those accidents of life over which they have no control. That is the essence of medical care.

Certainly, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni says, there ought to be some emphasis on preventive measures and there ought to be emphasis on scientific research, but how can the people of this country, and how can the provincial governments, believe the hon. member for Comox-Alberni when he stands behind and supports a Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who has acted in a way described by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as treacherous as far as the provinces are concerned?

The key is, of course, education in the long run, but we are not talking about just the long run. We are talking about provinces that have built their medical delivery systems on the basis of a program which was urged upon them by the federal government.

The minister says this bill is designed to give some incentive to the lowering of medical care costs. With all respect to the minister, that is pure sophistry. The provinces are striving in any event without this program to lower medical costs. If you go across this country from province to province, what will you see? You will see that the public is in an uproar because governments have decided to close hospitals. You will see the public in an uproar because governments have decided to limit what they have been led to accept in terms of over-all care.

Some provinces are considering pharmacare and have been discussing it, and some provinces are considering dental care and are considering that. They now say no because of the difficulties they face in financing these programs. They cannot go ahead with these things. Even existing facilities and services are being cut.

The provinces need no incentive to restrain costs. That is exactly what they have been doing. What happens as a result of this bill is pure and simply the placing of a ceiling on the federal government's contribution. This is not a ceiling on the cost of delivering medical care to Canadians, it is merely placing a ceiling on the federal government's contribution to it. That is the treachery the Leader of the Opposition spoke about last week.

What the government is doing is placing the great burden of cost on the backs of the sick, who are not voluntarily sick. The government is placing the burden on those people who are least able to afford it. What the government is doing by this unilateral change is placing a heavier and heavier burden on the provinces which are least able to maintain a standard of medical care without a generous federal contribution. Hon. members over there can shake their heads, but that is what the government is doing. I think it is the duty of members in this House, not just those on this side but on the other side as well, not merely to arise and shalom toward the Minister of National Health, but to think about this from the point of view of the costs which the government is shifting to the shoulders of the constituents they represent.

Hon. members opposite have the right to speak in this House, and the right to speak freely, and I hope they will enter this debate in that vein as it continues. I hope they will, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) suggests, ask the minister to reconsider the position he has taken in this bill, a position which has been universally condemned by every provincial minister of health in this country except one.

What is the alternative to this situation? There is only so much retrenchment that can occur from the point of view of the delivery of medical services. There is only so much that can be done in terms of cost saving. There can certainly be a lessening of the increase in fees and in the increase in salaries and wages. There are only so many hospitals, clinics, and other facilities which can be closed. There are only so many urgent problems which can be overlooked. Somewhere along the way something has to give.

An hon. member who spoke earlier asked some important questions. He asked what the provinces are supposed to do. Are they supposed to raise sales taxes, or are they supposed to increase land taxes? Is there to be a fee attached for services under this program? Is there to be a return to the iniquitous per capita tax?

In some way or another services in respect of medical care must be provided, at least to a certain level. In some way we have to continue research programs which have been started with so much hope and which will have so many benefits in the short and in the long run. Certainly the only alternative then to the provinces and, therefore, to the people of the country, is a cutback on medical services, a cutback in the provision of such services, a shifting of some very important plans in terms of improved medical services. What is going to be the result of this?

During the dinner recess I read the speech of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan). He mentioned certain myths that he and everyone thought would occur but which had not occurred, including a drying up of the source of doctors. These things did not occur as a result of the implementation of this plan, of that government of Lester B. Pearson. Of course these things did not occur. But they are not in issue. What is in issue is what will be the result of this bill in respect of medical care in Canada.

In his speech the parliamentary secretary spoke in glowing terms of the visit to Canada of that great humanitarian, Senator Edward Kennedy. The Senator said when he was here that we had one of the greatest health delivery systems in the world. He was right, and we did. It is a health care delivery system which has generally been accepted by Canadians as such, and accepted throughout the world as an example, but I wager with the parliamentary secretary that the government House leader and the Minister of National Health and Welfare did not disclose to Senator Edward Kennedy the existence of Bill C-68 on the order paper of the House of Commons. I would wager that, if they had, that great humanitarian would think much differently about the federal government's program which he extolled in such complimentary terms when he was here.

The fact of the matter is that the essence of the delivery system will be fundamentally affected by this bill. How can it be otherwise; how can the government say to the people of Canada and to the provinces of Canada—and particularly the provinces which are doing their best to cut back—that notwithstanding inflation which we cannot control, and notwithstanding the fact that it is realized that in certain areas the government is prepared to compensate for inflation, or is prepared in settlements one way or another to compensate the working people for inflation—how can it in the same breath and perhaps from the other side of its mouth say it is prepared to cut back on medical expenses? That is the inequity in this bill, plus the fact that the rug is pulled out from under the people of Canada.

That is the reason why we in the opposition must use the only weapon we have in this House, which is to expose the government again and again and again for what is is in terms of this kind of program, a government devoted to turning around and cutting down its whole thrust, a government which fails to consult at all and which goes in the face of its co-partners, namely, the provinces, in respect of their wishes, as has been set forth so ably by the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) and the Leader of the Opposition.

Treachery is a mild word for what this bill means. When the minister spoke in the debate he made a great play about his concessions. I would not trust the government, in view of this legislation, with any concessions for any period of time. If there is any piece of legislation with which we have dealt in the first session of the Thirtieth Parliament which has indicated the insensitivity of the government better than has this Bill C-68, then I am not sure whether or not I could find it. This is evidence of its insensitivity to a very important government service, a service which at one time was completely paid for either by those who could pay, or by doctors or by other professional people who gave their service. This has been held by us all to be so important that there should be national standards set for it and that it should be paid for out of the national revenue. Now the government has decided to shift the burden.

An hon. member at the beginning of this debating period at eight o'clock said that the government had decided to shift the burden so that it will fall heaviest on those who can least afford it in terms of curtailed service, and to the provinces and parts of Canada which can least afford it in terms of the share of the national wealth of the country.

The matters leading up to this bill are important not only from the point of view of the delivery of service but also are important to the whole question of our confederation. This government has damaged Confederation before, and I suppose it is too much to expect that it will not damage it again.

What do the apologists for this program say? The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal) on Friday afternoon made a speech in which, as recorded at page 10504 of Hansard for Friday, January 30, he had this to say:

> Madam Speaker, when we are talking of consultation, we must not restrict the scope of this term, that is refer to consultation merely in terms of expenditures.

He went on to say:

> In the context of the present legislation, the federal government is prepared to meet the costs without saying a word about how they are incurred. The provinces have full discretion to plan the extension of their services and the salary scales of health professionals

That is a cop-out. How can the provinces, in the face of inflation, possibly maintain that level of service heretofore enjoyed even by exercising their greatest power of restraint? The hon. member then said:

> It is quite obvious, Madam Speaker, that if all provinces unilaterally establish a fee schedule and decide to plan hospital facilities and to improve medical care—those are objectives shared by each and every province.

Then he implied by that statement and the words that followed that these provinces would go on willy-nilly so long as the federal government was there aiding, adding to the cost of the delivery of service. The history of that is not so. The history of the times in which we live is not so. The provincial governments, to the extent they can, have done their best within the limit of their assets, having regard to the services they render, to cut down on those difficulties.

The third point of the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont was this:

> It is essential, Madam Speaker, that the provinces put their own planning in order, not to prevent them from improving the services they administer to the patients in their own area, but to ensure that the improvement of services will be the same throughout Canada.

That is patent nonsense. There is only one government with a universal influence in this country and that is the federal government. When the federal government moves to an arbitrary ceiling, as it has in respect of this bill, then that arbitrary ceiling cuts more deeply in the have-not provinces and areas of Canada than in the have provinces and areas of Canada. That is a fact. Again, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont said:

> Bill C-68 does not seek to prevent provinces from upgrading their services or moving within a planning scale,

Of course it does not seek to do that. I underline the word "seek". However, that is the effect of it nonetheless. This is giving only lip service to what might be considered merely an apology from an apologist for the government.

We have a tremendous challenge in Canada. One of the limitations or challenges in terms of our country insofar as providing services for the citizens is concerned is perhaps the shortsightedness of the government in terms of the way it has planned or prioritized our society. We are now perhaps paying just a little bit for this.

At Christmas and New Year's the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in his famous epistles at the Chateau Laurier and on CTV in which he discussed this new society, ignoring the different problems of the whole society in which we live, cast the blame on the Canadian public, not thinking that perhaps there might be a modicum of blame to be cast upon his government and its predecessors in terms of the extravagant way in which they managed the affairs of this country. If we are at the point where it is legitimate for the government to renege on a solemn undertaking to the provincial governments with which it is in partnership in Confederation—and I do not believe that time has come at least in terms of medical care—then we have to take a good hard look at whether or not the government of the day is really fit to govern.

It is my respectful submission, Mr. Speaker, to you and members of this House on all sides, that in the area of general health care and hospital care the federal government should put forth specific proposals to the provinces in order to make the systems more cost effective. The provinces have a built-in incentive to achieve this. After all they are responsible for 50 per cent of the total cost of medical care and undoubtedly they would be receptive to such an overture. However, the government is prepared, to the extent of this bill and the ceiling imposed, to cut the provinces adrift rather than help provide a level of medical care.

If such an approach as I suggest were made by the government I think it should consider the standards of hospital admissions, the length of the bed occupancy in hospitals, the use of x-ray and laboratory equipment in clinics and hospitals, and should make an entire review of the comprehensiveness of medical and hospital care. For instance, should cosmetic surgery really be included under medical care?

There are a number of areas in which we might consider improving the delivery of health care service to Canadians. However, one of those is not what we see before us; one of those is not to breach the covenant of Confederation, because that in effect is what is happening with regard to this bill. I hope that those members on the government side who blindly support the government, which has acted in the treacherous way the Leader of the Opposition has described, will give some consideration to the effect of this bill ultimately on health care services in Canada.

The delivery of health care services, the matter of preventive medicine and prevention about which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni spoke, and the other things about which he spoke in terms of achieving all the long-term results in respect of improvements and so on, are matters most subject to the kind of restraints we should deal with in considering, for instance, the erection of the glass structure of the Bank of Canada. It is not just the same as cutting off or extending the period of time in which we would develop Rideau Centre in Ottawa or a new bridge across the Ottawa River. The effects of a cut-back in this kind of a program have far-reaching results perhaps even beyond the measure of us who consider that they are rather profound.

The program initiated by Lester B. Pearson was one designed to give the people of Canada the best medical care delivery system in the world. This government is now tinkering with it after the provinces of Canada, with some reluctance, agreed to go along with it and built their medical care delivery systems on that basis. That is the fundamental effect that this legislation may have upon the people of Canada.

The last member of the New Democratic Party who spoke talked about a shifting of the burden. That is precisely what they are doing. I hope the people of Canada will realize the nature of the act which this parliament is being asked to help perpetrate. I hope the people of Canada will understand why the Official Opposition intends to debate this thing as long as they can. This is why we intend to debate this bill, so that they will understand there are some people in this parliament who do not like this backroom tinkering that is going on with respect to a number of programs, one being this very important program of health delivery.

There may be some members of this House who have forgotten that the medical care program of this country was born out of a desire of Canadian parliamentarians—Liberal, Conservative, New Democratic Party, Social Credit, and perhaps independent—to ensure to all Canadians to the extent possible that they would be guarded against the vicissitudes of life over which they had no control, namely, the breakdown of health, accident and otherwise.

The tinkering that is being done with Bill C-68 in the treacherous manner described by the Leader of the Opposition is not in keeping with the principles of those people who brought this bill into being in the first place. Let us not forget that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Kaplan) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, when I spoke I did not defend the government's policy on medical research, and that is being misunderstood. Medical research has nothing to do with this bill. This is a health care bill, and medical research does not come under the total delivery program. Wrong interpretations are being put on the fact that no one on this side has spoken on medical research, when in reality it is out of order to speak on medical research in this debate, I submit.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in taking part in this debate I am happy to relate not only medical research but a lot of other things to the delivery of health care to Canadians. How you can separate it from any other part of medical services is beyond me. I think it is perfectly legitimate to raise it in this debate, and I do not know why the parliamentary secretary is complaining when in fact one of his colleagues raised it in his speech.

The test of any society in the eyes of our contemporaries, and certainly in the eyes of our children and grandchildren, is how well it does in treating its old, its sick, and those who are afflicted in a variety of ways. Surely that is the same kind of reasonable test of how decent, how civilized, how human any given society is at any time in history. This kind of legislation degrades and neglects the kind of test that all of us want to pass in how we treat our sick, our old, our afflicted, and how we deal with one another.

There is nobody in this House, Mr. Speaker, who can carry water for the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) when it comes to the issues of medical care and the delivery of health services. He gave some of the history behind this issue. I welcome the conversion of some hon. members to my right in the Progressive Conservative Party. They have become very progressive on this issue in the last few years, although I cannot say the same for some of their predecessors and a few who are left in their present caucus who spoke up with the Liberals back in the 1950's and 1960's against provision of this socialist health insurance program.

I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) lend their support to the kind of arguments that the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands has been making since the middle of the 1930's. He pointed out that it was the Liberal Party who proposed a national health program in 1919. The Liberals talk a good fight, Mr. Speaker. They are great as followers, not leaders. But while they talk a good fight, on every single social advance and change for this country, they were the ones to oppose those advances, and to denigrate them.

I am going to give a little list, chapter and verse tonight, for the benefit of my hon. friends opposite. From 1919 on, on every single occasion who was it who opposed, denigrated, talked against, and did everything to undermine every significant social advance? Every time social advance has been made, in the front line of opposition were Liberals and other so-called free enterprisers including, I regret to say, a few from the Progressive Conservative Party in those years.

An hon. Member: Not many.

Mr. Benjamin: The issue is how we are going to share this burden of the delivery of health care for ourselves and our fellow citizens. With regard to hospitalization I can remember 1945, 1946, 1947 and 1948, for four years running, Liberal after Liberal in the legislatures and in the Parliament of Canada, in the press and on public platforms saying that this was socialism, that it would ruin the poor hospital boards, and the doctors would leave.

The Liberals said it was a terrible thing and that we should only provide hospitalization for those on welfare and the poor. I remember my Dad driving a woman to hospital in 1937, and they would not admit her. It was a Liberal government and a Liberal hospital board. They would not admit her because her previous two babies had not been paid for. The Liberals said that people cannot be running in and taking hospitalization; that would destroy their incentive, and they fought hospitalization programs tooth and nail.

I will just discuss the list from the province of Saskatchewan for my hon. friends opposite. I wish the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale), the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) and the hon. member for Saskatoon-Humboldt (Mr. Lang) could be here because they could verify what I say. When the air ambulance program came in, who was it opposed it and said it would be too expensive, a burden on taxpayers and on the poor, private ambulance operator? Who was it opposed that from day one and right down the line? It was the Liberals every time.

Then those socialists in Saskatchewan decided there was something immoral—we have always felt that way—and there still is something immoral about somebody making a profit from the misfortunes of others. So we decided that somebody who was injured in an automobile accident, some innocent victim, should be covered under compulsory government insurance. Who opposed that from day one and right down the line? Liberals every time. They opposed the idea that there is something immoral about making a profit from the misfortunes of others and thought it moral to live like leeches off the backs of the sick, the injured, and the afflicted. They think there is something immoral about all of us paying together for this.

I remind all the Sunday Christians in this place that there is something in the book that they live by, something about the good Samaritan and about being our brother's keeper. That means we all pay, no matter what the price.

An hon. Member: I'm glad you are an authority.

Mr. Benjamin: I will tell the hon. gentleman that I do not pretend to be a Sunday religious type. I try to be a Christian—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member is off the track and that he get back on the rails.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, you will appreciate that the hon. member got me switched into the passing track, and I meant to stay on the main line.

When it comes to denticare or pharmacare, who opposes it all down the line? Who says it will be too costly and that the poor taxpayer cannot afford it? Every time it is the Liberals.

When it came to medicare—and that was the classic one—every Liberal in Saskatchewan and every Liberal I knew across Canada—I listened to their speeches, I read Hansard and I heard them on the radio—fought medicare tooth and nail.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the eloquent hon. member a question. I wonder if he remembers the answers Tommy Douglas, the former premier of Saskatchewan, used to give for the reasons he did not introduce medicare from 1944, when he was first elected, until 1961?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: No money.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I am glad my good friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) asked that question because he will need to rely on the history of Tommy Douglas and his fight with his own caucus and his own cabinet over not only medicare, but also capital punishment, and a few other items.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Benjamin: I would be glad to tell the hon. member or to refresh his memory, because I know he knows that Saskatchewan was among the poorest of provinces in Canada. In those 17 years the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) was the premier of Saskatchewan, he brought in hospitalization, air ambulance, drug plans for the old and medicare. Every one of them was brought in as and when we could pay for them by ourselves, with no help whatsoever from the government in Ottawa.

Mr. Nystrom: The Liberals again.

Mr. Benjamin: Every step of the way we were opposed by Liberals. Every step of the way the federal government refused to help.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Would the hon. member get back to the bill, Bill C-68.

Mr. Benjamin: This bill is nothing more than further proof of the Liberals coming out true to form. They are not worried about people and the delivery of health services; they are worried about bucks. Dollars always come first in their minds, ahead of people. Why is it that every single one of these social advances in the beginnings of their implementation was opposed by Liberals right down the line? This happened not only for Saskatchewan, but for province after province in Canada and in this Chamber year in and year out from 1919 on.

Why is it that every time this so-called free enterprise system or capitalist system gets into some trouble the first people they try to victimize in the course of getting out of that trouble—in an effort to save the system or to try to shore it up in order to help the rich, the powerful, and the privileged—are the old, the poor, the unemployed, and the sick?

Going back through the political history of this country, invariably whenever a government of the Liberal stripe decided to fight inflation, the programs it attacked were the ones which did the most for and were most meaningful to ordinary people and the overwhelming majority of the population. We have had the attack on the unemployed through the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. Now there is an attack on the delivery of health services, including medical research which is necessary in order to improve the health services you deliver. That is what the Liberals pick to attack.

This morning I was reading in what you can hardly call a left wing magazine, namely, Time magazine, on the plane coming in from Regina all about stumbling Gerald Ford whose new budget taxes people who are getting food stamps and people who are getting medicare. I arrived back in the House of Commons at three o'clock this afternoon to find the bumbling Liberals like stumbling Gerald Ford, attacking the sick and the afflicted. They put a price tag on health services. I believe, and the NDP believes, that good health and accessibility to good health services is a fundamental right, not a privilege.

Mr. Kaplan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Benjamin: Go ahead.

Mr. Kaplan: In criticizing the government for setting a ceiling which, he says, acts oppressively on the sick, is he aware that his own province of Saskatchewan has wisely set a ceiling on the increase of medicare for the coming year which is even lower than the ceiling permitted by the federal government?

Mr. Benjamin: Of course I am aware of that ceiling, but the hon. member might like to be reminded of the fact that the ceiling was applied to doctors, not patients. The hon. member should keep in mind also that that ceiling does not apply to health treatment under all programs in Saskatchewan.

Also may I remind him, the $95,000 member of parliament, that it is people of his ilk who decided to meddle with medical care in fighting inflation. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman where his priorities are, and where his party's priorities are. Why do they not place a higher priority on the well-being of Canadians in terms of their health or their employment? Why do they not place a greater priority on that than they do for the rich, the privileged and the powerful, those who can afford to pay a fair share of the cost of delivering health services or providing for the afflicted, the unemployed, and the sick?

It is nothing more than a last gasp attack by the Liberals. There is nothing new about it. It is an attack by the Liberals in trying to save their own necks, save their own misbegotten, outmoded system. This government is so concerned about inflation and about paying the bill for the delivery of health services to Canadians, no matter how or where they are, it wants to hold back and cut down on the sharing of the cost of helping one and another. It wants to cut back and hold down on the whole principle of medicare and health services. That is where Liberals want to cut down, that is where they want to set ceilings. To me it is sinful and immoral. They have their priorities backward.

Mr. Nystrom: Sinners, repent.

Mr. Benjamin: Any government which in times of depression and inflation would pick such social programs as the delivery of health services to cut down must be immoral, and must have its priorities backward.

I bet that all members of the House in all parties would support an item of legislation to amend our tax laws so that we could make sure we not only pay the present costs of health care we have but so that the Government of Canada, representing all the people, could share with the provinces additional programs which they presently carry by themselves. I would be quite happy to vote in favour of a tax bill which would add $100, $200, or $300 more to my income tax to help pay for the cost of the present health services and to help pay for the additional services that should be delivered by a national government. That is what a government that is moral and concerned about its people and concerned about a decent and civilized society would do. It would do something about the tax laws.

Perhaps the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) has not been getting support from the cabinet, the Treasury Board, and the Liberal caucus. Perhaps he has been told that he has to hold down the budget for health services. If that is the problem, may I suggest another way? I would be quite prepared to support a bill which taxes me some more, but let me offer the minister another small suggestion.

In today's terms 7 per cent is a more than reasonable, in fact a low rate of interest. If the minister needs, say, another $500 million for 1975-76 or 1976-77, how about charging a modest, low, 7 per cent interest rate on the $7 billion worth of deferred corporation taxes which appear in the books of the corporations and the books of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Cullen)? That could be done instead of allowing the corporations an interest free loan of $7 billion which will never be paid, and we all know it. We could charge them a 7 per cent, or a 7.5 per cent interest which would give the minister and the federal government another $500 million which the government could share with provinces such as Saskatchewan on programs that they are carrying themselves, programs such as pharmacare, hearing aids, eye glasses and drugs.

An hon. Member: Why only Saskatchewan?

Mr. Benjamin: Other provinces are doing the same thing. Name me a Liberal government anywhere in Canada doing this. There are none.

If we did this, we would be advancing not retreating. Surely people's illnesses, people's afflictions, people's right to access to the largest amount of health services should not be cut back by the government in times of inflation and restraint. Surely even in times of inflation that is one area which we want to expand. That is a time when we should expand the delivery of health services to those who are least able to pay and, because of inflated dollars, are becoming less able to pay. A time of inflation is not the time when the government should hold back or cut back; it is especially a time when health services should be provided for the unemployed, the sick, the lame, and the halt.

An hon. Member: And the NDP.

Mr. Benjamin: These are the people who are called upon to show restraint, take less, tighten their belts. The same government, in its worry about the spiralling costs of the health services, can say to the corporations they will get more write offs. In fact, in the second to the last budget another $500 million was allowed the corporations in depreciation and depletion allowances and tax write offs.

Where are the government's priorities? Right where they are where the Liberal priorities have been since 1919. They only talk in favour of these health plans. But now that many of them have been in effect for years, there is not a single Liberal who would dare try to do away with these programs. Of course they have tried to do all they can to undermine these programs, to shift the burden of the cost of illness from those who can afford to pay to those who are sick. Despite the terms of Confederation, the federal Liberal government has tried to do this without indulging in a sensible amount of consultation and negotiation with the provinces which have been leading the way.

The federal government is always lagging behind; it only comes in after one or more provinces have led the way and dragged a Liberal government screaming and kicking into the twentieth century. This bill is typical; it is the sort of bill introduced by Liberals who want to turn back every single social advance we have made since 1919. If hon. members opposite mean what they say they will at their caucus meeting on Wednesday morning in no uncertain terms tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare to withdraw this stupid bill. Let us assume for a moment that I am wrong and that Liberals are just as moral, or more so, as I am or anybody else in opposition.

Mr. Nystrom: Never.

Mr. Benjamin: If that is the case, they will arrange next Wednesday morning at the caucus meeting of the Liberal party for this bill never to be brought in again, either during the life of this parliament or any subsequent parliament.

In this area we should expand the operations of the Government of Canada, not respond to those thoroughly nineteenth century bogey men various government spokesmen have tried to create by referring to the spiralling costs of health services. If they are right, if health costs are spiralling, that is all the more reason to expand the participation of the federal government in our national health services. Need we remind ourselves that by implementing hospital care, medicare, pharma care or what have you, we are acting on principles of Christian morality and putting into every day practice what the man from Nazareth long ago told people to do? We are putting these precepts into practice in everyday life, through our government.

My colleague from Cape Breton Island spoke masterfully on the economics of this program and I have no hesitation in lending my support to what he said. The moral law, the Christianity of medicare, if you like, says that health services should be available to all citizens of this country, no matter what their standing is in society. It is incredible that even a Liberal government would have the nerve to bring in this bill, considering all the years of struggle we underwent to obtain national health plans of various kinds. That shows how true is the saying that battles won do not necessarily stay won.

There are still many reactionary dinosaurs around who support various governments of free enterprise stripe. Every now and then they come out from under their rocks or hiding places and do their best to undermine or set back programs like hospitalization and medical care. They do this, not because people are getting health services and not because people are abusing the services. No. Even they do not have the nerve to make such accusations any more. They do it because they say the program is costing too many dollars. If that were true why would they want to shift that burden back to the provinces and, hence, to the people who are sick? Why would they want to do it? Why would they not want to increase the number of dollars which the Government of Canada contributes to health delivery services?

If they are correct, if the costs of delivering health services are spiralling upward, if there is any legitimacy to their arguments, it seems to me, in all logic, that they should say, "We will increase our contribution; we will share with the provinces on a 50-50 basis the cost of new programs they are carrying by themselves." I know that the Saskatchewan minister of health would welcome such a statement. He would welcome the federal government's sharing 50 per cent of the cost of the hearing aid program, the pharmacare program, and the dental care program for children. We are raising the age each year, but we are paying for it ourselves. If the federal government were to pay 50 per cent of our costs, we could embark on other programs; but there is no leadership from this government.

For instance, we want to embark on home care nursing in a massive way. We want to embark on preventive medicine programs for people of all ages. These programs would cover people from birth to death and would be massive. No one can deny that they will be costly; but it would be nice if, for a change, the national government showed some leadership and said, "We will share 50 per cent of the burden with you." It would be nice if it said that the people of Canada will bear the cost of those programs on the basis of ability to pay so that those who can afford to pay most will pay most.

It does not matter whether the government raises the money by way of income tax, corporate tax, sales tax or any other method. But to attempt to weasel out of a commitment, out of an agreement made with the provinces, is unforgivable. We are not going to stand for it; neither are the people of this country.

We will oppose this bill right down to the line. If hon. members are worried about their Easter recess or summer holidays, they are worried for a good reason. Keep worrying. This bill must be withdrawn. I appeal to the good sense, if any, on the government side, and to the morality, if any, of members on the government side. I ask them to stand on their hind legs, if not in this Chamber then in their caucus demand that this bill be withdrawn and not proceeded with and demand that the government, which they support, bring in a program to expand the delivery of health services to citizens of this country in place of the bill which would contract such services. It is the least they can do. Do not fight inflation on the backs of the sick and the afflicted. If this legislation is one of the government's priorities, it is not going to succeed with it. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder, in light of the rapid progress being made with the bill being debated, whether someone on the government side can say what is to be the business tomorrow and if we are to continue debating this bill tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We were told otherwise.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, it is my information that, tomorrow, we are to continue with Bill C-68.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This afternoon at three o'clock the government House leader said definitely that we would not go on with Bill C-68 tomorrow but consider either Bill C-58 or Bill C-81, or he would see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, further to the point of order, my information is that we are to deal with Bill C-68 tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You can't trust those Liberals.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—STATUS OF MITCHELL BRONFMAN—POSSIBILITY WRONG INFORMATION SENT TO UNITED STATES OFFICERS CONCERNING MR. BRONFMAN

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, the matter of the status of Mitchell Bronfman has interested me for many months. The Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) knows that Mr. Bronfman has been the subject of more than casual concern to the RCMP. I am sure he knows, also, that Mr. Bronfman has been a witness in judicial proceedings involving the investigation of organized crime, and has been very co-operative.

● (2200)

I was very interested to see the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) say unequivocally in this House on January 28, and I quote in part from his answer:

—to my knowledge Mr. Bronfman has done nothing illegal.

Now that we have established, apparently conclusively, that Mr. Bronfman has done nothing illegal, to the minister's knowledge, I think it must logically follow that any person or persons who have suffered adverse effects because of association or acquaintanceship with Mr. Bronfman must have done nothing wrong either by virtue of knowing him, having dealings with him, or any other of this type of association. This aspect of the Bronfman matter is one which demands more scrutiny.

In connection with Mr. Bronfman and the way that he was being investigated, I want to place on record another excerpt from the statement of Chief Superintendent J. P. Drapeau, officer in charge, criminal investigation branch, "C" Division, Montreal, a portion of which I have already given to the minister. The statement is in reference to the activities of certain members of the force in relation to Mr. Bronfman. Chief Superintendent Drapeau said in part:

At my meeting with Inspectors Bélanger and Rodrigue, I reviewed the information on file regarding Bronfman and told Inspector Bélanger there was not very much considering all the verbal information that had been passed on to me by either him or CILO-East and that we should get to work on this immediately with a view to documenting the information and to ensure we had factual information and not just rumours. I also instructed Inspector Bélanger that we should make effort through our surveillance unit and our technical services section to develop information against Bronfman and possibly with regard to his alleged continuing association with S/Sgt. McCleery and Sgt. Brunet.

That is all of the statement I will put on the record at this time. What I want to know, and what I will continue to press the minister concerning is the basis on which certain RCMP investigated, and legal officers carried out their investigations, and how they developed information, the logic of their deductions and the inferences which they drew from events, events which in themselves might be interpreted different ways.

I am not an advocate for Mr. Bronfman, but I am very interested in the background and what has gone on. The RCMP is a great police force, but all of its members are not infallible. From time to time one hears of such cases as the MacInnis matter, the Nova Scotia doctor who is becoming a bit of a cause célèbre because of the enthusiasm which certain officers of the RCMP seem to have for this matter.

The Marin commission, a very worthwhile initiative by the minister, should soon be reporting. The reason I mention these two matters, Dr. MacInnis and the Marin commission, is to illustrate that it is time that more effort was made to open certain investigative practices and internal procedures by the RCMP to the view of parliament and the public where the national interest will not be hurt, and at the same time to make an effort to ensure that members to this force are treated more fairly in so far as RCMP internal administration and discipline are concerned.

Arbitrary treatment by the force of its own members should not be tolerated. Discipline is one thing, but mindless and slavish adherence to dictatorial or coercive regulations, which may not be practical in this day and age, is not in keeping with present day conditions of police or public affairs.

I feel the Solicitor General is concerned about conditions in the force and that he wants to be fair to all concerned. Therefore I hope he will soon be bringing in changes to the RCMP Act and will be reporting to this House on the Marin commission, and will be prepared to answer fully questions I want to ask him about those members of the RCMP who have been associated with persons like Mr. Bronfman and, based on associations such as this, have had their careers affected when perhaps this should not have been done and was not justified. I do not know the full story at this time, but I want to learn more about some of the practices that presently go on in our national police force. I am sure that many members of this House, and the minister, do as well.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has from time to time been described in this House as a most responsible member, yet at this time he is saying that he believes certain further things should be done with respect to what he alleges is a wrong regarding Mr. Mitchell Bronfman. At least, that is what he leaves by way of innuendo. He does not at any time say that Mr. Mitchell Bronfman has been accused of or is guilty of any offence, or indeed has suffered any harassment at the hands of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I note, however, that he does indicate that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police office is an honourable force, one that has been a credit to this country, as has every member in his individual capacity. I think that should be underlined, not the innuendo in the hon. member's other statements and remarks.

On January 28 the hon. member for Central Nova asked the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) if Mr. Mitchell Bronfman had violated any federal law, and whether the Solicitor General was acquainted with the alleged circumstances under which Mr. Bronfman was persuaded not to institute legal proceedings against certain RCMP personnel. That is the type of innuendo I refer to, Mr. Speaker. There is no indication whatsoever that Mr. Bronfman was ever persuaded not to institute legal proceedings, and if he had any cause of action, I presume he would have had the intelligence to do so.

The Solicitor General has been informed by the RCMP that Mr. Bronfman has, to the best of their knowledge, not committed any criminal act. However, it should be pointed out that this type of information is generally not disclosed in the House. This type of information is usually disclosed before the courts, where an individual is accused, charged, the evidence is adduced, and the accused given every opportunity for full answer and defence.

With respect to the earlier matter of whether Mr. Bronfman was persuaded to drop legal proceedings for defamation—that is, libel—against certain RCMP personnel, the Solicitor General has received no information on this. It might be added that the decision to proceed or not to proceed with an action for defamation or libel, a very serious civil matter, is a matter that would rest entirely with Mr. Bronfman and his counsel. I suggest that the hon. member is well aware of this, and it should not lie in his mouth to make such innuendoes with respect to the Solicitor General and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in this House unless he is prepared to sustain these kinds of innuendoes with facts, and to make the facts known to the House.

MANPOWER—MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to hear on Thursday last the minister of manpower inform the House, in answer to my question on what projects or financial involvement may be forthcoming from the federal government to help alleviate the serious unemployment crisis in the Cape Breton area, that he intended to bring to bear "the whole range of manpower programs". He said that "additional job creation, funding and training has already been discussed and that meetings were taking place in Ottawa with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and his officials to develop plans and to discuss further with the provincial authorities on this matter".

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. McIsaac), in answering my supplementary, said that his minister and departmental officials are working with the province of Nova Scotia to re-examine some of the ongoing agreements there to try to alleviate the problem. He suggested that by the time of the next meeting on February 9 they will have some concrete suggestions to put forward.

A brief profile of the problem is shown in the statistics. Out of a total labour force for industrial Cape Breton of 44,000, there were registered at the Canada Manpower offices at the end of December, 1975, 11,461 people, as compared to 9,810 in November, 1974. The unemployment insurance claimants increased from 8,000 in December of 1974 to 9,000 in December of 1975.

It was because of the large lay-off that was pending at the Nova Scotia government-owned Sydney Steel Corporation, with its attendant employment effects on the service sector of the economy, plus the fact that we were aware that most of the lay-offs in the Sydney steel plant were going to be of a long term nature rather than one of three or four months' duration, that we called for an emergency meeting. We had expected that the lay-offs at the Sydney plant would have been very serious, but we were surprised to find out that the total labour force there would be reduced to 2,882 by the end of February, and would likely go to 2,400 sometime following that. This is the lowest level of employment at that plant in my memory for the post-war period.

When you consider that the average number of employees working at the plant was 4,095 in 1974 and 3,623 in 1975 and again, to repeat, when you consider the employment multiplier effects of these job losses on the other sectors of a narrowly based area economy, then one can easily see that unless short and medium term jobs are put into the area by the government then the unemployment insurance claimants this winter and spring could be projected to be about 11,000.

Our hope for the long term is the opening of two coal mines with a coal fired generating plant that has been tentatively agreed upon by the Nova Scotia Power Corporation and the officials of the Cape Breton Development Corporation. Crucial to the whole economy, and indeed to the coal sector, is the whole question of whether we are going to succed through a consortium of private corporations and government agencies in placing a new fully integrated steel mill in the area that would come on stream in the middle of the 1980's with a minimum production of 3 million tons of basic and semi-finished steel. Besides that we have the possibilities of some development arising out of attempts to develop some resource based industries.

The attempt in the past through federal and provincial incentives to attract private industries in that area, especially during the first four years of the existing Cape Breton Development Corporation, was a miserable failure. It is my own opinion that as long as we do not have a fully employed economy operating for at least five years nationally, there is little hope for attracting any private profit industry from outside the area. This, of course, would change if we had a stabilized coal industry and a competitive international steel plant.

One of the things that government has to do in the long run at the federal level is to change its policies of decentralizing government departments and "footloose" institutions of the public sector. In recent years there have been some attempts by the federal government to decentralize other than in the defence sector. I am referring especially to the decentralization of certain DREE activities and to the recent attempts of the Department of Revenue to decentralize data processing facilities in the different regions of Canada. I realize some of the difficulties that are involved. But surely if the attempt to close regional disparity gaps in employment and income is to be taken seriously then the time has come to stop decentralizing from Ottawa only into the metropolitan areas of the country.

Most of the high unemployment slow growth areas that have within their radius 100,000 or more people should receive as government policy first call on these types of jobs as they develop. My reasoning is that the slow growth areas economic base is usually one in which the labor force is engaged primarily in producing for internationally competitive markets, as well as often having a seasonally structured employment base. You will never truly, in my opinion, improve the position of these areas by giving a carrot to private entrepreneurs to go in there; past experience suggests that if you try this route it often leads not only to a misuse of public money but to the lowering or destruction of the morale of the people in these areas, whose hopes get built too high.

During his speech to the Canadian Club the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), after reiterating the obvious, had this to say:

"I would ask private industry whether it is prepared to act voluntarily to distribute economic opportunities more equitably across the nation, through decisions on plant locations"

I think this is kind of naivety on his part, but in any case I would think that it would be much more important to the slow growth and chronic unemployment areas such as I represent to have a policy of decentralizing non-competitive public industries into these areas. Other such areas would include the Gaspé, Northern New Brunswick, the West Coast of Newfoundland, and Northern Ontario.

The metropolitan areas, even in the Atlantic region, are traditionally in the 1970's full employment areas so it makes little sense to me to push them over full employment and let the other areas depend so heavily on unemployment insurance and other government transfer payments. Surely no one in this day and age would consider another alternative of moving large numbers of people out of their natural communities as a solution—in fact it would be a non-solution—to such problems. In the meantime we will be attending the meeting on February 9 hoping that both the provincial and federal governments will have something substantial in the way of projects to alleviate the present crisis. Tonight I am hoping to have some indication of the projects the Department of Manpower proposes for our hard hit area.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the House was advised on January 29, I believe, the Department of Manpower and Immigration and myself are very much aware and very much concerned about the distressingly high rate of unemployment on Cape Breton Island, and we are aware that there are pockets on that island which seem to exceed the rate on the island itself. We are trying our best to help alleviate this situation with all applicable manpower programs and services, and we are allocating additional training funds for Cape Breton through the Nova Scotia Manpower Needs Committee. The Local Initiatives Program and the Local Employment Assistance Program have seen about 40 per cent or 50 per cent of their allocation go to Cape Breton.

The federal provincial manpower committee has of course discussed the problem, as the hon. member knows. I think the suggestions he has made in his very thoughtful and brief presentation tonight are very worth-while, and I intend to examine them with my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), during our on-going meetings about this particular problem, to see what we can do. I really wish I had a magic wand with which to try to resolve this in the immediate future.

As the hon. member knows, there is a citizen's committee developed by my department. We are looking for the input of the local people. We are discussing the matter with DREE and will try to have a solution. If I had a magic wand, as I have said, I would wave it and have a solution for tomorrow. We will have to search for a solution and see what we can do about this situation.

AGRICULTURE—BEEF—SUGGESTED RESTRICTION OF FOREIGN IMPORTS AND RENEGOTIATION OF UNITED STATES QUOTAS

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, last December 18, just before the Christmas recess, I addressed a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) suggesting he might give consideration to supporting the Canadian cattlemen's view that unless some form of voluntary restraint against foreign imports is instituted, or a Canadian meat import law is enacted, we may not have access to the United States market for our Canadian beef and veal. This was suggested the day before the minister went to Washington to confer with U.S. secretary of agriculture, Mr. Butz, on the egg issue and beef and veal quotas.

My suggestion was both kindly and logical in view of the recent strained relationship between our two countries over the cattle and beef trade and quotas in the last year and a half.

I also suggested that if cattle and beef quotas were to be renegotiated, they should be at or near historical trade levels, similar to Canada's five year average pattern, instead of a 12 month August to August quota as used by the U.S.

The minister's response was a very cynical and sarcastic comment that he would do nothing to offend the CCA because they do not want government interference. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that good, sound, properly negotiated bilateral trade arrangements do not constitute government interference.

Just two days before my question the minister had invited the CCA executive to meet with him and his senior staff to discuss this matter, as well as the current stabilization issue. While I can commend the minister for this action in asking the CCA for comments and advice, I must report that due to the constraints resulting from the Agricultural Outlook Conference which took place at the same time, it was not a fruitful meeting. The minister just did not arrange sufficient time for this special meeting called at his request.

Nevertheless, it is rather interesting to note the developments of the minister's meeting with Mr. Butz as reported in the minister's press release dated December 31. The release announced the end of beef quotas on December 31 by both countries, and reminded us that live cattle quotas had been lifted last August. The statement went on to report:

"During our meeting, Mr. Butz pointed out that the U.S. have a meat import law in their statutes and they must operate under it" Mr. Whelan said.

"Taking that into account, I advised Mr. Butz that Canada would need to provide similar safeguards to protect against any unusual or excessive meat flow into this country.

"We have reached agreement in this context and are very satisfied with the arrangement".

Toward the end of the press release we find the following:

Mr. Whelan also noted the agreement opens the way for discussions with Australia and New Zealand.

"These two countries are significant exporters of beef to Canada. We have already advised both countries that we want to make similar arrangements with them to ensure orderly marketing", Mr. Whelan said.

While the minister did not use the term "Canadian meat import law" his phrase "similar safeguards" does indeed suggest that he was aware of the cattlemen's views, and CCA, I am sure, would like to see this suggestion further developed between Canada and the U.S.A., and between Canada and Australia and New Zealand. I am sure he would like to ensure that never again will we in Canada have to endure a flood of U.S. cattle which collapsed our markets, such as in the summer of 1973 following the U.S. price control program.

[Mr. Hargrave.]

In the cattle industry we in Canada share with the U.S. cattle producers the North American beef market together with Mexico, of course. These three countries are indeed partners in the North American beef economy, but we are not equal partners. With a ten to one ratio of both people and cattle populations as between USA and Canada it is obvious that the U.S. market dominates the north American cattle and beef market, and therefore has much greater capacity either to benefit or damage our Canadian market, and both of these situations have occurred. Let me make it abundantly clear at this point that I fully support the concept that our Canadian cattle industry should continue to be a vital part of the north American cattle market.

Since 1970 our trade balance in both cattle and beef with the USA has deteriorated badly. In dressed beef we slipped from a $39.7 million credit balance in 1970 to a $5.1 million credit balance in 1974. In live cattle we dropped from a credit balance of $58.3 million in 1965 to a deficit of $33.4 million in 1974. The 1975 picture is better with a favourable trade balance for both cattle and beef, thanks to the very heavy export of 100,000 cows to the USA in the last five months of 1975. While our nominal tariffs between our two countries of 1.5 cents a pound for live cattle and 3 cents a pound on beef are the same for both countries, it should be pointed out that when we export cut beef or block ready beef to the U.S. there is a ten per cent ad valorem U.S. duty.

Since the first of this year Canada has reverted to the status of quota free access for beef imports. We are probably the only country with a developed beef industry to offer this unlimited access. The U.S. has its meat import law that can be triggered immediately by presidential action, and while Canada has a very generous access to that market we can never inundate the U.S. market as can happen in the reverse, such as in 1973 in Canada.

I believe very sincerely that Canada needs a beef import law to be implemented only at times when imports greatly exceed the boundaries of normal trade relationships and, most particularly, when such imports are the result of arbitrary forces developing in the U.S. market. I also believe that Canadian beef producers recognize the importance and validity of the concept of a North American beef economy. Yet many of us seem to believe that we can have the best of two worlds, a domestically supported industry and access to the U.S. market. This simply cannot be. If we seek public support for our industry, we will have to employ restrictive import controls, and such controls will prompt retaliation in time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, since this matter was raised by the hon. member on December 18, 1975, the minister has had discussions with this counterpart, U.S. secretary of agriculture, Earl Butz. As a result of his trip to Washington on December 19, Canada and the U.S. agreed to remove the quotas on beef and veal effective December 31, 1975.

This agreement goes further than the hon. member suggested, in that it cleared the way for the restoration of normal two way trade in beef and veal. Hon. members will recall that normal trade in live animals was restored by agreement in August of 1975.

Discussions are being held on a continuing basis among officials from Canada, the United States, Australia, and New Zealand in a concerted effort to establish meat import-export agreements which would be acceptable to all parties and which will ensure the orderly functioning of the international beef market. I must advise the hon. member, however, that because these discussions are still proceeding I cannot provide him with specific details, such as quantities involved, at this time.

Recently the hon. member has been raising the issue of Canadian imposition of blue tongue regulations. The minister has assured the House on several occasions, including earlier today, that this disease does not exist in Canada. Discoveries of this disease in recent years have been limited to cattle which were imported from the U.S. In all cases these animals were slaughtered, and all animals which had come into contact with them were texted for blue tongue. It is gratifying to note that such tests have consistently been negative. I must impress upon the house the importance of maintaining blue tongue free status among our cattle population so that Canada may continue to export cattle to more countries than any other nation in the world.

In his question of December 18 the hon. member raised the issue of egg trade between Canada and the U.S. As I am sure all hon. members are now aware, GATT has ruled that Canada has the right under GATT articles to limit egg imports. Nevertheless, Canadian officials are regularly meeting with their U.S. counterparts with the goal of arriving at an agreement which will satisfy both countries. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member opposite raised this question tonight, as it has given me the opportunity to—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary, but the time allowed to him has expired.

The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

APPENDIX «A»

UNCLASSIFIED INFORMATION
EXTRACTED FROM REPORT
FOLLOWING TWO CANADIAN ARMY EXERCISES HELD AT PORT HOPE IN 1951 AND 1953

INTRODUCTION

1. Two small scale Radiation survey exercises were carried out by the Canadian Army in the Port Hope area in the early 1950s. They involved Number 1 Radiation Detection Unit, located at Kingston, Ont., and were nicknamed Exercise Hope I (19 to 21 November 1951) and Exercise Hope III (17 to 19 November 1953).

2. Details of the objectives and scope are provided in Attachments 1 and 2 to this document. However in order to put these activities in correct perspective, some background information will be helpful.

BACKGROUND

3. In 1950, the Canadian Army was in the process of experimenting with the radiological survey and monitoring procedures which would be required in the event of an atomic war.

4. The Korean war was in progress at the time, and it will be recalled that there was a school of thought which advocated the use of atomic weapons to bring about a speedy end to the United Nations police action. Thus, although Canada was technically at peace, a Canadian Army Brigade was fighting with the United Nations Forces in Korea, and the possibility of atomic weapons being employed in that conflict could not be ruled out entirely.

5. Number 1 Radiation Detection Unit was formed in May 1950 to develop radiation survey and monitoring procedures as well as associated soil and water sampling techniques.

6. To provide the unit with practical experience in the operation of radiation detection instruments in an actual radiation environment, arrangements were made through the National Research Council to utilize the facilities of Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited in Port Hope, Ont. (Footnote 1). These facilities included the company's refining plant on the waterfront in Port Hope, two of its residue disposal areas (the MONKEY MOUNTAIN Residue Area and the WELCOME Residue Area) and the PIDGEON Hill Storage Site.

NOTE: 1. This Crown Corporation is now known as Eldorado Nuclear Limited.

RESULTS

7. Each exercise achieved its desired purpose and provided valuable experience to the officers and men involved in the assessment of radiation hazards which would be encountered in a nuclear war. The techniques devised made a useful contribution to the subsequent development of Army doctrine for nuclear warfare operations and field radiation survey procedures.

EXERCISE REPORTS

8. A detailed report was furnished to Army Headquarters following each exercise, the content of which centered entirely around the procedures and techniques employed, plus a number of recommendations relating to means of enhancing the Army's capabilities in radiation survey operations and associated functions.

OTHER REFERENCE MATERIAL

9. An article was published in the November 1951 edition of the Canadian Army Journal entitled «Radiation Detection Unit», which outlined the role and activities of the unit and included a brief description of Exercise HOPE I.

RADIATION LEVELS ENCOUNTERED

10. As expected, radioactivity levels encountered in the Eldorado Mining and Refining residue disposal areas were high enough to provide excellent training in the operation of the RDU's very sensitive radiation detection instruments. Some areas of the refining plant itself were also known beforehand to be mildly radioactive, and RDU personnel were invited to conduct a survey of the plant premises to gain additional experience in monitoring buildings and equipment.

HAZARDS TO THE PUBLIC

11. Following questions raised in the House of Commons on 28 Jan. 76 concerning the precise nature and purpose of the 1951 and 1953 survey exercises, all relevant reports and documentation were made available for examination by an official of the Atomic Energy Control Board. The official expressed complete satisfaction that the exercises were arranged solely to train military personnel in the use of radiation detection equipment and to test procedures to be followed in the event of a nuclear war.

12. Further, the examination confirmed that the information arising out of the two exercises did not in any way indicate that the operation by Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited of refinery residue disposal areas located within the town limits posed a hazard to the citizens of Port Hope. Nor did the surveys reveal any radioactively contaminated areas other than those directly involved in the Company's disposal operations.

SUMMARY OF PERTINENT POINTS

13. Exercises HOPE I and HOPE III were conducted by the Canadian Army to provide realistic training for personnel in the operation of radiation detection instruments, in radiation survey procedures and other associated techniques required for military operations under conditions of nuclear war.

14. The initiative in both instances came from the Canadian Army. The Radiation Detection Unit was not «called-in» to assist in assessing potential radiation hazards to the population of the Town of Port Hope.

15. As both exercises were very limited in scope and significance, the reports provided to Army Headquarters subsequently received very limited distribution, as they were considered to be of little interest to agencies other than the military staffs directly concerned with developing doctrine, procedures and special equipment requirements which would be necessary in nuclear war.

16. As expected, relatively high radiation levels were encountered in the residue disposal areas; however no other radioactively contaminated areas were identified other than those directly related to the disposal operations of Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited.

Attachment 1

EXERCISE HOPE I—SYNOPSIS

1. This exercise took place on 19, 20 and 21 November 1951. It was a very small scale operation involving only three officers and eight men.

2. The exercise scenario depicted the type of situation which might exist in a Canadian seaport after a nuclear explosion in the harbour area. The Radiation Detection Unit was tasked to carry out a re-entry operation, plotting the radiation levels encountered as survey teams approached the waterfront area.

3. For this purpose Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited made available a number of relatively harmless radioactive sources which were positioned at predetermined locations along the routes of the survey teams. The survey operations also included the Eldorado plant and premises, as well as the MONKEY MOUNTAIN Disposal Area and PIDGEON HILL Storage Site, where further instrument readings were obtained from the radioactivity present at those locations.

4. By applying an arbitrary multiplication factor to the readings obtained from their sensitive detection instruments the survey teams were able to represent to some degree the very high radiation levels it was thought would be encountered in an actual wartime situation.

5. The local populace was informed prior to the start of the exercise that radioactive sources would be positioned at various locations around the town, to avoid any unnecessary public concern.

6. The exercise report pointed up the need to develop standard procedures for the conduct of radiation survey operations, and highlighted weaknesses in the areas of radio communications, lack of technical facilities to perform on the spot maintenance of radiation detection equipment, the need for suitable maps, and a requirement for specially equipped cross country vehicles to support this type of operation.

EXERCISE HOPE III—SYNOPSIS

1. Conducted on 17, 18 and 19 November 1953, Exercise HOPE III was a simple radiation survey exercise carried out entirely within the WELCOME Residue Area, some four miles North West of Port Hope.

2. This facility offered an area of known radioactivity, and the objective of HOPE III was to refine ground radiation survey procedures, hazard estimation techniques and sample analysis.

3. Four officers and fifteen men participated. A mobile field laboratory was included to perform soil and water sampling.

4. The exercise report revealed some deficiencies in equipment and detailed procedures, and recommended the provision of some additional items to improve laboratory analysis techniques, the provision of an air sampling capability, and a number of minor measures to enhance the effectiveness of the unit's operations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION BY PRIME MINISTER OF ATTITUDE TOWARDS CUBA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

In view of the obvious widespread concern on the part of Canadians in regard to certain statements and actions of the Prime Minister during his visit to Cuba,—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cossitt:

—especially when this occurred against the background of Cuban military participation in Angola, the House directs the Prime Minister to give an immediate and complete account to Parliament on all aspects of the situation, specifically including any use of Canadian territory by Cuban aircraft involved in the Angolan war, the reported invasion of the Cuban embassy in Havana by Cuban security police and finally,—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Cossitt:

—the Prime Minister's apparent highly questionable gushing and stage-struck admiration for Prime Minister Castro and his dictatorial socialist government.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is evident that the hon. member does not have the unanimous consent of the House.

SUGGESTION UNITED STATES STOP INTERFERING IN CANADIAN AFFAIRS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 and seek the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a matter of serious and pressing necessity. In view of the CIA's blatant attempt to jeopardize the Prime Minister's most successful visit to Cuba by using the Canadian media to spread false reports by Trans-National Oil Company employees regarding the use of Gander airport to transport Cuban military personnel to and from Angola, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom):

That this House go on record informing Henry Kissinger and the United States State Department to stop interfering in Canadian external affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED REMOVAL OF AMBASSADOR TO CHILE PENDING NEW LAWS TO PROTECT ARRESTED SUSPECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since the International Commission of Jurists supposed to be aimed at protecting suspects from danger of torture is inadequate, for the sake of the welfare of the Chilean people I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That Canada remove the ambassador from Chile until the International Commission of Jurists approves of a new Chilean law to protect arrested suspects.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REASON FOR PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT IN VIEW OF SITUATION IN ANGOLA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Accepting that Canada and the Prime Minister's government disapprove of foreign adventurism of the sort that Cuba is pursuing in Angola, why did the Prime Minister not take this opportunity to make this point very effectively to Cuba and to the world by simply postponing his visit to Cuba at this time?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —because of the importance of the situation which had developed in Angola long after the agreement had been made to visit these three Caribbean countries, I felt it most important that our government, through our Secretary of State for External Affairs, make Canada's position clear on Angola. This was done, as the House knows, by public statement here condemning Cuba for the intervention, calling for a ceasefire, and so on. That being the background, I felt that the Cuban government knew our position very clearly. Since there could be no misinterpretation on the part of anybody, let alone the Cuban government, about our position, the trip should proceed as scheduled unless, of course, the Cubans themselves did not want to meet with our disapproval.

I venture to say that if we had postponed the visit, it might have been postponed for a long while, and without making any certain predictions I thought it important that Canada show its desire to continue the peaceful exchanges with Cuba which had begun in the days of the right hon. member for Prince Albert and that my visit to Cuba should precede any possible visit of a high level official from the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Given the fact that the importance of the Angolan developments, as the Prime Minister just indicated, including the Cuban participation to the extent of thousands of troops in Angola developed since the original arrangements were made, why was it not appropriate for the Prime Minister to follow the time honoured and very acceptable diplomatic practice by way of deferring his visit rather than giving the Canadian people and the world at large the impression, regardless of what was said privately between the Prime Minister and Fidel Castro, that Canada regards as tolerable or does not take very seriously this kind of intrusion into Angolan affairs which, despite whatever protests hon. members opposite may make, is the general perception of this event? Why did the Prime Minister forgo an opportunity to use the very acceptable diplomatic practice to make the point very effectively and firmly?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the perception of it is as the hon. gentleman says, that we in some way condone the action in Angola, I can only say that he is very badly informed and I regret that that is the case. I hope that hon. members opposite and the media will make sure that that is not the case, in view of the fact that the government's position was stated very clearly before my visit to Cuba, during it and then after I left Cuba. Therefore, any misinterpretation in the sense of what the Leader of the Opposition says can only be wilful and malicious.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I point out that the trip to Mexico, Cuba and Venezuela had been arranged quite some time ago. Cancelling Cuba and visiting Mexico and Venezuela would certainly have been considered by Cuba as not only a condemnation of its action, which it knows we have made, but also as a definite slight and a cooling, if not a breaking, in our relations. I think that would have worked to the disadvantage of Canadians. It might have worked to the disadvantage of the relations between our two countries.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: It is not a change in the policy of the government not to agree with all the policies of all the countries which we visit. Tens of thousands of Canadians go to Cuba as tourists, and there have been parliamentary delegations, including members of all parties.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: That policy was established by the right hon. member for Prince Albert when he was prime minister and has been followed ever since by every other government, and with regard to these two countries it has established a feeling in the world that Canada indeed follows its own foreign policy, and is able to disagree with other countries and still have civil and commercial exchanges.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It being very clear that people judge governments and prime ministers within their own country by what they do rather than what they say, similarly people judge governments in an international sense by what they do rather than by what they say because traditionally nobody pays very much attention to what governments say they are going to do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: This seems to be a great source of amusement to my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Just because we are looking at you, that is all.

Mr. Stanfield: Despite what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said as a result of the visit of the Prime Minister, the general perception abroad is that it was great for Fidel Castro. What did it do for Canada?

POSSIBLE USE BY WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES OF GOOSE BAY AS REFUELLING POINT FOR FLIGHTS TO CUBA

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister inform us if there have been any flights recently by Warsaw Pact countries which used Goose Bay airport as a staging or refuelling point between Cuba and points in east Europe or Africa?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no log on the stopping down of flights from eastern European countries at Goose Bay, but I believe that there have been two scheduled flights in the last months to Cuba stopping down at Goose Bay.

Mr. McKinnon: Would the minister investigate a non-scheduled flight, seek information and relay it to the House concerning Flight IF 901, an East German Interflot IL62 which landed and refuelled in Goose Bay last Wednesday en route from Cuba to points east? At the same time will the minister tell us if it is the position of the government that Canada is willing to provide what amounts to a staging area for Cuban traffic going to Europe or Angola?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member realizes that his final allegations are totally without foundation. It has not been used as a staging area for any such flights, and the hon. member really ought to be more careful about his statements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

ALLEGED DESIRE OF VENEZUELA TO DEAL DIRECTLY WITH GOVERNMENTS PURCHASING OIL—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Prime Minister will perhaps have some direct bearing on the possible consequences of the trip he took to South America. Since the government of Venezuela had indicated prior to the Prime Minister's visit to that country that they would prefer direct government to government dealings on oil exports without going through the oil company middle men, could the Prime Minister indicate if in his discussions in Venezuela he indicated Canada's support for this idea?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker the answer is yes but perhaps not in the areas which would be more directly interesting to the hon. member. I indicated that officials of Petro-Canada would be meeting with Venezuelan officials in the immediate future. The vice-president of Petro-Canada was in the group which visited Venezuela, and he has already engaged in discussions with the Venezuelan government. But beyond an assurance exchanged by both governments that we were interested in each other as a secure source and a secure market, there were no precise plans made for Petro-Canada to buy any quantities of petroleum.

The Venezuelans are interested at this time in seeing that Canada keeps up, more or less, its traditional liftings from Venezuela. This result has now been achieved. As to who the buyer should be, the hon. member knows that Petro-Canada, under the legislation, is empowered to embark on such contracts but they do not seem the likely avenue at this time. Petro-Canada does not own any refining capacity in Canada and it would not be of great advantage if Petro-Canada were to buy their bulk petroleum.

Mr. Broadbent: A supplementary question. Since the crucial financial point in Canada's favour is that such transactions proposed by the Venezuelan government would, I understand, involve a long range commitment at lower than normal prices or at lower prices than would otherwise be the case if they went to the oil companies I should like to ask the Prime Minister if the government would not indeed make Petro-Canada the exclusive importer for Canada of Venezuelan oil in order to get this lower price for Canadians?

Mr. Stanfield: What lower price?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, if the results were as the hon. member indicated I am sure this would be considered with much attention, but certainly in my discussions or talks there was no reason to believe that the Venezuelans would sell to Petro-Canada at a lower price than to the multinationals. As a matter of fact, there have been discussions on price with Venezuela and I am sure that both the multinationals and Petro-Canada would try to get the best possible price and Canadians would benefit in one case or another if prices can be made lower. That is not the issue at this time, however. The issue with the Venezuelans and with us was to talk about secure supply in the long run.

Mr. Broadbent: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In order to clarify this issue I should like to ask the Prime Minister if it is not part of the policy of the Venezuelan government, both in terms of ensuring long-range agreements for their products and ensuring a long-range and stable group of customers, that they build in as an incentive for purchasers, Canada in this case, a guarantee that if a long-term contract were entered into by a government agency they would sell at a lower price than on short run contracts to the oil companies?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether that is or is not the Venezuelan policy. I can assure the hon. member that this point was not raised by me or my delegation. I repeat, there will be a delegation of officials from Petro-Canada pursuing the opening we made, and it is possible that that principle will then be stated. I can assure the leader of the New Democratic Party that it was not put to me.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER TO CASTRO ON ANGOLAN SITUATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, reverting to questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition, if I may. The Prime Minister mentioned that during my period of administration we had relations with Cuba and that is right; we traded in non-strategic materials but we did not cuddle up to Castro.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: With whom?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That, apparently, is a Liberal at large. I would ask the Prime Minister whether he would tell the House in the clearest of terms what he said to Castro in regard to Angola, because his own statement was, "I talked to him brutally and frankly."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Just as in caucus.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I hope there were no four-letter words used. I ask the Prime Minister this: will he actually tell the House what he said, because his public statements were those of adulation? What did he say in regard to Angola? Did he say to Castro, "You should get out of Angola, because of the serious situation in Africa, and the involvement of the African organization?" What did he say? Instead of evading the subject, just tell the House, even though the language be brutal.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I realize that in the right hon. gentleman's day there was no cuddling up to Cuba, probably because the right hon. gentleman was never very good with the Latin connection.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: It is interesting to note, though, that there was no noticeable cooling off in the relations of his government with Cuba after Cuba had accepted missiles which were pointed at the heart of the United States. If the right hon. gentleman was so concerned with the effect of my visit, he might have shown a little bit of that concern in those dark days of 1962, when he was leader of the Conservative party.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the Prime Minister supported our position.

An hon. Member: How were you paddling your canoe in 1962?

Mr. Trudeau: As to the exchange of opinions on the subject of Angola, I can say that it took the better part of three hours—

Mr. Diefenbaker: But what did the Prime Minister say?

Mr. Trudeau: —and it might be difficult to give a blow account here, Mr. Speaker. But I can say this: one of the points of view that I took was that, apart from the destabilizing effect of any foreign intervention, particularly by nations from outside the African continent, I felt that Cuba, and I said so, was making a very serious mistake from the point of view of its own involvement in that Angolan situation. Regardless of the harm that they might be doing in Africa, I thought they were doing a fair amount of harm to themselves, and I made that quite clear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in 1962 the Prime Minister of this day was supporting my government in what was done. But he changed strongly when he saw the light and switched from socialism to the Liberal party. I simply ask this: did the Prime Minister suggest the withdrawal of the 10,000 Cuban soldiers in the Angolan civil war, because the Prime Minister said that Castro displayed a great deal of thought and feeling for the situation. Did he suggest that these forces should withdraw? In that three-hour tête-à-tête did the Prime Minister bring to Castro's attention the great disturbance in the OAU over the fact that the deputy prime minister of Cuba had said that Cuba "would continue to send troops to Angola to kill Africans whether the OAU liked it or not?" What all did he say about these things in that three-hour chat?

• (1430)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first question, the answer is yes. I suggested to Premier Castro that he would be well advised indeed in withdrawing his troops from Angola.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, my argument was not only from the point of view of Angola itself and the disturbance it might create in world stability, but from the point of view of the Cuban government and the people themselves. I think they are making a serious error by aiding Angola. They are dividing the Africans amongst themselves. The attitude of half the members of the Organization for African Unity was on one side of this and the other half on the other side. I think that is a perilous position for any outsider to get into.

In so far as Premier Castor's views, he made them known to me. I have the feeling that he has a good knowledge of Africa and a good feeling for the realities there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And no knowledge of democrary.

Mr. Trudeau: Certainly no experience in democracy, but you cannot blame Mr. Castro for not having learned that in his childhood under Mr. Batista.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: In so far as the so-called quote from the vice-premier of Cuba, this is the first time I have heard of it. I doubt whether I could agree with the hon. member in the NDP. I doubt whether that would be an accurate quote.

SUGGESTED USE OF PORTION OF CIDA FUNDS FOR CUBA TO EXTEND WHARF IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On January 8, 1975, the Minister of State (Fisheries) informed me that $50,000 would be made available for a 60 foot wharf extension at Vogler's Cove, Nova Scotia, and on June 23, 1975, the minister deferred this work as a result of budget restrictions. In light of the fact that CIDA gave the Cuban National Fisheries Institute $1.7 million in 1975, will the minister ascertain whether CIDA gave all this money to Cuba? If not, will he try to obtain $50,000 to be used as development assistance to Canadian fishermen in Nova Scotia?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AID TO CUBA NOT USED IN ANGOLAN WAR

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can he assure this House that none of Canada's aid to Cuba is being rechannelled into the Cuban war effort in Angola?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can give that assurance. Of course, our officials are constantly making sure there is no change in that situation. There was a special precaution taken in the fact that we had chartered two airplanes from Air Canada to Cuba before the Angolan situation developed. Of course, there was nothing in the contract about using those airplanes outside of Cuba. However, when the Angolan situation developed, we insisted on obtaining and did obtain from the Cubans an assurance that those planes would not be used for transporting anything that would, directly or indirectly, assist in the Angolan situation.

ALLEGED NEW AID AGREEMENTS WITH INDONESIA AND EGYPT—COMPLIANCE WITH CANADIAN AID POLICY

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask the minister to confirm that Canada has signed a new aid arrangement with Indonesia for $25 million along with a $1 million aid arrangement with Egypt. How do these two countries, Egypt and Indonesia, comply with Canada's five-year strategy on international aid which is to be directed to the least developed countries?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In the case of Egypt, Mr. Speaker, when I was in Cairo, I advised the Egyptian government that Canada would make a contribution of $1 million through the United Nations development program for reconstruction of the Suez Canal. Second, I advised that at the present time I had under consideration the provision of economic assistance to Egypt or to include it as one of the countries eligible for economic assistance. Of course, the foreign minister of Egypt informed me when we discussed per capita income figures that in his estimation, the per capita income of that country was less than $100. That certainly would put it among the poorest countries.

With respect to Indonesia, I am not aware of any new contract in the amount of $25 million with that country, but I will check into it and provide the information.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONTINUING CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, last week the Secretary of State for External Affairs said he would report to the House on the north-south conference in Paris and make clear Canada's position on the two commissions to which we have been appointed, energy and development. Will he be making that statement soon? When will it be made? Also, will he clarify Canada's role?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I did say that I would report on the two conferences on International Economic Co-operation in Paris, the first before Christmas and the second later. However, it is not possible to make clear at the moment what Canada's complete or even tentative positions will be at the energy and development commission because these policies are presently under elaboration. I gather that the process of development of policies on the part of every country involved will continue throughout the whole year in which this dialogue will take place. However, I will attempt to oblige the hon. member and the House as well as I can.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF DATA PROCESSING UNIT IN CAPE BRETON

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Now that the minister's department has opened a data processing unit in Winnipeg with an accompanying employment of some 1,400 full and part-time workers, will the minister consider doing the same this year for the Atlantic region and putting it in the Cape Breton industrial area where there is an obscenely high level of unemployment?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Yes to the first question, Mr. Speaker; possibly to the second part.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

SUGGESTED ADOPTION OF POLICY OF DECENTRALIZATION

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In light of the recent seemingly controversial statements before the Canadian Club concerning, among other things, the locational policy of private profit companies, can we expect a more decentralizing policy on the part of the federal government into different regions of Canada, especially slow growth chronic unemployment areas rather than the high employment metropolitan areas of various Canadian provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the House knows, particularly under the direction of the President of the Treasury Board, that the government has been taking some very firm steps in the area of decentralization. Of course, we have to balance that always with the necessity of keeping the decision-making powers close to the House of Commons and to ensure that the national capital continues to remain a focal point for all of Canada. However, the decentralization policy is very much a part of general government policy. If the hon. member wants to make any particular representations, I suggest that he address them to the President of the Treasury Board.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RADIATION LEVELS IN PORT HOPE AREA—REQUEST FOR IDENTIFICATION OF AREAS WHERE READINGS TAKEN IN 1951 AND 1953 STUDIES

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence of which I have given him notice. In spite of the fact that last week the minister undertook to release the actual radioactive readings and levels found by the army in their exercises in Port Hope in 1951 and 1953, and that yesterday we received only a partial extract of that report, will he now give the actual locations of where the readings were made by the army in 1951 and 1953 in view of the fact that some of the locations are glossed over by referring to such terms as "residual waste deposit sites of Eldorado" when in actual fact one of those sites was and is the Port Hope public beach?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I did agree to give an unclassified report and that was tabled in the House yesterday. The exact location of the disposal dumps of Eldorado are not, of course, known to me personally, but I understand that generally they are north of the city. One is approximately one mile north and the other about four miles to the north and north west.

Mr. Lawrence: In view of the fact the minister obviously refuses to table the full report, I will direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can he explain to the House the circumstances in which his department and agencies of his department have known since 1951 on the basis of this report alone that such areas as Port Hope Public Beach have registered massively high radiation levels?

● (1440)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I think it was made very clear in previous answers to questions that the report to which the hon. member referred, the exercise undertaken by the Department of National Defence, was an exercise for military purposes and was not a monitoring exercise for civilian purposes.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—BASIS FOR ASSURANCE AID NOT USED IN ANGOLAN WAR—POSSIBILITY AID WOULD CEASE IF PARTICIPATION IN ANGOLAN WAR NOT ENDED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question. I was most interested in the answer he gave the hon. member for Athabasca. Would he tell us how he can assure this House and the country that the aid Canada is giving to Cuba is not being used by Cuba in the aggression in Angola and the military penetration with which Cuba is involved?

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): By the nature of that aid, Mr. Speaker, which is, to give one example, assistance in the breeding of cows.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot describe all the areas of assistance under CIDA but this point has been made so clearly by the government that if it would satisfy the hon. member I would try to get a list of all the specific items. Perhaps he would wish to look at it, and if he has any thoughts about it I would be very willing to clear up any possible misunderstanding on my part of the way in which the policy is applied. But the policy is quite clear.

Mr. Woolliams: I would be most interested in connection with the discussion which lasted three hours, to learn whether there was any discussion in relation to these aid programs. Bearing in mind that the Prime Minister is supposed to have had some strong things to say about the aggression in Angola, did he state that this aid would be cut off if it were not stopped?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not Canadian policy to base our aid on all aspects of the foreign policy of a country receiving it. If we knew that our aid were to serve purposes unacceptable to Canada we would, of course, consider cutting it off. That is why I stated to the hon. member what our policy was. But there is another clear example in that area of the Caribbean. We are giving aid to Cuba but we are also giving aid to Haiti, two very different forms of government and two very different social systems. But we believe there are very poor people in those countries and that they should be helped.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CUBA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON DISCUSSIONS WITH CASTRO CONCERNING ANGOLA

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the statement which has been made and the interest shown during the question period concerning Angola and the Canadian attitude to Cuba, particularly to that country's intervention in Angola and in view of the fact that the official joint communiqué only devotes two lines to what has been termed a frank and brutal discussion of this important question, would the Prime Minister not consider making a full statement in the House with respect to what was said during this "frank and brutal" discussion?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can assure the hon. member that if he asks the right questions I can be frank and brutal with him.

MIDDLE EAST—POSSIBLE PROPOSALS BY MINISTER DURING VISIT TO HELP EASE TENSION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to his mid-eastern trip which has been somewhat obscured by a certain southern safari? Did the hon. gentleman make any proposals or offers to help abate tension in the middle east and, if so, what were they? What changes, if any, in Canadian foreign policy respecting this area can be expected to follow from the minister's high level, but, I trust, not brutal conversations?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I want to make it clear that there were no proposals on the part of Canada to enter into the situation in the role of mediator. We did not propose any political gestures or manoeuvres which would ease the situation. Certainly, as far as economic relations with all the countries of the area are concerned, and as far as relationships involving the granting of economic assistance are concerned, proposals were made which will, I believe, in the long term, have a very definite bearing on the stability of the middle east. In terms of bilateral relations with a number of countries including Israel, Saudi Arabia and Iraq, concrete proposals were under consideration to accelerate and intensify economic co-operation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, While we welcome him back, and congratulate him on a most successful trip—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harquail: —my question is not related to Cuba. My question has to do with something which has bothered me, as a member of this House, with respect to a statement which was made by a former Prime Minister when he was appointed to the company of Companions of Honour. I should like to ask whether, in fact, the recommendation was acknowledged and approved by the Canadian government through the Prime Minister's Office.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect to the hon. member, I think it has been understood for some time that questions which occupy a portion of the question period ought to have a currency to them which really cannot be dealt with in any other way, and I do not think this applies to the hon. member's question.

AIR CANADA

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT—POSSIBILITY OF APPOINTMENT FROM WITHIN EXECUTIVE RANKS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would the right hon. gentleman advise the House whether he has made a decision with regard to the appointment of a president of Air Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I discussed this matter with the Minister of Transport before my departure and I am to see him tomorrow, I believe, to continue our discussion of the subject.

Mr. Paproski: Can the Prime Minister assure the House that the appointment will be made from within the executive ranks of Air Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: The Minister of Transport answered this question some weeks ago by saying we would choose the best possible person regardless of where he may be found.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGOLA—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION INTO GRANT TO MPLA—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON AMOUNT AND TYPE OF AID

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): A question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the fact that the executive secretary of CUSO-SUCO has confirmed that a grant was made to assist an MPLA organization in Angola and that two of the three volunteers engaged in the project are now back in Canada actively soliciting support for the MPLA, will the minister inform the House whether an investigation has been, or will be conducted into the criteria used before extending government support to such an organization?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I believe the question of assistance to African liberation movements was discussed some time ago, along with the policy which was presented by my predecessor to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. As I recollect it, the policy had been to make certain specific grants for humanitarian purposes to liberation movements in Africa. That is the general situation. I will review the matter to see whether in fact any such assistance was made available to the MPLA.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, could the minister also table in the House information on the type of aid that is going to Angola and the amount of money spent, and would he inform the House whether the government is considering selling a nuclear reactor to Angola?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to get the information on the question that has been raised. I really do not know which aspiring government in Angola would be able to conclude a transaction for a reactor, even if such were available.

ENERGY

HEAVY CRUDE OIL—ACTION TO ELIMINATE PRODUCTION AND MARKETING PROBLEM

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources having regard to the serious impact which the federal government's pricing and export policy is having on the production and marketing of heavy crude in the Lloydminster area. Would the minister indicate whether the government is contemplating any immediate action to alleviate this problem which sees the massive shut down of many heavy crude oil producing wells in that area with the corresponding economic implications?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, there have been some measures taken in conjunction with measures taken by the Saskatchewan government, and I am referring to the oil export charge and other measures that will be taken for the months of March and April. The National Energy Board has indicated to those who wish to import Canadian crude that they will have 35,000 barrels subtracted from their quotas and will be limited, therefore, to that amount of light crude. By doing it this way there will be an incentive then to the importers to import a significant amount of heavy crude.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I can appreciate the minister's answer inasmuch as something is to be done in March and April, but since Husky Oil, which is the major producer in the area, is faced with the prospect of shutting down another 500 wells before the end of February, and I am sure the minister can appreciate the difficulties in starting up the process again after a well has been shut down. I am wondering whether the government is contemplating any immediate action to alleviate this problem in the month of February?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, this is immediate action in the sense that nominations are now being received for the months of March and April.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN EXPORT CONTROL PROGRAM

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the assurances given to the Leader of the Opposition on December 19 by the Minister of Finance that our export situation would not be adversely affected by the controls program or the export levies, and in light of the statement made yesterday that this control or export levy program was under review, I should like to ask whether the government is now considering dropping this export control or making any other changes to it?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. speaker, I think my colleague the Minister of Finance made some public reference to this yesterday. Of course, along with that minister I have been aware for sometime that some exporters were looking for some changes. Incidentally, I might say that different exporters are looking for different changes. In direct answer to the hon. member, we are looking at it again, and if we can accommodate some of these proposals we certainly will do so. My own view is that we should not put any serious impediment in the way of exports, obviously, and if we can meet what the exporters are seeking then, as the Minister of Finance has said, we will do our best for them.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO REACH DECISION ON EXPORT CONTROL PROGRAM ON SECURING AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this review, or the inability of the government to reach a final decision on the whole business of control on export income is serving as an impediment to a federal-provincial agreement on the over-all controls program, I would ask the minister when the government expects to complete this review?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would have to await the return of the Minister of Finance to give a specific date on that. I do know that discussions have been going on, even before yesterday, but I am not sure just how quickly the problems can be resolved. As to the reference in respect of the provinces and the holdup in the signing, my information at the meeting yesterday was that there was in effect no serious likelihood of that occurring simply because of the failure so far to resolve the export levy question.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DATE OF INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION CONCERNING PENSIONS FOR PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that last week both the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the President of the Privy Council indicated to the House that within two weeks we might expect an announcement on legislation regarding Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war, would the Minister of Veterans Affairs now confirm that there will be an answer regarding this matter next week?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question I can only give an answer similar to the one I gave last week, that I hope to be able to say something within two weeks of that day.

PUBLISHING

POSSIBILITY OF "READER'S DIGEST" COMPLYING WITH PROVISIONS OF BILL C-58

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Revenue. In light of the announcement today by Reader's Digest that they may now be able to comply with the contents of Bill C-58 as a result of meetings with officials of the federal government, I wonder whether the minister can indicate to this House what, if any, change might be in the wind or in fact agreed to in relation to substantially the same advertising provisions which would give rise to them changing their view?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question clearly anticipates an order of the day.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CONTRACT NEGOTIATIONS WITH TEACHERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Sometime ago I spoke to him about the fact that teachers in the federal service have been teaching without a contract since last September, during which time they have been in negotiations with officials of his department. I wonder if he can tell the House how soon we can expect a contract?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been negotiations since the beginning of the week and lasting through part of last night. I was informed this morning that they are close to settlement and I hope there will be a contract very soon.

[Later:]

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF DATE OF OLD CONTRACT WITH TEACHERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, since the contract that expired was a pre-1974 contract, will the President of the Treasury Board indicate whether the new contract will take that into consideration as far as the benefits teachers will receive are concerned?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are still under way. However, when the contract is signed, we will then be in a position to know what factors led to an agreement.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

ALLEGATION CHAIRMAN TRAVELLED FIRST CLASS ON FLIGHT TO TORONTO

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I should like to reply to a question posed yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

An hon. Member: Motions.

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pepin travels economy when on Anti-Inflation Board business. The Anti-Inflation Board has purchased only economy tickets for him. On the one occasion to which the question presumably refers, he was as usual carrying an economy ticket but was invited to sit in the first-class section in order to discuss matters relating to the anti-inflation program with a passenger who was travelling first-class.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chrétien: The staff member accompanying him travelled economy class.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM ONTARIO LEGISLATURE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before proceeding with orders of the day, I know that all hon. members would want me to call attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished delegation from the legislature at Queen's Park, the members of a special committee on procedure here to study, among other things, our great success in the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: They are members from the Ontario Legislature headed by their former Speaker, Mr. Morrow.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKAY—SERVICE OF SUMMONS IN CONFEDERATION BUILDING

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter that most nearly touches and concerns the privileges and prerogatives of your office, both as the guardian of our freedoms and as the warden of this House, and no outsider enters to meddle with those freedoms save with your leave and by your licence.

Yesterday I was served with a civil writ of summons, and a statement of claim alleging libel, issued out of the Supreme Court of Ontario. These legal processes were served upon me in the Confederation Building. Similarly served with similar processes were three employees of the parliamentary research office of the caucus of the official opposition. These persons, Mr. Speaker, are employees of the House of Commons and under your appointment, jurisdiction and discipline. All of us accepted service without protest. I do not propose, therefore, to support this question of privilege with a motion. However, Mr. Speaker, it is my information that the process servers sought no permission from yourself or any of your officers to effect their purposes. For your information, Mr. Speaker, the legal heading in the cause is:

Thomcor Holdings Limited, plaintiff, and Christine Johnson, Elmer MacKay, William Neville and Douglas Nixon, defendants.

The writ purports to be issued by Gowling and Henderson, barristers and solicitors, 160 Elgin Street, the city of Ottawa. It was apparently at the behest and in the pay of the plaintiffs and these solicitors that the process servers acted as they did. For myself, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize the following points. I am not raising privilege in respect of this matter on behalf of myself, and I am authorized by the three House employees to state the same upon their behalf. Again, the alleged libellous statements were deliberately made by me as a private citizen outside this House, without any attempt or desire to protect myself by raising parliamentary privilege to shield myself in a manner not available to any other private citizen of Canada. Finally, I intend to defend this action as a private citizen, on behalf of private citizens, in a court of law that will be free to decide the question at issue on the merits, unhampered and free of the intricacies of parliamentary privilege.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I leave the matter with you, Mr. Speaker, for your consideration and for such action as you may wish to take in the circumstances upon behalf of members generally and the respect due your office.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, of course, gave the Chair notice of the question of privilege, which gave the Chair at least a cursory opportunity during the conduct of the question period to verify with the hon. member whether the customary practice of introduction of visitors to this building was followed. In respect of those people who are staff members of the caucus of the official opposition, of course, a question of privilege in the formal sense cannot arise since they are not members of the House. However, in respect of the hon. member, access to this building without his consent or permission by anyone would constitute a question of privilege which would affect very greatly and very obviously the privileges of all members.

The practice, of course, has been customary that visitors call at the security entrances to these buildings and identify themselves, through the security officers there, in order to go to the office of the member. Whether or not that is a sufficiently complete practice, it was in fact followed in this particular instance. The fact that the hon. member is unable, without some information, to determine the purpose and the name of the caller is something to which all hon. members may wish to address themselves. But in any case there is no access to the office of any member—I think I should make this very clear although no action is sought by the proposed question of privilege—in this building except specifically with that hon. member's permission and consent. That is something which ought to be guarded very carefully.

In this case the visitor was admitted with the consent of the hon. member or of his staff. Whether or not it was with full knowledge of the intention of the visit is something to which hon. members might wish to address themselves. The fact of the matter is that, in terms of security of this building, it can be as secure or as relaxed as hon. members wish it to be. Therefore, it might be a matter for the consideration of the very valuable committee, the new Standing Committee on Members' Services, to ascertain whether or not hon. members seek a consensus to determine whether security should be tighter than it is. The effect of it, of course, would be to make access for the public and those who wish to visit the building for the purpose of those in the gallery today much more difficult than it is.

That is a question that has always posed great difficulty for hon. members but in any case there is no motion attached to the question of privilege. The customary practices were in fact followed. If there is to be any change in those customary practices, I suggest it might be a matter for reflection by the new Standing Committee on Members' Services.

Mr. McKenzie: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the prompt answer of the President of the Treasury Board, which I appreciate, in respect of the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board having the privilege of using first-class facilities. I should like to point out to him that Air Canada regulations clearly state that only persons with a first-class ticket can—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, by way of a point of order, I raised the matter of an undertaking by a minister, in this case the Postmaster General, to provide more detailed information. The concession was given that the minister was not in the House when that undertaking had been given. I note that Your Honour addressed remarks to this important problem concerning ministers who give an undertaking. I note now that the Postmaster General is in the House, and I wonder if he might be given an opportunity to respond to this point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my point of order arises out of the question asked yesterday of the Minister of the Environment which is to be found at page 10523 of Hansard. I asked the minister a question concerning Norway House and his reply was, very correctly, that the survey was so secretive that he did not know about it himself. However, in Hansard it is recorded only that he did not know "whether it is a secret", and he said, "but I am not in a position to answer today". I feel the minister's answer at that time does not resemble what is printed in Hansard, and that is my point of order.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I discovered a report. It was a report of April 15, 1975. It is a public report. The hon. member may have it if he wishes. He will have all the story about it. There is nothing secret about it. I think the Norway reserve will not be affected even marginally by the project of the government of Manitoba.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order raised a few minutes ago by the hon. member. The question of obtaining information for the hon. gentleman is quite a valid one. Assuming that the question is asked in good faith for as much information as possible, the hon. gentleman would help his cause by taking advantage of our written questions procedure or at least having the courtesy of giving me advance information of when he intends to ask his question so that I could obtain information for him.

If I had been told ahead of time, as all ministers would like periodically in order to answer an inquiry for detailed information, I would have had an opportunity to check with the department. Had I had notice that the hon. gentleman intended to ask a question about the theft of 39 mail bags, I would have been able to tell him that a subsequent check with the department showed that the bags were turned over to Air Canada. We have the receipts. The problem is not loss or theft from the Post Office, but loss or theft from Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Restigouche on a point of order.

Mr. Harquail: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. While I accept your decision, with great respect, I am sure Your Honour will appreciate that this is my first opportunity to place this question before the House. When I read in the press that a former prime minister of this country said he would only accept an appointment from the Queen if it—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member, I am sure, will realize that his comments are critical of the resolution or interpretation, or seek to add comment to the question which he sought to put which was ruled out of order. They really amount to an appeal against the Speaker's ruling, which I am sure he does not want to initiate or, alternatively, they amount to a discussion of the point which may take place at some other time. Certainly that does not constitute a point of order at this time.

Mr. Harquail: Mr. Speaker, this is my final point. Am I to interpret, then, that your decision is that this type of action has no effect or is of no concern to this House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO REPEAL EXCEPTION RESPECTING CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION OBTAINED

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved the first reading of Bill C-426, to amend the Income Tax Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker this is an act to amend the Income Tax Act and it arises as a result of a decision in the case of PPG Industries Canada Limited v. the Attorney General of Canada.

This bill would repeal an exception to the guarantee in the Income Tax Act that information obtained from private persons for income tax purposes would be confidential except for the purposes of prosecution under the Income Tax Act. In 1966 the Income Tax Act was amended to provide that private information obtained in confidence by the Minister of National Revenue for income tax purposes could be used by the government in any criminal proceedings whatever, and against any persons as well as the person from whom the information was obtained.

In consequence of this 1966 amendment, serious abuses occurred. In other words, information which is confidential and private which is filed by taxpayers could be used for other purposes, and the purpose of this act is to plug this hole so that privacy is not invaded.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

do not travel at public expense unless accompanying the Prime Minister by DOT or DND aircraft or by car.

3. Visits listed as private include holidays and private journeys. In the case of regional travel the Prime Minister participates in a variety of events some of which may be sponsored by provincial or municipal groups and others by the Liberal Party.

4. The Ministry of Transport is responsible for the provision of short to medium range airlifts of the Governor General, Ministers of the Crown, Members of the Royal family or foreign dignitaries visiting Canada, Parliamentary Committees or Delegations on official business and, from time to time, federal officials on government business. These flight operations are mainly confined to the North American continent. For its part, the Department of National Defence operates an air service for the transportation of its personnel. However, on occasion, it is called upon to provide special flights for other government departments. This occurs when the demand for such airlifts exceeds the Department of Transport's capacity, or when a transoceanic air airlift is required, since MOT's service is primarily limited to domestic operations. As just mentioned, the Department of National Defence operates certain regular flights of armed forces aircraft to Europe. Unassigned space is made available upon application to Members of Parliament at no cost. The aircraft are manned by crews made of public servants or of members of the Canadian Armed Forces or both. It is not deemed to be in the public interest or in the interest of the traditions of a non-political public service to answer questions calling for the names of such persons. Except during general election campaigns, the Prime Minister, when travelling by air, uses government-owned aircraft. This policy is based on the practice of successive former Prime Ministers, who, when travelling about Canada, had the use of a private railway car owned by the Government. In May 1968, the Prime Minister, following the practice adopted by his predecessor, issued guidelines governing the use of official aircraft by Ministers during a general election campaign. These guidelines, which still prevail, provided that official aircraft were not to be used for purposes related to the election campaign. This means not merely that government business must be involved in any such journey but that official aircraft may be used only when the performance of government business is the sole public purpose of the trip. The reasons that the Prime Minister travels in government-owned aircraft, except as provided above, are that he often requires travel facilities on short notice, he should be able to come back at once to Ottawa in cases of a national emergency, he often requires privacy so that he and his staff may work while travelling, he wishes, as a rule, to avoid inconveniencing the travelling public on commercial airlines and he has been advised that government facilities should be used for security purposes (see page 8618 of Hansard for December 11, 1973). Information about the official trips of the Prime Minister both within Canada and abroad is communicated to the media as a matter of course. Details concerning the destination, purpose and general duration are made public. For security reasons, both for the Prime Minister and accompanying persons and for crew members, it is deemed preferable not to disclose too precise details such as actual departure and arrival times, stops en route, itinerary, place of accommodation of crew members and support staff, etc. Information about the private trips of the Prime Minister, his family, and any accompanying persons is communicated to the media in summary form only.

SUPPLIES AT PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICIAL RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,792—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,666 which stated in part that the Department of Public Works spent $89,196.53 for "supplies" at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive during 1973-74, what is a complete list of all items making up this total along with the cost in each case?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): For practical reasons, there must be some limit as to the detail provided in answers to questions relating to expenditures. This question seems to exceed that limit.

SUPPLIES AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 2,795—Mr. Cossitt:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,667 which stated in part that the Department of Public Works spent $3,577 for "supplies" at the Prime Minister's official residence at 24 Sussex Drive during 1974-75, what is a complete list of all items making up this total along with the cost in each case?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): See reply to question 2,792.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER CONCERNING MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 3,516—Mr. Cossitt:

Are written questions on the Order Paper concerning matters pertaining to the Prime Minister now being answered by the President of the Privy Council rather than by the Prime Minister as in the past and, if so (a) for what reason (b) on what date was such a change made (c) who authorized the change (d) will the Prime Minister be answering such questions in the future?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): On some occasions when the Prime Minister is out of Ottawa, in order to expedite the process of answering written questions, the President of the Privy Council in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister, signs responses to the Prime Minister's questions. In addition, it is the practice of the government that the President of the Privy Council deals with any questions with which there appear to be procedural considerations involved.

BROCHURE ON THE PURCHASE OF OLYMPIC COINS

Question No. 3,694—Mr. McKinnon:

1. What is the cost to the government of the brochure distributed over the signature of the President of the Treasury Board to employees recommending the purchase of Olympic Coins, including distribution costs?

2. Is any costing being done of the time spent by public servants on such duties supporting the Olympic Games?

3. Have arrangements been made for COJO to reimburse the government for such expenditures?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): 1. The costs of the brochure in question are recovered from the proceeds resulting from the sale of Olympic coins before the profits are transferred to the Comité Organisateur des Jeux Olympiques (COJO).

2. Yes, costing is done for duties of civil servants directly related to the Olympic Coin Program.

3. Costs incurred by the Olympic Coin Program are deducted from the proceeds of sales before any remittance is made to the Comité Organisateur des Jeux Olympiques (COJO).

RENTAL OF GREENWOOD CHEESE FACTORY, SARSFIELD, ONTARIO

Question No. 3,695—Mr. Nystrom:

1. Has the Department of Public Works rented the old Greenwood Cheese Factory in Sarsfield, Ontario and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) on what date was the lease signed and for what period of time (c) on what date (i) did the lease come into effect (ii) does the lease terminate (d) what is the monthly rental rate of the lease?

2. Are there any escalator clauses in the terms of the lease and, if so, what are their terms?

3. For what reason was the Greenwood Cheese Factory chosen over other vacant cheese factories in the area?

4. Is Albert Bélanger the principal owner of the old Greenwood Cheese Factory and is he the lessor in the agreement to lease?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1. Yes. (a) For the purpose of providing accommodation for experimental animals for Health Protection Branch, National Health and Welfare. (b) March 23, 1973, for a term of three years from March 1, 1973 with two options of one year each. (c) (i) February 15, 1973. (ii) February 28, 1977 with a further option of one year. (d) $1,918.95.

2. Yes. An amount equal to any increase in taxes over base year 1974 and cost for heating in excess of cost for base year 1975.

3. The said premises were chosen by the client, Health Protection Branch, who requested that the Department of Public Works lease the building.

4. The premises are leased from Greenwood Cheese Co. Ltd., of which Mr. J. Albert Bélanger is president.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are 12 motions at the report stage of Bill C-58 and it would appear to the Chair, after a cursory examination at least, that the Chair should not intervene, from the procedural point of view, in respect of any of them. However, if any points of procedure or points of order are raised in respect of any of the motions, of course the matter may be discussed as each motion is put before the House. It would appear obvious that motions 1 and 12 are related in that motion 12 is consequent upon the acceptance of motion 1. Accordingly, it is the view of the Chair that these two motions should be grouped together for the purposes of debate and for one division.

Motions 2 and 3 should be discussed together, but probably would require separate divisions. Motions 4 and 5 are suitable for grouping for debate. A vote on motion 4 would appear to dispose of any necessity of a vote on motion 5. Motion 6 appears to be procedurally in order and should be both discussed and voted on separately. Motions 7, 8, 9 and 10 standing in the name of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), and motion 11 in the name of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), appear to be suitable for discussion together, but a separate division would be required on each motion.

It should be noted, of course, that because of the similarity of motions 7, 8 and 9, in the event that any of these motions are accepted, editorial changes will have to be made to the motions that follow. Motion 10 is consequential upon the acceptance of motions 7, 8 and 9, and obviously no vote would be necessary unless one of those three motions is accepted by the House.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal) moved:

Motion No. 1.—That Bill C-58, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 1 by striking out line 12 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:

Periodicals dated after December 31, 1976.

Motion No. 12.—That Bill C-58, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in subclause 4(1) by striking out line 35 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

force on the 1st day of January, 1977.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with reference to your comments, the House leader agrees with the grouping that you presented. With reference to the acceptability of the motions that have been presented, I simply wish to give notice and file a caveat with reference to motions Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 which deal with content. While we have our reservations as to the procedural acceptability of those particular motions, we recognize that there has been considerable debate directly on the content aspect, and therefore we would agree that we should debate those particular motions. However, we wish to file a caveat relating to the relevance of those motions to the bill that is being studied. With reference to motions 7, 8 and 9 we will be making representations to Your Honour relating to their acceptability, alleging that those motions are not acceptable procedurally.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand the position respecting motions 7, 8 and 9 is that an argument will be put forward about their procedural regularity. Of course, that will be discussed at that time. However, I am not clear on the position with respect to motions 3, 4 and 5. I understood the parliamentary secretary to say that there was a desire on his part, or on the part of the government, that those motions be debated; however, there were some reservations as to their procedural regularity. I do not know how he can have it both ways. Either there will be discussion about their procedural regularity or there will be a debate. But I want to be clear at this point whether we should anticipate an objection to the procedural regularity, and therefore to a debate on the content of the motions, or whether, while there is some reservation, there will be no argument suggesting the motions are not in order.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we have looked at the motions and have determined that there is some question as to their acceptability. However, those questions are borderline, and in view of Your Honour's position initially when you addressed yourself to the various motions, we accept the ruling you have made with reference to them.

Mr. Baldwin: Very, very good.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) on motions 1 and 12.

Mr. Fairweather: It will take me a little while to swallow that. However, we all love the parliamentary secretary and know he is trying to make his points, so we will forgive him.

There has been a curious addition to this debate which is very appropriate to discuss on motions 1 and 12. It is rather unfortunate that I was handed this press release unsigned. It looks as though it came from some government department. However, I think it was in a Reader's Digest envelope. It was handed to me just as I entered the House, although the subject has been current for some time. I wish to put this on the record because it will have some effect on how the debate goes. Then I will have some questions to pose to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and, hopefully, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). Perhaps we could resolve quite a number of questions on the matter of content vis-à-vis publications, leaving aside those issues having to do with broadcasting. The news release reads as follows:

> It was announced by Reader's Digest today that, after an examination in depth of the interpretation and application of section 19 of the Income Tax Act as it will apply if and when Bill C-58 is adopted, and, after discussions with officials of the federal government, it has come to the conclusion that the steps it has already taken or under way to conform to the amended statute, will permit it to continue to publish its French and English editions in Canada in such a way as to have them classified as Canadian issues of Canadian periodicals for income tax purposes.
> The result will be, it stated, that advertisers in its periodicals will continue to have the right to deduct their expenses for advertising space for income tax purposes.

I do not know what ruling has been made, but I am sure parliament is entitled to know. This is rather a key question. I am not even remotely suggesting there is anything underhanded about this. I want to know, and the House is entitled to know, what bargains have been struck by the Minister of National Revenue and his officials to make Reader's Digest feel that it can live with the content rule. I think this is extremely apposite.

I shall not continue at this stage for very long if the minister indicates he will be giving a substantive answer to this question. I am somewhat upset by the fact that in general one can apparently jettison a principle—that is, the 80 per cent content rule—or that those of us who have resisted the content aspect of this legislation should have to cease to make the points we want to make just because Reader's Digest has had some discussions with officials which makes it comfortable with Bill C-58. It does make it rather awkward to carry on the debate, not knowing what the undertakings have been. I think we are entitled to know what the discussions were.

I must say that the officials of the department were very frank and forthcoming—which is in the best traditions of the public service of this country—when they appeared before the committee, but I want to know, and the House is entitled to know, what has happened since to make Reader's Digest able to live with the bill. If the hon. member has something to say, perhaps he will say it in a moment. This is quite a serious point. It will seriously affect the length of this debate if the minister is able to give us an assurance.

We all know Reader's Digest has filled our offices with an alarming amount of paper telling us about the difficulty they would have. Now, after discussion with officials of the federal government, they have come to a different conclusion. We would like to know the purport of the discussions and how Reader's Digest is now able to take such an about-face: it is almost a faster about-face than this government made with regard to wage and price controls from 1974 to 1975.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity of participating in the debate. I intended to make substantive comments when the second motion came up for debate. The first one, having to do with the time element, did not in fact involve myself or my department.

Following the issuing of the press release in October, 1975, along with my colleague the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) I appeared before the standing committee and several questions were raised at that time involving—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to know where we stand. I was expecting that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) would speak to motion No. 1 which he moved. He has not yet done so. By relinquishing the floor, has he lost his right to speak to motion No. 1?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fairweather: I was very much hoping that this debate could be shortened by a statement. I find the House a comfortable place in which to ask questions and to receive answers. I will not need to make very much of a speech if the minister can give the assurances I have asked for by way of a question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I just do not want the hon. member to lose the opportunity to make his statement.

Mr. Fairweather: Thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It was my understanding that the hon. member had made his contribution in the expectation that the minister would satisfy him, and that he had spoken on his motion.

Mr. Cullen: As I indicated, the press release was issued in October, 1975, and following my appearance before the standing committee there were several questions raised about the uniqueness of digests. We indicated there, and have indicated publicly, that it was not the intention of the legislation as produced by my hon. colleague to preclude the operation of a digest in Canada. As a result of questions which were raised in the committee as to whether this legislation in fact had that effect, I again discussed the matter with my officials and subsequently talked to counsel for Reader's Digest.

It seemed to me at the time that the legislation would have that impact, that is, that it would preclude digests, so that if two, three or ten Canadians got together and decided they were going to have a Canadian digest 100 per cent owned by Canadians, with the editing and publishing being done in Canada, it would be theoretically possible for them to operate in Canada under the 80 per cent rule, but it would be for all practical purposes impossible because of the unique nature of digests.

I then discussed this at some length with counsel for Reader's Digest and I asked them also to discuss it with my officials. At that time it seemed really academic, because Reader's Digest had indicated publicly through Mr. Zimmerman that it did not intend to abide by the 75 per cent ownership rule. That being the case, any discussion about content and the 80 per cent "not substantially the same" rule seemed to be really an exercise in futility because they were not prepared to go down this route. In conversations with counsel for Reader's Digest we more or less operated on the basis of assuming that that in fact will take place.

We have a proposition, or a proposal to make that we can abide by the 80 per cent rule provided it is clearly understood that if the United States Reader's Digest secures its material from American or, for that matter, British magazines and that material is used in the U.S. Reader's Digest, and if that same article was condensed and used in the Canadian one, would that be considered as 80 per cent different? We considered that and decided, because of the unique nature of digests that we would accede to that, so the 80 per cent rule holds.

● (1530)

Mr. Cullen: But in extending this to make this provision, we felt we should accommodate digests, not Reader's Digest. On that basis we indicated that we were prepared to give that interpretation. That press release, I would assume, has been issued by Reader's Digest. The hon. member indicated that it looks like a government release, but it is not a government release.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, will the minister permit a question?

[Mr. Fairweather.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We will have to ascertain if the rules permit a question. The hon. member knows we are not in committee of the whole, and he has already spoken on the motion. I want to make sure that he just wants to ask a question of the minister. He can ask a question, but I would not want to have cross-examination across the floor. It has been the practice to allow members to ask a member who has spoken to give an explanation or answer one question, but not to do it in the same manner as in committee of the whole. I will allow this question, but I hope it will not be cross-examination.

Mr. Fairweather: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would say, as a result of this very interesting statement, whether the comments he gave before the standing committee—I will paraphrase them—namely, that if the 80 per cent rule were found to be ultra vires or beyond the powers of the legislation, the minister would consult his cabinet colleagues about amending the rule, are now moot in so far as Reader's Digest is concerned?

Mr. Cullen: No, Mr. Speaker, the rule stands. I have had some criticism of the fact that I said the 80 per cent rule is an interpretation. It is an interpretation. It is not an amendment to the regulations, as has sometimes been indicated in the press. It is an interpretation that was given about the meaning of "not substantially the same". Because it was an interpretation, I felt I had to have the backing of my cabinet colleagues on it. I indicated, as a courtesy to publishers and those who might consider advertising in these magazines, that if this were challenged through the usual tribunal and it was not substantiated, then it would be the intention of the government to bring in a new notice of ways and means motion to define that "not substantially the same" means 80 per cent difference. But the advertiser who successfully challenged would be able to write it off in the current year. It would not be retroactive.

The reason for indicating this to the publishers was to save the expense and frustration of going down this route, conceivably winning a case and then finding that the government moved in and applied the hammer. This is not an unpredecented move. It has happened on many occasions that a government has indicated it proposed to go a particular route and what the intention of legislation was, then it has been changed by a decision of the courts or a loophole has been found. In order to give effect to the government's intention, the bill has subsequently been amended but not amended to give a retroactive effect.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to motion No. 1. The events of the past few moments underline the wisdom of this motion, the effect of which would be to postpone the effect of this bill until December 31, 1976—a one-year delay. The confusion now existing about the effect of Bill C-58 has just been multiplying. Last May an interpretation was offered by the office of the Minister of National Revenue to the effect that a content of roughly 50 per cent difference would be acceptable. That was overruled by fiat from the office of the Minister of National Revenue, by a press release under his own name in which the 80 per cent content rule was enunciated. That led to great discussion in the committee following second reading of the bill.

The committee tried to bring before the government evidence that the 80 per cent rule was unfair, would be ineffective and practically impossible to police. Members of the committee from both sides were disposed to find an accommodation whereby the committee would be able to report a recommendation that the 80 per cent content be reduced. What is happening now is that the bill is to be allowed to stand with the 80 per cent content, but interpreted by the department in such a way that Reader's Digest will be able to continue to publish in its customary manner.

I suggest to Your Honour and to the minister that this is bringing us back to the very situation that Bill C-58 was intended to obviate, namely, the existence of special status for certain magazines. Time and Reader's Digest had special status, and a great effort was made to find a way in which Canadian publications could be enhanced. The method the government submitted was, as was repeatedly said on second reading in the House and in the committee by witnesses of diverse background, an unfair way.

I suggest to Your Honour that at the very least the bill ought to be referred back to the committee in light of the astonishing developments today. If I were the editor of Time magazine for which this bill has disastrous implications, as well as for Reader's Digest until a few moments ago, I would be asking if there was any chance of negotiating with the minister to find a formula through which the interpretation for Time would be allowed in the same way as for Reader's Digest.

I recall, at the committee hearings, the editor and publisher of Time magazine submitted in rough form a proposal for a new Time Canada. Under the changes proposed for that magazine they considered it should be able to qualify under a reduced interpretation. If we are to go along with what has been suggested this afternoon, namely, that Reader's Digest be allowed to continue and meet the requirements of this bill when it becomes law, then I submit the same opportunity ought to be given to Time magazine. I think the same holds true especially for the auxiliary publications also affected by this bill, for whom a great deal of concern was evidenced in committee but which do not hit the public eye as much. I speak particularly of MD of Canada, a magazine of great import to the medical profession which makes a very special contribution to medical knowledge in this country.

Motion No. 1 underlines the necessity of delaying the implications of this bill for one year once it becomes law. Even before that, however, I believe it would be grossly unfair of the government, in light of the interpretation on behalf of Reader's Digest, not to resubmit this bill to the committee for a thorough examination of how the full aspects of interpretation will be ruled on in the case of all publications that would be severely affected.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to speak in support of this particular amendment. Nothing has given greater cause for that support than the words of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) a few moments ago. Having been on the committee, and having seen this bill progress from tragedy to tragedy and chaos to chaos, I feel we have only added fuel to the fire today. The minister indicated that he looks forward to the time when he can make a more definitive statement about his negotiations and consultations with Reader's Digest. This has left us in a quandary.

If I understood the minister correctly, if the Canadian edition of a digest, any digest, reprinted an article that had appeared in a parent, whether it be a United States parent or not, which article was directly commissioned by the parent, then it falls within the 80 per cent test. If, however, the journal printing that article had not been directly commissioned, but it had been a condensation or reprint from any other publication in the world, then it would not fall within the 80 per cent rule. I hope the minister will rise on a point of order to correct me if I misinterpreted what he said.

What if an article appeared in the German edition of Reader's Digest or in any other publication: would it be considered? In other words, are our tax collectors directing their minds only to what is happening to the United States parent edition in order to determine whether an article falls within the 80 per cent rule, or will they consider articles in all editions of the Digest?

Second, will the minister explain, hopefully during the debate on the proposed amendment, whether the provision previously referred to relates only to the United States parent edition, or to other editions controlled by the U.S. parent, or is the matter broader than that? Will the authorities go so far as to determine whether the U.S. parent edition has an indirect association or connection with some other publication? For example, if Reader's Digest were to be involved with an interlocking board of directors, with publication XYZ, say, would our tax collector look at publication XYZ because of their association with the Reader's Digest parent company?

I reaffirm what the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) said. Although the minister has denied vigorously the sorts of allegations the hon. member made, it seems to me that Time, in the matter of their negotiations with the Department of National Revenue, were sold down the river. Without doubt, men of honour stood before the committee and said they were left with the clear impression that the content rule was not to be one involving 80 per cent. Subsequently, under what is known as the Cullen rule, they were zapped with the 80 per cent provision. They were knifed in the back with that 80 per cent provision.

I do not want this legislation to be passed in that atmosphere. I do not think legislation should be enacted in an atmosphere of distrust, particularly legislation involving the Department of National Revenue. Although on occasion we have all argued with the Department of National Revenue, that department for many years has enjoyed a reputation of integrity and can be proud of it.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona referred to MD of Canada. One could include other medical publications in what he said. Certainly, we should direct our attention to those publications. What is the position with regard to such publications? I know that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) feels that he is in a shooting gallery, that foreign publications are daily taking potshots at him. Since the Minister of National Revenue is more sensitive and sensible about this particular issue than his cabinet colleague, I urge him to accept the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my concern about what is happening. I am very sympathetic toward efforts to encourage Canadian publications, writers and artists in general, but find it difficult to accept what has been put before parliament and what seems to be happening.

The position taken by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) on what is meant by "substantially different", and to what extent a publication must be different in order for its advertisers to claim a tax credit is, in all fairness, substantially different from the position his predecessor seemed to take as stated in the House. Clearly, there is nothing in the bill to prevent the minister's successor, of whatever political stripe, or his colleagues in government from redefining what "substantially different" means. Surely that is not acceptable to members on either side of this House. That is not how we like to do these things in this country. There is no certainty to this measure. Basically, the government is following an arbitrary procedure.

At the moment I am not expressing any view on the 80 per cent difference rule or content rule. One might accept it in principle; I am not expressing any view on that. One might accept the necessity for some such law requiring Canadian advertisers to use Canadian-owned publications, that is, 75 per cent Canadian-owned, containing material that is 80 per cent different from something printed in the United States, for example. Even if we could agree on that, how many of us can accept the idea that the definition as to what is substantially different can be pulled out of the air by the Minister of National Revenue or his cabinet colleagues and changed from time to time? As it is, there is nothing to prevent their changing it two weeks from now or one year from now. There is nothing to prevent some successor government changing it. That is the point. Surely, this is a most unacceptable way of proceeding.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am not attacking the Minister of National Revenue personally. I think he is acting in good faith. The same applies to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). I accept their sincerity although suggest that they are most misguided on this occasion. This afternoon the Minister of National Revenue gave a good example of how subjective the implementation of this law is to be and will continue to be. In days of old when the law of equity was developing, it used to be said that the interpretation of the law depended on the length of the chancellor's foot. What is meant by "substantially different" will depend on the judgment from week to week, month to month and year to year of the Minister of National Revenue. It will depend on the interpretation of different ministers.

It may be said that we have had in Canada for some time provisions governing broadcasting and Canadian content of broadcasts. At least these provisions are administered in public by a commission which operates in public. It is not—I hope the minister will not take offence—a hole-in-the-corner operation of the kind associated with this legislation. That is how it is to continue. The minister has indicated a tendency which would make it possible for Reader's Digest to continue to operate. I do not want to dissuade him, because I happen to think that Reader's Digest should continue to operate. Nevertheless, the ruling in question is peculiar.

The test as to whether something is different, as I understand it, depends on its origin, not whether it happens to be the same as something being published in the United States, for example. Are we to have a succession of ingenious developments of this sort in relation to the application of this bill? I say as earnestly as I can, and without wishing to take too much time, that the 80 per cent provision is not embodied in any statute. It is only something which came out of the mind of the minister or the minds of his colleagues. It is arbitrary in that sense. It is also completely arbitrary in the sense that it can be changed whenever the minister changes his mind or whenever his cabinet colleagues change their minds. In that event there is to be no public discussion: there is to be a nice, cosy discussion within the confines of the minister's office or possibly in the cabinet room.

Is that the way we want to aid Canadian culture and Canadian publications? Is that the way we want to operate in this country? It is a secretive hole-in-the-corner kind of operation; it is fundamentally and totally arbitrary. I cannot support it. The government should think longer about this. I believe the motion calls for a deferral. The most charitable thing I can say for the minister and his colleagues is that they must be totally confused and mixed up or they would never have put this kind of proposition before parliament or this kind of interpretation before this House.

In order to prevent their making fools of themselves in perpetuity, I suggest that they defer further consideration. I suggest that they not impose their large majority upon this House, nor put through something, no matter how well motivated the idea may be. The method of interpreting, application and administering, in view of its arbitrariness and secretiveness, is opposed to the whole Canadian tradition of law and the way we want to see governments doing things.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am not at this point going to discuss the wisdom of having a rule which states that in order to get these tax benefits one must advertise in a Canadian publication that is 80 per cent different. That is just something the minister pulled out of the air. I may want to discuss that later. I say to both ministers through you, Mr. Speaker, that with this arbitrary, secretive way of proceeding, resulting in the kind weird sort of ruling the minister indicated he has given to Reader's Digest, is unacceptable to this side of the House. It is surely unacceptable to anyone who still believes in the fundamental principles of a liberal democracy.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I just want to speak briefly to this first amendment. I remind hon. members that it does not deal with the matter of "not substantially the same". It deals specifically with the proposition that the bill should be delayed for a further year. I am only going to talk about that particular point. I might say, in passing, that I find the charge of secrecy levelled by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) to be something of a specious, hollow and regrettable charge. There has not been a piece of legislation in the ten years I have been in the House of Commons that has been subjected to anything like the searching examination the propositions contained in this rather simple bill have been subjected to, and not only in the House but in the country at large. No other piece of legislation has generated more mail on both sides of the question or more letters to the editor, unless possibly the matter concerning the hunting of baby seals.

This issue has been openly examined in the committee. Officials have been available to answer questions from hon. members. Questions have been asked and interpretations have been given. I regret the fact that in his continuing campaign against this bill and what it is attempting to do, the Leader of the Opposition at this stage of the game has introduced specious charges of secrecy and things of that kind.

When one looks at the proposition that this bill should be given another year's delay, it becomes increasingly difficult to take the opposition seriously. I have had a chance to review the history behind this bill, a bill that is obviously concerned with trying to create equity in the imposition of the tax law in terms of periodicals. That, of course, deals with the whole proposition of trying to provide some assistance to periodicals. One need only go back to 1923 when a Conservative member of parliament, Mr. Hocken, obtained the unanimous approval of the House for his motion that measures be adopted to encourage the publication of Canadian periodicals. From there we go to the regime of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett and the fact that he introduced a tariff. One traces it through reference to the study of the periodical industry in the Massey report. In 1956, a 20 per cent tax on advertising was contained in a budget. There was the reneguing of that tax by the subsequent Conservative government.

A royal commission went into, at length, the needs of this industry and the need to do something. It concluded, in 1961, that a nation's domestic advertising expenditure should be devoted to the support of its own media communications and that a Canadian periodical is one published in Canada, owned either by Canadian citizens or by a company incorporated under the laws of Canada or one of its provinces which is controlled and directed by Canadian citizens and is not a licensee or otherwise substantially the same as a periodical owned or controlled outside of Canada. All that was said back in 1961.

What has been the record of this parliament since then? Has the problem disappeared? Have those problems disappeared that one of the greatest civil libertarians of this country, Gratton O'Leary, studied? Of course not. All that persists in this debate is the obstruction and refusal to act on the part of members of this parliament. This is now being led by members of the official opposition. They can charge secrecy. They can charge that 80 per cent is too high. They can live with 50 or 60 per cent. These are games of arithmetic. However, the problem persists. Therefore, I suggest that this House should reject, and reject in a definitive fashion, any notion or suggestion, and in particular any motion, that asks for a further delay in dealing with this matter.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, it may come as some surprise to members of the House that when this bill was first introduced I was at least mildly interested in supporting it. First of all, like many hon. members, I wanted to repatriate foreign industry back to Canada and have as much indigenous publishing industry here as possible and belonging to Canadians. However, as I began to examine the fundamental and underlying issues before us in this debate and in this legislation, I could not help reaching the conclusion that I not only had to oppose this bill, but should oppose it vigorously and do all I could to prevent its passage, or certainly, in the context of this amendment, delay it.

● (1600)

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) said there has been no legislation before the House which has enjoyed such openness and examination from all parts of Canada. It may be that the bill has undergone that kind of scrutiny. It is a short bill and, seemingly, a simple and innocuous bill; but the fact remains there are other matters related to it which have not been put openly before the Canadian public. I refer specifically to the kind of negotiations which have been going on behind the scenes between members of the Department of National Revenue and other various elements.

An hon. Member: Not to mention the Liberal caucus.

Mr. Friesen: Not to mention the Liberal caucus. The fact is, the great difficulty about this legislation is that the so-called Cullen rule is not part of it. This clearly shows the sloppy way in which the bill was drafted in the first place. The former minister of national revenue stated that he would be satisfied with a 50 per cent or 60 per cent content rule. Then, as the committee met to discuss the legislation, the head of the Maclean-Hunter board established under questioning that Maclean-Hunter had interceded with the minister several times for no less than 80 per cent; they would like to have had 100 per cent "substantial difference" but they could live with 80 per cent. I quote from page 25:63 of the committee proceedings, where Mr. Hodgkinson is reported as saying:

> We made a suggestion to them that if it was less than 80 per cent the Canadian magazine industry would be in grave difficulty of survival.

That, I suggest to the minister, was not under public scrutiny. These were private, almost clandestine negotiations going on between leaders of the industry and officials of the Department of the Secretary of State and the Department of National Revenue. The Secretary of State can say as often as he wishes that the legislation was open before the Canadian people. The fact is that the operative clauses of the legislation and the rulings have not been under public scrutiny. If the Secretary of State wants to be genuine and serious about openness in this legislation, let him work together with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and make sure that the ruling will be included in the legislation so that the writers in the publications industry may know exactly where they are when they negotiate for magazine articles.

I guess that in times of excitement like this you tend to revert to your previous vocation, and I flip back very easily to the days I was teaching writing and I imagine in my mind's eye hundreds of writers across Canada waiting to know what kind of climate they are entering. It was Aristotle who said a good writer keeps his audience in mind; he always has his audience in mind when he writes. The dilemma which faces the writer in Canada today is: what audience? I think it is an established fact that Reader's Digest and Time have created the largest circulation in Canada, and though some government members would like to have us believe that it is because of the support given by the parent organization in the United States, nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. Speaker, you can have all the support you like from parent organizations, but if these periodicals were not publishing the kind of material Canadians want to read, there is no kind of support from parent companies which could make them popular magazines. Reader's Digest and Time have been very careful to publish those kinds of articles, that kind of material Canadians want to read, and that is why they have the largest circulation in Canada. It is a tragedy that the one publication in Canada we can leave lying anywhere without having to be afraid of our children reading it is the publication which is under attack. That is the one the Secretary of State wants to make difficult to operate in Canada.

If the Secretary of State really wanted to help writers he would be more disposed to tear down walls than to create them. I have already suggested that the Secretary of State wants to help writers. He said, however, in a statement to his caucus:

> Even if Sélections were no longer published in Canada, no doubt the French edition presently printed and available in Europe would be available for distribution to Canadian readers.

What kind of a contradiction is that between the public and the private statements of the minister? On one hand he says he wants to help writers and provide a medium in which they can operate in Canada so that they can publish their articles and become known, and on the other he says that if the French edition of Reader's Digest does go out of existence, the French edition can still be sent over to Canada. Is he sucking, or blowing? Is he tickling, or scratching? Does he want to shut down a magazine, or encourage it? He went on to say:

> The uncertain short-term consequences of eliminating the tax exemption for advertisers using Reader's Digest must be weighed against the long-term effects for the Canadian periodical industry of eliminating lumpiness in competition and the removal of a major inconsistency in the government's cultural policy.

That makes my hair stand on end. What is the government's cultural policy for us? Is the beginning of its design first to make sure that a few publications can no longer operate successfully in Canada? Does he wish to eliminate that kind of competition and then move on to other areas? The Secretary of State told us in committee that he does have a cultural design for Canada, and he suggested at that time he would make that design available to members of the committee. We have not received it yet, even though it is two months later. Is that his cultural policy for Canada? Frightening! Then he went on to say:

> Of all the major consumer magazines in Canada, Reader's Digest is the most cost-effective magazine advertising medium as the table derived from the Canadian Advertising Rates directory of December, 1974, indicates.

I underline the words "the most cost-effective advertising medium". Do you suppose it has been the most cost-effective advertising medium because advertisers just love Reader's Digest and Time? No. It is because they know that those two periodicals are the two which Canadians most want to buy and read, and they know that in this way their products will get the greatest amount of exposure before the Canadian public.

On the other side of the ledger, we must ask ourselves this question: If Time and Reader's Digest have been so successful, why have other publications not been equally successful? Immediately you cannot help thinking of the dominant periodical in Canada, namely, Maclean's magazine. I would simply suggest that if a publishing company decides to cater to a very urbanite group, in the style that caters to that small select group of urbanite society, especially Toronto urbanites, it must take the consequences of that publication's decision and suffer a small circulation. Apparently Maclean's is not willing to do this.

I suggested in the committee some time ago that the problem in Canada is not a shortage of good writers, and certainly not a shortage of periodicals but, rather, it is the inhibitions which these writers and periodicals face when it comes to circulation. It so happens that Maclean-Hunter denied this vehemently. Of course, they said it was not a circulation problem but rather, other problems including the competition they face. Just by coincidence, next to Time and Reader's Digest, Maclean-Hunter has the largest distributing facility in all of Canada. That is strange.

I suggested in the committee that if Maclean-Hunter is really interested in helping the publication industry in Canada, what it could do is carry piggyback some of the small publications which are finding it hard to get exposure before the Canadian people. I suggested that maybe what they should do if they want to help these publications is carry them along in the distribution of their own magazine. This would give phenomenal coverage to the small publications. But they said that was not the solution.

On January 7, a month after the committee had met, there appeared in one of the Toronto newspapers an article regarding the magazine distribution industry. It suggested this was virtually a closed shop. We find in this article a statement like this:

> A Maclean-Hunter national magazine distributor said he will not provide magazines to a wholesaler operating in the territory staked out by the Maclean-Hunter regional wholesaling subsidiary, Metro News.

Metro News does have a corner on the market. The article continues:

> Many have quit dealing with Metro because of dissatisfaction with accounting systems and service. A normal turnover, Metro counters.
> Another Maclean-Hunter operation, Maclean-Hunter Distributing, one of the few national magazine and paperback distributing companies not foreign controlled, refuses to provide even Maclean-Hunter's own circulation-hungry magazines to wholesalers trying to crack Metro News' large territory.

There you have an industry that wants a closed shop and a corner on the market, without competition. That is the background to the kind of legislation that we are faced with today. The Secretary of State just last week published a letter, I suppose you could call it but it is more like an article, in the Vancouver Sun in response to a letter written previously by another gentleman. In that article he stated:

I think the point to keep in mind, however, is that a Canadian writer's chances of success in a foreign market are enhanced if first he or she has managed to get established at home and to develop a solid readership in his own market. It is with that objective in view that government support of writers and publishers is being provided.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State how he can prepare that kind of statement when indigenous writers are complaining all the time about competition from American publishers in Canada without the benefit of relief? The minister has not seen fit to look after that dilemma. There are gaps like this in every aspect of the legislation before us. I could go on, but suffice it to say simply that the amendment before us has a lot of wisdom, especially in light of the statement Reader's Digest has issued today, as well as the statement of the Minister of National Revenue. That statement has muddied the waters more than cleared them and we need time to look at the legislation as well as the ruling.

As the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) has already suggested, the bill ought to be sent back to the committee to be re-examined and to find ways to include the ruling, if there is to be a ruling, in the legislation so that the writer in Canada can move out of this world of insecurity to a place where he knows where he is at and does not have to worry about these rulings of the Minister of National Revenue. I distinctly remember members of the committee asking some very specific questions of officials of the Department of National Revenue, who on the spur of the moment made some judgments as to how the ruling would operate in this case. As they gave their answers, the Secretary of State sat there shaking his head, saying "No, no; that is not it". He then proceeded to reinterpret what that ruling would imply for that particular situation.

We go back to the statement that the writer must always have his audience in mind. I would ask, again, what audience is this? Is it the audience that the writer wants to reach in terms of a reading audience? If that is the case, then he is going to enjoy the freedom of expression that all writers in Canada must have if they are to write creatively and artistically and if they are going to write in a way that Canadian people will want to read. If in the meantime, however, they have to interject before their reading public three other voices of the reading audience for which they must account, namely, the Secretary of State's Department, the Department of Justice, and the Department of National Revenue, then I would ask very carefully again, which audience is it for which the writer must account?

The Secretary of State and the Minister of National Revenue can state as often as they want that this is not curtailing writing and that this is not censorhip. Perhaps in a legal sense it may not be, but in a psychological sense regarding the work that goes into the writing and preparing of a manuscript, this is censorship of the most subtle nature. No writer of any artistic or intellectual integrity, or with a creative desire, will want to submit a writing to any publication if first of all in his mind's eye he has to picture before him the scrutiny of a dollar-oriented Treasury Department official or a legally-oriented Justice Department official. That is no way to stimulate the writing profession in Canada and it is no way to stimulate the publishing industry in Canada.

What we need in this country is freedom of expression without bounds and without the deterrent effect of these various levels of government interfering with our writers. I return to the injunction that this piece of legislation must be sent back to the committee where it can undergo that kind of scrutiny it deserves, or that kind of scrutiny the Minister of National Revenue has given us reason to believe it deserves as the result of his change in ruling today.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) in his intervention this afternoon raised some very interesting points which I think have some important implications for this legislation. While addressing myself to motion No. 1, which would delay the implementation of this bill for another year, I should like to put on record some of my concerns about the statement of the Minister of National Revenue, to which perhaps he will reply when we come to motion No. 2.

I think all members of this House and the people of Canada must realize and keep firmly in mind that Bill C-58 is a piece of legislation, not to decide who will be allowed to publish in Canada but, rather, who will be assisted to publish. An anomaly in our income tax regulations that has existed since 1965 allowed two major publications, Time and Reader's Digest, to qualify for income tax purposes as Canadian magazines when in fact they were not. The legislation seeks to rectify that anomaly.

The purpose and the hope of the legislation is that the advertising revenue that had in the past gone to these two foreign periodicals, or some of that advertising revenue, will be redirected back to Canadian periodicals unless Time and Reader's Digest conform to the principles of what it is to be, a Canadian periodical. When the minister was before the committee he outlined four criteria for qualifying as a Canadian periodical. They were: place of production, ownership, licensing, and similarity to a foreign publication.

To this date neither Time nor Reader's Digest qualify in those terms as being Canadian, although we learned this afternoon just as the debate began that the Minister of National Revenue had worked out a deal with Reader's Digest concerning the fourth criteria, similarity to a foreign publication. As I understood the minister, he said an understanding had been reached by his department and Reader's Digest that if Reader's Digest bought an article from an American or any foreign magazine and did the editing or did the digesting of that article here in Canada, and at the same time if the parent magazine, Reader's Digest U.S., bought an article from the same source and did the editing and digesting in the United States, then the Canadian article would not be subject to the provision regarding similarity to a foreign publication. Although the two magazines may be using and publishing the same article in their magazines, because the editorializing and the actual digesting was done by Reader's Digest Canada, it then would come under the 80 per cent rule.

If that is so, then it raises another very important question which I should like the minister to clarify. If they worked out that kind of deal with National Revenue, they must at the same time have worked out a revision of the third criteria the minister mentioned to the committee, which is licensing, because under the existing situation with Reader's Digest Canada and Reader's Digest U.S., its parent, the licensing agreement works as follows: Reader's Digest U.S., the parent, has a pool of articles that it digests, and Reader's Digest Canada can draw on that pool of articles.

As part of the licensing agreement between Reader's Digest Canada and the United States, the following provisions must be met: Reader's Digest Canada must first promise to make no changes to editorial material obtained from the U.S. parent company without written consent. Second, the Canadian subsidiary must not distribute material which the parent disapproves of, or use material from any source other than those sources approved by the U.S. parent company.

Third, it must encourage Canadian writers to contribute material which would be of significant interest to international audiences, and submit any such material to the U.S. parent company for publishing consideration. Unless that licensing arrangement has been changed, in no way, even if they make the arrangement now with the 80 per cent "substantially the same" provision, by any stretch of the imagination can we consider Reader's Digest Canada an independent Canadian periodical if it is subject to the three licensing conditions I have just outlined. So I believe it is important that the minister make a statement to this House concerning what changes his department has agreed to with Reader's Digest Canada, not just on the point of similarity to a foreign publication but on licensing, ownership and place of production.

If this deal has been worked out and there have been some changes in the licensing arrangement, and Reader's Digest qualifies under all the other provisions, then we may accept that it is truly by definition a Canadian magazine and that advertisers in Reader's Digest, Canadian edition, will have the tax deduction benefits. However, I think this is still a blow, in one sense, to the Canadian periodical industry because, as was pointed out effectively in testimony before the committee, Reader's Digest and Time magazine for ten years were allowed to have the benefits through the tax system in respect of advertising revenue, and therefore have been able to capture about 50 per cent of the advertising revenue in this country.

We cannot quarrel with this if they comply with the four criteria, but this certainly does not do anything about redirecting some of that huge amount of advertising revenue back to the Canadian magazines which have been struggling for so long against these huge odds and advantages Reader's Digest and Time magazine were able to enjoy over a ten-year period. The point should be raised that what made Time and Reader's Digest so successful, and what gave them such an unfair competitive advantage, was that they were able to get much of their content at reduced rates from their parent company—at a fraction of the cost any Canadian magazine would have to pay if it tried to acquire the same material.

While these two magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, were able to get that kind of advantage of a cut-rate cost for the material, they also had the advantage, as foreign magazines, of being able to qualify under the provisions of the Income Tax Act for deductibility of advertising expenses. This attracted many advertisers to advertise in Time and Reader's Digest, which would not have been the case had these magazines been classified as foreign, because they would not have had that income tax deductibility benefit. So it seems to me that the Minister of National Revenue has much explaining to do about the kind of deal worked out with Reader's Digest as it relates to the four criteria for a magazine qualified as a Canadian edition.

I cannot support motion No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), to delay this bill for one year. As was pointed out in committee and on second reading, we have allowed this anomaly in our definition of a Canadian periodical to go on for far too long, so that Time and Reader's Digest have been able to capture most of the advertising revenue of magazines in this country and Canadian magazines are really at the breaking point. They need to attract more revenue, and unless we move to implement Bill C-58 this will not take place. It can only mean the continuing backsliding of the Canadian periodical industry as it hopes to improve and compete with these two giants.

We need a healthy Canadian periodical industry. From the testimony we have heard, if even a fraction of the advertising revenue which now goes to Time and Reader's Digest were diverted by the passage of this bill to the Canadian periodical industry, it could mean the difference between the collapse or the survival of a number of magazines. This is something to be borne in mind. For a country to have a sense of identity and to be able to speak to people both on the west and on the east coast, we need a healthy magazine industry which can interpret Canada to Canadians, not through the eyes of subsidiaries of some foreign magazines.

So I say that there is no time for delay. This issue has been before the House previously. We have had a royal commission studying it and a special Senate committee studying it. Their recommendations were that we move in the direction in which Bill C-58 is moving and that the longer we delay, the worse the situation will become for Canadian periodicals. I think it is important that we pass this legislation. If Reader's Digest and Time want to conform to the legislation and become Canadian magazines, then that is fine; they will be on the same footing as our industry in Canada. But I cannot see the logic of perpetuating an anomaly that allows these two magazines, of all foreign magazines in Canada, to receive benefits under the Income Tax Act which allows their advertisers to receive these benefits while the same benefits are not given to other foreign publications.

We seem to have a lot of concern for these two magazines at this stage. I find it surprising that the same concern and logic was not voiced for other foreign publications back in 1965 when they fell under the provisions of the Income Tax Act which classified them as foreign magazines, but Time and Reader's Digest did not. It seems important that we move to the speedy passage of this bill. As I said earlier, I certainly want to hear clarification from the Minister of National Revenue as to the deal that has been worked out with Reader's Digest and what has happened not only to the "substantially different" clause but to the licensing provisions which the minister outlined when he was before the committee. I hope that we can dispose of motion No. 1 soon, and that we can have an answer from the minister on those important questions.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in rising on motion No. 1, asking that the bill be delayed for one year, or until December 31, 1976, I would like to make a few comments regarding the intervention of the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). It was a typical performance by a minister who is again in trouble. He has staggered from crisis to crisis on Bill C-58. He has been trying to ram something through the House for which he has not had the support of his cabinet, his caucus, or his voters, and now he is trying to weasel once again. Then he gets up with a sanctimonious type of approach and goes after the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), suggesting that by asking simple questions the Leader of the Opposition is trying to delay the bill. I really question whether the minister has any right to consider anyone else to be less pure than he thinks he is on this issue.

Before we even started in the committee we were told that closure would be in effect. They did not exactly use closure, but they told us that the bill would have to be out of the committee by Friday. They said that was it; that was all the time we would have. They said, "We will have the bill back in the House prior to Christmas, and it will be rammed through the House because it is to become effective on January 1, 1976." Now we have a retroactive bill on our hands. I say to you very bluntly, Mr. Speaker, that that minister does not have the support of the House. I suggest that if he checked with members of his caucus he would find that he does not have the support of many of them, either. All that happened today clouded the issue further. Whenever we asked questions of the minister in the committee, he became defensive and said that we had to get this bill through the House because the effective date was January 1, 1976.

The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) also supported this bill in committee. I imagine he thought it was the greatest thing since rye bread, and he thought it would be great for the periodical association. Today he asked the Minister of National Revenue for clarification and said that he does not really know what we are debating. Then he turned around and said that his party is in favour of the bill. How does he know what he is in favour of? Throughout our debate on Bill C-58, the argument has been that if the large amount of advertising revenue which Reader's Digest and Time get were given to Canadian periodicals, it would help the Canadian Periodical Association and Canadian writers. That has been one of the basic arguments of the proponents of this bill. Yet if Reader's Digest can continue to advertise and to exist, where does that argument go?

An hon. Member: It is out the window.

Mr. Epp: Right, it goes out the window. So really what are we debating at this point? We really do not know. What bothers me more than anything else about the stonewalling and the closure that has been used on Bill C-58 is the arbitrary manner in which this legislation was introduced and is now before the House. Throughout this debate we have been wrestling and shadow-boxing with the so called Cullen rule which was not part of Bill C-58. When we had officials from the Department of National Revenue before the committee, we kept asking them how they would interpret the phrase "not substantially the same". I could just see these dear souls, these gentlemen, running out whenever the issue of Time or Reader's Digest came around. They were somewhat like a chain gang, these people who are supposed to measure how much work was done this week and how much will have to be done next week. I can see the officials of the department bringing out their tape measures to decide whether it is 79 per cent, 80 per cent Canadian content, or whatever. Surely that is not the way to go about passing legislation. Let the minister say what we are debating. Let him tell us what the conditions and the criteria are and how they are to be interpreted. We have been through second reading and committee stage of the bill, but actually we know less today, after the intervention of the Minister of National Revenue, than we knew when the committee returned the bill back to the House. There is less clarity.

● (1640)

This is the arbitrary manner with which Bill C-58 is being dealt. While on one hand the bill is quite clear, the operative or the administrative part which National Revenue would play is not clear. I ask the minister, again, whether our interpretation of the deal he apparently has worked out with Reader's Digest is correct. Our interpretation is that if Reader's Digest international commissions an article, that article appears in any Reader's Digest magazine other than the Canadian one and then it subsequently appears in the Canadian edition, it falls under the 80 per cent rule but if, on the other hand, an article appears, for example, in Redbook, is edited and appears in the U.S. edition of Reader's Digest and then subsequently appears in the Canadian edition, is that acceptable?

An hon. Member: No, it is the other way round.

Mr. Epp: The minister shakes his head. Obviously my interpretation of his arbitrary rule is wrong. I think it is important that the minister again rise in his place and not only refer to the interpretation but put it into the statute. It is important that this be in the legislation so that we can take a position on it and pass the legislation. With regard to this arbitrariness, what happens when we have a new minister? Will an order in council change it again? Can it be thrown out? I imagine it can be. Any subsequent minister can come along and say that the content rule will not apply at all in order for a magazine to qualify as a Canadian magazine. I submit that that is not the way to go forward with this kind of legislation.

A number of us received by hand—I received mine at 1.50 this afternoon—a press release from Reader's Digest Canada which indicates that a backroom deal has been made which will allow Reader's Digest to continue more or less in the manner it has up to the present time. I quote from that press release, or that official communique, as follows:

It was announced by Reader's Digest today that, after an examination in depth of the interpretation and application of section 19 of the Income Tax Act as it will apply if and when Bill C-58 is adopted, and, after discussions with officials of the federal government, it has come to the conclusion that the steps already taken or under way to conform to the amended statute, will permit it to continue to publish its French and English editions in Canada in such a way as to have them classified as Canadian issues of Canadian periodicals for income tax purposes.

The result will be, it stated, that advertisers in its periodicals will continue to have the right to deduct their expenses for advertising space for income tax purposes.

There are a number of questions which arise from that statement. What were the discussions with the officials of the Department of National Revenue? What steps were taken other than those Reader's Digest told the members of the committee about—for example, 30 per cent plus now having Canadian ownership? What other steps has Reader's Digest committed itself to, with the minister and officials of his department, in order that it will conform to the regulations which will classify it as a Canadian edition? Also, I believe the minister should state very clearly what long-term agreement, written or otherwise, Reader's Digest has made with National Revenue officials regarding its Canadianization. Is it a ten-year deal, is it in perpetuity, or what?

We should also have a commitment from the minister as to whether the so-called regulations will be put into the statute. We have many questions at the present time, but the major argument, obviously, must be with regard to the arbitrary approach being used. The Secretary of State and the minister are telling us to leave this matter in their hands, to let them make the rules, to let them make the backroom deals, and that we as members of the opposition, and the Canadian people in general, should be satisfied because those two ministers will make the best deal possible. That is what they are saying, and that is not good enough. The matter of the arbitrary manner in which this rule will be interpreted must be discussed and the minister must stand in his place and clearly explain that situation.

For example, when Time was before the committee, it indicated to us very clearly that it had submitted to National Revenue a so-called 50 per cent Canadian and 50 per cent other than Canadian mock-up for adjudication by officials of the department. During the course of the debate on this bill, Time had been under the impression that a 50 per cent content rule, if it could abide by it, would qualify it as a Canadian magazine if the other matters were adherred to. Obviously, the question for the minister is this: Is a backroom deal also being worked out with Time Canada, and in the not too distant future will we have a press release from them indicating that they, also, have been able to flex their muscles and move the minister to get a deal which will also classify them as Canadian? If that is the case, what has been the point of this whole exercise which is taking the time of the House?

Further, what about the licensing arrangement? Has a change been made in the so-called deal for Reader's Digest and Time with regard to licensing? The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie also mentioned licensing. With all this in mind, and considering the long discussions which have taken place, the bill should be referred back to committee for full disclosure and discussion, without the time restrictions which were placed upon the committee and without the restrictions which were also placed on government members who wanted to sit on that committee and who were in opposition to the bill.

We saw a charade in committee, the like of which I have not seen in my time here. Long-standing, full-time members of the committee were suddenly bumped because they were going to ask embarrassing questions of the minister and his officials and because they were not in favour of this bill. It is incumbent upon us to lift this bill for one year so that during that period of time full disclosure can be made and the Minister of National Revenue can give us a commitment that the administrative regulations will be incorporated in proposed legislation which can be debated in this House.

I should like to serve notice that I will move that the bill be referred back to committee once we get to third reading stage.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Sharp (on behalf of the Minister of Finance): That Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, be concurred in.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, if I have not yet taken part in the debate on Bill C-58 it is not because I believe that this legislation is not important; on the contrary this issue is, in my opinion, most important. However I wanted to listen to what my colleagues had to say about this legislation which directly concerns two magazines now published in Canada, namely Time and Reader's Digest. After listening to the interventions for and against this legislation, I can only urge that consideration of the bill be postponed, according to the amendment.

I hope that government members will pay attention to the arguments that were or will be put forward by the members of the opposition for I sincerely believe that no member should support such a legislation which will destroy the freedom of the press in Canada. This bill was introduced by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) with the view of putting those two magazines on the same footing as other Canadian publications.

Since the publication of the Davey report on mass media, I believe everybody agreed that only truly Canadian publications should be granted tax deduction for advertisements appearing in their columns. So far, Mr. Speaker, I think everyone agrees, and even Time magazine has clearly indicated its intention of being bought off by Canadian interests so as to comply with the requirements of the bill. Selection may have done the same thing, namely become a genuinely Canadian magazine, in spite of its initial lack of enthusiasm for this prospect.

Unfortunately the government allowed itsef to be carried away by nationalist feelings. Not content with trying to make Canadian publications out of Time and Selection by encouraging Canadian interests to purchase them, the government decided to go further and to interfere with the content and the nature of the articles published in those magazines. This in my view, Mr. Speaker, is a gross and unforgivable abuse of power.

We are not in Germany under Hitler's domination nor are we is the USSR under Stalin's, we are still living in Canada, a country where democracy and the freedom of the press should always be very well protected.

Does the present government wish to be remembered as the government that restrained and destroyed the freedom of the press in Canada? It is remembered as a government that has told the newspapers: "Publish 80 per cent of this and 20 per cent of that, but publish this article and not that one because it is not Canadian". And yet that is more or less what is advocated under the stupid Cullen rule which requires that the content of a magazine be 80 per cent Canadian in order that those who advertise in it may obtain income tax deductions. I just cannot find words to say how shocked I am by this unjustifiable intervention of the government in this field where freedom is sacred.

Today, the government requests us to let it control the percentage of Canadian articles in magazines; so what will prevent it from coming back soon and ask us to let it control the ideas expressed in those magazines under the pretext that they are not as consistent as they should be with Canadian ideas?

The step that the government wants to take today with the adoption of Bill C-58 is extremely dangerous. It is a step towards dictatorship. The government should be aware of the dangers that Bill C-58 will create for the future of the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, the government should differ passage of Bill C-58 for a year, as requested in the amendment under consideration today, or the bill should be replaced by some provisions granting tax deductions for advertising space in Canadian-owned publications only. Such a measure would help to reassure all Canadians who rightly wish to see Canadian publications become more prosperous and better able to meet fair competition from foreign publications.

It is very hard for Canadians to understand this government's attitude when it comes to protecting Canadian interests against our powerful southern neighbours. Indeed, the government has no qualms, as far as publications are concerned, in using brutal force to the extent of endangering freedom of the press, while, in other fields where Canadian interests are strongly threatened, it does not even lift a finger.

For example, it is well known that Canadian car rental companies are now facing unfair competition from giant American companies. The Canadian government, far from helping them in that connection, leane them to struggle without any assistance against the giant financial interests of American companies.

The Canadian government is not consistent with itself, not does it appear logical to Canadians. On the one hand, under the pretext of promoting Canadian publications, it puts the blame on the freedom of the press and, on the other hand, it allows Canadian car rental companies to be crushed by American companies. How can we have confidence in the good will of such a government? Further, the minister in charge of the Secretary of State does not deserve any congratulations for the manner in which he has piloted this bill. He repeatedly said in this House in May last that the exact meaning of the words "which is not substantially of the same kind" would be known in advance by the magazines involved. We now know that it was only very late in October—hardly two months before the date it came into force—that the Minister of Revenue made known his interpretation. We also know that, because of the effects, this interpretation—which calls for a Canadian content of 80 per cent—is the most explosive and the most dangerous legislative proposal of all measures now under consideration in this House. Had the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) proceeded with a minimum of competence, he would have taken the trouble to consult the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) before presenting his bill. His clumsiness and negligence in this affair are inexcusable. All Canadians know he was talking through his hat last May when he said that the Department of National Revenue was ready to produce its interpretation. And today, Mr. Speaker, all Canadians know that the former Minister of National Revenue was talking about a 50 per cent Canadian content before the present minister introduced the 80 per cent rule. I therefore cannot accept the attitude of the minister responsible for this bill and his performance will no doubt be cited as an example when it comes to showing how to present a bill.

The Secretary of State has been stubborn in his incompetence, and has persisted in the repeated mistakes he has made during the discussion of this bill. I understand the irrritation of the directors of Time and Reader's Digest, when they said:

In the face of uncertainty, we may have to close down . . .

—even if today the minister tells us that the publication of the same magazines may go on under some arrangements with the government, but they said they were ready to close down not because they do not want to comply with the law but because they were able to determine with a reasonable minimum of certainty what this bill says.

I would like to come back to the question of the dangers this bill will represent for the future of the freedom of the press in Canada, because this consideration is the most important of all. It is necessary, Mr. Speaker, to insist on the fact that all newspapers in the country are unanimous in condemning firmly the measure put forward by the Government.

La Presse of Montreal says without hesitation: "The measure is "a masterpiece of stupidity". "The Toronto Globe and Mail writes: "A foolish and dangerous censorship". The Edmonton Journal headlines: "An unjustified measure in a free society". And I could quote hundreds of articles and thousands of statements which agree that Bill C-58 is a menace to the freedom of the press and the freedom of speech in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the minister proved himself to be very determined in insisting that his bill be passed, despite the lifting of shields by all who believe in the freedom of the press. Determination is often a quality. But, in this instance, Mr. Speaker, I doubt that it is. It reveals a tragic lack of common sense and realism.

Mr. Speaker, let us reflect for a few moments on the consequences of Bill C-58 if it is applied in its present form. Contents should be 80 per cent Canadian. Let us suppose that in the course of a week, five events occur, namely, war breaks out in the Middle East, Brezhnev resigns or is replaced, a flying saucer really lands in Japan, the Queen of England resigns, and the Prime Minister of Canada decides to build himself an even larger pool. As no Canadian publication can afford to send journalists everywhere throughout the world, and bearing in mind the fact that our newpapers and magazines must respect the 80 per cent Canadian content rule, we stand a chance of getting a paper or magazine 80 per cent of which would be devoted to the Prime Minister's new pool, the four other events being relegated to the last pages.

Mr. Speaker, one sees immediately that the 80 per cent content rule threatens the Canadian people, primarily with not being properly informed of international events. Who, Mr. Speaker, would ever want that kind of situation? Yet, that will be the result of Bill C-58 if it is applied strictly.

It is as easy to imagine a crowd of officials with a lot of rules trying to read the articles to ascertain that 80 per cent of the pages are filled with Canadian texts. It is really a nightmare, Mr. Speaker. Adoption of this legislation must be delayed or the bill withdrawn by the government. If the government and the Secretary of State persist in their attitudes, I hope there will be enough members in this House to delay the adoption of this bill, which is ridiculous and dangerous.

As a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge the minister responsible to think it over. Is he prepared to leave his name tied to a piece of legislation which directly undermines the freedom of the press and of speech in Canada? Does he want our country to recall him as the man who struck the first blow against the liberties which we hold as heritage since the existence of Canada? If he wants us to remember him by a saying that he was able to preserve those liberties, he must withdraw this bill or delay its adoption as required in the amendment.

[English]

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to express my sentiments on this bill, but suggest that our being forced to participate in this debate, and the government's procedure in bringing this bill forward now, shows that the government is in a shambles. With your indulgence, may I read to the House the exchange which took place yesterday evening as recorded on page 10561 of Hansard. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) rose on a point of order and asked if we were to continue debating Bill C-68 today. Hansard records the following exchange after the hon. member spoke:

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE): We were told otherwise.

MR. BLAIS: Mr. Speaker, it is my information that tomorrow we are to continue with Bill C-68.

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This afternoon at three o'clock the government House leader said definitely that we would not go on with Bill C-68 tomorrow but consider either Bill C-58 or Bill C-81, or he would see the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau).

MR. BLAIS: Mr. Speaker, further to the point of order, my information is that we are to deal with Bill C-68 tomorrow.

MR. KNOWLES (WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE): You can't trust those Liberals.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: Considering the sorts of remarks the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has made, I am really surprised to note that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) supports the government on this particular bill.

Mr. Beatty: You can't trust those socialists, either.

Mr. Towers: I think the assessment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was correct, and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie would be well advised to reconsider his position and support the amendment before the House.

Mr. MacFarlane: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope the hon. member will indicate that the remark he read, attributed to the House leader of the NDP, was made in levity and not in seriousness. I hope he is not suggesting anything else.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shall I rise on another point of order?

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members opposite do not realize the difficulties they are apt to encounter from trying to proceed with this legislation at this point in time. There is no reason for this House to be asked to deal with legislation of this kind, especially in view of the information that came to the attention of members of parliament this afternoon as a result of the circular all members received from Reader's Digest. What is to happen to other publications? Other magazines and periodicals will be affected by this legislation. What will happen to TV Guide, to our medical journals and other journals which the Canadian people like to read? You know, I always like to have a new coat before I throw my old one away. I suggest that the House would be well advised to delay this legislation for 12 months, which is what the amendment suggests, and reconsider the entire gamut of the matter.

I have had great respect for the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and hope what I have to say will not force him to stay out of the House for too long. His statement regarding the 80 per cent content, 80 per cent the same as, or the 80 per cent difference rule—whichever way you want to interpret it—was most unfortunate and dangerous. I don't care what the minister says and I care less for the government. I say emphatically that the minute any government begins to decide what the Canadian people shall read, it becomes very, very dangerous. I am surprised that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie goes along with the government in this regard. You do not build up the weak by tearing down the strong. It seems to me that there are other ways to help Canadian periodicals develop, other ways to help them become strong.

I am happy to see the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey) in the House. I am sure he knows that increased postage costs have created financial difficulties for many periodicals. The magazine Country Guide is not nearly as large a publication as it once was, mainly because of the cost of postage. I suggest we can support Canadian periodicals in many ways. Why are we not looking at those ways and means of supporting the industry within Canada? I am sure we in the opposition are just as great Canadian supporters as anyone else in Canada. Nevertheless, why do we have to try to tear down the strong in order to build up the weak?

In committee I took issue with a promoter of Maclean's magazine because there was such a large amount of advertising in that periodical. At one point it was 60 per cent, which means 60 pages out of 100. Unfortunately, many of those 60 pages were advertising American liquor. Is the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) saying that it is all right for Canadian magazines to advertise American liquor rather than publicize commentaries that are acceptable, required and in some cases almost necessary because Canadians like them? Many Canadians like to peruse these magazines.

This government would be well advised to really consider this amendment. The bill should be taken out of the House for 12 months and sent back to committee. The minister shakes his head. It is unfortunate that he has become dogmatic and is going to force this issue even though there have been so many inconsistencies. Since the presentation of this bill, changes have been made. We had 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 70 per cent and 80 per cent. This is frustrating for everyone. Why should we have had to wait 12 months on this legislation and then, at the very last moment, a statement has been made? We have no guarantee that the statement will be correct that there is provision for Reader's Digest to survive.

We then came to the point where there is a real problem. Who is to decide that it will be 80 per cent different? I cannot accept this. I believe it is a right of the Canadian people to decide for themselves what they want to read and when they want to read it. If we are going to continue entering into state control in all facets of our way of living, I suppose we are going to have to accept it. However, just because we are entering into a program of economic control that is to last for three years, we should not have to accept a publishing control that may be for all time.

It is most unfortunate that any minister, not necessarily this Minister of National Revenue, or any government by any whim of fancy can change the whole aspect of this. This is a very dangerous precedent that we are setting here today. I hope the minister and the government will reconsider and accept this amendment. They should take the legislation back to committee where it can be reconsidered once again and adequately amended. This is an unprecedented move. It is beneath the dignity of this House of Commons. I hope the minister will give it further consideration.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, like many of my colleagues, I appreciate the opportuniy of speaking to and supporting this amendment. I spoke at some length when the bill originally came into the House. I pointed out then that I felt the great majority of Canadians thought the bill was very unfair. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) who stated that we all agree that Canadian magazines and Canadian writers must—be helped. However, this should not be done at the expense of doing away with Time and Reader's Digest. That is the view of a great many people of Canada, especially the older families.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) mentioned that this bill has generated a lot of mail pro and con. I agree with him to some extent. However, the great majority of mail that came into my office was in favour of continuing Reader's Digest. I would say it was about 25 to 1. I know that at one time I had received about 250 letters. I would point out to the Secretary of State, who is standing in the confessional at the back, that the letters are again starting to come in. Therefore, people must be concerned about this matter.

Many people have questioned the 80 per cent that was set by the government or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). They feel that Reader's Digest will not be as good a magazine. Many people stated in their letters that of all the magazines that came into their houses, Reader's Digest was the only one they really liked and respected. They do not want anything done to change that. I hope the minister gives that matter serious consideration. The directive that was issued today by the Reader's Digest officials came as a shock and a surprise to many members including, I am sure, some on the government side.

Our spokesman for this particular bill, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) had to leave early in order to visit the constituency of the Secretary of State. I hope he will put the situation to them plainly. The Reader's Digest press release came as a great surprise to many of us. As the House leader of the NDP said, Bill C-58 is thrown in here again. The government does not know from one day to the next what bill it will bring into the House. A great many of us would have been interested in more clarification from Reader's Digest and the Minister of National Revenue on this press release. It might have had some bearing on this debate and might possibly have shortened it.

Many of us are skeptical and worried. As was pointed out by previous speakers, the Minister of National Revenue may interpret the bill one way, but his successors, after reading an article which may be critical of their department of the government, could have another interpretation. In that event, the headsman's axe or the witch hunt would start again.

In today's mail I received a clipping from someone in Regina. I do not know why it was sent to me, when we have so many western members. It came from Grace Stewart, of Regina, who wrote:

● (1720)

Can you possibly help do something about this and help prevent the government pursuing its present collision course with Reader's Digest?

Application of Bill C-58 to Reader's Digest and Time magazine, to deprive the publications of Canadian status, sets a precedent that is frightening.

The legislation to amend section 19 of the Income Tax Act revises the regulations which grant Canadian status to foreign-based newspapers and periodicals.

Not many people will question the authority of parliament to enact the legislation. Application of it retroactively, however, to established Canadian corporations is another matter.

Reader's Digest and Time magazine were granted Canadian status several decades ago under R.S.C. 1952, and are, by law, Canadian publications with inherited responsibilities and rights.

One of the rights, under the Canadian Bill of Rights, 1960, part 1, section (b), is the right to equality of the law and the protection of the law.

The law is defined under part II, section (2) of the act to mean an Act of the Parliament of Canada, enacted before or after the coming into force of the act, any order, rule, or regulation thereunder and any law in force at the commencement of the act that may be subject to be repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada.

In assuming authority to go beyond the law, the government has made the law a nullity.

Today the hand of power is directed against Reader's Digest and Time magazine, tomorrow it could be someone else. An amendment to the Immigration Act could take away the Canadian citizenship of immigrants who have become Canadian citizens.

Another letter I received recently reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Darling:

[Mr. Darling.]

Thank you for the information on the debates with reference to Reader's Digest and the tax policies. You certainly did everything possible to help let the Digest continue as before. We seem to be on the losing team this time, but thank you for speaking out for us.

That letter came from Mr. and Mrs. A. Baston, of Gravenhurst, Ontario. Let us hope we are not on the losing side this time after all and that something can still be done. I am hoping that the government will yet decide to take account of the views which members of the opposition have expressed. I am speaking primarily on behalf of Reader's Digest. I know this issue was discussed and fought in committee. I know, too, that the government's own supporters are not 100 per cent in favour of the bill.

I think of certain members of the standing committee on the government side who were, in fact, against the bill. I think of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), and others. There are a great many more who may not have spoken, but those were members of the committee and they did their best to get the government to change its mind. That is one reason I am speaking in favour of the amendment recommending that the bill be given a year's hoist during which the government can reconsider its position, allowing us to consider the matter a second time.

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my remarks with respect to motions 1 and 12 in connection with Bill C-58 will be quite brief. I had not intended to speak at this stage until I heard the remarks of the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) which I thought were ill-tempered and partisan. I think it is worth while addressing myself to some of the points raised by the minister, and also to put on record my concern about the government's attitude.

The government has made it quite clear that it intends, whatever the opposition might be within the country, within this House or within its own caucus, to force this bill through parliament as rapidly as possible. I think it is bad legislation. I think the government should take a second look at it before requiring it to be passed. I support motions 1 and 12 which would result in one year's delay in the implementation of the legislation because this would give the government a chance to reconsider its policy and reverse its direction.

There was an interesting development today with the announcement by Reader's Digest that it feels the deal cooked up with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) will enable the publication to continue in business. This is an important development. We were told time after time, as government members spoke on this legislation, that it was vitally important to the survival of the Canadian periodical industry that Reader's Digest Canada be put out of business and that its advertising revenue be made available to other Canadian publications.

It is interesting that the government should have changed its mind on this issue. It doesn't feel this is important any more. It doesn't feel it is crucial that Reader's Digest be put out of business. The Government felt the pressure within its own caucus, within the country at large, and it has finally retreated. It has recognized that it would be extremely unpopular in the country at the present time to force this legislation upon the Canadian people. So it has left one target. The government is not terribly concerned about peripheral publications such as MD Canada which would be affected by this legislation, but they are concerned about Time. That is the target which is left. The government is willing to sacrifice its attack on Reader's Digest but it remains—the Secretary of State shakes his head and I can hear him from here.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Faulkner: The hon. member should inform himself.

Mr. Beatty: The Secretary of State says I should inform myself. Certainly, listening to the comments made by the Secretary of State and by the Minister of National Revenue it would be very hard to glean much heard information from either of them. I think the most important thing, watching the performance of the Minister of National Revenue today, was to see how he reversed himself on the policy. He has decided, in an arbitrary fashion, to interpret the legislation in a very different way from the way he said earlier he would be interpreting it. Now, apparently, Reader's Digest is to stay alive.

After news release which was referred to earlier, Mr. Speaker, put out by the Reader's Digest Corporation, they heaved an audible sigh of relief about the fact that the government had reversed itself and felt there could not be an accommodation between Reader's Digest and the Minister of National Revenue. Mr. Speaker, before Reader's Digest feels too comfortable in its new position, before it feels its future is assured, it should take a look at the track record of this government. It should ask itself whether to trust the government to continue to support the policy which has just been announced by the minister or whether, in the erratic fashion in which it has been acting today, the government is not apt to reverse itself again in the future.

The government has been legislating by interpretation in this matter. Then make quite clear what they want to do, and then they find some way around the law without even coming before parliament—as in the case of the 80 per cent difference provision—and thus find some way to force their will upon parliament and the Canadian people. When it suits their purposes to do so, Mr. Speaker, they can keep on flipping back and forth, and it may be that Reader's Digest will find once again that they are put on the firing line. They should be aware of this and should look critically at the behaviour of the government before the standing committee.

The Secretary of State, when he spoke earlier, talked of the very open nature of the proceedings before the committee and of the debate which we have carried on in connection with this piece of legislation. Mr. Speaker, if the proceedings in the committee were an example of openness and of the government's perception of the way in which legislation should be handled, I fear for this country's future. I think what has happened in this parliament, and what was exemplified very well by the government's behaviour in the committee as this bill was being studied, is that the government has proven itself to be contemptuous of the rights of parliament and contemptuous of the rights of the Canadian people. They did not have any time for dissent on this bill. The minister himself is very intolerant of people who express opinions which differ from his own. He made that clear in his remarks today. He just wants to put this legislation through, no matter how people feel.

If you take a look at the government's behaviour in committee you will see it has followed a course of action, which I think is very dangerous, in saying that there would be a time limit put on the debate in the committee whether the committee members liked it or not. The government said there was a time limit by which the bill would have to be reported back to the House of Commons, and that the government would put it through the House whether we liked it or not.

At that committee there were a number of Liberal members who had the courage of their convictions to stand up and say they disagreed with the position taken by the government, that they felt this was bad legislation and should not be passed. How were they rewarded for that courage? Let us take the case of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the former chairman of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. I had the honour in the last parliament to serve on that committee under his chairmanship and I feel he was a very excellent chairman. He was one member of the Liberal caucus who stood and said that in his judgment this was bad legislation. He had the courage to do that in spite of the fact that the government does not look very kindly upon people who speak their own minds. What happened to him? He was not allowed to speak by the Liberal members.

The only way in which a Liberal member who disagrees with government policy can be allowed to speak before a committee is by that member going to the opposition and asking for opposition time to speak.

An hon. Member: That is not correct.

Mr. Beatty: This is the government's attitude and this is the way in which it is dealing with this legislation. I think when the publishers of Reader's Digest issue news releases and applaud the course of direction taken by the government they should take a look at the government's track record and the government's erratic behaviour to date. They should take a look at the way the government views those who dissent in respect of government decisions, and they should fear for their future as a publishing entity in Canada.

The minister's problem with this bill is not that he is faced with opposition from this side of the House or that we have been unreasonable in any way in our dealings with the bill. The problem is that the minister has handled the bill in a very incompetent fashion. This piece of legislation is the bright, shining epitome of the government's approach toward the problems of periodicals in Canada.

I asked the minister during the second reading debate, and I ask him again now, when will the government be introducing a Canadian periodicals policy? What is the government's policy in respect of Canadian publishing? We know what it is. It is to continue the vendetta against Time and Reader's Digest, and I do not think that is acceptable in Canada today.

The members on this side of the House feel very strongly that positive action should be taken to encourage the growth, the health, and the vitality of the Canadian periodicals industry. The minister has done nothing to encourage or sustain the vitality of that industry. Before the minister forces this legislation through the House and puts this piece of punitive legislation into effect we should be able to give him time to reconsider his policies and present parliament with a Canadian periodicals policy which will give positive incentive to Canadian publishers.

I am pleased to see that Maclean's magazine has decided to go bi-weekly and become a news magazine. This is a healthy development in Canada and I applaud it. No member on this side of the House would in any way want to denigrate the development that has taken place. I do not know of any member on this side who would want in any way to discourage the development of new Canadian periodicals which are spoken of from time to time in these debates. None of us would want to discourage the development of a truly indigenous Canadian news magazine.

The minister in answer to questioning at the committee by myself, I believe last summer or spring, indicated that there were at least two or three groups looking at the possibility of establishing a new Canadian news weekly. Where are these groups? They have not surfaced. We have not seen an indication that if we drive Time of Canada out of business we will in fact have a wholly new Canadian news weekly. I think it is incumbent upon the minister, before he forces this legislation through parliament, to tell us what groups there are at the present time which have made a firm commitment to establish a new Canadian news weekly, and we would like to see this. We would also like to be able to have the opportunity of questioning the minister on the positive incentives he is giving to groups to form news weekly publications in Canada.

What is at issue here is really the right of Canadians to read what they want to read. Certainly it was made clear to me over the course of the Christmas recess that Canadians resent the increasing government involvement in their day-to-day lives. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) perhaps does not, and he has told us it is going to be necessary for even greater government control of our day-to-day activities.

Canadians who for many years have supported Canadian Time and Reader's Digest are asking for nothing more than the opportunity to continue as they have in the past to read the periodicals they enjoy. The government, for some inexplicable reason, is anxious to deprive them of that right. That is a wrong and disastrous course of action for the government to be following at this time.

If Reader's Digest can survive, as it has indicated today in its news release, this is very interesting because the government will have admitted defeat on one of the things it wanted to do. It is quite clear, if you read speech after speech made by government members on second reading of this bill, that they were anxious to do away with Reader's Digest in Canada, and did not like the sort of service provided Canadians by Time Magazine. It is quite clear in this case, if what Reader's Digest says is correct, that at least in respect of Reader's Digest the government has admitted defeat and decided that Reader's Digest should be allowed to continue. This is one very important development that has taken place today. The government has retreated on one aspect of this bill.

This whole issue raises questions of economic and cultural nationalism. I believe we should do whatever we can to repatriate our economy and culture to Canada. I believe this should be done by strong, positive incentives which will allow Canadians to encourage entrepreneurship. I am sure that Canadians would support the government in passing legislation which sets rules of behaviour for corporations operating in Canada, and I believe that multinational corporations operating in Canada are willing to accept that. Some of the argument that has been made in respect of this legislation is that this is precisely what the government is doing. I do not think that is the case.

A couple of years ago the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and I had the opportunity of travelling to Washington and talking to the people there who run the Canadian desk in the U.S. State Department. We asked them about this question of economic and cultural nationalism, and what American reaction, both governmental and of the business community, was to Canadian action attempting to Canadianize our economy. I was surprised by the response. I had initially expected there would be a certain amount of hostility among Americans to a Canadian attempt to take control of our own economy. I was surprised to learn that was not the case.

The official with whom I spoke stressed the fact that Americans recognize that we must be the masters in our own house. They recognize the fact that Canadian nationalism and Canadian independence are a healthy force in the world today. They recognize it is necessary and quite proper that we should take action to protect our interests and to encourage Canadian culture.

These people made the point very clearly that they were prepared to live with whatever rules were set by the Canadian government. They felt that the American business community was willing to abide by these rules. However, they pleaded with us that, once we set the standards for American corporations operating in Canada, we live up to our own regulations. They cited instances where the government had simply reversed itself overnight; having set standards of behaviour for Americans operating in Canada it changed the rules in the middle of the game. This is clearly the case in respect of this legislation.

The government has brought in legislation before. At the present time there are regulations governing the conduct of Reader's Digest in Canada. For some unknown reason the minister has decided it is not good enough that they abide by the laws which have been passed by the Parliament of Canada, and not good enough that they attempt to be good corporate citizens in following the regulations which were set by the government from time to time. Now he wants to do away with these companies operating in Canada.

This is the sort of reversal or flip-flop on the part of the government that has done so much damage to our relations with our neighbours to the south. Those people recognize and accept the concept that Canadians should take strong action to repatriate control over our own economy, but they say that once we set the rules and pass the legislation in this parliament, and once we say to foreigners that they are welcome to operate in Canada as long as they abide by our regulations and our laws here, we should stop flip-flopping overnight and completely reversing ourselves. I think Canadians, and the other people who would like to operate in this country, are entitled to better behaviour on the part of our government.

Before Christmas the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack) raised another point at which I think we should take a look. I refer to the effect the government's action will have on the stock of Reader's Digest. The people who have invested in the stock will find that their equity has turned down because of the government's action. I think many Canadians, who are not rich or powerful, are trying to save for retirement by investing in such a company. The action of the government simply will take away a part of the nest egg they have been trying to set up for their retirement. I think this is a point which should be recognized by the government.

I repeat that this bill is not in the interest of the Canadian public and industry. The government is proven to be bankrupt when it comes to producing incentives for Canadians to develop a strong and viable publishing industry in Canada.

The minister has lost the respect of the Canadian cultural industry. He has been forced to go incognito with his new beard so that he will not be recognized by angry artists who are tired of the vacillation they see today. I think members on this side of the House feel very strongly that the government has a responsibility to come up with strong, positive policies to encourage Canadian cultural nationalism and give the artistic community an opportunity to survive and prosper. This legislation does not do that. It is punitive, unfair, and bad legislation. I believe this legislation should be set aside for another year before it is put into effect.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, there are a few things I should like to say about this legislation at this point in time. It seems to have a tendency to degrade this institution and the people in it by leaving the impression with the public that members of parliament do not have a voice and are not heard, but I think the fact that members of parliament in all corners of this House have expressed some of the reactions of the Canadian public shows that we do have a concern and speak out about that concern on our own part and on the part of our constituents.

I believe the public has taken some heart from the fact that spokesmen from all parts of this House have expressed their views in the hope that perhaps the government would respond. While I am not completely happy about the way in which the government has responded, I should say that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) at the very least has ears that hear, and has a public perception of what people want, as well as an appreciation that perhaps culture cannot be legislated or that social habits cannot be legislated, as some of his colleagues unfortunately seem to believe.

From that point of view I always feel it is great when parliament is strengthened in any way and when members of parliament, regardless of their political affiliations, stand up and are counted on behalf of their constituents. In that regard I would have to say the ruling in respect of the regulations indicated by the minister is a victory for the individual member of parliament in this Chamber.

Second, I should like to say that unfortunately, as so often happens, once again the deliberations of the committees associated with this parliament have been proven to be useless and worthless from the point of view of really producing something of value and benefit to the Chamber. Committees are asked to consider in depth the legislation that is placed before the House. Witnesses are invited from all parts of the nation to appear before committees to express their views. Then in some minister's office negotiations are carried out that are not heard by members of the committee and that are not a part of the report rendered by the committee.

The government made a farce of the committee which considered this legislation by moving members in and out of it in a game of musical chairs when it was found that some members voiced dissent in respect of the government's proposals. Then at the eleventh hour the people affected sat down with the minister and his officials, and all of a sudden a magic formula appears which changes the whole concept of what the legislation is purported to do. That, unfortunately, is the bad aspect of parliament and what it stands for; it is a bad aspect of the committee system so far as this parliament is concerned.

I remember an occasion when the Standing Committee on National Defence was supposed to be considering what our posture would be in respect of NATO. In the midst of our hearings the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a pronouncement which did not even take into account the fact that the committee was deliberating on the matter. He cut them off at the pass concerning what they might produce. How can members of parliament take committees seriously when this happens time and time again when the committees are considering propositions that have been placed before them? That is the sad part of what has happened today.

What bothers me, my leader, and most members who are taking part in the debate on this subject is that here we have a firm that is in the business of publishing which has a deep concern about what its future in this nation would be if the legislation should become effective, whose representatives find themselves in the unfortunate position of going to a minister's office and accepting a proposition in relation to regulations as to the future of their operations.

I have no doubt that the Minister of National Revenue is as good as his word. He always has been with me and in this House. I am sure he will always be so long as he is a member of this House, either in cabinet or outside cabinet. I know that any businessman who had to rely on what this minister told him could feel confident about the word of the minister, but I am very concerned about the fact that he might not always be the Minister of National Revenue. Indeed he should not be, because he is a man with much ability and promise who could do a lot of good for the country if he were in the right positions in government. This company, however, has to rely on the interpretation of his successors in respect of the regulations. I would not want to be a businessman in this country if I had to depend from day to day on the word of any minister of any government in respect of the interpretation of regulations.

There are 500 employees in this country who rely on what the government does about these regulations, and who would like to know whether or not they will get their pay check at the end of every week. I do not think that we as members of parliament should subject any group of individuals to such a guillotine. For that reason I suggest to the minister that he consider this amendment before us, or bring in some other amendment to the legislation which would give more strength to what he is now proposing with regard to Reader's Digest.

Canadians in general believe that Reader's Digest should continue to be a Canadian publication because they like it, they subscribe to it, they enjoy it, and they want it. I think that the minister and the government came to that conclusion belatedly, and because they hate to face that fact they might have to involve themselves in a completely new debate on this bill they are endeavouring to do by the back door what most Canadians want them to do by the front door. I say there is no reason why we cannot do it by the front door.

I do not think there is any major argument about any other aspect of this legislation, and because it would be in the best interest of parliament to get this legislation out of the way so that we can deal with other things I would like to urge the minister to consider this amendment, or to bring in another amendment putting into effect what he proposes to do by regulation so that Reader's Digest may feel they have a guarantee not just for today or for the duration of the minister's tenure as the Minister of National Revenue, or for the tenure of this government, but for all time until a government comes in with another piece of legislation some day in the future and says it wants to change the rules whereby we, and the people of Canada, will know that the only way in which a change can be made is through parliament and that members of parliament will be given an opportunity to have their say about what the change will be.

It worries me a lot to think that the government feels that it can find a method or a device at the eleventh hour to do something that we have been urging it to do all along because it knew that it would not be an easy task to get this legislation through the House without using closure. Surely that would be the most retrograde step possible which would make Canadians believe that not only do they have a government forcing legislation on them which dictates their cultural and reading habits but that it was imposing these things upon them by closure.

I do not know how hard I have to work to convince the minister that there is another way in which he can do it, a way which would give a guarantee to Reader's Digest, and a guarantee to members of parliament who have tried so hard to convince the government that this is what should be done. The minister should offer the Canadian people an assurance that what they want will take place in the proper way. This is what I urge on the minister.

I think the minister will find that a degree of co-operation from members of this House which has not existed up to now because of the step he has taken will be forthcoming if he accepts my suggestion. I think there is a major difference between Time magazine and Reader's Digest. Reader's Digest is the type of magazine that relates to people in a completely different way. It has given a great deal of security to a great many Canadian writers. I think they are desperately concerned about their future in continuing their writing for Reader's Digest in the days ahead if that magazine is put out of business.

I think also that magazines such as MD are in need of some assurances. That magazine might well conform with the regulations that the minister has brought down for Reader's Digest and therefore be able to continue its publication. I think it is a most useful magazine both for the medical profession and the public in providing information about the health and well-being of our citizens. It is a magazine that does not interfere with any other magazine of the same calibre in this nation, and therefore we should do everything we can to ensure that Canadians have access to it.

I urge the minister to transfer the proposition he put before the House earlier today into some form of amendment so that this legislation can be passed by the House, and so that we can get on to other business of value and benefit to the nation. If we were to do that it would give hope to the people of this country that Canadians are heard by the government when they speak out and when they find representatives in all parties to voice their concerns, because the action of the government will be an indication that it has heard them.

Perhaps the government took a long time, and perhaps it took members on the government side to stand up in committee courageously and oppose the government's legislation, sometimes only to find out that they were no longer members of the committee and were replaced by other members who would go along with what the government said. Perhaps that was necessary to convince the government of the seriousness of members of parliament when they proposed that Reader's Digest should be allowed to continue in existence in this country.

I am looking now at the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), who was certainly in the forefront of the fight to allow Reader's Digest to continue to live. He deserves our congratulations. He is a man who puts the feelings of the nation and of his constituents above party loyalty, not on every issue but on important issues. He does not really feel the government should be dictating what we see, write, and read. I congratulate him, and I say to him that because of actions such as he has taken parliament is a stronger and better place for all of us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, on November 24, 1975, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) spoke at the opening of the CBC centre in Vancouver, and toward the end of his remarks he had this to say about Bill C-58, which is really his latest pronouncement: "At this time I cannot say how effective the legislation will be. We will have to give it time." Unfortunately the bill has not had time to be passed, to be brought into being or to work, let alone to become established.

We cannot demand a guarantee of success every time the government brings in legislation, and we do not in this case. However, while guarantees are unnecessary, surely there should be some likelihood of success before the government asks this House to approve a measure such as this. I suggest to the minister that there is no such likelihood in the case of Bill C-58. On what basis do I make this suggestion? I make this suggestion having sat on the committee and heard, time and time again, from witness after witness that Bill C-58 cannot and will not achieve what it was set up to accomplish.

What seems to be the purpose of this measure? It seems that the purpose of this measure at many different levels, and from perhaps even the smaller, more insignificant level, is just taxation, and it applies to the larger and broader issues of Canadian cultural identity, Canadianism and so forth. I wish to address myself to that element a little later on, but first I should like to outline some of the other reasoning involved. It is claimed that this measure is intended to encourage the growth of a strong and viable Canadian broadcasting and publishing industry. How? It will do so by denying to all advertisers in non-Canadian media the right to deduct the cost of such advertising from income tax as a business expense.

Since this bill has received second reading I cannot reiterate my opinion that it is unfortunate that the very basic principle is at fault, but because the principle is at fault, this amendment should pass. This amendment will delay implementation, and by delaying implementation perhaps the government will have an opportunity to see that a great business principle established throughout the world should be maintained in Canada.

The question is then, will this method prove successful in the stated aim of strengthening Canadian broadcasting and publishing? Again I suggest that the answer is no. Furthermore, this measure will do great damage to many Canadians, to those whose jobs will be lost and to those who may lose the reading and viewing material which has been available and which gave them a broader freedom of choice.

With regard to the potential effectiveness of Bill C-58, the first point to be made is that there is substantial evidence that no significant amounts of advertising revenue will accrue to Canadian media as a result of this measure. Of those non-Canadian media most affected, Time magazine has vowed to reduce its advertising rates to compensate its clients for the loss of tax deductibility. KVOS television in Bellingham, Washington, is going to follow the same course. Reader's Digest estimates that only 19 per cent of its current advertising would be diverted to other magazines, and most of that would go to Maclean Hunter. Now that Reader's Digest has indicated that it can reach a compromise and continue to exist under these provisions, that revenue will not accrue to Canada.

The very objective of the bill, to increase revenue to those magazines the government has defined, or seems to have difficulty defining as Canadian, and to bolster our culture as a side effect, will not be met, by the admission of the minister today in the House. So where are the massive amounts of advertising money supposedly released for the Canadian media? Where are they coming from, and how is this bill helping?

The second point to be made here was made before the standing committee by representatives of the Association of Canadian Advertisers. That is a group of 215 companies which together account for over 75 per cent of all expenditures on advertising annually in Canada. Their point is that the reduction in competition resulting from this bill could well have the inverse reaction of reducing, rather than stimulating, the demand for advertising in Canadian periodicals and on television. Mr. Tom Blakely, the president of the association, put it this way:

> Our Association is concerned that if advertising expenditures cease to be deductible in circumstances contemplated by the bill, not only the purpose underlying the bill may not be achieved but also advertisers may be adversely affected.

As a lay politician I quote these people because they are expert in their field. I suggest that their knowledge is at least equal if not superior to the laymen politicians of this House. The professionals in the field tell us that we will have inverse, adverse effect rather than the positive one contemplated in the bill. Mr. Blakely also said:

> Some advertisers might well reduce their expenditures in the magazine medium as a whole and use their dollars in a more efficient or less costly way.
> As outlined in our position paper, Time and Reader's Digest are key factors in many advertisers' decisions to use magazines as an advertising medium. We feel that the bill would impede advertiser access to Time and Reader's Digest. Those publications may cease to publish their Canadian editions. If that happens, many advertisers would face significant cost increases in using magazines to achieve their advertising goals.

● (2010)

In regard to broadcasting he said:

> We therefore feel that the serious reduction of border-station competition will increase the market power of the viable Canadian stations. That may result in higher advertising costs on those stations with these results. Advertisers will have to pay more for time on stations that deliver the audiences they seek and that will leave less money to be spent with new or developing stations so that, in fact, the ability of those stations to grow and become attractive to advertisers may be hindered.

Taken together these two points underline the futility of this bill. No substantial sums of money become available, and what does become available more likely than not will not end up supporting the struggling Canadian media we are supposedly trying to help. For a bill that holds out such meagre hope of yielding any positive results, C-58 has more than its share of negative end products.

It seems to me that as this bill progresses it gets in deeper and deeper. Perhaps it was well intentioned at the start but it might well be left not only for a year, as the amendments suggest, but might well be left, redrafted, and tried again under a little broader objective.

At this point I want to commend the minister, which might seem rather unusual. I think he is attempting to do something in the direction of shaping Canadian identity and I think this is a proper direction. If we look at the definition of what a Canadian is, a very simple dictionary tells us it is "a native or inhabitant of Canada". I think as maturing Canadians we need to move beyond the simple definition. I think we need to make a definition of Canadian newspapers, Canadian magazines, Canadianism and as far as the minister makes that kind of attempt in this bill, I applaud him.

The thing that concerns me is that he seems determined to impose his idea of Canadianism upon Canada—it seems as if he feels bound to get his way and if he does not get his way he will bring in other legislation. The bill itself loses this kind of direction and credibility where we look for this Canadian identity because its first purpose becomes more and more to say yes to 75 per cent Canadian ownership. That will make it more Canadian, so I think it is a good move. But what happens after that, Mr. Speaker? The minister does not stop there but goes on to the "Canadian content different" rule.

All of a sudden what started out as a very high and worthy objective seems to move from a matter of wanting to throw out something—it starts to take on an "anti" tinge just like anti-Americanism or the evils of pro-nationalism. We have to be very careful that our pro-nationalism is not expressed in negativism. I think when we get into this content rule we go a little beyond the positive direction that was initiated in the original pronouncement of this bill.

The minister seems to be talking about Canadianism or Canadian culture. What is this elusive culture that he is attempting to stimulate by this bill? One definition defines culture as the customary beliefs, social forms, and material traits of a racial, religious or social group. The other part of that cultural identity is looked at as the condition of being the same with something described or asserted, or sameness or essential generic characteristics.

All of a sudden we are talking about losing our cultural identity, this identity of Canadianism—but we lose this anyway when in this bill we talk about content differential. If we look to this commonality of beliefs as representing a cultural identity we must ask, what is this commonality and how is it expressed? When we talk about 80 per cent difference we should really be talking about the similarities. I would suggest that between Canadian and American culture there is easily an 80 per cent similarity. In fact, I would say that would be true if comparing our culture with any other culture of mankind. We should be emphasizing the things that we have in common rather than any differences.

When we look at cultural identity I suggest that we have started a thrust here. Even if the minister scraps this bill, delays it, modifies it, or passes it, I hope he will not lose sight of this thrust, this beginning to identification of Canadianism. Indeed I hope he will carry this further because until we decide on a definition of Canadian, how can we determine how we want to get there? The first job is to identify what we are; after we identify what we are then we must decide what we would like to become, what we ought to become, and then decide on measures to work toward this goal. We are doing it all backwards; we are feeling a strong surge of Canadian nationalism and saying, now let's do something about it, before we can even identify what it is.

[Mr. Wenman.]

I think the minister is struggling to find what it is. He talks about the struggle to uphold the ideals of Canadian identity and unity. Those are good words and thoughts, and I think he sincerely means them. The minister is a highly competent and intelligent individual and he knows that is what he was trying to do with this bill, but it is not working. I am sure he knows in his own mind that if he could accomplish only the 75 per cent Canadian ownership he would be better off than muddying the waters as he is doing with this content rule.

The content rule has much broader implications, but I do not think the minister wants a cultural czarism where we say, "This is Canadianism, and this is the border around Canada." That is what the bill is leading up to and I would ask the minister to step back and look at the amendment again. Perhaps he feels that he does not want to lose the progress the bill has made, so the bill could be referred to committee again during this year to grapple with the question of Canadian identity and culture. The subject is so large that we probably would not get near it, but we might discuss what Canadianism is, what a Canadian is, what Canadian identity is and what Canadian culture is. If we reach a common denominator on Canadian culture then we might be able to develop methods for teaching it. We are going in a directionless direction at the moment, and that needs to be changed.

My appeal on this first clause is that the minister accept this amendment and show faith in the parliamentary system, in the committee system. Otherwise this, unfortunately, will be a sad day for democracy.

The minister described the process which led to this legislation and pointed out that the government had considered, in the procedures leading to this legislation, the recommendations of two royal commissions and of the Senate committee. But he forgot to add that the parliamentary committee had also made its contribution. The parliamentary committee was engaged in its deliberations, but the minister did not allow that committee to provide any input. The government did not respond to it. Instead of listening, the minister throttled the committee and throttled his own members, so to speak. That was unfortunate for parliament and Canada, as such a committee can do a great service in establishing this country's cultural identity and showing the direction in which we should move.

I hope the minister will respond this evening and make a positive contribution. Instead of adopting a negative attitude, instead of giving a negative definition as to what a Canadian is and what Canadian culture is, let him be positive and say how we are to move positively in the direction of establishing Canadian identity. We should not move in the direction suggested by this bill.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Madam Speaker, I note that the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) listened with interest to the speech of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman). The hon. member's appeal is valid. I hope it struck a responsive chord in the Secretary of State's mind.

The basic thrust of Bill C-58 is suspect. Frankly I fear that the government is doing again what is has done for some time past, creating an addition to its burgeoning bureaucracy. Actually I can see an entirely new bureaucracy being created. There will be new offices and new appointments, simply to monitor Canadian content. Or is the Canadian content of our Canadian publications so small that we need appoint only one person to measure it, no matter whether he measures it by column inches or percentages? That part of the Bill, I feel, is suspect. That is why I support motion No. 1, in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

I question the ability of any thinking person to distinguish between "different", "substantially different", and "substantially the same", to distinguish between what is truly Canadian, what is pseudo-Canadian, and what is not Canadian. Apparently if a Canadian author were to write an article solely about South America or solely about Africa, his article would be classed as being of Canadian content, even though it is not about Canada. The author is Canadian you see. On the other hand, if an African author were to write an article solely about Canada, it would not be considered as being of Canadian content, because the author would be from Africa. Are these anomalies not strange? I suppose the only truly Canadian articles would be ones written by Canada's scouts or cubs. I ask hon. members to reflect on this.

Will this law, and regulations passed under it, suffer the same fate as other laws and regulations this House has passed in the last little while? For example, you will remember that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) claimed that the government was being generous with Canadians by removing the tax from shoes and clothing. Members asked if the tax saving would be passed on to the consumer and the minister said that, of course it would be; the government would monitor the process. If my memory serves me correctly, two members of this House questioned the minister at different times on the effectiveness of the program and on whether the government was making sure that the tax reduction was passed on to the consumer.

Later the government removed part of the tax on building materials and we were told that, yes, the government would monitor the process and make sure that tax savings are passed on to the consumer. That matter went into limbo. Nothing has been said about it, or heard about it. Little has been said about the tax abatement. No one, either on the government or opposition side, has expressed concern and wondered if the consumer is reaping the benefit. I suggest the same will be true with Bill C-58. Assuming it becomes law—perhaps I assume too much—and assuming the regulations are drafted, I foresee the entire matter disappearing into a vague limbo. Yes, there will be talk of monitoring the bill and of looking into the anomalies and aberrations which will take place. Finally, two or three years after passage, no one will know how to interpret the bill. That will happen if the House does not adopt motion No. 1.

The government has intruded on various aspects of Canadian life. At one time it said that the government has no place in the bedrooms of the nation. Now, apparently, it is to take its place in the reading rooms and libraries of the nation. It is to control what Canadians read. Some claim that any talk of censorship in connection with Bill C-58 is simply a red herring. I do not accept that. Surely the government is intruding on what we can read, and Lord knows for what reason. I can see the government becoming involved in other areas of our life. I should not be surprised if, next month, Playboy magazine carried in its centre fold, in full living colour, the Secretary of State in hirsute splendour, but possibly without his glasses. Seriously, I am pleased to see the Secretary of State there.

An hon. Member: In what magazine?

Mr. Brisco: Playboy. Perhaps that is stretching the imagination a little far in that particular context, but perhaps I am making my point.

Evidently the government intends to intrude on what we can read and on how productive our Canadian publishing industry will be.

On January 6, 1976, the Vancouver Sun carried a report concerning the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, of December 4, 1975. The author of the article is Lisa Hobbs. May I quote from the report of the proceedings, as reported in the Vancouver Sun.

Committee member John Roberts (L.—St. Paul's): If the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest wishes to make an arrangement with, say, an American author such as Norman Mailer, for an article and that article appears . . . that is part of the 80 per cent substantially different?

SECRETARY OF STATE HUGH FAULKNER: I would think so.

MR. ROBERTS: Can they sell it?

MR. FAULKNER: I don't want to get too deeply involved in this . . .

● (2030)

That statement is a reflection of the thinking of the Secretary of State. Quite frankly, the Secretary of State has a tiger by the tail. He wishes it were a Persian cat. It is going to bite him. The minister is being scratched, indeed bloodied, by the introduction of Bill C-58.

When speaking a moment ago, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West expressed the discomfort and concerns about the areas of vagueness in this bill. I share his feelings. He asked where the minister is heading and what he truly wants.

In the treatment of this bill in this House, there has been very unusual procedure. It was forced into closure on second reading, expanded and debated in committee at great length, and four members of the government party were removed from the committee. I am sure Your Honour will agree that that is an unusual procedure.

With the protracted debate on clause 1, it is very difficult to conceive that in the beginning the bill probably had wide Canadian support. Indeed people in my constituency were in favour of this bill initially. That support has been reversed. People no longer speak of being in favour of Bill C-58. Letters from my constituency run ten to one in opposition to the position of the minister. That is a reversal of feeling. Why is it present? It is because of its vagueness of basic purpose, and its thrust which is really no longer understood by Canadians, nor for that matter by many members of this House.

Non-Canadian Publications

There are three points that can best be made at this time with reference to an organization called the B.C. Civil Liberties Association. In a letter addressed to the minister that association said, and I quote:

> Unfortunately, we cannot consider the promotion of a 'truly Canadian' outlook by the destruction of what have hitherto been publications supported by Canadian readers as other than censorship. Censorship in our understanding is content control or content manipulation by government.

This is a very unusual, perhaps unexpected approach by the B.C. Civil Liberties Association which, like any other organization of similar thrust, is nationalistic in its views. It went on to say:

> Deduction of expenses does not appear to us to be a privilege which the government of the day has allowed a business only where socially desirable aims are to be achieved by the outlay. Deductibility is the ordinary rule and not a 'special advantage'... thus the content test which may result in non-deductibility for advertising in certain publications (which may be domestically owned and printed) creates an anomaly operating against these publications. It does not remove an anomaly which once favored them.

In their final remarks they stated:

> We do not know what aspect of content a future government, still disclaiming (as you do) any intention to censor, might see fit to consider in imposing taxation. A still more nationalistic administration might decide to define only writings about Canada as domestic for taxation purposes.
> A paternalistic government might decide that creation of jobs for Canadian writers was so high a priority that only Canadian citizens' work would rank as domestic. As civil libertarians, we would not be concerned with what laudable motives might underlie either of these fears of content manipulation.
> Nor are we concerned with the policy of cultural renaissance which underlies the current government's policy. Our objection is to the intended results, not to the reason for seeking those results.

So spake the B.C. Civil Liberties Association. I would think that the directors of that organization in seeing the letter go forward would certainly be aware of its contents and be prepared to endorse them. Otherwise it would never have gone forward. It is interesting to note that among the directors of the B.C. Civil Liberties Association we find such notables as "Justice Minister Ron Basford". The party to my left, which is in favour of Bill C-58, has failed to mention this, but another of the directors of the B.C. Civil Liberties Association, and his name is given, is the great libertarian, Tommy Douglas. Is it not strange that we should have two such notable politicians who in the House are supporting the bill and who serve as directors of an association which strongly opposes it?

My other concern is with reference to the very thrust of the 80 per cent, 75 per cent, 20 per cent, 40 per cent, or whatever. There is nothing in the bill that really defines it. We have been informed that these provisions will appear in the regulations. I understand the second amendment will deal with that very fact. However, I find it very disturbing that it is not clearly spelled out in the bill. Rather, it is subject to the whim and change of the ever-changing ministers. God knows, we see enough of that in this House. It is also subject to the ever-changing bureaucrats who perhaps will be responsible for the implementation of Bill C-58 if and when it becomes law.

Let me join with other members of the House such as the hon. member for Fraser Valley West in supporting amendment No. 1 at report stage of Bill C-58.

[Mr. Brisco.]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motions Nos. 1 and 12. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the said motions will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded divisions on the proposed motions stand deferred. The House will now proceed to Motions Nos. 2 and 3.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre) (for Mr. Fairweather) moved motion No. 2:

> That Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 14 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:
> "a market in Canada where more than half the contents of such issue, excluding advertisements, are substantially the same as the contents of an issue that was printed, edited or published outside Canada."

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins) moved:

Motion No. 3.

> That Bill C-58, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 1 by striking out line 14 at page 1 and substituting the following therefor:
> "a market in Canada, except in the case of a newspaper or periodical whose general content relates to scientific or medical subjects and is published for the general interest and benefit of professionals."

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak to Motion No. 2 on behalf of my hon. friend, the member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

I should say at the outset that the amendment he has proposed is a conciliatory one; it has obviously arisen out of the intransigence of the government on this issue. It is designed as an effort at conciliation. I should like to make it clear that I, for my part, do not share an approach on that level; I would not support any kind of restriction being placed on the freedom of information in this country. I am moved to read several lines on this subject which I believe to be à propos.

On a huge hill,
Cragged and steep, truth stands, and he that will
Reach her, about must, and about must go,
And what the hill's suddenness resists, win so.

Some hon. Members: Author?

Mr. Friesen: John Donne.

An hon. Member: They have never heard of John Donne.

Mr. Epp: Does he qualify under the 80 per cent rule?

Mr. Friesen: I guess those Phillistines opposite do not recognize good poets when they hear them.

It has always been the hallmark of good journalism that information should have free concourse in a society. The free interaction of information and discussion has always been the accepted medium of discovering truth, and truth has always been the goal of good journalism. It is upon the percolation of information and discussion that news magazines and the intellectual health of a nation depend. Now, it would seem, those famous lines must be rewritten on the basis of the government's intention, and we must read them:

On a huge hill,
Cragged and steep, truth stands, and he that will Reach her, about must, and about must go
To the Secretary of State's Department,
The Revenue Department and the Justice Department.

I suggest this is not the kind of foundation on which a nation is built, and I would simply refer to the historic experiences of nations around the world which have experienced the kind of measures the government is trying to introduce. If the government would look at the historical record of those nations which have introduced measures such as this, which really has at its heart the control of free access to information, it would find that the nations which introduced such legislation are those with which it would not want to identify itself.

Look through the pages of history at the experience of the nation of Persia or of the nation of Rome. Look at the Reformation and the Counter-Reformation. Now look at the 17th century in England. It was a Puritan government in England which first introduced legislation requiring the licensing of books in that country. The government felt legislation was necessary to control information because it was not sure what the printers were going to print and wanted to make sure that the material that went out to the reading public would meet the desires of the establishment of the day—that it would no way threaten those in power. I keep wondering whether there is a parallel between the experience of those nations and the government we face today.

Behind all this, I suggest, is a feeling of insecurity. Surely when we begin to build walls we are announcing in loud terms that we feel insecure, that we feel threatened. One of the hon. members opposite has already used a very good term for it, namely, cultural paranoia. Maybe the government is experiencing just that. It feels threatened from every side.

It seems strange to me that while the government is seeking to impose restrictions of this nature on the publishing industry it should also be espousing the cause of free enterprise—at least it was doing so as recently as last December. Until last December, at any rate, the market was to be open. On one hand they want a free market in the economy but, on the other, they do not want a free market place in the publishing industry, in the world of ideas. What is wrong? Is something wrong with the thought patterns of Canadians? Is there something wrong with the way we think? Is there something wrong about the ideas which come across international boundaries? Are we afraid of those ideas?

Along with all other members of the House I want to see the Canadian identity enhanced, and in many ways I agree we are sometimes too greatly affected by cultures other than our own. But that is a choice we make. We can never reach the point in this country at which we restrict our people when it comes to opportunities to make an individual choice. As soon as we restrict free movement of ideas across international boundaries we are telling the people: you do not have the right to choose what you should read or think.

While I enjoy the distinctiveness of the Canadian identity I hasten to add that I do not regard it as sacred. It is not the only valid identity in this world. Are we afraid of the ideas which come from the United States, or of the ideas which may come from Germany, Japan, India or China? Why is it the government wants to restrict the 80 per cent content on the free inflow of information? I ask the minister very seriously whether members of his department or any other department of government are competent to deal with this kind of legislation?

The issue is not one of establishing a Canadian publishing industry. The issue is whether each Canadian has the right to read that literature he chooses to read, and make for himself the decisions as to what reading material ought to cross his desk. Again we come to the same issue on the other side of the spectrum. We are dealing with periodicals that for the most part are widely accepted across Canada as being reputable, wholesome reading literature, albeit in the case of Time magazine especially we may not always agree with its opinions as it may have some subtle overtones. At least we have the opportunity of making the decision. What the government wants to do now is take that choice away from us.

The decision on the part of the government to introduce a content rule is restrictive and paranoic, and has no place in a country that honors freedom. As I have suggested before, if the government is really serious about having dependable guidelines, and I emphasize the word dependable, for writers to follow, the most simple thing the government can do is withdraw this legislation as it stands and include the so-called Cullen rule, so that the country will then know in a very firm way exactly where we stand on this ruling, and will not be carried about on the whim of fancy of every minister who comes into this portfolio. The rule will then not be subject to the dyspepsia, of the minister of the day.

How are we going to know whether the departmental rule which says 80 per cent today is going to mean 80 per cent tomorrow? Our country is founded on law and on the need for a firm and dependable understanding of where we are. I challenge this minister to find some way of including his ruling in the law so that we know by the final decision of this House that we are dealing with a statute and not with a departmental regulation.

I challenge this minister to work with other members of his Cabinet in finding some way of accommodating the regulations he has articulated by putting those regulations into the statutes, so that the House of Commons can debate the ruling rather than simply having this done by departmental regulation. In this way the writers of our country will know where they are at and will be able to write with a feeling of security.

Mr. Jean-R. Roy (Timmins): Madam Speaker, the amendment I have proposed to the House for adoption is a very simple one and does not require a long explanation or speech.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought we were on motion No. 2, yet it seems the hon. member is speaking to his own amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The two motions have been grouped together.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Madam Speaker, I thought we were discussing motions Nos. 2 and 3 at the same time. I was suggesting that the amendment I proposed was a very simple one which requires little explanation. It would exempt from the changes the minister has proposed newspapers or periodicals whose general content relates to scientific or medical subjects published in the general interest of and for the benefit of professionals. My amendment deals with a very specific type of printed material which zeroes in on subjects of particular and specific interest to professionals and scientific people. I cannot for the life of me think why such scientific material would represent any sort of challenge to the cultural integrity referred to in this bill.

If the material to which I refer does not in any way affect the culture of Canada and is rather strongly directed towards scientific and medical material, I can see absolutely no objection, and no reason why we should not exempt that type of published material.

It has been said that the government does not want to make any exceptions. I do not understand the reason for that because I think we should not only be looking at the short term but as well at the long term in respect of these specific publications. It is already too evident that the bill seems to be pointing at two publications, namely, Time and Reader's Digest. We have all seen the statement of Mr. Zimmerman on behalf of Reader's Digest this afternoon. It seems to me that if we are going to consider this legislation we should have the wisdom to adopt the long-term view, and in that way present acceptable legislation. In this way we would not be placing unacceptable controls on the publication of specific scientific and medical material which is published for the purpose of educating doctors and scientists. I certainly hope this House will give favourable consideration to this amendment, finding it desirable and acceptable.

[Mr. Friesen.]

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, as I listened to the speaker for the opposition, just prior to the last speaker, I wondered whether we were even talking about the same bill. There seemed to be some suggestion of censorship, or that people are being forbidden to read what they choose to read. I would respectfully suggest another reading of the bill which would indicate that there is freedom of information, and a freedom of choice so that the Reader's Digest, Time, or any other material the hon. member wants to read will still in fact be available.

I think this kind of misrepresentation and misstatement in respect of the bill does the hon. member little credit and does a disservice to the Canadian public. There is in fact no intention to curtail the free flow of information. I will leave it at that, and deal primarily with the percentage content.

It seems to me as we reach this stage of the bill it would be appropriate that I make a few comments on the government's interpretation of "substantially the same" as used in Section 19 of the Income Tax Act. The interpretation has been both misunderstood and misrepresented, and I welcome this opportunity to ensure that the record is clear.

On January 23, 1975, the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) announced the government's intention to remove the special tax status enjoyed by certain foreign-controlled publications. Bill C-58 seeks to repeal sub-sections 19(2) and 19(4) of the Income Tax Act, and in that way no business deduction may be claimed for the cost of an advertisement placed in an issue of a non-Canadian periodical if the particular advertisement is directed primarily to a market in Canada.

Predictably and appropriately enough, periodicals affected by this change in legislation carefully re-examined the bill first passed in 1965 and had little difficulty in understanding that in order to become qualified as a Canadian magazine within the meaning of the act it would become necessary first to be produced and published in Canada.

Second, it would have to be 75 per cent owned and controlled in Canada. Third, it should not be produced under some licensing arrangement with another magazine.

The fourth criterion, that is, that the contents must not be substantially the same as those of a foreign periodical, has not been as clearly understood and has needed clarification. I think it is fair to say that estimates of the required degree of difference ran from 50 per cent to over 80 per cent, and we have heard as high as 100 per cent. It had been the intention of my predecessor in office to announce the interpretation to be given those words at the committee stage. However, because the effective date in the bill was January 1, 1976, I felt it was more appropriate to make my decision, and to make it known, as soon as possible so that publishers and advertisers would be aware of their tax positions and have an opportunity to rearrange their affairs accordingly.

In deciding the interpretation to be given to the words "not substantially the same", there were several criteria to be followed. First and foremost, the government's intention was clear: there were to be no special privileges or exemptions under section 19(1) of the Income Tax Act. I should point out at this point that such a position was a recommendation of two federal inquiries, the Royal Commission on Publications, which has been called the O'Leary Commission, and the special Senate Committee on the Mass Media. The thrust of both inquiries was that exemptions granted to foreign publications under income tax legislation should be repealed to ensure the survival of a healthy indigenous periodical industry.

To give effect to the government's intention, it was obvious that a specific position had to be determined. Secondly, the provision relating to "substantially the same" was enacted in 1965 so that Canadian publications would not have undue competition for advertisers from "split runs" or "dressed up" versions of foreign publications. The requirements with respect to ownership and control by Canadian citizens, that is, 75 per cent, and the preclusion of licensing agreements, made it obvious that a great measure of independence would be expected from a truly Canadian periodical.

With this in mind I issued a press release on October 23 to announce that, in order to be considered not substantially the same as one or more issues of one or more foreign periodicals, more than 80 per cent of the contents of a Canadian periodical must be material which has not appeared in any current or prior issue of foreign publications with which the Canadian periodical has any type of continuing arrangement for access to material.

There has been some criticism of the procedure because this is, after all, an interpretation. Quite frankly I would have preferred an amendment to the Income Tax Act to specify unequivocally that the words "not substantially the same" be defined by regulation as meaning 80 per cent different. However, this would require a new notice of ways and means motion, and such an amendment would not be feasible at this time.

I have met personally with Mr. Paul Zimmerman of Reader's Digest and his counsel, and also with Mr. LaRue of Time Canada and his counsel, together with a counsel from one of the intended purchasers, indicating that my announcement, like thousands of others we are called upon to make, was an interpretation. However, because it had the backing of the government and my cabinet colleagues, if a challenge were successfully made it would be incumbent upon the government to proceed under a new notice of ways and means motion to define the meaning of the words, to restore the government's intention.

This has been the subject of some criticism and I would like to comment briefly upon it. First, such an amendment would not be retroactive. If an advertiser successfully challenged our interpretation in the court, that advertiser would be permitted the business deduction. My announcement about legislation that would follow a successful challenge was made as a courtesy to those who might see fit to launch an action and spend a considerable amount of money—only to find that down the road the policy's intent would be restored by legislation. This procedure of subsequently amending legislation is not unprecedented.

Usually when parliament passes legislation it announces the intention of that legislation, and what it is proposed to do. Sometimes that legislation is challenged, loopholes are discovered, or court decisions are rendered that are different from the original intent of parliament. When this happens, future legislation is passed to plug the loopholes, or to give effect to the original intention. I submit there are many precedents for the introduction of such an amendment to ensure that policy intent is achieved.

In June, 1972, for example, the Department of National Revenue issued an interpretation bulletin relating to government grants to industry. In May, 1974, this interpretation was challenged before the courts, which decided in favour of the taxpayer. Because the court's interpretation of this pertinent section of the Income Tax Act did not reflect government policy, an amendment was proposed by ways and means motion in the November 18, 1974, budget. A sub-section was subsequently enacted, with effect from November 18, 1974, but not retroactive, nor is that the intention here.

In my view, public awareness of the government's intended publications policy is important, and I felt I would have been remiss in my responsibilities and been unfair to the publishing firms in question, and to their advertisers, if I had left any room for doubt that we might accept a figure less than 80 per cent. I therefore opted for letting the publishing industry and the advertisers know well in advance precisely what the government's intention was.

The reference to "continuing arrangement" in the press release is vital to the understanding of our interpretation of "substantially the same"—the written law is given much greater flexibility by its inclusion—yet it is an important point that is often missed.

Because the interpretation specifies material "acquired through a continuing arrangement" an issue of a Canadian magazine may consist of even 100 per cent "spot" articles taken from foreign periodicals and still be considered Canadian, if those articles are not obtained through a "continuing arrangement"; that is, an arrangement by which a periodical has an on-going right for availability of general material.

In the case of a digest, Mr. Speaker, the definition of continuing arrangement will not refer to that arrangement which a periodical may have with a middle party to obtain material. The purpose of the legislation is not to preclude the possibility of a digest—which, by definition, reproduces most if not all of its material existing in Canada, but rather to ensure that the editorial choice and condensation, if necessary, of that material are done in Canada.

If a continuing arrangement must be made through a second party to have access to third party material, it would not be the purpose of the law to thwart that access but to ensure that that material is chosen and edited in Canada. The ruling remains the same. We are saying that "middle party access" used to obtain third party material will not be regarded as a continuing arrangement. This technique will allow a Canadian digest access to original material.

Before I close, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment briefly on the recent editorial in Time magazine entitled "Freedom and Fairness". This is such a distortion of the truth and such a misleading representation of the facts that it simply cannot go unanswered.

I take strong issue with the suggestion that my department or my predecessor misled Time. The former minister indicated in early discussions with Time editors that a content decision had not been made—that this would have to be referred to cabinet. He assured Time editors that this would not be less than 50 per cent, but at no time did he suggest that it would be 50 per cent.

The only public declaration made by the former minister with regard to content was that somewhere between 60 per cent and 80 per cent would have to be different content to qualify for the definition of "Canadian". The memo referred to in the Time editorial was part of a draft memo, never sent and never signed. It had been prepared with regard to format. No particular attention was being given at that time to the question of content. Time lawyers and editors know this as well as anyone and have twisted the words ripped from an unsent, unsigned memo to suit their own purposes. This is misrepresentation of the worst order.

In fact declaring that the government's policy requires that more than 80 per cent of the contents of a Canadian periodical must be material which has not appeared in any current or prior issues of foreign publications with which the Canadian periodical may have any type of continuing arrangement for access to material, allows more, not less freedom to periodicals. Articles do not have to have Canadian subjects, nor be written by Canadian authors. Canadian magazines will have access to a variety of foreign sources and still qualify as a Canadian magazine, as long as there is no continuing arrangement with the source for more than 20 per cent of their material.

The 80 per cent content ruling does not abridge, check or change the free flow of any information. Foreign magazines should and will continue to appear on all newsstand—but alongside their issues will be stronger and better Canadian periodicals which will be benefiting from a redirection of Canadian advertising support. This is the intent of Bill C-58.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cullen: Madam Speaker, for several months there has been a demand for a definite decision on what is meant in the Income Tax Act by "substantially different". I have publicized that decision, and pointed out government policy, as a courtesy, and in fairness to those interested or affected.

This interpretation was arrived at through much careful consideration of the interests involved. It was arrived at, as I have just demonstrated, by weighing many factors and by listening to the opinions of parties both for and against. It is a clear, responsible, and necessary interpretation which I have come to believe must be made if this bill is going to achieve its purpose, that of ensuring that Canadian publishing is in a position to grow and to compete with foreign magazines both within and beyond its borders.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I simply wish to direct the attention of the House to one point. Quite frankly I alluded to it this afternoon.

[Mr. Cullen.]

I rise tonight because I find the attitude of the government completely shocking. I am not speaking now about the policy of 80 per cent difference or any policy. I am referring rather to the fact that the parliament of Canada has passed a statute which, like other statutes, would normally be interpreted by the courts in case of any dispute. We are now being asked to adopt an amendment to that statute, and we are being told simultaneously by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) what "substantially different" means. I want to know what there is in any statute and any tradition in this country that gives a minister of the Crown the right to determine authoritatively, and without reference to the courts, what the words of acts of parliament mean. Who gave the Minister of National Revenue the authority to determine what "substantially different" means? It is a complete usurpation of the position of our courts in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I find it completely revolting that the government should take an existing statute, introduce an amendment, and then say how that statute passed some ten years ago will in fact be interpreted, regardless of what a court may say as to what "substantially different" means. Courts are not to be allowed to determine whether "substantially different" means 80 per cent different.

The minister referred to a ruling he has given arising out of conversations with representatives of Reader's Digest about the importance of the existence or the lack of a continuing arrangement. Is that in a statute? Is there anything in our statutes about continuing arrangements? Is there anything in the statutes passed by this parliament, or which we are asked to pass, which relates continuing arrangements or the absence of them to "substantially different"? I ask that question.

There is nothing in the statute which we are asked to pass which gives the Minister of National Revenue, or indeed the governor in council, the authority to say that the absence of a continuing arrangement as he defined it is significant or determinant for this purpose.

I rise at this time, as I say, not in connection with the policy at all but to express my distate for and indeed disgust with the approach of the government which in effect removes the whole question of interpretation of the statutes from the courts. I would like some member of the government to set my mind at rest or to point out to me if I am wrong in this respect.

I say it is a complete subversion of our whole judicial system. I do not see how the government and its supporters can ask this parliament to endorse a proposal or an approach which takes away from the courts the interpretation of statutes already passed by this legislature and substitutes the Minister of National Revenue as the Supreme Court of Canada in this respect, without the slightest authorization by parliament.

The minister says that he is trying to be helpful by telling publishers and others how the statute will in fact be interpreted by the department. I suggest to the minister that neither he nor his colleagues have that kind of an authority, and if I am wrong, if I misunderstood the situation, I would like to be corrected. It seems to me that the government, in an entirely arbitrary way, is assuming the right to interpret in a manner beyond appeal what the words of parliament mean, and that is something that I am not prepared to accept, quite apart from any question of policy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker,—

An hon. Member: Is he the government?

Mr. Cafik: —I really want to talk about motion No. 3 which is before the House, but in light of the intervention by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield)—

Mr. Stanfield: And by the minister.

Mr. Cafik: —I feel it is essential to point out that in substance I agree with a large part of the argument that the hon. member has made.

Mr. Cafik: It seems to me that the very essence of Bill C-58 is that the essence of it is not in the bill at all, and what really counts in this bill is that which is outside the bill, that is, the interpretation of "not substantially the same as." I must admit that this offends me to some extent as a parliamentarian because in my years as a member of this House I have constantly and consistently fought to try to minimize the effect of regulations and interpretations, although it could not always be done.

I think all hon. members readily recognize that a bill cannot always indicate every aspect which is going to be covered, but it ought to do so wherever possible, and in this particular case it is quite evident that it would have been possible to have treated that particular aspect of the bill, not now contained in the bill, in the bill itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: We would then have had an opportunity to know and to debate precisely what the government had in mind when this bill was introduced.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Cafik: Yes.

Mr. Stanfield: Would he not agree that this goes even further than the concerns he has expressed, that the bill goes beyond the question of delegating powers to make regulations? Will he not agree that the legislation which exists and the legislation we are being asked to pass make no provision for the minister or the government defining what "substantially different" means by legislation?

Mr. Cafik: I think I would disagree somewhat with the precise wording used by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in this respect. I think it would be counter productive to conclude that the government did not have some responsibility, particularly the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), to apply some interpretation to the law.

Non-Canadian Publications

The fact is that this provision for "not substantially the same as" is part of the existing law. I have no quarrel with the minister giving that an interpretation. My quarrel is on a different basis altogether. I would have preferred, and I think the Minister of National Revenue has already indicated that he also would have preferred, to see that particular interpretation embodied within the law. However, unfortunately, if I understand his previous remarks, he would have preferred to move in that direction but was given advice that it would have required a new ways and means motion. Be that as it may, it does not in any way alter the substantive points.

An hon. Member: Bring in a new motion.

Mr. Cafik: Don't debate with me. I am not on the minister's side on this particular point.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: However, I am not prepared to use a stick to beat a dead horse. If the minister is right, I see no reason not to defend him, and where he is wrong I see no reason to defend him either.

In any event, as I pointed out at the beginning, aside from wanting to make a brief comment with respect to the comments of the Leader of the Opposition, I really want to deal more substantively, but briefly, with motion No. 3, which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy). This amendment would provide an exemption for periodicals which deal with scientific or medical subjects. In that respect I must say that on June 4, 1975, in the second reading debate on this bill I raised for the first time the question of Modern Medicine, MD of Canada, and some possible other publications in that caterogy. At that time I indicated that I felt it was unacceptable that we prepared legislation in such a way that it would prohibit our people in the medical field from having access to whatever information may be available form elsewhere in the world.

It can be argued that these magazines can be published in the United States, printed there, forwarded into Canada and our medical people could have access to those journals, and I agree that that is a valid argument. Nonetheless, we should bear in mind that the stated purpose of this bill—and there may be a difference between what is stated and what is perceived to be the purpose—is to assist Canadian publishing concerns, and to that I largely subscribe. I think most of us, if not all of us, would like to see a healthy publishing industry in Canada, so we do not disagree with that. However, with respect to this motion I should like to raise one point.

How indeed are we going to help the publishing industry in Canada by effectively prohibiting under previous conditions the right to publish Md of Canada or Modern Medicine in Canada? Do they have competitors in Canada to which the advertising would be diverted? To my knowledge, the answer is no. Are we really suggesting that those who advertise in publications do so on a willy nilly basis?

With regard to trade magazines, those who publish in them are really looking for a particular target audience, and in the case of these medical magazines it is unthinkable that those who advertise in them will divert those advertisements to Maclean's magazine or to any other magazine which does not reach with the same target audience. Therefore, to contend that we have made an amount of advertising revenue available to Canadian publications by wiping out these particular magazines to my mind is just fiction and an excuse. In my judgment that is just not so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: Therefore, if we want to assist the magazine industry in this country substantially, it seems to me that we must deal with two aspects; first, attack the dumping problem. If there is editorial material coming into Canada at a price to the Canadian publisher or subsidiary of a foreign publisher in Canada at a cheaper rate than they could generate it themselves, we should deal with that kind of question in ordinary, traditional ways through our dumping legislation, and that appears to be the appropriate way to deal with that aspect of the question.

Second, if we really want to help the magazine industry in Canada, we need more advertising dollars directed into periodical publications as opposed to other advertising media. When we consider this side of the coin, it is quite evident that Canada has one of the lowest rates of advertising per advertising dollar in the publication industry in the world. Less than half our advertising dollars are diverted to the magazine industry in comparison with the United States. We are so far below that which occurs in Europe that it is almost beyond description.

For instance, I understand that in Italy something over 50 per cent of every advertising dollar goes to the periodical industry. In Germany, France, and England there are very large percentages compared with that of Canada which, I believe, is in the neighbourhood of 2.8 per cent.

If we really think that we ought to protect, expand and to give reason for new Canadian magazines to come into the field, perhaps we ought to consider this matter altogether differently, and we ought to indicate to advertisers that if they want a tax advantage from advertising in Canada, they should divert at least 5 per cent of their advertising dollars into the periodical industry. By doing so we would have twice the advertising revenue and many more Canadian magazines. That would be a very constructive approach to assisting the magazine industry. The present approach, particularly as it relates to this amendment, is not productive in terms of helping anybody in the magazine industry. It will simply adversely affect two medical journals which provide information to our doctors and professionals in this country. I frankly, am prepared to vote in favour of the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) and what he had to say, as well as the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) who, in my view, put the situation in its proper light.

As we know, the Canadian population today has reached about 22½ million people. We also know that medical science extends around the world. Experimental work is being done in China, in Great Britain, in France, in Germany, in the United States, South America—all over the world. The Canadian magazines in the medical field that the hon. member for Ontario mentioned, Modern Medicine and M.D. of Canada, come in free to the medical profession, bringing the latest scientific data gathered from all over the world.

I think it would be the height of folly to build a wall and say that we have all the scientific expertise we need in this country. We know what would happen to the exchange of ideas in the medical field then. Just to give an example, the Mayo clinic is doing research work on dissolving gallstones. A Canadian firm and others are also working in this field. When the research is complete it will be available to medical periodicals all over the world, not only for the benefit of the United States but that of the world at large. If there is humanity in this parliament how can we deny this information to countries that are ill-equipped and cannot afford the research?

Only a few years ago Great Britain was the medical centre of the world, but the centre has now shifted to the United States. We are doing a lot of valuable research work in Canada because of our connections and communications through journals and other ways with the United States. In the field of aeronautical science we are learning about the reaction of the human body in the medical end of that speciality and this knowledge is made available to the world through the magazines that I have mentioned. Knowledge about operative procedures in the same field is made available as well.

It is interesting that the hon. member for Ontario said that if we want to publish magazines in Canada the first thing we must do is apply for sufficient funds or get people to advertise in these journals. That is not the case at the moment; advertisers are using other avenues. I think the figures that the hon. member for Ontario quoted are about right. The only way these magazines can go to medical doctors, researchers, and other fields in Canada without charge is if the advertising pays for it. Modern Medicine and M.D. of Canada are well put together and bring to our attention facts that are many thousands of years old that still have a bearing on the human body.

This is the most reckless piece of legislation that I know of, Mr. Speaker. It is not only reckless, it is destructive. It is not only destructive, it is trying to build a wall to keep out information that comes to us free of charge.

I know the minister is rather a nice fellow but I cannot understand his thinking on this. He taught school himself so I cannot understand his motives. I hope he will see that this bill should be set aside for the present.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) wishes to ask a question of the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard).

Mr. Rynard: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of attention to the comments of the hon. member, a member for whom I have a great deal of affection and respect. In fairness, however, no one is suggesting that we build a wall. These medical magazines will have free circulation in Canada.

The question I put to the hon. member, and it is a question raised by the bill is this: should Canadian business be able to advertise in these magazines and use that advertising as a tax deduction? I do not think anyone is suggesting that the magazines should not circulate. I do not think anyone is suggesting there should not be a free flow of information. The question comes back to the point made by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes): should these magazines be assisted? That is what we are talking about.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I pointed out in my speech, and I think the minister must have missed it, that Canada, the United States, and other countries exchange information through their various periodicals. I would expect—and I say this with frankness—that Canada should bear its fair share of the cost.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to address my comments specifically to motion No. 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy), which seeks to exempt scientific and medical periodicals from the provisions of this bill.

I should also like to reply to the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) who, I thought, would have followed some of the testimony given in the standing committee and realized the motivation behind removing subsection 4(b) of section 19 of the Income Tax Act. I think it relates to a decision of the Federal Court of Appeal in 1972 that pointed out a loophole in the legislation that was not intended by the framers of the legislation nor by the royal commission from which the bill flowed. In order to inform the hon. member for Timmins and the hon. member for Ontario, I should like to relate some of that background and testimony. It will then become clear why the section will be repealed.

Section 19(4)(b) of the Income Tax Act exempted foreign publications from the tax effects of section 19 applying to any publication the principal function of which is the encouragement, promotion or development of the fine arts, letters, scholarship or religion. The members of the Royal Commission on Publications were clear in their intent: These foreign "little," or cultural magazines would not, I repeat, would not be carriers of Canadian advertising to Canadian audiences.

As we know, the royal commission recommended that the deduction from income tax by a taxpayer of expenditures incurred for advertising directed at the Canadian market in a foreign periodical wherever printed should be disallowed. The commission, in its conclusion and summary said that the foregoing recommendations I just mentioned would prevent the diversion of Canadian advertising expenditures from Canadian periodicals. They strike at split runs, regional editions, "Canadian" sections, "Canadian" editions, and other techniques of diversion which exist now or may be developed in future. They do not bear upon any Canadian periodicals and do not affect foreign cultural, "little," consumer or business periodicals in any way unless they are used as carriers of domestic advertising.

Non-Canadian Publications

I should mention a court case concerning JayKay Publications, which publishes a medical magazine. I will not dwell on the history of the appeal. What happened was as follows: The judge in the first instance interpreted very narrowly the question of content, but the appellate court did not look at what the judge below had considered, and looked at the total workings of the magazine. The decision of the Federal Court of Appeal in 1972 meant that the courts were to interpret subsection (4) as including foreign publications used as carriers of domestic advertising. In effect it means that a loophole has been opened affecting the narrow area of educational, medical or scientific magazines.

As the law now stands as a result of the decision of the Court of Appeal, any foreign publication that can be judged to have scholarly content seems to be in the position of becoming a Canadian periodical, and any Canadian periodical that can be judged to have scholarly content could therefore be purchased by foreign interests, without subsection (1) of section 19 coming into force. This means, then, that a number of Canadian scholarly magazines in fields of medicine, history, arts, science and so on can be bought out, or foreign publications could set up equivalent magazines, under the guise of their being scholarly or scientific magazines, and these foreign publications would not be barred from using the Income Tax Act and allowing their advertisers to deduct the expenses of advertising.

The testimony we heard in committee from Canadian scholarly magazines, scientific journals, and so on, and from the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association was to the effect that if this loophole is not plugged, which is what Bill C-58 attempts to do, Canadian magazines, especially Canadian medical publications, cannot survive the assault of this potentially new low-cost competition. Therefore I suggest it is important that this House reject motion No. 3, proposed by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy). The amendment would, if passed, open the floodgates for foreign magazines, which could qualify as scholarly or scientific publications in those narrow areas and escape the advertising prohibition provisions of the Income Tax Act.

I remind hon. members who are concerned in case this bill would somehow be a form of censorship that rejection of the amendment will not stop those magazines from crossing the Canadian border and being distributed to the scientific or medical community. Their members will still have access to those magazines. Certainly, if this bill is passed, it will protect scientific and scholarly journals of Canadian origin against unfair competition from magazines which could qualify under the loophole created by the decision in 1972 of the Federal Court of Appeal.

Let us remember that the United States has enacted much more stringent regulations concerning the publishing of scientific journals and the allowing of Canadian scientific or medical journals to penetrate the United States market. That may be a form of censorship or, at least, protection under American copyright legislation.

At present no foreign periodicals are denied entry to this country. Remember, this bill will not prevent them from doing so. At present Canadian scholarly publications are liable to be subject to a form of censorship, or they are denied entry to the United States by American law. Let me explain.

Unlike Canada, where our borders are open to foreign publications, the United States, through its manufacturing clause in the Copyright Act, effectively prevents Canadian journals containing articles by United States citizens from selling more than a limited number of copies in the United States without threatening the American citizen's copyright protection. The Americans do not call this censorship; they call it protecting their printing trade.

However, a Canadian publisher wishing to produce a scholarly journal concerned, for example, with medicine or economics, and to sell it to a North American market, has only two choices: to limit the size of his sale to the United States market, or to scrap the idea of including writings by American writers. No similar restriction exists in Canada, nor would Bill C-58 create such restriction.

We are in this position: the Americans, by their law, have effectively put up more barriers to the free flow of information than we have in Canada at present, or will have even after Bill C-58 passes.

For the sake of consistency, and in order to heed the intent of the royal commission, I suggest that it is important for us to reject the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Timmins. We should pass parts of the bill relating to subsection (4) and pertaining to scholarly journals as they stand. Otherwise the federal court decision which I mentioned will have opened a loophole whereby many Canadian scholarly magazines can be bought by Americans or foreign publications, and these foreign publications would then qualify for advertising advantages that were not intented for such scholarly magazines.

Also, if we do not pass the bill as is, many Canadian scholarly publications will face continued severe and unfair competition from certain magazines such as MD and others which have been able to exist through the qualifying provisions of Section 19 of the Income Tax Act. I say it is important that we do not follow or agree with the reasoning of the hon. member for Timmins or of the hon. member for Ontario.

The other point that is important and that we should turn our attention to is motion No. 2. This amendment seeks to reduce the 80 per cent substantially different clause to 50 per cent. We heard in testimony from many Canadian publishers that this would in effect destroy the intent of the legislation to promote and sustain a healthy Canadian periodical industry.

One of the great advantages that magazines like Time and Reader's Digest have that Canadian magazines do not is that those magazines can get editorial material much more cheaply from their parent companies than any competing Canadian magazine. In addition to getting that content cheaply, up until now they have been able to qualify for benefits under the Income Tax Act, or their advertisers could qualify for such benefits. This has allowed Time and Reader's Digest to capture over 50 per cent of magazine advertising revenue in this country.

If we are to agree to this amendment and reduce the substantially different aspect from 80 per cent to 50 per cent, this will mean that magazines like Time and Reader's Digest will be able to continue to lift half of their content from parent companies outside Canada while retaining their favourable status under the Income Tax Act.

It is obvious what they will do. The 50 per cent content they can get from the parent will be the most expensive content that they will acquire. It will be the material that is before colour work, feature articles, that kind of material that Canadian companies would have severe financial difficulty trying to duplicate. They will be able to get cut-rate costs. The royal commission documented that it costs Time and Reader's Digest as little as 5 per cent of the original cost of production for these materials. It cost Canadian publications 5 per cent of the cost borne by the parent. That is a totally unfair competition for most Canadian magazines trying to work up the same material.

We accepted the opportunity of protecting Canadian industry against unfair foreign competition. I think the same principle should apply here. To reduce that content regulation would mean a windfall for these subsidiaries to get the most expensive materials at cut rates from their parent companies. It would negate the whole intent of the bill. Therefore I do not see how we can support that amendment standing in the name of the hon member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather).

I am still a bit worried about the statement of the Minister of National Revenue as to the accommodation reached with Reader's Digest on the content regulation, 80 per cent not substantially the same as the parent. As I understood him, he said there could be a continuing arrangement by the Digest with the second party in order to have access to third party sources. I would like further clarification of this. I wonder whether it does not open up a loophole for Time Canada as well in terms of the fact that Time Canada could buy original materials from Time correspondents scattered throughout the world that are in fact being subsidized by Time in the United States.

If Time Canada could buy that material at a reduced rate, or that material which is surplus to the actual material appearing in the American edition of Time, it would in effect be continuing a kind of relationship almost approaching a licensing, but different enough that these magazines could qualify as Canadian magazines for advertising income tax purposes.

If that kind of loophole exists for the Reader's Digest, and more particularly for Time, it pulls the rug out from under the intent of the legislation which is that these magazines, by virtue of their symbiotic relationship with the parent company, are not truly Canadian magazines. I want to look at Hansard tomorrow and examine very closely what the Minister of National Revenue said so that I can be very clear. Perhaps when the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) rises, he can further elaborate on that situation.

To conclude, we in the New Democratic Party cannot support motions Nos. 2 and 3 for the reasons I have outlined.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the government House leader if he would clarify the situation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There is some technical difficulty. The microphone in front of the hon. member is not working at this time.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I simply ask the government house leader to clarify the situation so that all members will have it clear in their mind as to what business the government proposes to present tomorrow.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to continue with Bill C-58 until the report stage has been disposed of.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—PARIS ECONOMIC CONFERENCE—POSSIBILITY OF CANADA BEING CO-CHAIRMAN—CANADIAN POSITION AT CONFERENCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question dates from December 8 last when I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) whether he would put forward the ideas on trade and monetary reform to close the gap between the rich and the poor in the world, which he would be introducing at the conference on economic equality, otherwise known as the North-South Conference which was held in Paris which brought together the industrialized and the poor nations, the first real effort at bargaining on the issues which divide the rich and the poor countries. The minister replied at that time that he was then working out preliminary policy attitudes which would require elaboration as the work progressed.

Since that question was asked and the answer was given, the minister did, in fact, go to that conference in Paris, bringing honour to Canada in his role as co-chairman of the conference, and I wish to congratulate the honourable gentleman for the role he continues to play.

The conference went on into the middle of December and it was reconvened last week for two days to work out details for the work of four commissions. Canada has been appointed to two of them, namely, the commissions on energy and development.

Upon coming back to the House last week I asked the minister to give a report on the North-South Conference. The minister said he would be bringing some news of the conference before the House, perhaps this week, together with some of his own views. In his answer today he backed away from any commitment to bring into the House in the immediate future a report on Canada's participation in the conference, the most important conference on international life which has been held since the seventh special session of the U.N. General Assembly in September. More to the point, he backed away from his undertaking to bring before the House the policy positions to be adopted by the commissions on energy and development.

I must point out with great reluctance that the minister does not seem to be cognizant of the need to bring into a higher public profile in our country what Canada is doing in the whole application of the new international economic order with which the North-South Conference has been grappling.

While the minister was travelling overseas, I was travelling a bit myself. I went across Canada for ten days in January with two other members of parliament, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Pelletier) and the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). The three of us, in a non-partisan way, sought to explain to the Canadian people why there ought to be a greater degree of Canadian participation at both government and private levels in Canada's international development program.

As we were explaining this need to the Canadian people we were constantly asked the question: what is Canada's position? Madam Speaker, the Canadian people do not know that a major shift has taken place in Canadian policy which has now been codified in the Canadian five-year strategy called Strategy for International Development Co-operation, 1975-1980. That document is not even known across Canada. That is tied in with my point tonight.

It is imperative this House be told the concrete proposals Canada is bringing before international fora at the present time—what we intend to do at the Law of the Sea Conference, what we propose to do at UNCTAD IV in Nairobi in May, as well as our continuing effort in the North-South Conference.

While all this has been going on the Canadian people are under the impression that our effort in international development is concentrated upon aid, and are not yet aware of the structural changes or the multi-dimensional policy which the five-year strategy really introduces. In the five-year strategy a commitment is made which implies a concentration of our aid upon the least developed countries, the countries now known as the fourth world, identified by the World Bank, and Canada has pledged under point 18 of that strategy to concentrate our aid on those least developed countries, about 35 in number, containing one billion people. What do we find, though?

While the minister is overseas he pledges $1 million dollars to Egypt for the rebuilding of the war-battered Suez Canal zone. Today, although he was not as cognizant of the details as we might have expected, the minister confirmed the latest announcement by CIDA of the $25 million loan in concessional terms for mutually agreed projects to Indonesia. We do not know anything about this project at all.

My point in bringing this up now in connection with the North-South Conference is that Canadian aid is going to Indonesia and to Egypt, countries which do not qualify as the least developed countries under the figures of the World Bank. The figures offered by the minister today show that Egypt's net per capita is income under $100, not quite in conformity with the World Bank figure which is $240. However, deplorable as that figure is, it still leaves the Canadian people in some confusion as to where our aid is going. Is it to go to the least developed countries, or are we going to continue to give aid for political purposes, whether of not those political purposes relate to our foreign policy, or is it for purposes of our trade position with Indonesia, which seems to underlie the new $25 million arrangement?

I take exception to a press release fron CIDA which attemps to explain why aid is going to Egypt, without giving any of the details. I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to bring into this House the full program of Canada's participation in international development so that we can begin to understand, with the Canadian people, some of these details, allowing us to continue our responsibilities.

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to apologize to my colleagues in this House tonight for my unpleasant voice due to laryngitis. I should also like to thank the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) for his congratulations on the role played by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) as co-chairman of the Conference on International Economic Co-Operation.

This conference has had two meetings now, as reported on by the minister not later than this afternoon in the House. I should like to clarify one thing that has been said in respect of the minister's statement as having been a "backing away", according to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, from his previous intention of informing the House and making a complete report on the conference in Paris.

In fact what was approved by the two chairmen, the hon. Mr. MacEachen and Manuel Perez Guerrero, of Venezuela, and the other 25 colleagues of the other countries, of which 19 are developing countries, was a timetable for meetings and a general setting of guidelines, not of policies, for the meeting of the four commissions which are to start their work on February 11.

As we know now, we are members of the energy and development commissions. We shall, of course, also be engaged in the dialogue in areas covered by the two other commissions, namely, raw materials and finance. I think it is rather easy to understand at this point in time the general strategy to be followed by the 27 members of the conference. It is to act as a team that should respect the rules of work. The 19 developing countries have indicated topics which they wish to discuss in each of the commissions. Now that this has been done we shall be indicating how we think the commissions should be working.

For instance, we have started urging the adoption of a pragmatic dialogue to avoid confrontation, and we are at this point in time urging more than what the group has been doing as a working team. It is rather interesting and difficult to launch a working team which will have to create a network of relationships and a good, positive working atmosphere in setting up the most difficult distinction between aid and trade. My colleague gave the impression of mixing the two as interchangeable, which I suggest they are not.

I do not think anyone can settle the international economic order in a few weeks. Our senior public servants reached Paris recently and are working full time on the development of the policies.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—ALLEGEDLY CONFLICTING VIEWS OF MINISTERS ON ECONOMIC POLICY—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is most interesting to note that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) is here this evening. I hope he is here to answer my observations personally this evening and is not here simply as an observer.

Over the past few weeks there has been considerable concern over the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) remarks on the Canadian economy. The majority of Canadians are upset, to say the least. Toronto Liberal Leaders have expressed their concern about the Prime Minister's way of fighting inflation. The former minister, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), has requested that the Prime Minister call a Liberal caucus meeting to explain his remarks about long-term economic controls.

The president of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce does not agree with the Prime Minister's remarks that the free enterprise system is not working and that we should have more government intervention. The last thing we need in this country is more government intervention.

Canada is the most over-governed country in the world both municipally, provincially, and federally. What we need is less government. The Liberal government is responsible for our economic chaos and high inflation through its uncontrolled spending which has increased 151 per cent since 1968.

Labor and unions have no faith in the government or the Anti-Inflation Board. They are organizing official protests to say they will refuse to co-operate with the government. We now have the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) clearly repudiating the Prime Minister's controversial analysis of Canada's economic system. He says he is opposed to big government and big labour. How on earth can he stay in a Liberal cabinet when he feels this way? I see him smile. He should resign immediately. The minister made the above remarks in Winnipeg recently and distributed copies of his speech to the press in Ottawa. The acting Prime Minister stated in the House last Friday that the Minister of National Defence spoke without a text in Winnipeg. This is not true, as the speech was distributed.

There is no doubt in my mind that, under the Liberals, Canada is in for permanent controls. The Anti-Inflation Board rules and regulations are becoming so complicated and involved that a huge bureaucracy will be needed to compile all the paper work that the detailed Anti-Inflation Board forms will generate. Business is already complaining of the additional workload in its accounting systems now that it must provide information for the Anti-Inflation Board. This in itself will add to our inflation problems.

There has never been so much confusion and concern in Canada over how we are being governed. The Prime Minister has told Canadians the choice is theirs, and he also stated he welcomes the debate about the future of Canada which the government's actions and his words have stimulated. He further stated that we are living in a new economic era. I certainly agree that the Prime Minister's remarks have stimulated debate, and if the choice of a new economic era is to be left up to Canadians then an election should be called. There could be no better time, say in May or June, as the official opposition will have a new leader in less than three weeks and this would give Canadians an opportunity to decide between Progressive Conservative policies and the Liberals' new society of more government intervention. Also, the Prime Minister claims parliament is not working well, so at this time both major parties could explain to the electorate how they would make parliament work better.

The government was not given a mandate on July 8, 1974, to introduce a three-year or permanent government control scheme. As the Liberals stated, inflation was a world-wide phenomenon and nothing could be done about it, nor was any mention made of a new economic era being introduced.

Also, when there is a split in the cabinet, and the Minister of National Defence states in his Winnipeg speech that his economic views run counter to those of the Prime Minister's, and when a former cabinet minister, the member for Windsor West, states:

> that the Prime Minister's remarks have been taken by some to mean that the government is planning drastic changes in the free enterprise system and a pervasive new system of government regulations—

then I have some uneasiness about what the Prime Minister's remarks could mean. The former minister further stated:

> If major changes are in store, the Prime Minister has an obligation to explain them to caucus and to the public.

This is enough in itself to warrant an election.

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that the majority of Canadians would welcome a complete explanation from all parties as to the direction in which they would lead Canada if in power. I am also sure there would be very little objection to an election being called this spring, and under the present circumstances it would be best for the country. The parties could also explain their priorities at this time and we could have a dialogue with the Canadian public, labour, and business, as to their choice of priorities.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Public Works' (Mr. Drury) speech in Winnipeg last week on consumer buying requires clarification almost as badly as the Prime Minister's post-Christmas broadcast did. The Minister of public Works' speech also conflicts with the position now taken by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). His speech is also reminiscent of the disastrous Liberal policies of 1969 and 1970, of which he was a leading exponent.

Also, an election is needed so the Liberals can be more specific in their definitions of restraint and its approaches to the whole question of consumer demand. When a Liberal cabinet minister states that high consumer buying is harmful to Canada and is inflationary, then it is time we hit the campaign trail, Mr. Speaker.

When we read the headlines in newspapers across the country we find "Minister on Collision Course with PM". Another headline reads "PM is Scaring People, Mayor Says". Another reads "PM Urged to Explain". Another one reads "Government Blamed for Inflation". Another one reads "Trudeau's Way of Fighting Inflation Worries Toronto Liberal Leaders". Another one reads "Trudeau Scheme Absolute". Another reads "Insanity". Another reads "Mr. Trudeau Is Wrong On Economy—It Is Government Out Of Joint". Another one reads "Destroy Trudeau—Carr". He is a labour leader. These are great comments coming from Canadians about our Prime Minister. Another reads "100,000 Cubans Cheer PM;. Castro's Welcome Top Level". Another reads "Could Trudeau Pull a Ghandi?" Another refers to Trudeau as Mr. Hitler.

If we are going to be faced with these sorts of things, I can see no better time to call an election in Canada. Another headline reads "Bankers Gloomy Over Canada's Long Term Prospects".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to hear that my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre is continuing to read my speeches and to study them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I am glad also that he has seen fit to draw attention to the fact that I was speaking in Winnipeg. This was at a B'nai B'rith dinner when I was pleased to receive their International Citizenship Award. I expressed a number of thoughts on that occasion, on national defence, our relationship with Israel and peacekeeping, and I also talked about free enterprise. At that time I did not say anything about free enterprise that I have not said on a number of previous occasions. In fact some of my sentiments stated at that time I expressed even before I was in public life.

To remind the hon. member of what I did say, the essence of what I said was:

● (2220)

> It has not been free enterprise that has failed. It has been just the opposite. It has been all Canadians, working through the free enterprise system that has given Canada its high standard of living, and a way of life that in many respects is the envy of the world.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Richardson: I might say that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) suggests that I used a text. That is not correct. I did not speak from a text. Perhaps he has not heard of recording. My speech was recorded. It was later transcribed, and what was transcribed was later distributed. If the hon. member is not aware of that mechanism, perhaps he should learn that these techniques are now available.

Mr. McKenzie: A very moot point.

Mr. Richardson: However, on this occasion I did not have reason to mention the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and I did not have reason to quote anything he had said, but in view of the relationship between what I have said and what the hon. member suggests the Prime Minister has said, I should like to draw his attention to words the Prime Minister used as recently as last month here in Ottawa, and I quote:

> There is no desire on the part of the government or the people of Canada to impose more regulation on the truly competitive sectors of the economy. . . .
> The preservation and strengthening of the free market sector of our economy is absolutely central to the Liberal view of the Canada of the future . . .

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Richardson: I simply say to those who are trying to suggest that there is a conflict between what I have said and what the Prime Minister has said, that those are the words of the Prime Minister which I just read. They reflect my views, and they reflect what I said in my speech in Winnipeg.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—TRANSFER OF FOOD STOCKS FROM LOBLAWS TO ZIGGY'S—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF JUSTIFICATION FOR PRICE INCREASE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on November 7, 1975, I brought to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) the fact that Loblaws Pickering Farms in Toronto had closed and reopened on October 18, after the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of his anti-inflation policy, under the name of Ziggy's, which is also a Loblaws operation but with significantly higher prices.

The matter was referred to the Anti-Inflation Board by the minister, and last week that board made known its findings. The Anti-Inflation Board in its statement said, among other things, and I quote: "The decision of Loblaws was part of their ongoing marketing strategy".

It is no surprise that the board makes these kinds of decisions regarding prices. Board member Beryl Plumptre made it clear where she stood when she said:

> The board will have to show restraint with companies and their profits. After all, we need profits to provide jobs and investment for more growth and more jobs.

Board chairman Jean-Luc Pepin also made it pretty clear where the board stands on prices, and he is quoted as saying the following:

> Only by the end of the year, after we're able to study the big companies' profit reports will we be able to say that we've had an effect on prices here or touched something there. These guidelines on prices are much more difficult to put into use than the ones on wages.

That is what he said, again stating the obvious. Mr. Pepin accused the reporters of wanting instant coffee in terms of results on price controls. Obviously he was talking about instant coffee from Ziggy's, which now costs 20 per cent more.

In bringing down the Ziggy's decision Mr. John Hague, the director of the Anti-Inflation Board's prices and profits branch, said the decision was made to allow Loblaws to change its name to Ziggy's and raise its prices because the increases were the result of normal business practices and decisions taken prior to the implementation of the program. No doubt it took Mr. Hague's group a very long time, since November 7 until last week, to come up with that excuse. I mean, here is an excuse that not only lets these Weston-owned stores off the hook and allows them to raise prices as much as they want, but they set a terrific precedent for other businesses. I will bet that executives across this country are still scrounging through their files looking for memos talking about price rises dated before October 14.

It looks as if any price increases in this country will be getting red carpet treatment from the government and its flunkies on the Anti-Inflation Board. I am confident enough in this country's corporations to be sure that, no matter how excessive and unreasonable their price increases are, they will be able to come up with a memo dated before October 14 to back them up.

I notice that these sorts of regulations do not apply to unions, however. Loblaws decides to change its name to Ziggy's before October 14 so they can raise their prices as much as they want. But unions which had their contracts expire before that date and which were negotiating with employers have no such luck.

Say the two parties to the negotiation have agreed to negotiate. They have agreed to come to an agreement satisfactory to both of them. regardless of how much that is. Surely, using the logic of Ziggy's, anyone whose contract expired before October 14 should be able to bargain without the interference of the Anti-Inflation Board. But it does not work that way. You can only pull that kind of a stunt if you own a multi-million dollar corporation.

The board is not even content just to roll back wages, its only real function. Instead it feels compelled to jump in on the side of employers in every collective dispute it sees. And Jean-Luc Pepin in not content just to be the government's pet crocodile, snapping at the wages of workers whenever he can; he now sometimes even feels compelled to mouth the Liberal party line as well. He apologized to the Conservative Party leader for some of his partisan remarks, but it is clear he has in no way changed his mind.

The government made it clear what this program is all about through the Anti-Inflation Board's announcement on Ziggy's. It might as well have erected billboards telling the corporations, "Help yourselves—no price interference here!"

In fact the only price freezes we have seen around here have been ones the supermarkets put on themselves. Those, the Globe and Mail discovered, included prices which were frozen higher than they should have been in the first place.

There is only one good thing which can be said about the Anti-Inflation Board's Ziggy's decision, and that is it is decisions like these which indicate that the board might be committing suicide. It is decisions like these which show the people of Canada what a hypocritical farce and fraud are being perpetrated on them.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Anti-Inflation Board has carried out an investigation of a report that a Loblaws Pickering Farms store located at Yorkville Avenue and Yonge Street in downtown Toronto closed on October 18, 1975, and re-opened two weeks later as Ziggy's, a specialty chain owned by Loblaws, with higher prices.

The board's investigation disclosed no evidence that indicated the change in question was in any way an attempt on the part of Loblaws to circumvent the anti-inflation guidelines. It was determined that Loblaws was in the process of rationalizing supermarket operations by closing down unprofitable stores. During the past four years, 110 supermarkets were closed. On October 18, 1975, the Loblaws store located at 852 Yonge Street, in Toronto, closed down and re-opened on October 30, 1975, as a Ziggy's operation, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Loblaws Ltd. The Ziggy's store in question operates as a specialty delicatessen store and carries, in addition to the regular Ziggy's product line, certain convenience products similar to Beckers, Mac's Milk, etc. Certain of these convenience products are common to both Ziggy's and Loblaws, and initially some prices were higher at Ziggy's. After public outcry, prices were immediately rolled back by Ziggy's. Therefore the decision to close the Loblaws store and to open as a Ziggy's outlet would not appear to contravene the guidelines.

The characteristics of Ziggy's are sufficiently different from that of a supermarket in that it offers specialty merchandise, uses special equipment, and renders a personal service that a special pricing policy would seem justified. However, the so-called convenience products, such as bread, milk, eggs, sugar, coffee, salt, etc., offered for the shopper's convenience only, and which do not fall under Ziggy's normal pricing policy, in the judgment of the board, should be priced in accordance with Loblaws' pricing methods. To this end the board has told Loblaws that the maximum price to be charged for these so-called convenience products at Ziggy's should not be priced higher than these same goods at Loblaws supermarkets. Loblaws have agreed to abide by this decision of the Anti-Inflation Board.

PROPOSAL TO AVOID REDUCTION IN PRODUCTION OF HEAVY OIL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. I am compelled to do this by the extremely grave threat to Canada's heavy oil production caused in part by the export quota system which has lead to a dramatic fall in demand. Already over 500 of the Lloydminster producing wells have been shut down and due to the unique characteristics of the Lloyminster field, these wells may never again attain full production when restarted. I therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That although this House acknowledges the efforts of the National Energy Board to deal with the situation, this House regrets that the measures will not become effective until March or April, 1976, thus forcing the closure of many more oil wells in the Lloydminster area causing severe disruption of the economy and the subsequent loss to Canada of vital oil resources, and directs the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to make new initiatives, possibly entailing either the further reduction of the export tax on heavy oil or the exemption of heavy oil from the quota system.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED COMMISSION OF INQUIRY INTO EFFECT ON HEALTH OF URANIUM MINING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity arising out of press reports of continuing government inaction with respect to the cleaning up of radioactive contamination in Port Hope, Ontario, and with respect to the prevention of further similar threats to public health.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That this House instruct the government to appoint immediately a commission under the Inquiries Act to look into and report on all aspects of the mining and processing of uranium in Canada with respect to the direct and indirect effects that such activities have on the health and safety of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH ARMED FORCES GIVE ASSISTANCE IN EMERGENCIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an important issue of pressing necessity.

Considering that thousands of families have been deprived of electricity and essential services as the result of a violent storm on February 2 and 3, 1976, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) and, under the circumstances, by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That this House asks the government and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) to tell the Canadian people what assistance is available from the armed forces in stricken areas in such circumstances and the means to be used to obtain such assistance, if necessary and in due time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SECRETARY GENERAL OF NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the oral question period I know all hon. members would want to join with me in calling attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished visitor and to make him welcome during his all too brief stay. I refer, of course, to the very distinguished Secretary General of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Dr. Joseph Luns.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VENEZUELA—DISCUSSION DURING PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT CONCERNING PURCHASE OF OIL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister about the Latin connection.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Arising out of the statement in the House on January 9, 1974 by the then minister of energy, mines and resources that with regard to Venezuela we were making clear Canada's interest in the continued assurance of supply from that country and the possibility of an accord, et cetera, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he discussed this long term accord with respect to the security of supply of oil from Venezuela during his visit.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, only in the sense that I indicated in my answer, I believe to the Leader of the New Democratic Party, yesterday. There was no precise accord exchange of quantities or figures. As I think I indicated yesterday the Venezuelans now are interested in an assurance that we would not lower the general magnitude of our liftings because of the nationalization that they proceeded with, and I could give them that assurance. On our side, we were interested in making sure that they were going to consider Canada as a market to which they would be continuing to export without any political conditions put on their exports. So, in this very general sense, the subject was discussed.

Mr. Stanfield: That particular Latin connection seems to be a little loose. May I take it, then, that the Government of Canada is no longer pursuing the policy outlined by the then minister of energy, mines and resources? I wish to ask the Prime Minister whether he sought, and if so whether he received, any assurance from the president of Venezuela that Venezuela will continue to offer to Canada the present volume, or even an increase in volume, of oil which is now coming to Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: If I can use an appropriate metaphor, the shoe is on the other foot. Venezuela at this time is interested in making sure that Canada takes all the oil it wants to export, and therefore the kind of preoccupation suggested by the Leader of the Opposition is not at all appropriate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am referring to a preoccupation of the government which existed back in 1974, and in view of the fact that an increase in percentage of crude petroleum coming into eastern Canada, upon which eastern Canada is dependent, is now coming from parts of the world which can hardly be considered stable, I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the view of the government that the shoe is really on the other foot; that it is up to Venezuela to worry about selling oil to Canada; that Canada, particularly eastern Canada, can feel quite secure about the supply of oil and that the worries the then minister of energy, mines and resources had following the crisis or the near crisis of a year or two ago have been completely forgotten by the present Prime Minister and the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, that has not been forgotten, but I am sure the Leader of the Opposition is in a position to realize that questions of supply sometimes predominate and questions of demand sometimes predominate. At the present time Venezuela is more concerned with demand for their oil than we happen to be about supply. That does not mean that at a different time in world events the situation will not be different and the shoe will not be on the other foot. That is why, in general, it was very important to make sure that our relations at the political and commercial level with Venezuela remain very good. At this time they are, in a sense, perhaps asking us for something of a favour but a couple of years ago we were asking them for a favour. This is the meaning of the Latin connection, Mr. Speaker, that we help each other and this is the kind of relationship we have established with Venezuela.

Mr. Stanfield: One final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of even this government looking more than a year or two ahead and if the Prime Minister found that the government of Venezuela was anxious to encourage sales to Canada, would this not have been an excellent time for the government of Canada to have achieved an increase in the security of supply of oil for the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and the eastern part of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, it would, Mr. Speaker; in the very general sense I have admitted it would. The Leader of the Opposition will, of course, realize that the kind of question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic Party is also relevant, here, however. We want to make sure that, given the particular quality of that particular source of oil, we will be paying the right price and there was no need at this time to embark on any specific bargain. Of course, I repeat, that Petro-Canada is going to be sending a delegation there to examine this question and perhaps to embark upon some bargaining. I must remind the Leader of the Opposition, however, that in Venezuelan terms they do not have an eternal supply of conventional oil. They are thinking in terms of ten or perhaps 15 years and they are asking us for support in the exploitation of the Orinoco tar sands; they are talking exchange of technology with us.

In these various senses our relations are good and will continue to intensify, but we should not think that a guarantee against all future eventualities. Venezuela has a secure supply of oil. The time is limited, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: That is right.

VENEZUELA—DISCUSSIONS DURING PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT CONCERNING CONSTRUCTION OF STEEL COMPLEX

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. In view of the recent announcement by the government of Venezuela that they are planning a $3½ billion outlay for a new steel complex to produce five million metric tons of steel annually and in light of Canada's massive trade deficit with Venezuela, was Canadian participation in the building of the steel complex discussed with President Perez? There is no direct mention of this in the communiqué.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this and other forms of Canadian investment were discussed. The accent at this time was more on transportation because in this month of February there is a very big possibility outstanding for Canadians. Perhaps in the communiqué therefore we thought to put emphasis more on certain short-run or immediate projects but several long-term investment possibilities, such as the one the hon. gentleman referred to, were raised in the meetings.

Mr. Kempling: A supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister tell the House if arrangements were made for future talks on this subject and if the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will lead a delegation or make arrangements for talks with Canadian producers and the government of Venezuela on this matter? It is a large complex of $3½ billion and we should have a part of the action.

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member completely and I agree with him in his acceptance of my view of the new society, where the government is very important in aiding the private sector.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is super baloney!

ENERGY

ALLEGED ARSENIC AND RADIUM CONTAMINATION OF LAKE ONTARIO AT PORT HOPE BY ELDORADO—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, when speaking of the future new society, the Prime Minister mentioned that one of his areas of concern was the control of pollution. With specific reference to that subject, may I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Since an Atomic Energy Control Board study of last July reported that, when taken together, arsenic and radium contamination dumped from an Eldorado nuclear disposal area into Lake Ontario in the Port Hope region is above acceptable levels, and since this contamination is still being dumped into the lake in that region, why has the government, given its expressed concern about pollution, particularly dangerous pollution, not yet acted to stop this?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has fallen into the trap some hon. members fall into when they read sensational news stories. He has made certain assumptions which do not hold up under examination. There is no dumping of arsenic and radium waste into Lake Ontario. There is a run-off, which is what we are talking about only, a casual, very small run-off.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: Explain.

Mr. Stanfield: The minister is running off, too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, may I conclude by saying that this is a run-off in very minute concentrations. I have been assured that there is no hazard to public health as a result of this.

Mr. Hees: The minister is running off from the mouth.

DATE OF REPORT ON SITES OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE DUMPS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I suspect the minister might be running off. May I ask a supplementary question? Given the serious concern of the minister of health of the province of Ontario, I ask the minister who has said that investigative proceedings are under way into the dumping processes at Port Hope and other sites, when can we expect a report, in the House or outside, on the work being done by those investigating this situation?

Mr. Baldwin: In 1996.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, here again we see an example of a certain kind of thing, about which I am concerned. The hon. member is confusing a lot of separate issues so far as the town of Port Hope is concerned. A moment ago he asked me a question about dumping. Actually, that was a run-off from an old residue disposal area. The next moment the hon. member talks about radioactivity. That is as I understood his question of a moment ago. It is completely unrelated to his earlier statement. Let me make it clear that I am going to present to the House a list of the various areas in the province of Ontario which were affected. I will include in that, of course, the town of Port Hope. After consultation with the minister of health of Ontario I hope to be able to make public as well a list of the various locations within the town of Port Hope. I think the hon. member will agree that it is important for those affected to receive the information first and not to read it in the newspaper.

PROPOSED COMMISSION TO STUDY HEALTH AND SAFETY ASPECTS OF USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? As both situations to which the minister alludes involve radioactive substances which are the prime cause of both situations—hence the expressed concern I am voicing in my question, a concern expressed by people outside this House—may I ask the minister this question: in view of the government of Canada's decision to expand in the years ahead the number of nuclear power sites in Canada and the related concern, for example, of three scientists in the United States who resigned from a General Electric project because they felt it was a dangerous development in this field, would the minister commit his department to establish an independent commission which would look into all the health and safety aspects of our continued expansion in the nuclear field?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not rule out an inquiry at some time if it can be demonstrated to me that one might serve a useful purpose. I think it is quite clear at the present time that there has not been sufficient evidence of abuse to show that such an inquiry would serve any useful purpose at the present time. I have indicated to the hon. member and the House that we will do everything we can to deal with this situation which occurred some 20 years ago, and which had to do with the knocking down of an old building and not with the refining process at all.

Mr. Broadbent: That's absurd.

Mr. Gillespie: It was rubble from an old building. The purpose of this particular operation right now at Port Hope is to identify where that radioactivity might be and clean it up just as quickly as we can.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH ARMED FORCES GIVE ASSISTANCE IN EMERGENCIES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Since I have been caught, like thousands of other drivers and families, in a terrifying storm on Highway 20 in the area of Saint-Hyacinthe, Granby, etc. and thousands of families have been deprived of essential services such as electricity and related facilities needed on a daily basis, can the Minister of National Defence indicate whether, in such circumstances, his department can help the civilian population with snowmobiles, ploughs or blowers, and if so to whom should they address such a request for aid?

Mr. Speaker, I hope you are the one presiding over our assembly, my colleagues at my left should allow me to ask my question. Here in this House, there is no snow storm, there is no snow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I listened very carefully to the question. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to answer it.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is not finished.

It is not with jokes of this nature that the people can hope to be protected in tragic times such as those we have experienced on Monday and Tuesday.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

My question is serious, Mr. Speaker, and I want to ask the Minister of National Defence what procedures to follow when the civilian population finds itself in a tragic situation of this kind. How can people obtain any help from the army to insure protection in situations such as the one I just described?

[English]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the assistance required is relatively minor they could seek help by contacting the base commander. If it is of a wider nature or of more concern then they should seek assistance from the municipal authorities or, finally, from the provincial government which would in turn make a request to National Defence for assistance.

REASON FOR CONSTRUCTING NEW FACILITIES FOR LANGUAGE TRAINING AT ST. JOHNS, QUEBEC

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that it is vitally necessary for the government to set an example in respect of restraint if the anti-inflation program is to succeed, will the Minister of National Defence advise the House why the government is not planning to make far greater use of present language training facilities at St. Johns, Quebec by adding, if necessary, a second shift to the educational program, thereby making it unnecessary at this time to build a brand new language training facility at the same place, to supplement the present adequate facilities, at a cost of $88 million?

● (1430)

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): The Department of National Defence is already making full use of the language training facilities at St. Johns. In fact, they are over-extended, not only for language training but for recruit training and that is the reason for the decision to build new facilities there. They are for recruit training, the introduction of Francophone personnel into the armed forces, and also for the language training which is required.

Mr. Hees: As the minister obviously did not answer my question about the introduction of a second shift, and since a second shift would relieve the pressure sufficiently to make it unnecessary to build the new facilities, is it not clear that the attitude of the government toward the restraint program is: do as we say, don't do as we do?

INCOME TAX

ENTRY OF SKY SHOPS ASSETS INTO CANADA FROM THE BAHAMAS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of National Revenue. Has the hon. gentleman checked to determine under what circumstances the retained earnings or other assets of Sky Shops Limited from its Bahamian subsidiary or subsidiaries were brought into Canada and whether all of the requirements of Canadian tax law were satisfied in this respect?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am, of course, always reluctant to interfere with the right of hon. members to pose questions. There is, however, one rule we have followed, particularly in the putting of questions to ministers, namely, that ministers ought not to be asked to comment on a matter which is before the courts.

An hon. Member: This is not before the courts!

Mr. Speaker: Ordinarily that is not something which would interfere with the rights of an opposition member to ask questions. However, yesterday the hon. member for Central Nova was at pains to indicate that he had been served with a writ which he described to the House which involves an action before the courts and which affects the member personally as well as the company to which he has just alluded. I really think the hon. member ought to refrain from questions relative to that matter now.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: With respect to yourself, Mr. Speaker, I suggest it is only a very specific area involving this matter that is before the courts.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DATE OF REPORT OF INVESTIGATION OF SKY SHOPS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): May I put a supplementary question to the Solicitor General? Can the Solicitor General indicate, with respect to the RCMP investigation into the so-called Sky Shops affair and the related matter of Liberal Party fund-raising practices, when we may expect to hear some results of this investigation?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that there is an investigation into Sky Shops but not into the Liberal Party fund-raising process.

An hon. Member: Why not?

Mr. Allmand: The most recent information I have is that this investigation is continuing and will take some time because of the large amount of documentation involved.

Mr. MacKay: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Three o'clock.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED LEAK OF INFORMATION CONCERNING BILL DEALING WITH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT AND PAROLE—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Did the hon. gentleman authorize or knowingly acquiesce in the release of information to the media containing detailed contents of the bill with regard to capital punishment which resulted in a CBC television program last night, and also information concerning the changes in the Parole Act and the parole regulations which was publicized this morning?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker, I did not. I did not see the program but I heard about it. I do not know how that information got to them.

Mr. Baldwin: In the light of the fact that capital punishment has never been a partisan issue in this House and that making such information available on a program of that kind might prejudice the debate in the House, will the minister make an investigation to ascertain how this information was so improperly released before the bill had been introduced, and take appropriate action?

Mr. Allmand: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether all the information in that broadcast is correct. As I mentioned, I did not see the program. I am getting a transcript, however, and I will try to find out how it was leaked. I agree with the hon. member that such premature release could hurt the debate.

SALE OF BLOOD BY CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES—REASON FOR FAILURE TO IMPOSE EXPORT CONTROLS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his unavoidable absence I feel his parliamentary secretary should be able to answer it, because he has been given notice. In view of the critical shortage of serum albumin in 1974 and the fact that people were being entreated by the Canadian Red Cross to give blood to meet the shortage, while at the same time we were buying serum albumin from sources outside Canada, would the parliamentary secretary tell the House how the blood brokers were able to obtain blood from Connaught Laboratories to sell it abroad, and can he explain why export controls were not placed on these blood products which were being freely donated by the Canadian people? Further, has any legislation been introduced to stop this ghoulish and nefarious practice.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member is asking, in part, for an explanation of the conduct of Connaught Laboratories. I want the House to be aware that Connaught Laboratories is not a Crown corporation.

Some hon. Members: Oh!

An hon. Member: It is owned by one.

Mr. Kaplan: It is on its way to private ownership by Canadian investors and the top management of Connaught Laboratories should be given an opportunity to defend their conduct. They were in touch with me this morning and they claim they have an excellent defence. I do not think the government should put their defence forward. As to the export of blood from Canada, I very much regret that the CBC in its story yesterday failed to point out that the government has introduced export controls on these blood products and that when these products are required for Canadian use their export will not be permitted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rynard: The parliamentary secretary said the government has no control over the export of these products and now he says they have passed legislation to stop it. They cannot have it both ways and I intend to follow up this matter further.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

VENEZUELA—POSSIBILITY OF DISCUSSING TRADE WITH CHINA DURING PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose-Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister; it is, really, supplementary to the question asked earlier by the Leader of the Opposition. In view of the importance to Canada of the Latin connection, may I ask whether the Prime Minister had time in his discussions with officials in Venezuela to thank them for the amount of goods they bought from the Peoples' Republic of China which helped the Chinese people pay for Canadian wheat?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would certainly have had time to do that but I am sorry the hon. member did not put the idea in my head before I left.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF CANADA JOINING ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

Mr. Louis Duclos (Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether, in the course of the talks he has had with the political authorities of Mexico, Cuba and Venezuela, the matter of Canada eventually joining the Organization of American States has been raised, and if so, could he say whether, in his opinion, Canada would have advantage in joining the OAS and could make a useful contribution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I had the opportunity to discuss this matter with the three heads of government I have met, in the hope, precisely, as the hon. member is suggesting, that the Canadian government policy might take their points of view into account. I must say that the results have been rather surprising. President Perez of Venezuela has strongly urged us to become a full member. We are now an observer. As for Prime Minister Castro, he was of course extremely negative in respect of the organization. Finally, President Echeverria seemed to be divided between the two. Then, Mr. Speaker, the question remains entire in our mind, and I have committed myself vis-à-vis President Perez to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to undertake a new study of the matter.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT EFFORTS TO AVOID STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that wage negotiations between the railway workers of Canada and the railway companies broke down last Friday because the companies are hiding behind the Anti-Inflation Board's wage guidelines to avoid bargaining in good faith, can the minister inform the House what steps he is taking at this point to get the railway companies to come out from behind the skirts of the Anti-Inflation Board and carry on proper collective bargaining?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I announced in the House the other day—I do not know whether or not the hon. member was here—I was prepared to follow, as the unions so notified me, the stipulated courses under the labour code with respect to intervention along the lines of a single commissioner or board. I am giving the matter consideration at the moment and I hope to make an announcement very shortly.

Mr. Rodriguez: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the minister said that he is prepared to intervene in one of two ways, is he prepared to tell the House when we may expect to hear exactly when the commissioner will be appointed so that we can get on with the business of collective bargaining?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am under a stipulated time limit of, I believe, 15 days and I would hope to do it before the expiration of that 15 days. Naturally, there are some discussions I should like to have with appropriate officials prior to my making the announcement.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR CONSTRUCTING LANGUAGE TRAINING FACILITIES AT ST. JOHN'S, QUEBEC

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question first of the Minister of National Defence and second of the President of the Treasury Board concerning the question asked by my colleague from Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees).

Can the Minister of National Defence explain what was the priority scale he and the government have used to agree to the estimated expense of $88 million for a language training centre at St. John's, given the lack of funds for the purchase of tanks and aircraft and for the recruitment of the staff necessary for the maintenance of existing bases, and that despite the fact that there is extra space and teaching personnel at the language school in Ottawa. Could the minister tell the House what is the scale of priorities and whether that $88 million expense was affected by the famous $1.5 billion cut?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the question is directed in part to me and in part to the Minister of National Defence. The decision concerning the reconstruction of the St. John's base was taken in 1973. In fact, it was decided to rebuild not only the language school but the whole base which will be used for all French-speaking recruits while serving, at the same time, as language school for the armed forces. The project was submitted to the cabinet in 1973, and the work will start this year.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the President of the Treasury Board. Can he explain the principles which allowed the Treasury Board to authorize the department to build and expand their own language school while the government already has a very efficient civil service school with excess space and teaching staff? Could it be that each department is creating its own bureaucratic empire?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the principle involved is that which promotes the frenchifying of the Canadian armed forces, in compliance with the instructions of the House of Commons as indicated in the Official Languages Act. The base is being rebuilt. St. Jean already has a Canadian Forces language school which will be given more adequate facilities; but the language school is only part of the overall project.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR POSTPONEMENT OF RESTRICTIONS ON LICENCES FOR LOBSTER FISHING

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of fisheries. In view of the confusion that has arisen since the minister's announcement regarding the lobster fishery and the new regulations that he has imposed, and in view of the serious unemployment situation existing in the maritime provinces, particularly on Cape Breton Island, would the minister consider rescinding the new regulations for a period of at least one year, thus allowing those severely economically depressed to be able to continue to fish for lobster to help them make a living?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that a lot of the confusion comes from the fact that many people, including those who write editorials, have not read the communiqué and the letter that was sent to the licence holders involved. There is also another fact. I made it very clear that I was trying to remove from the fishery those who are employed full time elsewhere. Those who are unemployed or laid off from temporary employment, or those who are part time farmers or part time lumbermen, will not be affected. If they are, they should appeal and I would expect that the committee which hears their appeal will rule in their favour. This is a policy we are using to preserve the limited stock of lobster for the bona fide, honest to goodness fisherman. I am not attacking the hon. member personally, but if members, provincial and federal, do not want me to implement this policy they should make up their minds.

Mr. Muir: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his reply and I appreciate his views on conservation, but would he be good enough to advise the senior fisheries officers in the regions concerned so they can explain to those concerned? Many members have contacted the minister's officials within the areas and they are not sure of what is going to take place. Even in press releases they have said that.

Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent): Well, Mr. Speaker, I certainly believe it would be of help—this suggestion has been made and I am willing to accept it—if we met with members of parliament from the Atlantic region and discussed the matter with them. I have asked that this procedure be put into effect. I repeat that it was not an easy decision. Nevertheless, I am trying to preserve the stocks not only in terms of conservation but in terms of the income of those fishermen who depend on fishing for a living.

NATIONAL DISASTER

REQUEST FOR FORMULA TO GIVE LARGER AMOUNT OF AID TO NEW BRUNSWICK TO COMPENSATE FOR STORM DAMAGE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister of which I have given his office notice. Would the government consider totalling damages for the purposes of financial help for those who have suffered grave losses on three occasions during this fiscal year in southern New Brunswick? Such a formula would ensure a larger national financial contribution to a serious disaster that, of course, affects the whole country.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, following the hon. member's notice of his question my office initiated a study into this matter. We are looking into the possibility, because of the special circumstances, of providing an exception in this particular case, for which obviously we have great sympathy. I cannot give the hon. member a firm answer, but I want to tell him that we are studying the suggestion in a sympathetic way, particularly in view of the fact that this type of expenditure would not be a normally recurring one, and perhaps also because the hon. member is not in the habit of asking for handouts; and this is a particularly meritorious case.

OLYMPIC GAMES

INQUIRY WHETHER CANADA ASKED FOR INTERPOL SERVICES TO PROVIDE SECURITY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. He is not at his desk but I could put it in any case to the Prime Minister.

I would like to ask the Solicitor General, considering that two U.S. subcommittees are investigating the obscure background of Interpol and that Interpol cooperation proved inefficient at the Munich Olympic Games in 1972, to tell us whether he did anyway ask for the services of Interpol to avert any terrorist activities and maintain order during the coming Olympic Games in Montreal?

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as I have said several times in the House, Interpol is not an operation police agency but merely a centre of exchange for police forces in the world. It is the instrument of the national police forces and forces of different countries but has no operational capability.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON STUDY OF CLOSING OF BASES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question which is supplementary to a question of mine, one of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings and one by the hon. member for Edmonton West to the Minister of National Defence. In the same article which disclosed that $88 million is to be spent on a training centre for language in Montreal the minister says there will be bases phased out. I should like to ask the minister now if that study is completed in respect of the Calgary, Edmonton and other bases which apparently are to be closed out because of the $88 million to be spent in Montreal.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. The study is not completed and there is no relationship between the rationalization study and the development of the recruiting and language school which as the President of the Treasury Board has said, had been in the planning and development stage for the past three or four years and which will take the next four or five years to complete.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence who is making this study and why was the study called for if it is not the idea of the Department of National Defence and the minister to close out those bases?

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the study is being undertaken by the Department of National Defence. It arose out of the statement made in the House in November at the same time I announced the other major decisions concerning National Defence. I said at that time it was necessary to reduce the National Defence overhead and to increase the amount of our operations in relation to our support services. That is where it all originated. It was announced last November and when it is completed the decisions will be announced.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LEBANON—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID IN SETTLEMENT OF INTERNAL STRIFE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is prompted by the descendants of the ancient Phoenicians who live in Canada. What kind of action is Canada taking with regard to the troubled affairs in Lebanon?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been giving considerable attention to what role Canada should play itself or through the United Nations in the situation in Lebanon. At the present time as the hon. member knows the situation has eased in Lebanon in the direction of a political settlement and it is our expectation that this trend would continue.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBLE ACTION TO ENCOURAGE EARLY FILING OF RETURNS—LACK OF AVAILABILITY OF FORMS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the fact that annually the Department of National Revenue faces a crisis in terms of volume of tax returns received during the last two weeks of April, has the department taken any overt action to encourage taxpayers to file returns earlier than usual. In other words, has anything been done to minimize that peak volume in the last two weeks of April?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Well, Mr. Speaker, advertisements and admonitions are constantly being sent out by the department indicating to individuals who file early that if they do so they are more apt to get the refund quickly. I might say that, in respect of the returns that come in, 75 per cent of these people receive refunds.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer and appreciate his concern. I wonder if he can explain why certain and probably all district taxation offices as of yesterday do not have available for taxpayers certain essential forms necessary for the preparation of many returns among which unavailable forms are those for claiming a corporation's investment tax credit, the disbursement certificate for the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan and the self-employed contribution forms for the Canada Pension Plan.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can bet that as a result of his question a lot of people will scurry around tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—INQUIRY IF CASTRO DISCLOSED TO PRIME MINISTER REASON FOR SENDING TROOPS TO ANGOLA

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I should like to come back to these frank and brutal discussions we heard so much about. I am wondering whether they were sufficiently frank and brutal to secure from the Cuban leader some indication of why he felt it necessary to drag Cuba and the Cubans into a civil war so far from Cuba's frontiers and so far removed from Cuba's basic economic concerns.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, of course, Mr. Speaker; Premier Castro spent a great deal of time explaining the reasons for his participation. It might be fair to say he was also frank and brutal with me. I do not think the House would expect me to recite here the many, many reasons Premier Castro advanced. The opposition say "Why not". If they want to know what Mr. Castro thinks why do they not go and ask him.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect I do not think that was very much of an answer. I therefore have a supplementary. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether during these frank and brutal discussions he was able to get some explanation from the Cuban leader, in face of the fact that all of Angola's immediate neighbours, Zaire, Zambia, Botswang and South Africa are opposed to that particular intervention, why the Cuban leader should have felt it necessary to drag Cuba in on the side of the MPLA?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I could name several other countries of Africa which are favourable to the MPLA. As the hon. member should know the Organization for African Unity divided 50-50 on this—

Mr. Baldwin: Did you treat him as brutally as you did inflation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I had some hesitancy about the question of the hon. member in that it seeks a lengthy explanation of the opinion of another country. However, I am prepared to have the Prime Minister answer it if the House is interested.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, if I were to recite faithfully the arguments put forward by Premier Castro in defending his own position I am sure it would emerge as though I were being an apologist for his argument.

Mr. Diefenbaker: He has not got a better apologist anywhere.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, Premier Castro's position on Angola has been stated I believe at some length in an interview he gave the Canadian Press in Havana. I follow a rule in discussions with leaders of other countries which I expect them to follow when they are reporting on the meetings. I say what I told him. I do not expect him to give publicly all my arguments. If we are having private meetings between heads of governments, or indeed between heads of provinces and the federal government, the basic rule in these private meetings is that you quote your own position but you do not quote the other person's.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Prime Minister in connection with this brutal and frank encounter who wrestled whom to the ground?

Mr. Trudeau: It was a draw, Mr. Speaker.

● (1500)

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief point of order. I beg your leave, and that of the House, to give the Solicitor General an opportunity to correct what I believe was a misleading answer. I should like to have the minister explain why, if Liberal party fund raising practices do not form part of the Sky Shops and related investigations, a warrant issued on the part of Inspector Rodney T. Stamler, whom I know to be one of the finest investigators in Canada, contains a paragraph in which it is stated:

All letters, notes, memoranda and other writing relating to the collection of money for the Liberal party of Canada by Louis Giguère between January 1, 1968, and July 31, 1975.

If, in fact, this warrant does not read correctly, or if the minister is ignorant of its contents, in either case I think he owes the House an explanation. May I also say, on a related point of order, that I feel, with great deference, that the statement of claim with respect to the civil action which we both mentioned yesterday is confined to a fairly narrow aspect of this matter, namely, pricing practices, and has no direct relation to, for example, the type of question I asked the Minister of National Revenue. To impose restrictions on a member of parliament on questions asked on such a wide subject as this, based on a fairly narrow civil case, I think is an unfair restriction on the rights and privileges of all members of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, let me say that he, as a lawyer, should know better than anyone else that people are often subpoenaed to appear in a case or produce documents, not because they are being investigated but because their evidence is relevant to the case.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That has cleared up the situation!

An hon. Member: He needs a lawyer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Central Nova raises two questions, one which is, frankly, a rejection of the response given to him by the Solicitor General, which is neither a point of order nor a question of privilege which, as he indicated, he might raise at three o'clock. The other question, however, is a matter of serious concern. It regards any restriction which might be placed on the right of an hon. member to put questions when a matter is before the courts.

I am most reluctant to intervene on that ground. However, there have been rather clearly established precedents that matters which are before the courts should not be the subject of discussion in the House. I would prefer to give the hon. member the opportunity perhaps to prepare a further argument on that point and deliver it tomorrow at this hour in order to invite, perhaps, the intervention in that discussion by any interested members of the House in order that the Chair might be guided specifically in this case.

Past cases have dealt with most of the precedents regarding criminal charges and have really confined themselves to answers given by ministers of the Crown which might have some bearing on the outcome of the criminal charges. The fact of the matter is that we have here a rather unique situation in that the hon. member who put the question is, in fact, a party to the litigation. I think that puts it in a rather difficult category, one which gives me great trouble, and I would therefore welcome tomorrow at three o'clock the intervention of any hon. member who can make a contribution on this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, during the question period I was allowed to put a serious question to the Minister of National Defence. That question dealt with an urgent situation that occurred at the beginning of the week, namely on February 2, in Quebec, and more particularly in the areas of Montreal, Saint-Hyacinthe, Drummond and Quebec City.

Indeed, during that violent storm thousands of families had to do without essential services like electricity, heating, water supply and so on. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, hundreds of car drivers were also trapped on Highway 20 and regional roads. This put the lives of thousands of people in danger.

I personally witnessed that hundreds of other people stuck for hours were able to hear on station CKVL calls of distress from mothers of families who were asking for help to have either heating or water to give to their children. At that time, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian army was also being called upon because, finally, all Canadians pay to maintain thousands of people who must safeguard the rights of Canadians and come to their help in difficult times.

Well, I asked myself how it was that the Canadian army could not come in to rescue those people whose lives were in danger. That is, Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege.

Earlier I wanted through Your Honour to ask the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) what were his powers when such situations occur and which allow the Canadian army to come to the rescue of people or families caught in excessively difficult situations.

Some of my colleagues on the government side seemed to find the intervention by the hon. member for Bellechasse funny.

Mr. Speaker, this is no joke but a tragic situation, and God save those people from needing help from people, or even the Canadian army. It is necessary to live excessively difficult times and even see one's life endangered to understand all the grandeur of the life God gave us. And when it is put in danger because of events or exceptional circumstances one must seek by all means to rescue one's neighbours to protect and safeguard them.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) who is now in the House, a very serious question. I asked him whether he had received a request from the Quebec government and the City of Montreal that members of Canadian forces be posted in Montreal during the Olympic Games. The minister earnestly replied that he had. In a supplementary question, I asked him what would be the cost of the Canadian army's participation in the games; he answered, as reported on page 10430 of Hansard that this participation would cost about $24 million.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister for this information. If it is deemed desirable that Canadian forces be present at the Olympic Games, I wonder, on behalf of my fellow Canadians, whether when difficult situations arise, as was the case early this week in the areas I have mentioned earlier, we should not be entitled to expect that Canadian forces which are well equipped with trucks, ploughs, blowers and snowmobiles, provide Hydro-Quebec staff with assistance?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member started with the question of privilege, but in concluding he is discussing with the minister the action or lack of action by the Canadian armed forces, which is a completely different question. Would the hon. member end his comments?

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I think I was misunderstood. I did not want to criticize, but I wanted to ask, on behalf of my fellow citizens, what requirements Canadians caught in difficult situations, must comply with to get assistance from the Canadian army. This is my question of privilege and, in conclusion, I would say that I hope the Minister of National Defence will take all necessary means to inform the Canadian people so that, when in a difficult position, they know where to get protection from the army, which we pay for out of our own pockets. This is the substance of my question of privilege which I ask on behalf of my fellow Canadians. Particularly those from the Quebec City area.

[English]

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, in brief reply to the question of privilege I would like to say, first of all, that we do not consider the subject raised by the hon. member as humorous; it is a serious matter. I would like to think that the armed forces played every reasonable part they could in being of assistance. In my earlier reply I described the means by which the armed forces are brought into action, that is, through municipal or provincial authorities. I may be subject to correction, but I understand that during the recent storm there were requests from Quebec City, and we were of some assistance. I do not believe there was any specific request from the Montreal area. I want to look into that matter, make inquiries and find out exactly what requests did come forward and what we were able to do.

Mr. Speaker, I will mention one other point which was raised by the hon. member. He referred to the Olympic games and the work of the armed forces there. There has been some misunderstanding with regard to my reply on that subject last week. I want to make it clear that the armed forces are paying for, not only their pay and allowance and for operations, but we will also pay—and I have cleared this with Treasury Board who are responsible for negotiating with COJO—we will also pay for the out of pocket $24 million, plus whatever additional there may be above that from National Defence. We will not charge these out of pocket expenses to COJO. If that was not clear in my earlier answer, I hope it is clear now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NOTARIES RETAINED TO PROCESS NHA MORTGAGES

Question No. 3,254—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Does Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation hire notaries and, if so, how many in each province and constituency?

2. (a) How many notaries in the Constituencies of Shefford and Brome-Missisquoi handle loans for CMHC (b) what are their names?

3. In the past five years (a) how many cases have been consigned to each (b) how much money has been spent by the Corporation through each notary?

4. What was the average delay between the time the notary was instructed and the time the loan was awarded?

[Mr. Drury.]

5. For each year 1970 to date, what fees were paid by CMHC to each notary in the Constituency of Shefford?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am advised as follows by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation: 1. Notaries are retained to process mortgage documentation for loans approved by CMHC under the NHA in the Province of Quebec. The number of such notaries is determined by the volume of lending activity.

2. (a) and (b), and 3. (a) and (b) See Table 1 following.

NOTARIES RETAINED TO HANDLE MORTGAGE DOCUMENTATION FOR LOANS MADE UNDER THE NHA BY CMHC
MUNICIPAL COUNTIES OF BROME, MISSISQUOI AND SHEFFORD
1972-1974

Notary	Number of Loans	Amount $000
Beaudry and Dion, Cowansville	3	58.2
Raymond Boily, Cowansville	11	214.1
Gilles Dupuis, Waterloo	1	600
P.-A. Giguère, Valcourt	4	76.1

Armand Marier, Windsor	2	34.4
J.-P. Matton, Granby	43	796.0
Noiseux and Trudel, Granby	15	256.7

NOTE: The basic geographical units for compilation of CMHC data are the municipality and municipal county, and not Federal electoral constituencies.

4. The formal advice to the borrower of the approval of the loan includes the notary's name and address and, at the same time, the notary is advised of this action.

5. The fees arising from these transactions are paid by the borrower and, therefore, CMHC does not have any record of them.

SWIMMING POOL AT 24 SUSSEX STREET

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,233 that the swimming pool and related facilities at the official residence of the Prime Minister at 24 Sussex Drive, were designed by an architect of the Department of Public Works (a) what is the name of the architect and his employment record in government service (b) how many hours of work did he spend on the project (c) what is his annual salary (d) what was the cost to the Department of all work, in any way connected with the construction of the swimming pool (e) what are the names of all other employees of the Department, other than the architect, involved with the construction of the swimming pool including their job designations and annual salaries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): According to Beauchesne, questions must not repeat in substance or with slight variations questions already answered, a situation which applies to this enquiry. Moreover, it is not in the tradition of a non-political public service to disclose names of officials who perform tasks in the course of their public duty.

[English]

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, last November 17 I rose to express my concern about an answer which had been given to me in the House with respect to question No. 3,081 which I had on the order paper and which had been dropped by the government. I spoke on November 17 and on November 19 Your Honour ruled that the question would be reinstated and it was reinstated as question No. 3,577. That question has been on the order paper now for some months, and it had been on for some months before it was dropped.

At the time it was dropped, the Minister of Supply and Services indicated to me that an answer would be forthcoming within a couple of weeks. I raised the matter again on December 5 to bring it to the attention of the parliamentary secretary, but as yet there has been no answer. I rise today simply to bring once again, to the attention of the parliamentary secretary and Your Honour the fact that this question has been on the order paper for some months. I would be very grateful to have an early answer.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[Mr. Cossitt.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 3, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before continuing the discussion on motions 2 and 3 which are before the House at the present time, I thought this might be a convenient time to invite intervention on the proposed procedural argument respecting motions 7, 8 and 9, endeavour to dispose of that discussion and then return to the discussion of motions 2 and 3.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in my representations on motions 7, 8 and 9. Basically, I submit that the motions are out of order because they are not relevant to clause 3 which they seek to amend. Clause 3 of Bill C-58 is really a transitional provision. The purpose of Bill C-58 is well known to the House. It is a bill to remove a certain tax advantage to Canadian advertisers who use foreign broadcasting outlets. Clause 3 provides that if an agreement was entered into between a foreign broadcaster and a Canadian advertiser prior to January 23, 1975, that agreement would abide, notwithstanding the coming into effect of this bill, as provided in clause 4, on January 1, 1976.

In addition, any agreement which might have been entered into after January 23, 1975, but for the duration of a year or less and without the power of renewing that agreement, would also stand, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 4 of this bill. Therefore, it is basically a grandfather clause, a transitional clause, in order to prevent prejudice being created vis-à-vis broadcasters who prior to the introduction of this bill in the House for first reading, or at any time prior to the passage thereof, had entered into an agreement of short duration.

The amendments proposed in motions 7, 8 and 9 are the same in spirit. They seek to offer potential advertisers the right to deduct their costs of advertising if they advertise with a broadcaster who has entered into an agreement, which agreement would serve to obviate the effects of Bill C-58.

Motion No. 7 provides that if there is an agreement entered into between the broadcaster, the advertiser and the CRTC, with the approval of the Minister of National Revenue, whereby certain funds would be made available generally to Canadian broadcasting outlets and Canadian television producers in order to enhance the Canadian content and quality of broadcasting, such agreement could be contemplated as obviating the effects of Bill C-58.

Motions 8 and 9 have the same effect. They seek, by way of agreement, to permit a broadcaster to solicit Canadian advertising, offering the advantages to those advertisers of being able to deduct those expenditures by entering into certain arrangements advantageous to Canadian broadcasting.

My position and the position of the government is that these particular motions are out of order because they introduce a completely new concept into clause 3, which does not at all contemplate anything except a transitional provision. It is true that clause 3 speaks of agreements and that the amendments in motions 7, 8 and 9 also speak of agreements. The type and nature of the agreements is completely different, however. On the one hand, clause 3 speaks of an agreement to protect dealings that have already taken place of a very limited and transitional scope, whereas motions 7, 8 and 9 deal with agreements that tend to obviate the effects of Bill C-58 and are, therefore, completely strange and foreign to the concept of clause 3.

I suggest, therefore, that the three motions Nos. 7, 8 and 9 ought not to be dealt with as they are irrelevant to the principle of the bill and the principle of clause 3.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I note that the hon. member in whose name the motion stands seeks to intervene in the argument, that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) seeks to intervene and, as well, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If necessary.

Mr. Speaker: As is sometimes said, it might not be necessary to hear further discussion. I do not want to restrict hon. members who wish to intervene in support of the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais). I want to make that clear. We could take it as a general indication that if any hon. member seeks the floor in support of the hon. parliamentary secretary's argument, I shall hear from them now. On the other hand, if their intention is to support the procedural regularity of the motions put forward, I do not think it is necessary to hear them.

My view is that the bill is a bill to amend the Income Tax Act. Pursuant to the Income Tax Act as it now stands, without passage of Bill C-58 it is possible for taxpayers to advertise in foreign broadcasting undertakings and deduct those expenses from their income. The purport of Bill C-58 would be to change that and take away from those advertisers the opportunity to make those deductions from income. Whether it be that clause 3 contains an actual provision or not, the fact of the matter is the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) would in fact propose what seems to me to be middle ground, that is, advertisers who advertise in foreign broadcasting undertakings would be permitted to deduct from income the expenses paid for those advertisements, provided certain conditions are met. The conditions are complex and will need some explanation, but that bears on substance and their acceptability to the House by way of a vote. It does not bear, in any way that I can see, on procedural regularity.

It seems to me that the hon. member ought to be able to put that kind of motion by way of amendment to this particular clause. It would be my view that motions ought to be debated and voted upon. Therefore, I cannot accept the argument put forward by the hon. parliamentary secretary. The order called was resumption of the debate on motion No. 2. The floor was held by the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott), but I understand the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) seeks the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, am I correct that we are debating motions Nos. 2 and 3?

Mr. Speaker: We are resuming the discussion on motions Nos. 2 and 3, and the hon. member for Mississauga has the floor.

Mr. Towers: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, according to your ruling that we should not seek the opportunity of asking a question during the question period relating to legislation before the House or a bill pertaining to such legislation, with your indulgence I should like to put a question to the government at this time. Presumably the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) will accept the question and give an answer prior to the passage of motion No. 3. If it is a negative answer, I will have an amendment to present to the House.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this question now in order that the Secretary of State, or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) could answer it. Has the minister been approached by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) with regard to the adverse effect Bill C-58 would have on Canadian breeders of purebred and exotic livestock who advertise in the United States, and can the Minister of National Revenue state unequivocally that Canadian producers of purebred and exotic livestock will be permitted to deduct costs of advertising in the United States as legitimate expenses for income tax purposes in Canada?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to the question is yes, but it falls within the jurisdiction of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). I should like to confirm that and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott).

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a brief point with respect to the speech made last night by the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) questioning, not the substance of the bill but the propriety of the minister in seeking to interpret the words in the statute. The hon. gentleman delivered a scathing denunciation of this practice. I might even describe his language as brutally frank. He found the situation "shocking"; he found it a "complete usurpation"; he found it "completely revolting"; he was "filled with distaste"; he found it a "complete subversion of the judicial process", and thought it "entirely arbitrary". These are strong words, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman whipped himself into a veritable lather of indignation about this supposed transgression on the part of the minister.

As a relative newcomer I am, frankly, surprised to find the hon. Leader of the Opposition make this statement in regard to the role of the Department of National Revenue in giving an interpretation of the Income Tax Act. Surely he is aware that the department is called upon constantly to give such interpretations. Since 1970 the department has published over 280 interpretation bulletins performing just this function, informing the taxpayer how the department interprets the law. The public expects this service and constantly requests the department to increase this flow of information. As well, the department issues rulings to specific taxpayers on specific situations advising them how the department will assess.

● (1530)

I will not take much more of the time of the House. I repeat: the interpretation made by the minister is the same as the interpretation made by his officials on their reading of the law. If a taxpayer wishes to challenge that interpretation, he may take the matter to court and have the court interpret it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not in this case.

Mr. Abbott: That, clearly, is not a subversion of the law and is not a subversion of our courts. If in the normal course of appeal the courts disagree with the interpretation of the department, the government will, as it has in the past, bring vew legislation before the House by way of a motion of ways and means to correct the error. I suggest that is how the system has always worked and that is how it will work now. There is nothing new about it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, there is. This is a great deal different.

Mr. Abbott: I suggest that there is nothing different. For example, consider the interpretation handed down in 1972. It involved some government grants. That ruling, or interpretation, was challenged successfully in the courts and in November, 1974, the budget was debated and passed in parliament and legislation was enacted to support the original interpretation.

Clearly, this is no subversion of the system, as the Leader of the Opposition suggested. I suggest that the tongue-lashing he gave the government was inappropriate and unworthy of his usual wisdom in such matters.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the moderation shown by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). When I consider the words he could have used, I am amazed by the words he did use. Only because he is such a mild and reasonable man did he restrain himself to such an extent yesterday and use that kind of language. He was speaking about the shocking manifestations made evident by this government which is trying to give the mafia of the mandarins the right to make the kind of decisions which the government itself ought to make. This is ministerial discretion run wild.

Mr. Faulkner: Do you support that description? Do you subscribe to it?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes. It is the intellectual mafia of the mandarins.

Mr. Faulkner: Do you subscribe to that description of the public service?

[Mr. Abbott.]

Mr. Baldwin: Yes. Sometimes some of them leave the public service and arrive on the front benches of this unfortunate, misguided government and we see what kind of mess they can make in this country. Altogether too many of them ornament the front benches opposite.

An hon. Member: But they are very hard working.

Mr. Baldwin: Frankly, I was amazed to hear the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott). I think he is a good member, and now that he has managed to prevent being seduced to other spheres of activity he may well have a career in this House—but only if he does not do what his superiors on the front benches are engaged in doing.

How can one consider this measure? A snake would find it hard to follow the contortions this government has gone through—to follow its twistings and turnings backward and forward. I think the Leader of the Opposition was right to take offence and to speak as he spoke yesterday. We are now set back to the position dealt with by section 19(5) of the Income Tax Act. Subparagraph (F) of subsection (a)(ii) reads in part:

—the contents of which, excluding advertisements, are substantially the same as the contents of an issue of a periodical—

The hon. member for Mississauga knows that the language is far different from the sort of language to which he referred. It is narrow language. There may be narrower interpretations which from time to time officers of the Department of National Revenue are quite properly compelled to make with regard to cases involving individual taxpayers. But in this instance the government, for its own reasons, has singled out two corporations, two publications, and has aimed its attack at them. This could well be described as an act to exclude Time magazine and Reader's Digest from Canada. That is the sole purpose of the legislation.

Shortly after his appointment, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) took it upon himself to say, "I, from on high, interpret that particular section to mean such and such. If the courts dare to disagree with me, I will sit as a court of appeal higher than the Supreme Court of Canada." That, precisely, is the position the minister took, and it is a shocking position for a man for whom I had a great deal of admiration—although, at times, I begin to wonder about him. My admiration is somewhat shaken.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is shaken now and again.

Mr. Baldwin: As my hon. friend for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) says, it is shaken now and again. I will have to reflect upon and review my opinion of him. He may be influenced by his civil servants. That is the trouble with new ministers: they fall into the maw of the civil service and then do what they are told. We operate in this House under the adversary system, but in the House the adversaries are not the opposition and the government—not always, at any rate. The adversary structure involves hon. members and the civil service and that is the problem.

I will not be long, as there will be other opportunities when I may speak on this issue. We are seeing in this country today the ascendency of the top people in the civil service who in many cases are setting themselves up as the sole interpreters of the law. We have seen this happen in the committee of which I have the honour to be a member, the statutory instruments committee. It has happened with regard to the interpretation of various statutory instruments. We are seeing it here. The mandarins opposite are saying, "It is up to us to judge what is 'substantially the same' as to the contents of a periodical."

Mr. Stanfield: And they can change their minds every day.

Mr. Baldwin: As the Leader of the Opposition says, they can change their minds from day to day, and probably from hour to hour. Without doubt, certain arrangements have been made. I wish I could see the memorandum which was written following the meeting between officials of the department and the people representing Reader's Digest as a result of which there was this complete change of mind.

We cannot govern successfuly in this country by adopting these methods. For instance, at the meeting of the Liberal caucus on Wednesday there were, no doubt, some compromises made and the government may have said to members of its caucus, "All right, we will change our minds and we will sacrifice the Minister of National Revenue. He will have to suffer as a result of his statement."

Mr. Faulkner: Fantasy, pure fantasy.

Mr. Baldwin: The protestations of the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) indicate that I touched a vital chord. What I speak is the truth, and he knows it.

Mr. Faulkner: No way. It is pure nonsense.

Mr. Baldwin: The Liberal caucus has been running frightened. At the same time civil servants who love to exercise their right of dominion over the people of this country are acting on delegated authority.

Mr. Faulkner: Nonsense.

Mr. Stanfield: With the assistance of the whip.

Mr. Baldwin: My party, Mr. Speaker, has a strong, traditional respect for parliamentary government. But what we are seeing today is not parliamentary government. This particular issue is not being dealt with as a parliamentary government ought to deal with it. If the government wants to deal with the matter properly, let it have the courage to bring forward, as my colleagues have, amendments which will carefully narrow the definitions of circumstances under which particular benefits can be granted. Let it have the courage to do that. That is how we should operate in these circumstances.

Mr. Stanfield: They should not be able to change their minds when they want to.

Mr. Baldwin: I reject out of hand the government's attempt to arrogate unto itself the right to change its mind whenever it wishes. It might change its mind next year, with a new minister of national revenue, or it might change its mind with a new deputy minister as to this particular clause in respect of section 19(5).

Parliament has lost enough of its privileges, and we do not intend to lose any more without fighting for them. In these circumstances, we reject the government's proposal and we hope all hon. members of this House, including those sitting opposite—some of whom I know have indicated that they are prepared to support us—will have the courage and the respect for parliamentary traditions so that when the question is put they will stand and vote in favour of the amendments in respect of which I am speaking.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) I, too, was going to refer to the words used in the speech last night by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), but I intended to put a different connotation on them. When the Leader of the Opposition described the government's latest move on Bill C-58 as completely shocking, revolting, a subversion of our whole judicial system and acting in an arbitrary way, I intended to suggest that his language was not strong enough. The government is really undermining its whole position on this bill.

Certain facts have to be brought out in order to inform the Canadian people of precisely what is going on. I think the first response one must make, in commenting on the remarkable speech and tortured explanation of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) regarding the move to allow Reader's Digest to come under Bill C-58, is to say that this is a prime example of why the government should not be involved at all in the interpretation of what publishing is in Canada. The minister has done a disservice to that element of fairness which the government said was in its mind in bringing forward Bill C-58.

Yesterday, the government announced that Reader's Digest would suddenly qualify under Bill C-58, without ever hinting during all the committee hearings that they felt Reader's Digest would in any way qualify. What the government has done is completely reverse its decision. I submit that the Canadian people will not accept that kind of arbitrary change as being fair, particularly when it has no basis in law.

We on this side of the House are in a difficult position. Many members of the Conservative party argued that the application of Bill C-58 would be unfair to both Time and Reader's Digest and considerable effort was made to get the government to change its mind, particularly in the case of Reader's Digest. We now have a situation in which Reader's Digest is going to qualify for continued publication, with its advertisements being exempt for tax purposes. That is what we wanted. What we did not want was this decision brought in through a back door deal in a way unfair to the members of this House and to the whole publishing industry in Canada.

The committee held a number of hearings on this bill and a great amount of debate took place on second reading. During all that time the government gave no indication of a change of heart, and has now suddenly reversed itself without any basis for such a reversal. The opposition to this kind of decision by fiat should be continued in order that the government will know this kind of conduct is not acceptable to members of this House and is not an answer to the publishing problems in Canada which the bill set out to correct.

The editors and publishers of Time magazine are entirely within their right to speak as the president of Time Canada did last night when commenting on the new arrangement between Reader's Digest and the government, an arrangement that was sprung on everybody. I think Mr. Stephen LaRue was within his rights when he said there is no doubt that there was a bit of secrecy involved in these negotiations. Mr. LaRue went on to state:

It certainly raises some questions about last-minute deals. The public needs a clarification now of what the agreement means.

We are now in a remarkable situation. Reader's Digest will not have to change anything it is doing now regarding the manner of its publication. It will be able to go ahead and continue to publish and meet the demands of Bill C-58. Representatives of Time magazine came before the committee and told us about a proposed plan whereby it would make changes in such a way that half the publication would be of fresh material originating in Canada, and half would be imported from the United States parent, but that the entire package would be edited in Canada. That was a substantial move by Time, in the interests of complying with the intention of Bill C-58. Time came before the committee to say it would change to accommodate Bill C-58, but Time has now been rebuffed.

It was well known that the intent of Bill C-58 was to stop the special status that both Time and Reader's Digest have been enjoying since 1965. What we have now is a reversal of that intention. We will still have a special status for Reader's Digest. However much those of us who wanted Reader's Digest to continue publishing in Canada, as it now does, are in favour of this move, we certainly oppose this kind of decision-making process which in our opinion is completely unfair and without foundation in law.

Time magazine is entirely correct in posing a question to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) in an article which appeared in the February 9 edition in answer to a letter it received from the minister. In this article, Time sets out its opposition and objection to the content rule by stating:

It has no mooring in the law as parliament approved it in 1965. To say that "not substantially the same" means "more than 80 per cent different" not only distorts the law but violates the English language.

The amendment we are debating now, to which the Minister of National Revenue addressed his comments last night, has to do with content—and content is the heart of the bill. We ought to bring back into focus what we are trying to do in this bill in respect of publishing. We want to help Canadian publications. Representatives of Canadian publications and their advertisers appeared before the committee and were entirely divided on whether the bill would be of help to them. What everybody agreed to was that the provisions of Bill C-58 would be all right if they confined the requirement to 75 per cent ownership in Canada without a content rule. It is the insistence of the government on this extreme 80 per cent content rule which is at the centre of this controversy.

We now have this apparent violation of parliament's right to make sure that the legislation we pass in this House is fair to all concerned. The thrust of the objection this afternoon is related to the arbitrary decision by the government that a group of officials in the Department of Revenue should be empowered to decide what is "substantially different" under the 80 per cent formula and therefore able to qualify. We object to this arbitrary decision-making which exempts Reader's Digest under a new clause that is unfair and without foundation in law.

I think it is interesting, as we continue to focus on the heart of this issue, to look at the comment which was made by Geoffrey Stevens in the Globe and Mail. Greater attention should have been given to this aspect than has so far been accorded to it, because it raises once again the issue of anti-dumping legislation as a way of meeting the intention of helping Canadian publications rather than imposing an 80 per cent content rule. Mr. Stevens wrote this:

Content rules are odious in principle and would be a nightmare to administer. A better, simpler way would be to move to an anti-dumping approach. Time and Reader's Digest would not enjoy an unfair competitive advantage if they were forced to pay a realistic price for the news stories and articles they import. National Revenue would come up with a fair price by taking the editorial costs and prorating the cost over circulation in CAnada. Or, it could calculate a price on the basis of what Canadian newspapers pay for foreign wire services, what Canadian television pays for foreign news film, and so on.

I tried to follow the discussion which went on in committee as carefully as I could, but I have never heard any answer from the minister or from a government spokesman explaining why anti-dumping legislation could not be used to secure the end which Bill C-58 envisages. I believe that if our attention were focused on that aspect, as it will be when we come back to the motion for third reading, the issue ought to be raised again.

In addition, thought should be given to a further consideration, that because of the remarkable intervention yesterday by the Minister of National Revenue, the bill should be referred back to committee for reconsideration. The action of the minister yesterday completely distorted the effort of the committee to reach an accommodation which would be founded in law and which would make it possible for Time and Reader's Digest to operate within a formula enabling them to continue to publish in a fair manner and in a manner which, at the same time, was fair to Canadian publications. There was a disposition on the part of members of the committee on both sides to find such a formula but, as is well known, the government refused to consider amendments which the committee was in the process of formulating. This led, of course, to the stage we have now reached, in the course of which amendments have been introduced on a unilateral basis.

I believe the government acted in a wholly improper manner in seeking to protect Reader's Digest following the enormous pressure to which it was subjected in favour of that publication. The government acted in a way which leaves open the question of its sincerity—whether it did seriously intend to find legislation which would improve circumstances in the publishing industry in Canada.

I am saying, finally, that the government has taken a back door approach in bowing to this pressure without coming to the floor of the House of Commons and producing amendments, producing the kind of legislation which would write into law what it seeks to do for Reader's Digest. If I were the managers of Reader's Digest, I would be worried about what might happen if there were a change of minister, a change in some of the departmental officials who might advise the minister on decisions concerning Reader's Digest a few years down the line. I would be worried, not only about the arbitrary way in which officials of the Department of National Revenue are empowered to make rulings, but also that rulings might be changed, given a change in personnel or a change in government policy.

The government owes us some answers. I say this to the minister: I know he is really trying to help Canadian publishing, and I am on his side. I do not quarrel with the intent of Bill C-58, but I ask him this: What happened between the time he came before the committee shortly before Christmas, when he shot down the process of accommodation to which members on both sides were contributing, when he never even raised the possibility that Reader's Digest could conform to his requirements, and the announcement yesterday by the Minister of National Revenue? Obviously, something happened, because the government changed its mind. I ask the minister to tell us. Let us have the documentation. Let us see the memoranda which have been floating around with figures of 50 per cent, 60 per cent and 80 per cent on them. Let him come clean as to the publishing policy reflected in Bill C-58 so that members of this House and the public at large may have an understanding of what publishing rights are to be protected.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the more I listen to this debate, the more I get the impression that this must be the legislative equivalent of the long march, not only in terms of how long we have spent on this bill—we started it a year ago—but in terms of the history behind the subject itself. The two amendments which are before us are important amendments. One deals with the meaning of "not substantially the same" and the motion put forward on behalf of the Conservative party recommends that the interpretation be 50 per cent. As the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) pointed out, in committee I resisted that. What I will do now is what I have done before. I will try and go over the arguments for resisting it.

This clearly offers us a choice. I have no grievance with the right of the opposition to say that 80 per cent is too high and to offer 50 per cent as an alternative, but I think in fairness to the government they should recognize that there are strong arguments for 80 per cent. I am now looking at the matter as Secretary of State responsible for publishing policy. I am not going to go into the area of jurisdiction which specifically concerns my colleagues.

Mr. Stanfield: Why not?

Mr. Faulkner: I am surprised that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) balks at that suggestion. I should like to point out to the House that not only is it a position supported by the government, but it has been eloquently supported by members of the New Democratic Party and supported rather strenuously and very openly by the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association. I really do not know whether members of the opposition have so little respect for people in this country who are professionally involved in the periodical business, who are citizens of this country or in the marketplace day in and day out and who are the only professionals in the business. There is not a single member on th other side, that I am aware of, who is a professional in this field.

Mr. Epp: Are you?

Mr. Faulkner: No, I am not.

Mr. Epp: But you know all about it.

Mr. Faulkner: I do not know all about it and I do not pretend to know all about it. I am simply quoting one group which came before the committee that does know all about it and which tends to support the position of the government.

Mr. Stanfield: Did they support that ruling? It is even more shameful than the reversal of the wage and income controls.

Mr. Faulkner: Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been listening rather patiently to hon. members opposite and I think they should extend me the same courtesy. The issue is: What do we mean by "not substantially the same"? How does it relate to publishing policy? What are its origins? How did we get into this debate?

Mr. Stanfield: Good question.

Mr. Epp: Or out if it.

Mr. Faulkner: I know how we will get out of it, but I do want hon. members to try to understand the historical genesis of this whole issue. They seem to have come into the issue rather late in the game. Let me take them back a little. It may be rather laborious for them, but perhaps they will learn something. Let me go back again to the one document that we seem to be reasonably agreed upon and which started the process forward. I refer, of course, to the royal commission that studied this matter.

I am not going to read the whole report, but I should like to take a few excerpts from it which seem to me to be germane to the argument in which the House is presently engaged. As all hon. members know, the royal commission studied the state of the Canadian periodical industry and made certain observations and recommendations. One of its interesting observations, under the rubric of the responsibility of the publisher, the royal commission, is as follows:

> The right of Canadians to their own media of communication implies that they should not be served with merely a rehash of editorial matter cheaply obtained from abroad for reuse in this country. There can be no excuse for the republication in Canada of periodicals which are not much more than facsimiles of those abroad. Here is something which, whatever may be said of its ethics, does not benefit the public.

That was a general observation from which it drew certain conclusions. The first is as follows:

> 1. That a nation's domestic advertising expenditures should be devoted to the support of its own media of communications.
> 2. That a nation's communications media must be aware of their responsibilities and that such media should not be used merely for the republication of editorial matter to support an advertising structure.

Non-Canadian Publications

Thirdly, the commission concluded:

> That a Canadian periodical is one published in Canada, owned either by Canadian citizens or, if a corporation, by a company incorporated under the laws of Canada or of one of its provinces, and which is controlled and directed by Canadian citizens and is not a licensee of or otherwise substantially the same as a periodical owned or controlled outside Canada.

Obviously, what has happened historically since then has been an effort, frequently abortive, to try to translate those recommendations into some form of legislative practice. At the time the royal commission was concerned, of course, for the arguments that had been developed by members opposite, and indeed by members of my own caucus, about how the translation of these principles affects the question of freedom of expression. I think hon. members opposite will be generous to enough to concede that it is not simply a concern of their own but of all members of the House. The commission had this to say:

> Subject always to paramount national interest, the commission has avoided suggesting measures which limit either the freedom of expression or its corollaries: free flow of information and readership preference.
> Some may claim that the statement of an ownership requirement constitutes licensing of the printing press. Such is not the case. The right to own a press and to print and distribute from it whatever is legally permissible, remains unhampered.
> The commission's sole purpose is to define those periodicals which by reason of their responsibility to, and function in, the Canadian nation, should be assisted in their access to Canadian advertising expenditures, this in keeping with the principle that the advertisement of domestic goods and services to a domestic consumer should be through a Canadian medium.
> The diversion of Canadian advertising from foreign periodicals does not mean regulation of the preparation, content or free flow of their editorial material any more than it means that the reader is denied the periodical of his choice.
> Finally, in its emphasis on Canadian advertising support for Canadian media, the Commission's conclusions make neither rules as to what an advertisement may contain nor regulations regarding how much may be spent in periodicals. They simply provide for the spending of money raised from the domestic consumer in support of domestic media.
> The commission was concerned lest there might exist in some minds a concept of advertising which would consider this policy a violation of some sort of right or freedom.

That is really where this issue started in a thoughtful and comprehensive way. I think it is fair to say—I am sure there is no dispute in the House about this—that the credentials of the commission were impeccable. Their intent was serious and their efforts were thorough. What we, as members of parliament, have been trying to do—and we are not the first to look at this; our predecessors looked at it, too—is translate those thoughts and those conclusions into some legislative form. The debate we are involved in today, and have been involved in over this past year, really centres around this question.

As I have said several times, Bill C-58 is an attempt to eliminate an anomaly, an exception to the 1965 law which was the first major attempt to translate the recommendations of that royal commission into legislative practice. It attempts to reinstate the full thrust of that 1965 law, and that is all it attempts to do.

Mr. Stanfield: That is not what government policy attempts to do.

[Mr. Faulkner.]

Mr. Faulkner: Let me reiterate that the government is not seeking in any way to control the freedom of magazine publishers and editors. Nor do we want to impose our will upon the people of Canada and regulate their reading habits. Bill C-58 in no way impinges upon freedom of expression. The bill does not deal with prevention of entry into Canada of information, the curbing of the operation in Canada of any publication, or the imposition of any Canadian content regulations. But it does prevent the dumping of editorial copy. We are not talking about the availability of magazine business in Canada or the choice of reading material by anyone resident in Canada.

I find it difficult to really take seriously some of the arguments I heard in the House last night from members opposite to the effect that this is at play, because the disturbing fact is that 95 per cent of the magazines sold by Canadian newsstands are in fact foreign magazines. Given this fact, it seems to me it is difficult to argue that somehow the free flow of material is being impaired either by the 1965 law or by this amendment.

Bill C-58 is not discriminatory; it seeks to remove an existing discriminatory situation. The present situation whereby both Time and Reader's Digest are exempted from certain stipulations of the Income Tax Act, which apply to the majority of all other consumer and special interest foreign magazines regularly circulating in Canada, is clearly discriminatory. The legislation's intent is to reserve any benefits or concessions associated with the periodical publishing industry for the domestically-owned and controlled segment of that industry. This, historically, has been the practice of all governments vis-à-vis domestic industries.

More particularly, this very approach is consistent with the view held by a considerable number of governments, including one composed of some hon. members now sitting opposite. I should like to touch now, Mr. Speaker, on the ruling made by my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), that a magazine must be 80 per cent different from a foreign magazine to qualify as Canadian for tax purposes, because obviously this is what is at the root of the hon. member's motion. I should like to interject for a moment to say that I welcome him back from Peterborough, I hope his visit there was successful and that he enjoyed it.

Mr. Fairweather: I heard a very great deal about this legislation, I must say.

Mr. Faulkner: You were in rather select company.

Mr. Fairweather: Very select company.

Mr. Faulkner: I should like to say that this, perhaps has been the most misunderstood part of the government's attempt to support periodical publishing in this country. First of all, the ruling is not part of Bill C-58. It is an interpretation of a clause in the Income Tax Act which says that a magazine cannot be considered Canadian for tax purposes if it is substantially the same as a magazine published outside the country. It does not apply to newspapers, we are not suggesting it be applied to newspapers, and it has been law since 1965.

No one has argued the necessity for having some sort of definition of Canadian magazines, and no one has questioned the necessity of Canadian ownership as one of the criteria. But we are not dealing with the economics of some manufacturing company; we are dealing with the very nature and quality of our cultural expression. I would like to quote the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who in 1962 supported in this House the O'Leary royal commission report. At that time he said:

> The issues at stake are not essentially of a commercial character, but go into the fabric of our culture.

That is as true now as it was then; in fact, I believe the stakes are even higher now. I think in his very interesting and thoughtful speech the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) last night, in a more serious way than most of his colleagues, tried to come to grips with this very difficult problem. For those members opposite who did not have the privilege of hearing his speech, I recommend it to them because in it he reached some of the questions which lie at the root of this legislation and the attempts by the government and the opposition parties to deal with the problem of the penetration of the Canadian culture.

If what we are trying to encourage is expression and interplay between Canadians, then we must at the very least permit it to happen. But if what we support is to be Canadian, then we must have a definition. In the case of a magazine—a vehicle for ideas—it is not enough to say that it is owned by a Canadian company. That is where I part company with my very distinguished colleague who I am sure will be speaking later, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). That hon. member has a motion before the House which would restrict it simply to ownership. I say to her, as I will after she speaks, that I do not think that is good enough. She is within her rights to argue for it, and I have the right to argue against it. Who controls what ideas are in it? Surely that is equally important. And if the true control, both financial and editorial, is not in Canadian hands, then I do not think the magazine should be supported by the government. That does not mean it cannot circulate here. It does mean, though, that it should not qualify for special tax privileges which have been instituted to encourage, specifically, Canadian magazines.

When provision in the law was made to exclude magazines which were substantially the same as foreign ones from the benefits, it was done to preclude the possibility of a foreign company setting up a front in Canada, and because the front would be Canadian-owned, benefitting from something for which it did not qualify. In a sense, that is what Time and Reader's Digest have done. Their Canadian companies have full and exclusive rights to use in Canada a vast amount of editorial material which the Canadian companies buy for a fraction of the cost of its production. Yet the true Canadian magazine trying to compete has no access to any similar material. In fact, if a Canadian magazine tried to establish this sort of relationship with a foreign one so that it could compete with Time and Reader's Digest, it would lose the tax privileges it has because it would be substantially the same as a foreign periodical. Time and Digest are not required to meet this part of the law. Bill C-58 will change that.

The questions arise: How different is different? How substantial is substantial? Why 80 per cent? There are those who said that "substantial" should be defined as half; that to be "different" it should be 51 per cent different. Let me deal with that first.

Mr. Fairweather: Of course.

Mr. Faulkner: That is the position of the hon. member and it is the position of his party. I am looking at it from the point of view of publishing policy and I will develop an argument as to why it should not be 51 per cent or 50 per cent from a publishing point of view. That is my concern. It is not a workable proposition. That decision, of course, obviously is appealable to the courts.

A magazine which was allowed to receive 49 per cent of its material from a foreign source or sources would have a clear competitive advantage over one which tried to produce everything itself. This would be mainly because its costs would be so much lower, for it could buy material which is in a sense used for a fraction of what it costs to produce new or fresh material. The result would be this: in a short time almost all magazines, and certainly all those who had competitors, would be forced to accept this arrangement out of necessity. Magazines producing their own material could not afford to compete with those producing only half of their own material. Gradually, the market would change drastically so that the only magazines left would be those which had an arrangement with a foreign publisher. Because the magazines would be relying so heavily on their foreign suppliers, virtually the entire industry would be dependent on foreign sources.

So when considering the definition of "substantial", the government discarded the concept of "more than half". I think hon. members will have to come to grips with that argument. This is not an argument I alone present; this was the considered position of the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association. It has been the considered position of other members of this House. It is not good enough simply to say that that conceivably might be an interpretation by the court. What we are determining here, of course, is publishing policy. That may stand or fall in the courts. That is another issue. But it seems to me that when members opposite argue for 50 per cent, they argue that in terms of publishing policy. I think the onus is on them to demonstrate that at 50 per cent, in fact, my scenario would not happen. In fairness to them—and I have the greatest respect for them—I do not think they have done that; I do not think they did it in committee or in this debate. But the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has yet to speak on his motion and I take it he will address himself specifically to this point which was raised by the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association, which has been raised by me in committee and, as well, by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes).

I would like the hon. member to point out clearly to me and to the House why, if he feels that in fact we should go for 50 per cent, it would not lead to the scenario of a series of split runs in the country. The presumption behind that question is that he himself would not like to see this policy which would lead inevitably to a series of split runs, because he is sufficiently concerned about the state of the industry to object to that. Just to reassure hon. members that I am not simply speaking for myself, a confessed innocent in the field of publishing, I should like to quote a letter which recently appeared in the Globe and Mail, written by someone who is in the field and who had something to say about Bill C-58. The author of the letter is the editor of Chatelaine. It reads:

> The content ruling in Bill C-58, however, is being misinterpreted. The suggestion that the content ruling be lowered from 80 per cent to 50 or 60 per cent would completely negate the purpose of the bill. No Canadian magazine could compete with foreign publications that could import almost half of their editorial free—or at nominal cost. It is exactly the same as if we were to tell a Canadian car manufacturer that he must compete with another car manufacturer who gets his engine free.
> In fact, if the content ruling were lowered to 50 or 60 per cent "substantially different" it is more than likely that a flood of foreign publications both in consumer magazines and the business press would come into Canada to take advantage of the new ruling. Canadian magazines would be worse off than ever.

I think that fundamentally the question that is at play and that is disputed between the two sides of the House is about 50 per cent versus 80 per cent. What, in fact, would it lead to in terms of the publishing industry? Would it, as I have suggested, lead to a series of split runs? Would it, in fact, lead to a situation where Canadian magazines would cut their losses and go for the cheaper material for half of their content?

Contrary to the claims of some hon. members opposite, the figure of 80 per cent was considered some time ago; in fact, before second reading debate ever started. In February of 1975 the then minister of national revenue said publicly that 80 per cent was a figure which would definitely be acceptable. That was in an interview with the minister which was reported rather widely and to which there was a fairly widespread response, a response somewhat similar to the response we have been getting from the opposition since then. He also said that 60 per cent would be a minimum threshold above which it might be possible to consider magazines, but if they wanted to be sure, then they would strive for 80 per cent. He repeated this in March, but people said it was not clear and I think they have a point.

What was the grey area between 60 per cent and 80 per cent? Because it would be so difficult to administer a grey area fairly, the government made a final decision, announced in October, 1975, by the Minister of National Revenue, that 80 per cent was the amount of difference required to achieve Canadian tax status. This was to ensure that Canadian magazines could have a real chance, and also to ensure that there would be no possibility of the industry being controlled by foreign suppliers of editorial material.

So what happens to Reader's Digest or any magazine which wants to be a digest? Well, if the editors sit down and read the articles available around the world, make their choices, condense their articles and publish them, it is fine. We made that point at some length in the committee. But they cannot buy more than 20 per cent of the already digested and condensed material from someone else who has done it for another magazine while saying they are Canadian.

In the case of Reader's Digest, it means that predigested articles or those orginated by foreign editions of Reader's Digest can only make up 20 per cent of the material in any given issue. The rest of the work has to be done here with no obligation to a parent company or to foreign editors. Thus, editors and publishers will still remain free to do what they please. For example, they can sell their editorial and financial control to foreign interests and still be able to circulate freely in Canada. I am referring to such magazines as the Economist, Newsweek, Le Nouvel Observateur, and a host of successful foreign magazines. They cannot sell to foreign interests and qualify their advertisers for Canadian tax privileges at the same time. Once again I would say to hon. members that I do not consider this to be censorship. I try to make the case as rationally and dispassionately as possible. I think it is common sense.

The hon. member for Edmonton Strathcona has been talking about a back door deal designed to protect Reader's Digest. There has been no deal and there has been no reprieve. I think the Minister of National Revenue made that position abundantly clear last night. What has happened? It should not come as a great surprise to hon. members. Reader's Digest decided to conform with the law, and that was their option.

There are people in this country who support the bill and who view it as a device to get rid of the two magazines, but I have been perfectly candid with the House and with the public that that has never been my intention. My sole intention has been to equalize the impact of the law. If they can conform, surely that is their right. If they decide not to conform, that is equally their right.

What Reader's Digest has decided to do is to conform. That was the announcement that was made, I take it, yesterday or the day before, or whenever it was. I do not think we should underestimate the difficulties ahead of them. I think we are being rather casual about the announcement, and rather machiavellian in searching for motives. The fact is that the task ahead of Reader's Digest, and particularly the publishers of that magazine, is very difficult. To conform, they have to go to 75 per cent ownership, they cannot operate under a licence with their parent company, and they cannot be substantially the same as the U.S. edition. They cannot be, to use the language of the O'Leary report, a pale facsimile.

That is obviously what the announcement was designed to convey to their advertisers, in the first instance, and to the House and the public at large. Having looked at the bill and having, I take it, judged the prospects of getting it through—their judgment on that may be more accurate than mine—they decided to conform with the law. That is something that should not come as a surprise and should not be the subject of prolonged debate. I thought that was always something that both sides of the House viewed as a possibility. The fact that some of us on this side of the House—not all of us—the NDP and two very noble souls in the PC party have argued for the principles of this bill for the past year is something from which we can take some satisfaction in the results so far.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wonder if the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) would permit one question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): That is not a question of privilege. Is the hon. member rising to ask a question? Will the minister allow a question?

Mr. Faulkner: Yes, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Friesen: I wonder if the Secretary of State would not agree that if a writer is restricted by regulation as to how he can write, and the publisher is restricted by regulation as to what he can publish, it is not reasonable to suppose that there is a comparable restriction on the free flow of information?

Mr. Faulkner: If I understood the question, and I am not altogether sure I did, I think I would probably have to agree. But I do not see that that is relevant to Bill C-58 or to the debate.

● (1630)

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister permit a question? I should like to ask the minister whether, by any ordinary understanding of the English language, he could say that a magazine which is, say, 30 per cent the same as a foreign magazine, but 70 per cent different, is substantially the same? I am not asking him what the policy should be. We are dealing with a statute on the books. I am asking him, by any ordinary use of the English language, whether he can take those words which are in the statute, "substantially the same," and in using those words come to the conclusion that a magazine which is 70 per cent different and 30 per cent the same—or to put it the other way, 30 per cent the same and 70 per cent different—is substantially the same?

Mr. Faulkner: Madam Speaker, I am responding seriously to the Leader of the Opposition. I think that is arguable, and I think it is arguable all the way down the line.

Mr. Stanfield: "Substantially the same"?

Mr. Faulkner: That is right. I think in a court of law there could be a range of arguments about an interpretation of the meaning of that, but I think—and I am offering an answer which is my own in this respect—it would be quite possible to argue for the 80 per cent and 20 per cent ratio as a construction of "not substantially the same." In fact, there is some evidence to support that and some of that evidence was given in the parliamentary committee.

Mr. Roche: Madam Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question, if he will accept it. In view of the fact that Reader's Digest has suddenly found it possible to comply with Bill C-58 and having told the committee during the hearings that there was no way it could possibly do that, would the minister support my proposal that the bill be referred back to the committee in order that Reader's Digest officials be given the opportunity of explaining to members of the committee how it is they will be able to continue publishing under Bill C-58, and at the same time give the officials of Time magazine an opportunity to examine the method by which Reader's Digest will be able to continue publishing, so that Time may be given the same opportunity to comply with Bill C-58?

Mr. Faulkner: No, Madam Speaker, and I am surprised the hon. member has put that forward as a serious proposition. The decision clearly rests with Reader's Digest, Time and a variety of other magazines. Reader's Digest made a decision. Now Time also can make a decision. I think the suggestion that it be referred back to the committee so that the committee can find out why Reader's Digest made that decision is not a serious one.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. This is developing into a second question period.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mine is not a question. I seek the floor to respond to the minister. My points are very brief. It was the minister's reply which confirmed for me the suspicion I had in my mind as a result of the discussion yesterday and the point which was made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) last night. It is one which, if hon. members opposite had been present during the debate on the so-called tax reform measure of 1971, they would have seen hon. members on this side of the House shared at that time in objecting to so many insertions of precisely the same point that was raised last night. I refer to ministerial discretion.

Since there is no legal yardstick which defines "substantially the same"—and the minister just now, in reply to the Leader of the Opposition, said that there would be a whole series of arguments in court to determine whether a magazine 70 per cent and 30 per cent, or 75 per cent and 25 per cent, or 80 per cent and 20 per cent, or whatever combination comes to a hundred, is or is not substantially the same—that offends, I think, one of the cardinal principles which we have insisted upon in the Income Tax Act, that is, the removal of or the insistence on narrowing ministerial discretion. We have seen in certain sections with respect to corporations that "the minister may deem . . ." There are entire areas and, frankly, it introduces in effect what was pointed out last night, bureaucratic tyranny in the act; the minister acts on the advice of his officials.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) said that this was a matter, not within Bill C-58 but strictly within the confines of the Income tax Act and that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) was entitled to come to that conclusion and to make that assertion. I think this bill has been damned by that particular position. We can readily understand ownership proportions. Yes, that is simple to comply with. Everybody understands that. But not this infernal ministerial discretion.

I am surprised that the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) brought to our attention all the instances of rulings, some under ministerial discretion, in the Income Tax Act, and then made a statement—his eminent father, who is a former Supreme Court justice, must be shaking his head at the assertion of the hon. member—saying that in cases of this kind the disappointed taxpayer may come to the court for relief, when it is a fundamental principle of law that no court will substitute its discretion for the discretion of the person charged with exercising the discretion, provided that official or minister has proceeded legally. No court of appeal will substitute its discretion, so a person feeling aggrieved that his or her publication was wrongfully judged by the minister and his official advisers has no appeal in fact.

That person can go through the charade of going before either the Tax Review Board or the Federal Court, but no judge considering the matter and knowing the law would dare substitute his or her discretion for that of the minister and his advisers. So I simply say we are back down to precisely the difficulty pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition, and it is one which I and many others insist will have to be modified. This business of "substantially the"—I almost said "substantially the shame"; I think it is a shame—

Mr. Stanfield: It is "substantially, the shame."

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): My leader has the best words yet: substantially, the shame of this bill is that a minister and his advisers will say that a publication offends or qualifies when there is no right of appeal in fact.

Mr. Stanfield: And change their minds from day to day.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The purpose of my short intervention at this time is to reinforce the argument which was initiated last night about the so-called Cullen ruling. What was worse, the minister—whom I thought a reasonable man when he was a private member—assumed ministerial arrogance when he declared, at the time it was set at 80 per cent, "If we find anyone getting around this we will block the loophole. We are going to close down whomever we want—"

● (1640)

Mr. Stanfield: And let publish whoever we want.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): "We will close down anyone we want—"

Mr. Stanfield: And let publish anyone we want.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): "—and let publish anyone we want". This "substantially the same" admits of no appeal, and ministerial discretion, coupled with the statement of the minister charged with the administration of the Income Tax Act, leaves him the absolute power to determine who shall publish and who shall not publish. To that extent I say the bill is wrong.

I see that the hon. member for Mississauga has returned to the House, Madam Speaker. I hope the hon. member will seek the counsel of a very close relative of his on what I am saying about ministerial discretion, and that discretion legally exercised is not reviewable in a court of law. No judge will substitute his or her discretion for ministerial discretion. I find the bill to this extent "substantially, the shame" on this point, and I am against it.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I shall intervene briefly, I hope, in this matter. The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) suggested that this matter should be referred back to the committee. I would say there is more than one reason why it should be referred back to the committee. Many important groups were ignored, including Reader's Digest. Reader's Digest did not even get a complete hearing there. The minister claims there was a professional on that committee, but he would not allow me to sit on the committee even though he was there and I am a professional of 30 years.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

An hon. Member: Right on!

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mrs. Holt: I have 30 years' experience as an author, journalist, magazine writer and media person, but I was not allowed on that committee; so I am not very impressed with the work of a committee that was totally inflexible and did not move one inch. There are a couple of points the minister raised that I feel I should reply to. He referred to me, and said there would be differences between us. There is a great difference between us, Madam Speaker. I am just a backbencher here. The best I can do is trip these men from the front row and yell and scream and holler. He has the whips behind him. He sits there and gives orders, and we, like good little fellows—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member has to speak to the two amendments.

Mrs. Holt: Madam Speaker, he raised this matter by referring to me. I hope, through freedom of choice, that our people on this side of the House realize that this has terrible, terrible ramifications. I hope they do consider that we have freedom of choice here as members, and do not compare me, as a backbencher, to him as a cabinet minister. I want to talk on the references. He got pretty far off the amendments, too, Madam Speaker. I am just referring to one or two things he referred to—censorship—

An hon. Member: Here comes the whip.

Mrs. Holt: You are not mad at me, are you?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Me? No, but I should like to get up on a point of order.

Mr. Fairweather: Here goes freedom.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay) on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I just want to say to you, Madam Speaker, that if the hon. lady was taken off the committee, it was because she was not present.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: I was there every night, at the moment the meeting met. I do not think I missed one meeting. They were short of members and I was not allowed on. I think my credentials were better than the school teacher who is saying there were no professionals on there. I think I missed one meeting. You had a perfect attendance because I was there.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): That's right.

Mrs. Holt: I would hate to hear him say what black is, if he says this is not censorship. Black would probably be yellow, white, or maybe red. He says he is disappointed—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Who says?

Mrs. Holt: Not you; you are off the hook. The minister. He said he was disappointed. In saying there was no censorship, how can he say there is no censorship when certain publications have been here for 32 years and suddenly the rules change. Within the past year those rules have been changing constantly. There is a limiting of freedom of choice and freedom to the advertiser, freedom to the writers. There were writers who came, a group of 1,000 Canadian writers, who were not even taken seriously. Instead, the periodicals association was taken seriously, and it was formed specifically to get this bill through.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mrs. Holt: He referred to Doris Anderson of Chatelaine, her letter and Maclean's, the tragedy of it. He did not say that MacLean-Hunter in its list of holdings publishes Canadian Redbook which happens to be an American women's magazine—unless there are two Redbooks. It is all very well to discuss the special interests of the people who are for this bill, who have to gain in the name of nationalism, but I call it nationalism and greed.

An hon. Member: You have a lot of courage, Simma.

An hon. Member: Good work, Simma.

Mr. Fairweather: No trips for Simma.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, what the hon. member has just stated is entirely correct as far as the operation of the committee is concerned. Opposition members on that committee were willing to give up their place so that she would have the right to speak, as well as some of her other colleagues who were bumped from that committee because they were an embarrassment to the government while we were discussing the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton-Mountain (Mr. MacFarlane) on a point of order.

Mr. MacFarlane: Madam Speaker, the hon. member mentioned bumping committee members, and that is part of my responsibility. I should like to say that the only removal of members that I have been involved in is when members have been absent and not performing.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, obviously I touched a very sensitive nerve with the whip and the deputy whip. They are backing up all over the place, trying to recover some lost territory. I might say they do not look any better in retreat.

Mr. MacFarlane: I changed a few Tories who were away, too.

Mr. Epp: In respect of motion No. 2, Madam Speaker, the mentality that seems to have dominated the minister, government spokesmen on this bill—I have to differentiate between government spokesmen and those in the government who have had the courage of their convictions, despite some dire consequences that might fall on their heads, and have spoken against this bill—and government supporters of this bill has been one of simply ramming it through the House and the committee. As the 80 per cent clause was not available to us, it was difficult to discuss the aspect of the bill yesterday.

● (1650)

After yesterday's announcement concerning Reader's Digest, one was able to detect a new mentality on the part of government supporters. They say, in so many words, that as the opposition has saved Reader's Digest, its objections to this bill should vanish. We oppose the way in which the government was going to force Reader's Digest to cease publication. But we also considered the effect of the legislation on other magazines. Should we not object to the objectionable features of this bill, merely because one magazine was saved by a back door deal? The government is saying, "Well, you have saved Reader's Digest; you have won half the battle. Why not take half a loaf and go home?" The point is that this is not merely a question of saving a magazine, Reader's Digest or any other magazine. The legislation is wrong, immoral and unacceptable. That is why we oppose it.

I sympathize with the aims of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in whose name stands motion No. 2. On general principle I oppose content regulations. Probably I can support Canadian ownership provisions. There is nothing wrong with saying that 75 per cent of a magazine should be edited or published in Canada, or that the majority, say three-quarters, of the board of directors should be Canadian. But I object to the principle of any content provision. I object to giving the government, the Department of National Revenue in this instance, the right to determine if content regulations are being obeyed and the standards to be used. I mention standards because the matter is not clear even now.

The minister complains that this debate has been going on for about one year. We have discussed it off and on, that is true, but the issue is more clouded now than it was during the committee discussion. Then, at least, we knew what we were debating. Now it is hard to interpret certain provisions, despite the intervention of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). On principle, I oppose content regulations. Reader's Digest and Time Canada discussed Canadian content with previous administrations. If my memory serves me correctly, about 30 per cent of Reader's Digest could be considered to be of Canadian content before Bill C-58 was introduced. Time magazine devoted five or six pages per issue to Canadian news. You must concede this, no matter what your views are on the establishment of another Canadian news magazine. Even without the statutory obligation to include material of Canadian content, those two magazines took steps to becoming more Canadian, without any legislative requirement. Evidently, past discussions with those two magazines were fruitful. Perhaps more discussions should have taken place, and perhaps the magazines would have increased their percentage of Canadian content.

To make clear the subject we are debating, the mover of motion No. 2 suggests in his amendment that a magazine should be considered as Canadian, for tax purposes, if more than half the content of any one issue, excluding advertisements, are Canadian, as defined by the Minister of National Revenue. As I said, I do not like content regulations. If this amendment passes, we shall know clearly the content requirement. At least we shall know what we are dealing with, what are the rules of the game. As things now stand, the minister can decide arbitrarily.

Using his discretion, he can introduce any regulations in this field that he wishes.

Passage of the hon. member's motion would mean that the content requirements are spelled out in the statute and we could debate them. Therefore, I hope hon. members will accept the motion, as the content requirements would be clearly defined. Frankly, I feel that the government has done a complete about-face with regard to Reader's Digest. The rules concerning the 80 per cent and 20 per cent relationship have been changed. The figure of 20 per cent now applies, apparently, to matters previously governed by the figure of 80 per cent.

I hope the government whips will allow government supporters freedom to exercise their rights. I hope hon. members opposite will be allowed to vote as they see fit on motion No. 2 or on the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik). Acceptance of either motion would at least narrow the scope of debate and subsequent administrations would know the will of this House. Even I, with all my hang-ups about content rules, am willing to accept the hon. member's amendment so we may know exactly what we are debating. The hon. member for Ontario spoke well last night. His was a constructive, not a critical approach. He did not try to destroy what the minister had achieved. I think an accommodation could be reached with which members of this House could live. I commend the hon. member for his courage and for the clarity with which he spoke yesterday.

Finally, may I say a word about motion No. 3 standing in the name of the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy). I should like to see the scope of his motion expanded to include scientific, medical, trade and agricultural magazines. I live in the naïve hope that the government will re-examine its position and allow the motions alluded to, or some of them, to carry in order to make clear what we are debating.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I see the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) rising to speak. The hon. member did not move his own amendment. Since the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) moved it in his name, the hon. member has lost the right to speak on the motion.

Mr. Faulkner: Madam Speaker, I do not know if the House is disposed to grant unanimous consent for the hon. member to speak. Certainly I am. He has been a principal spokesman on this issue, it is his motion, and I am prepared to recommend unanimous consent if the House is disposed to accept my recommendation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Madam Speaker, I thank the House for its courtesy. I was in Peterborough, where an unruly student of Trent University classified me as the father of the red Tories. I was able to tell him that although I would be proud to accept that accolade, the title rightly belonged to Benjamin Disraeli, but that I would be glad to account myself as being of that noble line. So much for Peterborough. It is a long drive. My presence there accounts for my not being here last evening to present this motion.

• (1700)

I want to disabuse the mind of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) and members of the House about any motives I have in respect of this amendment. It really falls under the conservative part of the Progressive Conservative label. All I was doing was attempting to put in statutory form the judicial interpretation that I have come across of the phrase "not substantially the same". I was being authentically conservative in this regard. Having said that, I hope anybody who feels that way will not now have any difficulty. The hon. member was kind enough to say that although he did not like the content provision in any measure, he saw the point of this amendment.

The minister took the trouble to give us a little of the history of this legislation. If he does not mind, I should like to remind him that at second reading stage I said I thought, in the case of citizenship qualifications, using the phrase rather loosely, it is time that both publications which are really the subject matter of this bill took out their papers at the Canadian court of citizenship. The hon. member who just spoke echoed this feeling. That was not the major preoccupation of our debate either at second reading or at the committee stage.

We were told by representatives of Reader's Digest, and this added to our dilemma, that there was no way they could comply. I must say that I hope I am not now breaking any confidence. On many occasions, when representatives of Reader's Digest came to see me on this issue, I asked as the spokesman for my party why they did not get into the marketplace and get rid of some of their shares. This is a footnote, but I happen to believe that just because one holds shares, control does not necessarily follow. However, that is a semantic or a numbers argument that I do not want to get into.

I am not going to argue with the minister that the 75 per cent figure does not represent citizenship, and I said so on second reading. If that is the government's determination, so be it. If that is an element of citizenship, it is time these publications took up their Canadian citizenship. There was an indication that they were unable to take this step.

We then had the events of the committee hearings and the protestations on behalf of Reader's Digest to the effect that they could not comply with Bill C-58. The pressure was on all of us. I think the minister was generous in alluding to this in respect of his party and the opposition party, all of whom had a genuine interest in trying to see that once the element of citizenship had been fulfilled, these magazines would be able to continue publishing.

I have not been convinced or understood, no matter what people have said in this debate, that a much more simple and better way could not be found to deal with this matter of inexpensive material being used by Time and Reader's Digest. It is curious how this keeps coming up throughout the debate. I am not convinced that a more simple way of dealing with this material could be by handling it under the anti-dumping legislation. I think a review of the history of this legislation and prior legislation will show this to be the fact.

Time Canada could well have paid a higher price for the material it uses in its magazine, but this would of course have deprived the coffers of Canada of substantial amounts of money. The minister may not think this is a valid point, or one in respect of which he should comment. It was my understanding that the arrangement was made some years ago that these magazines were getting material at well below cost, but that the coffers of Canada, of the Crown, were benefitting. Certainly the government is justified in changing its opinion as priorities change. Those of us who feel deeply about the continuation of Canadian publications felt that mere tax dollars were not sufficient justification for having material dumped.

Perhaps the minister and others may think I am taking a bit too long to say that the anti-dumping legislation is in place, and that techniques could easily be put in place so that the material Time Canada is using could be dealt with under that legislation. We were told in argument that this would be an interference with the flow of information, We were told that we would have to believe that the 80 per cent rule was not interference, but that the anti-dumping legislation would somehow be translated into interference. Perhaps I was not in Peterborough long enough to understand the subtlety of that argument.

The minister quoted Doris Anderson. She is one of the people in Canada who over the years has been terribly sensitive on the issue of healthy Canadian publications. I want to believe that those who are so anxious about the survival of Canadian periodicals are equally concerned about the monopoly which will ensue if all the publications in Canada are housed under one publisher. That is perhaps not as fundamentally serious to the future of publications in Canada but it is a very major problem for the Secretary of State and his department. Let there be no mistake that I, for one—and many others—will be deeply disappointed if, as a result of all the agony we are going through, all the hearings and debate—and, if I may say so, a fair amount of cries of anguish—all we have done is enhanced or furthered one or two Canadian publications.

At second reading, and I think the minister will not mind hearing this again, I suggested there were a couple of things he could do now to help Canadian periodicals; and that was not six months ago. The first thing I suggested was in respect of the matter of postage. The second thing was that the Crown, as landlord of all these station and airport facilities for the distribution of magazines, could easily make it part of the leases that Canadian magazines have a fair opportunity to purchase. That does not say they will purchase, but an arrangement could be made in the leases to see that Canadian publications have a fair proportion of the exposure, something more than the 5 per cent which is now the case. I have no reason to doubt the minister's figures, but it is a terrible indictment on all of us that 95 per cent of the publications on the newsstands are American.

The minister said, and again I am not going to dispute this because I have no evidence, that the press release which was put in our hands yesterday was not the result of any deal. I am not using the word "deal" in any pejorative sense, nor am I being critical. But, obviously, representatives of Reader's Digest and of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) must have had some discussion and tested a formula—that is perfectly right; there is no reason why they should not—otherwise Reader's Digest would not have been able to make the statement it did.

But let us say the hon. member for Fundy-Royal believed all the evidence given by periodicals and èbelieved the minister's own evidence before the standing committee. The minister surely did not say that the Digest could not survive, but the Canadian periodical industry certainly said that unless legislation based on the 80 per cent formula was part and parcel of government policy, Reader's Digest and Time would continue. Now we find that despite all this, Reader's Digest finds it can continue. The minister would surely agree that this places us in a peculiar position. One wonders whether all the discussion which has taken place, all the evidence and all the hearings were not really a waste of time. I do not think the minister should be surprised if we are taking a day or two to discuss this new situation. Presumably, this is what was in the mind of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) when he suggested the committee should have another crack at hearing about the arrangement.

With reference to my complimentary remarks about Doris Anderson, I would be very interested to see—I do not suppose the mails have brought this yet, but perhaps the telegrams have started to come—what Mrs. Anderson thinks of the arrangement Reader's Digest has made with the Department of National Revenue. Will she write another letter to the Globe and Mail saying, "fine, the Canadian Periodicals' Association is happy to welcome a new citizen," a new member, presumably, of the association. Let us be fair about this. Has the mail begun to pile up? Has the minister received any telegrams?

I have another point to make. It is quite a serious one and I hope that before the debate on motion No. 2 is concluded the minister or one of the members opposite speaking for him can answer a rather important question. What arrangements concerning a time-frame have been made between the Department of National Revenue and the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest so that the Digest can get itself into the new form which will meet the test of the content rule? Will there be an interim period during which the Digest does not qualify and is, therefore, beyond the law if this law passes in the foreseeable future? Or will Reader's Digest Canada be allowed a transitional period during which it can come aboard, so to speak, and make the arrangements which are necessary?

As I understand the press release, the attributes of citizenship, for example, the selling of 45 per cent of the shares to make up 75 per cent, as is necessary under this bill, could not be accomplished immediately Reader's Digest could not be expected to do this in the month of February, and presumably it would take several months for Reader's Digest Canada to put itself into the position of being acceptable within the content rule and other parts of section 19 of the Income Tax Act. The minister apologized; he has left the chamber. The Minister of National Revenue is not in the House. But I would hope that before the debate on my amendment, No. 2, is concluded somebody on behalf of the government will satisfy the House in this regard because a matter of fairness is involved.

No matter how vigorously the government is opposed, citizens in a democratic state expect there should be fairness shown to all, so the House is entitled to know what time-frame has been allowed to Reader's Digest to come on board as far as content, ownership and such matters are concerned. If that question could be answered we would soon be ready, I presume, to vote on my amendment. What I have attempted to say—and I have tried to do this without a series of elegantly drafted notes—is this: I want to know the time-frame for Reader's Digest because it is my expectation that a fair and small "l" liberal government will be granting the same transitional period to every publication requiring time to meet the test of section 19. If I could be sure that the same transitional arrangement is to be allowed others in order to join this happy group of new Canadian publications, we would be able to proceed quite rapidly.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Madam Speaker, my first temptation is to take the compliments of the minister and run. I hope he will feel the same way after my contribution, on a point of principle, today. At any rate, I thank him for his generous remarks. I wonder what his reaction was when he heard that Reader's Digest would, indeed, comply. He indicated today that he received the news with pleasure, but I wonder whether deep down it was really so and whether we have really reached the end of this question.

The minister began by saying he was not a professional journalist or publisher, and that in those circumstances he had to take the advice of people who were. I will begin by mentioning two people who are professional journalists—Geoffrey Stevens and Charles Lynch, two of our most respected reporters. What do those professional writers tell us? I am sure the minister knows that these people do not support the bill. They decline to do so on important questions of principle. I wondered how the minister would respond to the Reader's Digest announcement and I think perhaps Geoffrey Stevens had it right when he said this:

> Beyond that, there is the question of what happens if Time somehow manages to survive and continues to attract Canadian advertising. A prediction: the government, having taken one highly discriminatory step with its 80 per cent content rule, would be hard pressed to resist taking another even more discriminatory action to get rid of the magazine.

I suspect that might well be so, and it concerns me. It concerns me that the principal steps, many of them very good steps that I support, might be taken to excess and be one more step down the road to what Charles Lynch says is manipulation of content. That is the angle that concerns me. He said:

> Indeed, news is being manipulated in many countries but Canada is not one of them. For us to join the list would be very bad business.

I share that concern, Mr. Speaker, and in talking to it, if I use overstatement or political licence excessively, I apologize. But I do so only to make this point of principle. When I was in India only a few months ago, the Speaker of one of the state legislatures in that country stoutly defended Mrs. Gandhi's emergency measures and her admonishments of an irresponsible press. He reassured me that I need have no concern regarding democracy and freedom of the press in India because Mrs. Ghandi was a true democrat and these stern, non-legislated controls would soon be lifted. Four months later the same Speaker saw his own legislature permanently dissolved by the central government, and legislation for the complete censorship of the press passed and enacted, all within the framework of a democratic constitution by a leader espousing and extolling democracy as the justification for her actions.

I am not suggesting that we are anywhere near this kind of situation in Canada, but even the smallest move in this direction of interference should be observed, enunciated and put to rest; because a democratic principle must always take precedence over an expedient one, no matter how important an issue the expediency might resolve. I suggest that tampering with content is tampering with the democratic principle in order to accomplish an expedient end. The expedient end I might even agree with, but even if I were to agree with it I could not compromise my principles and I do not think the minister could either.

I would agree that those who protest the content regulation are using considerable political licence when they call the content move outright censorship. However, if it is not outright censorship it is a form of restriction which inhibits and suppresses, a position perilously close to censorship. The initial steps toward censorship in any democratic state are usually orchestrated slowly and subtly. In India, in November, no specific legislation existed to exercise this power, but the press was warned and knew that their editorial and story line must be "substantially the same as" that of the government and more than "80 per cent substantially different" from that of the previously so-called irresponsible press. This unlegislated, yet insidious moral suasion in India largely accomplished its aim, and after several months of "80 per cent substantially the same" government line a final legislative death-blow to the press was easily accomplished, the press having fallen victim to its own unwilling axe.

I ask the minister to examine carefully his own use of insidious moral suasion, and suggest that this legislation, through its content rule, might be the exercise of the sort of power I have referred to. I ask the minister, would Time magazine dare print today an anti-government story in recent editions, or would such moral suasion encourage them to feature the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on the front of their magazine and suddenly find its Canadian section important enough to feature lavish, full colour photo coverage of the Prime Minister's travels? Or would it be possible that we might see CTV news suddenly downplaying the role of opposition members and promoting government members and programs? I would say probably not, because they know that earlier a prominent pro-Canadian member said that there is not, and could not be, any question of interference with the press in so far as the dissemination of news and opinion is concerned. "I know that no Liberal government would ever think of doing so"—so said the famous Walter Gordon in 1965. It was to his credit, as a nationalist, that he said we must not tamper with the press and its content in any way. Yet that is what we are doing today. I am sure he would share my concern and the concern of other members in this regard.

Certainly the minister should be watching closely that vested interest remains the dominating consideration in the passage of this legislation, rather than the control of content for some lofty nationalistic, Canadian objective. Even by touching the issue of any form of content legislation or regulation the government is setting itself on a dangerous course. I would urge it to reconsider.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) says it is important to understand that "not substantially the same" does not refer to subject matter. Well, what does it refer to? The colour of the ink? It seems to me that "content" and "subject matter" are substantially the same type of synonym. The amendment is a very difficult compromise and I shall vote for it with great reluctance. While I would vote for the amendment with great reluctance, favouring the 60 per cent rule, I would vote against the legislation if any concept of content control is to be found in the legislation, on the basis of the infringement of a basic democratic principle. I ask the minister to consider that carefully.

In Canada we are a long way from India but only a short step away from legislating a highly dangerous precedent on the route to content control. When the minister said that we want a situation where there is no interference in the freedom of Canadians to read Time and Reader's Digest, I am sure he would add "or any material of their interest". But if interference does result in the material not being available, obviously we defeat our purpose. Does the minister have evidence from Time Canada that the magazine will be available to read subsequent to the passage of this legislation? Unfortunately, negotiations seem to be going on outside the House and committee and we must read the results in the press. Having read the results and found that Reader's Digest can live with the legislation, let me ask the minister whether similar negotiations are going on with Time. Will Time actually survive, as Reader's Digest will, in his opinion? If it will not survive, then he is indeed infringing the rights of Canadians to read material of their choice.

I am pleased that the minister sees this bill as part of an attempt to define Canadianism. I am also pleased that we are proceeding to a further type of definition of what is Canadian and what is a Canadian magazine. Were he to move toward ownership, publishing control, and so forth, I think all Canadians would be pleased. But he is going further when he tampers with content. I feel confident that the minister, because of his integrity, does not like this content provision any more than the rest of us in this House. I am sure he shares the principle of non-intervention and that he would like to find some other way.

I am not suggesting the other way that he might find, because I think his search will be long and hard. However, I ask that he not give way to expediency now, that he take out the content section of this bill and immediately assign to a committee terms of reference to the effect that it should find a way other than content.

Let us listen, perhaps, to some of the suggestions of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), but above all let us take the great principles that have been advanced in this bill and keep them, and let us not tarnish the bill with an attack on content, on whether it is censorship or whether it inhibits. Let us take this out and then go ahead and bring the bill into play in the interest of Canadian culture, Canadianism and the principles that were enunciated and supported earlier at second reading.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Madam Speaker, I enter the debate at this report stage with some sense of urgency as we discuss this regressive and depressive step which has been resisted by many thinking writers in Canada whose professional qualities, I think, should certainly appeal to the minister and whose words should be read very carefully by him and the officials of his department.

The bill was fought out in the committee in a way that not many bills are. The minutes will show this. They will also show that on several occasions it went beyond comedy and into farce. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Miss Holt), has already alluded to some of the difficulties presented to some hon. members in attempting to be heard during the committee study. One has great difficulty in knowing what most of the points of the committee study were, but I think a point of some kind was raised when the minister fled the meeting as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was about to speak. She was only able to speak because of the gracious motion of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) that she be heard.

We again saw some rather strange developments in the history and transition of the committee stage during the study of Bill C-58. Any of the authorities on the Canadian parliamentary system who hail the committee system as being the one thing that would save this institution, or that would greatly assist this institution in its deliberations, should read the minutes of the committee as it discussed Bill C-58.

I think it is very important that the rules be grounded in law and that we should consider the point raised by the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), that we must indeed pay most careful attention to this question. It is very easy to slip away from "substantially different" into saying 80 per cent, 50 per cent or 20 per cent Canadian content. Again, I think a reading of the minutes of the committee will show that that slip was made frequently both by members and by witnesses. One would suspect, still, that the intent of the bill and the intent of the formula submitted by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) is really obscured by the term "substantially different" and there will be a gradual transition by which it will be interpreted as Canadian content with all that that implies.

I take no pleasure in noting that Reader's Digest has made some kind of a deal with the government. I expect it was easier for the Reader's Digest to do so partly because, to its credit, it has gone a long way in Canadianizing its operation and making its publication a forum for Canadian writers, and also because of the very nature of the digest aspect of the publication. A reading, again, of the minutes of the committee when certain questions were asked about what would constitute "substantially different" qualifications would lead one to suspect that a possible way around this provision would have to do with the timing of the publication, and whether this might be the road to take or a loophole in the legislation that has been found.

Again, I think the call of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) is worth considering, because it would be helpful to the committee and certainly to the House in these final stages of debate on the bill if we were to know just what the arrangements are in respect of Reader's Digest. In all of this, I think we are still missing the basic reason for the situation to which the minister alluded in his remarks when he pointed out that 95 per cent of the publications read in Canada come from outside the country. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) picked that up and said it was to our shame. On one level, that is true. Certainly, on another level it is not, because I do not think the problem all along really has been one of content. It has been one of tone, style and appeal to basic values which I believe are still basic to the Canadian way of life.

The problem for any journal or any publication in Canada is to gain and to hold readership. That is the problem, because advertising depends on readership and not on tax concessions, in the last analysis. It depends on the power of the publication to deliver an audience to the advertisers. We tend to lose track of that over and over again, but that is the basic question. We have the problem in respect of Canadian publications which blithely set about losing their readership and then cry for government intervention in order to save them from bankruptcy. When we had the debate on second reading, I referred to Saturday Night. It, coincidentally, had been restructured at the precise time of the debate.

I went through the first of the resurrected issues of Saturday Night with a good deal of pleasure. I made reference to the timing and said that they were on the right track. I was not being entirely facetious when I complimented them for having printed a poem which rhymed. This created a bit of a response from the editorial office of Saturday Night, because they said they never print poems which rhyme. They said that the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay was so illiterate that he failed to notice this. However, someone spotted the fact that it rhymed once. The author of the poem immediately wrote to Saturday Night that her poem contained ten rhymes which were missed because many of them were internal to the structure of the poem and were not strictly at the end of the line. The editor said he found only one after a close, textural study of the work.

Again, the question here is one of editorial policy and editorial judgment. It is not really a question of censorship at all, but of deals that are made between authors and publishers. They are made by editors who decide on the tone of the publication, and through that the authors learn what their chances are in the market. It is with enormous disappointment that I read recently the October, 1975, issue of Saturday Night. I could read it only recently, Madam Speaker, because of the most unhappy mail strike which went on and on. Believe me, the worst aspects of the mail strike were not simply that I could not read Saturday Night until just a week or two ago; there were far worse aspects to it. In all of the debate about content, readership, and so on, we tend to overlook such basic and fundamental questions as postal rates, which play such an important part in the demise of far too many Canadian publications. When one looks through this issue, one can see what the problem is in terms of Canadian content. The content is as Canadian as can be and it is substantially different because nobody else will print much of it.

At the beginning we find the editor, Mr. Fulford, making his comments in a long article on John Herbert's play "Fortune and Men's Eyes", a play which deals with the sordidness of prison life and deviations, homosexuality in particular. It is not everybody's cup of tea. Then he has a second article about developments in the school system in Ontario, and he takes a knock at oversimplification in a typical school text. It happens to be full of praise for the English language. He says that today English is likely to be the only language in common for educated men, that English is spoken in Great Britain, the United States and the Commonwealth, and may yet prove to be—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member knows that we are on motions 2 and 3. Perhaps he could limit his comments to those two motions.

Mr. Johnston: The motions refer to the whole matter of the 50 per cent "substantially different". I feel, with due deference, that what I am saying is germane to this topic because surely we would not have Bill C-58 if the kind of problems I am suggesting here did not arise. There has been a lapse of time since the second reading debate. The bill has gone through the committee and has been pushed forward willy-nilly by the government. There has been no reason for any Canadian publication which has looked to a boom in its readership once Bill C-58 has been passed, to be pessimistic, because I think they saw that the government was determined to ram Bill C-58 through second reading, through the committee, through the report stage and through third reading. So, with deference, I feel that what I am saying is germane to the topic because of the lapse of time between second reading and the changes that have occurred with regard to this publication.

I will attempt to be brief. There is an article by Singer and Rodgers on mercury, the hidden poison in the northern rivers. This is a sad story which shows little knowledge of either Canadian native Indians or of the people of Japan. There is also an article about two artists, the Bobaks. I have nothing but praise for it. I own a Bobak print myself. To quote Bobak: "Anglo-Saxons hate to get too personal, too intimate". This is putting a finger on what has been one of the problems in Canadian journalism. Doug Fetherling has an article entitled "Portrait of a Canadian actress waiting for something to happen", who is quoted as saying, "Canada is the country that taught me to be paranoid". I checked the suggestion, the individual responsibility. The idea that a nation does things to individuals within it is too simple altogether.

George Woodcock writes on the perils of freedom in India. This has already been alluded to by a previous speaker, so again I am sure it is very germane to the topic we are discussing. To quote again: "Mrs. Gandhi set in motion the same mechanism of a responsible tyranny which the British used to combat". Yet surely since the trial of Warren Hastings no British rule in Canada could be described as irresponsible because he was called to the bar of justice in a famous trial. Martin Knelman writes on the ghost of "Seven Days" which still mocks the CBC. He refers to the parliamentary committee which studied that program, but he shows no evidence of having read the minutes of the committee which investigated that particular matter.

There is an excerpt from Robertson Davies' "World of Wonders", and again there is nothing but praise for the totality of Robertson Davies' three part trilogy which may yet be the great Canadian novel, or be considered as such; but it deals with a sordid episode of sexual deviation. Anne Hardy is tough on Alberta. She writes on dining and says that one cannot expect to find good restaurants in English Canada. So much for the third force on the prairies. I am sure that when this issue is read, various readers will decide that that is the last issue of Saturday Night for them. Worst of all, there is an article by Mordecai Richler, reviewing The Swastika and the Maple Leaf, in which he renews the suggestion that a governor general of this country, Lord Tweedsmuir, better known as John Buchan, the novelist, was anti-Semitic. I would rather go to the gas chamber than read the quote that is attributed to him. The author put words in the mouth of a character in chapter one of his book "The Thirty-Nine Steps", which was written in 1915, and Richler uses those words to prove that John Buchan was anti-Semitic.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member is straying too far from the subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnston: Again, Madam Speaker, may I say, with deference, that I realize that the points I am raising are upsetting, but the point I am making now is that the reader of this publication will be upset by what he reads. I do not know at this moment on which side of the argument Mordecai Richler was, but we have had a great deal of comment from the minister himself and from others on professional writing and writers. Surely this is germane to the argument, because there are people in this country who continue to revere the memory of that governor general who died in office, and it is almost impossible to come to his defence even in this chamber. Yet he killed off that character at the end of the first chapter.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Madam Speaker, earlier today, on the advice of Mr. Speaker, I raised a question on a point of order relating to the deduction of advertising expenses for income tax purposes. At that time the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) stated that he thought the answer to the question was yes. I asked for an unequivocal yes because I think it is of utmost importance to producers of Canadian livestock to know exactly where they stand as they advertise in these publications, because of the fact that they will not know until a year from this April whether their expenses will be legitimate or not.

It seems to me that it would be logical to put legislation in place for the benefit of the industry so that those people will know they will be protected. We can accomplish this by passing just a subamendment to the amendment we are discussing at the present time, motion No. 3. At the conclusion of my speech to-day I propose to move that subamendment.

My reason for moving this subamendment is that the Department of National Revenue was not in a position to give an unequivocal yes to the question I asked. The question is, can the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) state unequivocally that Canadian producers of purebred and exotic livestock will be permitted to deduct costs of advertising in the United States as legitimate expenses for income tax purposes in Canada? The question is that the producer may be called upon to prove that his is a legitimate expense, and he must prove it under clause 1 where it says:

19. (1) In computing income, no deduction shall be made in respect of an otherwise deductible outlay or expense of a taxpayer for advertising space in an issue of a non-Canadian newspaper or periodical dated after December 31, 1975, for an advertisement directed primarily to a market in Canada.

The key words there are "advertisement directed primarily." It could well be that there is not another magazine, periodical or newspaper which would sufficiently advertise the product which the producer has to offer, whether it be young animals or older animals, and it could well be that the producer might go to a United States periodical which is circulated in Canada. He might sell a small percentage, 10 per cent or 15 per cent—it does not really matter; we do not need to discuss figures—in the United States, but the major portion of his sales would be made in Canada. This bill says "advertisement directed." It could well be that while this periodical covers a greater part of the North American continent, this particular advertisement could be directed to people in Canada because of the geographical location of the product which is for sale and also of the purchaser.

This bill is open to interpretation. This is the problem I have had with this legislation right from the start. The Minister of National Revenue, when he spoke about "not substantially the same", said yesterday that it would take time to bring in a ways and means motion to set this up by statute so that we would then know what we are talking about. There could be a great deal of difference between what the Minister of National Revenue, the Secretary of State and I think "not substantially the same" means. It is because of this individual interpretation that we are having problems with this legislation. This is of fundamental importance and individual interpretation is not necessary because it could be spelled out by legislation, and that is what is wrong here. When we are dealing with something of such magnitude, the government is doing a disservice by bringing in legislation to be administered by interpretation rather than by statute.

Yesterday the minister also used the phrase "continuing arrangement." Goodness me, "continuing arrangement" can mean a great deal to a great many people. It might even mean the consummation of marriage between two people. It could mean many things. I do not think the government is performing a useful function when it asks us to accept such vague terms. It boils down to the fact that this is just one man's interpretation, and this is causing a great deal of trouble.

I could go on in this debate, and I hope I will have the opportunity to go into further detail, but at this time I should like to move my subamendment so that Mr. Speaker will have the opportunity of looking at it and of seeing whether it is acceptable in his judgment. If it is not acceptable, I still should like to have the opportunity of presenting my argument to the House so that it may be fully considered because of its very great importance. I have other things to say on this matter, but because it is almost six o'clock perhaps I can have that privilege at another time.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain):

That the amendment be amended by deleting the words "scientific or medical subjects" and by substituting therefor the words "scientific, agricultural of medical subjects."

Madam Speaker, may I have the privilege of debating this at another time, if you see fit to accept this subamendment? May I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST THAT MILK PRODUCERS EXPLAIN PROBLEMS TO COMMITTEE IN ATTEMPT TO FIND SOLUTION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on an important issue of pressing necessity.

Considering that since April 1975, the Canadian Dairy Commission has been applying measures that have placed the producers of industrial milk in a more than precarious position, may I, Mr. Speaker, request this House to give this motion very special attention. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That this House unanimously request the Minister of Agriculture to call before the Committee on Agriculture representatives of the Canadian Federation of Milk Producers and provincial bodies concerned, for them to explain to committee members the problems they have to face, and, at the same time, to help the government find a solution equitable for all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

SOCIAL SECURITY

PROPOSAL TO MAINTAIN ESCALATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of certain disturbing reports in relation to this week's conference of federal and provincial welfare ministers, I ask leave under Standing Order 43, to move a motion which I believe is appropriate. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That this House urges the government not to present the provincial governments with a trade off between the annual escalation of family allowances and any proposed guaranteed income or income supplementation benefits, but that the escalation of family allowances, as provided by itself in an act of parliament, be reinstated forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPRESSION OF SUPPORT FOR PRINCIPLE OF NON-INTERVENTION IN INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF ANGOLA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. On January 5, 1973 this House approved a motion proposed by the government asserting the strong support of this chamber for the principle of non-intervention in the internal affairs of other countries and censuring a country which appeared to have violated that principle in respect of the Viet Nam conflict.

On the assumption that hon. members on all sides of this House wish to remain consistent in the application of that general principle, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) and hopefully supported by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau):

● (1410)

That this House noted with grave concern the continuation of the civil war in Angola and deplores the large scale intervention by other states in this civil war; is aware of the fact that the war is being prolonged by outside intervention, thereby increasing the suffering of the Angolan people; welcomes the declared intention of the government of South Africa to withdraw its troops from Angola, as it is believed to be doing at this moment, and calls on the government of Cuba to do likewise; urges the MPLA, the FNLA and UNITA to call a ceasefire and to conduct negotiations with a view to reaching a political settlement acceptable to all parties, and requests the government to convey the text of this resolution to all participants in the Angolan civil war including those who are providing arms, munitions and war materiel, and to the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion cannot be put without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Liberal members said no.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTED PROCEDURES FOR CLARIFICATION OF REGULATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to put a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The motion is necessitated by the growing confusion amongst the business community over the interpretation of the Anti-Inflation Act regulations. While everyone realizes that the regulations are necessarily complex, it became clear during the cross-Canada Anti-Inflation Board seminars that many professional accountants found the regulations confusing and misleading. Companies unable to afford professional accountants find themselves awash in a murky sea of legal and financial jargon. Considering that business must understand the regulations—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 each hon. member who seeks unanimous consent ought to be given the opportunity to explain as briefly as possible the urgent nature of the motion. However, I think we ought to be careful that we do not drift into a situation in which the explanation becomes debate. I would urge the hon. member to put his motion.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering that business must understand the regulations before making a sincere effort to apply them to their operations, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage (Mr. Masniuk):

That this House direct the Anti-Inflation Board to move expeditiously in clarifying the government's anti-inflation regulations by conducting additional seminars, by disseminating interpretation bulletins and by distributing a clean and concise manual of procedures that business may follow.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

An hon. Member: Who said no?

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROGRESS IN FINDING AMENDING FORMULA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister arising out of what he said in this House on October 2, 1974 when participating in the throne speech debate. With respect to the amending procedure of our constitution he said:

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

. . . it is time to decide that this will be done and that we will settle on an amending procedure within four years.

Could the Prime Minister indicate very briefly where the process stands, what is going on and what progress has been made in general terms?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in the course of that debate I did utter those words. The Leader of the Opposition will remember that it was in response to his own urging that the government should get on with the problem of repatriating the constitution.

Mr. Stanfield: I was too modest to refer to that this afternoon.

Mr. Trudeau: Modesty is not the usual approach of the hon. member, although he sometimes feigns it.

An hon. Member: You don't even feign it.

Mr. Epp: You would not recognize it if you saw it.

Mr. Hees: Don't be shy, Pierre.

Mr. Trudeau: I can assure the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings that after having skiied somewhat with him I am not shy. I think he should be the modest one.

Mr. Hees: I have always been shy and retiring.

Mr. MacKay: You are going downhill faster than Hees!

Mr. Trudeau: I think they missed it up there. You had better repeat it.

Mr. Crouse: You are going downhill faster than he is.

Mr. Trudeau: I discussed this first at a meeting of premiers which took place about one year ago and got general agreement from all of them that we should, indeed, proceed with the repatriation of the constitution in the course of the next few years. I was talking about the life of this parliament, and I would say there was general agreement that we should concentrate on repatriation and on the formula of amendment rather than re-open the whole series of discussions on jurisdiction under the British North America Act, sections 91 and 92. There was general agreement along the lines that we should attempt to work out a solution which would permit repatriation, without any premier binding himself to such an absolute. That was the thrust of the discussions with which the federal government was encouraged to proceed.

Following that there have been a great number of meetings between federal officials and officials of all provinces, I believe, except one. There have been few discussions at the ministerial level, and certainly no collective ones. At this stage I can only say that it is our hope to find a formula upon which all provinces will agree, and I hope that that will be done, certainly, before the end of this parliament. I am quite determined to see that it does happen.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I will not ask the Prime Minister for disclosure of any details which might be inappropriate at this time. Indeed, I will even resist asking him if he is wrestling Mr. Bourassa to the ground. Can he indicate generally if he envisages a first ministers' meeting to pursue the discussions taking place at the ministerial level at present? If so, can the Prime Minister indicate, in general terms, when he expects discussions to resume at the first ministers's level, so that, as he said, this problem can be dealt with and this challenge met during the life of this parliament; or, to use another phrase he used during that debate, before we, in this parliament, disappear from the scene?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the best answer is to say that I do not envisage a meeting of first ministers on this subject unless I see the solution in sight. I do not want to put the government of this country, the governments of the provinces and the people of Canada through the long process of expectation, namely, that we can find a formula on which all would agree if such formula is not possible. The House will realize that since 1926, some 50 years, federal and provincial governments have been struggling to bring the constitution back to Canada, and every time this has failed for some reason or other. I would not want to waste the time of parliament or of the premiers by getting them together to embark upon another long series of discussions in order to repatriate the constitution. I am hopeful that the behind-the-scenes discussion going on at the official level will permit us to find a formula which is acceptable. It would mean, of course, confirmation by the premiers and, most important, submission to parliament, for the approbation of such formula.

I appreciate the Leader of the Opposition's discretion in not asking about the details. I think this approach is very helpful. I think I owe it to him to indicate that we are looking at the type of amendment formula which was discussed at Victoria, but not at the whole bag which was discussed at Victoria, in which many other subjects were included. We are looking strictly at the amendment formula or some variation of that.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? I think the Prime Minister has already created the expectation, in the sense that he expressed his determination almost one year and a half ago to see an amending formula adopted. Now, one year and a half later, I should like to know in view of these discussions going on if the Prime Minister can see light at the end of the tunnel? Is he encouraged to believe that he will be able to present a formula to the first ministers and to parliament during a reasonable time? I ask this because I would like to see this question settled before I leave parliament which, of course, will be within the end of this parliament. Can the Prime Minister say whether he is encouraged after the discussions that have taken place or, rather, is it a question of a stalemate?

● (1420)

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Leader of the Opposition indicates that I am creating expectations. Surely, the answer he is asking me to give can only increase those expectations or shatter them, which is a position in which I do not want to put myself. If any expectations were created back in October 1974, they were shared jointly by us when we both expressed the idea that after 50 years of effort, surely the Canadian people should be grown up enough to be able to agree on a method of bringing our own constitution back to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: I regret that a statement made in Quebec by members of the Quebec government has put this into the public domain in order to put discussion of it at that level. I repeat, I do not think it is worth wasting our time on. If I cannot find from the officials at bilateral discussions that Quebec, since it put this into the forefront, is prepared to agree with a reasonable form of amendment, I do not think I would waste the time of the House on protracted debate which would end up like another Victoria or Fulton-Favreau formula or another series of agreements which would fall to the ground at the last minute. That is our position.

We are still discussing in an informal and private way and I hope that we will get positive results. If we do not, I imagine the Leader of the Opposition or his successor and the leaders of other parties and myself will then have to ask ourselves do we want it to happen before the end of this parliament or should Canadians be invited to wait another 100 years. However, let us not ask ourselves that question until we know whether present discussions are fruitful.

Mr. Baldwin: Are you getting any ideas from Mrs. Gandhi?

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES ON METHOD TO ACCEDE TO UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON CIVIL AND POLITICAL RIGHTS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a related question about one aspect of the constitution. It has to do with the United Nations convenant on civil and political rights. Here perhaps our expectations might not need to be 100 years or even the life of this parliament. Can the Prime Minister tell us if Quebec and other provinces have now agreed on a method by which Canada could accede to this agreement?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was a federal-provincial conference on this very subject, in December I believe it was. The Department of External Affairs convened a conference. The report I had was that any outstanding hesitations by provinces to permit the federal government to ratify had been overcome and that we were proceeding with the working out of the precise wording of the agreement then reached. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Justice and the Secretary of State are, I believe, the three ministers involved. If they can report progress at some point, I will ask them to do so. However, we have great hopes that at long last, and I would sigh with relief along with the hon. member opposite, we will be able to proceed with ratification in spite of the difficulties which we faced thus far.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it now the position that the provinces will have a place on the monitoring or report committee of the United Nations when human rights infractions are within the provincial domain? Has there been a modus arrived at so that provinces, through the federal umbrella, can be represented? Is that the point that is the holdup?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister has said is an accurate description of the situation. With respect to the precise methodology of the provisions for provincial participation I might say I am meeting with Dr. Cloutier the minister for intergovernmental affairs of the Province of Quebec tomorrow, and this is one of the items I hope to raise.

ENERGY

ALLEGED ARSENIC AND URANIUM CONTAMINATION OF LAKE ONTARIO AT PORT HOPE BY ELDORADO—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It pertains to the continued pumping by Eldorado Nuclear each day of hundreds of gallons of water containing uranium and arsenic into Lake Ontario in the Port Hope area. I am addressing my question to the Prime Minister since it was obvious yesterday that the minister responsible is unfamiliar with the situation. Considering that Eldorado Nuclear has confirmed that this is not a casual run-off, as the minister suggested yesterday, but rather that the water is flowing, as I said, at a constant rate of hundreds of gallons per day, and bearing in mind that the federal government itself tabled a report last July indicating that this flow was unacceptable, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, having in mind his expressed concern that measures be taken against pollution, whether he will take steps to bring this to a halt immediately?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It seemed to me that the exchange yesterday indicated that it was the hon. member rather than the minister who was misinformed. I am glad the delay has now provided him with an opportunity to ask a more precise question and I am sure the minister will be able to answer it.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): If I understand the question, let me deal with it in this way. I referred to run-off because that is precisely what the water is. There is a catch-basin there which collects rain water and melted snow water. That water is caught and then pumped out into a pipe which goes out into the lake some 50 feet from shore. Ever since 1962 the effluent there has been monitored and if the hon. member would care to refer to a report which was issued on July 29, 1975 at page five, he would find that the Ontario ministry of the environment has concluded that there is not a significant impairment of water quality.

Mr. Baldwin: Table it!

DATE OF REPORT ON SITES OF RADIOACTIVE WATER DUMPS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Since the federal government's own agency decided last July that there was a problem there, and since it took some 20 years to realize that it arose from another source in the same area, I should like to ask the minister when we can expect a report, either to the House or in some other form, resulting from an investigation of the two sources of pollution, one of which is the building site and the other being the by-product of the process which is going on, which I understand that the minister is investigating. When can we expect a report on the investigation now being carried out by his department?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As to the first point, this report to which I alluded was made public and all members of parliament have received copies. As to the second point, we hope to receive a status report which will be made public, probably in about two weeks time.

PROPOSED COMMISSION TO STUDY HEALTH AND SAFETY ASPECTS OF USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): The minister said yesterday that in his view it was not necessary to set up a commission of inquiry into the possibility of serious problems arising in the future as the result of the continued expansion likely to take place in the nuclear energy field. I would like to ask whether the minister has had time to reconsider his position, given the fact that we are now embarking on a national program involving many cities and communities. Does he not think it appropriate to set up a public commission of inquiry into the health and safety aspects given the probability of such a major development?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): That question was asked yesterday and I see no reason to change the answer I gave then.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT PERIOD OF ENTITLEMENT TO BENEFITS BE NOT SHORTENED

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the financial cut program now set out by the federal government and also in view of the progressive increase in unemployment as a result of the anti-inflation measures taken by the same government, can the minister assure the House that the victims of unemployment will not be penalized by shorter periods of entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits?

● (1430)

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I indicated to the hon. member for Provencher the other day, and also during my comments on second reading of Bill C-69, that there was a comprehensive review of the program underway and that there would very likely be further amendments in the not too distant future. The exact nature of the amendments will not, of course, be disclosed until we place them before the House.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REASON FOR DELAY IN REPORT OF JUDGE MARIN ON INTERNAL PROCEDURES—POSSIBILITY OF PERMANENT APPEAL COMMISSION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Solicitor General. May I ask the minister why Judge Rene Marin has apparently still not submitted his report with respect to the RCMP and its internal procedures? As the Solicitor General well knows, it is five months overdue.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this is an independent commission. I understand the report is ready, but is being translated and prepared for printing, and that it will be ready for publication any day.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Solicitor General state whether he would favour the establishment of a permanent appeal commission in relation to RCMP methods and procedures, and would he indicate whether he has already begun the long overdue process of revising the RCMP Act to better meet the expanded role of the force?

Mr. Allmand: With respect to the appeal procedures, I presume the question of discipline is the one to which the hon. member is referring. We will, of course, want to await the recommendations of the report of the Marin commission, but as a result of the sittings of the Marin commission some changes have already been made with respect to discipline in the RCMP and its operations.

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBILITY OF IMPLEMENTING GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME NEXT YEAR—CRITERIA USED TO DETERMINE IF COUNTRY CAN AFFORD PROGRAM

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in regard to the conference with his provincial colleagues which has just terminated and involved the income supplement programs. Does the minister anticipate that, as a result of his perusal of all indicators, these programs can be implemented next year, and is this the feeling of his provincial counterparts?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it was agreed that such a program could not be applied next year.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As I understand it, the conference also indicated that the country could not afford this particular program at this time but would have to wait till we could afford it. Can the minister indicate what criteria will be used in order to determine whether or not the country can afford these two programs envisaged by the minister?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, the issue is not whether the country has the necessary resources to finance such a program, but whether an appropriate reallocation of resources can be made. I must point out to the hon. member that even if the financial resources were immediately available, we are not yet in position to introduce a bill in the House. There must be further discussions on the matter in June. In view of the fact that such a bill must be introduced and passed in the House, it is quite clear that it could not be applied before next year.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—POSSIBILITY OF SUSPENSION OF AID IN VIEW OF PARTICIPATION IN ANGOLAN WAR

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the precedent of the suspension of aid to India following their nuclear explosion, and in light of the brutal discussions that the Prime Minister held with Cuba regarding Canada's strong opposition to Cuban troops in Angola, does the minister plan to strengthen the credibility of Canada's stand by similar suspensions or other sanctions against Cuba as are currently being applied in the case of India?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The situations are quite different, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

PROPOSED INTRODUCTION OF INCENTIVES TO INCREASE PRODUCTIVITY—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On October 30 I asked the Prime Minister whether he would consider introducing productivity incentives, to be paid in direct proportion to increases in productivity, with the aim of increasing industrial productivity and thereby lowering costs and prices. The Prime Minister showed considerable interest in the suggestion and said that he would refer it to Privy Council and finance for examination. I wonder whether he would take the first opportunity on motions to indicate to the House what progress has been made in this regard during the last three months.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the hon. member understands it would take a rather longer statement to deal with the subject than I have time for now. I will seek such an occasion to do so, I would not think on motions but perhaps at some time when we are discussing economic matters and either I or the minister would be drawn into a debate on productivity. I agree with the hon. member that it is a very important subject.

I can tell him that the following the question in the House I did have a committee set up in the Privy Council office which has reviewed the federal government's activities with respect to the measurement, analysis and promotion of productivity. This committee is now in front of an interdepartmental group for discussion. I think there is a fair amount of things not only to be said but to be done in this area. I can assure the hon. member that the government is very concerned with it and that we will find the first opportunity to discuss further this important question of productivity with the House.

DATE OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD DECISION ON BILINGUAL BONUS

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Privy Council.

Considering that in mid-January, the Treasury Board and the Public Service Alliance of Canada agreed to ask the Anti-Inflation Board whether an additional payment to civil servants filling bilingual positions would be allowable under the anti-inflation guidelines, could the president tell the House when the matter was submitted to the Anti-Inflation Board and when we can expect its opinion on the matter?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I cannot say specifically when the Anti-Inflation Board will give its decision on the problem which the union and Treasury Board have agreed to refer to that Board.

PUBLISHING

"READER'S DIGEST"—LICENSING PROVISION OF UNITED STATES COMPANY

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the revised interpretation by the minister which allows Reader's Digest to have a continuing arrangement with its parent company while still retaining its status as a Canadian periodical, can the minister inform the House whether the existing licensing provision whereby Reader's Digest, United States, must approve all material used—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure that the hon. member is well aware that on three very recent occasions I have disallowed questions that anticipate not only an order of the day but the order of the day.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF LANDING OF TWO CUBAN AIRCRAFT AT GANDER PRIOR TO VISIT TO CUBA

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which relates to the landing of two Cuban aircraft at Gander on January 13 and 14. Was the Prime Minister informed, prior to his trip to Cuba, of the landing of these two Cuban planes at Gander, one of which was going to Guinea Bissau and one of which was returning from Brazzaville, and did he order an investigation into whether the planes were connected with the Cuban war effort in Angola?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The general answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes. I would not say I heard about these two specific planes. At the time the information was not that precise, but I did discuss with my officials the possibility of Cuba using Gander, as it has for quite a few years since it could not have landing rights in the United States, for one thing, in circumstances which were related to the Angolan war. We made clear to Cuban officials, the ambassador to be precise, that if we had any cause to suspect such flights were taking place or would take place we would exercise our rights under ICAO to search those planes to make sure that they were used for civilian purposes. So the answer is yes, but I cannot say that I knew with precision at the time what plane at what time had actually flown.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he had good reason to believe, prior to going to Cuba, that in fact Cuban planes, which were being used to fuel the war effort in Angola, had landed at Gander? He indicated that he did not know specifically about these two aircraft. Did he have good reason to believe, prior for leaving for Cuba, that Cuban planes had been using Gander airport in connection with the war effort in Angola?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, for the question to become relevant the planes had to land and take off. One or two planes have landed and taken off and our officials were alert enough to draw the matter to my attention, at which time I indicated, in agreement with the Department of External Affairs, that the Cubans should be notified that already two planes had come and gone and we did not know what was on them or exactly what they were doing, but from now on they should be alerted to the fact that we would be watching future landings for the purpose of searching, if we felt it was warranted, or if the destination was such as to make us believe it was for assistance to Angola, directly or indirectly. I would have to check the facts, but I believe as a result of that, what has happened has been that in fact there have been no further unscheduled flights of Cuban planes for destination to or from Africa.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REASON FOR ADDITIONAL CHARGE FOR TOUGH GRAIN

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, can the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Boart explain why farmers receiving their final wheat payments for the 1974-75 crop year have found there was a deduction of ten-cents per bushel for tough grain when in other years this deduction was only two-cents per bushel? I ask this because farmers have already had eight-cents per bushel deducted when they delivered this tough grain to the elevators?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to obtain a more detailed explanation from the Canadian Wheat Board, but I have no doubt that their explanation will be that the actual cost of bringing the grain with moisture to an adequate dry state is reflected in these figures. I will confirm that and report back to the hon. member.

AGRICULTURE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT INCREASE IN PRICE DIFFERENTIAL BETWEEN BUTTER AND MARGARINE

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture if I can have his attention for a moment. In view of the very significant differential between the retail sale price of butter and the retail sale price of margarine, and the very real possibility of that price differential increasing, will the Minister of Agriculture take action to revise the support price of butter to assist in preventing further declines in butter sales and the buildup of an unnecessary surplus of that dairy product?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is not something new. The prices of margarine and other spreads are closer to the price of butter than they have ever been, and there used to be a great discrepancy the other way. The Dairy Commission and the dairy industry are looking at all aspects of the industry to make sure their products sell well.

TRADE

IMPORT QUOTAS ON CHEESE—DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF ACTION ON REQUEST FOR DECREASE

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question on a similar subject matter for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In answer to a previous question regarding import quotas on cheese the minister indicated to me on December 17, as recorded at page 10096 of Hansard, "an announcement will be made as quickly as possible with regard to the quota for 1976". May I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, if he has reached a decision on this matter and when we might expect an announcement to decrease these quotas from their present high level of some 50 million pounds?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the phrasing of the question as to whether there will be an announcement of an increase is something on which I am not prepared to speculate. I might point out that one of his colleagues asked the other day for ironclad assurances that there would not be increased quotas, so even on the other side we have differences of opinion. In any event, substantial progress has been made. As the hon. member knows, there have been a lot of representations made as recently as today and my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and I hope to resolve this within a matter of a week or so.

NORTHERN CANADA POWER CORPORATION

REQUEST THAT RATES CHARGED FOR TWO PROJECTS BE LESS THAN NECESSARY TO MAKE PROJECTS SELF-SUSTAINING

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development I will direct my question to the parliamentary secretary. In view of the fact that the act which sets up the Northern Canada Power Corporation requires that projects undertaken by the commission be self-sustaining, and the rates which are set be sufficient to cover the interest and repayment of principal, and in view of the escalating costs of the two projects at Aishihik and Strutt Lake, which are being carried out by the NCPC, will the parliamentary assistant advise whether the minister intends bringing in regulations or changes to the act which will allow the setting of rates at less than necessary to make these projects self-sustaining?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the minister has requested a report from Commissioner Smith on the reasons for the cost over-runs at Aishihik in the Yukon and Strutt Lake in the Northwest Territories. This report will be made public, after which the minister will determine whether there will be a public inquiry in response to that. Naturally, these over-runs have a complete bearing on the amounts of the rates that will be charged by the Northern Canada Power Commission. Further, the minister has requested that the Northern Canada Power Commission submit their proposed rate increases to both the territorial public utility board of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon to the Anti-Inflation Board.

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE OF ANNUAL REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the parliamentary secretary would ask the minister whether he would be prepared to refer the annual report of the NCPC to the standing committee of the House so witnesses can be heard and action taken?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I will convey the message, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Jacques Olivier (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Can he tell us whether he supports the position of the members of the Montreal Canadiens hockey club who systematically refuse to play in a team which would represent only the province of Quebec in an international tournament? Can the Minister tell us whether he supports those players?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, an international hockey tournament has been organized between six countries, to be held next September. Among these six countries are the USSR, Finland, Czechoslovakia, Sweden and Canada. I do not intend to take part in any dealing whatsoever which would imply that some provinces could participate in one way or another.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY THAT INSURANCE CORPORATION WILL BE ADDENDUM TO AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and concerns the most recent meetings of ministers in terms of provinces coming into the anti-inflation program. The minister announced there were two provinces that had now agreed and five that had not, and indicated there were special problems of a minor nature to be worked out. This gives some hope to British Columbians that there may be something done about ICBC rates. Will the minister advise whether it was the federal government's position at that conference, and, more importantly, is it the federal government's position now, that the Crown corporation ICBC be an addendum to the agreement as Ontario Hydro is here in Ontario?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question was not specifically discussed, but we have made it clear to the province of British Columbia, as we have to other provinces, that we would, of course, be quite prepared to discuss the inclusion of provincial agencies. For many months there have been positions taken by provincial governments, and by both the previous provincial government of British Columbia and the present one, insisting that a fairly large range of provincial agencies be excluded from direct control in so far as price charging was concerned because of their intimate connection with the fiscal policy of the province.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF EXPORT TAX—EFFECT ON WORKERS IN EXPORT INDUSTRIES

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, at the same meeting the minister indicated that there would be a review of export tax by Ottawa at the request of about five provinces, particularly British Columbia and Alberta. In the course of that review will the minister advise us if he is reviewing the wage control program with regard to those workers who are working in the export industry? In the event that you lift the export tax will it be the policy of the government also to lift the wage control program over those workers who are controlled, because at the other end the prices will be completely uncontrolled?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, at the meeting I made the basic point to the provincial ministers of the inequity which led us to propose the export levy in the first place. It seems to me that the proposal of the hon. gentleman would only compound the inequity as between different groups of workers in particular provinces.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF LANGUAGE SCHOOL AT ST. JEAN, QUEBEC

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and I preface it by saying that I think members in all parts of the House are most anxious to co-operate in the restraint program and will do everything they can to make it a success. Having regard to the difficulty of having finances for tanks and other military requirements, and the reduction in hospital beds across this country in order to keep down expenditures, does the minister not feel it would be in the interest of the country as a whole that he show restraint and put an end now to that $88 million language school in St. Jean, Quebec?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe the right hon. gentleman may not have been in the House yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was in the House and I listened to that fatuous explanation.

Mr. Richardson: He might not have heard the answer that was given by me and also by the President of the Treasury Board. The facility at St. Jean, Quebec, is to be used for recruit training as well as for language training. It has been planned now for several years and it will take at least four or five years to complete. The expenditure this year and next year is relatively small.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If it is not necessary and it will take four or five years before it can be opened, why not end it now and give an example to the Canadian people that the government follows its policy of restraint which it is asking others to carry out?

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since International Olympic Committee President Lord Killanin clearly indicated that his committee has nothing to do with the invitation sent to the Queen to inaugurate the Olympic Games in Montreal next July, and since Lord Killanin added he would have preferred that the inauguration be presided over by His Excellency Mr. Jules Léger, would the Prime Minister say why and how his government decided to invite Her Majesty the Queen instead of His Excellency Mr. Jules Léger?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the decision was made in consultation with the Quebec premier after he had talked it over with the Mayor of Montreal.

COMBINES

DATE OF REPORT OF BRYCE COMMISSION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the House whether there is any target date for the report of the so called Bryce commission on corporate concentration, and when does he anticipate that the House might get that report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to inquire. When I set up the commission I indicated my hope that within a year it could prepare its report, but there was no exact deadline. I will inquire as to when the commission thinks its report will be ready.

FINANCE

POSSIBILITY OF DELAY IN AMENDMENT OF BANK ACT AWAITING REPORT OF BRYCE COMMISSION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): In light of the Prime Minister's report I should like to put a question to the Minister of Finance. His predecessor had indicated that the government was choosing the draft bill route for the modification of the Bank Act. A new bank act should be in position for January 1, 1977. Can the minister say now whether it is the intention to await the report of the Bryce commission on the concentration of power, which is looking into the banks and the organization of financial institutions in Canada, before it presents its draft bill?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker. We had concluded that there being issues to be dealt with by the revision of the Bank Act other than the subjects being discussed by the Bryce commission report it would be desirable, either by way of a white paper to be tabled or by first reading of the bill, which would not then be immediately proceeded with, to put on the public record the proposed changes to the law. Very obviously, by the time the Bryce commission report is received there would be an opportunity to incorporate such of his recommendations as might be accepted by the government in any bill which was put forward for definitive enactment before the termination date.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NOVA SCOTIA—DATE WHEN METROPOLITAN AREA GROWTH INVESTMENTS LIMITED WILL BECOME OPERATIONAL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. As the September 22, 1972 press release by the federal minister of DREE of the day and the premier of Nova Scotia states:

> The ministers estimated that it would take a few months before organizational work would be completed and a board of directors appointed.

to Metropolitan Area Growth Investments Ltd., may I ask the minister: When did the corporation become fully organized and operational, and has it as yet taken any concrete action on behalf of the citizens in the Halifax-Dartmouth area, which would indirectly benefit many of the citizens of Nova Scotia?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, this corporation was organized a few months ago. Indeed only recently was it able to complete its executive staff and have its permanent director. It began operating in the last few weeks and filed its first report with my department. I have started going through it. I cannot tell at this time what its concrete operations have been, but I think that some difficulties have been solved. Thus we can hope that in the year that begins this corporation will be able to contribute very positively to the development of this area of the capital of Nova Scotia, Halifax.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID TO REPAIR STORM DAMAGE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the massive damage which has been done by recent storms along the south coast of New Brunswick and in other coastal areas of Canada, would he consider the assessment of this damage and a recommendation to the government that this area be declared a disaster area and receive adequate funds from the government for its re-establishment in business?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is familiar with the natural disaster formula whereby the province triggers a joint federal-provincial program for this type of disaster. I have asked the officials of the department to co-operate and to help the province of New Brunswick assess the damage so far as fisheries are concerned.

DECISION OF NOVA SCOTIA COURT ON CENSORING MOTION PICTURES—POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL INTERVENTION IN APPEAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the decision of the Nova Scotia supreme court that the Nova Scotia government does not have the right to censor motion pictures, thus putting into question the constitutionality of all provincial censor boards, and that that responsibility only rests with the parliament of Canada, has the minister had discussions on this matter with the attorneys general and is he planning to intervene in any further appeals to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, since the decision I have not had any discussions with the provincial attorneys general. The Attorney General of Nova Scotia, as is indicated by the press, is considering whether to appeal the decision of the appeal division of the supreme court of Nova Scotia to the Supreme Court of Canada. I and my officials are studying the decision, but obviously we have no right to intervene until the matter is appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada at which time, of course, we would have to consider the judgment to see whether the Attorney General of Canada should or should not intervene.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government House leader about the business for the rest of this week, next week and as far ahead as he can see in this session, which looks as though it will go on for all eternity.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I hope the final comment of the hon. gentleman is not borne out by events. We are very anxious to get ahead and to complete the business which is on the order paper. As I indicated at an earlier time, if we could deal with this business with reasonable dispatch, we would be in a position to give a clearer indication as to whether we intended to have a new session of parliament before June. However, I shall first deal with the business.

The government attaches first priority to the completion of consideration of Bill C-58, and that bill will certainly remain on the order paper as the order of business for each day at report stage, and when that is completed I hope we will move almost immediately to third reading. I should also like, however, to try to fit in one minor bill on the Thousand Islands bridge and also to complete consideration of the amendments to Bill S-10 from the Senate. I wish to follow that with completion of second reading of Bill C-68, and if we make progress, we would then call Bill C-72.

I have had some discussions with the leaders of the other parties, and it is agreed that Thursday should be an opposition day, one of the allotted days. It has been suggested, and we have accepted the suggestion, that the subject should be the seventh report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments which was presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1975, and the terms of reference which would follow therefrom, to implement the report of the committee. That would be considered as one of the allotted days. The vote, however, would be on the report and on the terms of reference.

Mr. Baldwin: If such a vote is not to be a vote of non-confidence, it would leave hon. members opposite free to vote, for once, as their conscience dictates. I should also like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice, a question which he asked me to ask. As counsel of some experience, I am usually reluctant to ask questions which witnesses want me to ask them. However, the question I should like to ask is, can the minister advise the House whether he will be introducing the amendment to the Criminal Code dealing with capital punishment, so that the House will know the official details?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General indicated in the House the other day that two bills would be introduced very shortly, one in his name dealing with the issue of capital punishment, and one in my name containing amendments to the Criminal Code and other statutes relating to crime prevention and detection. There is still some work to be done on those bills and some administrative measures to be taken, but unless we get hung-up—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Basford: —it is the intention of the Solicitor General and myself to introduce those two bills and to announce the administrative measures on February 24.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like briefly to repeat my Thursday question. Due to the fact that it has now been eight days since the Minister of Veterans Affairs said he would make a statement within two weeks, regarding prisoners of war legislation, may we anticipate that that commitment will be kept before next Thursday?

My other question relates to the comment just made by the President of the Privy Council to the effect that the question of when a new session is to start is still being considered. Due to the fact that sessions of parliament are, surely, the concern of parliament as well as of the government, should there not be consultations with representatives of all parties in parliament before the government decides to continue a session indefinitely?

Mr. Sharp: With regard to the first question, I think I can speak for my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs when I say that it is his hope to make a statement next Thursday on the subject of the report and the legislation.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, a statement!

Mr. Sharp: On the question of a new session, I think it is the decision of the government when to open a new session. I have had the opportunity of talking occasionally to my colleagues, the House leaders of the other parties, on the general question. I only wish I were in a position to be a little clearer, but we are not really proceeding as expeditiously as I think we all would with the remaining items on the order paper. If we were doing that, I would be very happy to discuss with my colleagues whether, and when, we should have a new session of parliament.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to give notice of a point of order. If the government persists in its plan to continue this session indefinitely, I will have a point of order or a question of privilege to raise about it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of the government with regard to whether there shall be a new session or this one shall continue, I trust that it will not abuse the privileges of members of this House in that the Senate and House of Commons Act provides for only a limited number of unexcused absences with heavy penalties. If hon. members are not completely, shall we say, to subvert the affidavits which they make every month, there has to be some reason. No session was deemed to last two years; therefore, the period of absence for most hon. members, including hon. members on the government side, has long expired since October, 1974, and it is a matter of statutory amendment.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, earlier in the question period I attempted to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue and I was ruled out or order based on the argument that the matter would be before the House later this afternoon. My point of order is that my question was outside the parameters of the report stage amendments which we will be debating this afternoon. The minister made an intervention in the debate the other day outlining changes in content regulations. My question had to do with a licensing arrangements, which is entirely separate from that matter and has great bearing, because the licensing agreement argues that Reader's Digest, United States, must approve all material published in Canada. My question, therefore, has significant bearing on the definition of a Canadian magazine.

With respect, since these matters are not included in the report stage amendments before the House this afternoon, my question on a licensing arrangement is entirely separate from those amendments. Therefore I respectfully submit that I should be able to put the question at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member raises, by way of a point of order, a disagreement with the decision made by the Chair in the question period, I might say that I further disagree with him because his question would be irrelevant with respect to the amendments I have seen on the order paper which remain undiscussed at this stage.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated yesterday that I would invite the hon. member for Central Nova, and other hon. members who are interested, to participate in a discussion about the rather complex question of sub judice and those restrictions which might be placed upon hon. members in asking questions and ministers in answering questions. In light of the fact that there is now an amendment moved by the hon. member for Red Deer to motion No. 3, we will likely endeavour this afternoon to call a vote on that amendment in order to proceed in an orderly way with the discussion of other clauses. In addition, there is an indication that the Secretary of State for External Affairs will make a statement on motions.

I have already, in a preliminary way at least, considered the rather difficult question which has been raised. I wonder if I might invite the indulgence of the hon. member for Central Nova, and others interested in that particular subject, to defer this discussion until perhaps Monday or Tuesday of next week. Might that be agreed?

● (1510)

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In light of the practice which the House has adopted in recent days, I wonder if I might ask that the tabling of documents and the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs be postponed until we have completed the remainder of routine proceedings?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS PERSONNEL

Question No. 3,767—Mr. Allard:

By year, from 1972 to date, how many (a) English speaking (b) French speaking employees have been working for the Department of Public Works?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): 1972: English, 5,610; French, 1,726. 1975: English, 5,181; French, 2,011. We do not have the information available for 1973 and 1974.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION 3414 (XXX) OF DECEMBER 5, 1975 CONCERNING TERRITORIES OCCUPIED BY ISRAEL

Question No. 3,872—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Does Canada's negative vote on the United Nations General Assembly resolution December 5, 1975 condemning Israel's continuous occupation of Arab territories imply that Canada recognizes Israeli sovereignty over the territories?

2. For what reason did the Canadian delegation vote against this resolution?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The intent of U.N. General Assembly Resolution 3414 (XXX) of December 5, 1975, as expressed by the cosponsors was to seek a just and lasting peace in the Middle East. Canada voted against the resolution, without a formal explanation of vote, because we did not think it would in fact make a positive contribution to the achievement of peace in the area. Our principal objection to the resolution was that it presented an essentially unbalanced statement of the situation. It made no specific reference to Security Council resolutions 242 and 338, which remain basic to the establishment of a durable peace and which contain the essential elements necessary for the achievement of this objective. Furthermore, the resolution appealed to all states "to desist from supplying Israel with any military or economic aid" but ignored the military support provided to other states in the area. The resolution also hinted that sanctions should be imposed against Israel, a measure which Canada considers to be totally unwarranted. Even if this were warranted, it would be an infringement on the prerogatives of the Security Council. Canada did not think that the UNGA would serve the aim of achieving a lasting peace in the Middle East by condemning Israel's continued occupation of the territories while remaining silent on other elements in Resolution 242 such as the right of all states in the area to live in peace and security. Our negative vote can in no way be construed as recognition by Canada of any kind of Israeli sovereignty over occupied Arab territories. Indeed, there could not be any such recognition.

INCOME TAX ARREARS OF NATIONAL AND MULTINATIONAL CORPORATIONS

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): 1. As of March 31, 1975 there were 25,620 corporation accounts outstanding for a total of $223,042,948. Information is not available to categorize these accounts by national or multinational.

2. Arrears bear interest at the rate of 6% per annum.

3. Number of accounts	Calendar year in which assessed	Amount outstanding

*LAW REFORM COMMISSION REPORTS

Question No. 3,821—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Has the Law Reform Commission made 14 reports since its inception and, if so, do they include a variety of topics including restitution, family law, mental patients, divorce, imprisonment and release, expropriation, and family property?

2. How many of such reports have become the subject-matter of legislation now before Parliament?

Order Paper Questions

[English]

Mr. Francis Fox (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, The Law Reform Commission has made one report since its inception, that is, the Report on Evidence which was received by the Minister of Justice on December 18, 1975 and tabled on December 19, 1975. The Commission has also issued fourteen working papers on a variety of subjects for the purpose of obtaining public reaction. Reports containing actual recommendations in a number of these areas are expected in 1976. Since detailed discussion and consultation with Crown attorneys, police, judges, and members of the legal profession will be necessary in relation to the Evidence Report, legislation in this area will not be able to proceed immediately.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief point of order about questions on the order paper and the particular method of answering them which the government seems to have adopted. I consider it to be totally unworkable and quite unsatisfactory for ordinary members of parliament. In July 18 I put question No. 2,985 on the order paper. It deals with the subject of growth in expenditures for public relations and advertisements in the civil service since the Prime Minister came to power in 1968. Some months later a partial answer was given to me from a number of departments which listed the information for their departments. The answer included a note at the bottom to the effect that a number of other departments would subsequently be providing this information. I have raised this matter before, both privately with the parliamentary secretary and in the House.

On December 1 the parliamentary secretary had a note prepared which indicated answers that were still forthcoming, including those from the National Capital Commission and Industry, Trade and Commerce, which should have been ready two weeks afterwards according to the note. The answer from the Department of External Affairs was supposed to be ready at the end of that week, the first week in December. As yet, there has been no answer from any of these departments or agencies. The Department of Urban Affairs, the Department of the Environment, National Health and Welfare, the Prime Minister's office, the National Capital Commission, Industry, Trade and Commerce, Secretary of State, Post Office, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, External Affairs, and Energy, Mines and Resources have yet to provide answers.

If the practice of placing questions on the order paper is to be at all meaningful, it is incumbent upon the government to try to give speedy and complete responses. I think the practice of giving partial answers, saying the rest will follow and then neglecting to submit the answers, is totally inadequate. I think this matter should be brought to Your Honour's attention and to the attention of the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Blais: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is true that I have had discussions with the hon. member relating to certain partial replies that were made. This practice has been followed and in some instances the follow-ups, in the regular course, come within two weeks. In other instances there have been some delays, and there have been a number of instances when pressure has been applied to the departments to obtain the answers. As a matter of fact, directions have been given to all departments that we hope will facilitate obtaining the answers.

I offer this explanation to the hon. member hoping it will be helpful to him. I recognize that the questions asked by the hon. member are usually orderly and seeking to obtain information, which is not the case with all questions asked.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

OLYMPIC GAMES

PROPOSED DEBATE ON OLYMPIC GAMES PROBLEMS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 26, I should like to move a motion to allow the discussion of a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the problem with regard to the Olympic Games expected to take place in Montreal this coming summer. The urgency of the debate lies in the fact that the reputation of the country is at stake, that fundamental differences between the Quebec government and the federal government threaten the unity of the country, and that it is important for the opinion of the representatives of the people in this House to be made known on that extremely important question. I therefore move:

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order. the hon. member for Champlain gave notice of his motion under Standing Order 26, but I am sorry I have to point out that those continuous problems, which started as far back as at least three years ago, which have not ceased to attract the attention of the House, do not quite respect the stipulations of Standing Order 26. The matter is very important, and may also be quite urgent because of the continuing importance of the matter; but because of the opportunities the House has had in the past and may have in the future, from now till next summer, of discussing it under other Standing Orders, and the other opportunities it may have of doing so, I cannot accept the motion under Standing Order 26.

In accordance with the agreement made earlier this day, the House will revert to tabling of documents and statements by ministers in order to receive a statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORT ON CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wish to report, as requested by at least one hon. member, and probably others, on the progress which has been made in initiating a dialogue among industrialized countries on the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. I have attended two meetings in Paris as co-chairman of the conference, a function which I share with the Venezuelan minister of state for international economic affairs, Dr. Manuel Perez Guerrero. We have worked together very closely from the start and I want to pay tribute to his wisdom, knowledge and good judgment.

The Conference on International Economic Co-operation is a new venture in international diplomacy bringing together 27 participants—19 developing countries and 8 developed members including the European Community. Seven of the developing countries are members of OPEC, whereas 12 are oil importing countries. The membership of the conference has been selected to be broadly representative of the interests of the world community as a whole with the exception of eastern Europe and China which are not participating.

The use of co-chairmen from the two groups to head the conference and the commissions is a new technique in conferences of this kind. Limited, but representative, membership may ensure that any consensus reached at the conference is broadly acceptable to the international community. It may also make it possible to replace the highly politicized and often sterile debate on international economic problems by a pragmatic and systematic approach to complex questions which cannot be resolved by rhetoric. Limited membership may also be conducive to better understanding, and hence to a more earnest and direct attack on specific issues.

The origins of this conference are diverse and are reflected in its character. What began as a reaction to the quadrupling of petroleum prices in late 1973 has evolved over the past two years into a conference designed to examine many of the world's major economic problems in addition to those associated with energy. The conference will undoubtedly address the various demands for changes in the world's economic system which have been put forward by developing countries in the United Nations. Since the first impact of the oil price rise, Canada has been a consistent advocate of such a consumer-producer dialogue and has in particular advocated including the "innocent victims"—the most seriously affected developing countries—in the dialogue. I am, therefore, particularly gratified that the conference can truthfully be described as a dialogue between developed and developing countries, between producers and consumers of petroleum, and between producers and consumers of other raw materials.

During the coming year the conference will attempt to reach agreement by consensus on a variety of important issues in the fields of energy, raw materials, development and finance. It is my hope that in the process it will make a positive contribution to a new era of international economic co-operation by fostering better understanding and by stimulating ongoing work in other bodies such as UNCTAD, UNIDO, the GATT, the FAO, the International Monetary Fund, and the World Bank.

The ministerial meeting in December which President Giscard d'Estaing opened and which Dr. Perez Guerrero and I chaired brought together ministers from the 27 members of the conference. We agreed on the creation of four commissions: for energy, raw materials, development, and financial affairs. Each consists of 15 members, five representing developed, and ten representing developing members. We agreed on the co-chairmen for each of the four commissions and approved general guidelines regarding the work of the conference.

At a follow-up meeting last week, Dr. Perez Guerrero and I, as conference co-chairmen, together with the eight co-chairmen of the four commissions, reviewed preparations for the work of the commissions. We agreed that each of the commissions should meet five times between now and July, and we made a number of recommendations with respect to the duration of meetings, participation by observers and other procedures. While the initial meetings of the commission will probably deal with organizational and procedural matters, I believe they will quickly move on to substantive questions. A meeting of senior officials from the 27 members may review the progress of the commissions in about five months' time, probably in June. I should qualify that statement by saying that the recommendation has been made by the conference co-chairmen but has not yet been acted upon or agreed to by the participating governments. Of course, it is expected that a ministerial meeting will be held next December to conclude the work of the commissions.

The two co-chairmen of the conference have a particularly sensitive role to play. Although all participants in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation are prepared to approach issues in a positive and co-operative manner, there is a broad range of differing national interests and philosophies among the developed, developing, and OPEC members of the conference. To a degree, it was this very diversity of interests and the consequent difficulty of providing leadership equally responsive to both the group of 8, the developed members, and the group of 19, the developing members, which led to the choice of the two co-chairmen as a technique for organizing the conference. This co-direction of the conference is symbolic of the determination of the member countries to work together and to accept shared responsibility for the results.

Just as Dr. Perez Guerrero and I have a certain responsibility for ensuring that the work of the conference proceeds in an orderly and constructive manner, so the co-chairmen of the commissions have a responsibility for guiding the work of their commissions so that they achieve results which are broadly acceptable to the international community, including those countries which are not members of the conference. As I said, I have been working closely with my co-chairman and I am sure that the co-chairmen of the commissions will also work together constructively.

Canada is a member of two of the four commissions: energy and development. The dialogue in the energy commission may eventually encompass such sensitive issues as oil prices, indexation, and security of supply. We hope that it will lead to increased stability in the international oil market which would facilitate the orderly planning and development of Canada's own energy needs. I also trust the dialogue will make a real contribution to solving the problems of the developing countries most seriously affected by the rise in oil and other prices.

I am particularly pleased that Canada will participate in the work of the development commission. As you know, Canada has won considerable respect in the third world for its stand on development questions. I can assure the House that Canada will continue this positive approach in the development commission which will probably consider a broad range of issues in such key areas as food and agricultural development, industrial and technological co-operation, trade liberalization, and official development assistance.

Canada is not a member of the raw materials and finance commissions. As they may deal with a number of vital issues such as the stabilization of commodity prices, the stabilization of earnings derived from commodity exports, and international financial questions, we do have a substantial interest in their proceedings. We shall, therefore, be following the work of these commissions closely through our observers in them. We expect to consult frequently and closely with our colleagues in the conference who are participating in these commissions.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we have got off to a good start. Canada has been given an important part in shaping this new instrument of international co-operation. That may be a matter of satisfaction, but it is also a challenge which we shall faithfully seek to meet.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I begin by acknowledging the role the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) played in the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. I congratulate him on his role as co-chairman, tell him we support him in his efforts to bring developed and developing nations together, and suggest that his role is constructive. If I am critical about some of his comments, let me add that I am critical in the context of supporting his intention as revealed once again in his speech. His speech was of the same tenor as the one he made to the United Nations on September 3, 1975, when he unveiled Canada's new five-year strategy. There is a difference between presiding and participating. The minister has been pretty good at presiding. That is a role which you, Mr. Speaker, can well appreciate. My party wants to know more about the specifics of Canada's participation in the north-south conference. What are the specifics of our participation?

The origins of the conference began with the quintupling of oil prices charged by OPEC nations. That price rise was a factor in creating worldwide economic disarray and produced a spirit of confrontation at the sixth special session of the United Nations General Assembly. That session gave birth, so to speak, in May, 1974, to a document known as the "New International Economic Order." A process of severe confrontation, about which developed nations entered several reservations, led to the creation of that document. The sixth session was followed by the seventh session in September, 1975, and the spirit of confrontation gave way to a new spirit of consensus.

Canadian participation in the seventh special session was a marked improvement over the sixth session even though we still had some reservations about the specifics called for by the developing nations with reference to the new economic border. The five-year strategy plugged into the new economic order that was reaffirmed at the seventh special session. However, it has been criticized, and I think fairly, as still being too rhetorical, the position on the part of Canada, when in fact the multidimensional approach—which is the code word for describing Canada's new role in international development—is a shift from reliance on aid as an expression of our humanitarian concern, over to the structural changes of trade and monetary reform, the two together, aid and trade, making a multidimensional policy which is at the heart of the five-year strategy of the Canadian government.

This was touched on by the minister in his speech in New York where he said that Canada was prepared to move ahead in commodities, trade liberalization and industrial co-operation. The minister opened up those areas. They are the very areas that the north-south conference has been called to deal with. We are past the stage of rhetoric, past the stage of expressing good intentions.

I reply to the minister today by emphasizing that we are waiting—I would like to say patiently, but I have to say impatiently—for more detail on how Canada is going to participate. There is the interdepartmental committee of officials of various departments of the Canadian government: we know that. There are the subcommittee on international development and the external affairs committee studying this issue at great length. Speaking as a member of that subcommittee, we cannot move too far into the field until we know where Canada will open up the areas of trade liberalization, commodities and industrial co-operation. There are some very hard questions that Canada has to face with respect to meaningful participation as distinct from presiding over a north-south conference.

Many of the nations which form the industrialized and developing group within the North-South Conference are fully cognizant of the urgency of this question. That urgency has been reflected in Canada's own five-year strategy in which we make reference to the fact that 800 million people around the world can expect almost no improvement in their conditions of life for the rest of the decade because of the cyclical poverty which is brought about by economic control systems in trade and commerce which severely disadvantage the developing nations. Therefore, we are pleased that Canada is beginning to move ahead.

I say, parenthetically, that it will be difficult for us to make real progress on the international scene—and I make the plea to the minister with some feeling on the part of Canadians—until we are solidly plugged into this international system for change, the North-South Conference. Canadians must first of all be aware that there is a new, five-year strategy. I can assure the minister that generally speaking Canadians do not even know this strategy exists. It can be criticized. However, Canadians must first recognize that we are now in the process of moving away from just aid to the multidimensional, the structural changes. I think the five-year strategy needs not only implementation but constructive criticism that will help us to participate more meaningfully in the North-South Conference.

A leading Canadian expert on development, Professor Gerald Helleiner, warns that the "rhetoric on co-operation" glosses over serious inadequacies. Canada is actually dragging its feet on such subjects as the SDR-aid link, reducing tariffs and fair sugar prices, and Canadian representation at international conferences has played too much of a protective role for Canada.

Therefore, I ask the minister how we are going to examine positively the idea of negotiating arrangements for a wide range of products under the commodities section of his speech in New York. How are we going to consider deeper tariff cuts and advance implementation on an m.f.n. basis, or other tariff cuts of interest to developing countries unless we move away from rhetoric and begin to bring into parliament and the subcommittee some of the detail of the thinking going on in the interdepartmental committee that is in the normal process of feeding material for the cabinet to consider?

The Canadian government, and the minister in particular, need the continued support they now have. This can only be retained by having us participate in the ongoing development of our own knowledge of the technical complexities of the structural changes in the multinational policy so that we, as members of parliament, can both understand and contribute to it. It will be a great mistake to go on in the way we have been doing, that is to say, to dump onto the scene a policy that came out of—where? Members of parliament did not participate in the creation of this policy. There are many members, particularly in the subcommittee, who want to have this ongoing role of participation.

The minister talked today about the positive approach he wants to bring into the development commission. A positive approach for what, and for whom? Is it for us, for the continuation of our own benefit with the systems of international commerce benefitting the developed nations, which is at the heart of the problem, or a positive approach to changing those systems? If we are going to demand stable oil prices, what will we offer the group of 77 in return? The minister's statement today was, unfortunately, very vague on what he is going to do.

The mood of co-operation that the minister exemplified in his statement and conduct—and for that I again congratulate him—must dominate new international relationships if there is to be any hope of achieving the new order. The five-year strategy warns that "a hostile reaction by the rich will only intensify the mood of the frustration of the majority of the world's population and foster an atmosphere of confrontation of international affairs."

We are in a dilemma. The massive changes of the new economic order cannot be implemented overnight. The developing world cannot, and will not, wait for our beneficence to catch up with reality. There is a note of urgency that must be maintained in the minister's conduct and in his participation, as well as presiding. I will back him on that urgency, provided he continues to make statements that enlarge the Canadian position in a participatory way as to how we can help the developing nations by better commodity pricing and trade liberalization with meaningful industrial co-operation.

International Economic Co-operation

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) has been appointed co-chairman of the Conference on International Economic Co-operation. As the minister said, this conference is an initiation of a dialogue among industrial and developing countries. The conference, as the minister also mentioned, arose out of OPEC and its quadrupling of petroleum prices. However, it has now gone far beyond a cartel of producer countries: the emphasis has shifted to a consumer-producer dialogue. In the opinion of the government, and I share this opinion, that is a far better approach than existed before. We have already had our attention called by the right hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) to the seventh—

An hon. Member: "Right honourable"?

Mr. Roche: I am not running for the leadership.

Mr. Brewin: I thought I might in that way give you a boost. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has referred to the seventh special session of the United Nations, held in September of last year. That session announced a new era of worldwide co-operation under the title of the New International Economic Order. This set up a framework, but it will be a long and arduous task to fit in the details and make the aspirations turn into fact. It is essential for the so-called developed, underdeveloped and developing countries to work together to remove what was described at the special session by the minister himself as gross disparities between conditions in the rich and in the poor nations.

● (1540)

I am pleased that Canada has taken its place on the commission on energy and the commission on development. Obviously, Canada is greatly concerned with the question of energy. We are a major supplier of energy as well as a major consumer of energy; we are deeply concerned about this matter and it is one which should be discussed and dealt with on an international basis. I am particularly pleased that we should be a member of the commission on development, for in my mind development has become the key word, item number one among the international issues affecting Canada and, indeed, the world. I hope, as has already been said, that the subcommittee of the external affairs committee of this House will be used to the full by the minister as a forum of discussion by what is really, now, a non-partisan group in connection with developments arising from the work and the discussions of this commission.

The conference to which I have referred is, of course, only one among many; it is only one instrument of international co-operation. Other steps are needed if the basic requirements of humanity are to be met and a stable world developed. Nevertheless, the conference is an event which is potentially important, and we are glad to promise to the minister our support to help him meet the challenge which is before him as chairman of this commission.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) referred to the needs of third world countries and to stabilization agreements related to commodity prices. Could he indicate succinctly—I know he is able to do so—Canada's position with regard to stabilization agreements? Is Canada prepared to put forward a precise position with regard to such agreements and, if so, what is that position? Has Canada already done so?

Mr. MacEachen: I will reply in general terms, Mr. Speaker. Canada did state at the seventh session of the United Nations that we were in support, or could certainly support, certain elements in the integrated commodity approach and that we were ready, also, in certain circumstances to consider the question of buffer stocks, which is also part of the integrated approach which has been put forward. Beyond this generally positive statement we have not developed a position in detail with regard to commodity agreements, because I believe this would require, particularly within the commission, a good deal of negotiation and discussion.

It is my view that in the course of the dialogue itself a response will be required not only from Canada but from the seven other industrialized countries which are operating as a representative group on behalf of the industrialized world, so to speak. While I am sure each country on the commission must take into account its own national interest, it will be necessary to work out with the other countries in the group, where possible, a common approach. That is how the dialogue has been developing so far.

I would think the area of commodity agreements is one in which the group of eight industrialized countries would be working out a detailed position. However, in general Canada has taken what I consider to be a positive approach toward the question of commodity stabilization. We have not endorsed without question—or, indeed, at all—the concept of indexation, although we do support the general objective of the developing countries, which is to protect their major export earnings, upon which they are so dependent, from the effects of price fluctuations. As a general principle, we would certainly work to bring that about. The precise application of indexation as put forward is extremely difficult, however, and might in some cases even work against the interests of the developing countries.

I believe the value of the dialogue which will take place in these commissions is likely to be the opportunity it provides for countries to discuss questions such as indexation in a practical context apart from the rhetoric which could be associated with them in a more political forum.

Mr. Stanfield: Since the purpose of the conference is to reduce the great disparity between the so-called northern developed countries on one hand, and the so-called southern underdeveloped countries on the other, and reduce or eliminate the sense of injustice felt in the underdeveloped countries, thereby, presumably, reducing the threat to peace, and bearing in mind the feeling of the underdeveloped countries that we have all been fooling around with this question—perhaps sincerely, but without much effect, for a number of years—and the feeling of dissatisfaction and expectation which exists, I am disappointed that the hon. gentleman did not tell us whether or not Canada would be taking any initiatives by way of proposals, and what those proposals would be.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Is it the intention of Canada to take some initiatives and to make some proposals, or is it simply to react to what is put forward by other nations on these various commissions? If Canada is taking certain initiatives and will be putting forward certain tangible, if not concrete, proposals in this connection, in what area will they be?

● (1550)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I begin by expressing agreement with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that it would be unfortunate if the conclusion of the conference were to be a feeling of frustration on the part, not only of the developing countries but frustration, I think, would be generally felt if the north-south dialogue produced very little in the way of concrete solutions.

One of my objectives will be to attempt to facilitate the reaching of, if not glamorous or spectacular results, at least limited or visible results which will have justified the dialogue. In saying that, I would mention to the Leader of the Opposition that in the two meetings that have already been held very formidable difficulties have been cleared away, obstacles that up to now have prevented the dialogue from beginning. So the dialogue is now to begin, the framework has been laid out, the work program has been laid out, key players have been identified, agendas or suggested lists of subjects have been proposed, particularly by the group of 19, by the United States, and the commissions will develop their own work program and, presumably, the listing of the subjects.

It is my expectation that Canada will be participating in the dialogue. It will also be making proposals or taking initiatives. I hope Canada will not be a passive participant or partner, but in certain commissions will make proposals that will not only protect our own national interests which are involved in a number of these commissions but which also will help bridge the gap.

I have made it clear that I was not able today to indicate the substance of our proposals; these are under development. Instructions for the opening commissions are now under preparation, but I do not for a moment underestimate the difficulties that a country like Canada will face in taking forthcoming positions on many of these questions. I believe we will face real difficulties. When hon. members rightly underline the necessity for making concessions in the trade field, it must borne in mind that there is no substantial concession that can be made for access to our markets which will not have an appropriate effect on unemployment or production in Canada.

Mr. Stanfield: Or an inappropriate effect.

Mr. MacEachen: "Inappropriate" would generally be the word used. It would have an effect on our employment and production. If meaningful adjustments are to take place that will bring benefits to the developing world, they will, in my view, require sacrifices in the developed countries. I do not think we are kidding ourselves or that we should kid ourselves that this exercise can succeed unless the industrialized countries are prepared to give something to the developing countries.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This subject has been rather lengthily discussed. I wonder whether all hon. members would agree that the interests of all parties in the House would be served if I concluded the questioning by recognizing the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) and the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a brief question, if I may.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I share the minister's desire to move on from rhetoric to action and from generalities to details. I understand why at this stage it is not possible to give the details, and indeed there are reservations perhaps at any stage about giving the full details of the Canadian proposals. Nevertheless, I ask the minister to undertake to give the House, or a committee of the House, before these conferences meet, as they will meet from time to time, at least an outline of the policies that Canada will positively propound and, when the conferences are over, to report to the House on the result.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will undertake to report either to a committee or to the House when I believe I have something that will be of interest to the House, something of substance by way of proposals under discussion at the commissions. Certainly, as the dialogue develops I would want to report to the House or to a committee on the progress that has been made. In June we will have a meeting at the conference level. We will have to have a midterm assessment. I would want, within that period—probably in connection with the mid-term conference—to give some indication of how things are going and what position we are taking.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question and one supplementary question to the minister, if I may. I appreciate his answer to the Leader of the Opposition, that it was necessary to work out a common approach on commodity pricing with the other members of the north-south conference, particularly the developed members, but I would ask him whether that answer is in harmony with the urgency of Canada working out a position on commodity pricing to bring in at the UNCTAD-four conference in May of this year. We will not be able to wait the north-south conference has fully finished its deliberations since the UNCTAD-four conference has already been hailed the most significant of all international conferences at a special session of the United Nations. Developing nations are waiting to see what the developed nations are going to do about bargaining on commodity prices with regard to cocoa, copper, lead, zinc, tin, coffee, bauxite and the bulk of the other 18 primary commodities.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe Canada has already signed or has become a member of certain commodity agreements affecting certain commodities, but I would be happy to get further information on that question. UNCTAD-four is meeting in Nairobi, I believe, next month. It is part of the process involved in the north-south dialogue. My approach, really, is a simple one. The same problems are being tackled in a number of fora—a commonly-used term today—at UNCTAD-four, at the seventh special session and at GATT. The same reality is being examined and the same problems are being discussed. Probably UNCTAD-four will make some further progress, but I do not see these various meetings as being separate events. They are all part of the same ongoing effort to solve problems affecting the same reality, and the same reality is being examined at all these institutions.

I believe the most important one, the one the world will be watching most, is the north-south dialogue, because it is a unique exercise, one that is working in co-operation with the United Nations. Apart from the United Nations, it has a separate origin and a new format, and is expected to deliver results at the end of 1976. So they are all important and they are all working on the same problem. I do not see how any one of us could try to develop a separate, new or different policy for each of these conferences, when actually they are dealing with the same question in one aspect or another.

Mr. Roche: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask more than one supplementary, but I will refrain from doing that as I expect it would lead to another debate. I want to move quickly to a question for the minister in respect of priorities respecting aid. As we know, continued aid is very much a part of the new economic order of events in the north-south structure. I would ask the minister about Canada's priorities for aid. If aid is to go to the least developed countries, how is it that a $25 million agreement has just been signed with Indonesia which is an oil producing and exporting country? How is it that we announced that agreement without any detail as to how that money is to be used in Indonesia?

I ask these questions because of the contrasting situation we have seen develop within the past 24 hours as a result of an earthquake in Guatemala, with 2,000 people dead and 5,000 injured, but I have yet to hear any announcement that Canada intends to provide emergency aid to Guatemala. I put this question in the context of the importance of Canadian people knowing who is to get the aid, and why it is going there.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in the case of Guatemala, I have authorized CIDA today to make a special donation to the International Red Cross as a first step in what I hope will be a series of measures to assist the tragically-stricken population of Guatemala. We have made this grant through the International Red Cross and we are considering substantial contributions in the form of food aid. We are also considering a restructuring of our aid program in respect of Guatemala in order to meet their short-term emergency situation.

In the case of Indonesia, it is a very poor country, well within the ambit of the strategy. Even though its economy has been helped by oil revenues, it is still a country that is very poor and deserves our help.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I must admit, through you, that I am rather shattered to hear nothing but rhetoric from the government on this particular occasion. This matter of trade and aid, and the relationship between the two and the need for aid has been in the forefront for—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will realize that there is provision for one spokesman for each party to make a comment and for others to put questions to the minister. The hon. member has the floor for the purpose of questioning the minister.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I do have a question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister advise us in what areas, and when, Canada is to put some substance to its verbiage? The areas of commodity agreements have already been mentioned in respect of sugar, rubber, sisal, coffee, tea, cocoa, cotton and wool. When is Canada going to take a step so as to lead people into following in the right direction, instead of patting itself on the back as being a leader in the development of these procedures?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian position is very well laid out; that is, we have developed, very clearly, a five-year strategy for our development assistance. We are now engaged interdepartmentally and in a parliamentary forum in the development of multidimensional project toward the resolution of the international economic situation. The honourable member will have realized that Canada, in the commodity field—as I have already indicated to the honourable member for Edmonton-Strathcona—has established commodity agreements in respect of certain raw materials and will continue to support those agreements and processes provided they do not become producer cartels. We have taken the view that trade commodity agreements must involve consumers and producers. We are not interested in those that become, as I stated, cartels for producers alone.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister has told us that the conference on international economic co-operation has set up four commissions, and that one of those commissions will be dealing with the matter of energy. I should like to ask the minister, very briefly, who will be representing Canada on that commission, and will it deal only with oil, since that is the only subject mentioned in the minister's comments; or will it deal with other forms of energy?

In addition, what position does Canada propose to take on that commission? I recognize that the minister cannot say that we are going to get certain things, because naturally there has to be compromise and some consensus reached. Also, I do not believe that Canada is going to go into a commission on a subject of this importance unless it has a position it proposes to advance. Is the government going to be asking for some type of agreement between the exporting and importing countries regarding an international price? Is the government going to be making some proposal for an agreement by which the exporting countries might reduce the price, in return for which the developing countries would give greater access to the markets of the developed countries or some reduction in the price of goods which they are shipping into those countries? It seems to me—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Having restricted one member earlier in respect of making a comment on the minister's statement as opposed to putting questions, I wonder if I might ask the honourable member to ask his question now.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was simply trying to make clear to the minister what I had in mind. I am asking, what is the position which Canadian representatives will take on the energy commission in respect of the kind of policy that will be beneficial to Canada and at the same time beneficial to the other countries, particularly the exporting countries?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might state, in general terms, what I conceive to be the major objective that Canada will seek to achieve at the energy commission. The major objective, in our view, would be to develop arrangements that would make for long-term stability in the international energy market—or oil market, in so far as we are talking about oil—making it possible for a country like Canada and others in the world to make orderly plans within that framework over the long term.

Obviously, the question of price is an important one. The question of security of supply is an important one, as well. The question of indexation will be extremely important to the oil producers. One asks himself, as a participant in the commission, whether it would be desirable at this stage to get involved in these extremely difficult questions, thereby endangering at a very early stage the possibility of a fruitful dialogue. I believe it will be up to the co-chairmen of the commission on energy, the United States and Saudi Arabia, as well as the members of the commission, to work out the work program.

It would seem to me there will be an effort to establish a factual basis and to determine all the factors which are presently influencing the demand for energy in the world, as well as the supplies of energy, so that people can agree at least on the facts before they get into the very difficult policy questions of price, supply and indexation. I think these questions are among the main ones that will be dealt with. That, in general, is the best I can do in reply to the honourable member's question. We have been giving consideration to the membership on the energy commission, and we will be represented by senior officials on that commission and another official on the development commission, and we will have observers on the commission on raw materials and the commission on financial affairs.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 4, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is not my purpose to take too long, because I understand that due consideration must be given to the fact that fairly soon there will be a division on this amendment. I am pleased to see here in the chamber the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) who will be able to support this amendment because it relates to agriculture. He has become a friend of the agricultural producer and I am sure he would want to do everything to help production.

This is a very specific amendment for the producer of a specific product. In this case, it could well be purebred or exotic livestock. My colleague, the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil) will take a few moments of the time of the House to make some remarks with regard to machinery.

The amendment is with regard to specialized production by a specialized corporation or individual, and to a specialized advertising agency and to specialized consumers. It is not a large area that we are covering. The necessity for this amendment is due to the fact that purebred livestock producers in one part of Canada, either western or eastern Canada, may be directing their advertising through a medium in the United States back to particular people in Canada. At present, it is left open to the interpretation of a government official as to whether that person can deduct the expense of advertising for income tax purposes. It would seem to me that, while this may be the manner in which the government would like to proceed, the provisions should be specific, and this is what the amendment would achieve.

I suggest the addition of the word "agricultural" to the amendment of the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy). I think this is a good amendment because it also deals with specifics. It is not a large business, but a specific one, and this is of fundamental importance. The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) took exception to it the other day because he felt that it might cause an influx into Canada of foreign-owned magazines. But I would bring to his attention and to that of all those who want to oppose this legislation the fact that we have the Foreign Investment Review Act which protects the Canadian industry.

However, in certain areas we do not have adequate facilities within our borders with which to publicize our products, and that is why it is of fundamental importance for us to try to give sufficient assistance to producers to advertise their products adequately across this country to enable them to receive the highest price for their products, which is to the advantage of both the producers and the consumers, because that is what competition is all about.

Government statutes allow exemptions for catalogues and publications for the encouragement and promotional development of fine arts and religion. I see no reason why the motion of the hon. member for Timmins to include scientific or medical subjects should not be adopted, following which we would add agricultural products.

Mr. Speaker, I will resume my seat now and give the hon. member for Moose Jaw an opportunity to make his comments.

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in commenting on this amendment, which I certainly support. As hon. members are aware, in the agricultural field at least there is quite a movement of goods across the border. The maritimes trade with the eastern United States and Ontario purchases and sells specialized equipment to the U.S. We in Saskatchewan have quite a number of small manufacturing businesses which specialize in the production of certain types of farm machinery. Of course, the same situation exists on the west coast in British Columbia. I feel that these manufacturers of farm equipment and other commodities should be free to make use of the advertising media from across the border, because in almost every instance the trade magazines and periodicals are published in the United States.

Up to now in Canada we have not been able to publish a trade magazine or periodical on various industrial subjects which would contain advertisements for the products that we manufacture. Therefore, I think it is of vital importance that the exception which is set forth in this subamendment be approved, and I urge every member of the House to support this amendment, as I know the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) will want to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the subamendment of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Subamendment (Mr. Towers) agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to motion No. 3, as amended.

• (1620)

Mr. Neil: Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in connection with motion No. 3. I believe motions Nos. 2 and 3 are being dealt with together. Unfortunately, I was not in the House yesterday afternoon when the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) spoke; I was in the resources committee. But I did have the opportunity of reading his remarks as recorded in Hansard. At the outset he said that this bill has taken a long time, about a year. This is true, but this is a very important piece of legislation as far as the people of Canada are concerned. It is a piece of legislation which possibly has brought in more correspondence than any other legislation which has been before the House since I came here in 1972. Consequently, it is important that we do take time with this bill.

The tenor of the correspondence which has come in, not only to myself but to other hon. members on both sides of this House, has been opposition to the bill. It is interesting to note that the Secretary of State throughout the year has remained adamant in his stand until the last day or two. Suddenly we were faced with a piece of correspondence or a news release from Reader's Digest to the effect that it is now in a position to comply with the bill or the regulations as to content.

In so far as this motion is concerned, the Secretary of State indicated in his speech yesterday that both motions Nos. 2 and 3 are very important, yet on the other hand he indicated he is not prepared to accept them. It seems to me that he is prepared to allow the interpretation of the regulations to be the guide, and the interpretation of the regulations in the past has been a movement back and forth depending on the whims and fancies of the Minister of National Revenue. It seems to me that it is important to companies doing business in Canada, and to individual citizens, to understand the law. The law should not be left to the interpretation, the whims and fancies of the minister or to the mandarins who administer the regulations or the legislation.

These two amendments set out specifically what the law is. They are amendments which anyone can understand. Often in recent years legislation was drafted in such a manner that it was almost impossible to understand, and it required interpretation. However, I am pleased to see that these two amendments leave no doubt as to what the publishing companies have to comply with. This is the way we should legislate in this country. Parliament is the sounding board; it is the legislative body which makes the law—and if we have a situation where things are done by regulation rather than by legislation, there is nothing but chaos. This is what has happened in the past year with this piece of legislation. If the minister had been specific and had left no doubt in the minds of the companies involved, we would have had a much shorter debate and arrived at a solution much earlier.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), when speaking yesterday, posed certain questions to the Secretary of State or to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). The hon. member was concerned about what time-frame was allowed Reader's Digest in order for it to be within the law. Up until now that question has not been answered by the ministers involved or by any hon. member on the government side. However, certainly Reader's Digest at the moment is not in a position to comply with the ownership requirements or the shareholding requirements, and it seems to me that there must have been some arrangement made between Reader's Digest and the Department of National Revenue to allow it to continue publishing in Canada until such time as it complied with the specific regulations. If this is the case, I think it is only fair, and indeed it is incumbent upon the government, to advise this House what the time-frame is, because we certainly cannot make fish of one and fowl of the other. In other words, if Reader's Digest is to be allowed a certain time-frame during which it can comply with the regulations, then it is only fair that Time or any other magazine involved should be given similar consideration.

In closing, I must say I hope that at some time before we close the debate on these two amendments, or before we have a final vote on this bill, one or other of the ministers, or some hon. member on the government side, will stand and tell the House the true facts and what the time-frame is, in order that not only may Reader's Digest be in a position to carry on and comply, but perhaps in fairness Time magazine may be allowed to have a similar opportunity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in the debate and to make a few comments with regard to motions Nos. 2 and 3. In substance, the amendments deal with the aspect of "not substantially the same". Let me emphasize once more that along with a great many other members of parliament on all sides of the House, I was most surprised to learn that Reader's Digest had issued a press release the other day agreeing to the terms set out by the government. I am also just as sure that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) was not in the least surprised. Some of us have endeavoured to get some information but have not been successful. It is my considered opinion that Reader's Digest was bludgeoned into this, or I could say it might have had a rubber hose used on it and in order to survive it issued the directive or press release. A good many of us are now wondering how Time magazine will react.

I will concede that the 75 per cent ownership and the other requirements as originally set out are in order, but let me repeat that, along with many of my colleagues and hon. members from the government side of the House, 80 per cent is an arbitrary and high amount of Canadian content and will, in my opinion, dilute the content of a magazine. It now looks as if we will have a czar of the magazine industry, which will result in a controlled press as far as magazines are concerned.

The minister, in his omnipotence, could step in and close down some magazines and let others operate. The president of Reader's Digest made the following statement some while back when appearing before the committee:

> We cannot meet an 80 per cent substantially different content regulation. It would simply destroy the Digest basic publishing format. It would largely prevent us from republishing material from other publications to the extent that we would no longer be a digest of international articles. It is therefore our opinion that we would no longer have a publication that would be recognized by, or have the same or as much appeal, to our readers.

There has been an about-face in that I am aware that the minister has relented somewhat and will now allow digests of worldwide articles which may be used in the parent magazine but which cannot be the same and must be edited by the Canadian writer. I am assuming that this is a face-saving device because of the tremendous criticism that the government has received on the content issue which, let me repeat, is a form of censorship.

Let us hope, Mr. Speaker, that Reader's Digest will not exist in fear and trembling at the whim of the Minister of National Revenue or his grand mandarins or the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), depending on who assumes control of this. A great many of us will be watching each issue. I know that a great many government officials will have their measuring sticks out, checking it like hawks.

I would also like to commend the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) for his amendment which requests special consideration for medical journals and scientific magazines, and also the subamendment of the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) who is suggesting agricultural magazines be exempt and has presented a very good case for this type of magazine. I was delighted to see this was passed on division, but I am somewhat skeptical that when the votes come on motions Nos. 2 and 3, in all probability government members will change their view and vote against them.

As I mentioned earlier, the government has retreated on the Reader's Digest issue but only as a sop to the opposition. I am delighted to know that Reader's Digest is going to continue, even if in some restricted form. Let me also say, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil), that I received more letters on the Reader's Digest subject and the possibility of its being discontinued as a Canadian publication than on those two contentious issues of capital punishment and abortion. If anyone doubts that, they can come to my office and see the file of letters. This is an indication of how seriously a great many of the citizens of Canada, particularly those in my riding, view this matter. I received letters from other parts of the country than my own riding.

As the member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) pointed out the other day, the Secretary of State entertained representatives of Maclean-Hunter as witnesses before the committee examining this legislation and refused to allow a delegation from Reader's Digest to present their views on the subject. In addition, the hon. member pointed out that even some of the Liberal members of the committee were bumped because of their opposition to this bill. Surely that is not democracy.

Once this bill becomes law, the Secretary of State will be able to exercise his powers of censorship over other publications in Canada. This is a very potent weapon for the government to put in the hands of one of the henchmen of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I can see him now, lowering the boom on certain publications that expose the blunders and derogatory statements made by government officials and departments. This is the sort of club presently being used with such devastating effect by India's Prime Minister, Indira Gandhi.

There has been much criticism in the press. I assume most hon. members saw the article in this morning's Globe and Mail by Geoffrey Stevens which is a parody on Gilbert and Sullivan. He says that the Cullen rule is obnoxious on several grounds and, of course, the Minister of National Revenue has admitted that this Cullen rule is now the gospel of the government. I heard the minister on the CTV program "A.M." yesterday morning. Mr. Stevens wrote:

> The "Cullen rule" was obnoxious on several grounds. It has no basis in law—and Mr. Cullen admitted as much when he said that, if the courts did not uphold his interpretation, the government would change the law.

That is a pretty strong statement, Mr. Speaker. He went on:

> Unlike Bill C-58, the objective of the "Cullen rule" was simple discrimination—to force Time and Reader's Digest to abandon their Canadian editions, regardless of whether they met the Canadian citizenship requirements of C-58. And, given the realties of Canadian publishing, the "Cullen rule" meant that Canada would probably never have a magazine which reported fully to Canadians on events beyond our borders. An asinine rule.

The article concluded by saying:

> What we have is not a "magazine policy". What we have is a thoroughly muddled government scrambling to save the political skins, if not the credibility, of two of its ministers.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I realize it is a position of weakness to apologize at the beginning of participation in debate, but I do so to the hon. member of Ontario (Mr. Cafik) because I am most anxious to hear him speak on this particular motion as well, but I feel compelled to enter the debate on motions Nos. 2 and 3. With regard to motion No. 3, I will satisfy myself by complimenting the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy) and the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) for their amendments. I would commend their attention to motion No. 5 in the name of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen). Certainly, the subject matter raised in this motion and the amendment to motion No. 3 pose no threat whatsoever to the Canadian publishing industry. Why they are even resisted by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) bewilders me.

With respect to motion No. 2, I am compelled to participate in this debate in order that I may continue where the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) left off yesterday. The hon. member posed an important, and indeed vital, question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). As reported at page 10645 of Hansard he asked:

> What arrangements concerning a time-frame have been made between the Department of National Revenue and the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest so that the Digest can get itself into the new form which will meet the test of the content rule? Will there be an interim period during which the Digest does not qualify and is, therefore, beyond the law if this law passes in the foreseeable future? Or will Reader's Digest Canada be allowed a transitional period during which it can come aboard, so to speak, and make the arrangements which are necessary?

Mr. Speaker, that question is very important. It is absolutely unacceptable to me that neither the Secretary of State nor the Minister of National Revenue has replied, and that they are not in the House today to witness this debate.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Jarvis: It was the Secretary of State who got the country and himself into this mess in the first place. It was dumped in the lap of the Minister of National Revenue, and it is an affront to the House that they are absent from this very important debate. With regard to the question put by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, Reader's Digest finds itself in the position of having to dispose of equity shares of, I believe, some 45 per cent. If I recall my figures correctly, approximately 30 per cent are in the hands of Canadian shareholders. It must make its content arrangements and its licensing arrangements.

Unconfirmed reports—because the Minister of National Revenue refuses to answer questions—are the department is going to give Reader's Digest until the end of this taxation year to conform. First, I should like confirmation of that. Second, if that is the case, why did the government not adopt motion No. 1? I cannot conceive of any reason for refusing. If it wanted to correct the shambles it created, why did it not adopt motion No. 1 standing in the name of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. As the hon. members know he is charitable, and if the Minister of National Revenue or the Secretary of State wanted to wipe some of the egg from their face, I am sure the hon. member would have been only too glad to let them adopt his motion and take the credit. But no, they did not do that.

As the hon. member for Fundy-Royal suggested, motion No. 2 deals with the issue of fairness or, more properly, the lack of it. We were concerned about the fairness of Bill C-58 at second reading stage and in committee. Now we are most concerned about its fairness. Reader's Digest raised the issue of fairness during the committee hearings. The magazine said that it had acted as a good Canadian citizen without guidelines but that, suddenly, it was confronted with Bill C-58. It implied, in so many words, that it was unfair to change the rules halfway through the game without warning. The arguments of Reader's Digest made the committee aware of the issue of fairness.

Time magazine raised the issue of fairness with regard to content when this bill was considered in committee. I, for one, said that the so-called Cullen rule was unfair. I still think it is unfair. Without question, Time magazine was led to believe that the government's content rule required between 40 per cent and 60 per cent of Canadian content. The magazine believed this sincerely, and anyone who says otherwise is simply not stating the fact. Their evidence was clear and was not, so far as I am aware, refuted. The Minister of National Revenue's staff denied the alleged effect of the interdepartmental memorandum to which others have alluded, When Time magazine took a mock-up of its proposed Canadian edition to the Department of National Revenue, it was left with the impression that between 40 per cent and 60 per cent of Canadian content would be acceptable. When the Cullen rule was made known, the magazine alleged, with cause, that it had been treated unfairly.

The issue of fairness concerns all motions on the order paper. The sort of treatment meted out to Reader's Digest ought to be meted out to any other publication affected by Bill C-58, otherwise we shall subvert every fundamental principle of equity. If the minister made a special deal with Reader's Digest, why does he not have the courage to stand up and say, "Yes, this is the special deal." What are the details of the deal? I argue against any special deal and will vote against any proposal which runs counter to principles of equity and justice. I want to see fair play. I suggest that the Minister of National Revenue is under the duty of participating in the debate on this motion as soon as possible and telling the House of the deal he made.

I am delighted the Digest can continue publishing in Canada. My mail has been similar to that received by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling), and I am delighted to be able to say that the government has capitulated for political reasons. But we are not debating that principle; we are debating the principle of fairness.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): And honesty.

Mr. Jarvis: Surely the Department of National Revenue, of all departments, ought never to be accused of arbitrariness and unfairness. Surely that department's reputation deserves protection. The implications of fair dealing extend beyond this bill. The Minister of National Revenue asks the House to give him carte blanche to determine the meaning of "substantially different" or "substantially the same" in connection with the publishing industry. At the moment he says that the pertinent figure is 80 per cent. Next week it may be another figure; it can change with the passage of time and from minister to minister as one minister succeeds another in that portfolio. The figure depends on the whim, the arbitrary decision of the government of the day. Let me quote what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said in this debate as reported on page 10586 of Hansard. He was speaking about the 80 per cent provision not being embodied in any statute. He said:

> It is also completely arbitrary in the sense that it can be changed whenever the minister changes his mind or whenever his cabinet colleagues change their minds. In that event there is to be no public discussion: there is to be a nice, cosy discussion within the confines of the minister's office or possibly in the cabinet room.

Surely we cannot accept any arbitrary interpretation of any part of a statute affecting the magazine and publishing industry of Canada. No fair-minded Canadian would accept this. Frankly, I regret the involvement of the Minister of National Revenue, for whom I have profound respect and indeed, affection. I would not expect the minister to act arbitrarily. Possibly he will be less arbitrary than others; but the principle remains. Who will be the minister tomorrow? I don't know. What confidence can we place in any minister of the day not to act arbitrarily? To what pressures will the minister be subjected? What pressure was brought to bear to permit this political face-saving involving only one magazine? Frankly, Mr. Speaker, that is all this is. The government's attempt to extricate itself from the mess it created by providing for the arbitrary exercise of ministerial discretion is unacceptable. We do not accept it; neither do those we represent accept it. I say this more in sadness than in anger.

Earlier I referred to Geoffrey Stevens' column in today's Globe and Mail. I shall quote part of the column in a minute, but before I do so let me emphasize that we did not disagree with the original concept and purpose of the bill. We were in favour of giving encouragement to the Canadian publishing industry. No one disagrees with that. Actually, I think most hon. members would unanimously support the idea. Unfortunately, the government's action has clouded the industry's horizon. I suggest, with all sincerity, that we shall all rue the day the government introduced the present measure unless we amend it as proposed. May I now read part of Mr. Geoffrey Stevens' column in this morning's Globe and Mail. He said:

> Quite simply, we have in Ottawa a government that is so confused that it doesn't know what it is doing. We have a government which started out with a good idea—to protect the domestic Canadian magazine industry from unfair foreign competition. To this end, it introduced Bill C-58 which would require that, to be deemed Canadian for tax purposes, all magazines would have to be edited, controlled and at least 75 per cent owned in Canada. A sensible, long overdue step.

Mr. Stevens was writing about the peak of the affair. It has been all downhill ever since. We have stumbled from crisis to crisis, mistake to mistake, and come to the point at which deals are made—probably in the minister's office. Surely that is no way to encourage other Canadian magazines or Canadian writers. I am certain that magazines and writers of integrity do not normally indulge in back-room deals. I therefore urge the government to take time to think about this matter. Let us find an honourable way out of this completely unacceptable situation in which the Canadian magazine industry today finds itself.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis) referred to the absence this afternoon of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). I am sure he would want to be fair. I tried to contact the minister privately. I understand his wife is ill, and that is the reason for his absence this afternoon. He will return this evening.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had the pleasure this afternoon of listening to a number of speeches on this amendment. They have raised a number of concerns in my mind. The most important thing that has been said has been the relative lack of answer by the government to the very important questions raised by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). There has not only been a lack of answer with respect to the questions themselves, which certainly bear answer, but with respect to the nature of the questions. Aside from the specific answers, what the hon. member for Fundy-Royal was asking was the philosophy of this government in dealing with the rights of what, for want of a better term, might be called citizens in terms of the dangers that can occur as a result of discriminatory acts. The intervention that was brought to the attention of this House a day or so ago as the result of the statement by Reader's Digest was the most blatant evidence of lack of understanding of the importance of there being no discrimination in the operation of a government in the way in which rules and statutes are to be determined and administered.

This is a black day. When Bill C-58 came forward, I joined with others in not quarrelling with the general idea of the government to provide some equity and balance in terms of privilege. In a speech at that time, I suggested that we ought to consider the fairness of doing it in an arbitrary way. Sometimes the names create different attitudes toward the idea. For a publication or a group of publications, in this case two, to have a certain status in Canadian law, and they having committed themselves to the rules in existence at that time, it would be unfair suddenly to pull the rug out from under them. That is not the way things ought to be done and it is not the way that things are normally done in terms of taxation matters. If we were dealing with anything but an American edition, Canadians would rise up and cry "Foul". I cry "Foul" regardless of what publication. I would also cry "Foul" if we were talking about something else, because this is not the way things ought to be done.

The first blunder of the government, therefore, was not the intent but the method it adopted. Having unfairly dealt with two publications, we heard the other day that there is a second discrimination. Some call it a deal, a back-room arrangement, or put some other label on it. I am not privy to the reasons for the discrimination; I can only guess. However, one publication is being dealt with differently from the other. I take no comfort in the fact that Reader's Digest, a magazine I enjoy and about which I have received a lot of correspondence from my constituents, is being favoured by this discriminatory back-door arrangement. In my respectful submission, it is a dreadful arrangement that this government has made.

Although this action may appear to benefit one particular magazine, in the long run the government may have opened the door to justice and equity. It will depend on who is the minister, his attitude, his relationship with his colleagues, his clout and, to quote an adage from ancient times in British justice, how long is the chancellor's foot? It is as simple as that. If that is the way the law is to be administered in Canada, with arrangements made, issues settled and rights determined in the cabinet room or in the office of the Minister of National Revenue, whether this or some future minister, or some other minister, I say that is wrong. I hope there are sufficient people on all sides of this House who feel strongly about this. Regardless of the transitory embarrassment this may be to the minister, I hope they will stand up and say it is wrong. I hope that happens because this is a very important principle.

What has happened in Canada is that we rely more and more on the administrative tribunal. We have moved away from the courts, whether we are talking about public service legislation, as we talked about in the Finkelman committee this morning, or transportation. We are moving to where the decisions of government are being made by commissions. That is not a happy trend in a free society. Commissions and boards can act as lightning-rods to take the heat off governments. The responsibility is basically a political one in terms of decisions that ought to be made. However, even if that is a bad trend, and even if the administrative tribunal is bad, before the administrative tribunal—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Contract of Employment

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE INFORMATION TO PUBLIC ON CONTRACTS OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved that Bill C-267, respecting employment with the Government of Canada not covered by the Public Service Employment Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

● (1700)

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is a simple one. It is to provide information to the public as to all contracts of employment entered into by the office of the Prime Minister or by government departments. What I am proposing is an amendment which would add to the Public Service Employment Act a clause which would require the publishing, in full, each month in the Canada Gazette of every contract of employment not covered by the Public Service Employment Act to which the government of Canada is a party, where a person is contractually engaged by a department of the government or by the office of the Prime Minister.

We ought, all of us, to be concerned about the sharp increases which have taken place in recent years in government expenditure and the very large increases which have taken place in the number of civil servants. I am a member of a party which believes that, as life becomes more complex, government must assume greater responsibility than in the past for meeting the needs of the people. I do not, therefore, object to increases in the number of public servants. However, I join with many people who are concerned about the very large increases which have taken place in the number of public servants, particularly the tremendous increase which has taken place in recent years in expenditure for the hiring of consultants who work for the government and are paid by the people of Canada, through their taxes, but who are hired with none of the safeguards which are enumerated in the Public Service Employment Act.

Let me illustrate what I mean by quoting from the Globe and Mail of March 17, 1975, a couple of paragraphs from a news report which appeared in that issue:

> Government spending for "Professional and Special Services" will reach at least $982.5 million this year (1975-76) according to initial government estimates and will almost certainly be higher after supplementary estimates are introduced throughout the year.
> The figure represents an increase of 18.3 per cent over spending on consultants in the current fiscal year and a 35.9 per cent increase since 1973-74.
> During the same two-year period the overall government work force . . . has risen by about 10 per cent to about 255,000 from 231,000.

That is the picture of what is happening. There has been a steady increase, one with which I do not entirely disagree, in the number of public servants in recent years. But look at what has happened in the senior positions, in the executive positions which are classified as SX positions. On October 1, 1974, I put a question on the order paper as follows:

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)).]

> What was the increase in the number of senior officers, SX-1, SX-2, SX-3, SX-4, for each year from 1968 to 1973, or, in the case of new departments, etc., from their inception to 1973?

The answer was as follows, and I am sure the figures are out of date by now:

> The increase in the number of senior SX officers for each year from 1968 to 1973 for all departments and agencies of the public service was as follows: in 1968 there were 381 senior SX officers. This total rose to 412 in 1969, 535 in 1970, 602 in 1971, 720 in 1972 and 895 in 1973.

So there were almost 2½ times as many in 1973 as there were five years earlier. The people of Canada have a right to ask whether such an increase was necessary. In 1975 I asked a question which was answered on March 17 of that year. The answer can be found in Hansard of that day. I asked:

> What categories and ranks specifically of public servants other than SX are considered part of the senior management complement of government departments?

The answer came down—I shall not read the list department by department—showing there were over 450 of these positions. Then on January 28, 1975, I asked the question:

> How many people in the public service, excluding those in the SX salary range, are earning salaries equivalent to or more than $25,500, which is the minimum SX-1 salary?

The answer was as follows:

> As of September 30, 1974, 3,307 public servants, including those in levels deemed to be equivalent to senior executive officer levels, earned salaries equivalent to or more than $25,500 per annum.

Mr. Speaker, despite this tremendous increase in employees in the senior levels of the public service, details of which I have placed on record, we spent, in 1975, close to $1 billion on consultants hired by contract. And, as I pointed out, none of the restraints or detailed information which are expected by the public and required by the Public Service Employment Act are applicable in these circumstances.

Back in 1974 I asked how many employees in each department were employed on a term basis, a casual basis or a contract basis. The answer was voluminous. I am not the only hon. member who has asked questions on this subject. I tried to count the number of those who make more than $20,000 a year on contract. My arithmetic may not be exact, but I do not think it is far wrong. In the Department of Communications there are 15; in the Department of Consumer Affairs, two; in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, four; in Indian Affairs and Northern Development, five; Justice, 10; Manpower, three; Regional Economic Expansion, six; Science and Technology, five. I could go on and on.

On October 1, 1974, the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark) asked how many consultants were engaged by each of the departments as of that date. Again, there was a long answer and I do not have time to read it all into the record. But let me give the House a few illustrations. In the Department of External Affairs an editorial consultant was employed for two years, for which he received $52,800. There was paid the sum of $40,000 in connection with specialized projects in the field of international law.

Take the Treasury Board, the people who are supposed to monitor the whole system, the people who are supposed to protect us from overspending. Here we find a contract to advise on questions pertaining to federal public service compensation programs. The consultant worked, as far as I can tell, for six months and was granted $33,000. Another consultant was called in to advise on matters pertaining to federal decentralization. He, it seems, worked for three months and received $18,000. Another was engaged to advise on operations research. He worked for a year and received $23,000. Another man worked to advise the secretary of the Treasury Board on the form of the accounts of Canada and other areas of financial management; he seemed to work for about six months and received $25,000. A company was engaged to analyse the role and long-range purpose of the personnel policy branch; they worked for about five months and were paid $36,000. Another man worked to advise and assist the Treasury Board secretariat on administrative procedures regarding personnel management; he seemed to work for about six months and received $46,000. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker.

Not so long ago I discussed this whole question of the number of senior public servants and consultants being engaged, the fees they were charging and getting. One man told me—I am not going to reveal his name because I did not say I would, but he has been in the senior levels of government, both federal and provincial, for many years and I consider him to be one of the best public servants this country has ever had—that the system is out of control. Those were his exact words. He said no one is looking at these things any more.

A large sum of money is involved here; the last year for which figures are available showed an expenditure of almost $1 billion. Whether the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) will succeed in holding the line this year—a year of supposed restraint—to the figure last year, I do not know. In answer to a question I asked him when he first announced his program, he said that the budget was frozen and would not increase.

Let me cast my mind back to the last time the Government of Canada, this present Liberal government, during the period 1971-72, said it would freeze for one year the number of civil servants. They did it, Mr. Speaker, but during that period of time the number of consultants hired and the consequent amount spent increased dramatically by the standards of that year, though much less than today or even last year. But based on my experience here, I have the feeling that this year will be no different, that there will be further increases in the number of consultants hired and the amount of money paid to them.

I want the Government of Canada to be efficient. I want it to hire the best people it can to do the jobs that need to be done. But I find it very difficult to be enthusiastic—I am putting it mildly—about participating in any program that says to people down at the bottom, both in the public service and in private industry, "We are determined that inflation must be checked, that we must stop inflation, and therefore we have passed legislation under which your increase in wages or salaries cannot be more than 10 per cent this year, 8 per cent next year and 6 per cent the following year".

Not that that plan will not work, Mr. Speaker, but I find it difficult to support such a program when I see how generous—I could use stronger language and say profligate—this government has been in its treatment of senior civil servants. I see their expenses and salaries increasing, as are their trips both inside and outside the country. There has been a tremendous increase in recent years in the number of consultants hired by virtually every department of government.

My proposal is a very simple one. I am not saying that contracts to consultants must cease. Neither am I saying that at this point in time the amount of money spent or the number of consultants hired should be reduced. I am simply saying to this government, and to any government that may be in office in future years, that it makes sense to me that we let the people of Canada know as much as possible about what the government is doing, and that therefore each month there should be an announcement in the Canada Gazette of the contracts that have been let, the number of people hired as consultants, what they are to do and how much they are to be paid.

One member on the government side will shortly get up and tell us that there are hundreds of thousands of people who are hired for a week or a month, many of them to undertake very ordinary jobs at somewhere between the minimum wage of $3.50 an hour, or whatever it is at the moment, and $5 an hour. I realize it would not be very productive to list every single one. I also realize that if my proposal were enacted in the precise terms written into the bill there would be problems. If any member on the government side wants to amend the bill to provide that only contracts that pay more than $20,000 a year and up should be reported in the Gazette, then I would be very happy to accept that amendment.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, the bill I am introducing is a simple one. It is not aimed at the government. It is asking for the publication of information that the people of Canada are entitled to have, and I urge hon. members to support passage of this bill.

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to discuss Bill C-267 in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in its present form from the point of view of the increased cost to the taxpayer that would be involved should the bill become law. The proposal apparently includes contracts with both companies and individuals. As the House is no doubt aware, a company is a legal person; therefore, we may interpret the hon. member's suggestion as meaning both personal service contracts and third party contracts.

It is difficult to place a numerical value on the numbers of contracts in the public service, excluding Crown corporations. However, considering major users we would estimate it to be in the area of 6,000. It is likely that that figure is a minimum one as all departments, the Treasury Board secretariat and Supply and Services have authority to issue contracts, either personal service or otherwise. These would include everything from cleaning services to engineer to personnel consulting to foreign aid to small post offices in rural areas as well as urban areas. The publishing of all such contracts on a monthly, or indeed on any basis, is ludicrous. Publishing costs would be astronomical, to say nothing of the number of additional pages needed in the Canada Gazette. Based on a minimum of 6,000 contracts, it has been estimated that the Canada Gazette would probably be extended to somewhere in the neighbourhood of 3,000 pages every month Just to cover contracts, to say nothing of other material which must be published. At present the subscription cost of the Gazette is $25.00 a year. I would think that production costs if, indeed, it were even practical, would increase the cost of subscription to the point where few could afford it, not even libraries.

Translation costs alone, which average approximately five cents per word, makes the whole idea prohibitive. Perhaps an example here would be appropriate. The Canadian International Development Agency lets approximately 1,000 contracts for foreign aid services as well as internal services. These contracts contain all specifications for work to be accomplished as well as compensation both in the form of salary and allowances. At a minimum of two pages per contract, it is estimated that with translation one contract could be published per page of the Gazette. This means that, using both sides of one page in the Gazette, two contracts could be published. From this point, simple arithmetic tells us that for CIDA alone the Gazette, in terms of contract publication, would use 500 pages.

The situation regarding personal service contracts, that is, contracts with individuals, is almost as bad. Consider the Post Office with its hundreds of contracts to individuals as postmasters in rural areas. Even taking a minimum of 1,000, we find ourselves with a 500-page Gazette. We would estimate that there are some 2,500 personal service contracts let in the public service; therefore, again simple arithmetic gives us a Gazette of 1,250 pages for contracts alone.

As I mentioned, we have no way of knowing specifically how many contracts are let in the public service during the course of one year, but just from conservative figures one can see the utter folly of demanding publication of each every month as is suggested by the hon. member.

In terms of cost of publication, let us consider that the Gazette averages approximately 20 pages at an annual subscription rate of $25. At 250 pages, these subscription costs could rise to 12.5 the present rate, bringing the yearly rate to approximately $312. Somehow, I do not think we would get any subscribers. Also, let us consider translation costs which could be necessarily the responsibility of individual departments. At present, if we contract with an individual or company who deals in the French language, the contract is drawn up in French. The same applies to the English language, so there is little problem in individual departments. However, to publish these contracts we must have all of them available in both official languages. In order to accommodate this work load, we must hire more translators or, of course, we could contract at five-cents per word.

A conservative estimate gives us an average of approximately $50 per contract. Multiplying this by our estimate of 6,000 contracts gives us an approximate cost of $300,000 initially. We cannot say what the total cost may amount to as contracts expire at any interval during the year and new ones are let, and for every new one a translation must be made. It is evident, then, that the publishing of each contract in full every month would be prohibited by the costs involved. It is for this reason alone that I will vote against this proposal.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has brought forward a very interesting proposal. What was the most interesting part of the debate so far was the unusual suggestion by the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) when he said he intended to vote against the bill. This left a little hope in my heart, as I thought perhaps history was to be made tonight and we would actually have the opportunity to vote on a private member's bill. I do not know whether those words were in the hon. member's notes, whether that was a slip, or whether he was indicating he agrees with me that we ought to have greater opportunity to vote on private members' bills rather than merely set them aside.

I read this short bill with great interest. It appeared that the intention of the hon. member is to answer what has been a cry of many people, in terms of big government and complex governmental matters. His intention appears to be an answer to the public's right to know. What has taken place in respect of our order paper and a number of other things in this place would indicate that the right of the public and of members of parliament to know what is going on is diminishing at about the same rate as the complexity of government and government intervention is increasing. The introduction of the computer and sophisticated methods of communication have not really helped the situation.

In looking at the bill presented by the hon. member, it says two things: it says that the public has a right to know, and governments have a duty to disclose. The hon. member, hopefully, would have the bill go to the committee where the objections of hon. members, such as the one by the hon. member for Wellington, which could be entitled "It cannot be done", could be considered.

Let me say to the hon. member for Wellington that I am as conscious as he is of cost, but I would hope that the principle and the main thrust of this proposal could be sent to the committee for examination. It could be considered there, and it may be that the committee would not accede to the request of the hon. member for Winnipeg North. What he suggests, I admit, would result in monumental costs of preparation. It could be that these contracts could be filed at a central registry where they would be available to those interested.

The principle which has been set forth in this bill having regard to the matter of disclosure ought not to be rejected. I regret that the hon. member for Wellington would vote against the matter if he has the chance, having particular regard to the principle being put forward. There are very few people in Canada, even in the cabinet, who are fully cognizant of what is happening in all departments, or even the department of one's seatmate. The organization of the business of government is becoming more difficult and more complex. I do not believe that on every occasion a government does not disclose something it does it wilfully. I do not believe there is any feeling in the public service that they are going to make mistakes which will not be disclosed. Alll I am saying is that our procedures have come to the point where it is easy for them not to disclose. Rather than having a little trouble with it at the outset, they will just not give out the information. I think it is important that we, as representatives of the people, have access to that information and that people who are interested in particular areas have access to it.

I do not often support an NDP bill or a proposition advanced by a member of the NDP, but I think this is a sound one and I hope the government, and the members here today, who actually have the decision as to whether or not they will let it go, not the government, will give careful consideration to the principle of the bill.

Let us deal with the question of consultant contracts. There is a suspicion in the land—from time to time there are enough pieces of evidence which tend to confirm that suspicion—that the consultant contracts in the public relations field are one of the largest patronage operations available to government. I hope that is not so, but that is the suspicion.

I raised the matter with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro) in the House with respect to the Price Rubin contract. That matter has never been satisfactorily answered in terms of the time when Treasury Board approval was given in relation to the payment out of moneys under that contract. It is an established fact that one of the members of that organization at one time was a partner of the Minister of Labour. I am not suggesting that that by itself indicates that the Minister of Labour had his finger in the giving of the contract, but what I am suggesting is that that relationship gave the appearance of that, and that is very bad for our system. It was a bad thing for the Minister of Labour. He wrote me about it, he felt sensitive about it. He would not have felt sensitive about it if there was not a bad appearance, an unusual appearance.

I recognize that we cannot tender for every contract; it is impossible; the cost would be impossible. But if we cannot tender for them all I do not think it is unreasonable that we should at least disclose them all. I hope there is no member who would disagree with me. When we talk about consultant contracts we are talking about a substantial amount of government moneys. If my recollection of the current estimates is correct, we are talking about $900 million in consultant contracts, a tremendous increase over the previous fiscal year. Some of that could be attributed to the fact that government activities have expanded, but I believe that some of it—and this is important to me as a member in the national capital area who represents a large part of the public service—is due to the fact that the public service of our country, far from being too large and far from growing too rapidly, is in fact under-challenged in terms of its ability to do a job.

I have raised this matter before in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates when the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Drury) was before the committee. I spoke about the practice of turning to consultants whenever there is a little problem within a department or a small study to be made.

In fact the public service of this country is under-challenged. When that happens the public service becomes the butt of everyone who would say that bigness is bad, government is growing and is too large, and civil servants sit around and do not do any work. I have been in a lot of government offices and have found that in some cases that is true, but I have also been in the offices of Dupont of Canada, the offices of General Motors and many big private enterprise organizations, and I see the water cooler crowd there too. That happens to be one of the difficulties with respect to business. So, whether the criticism comes from any particular area of this House or not, I do not accept the contention that the public service is necessarily too large and that that is the major criticism with respect to the public service.

I believe that the public service is under-challenged in terms of the ability of the men and women in the public service to handle the problems they have. This is something at which we will have to look. I think we have been somewhat unfair with the public service in many ways because every time a government gets into trouble it pounces on the public service as being necessarily too large, instead of looking at the priorization of the programs of government to see whether, not the public service but the governors of the country have their priorities set in such a way that large parts of these programs go on and on without being considered in terms of their relevance. They take on lives of their own.

What happens is that either a government freezes or, on the other hand, it appoints a commission, a one shot operation, to examine the operations of the government. It will come moving in, and instead of this examination being something that would be welcomed generally by the public servants who want to advance in their careers, like everyone else who wants to have a reasonable security of tenure in a challenging job, they feel themselves to be the target of these periodic examinations that go on whenever a government is in trouble.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North is in order. I think the growth factor is out of control in many ways and we do a disservice to the public servant and to the public service generally in allowing that to happen. Perhaps we ought to consider a mechanism such as a continuing commission on government operations and management, recognizing that it is large but recognizing at the same time that, as a result of the attitudes of government and the necessities of society opportunities in the public service were opened up but that they should not be expanded like a balloon and then knocked down. It is most unfair for the people in the public service. It should be a kind of continuing operation.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned the level of compensation in the public service. In the higher levels of the public service of this country, the deputy ministers and assistant deputy ministers, we have in fact the highest paid public servants, dollar for dollar, and comparing dollars to pounds sterling or francs, compared with any public servants in the world.

Mr. Orlikow: Higher than in the United States.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): What has happened with respect is that somehow the rates of compensation between those high levels and those on a somewhat lower level have got out of alignment. The differentiation is too great. We go from this extreme height down to levels of compensation that are just above the established poverty level. I think we must examine that, not only from the heights but from the lower areas as well, and in that examination we must be prepared to look at the duties of the public servants and to expand them to take the place of the army of consultants who march in and out of this city.

When consultants do that, they are actually adding a little piece of wood to the pile of wood, which sometimes leads politicians to say that the size of the public service should be frozen, although I for one do not know how we can freeze the size of the public service. We may be able to check the rate of its growth or challenge it more, but that can be left for another day. That is perhaps outside the principle of the bill.

We are now talking about decentralization. At one stage I raised a question on the floor of the House with the minister about the intention to decentralize in a period of restraint. That is a great thing for the areas which will receive the agencies of government. In Matane there is a cheque processing unit, in Winnipeg there is the Mint, and so on, but I suspect that there is no criterion established with respect to the movement out and the decentralization of the public service other than the creation of employment.

I suspect that the minister has a mandate to decentralize. What will he do? I would bet that this will be borne out by the facts: he will ask all his officials what departments could be moved. That is not establishing a criterion. That is taking the administrative point of view, because there is no examination of what might happen if an area of undertaking within a department, a branch of a department, or indeed of a whole department is moved out, in terms of its function and as to whether that movement may do nothing more than create another element of bureaucracy.

I suspect that what is happening with respect to the government's program is that it is considering decentralization from two points of view, the first being the creation of the presence of the government, and therefore employment and benefits, in certain areas of Canada, and secondly, reading the secret cabinet documents I released on September 3, 1975, it is tied into the whole program concerned with units working in French, none of which has to do with the efficient operation of the public service of Canada.

These are the things which worry me as a representative of a constituency in the national capital area in terms of the public service. I do not want to occupy too much time of the House with respect to this matter, but obviously I feel very strongly about it. I hope hon. members will not talk the bill out but will let it go so that we can examine in a committee the problems I have raised in, I hope, a constructive sort of way, and the problem raised by the hon. member for Wellington because I think it is relevant to the form of the bill, and it could lead to an amendment.

If I understand what the hon. member for Winnipeg North is saying, the 125,000 or so people which each of us represent have the right to information and to more than lip service. They have the right to access. He used the vehicle of the Canada Gazette. Frankly I would not favour that myself; I would favour a central registry. I do not like reading the Canada Gazette any more than anybody else, and I will wager that no one here takes that publication home and tucks it under his pillow at night. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) says he does. I suggest that he should have two pillows, and he would if he took the Canada Gazette as it is envisaged by the hon. member for Winnipeg North.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

The principle of this bill is very sound, and I hope some consideration will be given to it because it is very important that things are done properly as far as is humanly possible. It is perhaps even more important that they appear to be done properly. We always talk about ours as a free society. It is very important in a free society that all people, whether inside or outside this House, have access to all information, and that the emphasis we give to the guidelines with respect to order paper questions which could be answered by ministers in the House should be extended to include disclosure, and not something less than complete disclosure, recognizing of course that there is the matter of the security of the state and the right to proprietary information in some very narrow categories.

I want to commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North for bringing this bill forward because it has given this House an opportunity to consider a very important matter. I hope that when the hon. member for Wellington said that he was going to have to vote against the bill—as much as I regret that decision—it was at least an indication that we are going to have an opportunity to vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Parent (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I think that perhaps I agree this afternoon with the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) but as my colleague from Wellington (Mr. Maine) as shown, it would be very costly to publish all those contracts in the Canada Gazette. I think that they could be published somewhere else where they could be examined to obtain further information.

[English]

However, having said that, I find that there are some nagging questions which come up with regard to this problem. I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North that possibly this is information to which the public should have access. However, I wonder whether by definition a consultant who is hired by the government and becomes an employee of the government should not be afforded the same protection of—I do not like to use the term secrecy as did the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—the same protection of confidentially when he raises some of the points which the government is currently discussing and which, by their very nature, could be very delicate as far as the public is concerned.

The question is: what can be considered of a delicate nature? Incidentally, I disagree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton in that I think this is a potpourri, so to speak, for patronage. I hope this government and all governments would be above this type of thing.

I note that this has never occured, for example, in other governments such as that of British Columbia because they are discovering things now as to the honesty and as to how well that government stayed within the bounds of legality. I will not stretch this point any further.

To get back to the matter of confidentiality, I think that people who are hired by the government should be able to do their jobs without interference. When they are acting in the public interest there should not be any coercion. It might be asked how coercion can exist. I will cite a case of which the hon. member for Winnipeg North will have knowledge with regard to the dispensing of LIP grants. Those people are in a sense consultants, and notwithstanding the fact that they are not paid and do not have contracts, we still try to give them the type of confidentiality we would extend to any other person in the government administration.

● (1750)

When I select a citizenship advisory group to advise me in my riding as to which projects they think would be most worthy of government assistance, I hesitate to release their names prior to their having made their decisions.

[Translation]

Now if you ask me why those names should remain confidential, the reason is the following. The first time that LIP grants were given in my constituency and the names of those persons were published, they received many phone calls to ask them to do such and such a thing or help a special group. Those people are not in politics as we are. This is why they have been asked to advise us what to do. They are constantly disturbed by telephone calls, even at work.

[English]

If those people in some way have to be protected so that they are at least anonymous and not subjected to the pressures of public life that we are, there is all the more reason for these consultant firms, I would say.

There is another problem which perhaps the hon. member for Winnipeg North might not have considered, and that is consistency. He pointed out that these were just contracts that were not already noted in the government service. I think that would be fair ball, but I wonder if in the name of consistency the hon. member should have included not only the people who are getting contracts as consultants but everyone in the public service—if there is indeed a contract signed by two individuals should not those contracts also be listed?

Mr. Orlikow: It is done in Manitoba.

Mr. Parent: I was told by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) that Manitoba has a very advanced government. I question that because it is not a Liberal government. I do not wish to bring politics into this very above board discussion this afternoon, however. But I would say we might have a lot to learn from the government of Manitoba, just as we had a lot to learn from the government of British Columbia.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) on a point of order.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I want the hon. member to know that the practice of listing the salary of every senior civil servant in Manitoba was inaugurated by a Liberal government, continued by a Conservative government, and is maintained at the present time by New Democratic Party government.

Mr. Parent: Now I know what the hon. member means when he says it was a wise move. It was brought in under a Liberal government. I thank the hon. member for pointing that out. A colleague says the list has lengthened somewhat in these past years.

When we are dealing with confidentiality, Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a matter of such delicate proportions that I think we must deal with consistency. I came across something which deals with consistency and I should like to share it. I do not say I necessarily agree with everything written here, but I think it points out some of the pitfalls of listing all of these contracts in Canada, at great expense as the hon. member for Wellington pointed out.

In a paper presented to the Twelfth Annual Conference of the Institute of Public Administration of Canada at Banff, Alberta, from September 14 to 17, 1960, Mr. S. H. S. Hughes said:

> The third rule of conduct which I would like to propound is that of consistency. I noticed recently in a magazine produced by a well-known manufacturer of business machines, among a number of other aphorisms, the following attributed to the latter-day American sage William Allen White, "Consistency", quoth be, "is a paste jewel which only cheap men cherish." The lot of the aphorist is a hard one, because so much sense has to be sacrificed to form, and wit and wisdom do not always go hand in hand. Making all the usual allowances for misquotation and removal from context, it would be difficult to find a more preverse observation, particularly when applied to the subject of administration.

Indeed I would say when applied to all public life in which we are involved. To continue:

> Consistency is as important in administration as it is in law—

And as it is in politics—as consistent as you can be under given circumstances.

An hon. Member: What about the Tory leadership?

Mr. Parent: I would prefer to stick to the point. This is what we are dealing with, and I know my colleagues will appreciate what we are trying to get at. Mr. Hughes went on:

> Yet consistency has its drawbacks, as anybody who has the experience of being told "I cannot do this for you because if I did I would have to do it for everybody else" can testify. To each member of the public, his own problem is paramount, and it is of little comfort to him to be told that the requirements of consistency, in this respect, are all that stand between him and the beneficence of a warm-hearted civil servant who would otherwise be glad to help him. And yet here I think the public must be told emphatically that without consistency in administration there can be no real justice.

Without real justice you cannot have equality and without this type of equality I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that no matter how much divulging is done, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton says, you are still going to be faced with the question: "Is this all there is? Is there more?" Are we going to print more books and who is going to read them, Mr. Speaker?

The article continues:

> A capricious, changing, unpredictable policy can only be a reflection of the minds of men who make it. It is only necessary to consider a situation where consistency is not observed, and which results in different treatment being given in individual cases where the facts and the law are the same, to realize that a position typified by the observation "I will do it for you but not for him" is indefensible.

As indefensible in this House as in any court of law, or any other circumstance where the public is concerned, I submit. I notice it is six o'clock and my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m. this day.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, before private members' hour I was discussing the dreadfully difficult situation which has arisen from the government's action in connection with this bill. The difficulty has little to do with the bill itself, as the bill seeks to establish a principle on which there is no significant division of opinion either in the country or in the House, namely, that there ought not to be any special privilege for magazines which operate, in the main, offshore, so to speak, but which also print editions for this country.

The difficulty which has been alluded to on second reading, and now, during report stage, has been compounded by the government's imposing on the magazine policy of Canada a discriminatory aspect which ought not to exist in any Canadian law expressed in the form of statute or regulations. In the present instance the sin is greater and more reprehensible because the government proposes to enact regulations by ministerial edict.

Before the dinner adjournment I suggested what we, of this House, feel about the place of government, about parliamentary responsibilities, and about the duties of people in politics. I suggested that we look on administrative tribunals as a sort of second level of governmental structure which operates independently of the political structure of government and is not responsive to the political process in a free society. The particular statute we are discussing would create a tribunal, under the aegis of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), which cannot even be graced with the appellation "administrative." Here we have discrimination at its worst.

First the government changed the rules which, to begin with, have been shown to be patently unfair. What was done ought not to have been done, particularly if one considers the commitment to an important industry with regard to the existence of certain rules. But it has gone one step further. Having changed the rules, the government has decided that magazines coming from offshore, or other countries, fall into two categories, two classes. They say, that Reader's Digest should be given special treatment; as for the treatment of Time magazine, it is nothing but unfairness compounded by unfairness, inequity by inequity and, I suggest, stupidity. Is it any wonder the people of Canada have their doubts about the government? Is it any wonder, as Mr. Geoffrey Stevens said in this morning's Globe and Mail, people think that in Ottawa we have a government so confused it does not know what it is doing?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Come off it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I hear the government whip muttering under his breath. That was not my judgment; it was the judgment of an independent person who looked at the government's record. If there was ever an example of a misapplied policy, this is it. I wager that the change of heart took place not because the government was following a principle, but because it had departed from it. I suggest that a number of Liberal backbenchers were as dismayed as hon. members on my side of the House. They shared the dismay of many other Canadians.

Hon. members talk about the Cullen rule. I might say that I have great admiration for those who defy the whip, particularly on the government side of the House, and stand up to speak. I appreciate that. I admire them. I encourage them as well. They are joining a growing mass of Canadians who are looking at this legislation that is applied without benefit of legitimacy in terms of anything written. Rather, it is applied in terms of justice that could vary with the length of a chancellor's foot, and even vary with the chancellor or the disposition of the minister or the government, or the influence of that minister or the government. That kind of variation makes it a mockery in terms of those principles that ought to govern the life of this country. As I said at the beginning, I have no hesitation in saying that I admire anyone who is prepared to stand against that kind of application.

Mr. Geoffrey Stevens, in a column in this morning's Globe and Mail on the "Cullen rule" wrote, and I quote:

> The "Cullen rule" was obnoxious on several grounds. It had no basis in law (and Mr. Cullen admitted as much when he said that, if the courts did not uphold his interpretation, the government would change the law).

That is brave stuff.

> Unlike Bill C-58, the objective of the "Cullen rule" was simple discrimination—to force Time and Reader's Digest to abandon their Canadian editions, regardless of whether they met the Canadian citizenship requirements of C-58. And, given the realities of Canadian publishing, the "Cullen rule" meant that Canada would probably never have a magazine which reported fully to Canadians on events beyond our borders.

He went on to say that the rule is asinine. I respectfully suggest that if that term were parliamentary, it could be applied to the government.

Mr. Alexander: We get the message.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Stevens went on to say:

This week, the government demonstrated that when it tripped on the second step, it had hit its head and scrambled its brains. Mr. Cullen announced that the 80 per cent rule would be waived for Reader's Digest, but not for Time.

That is the end of the quote. There are many in this House, and I am one, who are delighted to see Reader's Digest saved. We are receiving the correspondence and input from our constituencies. However, it is wrong for it to be saved in a way that is without principle, without rhyme or reason except for the worst kind of expediency. It sets a precedent that will make it easier for the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister of National Revenue to do the same the next time they are in trouble. Those are not the actions of a government that knows what it is doing. They are not the actions of a government that has any principle or—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but there seem to be quite a few debates on this side of the House. Perhaps some of these could be continued behind the curtain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for intervening. I really do not mind the debates on the other side. I live with the fond hope in my heart that they will be productive. I hope that they will screw up the courage of some of their members to stand against this bill.

I hope that some members opposite, if they support the position of the government, will think of the principle for which they stand. It is wrong? Indeed it is a non-principle. It is administrative law of the worst kind. As I said earlier, none of us particularly like the growth of administrative tribunals, but at least they permit hearings. The hearings are in public. There is a rule of practice and procedure to govern the conduct of the administrative tribunal and its consideration of the facts before it. But if this matter is allowed to proceed as the government intends it to proceed, there will be none of those precautions. It is unsound and unwise for this House to give any encouragement to these ministers in the circumstances.

In the government feels strongly about the question of principle, the whole matter of natural justice, and the proper body of administrative law, it will withdraw this bill, rethink the rules and its attitude and come back to the House with something new and better, something that shows there is a foundation for thinking it has a feeling for justice and equity. That is the issue. I hope that the number of members of the government side who are opposed to this grows. More than that, I hope that those who are opposed to it have the courage to stand in this House and say so.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The question is on motion No. 2 (Mr. Fairweather). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The question is on motion No. 3 (Mr. Roy (Timmins)). All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now proceed to motion No. 4.

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario) moved motion No. 4:

That Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 1 by adding immediately after line 14, at page 1, the following:

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act or Regulations, a periodical shall be deemed to be a Canadian issue of a Canadian periodical if 75% of its Directors and ownership are Canadian and its editing and publication functions are controlled and conducted in Canada and not more than 40% of its contents, excluding advertisements, were first published in a single periodical outside of Canada.

(3) Periodicals which were deemed not to be an issue of a non-Canadian periodical prior to the coming into force of this Act shall continue to be deemed to be a Canadian issue of a Canadian periodical for a period of two years following the coming into force of this Act provided notice of intention to publish in compliance with this Act has been filed with the Minister within one month of the coming into force of this Act."

He said: Madam Speaker, I must admit right at the beginning in moving my motion, and indeed in speeches I have already made on Bill C-58, that I find it extremely distasteful as a human being and a person to oppose the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). I think these gentlemen are people of honour and conviction who are genuinely trying to do something for the publishing industry. I have very great and high regard for both of them. Nonetheless I find it incumbent on me to move motion No. 4 in opposition to the bill which has been presented to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I suppose I can in some way justify myself to my colleagues by saying that I, as a person, refuse to disown my own principles for my own personal benefit and certainly cannot be expected to do so for someone else's. I have great respect for these men and I have a great respect for the opinions which have been presented on behalf of the government and by those who support the bill. I can only hope that those on the other side of the issue will have an equal amount of respect for those who differ with them. There is in this instance a genuine disagreement as to what is the best thing to do in the Canadian publishing field.

I am sure my feelings are shared by all members of the House of Commons when I say I strongly support the stated intention of this bill, that is, to assist the Canadian publishing industry. The question is: does the bill before us achieve that objective, or are there better ways in which this could be done? I think there are.

Because of the importance of the bill and the fact that it is a government measure, in the early days of Bill C-58 I took extraordinary steps to try to become acquainted with all sides of the question. I telephoned and wrote to all those directly affected, including Macleans, Time, Reader's Digest, MD of Canada and Modern Medicine asking them to present their views to me so that I might be able to make an informed judgment. I also discussed the matter with members of the government and with my colleagues in my own caucus. I did so to feel satisfied in my own mind that the decision I was about to arrive at was, indeed, the right one. I am satisfied I have now been exposed to all aspects of the subject.

I might also say that I am not an advocate of Time, Reader's Digest, or of the other magazines affected. I am certainly not a computer printout in favour of any of those publications. I am taking the position I am taking today because I believe it is the right one. I cannot accept the premise that this bill will in fact assist Canadian publishers in the way it should.

The crux of the difficulties in which the Canadian periodical industry finds itself is, in fact, a shortage of advertising revenue sufficient to generate a truly healthy publications industry. In addition, I believe there is a real concern about the effects of unfair competition resulting from the dumping of editorial matter into Canada. These concerns are real and genuine and they should be dealt with by the House in a substantive way.

I notice that the Senate Committee on the Mass Media indicated that there were really two basic problems encountered by the publishing industry. The first was the volume of overflow magazines coming into Canada primarily from the United States. The second was the intense competition in Canada among the various sectors of the media for the advertising dollar. Does the bill before us address itself to either of these central questions? I say it does not.

First, in connection with overflow magazines coming into Canada from the United States, the bill we are discussing does not even deal with the question at all though it is a substantial problem. For example, in 1964, a year for which I have the statistics, the number of overflow magazines coming in from the U.S. came close to 182,000,000. Salès of domestic magazines, excluding Time and Reader's Digest, totalled 418,000,000. This means that roughly half the magazines which are sold in Canada are in fact produced in the U.S.A. and sold in this country. This may well be a major problem but I have not seen anything in bill C-58 which deals with it or even pretends to do so.

The other substantial question with respect to this issue relates to an entirely different aspect, that is, the amount of advertising money spent in Canada by advertisers which in fact finds its way into the pockets of producers of Canadian magazines. Yesterday, or the day before, speaking on one of the amendments before us I indicated—and I was speaking off the top of my head—that the statistic was 2.8 per cent—that 2.8 per cent of the advertising dollar went into the pockets of the periodical industry in Canada. I have subsequently learned that this figure was not quite accurate. The fact is, it is 2.3 per cent. That is the last figure I have, for the year 1974. In the United States 6.5 per cent of the advertising dollar is spent in the periodical industry. In the United Kingdom it is 8.5 per cent, in France 16.8 per cent, in West Germany 27.9 per cent, and in Italy 33.2 per cent.

The real competitors of the magazine industry in this country are radio, television and newspapers. For instance, newspapers in this country corner 28.6 per cent of the advertising dollar spent in Canada. Television accounts for 14.1 per cent, radio for 11 per cent, business publications 2.9 per cent, and supplements 1.6 per cent. And, as I have said in Canada the periodical industry, to which we are addressing ourselves, gets 2.3 per cent.

It would be interesting to quote from the Senate committee report on the media in this connection. "Most magazine publishers in Canada do not regard the overflow circulation as a primary problem for them. It is simply part of their environment. What they are aware of, though, is the intense competition for advertising revenues between themselves and other sectors of the media. It is a scramble between radio, television, newspapers and magazines for available advertising dollars and the attention of audiences."

Between 1954 and 1968 the magazines' share of total advertising revenues dropped from 4.2 per cent to 2.3 per cent. The bill we are considering does not deal with that question at all. We can see a trend on the graph militating against the publishing industry in this country because of its inability to get a sufficient percentage of the advertising revenue available in Canada. That is a matter the bill fails to deal with at all.

The solution is to increase the amount of advertising from the 2.3 per cent level to a much more significant level, one which would create in Canada a healthy magazine industry.

Diversion of revenue could easily be achieved in the Income Tax Act by declining to allow tax exemptions for advertising unless a minimum of 5 per cent of such advertising were directed to the periodical industry. I would think that a ceiling should be placed on this; to be reasonable, one would not look at those figures in relation to advertisers spending less than $100,000 a year. But if they spent more than that, surely it would be proper for us to say they must allocate a certain proportion to periodicals. Surely it would be appropriate for us to say that they must divert a certain proportion of that advertising into the magazine industry if we want to pay more than lip service to the industry and, indeed, make it a healthy and prosperous segment of our economy. This would be beneficial to those in the field, the writers and all the multiplicity of people who are involved, and I think it would be a giant step toward creating some kind of cultural identity in Canada through the printed word in magazines.

Let me review for a moment what advertising revenue would be diverted from the four magazines that are primarily affected by this piece of legislation. As for Reader's Digest, in light of the recent announcement of its ability to comply with the legislation, obviously there will be no diversion of revenue from Reader's Digest to some other periodical in Canada. So from that standpoint there will be nil benefit to other publishers in Canada so far as Reader's Digest is concerned.

With respect to Modern Medicine and MD of Canada I do not want to go through the arguments all over again. I simply indicate that, in my humble view, there will be no diversion of advertising revenue either. The first point to be made in this respect is that these two magazines are free distribution magazines. They do contain Canadian advertisements now, but where would those advertisements go if in fact the two magazines cease publishing in Canada? Would they go to Maclean's magazine or to Weekend supplements? Anyone who knows anything about advertising knows that that advertising can only go into another trade magazine directed to that exclusive market.

Those who advertise medical products are not going to advertise their products to a group of farmers or to a group of people in the industrial field. They will try to direct their advertising to where it will pay the biggest dividends, which would be in the medical field. To my knowledge there is not one substantive magazine that will pick up that advertising revenue.

There may be some who might argue, as the Secretary of State argued, that in fact these magazines and others will still be available on the newsstands anyway, so there is no problem in regard, for instance, to access to or availability of information for Canadian doctors or others. I simply point out a self-evident feature: those two magazines have never been sold on a Canadian newsstand to date, and I can see no reason for believing they ever will in the future, because they do not have a dollar tag attached to them. So I suggest that argument does not mean much in terms of availability of information to Canadian doctors. I cannot see any likelihood of anyone continuing to publish either of these medical journals in Canada in the future when in fact they do not sell them. They are free circulation magazines.

In respect to Time magazine, what diversion of advertising dollars will there be to the Canadian periodical industry? This is a much more difficult case about which to make a substantive point. In my view, as a result of my studies of the question, I have concluded that there will be very little. I base my conclusion in part on this observation, that in Time Canada a large percentage of advertising consists of multinational ads, such as Haig & Haig, General Motors or whatever. These corporations also advertise in the United States. According to admissions made by the government, Time magazine will still be available in Canada; therefore Canadians will be exposed to the same advertising to a very substantial extent, the difference being that it was bought and paid for in the United States. It comes into Canada and we achieve no benefits from it whatsoever. So I do not really see that there is that much diversion of advertising.

There is another point in this regard. Advertisements which appear in Time magazine also have duplicates in many instances within the Canadian magazine. Exactly the same advertisement is placed in two different magazines, not an unusual practice for advertisers. Is it really reasonable to presume that if Time is not longer published in Canada they will place two identical ads in Maclean's magazine or some other Canadian publication? It is highly unlikely, in my view. In fact I think it is absurd to imagine this would happen.

I have therefore concluded that in terms of diversion of advertising dollars to the magazine industry this bill is just not what its advocates have said it is. In addition, there is the argument whether any diversion that might take place would go into the periodical industry or into some other media, such as radio or television. Clearly in this respect one has no more reason to believe it will all be diverted into the publications field as opposed to arguing that it will be diverted into other forms of media.

I have therefore concluded that the best answer to the problem of genuinely assisting the magazine industry is a reallocation of Canadian advertising, bringing a minimum portion of it to the Canadian periodical industry. I would suggest 5 per cent might be a base from which to start.

Let me next consider the competition aspects of the proposed legislation now before us. There was one very legitimate argument that causes us all some concern, I think, and that is the editorial dumping of material into Canada at rates not compensatory with the cost of generating that editorial material. Indeed that could bring about unfair competition for the Canadian magazine industry. However, does this bill really solve the problem? I do not think it does at all. Although it deals with it in part, we already have legislation on our books directed toward dumping and it would seem to me appropriate that the dumping question ought to be dealt with in dumping legislation.

The next point I am concerned about is the elimination or minimization of competition to Maclean's and other Canadian magazines by the removal of other magazines from Canada. Competition is something we all pay lip service to, some of us more genuinely than others. I think we would all agree that competition run rampant is not necessarily a good think and that we must protect our Canadian industries. None the less should we protect them in such a way as to preserve for some in the Canadian magazine industry a virtual monopoly? I do not think this would be in the interests of the Canadian public.

In response to the statement of the Secretary of State in regard to Canadian magazines, let me say that even the magazines that might have to go back to the United States will still be available in Canada. There is no question that that is largely true. In the case of the two medical journals I would disagree, so this argument really does not cut that much ice with me.

The fact is that Time magazine will indeed be available in Canada. The difference will be that there will be no Canadian ownership of Time, no Canadian control of Time, no Canadian content in Time, and no Canadian jobs generated as a result of its sale in Canada. In terms of the global national interest, I think those negative factors ought to be taken into account.

Let me look for a moment at the nationalism question. Have the Canadian people been stampeded into supporting a proposition that effectively makes nationalism a vehicle for wiping out legitimate competition and for lining the pockets of the publishing elite in Canada? I think there is reason for believing that may well be the case. I am nervous about that possibility and think it is inappropriate for a government to contribute in any way to that sort of thing happening. I am not saying it is a certainty, I am saying that I am nervous that this in fact will be the case, and I am not proposing to support the bill for this and a lot of other reasons.

There has been a lot of talk about this nationalism question. I am inclined to think that some would believe this under the guise of nationalism, and I think we are all economic, cultural nationalists in one way or another, and I certainly am. I am not prepared under that banner to come to the conclusion that we must have one set of standards for that which is Canadian and another set altogether which denies fair and equal treatment simply by virtue of the fact that it happens to be a foreign operation with which we are dealing. Indeed we have to protect our industries. I do not care if we nationalize them in many instances, but I do not want to see us simply rejecting or ejecting them from Canada by unfair and inappropriate treatment.

Let us look at the larger question that has been spoken about a great deal in this House, and that is the question of government control over editorial content. I must admit that in principle I have no objection to the government being involved in content regulations. In practice it is an extremely difficult area to be involved in, and I think there are considerable difficulties and dangers. However, I am not one who believes that the CRTC regulations, for instance, respecting Canadian content are bad. Clearly we have to take steps from time to time to encourage our own Canadian artists, writers and so on. I have no objection to these content regulations in principle, but I want to look at them very carefully to ensure that they achieve the objective we have in mind.

If we were to judge the newspaper industry in Canada in the same way we propose to judge the periodical industry in Canada with an "80 per cent not substantially the same as" rule. I am of the opinion on the basis of my research that there would hardly be a newspaper in Canada which would be allowed to publish. I do not know of any, including the Toronto Star, the Globe and Mail and others, which really could conform to an "80 per cent substantially different" from that which has ever appeared anywhere else rule.

That might be over-stating the case, but the principle is substantially right. We have established one set of rules for a particular publication industry, and have completely ignored those rules in respect of another larger segment. Perhaps there might be some good reason, and we might find if we ever debate it that in respect of the newspaper business there is no government with sufficient political influence to resist the onslaught to which it would be subjected. Politically we could not afford to do this in that industry, and I am not too sure we ought to have a different set of rules in respect of this industry.

This amendment I have put forward defines a Canadian periodical, and I want to deal with my definition of it. Before going into that I want to make a point in respect of the bill the government has put forward, C-58. This bill also defines a Canadian periodical, but not so much through the legislation we have before us but in fact through an interpretation of that legislation which is not before us. This is a difficult thing to accept, and I will deal with that more specifically later.

Effectively my approach to this is to bring within the law before parliament the definition of what a Canadian periodical is so that all of us can debate it and decide whether we agree. My definition parallels to some extent the definition already contained within the law: 75 per cent of the directors of the said firm must be Canadians; 75 per cent of its ownership must be in the hands of Canadians; its editing and publishing function must be controlled in Canada; all of its publication function must be conducted in Canada by Canadians; and not more than 40 per cent of its content can be first published in a single periodical outside Canada.

Effectively the difference is this: the 80 per cent rule put forward by the Crown is really, by my definition, the 60 per cent rule. You may agree or disagree about a few percentage points, and you may even agree or disagree on the subject of whether there should be any content regulations, but I think that all of us should have the right to make that determination within the law itself and not in some regulation or interpretation of the law that is not dealt with by parliament in this bill.

If my definition of a Canadian corporation does not constitute something that is Canadian, then what in the name of God would? That is really the question. In addition my amendment would allow a period of two years in which to comply. This would provide an opportunity for publications which wish to comply to divest themselves of their stock to Canadians, thus avoiding a fire sale or premature disposition of assets in a disorderly manner.

Surely that is not expecting too much when we have had magazines and periodicals in Canada operating under the law for many, many years. We should not turn around and kick them out of the country, or make them comply without giving them an adequate time frame in which to do so.

I have indicated also in my amendment that to qualify for the two-year period they must give a statement in writing to the minister showing their intent to comply within that two-year period. I think that is a very reasonable proposition. Some may argue that it should only be a year or 18 months. I am game, but one thing I am not game for is that there is no time at all. I believe the approach I have outlined would in fact help guarantee a healthier Canadian magazine industry than the approach presently being proposed in Bill C-58.

Yesterday the Secretary of State in an interesting, quite informative, and very good speech, indicated the difficulty in respect of the possibility of split-runs that might occur in Canada if the not substantially the same as provision were interpreted as being less than 80 per cent. That is a good argument, and I must admit it gives me some concern. However, reducing the 80 per cent interpretation to 60 per cent in my view would not really cause that kind of problem.

I should indicate that the problem of split-runs does not exist in Canada today under the existing law, except in possible cases of U.S. publications which are already resident in Canada. It is the introduction of the new law, Bill C-58, that gives rise to the problem about which the minister seems concerned. It is not those who oppose this legislation who are creating this difficulty, but in fact those who propose Bill C-58.

I should also make a point in response to the observation by some in respect of the fear that Americans or others would come into Canada and take over the ownership of existing periodicals and, therefore, be able to have a hybrid magazine, half American and half Canadian. Surely I do not need to draw to the attention of the House the existence of the Foreign Investment Review Act. Surely we all know it is not possible to do that if it is concluded that it is not in the public interest to do so. So that is really a red herring as far as I am concerned.

I have grave reservations about the law in respect of the ministerial interpretation aspects. Many have expressed that reservation; none, however, have touched the central point of the real, legitimate objection to this question. I think it has been overlooked. Clearly it is advisable to have the essence of a bill within the bill itself wherever that is possible. We all agree with that.

Some have suggested that the Crown should not interpret the law. That to me is an absurdity, for how can the law be applied unless it is interpreted? The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) implied that and others have suggested it, but I will not debate that point. That is my understanding and I do not want to make an issue of it.

The essential role of the Department of Justice, in my view, is to assist the Crown in the interpretation and application of the law. The essential new factor being brought out in this legislation and in the interpretation of "not substantially the same as" is that the Crown is interpreting those words in such a manner as to achieve a policy objective, and is the Crown really entitled to do so?

Is, in fact, the Crown entitled to interpret the letter of the law against itself, interpret it in such a way as to render its literal meaning meaningless? I say, definitely not. Is it not the obligation of the Crown to interpret the law as it believes it would be interpreted by a court, as it believes that interpretation would be upheld by a court? The Crown, in my view, has chosen an interpretation to suit its own purposes, not an interpretation which it believes can be upheld. If it believed it could be upheld in court, why the suggestion that if it did not, we will change the law? This appears to me to be a departure totally contrary to the normal methods of application of the law.

On the contrary, in the case of expropriation, on which I have considerable experience, the law is interpreted in a very narrow and harsh way against the people under the umbrella that the Crown has no choice because it must follow the law like everyone else. Can the government of Canada have it both ways? If it is right to interpret "substantially the same as" to obtain a policy objective, then why can we not interpret the Expropriation Act to achieve justice rather than victimize the expropriated? Essentially, in a democratic society we should live under the law, not under the arbitrary rule of men. In the British system the law must stand or fall on its own words.

The Secretary of State implied an element of obstructionism in respect of this bill by some members of parliament. I must say that I do not feel guilty of that in any way. Indeed I have spoken out and I intend to continue to speak out on this bill. I have no intention of being silenced, but I have no intention either of delaying this bill to prohibit parliament from coming to a quick and speedy decision in respect of it.

I am delighted that Reader's Digest has indicated its ability to comply with the law. Like many others I wonder what really happened to make it possible. On June 4, 1975, I suggested my real and genuine concern for the uniqueness of Reader's Digest and its reprint operations in Canada. I am delighted, whether anybody admits it or not, that there appears to be a different application of this law in relationship to such types of magazines, and I am pleased that they can comply. I think most of us in this House would agree with that.

Now I want to make another point about an observation made in respect of the committee system. Some have indicated a genuine concern that the committee system fell down in terms of its application of Bill C-58. I do not basically feel that way. I think that the essential criticism in connection with the handling of Bill C-58 in the committee is that the government did something particularly and notably stupid. I believe that it is simply counter-productive, even in political terms, to deny at least some people who oppose a bill, if they happen to be on the government side, membership on a committee. A lot of the heat would have been taken off had this not occurred.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I cannot say that I was denied access to the committee, even though I was.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: What I really mean is that I was not overtly denied access to the committee, but effectively I was denied it. I put my name down to sit on this committee long before the bill ever got there and I was assured that I would be able to sit on it. I must admit that since 1968 when I was elected I never wanted to get on a committee and failed to do so, but in this particular case—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please, I am afraid the hon. member is straying from his own motion.

Mr. Cafik: O.K., Madam Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Go on.

An hon. Member: It's pretty good.

Mr. Cafik: All I am saying is that I could not sit on the committee, but I am in the House and I shall express my views here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: In conclusion, to close off this perhaps too lengthy speech, I should like to say that I oppose Bill C-58 as it presently stands unamended for the following reasons:

First, it does not achieve its objective of enhancing the Canadian periodical industry in any real or substantive way.

Second, it creates a false impression that it does so.

Third, it embodies a departure from the traditional means of legislating by having its fundamental application outside of the bill presently before parliament. On principle I cannot accept this approach.

Fourth, the consequence of its passage would create a near monopolistic situation in the publishing industry, which is against the public interest.

Fifth, it is a distortion of true cultural and economic nationalism. Essentially it extends the definition of Canadian to something other than that which is Canadian. Canadianism in this context is irrelevant, content becomes the relevant factor.

Sixth, its effective application will mean a net loss of jobs, job opportunities, and economic benefits to this country.

Seventh, it seeks not to give Canadian control over publishing activity in Canada, which is not now Canadian, but in fact makes it a virtue to force such Canadian subsidiaries of foreign publishers outside of Canada altogether rather than to Canadianize them.

Eighth, it would make more sense to Canadianize that which is in Canada than it does to bring forward a bill which has the potential of defining that which is Canadian as foreign. The real danger of this bill is that Macleans magazine could be considered a foreign periodical if it does not watch out.

Ninth, it would make more sense to assist positively the Canadian publication industry through positive action and the direction of more advertizing to it than it does to insulate it from competition and to guarantee for posterity a hothouse publication industry incapable of standing on its own feet in the world or in the marketplace.

Finally, its primary thrust is a holding out of false hopes to publishers and paying little or no attention to the interests of the consumers.

I urge that all members of the House support my proposed amendment. By doing so I believe that we shall improve the present legislation, bring the substantive provisions of the law under statute, resist passing a law in the interest of the elite against the interest of the many, substantially provide economic benefit to Canada, enhance our employment opportunities for Canadian writers, and give more than lip service to the legitimate and genuine concerns expressed by the Canadian people.

● (2100)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member's time expired at one minute past nine. There would have to be unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Will the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) allow a question?

Mr. Cafik: By all means.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I do not want to detract from the magnificent speech made by the hon. member, but at the beginning of his speech he spoke about a tax allowance which he would propose, or a new form of permission in order to have an exemption for advertising placed in periodicals. I should just like to confirm that no allowance would be permitted unless 5 per cent of advertising revenue were diverted into the periodical field. I think the hon. member said that, and then he spoke of a limit of $100,000. It was that aspect of his comments which I did not hear. I wonder if he could help me with that.

Mr. Cafik: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the question and the opportunity to clarify this particular point. What I am really saying is that to divert advertising into the periodical industry it is better to have the kind of limitation I spoke of earlier, and to which the hon. member referred, but I did indicate that for practical purposes it would be extremely difficult to expect everyone who advertises at a cost of $100, $1,000 or $10,000 to divert a certain portion of it to the magazine industry. However, those who are large advertisers—and that is why I set an arbitrary figure; perhaps $100,000 is not appropriate—and advertise at a cost of $100,000 per year ought to be forced to divert at least 5 per cent of that advertising into the periodical industry. That would double the amount of advertising available to magazines in Canada, and in my view it would make it a much healthier industry and create many new and desirable Canadian publications.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, in speaking to the motion put forward by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) I should first like to commend him for making known his views on the Canadian publishing industry and for expressing in a very positive manner what he thinks could help it. He obviously came to the same conclusion many of us did, and that is that Bill C-58 will not help the Canadian publishing industry. The arguments which have been made that it will help merely raise false hopes, and they are raised for people who very often are unable to compete in the market place but think they should have the right to do so.

The hon. member for Ontario did not sit on the committee, for his own reasons or for others. There were other hon. members who wanted to sit on the committee, and I say to the minister and to the government that if the whips would come off, there would be a number of other hon. members opposite who would agree almost totally with the points the hon. member for Ontario just finished making because Bill C-58 through second reading, through the committee, and now in the report stage has been a shell game, in that the government has been trying to push something through this House which is supposed to do something it will not do.

Mr. Fleming: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: The hon. member objects to my saying that the government has been trying to push it through, but the hon. member knows that very well. He sat on the committee with us, and there was de facto closure. The minute the committee sat we were told that it would not sit beyond the Friday, and no matter what we said, whom we wanted to bring in as witnesses, or how many times we wanted to sit, the hon. member was one who kept insisting that the committee could not sit beyond the Friday. He spoke against—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member is straying from the motion. Perhaps he could limit his comments to the motion.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, I have a question of privilege. I simply want to correct the hon. member. I do not remember repeatedly insisting. I simply remember supporting the motion that we get on with this bill because the bill had been under consideration for a year, or almost a year at that time.

Mr. Epp: Obviously the hon. member is just as touchy in the House as he was in the Committee.

An hon. Member: Look who's talking.

Mr. Epp: I am rather enjoying the manner in which hon. members opposite are trying to take the load of guilt off their minds after one of their members has shown them so clearly to be as empty as they are.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: If any of them wish to make a speech, I will gladly relinquish my place. However, they were not able to speak in committee, and they do not want to speak here either.

I am trying to get back to the amendment, and I will as soon as the warblers on the other side quit singing.

I have the same difficulty with the motion before us as I had with the one we discussed yesterday which was moved by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). At that time I stated that in principle I was opposed to a content rule as such, that is, I did not like a content rule established in statute, through regulation, as the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) would like to have it, or anywhere else. I would much prefer an operation whereby the government in general principle establishes what it would like to see in the publishing industry. Reader's Digest tried to be a good corporate citizen and to become part of the Canadian family of Canadian publications, so to speak.

I have difficulty with the first part of this motion in that it calls for 60 per cent being not substantially the same, but it does have my support for one reason—notwithstanding the caveat I just placed before the House—and that is that at least the hon. member for Ontario is trying to define for the House, for Canadians, for publishers and for everyone concerned what the regulations are. He wants them placed in the statute, and that has my support.

Just to show the manner in which this whole issue has been clouded again, a so-called deal has been made with Reader's Digest. By not placing the ground rules into the statute the minister is able to interpret in such a way that one magazine is in and the other is out. If the minister's moods change, these magazines will depend on his good wishes. Therefore the hon. member for Ontario has my complete support for at least trying to define for the House and for Canadians what qualities a magazine must have in order to qualify as a Canadian magazine for tax purposes.

Why are we considering only Reader's Digest and Time Canada? Why not the newspaper industry? Would the newspapers that we read every day qualify under the regulations which the minister said will operate after passage of Bill C-58? These newspapers get many of their stories from UPI, Reuters, and Canadian Press. UPI and Reuters are foreign wire services, but the minister and the government have chosen that they be not regarded as foreign material. The government's approach to the whole question has been so arbitrary that it is almost inconceivable that it thinks that members of parliament and the Canadian public would accept the minister's interpretation, just rubber stamp it, and allow it to become the law.

It is clear that this legislation will not enhance the Canadian periodical industry especially since the decision has been made to allow Reader's Digest in through the back door. The constant argument put before us in committee was that Reader's Digest and Time were taking too many advertising dollars and that if they did not qualify for the available advertising money it would go to Canadian magazines. Now that Reader's Digest can continue to exist surely that argument does not hold. But that is the impression proponents of this bill are trying to foist upon members of the House and Canadians generally.

Some of the members opposite have come to me in private asking why we worry about the details at this point. They say, "We have saved Reader's Digest, so why be concerned?" Madam Speaker, it was not a matter of worrying how to save Reader's Digest. That was not the point. The point was that we wanted the government to define what a Canadian periodical was, and to have that enshrined in the statute. That way we would know what the ground rules were, but that has not happened.

The hon. member's motion at least attempts to show his government colleagues that we need to know what the ground rules are, but I get the impression they are going to ignore him. I believe their minds were made up long before the debate on second reading began. Indeed the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) told us that we spent so much time on second reading that the bill should now go through. Surely that is not the issue. We still do not have in the legislation the qualifications that a periodical must meet to be considered a Canadian publication for tax purposes.

I frankly believe that the government has advisers with vested interests in the Canadian magazine industry who tried to get the percentage of "not substantially the same" high enough that they knew Reader's Digest and especially Time would not be able to function as we have known them. Time and after time Maclean's magazine and the Canadian Periodicals Association argued that 80 per cent was the absolute minimum they could live with. At one point the representative of the Canadian Periodicals Association said they wanted 100 per cent but had discussed the matter with the minister—even though later on it was denied that they were in on the negotiations—and they would be satisfied with 80 per cent. I do not see how that attitude can have changed now with the so-called Reader's Digest deal, because the 80 per cent is interpreted in such a way that it is meaningless relative to the way the representations were made by those two organizations.

Throughout this debate we have seen the virtual cartel and monopolistic attitude of Maclean's. It wants to become the news magazine in Canada. In the past it has not been able to compete with Time Canada so it is saying that in order to compete we must remove the competition, and it has the government and the minister doing the dirty job for it. The facts are quite clear, Madam Speaker. That is what is happening in Canada right now.

Let us look at Maclean's magazine, Madam Speaker. As with any other product, you and I can choose to buy it or not. Its problem was not that it could not sell advertising but that Canadians did not want to buy Maclean's magazine in the volume needed—

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, they wrote "Renegrade in Power".

Mr. Epp: —in order to function as a news magazine. Then it published bi-monthly in the anticipation that the government would be able to ram Bill C-58 through the House. I believe it was the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) who said in committee that this was the tender blossom we were going to nurture. Surely Maclean's can stand on its own two feet. Why do we have to go through this in order to protect this magazine?

The hon. member for Ontario has made an honest attempt to lay specific ground rules by which everyone can operate but I am fearful that the government is turning a deaf ear to one of its own. The second part of his motion proposes a two year hoist during which magazines which are not presently Canadian would be able to divest their foreign stock and achieve the minimum of 75 per cent Canadian ownership. I do not know in what manner Reader's Digest would divest itself of its foreign interest in order to qualify under the 75 per cent rule, but the hon. member's motion calls for a two year moratorium.

I am convinced, that in this so-called deal Reader's Digest has been given a certain amount of time to divest itself of its foreign holdings. How much time was it given, Madam Speaker? What was the deal, how long can it function without meeting the 75 per cent criteria? The minister has not chosen to tell us, yet we as members are supposed to accept his assurances that he has everything under control—but do not ask about the details, just rubber stamp what he is doing outside the House.

Mr. Woolliams: Trust him.

Mr. Epp: Yes, trust him. The way we have seen these people operate since 1968, I think trust is the last thing we can give them.

Through you, Madam Speaker, I ask the Minister of National Revenue how long Reader's Digest was given to divest itself of enough foreign interest that it would qualify for the 75 per cent Canadian ownership rule? We do not know that, and I think it is incumbent upon the minister to tell us. The hon. member for Ontario asks for two years. For all I know the minister gave Reader's Digest two years.

● (2120)

Mr. Woolliams: Or perhaps five years.

Mr. Epp: Perhaps five years; who knows?

An hon. Member: Are you questioning the minister's integrity?

Mr. Epp: I do not think the hon. member should speak from his seat. Perhaps he knows how long the magazine was given.

An hon. Member: Two years.

Mr. Epp: I suppose the hon. member knows.

An hon. Member: I trust the minister.

Mr. Epp: How naïve. I assume that hon. members do not know. Some hon. members rise in the House to support the minister's position, in the hope that perhaps they will get some tidbits dropped from the tables of the rich, as it were. The minister has made no definitive statement on how long Reader's Digest has been given to comply with the 75 per cent Canadian ownership rule. It is incumbent on him to tell the House. For all we know he has given the magazine two years to comply, in conformity with the hon. member's motion. I predict that even if the government grants Reader's Digest two years, it will defeat the hon. member's motion, as it will want to say to the Canadian people, "We will not cave in." That is what it will say.

What can be said about Canadian nationalism, or economic nationalism? We have heard much talk these days about how we are to repatriate our national identity, as it were, or our nationalistic identity. If Maclean's ever becomes the arbiter of Canadian nationalism we shall be in trouble. As it is that magazine is given almost carte blanche to define what is Canadian and what is not. That raises an interesting point. Just before the Christmas recess when the committee sat, Maclean's took the position that it is the leading Canadian news magazine; yet strangely it said nothing about the work of the committee discussing Bill C-58. I suppose it would have been hard for the magazine to be objective about Bill C-58 in view of the particular interest, the tie-in, so to speak, Maclean's had in the bill. So it ignored the committee. Perhaps that was better than saying something hard to substantiate.

Surely passage of this bill will not promote Canadian nationalism. What is it in our thinking that says we can compete only if we stack the rules? Why do we think we can compete only if we stack the deck? To illustrate my point I wish to read part of an editorial appearing in today's Toronto Sun, a newspaper known for its economic nationalism.

Mr. Symes: It is a great, progressive journal.

Mr. Epp: Finally I agree with the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) who calls the Toronto Sun a progressive journal. I never knew he had such insight. I can see that he is learning. He is listening to Conservatives and learning. Perhaps there is hope for him.

The editorial in the Sun said in part:

> We are becoming petty, piggy nationalists. Ottawa encourages the stealing of American TV programs and the inserting of our ads for something we haven't paid for; Ottawa gives public money to artists and writers which, far from developing new talent. tends to encourage old mediocrity . . .

Bill C-58 is bad legislation which the minister's regulations will make worse. I hope that hon. members opposite recognize the courage of one member on the government side, vote in support of his motion and demonstrate their respect for him, which he deserves.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, if Longfellow were alive he would write, "Sail on, thou censorship of state."

Mr. Woolliams: Good girl!

Mrs. Holt: May I, before I say any more, introduce a subamendment to motion No. 4 moved by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik). I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy):

> That motion No. 4 be amended by striking out all the words in subclause (2) after the words 'conducted in Canada'.

In other words, I wish to remove anything that controls content in this country's culture.

Mr. Epp: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Where is the great NDP?

Mrs. Holt: I ask the support of my colleagues in the House for the subamendment which would totally remove any content control over our cultural carriers. I would even fight a 1 per cent content control. By the way, it is difficult for me to vote on these amendments because of what happened in committee. Any compromise here would be welcome; but I shall vote for all the amendments in the hope that some semblance of justice can come out of at least two of them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: I am so positive that Canada's and Canadians' freedom is in great danger with such interference with basic civil rights like the freedom to choose what we read, what we watch on television, what we think, even for that matter in the commercial area, where we advertise, and where we sell our commodities. I would have preferred the amendment to deal also with ownership, because arbitrary figures create ridiculous modes of measurement. I would have preferred language like "controlling interest by Canadians" which would be 51 per cent and up. I fear that one day control will fall into the hands of some of the existing Canadian publishing monopolies whose cynicism, negativism, in many instances contempt and a sort of perpetual sneering at every institution of law and national management, are sorely hurting our nation.

Personally, I admire the work done by Reader's Digest, Time, MD of Canada, and station KVOS in Bellingham for Canadians. I immensely admire the work of KVOS and am impressed with their activities; when I compare their works with what we get from the monopoly group, I would almost like to invest, in them if I were free to do so. That is because I trust their policy more than I trust the cultural monopoly power that seems to have Canada in its control and is distorting our institutions.

Incidentally, for the record, I wish to correct the impression the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) left about that tender flower, the Maclean-Hunter group. He talked about the wealth of that monopoly. It is not a Canadian monopoly; it just happens to have its headquarters here. It operates 101 various businesses including technical, consumer, and special interest magazines, newspapers, five radio stations, a TV station, a cable TV system and programming services. Is that freedom? Is that independence? It also has 12 business and technical magazines in England, eight business journals, three cable television systems in the United States, four magazines and six marketing services in South Africa, six publications in key cities in Europe, and so on. As the hon. member for Parry-Sound-Muskoka said, this is the tender flower for which Bill C-58 has been produced to protect.

It is absolutely fundamental to a free society that government must never be allowed to control thought. It must not be allowed to control what people read and what they watch. Anyone who votes lightly on this bill, and I refer to my colleagues whom I respect and admire, should not vote away our basic right, inviting a new era where books not acceptable to our cultural "Fürhrer" are burned. We do not know who will be controlling our culture in the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: The Department of the Secretary of State has shouted that the bill—

An hon. Member: Do you support your leader?

Mrs. Holt: I do support our leader, and I have supported many cabinet members. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) shouted "this bill is not censorship." He, or someone in his department, actually placed a telephone call across Canada to an editorial writer who seemed to understand the English language as well as he does. He, or one of his agents, denied that it was censorship. Perhaps the Secretary of State, his staff, or both, should study the new Concise Oxford Dictionary recently delivered to his office free of charge. It reads:

> Censor . . . Ancient-Roman magistrate drawing up register or census of citizens and supervising public morals; person expressing opinions on other's morals and conduct; 2. Official licensing, or suppressing as immoral, seditious, or inopportune, books, plays, letters, news, or military intelligence (vb, exercise such control over, make excisions or changes in.)

George Bernard Shaw said:

Censorship ends in logical completeness when nobody is allowed to read any books except the books nobody can read.

I suspect there are such illusions of grandeur that the time will come when someone in the Secretary of State Department will suggest an expurgated version of Shakespeare.

I wish to read a letter which was sent to the Secretary of State on August 11, 1975, by the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association. It deals with this very question of content. The association says that no matter how much he protests—and methinks he doth protest too much—this is censorship.

It is funny. The Secretary of State sent us all supportive material, especially that of the Canadian Periodical Association, which was formed only a few years ago obviously to push for a protectionist bill of this sort. However, he did not send me this letter from the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association. I cannot understand it. Maybe hon. members will understand when they hear it. I doubt whether any members received it, but I hope those in the NDP did. I understand they are going to vote for this bill. I will explain later why they might find themselves in a terribly uneasy position.

I also wonder how the former revenue minister, my friend, and the great Justice Minister, probably Canada's greatest Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), can vote for the bill in view of his involvement in this statement. I will read the letter. It will then be understood why many members here will have to change their minds about their vote. I quote:

Dear Mr. Minister:

Re: Income Tax Act and "Foreign" Publications

Thank you for your letter of 10 July, 1975 regarding changes in the tax legislation or enforcement policy proposed to be made in connection with "foreign" publications.

You will of course recall that we did not propose creation or continuation of special status for any magazine within the class of "foreign" or "domestic" publications. Our objection is to your stated intention of treating certain publications, even if owned and printed in Canada (and hence factually domestic) as "foreign" on the basis of content.

We note that you assure us that the government's aim is not to impose any form of censhorship. The purpose is to ensure that Canadian magazines' content is not substantially the same as that of other publications.

Mr. Woolliams: Were you ashamed of your Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in Cuba?

Mrs. Holt: I am not ashamed of my Prime Minister.

Mr. Alexander: He was talking to Joe.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has the floor. I suggest that hon. members listen to her.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Thank you Mr. Speaker. I continue the quote:

To these explanations there is a short (and technical) and a long (and principled) rebuttal.

[Mrs. Holt.]

The short answer is that the tax deductibility of an expense incurred for the purposed of earning income (e.g. advertising costs) is the normal rule. Deduction of expenses does not appear to us to be a "privilege" which the government of the day has allowed a business only where socially desirable aims are to be achieved by the outlay. Deductibility is the ordinary rule and not a "special advantage" as your Time and Reader's Digest press release suggests. Thus the content test which may result in non-deductibility for advertising in certain publications (which may be domestically owned and printed) creates an anomaly operating against those publications. It does not remove an anomaly which once favoured them.

More fundamentally however we must differ with you as to the aims to be promoted by content regulations. You appended to your letter to us a recent press release from your office quoting a passage from the O'Leary Report:

All members know it. They have seen it ad nauseam. I do not have to read it. They can get copies of it and read it.

Unfortunately we cannot consider the promotion of a "truly Canadian" outlook by the destruction of what have hitherto been publications supported by Canadian readers as other than censorship. Censorship in our understanding is content control or content manipulation by government.

I will repeat that, in case some members missed it.

Censorship in our understanding is content control or content manipulation by government. The O'Leary Report proposes manipulation of content to create a distinctive Canadian cultural identity. The current tax proposals (including the revival of enforcement of the 1965 content definition of foreign status) appear to adopt the O'Leary approach as government policy.

We do not know what aspect of content a future government, still disclaiming (as you do) any intention to censor, might see fit to consider in imposing taxation. A still more nationalistic administration might decide to define only writings about Canada as "domestic" for taxation purposes. A paternalistic government might decide that creation of jobs for Canadian writers was so high a priority that only Canadian citizens' work would rank as domestic. As civil libertarians we would not be concerned with what laudable motives might underlie either of these forms of content manipulation. Nor are we concerned with the policy of cultural renaissance which underlies the current government's policy. Our objection is to the intended results, not to the reason for seeking those results.

Before pressing through parliament legislation to accomplish this change in Canadian magazine content we ask you once again to consider whether the public choice of reading matter might not better be left to the market place.

Now I'll tell you why the NDP should be a little uncomfortable. Some will be voting here on it. The list of honorary directors on this letterhead includes the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas); the hon. Minister of Justice; the Hon. David Barrett, who was the former NDP premier of British Columbia; Rosemary Brown, MLA, who was once runner up for the leadership and went quite far with the NDP party; Hugh Curtis, who is now Minister of Urban Affairs and Housing in British Columbia. There are mayors, men of the cloth, the Reverend R. R. Cunningham; the Hon. Judy LaMarsh, to name a name that is well known to many on this side of the House; Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, another well known figure, and on and on.

That is the end of the letter. The ramifications and obvious intent of Bill C-58 are frightening to me as a writer, as one who wants to read Time, not Time, U.S.A. with the Canadian content deleted.

As to all this talk about how we are free to get Time, how we can get Newsweek which has no special privileges, or perhaps Oui, or Playboy, or Penthouse, we are able to get them, yes, but they didn't come to Canada, publish, give jobs, spend money here. I say, as one who believes Western Canada is not included as part of the national scene, because nationalism in Canada only extends about the fringes of Toronto, that perhaps those who are treating this bill lightly did not read the record of the Broadcasting Committee on Bill C-58 or understand the meaning of that dialogue.

When the Secretary of State and the senior officials of Revenue Canada tried to explain how they would measure content for the purpose of this legislation and how they would act as watchdogs over publications throughout the world—they might have to do that, they said, to be sure that the act would be followed—I was even more appalled at what the prospect of this bill would become. Phrases and rationalisations, perhaps even manipulations of truth, were quite remarkable and indicated the ridiculousness of trying to use the ruler of science or mathematics to measure culture and content.

Here are some of the remarkable phrases used in connection with content measurement: "continuing arrangements for access to material"; in other words, it isn't Canadian content, they don't care about Canadian writers in this bill. Norman Mailer could write, and the revenue people explained this. He could write in this magazine and be published and be acceptable. We are always protecting the publishers, not the writers and not those in allied trades. It must be "essentially different", whatever that means.

Then they talked of a "criterion for methodology" for measuring content. Then there were numerical interpretations which might be contributed to the word "substantial". It was a remarkable night, especially December 4, and I must say I did attend all the meetings. It was rather Gilbert and Sullivanesque, even Mack Sennett in many ways, except it was so serious.

Things like this happened. The man from Revenue, a senior civil servant who must answer the committee whether he believes in it or not, said, "If, for example, in our measurement we came up with 40 per cent it is arguable that it should have been 39 per cent, or 38 per cent, or 41 or 42 per cent, but apart from a minor margin of error we have not met any undue difficulties nor do we foresee any undue difficulty in measuring the arithmetic of the thing."

They are not getting a panel of editors, of journalists, of cultural experts to measure it. They are going to do it by a computer, or by one of those little pocket machines that add. They said there might be more difficulty in the area of "continuing arrangement" but it was felt desirable to insert this into the policy because otherwise officials of the Department of National Revenue would be expected to search all periodicals throughout the world to see whether a spot article was derived from something in Afghanistan—hear that: they have to go to Afghanistan to be sure it didn't happen there—or to Baluchistan, and I don't even know where that place is.

It is by establishing whether there is or is not a continuing arrangement that the matter becomes administrable. That is so fantastic as to be almost incomprehensible. If that were so, why every newspaper in Canada has a continuing arrangement with the New York Times, the Associated Press, United Press International, or Los Angeles Times writers. Even the University Press has a continuing arrangement. Who knows, they may develop a continuing arrangement with Xavier Hollander.

Some hon. Members: Explain!

Mrs. Holt: That is for you to explain, gentlemen!

When the witnesses at that committee meetings were trying to explain "substantially different" and "continuing relation" in order to hit this target, they obviously fluttered around. They could only miss the bull's eye, Reader's Digest, Time, etc. which they were out to get. There is no doubt in my mind that when the rules changed from May 5 to October 23, and finally in the last week to make a special privilege for Reader's Digest, which in a few years will return to haunt Reader's Digest in a new Bill 58, the objectives were clear.

They will hit the whole outer edge of the target and not just Reader's Digest and Time, all foreign news and features, even the comics, except for Ben Wicks' little item. They seem not to realize that they will be the victims. Those are the dangerous ramifications I urge you to reject. When you play with content you endanger the freedom of choice to publish, you endanger the freedom of availability of culture.

One of Vancouver's most eminent writers, an international author and journalist, Lisa Hobbs, responded to a statement made in Vancouver at the opening of the CBC building by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner). The hon. gentleman had stated:

> We can't compete if Canadian interests are left to their own initiatives. Do they (people) want us simply to become a total U.S. cultural satellite? We have to recognise that we must work against that eventuality. And in the leadership of that effort must be the Canadian government.

Lisa Hobbs asked:

> How would this "leadership" be expressed? According to Mr. Faulkner, in "controlling the importation of foreign culture." It is a nice phrase. It means denying us access to it, which means censorship. And it rings with the echo of the boot. There is no free society in the world today that censors publishing and the arts.

The minister announced at the committee hearings that he had a cultural plan for Canada. Once before in history a government announced a cultural plan in the name of nationalism. That government called itself "National Socialist". It is kind of frightening that the socialists here are also nationalists. I stand up today and speak against my government, with sadness but with intensity, because I know the end result of cultural planning. I am not as young as all the rest of you here, and I remember. I am just an amateur here but I've got gears! I remember that in the name of nationalism books were burnt and that, in the striving for purity of race and nationalism, millions died. I do not want even to start to set in motion any form of controls that can lose us our freedom.

Another very disturbing aspect that the CBC has uncovered is the power of Canadian publishers in Canada. Every writer of books knows very well that it is the publisher who makes the money. Anyone who tells a Canadian author that he can get rich, even with a best seller, is trying to deceive him, especially if the Canadian publisher is absorbed in making a few of the eastern idols even richer. I say that from personal knowledge. Every author is but part of the publisher's stable and few ever making a living out of books. It is the publisher who makes the money if you have a best seller for him; he only cares about the buck. Oh, they love their authors—as long as they write and allow use of their names.

I should like to mention another interesting point, something that has gone on for a great length of time, not something for which this particular government is responsible. Perhaps even the leaders of hon. gentlemen opposite started it, or some senior civil servants. I am never sure who is running my life around here.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): The whip.

Mrs. Holt: The whip is a great man. He smiles at me even when he knows I am not doing quite the thing he would like me to do. If anyone is thinking of becoming a Canadian writer, whether he be a journalist or an editorial writer, let them forget it because no one cares about them.

The Department of External Affairs has played a strange game in all of this. The Canadian embassies' reading rooms and libraries will not accept works of Canadian authors unless they are published by Canadian publishing houses. There were many outstanding Canadian writers for Macmillan Publishing, but their books could not qualify for Canadian embassies. Maclean-Hunter bought out Macmillan and they suddenly became Canadian, their publications could go into embassies and much money was spent on them, for which they received royalties. Canadians who write for Ryerson lost their Canadian identity as far as external affairs' reading rooms were concerned as soon as the publishing house was bought out by Americans. How petty, how ridiculous, and how unnationalistic that is.

I hope that as of today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) will end this discrimination against Canadian authors who choose to publish where they will. I personally am a Canadian author, not because I was born in Canada but because I happen to publish with a Canadian publisher. But I will not be publishing with a Canadian publisher in future because I think American subsidiaries care about us westerners, about Canadian culture and writers, just a little more than the Toronto mafia.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope those socialists are listening.

Mrs. Holt: As I say, it is ironic that the content control is not designed to protect Canadian writers. It does nothing for Canadian publishing. Everything it does is for the publisher, the billionaire conglomerates. Southam's are linked with Maclean's in many enterprises and they are pulling out their foreign correspondents. There are only two foreign correspondents in Peking offices to cover the situation in China. In other words, if continuing content is to be the rule we will not be getting any foreign news from China because we can only get it through a continuing arrangement with Associated Press and all the other agencies.

The history of Bill C-58 makes me think of a king who is in a card game and cannot stand to lose. He changes the rules as he goes along. He becomes ridiculous and the game not worth the playing. I wonder though if even that king would tear up the cards or ultimately assassinate his opponent when the rules are changed so much that they come full circle to start again.

The rules in this bill have been changed several times. On May 5 the requirement was that half the content was to be "new, fresh, original material which has not appeared in any periodical outside Canada". Obviously that strange dictum had one purpose, and it was a dangerous purpose. Perhaps it was written by an accountant rather than a person of culture—perhaps a schoolteacher. No one can really define "new, fresh, original material". I defy anyone to tell me what that is. Perhaps the Secretary of State has never heard it said that there is nothing new under the sun. Perhaps there is nothing really fresh or original either.

To show the danger of this whole exercise, when it was discovered that Time was ready to meet the May 5 dictum the "king" quickly changed the rules and on October 23 content suddenly was no longer 50 per cent but 80 per cent. Now it has been changed again. One victim is now saved, Reader's Digest, and its French edition Selection. I can only suspect that this was the result of political expediency. Perhaps a few members on this side can accept that kind of deal, but I cannot because of the danger of the principle involved. It is not acceptable to me, and I doubt whether Reader's Digest will be able to face the repercussions of once more being accused of being given special privileges.

This is reminiscent of a strange event in the prohibition era. When the United States could not get Al Capone for the substantive offences of murder and bootlegging, they got him on income tax evasion. Canada is doing the same thing here in order to rid the community of Reader's Digest, Time, MD, and KVOS Bellingham and other border stations. Other small publications will also become victims. But none of these are criminals. They are not the Al Capones of culture. On the contrary, they are good corporate citizens, perhaps too moral for the swingers who saw Reader's Digest, during the bead and beard hippie era, as a symbol of despised morality and Time as the symbol of patriotism in the Viet Nam explosion.

If law is written to cure an imagined ailment—a sort of sociological hypochrondia, perhaps a cultural hypochondria, imagined and not real— by the Department of the Secretary of State, using the Department of Revenue as its tool, it can only end negatively and dangerously.

The dangers to freedom of choice and the spin-offs from that have been referred to already. It is difficult for me to conceive of any government, any body of people, assigned to this very serious duty we have been given by the electorate, creating law here that is not positive, is not for the good of the majority and the nation, but is built on a negative, an anti-American bias.

I should like to challenge anyone in this House to put on those scales of justice what will be gained for Canada and Canadians by this action, and what will be lost. They will find little if anything of gain, and the loss will rock the scale off its base.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I just wonder if I might inquire of the parliamentary assistant to the government House leader about the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we will be proceeding with Bill C-58 tomorrow.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTION THAT PROVISION FOR EQUALITY OF SEXES WITH REGARD TO INCOME BE MADE MANDATORY

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will try to get as much as I can into my seven minutes on this very important issue. Approximately one third of the Canadian work force is made up of women, and almost all of that total, some 2 million, are subjected to job discrimination in terms of the income they are paid. All the rhetoric and supposed efforts of the government to one side, considering what the government has attempted or is alleged to have attempted in the past ten years, instead of the gap between women's and men's income narrowing in that past decade it has widened.

The most recent statistical information provided by the women's bureau within the federal Department of Labour, published in this year, indicates that the wage and salary position of women in the Canadian labour force during the past decade has become worse and not better. The average pay for a woman now is 60 per cent of that of a man doing the same job.

Fully two thirds of women in the work force are doing four categories of work, namely, clerical, sales, service, and professional. The one group, and I think this is understandable, that has made some progress in recent years has been the professional group. I am sure all Canadians and members in all parties will be pleased at that fact, but will not be so pleased about the other fact, and that is that with respect to the other categories of women their average income position has worsened.

Let me present to the House four illustrations of the current situation in respect of women's incomes as compared to men's. These figures again come from the Department of Labour and are the most recent, being for the year 1973. The first category is hospital workers and medical lab technologists. The average monthly pay for a woman was $659, and for a man $693. For hotels employing 200 or more people, men earned on the average of $464 a month, and women $427. In real estate, clerical and related workers, women earned on the average $3.25 an hour compared to $3.82 for men. In banks and financial institutions, for those who were in a supervisory position, as of 1973, women earned on the average $4.39 per hour, as compared to $5.67 for men. In clerical positions in the same financial institutions women averaged $3.15 a hour, and men once again subtantially more, $3.94.

One could go on with a whole variety of average and low income occupations and show the remarkable and sad discrepancy which exists between men's and women's salaries in 1975. The government, in terms of its program for International Women's year, last year spent a lot of money, but in the main spent money on glib advertising campaigns, in my view, and on rather sexist slogans such as "Why Not?" and "Pourquoi non?", but did almost nothing in terms of removing the discrepancy which exists by taking concrete steps in national terms. I am not talking about federal employees only, but in national terms the government took almost no measures to remove that discrepancy in income which exists between working men and women.

There was one opportunity which would have enabled the federal government to show in a demonstrable way its serious concern about the situation in recent months, and that was of course the anti-inflation legislation. As the minister knows, there is a specific exemption from the guidelines provided in the legislation which would enable employers in Canada to go beyond the guidelines for wages and salary increases if the purpose were "to eliminate sex discrimination in pay practices". That is a laudable exemption provided in the legislation. It would have been more laudable, I suggest, if the government had followed up once again with something other than the permissive phrase that is in the legislation and had actually taken steps to implement seriously that possibility which it leaves open to employers. There was nothing in the regulations that I was able to see pertaining to this fact following the passage of the legislation.

The government has done nothing in terms of publicity to private employers stressing the moral obligation—because it is not within federal jurisdiction but in a provincial area where most people are employed—that private employers should now have to eliminate this unjust and outdated discrimination.

There is nothing that I am aware of that the federal government has done in terms of its negotiations with the provinces to persuade, cajole, or coerce in some way the provinces to take direct steps to implement on a mandatory basis this permissive clause in the anti-inflation program. I repeat that it would have been a glorious opportunity for the government to try to implement within the framework of its anti-inflation legislation a policy which in 1976 could have led to the virtual elimination of wage and salary discrimination between men and women in Canada. I suggest that it is a step which is long overdue.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was fascinated to hear the hon. gentleman say that the best way to conduct federal-provincial relations was to coerce the provinces. I suppose he would adopt as the NDP slogan "coercive federalism".

I have already replied in substance to the question on male-female earning differentials raised by the hon. member. The government's position is two-fold: first, it has taken steps to correct the situation insofar as workers under its jurisdiction are concerned, and secondly, it very much hopes, although it cannot impose its view, that other jurisdictions will follow its example. I would like to elaborate briefly on these two points.

With respect to workers under federal jurisdiction the necessary steps have been taken to ensure that women receive equal pay. In line with the publication in 1970 of the report of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women, the government has placed before the House legislation which will, among other things, add sex and marital status as prohibited grounds for discrimination under the Canada Labour Code. I am referring here, of course, to Bill C-72 which is now before the House.

As for other workers, that is to say, those not under federal jurisdiction, labour standards applying to them are those under the various provincial labour codes. The hon. member is certainly aware that the anti-inflation legislation was not intended, nor would it be legally able to amend the provincial labour laws. While the government is aware of and respects the jurisdictional constraints, it has been conscious of the need to create an environment which would facilitate the resolution of such problems. That is why the white paper on the anti-inflation program states, and I quote:

> ... employers may also grant increases in compensation above the guidelines if such increases result from taking measures ... to eliminate sex discrimination in pay practices.

In brief, the government believes it has played an important role in creating a climate which will help in the resolution of male-female pay differentials. It has done so in a spirit of respect for jurisdictional allocation of powers in Canada and by consciously designed provisions both in the anti-inflation guidelines and Bill C-72 in carrying out its own responsibilities. We are confident that with these actions the general situation will continue to improve.

NATIONAL PARKS—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—SUGGESTED MORATORIUM ON IMPOSITION OF FEE

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, when I last raised the question of the Prince Edward Island national park with the minister I was depressed and distressed by his answer. I noted with much regret that he was applauded by members of the Liberal party when he said, and I quote:

> Basically, the position is that the national park in Prince Edward Island is one of our national parks and part of our national system. It is very difficult to say we are not going to charge a fee for Prince Edward Island but will for Fundy and Kejimkujik. It is part of our national system and we feel it is equitable that the users should be contributing a minimum of 18 per cent, which is what is amounts to, of the operating costs of our national parks.

I think that unless and until he recognizes that there are differences as among parks and among provinces, the minister will not approach an equitable solution to this serious problem. The history of this dominion has shown that Confederation has been one long series of adjustments and readjustments.

It was a century ago that John A. Macdonald and Joseph Howe worked out financial changes in the BNA Act respecting Nova Scotia, a province which on Dominion Day, 1867, had voted solidly, indeed almost unanimously, for the anti-confederate ticket. Only Charles Tupper escaped the wrath of the electors.

Ever since there have been special formulae worked out. No realistic person could expect a nation composed of provinces of such great differences in size, wealth and economic and social values to work in an inflexible framework. Compromise and common sense are the essential ingredients of a functioning federation or confederation.

While speaking of special provisions, arrangements or inhibitions, I might mention one we do not like. It is no delight to Prince Edward Island or the island portion of Newfoundland to know that they alone must pay to go to or to come from another province. I wonder how the residents of Saskatchewan and Manitoba would like to pay a toll every time they move from province to province.

I appeal once more, most earnestly and sincerely, to the minister to listen to the people, the legislature, and the government of Prince Edward Island. The sea has been our inspiration throughout our history. It has also and often been our economic strength. Consider how much of our coast line was given over to the national park. Realize that the imposition of this fee is really cutting off island people from their ancient joy and heritage, the beauty, majesty, and charm of the glittering sea.

If some day soon you, sir, or the charming parliamentary secretary, come to my province and I offer to take you fishing for that queen of the sea, the mackerel, I will have to pay to get into the fishing grounds, and that might stagger my Presbyterian thrift.

In all my years in public life, and they are now quite a few, I have never seen such depth of feeling as exists in Prince Edward Island in respect to this question. I urge that some arrangements be made, whether the establishment of a new concept of a sea shore park as there is in the United States, or whatever. Let the minister indicate his awareness of our unique situation and bring about a fair and acceptable adjustment to it.

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would gladly reciprocate with an invitation to go fishing for some west coast salmon off the Queen Charlotte Islands if we were fortunate enough to have any national parks in that part of Canada. Unfortunately that is not the case.

I really do regret that the hon. member has been depressed and distressed that Prince Edward Island must pay as other Canadians must pay for the privilege of enjoying national parks. The only difference to date has been that other provinces in the west have paid for the privilege of utilizing parks for 40 years. Suddenly the eastern part of Canada has begun to take on its share of the future improvements.

The minister has listened to the people very carefully. They want park facilities and good ones; they want improvements and developments and these things must be paid for. Unfortunately in today's economy they must be paid for by the people who utilize them. It is a most natural human reaction to seek to avoid paying fees.

The decision to increase national parks motor licence fees and apply them where they had not been collected before, was taken in 1974. It arose from the minister's efforts to embark on a major program of development, to establish new parks, to provide basic facilities in new parks, and to preserve and protect more of Canada's natural and historic heritage of which the hon. member speaks with such eloquence.

The rapid expansion in the number of national parks within recent years on a very limited budget was in many instances done at the expense of the old established parks in the system, such as Prince Edward Island national park. Unfortunately, this happened over a period when ten new parks came into being, and there has not been sufficient funding to develop them all at one time without the participation of the people who make use of them. I know the hon. member would not wish to shirk the duty of the people of Prince Edward Island in supplying their assistance to parks of Canada in their growth and development. Maybe with the help of the people of Prince Edward Island the people on the Queen Charlotte Islands will have a park one day.

FISHERIES—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL AID TO REPAIR STORM DAMAGE IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, this country is a confederation of provinces into a single unit. It was formed with the understanding that the provinces, as they became members of this structure, recognized that there were mutual responsibilities of one province to another, of one region to another, and of the national government to all provinces and all regions.

In recent years the tendencies of the national government has been to disclaim responsibilities which are historically inherent in the principles of confederation. Examples of this national responsibility can be cited from the construction of the national railroad, the construction of a series of airports for air travel, the construction of the Trans-Canada highway, the assumption of responsibility for the maintenance, construction, and expansion of the seaports as well as those ports of national consequence on the inland water system of Canada. And one can go on over a long list of items which are examples of the assumption of responsibility by the national government where an individual province or region could not, without undue hardship assume responsibility for the particular situation in which it found itself.

That coastal area of Canada which forms the Bay of Fundy now finds itself in a disaster position; whether it be in the area of Yarmouth or Grand Manan, whether it be Saint John or Moncton, and the area deserves relief from the Government of Canada on a disaster basis.

While I was encouraged yesterday by the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) given to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), I was most discouraged by the answer from the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) in his reply to me today. The Prime Minister recognized in a heartening way that this is not a situation which would make a recurring claim upon the national treasury. In contrast to this, as I remember his remarks, the Minister of State (Fisheries) today said that only if something were started by the provinces would any relief be forthcoming.

In view of the fact that this cabinet minister is a resident of New Brunswick and is looked upon as the voice of the province of New Brunswick in cabinet, it was indeed disheartening to hear that the damages to the industry for which he is responsible will only receive relief upon initiation of the individual provinces concerned. This is the second occasion since he has been minister responsible for fisheries that he has turned a deaf ear to the pleas from people in dire trouble.

During the fall of 1975 a multitude of fishermen on the Atlantic coast suffered serious damage as a result of unusual weather, and their plea for help went unanswered. Some of the same people have again experienced disastrous losses, particularly lobster fishermen, within a time span of less than six months. This type of loss is beyond their means; yet the returns from this industry are of major importance to the national economy.

I am sure that when the Prime Minister made his statement that this area could receive consideration under the existing circumstances, he was aware of the fact that though the policy of government has not been to recognize problems such as this, they have not chosen to declare a disaster area on their own initiative and the machinery is still in place to permit this to be done. Though the position of the Minister of State responsible for Fisheries was historically correct, during the past few years on the basis of existing government policy the machinery is still in place whereby special funds could be allocated to alleviate the difficulties of that storm ravaged area. The statutory authority for this is still in existence, although it has not been in use.

The people of the cities and towns which have been so thoroughly disrupted must be congratulated upon the dispatch with which they have dealt with their problems. The co-operation of the residents with one another in the city of Saint John would restore the faith of mankind in the principle of brotherly love. It is a stirring example of the practice of the good neighbour principle.

I wonder does the minister recognize that the livelihood of hundreds of families and their life savings have been eliminated in the span of a very few hours of almost merciless weather. I wonder how many people in this House realize that this was just not an ordinary storm. This was a storm which had winds of hurricane proportions. This was a storm in which wind measuring instruments registered velocities of more than 120 miles per hour on a continuing basis. These were not just momentary gusts. Boats do not get thrown across highways and into a wooded area by a single gust of wind. Fish processing buildings are not lifted off their foundations and scattered by a single gust of wind. This was a storm which carried continuing winds of hurricane proportions and the damage is in direct relation to their intensity.

Canada has had a record of generosity on an international basis. It has always come to the aid of those areas which suffered catastrophes. I am sure we will come to the aid of Guatemala, to some degree, after the moments of horror people there have experienced and the catastrophic damage to man and his property. If we do not, we should; but we should be equally aware of the needs of our own people in time of trouble. It is not proper that the Government of Canada, or any of its ministers, should say that this is a provincial or a regional problem. It is, instead, only fair and right that government should say that this is indeed an unusual circumstance and that we shall indeed come to the aid of those who need it so badly.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal proposed that a formula should be adopted by the government under which. The first dollar, per capita, of a province required to reimburse for flood or other types of unusual damage should come from the province. The second dollar spent within a province for this purpose should be shared equally by the Government of Canada and the province. The third dollar spent for this purpose should be absorbed 75 per cent by the Government of Canada and 25 per cent by the province concerned. The fourth dollar and each additional dollar per capita of a province required for this purpose should be financed by at least a 90 per cent contribution from the federal government.

The adoption of such a program would certainly relieve the present situation immensely. It would be a step in the right direction. It might very well be a very proper and responsible position for the Government of Canada to take on a national basis. It would certainly be preferable to the formula which presently exists. It would not, however, relieve the Government of Canada of the responsibility of an immediate assessment of the damage to a national industry, such as that of the salt water fishing industry.

I am, and I always have been, of the opinion that unusual expenditure by any area of Canada should be the responsibility of the Government of Canada in recognition of the differences in the various areas of our country and the unique responsibilities which some areas have but which others do not have at all.

I thank the Prime Minister for his sympathetic statement and I implore the Minister of State (Fisheries), in view of this statement, to assess immediately the damage in the Atlantic area and sell to cabinet a proposal for furnishing adequate money to re-establish those who cannot re-establish themselves, whether they live along the shore or inland. I wish to put in a special word for those who live along the shore, who are engaged in a profession which few of us choose as our source of income and who, through generations of almost unendurable conditions, have made such a major contribution to our total economy. They are not asking for charity. They are asking for the recognition of a right which is truly theirs. They ask their government in Ottawa to recognize their plight and lend the necessary assistance to alleviate it.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the government is doing exactly what the hon. gentleman is requesting.

The hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain) yesterday received the assurance of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that his office is looking into the possibility, if I quote him correctly, of providing an exception in this case and studying the situation in a sympathetic way.

In reply to further questioning today by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte, the Minister of State (Fisheries) (Mr. LeBlanc) gave his assurance that officials of his department would co-operate and help the province assess the damage as far as fisheries are concerned. Therefore, to the two requests that the hon. member made, he received assurances from the Prime Minister and the Minister of State (Fisheries).

I understand that today surveys were being conducted by the government of New Brunswick together with EMO and, we hope, the assistance of the federal fisheries officers.

Mr. McCain: "We hope." So do I.

Mr. Baker (Gander-Twillingate): The hon. member was given assurance today by the Minister of State (Fisheries). I do not know what else he wants.

As the hon. member stated, the existing formula is that the province has to put in the first dollar of capital, the second and third dollars would be funded 50 per cent by the federal government, the fourth and fifth dollars by the federal government, and the excess 90 per cent by the federal government. That has been the exact formula since 1970 for every single case with a few exceptions of small disasters that were very localized. However, as the hon. member stated, this was a large disaster.

Through the efforts of the hon. member and those of other hon. members affected, the Prime Minister has taken this exceptional step. However, let me assure him that under the existing formula the initiative for the assessing of damages for disaster relief rests with the provincial governments. It has always rested there. As I stated, the hon. member's comments have been taken into account by the Prime Minister and the Minister of State (Fisheries). I think at the moment that is all we can expect from the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10:29 p.m.

SUGGESTED WITHDRAWAL OF ALL FOREIGN TROOPS FROM ANGOLA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there are no longer days set aside for discussion on foreign affairs, as was customary in the past in successive governments, pursuant to Standing Order 43 I move the adjournment of this House, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro), to discuss a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, which was particularly emphasized by Dr. Joseph Luns, Secretary General of NATO in Ottawa a couple of days ago when he said intervention by the Soviets "is a serious blow to east-west detente",—

An hon. Member: What about the United States?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —namely, that the government of Canada having failed to make a clearcut public declaration against the brutal invasion of Angola by various forces, including some 9,000 Cuban troops—

An hon. Member: And South African.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —this House condemns in strong and unequivocal terms the invasion of Angola by Cuban and other troops in the interests of world peace and the right of nations to self-determination, and asks that Cuban and all other foreign troops should remove themselves from Angola.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Liberal members all said no.

Mr. Trudeau: I said no.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You want them to stay there?

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED WITHHOLDING OF APPROVAL FOR OIL DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA PENDING INQUIRY INTO ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to Standing Order 43. The report of Environment Canada dated January 14, 1976, states that offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea could result in a blowout which would go uncontrolled for a period of at least one year and take up to three years to control, resulting in a massive kill of seals, birds, whales, polar bears and other wildlife, further denuding the capacity of natives to live from the land. In view of the fact that the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs intends to conduct hearings for six communities in three days in the north making the consultation process a farce, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That approval be withheld from any company for offshore drilling until a full parliamentary inquiry has been held into the environmental effects of such drilling and further that the terms of reference of the Berger commission be expanded to include the subject of offshore drilling.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED OBSERVANCE OF MINUTE OF SILENCE IN SYMPATHY WITH VICTIMS IN MARITIMES AND GUATEMALA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a very important motion and I am convinced that no member will dare reject it.

Considering that mankind proceeds from the same Creator and that we are all united one another and living in the same world, our ethnicity, our language and our religion notwithstanding, and considering also that Canadians are ever sensitive to the calamities striking their fellow citizens and other nationalities, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House keep a minute of silence as a mark of sympathy for the victims of the Maritimes and the victims in Guatemala heavily devastated by an earthquake, and that this House also urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to extend to the hard hit people our deepest sympathy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such a consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; the motion therefore cannot be put.

REQUESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF POSSIBLE DANGER CONNECTED WITH USE OF AMARANTH—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The banning of the use of Amaranth—red dye—in the United States because of possible link to cancer and long prohibited use in the U.S.S.R. throws into question its use in Canada. In view of conflicting statements on this matter in the minister's press release of February 2, 1976, I moved, seconded by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie):

That this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare for study and report.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED ACTION TO COLLECT UNPAID TAXES FROM CERTAIN CORPORATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present an important motion.

Considering the answer given yesterday to a written question of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) that 24,620 accounts of national and multinational corporations were outstanding at the Department of National Revenue, considering that these corporations owe the Crown the sum of $223,042,948 in unpaid taxes, and that only since 1973, considering the fight against inflation and the monetary needs of the government which takes the liberty to freeze family allowances, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That the government immediately order an inquiry to examine the said outstanding income tax accounts to of the national and multinational corporations and to ensure the payment of these taxes owed to the Crown, in the same way and with the same severity as is applied to individual taxpayers.

[Mr. Allard.]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REVIEW OF EXPORT LEVY REQUESTED BY PROVINCES—DATE OF COMPLETION OF REVIEW

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance arises out of his reported statement to provincial ministers of finance to the effect that he would talk to his colleagues in cabinet about the proposed export levy associated with the controls program. Can the minister indicate to the House precisely what aspect of the export levy he agreed to discuss with his colleagues, whether it is the whole question of such an export levy, or any particular aspect of that levy.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the point made by the ministers of the provincial governments was that the proposed export levy system could operate as an impediment to the growth of exports at this time. They therefore requested, essentially, that export profits be exempt from the over-all controls system. As the House knows, the purpose of including them is to provide equity in treatment as between firms selling in Canada and export firms and also between exporting firms and their own employees whose compensation will be controlled. With regard to this proposal, it was the general concept of controlling export profits to which some of the provincial governments objected.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it that the whole question of the export levy and the whole question of controlling profits from exports in this way is being reviewed by the government. If that is the case, when will the minister or the Prime Minister indicate the result of this review to the House? How does the Minister of Finance propose to proceed so far as the provinces are concerned? When does he anticipate he will have word for the House and word for the provinces on this matter?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, we will have to discuss this in cabinet and I anticipate that within the next week, certainly, this matter will come up. Of course, I cannot be final as to when the decision will be made. The decision, ultimately, will be that of the federal government and, obviously, I would communicate with those ministers who spoke most directly about the question. I would not anticipate another meeting for this purpose but I indicated that, in the meantime, we would not proceed with the ways and means motion now before the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Leader of the Opposition rising on a final supplementary question?

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE WHEN PROGRAM WILL BE FULLY OPERATIONAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not a final supplementary, in view of the obvious importance of getting this matter settled, both in terms of knowing whether there are to be agreements with all provinces relating to the anti-inflation program, and putting export industries in the position to know what they are doing, or supposed to be doing, at a time when exports are of the gravest importance to this country, may I ask this question? As it is nearly four months since the Prime Minister announced the launching of this program, can the minister indicate when he expects to have the whole program in place? When he replies I hope he will not say that it is not helpful to threaten the provinces. I am not talking about threats to provinces. I am asking him to indicate to the House when, if at all, he expects to have the program in place, as he originally envisaged?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the program is substantially in place now. A number of provinces which for their own reasons have had problems in their own public sectors, had difficulty in coming to a conclusion with regard to the agreements. Whatever the hon. gentleman may say about any suggestion of threatening the provinces, he has to recognize that it is the course of common sense in dealing with them to enable them freely to come to agreements in this regard and try to accommodate their positions. This is exactly the approach I have taken. I do not think that confrontation or setting deadlines is a sensible way to proceed.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE OF AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES ON EXPORT CONTROL LEVY

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the uncertainty of the government's control program as a consequence of a failure to reach an agreement with the provinces on the export levy and bearing in mind the adverse consequence that this is obviously having on capital investment and the need for increased productivity at a time of high unemployment, will the minister advise when we can expect an agreement on this? Also, what is the procedure to be followed now that the ministers of finance have returned to their respective provinces without having reached an agreement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of agreement on the export levy. It is fair to observe that while the export levy has been in the government's program, the reference to it has been there since October, it is only at this most recent meeting that there were substantial objections to it. In this program dealing with all sectors in the community, labour, management and the provinces, we sought to try to structure the program in order to meet their particular concerns. It was in that frame of mind that I agreed to have a review with my colleagues in this regard. I do not think anybody could sensibly say there has been any hesitation in investment in the export sector because of this preparedness to meet with the concerns of the various groups in the community.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF PROBLEMS PREVENTING AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): The minister said in his statement that he was negotiating with the seven provinces that failed to sign an agreement on what he described as "special problems of a minor nature". Can the minister expand on that statement? What are these minor problems still to be resolved?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As I mentioned to the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, to describe them in general terms, some provinces have difficulty arriving at an agreement because of negotiating situations with particular groups in the public sector in their provinces. Others have problems because of the question of pricing in the public sector. No province has indicated it would hesitate because of the review we now have underway of the export levy system.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FLOODING OF SKAGIT VALLEY BY SEATTLE LIGHT AND POWER—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the decision by a United States court that the Seattle Light and Power Company be granted permission to raise the Ross Dam by 100 feet, which will entail the flooding of over 5,000 acres of the upper Skagit Valley which, according to the report of the International Joint Commission tabled in this House on December 17, 1971, would have far reaching and permanent effects on the environment of the Skagit Valley, what steps does the government intend to take to prevent the flooding of this important and environmentally vulnerable area of British Columbia?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of points to be made in reply to the question. The United States Federal Power Commission, operating within the context of United States law, has completed its hearings on Seattle's application for a licence to raise Ross Dam. Just two days ago, the federal commission judge hearing the case handed down his decision approving the application. There is a period of 30 days during which exception could be taken to the ruling and then a period of 30 days within which the commission must act to grant the licence or otherwise. If the Federal Power Commission does grant a licence the matter can be raised in the United States Courts.

I should point out, also, that an application by the Province of British Columbia to overturn the 1942 order of the International Joint Commission approving the raising of the Ross Dam is being held in abeyance by the IJC pending the outcome of discussions which are taking place between British Columbia and Seattle. To make one more point, when the President and the Prime Minister met in Washington, it was agreed that the best way to deal with this question would be through negotiations between the Province of British Columbia and Seattle. These negotiations are still under way and we shall be having discussions on the federal side with provincial officials on the whole question of the Skagit at a very early date.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Having regard to the statement which was made by the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, the present President of the Privy Council, on February 13, 1971 that before any dam construction which would cause flooding in the Skagit Valley could begin, approval must first be given by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I want to ask the minister whether that legal interpretation put forward by his predecessor expresses the view held by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs and, if so, whether he or the Prime Minister can assure the House that no such approval will be given either by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources or by any other department of the Canadian government.

Mr. MacEachen: I have no reason to question the opinion expressed by my predecessor although, to be honest, I have not considered that particular point. I shall obviously look into the legal situation and form my own conclusion as to what the government ought to do in the event that negotiations prove futile, in the event that in the final analysis the Federal Power Commission grants a licence or in the event that the IJC fails to overturn the 1942 order. There are a number of contingencies which would have to be dealt with before we reach the point which the hon. member put forward as calling for a final decision by the government.

FLOODING OF SKAGIT VALLEY BY SEATTLE LIGHT AND POWER—POSSIBLE RENEGOTIATION OF 1942 AND 1967 AGREEMENTS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As the minister has said, there are a number of options open to the government and to the government of British Columbia. But as the best approach would seem to be renegotiation not only of the 1942 agreement but of the 1967 agreement between the Seattle Light and Power Company and the government of British Columbia, with provision for compensating the United States company in respect of the $8 million it has spent and returning the $35,000 a year payment to the province of British Columbia, may I ask whether the minister would be prepared to initiate such a renegotiation of the 1967 agreement with the co-operation and consent of the government of British Columbia?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I agree that the best possible approach to this question is by way of negotiation between the government of British Columbia and Seattle, a procedure which was not followed very enthusiastically by the former provincial government of British Columbia. We believe this ought to proceed and that such negotiations are the best way to deal with the matter.

INCOME TAX

SUGGESTED ACTION TO COLLECT UNPAID TAXES FROM CERTAIN CORPORATIONS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Is he aware that as of March 31, 1975, 24,620 corporate accounts were outstanding, totalling an amount of $223,042,948 owed to the Crown? In view of the budgetary needs and the restrictions imposed by the President of the Treasury Board, could he tell the House what action he intends to take—special action since the standard approach does not seem to be effective—in order that the Crown might secure this income tax reimbursement in the same manner as it is done with respect to individuals?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the department concerned with income tax collection is the Department of National Revenue, and this question should be directed to my colleague.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue what special steps he intends to take to recover this tremendous sum of $223 million owing to the Crown since 1975?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for this question and for moving his motion under Standing Order 43. I agree with him that it is necessary to continually look for new methods to collect outstanding taxes. We have already succeeded in recovering millions of dollars, and we will pursue our efforts along this line in the case referred to by the hon. member.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, one last supplementary.

Considering the various recovery methods mentioned by the minister, could he explain to the House—if they are so effective—why late filings numbered only 2,470 in 1973, as against over 9,269 in 1974 and 12,881 in 1975?

[English]

Mr. Cullen: We are always trying to improve, Mr. Speaker. I used up most of my vocabulary answering the last question.

CUBA—POSSIBLE REVIEW OF AID PROGRAM IN VIEW OF INVOLVEMENT IN ANGOLAN WAR

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Will the government be reviewing any CIDA loans or grants to Cuba now its troops are engaged in the Angolan conflict; and if Cuba has money to become involved in wars, should not this disallow its receipt of aid as an underprivileged country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I dealt with that question or one very much like it a couple of days ago, and the answer is still the same. Our aid program is not linked to the ideology of a particular country. I think I gave the example of helping Haiti, on the one hand, and Cuba on the other, which are very differently oriented countries.

CUBA—POSSIBILITY OF PROVISION IN AID CONTRACT ALLOWING DISCONTINUANCE OF AID IF ECONOMIC CONDITION IMPROVES

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When these contracts are negotiated with the various countries, are there any clauses in them that provide that, if they come into an exalted position and can find funds for fighting wars and that sort of thing, then grants can be cut off?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There are no clauses that provide for that, Mr. Speaker.

GUATEMALA—AMOUNT AND FORM OF AID IN VIEW OF EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In regard to Guatemala, the minister indicated yesterday that Canada would be making a special donation as the first of a series of steps. May I ask him today whether he is prepared to speak in more urgent tones concerning how much our donation will be to Guatemala, what form it will take, and how quickly it can be dispensed to that country, particularly medical aid that is needed in the form of blood plasma and anti-tetanus vaccine?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister sent a message to the government of Guatemala expressing our very deep feelings of sadness at the tragic events in that country and assuring the government of Guatemala that Canada stood ready to assist in any way possible. We have already indicated to the Guatemalan Red Cross that we are prepared to provide an initial donation. We are now considering a substantial contribution in the form of food aid, and we are also giving immediate consideration to the rearrangement of our aid program in Guatemala so that funds can be released for the reconstruction of that country. Yesterday we sent a representative of the Canadian International Development Agency to Guatemala so that in consultation with the government, we can determine what further ways we may be able to assist.

DEDUCTIBILITY FOR TAX PURPOSES OF BREAST PROSTHESIS AND TELETYPEWRITER

Mrs. Ursula Appolloni (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue and I do so in an effort to avoid unnecessary embarrassment and anguish for thousands of women across Canada. Because the guidelines are not specific on this point, will the minister please confirm that effective as of the taxation year 1975 women who have had to undergo mastectomies will be permitted to deduct as a medical expense the cost of an external breast prosthesis?

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question and I do appreciate its importance. In fact, I am pleased to confirm that the income tax regulations were amended in January, 1976 to add to the list of items deductible for medical expenses for income tax purposes the cost of an external breast prosthesis required as a result of a mastectomy.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I would also take this opportunity to mention that the cost of a teletypewriter or similar device that enables a deaf or mute individual to make and receive telephone calls has also been added to the list of deductible medical expenses for income tax purposes.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

REASON FOR FLYING OF UNITED STATES FLAG FROM PEACE TOWER

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the raising and lowering of flags on public buildings. Will he advise the House what was the purpose behind the raising of the United States flag over the Peace Tower this morning? Was it to show our American neighbours that we really do love them, and is it planned to give the Cuban flag equal time later this day?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have not been in communication with the raisers of the flag this morning. I am told they are from the academic community with which perhaps the hon. member is more familiar than I.

Mr. Hees: You mean I am a little better educated?

An hon. Member: It doesn't show, George.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I am so modest I keep it under a bushel.

Mr. Drury: Their purpose, Mr. Speaker, in raising the flag has not been made too clear to the Sergeant-at-Arms who has succeeded in collaring them all, according to accounts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FLYING OF UNITED STATES FLAG FROM PEACE TOWER—INDICATION OF LAX SECURITY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to give a degree of seriousness to what happened this morning over the flag, but it does indicate that there is some loose security about the parliament buildings, and I would ask the Minister of Public Works what investigation is being made in this connection? When these pranksters can do what they did by going through three doors and getting up to the tower without being seen there are some security precautions in addition to those now being taken that should be adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is with the usual regret and some humility that I intervene in the right hon. gentleman's question, but the fact of the matter is that security in this building is my responsibility and not that of the Minister of Public Works.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I realized the question could not be asked of you, Mr. Speaker. In that connection, when the security of this building is subject to such potential dangers then I think it is a matter for consideration on the part of the Minister of Public Works and the government. You, sir, look after the building itself, but you do not look after the tower and security outside.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In any case, to the extent that I am responsible, I can assure hon. members that the matter will be thoroughly investigated from a security point of view.

CRIMINAL CODE

RELATIONSHIPS BETWEEN DELAY IN INTRODUCTION OF BILL CONCERNING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT AND PROMISE OF FREE VOTE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question with reference to the administration of justice. It arises from the fact that there have been adjournments or postponements of sentences in respect of capital murder. How is the Prime Minister's government able to reconcile the promise of a free vote on capital punishment with the fact that there appears now to be a delay or a postponement in respect of this bill because a large number of his own backbench supporters are not going along with the government's bill? How does he reconcile the promise of a free vote with the fact of the postponements?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the one has nothing to do with the other. There will be a free vote whether it is held next week, the week after or a month after that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: Is this going to be a free vote for the members of the Cabinet, or as free as it is to be for the backbenchers? I ask this because last time members of the Cabinet showed a degree of solidarity which does not exist with regard to the new economic society suggested by the Prime Minister, particularly in view of the recent statement by the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should not worry about the Cabinet. Perhaps he should worry about his own frontbenchers, or talk to the two or three dozen people who are running for the leadership of his party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Prime Minister always wants to be fair. I thought he would feel awfully good in that he ran successfully against eight or nine of the members of his party.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PROPOSALS OR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the interest of the country and of the members of this House in the proposals for a guaranteed income or income supplementation which were discussed earlier this week by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and his provincial counterparts, may I ask whether a statement on this matter will be made to the House, or will the proposals be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for study? When the minister is answering that question I wonder if he might assure the House that these proposals are being made on their own and not only if the provinces agree to the non-escalation of family allowances?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my provincial colleagues and I have discussed the possibility of setting up an income support and income supplementation program. Those discussions have now been under way for over two years. This week they went into another stage; early in June another meeting will be held at which time we will look into certains aspects of the proposals made to date. I do not intend to make a formal statement at this time. I believe every hon. member has now received copy of the news release from the conference. In addition, the estimates of my department will be considered by the committee on health, welfare and social affairs later on in the session. At that time, I shall be happy to give hon. members all the information they might deem useful and to discuss with my colleagues of the parliamentary committee whatever proposals are made. I feel it is still too early to make a statement on specific and final proposals, for they still have to be debated at the June meeting. Finally, the proposal of the federal government was made without specific mention of the possibility of indexing family allowances, which matter was not brought up.

METHOD OF EFFECTING NON-ESCALATION OF FAMILY ALLOWANCES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the new proposals may not come into effect for two or three years and family allowances are in effect now, I would ask the minister whether the question of their non-escalation will be brought before parliament this year or is this non-escalation being effected by order in council?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member knows that the indexing of family allowances is covered by the law on family allowance passed by Parliament and that the suspension of indexing for this year will be the subject of an amendment which will be discussed in the House in the weeks to come. Any decisions concerning non-indexing in any subsequent year would be subject, I think, to a new amendment if such a proposition were entertained by the government but for now such a project was not discussed at the conference. I do not know where the hon. member got hold of such information. There was no discussion on that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Mackenzie.

AIR TRANSPORT

NATURE OF PROPOSAL TO MANITOBA AND SASKATCHEWAN FOR REGIONAL CARRIER—DATE OF RESPONSE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Following the scuttling of the original Skywest proposals for the operation of a regional carrier the minister laid before the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan some counter-proposals which apparently are being studied. Would the minister indicate what his proposals were and what stage of development we have reached at this point. Does he expect a response shortly from these governments?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Skywest operation as such, of course, is dead because of the withdrawal by Manitoba of Skywest. The proposals are essentially toward providing the same kind of services that would have been provided by that carrier and ways of finding another carrier or carriers to provide the services. At the present time I am awaiting a response from the two governments which I hope will indicate their willingness to support such a proposal financially about to the extent of their previous willingness.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether his proposal was such that it would involve the governments in the actual operation or was the operating aspect of any proposal to be turned over to a private carrier.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, it would likely have involved a private carrier although the general proposition at the time is to ascertain the degree of support which would be involved from these various governments. I do not exclude the possibility of a carrier other than a private carrier being involved if they could come up with a proposition which was as good on a competitive basis. However, I would want the CTC to play a full role in the licensing and, if possible, the assessment of the various proposals put forward by carriers.

PERFORMING ARTS

VOLUNTARY QUOTA SYSTEM FOR FOREIGN FILMS—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN POLICY

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Secretary of State for returning to the chamber. The Council of Canadian Filmmakers in a statement on August 23 viewed with alarm the situation in their industry and said in part that the situation had been aggravated by several events. I quote the industry as follows:

> —the Secretary of State's announcement of a patently absurd scheme to extend the failed 'voluntary agreement' with Famous Players and Odeon—an arrangement which serves the purposes of the foreign-owned theatre chains but has the full potential to defeat the purposes of the Canadian Film industry—

In view of that statement, I wonder whether the Secretary of State is contemplating a change in policy?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker. I have gone into this matter at some length with the council and also before the parliamentary committee. I would be pleased to let the hon. member have the results of the voluntary quota when I am before the committee dealing with my estimates. I think it will be quite clear at that point that the voluntary quota in fact is leading to a much greater number of Canadian films being shown across Canada.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Secretary of State could inform the House whether he is planning any action with Mr. Harold Greenberg or the officials of his department, since the CCFM has said that the officials of the Department of the Secretary of State have repeatedly lied to the CCFM when it has expressed fears that plans were afoot for the kind of voluntary agreement which the minister did announce on August 5. Does he plan any action either with the officials of his department or Mr. Greenberg?

Mr. Faulkner: No, Mr. Speaker, but I think the hon. member's question is somewhat out of date. The Canadian Council of Filmmakers is perfectly aware of the fact that this chamber is not in a position to legislate quotas over theatres in this country. They come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. They were trying to lobby the provinces to institute quotas in the ten provinces. That effort was not successful. I felt very strongly that some form of quota was necessary. What I was able to do in the interim was make an arrangement through the Canadian Film Development Corporation for a quota which will be observed, obviously not under the aegis of law but which will be observed, and which will be monitored and the results made public through Famous Players and Odeon. That seems to me to be an improvement over where we were. It may not be exactly as much as the Canadian Council of Filmmakers would want.

HOUSING

ASSISTED HOME OWNERSHIP PLAN—REQUEST FOR REBATE OF SUBSIDY IN VIEW OF DELAY IN REGISTRATION OF HOMES

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the fact that homeowners eligible for AHOP can only qualify to receive their government subsidization once their dwelling has been registered, and since registration, in some instances, cannot be processed until months after the initial purchase, can the minister assure the public that, upon entering into the AHOP program, they will receive rebates on the subsidization they did not receive before their dwelling was registered.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member did a great deal of research in respect of that question. I would like to grasp the full sense of it and report back to him when I have been able to make a decision. Certainly, I want to do all that is possible in the situation to keep the outstanding record of housing starts in this country continuing.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of the utmost importance. I would point out to the minister that I received a telephone call today indicating that in this immediate area there are 130 families involved. Considering that most of those qualifying for AHOP end up purchasing condominiums, which are usually only registered by the builders once an entire condominium complex has been occupied, does the minister realize that condominium owners purchasing AHOP sponsored dwellings are forced to pay occupancy fees or rent that does not go toward amortizing their mortgages, that these individuals do not receive subsidization until the entire complex is occupied and that, in short, these individuals end up paying more for their home and more interest than they originally realized. What will the minister do to clear up this obvious shortcoming in the AHOP program?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I will look into it immediately.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON KUWAIT PLAN TO EXTEND AID PROGRAMS TO DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the honourable and learned Secretary of State for External Affairs. Recalling that it is now some time since the director of the Kuwait fund for Arab development was in Canada seeking co-operation between Kuwaiti money and Canadian expertise in the extension of aid programs in developing countries, can the minister advise if and to what extent Canada is co-operating in this very positive outreach from one of the major OPEC countries.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; I cannot advise at the moment but I will obtain the information immediately.

ENERGY

OIL—NEED FOR EARLY ACTION TO PREVENT CLOSING OF WELLS PRODUCING HEAVY CRUDE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Inasmuch as the actions taken by the National Energy Board, which were referred to in the minister's answer earlier this week, in connection with relief to the heavy oil industry will not provide any immediate relief for the month of February to this ailing industry, is the minister considering any other immediate action, such as amendments to the export tax or the quota system, to prevent the continuing mass closure of the heavy oil-producing wells, particularly in the Lloydminster area. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the failure to initiate any immediate action results in many of these wells being closed the effect of which is that they will entail very heavy starting up costs and in many cases the wells may never again be producing wells.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question earlier this week. I indicated we have been talking to the industry and to the provinces and have been trying to work out arrangements which will secure the industry. We believe the changes in the regulations with regard to oil exports for the months of March and April, nominations of which are now being called for, will help alleviate the situation.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the wells are continuing to close—Husky Oil will be closing another 500 in the month of February—notwithstanding the action taken by the minister, is he not prepared to do anything else but allow the industry to collapse as a result of the ambivalent government policies which have been imposed upon it.

● (1150)

Mr. Gillespie: I believe that the industry itself has a responsibility for its own survival, and there are a number of measures it could take as well.

HEALTH

PROPOSED STUDY BY COMMITTEE OF MERCURY POISONING IN NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Considering that mercury pollution has disastrous effects in northwestern Quebec and that each week we learn that new victims of mercury poisoning are being discovered in this area, could the minister tell the House if he is prepared to recommend that the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs go to that location in northwestern Quebec to investigate mercury poisoning?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a federal-provincial team is already working actively in this field; it is composed of leading specialists. I think that the best work is that now being accomplished by experts in the field. As to whether or not the health committee should be sent there, this decision is not my responsibility.

MEDICARE—INQUIRY WHETHER VOTE ON BILL C-68 AWAITING CONSENSUS OF PROVINCES

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Referring to the statement made by the former Minister of Finance on medical care last June and recognizing the commendable efforts the minister made at the provincial level to have them accept the amendments concerning health care, and recognizing now with Bill C-68 that the provinces still seem to be seriously concerned, would the minister be prepared to seek a consensus with the provinces and wait for this consensus before inviting the House to vote for Bill C-68 on third reading?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, for several years now the federal government has been trying to follow the procedure of consensus in the area of health and in many other areas, even well before my appointment as Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I acknowledge the minister's good answer but my question is as follows: Is the minister prepared to wait for a provincial consensus before requesting the House to adopt this bill on third reading?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated in my speech on second reading, we have held major consultations with the provinces during the last few months before some amendments and modifications to Bill C-68 were put forward. As the government House leader has indicated, the government now intends to proceed with the study of this bill. When the bill is referred to committee, I shall be pleased to propose the amendments that I have already mentioned. I think this is the best procedure under the circumstances and one which, hopefully, will be adopted by the House shortly.

CABINET COMMITTEE STUDY OF PRODUCTIVITY—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF REFERENCE TO INCLUDE CONSEQUENCES OF BUDGET CUTS FOR RESEARCH

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. Yesterday in answer to a question by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings the Prime Minister indicated that he had established a Privy Council Committee to look into the question of productivity. Could he tell the House whether this Privy Council Committee study included a consideration of the consequences to Canada's future technological competence, and therefore future productivity, of the effects of the government's decision to reduce spending on research and development?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings was a much more sensible way of getting that type of answer. He suggested a statement at one point, and I indicated one would be made either in the form of a speech or in the form of a statement on motions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTORS TO SOUTH KOREA AND ARGENTINA—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF MOTION OF APPROVAL

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In reply to a suggestion made by my colleague, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, that the minister should introduce a motion in the House to approve of the agreements in regard to the sale of nuclear reactors to South Korea and the Argentine the minister promised to consider this suggestion. Will the minister now state his intention to introduce the proposed motion so that parliament itself may consider these agreements, which purport to provide for safeguards, which Mr. David Lilienthal, first chairman of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, and Canada's General Burns have both said are useless in stopping the proliferation of nuclear weapons, thereby inviting impending disaster?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I said, following the making of the statement and the comments, that I would consider whether a further resolution would be required. I believe when I did make my statement there was a very full discussion. Statements were made and questions were asked and answered and at the moment I do not personally see the necessity of bringing in a special resolution for agreements which are already in effect, in accordance with a practice which has been followed in this country for a long time. However, it will be possible in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to question me further on the elements of these agreements when my estimates are before the committee.

I should remind the hon. member that I did table considerable background material on Canada's nuclear safeguards policy. I believe that upon examination the hon. member will agree with me that we have entered into very stringent safeguards, and that in either country involved will Canada be in any way increasing or adding to any capability for proliferation. In fact, the opposite is the case.

Mr. Brewin: I think the minister has missed the point, which is that we suggested parliamentary approval. I ask him whether he has taken into account the statement made by the Right Hon. Mackenzie King that parliamentary approval should be sought for international agreements where the matters involved are of large expenditure or political considerations of a far-reaching character. In view of this pronouncement by Mr. Mackenzie King, who was for many years our prime minister, I ask whether the minister will give further consideration to carrying out the suggestion made by Mr. Mackenzie King as to the need for parliamentary approval.

Mr. MacEachen: While I do respect any pronouncement made by Mr. Mackenzie King, in this case I do not find that his pronouncement should determine the course of action to be taken by the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He will come back to haunt you.

Mr. Trudeau: He is here.

CUBA—SUGGESTION CANADA WILL HELP FINANCE PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of what I think must be a very wild report contained in a respected United States weekly, and I quote:

> Cuba is to get an atomic power plant from Russia to be completed in 1978 with financing by France, Britain and Canada, among others.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the minister tell the House whether Canada is either involved in or considering financing such a plant either directly or indirectly? Surely, we are not that wild.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, we are not that wild. We are not involved in any such arrangement.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the Latin connection which has developed, could the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether the U.S.S.R. has agreed to supply a nuclear reactor to Cuba, and if so, what are the safeguards imposed?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the U.S.S.R. is planning to provide a power reactor to Cuba, but I would say that they have been a party to the ongoing consensus at the suppliers' meeting. As I understand it, they would apply the internationally accepted safeguards to the transmission of any plant to any other country.

● (1200)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order of which I gave notice at the conclusion of the exchange I had with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the minister's admission that the Family Allowances Act, which is an act of this parliament, requires the escalation of family allowances, by what authority is that escalation being withheld?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I think this question should more properly be addressed to the Minister of Justice, in the present circumstances.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can this government break the law with impunity?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Lalonde: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows the formula is put in the act itself and I would refer him to it. The law provides for an escalation to be tabulated from one certain period to another period; and it is then by order in council that this particular escalation takes place. The hon. member has been in this House much longer than I have been. If he looks at the statute, he will find that there is no problem. However, we can discuss this matter later.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe the minister had better have a look at it, too.

Mr. Paproski: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that the Minister of Transport has a very important announcement to make today, namely, the appointment of a new president of Air Canada. I hope, if he is going to make the announcement, he will make it in the House and will assure the House that he will do so.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there have been, and there are, a number of Canadians in Guatemala today, and in view of the fact that no statement has been made in this House with respect to their welfare, and also in view of the fact that I was not recognized and could not ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs about the condition of Canadians in Guatemala and what the government is doing to help them out, may we expect a statement? There are a lot of Canadians who want to know where their sons, daughters and relatives are.

REMOVAL OF PROVISION ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Thursday, February 5, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. William Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Madam Speaker, my reason for speaking is that I support wholeheartedly the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), a motion which has the effect of removing the censorship aspect of this legislation. I am sure that by doing this we are now getting down to the philosophical aspect of this bill. This is what is of such great concern to people on this side of the House and several members on the government side.

Another reason for speaking in this debate is that I have received, as have many other hon. members, literally hundreds of letters from constituents. I feel I would be less than responsible if I did not rise to express their views on this very important piece of legislation. Every letter has asked that I, as a member of parliament, do all in my power to block legislation that will have the effect of forcing Time and Reader's Digest, as we know them in their present form, out of Canada. It is true the American editions would continue to be published and would be sold in Canada. That point has been made by the supporters of this bill. But that is not the real point, Madam Speaker. The thing that Canadians are upset about is the fact that the Canadian editions, as we know them, will be removed from the bookstores and the mail of Canada. Canadians want the Canadian edition because of its content.

The issue which should trouble us most is the totalitarian nature of the government's legislation. Over half a million copies of Time are circulated in Canada. This is a very large circulation, by any standard, for a country like ours. These are copies which are printed in this country, though the largest part, by far, of the editorial copy originates in Time news bureaux in the United States and around the world. Canadians like myself have deliberately chosen this publication because it provides a window on the world which no Canadian publication can ever hope to emulate—least of all Maclean's with its effete, simpering kind of Canadianism. We need the Time kind of journalism at least as much, if not more, than the sort of thing Maclean's keeps offering us.

I have read Maclean's for at least half a dozen years and I think I understand its approach to journalism. If some hon. members have read Time magazine's 1975 account of the United States government's fiasco in Viet Nam, in terms of sober and, ultimately, health-giving reporting, I think they will understand what it is about a publication such as this which has made so many of us reach for it rather than for Maclean's.

I understand the government's position is that to qualify as a Canadian publication a magazine in this country would need to be 80 per cent different from the parent, United States publication, and 75 per cent Canadian-owned. Applied to Time, this rule would obviously mean that the magazine would cease to be. By introducing such rules the government would so affect—totally remake, so to speak—the magazine that Time could no longer continue in the form in which we have chosen to receive it. This is a form of muzzling of the press which we should view seriously. Already we are exposed to many extremist voices in this country. This legislation would make us more susceptible to them and would not give us easy access to publications with a large world view. This bill is opening the door for the narrowest kind of Canadianism and to the strongly ideological kind of journalism which is becoming increasingly prevalent in this country.

Most frequently overlooked is the fact that Time and Reader's Digest have not been given special advantages. These magazines competed in the Canadian marketplace in the same way as other publications. This issue has been presented to the Canadian public in such a way that many feel genuinely that advertisers in Time and Reader's Digest have had tax advantages which advertisers in Canadian publications did not have. Canadians should know that this is not the case. Time and Reader's Digest are being placed in a position of tremendous competitive disadvantage in the hope, as the government likes to believe, that advertisers will take their advertising from these two publications and place it in fully Canadian-owned publications. Taken by itself, that is a most doubtful assumption. We ought to view such attempted manipulation of the press with the utmost seriousness. The free press ought to be one of our most cherished possessions, jealously defended. In a very real sense, Canadians are being deprived of their freedom of choice.

The government's action reminds one more of a totalitarian régime than a truly open democracy. Such action by a Canadian government gives me a great sense of foreboding. The outcome will very likely be that Time and Reader's Digest—certainly the former—will, for all practical purposes, be legislated out of the country by means of economic levers. Canadians will have been deprived of one part of their freedom of choice. One more step will have been taken along the road to repressive action, and all this will have been done without guaranteeing the very thing the government is ostensibly concerned about, namely, a Canadian magazine industry with strong economic viability.

Why are Canadians so concerned about what is happening? Originally, I suggest, the minister intended to force both publications out of this country. Reader's Digest is the best family magazine that enters Canadian homes. It is a welcome visitor, an old friend. For the time being the magazine has been reprieved. Personally, I condemn the method by which this was done. It is not spelled out in legislation. It is open to any future minister of national revenue to reverse such a decision. How would he decide, after a bad night, say, or a bad day, when this matter could come up for decision again?

Mr. Baldwin: And the minister has so much on his mind that his nights must be bad.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Perhaps another minister's view of what constitutes 80 per cent Canadian content will be different. I have never been ashamed to admit that Reader's Digest enters my home. I think it is a fine family magazine, fit for children to read. I welcome it; I welcome its wholesomeness. The magazine does not resort to four-letter words, pornography or near pornography, in order to attract reader attention. In recent years, 30 per cent of its material has been of Canadian content and its articles are attractive to Canadians. It prints factual accounts of Canadian geography, human interest stories about Canadians, and interesting, readable vignettes about our history.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) spoke about taking the advice of advisers in his department before proposing Bill C-58 as now printed. He ought to have consulted experts in literary matters. Perhaps he did. Perhaps he overlooked the expertise of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) who in her interesting and logical speech last night showed that she possesses knowledge and expertise of literary matters.

An hon. Member: She sure took a long time doing it.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): The ministers concerned ought to consider the views of departmental experts, but they ought also to consider the views of the Canadian people. I suggest that they have paid too much attention to the views of the periodicals' association which has an axe to grind and wants to promote its own interests. I suggest that the desires of the Canadian people should prevail. The government should pay more heed than it has to the wishes of Canadians. I should like to put on record the views of certain people who wrote to me communicating their concern about the matter we are discussing. First, may I read the letter of the Reverend Peter Brouwer, who wrote:

> With respect to the government's intention to rescind section 19(2) of the Income Tax Act, I wish to express my strong objection. We appreciate and enjoy Reader's Digest and Time magazine a great deal and I hate to see it go or hurt in any way.
> As far as we are concerned, there is nothing comparable that can replace them, especially Reader's Digest. It has a good percentage of Canadian content and we would be deprived of that if RD would have to go.
> Reader's Digest, I feel, does our country a very worth-while service. It gives work for many Canadian workers and writers.
> If the government really wants to strengthen the Canadian magazine industry, let them come up with something comparable even if it means a little extra help. I have nothing against that—

He says that penalizing good, bona fide foreign magazines which try hard to give good Canadian content, is wrong. He ends the letter by saying:

> —And why should we be subjected to such arbitrary government interference?
> Please, let both Reader's Digest and Time magazine keep their present status.

Next, let me read a letter from an educator, Sister Therese Messner of St. Patrick's separate school in Caledonia. She writes:

Non-Canadian Publications

As an educator, I am an avid reader of the Reader's Digest and use it frequently in my English classes, so therefore I would hate to see this publication discontinued in Canada.

She asks, would I please, when section 19(2) of the Income Tax Act disallowing, as a business expense, advertising placed by Canadian companies in the Digest is debated, keep this in mind. This magazine helps our children, she says. The third letter concerning Time and Reader's Digest is from a lawyer. He writes:

Dear Bill:

I spoke to you last Friday to voice my views about the attitude that the government is taking toward Time and Reader's Digest. I am not a constant reader of the latter although I have been a subscriber to Time since I was at law school in the late 1930s.

● (1220)

I pointed out to you that one of the commendable things that Time did during the war was to establish what they called—if my memory serves me correctly—a pony edition. This was an edition printed on fine paper, and carrying no advertising, which they airmailed to their subscribers in the armed forces who were overseas, including the Canadian forces, so that we used to have our edition of Time usually within a week of it hitting the streets in North America.

If the proposed legislation does anything to prohibit Time from carrying on in Canada as they have in the past, I will be most unhappy.

There are many other letters, but I feel these three are a fair example. They are all from responsible citizens. Other Canadians accomplished in journalism, authors, writers, and so on, have expressed the view along the line I have attempted to present today. Editorials in the daily press all across Canada have condemned the principle behind Bill C-58. They say that the 80 per cent difference in content requirement is a form of censorship; it is most dangerous. I would call it a censorship by mathematics. Mathematics is a precise science dealing in figures. Here we are talking about ideas and literary content. How could a magazine be censored by mathematics? In my opinion, the officials of Revenue Canada are the least qualified to do this of any government department.

As I said a few moments ago, one of the most qualified people in this House to do this would be the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. She has many years of experience, and a good reputation as a journalist. We should listen to what she is saying. Why does the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) not consult her before putting a mathematical value on content? The hon. member to whom I referred was not even permitted to be a member of the committee and to make a contribution to it. The government whip is usually a congenial person even though he has a rather loud voice. I hope she was not intimidated by his voice. Surely the whip should have seen the reason and should have permitted her views to be expressed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Advertising costs should be deductible. The competitors of Time and Reader's Digest claim that those magazines have an unfair advantage in attracting advertisers. That is not so. The reason for advertising in those magazines does not have anything to do with the cost. The fact is that the cost of such ads are deductible, in the same way that advertisers can deduct for advertising in Canadian magazines. The advantage of deductibility is the same for all. The compelling reason lies in the fact that these two magazines have the greatest circulation and readership; therefore, there is the greatest possible exposure for advertisers.

I wish to refer to the comments of the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) whom Your Honour censured the other day, if I may be so bold as to say that. He did not have the opportunity to make his point. He stated that article after article in Saturday Night expressed the Canadian scene in a way that simply turned off readers. Having read one or two issues of that magazine, I found it a most destructive and demoralizing view of the Canadian scene. Maclean's is often in the same category. Nobody wants to be continually fed this sort of thing. The writers in Canadian magazines are what I call iconoclasts: they want to tear down anything that detracts; they do not give Canadians a sense of well-being or a sense of being proud to be Canadian. It is for this reason that Time and Reader's Digest attract the readership they do. This is why advertisers use them to reach the Canadian people.

Magazines such as Maclean's need only to improve their format. I would be less than honest if I did not admit that they made some effort in this regard, although they still turn me off. They must improve their format in order to appeal to a larger cross-section of the Canadian people. If they do that, they will certainly increase their circulation and readership. They will then attract advertisers and get their share of the advertising dollar.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He can complete his remarks only with the unanimous consent of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Madam Speaker, I thank hon. members for giving me permission to continue. The word "conclusion" appears at the top of the page in my hand. I have shown that Bill C-58 flies in the face of what grassroots Canadians really want. It is important to have another look at the "content" interpretation based on the 80 per cent content rule, or to simply remove it altogether as this subamendment suggests. That is why I support it. There needs to be much greater precision in defining what the government is talking about. It cannot be left to the whim of any minister. Surely it is not beyond the competence of the departmental officials to devise a precise way of indicating what they want accomplished. It would be far better to remove this provision altogether.

I admit that the present minister has good intentions. Previous speakers have complimented him. I know him as an honourable minister who wants to do what is right. I feel he had a gun held to his head, perhaps by the Secretary of State or the cabinet, and this compelled him to take this avenue of accomplishing the removal of Time and Reader's Digest from the Canadian scene.

There is the threat of closure. To what end? Reader's Digest will live, thanks to the minister and the special arrangement he has made. Let me say, however, that we want to know about it in more precise terms. The Canadian edition of Time will perhaps disappear. Canadians will have lost a publication which gives us a view of the world. As I said before, it is a window on the world. The advertising revenue accruing to other Canadian magazines such as Maclean's will remain essentially the same, for the reasons I have given. I will support all amendments and subamendments which have the effect of permitting Time and Reader's Digest to continue to provide intelligent, interesting reading to thinking Canadians.

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, in rising to speak in support of motion No. 4, placed before the House by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) and seconded by myself, I think it becomes quite obvious that I have serious misgivings about certain aspects of the bill that is before us. This is a somewhat difficult and delicate role for a backbencher to play. For this reason, and at the outset of my remarks, I want to express my support and encouragement of the two ministers involved who have been faced with the unenviable task of attempting to grapple with yet another aspect of our developing Canadian nationhood—that relating to the status of the publishing industry in this country and the promotion and sustenance of greater Canadian talent in that area.

There is one other general comment I would like to make at this point, and I feel this very sincerely. I feel it is an indication of the real strength of the government, and of the party which forms the government—of which I am proud to be a part—that, as a backbencher of rather lowly rank, I can rise in this chamber and speak freely and express my concern about specific aspects of this legislation, even when such concern extends to the point where the member may find it beyond the bounds of his considered judgment to be able to support the legislation in the final stages of debate.

Mr. Martin: I want to talk on several aspects of the bill, but first I would like to speak about the intent of the legislation as I understand it. My understanding is that it is intended to assist Canadian newspapers and the periodical industry, to promote Canadian talent and to take a further step in our development as an independent and interdependent nation. So what did we do? Ten years ago we introduced a 75 per cent ownership clause. This was the key. This was the clause which exempted, at the time, two prominent international magazines then on the market in Time and Reader's Digest. It was a move in the right direction. It was a move which had the general support of Canadians.

What are we doing now? We are taking this one step further: we are introducing Bill C-58 and we are saying that the exemption given ten years ago to those particular periodicals is not valid today and that it should be withdrawn. Basically, that is all that the legislation says. The legislation as it is proposed at the present time really changes no other aspect. So Bill C-58 is really intended to complete the job which was started ten years ago.

The problem arises with the introduction of a new definition which really came before us some ten months after the bill was introduced. It is not a factor in the bill itself, but it is clear—and I think the minister deserves credit for having made this clear—that it is going to be part of the regulations that will be followed as the bill is administered. The key phrase in this connection is "not substantially the same". For the last ten years there has never been a test, as I understand it, of that particular phraseology in the Income Tax Act. It was never queried. This was probably one reason why the legislation worked so well. It was never queried until this spring, and at the time it was queried my understanding is that departmental officials in the Department of National Revenue, in their usual able way, looked at it and said, "Well, we would interpret this as being 50 per cent different."

That was a reasonable conclusion, arrived at by reasonable people. The senior officials in the Department of National Revenue are, indeed, very reasonable people. My understanding is that, based on that ruling, one of those international magazines, namely, Time, proceeded to arrange its affairs so that it could live with Bill C-58. In other words, it was prepared to become a Canadian magazine 75 per cent owned and controlled in Canada and it was prepared to change its format dramatically so as to have a 50 per cent Canadian content. In the case of Reader's Digest, I understand they never did give that indication; they never did indicate, until very recently, that they had any intention of Canadianizing their operation as Time had done. Then, late in October, the government came up with this 80 per cent factor, and this, I suggest, drastically changed the rules of the game.

Mr. Martin: I am not a lawyer, but it is not at all clear to me how something that is "not substantially the same" has to be "80 per cent different." It seems to me that if the legislators in 1965—and I was not among them—had wanted "not substantially the same" to mean something other than a normal person would deem it to mean, they would have inserted such definition into the legislation at the time. Surely, if they had thought in terms of 80 per cent different or 75 per cent different, or whatever, they would have indicated as much and put it into the bill at that time. However, they did not, and I think that is an important point.

My objection is that we should be forced to accept as an understanding, as we review and pass Bill C-58, that even though there is no change in the bill itself, based on the 1965 "not substantially the same" terminology, that part of what we are doing must be deemed to change that situation. In other words, we understand there is to be an accompanying regulation which will say that from now on "not substantially the same", regardless of what it meant in the past, will from now on mean "80 per cent different."

The nub of the issue, in my view, is that this is really not what parliament wants at all, and I do not think it is really what the Canadian people want. That is why I am supporting the "60 per cent different" terminology in motion No. 4. I believe it refers to 40 per cent the other way, but effectively 60 per cent is the content factor included in motion No. 4. If the government proposes to get into the content game, that seems to be a much more rational and acceptable approach and one which contains a reasonable degree of fairness and equity. I believe we need to put this into legislation if we are going to do it at all.

Madam Speaker, there are a number of points I wish to cover. My time is limited, so I propose to discuss now some aspects of the content provisions of the legislation which are of particular concern to me. Following that, I shall probably come back to another matter relating to the "international pool" development which is now applicable to Reader's Digest. But I will skip that for the moment. Let me speak of the content rule. I want to talk for a few moments about the matter of freedom of the press. I know that the last thing in the minister's mind is that any enactment of parliament under his direction would in any way attempt to limit the freedom of the press as we understand it in Canada. Yet I submit that, wilfully or not, imposing this 80 per cent content factor really does have an effect in that direction. It must be accepted that in future, assuming the passage of Bill C-58 in its present form, Canadians engaged in publishing periodicals or newspapers in this country will not be free to publish what they wish and to stay in business, simply because advertising revenues will not be available to them unless they conform to a specific government requirement imposed by parliament.

Normally, my concern about this issue would not be so great as it is had I not had a recent international experience during which I talked first-hand to the people who knew whereof they spoke. I refer to complete withdrawal of the freedom of the press under a parliamentary system not very different from our own. This experience remains with me and will never, likely, be erased. I was also amazed to read recently of the freedom threats that were implied by a reputable Canadian editor to have been directed to the press around the free world in 1974. He referred to such countries as Portugal, Greece, Lebanon, Iraq, Turkey, Thailand, Cambodia, South Viet Nam and Africa, among others. Madam Speaker, without further elaboration of this point, which I know will be disagreeable to many members of this House, I just want to say I agree with the concept that magazine readership must be earned and that it cannot be legislated by government.

The next point I would like to touch on is one relating to advertising dollars. Until quite recently I was under the impression that these two international magazines which have been of such concern to us were drawing a very large proportion of advertising dollars in the consumer magazine advertising business in Canada. I now understand, from what I consider to be a reliable source, that the total obtained by these two magazines in 1975 was 20 per cent, compared with the combination of the Toronto Star and the Maclean's group which drew 47 per cent.

An hon. Member: Of what?

Mr. Martin: Advertising revenue. Time, the magazine that now seems to be the only one under the gun, drew 12 per cent on its own. The point is that Canadian magazines are indeed growing quite well and it may really be doubtful whether the content protection is basically needed for them. From a circulation point of view, however, it is clear that Canadian magazines would be happy to see the disappearance of those that have an international base, something that in my view will not actually occur because I do not think that the readership of Time—Reader's Digest being no longer affected—will drop by a single subscription.

[Mr. Martin.]

I should like to make a few remarks about what I consider to be the counterproductive nature of this legislation, and I am particularly referring to the 80 per cent factor. Presumably, the intent of the 80 per cent is to keep any new international periodicals out of the country, or at least to prevent them establishing a Canadian-owned and operated organization. It was also the intent that Reader's Digest would probably have to fold its Canadian operation, though this matter has now been resolved.

My view, as I mentioned earlier, is that the readership of Time magazine will not decrease by one subscription. So really what we have done is to eliminate not only the possibility but, indeed, the firm and stated intent of a major international newsmagazine to Canadianize its operations and vastly change the format of its publication so as inevitably to enhance development of the Canadian periodical industry, with all its offshoots in the area of Canadian talent and business to Canadian enterprises that that would bring. Surely we are not looking at this time for a means to lessen economic activity in this country. By throwing out the existing Canadian edition we are even going so far as to take away whatever economic benefit may have existed in the country. At the same time we are effectively saying no to the potential of a much more Canadianized operation in all respects. I simply do not understand the thinking that has led to this kind of development, Madam Speaker. To me, it makes no economic sense whatsoever, particularly at this point in time.

I would now like to speak about the creation of a precedent that I see arising from the 80 per cent question. As a chartered accountant engaged in a number of industry settings prior to my election to this House in July, 1974, I had a good deal of interaction with the Income Tax Act and with the officers at all levels of Revenue Canada who have had the responsibility over the years of administering this very complex statute, which has become even more complex since 1972. I have developed a great respect and esteem for the senior officers of Revenue Canada. In fact, it is, I think, the real strength of our taxation system that we have been able to entice and hold people of such calibre to manage and administer the legislation that brings in the revenues of this country.

I believe it was the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) who drew the attention of the House to the fact that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and his officers are frequently making interpretations under the Income Tax Act. They do this under the regulations that accompany the act. This is part and parcel of the difficult role which they are frequently called upon to play. However, Madam Speaker, in my view—and this has been my experience over the years—the government has normally attempted to restrict these regulations to accompanying sections of the Income Tax Act where in fact it was not possible to cover in the actual law the varying sorts of problems that might arise in practice. Yet that, surely, is not the case here.

It follows that the argument relating to the frequency of use of ministerial discretion under the normal operations of the Income Tax Act does not apply in this case. Here, is simply a question as to whether the figure of 80 per cent, 60 per cent, 50 per cent, 40 per cent or whatever should be inserted into the legislation. To not insert a definite figure, in my view, is attempting to do by ministerial discretion what we are not prepared to do in the normal parliamentary process. This grates me, Madam Speaker, and I believe it is a most undesirable precedent for this House to adopt.

I should like to say a few words about the timing of this legislation. I do not find it difficult to support that portion of the motion put forward by the hon. member for Ontario which simply would give a reasonable amount of time to both Time and Reader's Digest to enable them to arrange their ownership affairs in order to meet the requirements of a proposed piece of legislation that will conceivably be passed into law within the next few months.

To suggest, as I believe has been suggested, that an effective date of January 1, 1976, would be fair under the circumstances, in view of the fact that these periodicals have been aware for some time of the intentions of the government in regard to this bill, is in my view stretching the credibility of such an argument far beyond any bounds that can be construed as in any way being fair and reasonable. It is my sincere hope that businesses operating in Canada will always be in a position where they can depend on the laws of the country, as they may exist from time to time, in carrying out their operations and making business decisions that may indeed be fundamental to the continuation of such operations in the country, as is indeed the case with Bill C-58.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I should like to make a few points quite clear in regard to my position on this bill. First, I consider it not only a privilege but a responsibility to speak out in this important forum when confronted by an item of legislation that, in my best judgment, is not in the interests of the public at large. Second, I want again to express my confidence and my satisfaction as a member on the government side in the completely open and almost supportive stand that this government is prepared to take in regard to members who from time to time disagree with specific items of legislation.

My last point is that I want to make it aboundantly clear that I have absolutely no axe to grind with, or on behalf of, any existing periodicals operating in this country which will be seriously affected by this legislation, or indeed with any other publications of international repute which will now be precluded from establishing a Canadian-owned and operated enterprise in the future. My only interest is to see that any legislation in which I participate as a member of parliament during my time on the Hill is truly in the public interest. I do not believe that the existing format of Bill C-58 is so, with specific reference to some of the trappings associated with the bill. I urge members of the House to support motion No. 4 which has been put forward by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Madam Speaker, probably no piece of legislation has generated a more strenuous and informative debate than the debate which has evolved around this particular piece of legislation, its amendments and the motions associated with it. Perhaps at no time in parliamentary history, both through the expressions of members of the House and expressions supported by communications, be they verbal or written, has there ever been such a preponderance of evidence that the government is taking a course that is not approved by the people and which is not necessarily in their best interests.

I think it would be rare indeed if one were to look through the records of this House and find that speech after speech from the side of the proponents of a piece of legislation have criticized and complained about the effects it would have upon them, their constituents and Canada at large.

This bill has been criticized authentically and in documentary fashion in respect of its difficulties of administration, the broadness of possible interpretation and the precarious position in which those that survive may find themselves after this legislation has been brought to bear. It does not necessarily apply only to foreign-owned structures, but it could conceivably apply to Canadian structures within the printing industry. It could, for instance, in many daily newspapers find people from the Department of National Revenue carefully looking over the paper to see how much has been generated by local reporters, how much has been generated on the editorial page by editorials copied from abroad, how much has come from UPI and other foreign sources, and how much has been picked up and merely rewritten to create an interest for the reader of that particular publication.

It is very broad in the impact that it might have while it is officially levelled at two publications in this country. It leads me to wonder whether it is in the interest of Canada, in the interest of the Liberal party or in the interest of some academics, regardless of the interest of the rest of Canada, that this particular bill is now before us. Has it got something to do with the philosophy of the publisher, or has it got something to do with the philosophy of the writers?

I think the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay (Mr. Johnston) made some very pertinent remarks in respect of the interesting aspects of articles which were published in Saturday Night. I think he defined quite adequately why that magazine has not had economic success. He explained why a multitude of Canadians would not read it in large enough numbers to attract advertising, regardless of the competition that existed.

So is it philosophy? Is it because a Sunday school teacher may on occasion take an article from the Reader's Digest to his class? Is it because a minister could quote that magazine effectively as he speaks from the pulpit? Is it because in the main Reader's Digest has been a supporter of the free enterprise system? Is it because on occasion it has attacked a political philosophy that we do not share in this country? Is that the reason? There is no other obvious reason, because you cannot legislate an effective press, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) only moments ago: you just cannot legislate an effective press or an effective magazine industry.

Let us take again the case of Time. Time magazine also has been a free enterprise structure. It has abhorred the interference of government in the lives of the people. It has, I must say, been a very vicious attacker of a former leader of our party and, in effect, in its attack has supported the present government and aided and abetted its election. It is now getting its throat cut.

Is that because it is philosophically not in line with the government of today? We cannot help but wonder about these things. Is this another way of removing an obstacle from the minds of Canadians, an obstacle which might be in the way of the re-election of this government, because philosophically the mood of this government certainly is not reflected by articles which one reads in either of the magazines concerned? Certainly neither of these magazines would support this in a free editorial structure, and they are not free at this moment in time. They would scarcely dare open their mouths except in a plea for their support. Certainly they are not free at this moment in time to editorialize without being further considered guilty by a government of this structure and this nature.

There are in Canada a multitude of magazines which serve Canadians on a regional or relatively local basis. Among these magazines one would have to consider the Atlantic Advocate. It has been an authentic magazine with an attractive readership. It is a magazine which is taken to school, to the historical society and to other organizations as an example of authentic literature in respect of the area which it serves. It has given historic and current articles to the readership of that area which are of great significance. It has, without fear or favour requested, presented articles which attack the government of the day and which support the government of the day. It has represented the broad view of the editorial staff of this structure which has made it an attractive magazine read by maritimers whether at home or abroad.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if the national structure of the magazine industry in Canada were to follow the same pattern, Canadians would be seeking these magazines out and they would not be seeking those of foreign ownership or those of foreign publication. It is from this point of view, I think, that this House must consider what is good or what is bad for Canadians, because we cannot legislate change in the philosophies of those who write the present magazines.

I should like to take an example, as did the hon. member for Okanagan-Kootenay, of an article in Maclean's magazine by Mr. Harry Bruce, who I agree has done some good writing in Canada. He wrote an article about the rural community in which I live. That article discussed the principal economic support of that community and of tens of thousands of people around us, including an important part of the constituency of Victoria-Madawaska. The hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles) described this article extremely well when be wondered whether these were iconoclasts or whether they were looking for the things they could criticize and not looking for the good side.

This article pertained to the McCain food industry. Let me say at this moment that I have no conflict of interest because of any pecuniary interest in that corporation—none whatsoever. I happen to be one of the distant cousins to which they have never extended the use of their chequebook and are not likely to. I am certainly not taking their part; I am taking the part of the economic stability of the community in which I live. The national image which was created by the article written by Harry Bruce was detrimental not only to the company concerned but to the whole area because he criticized, while looking for nothing good, and he discovered virtually all the bad one could find. May I call it one o'clock?

At one o'clock the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, at the noon-hour I was mentioning an article which referred to one aspect of my constituency in which the subject matter was extremely critical. I submit it was not an in-depth consideration of the subject matter nor a fair consideration of it. The picture presented could reduce the business of the company concerned if the article were to be believed by all its readers. This is an article detrimental to the area in which I live. It is an article to which the owners, publishers, editors and whoever may be responsible did not give proper analysis prior to distribution. This is the kind of article which will not have the magazine read, no matter where published or by whom, and no matter how Canadian it may be. Altogether, too many of these articles appear.

I abhor the basic philosophy of so many people who seek out the bad in an individual, regardless of how good his record may be. I abhor the approach, that seems to be totally negative, where we cannot assess the positive and present that as well. I suppose the classic example in today's American publications would be the assault on the Kennedy's. The Kennedy's may be criticized for their accomplishments in the field for which they are noted, but it is also high time that they were assessed in their daily work rather than in the way they live. If this is a matter of interest to some, and I agree it is, it certainly is not an item of interest to an adequate readership in the Canadian magazine structure which we are talking about, or any other comparable structure anywhere in this world. Those who go for filth will read it, but those who go for information in their reading and expect information from national publications, of course, will not read it and will not be patronized, therefore, by the advertisers who must have readership if they are to obtain value for the money spent.

It has been stated in this House that there is a parallel. I will be repetitive in this regard, inasmuch as I made comparable remarks during an earlier phase of this debate. It has been stated that the materials which flow into the two magazines in this area do so at lower than the total cost. I submit that every magazine in Canada has a purpose to use syndicated columnists, and that every writer in Canada has a purpose to join a syndicated organization whereby his work can be distributed. I submit that if there is theft of our literature from Canada, we should not legislate other literature out but should negotiate a fair deal for Canadian writers and foreign writers, particularly from the United States. This has been mentioned in this debate.

This amendment does not at all correct the structure about which we are objecting. The amendment and the bill refer to an indefinable and only interpretable difference. I submit to you, Madam Speaker, that probably most members of this House could take a pen and, without research, reproduce an article for Reader's Digest or Time magazine that would really accomplish little in result and would convey the full intent of the original author. That would contribute very little to society and would, in return, produce a lower fee for the writer while it would accomplish, in a poorer way, the same purpose. The writer would have condensed it, recondensed it and altered it—and who does not? It is just a matter of basic homework, and the cost of that homework, having been done abroad while some magazine hires a flunkey to do it over again, probably in poorer form. What are we really accomplishing?

I should like to issue a little warning to the minister. While he may be totally and completely dedicated to this cause, a group of his predecessors in cabinet have been equally dedicated to causes only to find, when their government was criticized for that cause, that they no longer held office. Just to cite a few, a gentleman by the name of Benson went across Canada with a white paper with the full backing of the Prime Minister. He was dedicated. He said, "This shall be our law, and this is our white paper." Mr. Benson did not even run for parliament after that. There was a minister of consumer and corporate affairs named Gray, and another fellow by the name of Haidasz. More recently, there was a fellow by the name of Turner. And what about another fellow by the name of Stanbury? I assure the minister that if, perchance, this government happens to experience political repercussions because of the dedication of the minister to a cause opposed by many Canadians, the name which is written at the end of that list may very well be his.

I regret very much that a good friend of mine by the name of Alden Nowland, who is nationally noted as an author, came under some criticism in the course of this debate, but if one is going to write, or if one is going to be in the field of politics, one has to be able to take criticisms and I am sure he will not mind. He has, by long personal sacrifice and dedication to his profession, achieved prominence in Canada, which is a great credit to him. While I reserve the right not to agree with him—and he has, in print, already reserved the right not to agree with me—that in no way interferes with our long-standing personal friendship, and I hope that will remain a mutual situation. However, the criticism merely indicates that the Canadian public has the right to criticize what it reads, and to read it or leave it. Let us read it or leave it, and not legislate any control over it to ram down the throats of Canadians.

This bill has a multitude of weaknesses, including its total unpopularity with many Canadian people—but it is an administrative carte blanche. I do not believe that in any instance we should give to any minister or pair of ministers the right to judge and to put themselves into the position of being both judge and executioner. This is not right. Putting all other criticisms of this legislation aside, the delegation of authority to the minister and the cabinet is, to me, an obnoxious factor in this bill because it is purely and simply a matter of judgment. It is not defined for either the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State just what might be done with this legislation at any given time in the future. Those who might at some future time come under the influence of this legislation should bear in mind that they are at the whim, pleasure and total personal disposal of those who make personal judgments in the execution of their jobs as part of the government structure. It may be the minister or an understrapper of some kind, but this is not legislation which defines the position of any publication in Canada, Time and Reader's Digest included, despite any smoke-filled, backroom deal which may have been made.

It seems to me that there should be international representation on a worldwide basis employed by Canadian publications. If we are to pass this legislation, Canada is entitled to first-hand technical knowledge of Canadians located outside Canada. There is no indication whatsoever that any publication in Canada has the capacity to do this, and if there is the capacity to give us worldwide information perhaps it will have to be in co-operation with other publications from other lands to exchange items of interest in a way which people can find credible. I submit that until such time as a syndicated structure can be established for regional publications, and until such time as our national publications can find the opportunity, the way to co-operate with other national groups either inside or outside Canada to maintain a group of authors who will give Canada credible articles on the world at large, this legislation is totally premature.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I do not have a page in my hand which says "conclusion," as did the previous speaker, but I want to say, in closing, that those who are Canadian nationalists to the exclusion of all other aspects of our life have to recognize that Canada's writers and its publishing industry are not experts in every field. There is no such structure imposed in other countries, that is, those with the democratic structures we admire. There might be such a structure imposed in some of those countries we admire much less, but no such structure exists which insists on such rigid regulations regarding the printed word as there will be in Canada when this legislation is passed.

There is no country in the commonwealth of nations as we have known it which has imposed such rigid restrictions on the publishing privilege. Canada has two Canadians who have owned printing establishments on a worldwide basis, and they are examples of the freedom of the press and ownership which we will not extend to the rest of the world. We expect to put up a standard of our own, and probably will complain if comparable standards are imposed upon our Canadian owners of publications abroad. This certainly is a one-way street down which certain nationalists are leading us without consideration for the welfare of Canadians as readers, Canadians as publishers or Canadians as writers. We have failed to recognize what was needed and have exported good writers because we failed to give these writers a chance to make a living in Canada. We are now trying to kick out those who are running the service, and the Canadian authors who are critical have not prepared themselves to fill the gap.

● (1420)

Mr. John Roberts (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion moved by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) and the amendment by my friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I should like to associate myself with the remarks of the hon. member for Ontario—at least the first paragraph or so—in which he compliments the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), describing them as men of honour and conviction who are genuinely trying to do something for the publishing industry. Like him, I have a very great and high regard for them both. They have been subjected to a long and trying debate and to a considerable degree of abuse which must be difficult to accept—allusions to national socialism, führers and dictators. These two gentlemen, with their background and reputation of concern for civil rights, must find that kind of comment very difficult to take.

Mr. Baldwin: Dig in your heart; you know it is right.

Mr. Roberts: Digging in my heart, I say to them that I respect their obstinacy, their determination, their decision to proceed and persevere with this legislation. There are those on the other side, and even some on this side, who do not support them, but the vast majority of members on this side of the House do.

I wish to direct my remarks to the amendment presented by the hon. member for Ontario which would have the effect of allowing 40 per cent of non-original material to be presented in periodicals in this country. I think the hon. member shares, as does the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin), the general fundamental purpose of the legislation which is quite simply trying to ensure that advertising revenues in the Canadian market be used for the support of a Canadian periodicals industry. I think most hon. members agree with that objective.

Mr. Fairweather: Right.

Mr. Roberts: The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has a distinguished record of supporting the objectives of ensuring that kind of protection for the Canadian periodicals system. Where the hon. member for Ontario might disagree is with the effectiveness of the legislation to reach those objectives. The first question the hon. member raises is why such legislation or regulations are necessary to achieve the objectives. It springs from the context of economic activity on this continent which supports the periodicals industry.

The House recognized this in 1965 when it brought in legislation to correct what otherwise would have been a difficult or impossible situation. If you are producing magazine material for a market of 200 million or 220 million people in North America, as is the case for most publications within the United States, then the cost per article is relatively low because you can write off the cost more widely than what it would be for purchasing the same kind of material of the same standard for a market in Canada of 22 million people. It is a very simple argument.

[Mr. McCain.]

The cost of material of the same quality on a pro rata basis in the United States is much lower than it could possibly be for publications which operate in Canada.

In that sense, it is very easy to place in Canada foreign material at very low cost to the magazine that wants to use it in Canada, because the cost of producing that material has already been met in a much larger market. In effect, the material could be easily dumped, if there were no regulations or legislation to oppose it, from the United States market into the Canadian market. Revenue to the originator for that material would be gravy, not necessary to cover the cost of the material in the first place.

It is for that reason in 1965 we had a situation of unfair competition. Magazines coming into Canada at a lower cost base could compete effectively against Canadian magazines. The life of the Canadian magazine industry was threatened with this kind of competition. It was going to be impossible for them to survive. One of the witnesses who appeared before the committee in reference to this subject put it very well. He said if you were manufacturing automobiles and had to do that lock, stock and barrel, and there was a competitor down the street who was importing engines which he did not have to pay for, obviously he would be in a superior competitive position. You would not stay in business very long if you had to cover the whole cost of production while the competitor covered only half or a portion of it. The example is quite a good parallel with the magazine industry.

It was for these reasons that changes were made in 1965 to try to ensure that Canadian periodicals had a chance of surviving. That change said to Canadian advertisers, "If you wish to deduct the cost of advertising, it must take place in magazines whose material originates in Canada". There were two major exceptions, Time and Reader's Digest, who were able to have the advantage both of low costs—because they were producing for the North American market—and an advantage in competing against American competitors such as Newsweek because they promised their advertisers a tax deduction which Newsweek and other foreign magazines could not offer.

What we are doing in this legislation is removing that anomaly. It is not a question of censorship, but simply saying "Compete on the same terms as other Canadian magazines or the same terms as non-Canadian magazines. Don't expect the advantages of both. Choose the same footing either of one or the other." It removes the special and advantageous position which those magazines have had.

The hon. member for Ontario says that in practice what we are doing is insisting that 80 per cent of the material originate in Canada, so why not make it 60 per cent? In other words, it is not a question of principle. He is arguing it is all right to be 60 per cent pregnant, but 80 per cent pregnant is not all right. He says he believes 60 per cent would be sufficient to encourage the Canadian periodicals industry. The hon. member for Scarborough West made the same argument. He looked at the percentage of total advertising revenues paid to Time and Reader's Digest and said it was small. It would have been more accurate if he had brought to the House the figures for the periodicals industry. He would have seen that the amount Time and Reader's Digest siphoned off was very significant.

If we accepted the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Ontario, I suggest we would create not only a situation in which Time and Reader's Digest would be able to bring in 40 per cent of material originating outside the country, but that virtually every Canadian periodical would ultimately be required to depend more and more heavily on material generated outside this country. That is the major difficulty with the proposal. This difficulty has not been dealt with by hon. members opposite, as far as I can recall, nor has it been greatly stressed by members on this side.

What the amendment would do is set a context which would assure that in order to be able to compete effectively in cost terms, almost every Canadian periodical would have to face a split-run type of situation. If your competitors are able to bring in 40 per cent of their material at high quality and low cost, no Canadian periodical is going to be encouraged to do any better than that, because in doing better than that he will put himself in a difficult cost position in comparison to his competitor.

The suggestion which the hon. member for Ontario is making would not only not assist the production of more Canadian material in the Canadian periodicals industry but it would in fact have the reverse effect. It would lead to less and less Canadian material being produced because it would be cheaper to import it from sources outside the country.

Some members may suggest there is nothing to worry about in that; that we should open the market and let whoever can compete, compete with whatever advantages he has. Some members say that we should let all compete on whatever basis they like in the periodicals industry, communications and in allied areas. I point out that we have decided in other fields that such a course of action would be strongly inimical to the interests of this country.

No doubt it would be cheaper to do away with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canadian television system and let ABC, NBC and CBS instal stations in every Canadian city. That would cost less. The stations would still carry local news after the national news, no doubt—the American national news. But we have said that we do not feel this approach would be appropriate. The reason is that we wish to assure, in Canada, access to Canadian material for those who wish to see it. For that reason, we support our broadcasting system and impose content requirements on that broadcasting system in order to ensure that those who wish to see or hear Canadian news, who wish to see the world with the Canadian viewpoint, will be able to do so.

Those listening to this debate might be pardoned for concluding that if this legislation is allowed to pass, Canadians will be unable to receive material describing what is happening outside the country. I suggest that access to U.S. publications is not threatened in our country, what is threatened is the Canadian ability to receive Canadian material and a view of the world through Canadian eyes. That is the danger—not that there will be any shortage of material explaining to us what is happening in other countries, particularly in the United States.

Non-Canadian Publications

The problem with the amendment of the hon. member for Ontario is this: it will lay down a rule which will have to be followed not only by the publications he is concerned about but by every other publication in Canada. It will ensure that more high quality, but cheaper material comes from outside the country. It will set a standard which all magazines will have to meet within the competitive context of that industry. I suggest that on those grounds the amendment ought to be rejected.

I respect the hon. member for Ontario and the hon. member for Scarborough West. Their concerns expressed in this House have been with the practical consequences of this legislation.

An hon. Member: What about the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt)?

Mr. Roberts: They wonder if it achieves the objectives to which most of us subscribe. I feel that if they and other hon. members will take the time to read the extensive committee hearings, they will see, without doubt, that this legislation will have a significant, favourable impact on the revenues of the Canadian periodical industry and television industry. I commend a reading of the long discussion in committee to those two hon. members.

I turn now to the question of censorship which, as I have said before, is not a red herring but a red whale dragged across centre stage of this debate. Yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway quoted at length from a brief presented under a letterhead with the signatures of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the former premier of British Columbia and Mrs. Brown.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It was not with their signatures.

Mr. Roberts: It was under their signatures as patrons of the organization. I was going to suggest to my hon. friend that there are other reasons for rejecting the letter's arguments than its official patterns. However, that is by the way. The letter raised two basic arguments, in reply to an earlier statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), asking what was the objection to depriving Time and Reader's Digest of tax deductibility for their advertisers. I quote what the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway read, as printed on page 10692 of Hansard:

> The short answer is that the tax deductibility of an expense incurred for the purpose of earning income (e.g. advertising costs) is the normal rule.

This, clearly, has not been the normal rule since 1965 in this country as applied to magazines which are not Canadian. Magazines like Newsweek, U.S. News, World Report, The Economist, Playboy, Cosmopolitan—take what you will—aside from Time and Reader's Digest are magazines which have not been able to claim that tax deductibility. The normal rule is not what he has described in this letter as quoted by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. The second argument she made, an argument echoed on many sides of the House, is that we are giving the Minister of National Revenue power of extraordinary censorship, power to impose arbitrary decisions. The document the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway quoted says, as reported on the same page of Hansard:

We do not know what aspect of content a future government, still disclaiming (as you do) any intention to censor, might see fit to consider in imposing taxation. A still more nationalistic administration might decide to define only writings about Canada as "domestic" for taxation purposes. A paternalistic government might decide that creation of jobs for Canadian writers was so high a priority that only Canadian Citizens' work would rank as domestic—

In a sense, it is true that future governments might decide to do this. Parliament is supreme, and if the government has a majority it can get its legislation through and make it effective. But it cannot be done under this legislation nor under these regulations. The "substantially not the same" clause is in the legislation. It is capable of being interpreted by the courts. The courts can apply their interpretation. Such interpretation, it seems to me, could not be applied to the kinds of things described in this paragraph. If any future government wanted to do those things, it would have to come back to this House and obtain authority for so doing. It could not be done under the regulatory powers held by the Minister of National Revenue.

It has been argued that the "substantially not the same" provision is a censorship provision. I suggest that there is a strong difference between a provision which requires a certain amount of material of a certain kind and one which excludes or forbids certain material. The difference is very considerable. If, for instance, there were a private club in Ottawa which said that no woman is eligible for membership, we would look on that as discrimination. If, on the other hand, the club's regulations required 25 per cent of its members to be women, I doubt if one would say that this discriminates against men. The same can be said about political parties. The Liberal party—and, for all I know, the Conservative party—is governed by clauses which ensure that a certain proportion of delegates to a convention are women. I have never heard any Liberal, or anyone else, describe that as censorship or discrimination against men entering the party.

Mrs. Appolloni: It is only discrimination against women.

Mr. Roberts: When I attended university, the Anglicans constructed a chapel. However, the university insisted that not only Anglicans should use it but that a certain proportion of time should be set aside for those of the Jewish faith, for those of the Protestant faith—

An hon. Member: And for Catholics.

Mr. Roberts: —and for those of the Catholic faith. That was a content regulation, if you like. Not one of these groups complained about being censored, persecuted or discriminated against because they were kept out for a certain proportion of the time when members of another faith occupied the chapel. Nor have I ever heard it said that a law to protect an endangered species—and I think Canadian magazines expressing Canadian views are an endangered species—is discriminatory or constitutes a persecution of species which are not in danger.

This legislation, and the regulations under it, will not prevent any article being written or any point of view being expressed so long as the editor of the magazine wishes to have that view expressed. It does not forbid the expression of points of view, but does require that 80 per cent of the material should originate in Canada or be for a Canadian publication. That is all it says. We have the same kind of regulations governing television content in this country. I have not heard, during the past ten years, members of the opposition claim that those are censorship provisions. I have not heard people in the broadcasting industry argue that they are being censored.

We are proposing to apply the same regulations to Time and Reader's Digest which apply now to magazines like Chatelaine, Maclean's, Saturday Night, and so on. I have not heard anyone seriously suggest that we are now censoring Chatelaine, Saturday Night, and so on. The same regulations are applied now to U.S. News, Foreign Report, Newsweek, and so on. It would be ridiculous to say that these magazines consider that they are being censored. Nor does this legislation prevent or preclude the entry of any foreign magazine into Canada.

The question of censorship has been raised not only in relation to what I believe is a completely false equation of censorship to the establishment of content requirements for Canadian magazines to qualify for tax benefits. It has also risen in a personal context with suggestions coming from various sides of the House that somehow a personal censorship has been exercised against the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I gather that she, herself, supports the argument that somehow she has been unfairly treated in being removed from the parliamentary committee which considered the matter.

The fact is that she was never a member of the original committee. She was never taken off the committee, because she was never on it. She asked to be on it. She felt that her distinguished characteristics of 30 years in journalism—characteristics which led to a character that we all, certainly on this side, respect and admire—should entitle her to a place on the committee. It is understandable that she should feel that way.

There were many members on this side who, for a variety of reasons, had for many years occupied themselves with this kind of question. They equally felt they had a place on that committee. It is not surprising that the members of the committee should be those that the government and Liberal members felt were most likely to express the case held by the vast majority of members on this side of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can only continue with consent. Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The issue of my participation on that committee has been discussed and published over and over for several months. Now it has been raised in the House. The hon. member knows exactly what happened because he shared in that committee very carefully.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: When I applied to go on that committee, the whip himself agreed to my going on there. I flew all the way from Vancouver on the midnight flight to be there on time. I attended every committee meeting. The facts being raised now are not true.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I should say that this is hardly a point of order. The remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) indicate that this is pursuant to a debate on the matter. Hon. members may have different points of view. However, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway had the opportunity to raise this question the other day. Every time a member refers to the membership of a committee, I do not think it allows the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway to raise points of order that are not really points of order. She might have opinions but they are not points of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) said she was rising on a point of order. I submit that what she was attempting to do was to raise a question of privilege. This is a matter of the privileges of this House. I make this suggestion in all humility and in a spirit of non-partisanship.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: I am quite serious. The right of every member of this House has been challenged. I suggest that we work out the terms of an order of reference by which the House might refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. There is a well known practice in this House that when a member stands in his place he is standing on his reputation and the House has to accept the word of that hon. member. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) stood in her place in the House and said she was present at the committee. She said, quite unequivocally, that she tried to get on that committee and did not succeed. I suggest that the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Roberts) has to accept the hon. member at her word.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order.

Mr. Faulkner: Tell us about Jack Horner and the Hutterites.

Mr. Paproski: What's a Hutterite?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, the chancellor's foot is rather short today. The matter of Hutterites and the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) surely has no relevancy.

Mr. Faulkner: It is just a little embarrassing.

Mr. Paproski: I don't know what they are talking about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fairweather: I have all afternoon. Obviously, the government is not very anxious about this bill any more. I will wait until I get the courtesy of silence.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I was on the committee and tried to be responsible for my party's view of Bill C-58. The point that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and the one for which I want to defend her privilege is that, despite her request, there were constant changes in the membership of that committee during the hearings. At no time did the whip, or whoever organizes this for the government, give this hon. lady the privilege that she was invited. I do not particularly share most of the views she has about this legislation, but I do find that the way in which the government treated this hon. member is most reprehensible. I merely wonder why the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Roberts), a person of high intelligence, should spend his time trying to defend such conduct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I admit that I sympathize with the views of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway as much as I sympathize with the different views of other hon. members. However, everything that has been said only convinces me more that this is not the right place or the right time to raise this matter. It should be raised at another time, through other means. I invite hon. members to allow the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Roberts) to complete his remarks on extended time.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for giving me a little rest to revive my spirits. I was simply pointing out that which the hon. member has confirmed. Her complaint was that she was not placed on the committee, not that she was removed from it. I suggest that she has been heard ad infinitum in caucus and in committee. She came to the committee. She was given the rights that hon. members have when they come to a committee but are not members of it. She was allowed to speak out and present her views. She spoke in the House. She spoke to the press. Her problem is not that she has been gagged. Her problem is that she has not been able to convince her colleagues. That is the essence of the matter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would hope that the hon. member will come back to the subject matter. What he is now saying is not relevant to this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member should come back to the motion before the House at this time.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was referred to by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). He admitted that he did not know how members were appointed to a particular committee. I would like to place on record that at no time was the hon. lady muzzled. She can speak as much as any member of that committee. I never removed her from the committee.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The government whip, inadvertently I am sure, has misled the House. The fact is the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was not only kept off that committee but she was denied her right as a member of parliament to contribute to the committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The only opportunity that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway had to speak during the proceedings of that committee was when I, as a member, moved that she be heard. The government members abstained on that vote.

Mr. Roberts: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, it would be better to proceed with the argument. Of course the committee worked under restraints. It worked under a time restraint to which all parties agreed. The discussions necessarily took place within that framework. The hon. member loves to feel persecuted. I would simply say there is no reason to impute motives of persecution when all that has happened is that there has been a disagreement of view. The member for Vancouver-Kingsway may march to a different drummer; she should not expect her colleagues to fall all over themselves to dance to her particular tune. I want to pass on briefly to the argument that somehow in the past few days there has been an extraordinary collapse and change of view on the government's part in relation to Reader's Digest. It was quite clear, I believe, to most of us who sat on the committee that if Reader's Digest were prepared to meet the ownership requirements, it could very easily meet the 80 per cent content requirement rule. In fact, it was established before the committee that so long as an article appeared first in the Canadian Reader's Digest, even if it subsequently or almost immediately were to appear in the international edition, it would be classified as material meeting the 80 per cent requirement. This is because the purpose of the requirement was to encourage the generation of material within Canada, and that, in effect, is what is happening under the clarification—not, I would argue, a great change, but a clarification—which was described by the Minister of National Revenue.

There has been no collapse, no great change in government policy. What happened was that Reader's Digest agreed to meet the requirements, which came as no surprise to many of those who sat on the committee. The interpretation provided by the Minister of National Revenue is this: if there is an article in the possession of the Reader's Digest pool, then provided that the rewriting and condensation of it is done by Canadians in Canada, that will be considered as part of the 80 per cent content. This, I would think, was generally clear from the beginning; material which was rewritten, condensed or originated for the Canadian edition would be classified under the 80 per cent substantially different rule.

The criticism that the clarification of the ruling in relation to Reader's Digest indicates the arbitrariness of the legislation and the regulations seems to me to be completely fallacious. If the minister had come to the House and said only that he was presenting legislation which required that a periodical be substantially not the same if it was to qualify for that tax advantage, members opposite would have said, "What is 'substantially not the same'"? Why do you not tell us exactly what you mean? What is this pig in the poke you are asking us to buy?" In response to that kind of questioning from the magazines affected and from members of the opposition, the government has indicated what, in its view, the phrase "substantially not the same" means. That is all that has been done. So as not to fudge the issue, so as to be frank with members of the House, the government has said what, in its view, those words mean.

Of course, the opportunity to deal with the courts still exists. Hon. members ask; "What if the court disagrees with your interpretation? Does that mean you abandon the policy? Do you abandon the techniques? Do you abandon the objective?" The government has simply said, "No. Under those circumstances we shall come back with proposed legislation for what we believe is required and what we say now to the House is required." There is no arbitrariness in that position. There is no possibility of changing "substantially not the same" without coming back to the House and seeking approval. The government has been asked to say clearly what the requirements are and what they mean in practical terms. It would have been denying its responsibility if it had simply said, "Those are the words we intend to use. We do not know how they will be interpreted. We have no view as to what their effect will be."

Mr. Baldwin: Would the hon. member permit a question? He has raised an interesting point. I have been concerned about it, too, and I raised it earlier. If I ask a question it might save my making a speech later. Under section 19(5) of the original act, as the hon. member knows, it is provided that a Canadian issue does not include an issue of a periodical the contents of which are substantially the same as the contents of an issue of a periodical. The regulatory granting section, section 221, says that the governor in council may, among other things, make regulations prescribing the evidence required to establish facts relevant to assessments under the act, and, finally, may make regulations generally to carry out the purposes and provisions of the act.

What I want to know, and the hon. member may be able to tell me, is this: as the matter now stands, assuming the bill passes in its present form without any of the amendments being accepted, will that decision be made by a civil servant in the office of the Minister of National Revenue, or will the government pass regulations under the regulatory granting powers in section 221 to prescribe specifically what is the meaning of the words "substantially the same as the contents of an issue of the periodical"? That is the point I should like the hon. member to clarify.

Mr. Roberts: I welcome the question asked by the learned gentleman who is, as we know, a distinguished lawyer. Fortunately, I am not. Some consideration was given to this question in the committee. I hope I shall not mislead the hon. member when I say that the decision, in the first instance, is one taken by tax officials though ultimately determination will be made by members of the government. Perhaps that is what will happen in this case. Considerable material was presented to the committee in an effort to clarify the legal situation. There was a dispute about it. But there was certainly a great deal of material indicating that 75 per cent or 80 per cent would probably be, or could be, on the basis of various cases, particularly in the United States, the criterion for deciding that kind of question. No doubt it was a disputed issue, but there was legal precedent for that kind of criterion.

My point is this. While it would be possible, under the "substantially not the same" clause, for varying interpretations to be made, there is a provision for appeal to the courts respecting that interpretation. Cases will ultimately be decided by the courts; the courts will ultimately determine what that means. What seems to arouse hon. gentlemen opposite is that we have gone further and said that if the courts decide that the 80 per cent is not what "substantially the same" means, then the government would go back to the Commons and ask for the approval of the House of criteria which they believe are necessary to deal with the situation. I do not call that arbitrary or irresponsible. We are saying that the courts and parliament will ultimately decide what is to be done in connection with this matter. As I say, there is nothing arbitrary about it. Ministers reach their decisions within the context of this phrase, whose meaning, ultimately, it is up to the courts to determine. Then Parliament will be asked to change the law. That is hardly shocking. It is for this reason, I suggest, that arguments about arbitrariness and arguments about censorship are not germane to the issue before us. The issue before us is the practicality of the legislation for achieving an objective which most of us in this House share—the encouragement, through advertising revenues, of the Canadian periodical industry.

There are those who disagree that the legislation will have that effect. I would refer them most earnestly to the long and diligent committee consideration which took place on the matter. I believe that if they do this fairly they will find convincing evidence that there will be a significant impact on advertising revenues as a result of this bill, and that changes will be brought about favourable to the industry in Canada. I beg hon. members not to be distracted by false accusations of arbitrariness and censorship which are not germane to the issue. I urge hon. members to give as speedy a passage to the legislation as possible.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Cullen: If I may be permitted, Mr. Speaker, in response to the question raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). The section he quoted in the regulations, section 221, provides that:

The Governor in Council may make regulations (a) prescribing anything that, by this Act, is to be prescribed or is to be determined or regulated by regulation;

Section 19 does not give that authority.

Mr. Baldwin: This is one of the problems—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. That is not a point of order. Perhaps we can do this by unanimous consent, which might simplify the matter.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Baldwin: I would ask for unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to allow the minister to clarify a point of interest?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, question and answer was the old system that we used in committee of the whole and it had very considerable values. The minister has raised a point that is directly at issue and concerns those who serve on the statutory instruments committee. Because of some arbitrary and capricious decisions that were arrived at by the Privy Council Office and other ministers, an artificial definition has been placed on the regulations which places many of them outside our scope. The minister has put his finger right on it.

I would suggest that section 221 does provide that there may be the opportunity, by regulation, to carry out the purposes of the act. I think that has been interpreted in the past in a wide enough way to permit the government, if it sees fit, in accordance with section 221(j), to deal with this issue and lay down regulations as to what in its opinion constitutes a publication or the issue of a periodical which is not "substantially the same as" that published elsewhere. Then everybody will know what is involved.

What we are going to find is that an official will make a decision today, and next year a different official or deputy minister charged with that responsibility might make a completely different decision. As my hon. friend for St. Paul's has suggested, it is the lack of knowledge of certainty that I think is so important here. It is not good enough to say that the official makes the decision and if it is not liked appeal can be made to the courts. I do not think that makes sense at all. I think the minister sees what I am driving at, that it is possible to regulate under section 221 if they wish to do so.

Mr. Cullen: Well, Mr. Speaker, I guess it has often been said that if you have two lawyers you will get four opinions. We seem to agree and disagree on this question. I know the point the hon. member is making, but as a minister endeavouring to interpret the law I have to accept the advice that is given me by the law officers of the Crown. This is the interpretation that has been given, and I did try to clarify it for the hon. member.

I know the interest of the statutory instruments committee. The hon. member feels it should be more specific and that there should be more control. That is another debate. With respect, I must accept the interpretation given me by the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want first of all to commend the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Roberts) for his intervention and for bringing some very cogent arguments to the debate. After sitting through last night's session and hearing the interventions of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), and the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp), I thought for a moment that I was in the United States Congress listening to the arguments of the lobbyists for Time and Reader's Digest. It was a most incredible evening.

I have been asked many times why we in the New Democratic Party support this bill. As has been stated, it is an attempt to give some kind of consideration to the Canadian periodical industry and to remove an anomaly whereby in 1965 Time and Reader's Digest, although by all degrees of understanding foreign magazines, were classified under the Imcome Tax Act as Canadian magazines, so that their advertisers could receive the same deductibility provisions as Canadian advertisers in Canadian magazines. The amendment of the hon. member for Ontario which is before us, as amended by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, subverts the whole intent of this legislation.

When we try to decide what is a Canadian magazine, thereby entitling it to the benefit of the provisions of the Income Tax Act so far as advertisers are concerned, four criteria were outlined by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) in testimony before the committee. Two key criteria which I do not think have had enough elaboration in this debate are the licensing and the "substantially different" requirements.

The amendment of the hon. member for Ontario seeks to reduce the amount of material in any given magazine that must be "substantially different" from 80 per cent to 60 per cent. As we have heard in the committee, this would mean continuing an advantage to American magazines whereby they could import the remaining 40 per cent material from the parent magazine, expensive material such as full colour lay-out material, and expensive research material, at a subsidized price. Therefore no Canadian magazine would be able to compete against that kind of advantage.

This has been the problem with the Canadian periodical industry to date. Time and Reader's Digest have been given tax privileges which were reserved for Canadian magazines, and at the same time they had the advantage that no Canadian magazine had of being able to obtain their content from their parent magazine at a subsidized rate. In effect we had editorial dumping in this country.

I am constantly amazed how members of the Conservative party and a few dissident Liberals can make the argument that a Canadian magazine should not have this kind of advantage, and at the same time argue that foreign magazines like Time and Reader's Digest should have that advantage, whereas they do not make the same argument for foreign industry in the manufacturing field. That seems to me to be totally inconsistent.

I think it important that the Minister of National Revenue rise in his place and clarify for the House what is going to happen to the licensing arrangement. There has been an assumption by hon. members and the media that since the Minister of National Revenue's announcement that he had reached an accommodation with Reader's Digest on a continuing arrangement, Reader's Digest would automatically continue to publish in Canada, and that everything had been solved.

I would point out that there are still a number of requirements to which Reader's Digest must conform. I should like the minister to state for the record that Reader's Digest will be required to change its existing licensing arrangement with the parent company in the United States in order to qualify as a truly Canadian magazine. For there exists now a licensing arrangement between Reader's Digest of Canada and Reader's Digest of the United States whereby Reader's Digest of Canada must, to quote the agreement, not distribute material which the parent disapproves of, or use material from any sources other than those approved by the U.S. parent company

If that licensing provision is allowed to stand, in no way can we conclude that Reader's Digest of Canada is a truly independent Canadian magazine and therefore able to fall within the provisions of section 19 of the Income Tax Act. The minister has assured me in private conversation that Reader's Digest is quite aware that it must change that licensing agreement in order to qualify as a Canadian magazine for income tax purposes. I should like him to state on the record that that is what must happen.

We also learned from the minister that he would allow a continuing arrangement to exist between Reader's Digest Canada and Reader's Digest United States that would not mean that the Reader's Digest edition in Canada would be considered the same as the parent company. The argument put forward by Reader's Digest was that it is the kind of operation that, in order to have access to articles from around the world which should be condensed, it had to have access to the pool of articles collected by Reader's Digest United States.

Therefore the minister made the interpretation saying that as long as Reader's Digest Canada edited, digested, and re-wrote its pool of Reader's Digest articles collected in the United States, that would not be looked at as a continuing arrangement that would violate the 80 per cent different interpretation.

My point is that it seems to me in a roundabout way there still is a degree of editorial control by the parent company which submerges the concept or at least the definition of a truly independent magazine. Let me explain. By virtue of the fact that Reader's Digest United States has pretty well sewn up the market for digest articles, that is to say it has made exclusive arrangements with most of the magazines in North America, if Reader's Digest Canada is to draw on that pool of articles it would seem to me already there has been an editorial decision made by virtue of the fact that the American editors have decided which articles will go into that pool from which the editors of Reader's Digest Canada can draw. So we have, in a sense then, the choice of material to be digested in Canada already being decided upon by American editors, and I think in a roundabout way that puts some constraint on Reader's Digest Canada to be truly independent in choosing the articles it wishes. This is something that must be considered.

Moreover, I fail to see how under that arrangement any new Canadian digest would be able to start up if there is that kind of licensing agreement with the parent company in the United States. I am not speaking of the Canadian Reader's Digest. If we wanted to have a new independent digest, would it be allowed access to this pool of material over which the Reader's Digest in the United States has control? I doubt that that would happen.

There is another point the minister should clarify. One of the requests that the Canadian periodical industry has made, and it is quite valid, relates to the fact that Time and Reader's Digest have had an unfair competitive advantage because they have been able to get their material from their parent companies at a subsidized rate. For example, Reader's Digest can get its material at about 5 per cent of the actual cost of production from its parent company. If Reader's Digest is going to be allowed a continuing arrangement under this new interpretation by the minister we want to have the assurance that Reader's Digest Canada will pay the going rate for these articles which are taken from the pool in the United States, and that the subsidization will not be allowed to continue.

The minister should explain and clarify how the department will go about investigating whether Reader's Digest Canada, under the new interpretation, is paying the going rate that any other magazine would be paying for the right to digest an article from another magazine. If there is any doubt that the Department of Revenue will be able to scrutinize Reader's Digest closely when it purchases articles from this pool of the United States Reader's Digest, then I would have serious reservations about our ability to accept this interpretation.

I am also anxious that the minister clarify the position of Time magazine as it relates to this interpretation of the continuing arrangement, for the minister said in the House, as reported at page 10607 of Hansard:

> We are saying that "middle party access" used to obtain third party material will not be regarded as a continuing arrangement.

I asked the minister privately what is to prevent Time magazine from setting up a middle party in the form of a news collection agency, drawing material from correspondents throughout the world, with the material going into a news collection agency just as there is a pool from which Reader's Digest will pull material. From this news collection agency Time United States would draw material and Time Canada would also draw material. If Time is allowed to make that kind of arrangement, similar to Reader's Digest, then again we find a major loophole in the legislation that allows Time to make some kind of a continuing arrangement through setting up a third party or a news collection agency.

The question arises once again, would this material be at a subsidized rate and would Time have sole access to it? I do not think that would be the case because the correspondents may be in the employ of Time and, therefore, under the definition of licensing this would not be permitted. I think we need some clarification of that matter.

Also we need some clarification as to what position it puts MD of Canada in, because it is a similar kind of magazine to Reader's Digest. I would like to know if MD of Canada could set up some parallel licensing or continuing arrangement that would allow it to qualify under the regulations as Reader's Digest apparently has.

Those are the points that should be on the record for clarification, and I hope the Minister of Revenue rises at a later time to clarify them.

We have some difficulty with the fact that so much of this legislation is being done by regulation and at the whim of the Department of National Revenue. It would help matters immensely if this were all spelled out, or if the regulations were in the form of legislation so we do not have continuing variations in interpretations as ministers change, or as time goes on and magazine groups are able to lobby for some kind of change.

In retrospect it is very important that in trying to make accommodations for a magazine to become Canadian we do not subvert the intention of the legislation in the first place. I have no quarrel with Reader's Digest or Time magazine if they conform to the definition of what a Canadian periodical is, as all other Canadian periodicals do. I have no objection to them continuing in this country as long as they continue on the same footing as Canadian magazines.

What I do object to is the kind of legislation we have had for the past decade that has allowed Time and Reader's Digest to be treated as Canadian, although they are not, and therefore has allowed their advertisers income tax advantages reserved only for Canadians. The result has been that Time and Reader's Digest have gained the lion's share of advertising in this country to the detriment of the growth and expansion of the Canadian magazine industry. We heard much testimony to that effect before the committee, and we heard about fluttery flowers last night.

I would remind hon. members that when we look at the figures for the period 1950 to 1974 and when we look at the percentage increase in advertising revenue, we find that for the whole of the Canadian industry in those 24 years their advertising revenue increased by 185 per cent but that the revenue for Reader's Digest, an American subsidiary, increased by 413 per cent while that of Time magazine increased by 819 per cent. Those two magazines have had ten years of operation under tax advantages reserved only for Canadians and have captured over 50 per cent of the advertising revenue in this country. They are immensely rich. They have profited immensely by this legislation.

In the intervening period, however, we have seen Canadian magazines existing on a hand-out basis. We have seen some of them go under, and some almost go under such as Saturday Night. I am not speaking particularly of Maclean's magazine. I would like to see more competition by Canadian magazines against Maclean's. We have heard from many independent journalists that they are on a desperate course and that any advertising revenue which may be diverted their way by virtue of the requirement that Time and Reader's Digest either conform or lose their independence would be governed by their continued growth or collapse.

I think we must keep these points in perspective. This bill has nothing to do with censorship or who will be allowed to publish, but rather who will be assisted in publishing in this country. Therefore I argue very strenuously against the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Ontario and the sub-amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. They subvert the intent of the legislation and should not be supported. In the meantime I would ask the Minister of National Revenue to stand in his place and clarify the implications of the new arrangement with Reader's Digest so that we may debate this issue with some clarity in respect of the new status of that magazine.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I think we must all acknowledge that it is difficult to simplify the legislative process. The amending process, generally speaking, is even more complicated and even more difficult to sort out. The present amendments are no exception. That being so I see no reason to complicate further the matter as is now being done. This is one of the problems that confronts us in the present debate. I shall return to that in due course. The other, the further complication I mentioned, is the government's interpretation of its mandate. I shall now address myself to that.

This bill, and its rocky passage through the House illustrate as clearly as any procedure I can imagine the unusual attitude of the government toward the legislative process, toward the mandate secured at election time, toward the people of Canada, a certain proportion of whom elected members opposite to office, and finally towards the views, wishes, and desires expressed by that population.

Starting at the end of that list, I ask how does the government regard or take into account popular views and concerns? From my particular angle I feel obliged to say that the government feels free to ignore popular concerns, to ride roughshod over them, and to replace them with views which conform more closely to what the government considers the general public should want. That is the way this government governs.

What is its attitude toward the people of Canada? We have seen that already too often and in too many different forms. It regards the people of Canada as a necessary nuisance, necessary to put them in power but thence forward a nuisance, a nuisance with no real mind of its own, no critical faculties and no ability to determine what it wants. Why do I say this? I say this because these are very serious strictures. I believe them to be true. Why? Because of the evidence accumulated before me even on this one bill. It has been built up since the time I have been in this House. However, on this one bill alone there is ample evidence to substantiate my case.

Is there anyone on the government benches who can assure me that he has received one single letter from a reader of Reader's Digest saying, "Kick them out. They're no good. They're anti-Canadian". I would wager that no such letters exist in the files of any parliamentarian. But how many letters are there in my files and in the files of all members of this House, urging that Reader's Digest be left alone to provide the service it performs so well?

What does the government do? The government says in so many words: Now listen, you people out there, you elected us to do a job for you. Go back to your jobs and we will get on with ours which is to provide you with what we know is good for you, not necessarily what you want, but what we, the government, determine that you want. What the government is doing in adopting that attitude is recasting in group terms the definition enunciated by Edmund Burke on the role of elected representatives. Elected representatives by this transposed definition are put in place not to represent the constituents who elected them but rather to do their thinking for them. There are some, I suppose, who may believe this might be possible on a member by member basis, but who other than the government will allow that definition to be transferred to an association of members? This may be the view of members of the government but there are not many beyond their number who share it.

My criticism of the government in its approach to legislation in general and this legislation in particular will be developed elsewhere. I leave these comments as they are and turn to another aspect of the measure before us which causes me concern. This is the ability of ministers to interpret laws passed by this parliament. I might say there was an exchange between the minister and the house leader of my party which helped clarify the matter for me. During the lunch period I endeavoured to find where that authority was put forward. I am happy to note that the opposition House leader, with his much wider experience than mine, was able to find it whereas I did not. As he so rightly pointed out, it lies in section 221(j) of Part XV of the Income Tax Act, which of course is not being touched by the amendments that are being proposed.

We must ask ourselves why we are focusing our attention on Reader's Digest when we learn, through the press and elsewhere, that due to re-definition of a definition the full weight of this legislation will not fall on that publication? Why then should we worry? We have cause to worry, and I suggest Reader's Digest has cause to worry. My particular reason for concern in this area is that if the minister can sharpen a definition, as he has done by pronouncing the 80 per cent substantially different notion under the authority granted to him under 221(j), and then withdraw it, he can just as easily introduce a figure at a later date and suggest an even higher figure. That gap must be closed. I suggest to hon. members that the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) do just that. They close that gap, and define and narrow the discretion of the minister, as it should be.

The important openings to those two amendments before us, motions Nos. 4 and 5—and I commend both hon. members for having proposed them—read as follows: "notwithstanding the provisions of this Act or Regulations." This is true in both cases. Therefore these amendments override any amendments, regulations, redefinitions, or redefinitions of definitions which might come about by order in council or through the exercise of ministerial discretion.

What do these amendments do? The first one is the more all-embracing. It defines Canadian periodicals in terms of ownership and content. The second one defines ownership and the control and conduct of editorial and publication functions. These are very important definitions. They narrow the scope of interpretation—which unfortunately has been broadened or let loose in so much legislation—and bring within the ambit of parliament the control of the law and the formation and structure of that law. In this House we have complained about the freedom with which governments can play with the law. We see a solution here.

With the statute of 1970-71, the amendments to the Income Tax Act, so much was involved that something slipped through. We found a gap here, and the hon. member for Ontario and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway have closed it and allowed us to give expression—and I come back to the first part of what I had to say—to the views which are passed on to us by way of correspondence and in discussions with our constituents.

I said earlier that surely there is not one hon. member in this House who has not been overwhelmingly deluged with letters, communications, telephone calls, and personal intercessions seeking for the maintenance of the status of at least Reader's Digest. There was less emphasis with regard to Time. Here we have a means of doing so because the formula provided in these two amendments is one with which Reader's Digest at least can comply.

The hon. member for Sault Ste Marie (Mr. Symes), who preceded me, mentioned the matter of two other important publications. Time may come under this category, and if it does that is all well and good. I do not think it can in its present form. However, MD of Canada is certainly a publication which deserves our attention, and I hope it can come within the prescribed limits of ownership, control, and conduct of the editing and publication functions as defined by the second amendment.

Therefore, along with a number of my colleagues I am delighted that these amendments have been proposed, and I can give them my unquestioned support because I feel that this House should do the legislating. Legislation should not be left to order in council, the whim of a minister or ministerial discretion. I have great regard and respect for the minister, but I think it is unfair to impose upon him, along with the many tasks he has confronting him from day to day, the duty of amplifying legislation parliament has passed indifferently or defectively. For that reason I welcome the amendments, and I will give them my support.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join in this debate to discuss two points. I say to the government or anyone else that the question of 80 per cent content is a myth. It is undefinable and does not exist in the context the government claims in the legislation before us. When we think in terms of percentage, we must realize that we are using a mathematical concept. We are dealing with units or numbers.

It is possible to talk about percentage if we are talking about volume, length, weight, or anything for which we can use a unit of measurement. If we talk about miles, centimetres, kilograms, pounds or anything which is a unit of measurement, we can use the term 80 per cent, but I challenge hon. members opposite, and the minister specifically, to tell us the unit of measurement used with regard to censoring a foreign magazine.

In the committee when this question came up the deputy minister said that the unit of measurement would be one of length. We challenged him by asking if we took a piece of material which was 100 column inches long and reduced it to 20 inches, but it really had the same content material in it, would that be acceptable under the regulation of the government, and he responded, yes. However, the minister interjected and said no, it must be substantially different in content.

The hon. member for Sault Ste Marie (Mr. Symes) said that the government is not into a censorship program. I suggest that it is because if it is saying that the content must be substantially different and it cannot define the unit of measurement, it is a case of the government making the decision and being the judge. The fact of the matter is that this government does not know what the unit of measurement is. It is applying a mathematical concept to a value judgment, which is impossible.

If we are going to talk about a situation in which foreign publications or foreign material comes into this country to be printed and is subjected to a bureaucratic value judgment we must recognize, that as a subjective position, that does not have a unit of measurement. It cannot be measured in percentages—that can only be applied when we speak of weight, length, or volume. We cannot apply percentages to value judgments. Applying mathematical concepts to value judgments implies censorship because it means the government is the judge of what Canadian people will read.

I challenge the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) to give this House some unit of measurement; otherwise the whole concept falls apart. Unless that is forthcoming the government can rule out 100 per cent, or 50 per cent, or whatever it wants. If bureaucracy likes the flavour of some foreign information it can allow it into the country. On the other hand, if bureaucrats do not like something they can censor it 100 per cent. Recognizing there is no unit of measurement is simply a subjective judgment and that means the government is all powerful. It means there is no debate. A group of people in the bureaucracy make a subjective judgment about a piece of writing, but unless they can produce some unwavering criteria to support their judgment then there is no formula.

The other matter I wanted to refer to is the phrase "substantially not the same as previously published material". That there is a fallacy in the legislation has already been admitted in committee. The reference to previously published material in fact means that writers from any other country can publish first in Canada and then in a foreign country. Any material written in another country becomes acceptable if it is first published in Canada, but if it is published in the other country and then comes to Canada it is not acceptable.

All that magazines such as Reader's Digest or MD of Canada have to do is change the order of publication by one month—publish first in Canada and then in the foreign country. "Substantially not the same as previously published material" simply means that you change the order of publishing to escape the regulation. That will not protect the Canadian publishing industry but simply creates a loophole to circumvent the law.

The percentage content is a myth, Madam Speaker. There is no unit of measurement. I hope the Secretary of State will define for us how the 80 per cent figure is arrived at. Unless there is a mathematical basis it becomes a subjective judgment of the government and that essentially means censorship.

Quite frankly I do not see any better evidence of the government's position on the "new society" and a greater degree of government intervention than this legislation which, with the words "80 per cent", grants the government power to restrict the entry of written matter that it does not like or allow material that is advantageous to it. I hope the minister will respond and clear up this matter and the conflict that occurred between himself and his deputy minister in committee. How do we put a unit measurement on a value jugment? I hope the minister will accept the challenge.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Madam Speaker, I would gladly have yielded the floor to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) whom I thought would perhaps want to give the House some factual information. I have no desire to stand in his way, but he is not in the House at the moment and there are some things I should like to say arising out of the subamendment and the amendment which have been proposed.

It has been emphasized by those supporting the bill that it has a very simple purpose, that is, to eliminate the special status enjoyed substantially by two magazines with large circulations and perhaps by some other specialist types of periodicals.

I want to say quite frankly that I do not favour the maintenance of special status for any periodical—or anybody else as far as that is concerned. That is not my problem with the bill. I have to say in all frankness that it is now apparent that the Minister of National Revenue and the government as a whole are not in fact eliminating special status; they are continuing to maintain a sort of special status for one of the periodicals.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) is shaking his head but I do not think he can convince any fair-minded Canadian that things have not been arranged so that the special circumstances of Reader's Digest will enable it to continue to maintain tax deductible benefits for Canadian advertisers in that publication.

I think it is desirable to eliminate special status. I recognize the problem the Canadian periodicals face. The problem in Canada is not peculiar to publications or periodicals. If I were in a court of law—and were paid to do it—I could make a pretty good argument to the effect that manufacturers and others trying to do business here face the competition of factories which enjoy longer production runs because they serve bigger markets, and so on.

I presume that the minister would argue that publications, television, and so on, are in a special category, in view of their importance to our national and cultural life and that, consequently, their position is different from that of concerns engaged in ordinary lines of business. He would argue, no doubt, that the preservation of their economic health and the encouragement of their development are important for the cultural life of the country. I accept that. But the question I keep asking myself is: does this bill achieve that purpose at all, and achieve it in a satisfactory way? It will not achieve it by making available to other publications advertising which has been monopolized, shall we say, or dominated by Time and Reader's Digest.

I think Reader's Digest is the biggest factor in the field and, under the new interpretation handed down from on high, Reader's Digest will be able to continue publishing in this country. I am not suggesting that Reader's Digest should be pushed out of Canada; I do not mean that. I merely say that the bill will not achieve its purpose, as it now is interpreted. In other words, it will not release all that advertising for other Canadian publications. That is not my principal objection to what the government is doing.

I am not objecting because the government's bill will be only partially successful under the present interpretation, will only succeed in pushing Time out and releasing only part of the advertising which Time and Reader's Digest have been getting. My real objection, in other words, is not that the government's aim will be only partially achieved; my objection is to the whole way in which the government is proceeding.

I hope the Secretary of State will not take offence if I say to him, as I said earlier in the week, that the government's general procedure is fundamentally dishonest, fundamentally at odds with what I consider as liberal democratic procedure.

Earlier in the week I asked the Secretary of State if he could honestly say that "substantially the same" means the same as "80 per cent the same". I do not know how anyone can argue that such expressions come within the normal use of the English language. How can anyone argue that the interpretation given those words approaches their normal meaning? The interpretation is a complete distortion of the three words "substantially the same". How can one say something must be 20 per cent the same, or 80 per cent different? In other words, the government is changing the statute.

Parliament previously adopted a statute which said that something must be "substantially the same." The government is changing that statute, by executive decree. It is not asking parliament to change the law. The government itself is changing the law. The Secretary of State can argue that that is not the point, that the only thing before the House is the elimination of special status. But what can one say about the meaning the government has given to the phrase "substantially the same?" It has changed the statute by executive decree, a decree which has become part of the res gestae. That action has become an integral, basic, and essential part of the question we are considering. I cannot accept as a member of parliament, and could not accept if I were not in parliament, the idea that members of the government can, under our constitution, arbitrarily change the meaning of a statute passed by parliament.

An hon. Member: That is what it is all about.

Mr. Stanfield: That is one thing this is all about. To me, that is abhorrent. To me, that is a violation of everything I understand about responsible parliamentary government. The government's attempt to change the law by decree, and not by act of parliament, violates the Canadian constitution as I understand it. With all due respect to the Secretary of State, I assert, as would anyone of a reasonably independent point of view such as mine, that no one can honestly say that "substantially the same" means that something is substantially the same if it is 20 per cent different. Or, how can anybody say that something 20 per cent the same is substantially the same as something 80 per cent different? How can anybody say, for example, that something that is 74 per cent different is "substantially the same?" How can anybody do that without doing violence to the ordinary meaning of English words? It cannot be done and I do not think it is fair.

With the permission of the House may I call it four o'clock and seek permission to enlighten members of the government further on another occasion?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): We are enlightened. Enlighten yourself.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. After the usual consultations it has been determined that motion No. 6, standing in the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) and printed on page 54 of the Order Paper for Monday, February 2, 1976, is to be disposed of today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Do hon. members agree that all motions prior to motion No. 6 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

CROWN CORPORATIONS ACT

SUGGESTED INQUIRY TO STUDY ACTIVITIES OF AND LEGISLATION RESPECTING CROWN CORPORATIONS

The House resumed from Monday, November 4, 1974, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fortin:

That, in the opinion of this House, a special committee of inquiry on Crown corporations exercising financial, commercial or industrial activities be established to study the various Acts establishing such Crown corporations, the Crown Corporations Act, sections 76 to 88 of the Financial Administration Act, and all other laws concerning Crown corporations and to recommend to the House the adoption of a law regarding federal public enterprises; the committee should also study the following subjects without restriction (a) the legal rules pertaining to the employees of such corporations (b) their financial structure (c) the way in which they are financed (d) government control over said corporations (e) fiscal regulations (municipal, school, provincial and federal taxes) (f) the status of the administrators (g) the privileges of such corporations resulting from their being "commissioned by Her Majesty" (h) the status of the subsidiaries of these enterprises (i) their purchasing policy (j) the problem of auditing by the auditor General of Canada or by private auditors (k) the appropriateness of State intervention in the economic field in the form of enterprises; and all other matters concerned.

Mr. A. C. Abbott (Mississauga): Madam Speaker, it is a pleasure to address the House on the matter raised by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). The hon. member several times previously has brought forward the subject matter of this motion and has spoken at length and considerable good sense on the subject, the last time being November 4, 1974. That day the hon. member for York East (Mr. Collenette), on behalf of hon. members on my side, presented a scholarly rendering of the law affecting Crown corporations. He gave a considerable elucidation of the responsibilities they had under the Financial Administration Act. The essence of the motion, as hon. members are aware, is seeking a far greater responsibility for members of parliament to gain information as to the practice, spending procedures and so on, of Crown corporations.

The whole rea of Crown corporations is both interesting and of some concern. Over many years we have found that they have served governments well. They are legal entities set up either to carry out responsibilities for which no other group or aggregate of capital is interested in doing, or there has been a situation of enterprises floundering and requiring government intervention.

The last case of this aspect is with respect to Canadair and de Havilland. The Government of Canada acquired control of those two corporations with the objective of trying to maintain the aircraft industry in Canada, ultimately for the benefit of the country. Hopefully it will be restored to the private sector.

One can look at the history of this country and see cases where Crown corporations have been formed and have grown into great empires, now reaching a value of some $20 billion. Under the regime of Prime Minister R. B. Bennett, Canadian National Railways was put together as well as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Bank of Canada. All of these institutions were formed under a Tory government, those champions of the private sector. It is sometimes forgotten by Canadians that these bold initiatives were taken for good and sufficient reasons. Since that time, both Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have grown into major, massive corporations which compare in size to their opposite numbers throughout the world as being among the giants, particularly in the case of the railroad.

I suspect that for a good many members, the notion that parliament should have considerable control over the activities of Crown corporations is very appealing. I found it distressing in a committee hearing that when a Crown corporation came up for consideration there was very little time to deal with it, and frequently little information was provided.

The annual reports, like all corporate annual reports, tend to highlight the accomplishments of the year and downgrade that which did not go favourably. There is always a generous tribute to the management, however competent or incompetent it might have been, but that is about all. Members of parliament in rare instances have an opportunity to question the officers of the corporations. They are extremely limited in the opportunity they have to get real information about the affairs of the corporations.

I found it particularly distressing on two occasions that we had officers before us. One instance was that of Canadian Arsenals. The other was the Export Development Bank. In both cases the presidents said it was contrary to law and that they were unable to reveal their annual salary. I personally found that totally unacceptable.

As one who goes home to my constituency regularly and consults my mail every day, I find that my own modest stipend is the subject of constant public interest. When we are told by a president of a Crown corporation, a wholly owned entity of government, that unlike his minister, deputy minister and all the other officers, his salary remains sacrosanct and unavailable for public scrutiny, that is unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: I can understand that some of them might be embarrassed to have their large emolument compared with that of a member of parliament. I do not know if that is the primary motivation or not.

Crown corporations cover an extraordinary wide range. We have some 40 of them which represent departmental corporations. They are very much directly responsible to the department and the minister. We have agency corporations which are somewhat less so. We have proprietary corporations such as Canadian National Railways which have great superstructures, the ability to borrow and the ability to finance their own requirements.

Because the hon. member for York East gave such a scholarly rendering of the Financial Administration Act and how it affected these corporations, I suppose hon. members would welcome it if I were to dwell for a few minutes on several of these Crown Corporations, discuss what they do and how they are constituted. What comes to mind is the Seaway International Bridge Corporation Limited. That would be a fascinating subject for discussion.

Also the National Museums of Canada would open a wide range of discussion—for example, the locations of the museums. One's mind runs back to the great full page ads placed by the Victoria Museum when it completed its expensive renovations, advising Canadians as far away as Victoria, B.C. of these changes. They were full page ads to encourage Canadians to visit that museum. I spoke to the minister who confirmed that perhaps this was carrying a good thing a little far. It does perhaps illustrate that these corporations have a way of acting on their own without respect for parliament or even the minister.

When one talks of the problem of Crown corporations not being sufficiently responsible to parliament or to their officers in appearing before us, I think much of this could be said of the whole apparatus of government and the sense of relative futility that we, as members of parliament, feel in trying to analyse and know something about the vast expenditures and what lies behind them. The opportunities for discussing departmental estimates are relatively slight compared to their enormity. I am sure that even the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) must find it difficult to be able, in the hours that he spends in this House, in committees, and in his office, to grasp the whole complexity of government and find himself aware of all these expenditures.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: It is, of course, a great pleasure to see him here. Last week at this time we had a debate on the question of a quorum in this House and his dissatisfaction with a quorum of 20 rather than 50. As several of our hon. friends said, if we had to depend on filling even the modest quorum we now have with members from his party, we would rarely if ever have a quorum. It is, of course, wonderful to see him here.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): All of us regular members of the club are here.

Mr. Abbott: It would be very surprising if we did not see him here. Indeed our children, or grandchildren yet unborn, may find themselves seated in this chamber watching the hon. member participating in these proceedings on a Friday afternoon. I hope that will be the case.

● (1610)

When we talk about Crown corporations being made more accessible to parliament—and I strongly recommend that legislation be enacted in this area—I think it is worth considering what is happening in the private sector. As we all know, there has been considerable debate lately on the subject of free enterprise, public enterprise, a free market system, state socialism and so on. I know all of us are concerned about this vital area of discussion.

It is worth pointing out, I think, that the information which is available to Canadians concerning the affairs of Crown corporations is in a great many respects more comprehensive than that provided to private shareholders by many of the great private corporations. Anyone familiar with the workings of major corporations realizes how little opportunity exists for interrogation of the officers of those corporations or for ascertaining information beyond that which can be read in an annual report. Shareholdings in these corporations are often closely held by blocks capable of exercising control. Before annual meetings take place proxies are sent out, and provision is usually made for half an hour or so to be set aside for questions. The questioning, in these circumstances, is merely a formality. At most, it has only a nuisance value, and as soon as possible everyone repairs to a nice lunch, if it is a good company, and that is "it" for the year.

Mr. Blais: Would my hon. friend permit a question? I do not want to take up his valuable time, but with reference to the establishment of a committee would he envisage a committee which would be formed of members from both this House and from the other place so that we could benefit from the massive corporate experience of members of the other place?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Which side is that question on?

Mr. Abbott: I gather the parliamentary secretary was anxious lest I launch into a tirade against big business. That was not my intention, I assure him. Since he has, with his usual skill, returned me to the subject of the committee, let me say that in my view it would naturally be desirable for the committee to be made up not simply of members of this House though clearly members of this House should dominate any such body, but also include members from the other place provided their activities on boards of directors permitted them to attend the hearings.

It is always an interesting and salutary experience to read minutes of the hearings of the banking committee of the other place, recognizing that its members bring so much expertise to that subject, which is natural since most of them sit on a variety of bank boards.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are just jealous.

Mr. Abbott: When they are considering the eligibility of applicants to form a bank I am sure they free their minds and address themselves directly to the matter. I am sure the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) wakes up every morning wishing he were a member of the board of some big bank. For too long his talents have not been recognized by those institutions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Abbott: But he keeps himself free from the temptation to sit on such boards so that he can bring his judgment to bear on the fitness of bank applicants when they come forward. I think that is a real distinction between this place and the other place.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is not the only one. Will the hon. member permit a question? In view of the large part which is played in our economy not only by government corporations but by private corporations like the CPR and the banks, Canada Packers and so on, would the hon. member not agree that the kind of committee we are talking about should also be able to call those corporations before it?

Mr. Abbott: I do not think so. No. There are a number of regulatory bodies such as Securities and Exchange Commissions which keep a careful watch on corporations of that type. I have mentioned one such control group, but there are others.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member did not mention the CTC.

Mr. Abbott: If I were a shareholder in those companies I would start writing letters asking why shareholders could not be given more extensive rights to look behind the information presented in the annual report and find out what management had done. I would think the hon. member for Lotbinière is on firm ground when he suggests that members of parliament represent Canadians who are, in essence, shareholders of these corporations and that we do not have an adequate opportunity to call the management of such corporations before us when problems arise. If hon. members feel that the affairs of one of these Crown corporations deserve a searching examination, we should be able to make use of the services of a committee empowered to carry out this task, to spend two or three weeks, for instance, finding out what is happening.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member permit a question to be asked by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert)?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you, Madam Speaker. Before the time allowed to the hon. member is expired, I should like to ask him a question. I was led to believe during his statement that he entirely approved the motion of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). If such is the case, may I ask him before he concludes his speech whether he would be prepared to ask his colleagues on the government side to support the motion so that it may be passed before five o'clock?

[English]

Mr. Abbott: Well, Madam Speaker, I support the spirit of it, the intent of it, but if it were to be made into law I would strongly recommend that members on this side have an opportunity to provide the sort of legislation which would really be effective.

To conclude, I would simply repeat that there are many occasions when a Crown corporation assumes a higher profile than is usual and when its affairs call for special examination, and I do think that a committee ought to be formed which could call before it the officers of such a corporation and obtain any facts which it required, within reason. To this extent I would certainly support the motion.

● (1620)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, the fact that this motion was introduced 15 or 16 months ago, that is on November 4, 1974, indicates that we have undertaken a long trip. This session could very well be extended to June and perhaps even later, if we take note of progress made in recent days concerning the legislation before us and if we consider other highly controversial bills now being discussed even by the government members.

It is not the first time the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) tackles this matter and brings in an issue that vexes several members. I have before me a letter from a colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), who make a suggestion to me as a member of the Committee on Procedure and Organization now working on the terms of reference of a sub-committee for the study of our organization of the House of Commons.

He indicated to me that he has a great desire that we should have among all our committees of the House of Commons precisely a committee to study the activities and reports of Crown corporations, and in fact quoted the same arguments put forward by the hon. member for Lotbinière on November 4. He said that this should be compulsory in order that every Crown corporation be subject to parliamentary scrutiny. Now, he indicated that the last report of Air Canada which has been studied has been the 1970 report, that the answers are always the same, and that when a member asks for information this can be detrimental to the corporation involved.

Now, are all those arguments valid? Also given as examples is the Parliament of the United Kingdom and, among others, the parliaments of other countries which have a better system than ours. Now, let us give a closer look to this thesis and this statement.

First of all, from all committees complaints are heard from every corner that members are overworked. There are some who are not ready to ask the questions they should ask, who cannot attend all the numerous sittings. Then they do not have time to read the reports of the proceedings and everything else. So to a great extent many members who sit on the committees of the House unfortunately are wasting their effort. There is a waste of time because of duplication.

As regards the study on Crown corporations, there are about forty.

An hon. Member: About fifty.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am told there are about fifty. Well, they will count them, perhaps there are now sixty. They have just established what I call "Petro-Can". We are asked questions the answers to which hon. members would like to know: What are the salaries of the executives? I do not know what will be the use of knowing that.

Are there any reliable reports published every year by chartered accountants, regardless of whether they come from the Auditor General or the private sector, just as long as they are competent auditors? Those people are every bit as honest and responsible as the Auditor General. To my mind, of the two I would say that the Auditor General is better qualified to say whether the operations of a Crown company are viable or not, and whether they are dishonest.

I do believe my hon. colleague from Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) as well as the hon. member for Lotbinière wonder if all Crown companies are profitable and justifiable. Why were they created? Some are 40 years old. How were they set up? What were their objectives at the time? Have circumstances changed? At this time, are their activities profitable or do they follow the same old routine without anyone ever questioning their raison d'être or ever wondering why this Crown corporation should not be disbanded.

I would simply like to point out that this has already been done. I have here a manuscript on a study made by Dr. Allan Blair, associate professor of the Commerce Department at Carleton University, sponsored by the research department of my party. Dr. Blair gives the names of a number of Crown corporations and concludes that they should be ended, that some of their activities could be transferred to other existing corporations or even taken over by the Department of National Defence.

A case in point, Defence Construction Limited. This corporation was established in 1942 or 1943 by then Minister of Munitions C. D. Howe. Why? Because during the war it was necessary to maintain the construction of several army bases in Canada, barracks and what have you. At that time he was not impressed with the efficiency of the Department of Public Works as several scandals later came out in that field. War construction works were to be done as quickly as possible instead of going through the normal procedure, namely the Treasury Board and the Department of Public Works. Government machinery was much too slow, later on it improved and is now quite efficient.

What is DCL today? It is a Crown corporation which finds itself caught in a little corner of the Department of National Defence. Its directors are civil servants.

There are others, such as the Canadian Arsenals, the Canadian Commercial Corporation and another whose existence hon. members probably do not know: the Canadian National West-Indies Steamship Limited. Why is that? They have two ships.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): They had two ships.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This corporation exists only to protect certain interests that we must recover on our debts. Others, like St. Clair River Broadcasting Limited and Canadians Arsenals Limited, have special roles to play. I shall read my quotations in English because they are in English and the translation would not be accurate.

[English]

With regard to the historical public policy mandate, CAL was the phase-down agent for munitions production at the end of World War II. The mandate "fit" was appropriate at that time. Today it is the custodian and operator of two Crown owned facilities and keeps a skill pool in place. The other day it almost did not; the skill pool nearly left its earthly confines. As for its ongoing public policy rationale, there is none really apparent; phase-out seems appropriate, with skills lodged departmentally. I did say "DCL"; that is, Defence Construction (1951) Limited.

• (1630)

Then we have Eldorado Nuclear Limited and Eldorado Mining and Research. They were expropriated under war emergency powers to control uranium sources exploitation. They were closed down in 1940 when I was working for a subsidiary up on the Mackenzie River and I can assure you that this caused some consternation among the employees. However, they were resurrected in 1942. What should happen to these two companies? A thorough review and study are recommended. This was first recommended in 1961 and I think should be carried out. I could go down all the way through this list.

[Translation]

I shall come back to the purpose of the committee because I believe that if the motion of the hon. member were adopted, we would launch a perpetual and comprehensive investigation which would never come to any conclusions. We may wonder why, especially if the terms of reference cover only one session of Parliament. I would agree entirely with the hon. member that this committee, whether it be a joint committee or a committee of the House only, should be a small committee, including a maximum of six or eight members well versed on the subject who could examine the philosophy and the purpose of Crown corporations. This commission should be asked to make recommendations like those made by Dr. Blair.

I cannot say that I would not accept this, because I did not study the report carefully, but several corporations should be eliminated, others should be modified and others should be clarified because many of them were established 30 or 40 years ago.

He believes, and I do not doubt this, that Crown corporations have their place and their uses in today's modern society.

The Crown corporation has a very viable and very valid role but simply because the child was born many years ago I would not say it necessarily follows that it must continue to operate. If that is the case, I can speak of another objective, in addition to those that were put forward by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), and others who spoke on this subject. But one must go over Hansard in past years to see what was said. It is difficult to remember, and I would be quite prepared to recommend strongly to the government that if this motion cannot even be passed this could be taken into consideration and amended to examine the principles of Crown corporations.

In our day-to-day activities if we want to consider something and pass a judgment we must make sure we know what we are talking about. Otherwise, there is no point in entering the ring. You do not send a carpenter to examine the inside of a stomach, you ask the doctor, an expert. And to say here that a group of members could examine accurately and rightly the administration, say of Air Canada, what do they know about it? Quite simply, there would have to be a whole body of examiners and our committee would have to form a jury rather than simply saying we are going to conduct the examination and we as members are going to ask the questions. Somehow we would come out of it. We would push a little button or ask a question to an official or an executive of, say Air Canada or the CNR, and a fountain would immediately spout all the information required.

I prefer that we start by limiting our objective, then the little commission of inquiry of this House would hire competent staff and take a company or two and examine them. Then the commission could pass a judgment, make recommendations to the government and continue to amend or stiffle that corporation.

Those are my views on this point and I thank hon. members as well as you, Madam Speaker, for the attention you gave me.

An hon. Member: Continue!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, no, I am finished, I made my point.

[English]

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased and honoured to comment on this motion moved by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) recommending the establishment of a special committee of inquiry on Crown corporations engaged in financial, commercial, or industrial activities.

With all due respect to the hon. member, one of the things that struck me a year and a half ago when I became aware of these august halls for the first time was the great complexity, not only of Crown corporations, but of the government as a whole. At that time the question came to my mind how one person who is responsible for representing an area could possess the ability to understand all of these complex things and at the same time deal efficiently with the many matters that arise in his riding. How does an hon. member grasp, within a reasonable period of time, the many complexities with which we are faced on a day-to-day basis here?

I suppose many of us here are a bit lost in respect of this vast area of enterprise in which the government is involved. I suppose it comes down to the question of what is the role of an hon. member in this House, and to what activities should he direct his energies. It is for that reason I am pleased to speak on this motion.

We sometimes forget that we were not sent here as accountants to go through the books of various corporations. I was under the impression we were sent here to act as legislators. We have accountants, lawyers, and many other people employed in government service. We must assume first of all that they are basically honest and fairly intelligent, and that the information they provide members is accurate.

We must operate with the information that is available to us and make decisions for the betterment of the country. I for one would still be lost having gone through the financial statements of some of our many Crown corporations. They are part of the vast galaxy of shoot-offs from our government. For example, there is the centennial commission. I have no idea what that is. Since we have had our 100 years celebration perhaps this no longer is in effect. It may be that someone has not noticed that it is still in existence. This is an example of the vastness of this area.

● (1640)

In deference to my compatriot across the floor, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who has been in this House for many years, he might tell me whether in his many years' experience he has discovered how Crown corporations operate and whether he has a greater knowledge about them now than he had previously. If I am not mistaken there are approximately 250 people whose job is to act as auditors for the government. They are employed by the Department of the Auditor General. I would not wish that job on anyone. It must be a tremendous undertaking.

I believe the previous Auditor General required additions to his staff. I hope there is now sufficient staff in the Department of the Auditor General because, from a look at the number of corporations as well as the departments, it would seem that this must be an enormous task.

I wonder whether any member of this House or any committee of this House should try to take away the power or the right of review by the Auditor General's department. I wonder even if we did decide that was in the interest of Canada and the House, whether we or members of the committee, with our backgrounds which are unrelated to accountancy, actually would make any contribution to this House or the government. It might be that we should examine our priorities. As much as I may be in sympathy with the motion of the hon. member I wonder what, in practical terms, it would accomplish. I wonder how deeply we would be able to go into the situation and how much time would be required. Also I wonder whether we could afford such an in-depth study.

If such a study were to be meaningful it could not be conducted over night or once, say, every five or ten years. It would have to be an on-going process. The expertise required might be outside our sphere. This is a debatable subject.

In the past perhaps a band-aid approach has been taken to this. Situations have arisen which caused the government and the House to take a certain course of action. Special committees of the House have been established for the purpose of examining the situation in respect of a Crown corporation or something else. Although this may be open to debate, it would seem to me that this is a reasonable way to do it.

If a situation should develop among one of the corporations which we feel is wrong, or in respect of which we feel there is some question concerning the competence of the people involved, perhaps a special committee to study that situation is the answer. I suppose a good example is the special committee that was set up to study the question of egg marketing. That was a very complex issue. The committee spent several months studying that situation. At the end I felt that there was much more we could have done had we had more time, but I think the House and the committees realize that time is one of our most precious commodities and one of the things of which we do not have very much.

I do not know whether the hon. member who brought in this motion has considered this aspect of having a special committee study certain corporations, or whether he feels that this would not be an ongoing process. However, as one member of parliament I sincerely believe that we must give offices such as that of the Auditor General, once it has been given the job of acting as a watchdog, an opportunity to carry out that function without appointing another watchdog to watch the watchdog.

The reports of the Auditor General are available to us. I have had an opportunity to look at them. It is a difficult task to study these reports. For a lay person who has perhaps no special skill or training in reading columns of figures it is neither the most productive nor easy reading. I believe the hon. member brought up a very important point. As legislators I do not think individually or even as a committee we have the time to go through the reams and reams of statistics in respect of every Crown corporation.

I agree with the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) that we have the right to know what these people who are running Crown corporations are costing the taxpayers of Canada. It is public money that is being spent and therefore, in my opinion, it should be accounted for.

In the province of British Columbia the salaries of doctors who are paid through the medicare program have been made public because they are paid from money out of the public purse. There was much debate in respect of whether or not the salaries of the doctors should be made available. However, it was decided that since this was public money it should be accounted for.

I have always felt that since we ourselves are under scrutiny, and since we are accountable to the people for the management of the public purse, the money paid to people employed through the Government of Canada should be accounted for and the figures made available. I do not suggest this in a critical way but rather so that it may be ascertained whether the salaries are fair. I am saying this not only from the negative point of view but from the point of view of making sure that these people are dealt with fairly and equitably and so that we will know whether these expenditures are too high or too low. I think we have the right to know this since we provide the money.

I also strongly believe that the House of Commons should have a status that is higher than that of a court of inquiry. There may be occasions when we might like to delve into that problem. However, I do not see this matter as being a preoccupation of the standing committees. We have many other facilities for studying the problems in various areas of our government service. We should tackle one area alone.

Perhaps as a final comment I might say that this whole question of being able to have the time to go into an area in which we perhaps have specialized would be made much easier if some of the staff we have in our research centres were under our own control rather than being part of a central research staff where we have basically no control over the work done, or the type of person employed. I think at some point the House should consider having an individual member given the right to have his own staff so that he would have someone to work in his office whom he could trust, and whose abilities he would know, so that the member would know the quality of the work being done and so that there would be a much more positive and closer relationship than exists at the present time.

This is slightly off the point made by the hon. member attacking the question of information being made available, but I think all of us have certain interests which could be better researched if we had that sort of staff rather than using the staff under the present system. I realize that this does not include ministers. I am talking about ordinary backbenchers in this House who could make a more positive contribution if they were provided with better research facilities. The information is there if someone has the time to research it, but hon. members know that our time is very limited. Our time is devoted to committee work, the House and so forth, and surely we can use people who have expertise in certain areas to do some of that work for us.

Going back to my original point, that the Auditor General has a branch which is already set up, I do not think we have to go further and set up a watchdog committee. Someone might be interested in Air Canada or, in the case of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), a steamship company—I did not realize we had one in the West Indies, but apparently we have two flag carriers in that area—but all hon. members might not be interested in that. That is why I feel a committee is not the answer. However, if one or two hon. members were interested in a particular subject, they could do the research themselves and that would not take up the time of a committee. We have enough problems.

In the External Affairs Committee we set up a subcommittee to deal with international development. We have problems maintaining interest, although it started off with a great burst of confidence. After CIDA, and where the money was going, had been discussed for several weeks we found that the interest of the committee waned to some extent.

I feel we would have the same situation in the committee the hon. member suggests because although one interesting thing might come up, this would not occupy the attention of 16, 20 or 30 people on a month by month basis if it were a permanent committee. For that reason I ask the House to consider this proposal very seriously, to consider whether we already have instruments set up to look into these subjects and whether we would be duplicating efforts. Although I would like to see some way of developing a better research centre for our own members, I cannot agree with the proposal of a permanent committee.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I am rising to ask if the hon. member will accept a question.

Mr. Anderson: I would be honoured to accept a question from the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) agrees that salaries of Crown corporation officers, such as the president of Canadian National Railways, should be made public, would he not also agree that the salary of the president of CPR should be made public?

Mr. Anderson: I certainly do not want to go into a long debate on this.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes or no?

Mr. Anderson: The answer is no because, as I mentioned, the reason I feel Crown salaries should be made public is not because of curiosity but because it is public money. A person who works for a company or is president of a company should not have to make that disclosure. I feel these are two separate situations. One is supported by the public, and the other is not.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Where does CPR get its money?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I am deeply moved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: I only hope that—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: Thank you.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: On a question of privilege, Madam Speaker, if this sudden groundswell of support and enthusiasm could be restrained, I should like to make a few brief comments on this motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: Failing that, I will do my best to make these comments later in my office, and I am sure all hon. members who are interested would like to hear them.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Get to the bill.

Mr. Fleming: I really had a few comments I had hoped to make.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Very convincing.

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fleming: Only if it applies to my speech.

Mr. Blais: It does. My question is this: when is the hon. member going to start his speech?

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, may I call it five o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF REDEPLOYMENT OF AIR-SEA RESCUE FORCES IN ATLANTIC REGION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The failure of an air search to locate two lost seal hunters off the northeast coast of Newfoundland, the second failure in a month, prompts the vital necessity to consider a redeployment of the air-sea rescue forces. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That the task force report on Canada's national search and rescue policy, recently completed, be referred immediately to a combined committee of members of the Transport and Communications, External Affairs and National Defence and Fisheries and Forestry committees, to review the report in order to recommend to cabinet action of the highest priority, the redeployment of air-sea rescue forces and lifeboat bases in the Atlantic region.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

PROPOSAL TO COMPLIMENT GOVERNMENT ON APPOINTMENT OF MR. LASBY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The matter of urgent and pressing necessity arises from the importance of dealing with escalating food prices as part of the government's anti-inflation program. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House compliments the government on its wise, impartial and imaginative decision to appoint Mr. W. W. Lasby as director of the food and agricultural division concerned with prices and profits in the Anti-Inflation Board since, as the former vice-president of Canada Packers and past president of the Meat Packers Council of Canada, he is obviously a man who knows what price rigging is all about.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

POSSIBLE MEASURES TO INCREASE SUBSIDY ON INDUSTRIAL MILK AND DISTRIBUTION OF MILK IN SCHOOLS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion concerning an urgent and important matter.

Since the income of industrial milk producers is decreasing following the changes in the milk production policy of the federal government and because of the excessive imports of milk products, since the federal government, in its fight against inflation, recognizes that other groups in society need an income increase, and since it should do the same as regards industrial milk producers, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin):

That the House recommend to the Minister of Agriculture that he revise his milk policy so that the support price of industrial milk be increased in the same proportion as production quotas are being reduced, to guarantee a fair increase in income to those producers, and that the government consider resuming the distribution of milk in schools, on the one hand, and on the other, in underdeveloped countries, through CIDA.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent; therefore, the motion cannot be put.

MOTION URGING WITHDRAWAL OF FOREIGN FORCES AND POLITICAL SETTLEMENT IN ANGOLA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I wish to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In fairness to hon. members, I should indicate that I have taken the advice of and consulted with my hon. friend, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen). I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That this House views with concern and anxiety the continuation of armed conflict in Angola and deplores the military involvement of foreign powers in that country. Further, that this House urges the withdrawal from Angola of all foreign combatants and military technicians engaged in the warfare, calls for the cessation of arms shipments to all fighting forces and urges the three major Angola political groups—the MPLA, FNLA and UNITA to desist from armed combat and proceed toward a mutually agreed-upon peace settlement. Finally, that the government be requested to convey these sentiments of this House to the Secretary General of the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the terms of Standing Order 43, such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) moves:

That this House views with concern and anxiety the continuation of armed conflict in Angola and deplores the military involvement of foreign powers in that country. Further, that this House urges the withdrawal from Angola of all foreign combatants and military technicians engaged in the warfare, calls for the cessation of arms shipments to all fighting forces and urges the three major Angola political groups—the MPLA, FNLA, and UNITA to desist from armed combat and proceed toward a mutually agreed-upon peace settlement. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVERT THREATENED STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Labour, I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister who, I am sure, will be fully familiar with the problems involved in view of their importance. Apparently the Minister of Labour met last Thursday with the negotiators involved in the railway dispute and apparently the negotiations have broken down. Can the Acting Prime Minister tell the House what action the government is going to take? In particular, would he tell us whether the government has clarified its position as to what constitutes the maximum permissible offer under the guidelines?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): Perhaps I might reply to that question, in the absence of the Minister of Labour. I did have an opportunity to discuss this very point with the minister and he is at the moment considering whether to name an industrial commissioner or a conciliation board. I believe he will come to a firm conclusion in the course of the next few days.

THREATENED STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE CONSULTATION WITH ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ON PERMISSIBLE WAGE INCREASE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary relating to the second part of my question, which becomes even more pertinent in view of the complaint by the commissioner dealing with an industrial inquiry in British Columbia into the supermarket dispute, having to do with the ambiguity of the guidelines which causes confusion and delay in analyzing the dispute. May I ask the Acting Minister of Labour whether the government proposes to clarify the parameters of the negotiations in order to avoid serious industrial disputes unnecessarily paralyzing the economy of the country.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): This is a valid question, Mr. Speaker. I would imagine this is the first thing an industrial commissioner would want to do in his own capacity. I do not believe we should encourage the government to dictate to the Anti-Inflation Board or ask the Anti-Inflation Board to clarify certain things which are more ambiguous to some provincial commissioners than to others. But I do believe that an industrial inquiry commission, or chairman of the board, once it is set up, would want these areas to be clarified before negotiations continued.

THREATENED STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ESSENTIALITY OF RAIL SERVICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I take it from what the Acting Minister of Labour says that, as the government sees it, the Anti-Inflation Board would respond to such an inquiry from the industrial commissioner and would indicate to him the parameters within which he could work. Has the government indicated to the negotiators in the dispute what the position of the government is with regard to the possibility of a railway dispute leading to a strike? Has the government taken a position with regard to the essentiality of rail service and, if so, has it indicated that position to those involved in this dispute?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): So far, the position of the government is that the dispute is between the employer, C.N. Railways, and the employees represented by various unions. It is not the government's intention or prerogative at this moment to interfere with the collective bargaining process. As to my reference to the Anti-Inflation Board, I think the hon. gentleman has read too much into it. It is entirely up to the Anti-Inflation Board to pass judgment on a collective agreement, once signed, and this should be the traditional position, I think, unless we want the Anti-Inflation Board unintentionally to assume the role of arbitrator in all disputes before collective bargaining has had an opportunity to function.

POSSIBLE STUDY BY LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL OF ROLE OF ANTI-INFLATION BOARD IN COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Having regard to the fact that this is exactly what has happened in terms of the Anti-Inflation Board, could the minister inform the House whether or not the Canada Labour Relations Council is studying this matter specifically, and, if so, what studies are being undertaken by that Council?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): If that is what is happening—and I do not agree that it is—I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would suggest that we encourage it further by asking the Board to interfere in the railway dispute before a strike occurs or before a settlement is arrived at through the collective bargaining process. As far as the Labour Relations Council is concerned, the hon. member will realize that this is an advisory body concerned with government policy in general rather than any particular dispute.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Having regard to the Woods report of 1968, which did make certain recommendations, would the minister ask the Canada Labour Relations Council to study and advise the government on the dangers to the public of a work stoppage in the railways in order that the government can take an early and clear position on whether a strike would be tolerated? Reportedly, the council is going to meet this week. Would the minister undertake to advise the council to make such a report?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the minister. This is not the issue that was introduced by the question. The subject matter has evolved all the way from the railway dispute to the proposed role of this particular council in industrial relations in the future. Certainly, that is something that I do not want to try to anticipate at this moment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—EXTENT OF GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE IN VIEW OF DISASTROUS EARTHQUAKE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Given the scale of the human disaster which is befalling the people of Guatemala and the decision of the federal government to give the paltry sum of $75,000 to provide some assistance to this disaster, I should like to ask the minister in all seriousness whether this is the limit of the government of Canada's concern for this situation, and does it not intend to provide some medical or other assistance in the form of food to the people of this unfortunate country well beyond the $75,000 level?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe I indicated to the House last week that the contribution mentioned by the hon. member was an initial contribution to the Red Cross in Guatemala for disposal on an urgent basis. That is not the limit of our effort or our intentions with respect to Guatemala. We undertook on the weekend a shipment of powdered milk to Guatemala. As this is one of the urgent requirements of the government, 30 tons of powdered milk, purchased from the Canadian Dairy Corporation in Winnipeg, are en route to Guatemala at the moment. We are evaluating the situation with the intention of adding to our commitment for food aid. As I also stated last week, we are proposing to make a substantial contribution in food aid to Guatemala.

This afternoon the Canadian ambassador in Guatemala, in company with other ambassadors accredited to the country, will be meeting with the president, and I have indicated to our ambassador to make additional commitments with respect to food aid to Guatemala. An additional requirement at the moment is for blankets. It is one of the coldest Februarys in that country and many people have to remain outside because of the destruction of dwellings. We are considering at the moment what we can do to assist in the provision of blankets to the freezing population.

In addition to that, we are co-ordinating our efforts with the International Red Cross in order to respond to the medical requirements of the situation in Guatemala. We know that there are volunteers in the United States, Canada and other countries ready to go to assist medically, but at the moment there is a limit to the capacity to absorb these facilities. All efforts are being co-ordinated through the International Red Cross so we are advising individuals in Canada who are interested in serving to have their efforts co-ordinated through the Canadian Red Cross.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, we are operating urgently on a number of fronts and we will be increasing our commitments as needs are more clearly evaluated and presented to us by the Guatemalan authorities.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the minister says "in brief", but in all of that the only commitments I heard were for some powdered milk and $75,000 which the government has already committed itself to spending. Since the initial earthquake took place almost a week ago, could the minister be more specific as to what other food commitments the government has in mind and, secondly, in terms of medical assistance is it making plans to send medical personnel of a variety of kinds, plus the supporting equipment to that country? If that is so, how much and, more specifically, within that context, will it be assisting the Montreal medical team which has indicated that it wants to go to help?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the commitments in the future, in addition to the sums mentioned by the hon. member, are quite considerable. I have undertaken with the officials of CIDA to make an increasing commitment in food aid to the situation in Guatemala. Today at the meeting with the President of Guatemala the ambassador will be authorized to commit an additional $300,000 in food aid to that which has already been made available. Depending on the needs, we will be prepared to go beyond that, so there will not be any slackening of effort in respect of the food aid portion of our assistance. On the medical side, I repeat that experience has taught in previous emergencies that the most efficient way by which medical supplies can go into the area is through the coordination of Red Cross societies which can evaluate the personnel and resources becoming available from all countries. We encourage those who wish to go to present their intention to the Red Cross, and we will assist the Red Cross in any way that seems appropriate and desirable at the present time.

AVAILABILITY OF MEN AND MATERIALS TO ASSIST EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS IN GUATEMALA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary for the Minister of National Defence. Since in the white paper entitled "Defence in the 70's" published in 1971 the government stated its commitments to the use of Canadian armed forces for international disaster situations like the one that has unfortunately befallen the people of Guatemala, would the minister advise whether the Canadian armed forces now have at their disposal field hospitals, field kitchens, ground transportation and medical supplies that can be made available in such a disaster? If we do have those supplies, has the Department of National Defence taken any steps to make sure that these will be offered to the people of Guatemala in the existing circumstances?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, on a number of occasions since the white paper was issued the armed forces have been of assistance in international emergencies, but that assistance has been primarily in the form of transport. In the present emergency we do have three Hercules standing by and ready to move supplies to Guatemala. To date we have not received a specific request for particular items to transport. We are not ourselves collecting the kind of medical equipment to which the hon. member has referred. That would be the responsibility of others and we would be primarily responsible for transportation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—EFFORTS TO FIND CANADIANS MISSING FOLLOWING EARTHQUAKE

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. First may I preface it by congratulating the minister's staff on their dedication over the weekend in looking after inquiries regarding Canadians missing in Guatemala.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: Given that, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would assure the House, and perhaps reassure the Canadian public, that every effort is being made to locate those Canadians who have still not reported into the Canadian embassy, in order to determine the safety and condition of health or otherwise of those Canadians still missing there?

● (1430)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his words of commendation for the members of the External Affairs Department who are working on this problem at this particular time. It is impossible to give precise figures, but we believe there are approximately 500 Canadians in Guatemala. So far the embassy has been in touch with more than 400 of these Canadians to confirm that they are safe. That information is being communicated by telephone on an urgent basis to their relatives in Canada. The embassy staff is continuing its efforts to locate additional uncontacted Canadians and that information will also be conveyed. I should mention that communication is not normal at the present time and over the weekend it has been difficult both by telephone and Telex to be in touch with the embassy because of the frequent breakdown of communications.

MILK—POSSIBILITY OF NEW POLICY TO INCREASE RETURNS TO PRODUCERS

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but as he is not in the House, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

Since Quebec industrial milk producers and the management of industrial plants are seriously concerned about the government milk policy, which would result in lower income for producers, may I ask the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, whether he will recommend an adjustment to the milk policy to favour better returns for milk producers?

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the minister, who is absent for the whole week and is to speak to several agricultural organizations in western Canada, has been examining this question for several weeks already and he will put to the House within a month a new dairy policy for 1976-77.

POSSIBILITY OF MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND FLUID MILK PRODUCERS TO CONSIDER PROBLEM OF SURPLUS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

Before the end of that month, do the minister and his parliamentary secretary expect to meet the natural milk producers who discharge their surplus in those that are also part of the industrial milk producers' surplus so that, one day, those surpluses be adjusted in a manner that would be fairer to industrial milk producers?

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the minister considers both types of producers on the same level. It is well known that industrial milk producers are much more affected. Any way, the minister gives consideration to both categories of producers.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATES OF BUDGETARY DEFICIT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I note that the federal government's statement of financial operations for the first nine months of this fiscal year shows a budgetary deficit of more than $3 billion. Considering that the past pattern of revenue collections and expenditure disbursements indicates that the pace of expenditures will accelerate in the final three months of the year while revenues will grow at a less rapid rate, is the minister in a position to tell the House whether the budgetary deficit projection of $3.2 billion given on June 23 will be exceeded and, if so, by what amount.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to make an estimate of that kind at the moment.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Can the minister identify to the House any expected developments in the behaviour of either revenues or expenditures over the next three months which would prevent the budgetary deficit from passing the $6 billion mark, as some reputable private forecasters have indicated?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that is rather an exaggeration.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO BRIBES OFFERED BY LOCKHEED FOR PURCHASE OF AIRCRAFT

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. Can the minister reply without equivocation that the government has investigated and satisfied itself that there were no improprieties in the purchases between the government and its agencies and Lockheed Aircraft Company in the sales of aircraft by the company to Air Canada and to the Department of National Defence. I ask this question because of the reports current in the press concerning bribes offered by Lockheed in the Netherlands and Japan.

LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TECHNICAL PROBLEMS PREVENTING SIGNING OF CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services and his parliamentary secretary I will address my supplementary to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister advise the House if he has overcome the technical problems which have prevented the Minister of Supply and Services signing the contract for the long range patrol aircraft with Lockheed and could he give the House a brief explanation of what was meant by "technical problems", a term used by the Minister of Supply and Services in the House last Monday in reply to a somewhat similar question.

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the Minister of Supply and Services is completing the negotiations with Lockheed and it is expected he will be able to finalize the contract in a very few days.

Mr. Speaker, in response to the earlier question of the hon. member for Victoria perhaps I might read a paragraph from a letter from the Chairman of Lockheed, which I think answers the question raised:

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has not paid commissions nor will it pay commissions to anyone in connection with the LRPA competition. We are prepared to certify to this fact as a provision in the contract.

Under the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, I will table this correspondence, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

SUSPENSION BY UNION OF EMPLOYEES WHO RETURNED TO WORK DURING STRIKE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General or the Minister of Labour whomsoever wishes to field it. In view of the fact that during the strike by the postal workers last October and November the Postmaster General and the Minister of Labour resisted any efforts to get back-to-work legislation by the Postmaster General in particular encouraging people to go back to work and asking members of this House to be patient. This did happen and the strike was settled. My question is, what action is the government taking with regard to the suspension and fining now by the postal union of those members who had the courage to go back to work to follow the suggestion of the Postmaster General in order to break the strike and who now may be the victims of it.

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to thank that particular hon. gentleman for his well known patience on all subject matters. Insofar as the 10 per cent or up to 2,000 workers who went back to work during the strike, they did so because of the courage of their own convictions. I assured them then, and I do so again, that the post office is an open plant and that one does not have to be a member of the union to work in the post office. Their security is protected, their rights are protected and their grievance procedure is protected. In every respect, the rights of all postal workers are sufficiently protected whether they do or do not belong to the union.

However, the internal question of their role in the union is up to the union. I hope the hon. gentleman is not suggesting that we should start interfering with the internal operations of that particular union. Nevertheless I am sure when legislation comes forward as it might one day to revise the PSSRA we may want to take a better look at the rights of individual workers in respect of a secret ballot when there are issues of this magnitude during a strike.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the minister may have suggested, I am not suggesting in any way that the government should interfere in the internal workings of the union, but does the minister not agree that the minister having encouraged people to take an independent line of action he should not now suffer them to be intimidated.

[Mr. Richardson.]

Mr. Mackasey: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am awfully pleased the hon. gentleman has suddenly become a convert and suggests that we not interfere with the internal operations of the union because that was implied by his second question. The people who went back to work during the strike as a result of my encouragement, and the encouragement of all members of parliament and the public, are people with courage and conviction, since there was a certain degree of unpleasantness. However, I suggest they were quite prepared to recognize that that is part of the democratic process. There is no evidence of intimidation, and I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he bring forward to me one case of intimidation by the union against people on the work site. I think this union has been the subject of a certain amount of adverse publicity, and I think it would be fair now to give them an opportunity to work out their own problems. They are well on the way to doing so.

● (1440)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There has been moral intimidation. You know that, too.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTION BOARD PUBLISH DECISIONS ON PRICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Will he take immediate steps, including the presentation of amendments to the law if necessary, to ensure that the Anti-Inflation Board will deal with prices through formal decisions which it will publish no less than it does when it comes to wages, and generally to ensure that the board will publicize its findings and conclusions on prices as fully as it does on wages in order that public confidence in the even handedness of the board in carrying out its work continues and in fact increases?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to discuss the hon. member's very detailed question with the board.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONTRIBUTION TO CROP INSURANCE FUND

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that under the Crop Insurance Act the federal government is committed to a certain level of contributions based on the number of farmers covered; in view of the fact that the crop insurance section has estimated that the required federal moneys for 1976 will be about $62 million; and in view of the announcement by the minister that the amount of the federal contribution will be cut by about $10 million, reducing the contribution to $52 million, can the minister advise what will happen if the required contributions by the crop insurance board exceed $52 million, and will he advise further when the government plans on obtaining additional funds, or will it renege on its commitments?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this question is rather technical. I do not think I can give an answer at this time, but I think that all sectors of the economy, including this one, must participate in the federal government's restriction program.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED DELAY IN GRANTING DOME PETROLEUM PERMIT TO DRILL IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in the absence of the minister and also in the absence of many other ministers.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Leggatt: It concerns the report issued by the Minister of the Environment on January 29 regarding the environmental effects of off-shore drilling in the Beaufort Sea which indicated that it would be one to three years before blowouts in that area could be controlled with resulting severe environmental effects to the area. Would the parliamentary secretary advise the House and the country as well as those officials who works so hard in the Department of the Environment that a drilling permit will not be granted to Dome Petroleum until the proper technology is developed to control blowouts in the Beaufort Sea and until such time as Dome Petroleum ceases to lobby for that?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman will be delighted to know that the people who are absent from the House today are all in British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campagnolo: In general, the application is complete and the studies are satisfactory. Some documents on the subject have been made public, most significantly Environment Canada's Preliminary Environmental Assessment, based on the Beaufort Sea environmental studies program and this department's Backgrounder on off-shore drilling in northern Canada. As a result of the availability of both these reports, the advisory committee has just completed one week of consultations with the Beaufort Sea communities which would give about seven days for the advisory committee to deliberate on the matter, possibly three more days for a review in the department, and it is anticipated that a recommendation on this application will be placed before the minister on February 18.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSED REFERENCE TO BERGER COMMISSION OF ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS OF DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): On this consultation process which the parliamentary secretary indicates will take place over a period of some three days covering six communities, would the parliamentary secretary advise the House whether that is the extent of the consultation with people in the north on that drilling and, secondly, will she advise the House why the Berger Commission does not have its terms of reference extended so that they can carry out a decent study into the environmental effects of drilling up there?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I am sure the hon. gentleman is more familiar than I with some of the activities undertaken by the northern people, particularly in C.O.P.E. C.O.P.E. has been told that the decision on the Beaufort Sea drilling will have to be taken before the Berger inquiry is completed but that the decision may not have to be taken until after the last set of Berger hearings in the delta in mid February.

TRADE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON LEVEL OF CHEESE IMPORTS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and it relates to the issue of the import of foreign cheese products. In order to find out whether the minister has finally resolved his differences with the Minister of Agriculture, may I ask him to confirm reports that the level of imports for this dairy year will be reduced by some five million pounds below the 50 million pounds permitted last year?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to confirm that report. There have been other reports, of course, on increases and also on keeping the level the same as it was last year. At the moment no decision has been made.

Mr. Jarvis: May I ask the minister therefore if it is necessary for us to wait one month for the final decision in light of what the parliamentary secretary said today vis-à-vis the industrial milk producers? I should also like to ask whether there will be a reconsideration of the long-range policy that imports will be permitted to increase to at least double in the next few years. Is that policy being reconsidered?

Mr. Jamieson: The answer to the latter part of the question is yes, in the sense that we are looking at the impact of quotas on cheese as it affects the dairy industry into the future. Therefore, it is being reviewed. As to the question of where it will rest for the next 12 months, I repeat that no decision has been made, but I think it is safe to assure the hon. member that there will be no increase in the quota during the next 12 months.

Oral Questions

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR REDEPLOYMENT OF AIR AND SEA RESCUE FORCES IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that air and sea rescue have failed in two attempts in one month to locate lost fishermen, is the minister now prepared, in view of the fact that the reaction time of sea and air rescue is not good enough in locating lost fishermen, to redeploy a force in the province of Newfoundland where these occurrences take place?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that in the last two instances we were not successful in finding the fishermen who were lost, but there have been many successful searches as well, and in this particular instance the armed forces did all they could do. We sent three aircraft and a coastal vessel. They were working there for some four days and really conducted an excellent search and rescue operation, even though it was not successful. There is no reason to make any changes in the location of the search and rescue fleet.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF TASK FORCE REPORT ON SEARCH AND RESCUE POLICY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): The letter from the Minister of Transport on December 5 indicated that the necessary implementation documents on the task force report on the national search and rescue policy were completed. Would the minister agree to have this report referred to the appropriate committee to make recommendations on the redeployment of a force and the necessity for a better reaction time and better surveillance of the Atlantic coastal region?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): I will agree to consult my colleague, the Minister of Transport.

COMMUNICATIONS

EFFECT OF VANCOUVER COURT DECISION ON POWERS OF CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION COMMISSION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

In view of the ruling of the court, in Vancouver, which interrupted the activities of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, and its resulting downgrading of the CRTC, what administrative or legislative steps is the government considering, outside of an appeal to a superior court, to reinstate the commission in its role and functions?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly what happened in Vancouver, I would say that only the administrative aspect of the CRTC hearings in Vancouver was involved. I believe the CRTC could proceed with its hearing in other cities because the specific problem involved in Vancouver does not necessarily exist elsewhere. With regard to the ruling that may be appealed, that is validity of the owner's preferential rights, that is the question the CRTC will want to put to a superior court.

[Mr. Jamieson.]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Do I understand that the answer given by the minister means that the decision of the court in Vancouver has no influence on the activities of the commission in the other provinces?

Mrs. Sauvé: No, Mr. Speaker, even if the same circumstances occured in another city, if an applicant opposed the renewal of a television licence and wished the CRTC to hear his own application. What happened in Vancouver could have some repercussions in another city unless the writ is only territorial. What happened in Vancouver is that the person asking for a renewal of his licence saw his application challenged by another who wanted to licence in his place. Nevertheless, it is not the policy of the CRTC to hear new applications for licences against those who already have one. The person who already has a licence has priority. However, they agree to examine the objections of those who complain about the way a television station has performed its functions, but a new claimant is not allowed to ask for the licence.

AIR TRANSPORT

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT STRIKE BY AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering that a strike by air traffic controllers in Canada is imminent as a result of the breaking off of negotiations between Treasury Board and the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers' Association owing to the rejection of clauses asking the prohibition of bilingualism in air communications, can the President of the Treasury Board advise the House what steps he intends to take to avoid the stoppage of air traffic control throughout Canada for the alleged reasons and conform that the rejected clauses violate the Official Languages Act?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am essentially an optimist and I hope that we can solve the problem through normal negotiations or bargaining during the next weeks.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF RECOVERING GRANT FROM MEADOW LAKE WOOD INDUSTRIES

Mr. Bert Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, although in view of the importance of the question I would prefer the Acting Prime Minister to take note of it. In view of the fact that the Meadow Lake Wood Industries which opened on May 20, 1975 and closed on or about February 6, 1976, leaving 50 people unemployed and numerous debts including wages and taxes, had received a $423,000 DREE development incentive, would the minister please advise what the policy of the government is in recovering its investment?

AIR TRANSPORT

INCREASED AIRPORT TERMINAL CHARGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION IN VIEW OF RESTRAINT PROGRAM

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the contemplated action of the Minister of Transport to increase airport terminal charges and landing fees by 30 per cent across the board and also to impose a new 66 cents per passenger security charge which will also have to be passed along to the Canadian consumer, does the minister not feel that the government, which is seeking the co-operation of the provinces, organized labour and the Canadian people with the Anti-Inflation Board should now set an example of price restraint rather than leading with arbitrary price increase and the imposition of new charges?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I might say that the nominal figure of $1 which has been charged at airports is a continuation of the policy that wherever possible the user should pay for the particular service provided.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDY ON INCREASED COST OF SECURITY GUARDS AT AIRPORTS

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question was really addressed to the Minister of Finance but if I may I will address a supplementary to the Acting Minister of Transport. In view of the fact Eastern Airlines in the United States shows an average cost of 15 cents per passenger for the cost of armed guards, can the minister advise if he has cost benefit studies supporting the new 66 cent charge? If the has, will he table them?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have them but I think the Minister of Transport should decide on his return whether they are of sufficient importance to be tabled.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FUNDS FOR FLOOD CONTROL IN FRASER VALLEY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the President of the Treasury Board. In reply to a question asked by my colleague the hon. member for Fraser Valley West, as recorded at page 9682 of Hansard for December 3, 1975 and later confirmed in a conversation with me, the Minister of the Environment at that time stated that flood control in the Fraser Valley was of top priority with the government, and the request for an additional appropriation to continue the program was then before Treasury Board. Could the minister advise the House whether a request was before the board at that time or has been placed before the board since, and whether a decision has been made on the request?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the decisions of the Treasury Board are always announced by the minister responsible for the program.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Many businesses are given the burdensome task of filing mass reports to the Anti-Inflation Board which are due February 20. The same companies are asked by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to file reports back to 1960 and they would like these by the middle of March. The Department of National Revenue wants its pound of flesh by March 31. Where is business going to get the help to facilitate this horrendous administrative nightmare when the government has employed all the chartered accountants and accountants to watch over these companies and which department over there has priority?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, these people are serious; they want to know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Central Nova.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DISCHARGE OF STAFF SERGEANTS McCLEERY AND BRUNET—INQUIRY WHETHER DISCHARGE BOARD CONVENED—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. On December 5, 1972, RCMP Staff Sergeant Donald R. McCleery, No. 18110, was discharged from the force as "unsuitable" under regulation 150(d) by the commissioner under regulation 173. About nine months before discharge, Staff Sergeant McCleery had been awarded a long service medal for 20 years of good conduct service. My question to the minister on these facts is: was a discharge board convened in respect of McCleery's discharge as is mandatory under regulation 155 and may I ask the same question with respect to Staff Sergeant Giles Brunet?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, to the best of my recollection no board was convened in the case of McCleery or Brunet because they were charged or dismissed under a section of the RCMP Act which does not require such a hearing. There was no disciplinary charge made against them. There are two sections of the RCMP Act under which members can be dismissed, one section for discipline where there is a hearing and one section for unsuitability where there is no hearing.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, without necessarily agreeing with the minister may I ask what action, if any, he is contemplating with regard to these two officers to reassess their position under present circumstances?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I have re-examined their file on several occasions with officers of the RCMP; I have met with their lawyers; I have even met with the individuals themselves. I advised them that if they felt they had any complaint about the procedures they should have pursued the legal recourse they had before the federal courts. As the House knows, under the Federal Court Act, as revised a few years ago, it is possible to review the decision of a commission or board or an administrative decision of the federal official. The two officers in question did take an action before the federal court but dropped it without further notice.

An hon. Member: You know why.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 3,707 and 3,828.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

PUBLIC SERVICE COMPETITIONS AND MEMBERS OF CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 3,707—Mr. Forrestall:

1. Is the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion aware of the answer to Question No. 2,849 and, if so, does he accept its implications as to the ability of members of the Canadian Armed Forces born in the Atlantic Provinces but not stationed there to enter closed competitions offered by the Public Service but restricted to residents of the Atlantic Provinces?

2. Does this policy and its working advance the efforts of DREE to promote regional growth and encourage residents of the Atlantic Provinces to contribute to their regional economy and, if so, in what manner?

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): The answer to this question for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is as follows: 1. Yes. As indicated, members of the Canadian Armed Forces have the same rights and restrictions in regard to closed Public Service competitions as members of the Public Service.

2. The effects of the policy, which is based on considerations of equity, would appear to be neutral in so far as regional development is concerned.

RADIO-TELEPHONE OPERATOR'S CERTIFICATE (AERONAUTICAL)

Question No. 3,828—Mr. Forrestall:

1. During each of the past five years, in the Province of Quebec, how many air pilot candidates applied for a (a) general (b) restricted radio-telephone operator's certificate (aeronautical)?

2. How many were issued a licence in (a) French (b) English?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): In so far as the Department of Communications is concerned:

1. Applications:	1971	1972	1973	1974	1975
(b) Restricted Class	323	411	410	579	479
2. Certificates issued:

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I indicated earlier that perhaps today or tomorrow I would invite the hon. member for Central Nova to discuss a certain matter now sub judice. I wonder if three o'clock tomorrow would be a convenient time for that discussion. Is that agreed?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable, but is that without prejudice to my right to ask questions tomorrow relating to the general subject of Sky Shops? That was not specific.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated earlier, previous rulings of precedents in respect of matters sub judice have been confined to matters before the criminal courts and really have been confined more to the right or obligation, as it were, of ministers to answer questions, than the right of opposition members or other members to ask question. The civil law suit puts a different dimension on the question; the hon. member being a party to the litigation puts a different dimension to it. Otherwise the hon. member and others would be free, as a matter of precedent, from restriction to ask any questions until such time as the matter is set down for trial or actually being heard.

I would therefore need some indication that the restriction to which I referred generally applies to the hon. member, but there is an unusual circumstance here in that the hon. member is a party to the litigation. I think that in this case I would have to hear the individual question before ruling on whether it would to be in any way confined.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Friday, February 6, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on Friday when speaking on the bill before the House and the amendment and subamendment now being considered I made the point that the government, with the fiat of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), tried to change a statute this House passed a number of years ago.

Some years ago this House laid down the principle that if advertisers wanted to qualify for income tax deduction, their advertisements had to be placed in publications not substantially the same as foreign publications or, more accurately, that income tax deductions would not be permitted in cases where those advertisements were placed in publications substantially the same as foreign publications. I made the point that "substantially the same" could not, by any stretching of the English language, mean "80 per cent different." Neither can the English language be so tortured that "substantially the same" means "20 per cent the same." For example, to suggest that a publication "25 per cent the same" as another publication is "substantially the same" is a misuse of the English language. Clearly, the government is changing the law which parliament adopted, and not by asking parliament to change the law it is doing it simply with a ministerial interpretation. A few days ago the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) was surprised that I should be surprised at the Minister of National Revenue's interpretation of this law. The hon. member suggested that the minister and the department must as best they can frequently interpret the various laws they are called on to administer, particularly the Income Tax Act.

This bill relates to the Income Tax Act. Let me ask the hon. member for Mississauga this: Is it the practice of the Department of National Revenue, when interpreting the Income Tax Act or other legislation, to hand down interpretations clearly contrary to the meaning of the original law passed by parliament? Some Canadians are so suspicious of the operations of the Department of National Revenue that they think the department is capable of being most arbitrary. I do not want to be associated with such accusations. I do not think it is the practice of the Department of National Revenue to render an interpretation of our laws clearly contrary to the plain meaning of those laws. I hardly think any hon. member opposite will defend the practice of the Minister of National Revenue and officials of his department of operating on the basis of interpretations so clearly contrary to the law adopted by parliament.

Again I say, no reasonable man can say that in the English language "25 per cent different" means the same as "substantially the same," or that when one says a magazine is "25 per cent the same as a foreign publication," it is "substantially the same" as that foreign publication. That is what I mean when I say this process is an abuse of the processes of liberal democracy. It is a subversion of the judicial and parliamentary process.

I am also unhappy with what is happening, as the minister's interpretation does not relate simply to money. It does not determine merely how much money is to be taken from a citizen or corporation; and I admit that such a decision is important to any individual or corporation concerned. We are not, as the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) said, dealing with an ordinary business: he went to some pains to point out that we are not dealing with ordinary business. We are dealing with periodicals, with the press, and we are dealing with what I must call arbitrary decisions arrived at in secrecy.

I am not implying for a moment that if a periodical or publication attacks the government or its decisions, the present Minister of National Revenue would even be tempted to make a ruling which would make it difficult for that periodical to continue operating; but another minister might do it.

● (1510)

In any event, that idea at least must always be somewhere in the mind of the publisher of the periodical.

We are dealing with the freedom of the press. I am not now making the charge of censorship that is frequently made against those who are sponsoring this bill. However, I am saying that any process tolerated by parliament which allows decisions to be made by a minister in private, decisions that can affect the very viability of the publication and could, therefore, impinge upon the freedom of speech in this country, ought not to be tolerated.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I recognize that in connection with radio and television, the CRTC is following a policy involving the determination of Canadian content. The CRTC lays down rules about what proportion of the programming has to be Canadian content; it determines what it will accept as Canadian content. I am not happy about this set-up. I am not happy about the fact that television and radio stations have to renew their licences every two or three years. I would think that in the six-month period before a licence has to be renewed, the owners of those stations are perhaps a little nervous about the CRTC's attitude. They might be inclined to be a little careful about what they put on their stations during that period. I emphasize that I am not suggesting any improper motives as far as the CRTC is concerned; I am just saying that it is an unfortunate to situation. There may be no way of avoiding it.

In any event, at least as far as radio and television are concerned, the affairs are being handled by what I think can properly be referred to as an independent commission. It holds hearings and makes decisions only after the holding of those hearings. It is totally different process from the secretive way in which the Minister of National Revenue works; for example, it is totally different from the way in which the Minister of National Revenue handed down the recent ruling with regard to Reader's Digest.

I have to say to the minister, because I want to be frank with him, that there is a general feeling in the country—and it is not unreasonable—that in making that recent ruling with regard to Time and Reader's Digest the minister was responding to pressure placed upon him to find some way in which to permit a popular publication to continue. He was pressured into finding some way to prevent the legislation presented by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) eliminating Reader's Digest from Canada. Fond as I am of him, there is no way in which this minister, particularly as a result of the secrecy surrounding these proceedings, can persuade the people of Canada that he has not been influenced by pressures of public opinion.

As parliamentarians, we have to ask ourselves whether we are going to permit the Minister of National Revenue to interpret a very simple phrase, consisting of two or three English words, in a manner in which nobody would think it could ever be interpreted. That is the first point. Second, we have to ask ourselves whether we are going to permit the Minister of National Revenue, in private, without any public hearings, to make rulings regarding the viability of periodicals in this country. If there is to continue any such process as this, are we going to at least insist that any such decision be from the hands of an independent tribunal, and made only after public hearings?

I am not arguing in favour of a content rule. However, if we are to have a content rule and if we are to continue with substantially the same concept, the meaning of "substantially the same" cannot be tortured as the minister is torturing it. If, in this House, the majority feels that something must be done to help Canadian periodicals—and I certainly favour that—we cannot allow the process of liberal democracy to be subverted in this way. We cannot continue to allow decisions of basic importance to the press, and therefore to the freedom of speech in this country, to be made secretly by a minister rather than after public and due process of hearings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Stanfield: I do not say this by way of threat, Mr. Speaker, but I may have something more to say about it before the debate finishes. However, last Friday and this afternoon I wanted to make these two quite simple points which I believe are very basic. I thought the minister was going to say something on Friday. I hope he says something this afternoon. I hope he answers the questions asked as to, for example, how long the publishers of periodicals have to meet the requirements of any law that is eventually passed by this parliament. There is nothing very specific about this. I do not see what defence the minister can make about this way of proceeding, or what he can do to eliminate the suspicion that exists with regard to the ruling in favour of Time and Reader's Digest to show that it was not the result of pressure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). It is always a tough act to follow because his questions are very pertinent. However, I just wish he had his facts a little more clear. Taken altogether, it was a pretty good speech on Friday afternoon and today. When it hurts, we pay a little bit of attention to it.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is why you are on your feet.

Mr. Cullen: I am speaking as a courtesy. Questions were not only asked by the Leader of the Opposition, but last week by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes). During the past days of debate many points have been raised by hon. members which have been dealt with, I hope, patiently and at length by both the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and myself. Certain areas, however, continue to be of concern. These were outlined on Friday by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie. I will attempt to deal with the specific questions he raised then, hoping thus to put to rest much of the concern and criticism that surrounds this bill.

First, on the question of licensing. It is clearly stated in the act that to qualify as a Canadian periodical a magazine must not be "produced or published under a licence granted by a person who produces or publishes issues of a periodical that are printed, edited or published outside Canada". The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie asks me to state for the record that Reader's Digest will be required to change its existing licensing arrangement with the parent company in the United States in order to qualify as a truly Canadian magazine. I can only reply that if Reader's Digest Canada continues to publish in Canada and qualify as a Canadian periodical as they have announced they will do, it is because they have decided to meet all the criteria to qualify, including the necessity to be free from publishing under a licence.

Reader's Digest obtains the sole rights for reproduction of previously published material from periodicals around the world. For Reader's Digest to reproduce any of this material it must work through its American counterpart. The hon.

member suggests that the use of the pool is, in a sense, a form of editorial control by Reader's Digest, Inc. If Reader's Digest Canada wishes to publish such an article it must carry out in Canada, under Canadian editorial control, all of the required condensation and editing to permit it to count in the "80 per cent different" provision. There is no outside editorial control exercised here. The Canadian magazine must remain as free to choose or not to choose articles through the Reader's Digest, Inc. pool as it is to choose or not choose articles from any other periodical. Choice, condensation and editing remain in Canada.

The use of this pool does not jeopardize real operational control over the Canadian magazine which, under the law, must be 100 per cent printed, edited and published in Canada. True, this pool is a market advantage for Reader's Digest Canada, as far as contacts go, over any other digest that may wish to set itself up in competion. The point is, we are talking about an advantage for a Canadian magazine—75 per cent Canadian-owned, produced and published in Canada, free from a licence and reproducing only 20 per cent from other periodicals with which it has a continuing arrangement.

The hon. member went on to ask about rates. Reader's Digest Canada will be paying the going rates for material obtained from the pool. The United States company no longer controls the Canadian company. This will be subject to review by two tax authorities, Revenue Canada and IRS, who may exchange information under the Canada-U.S. tax treaty. In addition to the tax authorities, any deliberate use of inappropriate rates could result in the directors of the corporations being vulnerable under security regulations or to their shareholders.

The question arises as to how other periodicals, two in particular, will be affected by this clarification of my interpretation. MD of Canada may follow the same route as that taken by Reader's Digest Canada if it is feasible within its mode of operation. If it finds it can meet the content criteria it must also, of course, be 75 per cent Canadian-owned, be free of a licence and be published, produced and edited in Canada. Whether MD of Canada is prepared to meet these criteria or not, I do not know. My information is that Time Canada does not obtain third party material through Time U.S.A. Rather, I understand, it obtains material editorialized by Time U.S.A. Hence, it would not include this material in the "80 per cent different" provision. Time Canada, like Reader's Digest, may take up 20 per cent of its content from material originated by, condensed by or first published in Time U.S.A. or Reader's Digest, Inc. To use more than 20 per cent of this material would disqualify that periodical as a Canadian magazine. I trust these specific points will reassure the hon. member and other members of the House that the intent of the government remains firm: to qualify for a Canadian tax advantage, a periodical must qualify as a Canadian magazine.

The Leader of the Opposition has talked about the role of the Minister of National Revenue in dealing with interpretations. I ask him: What is the role of a responsible minister of national revenue? Does one simply ignore the individual who asks for clarification of an interpretation; does one ask him to make up his own mind and take it through the court process; or does one meet with these people, as I do on an almost daily basis, sometimes at the request of members on this side of the House, sometimes at the request of members who sit on the other side, and sometimes at the request of the individuals themselves? Surely this is the course which should be taken by a responsible minister of national revenue if he does not wish to get into some form of confrontation or appear arrogant by saying, "The words speak for themselves. You interpret them and make up your own mind."

I would agree with one of the approaches made by the Leader of the Opposition. He indicated that there is enough cynicism in the country to suggest that the Minister of National Revenue responded to pressure. I prefer to think that we looked at the merits of the case, that we took into account public opinion as expressed both in this House and outside that we issued a clarification, an interpretation. I submit this is, surely, a responsible role for the Minister of National Revenue to play. It is not a question of hiding in the bushes or of operating from a hole in the wall or a smoke-filled office, as I believe he suggested. I might say that I am non-smoker and there is no smoke-filled office out of which I operate. I believe the minister of national revenue has an obligation, indeed a responsibility, toward the taxpayer where there is some confusion or some further information required, or clarification of an interpretation. If a minister of national revenue is not prepared to do that, then I say, with respect, he is arrogant.

Mr. Fairweather: The minister has not yet answered my question.

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member asked how long these periodicals would be given to adjust themselves to the new situation. I am advised that if a magazine fulfils all the conditions of eligibility during the 1976 taxation year, it will have qualified as a Canadian magazine within the meaning of the act.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I might say I felt the speech of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) was important because of the questions he did not answer rather than the ones he did. I should like to put my speech in proper perspective in reference to motion No. 4. moved by the Liberal member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) and the amendment moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). This is the amendment to which we are addressing ourselves today and I would read one paragraph of it as follows:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of this act or regulations, a periodical shall be deemed to be a Canadian issue of a Canadian periodical if 75 per cent of its directors and ownership is Canadian and its editing and publication functions are controlled and conducted in Canada and not more than 40 per cent of its content, excluding advertisements, were first published in a single periodical outside of Canada.

It is content to which I want to direct my remarks. I want to congratulate the other Liberal member for making the amendment because as I understood it, just before she moved her amendment—and I listened very carefully to her remarks—she said she was really unhappy about whether the deal was 80 per cent, 75 per cent, 50 per cent, 40 per cent or only 1 per cent. She does not want that kind of censorship or that kind of control, particularly when control is to be exercised by the minister or the officials of the Department of National Revenue, who are always subject to change. Ministers are subject to many changes and, of course, people in the public service are subject to change. So the rules will change from time to time, and I can understand the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway moving her amendment as follows:

That motion numbered 4 be amended by striking out all the words in subclause (2) after the words "conducted in Canada."

● (1530)

Over the Christmas recess I picked up several periodicals wherein I was attacked by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner)—I am sorry he is not here this afternoon—for the speech that I made on second reading when I put the position pretty bluntly and meant to do so. Perhaps it is time to review what I said. I have listened to all the arguments, and they really boil down to a very simple formula. What the government is trying to do under the guise of a tax measure is to determine what I shall read, what members of the House shall read and what the Canadian people shall read. I feel very deeply about this.

Going back over history, some of us have lived during periods when dictatorships were set up which committed heinous crimes. If those countries had had freedom of the press, then those dictatorships would have been undermined instead of flourishing as they did and eventually bringing about the horrible Second World War. I said this in my second reading speech, and the Secretary of State took great exception to it:

I came here this afternoon because I am pretty concerned that by means of a tax measure we have brought censorship into this country.

My point is that over time the minister and his officials will be able to control content, which is a form of censorship. No one has satisfied me that that will not be so. I went on to say this:

One of the most fundamental freedoms of all is surely freedom of speech. From freedom of speech flows democracy; and freedom of the press, of course, follows from that. It might be a good idea for my hon. friend who says, "Oh, no" to look at chapter 44 of the Revised Statutes of Canada and read section 2 of the Canadian Bill of Rights, which crystallizes the common law not only of the Commonwealth but particularly the law that we have inherited in statute form through our constitution from the British system.

I maintained that if this bill was passed it would mean some form of censorship. I now want to refer to a case that is well known in my province. It was referred to, by the way, Mr. Speaker, in an article in the Globe and Mail on February 7 last. I know the rules of the House do not allow me to read an editorial, so let me paraphrase it. The editorial seems to be repeating what I said previously, putting a little more meat on the bones. According to the Globe and Mail, when you leave to the discretion of officials in a department or a minister what amounts to Canadian content, and then above all make exceptions of the kind alluded to so ably by my leader today, such as Reader's Digest and Time, then surely that is some kind of censorship. That is what the Globe and Mail says, and if the Globe and Mail supports my argument in this regard then I must be on sound ground.

Let me refer the House to the Alberta statutes case which came before the Supreme Court of Canada in 1938. Judgment was given by Chief Justice Duff and there was also an able judgment given by Justice Cannon. Basically, Mr. Speaker, what the Alberta government had tried to do under Aberhart was this. Aberhart was taken on by the daily and weekly newspapers which cartooned him to death. They painted him as a lumbering bear, and because they always thought he had a very good appetite they used to portray him eating five or six steaks at a time. He was criticized for practically everything he did. Aberhart was a leader who came out of the radical groups in western Canada at that time and who had threatened to take over the banks and mortgage companies. No paper supported him and the editorial writers in particular took after him. I cannot recall any other man in public life who was taken after by the media as badly as he was.

He therefore set to work with his advisers and drafted a bill that would protect all members of the legislature and those in other institutions who apparently supported his viewpoint. Under this bill, any attack made by a newspaper editorial or by the media would be referred to a board. It was a very prejudicial board, Mr. Speaker, because it was the Social Credit board who decided who could run and who could operate the government. The bill provided that if this board should find that there had been a scurrilous and unfair attack made on the government, that the facts had not been properly weighed and or had been misrepresented, then the board could suspend publication of the newspaper in question for two or three weeks and could subject it to other penalties. The matter came before the Supreme Court of Canada. My hon. friend for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) probably knows the name of it, but there were two questions in the case: the first was whether the matter fell within provincial jurisdiction; the second was whether the act could be passed at all as a means of censorship.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It has absolutely nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Perhaps the hon. member would listen to me for a moment, as I know he always likes to ask questions. I listened very intently not only to those on his side who support the government, but also to the very learned member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Ontario, and I know there are others in the back benches of the Liberal party who are no more happy about this legislation than I am. Whenever you get a division in the Liberal party, Mr. Speaker, the disease that strikes them must be pretty serious because they generally agree. Having dealt with the facts of the case, and after dealing with the essentials—traditional freedom of speech, freedom of the press and whether it was within the ambit of a provincial jurisdiction to pass an act that would be common to all Canadians, which would really put it under federal jurisdiction—the then chief justice said this:

The legislation now under consideration manifestly places in the hands of the chairman of the Social Credit Commission autocratic powers which, it may well be thought, could, if arbitrarily wielded, be employed to frustrate in Alberta these rights of the Crown and the people of Canada as a whole. We do not, however, find it necessary to express an opinion upon the concrete question whether or not this particular measure is invalid as exceeding the limits indicated above.

However, they found that the authority had been placed with the board. So far as Canadian content is concerned, it has been emphasized by many speakers, and cannot be overemphasized, that it is a very dangerous precedent to place this kind of power in the hands of public servants. We have seen the Minister of National Revenue (Mr.

Cullen) change his attitude toward Reader's Digest, using a different kind of discretion, one not spelled out by the law. The only protection that we have, whether in regard to freedom of speech, freedom of the press or any of the freedoms outlined in the Canadian Bill of Rights, is that afforded us by the law. It is only the law that protects us from autocratic government and authoritarianism. I say that as soon as discretion is handed to a public servant or to a minister, we are in trouble. As soon as we give discretion to officials to decide what constitutes Canadian content, we are letting them determine what we in Canada shall read.

Let me refer to what Mr. Justice Cannon said about the Alberta situation. I think it has a lot to do with this bill, if my hon. friend from Bruce-Grey will just give me a little time. Mr. Justice Cannon said:

● (1540)

The bill does not regulate the relations of the newspapers' owners with private individual members of the public, but deals exclusively with expressions of opinion by the newspapers concerning government policies and activities.

I want to emphasize that the kind of Canadian content decided on by the minister may be decided on the basis of political philosophy, or it may be the content emphasized by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) during a Christmas recess and therefore not subjected to the views of the other side. I do not want to see that happen, as a Canadian or as a member of parliament. The quotation continues:

The pith and substance of the bill is to regulate the press of Alberta from the viewpoint of public policy by preventing the public from being misled or deceived as to any policy or activity of the Social Credit government and by reducing any opposition to silence or bring upon it ridicule and public contempt.

I have not made this charge but it is one that concerns me. There are others who have suggested that this legislation may have been motivated by some people because of the influence of Maclean's magazine or the editors. I do not know whether that is true; but surely, as Canadians, we have and want the right to read these magazines, including Time and Reader's Digest. We do not want other people deciding what should be the content of these magazines. This is a very dangerous precedent. Wherever we have seen freedoms taken from people, the first rights that have been taken are the rights of the people to speak freely, that is, to speak their piece, to sing their piece or to print their piece. I continue reading the quotation:

I agree with the submission of the Attorney-General for Canada that this bill deals with the regulation of the press of Alberta, not from the viewpoint of private wrongs or civil injuries resulting from any alleged infringement or privation of civil rights which belongs to individuals, considered as individuals, but from the viewpoint of public wrongs or crimes, i.e., involving a violation of the public rights and duties to the whole community, considered as a community, in its social aggregate capacity.

It goes on to deal with exactly what I am thinking of this afternoon. Mr. Justice Cannon then stated:

It appears that in England, at first, criticism of any government policy was regarded as a crime involving severe penalties and punishable as such; but since the passing of Fox's Libel Act in 1792, the considerations now found in the above article of our Criminal Code that it is not criminal to point out errors in the government of the country and to urge their removal by lawful means have been admitted as a valid defence in a trial for libel.

So even until 1792 it was considered somewhat of a crime to criticize the government. We only have to look to the U.S.S.R. to see how many writers have been forced to leave that country and take up residence in countries in the western world because they wanted to challenge the government. We only have to consider the dictatorships of Hitler and Mussolini, or any other dictatorship for that matter, to see that the first thing they do is adopt a policy of censorship of the press. We all know what happens to anybody who criticizes the government of the U.S.S.R. today. We must be wary whenever this seed is planted, germinated and begins to flourish, because we know it will grow into a big tree, taking away our freedom of speech, our freedom to think as we like and our ability to read whatever we wish. That is why I am against this kind of censorship, particularly under the guise of a taxation law.

We believe that Canadians should benefit from taxation in respect of magazines which are printed here or elsewhere but contain advertising paid for by those periodicals—and I have never argued with that idea. However, if we are to have rules, under the guise of taxation, regulating what I shall read and what Canadian people generally shall read, then I think this smacks of some form of censorship and leads to a totalitarianism of the kind I shall oppose at all times. It might be of interest just to read what has been said about these freedoms by other people. William Allan White once said:

You say that freedom of utterance is not for time of stress, and I reply with the sad truth that only in time of stress is freedom of utterance in danger... Only when free utterance is suppressed is it needed, and when it is needed it is most vital to justice.

Let me read another line by Adlai Stevenson, who said:

The first principle of a free society is an untrammeled flow of words in an open forum.

William Allan White also wrote the following:

Put fear out of your heart. This nation will survive, this state will prosper, the orderly business of life will go forward if only men can speak in whatever way given them to utter what their hearts hold—by voice, by postcard, by letter, or by press. Reason never has failed men. Only force and oppression have made the wrecks in the world.

That is what you have to guard against. Let me now deal with something that concerns me greatly. I believe this bill was brought in under the guise of a tax bill. I believe the main principle is to control, what people read, and that seems to be a violation of the Bill of Rights. If you read these cases in respect of freedom of speech, you will find that they spell out very clearly what is a freedom. The bill in 1938 was declared by the judge to be ultra vires. These freedoms are spelled out pretty clearly and thoroughly in our Bill of Rights. I wonder if the minister cleared this particular bill with his legal officers; and if he has, can we accept the opinion of those officials of his department? Many times they have given the government advice and the courts have thrown out that advice and the case of the Crown. Our Canadian Bill of Rights states in part:

It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms,

Then it spells out some of those rights, which include freedom of speech, freedom of assembly and association and freedom of the press. The last one is a very important freedom. Surely it is a fundamental freedom for the press and the media to always keep the people informed of what is going on. Surely that is a check on the democratic process. In this way we keep the public informed of what their elected representatives are doing here, what the government is doing and what the public servants are doing. Only through a free media can we accomplish this.

I think it was the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who said she is always greatly concerned when people begin to tell us what we shall read, what we shall not read and whether it shall be 1 per cent, 20 per cent, 40 per cent, 50 per cent or 70 per cent Canadian content. After all, who makes the decision? The decision should be left to the freedom of the people. We should leave it to the freedom of the press, because we have enough protection in the rules of libel and slander.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall try to be brief. I maintain you cannot do indirectly what you cannot do directly. This press control is being attempted under the guise of narrow nationalism. Nationalism is of great benefit if it is used in the right way, but we have seen what uncontrolled nationalism has done in dictatorships. This control of the press is being done under the guise of fair taxation law. We have this control of content, and that is where the government and I part. Why should a few bureaucrats decide what we should read and what we should know? The law must be clear and free of ambiguity, and known to be free by all of us. That great parliamentarian, Mackenzie King, said that the law should be known to all Canadians as they sit, as they walk and even as they go to bed to sleep.

This law leaves a discretion with the minister. This discretion relates to the amount of Canadian content, and we all know the difference of treatment in respect of Time and Reader's Digest. In this way, I suggest that the discrimination is in fact ambiguous in the law. This is rule by the people, and not rule by the law. Any time you have rule by the people, and not rule by the law, you must look out because our freedoms are in sorry shape. If you give this government the power over the press and the power to be more authoritarian than even this government has asked for, then God help us in Canada.

To my mind the Bill of Rights has been breached. This is no tax measure. It is a measure to control content and what the public will read. We should fight this measure to the end. I am not frightened of the word "filibuster". Many people fear that word because filibuster is something which has been used in this country and in every parliamentary system. There comes a time when freedom is at stake, and at such a time, any tool that parliament can use to kill a bill should be used; and this is a bill which should be killed.

While you and I, Mr. Speaker, and while members of parliament and the people of Canada have lips and voices with which to sing and speak, are able to refer to modern technology, and have hands with which to write, why should any power block our right to sing, to say what we think and to record and to print? In respect of this measure, I say God help us if this is the role the government has chosen to control what people will read, record, say and sing in Canada.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, first may I say it is an unusual pleasure for me to be supporting an amendment set down by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). At the same time, I should like to say how pleased I am to see so many Liberal members from our native province in the House today. During the question period I noticed there was a very good turn-out. I am puzzled whether they are here to support the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway or because they wish to avoid the visit of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to the province of British Columbia.

I am pleased to support this amendment. On November 17 last I had a few words to say concerning the position taken then by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I am sorry if I questioned her sincerity at that time, because it is now obvious, even to those of us with a most partisan outlook—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Indian and Northern Development (Mrs. Campagnolo).

Mrs. Campagnolo: Mr. Speaker, I feel I should rise on a question of privilege, because I am here for neither reason the hon. member states but to do my duty to my constituents. I take issue with him for saying we are here under duress.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I am astonished at such sensitivity. I never dreamed I would witness it on the part of the hon. member for Skeena (Mrs. Campagnolo). Apparently she thought I had used the word "duress". I do not know what word I used which would lead her to make that assumption. I do not think she would ever come here under duress. Her attendance here is regular. I repeat that I am pleased to see so many members here from British Columbia. There is probably an equal number of Liberals here and in British Columbia at the present time.

I particularly enjoyed the speech made on Thursday night by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik). It is very refreshing to hear such independent speeches from members on the opposite side. I also appreciated his reference to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, because she brought to the subject her knowledge and background as a journalist. This was very refreshing in this debate which seems to be one largely conducted by lawyers and politicians, not too many of whom have an intimate knowledge of the workings of journalism in Canada today.

The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) has come out of this not looking too well. Quite recently he joined the cabinet with the best wishes of the opposition. We appreciated him very much as parliamentary secretary to the former minister of finance. I particularly recall the stalwart defence he put up for the minister's policies during the last budget debate and during the proceedings on the bills which flowed from that budget. He went to the job with the very best wishes of the opposition, but unfortunately he has found himself caught in some kind of an impasse with the cabinet, I presume, in which he has been required to back track on issue after issue. I am sorry he got off to such a bad start.

Of course, if one wishes to join what was recently described in Europe as the Government of Canada being a ship of fools commanded by Captain Kangarroo, then one must expect to look like a fool himself. When this bill was first brought in by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulker) it was suggested that 50 per cent would be what they were looking for in the way of Canadian content. Then it was 60 per cent, and later 80 per cent. At one time it appeared it would go to whatever extent necessary to ensure that Time magazine did not publish in Canada. These are not the reasons which should be behind an attempt to eliminate Time magazine from Canada. The reasons should be economic or national pride, and not merely to ensure that Canadians do not read Time magazine.

I hate to think what we would read if we did not read Time magazine. I refer to the general public of Canada. Up until recently, Time magazine has provided us with the type of writing which Canadians read. Many people may prefer to obtain their world news from other magazines, but the average Canadian prefers the conciseness of Time magazine. I like the Economist, but usually it arrives quite a while after world events have happened. While it might be authoritative and better researched, it arrives late. Not everybody reads such a magazine, in any event.

I should like to speak for a few moments about the unknown regulation which will be at the whim of the Minister of National Revenue concerning what will be Canadian content and how much of it there must be. I shall refer to this a little later and show a similarity to another well known organization. This will show the effect what has gone on here has had on parliament. When we were drawing up laws to govern the publication of two American magazines in Canada, suddenly we walked into this House and were informed by a press release from Reader's Digest that we could pack it up and go away, or do something else, because they had talked to the officials in the Department of National Revenue and the problem no longer existed. This certainly downgrades Parliament to an extent which I consider reprehensible.

I should like to read an excerpt from Hansard which described the position I took at that time. I refer to Hansard of November 17, 1975. What I was saying at that time was in conjunction with a letter sent out by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, the sponsor of the amendment. I am referring to page 9130 of Hansard. This letter stated:

> There has been an attempt by certain people—in some cases misinformed and in others deliberate distortion—to convince the public that Reader's Digest is subsidized by the government. This is not so. It is simply a case of allowing free choice of advertisers in Canada by which to sell a product.

The hon. member went on in the letter to say:

> I also prefer Time over Newsweek, U.S. News and World Report, etc., for the same reason; Time provides a good, concise, objective record of international news along with well written, depth-packed reports of Canadian interest. Personally, as a writer, I fear the action to eliminate a market for writers and allied industries, especially beginners in this field. If Reader's Digest closes out in Canada, this could eliminate jobs in Vancouver and Montreal, lose $5.2 million in salaries for 450 Canadian employees (including $700,000 in fringe benefits and $600,000 in profit sharing); $22 million in trade with Canadian suppliers; $1.6 million in taxes; $3 million in first class postage (not counting the magazine distribution itself). The company has $8 million invested in office, printing presses and other capital equipment in Canada.

● (1600)

If we do not accept this amendment, we will be at the mercy and the whim of the Minister of National Revenue, not this month or next month but every month in the future. I think it is a most unsatisfactory situation to try to conduct business under such regulations. Let us look at the alternative which has been sponsored indirectly by the government, that is, Maclean's magazine. First, I should like to say that I have read Maclean's all my life. I have never lived in a home without Maclean's. I was raised on the western prairies where we had certain basic precepts. We cheered for the Toronto Maple Leafs, we voted for the west in the Grey cup, we voted Conservative, and we read Maclean's magazine—not necessarily in that order. Sometimes, particularly of late, it has become more and more difficult to read Maclean's magazine. I should like to say that this bill is sometimes known around Canada as the Maclean-Hunter monopoly bill. It seems to me to have a political bias.

I looked over the last issue of Maclean's rather carefully. On the cover we have a picture of the Prime Minister with the words underneath reading "Our man in Havana". Certainly they have every right to refer to him as "Our man" if they get this bill through without any amendments. On page 1 the Progressive Conservatives are mentioned under the title "Bloody Sunday", where reference is made to our leadership election in two weeks. If we look for world news in this magazine, we will not get much if we do not continue to get Time magazine. On page 14 we read "All the muck that is fit to rake: the truth hurts more when it comes too late"—all about the love life of John F. Kennedy. On page 17 in the preview we have pictures of two Americans and one Canadian. On page 19 there is a cartoon of the Prime Minister. On page 20 there is a picture of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). On page 22 they even it up by bringing in the Progressive Conservatives in a derogatory article on Alberta.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. McKinnon: On page 23 they have two pictures of the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: "Our man" in Maclean's.

Mr. McKinnon: On page 30 there is an article on Rich Little which may be considered as Canadian content. I do not know, because he has been away for a quite a while and is doing well in the United States. On page 34 we have the article I mentioned, entitled "Bloody Sunday", about the Conservative leadership convention. Then we come to page 41 where we find world news. And this is to replace Time magazine! There are only three pages in this periodical dealing with world news. The first one is entitled "The World—Mr. MacEachen goes to Paris . . . and Cairo . . . and Tel Aviv", and there is a very large picture of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen) seated on a camel. I do not know which one looks more uncomfortable and embarrassed.

The world news on the next page refers to quintuplets being born in Holland, again, I suppose, to educate Canadians. Then we have a derogatory article on the CIA in Washington which has been printed in one form or another dozens of times. On the next page we read about Italy in a very interesting article which says that the communists are projecting a moderate and thoughtful approach to Italy's many problems. It states:

> . . . the communists have seen their portion of the popular vote increase steadily in every election since 1948, the year after they were thrown out of power.

This is rather peculiar, because the elected people in Italy in the period between 1946 and 1948 were not elected in the way we know it but were elected to a constituent assembly. When the constituent assembly drew up the regulations for the next vote, the communists were into a minority and the majority was given to the Christian Democrats. Then we come to page 46 where, I must confess, I have found an author that I certainly enjoy, namely, John Robertson who seems to me to be a superb writer on sports. I am glad to see that he is included in Maclean's if we have to read it in lieu of some other magazine which we may prefer to read. There is a page on business which contains an article headed "How big oil provides for its friends in high places", and I see pictures of Senators Godfrey and Connolly under which is written "It's great to be a Liberal in the internal combustion age".

From what I have said about Maclean's magazine it is not difficult to see why there is concern about that magazine replacing Times magazine and giving Canadians an opportunity to find out what is going on in the world. This is borne out by the Victoria Times, a newspaper on the west coast which had the dubious honour of being declared one of the only two English speaking newspapers which supported the Liberals in the last election. An article in the newspaper states:

> If the federal government hadn't already made a martyr out of Time magazine with its clumsy Canadian content rules and bull-headed indifference to all arguments on the crucial issue at stake . . .surely it has convinced any doubters with its curious decision now to exempt the Reader's Digest.

It goes on to deplore the government getting into the sticky grey area of defining what is and what is not Canadian content. In conclusion, I should like to recommend to anyone who likes reading George Orwell—which I do—his book "1984" in which he points out that in 1984 the government will have only four departments, one of which will be the ministry of truth, which exactly fits the description of the Department of the Secretary of State. I should like to quote a few lines from this book on the ministry of truth. They read:

> —the ministry of truth, whose primary job was not to reconstruct the past but to supply the citizens of Oceana with newspapers, films, text books, telescreen programmes, plays, novels—with every conceivable kind of information, instruction, or entertainment, from a statute to a slogan, from a lyric poem to a biological treatise, and from a child's spelling-book to a Newspeak dictionary.

This sounds exactly like the Department of the Secretary of State. It goes on:

> And the ministry had not only to supply the multifarious needs of the party, but also to repeat the whole operation at a lower level for the benefit of the proletariat. There was a whole chain of separate departments dealing with proletarian literature—

That is the CBC

> —music, drama, and entertainment generally. Here were produced rubbishy newspapers containing almost nothing except sport, crime, and astrology, sensational five-cent novelettes, films oozing with sex, and sentimental songs which were composed entirely by mechanical means on a special kind of kaleidoscope known as a verificator.

I do not know where the Secretary of State thinks he is going—he was referred to as an school teacher by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway—but we will be getting closer to "1984" if this bill is allowed to pass. I recommend highly to the House that it seriously consider the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and either support it or, better yet, throw out the whole bill.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to be able to participate once more in this debate and to commend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) on her amendment, which I support. It is now becoming quite clear that Bill C-58 is nothing but a device for getting rid of the Canadian edition of Time magazine. While I am pleased, as are most people in Canada, that Reader's Digest will continue to publish its Canadian edition, I think the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has proved beyond the shadow of a doubt that he and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) are charged with shutting down Time magazine.

I am not sure how successful they will be and whether any deals are involved. I endeavoured to get information from officials at Reader's Digest, but they were very reticent. When the press release was issued by Reader's Digest stating that they were willing to live with the new rules and would continue to publish, it came as a bombshell to most of us with the exception of the Minister of National Revenue. I have no idea what kind of statements or deals were made. I give the Minister of National Revenue credit for listening, reading, or at least being informed of the speeches during this debate in defence of Reader's Digest and Time magazine. There has been a great deal of comment in the media, particularly the press, and as a result of all this the minister has made some changes. The leader of my party made some rather strong comments this afternoon but, Mr. Speaker, I say more power to the minister for going as far as he has.

When it comes to playing with figures such as this 80-20 deal, I think many of us are worried about the power which lies with the mandarins: that is why the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway deserves consideration. There is no doubt that Reader's Digest was coaxed a little, but in the end they made the decision. What the government has done to Reader's Digest can, and will, happen again in Canada. I do not believe, and I do not think anyone else believes, that the government would go to all this trouble to scuttle Time magazine, to shove Reader's Digest into line, and then let the matter lie. There is a lot of discretionary power in the hands of the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Revenue. After their performances in this House in regard to this bill, I wonder how much either of them can be trusted to exercise discretion in the use of this awesome power.

No one in this House, and very few people in the country, will believe that Bill C-58 was designed to protect Canadian magazines from foreign competition. It has been established that competition from Time and Reader's Digest has had no effect at all on the other magazines. We know that those advertisers who will lose out on their Time magazine audience will certainly not go to Saturday Night or Maclean's magazine.

Although I cannot go along with Bill C-58 because it seeks to introduce government censorship of the media and government intervention in the area of editorial content, I have to go along with the amendment that seeks to lower the requirement for material to "not substantially the same". I know that this bill will pass even though there is a great deal of resentment in the government benches against it, so I have to be willing to take half a loaf. Even if we lowered the requirement to 50-50 it would still amount to substantial government interference and government censorship of the press, and I do not think many of us are interested in seeing that happen.

We know from experience with censorship in other countries that censorship does not promote a higher level of professionalism. Indeed, it has the opposite effect; it promotes mediocrity. Writers and editors who cannot find their niche in a free media market will favour censorship because that would be the level at which the media would be pitched. Every great writer who has emerged from the controlled press behind the iron curtain is not considered great on the basis of literary merit. Those who have become best sellers on this continent have become so because they have written so tellingly against the system in which they have had to work. The latest is Zakharof. I wonder if the Secretary of State is trying to establish an environment for writers along the lines of those in the Soviet Union and other iron curtain countries.

I have been checking press reports, as I know other hon. members have. The hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) said on CFCF radio on February 4:

I don't think it achieves the objective of assisting our publications and I am going to vote against the bill in any event. But, I am very concerned that at least we have accommodated one of my concerns in connection with republication operations.

The Secretary of State was interviewed by CBC radio the same day, and he said:

Well, because Reader's Digest took a decision yesterday, a very important decision to conform to the law. I have always said that that was an option of both Time and Reader's Digest and any other magazine affected that they could either conform to the law, in other words, operate under the '65 law as all Canadian magazines are obliged to do or send in their foreign edition. Now Time has not decided to do that and I understand Time's difficulties but Reader's Digest has. Now, we are not making any special consideration giving a special break to Reader's Digest. They decided to conform to the law.

The commentator questioned the minister further on the 75 per cent ownership question. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that we all agree 75 per cent ownership is in order and we are in favour of it. The minister made the following statement with regard to Time:

That is something that really is in the hands of Mr. Cullen. But, as I understand it, it would probably be interpreted like most tax laws are.

I was delighted to hear the minister state today that as long as a magazine conforms to the law any time up to December 31, 1976, it will be considered to have become Canadian. He cited the example that if you get married on December 29, you are considered to have been married for that entire calendar year for tax purposes. I should like to refer, also, to the comments of Gordon Sinclair who is, I believe, the son of that very eminent writer and news commentator on CFRB whom a great many people in Ontario listen to at every opportunity. On CFCF radio on February 4, Gordon Sinclair stated:

For months I have been saying and believing that the legislation being passed in Ottawa requiring that publications be 80 per cent Canadian content in order to be considered Canadian was discriminatory and immoral and was being rammed through parliament for one reason only, to get rid of the Canadian edition of Time magazine. By the way, if the rule was scrupulously enforced, they might get rid of most Canadian newspapers as well.

An hon. Member: Not a bad idea.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, I think many hon. members would agree that outside of the advertising, our daily papers do not carry Canadian news so much as news that is worldwide, particularly that concerned with our neighbour to the south, and this is probably as it should be. Gordon Sinclair continued:

● (1620)

The ruling stinks. It is trickery and the government should not play tricks.

Mike Donegan of CFCF-TV, said on February 4:

—suddenly Reader's Digest is off the hook. After months of teeth-gnashing, breast-pounding and nationalistic flagwaving, the Trudeau government has decided that Canadian citizenship after all can be conferred on to Reader's Digest because it is not a magazine at all, it's a digest. It is likely not wise for us now to go into all the tortured reasoning that has led to the latest of this pretzelled situation, but the upshot is that the Canadian edition of Reader's Digest is now in and the Canadian edition of Time magazine is now out, or is it? Although federal government officials are stressing the the Reader's Digest compromise cannot be extended to Time Canada, the Time Canada publisher Steven Leroux apparently feels that the rope around this neck is somewhat loosened. He is telling newsmen that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, although officially Ottawa is insisting that it is not. Ottawa should do us all a big favour by scrapping this nonsense entirely and let Reader's Digest and Time Canada go about their business.

Ian McKenty, of station CJAD; also said on February 4:

As you know, the Trudeau government has been trying to boot the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest out of Canada, and now the government has backed down on Reader's Digest. That's good news for the hundreds of Reader's Digest employees in Montreal and is also good news for anybody who values the free press in this country. The government should now back down on the Canadian edition of Time. The government should withdraw Bill C-58 and its own interpretation of Canadian content. The real problem here is the Canadian content rule. It's called the 80 per cent rule—

The new rule, for the minister has assumed full responsibility, is known as the Cullen rule. Mr. McKenty went on to say:

—More than 80 per cent of the contents of the Canadian periodical must be material which has not appeared in . . . prior issues of foreign publications; and I should add here that "foreign publication" refers to one with which the Canadian periodical has a continuing arrangement. Now this so-called Cullen rule gets right down to the arrangement and size of photographs on a page. Suppose a photograph appears in the Japan publication, a similar view of the same photograph then appears in the Canadian magazine. It will not be considered Canadian content. But here is the rub—who decides what is Canadian content and what is not? I expect it's the boys in the Revenue Department in Ottawa. They are the same gang who decides for all of us what is a dirty—

Or pornographic

—book and what isn't a dirty book.

Mr. Robert Stanfield said this legislation is not acceptable to anyone who still believes in the fundamental principles of a free democracy. Mr. Stanfield is right. The government should withdraw Bill C-58 and review its 80 per cent content rule.

I support the subamendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. If Canadians want Maclean's, they will have to buy it. We do not need the Liberal government ramming it down our throats. The Montreal Star said much the same in an editorial on January 29:

The federal government's Bill C-58 has one thing in common with Bill 22 of the Quebec government.

Each of these laws is controversial. I continue:

Each is framed in ambiguity and therefore open to whimsical or dangerous interpretation by bureaucrats—

The editorial further says that one official interpretation so far is that "substantially the same as" means that 80 per cent of the contents must be reported, edited, viewed and otherwise originated by Canadians. As I said earlier, this means that most Canadian newspapers or periodicals at one time or other will not, under this definition, be considered as Canadian. The Montreal Star says:

What kind of future interpretation will be delivered by bureaucrats who for purposes of their own or the government that hires them decide that specific Canadian newspapers aren't friendly and therefore must cease publication because they do not qualify? Bill C-58 has reached its present stage without benefit of full cabinet debate. It is ill-conceived in the form in which it now appears. It is a threat to civil liberties. It is, moreover, politically dangerous for a Trudeau administration which has already become enmeshed in a distasteful controversy over a possible increase in government intervention in business affairs and habits of Canadians. There can be no excuse for adding to the conflict by inviting the kind of bureaucratic meddling that might violate fundamental democratic values. Bill C-58 has no reason for passage.

As another contributor to a certain Toronto magazine says, if the Liberal government passes Bill C-58 in its present form, "it will be the last editorial viewpoint in this magazine that will be written and published free of government editorial control." That is terrible.

Mr. Symes: The hon. member has not considered certain aspects.

Mr. Darling: The hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) is commenting. He thinks that anything to do with free enterprise is distasteful, as do many members on my left. Those hon. members want more government ownership, more government intervention, more government control: that is their goal.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And jobs for the boys.

Mr. Darling: I suggest that the majority of the members of this House and the vast majority of Canadians are not ready for that kind of control.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, having listened to many hon. members speaking in this House, my admiration has been strengthened for government supporters who had the courage of their convictions and spoke as representatives of those who voted them into parliament. They clearly outlined their reasons for opposing this bill even though most of their backbench colleagues support the government, disregard the effect of Bill C-58 on the majority of Canadians and forget that there was little, if any, consultation between the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and their counterparts south of the border.

Canadians ought to remember that we have a good neighbour south of the border. If we continue treating our neighbours in this manner, there is no guarantee they will remain good neighbours. Anti-Americanism is popular in Canada these days; but let me impress on the House that one need not be anti-American in order to be pro-Canadian. There is room for both countries on this continent. As one country grows, so will the other: we must remember this. If we are to become strong as a country, our neighbour south of the border must also be strong.

Have the Minister of National Revenue and the Secretary of State considered what our Canadian publications would lose if our good neighbour to the south retaliated in like manner? How much would our publishing industry lose if it no longer carried glossy advertisements of products made south of the border? Our advertising arrangements should be reciprocal. We all understand that the United States is bigger than this country: it has ten times our population and is ten times as strong. Let us remember that almost every publication sold in Canada carries advertisements of United States products and services to do with liquor, cigarettes, real estate, vacation spots, cosmetics and countless everyday consumer products.

Even the Canadian Periodical Publishers' Association must be aware of that fact, but perhaps it, too, can afford to ignore the individual's welfare and point of view, as the Secretary of State did with regard to other representations made to the House committee. That association seems to be the sole interest, vigorously defended by the Secretary of State. That is strange, yet interesting, because this government is well schooled in overlooking suggestions, submissions, personal petitions and pleas by Canadians from every area of our land, regardless of the number. I guess that can only be construed as another interpretation: this government and its ministers find an interpretation to suit their objective, turning a deaf ear, flaunting authority and discounting all intelligent reasoning emanating from outside their own sanctum. Unfortunately, power begets power. I do not think it would be at all far-fetched to say that nothing destroys democrary as rapidly as power and the greed for more power.

This legislation, if left unamended and if no consideration is given to this amendment, will discriminate in favour of publications which concentrate on events within this country as against those which report extensively on international affairs. Most Canadians read daily or weekly newspapers in which all important Canadian news is printed, without restriction, interpretation or discrimination. Magazines or periodicals which contain information and educational or other specific informative material may no longer be permitted to serve Canadians as a result of the decision of the Secretary of State. While giving lip service, has the government given enough thought to publications such as MD of Canada which provides an important and necessary service to our physicians? The entire content of this medical journal is valuable information. It does not offer competition to any other journal or magazine in this country; it is published, printed and edited in Canada—yet Bill C-58 would eliminate it.

Did the Secretary of State also decide to disregard the 1,000 Canadian writers because he was so bent on hearing only the periodicals' association? What has happened to the right of the individual? I am sure many of those writers are just as professional as members of the association in question—perhaps more so than the sponsors of this arbitrary piece of legislation—and perhaps could do much more to put Canada on the world map in a more meaningful and brotherly manner. Maybe it would be wise for the respective ministers and government supporters to read the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) once again. I am as pro-Canadian as anyone, but before you have a good neighbour, you first have to learn how to be one, and the policy of this government certainly lacks the premise of being a good neighbour as far as relationships exists with the United States.

Did members of the NDP realize what they were doing when they spoke in support of the government on this bill? Does the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), for instance, want to become part of this about-face of the Minister of National Revenue and the narrow and biased outlook of the Secretary of State? Did not the constituents of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) express their feelings about this biased legislation? Are they not "men of the cloth" to whom Canadians look for justice at every level? I believe that if they reconsider their stand, especially when government MPs have, they will have the courage to stand up for what is right, rather than to be led around by the nose. How can NDP members, or any member in this House, respect ministers in their individual interpretations and single-minded decisions?

We have heard about the Cullen rule. If this minister does not change his stand, perhaps we will hear about the Cullen funeral. There is no reason why he has to be tagged with this legislation. It was handed to him by his predecessor. If he wishes properly to represent those who elected him and all other Canadians, he will have to take another look at this question. We must ask ourselves whether we want government by interpretation rather than by statute. Government supporters who are supporting the two ministers in this legislation should recognize that these ministers may not hold their positions for very long. Perhaps there will be a new government. I hope so. If that happens, there will be two new ministers. Unless changed, this legislation will be in place and open to interpretation. Therefore, if this legislation passes it will be a great disservice to the Canadian people and the freedom that has been given to us by those who went before. We should be careful about giving away that freedom to the interpretation of ministers.

This bill has gone beyond a simple income tax measure. Reader's Digest can perhaps continue to publish within Canada, and the future of Time is not yet known—so how many Canadian publications will actually reap benefits from this measure as far as income is concerned? We know the facts. The figures have been given to this House. It is within 2 per cent or 3 per cent of the amount used for advertising that is put into magazine advertisements. This legislation will surely not change the amount that much. The inherent danger in Bill C-58, and I would think that every democratic individual would realize this, is the fact that the government is interfering in what is to be published, namely, the printed word. Perhaps the next step will be infringement of our freedom to worship. Economic freedom in this country has already been implicated because of government restrictions.

How can any conscientious MP of any party profess to be concerned about our veterans, our former prisoners of war, senior citizens' well-being, our prisons and their inmates, and child care—to name a few—and yet defend a measure which takes away one of our basic freedoms by interpretation? The printed word, after all, is a form of freedom of speech. Not many countries in this world have the opportunity of exercising that freedom. We should certainly do it at every opportunity. We must make sure that freedom of speech is protected in order to maintain a degree of stability.

I feel sure that every MP who has the courage and integrity to think for himself will realize he cannot support this bill. Members opposite have been very active in their support of the O'Leary commission recommendations concerning Canadian periodicals, but it was very noticeable that their support did not mention one very significant fact. At no time did the O'Leary report suggest that government should become involved in the interpretation of what Canadians should or should not read. It should be left up to Canadians. They are intelligent people. If they do not like what they see, they do not buy it. However, they cannot read what is not printed. When the Minister of National Revenue or the Secretary of State interferes with what is to be printed, there is created an element of political bias. It is an infringement on the rights of the individual.

There is no reason why we should allow this bill to pass. I hope there are enough members on all sides who will stand up and be heard on this very crucial issue, because once in place it will be very difficult to change. Let me emphasize that that which is put in place should be put in place by statute, not by interpretation. Because of the disagreement in the course of second reading, committee stage and report stage, there is a great variance in opinion. The government has no right to decide what should be available for reading or what can or cannot be printed in this country.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it has become apparent from what one reads and hears in the media of this country that journalists in Canada, newpapers in Canada and most thinking Canadians, have come to realize as this debate has gone on the danger of this bill with its so-called Cullen rule and its principle of government by interpretation rather than government by statute. What the government has proposed, and what it persists in doing by refusing to reconsider its position, by setting on its own embarrassment a greater value than the principle upon which a free society and free democracy is established, is in point of fact violating everything we have ever been taught about responsible government, in the parliamentary sense, acting through our parliamentary institutions.

What the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) has done and, by his speech, will do in the future is to amend a statute of parliament by a decree outside the statute, a decree made to suit the convenience of the government. Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on Friday, and speakers in this debate today, have made it clear that we are not prepared to let this pass. We are prepared to use every available parliamentary means to ensure, to the extent we possibly can, that we will not allow this to happen. That is why the members who spoke on Friday, and those who spoke on Thursday on amendments to this bill from the government side and who put their partisanship aside and spoke in terms of their conviction—all of them admirable speeches and all well-researched—brought out the points which were separating them from their party, that were separating their positions of principle from a position lacking in principle on the part of their party. I sat in wonder and in admiration and heard them out. I think that these members who have thus far spoken with respect to this bill—and all of them spoke under great strain—are the unsung heroes of this debate. I join with colleagues on all sides of the House in congratulating them for their courage.

That is what has been happening. The Leader of the Opposition on Friday, and again today put the proposition very carefully. I quote from his speech on page 10728 of Hansard for February 6, 1976:

> Earlier in the week I asked the Secretary of State if he could honestly say that "substantially the same" means the same as "80 per cent the same." I do not know how anyone can argue that such expressions come within the normal use of the English language. How can anyone argue that the interpretation given those words approaches their normal meaning? The interpretation is a complete distortion of the three words "substantially the same". How can one say something must be 20 per cent the same, or 80 per cent different? In other words, the government is changing the statute.

That is the issue. That is, aside from the main objective, not a really bad objective when you look back on the debate and the purpose of Bill C-58 which has now become lost in the shuffling which has gone on. The real issue is the failure to act directly or honestly by coming to parliament with an amendment to the statute. Instead, the government has relied on a procedure which is merely justice depending upon the length of the chancellor's foot, depending upon the whim of the minister, depending upon the clout of the minister within the cabinet and his position from time to time, whoever he might be.

Mr. Speaker, I would not trust my own party with those powers and I'll be damned if I will trust this government with them! It is important that we not succumb, in this House or anywhere else, to the easy compromise which would be to say, "All our prayers have been answered; all our mail has been answered: we can now send out the press release to all the people who wrote to us about Reader's Digest and say Reader's Digest has been saved." Of course, there is no guarantee of that, if we understood what the minister said this afternoon. But that would be the easy way. It would also be the unprincipled way, because it is precisely why that decision was taken.

Public criticism over Reader's Digest could be dampened and turned away, it could be set aside, and every loyal little Grit could send out a statement that Reader's Digest had been saved. Well, I do not think it is sure that Reader's Digest has been saved. I would be delighted to see it happen, but not at the expense of what is the right and duty of the government in a parliamentary system which is to come before parliament with the changes to its legislation, not with the back-room tinkering which has gone on. I'll wager that some of that back-room is the caucus room of the Liberal party.

Part of it is the difficulty which beset the Minister of National Revenue. Part of it is the problem which overtook the cabinet the moment they departed from principle. Part of the problem is—as Geoffrey Stevens pointed out in his column last week—moving from blunder to blunder in terms of this legislation. I do not believe every backbencher on the government side is a tool of the government. I do not believe they are ciphers. I believe there are more members like the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) and the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) who spoke in this debate. They spoke with courage. But the principle is a clear one.

No member of this parliament representing, as we do, 125,000 people should lie down and tolerate this backroom tinkering, this compromising in an unprincipled way with legislation which may have been founded in the right direction. No member of parliament who respects his position should let it go by. I am very happy to stand with the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and with others who have spoken in this debate and say that what we are witnessing here is a dark day for parliamentary democracy. If the good word "compromise" is to be derogated in this kind of unprincipled way, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition will do all that they can to prevent it.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) said that the government is changing the law outside the statute. He said we are being governed now by interpretation of a statute by a government whose attitude may change. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) spoke of the danger that this action could pose to other forms of the media such as newspapers. We are dealing with a very serious matter. I hope all members of the House will avail themselves of the opportunity of putting in their two-cents' worth on this legislation, even those members of the House who are prepared to take a nationalistic view of Bill C-58 and those who are prepared to say that Time and Reader's Digest ought to have no privileges whatever in Canada. Even those members ought not to sit back silent while this right of a free people to debate legislative change is being trampled by a government that is doing by regulation what it does not have the guts to do by statute.

That is the issue here, Mr. Speaker. All members of the House who feel strongly about the matter should ask themselves this question: Do we honestly approve, as members of a free parliament, of the government doing an end-run around parliament and taking unto itself the unprincipled use of regulations? Having put itself into a discriminatory position first of all in regard to both Time and Reader's Digest, considering those two entities together, by virtue of this interpretation, it is now taking a position against Time magazine only. Whether we are talking about Time at about Reader's Digest, if we are to believe the government, Mr. Speaker, we are still talking about revenue of which Canadian publications will be deprived. Althouth I have difficulty believing the government, I have no difficulty in seeing that not only is this unprincipled in terms of administrative law and parliamentary practice, but it is equally a kind of vendetta against Time magazine. I would commend to members of the House an editorial that appeared in today's Montreal Gazette written by Christopher Young, former editor of the Ottawa Citizen. He had this to say:

> The great Canadian magazine policy is now hardly more than a vendetta against Time. Or perhaps, to give it a positive framework, the magazine bill is reduced to that ancient national policy, protection of infant industry.
> The "infant" in this case is Maclean's now ironically calling itself by the Time-coined name "newsmagazine".

If that is the object of this legislation—and it will be the result of this unprincipled move by the government, and I hope by fewer than a majority of the members of the House—then all of us will be party to an act which will be discriminatory against one magazine that we have accepted in favour of another, on the narrow ground that it happens to be Canadian. As I say, Mr. Speaker, I commend this article to all members of the House as one that examines the real purpose of this legislation. It is written by a well known journalist, a man of the highest repute who is as much concerned about the fate of the publishing industry in this country as any member of the House.

This is a bad discriminatory practice that the government asks the House to approve. I, for one, am not prepared to stand by and allow this to happen and I know there are others in the House who are not. I am satisfied that before this debate is over the government will rue the day it ever decided to tinker in the backroom with principles that affect and which ought to govern a parliamentary democracy.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-58 to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we have had the great privilege of listening to a first-rate speech by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker)—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baldwin: —which was emotional but reasonable, which was on a high level yet based on the law. It was the kind of speech that I hope will have great appeal to hon. members opposite, fresh from their weekend caucus at which they dealt with the very serious problems they are now facing. I was not privileged to be at that caucus, Mr. Speaker, but I can imagine Your Honour was there. There is no doubt at all in my mind that among the issues they discussed was this very bill.

Mr. Lalonde: Wrong again.

Mr. Baldwin: If I am wrong, let one of the members opposite stand up when I am finished and make a speech about what exactly is the approach of his party's caucus.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You fellows should come clean.

Mr. Baldwin: As they feel their world trembling about them, getting close to the last days of Pompeii, I would have thought they would have seized the first opportunity to make a speech either in defence of the bill and the strange and tortured actions of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), or they would stand up, if they had the courage to do so—as my hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton said—and challenge the bill and the principles behind it.

I have not spoken on this bill before, though I did ask the Minister of National Revenue some questions about it. I did not get the answers I sought; they did not deal strictly with the issue I raised. Today the minister spoke, but failed to deal with what I consider to be a very important although possibly a collateral issue of the bill and the principle involved.

I asked the Minister of National Revenue why, if the government did not want to legislate the terms under which certain periodicals would either be or would not be allowed to be published in Canada and receive the tax benefits which heretofore have been received by Time and Reader's Digest, it did not at least use the opportunity provided under section 221 of the Income Tax Act and put this in the form of regulation. If the government did not want to put this in the form of legislation, as it did in the 1965 act, then why did it not put it in the form of regulation? A regulation, to those of us who labour in the vineyards of public life, is not as effective as legislation because we can debate legislation in the House, propose amendments to the matter when it goes to the committee, and perhaps amend it when it comes back at the report stage. Of course, legislation is the ideal way, or the best approach. However, if the government does not want to legislate, or does not dare to do so, then why, in the name of heaven, does it not use the opportunity provided under section 221 of the Income Tax Act to do this by regulation?

A regulation becomes a statutory instrument and is then subject to some review by the scrutiny committee established under the Statutory Instruments Act. We then have an opportunity to examine and consider the regulations and then, if necessary, report to the House. In this day and age, when governments—and this government in particular—are abrogating to themselves more and more power to deal with the affairs of the people of this country secretly and by decree, it becomes necessary that some of these things at least come out in the open.

As I recall the minister's statement the other day, he said he had received the legal opinion that he was not able to do this by regulation. This is an extraordinary thing. When we have tried to find out in the statutory instruments committee why certain decrees and regulations are not allowed to be brought before that committee for scrutiny, we have been told a legal opinion has been given that these were not regulations and therefore were not to be brought before the committee. I am glad to see the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) in attendance here. He was chairman of that very good committee.

An hon. Member: A very good chairman, too.

Mr. Baldwin: He was a very good chairman of that very good committee with many very good members who sent back a very good report, something that we do not get too often these days. That report recommended certain things, and as a result there was a subsequent Statutory Instruments Act.

An hon. Member: What has this to do with the bill?

Mr. Baldwin: I know the hon. member has a mind that likes very simple things, but I like to deal with these issues in terms of building a case. Perhaps if I use more simple words the hon. member might be able to understand. I will speak slowly and try to take him along one stage at a time so that he perhaps will be able to understand the points I am trying to make.

An hon. Member: Make sure you don't tell us about your convention.

Mr. Baldwin: The hon. member is worried about the convention. I am sure that is what they have been talking about in caucus. They are so worried that something is going to come out of our convention. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will get back to the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: I was making a point about the method adopted by this government when dealing with the problems we are now debating. This method falls in line with the past conduct of this government. I use this illustration because it indicates precisely what has happened and what will happen to this government when it exercises the dictatorial power it has received from parliament to deal with matters of this kind.

When we have asked in the scrutiny committee for legal opinions, we have been told that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) is the constitutional adviser to the government and has no right at all to give any legal opinions. When we have gone to a particular department, Crown corporation or agency, which has received legal advice that compelled it to refuse to produce a statutory instrument or a decree for consideration, we have been told we are not allowed to see the legal opinion given by the Minister of Justice. That is the situation today.

The Minister of National Revenue has said that at his whim, or the whim of his advisers, he has decided that Reader's Digest has now engaged in an arrangement which he accepts as being satisfactory under the terms of section 19(5) of the Income Tax Act. This is governed by the whim of the minister or by the whim of civil servants. If the minister has one whim today, he can have another whim tomorrow, another the day after and another the day after that. This is the sort of thing about which we complain.

I will come to the content of the bill a little later, but it is the procedure adopted by the government that is most repugnant to anyone who believes in the principle of parliamentary government, as does this party, and as I hope at least some members over there as well. When I raised this matter the other day, the Minister of National Revenue said his legal advisers had told him he was unable to do this by regulation. Let us look at section 221(5) of the Income Tax Act to see what in fact it says. Let me paraphrase the section which says that the governor in council may make regulations—and I come to (j)—generally to carry out the purpose and provisions of the act.

This has been subject to legal interpretation and we understand clearly what it means. There is no question at all that if the government had the courage to say precisely what the rules are, it could do so by regulation. If the government had the courage to say precisely what rules it intends to adopt when it comes to establishing the basis on which a periodical shall be deemed to be a Canadian periodical, it could do so by a statutory instrument such as a regulation.

If the government followed this procedure, such an instrument would then go before the scrutiny committee, under the Statutory Instruments Act, where members of this House could at least exercise some measure of scrutiny and supervision. The government has refused to do this. Rather than do it this way, the government has decided to make its decisions in the darkest recesses of some departmental office. There the government huddles with its legal advisers and, perhaps, officials of Reader's Digest. Perhaps later on these officials will huddle together with representatives of Time magazine, and perhaps later still with representatives of some other periodical, making deals with them based on the government's whim of the moment. That is the basis of the government's case at this time and, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has said, that simply is not good enough. If that is not the basis of the governments decision, let someone over there stand up and establish in words we can all understand the basis on which the government is operating. Let some hon. members over there do that, if they have the courage—which I doubt.

I say to you at this branch of my argument, Mr. Speaker, that the government could have acted by legislation as it did in 1965. If it did not want to do that, it could at least have indicated there would be regulations under the regulatory clause. In that event, the regulations would have been published and we would then know what are the facts.

An hon. Member: I thought you wanted legislation?

Mr. Baldwin: As the hon. member suggests, I would much prefer legislation, but if we cannot have legislation let us at least have regulation. Let us know what the rules are so that we may decide to abide by those rules, or not, as the case may be. This is much like the old story I have told before, of the Roman emperor who, when compelled by law to engrave his laws on tablets of stone, did so and then hung them up so high that no one could see or read them. That is what this government is doing. No one knows the real basis of the deal made with Reader's Digest apart from the Minister of National Revenue and/or his officials. That is the situation we face.

● (1710)

All over the United States, ever since—and even before—the Watergate situation a number of states have started what is known as the sunshine law. This began in the State of Florida and spread to Oregon and California. I think that now almost all the states in the United States of America have passed sunshine laws. This means sunshine in government, open government by which not only the legislature but all the boards, the tribunals and their agencies are compelled to hold proceedings in public subject to secrecy acceptable to the people whose lives are affected by their decisions. That is sound, common sense. I think we are coming into this era in our political history when we need something similar in Canada.

Instead, we find this government proceeding further and further away into the medieval days in respect of a simple issue of whether or not a periodical is a Canadian periodical. The decision is made in the dimmest recesses of some government office. The minister said this is the same kind of decision he often makes. He said that members from all sides often ask to make interpretations. That is an entirely different thing. Decisions made in respect of income tax returns, mathematical calculations and interpretations under the regulations are one thing. That is on a completely different footing to what appears as the law under section 19(5) of the Income Tax Act.

Let me again place on the record what section 19(5)(a) "Canadian issue" means. Then certain items are given. It states that a Canadian issue does not include an issue of a periodical the contents of which, excluding advertisements, are substantially the same as the contents of an issue of a periodical, or the contents of one or more issues of one or more periodicals, that was or were printed, edited or published outside Canada. That is very different, far more important and more grave than the kind of example the minister gave when he said that from time to time, at the request of people in this country or of members of the House of Commons, he might examine the return of a taxpayer in respect of a specific issue and make an interpretation. This is a more grave, more serious and more important issue which cannot be left to the uncontrolled discretion of departmental officials.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, let me make one more general comment. I hold no brief for or against Time magazine or Maclean's magazine. I must say, however, that in my opinion literature, like beauty, art, science and mathematics should have no national boundaries. I do not think we add to the value or calibre of Canadian literature, Canadian science, Canadian mathematics, Canadian art, Canadian sculpture or Canadian drama by closing our boundaries. I do not think there should be national boundaries. If I want to read Time magazine or any other periodical, and if that may involve the fact that Time magazine receives certain benefits in terms of advertising revenue which are not shared by other magazines, then if that is the price to pay perhaps we should be prepared to pay that price.

There is no question that the recent contortions of the government have indicated who is their target. It is Time magazine. The determination from the beginning may have been how to keep Time magazine out of Canada. That is obnoxious to me. Maclean's magazine may take its place, but I doubt that. My experience, as a westerner, is that so far as the west is concerned Maclean's magazine sends its hatchet people out to the west from time to time to write distorted and completely improper articles on the people of western and northern Canada. I have seen some of these articles from time to time. This is an indication of the slovenly intellectual capacity of the people on Jarvis Street and University Avenue in Toronto. The CBC does the same thing from time to time. There is no question about that. I see no reason, under these conditions, why the government should be allowed to go through, unscathed, in its contortions and twistings in its attempt to bring about the proposals in the bill.

For that reason, I support the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) who has had the courage of her convictions in dealing with this matter honestly and straightforwardly. This is the way she sees it. This is a legislative proposal which the people can vote for or against. This is the way we should proceed. We should proceed by way of a legislative proposal which will be dealt with in this House.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, as a relatively new member of parliament, sometimes I sit back and scratch my head wondering what we are arguing here. As I listen to the debate and the frustrations of members express, I wonder even more so, because the deeper and deeper we get into the issues involved in this bill, the bigger and bigger a mess we seem to have. What started out at second reading as a statement of high principle and philosophy has now turned into absolute confusion. The principle and philosophy have long since been lost and we are attempting to salvage something. Unfortunately, the more I look at the bill and the more I hear about it, the more vested interest there seems to be and the less principle there seems to be.

As I looked at the original intent of the bill, it seemed to be to eliminate special status. Who can argue with that principle and that philosophy? That philosophy of special status and privilege goes to the very root and foundation of the Liberal Party as I have studied it. The movement for equality is a small "l" liberal move away from class and this type of "ism". So I would expect, when a Liberal brings forth this policy of equality, he would attempt to justify it and produce legislation on that basis.

I hear some Liberals on the other side say they want that equality. Some of them have even been taken in and have called this a form of equality and a form of liberalism. They have been talked into accepting the minister's statement that this eliminates special status. But even they who are lulled into this false sense of complacency are now beginning to doubt. They are doubting the judgment of their minister and of their government, because it does not take an intellectual giant to eliminate the special status. This bill is supposed to accomplish that. All we hear is double-talk coming from the government benches, double-talk which tells us that they will eliminate the special status, and yet Reader's Digest will continue to publish as before. So where is there the elimination of the special status? I do not pose this question to the minister now; I address it to the backbenchers. I urge you all to go back to your basic philosophy and to the principles which brought you here to the House, to the things in which you believe. Every time that your minister says that, I ask you to challenge him and ask him how the special status is eliminated.

Let the hon. member who has just spoken stand up and make his speech, because I want to hear him. I want him to tell me about the special status of Time magazine, how it has been eliminated by this bill. In fact, this bill does not eliminate the special status of Reader's Digest. That argument will not wash in light of the announcement of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen).

So if this is not the principal purpose, what purposes are left? I think the purposes that are left are, first, vested interest. I suggest that everyone had better consider this. In the name of whose vested interests is this bill being passed? I suggest we look for the vested interest of the opposition members in the effects of this bill. Obviously, the opposition does not have a vested interest in destroying this bill because the opposition members, like myself, who speak on this bill, and like hon. members in the party opposite who dare speak against this bill, have no vested interest because we will be hurt by the Canadian news media who gain from this bill; we will be their victims of attack or we will be ignored, both of which possibilities have very severe consequences to a politician.

So the opposition does not have a vested interest in this. Obviously, the Liberal backbenchers do not have a vested interest in attacking this bill. Some of them have staked their political future on this bill. They are walking into the jaws of this machine and they will be chewed up. This is unfortunate because they are idealistic members, members who stand on principle. So I say there is certainly no vested interest among the Liberal backbenchers who are attacking this bill. They can only be interested in principle, and nothing else, when they attack the government.

[Mr. Wenman.]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: If you doubt your own backbenchers, then listen to the arguments of the press.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Wenman: Certainly, I also say, "Order." If we want order, the only order is from the other side.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Address the chair. You are saying "you" all the time. Address Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wenman: Hon. members on the other side dare to speak. I encourage them. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has allowed her name to stand behind this amendment. I urge other members who have spoken up loudly in caucus to stand up. Let us hear their opinion as well. Let us hear them support the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. They have much to lose from fighting members of their own party. I say to the minister, "Listen to the press which speaks and reports." In the last few days they have caught the nature of the argument and they are concerned about the content rule and about the clause "substantially different". The fact that the motion before us today would eliminate this clause is to the credit of the hon. member who proposed it.

It seems to me that the other object is the importance to our national and cultural life, and this should be considered as well. Unfortunately, we do not seem to want to allow freedom of choice to the majority of Canadians. I recognize that the communality of choice, even if it leads to mediocrity, the choice which people have and which may be mediocre is worth protecting more than any other principle we may be discussing here today. When the government tells us that their judgment on what is Canadian and what is not Canadian is better, I am in doubt. I know that this bill does not state clearly what canadian content is. I know that this has been avoided so that we can be more comfortable and say that we are not legislating content. But, in effect, content is being legislated and the content which the minister intends to protect under this legislation is Canadian content. If we had his choice, that is what would be printed and distributed.

I suggest that Canadian content is being distributed and produced very widely through Time magazine and, as a matter of fact, through Reader's Digest. As I have said, even if that choice is mediocre, that is the choice of the people. There is a small group of elite writers who are certainly Canadians but who promote a minority point of view. They should have a way of being heard and of receiving subsidies from the Canadian government, perhaps through the CBC or through subsidies to books and other publications. This is being done to a large extent. At the same time, let us recognize the choice of Canadians in their reading, which is in itself an expression of what they feel is their own culture. I suggest, for example, that Reader's Digest or Time magazine express in 80 per cent of their content what Canada is and what Canadian culture is.

Perhaps I am saying that we Canadians are 80 per cent the same as people in the United States. I think it is also true that they are 80 per cent the same as people throughout the world. Our cultural differences are small and they should remain small. We should promote those things that tie us together. That can be done through international magazines such as Time and Reader's Digest. On that basis, I say they express the Canadian viewpoint, and because they express the majority Canadian viewpoint they have the right to exist, the right to be read and the right to be heard in Canada.

The government has been in power for many years. A government that has been in power for many years often develops the "Big Brother" complex. A small clique or elite within the government gains control and with that control a series of pieces of legislation are put out by the government against the will of the majority of the people. We have seen this happen in governments time and time again. This does not occur on very large issues; it occurs on small issues. It happens when a government becomes deaf, not just deaf to the majority of Canadians but deaf to the backbenchers within its own party, because it is the backbenchers who are out in the larger community. They are talking to people and getting the gut political feeling that people like to read these magazines and want them to continue. I suggest that those backbench members on the government side opposing this bill will survive longer than members of the government who are promoting the legislation.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I urge the government to reconsider the content section of the legislation. The principles of the Liberal party can be upheld on every aspect other than content, and the same is true for the Conservative party, in my opinion. I am sure the New Democratic Party does not like content legislation either.

I ask the government to listen to the representations of the Canadian public as expressed by members who have, are, and will continue to speak until the message gets through to the minister. This content rule must be modified, if not totally eliminated, which would be our preference. I think the message is starting to get through. I urge the backbench members on the government side to speak out now. Every time they allow an infringement of this type on our democratic principles it threatens all we stand for.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to stir the embers of memory in this House tonight and go back to the days when members were campaigning for the privilege of participating in debates such as this. I suspect members were very vocal on the hustings, saying they wanted to sit in the House of Commons to represent the people of their ridings and the democratic principles for which our country is known and admired all over the world.

I remember listening to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) participate in the talk shows for which Vancouver is well known. She said that she was not going to be simply a mouthpiece for all the policies of the government, that if she were elected and disagreed with the government, the government would know about it. I must confess that many times I wondered whether she would be true to her word, and I am happy to say that she has been. I regret there are not more members on the government benches who follow her example and remember the statements they made on the hustings.

This first session of the House has been a period of orientation for me as well as other members. I recall the pre-election idealism and how I, and I am sure other members, saw the function of debate as perfecting legislation, and the very word parliament as meaning "talking things out." I find the government benches strangely silent, however. This seems to be a one way dialogue—a monologue in fact.

When I arrived here I learned that the function of committees was to take legislation that was a little too cumbersome for debate in the House and create the best kind of legislation from it. Committees were composed of members representing some kind of background, training or interest pertinent to the legislation, and they would hone the legislation to the sharpest edge, perfecting it in a way that could not be done through cumbersome dialogue in the House.

I watched with interest this piece of legislation pass on a predetermined course set by a minister who refuses to listen to debate and the advice of members of the committee—a minister who has set as his goal that this legislation will go through the House undisturbed and unchanged. For this he is unrepentent. I feel sure, however, that by the time the legislation passes he will feel a measure of chagrin if not repentence.

I have watched the operation of the committee and the function of the government whip. At one time the whip's function was to make sure that members would attend and participate, and that a quorum would be present. That is not the way it works, however. The whip's function is really to make sure that all members are there who favour government legislation and that members who do not favour it will not be there. They get the double shuffle.

I watched with interest the protection of vested interests close to the minister, and the contradictions within cabinet. For example, the minister said there was no problem with this legislation, that Time and Reader's Digest could function easily in spite of it. For example, the minister said as reported at page 10638 of Hansard:

> Let me reiterate that the government is not seeking in any way to control the freedom of magazine publishers and editors. Nor do we want to impose our will upon the people of Canada and regulate their reading habits. Bill C-58 in no way impinges upon freedom of expression.

Not at all. Then in committee he said that the success of Reader's Digest depends largely upon not only its large circulation but its ancillary projects such as the record industry, Book of the Month Club, and the Digest books. These are the ways Reader's Digest makes its money. Because Reader's Digest is a wealthy corporation it has a healthy margin of profit, and therefore Selection in Quebec is not going to suffer at all.

He went on to say:

> Examine it in those terms. I think if there is a problem it simply focuses on that particular area, and I would suggest there is enough public evidence around that Selection does not have to stop publication.

Then we have the words of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) in the House as reported at page 10584 of Hansard:

As a result of questions which were raised in the committee as to whether this legislation in fact had that effect—

That is, a sop to digests in Canada.

—I again discussed the matter with my officials and subsequently talked to counsel for Reader's Digest.

It seemed to me at the time that the legislation would have that impact, that is, that it would preclude digests, so that if two, three or ten Canadians got together and decided they were going to have a Canadian digest 100 per cent owned by Canadians, with the editing and publishing being done in Canada, it would be theoretically possible for them to operate in Canada under the 80 per cent rule, but it would be for all practical purposes impossible because of the unique nature of digests.

That is the point that we continuously tried to bring forward to the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) in committee.

● (1740)

I wonder is the cabinet unanimous in its opinion. On the one hand the Secretary of State adamantly denied the suggestion that this legislation will in any way affect the operation of Reader's Digest in Canada. On the other hand we had the Minister of National Revenue saying, obviously as a result of what went on in Committee, that Time and Reader's Digest, especially Reader's Digest, could no longer function in this country. One thing encourages me. Despite such contradictory statements it is evident that the Minister of National Revenue pays attention and listens. Yet I guess the old saying still holds true that a new broom sweeps clean. At least that minister is approachable, is not following a pre-set course, and is willing to change his mind. Whom are we to believe, the Minister of National Revenue or the Secretary of State? Right now I am willing to put more stock with the Minister of National Revenue. I think he wants to do the right thing.

We must resolve some basic issues when considering this bill. I know that others have mentioned them; that does not lessen their pertinency. The Secretary of State has said repeatedly that the intention of this bill is the preservation of Canadian culture. That is a laudable goal. I ask, first, which Canadian culture does he mean? There is some basis for thinking that the Canadian culture the minister has in mind is the culture centred on Toronto, the suave, urban-oriented culture of the self-professed purveyors of culture in Canada. In the assessment of some, that is Canadian culture. Do you want to preserve Canadian culture of that kind? If you do, it strikes me as ridiculous to talk about preserving Canadian culture when we are not necessarily talking about Canadian writers but talking only about the Canadian publishing industry.

I recall questioning a witness in committee who said he was speaking on behalf of the newly formed writers association. I asked, "Incidentally, how many writers in your organization are Canadian?" He replied that most of them are either citizens or landed immigrants. Ha! What a joke! Tell me, how does a landed immigrant from England, France, the United States or South America, writing in a Canadian periodical, preserve Canadian culture?

How does the landed immigrant saturated with the culture of his native country in any way preserve Canadian content and Canadian culture when writing in depth about his experiences of his native culture? If he crosses the Canadian border and writes in a Canadian periodical, how does he preserve Canadian culture? Is that how you guarantee the preservation of Canadian culture? It is fatuous to believe that you can preserve Canadian culture merely by publishing items in wholly Canadian owned magazines, as defined by the Minister of National Revenue; such expectations are especially foolish as contributing writers need not necessarily be of Canadian origin or of Canadian background.

My next question is this: are such writers Canadian by conviction? The sole purpose of some writers in Canada is the overthrow of the Government of Canada. Can we say that they preserve Canadian culture? How far does the Secretary of State want to go in preserving our culture? Where does he draw the line and to what extent interfere with our publishing industry?

Again I ask, when the minister says he wants to preserve Canadian culture, which culture does he mean? Who will define Canadian culture? Is any member of this House smart enough to define it? Can any cabinet minister define Canadian culture in a way satisfactory to all Canadians? Is anyone smart enough? I doubt it.

An hon. Member: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Friesen: I am, and I am speaking for the hon. member too, and all other Canadians.

If the government intends to preserve Canadian culture I say its goal is laudable, but the procedure is self-defeating. How can you preserve Canadian culture with legislation, when the Canadian people themselves must preserve it? The intent of this bill quite simply is to cloister, purify, and identify that which is truly Canadian. But who will define these things? I suppose the process must begin with the Department of National Revenue, the Department of the Secretary of State, and the Department of Justice defining Canadian culture. We will have to put ourselves in the hands of those departments.

Something else disturbs me, Mr. Speaker. Although the Secretary of State says he wants to preserve the Canadian publishing industry and Canadian culture, he does not do it when given the chance. I am thinking of a publication which went out of business not more than three months ago in my neighbouring riding, largely because people under the Secretaty of State did not keep their promises. I am talking of Sono Nis Press, which I am sure the Secretary of State remembers. Sono Nis Press was a fine arts publishing company specializing in the production of artistic works. It published writings by Canadian authors in Canada and its avowed purpose was to preserve the fine arts in Canada. It was a Canadian publishing venture, endorsed and partly underwritten by a Canada Council grant. It so happens that this publication was the brain child of a visiting professor of the University of British Columbia. He has been called Canada's youngest and most prolific writer, a man of no small stature in the fine arts, a great poet and a good writer. Let me tell you his story, Mr. Speaker.

The Canada Council went to him and said, "If you relinquish your full professorship at the university, where you enjoy an assured salary, and become a member of the Canadian fine arts team which is to preserve Canadian culture, we will give you $15,000 a year." The man was willing to make the sacrifice and relinquished his full professorship at UBC. He began writing for the Canada Council and for Canada, and set up the organization known, as I said, as Sono Nis Press. What happened? He agreed to do this work for $15,000, but it was not long before the Canada Council said to him, "Look, we can't quite afford $15,000; can you do it for $11,000?" By that time he had relinquished his university appointment; but he agreed to do it for $11,000.

There are lots of people in Canada who do not fully appreciate the fine arts, but who think $11,000 is a lot of money. At any rate, the ex-professor said, "O.K. these being times of austerity, I will settle for $11,000." So he settled for $11,000, and tried to live on that sum. He wrote and published the kind of work that inspires Canadian poets, short story writers, and novelists. He has been an inspiration to scores of writers across Canada.

● (1750)

The first year goes by. He waits for the next grant. He is supposed to be a permanent writer under the Canada Council. The second year comes along. They say that $11,000 is quite a bit, they do not know if they can do that, and would he settle for $9,000? By this time, there is no way that he can go back to university. The austerity program has set in. Full professorships are not hired back because the salaries are too high. Therefore he must stick with Canada Council. They have him where they want him. When he comes back the next year, they say that $9,000 is too much, and will he settle for $7,000?

What happens to him as a poet also happens to him as a publisher. Canada Council says that what we need in this country is a fine arts publishing company that publishes books, poetry, short stories and so on. When he is asked to start that company, he agrees. The first year everything is kosher. The next year it is not quite so good. The next year one of his writers is publishing short articles in many of the learned fine arts journals across Canada and the United States, all of which have been recognized. In fact he has Canada Council grants to work on them.

This person then decides to compile all those articles and bind them in one volume. Canada Council says no, he cannot get the grant because the articles separately do not constitute quality. The young man decides to publish them anyway. After the book is published, the government by way of Canada Council says that this is representative literature and it would like to have it in our embassies around the world. They would like 200 copies, but would like 20 per cent off the full market price. Therefore you have a publishing company that is fully Canadian, staffed by Canadians, publishing in Canada, publishing Canadian work that is being cut off.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret I must interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He can continue only with unanimous consent. Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) is going to make a speech. If he is, we would like him to get across the floor first.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I was asking if there was unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: I thank hon. members for allowing me to conclude my remarks. By the time I finish my speech they will be glad they gave consent.

Here is an example of a golden opportunity for the Secretary of State to demonstrate that he really is in favour not only of preserving the publishing industry, but the jobs and locations of hundreds of writers in Canada who are dependent upon the publishing industry for their livelihood. And he blew it. The Canada Council blew it. It makes me believe that the protestations that the Secretary of State made about wanting to preserve Canadian culture are totally spurious.

I come back to the point where I began. How do you go about preserving culture? Can you preserve a culture regardless of how identifiable it is, how Canadian it is, or how pure it is? Can you preserve that culture by building a wall around it, making sure that no one on the outside can contaminate it? Are we content to build a wall around Canada in the hope of having a purer Canadian culture?

I wish to quote from a speech made in the British House of Commons some time ago by a man who knew what it was to be threatened by censorship. He knew what it was to be threatened by this kind of control. He refused to bow the knee to this kind of intimidation. He said this:

> I cannot praise a fugitive and cloistered virtue, unexercised and unbreathed, that never sallies out and sees her adversary, but slinks out of the race where that immortal garland is to be run for, not without dust and heat. Assuredly we bring not innocence into the world, bring impurity much rather; that which purifies us is trial, and trial is by what is contrary. That virtue therefore which is but a youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental whiteness;

We have a government that mouths a conviction of believing in free enterprise and, maybe to a lesser degree, interaction in the market place. It wants to believe in free enterprise and competition everywhere except in the field of arts, journalism, and publication. There competition is not good. Everywhere else members of the government believe in competition. They say that it is competition that makes our economy run well. However, when it comes to freedom of information, access to information, and style, they no longer believe in competition.

In no other field like in the field of writing and the arts is it so necessary to have a cross-fertilization of cultures in order to preserve, enhance, and make our own culture grow. We cannot allow this kind of legislation to restrict the thinking and artistic expression of the people of Canada through the field of journalism. I call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

Non-Canadian Publications

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, before we recessed for the dinner hour I was saying it seems that in every part of our economy we believe in competition but that in the world of writing the bill before us and the actions of the government would seem to suggest that competition is not good.

Perhaps, though, on reflection, there may be an element of consistency in the government's approach. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has suggested the time is coming when there will be increasing governmental interference in the lives of ordinary Canadians. From this point of view it might be said that the legislation we are being asked to approve is consistent with government policy.

I for one maintain that competition in the world of ideas, in the world of the arts, in the world of writing, is a healthy state of affairs, just as it is in the market place. For support I would simply turn to someone whose words will, I am sure, be accepted more readily than my own, although my own, I feel, ought to be accepted readily enough. I refer to the noted essayist, Matthew Arnold. In an essay entitled "The Function of Criticism at the Present Time" he wrote:

> It is of the last importance that English criticism should clearly discern what rule for its course in order to avail itself of the field now opening to it and to produce fruit for the future it ought to take. The rule may be summed up in one word—disinterestedness. And how is criticism to show disinterestedness? By keeping aloof from what is called "the practical view of things"; by resolutely following the law of its own nature, which is to be a free play of the mind on all subjects which it touches. By steadily refusing to lend itself to any of those ulterior, political, practical considerations about ideas, which plenty of people will be sure to attach to them, which perhaps ought often to be attached to them, which in this country at any rate are certain to be attached to them quite sufficiently, but which criticism really has nothing to do with.

The hallmark of fertility of thought and fertility of writing is summed up in the word Matthew Arnold uses, namely, the word disinterestedness.

It occurs to me that in order to understand the effect this legislation might have in future years we might project ourselves into the world of Gulliver's Travels. Gulliver was a model of the rigid Englishman who thinks that the world is his oyster and that everything centres upon his world. This was his belief until he began to travel.

The first unsettling experience he encountered was in the world of Lilliput where he met a race of people who thought in very much the same way as himself. They believed they enjoyed the best of all cultures, the best of all lifestyles, that everything they had devised was little short of perfect. When Gulliver came along they were obliged to revise these impressions. Until then there was no basis of comparison which they could use; they had no way of knowing whether their culture was really a superior culture or not. When Gulliver arrived they recognized instantly that they were, in fact, a very inferior race, a very diminutive race, not in the matter of size only, and that they had by their insularity frustrated the growth of their culture.

Later on Gulliver resumed his travels and went to the world of the Brobdingnagians. These were giants and they, too, thought their world was perfect—that there was no culture better than theirs. Again, though, they had no true basis for this judgment because they had not come into contact with members of any society other than their own until Gulliver arrived. But as soon as Gulliver landed on their shores, a basis for comparison existed. As I said a few moments ago, Gulliver himself had felt there were no achievements superior to those of his own culture, but when he saw the giants he was obliged to recognize that his world was, in fact, narrow and circumscribed.

My point is this: if we insist on drawing artificial boundaries we are eliminating contrast, we are eliminating conflict, and in this way we are eliminating growth and the possibility of perfection.

• (2010)

An hon. Member: What about comparing the Yahoos with the Houyhnhnms?

Mr. Friesen: The hon. member asks if we are going to compare the Yahoos with the Houyhnhnms, and we might because it would be a very apt comparison. I suppose we do have some around, but we should probably leave them for another discussion. But if we draw these narrow boundaries of nationalism the day will come when we, in our pygmian fantasy, will look at our culture like many of the Lilliputians and, without thought of comparison, say, "We are the very best there is; there is none better". While that happens the world passes us by. While this happens to our culture, our writers and journalists, who are the exponents of our culture, the expression of what we think and believe, have no way, if we are in splendid isolation, to sharpen their faculties and skills because they are isolated unto themselves.

I would ask the members of this House whether they think that the Manchester Guardian, an English newspaper, became a good newspaper because it studiously practised an insular editorial policy? Did the New York Times become what it is today because it had a paranoic fear of foreign correspondents? These kinds of barriers are never a sign of virility and strength; they are always a sign of decay and fear, a kind of cultural egotism based on fear of comparison.

How are the Canadian people to sharpen their critical faculties if all Canadian publications are the products of an inbred journalistic society? Critical faculties are developed by comparison. Let the people read, let the people compare. Let them decide what is Canadian and what is good.

Let me turn now, Madam Speaker, to some of these practical realities of which we have spoken. The Secretary of State addressed his caucus and I should like to make reference to that address. He said:

> While any potential economic dislocation caused by the change in the Income Tax Act would be short-term, it should not be forgotten that some individuals may, certainly, suffer financial loss. One cannot dispute Reader's Digest on this point—

I ask the House to take note of this next statement:

> —and a conscious trade off has to be made between these effects and the policy objectives of the government.

Do hon. members realize just what the Secretary of State is saying? The jobs of writers, typesetters, lumbermen, pulp workers, printers and delivery people are to be a conscious trade off between "these effects and the policy objectives of the government". I suggest that it is both callous and Machiavellian when workers become helpless pawns in a trade off by an unthinking and unfeeling Secretary of State.

Just to make my point a little more clearly, Madam Speaker, I am sure other hon. members have received some of the information that I received. I have before me a half page and placed in all the leading newspapers of this country submitted by about 49 companies in the printing trade. The headline is: "A message to the Government of Canada from the Graphic Arts and Printing Trades Suppliers of the Canadian Reader's Digest". These 49 companies represent about 1,500 workers, among them Evergreen Press Limited of Vancouver representing 50 jobs, Century Arts Studio, Montreal Lithographing Limited and so on. The Secretary of State says that these 1,500 jobs are a conscious trade off that has to be made between "these effects and the policy objectives of the government".

Let me say something about the inconsistencies in this legislation. The Secretary of State has made it abundantly clear that there will be a real distinction between the effect of this legislation on periodicals and its effect on newspapers. As a matter of fact, the government has always made it clear that newspapers are not to be affected by this legislation at all. I ask you, Madam Speaker, what in the name of fairness can that mean? It means that newspapers in Canada can use the services of the writers, UPI, and all the news agencies around the world at a fraction of the cost of sending their own correspondents out to get news stories and to write them up.

I would ask the House how this situation is any different for Time and Reader's Digest. Both those companies are, in effect, using news agencies to gather in their material and prepare it for publication. One of the dilemmas that the minister faces is the freedom of news agencies to distribute their news stories to Canadian newspapers and magazines. This is done on a shared cost basis with other customers around the world. So a Canadian newspaper that buys a story from UPI, Reuters or API buys it at a fraction of the total cost of production. The rest of the cost is paid for by other customers in England, Australia, the United States and other English-speaking countries. No one questions the validity of this practice; it is the only way that Canadian newspapers can afford to provide world-wide news for their readers.

Reader's Digest and, I might add, Time magazine have a continuing relationship with the parent companies in the United States. Reader's Digest has raised two features which are objectionable to the minister and apparently to the government. First, its profit picture makes possible, indeed inevitable, that dividend payments will flow to the United States company. Second, it makes possible the purchase of previously published articles at a fraction of the cost of production, since they are already "used".

This practice has been termed by the government and some witnesses, I believe erroneously, "dumping". Nevertheless, the relationship makes savings possible, only because Reader's Digest, I might add, is a unique magazine both in format and in content as well as audience. However, it is the contention of the government and of some publishers that this relationship constitutes unfair competition, and therefore inhibits the growth of existing periodicals and perhaps prevents the birth of new ones.

For reasons of consistency I wish the government would clear up what it plans to do with the news agencies scattered around the world as they "dump" their news stories in Canada. I would then ask the Secretary of State, who loves to quote Walter Gordon, why he does not quote other passages of Walter Gordon, for example, the statement he made in 1965 that:

> The government's proposal asserts no control whatever over newspapers or any other publications. It does not alter in any way the complete freedom of businesses to advertise in any way they choose in existing publications or in any future publication owned by Canadians. It provides no precedent for any kind of government interference in the complete freedom of the press.

Then in a sentence I would like to underscore, Walter Gordon goes on to say:

> There is not and could not be any question of interfering with the press in so far as the dissemination of news and opinion is concerned.

Then note this, Madam Speaker:

> I know that no Liberal government would ever think of doing so.

● (2020)

Would you believe it: I know of no Liberal government that would ever interfere with that?

There is one final difficulty with this legislation, and that is that this is not in the form of a statute. Members have pointed this out before, as I did when speaking on a previous amendment. It is impossible for writers to operate in an atmosphere of freedom and security when they have hanging over them the Damoclean sword of government regulations and the whims and vicissitudes of ministers making up their minds. The government knows, and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) knows, as tacitly admitted by a statement in Hansard, the mistake of drawing up legislation in this present form. The Minister of National Revenue is faced with an impossible dilemma. First he realizes that the bill should include these regulations, and secondly he cannot do this—

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member presently speaking was granted the consent of the House to pursue his remarks past the limits imposed during these proceedings. He has now taken over 20 minutes of extra time. I should like the hon. member to indicate whether he has nearly completed his remarks and, if not, perhaps I might raise a further point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. If there is not unanimous consent the hon. member cannot continue his speech. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, as the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais) has stated, just before the adjournment at six o'clock the hon. member had come to the end of his allotted time and the House was asked for its unanimous consent in order that he might continue. That consent was given. I am satisfied that is the case. I know the hon. member will not abuse that privilege in any way, but consent for an extension of time was given. I want to say that we are extremely grateful for that kindness on the part of hon. members on that occasion.

An hon. Member: You have had it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member has already gone on now for 15 minutes. Perhaps he could bring his remarks to a conclusion.

Mr. Friesen: Much to the disbelief perhaps of government members, Madam Speaker, I have only about five minutes left and then I will be finished.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

An hon. Member: The hon. member had unanimous consent before six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Order!

An hon. Member: He had unanimous consent, but not for the rest of the day.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member could bring his remarks to a conclusion.

An hon. Member: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member has agreed to complete his remarks in a minute or so.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There is not unanimous consent. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I am as anxious as anyone for this debate to get on, and I think the hon. member has abused the consent given to him by going on this long, but I do not see how the House can withdraw that consent once it has given it.

An hon. Member: For the rest of the day, or for the rest of the session?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Madam Speaker, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has confirmed what I had said earlier in respect of what the House did just prior to six o'clock. I do not believe the hon. member who now has the floor intends to abuse that consent in any way, particularly in terms of the importance of the matter before the House.

An hon. Member: He already has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: You just don't want to listen.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The record shows that the hon. member has already spoken an additional 18 minutes.

An hon. Member: So what?

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member has spoken for 18 minutes over his limit which is almost two allotted periods, so I think the hon. member has had enough time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to contribute to the debate on Bill C-58. My remarks will be brief and, I hope, to the point, realizing that as a result of the many points already raised and debated the government should by now have received the message, and possibly should have withdrawn this bill.

The behind the scenes agreement between Reader's Digest and the government to make it possible for Reader's Digest to remain in Canada can, in my opinion, be classified as one of the most unworthy acts ever perpetrated in the annals of the history of Canadian governments, and is one more example of the government hacking away at the democratic process on which our country built its foundation, a foundation in which there already appear the cracks of disintegration as the result of almost eight years of misrule by this government.

My Greek ancestors, the founders of democracy, would turn over in their graves if they could perceive the dilution of these principles of democracy, principles which on numerous occasions, they defended, and indeed died for over the last 2,400 years.

Setting policies by regulations drawn up and enforced by civil servants, without prior knowledge or input by elected representatives of the people, is bad enough, but to legislate solely by the whim of a minister, as this regulation regarding Reader's Digest will do, leaves periodicals at the mercy of that minister.

Our present minister may have a benign, non-jaundiced and non-interference outlook, which would perhaps be the same outlook as his successor, but there is no guarantee of that. Even if there were a guarantee, all I can say is, what a hell of a way to run the government of a country. Back door policies and back door agreements have no place here.

I am in full agreement, as expressed by some previous speakers, that Bill C-58 is the brain child of an individual or individuals, possibly in the vast hierarchy of the civil service, who from time to time have to justify their jobs or positions. I think the country would have been better off if they had been transferred to somewhere in some never-never land where their words of wisdom might have found their appropriate place.

As my leader earlier admonished, Bill C-58 is a violation of everything that responsible parliamentary government is all about, and changing the law by decree and not by an act of parliament grossly violates the Canadian constitution.

To me Bill C-58 is nothing but veiled censorship to serve the interests not of the majority but only of one publication, Maclean's, whose behind the scene power is so necessary and important to the government. In addition, it is a blatant example of the government not only making the decisions regarding the contents of a publication, but also taking on the role of judge and jury. As the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) has said:

If we are going to talk about a situation in which foreign publications or foreign material comes into this country to be printed and is subjected to a bureaucratic value judgment we must recognize, that as a subjective position ... if bureaucrats do not like something they can censor it 100 per cent ... It means there is no debate. A group of people in the bureaucracy make a subjective judgment about a piece of writing, but unless they can produce some unwaivering criteria to support their judgment then there is no formula ... The reference to previously published material in fact means that writers from any other country can publish first in Canada and then in a foreign country.

Any material written in another country becomes acceptable if it is first published in Canada, but if it is published in another country and then comes to Canada it is not acceptable. What a lot of hogwash, Madam Speaker! All magazines such as Reader's Digest or MD have to do is change the order of publication, that is, publish first in Canada and then in the foreign country. Substantially not the same as previously published material simply means the order of publication can be changed and it is within the regulations. This will not protect the Canadian publishing industry. Actually it will simply create a loophole to circumvent the law.

Quite frankly I do not see any better evidence of the position of the government in respect of the so-called new society and the greater degree of government intervention than in this legislation. Clearly the government intends to restrict the entry of written material which it does not like, and allow material that is advantageous to it.

It is the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) who is responsible for this mess. He in turn has dumped it into the lap of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). I think the Minister of National Revenue would be well advised to dump it right back into the lap of the Secretary of State.

The real issue here is really the right of Canadians to read what they want to read, and they resent the government's increasing involvement in their day-to-day lives. It would seem to me that this is a collision course that the government would hope to avoid. I believe common sense in this situation should always prevail.

The government made a farce of the committee which studied this legislation. When it became apparent that some government members of the committee voiced disapproval, the government responded by moving these dissenters and replacing them with "yes" men. By emasculating this committee the government has exposed the real inability of most committees to do a job in a way that not only would be meaningful and fulfilling to a member but that would also help members in their attempt to contribute to the legislative process of the country.

The minister talked about Canadianism and Canadian culture. He talked about our losing our identity as Canadians. When he mentioned this there was no question in my mind that he was referring to our neighbour to the south. When he spoke of the 80 per cent difference perhaps he should have stressed not the difference but rather the similarity of our two cultures here and in the United States. He should have emphasized the similarity more than the difference.

I said my remarks would be short. I should like to say in conclusion that this bill is not in the interest of the Canadian public. The Canadian cultural industry has already turned its back on the Secretary of State. The federal government is the servant of the people; it is not the people who are the servants of the government. When any government fails to recognize this then it invites political disaster. My suggestion to the minister is that he clean up this mess very simply by tabling Bill C-58 and relegating it to the wastepaper basket where it rightly belongs.

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Anderson: I am glad to see hon. members over there are awake tonight. It was interesting to listen to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) when he was discussing competition. I thought that in a very short time, within two weeks, the same people who are discussing Bill C-58 tonight will be discussing competition and Canadianization of our country at a convention to be held not too far from these premises. I wonder if the same people, like the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, will be saying the same things at that convention they are saying in this House. I doubt it.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock made quite a large issue, while speaking for some time, of competition. I do not think any member of this House will be deluded into believing that the hon. member really was talking about competition between Canadian firms but basically was talking about competition in the sense that there is unfair competition. He did not say it, but there was the implication that there is unfair competition in the periodical industry in Canada.

I suggest that in bringing up the subject of competition between Canadian firms and Reader's Digest and Time magazine the hon. member is creating a smokescreen, because surely the way the law was set up in Canada in 1965 gave a very clear advantage to Time and Reader's Digest, and therefore there is no competition between these two magazines and the publications we have in Canada. It amazes me how, day by day, things are twisted around. I thought members on the opposite side, being fair, would recognize the fact that there is no fair competition in the way our laws are set up today.

In our law since 1968 we have allowed content, editorial and otherwise, to cross the border from one country to another with little or no input to Canada and at no cost to the firm bringing it in. Then it is said that we want competition between Canadian and American magazines. That is nonsense. How can there be competition when these magazines come in at a distinct advantage?

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock was a member of the Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. He heard the periodical people say, time after time after time, that they could not compete with these two American companies because they were too large and had the advantage of shipping their material across the border at nearly just cost.

When the hon. member talks about competition I hope he merely is misled and is not really serious about this aspect of Bill C-58, because I believe any thinking person in this House, and certainly any thinking person in Canada, could not believe that we have fair competition in the market today. In all sincerity I hope that at some point the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock will withdraw that after he has re-thought his position about whether there really is competition between Canadian and American periodicals under the law as previously set up.

I think every member of the House should clearly understand that Bill C-58 is an attempt to eliminate an unequal situation which has existed for many years. As the hon. member knows, a royal commission started by his party stated that what we had was bad legislation and that there should be no situation in which exemptions are given to American magazines. I think members should really reassess the position they are taking when, after years of debate, hon. members are still arguing that this is some form of censorship and that fair competition is being knocked down.

Let me say that there are people outside this Chamber who are taking note of what is being said by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock. People will not be taken in by an argument that is facetious to start with, and which has no substance in respect of competition.

I must bring up another point the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock discussed at some length. He compared Canadians to Lilliputians and suggested we are living in isolation. I am sure the hon. member will re-assess that also. Of all the arguments I have heard in the House regarding Bill C-58 the most facetious is the one that we are somehow living in an isolated world here in Canada with nothing coming in. In fact it is exactly the opposite. We have, coming in from the United States as well as from other countries, books, periodicals, you name it, Madam Speaker. We have periodicals flowing into this country from other nations. If anything our problem is trying to establish an identity with all the material that is coming in from other countries.

I was very surprised when the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock said that we were isolationalists, and that we were trying to stop books and periodicals from coming into this country. The distribution system of our magazines on our newsstands is in the hands of the Americans. The majority of the material available on our newsstands is from the United States. Anyone who has ever looked at our media must be impressed with the great amount of foreign material and foreign publications presented to the Canadian people. We wonder sometimes why Canadians do not have an identity. I submit it is for that very reason. That is why I disagree with the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock.

Regarding the right of our writers to security—again the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock discussed this at some length—surely what we are trying to do is to provide a market for Canadian writers and artists so that they can have a chance to be seen and heard over our media because, due to the size of our country and the number of our people, we do not have the money to devote to these periodicals or money to compete with the very large and the very rich countries which have much more money to put into this area. No wonder we do not have more Canadian television programs, for example, to sell to the Americans. We put our programs on the English market occasionally. I submit that we can change this so that the Canadian people will have the opportunity to see and to hear programs produced in Canada, not imported from another country.

The hon. member who spoke before said that Bill C-58 is a veiled attempt at censorship. Because Newsweek is not given the same advantage as Time or Reader's Digest I wonder if the hon. member would say that the Canadian government is applying veiled censorship to Newsweek magazine. The fact that such magazines are not given a tax break does not mean we are trying to stifle them or keep them out of the country. There is no one in the House who would suggest that these articles or periodicals are not available in Canada.

I hope that the position taken by Reader's Digest means that they, in their wisdom, find they can live within the proposed legislation, and I hope that we in this House can settle down and get on to different things. I am sure that in a year or two from now this legislation will be considered to be good legislation, and perhaps a milestone on our statute books. For all these reasons, Madam Speaker, I hope that this debate can be concluded speedily.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Madam Speaker, I welcomed the intervention of the last hon. member because I believe that the essence of his comments was that we should attempt to reduce the American influence in this country. Whatever else may be said about fairness in competition and so on, this is essentially so.

Most of us Canadians would probably agree that we feel Canadian periodicals should be a thriving industry in this country. However, I have grave doubts about this legislation making that a reality. I think in fact that this bill will divide the country further. Many people who are willing to support the Canadian periodical industry are now becoming quite concerned about the way in which this is going to be done, about this open and blatant attempt by the government through the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) to rule on what is a Canadian periodical. It is the Department of National Revenue, of all departments, that is ruling on that. Surely the Department of External Affairs or some other department would be better qualified to rule on Canadian content.

In effect this legislation is an attempt to impose thought control in a selective area of our periodical industry. The Department of National Revenue has given us no information on who should make up this board. After all, it is their role to interpret our tax laws, but in practice they tend to come down heavily against the individual. This is becoming more and more obvious. I think they will do the same in deciding what is Canadian content.

If it is important that there be a decision on the Canadian content in periodicals, then the same role should apply to newspapers. We would not have many newspapers left in this country if the rules proposed in this bill were applied to them. The back door agreement to keep Reader's Digest is obviously a sop to the part of the country where it is located. I am surprised this event did not take place sooner. It is also a recognition of the fact that Reader's Digest cannot be duplicated in Canada. It contains human interest stories. We could change the names a little and locate the stories in the province of Saskatchewan, in Quebec, in the state of Georgia, in England, or anywhere in the world. All that needs to be changed in these stories to make them Canadian is a line or two and immediately they would become home grown in Canada, but in fact they have come from another part of the world. More than the articles in Time, the articles in Reader's Digest represent varying viewpoints from around the world.

So far as Canadianization is concerned, certainly Reader's Digest is more international than Time and the other two periodicals mentioned, MD Canada and Modern Medicine. Essentially we are getting rid of a news magazine, namely, Time. Personally I was not much interested in Time, particularly the Canadian edition. Obviously Time magazine feels in Canada as a guest who has to behave himself and has to write nice things about Canada. However, Time was a window on the world. U.S. magazines have much greater access to people scattered throughout the world and the events that are happening. No Canadian magazine could equal them. There are some very obvious reasons for that.

Some people thought that if we suddenly put Time out of business, a lot of money and many Canadian writers would become available. In fact, in any population there is only a small number of people who can write, the news people and the media people. Canada has approximately 15 million English speaking people, whereas the United States have 200 million. Most people in western Canada are much more interested in events across the border than in what Maclean's writes about. Maclean's writes about Toronto, about Bloor and Jarvis Streets and about the lake front. This is as uninteresting to most western Canadians as it is uninteresting to Quebecers. This does not mean that they are against anything being written about Toronto, but they are more interested in reading what happens south of the border.

To say that Maclean's, as the obvious beneficiary of this legislation, will become a newsmagazine, seems to be stretching the realm of the possible. Many of its articles seem quite risqué. Sometimes I think the magazine should be sold under the counter as other pornographic and risqué magazines are—though in fact some are being shown over the counter now.

We can get rid of Time, as the government obviously wants to, but will it have the desired result? Canadian Geographic magazine is a quarter the size of the National Geographic but it is more expensive. Canadian magazines are seriously disadvantaged and you have to be really patriotic to support many of them. There are some good articles in them but it is doubtful whether they will be able to probe the larger issues as do the American magazines. Canadians like to read American magazines, and this is partly because Canadian magazines spend so much of their time telling us that we should be good Canadians, just as the CBC spends a lot of time telling us that we are polluting the atmosphere. Sometimes you feel guilty to be alive. Much Canadian writing is directed along similar lines.

Non-Canadian Publications

The advertising in Maclean's magazine is pretty well divided into four groups—liquor, tobacco, travel and cars. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) tells us that alcohol and tobacco are major health problems, but the advertising revenue comes largely from the four areas I have mentioned.

I think it can be fairly said that alcohol is a serious problem. I do not often agree with the premier of my province who is a member of the NDP, but when he says there is too much emphasis on liquor advertising I am inclined to think he is on a good wicket, as the English would say. And what about automobiles? We are told that their use will diminish in the future so that factor will reduce advertising in the magazines and periodicals. Travel will also be reduced if the dire forecasts of energy shortages prove to be correct.

It does not logically follow that the advertising dollars which presently go to Time will automatically go to Canadian periodicals when it leaves the country, nor is it certain they would be able to use them. Will they be able to produce writing of the same standard? I notice that CP Air advertises in Newsweek magazine. Presumably this is not deductible. CP Air is a Canadian company obviously attempting to attract American travellers.

I should like to say that I support the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and agree with her wholeheartedly.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of the excellent amendment put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). I do so as one who participated in the examination of this bill when it was before the committee, and I also participated in this debate when the bill was before the House.

It is interesting that we should reflect tonight on the fact that the vote at second reading stage of this bill was only reached when the government imposed closure. Even after the imposition of closure two prominent supporters of the government voted against the bill. I refer to the hon. member for Montreal-Bourassa (Mr. Trudel), who unfortunately is not in his seat, and the hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Flynn).

When the bill went to committee, notwithstanding the tremendous interest there was in the legislation, we as a committee found ourselves again operating under the constraint of closure. The very first move the government made was to impose closure on the time of the committee. We were in fact given approximately one month to examine the bill and the many witnesses who had signified their intention of appearing and giving evidence.

I should like to speak on one aspect of the experience of this bill that was dealt with by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in her speech last Thursday, and again in her intervention on Friday last. In my experience in this House, and in participating in committees of this House, I have never seen the government impose such rigid discipline on its members, actually denying members the right to participate in the examination of this bill as it did with its own members when the bill was before committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, who has an amendment before the House which I support and commend to members, was denied the right time after time after time by the government members on that committee to be heard in that committee—and not only the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

I should like to point out for the benefit of the House some other very interesting aspects of the examination of this bill by members of the committee. The hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart) had been the very distinguished chairman of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts all during the last parliament and the one before, and has been a member of this committee ever since. Yet the hon. member for Cochrane was denied the right to sit on this committee because of his known opposition to the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. Motion No. 4 deals with the definition of a Canadian magazine. Perhaps the hon. member would limit his remarks to the motion.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, we are dealing with report stage of the bill and I am bringing my remarks to the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway now before the House and the reasons why it was necessary for her to move the amendment. I was talking about the hon. member for Cochrane who had been the distinguished chairman of the committee and who was denied the right not only to sit on the committee but to participate in it because of his opposition to this bill.

● (2100)

The hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert), another outstanding and dedicated member of that same committee, was also denied the right to participate in its debates because of his opposition to the bill.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McGrath: And what about the opposition to this bill of the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Roy)? Was he given an opportunity to participate in committee?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Never.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. McGrath: And what about the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin) who made such an outstanding contribution—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Timmins is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): Madam Speaker, I do not like to disappoint the hon. member, but I never requested the opportunity to participate in that committee.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I understand why the hon. member did not request the opportunity to sit on the committee. He knew what happened to his colleague from Cochrane, to his colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway, and to his colleague from Vaudreuil. They were all denied the right to participate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I remind the hon. member that motion No. 4 has to do with the definition of a Canadian magazine. The motion is restricted in scope and the hon. member ought to address his remarks only to the motion. The remarks the hon. member is presently making could be made on third reading.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I intend to participate in the debate on third reading. I submit to you, with great deference, that we sat here last Friday and last Thursday and listened to hon. members make the same kind of intervention that I am making this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member has been brought to order several times. He must speak to motion No. 4 or the subamendment.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, I was merely trying to speak in the vein in which other hon. members have spoken, including the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and including the chief government whip, the government's disciplinarian. I am trying to set the record straight, because the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, and really this is what my remarks are all about, stood in her place and said she was denied the right to participate in the committee; she was denied the right to contribute to the deliberations of that committee. I submit that what the hon. member said was accurate and is a matter of record.

It is obvious that the government's bill is a shambles. I can only echo the words of the hon. member for Scarborough West, a government supporter, who said in the House last week that it would be in the public interest to withdraw this bill. He said that this bill was not, in fact, in the public interest.

Mr. Martin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate very much being referred to in the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) but I wish that he would keep to the context of what I actually said. I do not think I indicated at any time that Bill C-58 as such should be withdrawn. I supported the amendment—and this is the reason for my concern—because the 80 per cent content rule was not contained in the legislation.

Mr. McGrath: Madam Speaker, that was not a point of order. It was a point of debate, and the hon. member ought to know better.

The government is in trouble with this legislation, and knows it. The government ought to harken to the advice of some of its own supporters and withdraw this bill. I say that, even in view of the back room accord which has been reached in the case of Reader's Digest. That decision could be withdrawn at any time at the whim or the pleasure of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) or his successor. That minister, or a successor in that portfolio, could withdraw tomorrow the interpretation leading to the accord and redefine what is meant by "substantially the same," or "80 per cent different". That will show you the kind of future Reader's Digest can expect in this country. I submit that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was correct when he said that this is just not good enough. This is not the way to treat a company that has been a good corporate citizen of this country and has provided Canadians with good reading material for the past 30 years.

In my view this bill is not aimed at Reader's Digest, and I do not say this merely because of the accord entered into with that magazine. It is aimed solely at Time magazine. And what will it achieve? If passed, the bill will be instrumental in displacing from their jobs 45 Canadians who are with Time. It will do away with the Canadian section of Time magazine, with all its faults; if that is not counterproductive I do not know what is. More particularly, and I think this explains the government's persistence with this bill, it will satisfy Senator Keith Davey and the publishers of Maclean's magazine, and nobody else.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. The hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I had not intended participating in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: My hon. friends opposite can jeer, hoot, yell, and scream all they want. I tell them that since coming to the House of Commons I have never received so many letters on any subject, if one excludes the tax reform legislation, as I have on this subject.

An hon. Member: You've got to be kidding.

Mr. Alexander: I hear an hon. member say, "You've got to be kidding." I tell the hon. member I have received many letters indicating that the vast majority of Canadians dislike the government's approach to the subject, do not like what the government is doing, and resent what the government is trying to force down the throats of the people.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It's a cruel and unusual punishment.

Mr. Alexander: I admire the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt).

Mr. McGrath: She's a good member.

Mr. Alexander: She's an excellent member because she stands up to be counted. She is not like the rest of her colleagues who run and hide their heads in shame behind the curtain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Stand up to be counted.

Mr. Alexander: Her subamendment makes sense. She will have nothing to do with content, an unworkable concept which can destroy most Canadian periodicals, magazines and newspapers overnight.

Mr. McGrath: Especially magazines like MD of Canada.

Mr. Alexander: As my hon. friend from St. John's East says, especially magazines like MD of Canada. Adopting the content approach would bring disastrous results to such magazines which serve the medical profession and others. The government's approach could destroy these magazines.

An hon. Member: When did you last read MD of Canada?

Mr. Alexander: Motion No. 4, as amended by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway would read:

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in Clause 1 by adding immediately after line 14, at page 1, the following.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of this act or regulations, a periodical shall be deemed to be a Canadian issue of a Canadian periodical if 75 per cent of its directors and ownership are Canadian and its editing and publication functions are controlled and conducted in Canada.

No member in his right senses will fault that. Any who fault it sit on your right, Madam Speaker, with one or two exceptions.

Why have hon. members opposite not supported the significant contribution the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway made in moving her subamendment? It seems to me that the government is trying to save certain periodicals operating in this country. This bill will not save Canadian periodicals. I will explain why.

The other day the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), who has been involved with this bill from the beginning, put on record significant statistics relating to Canadian advertising dollars. If I am not mistaken he said that only 2 per cent of advertising dollars in Canada is directed to periodicals, whereas 6.5 per cent of the advertising dollars spent in the United States is directed to periodicals. He said that 20 per cent of the advertising dollars spent in this country is directed to radio, television and newspapers. In effect he said that if Bill C-58 passes, there will not be much future in Canada for Canadian periodicals. That point we cannot escape or ignore.

Something else that bothers me involves the lack of interest in consumer concern. No matter how you put it, this is cultural censorship, a denial of free access to information which includes that given by Reader's Digest and Time for over 30 years. It has unquestionably been of significant benefit to Canadians. They like it and they want it. The letters that I received registered that concern without any equivocation whatsoever.

We talk about equity. The backdoor deal and the hanky-panky of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), which saved Reader's Digest but gave the axe to Time, are discriminatory, unprincipled, heavy-handed and callous. This is surely an inequity. If the government moved in such a way to save Reader's Digest there should be some effort on the part of the government to recognize the plight of Time. However, the government believes in discrimination in this regard.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) is unbending. The Minister of National Revenue is unbending. He has now set up the Cullen tribunal whereby interpretation of "substantially the same as" is now within his hands and those of the bureaucrats. It is not within the purview of the courts of this land. That is another important issue. A principle has now been set which can be said to be dangerous in both its intent and conclusion.

As I listen to the debate I wonder why the government is so hell-bent in moving the way that it is, keeping in mind the legitimate concern that has been registered not only on this side of the House but by members of all parties. They have indicated to the government that it should slow down. It is moving in the wrong direction. The government is moving in a direction that the future will unquestionably show was wrong and which cannot by itself, in terms of this bill, save Canadian periodicals.

In conclusion I have no hesitation in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I ask government members in particular to listen to what the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Ontario have indicated because I believe they are on the right track. Being on the right track I respectfully submit that this bill should be sent back, withdrawn, and redrafted in order to bring about principles and attitudes that are consistent with the needs of the Canadian consumer, something the government has completely ignored.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Madam Speaker, it was not my intention of speak in this debate, but I was moved to do so by virtue of some of the rather unfortunate comments made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) in attempting to answer the very legitimate and pungent complaints and observations raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen).

Members on the government side have made a real attempt to misconstrue the points raised by members on this side. The great majority of those in this House are certainly interested in trying to promote and encourage the Canadian publication industry. We want to encourage the vital publishing industry of which this country is capable.

As pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), this particular piece of legislation was brought forward by the government through the process of closure. In my estimation and observation, there has been a manipulation on the committee side. It is an indication that the government is rather uncertain of its position. It would very much like to curtail the debate that is taking place, not only in this House but in the media and among the people of the country.

There are two facets of this debate that bother me. One is the crux of the complaint raised by members of the opposition. Through the government's negotiation with Reader's Digest and its decision with regard to Canadian content, the fact is that the matter is simply up for grabs in negotiation with the government of the day.

Even though I have only been here a short time I find it obvious that the amendment presented by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik) is absolutely essential if we are to have any semblance of reasonable application of the law respecting the publishing industry in Canada today.

I do not care how many ways government members argue that this is not censorship and that they are not interfering with the publishing or involved in determining which publications will be published in Canada. It is obvious from what happened with regard to Reader's Digest that there is a great degree of flexibility, that the government can, and in fact will introduce into its application just who can get tax credit for advertising in Canada. Therefore this is a very unfortunate situation that we face today.

As a member of the Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments I spend a lot of time considering regulations. I thought I was put on that committee as a form of punishment for a new backbencher because every week I am faced with mounds of regulations. The committee looks at regulations in an attempt to see whether they are in fact authorized under the governing statute, whether they in fact carry out the principles of natural justice, or whether they are arbitrary and ultra vires of any particular act. My experience on that committee leads me to believe that wherever possible we should be as specific and explicit in our laws as we can in the statute, as opposed to leaving the matter to legislation through order in council and regulation. This is what we are experiencing at present.

There is no definition of what constitutes Canadian content or of what constitutes a Canadian publication. What prevents the government putting forward a straightforward definition of Canadian content in percentage terms? Why not do so and leave the interpretation of such a definition to the courts, as opposed to a tribunal or to the discretion of the minister at any particular time?

The publishing industry is a large one and we realize that a fair amount of money is being made by successful magazines. I suggest that if we allow the government's proposal to go forward we may find that the stakes are sufficiently high as, possibly, to produce a backroom situation involving members of any particular administration with respect to obtaining a favourable interpretation of what constitutes a Canadian publication so that a magazine can obtain tax benefits by conforming to the definition. The proposition being put forward by the opposition is a reasonable and sane one. I commend it to members on the government side. It is not what one could call a big deal. We are simply asking the administration to put its definition into a statute and to take it out of the realm of arbitrary decision by a cabinet minister.

I am surprised that more members on the government side are not coming out in support of this view, that they are not coming forward to "give Ottawa a jolt", or perhaps to "give Ottawa a Holt!" I commend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway for her actions in connection with this bill, a responsible move on her part to bring some sanity to the legislation before us. I should like to see more hon. members supporting her stand.

I am not normally convinced that editorial comment should dictate the policy we adopt in this House but I am impressed that editorial pages are increasingly questioning the wisdom of the government in persisting in its present course of action. I am sure that when the announcement was made confirming that an arrangement had been reached between Reader's Digest and the government making it possible for Reader's Digest to come within the terms of the bill, the government believed it had taken the heat out of this issue and solved a substantial part of its problem. Madam Speaker, questions of principle are not so easily set aside by arrangements of convenience, and the principle involved in this legislation is far more important than whether the government has been able to reach an accommodation with Reader's Digest.

Suppose that next year Reader's Digest were to contemplate making some change in its policy. Would it be making any new arrangements with the government in consequence and, if so, would the government be so receptive once the legislation had been passed into law and the issue was no longer before the public eye? Would the attitude of the government change when the subject was no longer a matter for discussion in the House of Commons? Possibly we should keep this debate going so that the people of Canada might have an opportunity to communicate with the government—

An hon. Member: Filibuster!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I am trying to make a concise and reasonable contribution to the debate. When one tries to be logical, members on the other side begin to get nervous.

An hon. Member: You were nice and short on television and more effective.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: There is no provision for television editing in the House of Commons, so I shall have to ask hon. members to bear with me a little longer.

The hon. member for St. John's East made a valid point when he indicated that the reason we are dealing with these amendments on the report stage is because the participation of members on the government side who had taken part in the proceedings in committee had been thwarted. This is one of the criticisms levelled at the committee system as it operates in practice. Had the government taken a more flexible approach, had it allowed its members on the committee to take part in the proceedings without restriction and to put forward amendments at that stage, the progress of the bill might have fared far better.

There is no surer way of giving rise to a long debate on legislation than by first of all imposing closure, and then, second, by trying to manipulate the membership of a committee. I hope the government learns something from this debate and that in future it will allow its members to continue to sit on a committee even though they may hold certain views which are contrary to those held by the government with respect to legislation under consideration.

I want to assure members on the government side that, as far as I know, we are as interested as they are in the Canadian publishing industry. I believe though that we place more emphasis on a positive approach to encouraging the industry in Canada as opposed to the questionable, negative approach the government is taking and the generally vague legislation it appears determined to enforce.

● (2130)

I ask hon. members to encourage the government to withdraw this legislation, because basically it is bad. If that is not possible, I ask the government to allow the legislation to remain unpromulgated for at least one year so as to allow the publications affected by this legislation to make appropriate adjustments. It seems to me if the government demonstrates it is genuinely interested in dealing in a fair and even-handed way with this problem, instead of adopting a heavy-handed attitude, it will have far better success in getting this legislation through the House.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise somewhat reluctantly because I do not like to stand in my place at any time to support something that the government does, since it does so many bad and ridiculous things. However, I doubt very much whether this legislation is one of them.

A great deal as been said in this debate by members on both sides about censorship. I have had the opportunity of listening to and reading some of this debate, so tonight I decided to take a look at the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: I know I am a little late but it would seem to me useful if all hon. members read the legislation, which occupies only one and a half pages and is simple to read.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You have to look at the main act as well.

Mr. Leggatt: I can assure the hon. member that I have read that too. This bill says, in effect, two things. First, it says that those Canadians advertising in a non-Canadian newspaper which is directed primarily to a market in Canada will no longer receive a tax deduction. Secondly, it says that those advertising in the broadcasting media will no longer receive a tax deduction for an advertisement directed primarily to a market in Canada and broadcast by a foreign broadcasting undertaking. In other words, the tax advantage given to two particular publications has been removed. We have spent a good deal of time in this House talking about a red herring, in my opinion. I am just wondering how long it will be before Canadians start to grow up and try to be Canadian for a change.

I am sorry the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) is not here, but he was so worried about CP Air advertising in Newsweek to encourage United States traffic to use CP Air services. This situation is clearly covered by the bill. The bill refers to advertising that is directed primarily to the Canadian market. The market referred to by the hon. member is the U.S. market, so CP Air would clearly be allowed the deduction my hon. friend was so worried about.

Mr. Towers: Read the bill again; you obviously do not understand it.

Mr. Leggatt: Now, Mr. Speaker, what are we about here? What is the bill trying to accomplish? It is not a question of who will be allowed to publish. We have been determining what is substantially Canadian and what is substantially foreign for some time now. Where were all these defenders of freedom over the last 20 years when we were making determinations in connection with Newsweek and similar magazines? In terms of intent, this legislation does nothing more nor less than determine who in the publishing industry in Canada will be assisted. The bill has nothing to do with who will be permitted to publish. There is no tariff being imposed at the border. I suggest the arguments so far has been a red herring. I welcome publications from all over the world, and so does every other Canadian. It is wrong to scare the Canadian people with the idea that somehow we are spending our time trying to determine what they can and cannot read.

An hon. Member: I am glad somebody over there has read the bill.

Mr. Leggatt: What the minister has done in regard to Reader's Digest gives some of us considerable cause for thought. I welcome the attempt of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) to amend this legislation; the amendment should be right in the bill where it belongs. I very much regret the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) making this kind of, I would have to say sweetheart deal with Reader's Digest, because no such deal has been made with Time. It was completely unnecessary to make that special arrangement. It was not out in the open.

I can understand why this debate is being dragged out. I presume that tomorrow there is going to be another announcement that somehow the rules have been changed as well for Time, though I hope not.

An hon. Member: What was changed?

Mr. Leggatt: The content rule and the licensing provisions. The hon. member knows very well what was changed. I see the minister is shaking his head. Surely the pool of articles available to Reader's Digest in Canada is under licence in terms of the U.S. parent company. In other words, the editorial content of that Canadian magazine is being determined by the pool of articles that is available to the Canadian publication. This being the case, one of the provisions of the legislation has been defeated by the minister's sweetheart deal with Reader's Digest, and that is why I regret it.

I think Reader's Digest should carry articles gathered from all kinds of places. We do not need a special arrangement between Reader's Digest of Canada and Reader's Digest of the United States since the pool of articles has already been determined and copyright exists. If the minister says I am wrong, then fine, but it seems to me that we are defeating one of the purposes of the legislation by allowing re-editing in Canada of this narrow pool of articles which are not generally available to Reader's Digest in Canada. In other words, it is not a Canadian digest at all. Once more we have an American magazine masquerading as a Canadian magazine, and therefore giving it a tax advantage that the government so rightly took away under this bill.

My intervention, Mr. Speaker, is brief. I cannot support the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway though I am pleased to see her put it on the order paper. I am glad she has tried to make it part of the legislation, where it belongs, so we can engage in some meaningful debate about it. That is all I wish to say at this time, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Leggatt.]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, it is not my desire to launch myself into any kind of attack on another member and I do not propose to do so this evening, but I am very concerned about some of the comments made on this bill by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). I am concerned about his over-simplification of the intent of this bill, about his interpretation of it. There is nothing at all simple about this bill. I challenge the hon. member to give the House an indication of what is simple about the bill other than perhaps the people who drafted it.

● (2140)

Let me liken the amendment that has been proposed and the bill before us to the policies of the previous provincial government in Victoria. That government also wanted to get into the ball game of deciding what the people should read, or at least what they would see and hear through the television media. I refer to the infamous Channel 10 situation. That channel was supposed to be an educational channel, but was really a propaganda machine of the administration of the time. I know the hon. member for New Westminster will reject that proposal out of hand, but nevertheless this was of very real concern. Taking into account the kind of minister who was proposing this and what subsequently happened to him, I am not ready to be convinced that this was not really a propaganda ploy of that government at that time.

I really must say that you cannot have it both ways. Either it is censorship or a form thereof; either it is propaganda or a form thereof, or it is not. It is just that simple, and that is the only simple thing about it. The only simple thing is the basic thrust and the intent of the bill.

Having regard to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), I must say I am astounded at the lack of favourable response on the part of those on the other side. I think it is a sensible and a reasonable proposal. I am also astounded at the lack of acceptance by the government in respect of all the amendments that have been put forward to this bill. Surely the government has received some kind of message by this time. Surely it realizes what our position is in respect of this bill. Surely the government must realize the kind of concerns we have. Are we concerned because of some kind of political motivation or some deep ingrained Tory philosophy? Of course that is not the case. We are concerned because of a sense of knowing what is right and what is wrong.

Let us get back to this old red herring we have heard so much about. In fact it is no longer a red herring, it has become a mighty great whale that we are supposed to be dragging across in respect of this item of censorship.

An hon. Member: A red whale.

Mr. Brisco: There is no question in my mind as to the intent and the thrust of this bill. I am sure there is no question in that regard in the minds of any of those who have taken part in this debate or brought forward amendments. I have no brief for Maclean's magazine or for Canadian publishers. Surely if they were going to, they have had the opportunity to make it on their own. That opportunity has long since presented itself. I am not opposed to the basic idea of taxing Reader's Digest, Time, or requiring Canadian participation. That is an excellent idea to which I am not at all opposed.

What I am opposed to is this vague thing introduced by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). The minister knows, and this has been discussed in the House, that he has been placed in an impossible dilemma. He realizes the bill should include regulations. Where are those regulations? In order to have these regulations put into effect the minister has recourse to one simple expedient. He should withdraw the bill from the House and send it back to the committee. That committee should have on its membership the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and one or two others from the other side of this House who could then assist in redrafting the bill so that it might be brought back into this House where it would then make sense and be safe for Canadians. The minister knows he is stuck with a bill that is unfair and destructive, and is stuck with a procedure that is undemocratic.

How can the Crown interpret the law for the purpose of achieving a direction which is against the literal meaning of the law itself? Of course it cannot, but that is in fact what the Minister of National Revenue seeks to do, and by doing that he abrogates to the government powers it does not now have. This is a very dangerous precedent. It is dangerous to the security of the public and it is dangerous to the sanctity of the law. Our lives are governed far too much now by regulation and, my God, we see examples of that every day in this House and every day in our offices.

The minister is faced with a fait accompli unless he withdraws this bill and allows those government members to support the motion by Simma. I am sorry, I really should not refer to her by name as that is not done in this place. I had made reference to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. We have such affection for that hon. member that it is very easy to address her by her first name.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Come over to this side where we love you.

Mrs. Holt: I like it here.

Mr. Brisco: As a relative newcomer to this House and to the system of things here I wonder quite frankly how much different and how much improved legislation would be if hon. members on the other side would listen to the reasoned arguments of their confrères. But no, as has been written into the context of the records here, like trained seals they pound their desks in approval or denial.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brisco: Did the hon. member wish to ask a question?

An hon. Member: You have to say something before we can.

An hon. Member: And that is the longest speech you have made during this session.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brisco: May I continue now that these unreasoned interjections of the hon. members have ceased?

Non-Canadian Publications

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please.

Mr. Brisco: This evening I had the opportunity of reading through the review of another publication, MD of Canada.

An hon. Member: Oh no.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there is some way that hon. member referred to as "radar" over there could zip his lip? It would be different if what he had to contribute made sense. In any event, I had the opportunity of reading a review of MD of Canada, and I am sure the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Railton) is familiar with that journal. I recognize there is an amendment to look after these supposedly professional, agricultural, and trade magazines, but without accepting this amendment there will have to be other exceptions made. I suggest that we should deal with them all right now.

An hon. Member: Remember that phrase "from time to time".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brisco: Either we deal with the whole thing now by taking this bill out of the House and sending it back to the committee where it belongs, or we will have to deal piecemeal with all these anomalies and odd situations which will occur as we progress. We will have to look after all these oddballs, these so-called loopholes with reference to these trade journals and professional magazines.

An hon. Member: To whom are you referring?

● (2150)

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, was someone addressing a question to me?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) rising to ask a question?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the hon. member referred to oddballs I wonder if he would identify to whom he was referring.

An hon. Member: There are too many of them.

An hon. Member: Don't take it personally.

Mr. Brisco: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member took my reference to oddballs as a personal affront. That is his problem, not mine. I shall continue with the debate. This afternoon I had the opportunity to review MD of Canada. I was very impressed by its international flavour and content, just as I would be equally interested in reading the cattlemen's magazine with its international flavour and content and its articles submitted by foreign authors not referring to things in Canada but things which affect Canadians, be it in medicine, agriculture, the beef industry, or whatever.

My concern is that somewhere down the line this type of journal will be affected if it cannot be favourably covered by the legislation. Finally, my concern is that I have more than five minutes to go. Surely there is another member over there with another question.

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are very anxious to deal with this bill as fully and as fairly as we can having regard to the important principle involved. I would respectfully suggest that government members who persist in interrupting members of the opposition when they are speaking are doing nothing to advance this. If government members are truly anxious to have this matter proceeded with they should sit quietly and allow opposition members to make their speeches, and extend to us the same courtesy we would extend them if they chose to speak on this bill.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I must rise on this point of order. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) at about five minutes to ten tends to be very farcical. This bill has been subject to a filibuster since last Thursday. From the quality of the debate from the other side and the remarks made by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton it is evident that an attempt is being made by the opposition to delay passage of this bill and to prevent effect being given to the will of this House.

An hon. Member: What will?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There was quite a bit of noise in the House and I think the hon. member who had the floor should be entitled to continue.

Mr. Brisco: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, just as I thank the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). After a full day in this House and a full day in my office—and the same applies to other members—it may well be that the quality of the presentation and debate perhaps dwindles somewhat as the hour approaches ten o'clock.

That should be no reflection on the sincere efforts of members on this side of this House and some from the other side of the House to be heard in their attempt to see that this bill is removed from the House, or at least amended as proposed by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, one of the very interesting things in respect of this bill is the fact that in the beginning there was a wave of nationalism on the part of the Canadian public that was really quite interesting. However, that wave of so-called nationalism has waned as the public has perceived the true purpose and intent of this Liberal bill. There is no question about the manner in which my constituents and those of other members have addressed themselves to this bill. Their concern is now being reflected and is the antithesis of the proposal originally put forward in this bill by the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner).

It is interesting to note the backlash from the backwoods, to the grassroots if you like. These are the people who are most concerned and who will be affected and who will be affected. The little old lady who reads Reader's Digest is the type of person writing to me. These people are really concerned. Let me return to the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. I would support this amendment right down the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Brisco.]

Mr. Brisco: Either there is support for this amendment, which is intelligent and well thought out, or the bill will be denied by this House and by this party. It is either that, or the bill must go back to the committee. I would urge that this House and the minister reconsider the decision. This debate is being prolonged and protracted, as the minister knows, simply because this side will not give an inch on Bill C-58 until it has been intelligently amended. At this point I would inquire of you, Mr. Speaker, if it would be safe to call it ten o'clock.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AGRICULTURE—REDUCTION IN FEDERAL SHARE OF COST OF CROP INSURANCE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OFFSET

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, on December 20 last I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan), whether the $10 million reduction in the federal share of crop insurance will mean that the farmers, and the provinces will be expected to cover this reduction. The Prime Minister replied: "In our cuts we are expecting everybody to bear some share of the sacrifice . . ." Surely the Minister of Agriculture should have said he would make cuts in other areas rather than important programs such as crop insurance, farm credit, and so on.

● (2200)

Out of a total budget of $664 million it would have been better to reduce expenditures first in the area of professional and special services, utilities, materials and supplies, which total $9.4 million and $12.8 million respectively in the 1975-76 estimates, since the former too often causes morale problems, and the latter too often proves to be unnecessary.

Federal contributions to crop insurance have grown from $16 million in 1973, to $30 million in 1974, to $49 million in 1975, to a projected $62 million in 1976; and some .1 million is to be subtracted from the $62 million. However, the federal government is already committed to give a certain level of contributions to the provinces.

What happens if the projected figure of $62 million is reached for the level of federal contributions? Where does the crop insurance section get this extra $10 million? No one seems to know.

In 1976 the federal government is committed to make a certain level of contributions; 1977 is different. The crop insurance people talk of restricting the amount of insurance available to an individual.

For example, if strawberries can be insured up to a 70 cents per pound level, this would be cut back to a maximum of 60 cents per pound. Does this not go against the very concept of insurance? The aim of insurance is to protect from unforeseen losses. Reducing the maximum level of insurance only seems to harm the farmer's interests more.

In farm credit it originally had $400 million to give out in loans. This was cut by $20 million in June of 1975, and by another $20 million in December. These cuts have severely constrained the farm credit program. Already the farm credit corporation has committed part of next year's funds. This means fewer people will receive loans. In 1974 the average size loan was $50,000. In 1975 it was $65,000. Inflation and higher input costs have caused this rise so that now, when costs are at their highest, loans are at their lowest.

On farm credit loans a farmer pays 9 per cent interest and has 29 years to pay it back. Such aid is invaluable to the young farmer just starting out. However, with these cutbacks the Farm Credit Corporation seems to be becoming more conservative and refuses to lend money to those farmers it considers to be risks. This latter group usually includes the young farmers.

Rather than attacking these programs, why did the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) not look elsewhere for cut backs? In the Department of Agriculture itself cuts could have been made in professional and special services, and in materials and supplies. The former group is largely made up of consultants and these outside people have often caused morale problems among regular workers. Their budget has soared 35.7 per cent from the 1974-75 estimates of $6.9 million to the 1975-76 estimates of $9.4 million.

One cannot help wondering why the Department of Agriculture needs $12.8 million for material and supplies? Is its turnover rate for furniture etc., that high?

Although cuts in government spending are necessary it would seem that the government is wrong in making cuts in crop insurance and farm credit. These cuts will only exacerbate the problems of many farmers. Should these problems not be met now, when costs are reasonably low, rather than in the future when it might be too late?

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, since 1959 the federal government has assisted the provinces in making all-risk crop insurance available to Canadian farmers under the authority of the Crop Insurance Act. The program is designed to stabilize incomes of individual producers by a guarantee against losses by natural hazards. For those farmers who have purchased crop insurance there has been a satisfaction of security and protection against crop loss disaster and many farmers who have experienced crop losses have been paid indemnities.

Crop insurance is a joint federal-provincial program in which the federal government, the provincial government, and producers participate. The program is most beneficial to producers as the producer pays for only 50 per cent of premium costs and none of the administrative costs.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) has written to all his provincial counterparts explaining to them the reasons for restraining the increases in expenditures for the 1976-77 fiscal year. Officials of the provincial governments have generally expressed agreement with the restraint policy undertaken by the federal government. Provincial crop insurance officials have indicated to the department their willingness to meet with our officials to negotiate a mutually satisfactory means of implementing the announced intentions. Therefore the precise manner by which the reduction of federal contributions to this program will be accomplished has not yet been determined. It is not anticipated that the current costs sharing formula will be altered in the next crop year. Therefore there should be no additional cost to either the provinces or the producer.

The commitment of the federal government to this program is clearly indicated by the growth of the program in recent years. In the 1974-75 fiscal year expenditures under this program amounted to only $31 million. Contributions in the current year are expected to reach some $49 million, an increase of $3 million, or approximately 5 per cent, over the 1975-76 program has been provided for—even after the reduction of $10.1 million. Therefore it should be quite evident to all that the federal government is not reducing its participation in the crop insurance program, but rather, is applying some restraint to the rate of growth.

It remains the intention of the government to support the crop insurance program as a primary means of assistance to producers who suffer serious crop losses as a result of natural hazards.

MANPOWER—POSSIBLE ELIMINATION OF SOME YOUTH ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS—ALTERNATIVE MEASURES TO INCREASE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I am returning this evening to a question which has concerned me for some time, one with respect to the chronic and consistent high unemployment rate among young Canadian people under the age of 24 years.

May I say at the outset that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Andras) is in the House to respond to this question and I think this is an indication of the seriousness of his concern with this issue. I believe that the minister has tried very strenuously to provide some workable solution to what I consider one of the most serious social situations that exist in this country. It is not something new; it is something that has existed for some years and has been particularly exacerbated during the time the Trudeau government has been in office.

I suspect when the history of the eight or nine years that this government has been in office—

Mr. Pelletier: Twenty years.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I would hope if it should befall this country that the government is in office that long that it will not have as sorry a record as it has with respect to unemployment among young people—we would have millions of young people who would have undergone the most disheartening situation of being unemployed for a long time.

On December 11, prior to the introduction of the anti-inflation measures taken by the government in the middle of December, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) whether rumours suggesting that programs like Opportunities for Youth and the Company of Young Canadians would be curtailed. The Prime Minister simply indicated that the government was aware of the importance of those programs and also was aware of its own responsibilities with respect to anti-inflation measures. In spite of the fact that on December 11, when I raised the question, some 317,000 young people were unemployed—a figure which has now risen a month later to 327,000 unemployed and I suspect when we receive the figures tomorrow it will again show an increase—the only kind of firm indication that the government was concerned about this problem was the announcement that the Department of Manpower and Immigration was assigning $24 million to obtaining student employment next summer.

That would create an estimated 12,000 jobs, a drop in the bucket, and far fewer jobs that the government had said it would create by way of various programs established in the preceding three or four years. That shows how much the government's anti-inflation fight is being fought on the backs of the disadvantaged and of those unable to protest against the government's action. Young people, for the most part, are not organized into pressure groups. Many of them are in secondary educational or post-secondary educational institutions, or have just left such institutions, and their job opportunities are limited.

Surprisingly, from time to time Prime Minister has made protestations to suggest that he takes the problem seriously. Although I congratulate the Minister of Manpower and Immigration for being concerned about this problem, I suggest that he ought to be more forthright than he was with my colleague from Hamilton West who, on December 9, raised specific questions about youth unemployment. The minister indicated then that a number of programs are designed to alleviate the problem of youth unemployment. He referred to such things as manpower mobility, youth training, counselling, and so on, general programs relating to the specific problem affecting young people. The minister was good enough to suggest that, after he had looked at the statistical trends on which the hon. member based his question, he might be able to answer the question in more detail, and presumably provide the country with leadership in alleviating this serious and continuing problem.

I will not read questions asked in the House in the past half dozen years about youth unemployment. Instead I shall quote from the report of the committee on youth, commissioned by the government in 1969, and received in 1970. On page 166 of the report there occurs the following passage:

> Not only is the rate of youth unemployment rising, it is consistently at a higher ratio among this age group than all others. It is evident, first of all, that no substantive solution can occur until one of Canadian economic policy's major goals becomes full employment within sectors, whether by age, sex or region.

After referring to the high level of youth unemployment that existed four or five years ago, the report said this:

> The present tragedy is more than personal; it is societal in scope. Canadian society cannot seem to generate a broad range of options for its young in the employment field.

The government has not been short of advice. It received the advice of the Hunter task force of 1971, and the advice of my party in the last general election. We said:

> For the immediate short term, a Progressive Conservative government would establish a jobs agency for young Canadians in the Department of Manpower to:
> a. co-ordinate and focus federal economic and social policies affecting youth employment;
> b. seek to co-ordinate provincial and private-sector policies affecting youth employment;
> c. provide a year-round national counselling facility designed to serve young Canadians; and
> d. provide young Canadians with one agency that would go out and locate potential jobs, encourage young people to come for aid in finding work, and encourage potential employers to consider hiring young workers.

Those are some of our suggestions. Since the government has not been reluctant to use some of our suggestions to do with other matters brought forward in 1974, I hope it will review some of the other things we said somewhat less than two years ago about this basic social problem. Perhaps this evening the minister, in responding to the question and to the concerns raised by the Prime Minister on December 11, will provide some leadership and encouragement.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, regrettably the three minutes for reply permitted on the late show does not allow one to cover the whole ground. Without question I share deeply the concern the hon. member has expressed with regard to this continuing phenomenon which has been exacerbated in Canada by the rapid growth of the labour force, a statistic with which we are all familiar. We share this misfortune with other countries which are beginning to realize the serious and perhaps all pervasive, long-lasting damage which can be done if we do not mutually find ways to correct the situation. Incidentally, I shall be attending an OECD conference in two or three weeks which will deal with this subject matter. I say that to give the hon. member some information. I hope it will help. I might also indicate that many other countries are facing the same problems without, unfortunately, yet finding pat solutions.

We have cut out Opportunities for Youth. I am glad to get the indication that that program was accepted by the hon. member. However, it was not accepted by all members of his party. It was, I felt, an unhappy necessity because of budget constraints on one hand and looking very carefully at where we get the biggest bang for a buck, if I can put it that way.

The hon. member understated the position when he mentioned that the $24 million will provide only 12,000 jobs. That is a fact with regard to the direct employment. There will be another 110,000 indirect jobs provided in unpaid program activities and the like.

I really think that to concentrate on where the solutions must be found in the intermediate and longer term, it will have to be in the private sector. I do not think in any size of job creation that we attempt to soak all of this that the government, as an employer of last resort, would be successful, and in fact could introduce other evils or difficulties that we better watch very carefully before we go that route.

About 85 per cent of the jobs provided to students in summer, in spite of the job creation of the federal and provincial governments working in co-operation, has been in the private sector. That is where the gains are to be made if we are going to make them.

Last summer we operated 300 special Manpower centres for students. We received co-operation from such organizations as the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and so on. That has an ongoing lower budget, but far more effective in results than even Opportunities for Youth and the more visibly direct higher profile job creation efforts.

We also addressed ourselves to the employment needs of youth who were no longer in school and had entered the labour market on a permanent basis. It is unfortunate that they encounter a very high unemployment rate. However, I believe the causes are extremely complex. They will not be solved simply by job creation or by the federal government alone.

As unpopular as it may be in certain circles, I am increasingly convinced that part of our problem lies in the school systems. I am not knocking the provincial governments, but I hope they will begin to take a deep look at some of the schooling ideas of the last few years. In too many cases they are not preparing our young people to find gainful employment when they get out of school.

We are consulting businesses and the provinces about the employment problems of youth, as was suggested by the hon. member. We introduced 18 pilot youth employment service projects across the country. They are designed to provide specialized intensive employment placement and counselling service to youth. We do not yet have an evaluation about which I am satisfied. It is not that it is not good; I am simply saying that it is not complete. However, it is the right route.

I indicated that we have worked in co-operation with the chambers of commerce across the country and certain local school boards. This was a special program of job exploration and so on. There are many things we are doing. I hope to have a more appropriate and lengthy opportunity to place on record our ideas in this field.

AIR TRANSPORT—INTRODUCTION OF BILINGUAL AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL IN PROVINCES OTHER THAN QUEBEC

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on December 18 last I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) the following question:

Since the introduction of bilingualism for air traffic controllers is based on constitutional grounds, can the minister inform the House as to his schedule for introducing bilingual services into airports in other provinces of Canada?

The minister replied:

The studies which have been carried out relate essentially to the Province of Quebec, although there was an examination of the question in relation to the National Capital Region. The question of any possible extension is a very difficult one indeed because of the nature of the bilingual quality of the controllers who would be required and there is therefore no plan in this regard. Our first and obvious step is to examine the use of both languages in air traffic control in the Province of Quebec, as the statement I made the other day indicates.

● (2220)

I am deeply disturbed about this issue. I believe the bilingual program was well intended and that it has certainly met the needs of thousands of people who previously had been deprived of government services because they were unilingual French-speaking or unilingual English-speaking. But I am deeply concerned because the program is now being applied to an area which, I am convinced, is not so much a matter of the constitution as one of safety. A spin-off has been the public reaction across Canada.

The promoters of this plan have alienated many people who travel by air in this country. For example, I had a call from a lady in my riding who evidently travels east a good deal saying she would no longer take a plane into Montreal. That is too bad. Then again, because of the haste with which this program has been introduced, a reaction has developed across the country which is unfortunate. It is the impression among many people that the pressure of the bilingual program is so inexorable that people who are not unilingual French or who are not bilingual will be obliged to become bilingual whether they wish to do so or not.

The official position is based on constitutional argument but all of us know that questions involving emotion cannot be solved by the law. There are other ways of solving such questions.

It is my understanding that to be a fully qualified pilot, qualified to fly by instruments, it is necessary to know only approximately 120 English words. That is not asking too much of anyone who really wants to fly. I should like to think it is not too great a burden to impose. The issue here is one of safety.

I had the pleasure a few months ago of visiting Mexico City and on my return from that city I was privileged to sit in the cockpit of the plane while awaiting clearance from the tower for the take-off. I was wearing a headset and listening to the instructions coming from the tower. Most of them were in Spanish but in the jumble of words coming from the headset there was one instruction in English. I did not catch it, but the pilot, with his more acute perception, had no difficulty in doing so.

It may be one's constitutional right to be able to use one's native language, but in my view the lives of hundreds of people are more important than my right to use a particular language. When I hear there have been approximately 27 near-misses since this program began, and when I learn that the Ministry of Transport is refusing to publish details of these near-misses so that the public might be in a position to know about them, I have still greater cause to be concerned. It is now a fact that the tower in Moncton refuses to answer a call that comes in another language.

I have before me the Canadian General Aviation News, the January 1976 issue—I believe a very responsible journal. In an article it has this to say:

The Ministry of Transport appears to be reacting to political pressures in its announced intention to introduce bilingualism into these vital areas. The aviation community is frustrated by the fact that the knowledge and experience it can offer have been ignored. In particular the two groups with the greatest knowledge of the situation, the operational air traffic controllers represented by CATCA and the airline pilots represented by the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, have continually opposed such action.

This Association cannot stand by while misplaced linguistic passion, emotionalism, and political pressure degrade what has been up until now the safest air traffic control service in the world, and jeopardize the safety of the hundreds of thousands of airline passengers who each month go through the airports of the province of Quebec, or the skies overhead.

[Translation]

Mr. Irénée Pelletier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I must pinch hit for a colleague, and give the answer that comes from the department. But following that answer I will have a word to say to the hon. member who asked the question.

[English]

There is no schedule in existence at this time for introducing bilingual services into airports in other provinces of Canada, other than the possibility of such services being provided in the national capital region. Of course one compelling reason for this is that at the present time there are not sufficient bilingual controllers in the air traffic control service to provide such services outside the province of Quebec.

It is also essential that this entry into the provision of bilingual service in the air traffic control service in the province of Quebec, which it must be remembered is a new experience for both the pilots flying in this area and for the controllers providing the service in this area, must be certified to ensure that there is no decrease in safety. With regard to the question as to whether the bilingual or unilingual French pilots will in due course request bilingual service in other provinces, as the minister indicated earlier in reply to a question, this is a hypothetical question and I can only reiterate that at the present time we do not have any intention to provide bilingual services in other provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker—and that does not form part of the answer I have to give the hon. member—I travelled pretty well all over the world, and in most African countries, the French language is used, it is used in France, in Switzerland, in at least 32 countries, and I do not understand at all that the hon. member who lives 3,000 miles away from the place where that is going to apply should come and say that it is a nonsensical reason.

To say that it is a matter of safety rather than a constitutional matter is not really the answer. I travelled across this country. There are pilots who use French, and it is not because one uses that language that one is a less competent pilot than someone who uses the English language.

When you go to Russia you land in the Russian language; when you go to Spain, Italy or some other country of the world you land in the language of that country. I find it absolutely inconceivable that one would come up with questions regarding safety to try to justify a position that one would like to see respected.

The government of Canada already agreed to make it possible, not in the other provinces of this country but in Quebec, for pilots leaving an area of Quebec for another to be able to converse in their language. One would have to be unrealistic to try to take away that entirely legitimate right from people who live in a province and always speak the language of that province.

PROPOSED DEBATE ON REDUCTION OF MILK SUBSIDY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on an urgent and important matter.

In view of the federal government's new dairy policy which reduces production quotas in Canada and of the quite illogical increase in dairy product imports which already represent 5 per cent of the national production of industrial milk, and in light of the federal government's decision to reduce the amount of grants to producers, thus reducing their income, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House request that a special and urgent debate be held to give the elected representatives of the people the opportunity to discuss this essential matter before a final and last minute announcement is made by the government, as the decisions of the federal government in the matter are reached unilaterally without prior consultation with the members of parliament, whereas in the case of the western wheat producers the policy was appropriately discussed and submitted to the House several times.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: As there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY TO FIND MORE HUMANE METHOD OF APPLYING CAPITAL PUNISHMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 relating to a matter of utmost concern to the majority of Canadians. The subject is the capital punishment bill which is to be presented to the House shortly. I therefore hope that all members of the House will give careful consideration to the following motion. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Neil):

That it is the will of this House that the subject of capital punishment be referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and that the said committee study and hear witnesses, if necessary, to find a more humane method of applying capital punishment other than hanging by the rope and that the committee make a full report to parliament with recommendations, no later than March 15, 1976.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED USE OF STATISTICAL SKILLS IN FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to deal with a case of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the government has had years of failure in its attempts to decrease the unemployment rate whereas Statistics Canada has finally succeeded in cutting the unemployment rate from 7 per cent to 6 per cent in the space of one month, and in view of the fact that their most spectacular success was in decreasing the rate of unemployment in Newfoundland from 17.1 per cent in December, 1975 to 11.6 per cent in January 1976, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes):

That the government employ the obviously effective skills of Statistics Canada in their fight against inflation.

Mr. Speaker: The motion requires the unanimous consent of the House.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED ACCESS TO CANADA'S NATURAL RESOURCES AS PRICE OF LINK WITH EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder if he would remove a little of the secrecy involved in Canadian diplomacy in connection with the demand by Denmark and other European countries to the effect that, with regard to the European common market link or any floor price for oil, Canada should give to European countries the same access to our energy resources as Canadians. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs precisely what assurance Canada has given.

● (1410)

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The question raised by the Leader of the Opposition came up during the discussion at the International Energy Agency particularly on the issue of the adopting of the long term program. Canada, because of the implications to which the hon. gentleman has referred, sought and received an exemption from paragraph five of the long term program which may have had implications affecting access on equal terms as Canadians. In the meantime, while this was going on in the International Agency, a reserve was entered by Denmark at the Council of Ministers which was considering a mandate for the beginning of negotiations with Canada. As I understand the position, that reserve has now been withdrawn by the Danish government and the way is now clear for Canada to begin negotiations with the Council on the contractual link. Specifically, the matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition has been resolved to the satisfaction of the Canadian government.

Mr. Stanfield: What I want to know is what assurance the government of Canada has given to the members of the European Economic Council and to other countries involved in the International Energy Agency so that this matter might be resolved in terms satisfactory to the Canadian government but completely unknown to the Canadian people.

Mr. MacEachen: Assurances have not been given by the Canadian government beyond the adoption of the long-term program, apart from chapter five, from which Canada has been clearly exempted by the governing body of the International Energy Agency. We have not given any assurance beyond our general commitment within the long-term program. In other words, we have not traded an exemption from chapter five.

Mr. Stanfield: Is the hon. gentleman saying that Canada has given no assurance to other members of the International Energy Agency and no assurance to members of the European Economic Community with regard to access to Canadian energy resources?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. MacEachen: In the terms described by the Leader of the Opposition in his initial question, the answer is no. Certainly that was the issue which was before the government and before the governing board—whether Canada would undertake explicitly the obligations imposed by chapter five. We declined to do that, and were exempted. That is the situation in the International Energy Agency which is an institution aside and apart from the Community. When we begin negotiations for the contractual link with the Community the question of access will probably come up again, and at that time Canada will have to take its position in the particular context of those discussions. But that bridge has not been reached yet.

EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—CONSIDERATION OF MANUFACTURED GOODS IN DISCUSSIONS ON CONTRACTUAL LINK

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. From conversations that I had in Brussels last year, the prime interest of common market officials seemed to be a long-term, secure source of supply at fixed prices for raw resources and semi-finished resources, such as iron ore pellets, copper, uranium, pulpwood and petroleum. At present we have a $9 billion trade deficit in manufactured goods. To what extent will manufactured goods figure in the discussions?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations which will begin with the Community will seek to establish a contractual agreement with, on the one hand, the Community and, on the other hand, Canada. There are three general areas of discussion that have been identified. One, of course, is the question of industrial and economic co-operation. At the present time these negotiations have not commenced, and it is not possible at this point to say what particular items will become part of a future agreement. As suggested by the Leader of the Opposition, access to Canadian raw materials is of interest to the Community and that question will be considered. So far as the trade aspect of the discussions is concerned, manufacturing will be very much on the list.

INDUSTRY

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON DEVELOPMENT OF STRATEGY FOR SECONDARY INDUSTRY

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a final supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Inasmuch as industrial technology will be made available under the common market connecting link, assuming that it is successful, is the minister planning to develop an industrial strategy for a secondary industrial base in Canada, or is his position that of his predecessor, that Canadian businessmen should go outside Canada to the third world countries, become involved in joint ventures and export back to Canada, which will do little to aid employment in Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am reasonably certain that the policy attributed to my predecessor is not precisely what the hon. member said it was. If he is asking whether our strategy is to ensure that there is maximum employment in Canada as well as the upgrading of our natural resources to the maximum degree that is practical and reasonable, then certainly the answer is that that is the policy I will be pursuing, not only in connection with the European Economic Community but also with other parts of the world.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—RESULTS FROM DIFFERENT METHOD OF CALCULATION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of two ministers who might answer this question more appropriately, may I direct to the Minister of Finance a question concerning the labour force information that was released today. First of all, I would ask the Minister of Finance whether it is the case that, if the same methodology were used to ascertain the unemployment levels for January of this year as was used for the preceding December and January of 1975, instead of showing a percentage drop in unemployment for last month the figures would have shown a percentage increase, both in comparison with the month before and, even more significantly, on a seasonally adjusted basis, over January, 1975?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no. While there would not in fact have been the actual drop that appeared, there would probably have been no change upward in the former detailed figures. Of course, it remains speculative because the questions asked in the former survey were not asked. New questions were asked in this particular survey, so that is something that cannot be determined. From month to month I would have to say that there has been no change in the general level of unemployment in Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INCLUSION OF FARMERS' WIVES IN STATISTICS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Well, Mr. Speaker, our calculations for both periods are different from those of the government. My supplementary question is related again to the reclassification. Is it the government's view that the percentage drop in the number of unemployed women is substantially due to the redefinition of "farmers' wives", who have been included for the first time in the survey? If that is the case, I should also like to ask the government, if now that it has been decided to include farmers' wives as part of the labour market, whether the government plans to take related steps in regard to equality so as to ensure that farmers' wives are actually entitled to part of farmers' incomes?

● (1420)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to observe at this point that this is a technical revision of the unemployment figures started three years ago and carried out by the relevant agencies of the government, among other things so as to base these figures on 1971 census data instead of 1961 census data. With regard to the inclusion, there has been a change in the nature of the questions asked so as to better determine who is actively seeking employment. As to the hon. member saying his figures are different from those of the government, I assume he has made a survey of 55,000 households as has Statistics Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EXCLUSION OF SEASONALLY EMPLOYED WORKERS FROM STATISTICS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the minister is normally very courteous and accurate in his observations, but he failed to answer the question in respect of whether women were going to be entitled to part of the farm income. Maybe he will pick that up in response to my third question. My third question concerns the decision to exclude or change the categorization of seasonally employed workers so that they do not show up in the same way in the unemployment figures.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Broadbent: The question I put to the minister is, since the vast majority of seasonally employed in Canada would in fact prefer to be employed all year round, but because there are not jobs available all year round they cannot be, will the minister explain the justification for this change in methodology? Is it not entirely inappropriate to categorize people who would prefer to be employed all year round in such a way that they do not even show up now in the unemployment statistics?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to deal with the ultimate question of the hon. gentleman in the previous series of questions, the answer would be, of course, this government has been taking the lead within Canada in making certain that the principles of International Women's Year will be carried forward hereafter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): With regard to the question about seasonal workers, of course, the critical factor is whether someone is actually in the work force or is actually seeking work. The questions that have been proposed by the Chief Statistician are for the purpose of elucidating a sample on that basis. I might just say again that there have been a number of technical changes which commended themselves to the Chief Statistician and others. Perhaps the hon. gentleman and his colleagues would like to examine the Chief Statistician and others responsible when the estimates come before the House.

Oral Questions

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

POSSIBLE DELETION OF SECTION 158 TO MAKE TEACHERS ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS IN SUMMERTIME

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the Acting Prime Minister, of which I gave him advance notice.

On October 15, Mr. Justice Haddy made a judgment about the Unemployment Insurance Act, by declaring inconsistent and non applicable section 158, which theretofore prevented a teacher from receiving unemployment insurance benefits under certain conditions during summer. The Unemployment Insurance Commission had then appealed that decision, but withdrew its appeal last week.

Can the minister tell the House if it is true that an administrative decision must be made today to delete section 158 from the Unemployment Insurance Act in order to settle this problem which a great number of teachers have faced for several months?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the umpire appointed under the Unemployment Insurance Act ruled that Section 158 of the Unemployment Insurance Regulations was invalid. However, the Unemployment Insurance Commission is reviewing the umpire's decision and the possibility of an appeal to the Federal Court of Canada against this decision is still in abeyance.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Since this section of the act seems to have been removed and reinstated many times, can the minister indicate whether the deletion of section 158 in the regulations will be definitive this time?

[English]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me the important question is what happens to the various rights of those who might be affected. I should add to what I said previously that should the commission appeal and the decision of the Federal Court of Canada should result in a favourable decision for the teachers, all teachers who have appealed the commission's disentitlement under section 158 and are not otherwise disentitled will be paid benefits.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN INTERNATIONAL TRADE BALANCE WHEN STATISTICS ISSUED BY STATISTICS CANADA

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is responsible for Statistics Canada. As the government's new method of reporting on unemployment shows a spectacular improvement in the situation—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Mr. Hees: Just wait—when more than 100,000 additional people become unemployed during a month, will the minister tell the House if we can expect that when Statistics Canada makes its next report on our international trade balance we will see an equally spectacular improvement in that trade balance as our exports continue to decline rapidly and our imports continue to increase rapidly?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Well, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member I am bending every effort to have the next report of Statistics Canada show a spectacular increase in exports but it will not be because of the statistical position but because I am following the very good example of the hon. member when he was Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which is getting up off my butt and selling something.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is very simple. I would ask the minister whether it is true that during the last month he has ordered that Alice in Wonderland to be required reading by all employees of Statistics Canada so that they can produce the extraordinary result we have seen today.

STATISTICS CANADA

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF NEW METHOD OF COMPILING UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the skepticism over the new methodology employed by Statistics Canada in arriving at unemployment figures in the country, especially when we consider for example that one wave of the Statistics Canada wand can reduce unemployment in Newfoundland from 17 per cent to 11 per cent, which the minister and I know is not the case, may I ask the minister if he would, in order to reassure members of the House, refer at the earliest possible moment to an appropriate committee of the House the whole new system employed by Statistics Canada in arriving at the unemployment figures in the country in order to assure members there is in fact no hanky-panky taking place between the government and Statistics Canada?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I know the hon. member was using a little rhetoric at the end when he referred to "hanky-panky", but he knows perfectly well that Statistics Canada has developed this system independently over the past few years.

On his other point about the Newfoundland figures, he and I may know differently but the Newfoundland government is now saying very clearly that these statistics prove what it has been saying all along. In any event, so far as the member's question about explanations is concerned, not only am I prepared to make a reference but I am sure that if members, either individually or as a group, wish to have a thorough briefing on the technique and incidentally to see last year's experiment, in other words to see the new technique as well as the old so that they can compare the two sets of figures because they were carried out over all of the past 12 months, then that can be arranged at very short notice by Statistics Canada through reference to my office.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—MEASURES TO DEAL WITH WIDENING DISPARITY BETWEEN ATLANTIC REGION AND OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, normally my question would be for either the Prime Minister or perhaps the Minister of Finance. It relates to the same labour force statistics released today. I am sure the minister is well aware that in 1975 these figures showed that while the number of people employed increased by roughly 3½ per cent in both Atlantic Canada and Ontario the number of unemployed dropped 6 per cent in Ontario and rose by 9 per cent in the Atlantic region. Since this would indicate a further widening of the disparity between the Atlantic provinces and Ontario, and since there has been no announcement in recent months by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance of effective programs to deal with this regional disparity, I should like to ask the minister if he has taken into account the new figures and whether he would indicate what steps are to be taken by the government.

● (1430)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to say that we do acknowledge there has been a shift in regional employment. I suppose a recent decision with a negative import perhaps is that we have decided not to take the suggestion of the treasury of Ontario that DREE might be cancelled.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I am a little surprised that the minister should deal in this frivolous way with this very serious matter inasmuch as his government has in effect, frozen or continued to reduce the profile and effectiveness of DREE.

Perhaps I could ask either the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion or the Minister of Finance, specifically with respect to the Atlantic economy where employment in the manufacturing sector has increased by 7 per cent but in the primary sector decreased by 18 per cent, in view of this further weakening of the primary sector in the Atlantic provinces and with respect to the recent changes announced by the Minister of Fisheries—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Oral Questions

INDIAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ACTION IN CONNECTION WITH BOOK ENTITLED "BENDED ELBOW"—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is not in the House, may I direct a question to his parliamentary secretary? Last spring I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development about a piece of hate literature called "Bended Elbow". I wanted to know if his department had considered laying charges under the existing hate literature legislation. He said his department was "looking into the matter to see what action should be taken". Last week the same book turned up in the mail box of one of my colleagues. What action, if any, is being taken in this regard?

Mrs. Iona Campagnolo (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I do not have that latest item here for the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, but the minister will be in the House on Thursday when, I am sure, he will be pleased to respond.

HEALTH

REQUEST THAT EXPORT OF BLOOD BE CONTROLLED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow up a question put by me last week to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that Connlab sold blood abroad through export order at a time when Canada had a shortage of blood, can the minister assure the House and the Canadian people that before any future export orders are issued they will come before the Department of National Health and Welfare for discussion so that the Canadian people can be assured that when they donate blood it will be used by the proper agencies?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the hon. member that at the end of last year regulations were enacted under the Export and Import Permits Act to control the export of blood. This particular act comes under the jurisdiction of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. These regulations are currently in effect and are designed to ensure a supply of blood in this country.

With regard to the safety of blood to be exported, this would be a matter coming under the Food and Drugs Act. We are presently examining whether there is any possibility of enacting regulations under that act to ensure that blood which is exported from this country meets the same standard of safety that is applied in Canada. But this is another related matter.

Mr. Rynard: I think the minister is referring to the plasmapheresis centres that are across Canada. Can he assure the House that where these centres are established across Canada proper tests will be made to ensure that this blood is free from viral infections, hepatitis and other viral diseases?

Mr. Lalonde: The regulations I am referring to would not deal with blood for sale inside Canada. There is doubt whether we had any power to exercise such safety control over products for export, and we are therefore looking into this matter very carefully.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING INTRODUCTION OF PEACE AND SECURITY LEGISLATION

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I should like to put a question to the Solicitor General. In light of the fact that I have been advised that the peace and security legislation will be brought in and that there is a definite date set, can the Solicitor General, in the absence of the Attorney General of Canada, give us that definite date? Will he also advise the House whether he or the Minister of Justice will be presenting the bill?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): As the Minister of Justice said recently, there will be two bills introduced with the announcement of the peace and security legislation, one bill will deal with capital punishment and the other will deal with all the other measures. I will introduce the bill on capital punishment and the Minister of Justice will introduce the other bill.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, one supplementary question should clear the air. Can the Solicitor General assure us that the changes in the Parole Act or in the regulations on day passes will be in the peace and security bill rather than in the bill to abolish capital punishment which, as the Solicitor General has said on several occasions in the House, qualifying it with some adjectives, will be brought in separately and apart from any other measure in the Criminal Code?

Mr. Allmand: There may be some misunderstanding. The bill on capital punishment will also deal with the alternatives put forward to the present regime for murder. Whenever we have had a bill on capital punishment, that has happened. In other words, the bill on capital punishment will deal with proposals we suggest for those who are convicted of murder, including the rules on parole and imprisonment which will apply to them. But all other changes in the Parole Act that apply generally will be in the second bill introduced by my colleague.

CITIZENSHIP

REQUEST THAT VACANCIES IN TORONTO CITIZENSHIPS COURTS BE FILLED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State whether he would strengthen soon the manpower at the Toronto citizenship court by filling long overdue vacancies and appointing more staff to clear the backlog of more than 3,000 citizenship certificates and applications, as Canadian citizenship delayed is a denial of citizenship rights and privileges to eligible and qualified residents of Canada.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member. It is a serious problem in Toronto. It is a reflection of the success of our citizenship promotion program. It will need a complement of more people.

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBLE ADOPTION OF MEASURE TO PROVIDE GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Since Quebec's Social Affairs Minister has recently declared that, in his view, the guaranteed annual income program cannot be implemented until 1978 and even later because economic and financial conditions will not allow it, can the minister tell the House whether or not he agrees with this statement and if not, will he put forward a bill aiming at an earlier implementation of this program so as to correct the injustices which have been caused by the social measures now existing?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions, our prime objective is to complete the review of social security and to come to an agreement with the provinces as early as possible. I hope it will be reached by next summer. Any legislation which might result from such an agreement will have to be presented at a later stage, probably during the next session. Now, I do not think it is realistic to expect such a program to be in effect this year or the next. As for the following years we shall have to wait and see what has developed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Inasmuch as the minister I quoted did specify that even if the federal government and the provinces come to an agreement, this program could not be implemented, as I said earlier, before 1978—he specified this—and even several years later, does he think this should be the case or that efforts are being made to come to an agreement only on a contingency or that we really want to implement the program?

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that all governments want to implement such a program as soon as possible. As I indicated in a previous answer in this House, the federal government proposes that this program be administered by the provinces. So it is the provinces that will have to decide when the program is to be implemented in each province. As far as the federal government is concerned, we made an extremely generous offer concerning cost sharing, and I think financial motives should not be a real reason for postponing indefinitely the implementation of such a program.

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN COST-SHARING FORMULA FOR PENSIONS FOR BLIND AND DISABLED

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that a guaranteed income is not foreseen in the near future, and in view of the fact that those who are disabled through no fault of their own—the blind and the disadvantaged—are suffering as a result of inflation, has any representation been made by the provinces about increasing the cost-sharing formula, particularly for the province of Newfoundland, to allow these people to be able to cope with the high cost of living which exists?

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT IN TELEPHONE SYSTEM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Communications, born of some frustration, not with the minister but with the telephone system. I understand from usual channels that the Liberal caucus decided on the weekend that improved communications would assist the faltering image of the government. Would the minister agree that unless the communications system is improved nothing can be done to help the image of the government, and will something be done to improve what must be one of the worst telephone systems in western civilization?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I think what is going on in British Columbia this week might do much to improve the image of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Sauvé: But I am sure the hon. member will appreciate that that has nothing to do with the telephone system. To answer his question, rate increases like the ones which have recently been allowed are related to development and expansion of telephone services. In many cases that would mean an improvement of the service. However, under the new legislation providing for the regulating of the telephone system under an enlarged CRTC there will be more opportunity to take into account social factors and also to have an input as to the possible concern the hon. member has about coverage and quality of service.

Mr. Fairweather: Is it not somewhat anomalous that while we congratulate ourselves for having one of the most wonderful telecommunication satellites in space, here on earth one cannot get the government switchboard, in or out?

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PROCESSING PENSION APPLICATIONS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I should like to ask the minister what is happening within the Canadian Pension Commission. Veterans who submitted their applications as long ago as three years have not had their applications processed. What steps does the minister intend to take to speed up these applications?

Will he reorganize the commission and if necessary add more members, or, as has been so brutally suggested because of the annoyance, perhaps withhold pay cheques to see if they extend their hands and determine if rigor mortis has set in?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member knows of any cases which have lasted over three years—because I do not think we have any—he should bring them to my attention. To answer in respect of the processing, previously there were 10,000 applications, now it is in the vicinity of 4,000 and the commission is working quite well. I would be very glad to take notice of any particular cases the hon. member has in mind. Sometimes there are applicants for pensions who do not qualify, and to determine what their qualifications are is quite a process, and takes much time. It would take a very detailed answer to give the many reasons for this, but I would be very interested in obtaining information about the cases to which the hon. member makes reference.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

REASON FOR REDUCING AMOUNT OF WAGE INCREASE FOR UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY WORKERS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of statements made by the minister during a debate in the House and in the committee during the discussions on the anti-inflation bill that people earning less than $3.50 per hour would be permitted to get increases of more than the 10 per cent maximum permitted by the guidelines, would the minister explain why the University of Toronto library workers, for many of whom the 20 per cent increase would still leave them earning less than the $3.50 an hour, had their agreements scaled down by the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have referred a question of that nature to the board. I would be glad to report to the hon. member when I have a response.

Mr. Orlikow: When the minister discusses this question with members of the Anti-Inflation Board, would he ask them if they can explain why they turned down this increase to people who are on a relatively low pay scale while teachers in some Ontario communities have had increases of more than 20 per cent approved? Also would he ask members of the Anti-Inflation Board if they could do more than just issue a directive, that is give some explanation of their reasons for making the rulings they make?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will very carefully discuss with the board the questions of the hon. gentleman.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF REASSESSMENT OF STANDARDS FOR MERCURY IN SWORDFISH—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. On Friday, December 19 at page 10193 of Hansard the Minister of State (Fisheries) informed the House that he had asked the Health Ministry to reassess and re-evaluate health standards relating to mercury in swordfish.

In view of the importance of re-establishing, if possible, this industry, worth some $4 million to Nova Scotia alone, while at the same time giving new job opportunities to fishermen who have been refused the renewal of their lobster fishing licences, will the minister give the House a progress report from his department, and has he made any representations to Washington in the hope of re-opening this important market?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there have been no representations made to Washington, but this is a matter of great significance and obviously of great economic importance to fishermen. However, it is also of significant importance with respect to health. This is a very complex and difficult matter which is actively being studied by my department and fisheries officials, and I hope there will be a resolution of this question reasonably soon.

TRADE

REQUEST FOR NEW MARKETS FOR SWORDFISH—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Since swordfish are consumed in some states of the United States and in Japan, South Africa, Italy and Latin American countries without apparent damage to health, has the minister made any attempt to open up new markets for swordfish in the countries I have mentioned, and if not, will he endeavour to do so?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have to admit that the issue certainly has not come to my attention, and I have not done anything along the lines suggested by the hon. member. However, I will be glad to look into this matter to see what we may be able to do.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF REDUCTION IN BUDGET FOR MEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the remarks made by the Prime Minister yesterday at the University of British Columbia, where he was accompanied by most of the missing members of the cabinet and where he dedicated the TRIUMF project, the $36 million joint universities meson facility which contains the largest and most complex cyclotron ever built, wherein the Prime Minister indicated that the cabinet had decided to extend money because they were, and I quote, "mindful of the potential in meson research of international significance," will the minister seek reconsideration of the announced freeze of medical research budgets for next year so that much needed medical research at the University of British Columbia and other medical schools, which also have international significance, will not need to be curtailed, to the lasting detriment of existing research establishments?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the budget restrictions have already been announced by the President of the Treasury Board. It is obvious that if the President of the Treasury Board ever get hold of additional monies, I am sure he would consider with much sympathy any endeavour to increase the grants offered for research. But I have not yet been advised that such additional resources were available.

Can the minister tell the House whether, in the light of revelations about the activities of the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation of Canada, particularly the kickbacks paid on an international scale to get lucrative contracts, the RCMP has conducted, is conducting or considers conducting an inquiry to ascertain if that corporation did pay kickbacks to obtain from the Department of National Defence a contract estimated at $1 billion for the replacement of the long range patrol aircraft.

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONTROL OF INTERNATIONAL FLOW OF CAPITAL AND DEVALUATION

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As the value of Canadian money on foreign exchanges has remained high because of the continued inflow of foreign capital, which may lead to trouble down the road as it were, has the government considered avenues of relief such as lower domestic interest rates, direct controls on international capital flows or devaluation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, to deal with the hon. member's specific suggestions, we have indicated that we would continue to maintain restrictions on the increase in the money supply and therefore the kinds of actions proposed by the hon. gentleman, which would involve a very substantial increase in the money supply, do not commend themselves to us. I specifically indicate that we have given no consideration at all to the imposition of foreign exchange controls.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Stick with Sinc.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Will the Acting Prime Minister consider broadening the terms of reference of the Royal Commission on Corporate Concentration, to allow that commission to review the relations between big corporations and the government, particularly such relationships as may exist between the present administration and such corporate giants as Power Corporation and its subsidiaries.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing to have the hon. member back in the House, and to understand the basis on which he is conducting his election campaign. The answer is, no.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of his reluctance to refer this matter to the Bryce commission, would he consider referring it to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, of this House, in order that the committee can consider the relationship of such big corporations with the present administration?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, knowing the hon. gentleman, I am quite sure it would not require any reference to any committee to permit his raising the question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REASON FOR INCREASE IN ESTIMATED COST OF LANGUAGE TRAINING SCHOOL AT ST. JEAN, QUEBEC

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. In the past week the minister stated that the $88 million construction program for the Canadian Forces Base at St. Jean had been approved in 1973. The 1975-76 estimates, published some ten or 11 months ago, called for a total cost of $47,220,000. Can the minister explain this apparent increase of 86 per cent in projected cost in some ten months?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely it would be appropriate to ask this kind of question when the minister's estimates are before the standing committee.

HEALTH

FOOD COLOUR ADDITIVES—DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT OF RED DYES TWO AND FORTY IN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Considering the controversy regarding the possible carcinogenic properties of Red 2 and Red 40, used by the industry to colour food, and as the minister on the basis of information he received has seen fit to ban Red 40 but not Red 2, whereas the United States has done exactly the opposite, will the minister consider consulting with his counterpart in the United States in order to interchange information and research data on these two chemicals so that a uniform decision may be made which would help greatly to allay the fears of the general public of both countries?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we in Canada have when necessary adopted a more restrictive approach to food colour additives than most other countries and the United States. In Canada we recognize only nine of these, whereas I believe other countries recognize as many as 20. May I advise the hon. member that I am advised that the court of appeal yesterday reversed the decision of the court of first instance to do away with red dye No. 2. Red dye No. 2 is at least temporarily again valid in the United States. We asked the FDA of the United States for all its scientific information on the matter. This has been transmitted to my department, and the health protection branch is studying at present the scientific studies which were carried on in the United States. Consultations on this subject this weekend were held with European countries; but we are still of the opinion that, at this stage, it would be premature to ban red dye No. 2.

Mr. Baldwin: I suppose you are an expert on red dye.

PENITENTIARIES

CRITERIA USED TO DETERMINE PRIORITY FOR INMATES IN NEED OF PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Recently one Chris Squires, a twice convicted rapist, took two females hostage at Kingston penitentiary. It is reported that Squires had requested a pass to attend his father's funeral, but was refused; that he had also requested psychiatric treatment, which he was unable to obtain because of his low priority rating. Will the minister tell the House what methods or criteria are used by the Canadian penitentiary system to determine who shall receive priority for psychiatric treatment?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, my information on this inmate is this: He was convicted only recently and had been at the regional reception centre in Ontario, being tested for programs like psychiatric treatment, and so on. On the other hand, we know that he underwent psychiatric treatment in the past. He spent some time at the Penetanguishene institution, in Ontario, and at Kingston psychiatric hospital during his teenage years.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are there criteria relating to priorities for psychiatric treatment, or is the House to assume that treatment is given on the basis of the arbitrary decisions of the officials in an institution? Are there any criteria; if there are, will the minister table the criteria in the House?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are. Actually, two years ago we set up a committee of psychiatric consultants right across the country and asked them to help develop such criteria. They suggested a system of five regional psychiatric centres. We have now built three of those five centres and will build the other two shortly, one in Saskatoon and one in Halifax. I know there are criteria but cannot give them to the hon. member right now. We will send them to him as soon as possible.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDING PROVISIONS OF WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs? I am not asking the minister today about the proposed legislation respecting veterans who were prisoners of war, because I await with hope the statement he has promised to make on Thursday.

In view of representations made to the government directly by the Royal Canadian Legion, and also made editorially in a recent issue of Legion magazine, calling for the simplification and broadening of the provisions of the War Veterans Allowance Act, may I ask the minister if this act is under review in his department, in the hope that there may be amending legislation some time in 1976?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I also received correspondence from the president of the Canadian Legion. I answered him and told him that, at this time, the possibility of having that legislation for 1976 is not very good.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

● (1500)

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point order. It concerns yesterday's Hansard and the Minister of National Defence. At page 10742, the Minister of National Defence declared:

> Under the rules of the House, Mr. Speaker, I will table this correspondence, Mr. Speaker.

The minister was referring to a letter from the chairman of Lockheed Aircraft Company which he produced, rather naively I thought, as proof positive that Lockheed would never attempt to bribe a Canadian. The document appears not to have been tabled and I would like an explanation from the minister.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, the letter in question was put on the table yesterday.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, I rise with some reluctance to raise a question of privilege which I believe affects my right as a member of this House to ask a supplementary question. Your Honour chose not to allow a supplementary question. For some reason, there seems to be a blind spot in this area. For several days—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. An hon. member close to that area recently raised the same question by way of a point of order. I think all members understand that there is a discretion in the Chair as to whether to allow supplementary questions. The exercise of that discretion may displease hon. members from time to time; it is bound to. The fact is there is common ground among us all. The refusal from time to time to recognize a given member on a supplementary does not constitute either a question of privilege or a point of order. It is a matter that hon. members have to accept from time to time. In this case, the hon. member put a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs about the backlog of the board with regard to veterans' pensions. Some, he said, had built up over three years' duration. That precise question was put to the minister only a few days ago, and answered.

If the Chair had wanted to take a very hard line against the hon. member, it could have refused to permit him to put the question at all. However, the minister was permitted to give an answer, which was the same answer that he gave a few days ago, namely that they are trying to clear up the backlog. If there are any specific cases, the hon. member should bring them to the minister's attention. That goes beyond the ground granted to the hon. member. He can bring specific cases to the minister.

We face a continuing problem. Every member wants to ask supplementaries. I do not, and will not, recognize every member on a supplementary. There is one thing about which we can be absolutely clear. If every time that a member is not recognized on a supplementary he proposes to take it as a personal gesture of prejudice or discrimination against his particular line of questioning, we will have to face this matter every day at three o'clock. There are times every day in the question period when I have to exercise discretion either to allow or not allow supplementary questions.

Mr. Korchinski: With all due respect—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Korchinski: I do have a case of three years' duration.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Korchinski: I do have a letter from the minister indicating that he will take this up on a priority basis. This dates back two years. I still have not got any answer. Since we are continually told by the commission that we should not—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Korchinski: It would lose its priority.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Yesterday I indicated that at three o'clock today I would invite discussion on the question I deferred on two occasions, namely, a tax matter that was sub judice. I wonder if before launching into that discussion today we might complete routine proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PURCHASE OF SUGAR FROM CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Question No. 3,651—Mr. Herbert:

1. Has an offer to sell sugar to Canada been received from a Caribbean country and, if so (a) which country (b) on what terms?

2. Has consideration been given to use foreign aid in assisting in the stabilization of the export markets of developing countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce and External Affairs as follows: 1. The purchase of sugar is in the hands of the private sector which makes its own arrangements for sugar supplies, including quantities from Caribbean countries. During the first nine months of 1975, imports of sugar from Caribbean countries were: Trinidad-Tobago: 2,556 metric tons; Cuba: 105,840 metric tons; Total: 108,396.

2. Two techniques are used internationally to cope with the problem of stabilizing commodity export earnings. The first is to stabilize commodity prices by negotiating commodity agreements and the second is to stabilize export earnings by providing compensatory financing when export earnings fall, through arrangements such as the IMF compensatory financing facility. While both these approaches may result in the transfer of resources from developed to developing countries, neither approach makes direct use of aid funds. The direct use of aid funds to maintain LDC export earnings would, in effect, be similar to providing direct subsidies to the countries concerned which is contrary to Canadian aid policy.

CBC REPORTING OF NEWS

Question No. 3,708—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Do persons involved as bureau chiefs, news editors or producers of news and public affairs programmes for CBC Radio or Television operate under any instructions to keep such programmes free of their own personal political bias and (a) if so (i) are they instructed to edit and report but not to manage the news (ii) what are such instructions (b) if not, for what reason?

2. Is the government prepared to insist that CBC follow a policy of reporting news from Parliament and elsewhere without (a) political bias (b) news management, etc. so that the Canadian people can have access to opinions on all sides of every public issue?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. CBC information programming staff are under explicit instructions to keep programs for which they have responsibility totally free of their own personal political bias. They are instructed to edit and report fairly and, to quote program policy directives, to strive for a maximum subjective detachment from the events and opinions of the people which constitute the news. He can report, he can background, he can explain and he can analyse, but he must not express his personal opinion.

2. The government believes that the CBC's own standards and directives are adequate to ensure that objective reporting is maintained.

CBC—INQUIRIES BY MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 3,723—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Does CBC maintain a Parliamentary Liason Officer in Ottawa for purposes of dealing with inquiries from Members of Parliament and, if so, does this individual assist in the preparation of answers to questions on the Order Paper concerning CBC?

2. For what reason have answers been declined in regard to CBC in many cases on the grounds that it is not the customary policy to reveal such information?

3. Is the government prepared to (a) establish a policy of allowing full answers to questions pertaining to CBC (b) make public the names and salaries of all persons involved with any CBC news programme or public affairs programme if such information is requested by a Member of Parliament?

4. Has secrecy been applied to many aspects of CBC operations when questions have been placed on the Order Paper and such information has been refused and, if so, for what reason?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. The CBC maintains a Parliamentary liaison service which coordinates the preparation of answers to questions on the Order Paper concerning CBC.

2. See reply to parts (a) and (b) of Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

3 and 4. See reply to part (c) of Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

CBC—USE OF NEWS ITEMS FILED BY PARLIAMENTARY BUREAU

Question No. 3,773—Mr. Cossitt:

1. What are the (a) names (b) job designations (c) annual salaries of all persons employed by CBC in Toronto who have jurisdiction of any kind in regard to what news items filed by the Parliamentary Bureau of CBC in Ottawa are used or not used in CBC radio and television newscasts?

2. In each case (a) on what date were they hired by CBC (b) what previous positions, if any, did they hold with CBC (c) what previous experience, if any, did they have with any other news media?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. (a), (b), (c), and 2. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide the names of individual staff members, their employment histories or salaries. (The background of this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975). For information about the line of responsibility within the CBC News department, see the answer to Question No. 548, October 23, 1974.

CONSOLIDATION OF SPACE USED BY CANADA COUNCIL

Question No. 3,775—Mr. Cossitt:

Will the Canada Council within the next year expand the space it occupies in the La Promenade Building on Sparks Street, Ottawa and, if so (a) for what reason (b) how many additional square feet will it occupy (c) in what way is this consistent with the government's declared policy of restraint and non-expansion of the Public Service?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canada Council as follows: The Canada Council presently occupies space in three separate buildings located at 222 Queen St., 85 Albert St. and 151 Sparks St. (La promenade). Time and money would be saved by consolidating operations in a single building. This option is now being considered by the Council but no decision has been reached.

CBC—COVERAGE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GENERAL ELECTION

Question No. 3,823—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On the Saturday following the British Columbia general election did CBC national television news carry a sequence on the loser, Mr. Barrett and, if so, what amount of air time was devoted to the item?

2. Was a sequence carried on the same programme of the winner, Mr. Bennett and, if not, for what reason?

3. Does this lack of balanced coverage indicate a policy of certain CBC personnel applying their personal political views to the news rather than balanced reporting of the news?

4. What are the names and job designations of all persons involved in compiling the items that appeared on this particular edition of the national television news?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. On Saturday, December 13, The National carried a one minute, 42 second report on the defeat of the NDP government in British Columbia, not specifically on Mr. Barrett.

2. Not on December 13. Coverage of Mr. Bennett on The National immediately before and after the election was as follows: December 10, a one minute, 37 second report on the strong possibility that he would become the next Premier of British Columbia; December 11, reports on the election, updated in each time zone, all including sequences with both leaders; December 12, a two minute, two second report on the results of the election, including footage of Social Credit victory celebrations and a statement by Mr. Bennett.

3. CBC does not agree that there was a lack of balanced coverage.

4. It has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such information about its staff. The background of this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

CBC—NATIONAL TELEVISION NEWS, DECEMBER 15, 1975

Question No. 3,824—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On CBC national television news on December 15, 1975, did CBC give coverage to comments of the federal NDP leader on the matter of certain remarks made by the United States Ambassador to Canada, William Porter, on United States-Canadian relations and, if so, what amount of time was allotted?

2. Did the same programme give any coverage to comments on the same subject made by the federal leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and, if not, for what reason?

3. Are CBC officials aware that CTV national news appearing at the same hour provided coverage of the comments of both party leaders?

4. What are all the reasons for this unbalanced CBC news coverage and what are the names and job designations of all those involved in deciding the material to be used on this particular edition of CBC national TV news?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. On December 15, following remarks made by Mr. Broadbent in the House earlier in the day, The National carried 43 seconds of Mr. Broadbent's comments regarding the new U.S. ambassador, Mr. Enders. He was not interviewed with regard to the remarks made by Mr. Porter.

2. No. Mr. Stanfield had made no comments in the House regarding Mr. Enders and was not interviewed on the subject.

3. Yes.

4. CBC does not agree that there was unbalanced coverage. With regard to the names of staff members involved, it has not been customary to require the CBC to provide such information. The background of this custom is explained in detail in the reply to Question No. 2,530, May 22, 1975.

CBC—CAPITAL REPORT

Question No. 3,826—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On the Sunday following the British Columbia general election did CBC programme "Capitol Report" include any unbiased details of Mr. Bennett's victory and, if not, for what reason?

2. Did the programme include an attack on the Social Credit Party by columnist Trevor Lautens and, if so, for what reason?

3. What are the reasons for this lack of balance in political news and comment by CBC?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. Yes.

2. Trevor Lautens did a tongue-in-cheek review of the campaign, dealing with both the government and the opposition.

3. CBC does not agree that there was a lack of balance.

CBC—"THE WORLD AT SIX"

Question No. 3,827—Mr. Cossitt:

1. On CBC radio programme "The World at Six" on the day following the British Columbia general election was Mr. William Bennett or any members of his party interviewed during comments on the election results and, if not, for what reason?

2. Did the coverage on the British Columbia election on this programme consist of two CBC newsmen making allegations that ex-Liberals elected as Social Credit members might seize control of that party?

3. What were the reasons for this lack of balance in political reporting?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows: 1. No. Mr. Bennett was in the B.C. interior that day. For that reason he was interviewed by telephone and the results fed to Toronto. The technical quality of the interview was too poor for any of it to be used.

2. No. The discussion between the two reporters was based on matters raised by the result of the election, including the fact that many members of the new government formerly belonged to other parties.

3. The CBC does not agree that there was a lack of balance.

OFFICE OF TOURISM—PROMOTIONAL ACTIVITIES EXPENDITURES

Question No. 3,867—Mr. Nystrom:

1. What is the total amount budgeted by the Office of Tourism to be spent on (a) promotional activities (b) travel brochures (c) other items promoting tourism in Canada by its offices in the United States for 1976?

2. How much will the Office of Tourism be spending for transportation and accommodation of the contingent being represented in (a) the Rose Bowl Parade in Pasadena, California, January 1, 1976 (b) "Canada Day" at Disneyland (c) promotional events that all or part of the contingent will be participants in (i) Los Angeles (ii) San Francisco, in the first week of January, 1976?

3. What is a list of the events that the Office of Tourism will be involved with in (a) Los Angeles (b) San Francisco, during the first week of January, 1976?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. The total amount budgeted by the Office of Tourism to be spent by its offices in the United States for 1976 on: (a) promotional activities, Special Promotions, $396,000 (travel trade exhibitions, consumer travel exhibitions, ski seminars); Travel Industry Promotions, $100,000 (travel trade seminars). (b) travel brochures, produced and provided by CGOT H.Q. for distribution through its offices in the U.S., $250,000. (c) nil.

2. CGOT has made no contribution to transportation and accommodation directly. However, following interdepartmental development of a program for Canadian participation in the commemoration of the U.S. Bicentennial, and further discussions with provincial and municipal tourism authorities the CGOT made a commitment of $25,000 towards the total budget for the project. Because of unexpected increased costs, most of which were brought about as a result of unanticipated opportunities for significant television and media exposure in addition to those events in which Canada was already participating, the CGOT is considering an increase in support by $5,000-$10,000. This financial support is based on the CGOT's assessment of the share of gain it anticipated in tourism publicity from the series of promotional events.

3. The CGOT was not involved directly in any events in the two cities during the first week of January, 1976 beyond consultation during the development of the program of events and its contributions towards the projects as noted above in 2.

1. How many 1976 calendars were printed for free distribution by the Post Office Department?

2. What is the total cost to the taxpayer for such calendars?

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): 1. 750,000.

2. $146,480.

3. How long has she been in the office of the Minister of Transport and/or the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board?

4. Has she made any trips on government business and/or government public relations and, if so (a) to what locations (b) on what dates (c) for what purpose (d) at what expense?

5. Does she have an expense account and, if so, what are all the expenses she has incurred, the purpose for each such expense and the dates incurred?

INCREASE IN NUMBER OF SENIOR OFFICERS IN VARIOUS GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Question No. 3,796—Mr. Orlikow:

By department, what was the increase in the number of senior officers (a) SX1 (b) SX2 (c) SX3 (d) SX4 for each year 1969 to 1974, or in the case of new departments, commissions, agencies, etc. from their inception to 1974?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I gave you notice today that I intended to move a motion under Standing Order 26 as it related to the national dispute of paperworkers. Due to certain developments, I request Your Honour's permission not to put that motion today but at a later time, possibly tomorrow.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACKAY—QUESTIONS BY MEMBERS ON MATTERS SUB JUDICE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief on this question of privilege. It is my feeling that there may be other members more senior than I who can contribute more to this debate and who will want to participate when I have finished speaking. I submit there is a plain distinction between my questions regarding tax aspects and possible police investigations with regard to Sky Shops and the specific area of the civil libel suit against myself and others brought by Thomcor Holdings Limited. If I were to be technical, there is no evidence before parliament to indicate conclusively that Thomcor Holdings are one and the same as Sky Shops.

The matter of the libel suit, of course, is civil, not criminal in nature and the Crown, not being a party, ought to be free to give information. In addition, the pleadings of the civil action in which I am involved are at such a preliminary stage that there is a question as to whether the matter is before the courts in more than a very technical sense, it has not yet been set down for trial and there is no judicial decision pending. In any event, the questions that I have asked are not part of those matters which form part of the libel suit.

A member of parliament, I submit, has a right and a duty to pursue investigations and ask questions on behalf of his constituents and the general public, and any interference or obstructions in this respect must be undertaken very carefully and supported by citations and predecents of the greatest weight and substance. Our House leader, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), will proceed to deal with the precedents and will develop the case on my behalf in greater detail. Indeed, I am so closely involved, as Your Honour pointed out, in being a participant in or party to the action that if I were to become too closely involved I might lose my sense of objectivity and be in the position that is often applied to those who act on their own behalf, that of having a fool for a client. I would not want that to happen.

I appreciate the opportunity to make these few remarks on my behalf and want to point out once more, Mr. Speaker, that the reason I originally brought this matter to your attention as a question of privilege was not because I was concerned about the litigious aspect of the matter but, rather, to give Your Honour an opportunity to make certain that the way the action was instituted against me and my co-defendants did not affect the traditional rights and privileges of Parliament and the Chair itself.

● (1510)

Mr. Speaker: I certainly want to invite contributions from other hon. members who are interested in developing the point. My interference with the hon. member in the first instance was more from the point of view of giving us an opportunity to review this question, one which is surrounded by considerable confusion. I think I have indicated that a review would show that in the particular instance of a civil law suit, the hon. member and all other hon. members are free from any restrictions. But it might be opportune, before we go further with this subject, to clarify from the chair the whole question of matters sub judice, and for that reason I welcome the contributions of other hon. members.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, let me say at once that I believe Your Honour and members on both sides of the House will accept the fact that my hon. friend from Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) has been completely objective in his whole approach to this matter. This might not be relevant to a decision on the issue, but I submit it is something the House should bear in mind.

After giving this matter a good deal of attention over the weekend since Your Honour intervened, after looking over the precedents and checking the facts, it is my opinion that rather than the House considering the extent to which the hon. member for Central Nova should be inhibited in dealing with this issue, we would be in a far better position and doing much more justice if this House were considering invoking its penal jurisdiction and sanctions against the plaintiff in the action, as I hope to show during the course of my argument.

What are the facts? As the hon. member said, he was pursuing a reasoned and studied inquiry, in a very objective way, of what was an extremely difficult problem and in the course of this investigation he had occasion to ask questions in the House, to bring motions and to participate in debates. During a period when the House was not in session, if my information is correct, the hon. member issued a press release accompanied by a statement and a document dealing with the question of the comparative prices of goods in certain duty-free shops in the airports in Montreal and shops in the city of Montreal.

I want to pause at this point to say that in doing what he did the hon. member was only doing what had been done by the department of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). Unfortunately, I do not have the release here, but a report was issued by the minister in October, 1975, which was in the same general terms. It did not deal precisely with the plaintiff in the action against the hon. member or with any of its subsidiary companies, but it was a statement and a report by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs drawing attention to the fact that there was a grave discrepancy between prices and the publication of those prices in the duty-free shops and in the ordinary stores in the city and suggesting to tourists and others that they should exercise great caution in making purchases. So the hon. member, in issuing a statement related to these prices, was doing only what he had a duty to do, not only as a citizen but as a member of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: Subsequently, the plaintiff in this action, Thomcor Holdings Limited, issued a statement of claim and a writ against the hon. member for Central Nova and three other people alleged to be—and actually they are—employees of the research bureau of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. I do not intend to take the time of the House or of Your Honour by going over all the details of the statement of claim, but it was a statement of claim for libel based on allegations contained in the statement issued by my hon. friend.

[Mr. Speaker.]

In particular, paragraphs 11 and 12 of the statement of claim said the statements issued by the hon. member for Central Nova were published and were understood to mean that the plaintiff sold goods at prices which were not lower than most, if not all, retail outlets; that the plaintiff, in any event, did not sell its goods at prices which represented 25 to 60 per cent savings as advertised; that the plaintiff was misleading the public and that the plaintiff was, or was probably, guilty of a criminal offence under the misleading advertising provisions of the Combines Investigation Act. Then there was a claim for damages and loss of profits in the amount of $250,000.

That is a broad allegation against the hon. member for Central Nova, but it is nevertheless restricted to allegations made in the statement he issued and which was made the subject of the action for libel and damages. I submit, therefore, that we must consider the rights of the hon. member in light of the terms of the action taken against him. While it is true that the hon. member came to this House and, quite manfully, said in a question of privilege which he raised and upon which Your Honour commented yesterday, I believe, that he had done what he had done as a private citizen and was not specifically seeking any special rights and immunities as a member of parliament, I would call to the attention of the Chair and all hon. members that it is not easy for a member of parliament to achieve that objective, no matter how desirous he might be to stand alone as a private citizen. He is a member of parliament and his rights and immunities must be considered in that light. This becomes important as I shall show a little later in the course of my argument.

On the basis of the facts to which reference has been made, the hon. member asked a question in this House on February 4. That question, of course, will be recalled by Your Honour; it appears on the record at page 10622 of Hansard for February 4, 1976:

> Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Minister of National Revenue. Has the hon. gentleman checked to determine under what circumstances the retained earnings or other assets of Sky Shops Limited from its Bahamian subsidiary or subsidiaries were brought into Canada and whether all of the requirements of Canadian tax law were satisfied in this respect?

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it requires the greatest ingenuity to place the context of that question within the framework of the action brought against the hon. member and his co-defendants, and action for libel commenced by Thomcor Holdings Limited. The style of cause for this action did not include Sky Shops Limited about which the question was asked; it was on a different tack entirely. The action for libel had nothing to do with the question asked by my hon. friend.

● (1520)

Up until 1961 it was only in respect of criminal actions that sub judice could be raised. At that time it was also an action for libel and a question was asked relating to that action which the Speaker ruled out of order. The members of the House at Westminster were so concerned about this that a special committee was set up to examine the issue and to bring in a report. That committee examined the matter very extensively, as a result of which the rules and Standing Orders of the British House were amended and there is now in the British Standing Orders a provision that deals with sub-judice questions.

I admit that this is not necessarily binding upon Your Honour or this House. Standing Order 1 provides that the rules and practices of the British House shall apply so far as is possible in the Canadian House of Commons, but certainly we do not follow changes made in their Standing Orders from time to time subsequent to the date when we first received our Standing Orders. However, I think it would be wrong not to examine with care and to take into account the law that now prevails in the United Kingdom, which is simply this: I shall read from the Journals of the House of Commons at Westminster for July 23, 1963, and the Standing Orders which I believe are still in existence:

Resolved, that, subject always to the discretion of the Chair and to the right of the House to legislate on any matter,

(1) matters awaiting or under adjudication in all courts exercising a criminal jurisdiction and in courts martial should not be referred to—

(a) in any motion (including a motion for leave to bring in a bill), or

(b) in debate, or

(c) in any question to a minister including a supplementary question;

(2) matters awaiting or under adjudication in a civil court should not be referred to—

(a) in any motion (including a motion for leave to bring in a bill), or

(b) in debate, or

(c) in any question to a minister including a supplementary question from the time that the case has been set down for trial or otherwise brought before the court—

I think those are the important words, Mr. Speaker, that under the time element in the British House in regard to civil actions, the right of the Chair to prohibit the asking of questions or proceedings in the House regarding a civil matter comes into effect from the time that the case has been set down for trial or otherwise brought before the courts. It is interesting to notice that a little further on it states that where a case has been settled, the right is resumed in the House to ask questions unless and until an appeal is set down, in which case the right is suspended again.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the British practice and I do not think it is so very different from what has been the decision of other Speakers, particularly Your Honour's predecessor, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux. In 1971 there was a case that was debated at length in this House. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was involved, as was I and other members including the hon. member from Halifax at that time. It dealt with a case that had achieved some prominence because the government had failed to pay moneys it was required to pay under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and we had raised the issue in the House. An action had been commenced in Saskatchewan by some Saskatchewan residents seeking relief from the courts to compel the minister of finance and the government to pay out the moneys due under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act.

An attempt was made to carry forward the discussion of certain legislation. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a point of order, arguing that the debate on the legislation should not be continued while this action was still before the courts. I am sure Your Honour has had occasion to read that decision, but I will put on the record for the benefit only of members of the House some of the points Mr. Speaker Lamoureux made as they appear in the Journals of this House of Commons under date October 4, 1971. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux referred to the precedent known as citation 149(c) in Beauchesne's fourth edition, which provides:

It has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada that a member while speaking must not refer to any matter upon which a judicial decision is pending.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux had this to say in the next paragraph:

—"judicial decision pending" means that the case has been heard in full and that the court has before it the matter on which a decision will be rendered in the near future, in which case debates in the House might not be interpreted as influencing or attempting to influence the decision of the court.

He went on to say:

A matter, whilst under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the House by a motion or otherwise. This rule does not apply to bills.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux went on to say that his opinion of the matter was such that the mere issue of a writ did not bring into effect the sub judice rule so as to inhibit the right of a member of this House to ask a question or to pursue a debate in the House. I would say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the members of the House that that is a very reasonable and proper interpretation of the law both as it is and as it should be. If attempts are made to inhibit a member of this House in asking questions merely by the issuance of a writ, I can see our opening the door to wholesale abuses.

For example, in a case where a member of the House had had occasion to make an inquiry or investigation into the conduct of some individual or company, all that would be necessary would be for that individual or company to issue a writ, whether it be a writ for debt, or anything else against that hon. member. If the law were applied as some might contend, this would shut the door and would constitute a very grave abuse of the rights of members of the House in the exercise of their duty on behalf of their constituents and the people of Canada. I submit that under such conditions the House should give effect to the decision of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux and to the proposals contained in the report of the British House which is now incorporated in their Standing Orders.

But there is more to it than that, Mr. Speaker. I have ample precedents not involving decisions but where questions have been asked and no challenge was made. On July 9, 1973, an issue was raised in this House by myself and the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) dealing with students' co-operative projects, a report of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and certain challenges with respect to the tendering programs and practices of CMHC. The issue was based on some evidence given by a party to an action then being carried on in the city of Toronto, where one of the parties to the action had given evidence that there had been improper practices in tendering by CMHC which, according to the documents we had, I suggested amounted to improper and perhaps even criminal practices. Questions were asked by myself, by the hon. member for Calgary North and others and no one challenged our right to ask those questions or to have answers given.

● (1530)

In the same context, there was a debate on a somewhat different but related issue in this House when Mr. Reg Stackhouse, at that time the hon. member for Scarborough East, participated in an adjournment debate and asked the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), then minister of state for urban affairs, to deal with the question of foreclosure proceedings then pending against Rochdale College. I think it is rather fascinating to read the reply made by the present Minister of Justice because, after all, I assume he was made Minister of Justice because he has some knowledge of the law. The minister was then dealing with the question of foreclosure which was the subject before the courts and he said this as recorded at page 3991 of Hansard for May 22, 1973:

> I hope the Chief Justice of Ontario, who is responsible for placing matters on the trial list, will see that the action of Central Mortgage and Housing on foreclosure receives an early trial and is handled expeditiously in the Supreme Court of Ontario. That is not under my control. As the hon. member knows, the setting of the trial date is a court proceeding in itself. However, I hope it would not be improper of me to suggest, in regard to these proceedings, that the Chief Justice take note of their special nature and the need for the protection of the interests of the taxpayer and give this matter an early trial.

In that case there was an action commenced in the Supreme Court of Ontario for foreclosure in respect of which the present Minister of Justice made a comment, in effect inviting the Chief Justice to render an early decision. No objection was taken to that, as I do not think any objection could well have been taken, and this was infinitely more flagrant, of course, than the situation which we are now considering, namely, the question asked by the hon. member for Central Nova. Under those conditions, I submit it would be wrong to inhibit the hon. member in asking this and other questions which are related unless they come squarely within the four corners of the style of cause in the action in which he is a co-defendant and the matter which is involved in that style of cause. Outside of that, I submit with great deference that the hon. member should have full leave to pursue his inquiries.

Before I sit down, Your Honour invited some study and I have one more brief comment to make as I think this is an issue we should face in this House before too long. About 18 years ago in the United Kingdom a Mr. Strauss, a member of the Liberal party, had occasion to write a letter to one of the ministers, I think of the then Conservative government, in which he alleged certain irregular practices on the part of the London Electricity Board, an independent board which sits with all the powers of a corporation sole. The minister passed the letter on to the London Electricity Board which, after considering it, wrote to Mr. Strauss and said that if he persisted in this course of conduct in challenging its practices, it proposed to take libel action against him. Mr. Strauss then brought the matter into the House of Commons and alleged, on a question of privilege, that there was intimidation and an attempt by the London Electricity Board to prohibit him in the proper discharge of his duties as a member of the House of Commons.

The matter was debated in committee, it went to the House and ultimately there was a further committee report in 1967, I think it was. That committee reported to the House that, in its opinion, when people in a position such as Mr. Strauss received letters of the kind he had received from the London Electricity Board, it constituted an interference with the rights and immunities of a member of the House of Commons.

I suggest and argue, from that basis, that if it is wrong to write a letter threatening libel, it is an infinitely far more dangerous practice to try to inhibit a member in the discharge of his duties as a member of this House of Commons by bringing a libel action against him.

I should like to think that before we have lost sight of this matter, irrespective of the decision made, this House will consider setting up a small select committee to deal with this whole problem. With the possible introduction of television facilities, we are getting into an area surrounding what are the rights of members, what are the precincts of parliament, and what are the proceedings of parliament. Your Honour has probably discovered that not only are there debates of parliament, but also proceedings of parliament which are areas in which a member is free to disclose, make statements and write letters. This dates back to the time of William and Mary, some hundreds of years ago. When heading into this area, as we are, with some of the problems we face in respect of some of those matters which have received some notoriety, I think it would be very wise for us to review this whole question. Your Honour might agree with this. I have spoken to my friend opposite, the government House leader, and to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I think this is an area to which we should devote some attention, not only for our sake but for the sake of the proceedings of this House and the people involved.

I conclude on that note, because there is a broader issue raised here than the one which involves the hon. member for Central Nova. I conclude, in respect of that branch of the argument as it affects him, by saying that it would be invidious and a great disservice to the political life of this country and to the affairs of this parliament if it were possible to prevent an hon. member from discharging his duty and continuing an inquiry into a matter which needs inquiry merely by issuing a statement of claim against him.

I rest my case on that and suggest to Your Honour that the hon. member for Central Nova, rather than being prohibited from asking his questions, should be entitled to the approbation of members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion Your Honour made to the effect that we might deal with this matter as briefly as possible. But as Your Honour knows, research into a matter of this kind can be far more intriguing than reading James Bond, and surely we should share with other members what we have discovered.

Mr. Broadbent: There may be some dispute about that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There are quite a few things the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has said which I had planned to include in my argument, most of which I will not repeat because he has said them very well. However, there are a couple of things he has said which I want to underline and emphasize a few moments from now. Let me say at the outset that I come down completely on the side of the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). I feel that his freedom of speech as a member of this House takes priority over any other rules or suggestions that may be found in various rules books.

Initially when one looks at this issue, he comes up against two apparent absolutes. Life is full of situations like that and you have to decide which one is more absolute than the other. One of the absolutes is in Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 127, where we read in citation 149(c):

Besides the prohibitions contained in Standing Order 35—

That is what it was when this book was produced.

—it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not:

(c) refer to any matter on which a judicial decision is pending—

As I say, that sounds absolute. I intend to join with the hon. member for Peace River in a few minutes in pointing out that if one goes back to the origins of that statement he will find that it is not as absolute as Dr. Beauchesne suggested when he digested the original citation for the purposes of his book. On the other side of the coin, again if we look in Beauchesne's fourth edition, at page 109 we will find the other absolute which is freedom of speech. Citation 117 (1) states:

● (1540)

The privilege of freedom of speech enjoyed by members of parliament is in truth the privilege of their constituents.

Then citation 117 (2) states:

Freedom of speech is declared by the Bill of Rights in the following terms: "That the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of parliament". "This, as the Right Hon. Sir Donald B. Somervel, D.B.E., K.C., M.P., said before the committee in the Sandys case, in 1939, is not necessarily an exhaustive definition of the cognate privileges." But even assuming that it is, the privilege is not confined to words spoken in debate or to spoken words, but extends to all proceedings in parliament. While the term "proceedings in parliament" has never been construed by the courts, it covers both the asking of a question and the giving of written notice of such questions, and includes everything said or done by a member in the exercise of his functions as a member in a committee in either House, as well as everything said or done in either House in the transaction of parliamentary business.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that citations of that sort—and there are quite a few of them—underline the proposition that freedom of speech is one of the absolutes that apply to members of the House of Commons. We find this again in May's eighteenth edition, at page 70:

Freedom of speech is a privilege essential to every free council or legislature.

Later we find this:

There could be no assured government by the people, or any part of the people, unless their representatives had unquestioned possession of this privilege. Thus only the House of Commons was concerned in its vindication, and only in its connection with that House could it be a matter of constitutional importance.

The point I am making as a theme to what I am saying is that of the two absolutes, freedom of speech is superior to the dictum that there cannot be reference to a matter that is sub judice. However, in addition to these general pronouncements there are some interesting precedents. This is where James Bond is pushed out of the picture. It is true I have to go back to the year 1512. I would have gone back further, only the difficulty with an instance in 1455 is that even in May's eighteenth edition the references to it are in Chaucerian English.

Mr. Broadbent: And Mitchell would not understand.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I would have difficulty reading it, but by 1512 the English was understandable and I shall start there. The case was that of a member of the House of Commons at Westminster by the name of Strode. I gather from the interruptions I am hearing that some members would say he strode across the pages of history, but far be it from me to suggest that. In case members think I have had to dig pretty deeply to find this case, I would point out that even in this most recent edition, May's Eighteenth, it is indexed and there are frequent references to the Strode case as the beginning of the establishment of the precedent that parliament is superior to the courts. The Strode case took place during the fourth year of the reign of Henry VIII. We have all heard of him.

An hon. Member: Simma was not here then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): When I said earlier that procedural research is more intriguing than James Bond, my friend from Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) said there was no sex in it, but since I have mentioned Henry VIII that should satisfy him. I shall read from page 71 of May's eighteenth edition:

—Strode, a member of the House of Commons, was prosecuted in the Stannary Court for having proposed certain bills to regulate the tinners in Cornwall, and was fined and imprisoned in consequence (h). Upon which an Act was passed (i), which, after stating that Strode had agreed with others of the Commons in putting forth bills, "the which here, in this High Court of Parliament, should and ought to be communed and treated of," declared the proceedings of the Stannary Court to be void, and further enacted that all suits and other proceedings against Richard Strode, and against every other member of the present Parliament, or of any Parliament thereafter, "for any bill, speaking or declaring of any matter concerning the Parliament, to be communed and treated of, be utterly void and of none effect".

If I carry on with what happened in the Strode case, instead of just defending the right of the hon. member for Central Nova to ask questions about Sky Shops here on the floor I might be challenging the right of the courts to deal with his case at all. I will not push it that far, but certainly the Strode case is an interesting one. Lest hon. members think that was a long time ago, in 1512, I would point out that it was referred to in quite a few subsequent cases. A long time later, in July, 1641, there was some discussion of another case and a member of parliament quoted the Strode case. Somebody else said that since that was 100 years earlier it did not count, whereupon the House of Commons on July 8, 1641, declared the proceedings in the Queen's Bench to be against the law. Again, at page 73 of May's eighteenth edition we find this:

The judgment had been given against the privilege of parliament, upon the false assumption that the Act of the 4th Henry VIII had been simply a private statute for the relief of Strode, and had no general operation. To condemn this construction of the plain words of the statute, the Commons resolved, 12 and 13 November, 1667, "That the Act of Parliament in the 4th Henry VIII, commonly intituled 'an Act concerning Richard Strode', is a general law," extending to all members of both Houses of Parliament.

I hope I have whetted a few appetites for the reading of this material which, as I say, is not at all dry. But the point I am making is that it was established long ago that what is done outside cannot interfere with the freedom of speech of members in the House of Commons. Perhaps members will take my word for it when I point out that immunity does not apply if a member is charged with some crime, but in civil cases the freedom of speech of a member is not interfered with or limited.

Now I will quote a bit of what the hon. member for Peace River said. I come back to the absolute I started out with, namely, Beauchesne's statement that a matter which is sub judice cannot be referred to at all, which sounds as though there is no way to get around it. But I find that Dr. Beauchesne—he was good at this—when he produced his books did some digesting and frequently left out important parts. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said of a Beauchesne quotation that it was too bad the full quotation was not there. So I refer hon. members to page 328 of May's eighteenth edition:

Matters sub judice.—By a resolution of the House matters awaiting or under adjudication in a criminal court or a court martial, and matters set down for trial or otherwise brought before a civil court may not be referred to in any debate or question.

The point about civil matters is that they have to be set down and brought forward for trial. So far as the present action is concerned, nothing has happened, and if the stricture that Your Honour had in mind the other day—I sense that maybe Your Honour's research has changed your mind a bit—was applied, then just the fact that this notice was given to the hon. member could keep him from exercising his freedom and his right to ask questions about Sky Shops month after month, maybe year after year.

The hon. member for Peace River also referred to the ruling given by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on October 4, 1971. I am coming ahead several hundred years. I think the interesting thing—and I quote it, again for emphasis—is the statement that Mr. Speaker made about the citation in Beauchesne's; the one which says stay away from things that are sub judice. This is what Mr. Speaker Lamoureux said:

I think this citation should be interpreted as narrowly as possible.

In other words, freedom of speech takes priority. He went on:

I doubt very much if the Chair should be called upon to intervene whenever a member refers to a matter which is before the courts.

He goes on to point out that notice of the matter then being dealt with had been given but no proceedings had been underway. If Your Honour has done some of this same research, you might have fun pointing out that I more or less on the other side of the argument in that debate. When I asked some of my lawyer friends this morning what that would do to my status as my kind of lawyer, they said I would probably get a Q. C. if I could argue one way one year and the other way later on.

Mr. Lawrence: Yes, a federal Q.C.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The reason I was arguing that way at that time was that because of the action taken in Saskatchewan, ministers were refusing to ask questions about the matter, but then the government brought in a bill, dealing with the same issue. So I suggested that the matter should be settled one way or the other.

So, sir, Mr. Speaker's ruling was clear, namely, that the kind of notice that had been in the Saskatchewan court at that time did not stand in the way of the bill proceeding. I go back to the Strode case and all the others, and I feel that on all counts Your Honour should come down on the side of freedom of speech rather than on the side of imposing a rule which Dr. Beauchesne quoted in his fourth edition but in which he did not quote all that was there in May from which he took it.

I am about to conclude, sir. I make the same argument that the hon. member for Peace River made. If the hon. member for Central Nova can be stopped from asking questions about Sky Shops because notice of a libel action, has been served on him, just think what could happen in this House. For example, I think the CPR is the meanest employer in Canada and I say that the CPR is particularly mean towards its pensioners. Is the CPR going to sue me for libel and shut me up? My friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), thinks Imperial Oil is making huge profits by gouging its customers, and he says so. Is Imperial Oil going to sue him and silence his voice? The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) also have things to say about Weston, Loblaws, Ziggy's; yes and INCO. Are they all going to be stopped by suits for libel, being filed against them? I am carrying it to the absurd, but sometimes one has to do that to make the point.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to Your Honour for giving us a few days in which to deal with this matter and for suggesting that we do some research, because it is really very interesting reading, and my conclusion from the reading I have done is to come down completely on the side of the hon. member for Central Nova.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief, and most of all I would be clear enough to convey the point of view of the Social Credit Party of Canada on this issue.

First I have to thank you for having provided us with a few days of reflection before voicing our views. I believe it essential to draw your attention on the very principle which is at stake in this discussion. I leave it to my knowledgeable colleagues to bolster their positions with technicalities like precedents or citations by such or such parliamentary jurists who are authorities with respect to the decision to be taken today.

I am very concerned with the orientation you will give to your decision today, if you do so. In my opinion, it is the very principle of the right to ask relevant questions on ticklish subjects which is at stake. The precedent which could be established by any decision directly affecting the case under study could serve—and I would dare say could dangerously serve—the interests of present or future governments which would not in any way want to answer such questions and would claim that a matter is sub judice to prevent a member from asking any relevant questions regarding matters which are before the courts.

There is only one word to describe that—the imposition of the gag, a restraint on the right to speak of a member of parliament. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), considering in fact that he is at the origin of the Sky Shops case and of some other matters which are far from suiting the party in power, becomes I think the scapegoat in all that story. Mr. Speaker, the ruling to be made should encourage the hon. member to keep on bringing to light the venial or maybe mortal, sins on the conscience of this government or future governments when other similar questions will surface.

Mr. Speaker, I urge you to allow any member, in the circumstances the hon. member for Central Nova, to ask direct questions on the Sky Shops case, provided those questions are not intended to exonerate him in this case, should he be at fault. I therefore ask that this assembly be not a place where everyone who attacks the government may be sued, making thus the matter pending and automatically preventing any discussion of the subject by the House. As the previous speaker just said, it would be total distortion of the parliamentarianism principle. It is on this decision, Mr. Speaker, that rests the assurance of keeping our parliamentarianism intact. The hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) is highly esteemed by the members of my party. We believe that his research and questions should not, in any way, be limited by a decision taken too quickly which would create a regrettable precedent in respect of our basic right to know all there is to know. We have no need for scapegoats in this House.

Lastly, with all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I believe the statement you made in this House on Tuesday, February 3, concerning procedures to serve a writ on a member of parliament or on a House of Commons employee has somewhat overshadowed the basic problem of your specific role, that of guardian of our freedoms. The matter is not addressed to the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, but indeed to your role as guardian of our freedoms. No stranger has the right, by virtue of the privilege which is yours as Speaker of this House, to come between an hon. member or an employee of the House and Your Honour. The matter at hand has nothing to do with the right of visitors to enter Parliament, it deals strictly with the authority, other than yours, to come between yourself and any other person directly related to you. I beg of you to consider those principles, Mr. Speaker. They are dear to us and of the utmost importance to all of us.

In closing, I should like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that this Parliament is, to us, a sacred forum in which we should be free to deal with any and all possible matters, to enlighten the Canadian people, and particularly our electors, with regard to the actions of the present and future governments.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is with great reluctance that I join in this issue because of the seniority of the hon. gentleman who spoke previously. However, I think there are two points which have to be made and which were not made by the hon. gentleman. I agree fully with and do not dispute the view that there is absolute freedom of speech within this House, and I would not attempt in any way to limit that. I fully agree that the discharge of the obligations of a member of parliament ought not to be hindered in any way by anybody outside this House, and I am very grateful to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who indicated that there is authority in the Strode case—there was a beginning of authority there—recognizing the superiority of this parliament over the courts.

However, in this instance—and I refer to the specific facts we have before us as recited very accurately by my friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)—the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) indicated in this House that with reference to the action which has been launched against him, he was not seeking the protection of parliamentary privilege. He accepted responsibility for the release which he issued which is the subject matter of the case and which was issued freely. He indicated that he was defending the case on its merits and that he would not bring to the attention of the court or this House any question of personal privilege. That is the first distinction.

I agree that when we are dealing with the sub judice rule we are limiting it in the case of civil action. I agree wholeheartedly that there has been a tendency—and if there has not been as great a tendency as in the British House of Commons, there ought to be—to limit the application of the sub judice rule with reference to civil cases in order to avoid situations where writs are issued in order to prevent further debate on certain issues. I agree, as well, that the time—namely, the setting down for trial—is a very judicious time, if I may use that term, in which to bring into effect the sub judice rule. However, by the same token I agree with the position which was taken by the British House of Commons, that that could be subject to exception in situations where the trial of an action could be prejudiced by matters raised in the House.

None of the precedents which have been brought to the attention of this House deal directly with a case similar to that which we have before us. The hon. member for Central Nova has refused the immunity of parliament and has indicated that he is defending the case on its merits. The hon. member for Central Nova is a party to the action. Usually, the sub judice rule is brought into play when a question is asked of a minister the subject matter of which is under review by a tribunal. At that point the sub judice rule applies and protection can be sought under that rule. However, in this instance the question which gives rise to this matter was posed by the hon. member for Central Nova who is himself a party to the action. Therefore, there is a distinction.

The hon. member for Central Nova and the hon. member for Peace River have indicated that the issue in the libel cause of action is a very narrow one, namely, the pricing policies of Sky Shops, and that the proceedings are at a very early stage. However, there have been a number of declarations outside this House by the hon. member for Central Nova which give me cause for concern. I quote from the Ottawa Citizen of Tuesday, February 3, as follows:

Privilege—Mr. MacKay

Conservative MP Elmer MacKay said Monday that a $250,000 law suit launched against him may provide the courtroom forum he has sought for a judicial look at Sky Shops Export Ltd., under investigation by the RCMP.

From the Montreal Gazette of Tuesday, February 3, I quote the following:

After the suit was filed, MacKay said in an interview: "Maybe here's the judicial inquiry we requested."

Again, in the Ottawa Citizen for Wednesday, February 4:

Mr. MacKay said he regards the law suit as a chance to raise in court questions about Sky Shops Export Ltd., bought out in 1972 by Thomcor—

I am concerned because the question of prejudice of the proceedings before the tribunal applies not only to a member of parliament but also to the other parties involved in the suit. It has been recognized that this House is a tribune, or a podium of considerable power, and while I am very conscious of the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that on the one hand a member of parliament cannot be shut up by commencing a law suit against him, neither should this chamber—and here is the dilemna—be used by a party to an action in order to prejudice the case of his opponent.

It is true that in this instance the proceedings are at a very early stage. However, as a barrister of some experience and reputation, Your Honour knows that it is a determination to be made by the defendant as to whether he will retain a civil jury of six individuals, and the jury notice has yet to be served. I am not attacking or attempting to attack the hon. member for Central Nova; I am attempting to develop an argument relating to the dangers which there are in the positions being taken. There is a danger that a member of parliament might use his privileges in this House to prejudice a trial in which he is involved.

I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that the matter in its whole context is one which could well be referred to a committee for study. In conclusion, therefore, I suggest that the original ruling of Your Honour was the proper ruling. In this instance there has been an indication by a party to the action, who is also a member of this House, that he regards the action as a forum in which to deal with the matters he has brought to the attention of this House. He has said that expressly. In addition, he has forgone the immunity which otherwise might be available, and I am not prepared to debate whether that immunity is available in this case, or at least that immunity subject to the nature of the release and the facts which were attempted to be communicated therein.

● (1610)

In conclusion, I suggest that this is a novel case, that in this instance freedom of speech has been voluntarily forgone by the hon. member and therefore is not in question. He also chose voluntarily to extend the whole matter that he has brought to the attention of the House within an action that was brought outside the House. In those two particulars, this case is distinguishable from any matters which have previously been brought to Your Honour's attention or to the attention of your predecessors.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to traverse any of the arguments advanced by my colleagues in the House on this important question. I simply point out that the arguments as to whether the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) waived his rights and privileges as an hon. member go only to the question of a bailiff or somebody attending upon him to serve documents. That is all that is to be said on that point. That is the only waiver he made. He did not waive any of his other rights as a member of parliament, and therefore the other argument about the statement made by my colleague for Central Nova is totally irrelevant to this particular question.

In this instance there has been started a civil lawsuit against an hon. member on a narrow issue, in this case libel with regard to a statement made by the hon. member as to pricing policy. That is the only thing in that lawsuit. Having had some experience in this House and some experience in the chair which you occupy, Mr. Speaker, it is my view that the rights of members—the parliamentary secretary insisted on this and admitted it—to ask questions which are relevant, which are urgent, which seek information, should be as wide as possible. The contention of sub judice would place a limitation on that right.

I suggest, as other speakers have, that every exception placing limitations on the right to ask questions must be interpreted narrowly. It is not the right which must be interpreted narrowly; it is the exception or derogation of the right which should be interpreted narrowly. I therefore contend that a party commencing an action against an hon. member on a very narrow, definable issue, should in no way preclude that hon. member or any other hon. member from asking the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) or any other member of the treasury benches questions about an investigation predating the commencement of the action and dealing, as we know, with a search in the precincts of parliament and elsewhere by the RCMP. That is an entirely different question.

There are two considerations. Firstly, the identities of the parties, shall we say, on the other side, or outside, have not turned out to be the same, while the hon. member involved has turned out to be the same. Secondly, I repeat, the right of hon. members to ask questions should be as wide as possible and any derogation from that right should be interpreted narrowly.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With regard to the last statement made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the House will recall that I permitted the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) to put a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Allmand) about the general investigation. It seemed to me that there could not be any possible connection between that answer, as to the timing of that particular investigation, and any lawsuit.

In any event, I am reluctant to put the Chair in the position of attempting to analyse issues at stake in any lawsuit in order to determine which questions ought to be put and which ought not to be put. That would put the Chair in an impossible position. I wish to seek general guidance with regard to the question of sub judice, particularly to do with lawsuits, and to clarify it if possible. I also wish to understand if there is anything of special significance which may restrict the hon. member because he is a party to the litigation. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Monday, February 9, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Alex Patterson (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, when participating in debate on this bill on second reading I expressed serious misgivings concerning the principle of this measure, and I am constrained to say that nothing has been said to alter my views on the government's proposal. On the contrary, I am more convinced than ever that, while some unrevealed accommodation has been reached which makes it possible for Reader's Digest to continue publishing its Canadian edition, some of the features of the bill remain unacceptable to many members of this House.

Many views have been recorded with respect to the blundering manner in which the government has approached this question. However, I must say the government has been consistent in that it has established a reputation for confrontation that has never been approximated by any previous government of Canada. In this instance, it has acted true to form. Perhaps the best assessment is that made by Mr. Geoffrey Stevens who wrote the following in the Globe and Mail of December 6, 1975:

> Anyone who cares about fair play, straightforwardness in government, and freedom of discussion cannot help but be appalled by the shabbiness of the government's methods on Bill C-58.

It is evident that the government has failed to recognize basic flaws in the legislation and the basic injustice of the measure proposed. Rather than review the situation and come to an accommodation, the government has chosen to bulldoze the measure through and disregard the attitude of the general public and of members of this House, including government supporters. I wish to call attention to some of the arguments advanced by the government. One of them is that in some way our media should contribute to the development of a truly Canadian culture. I am appalled when I note the ways in which our media tries to accomplish this. When one compares Canadian periodicals and Canadian programs with periodicals and programs produced elsewhere, one cannot help concluding that the Canadian-made product does not portray that which we wish to recognize or acknowledge as truly Canadian culture.

● (1620)

Not too long ago I spoke with a young couple who had spent a number of years in the United States and had re-established their residence in Canada. They told me they were shocked at some of the programs aired by the CBC. They voiced the opinion that this would never have been tolerated across the border. I mention that to point out that just because something originates elsewhere does not mean that it is not good, and because it is produced in Canada it is good.

I again refer to the statements that have been made and the affirmation that one of the purposes of this measure is to strengthen the Canadian publishing industry. I could quote from the speech I made on this measure on May 26, but I do not propose to do that this afternoon. Nevertheless, I believe there are ways in which we can strengthen the Canadian publishing industry. If we must resort to this type of procedure to build the Canadian industry, I say that we are not complimenting it in any way, shape or form. Some of the fault lies with the Canadian publishers. If their periodicals leaned more in the direction of the desires and reading interests of Canadians, there would not be such a tendency to choose other magazines ahead of those published in Canada.

Let us look at it from the other point of view, that is, the money saved by advertisers not being able to claim advertising expenses for income tax purposes. If that were directed into the Canadian industry, it would be in a much more viable position. May I again point out that there is no indication that any substantial amount of such advertising money will be redirected to Canadian enterprise. Indeed, figures that have been quoted show that it will be a very small amount. When requests have been made for proof that this would substantially increase the financial position of the Canadian industry, that proof has not been forthcoming. It is a matter of "it should accomplish this purpose", or "we anticipate that this is going to happen". I do not believe that the position the government is taking in this particular measure is going to strengthen the Canadian publishing industry or put more money into its coffers.

I wish to make reference to the attitude of the government on this issue, particularly with regard to the operations of the committee. I do not have to go into detail about what happened in committee; that has been placed on record on a number of occasions. Because some members of a committee choose not to go along with the measures before it, it would be reprehensible for them to be removed from the committee and others placed on it. However, that action has been taken with regard to members of this committee. It is a reprehensible position for the government to take. This afternoon we were speaking about the freedom of individuals and freedom of speech. That also applies to this measure. Every member who has been on the committee has the right to express his view, regardless of whether it corresponds with the government's proposal. Members on the government side have been taking a position on this measure that is opposed to the proposal of the government. When I spoke on May 26, I referred to the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart). The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt)—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but several members have attempted to speak outside the scope of motion No. 4. Motion No. 4 is a definition of a Canadian magazine. Perhaps the hon. member would limit his remarks to that.

Mr. Patterson: I accept Your Honour's ruling, but respectfully suggest that this comes within the bounds of the measure. It has been dealt with by many other members. In presenting arguments on this bill, surely it should be our right to discuss the position that has been taken. However, I accept Your Honour's ruling and will endeavour to conform to it.

A great deal of attention has been given to what is known as the Cullen rule which deals with the matter of material being substantially different from that published abroad. I do not suggest I would support the law of the Medes and the Persians that that cannot be changed, but there should be something in this measure setting out what is the rule. It should not be left to the discretion of the minister or others; it should be clearly stated so that people will know where they stand in this regard.

What we have been saying with regard to Reader's Digest in connection with rules and regulations carries over into the operations of other news media. They are faced with exceedingly difficult situations in attempting to comply with and come under the rules laid down in this measure by the government. I think of the provisions dealing with television. Reader's Digest have been doing their best to conform to the requirements of the bill. Apparently they have come to the point of accommodation. That company has endeavoured to be a good corporate citizen; it has tried to meet all the requirements and fit in with the program that the government has outlined. Because of the representations that have been made, some accommodation has been reached.

There are others who have been making every attempt to conform with every requirement of legislation. They have been trying to govern their affairs and arrange their enterprises in order that they might fit in. In so doing they have made a tremendous contribution to the Canadian economy. They have paid their taxes, provided job opportunities and have made a tremendous contribution to the development of other types of operations. I am thinking of television and particularly of KVOS which covers most of the area in such an admirable way. Here is an organization which is making a worth-while and appreciated contribution to the community and to the national economy. Yet it is being faced with restrictions severely limiting its operation and it will not be in a position to carry out its activities in the same manner as hitherto. They have made suggestions as to how they could co-operate in the further development of the industry, but no co-operation has been received, with the result that KVOS is facing the same problem as the magazines.

● (1630)

Bringing all these factors together, I am prompted to suggest that the government should take another hard look at this question, reconsider its attitude toward the motions before us today and recognize the validity of the representations which have been made in this chamber. I trust the minister and his colleagues will bring themselves to agree that in the interests of organizations which have made their contributions to the economy, as well as in the interests of the community generally, they should be willing to make the necessary adjustments and allow some of these amendments designed to soften the impact and permit the organizations concerned to carry on the valuable work they are doing and the contributions they are making to Canadian life.

[Mr. Patterson.]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I am looking through my papers, Mr. Speaker. There has been a change in the documentation I have here, a lot of the preparation for my speech having been made for yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Roberts: Has somebody given you a speech to read?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That would be the last thing on earth, to suggest that anyone prepares a speech for me to read. If the hon. member spoke yesterday, as I believe he did, he broke his eternal silence.

Mr. Roberts: On Friday.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If the hon. member spoke on Friday, he broke an eternal silence. There is usually a muted voice coming from that seat. As to the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), an amendment to the motion put down by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), I find it makes eminent sense with regard to what it is purporting to amend.

The hon. member for Ontario put down a twin-barrelled modification amending the Income Tax Act in clause 1 by adding two paragraphs. The first raises the question of the extent of ownership of the publication. That matter has never been an important issue. However, it could be argued, for instance, that 75 per cent is no better than 60 per cent, say, or that 75 per cent is somewhat less than 100 per cent. But I suppose this began originally when a former minister of finance, Walter Gordon, brought in changes to the Income Tax Act to make it possible for certain benefits to flow to corporations operating in Canada and owned abroad, provided they would sell or list on the stock exchange 25 per cent of their equity stock.

The complementary figure is, of course, 75 per cent. All this means, in this instance, is that 25 per cent of equity stock in a foreign-controlled publishing company established in Canada and publishing in Canada shall be owned by Canadians. At one stage, the "Canadian" requirement only went as far as residence, but if my memory serves me correctly this has now been changed to Canadian citizenship. That, of course, is the correct position.

As originally put forward by Mr. Gordon back in 1964 or 1965, the position was somewhat ludicrous since the only requirement was one of Canadian residence. One could, of course, be a citizen of Timbuktu and still be a resident of Canada qualified to hold shares under whatever regulation was in existence in those years. However, this does not appear to have been an issue of great moment in the course of the present extensive debate.

I am astounded that a reasonable man like the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen)—when he was a private member and parliamentary secretary he showed eminently good sense—could have applied the interpretation he did to the words "substantially the same" and determined the figure of 80 per cent; in other words, that there would be 80 per cent difference. First of all, I find it repugnant that the minister, under the Income Tax Act, should be exercising discretion in determining what is meant by "substantially the same". This point has been argued by a number of hon. members in the course of the debate and I do not propose to go over it again. However, the hon. member for Ontario added these words:

—and not more than 40 per cent of its content, including advertisements, were first published in a single periodical outside of Canada.

Here, with the greatest respect, my interpretation is that the contents could be entirely foreign and not one line Canadian because the limitation, as I read it, is that not more than 40 per cent shall have been published in any single publication outside of Canada. Therefore, Reader's Digest or Time could pick up 35 per cent from one publication, 35 per cent from another and 30 per cent from another pool. In fact, you can break up these percentages so long as they are under 40 per cent, and be merely a digest or a compendium put together from other sources. So long as no single publication could claim to be the origin of 40 per cent of the editorial content, the magazine would qualify if it otherwise qualified under ownership.

● (1640)

This is not what we are trying to cure. We would, of course, like to see some Canadian content in a publication, but the motion of the hon. member for Ontario does not establish any Canadian content in it at all—not one line. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway establishes the same freedom, shall I say, simply by striking out the provision having to do with 40 per cent content from any publication. The hon. member's amendment is strictly limited to ownership—at least to that extent it is clear—and is certainly preferable to the proposed motion of the hon. member for Ontario which I have criticized.

The Parliament of Canada is a place of debate and of mobilization of public authority. The extensive debate that has taken place in this House has tended to mobilize some public opinion. Since the debate started we have seen a number of newspapers take up the question in their editorial pages. It is not attracting much further debate among news reporters. They have reported the debate, which has continued for a good number of days, in every imaginable form they can find, which I suppose is not the way to write stories which sell newspapers, and as a result this debate does not rank as a front page attraction so far as a news feature is concerned.

As a result of the debate in this House, the attitude of the Minister of National Revenue has been modified. Following the debate on second reading and the discussions in committee, the public was astounded by the statement of the minister that "not substantially the same" was going to be interpreted as meaning 80 per cent. Further, he assumed the fiat that should anyone discover a means whereby these requirements could be circumvented in any way, then either the law would be changed so as to clamp down, or the interpretation of the law as it might exist following passage of this bill would be changed so as to catch everyone. There is about as much principle in that as there is in the most tortuous of crooked arguments.

Then we had the other day, I think to the astonishment of the press and the whole of the Canadian public, the statement by the Minister of National Revenue that the government has come to an accommodation with Reader's Digest. I don't know how much thinning oil was put into the works by either side in regard to interpretation.

I should like to lend whatever influence I have—I was almost trapped into saying whatever weight I could lend—to the argument of my colleagues that this bill be returned to the committee. I should like to know through my colleagues on the committee what changes have been made in the thinking of Mr. Zimmerman and his board and that of his principals in Reader's Digest Incorporated to enable them now to live within the spirit and letter of the law as amended by this bill.

I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a file which, for the purposes of the record, is about an inch and a half thick, containing representations from Reader's Digest and from an aroused citizenry, most of them readers of Reader's Digest, lamenting, fulminating and generally deploring the lack of principle and the insidious action of the government in trying to take away the position that—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order. I regret to interrrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I promise to finish within two minutes, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, protestations have been made. The governement decided, for its own reasons which I will not go into at this time, that the status of Time and Reader's Digest should be changed, ten years after a governement of the same stripe had given that particular status to those two magazines. The members of this House would like to know from the Minister of National Revenue just what the government has done to change its mind, and what inspired it to insert some oil into the works that has induced rapprochement, shall I say, between Reader's Digest and the government in this particular matter. Also, we would like to know whether anything is developing in regard to Time Incorporated. May I thank the House for its indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and say I certainly support the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I notice that a number of government members called for the question when you recognized me. I think about the only questions that still confront us are, why are they so silent and why are they backtracking so rapidly as they go back to their constituents to discuss Bill C-58?

An hon. Member: They are all asleep.

Mr. Epp: If they are all asleep, then that is an attitude they are familiar with and perhaps it is where we should leave them. The amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has my wholehearted endorsation and support. The government and its supporters would be very wise to consider what that amendment does in essence. It really bails the government out a very sticky situation in which it finds itself.

● (1650)

Many government members felt that once they were able to give a last-minute reprieve to Reader's Digest, all members of this House and Canadians in general would be pleased with the result and Bill C-58 would receive speedy passage through the House. The government is now surprised to find that some people who believe in principles do not like back-room deals. The government is finding out that in spite of the fact Reader's Digest feels it can continue to function, we are not accepting a contents regulation.

During my two previous interventions in this debate I said I did not in any way like the content rule or percentages in that context, but at least I can support this amendment for the simple reason that we would have the regulations written into the law. I commend the hon. member for Vancouver Kingsway for having the courage, as a member of the government, to say that there should be absolutely no content control by virtue of Bill C-58 or by virtue of any regulation passed by the minister or officials of the Department of National Revenue. Her amendment has my support.

It is interesting to note the government hoped that by getting this legislation passed very quickly after the recess, it would not attract too much editorial comment. It is interesting to note that in general the newspapers of Canada are not supportive of the Reader's Digest deal. This whole question goes far beyond the existence of one magazine. While that may be the focal point at this juncture, the critical question for us, as members of parliament, and for Canadians in general is whether any government or any minister of the Crown should have the power, through legislation or regulation, to control the press. I am sure that government members will immediately argue that this does not involve control of the press. However, as soon as a content rule is brought in, a certain amount of press control becomes the fact of life.

I also find it exceedingly strange that the NDP, which likes to clothe itself in the righteous cloaks of civil libertarians, has remained silent about this amendment. If a so-called left wing magazine were threatened by government legislation or a back-room deal, I wonder if we would see every NDP member moving amendments and subamendments one after another. They are strangely silent on this amendment.

Mr. Peters: We never consider Time a socialist magazine.

Mr. Epp: That is not what I was saying, and if the hon. member had been listening he would know the difference.

An hon. Member: We are listening.

Mr. Peters: I don't find it either right-wing or left-wing.

Mr. Epp: I wonder if the hon. member wants to make a speech from a seat other than his own.

An hon. Member: We want to listen. We are trying to get some wisdom from what you are saying.

Mr. Epp: The NDP, supposedly the proponents of Canadian nationalism—by their own definition I might add, which has been rejected time after time by the Canadian electorate—is now strangely quiet. We have legislation which goes to the very root of civil liberties, yet members of that party have nothing to say. By saying nothing, I suppose one could assume they are in favour of the legislation. I suppose the only civil liberties they believe in are those they advocate for their own support. That is not a principle but a cheap political move. They obviously think this is not fighting ground for them and they should abandon the field to come back and fight another day when they have something to fight about.

No contents legislation or regulation should be supported by this House or by Canadians generally. I might suggest that if the whips were not doing their job it would not be supported by a number of government members. This amendment lends itself to the support of every member of this House. The amendment retains the ownership provision, that is, the 75 per cent rule. I am sure every member of the House can agree with that. It also retains the provision that editing will be done in Canada, that the publication functions will be retained in Canada and performed by Canadians. That is where it stops. If the House were debating a bill in that form, I am sure it would have been passed through the House long ago.

What the government has tried to do is close the door still further. This would have eliminated Time magazine and would have been in support of the Canadian Periodicals' Association. Time and time again supporters of that association stressed the fact that 80 per cent "not substantially the same" was the absolute minimum with which it could live. In fact, that association wanted 100 per cent. These supposedly great writers of Canada were saying they could not compete with the rest of the world. They asked for complete control of the industry through a 100 per cent rule in order that they might compete. They were very gracious in their concessions and dropped from 100 per cent to 80 per cent.

The regulations as interpreted for the purpose of Reader's Digest and the so-called deal have not changed. The application of the word "digest" to the rule is now being viewed differently, and that is the whole essence of this debate. Even before Bill C-58 passes through the House, the minister has changed his interpretation and the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) has had to agree. I imagine the Secretary of State takes the low road home every day now. He has had to concede to this change in interpretation. I do not know what other changes will take place after the ten ministers return from the province of British Columbia. I understand they are being absolutely decimated by the arguments of the lumber association and other people in British Columbia to the effect that Bill C-58 not only is regressive and wrong but it will not achieve the purpose it is supposed to achieve, and will be counterproductive. It will result in a backlash from their best neighbour, the United States.

Having passed the ownership clause, why must the government insist on going further in respect of content? Not one good reason has been given for this. What the government hopes to accomplish is that editorials will be such that they will be able to survive. The other day the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), when I quoted from the Toronto Sun called it a progressive paper. I commend him for his insight.

Mr. Symes: I was being facetious.

Mr. Epp: Having been back home to the west where clarity of thought prevails, I thought I would find out what the people were saying back home. The Winnipeg Tribune, I understand, is a paper that is at times supportive of the present administration. I wish to quote from an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune of February 9, headed "Arrogant action". I do not think the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie would have too many complaints about the editorial policy of that paper.

The editorial reads in part:

> Now, with the bill stalled in the Commons and with several MPs ready to propose amendments which would tone down the severity of its terms, the government has taken it on itself to interpret the law before it is even passed.
>
> Mr. Cullen said the agreement with Reader's Digest would permit the publication, based in Montreal, to use the same articles as the parent magazine in the U.S. As long as they are edited and condensed in this country, they will qualify as Canadian content.
>
> That's rather like saying if one imports milk from Wisconsin and processes it in Thunder Bay, one can then call it Canadian condensed milk.
>
> No wonder Mr. Stanfield and other MPs, some of them Liberals, are shocked. As Mr. Stanfield pointed out, interpreting the law is for the courts, not the cabinet.
>
> If governments can decided what the law means, they are endangering the painfully-won and dearly-bought concept that making the laws must be a separate function from interpreting them.
> The government has, in effect, taken control of a segment of the press. Further extension of this control may lie in abeyance, but it is a precedent which this or future governments could use for their own purposes and to their own ends.

That is the critical issue, no matter whether the minister wants to think of it in another way. That is the central point of Bill C-58, whether or not his brainwashed officials want to think of it in another way. I found it interesting that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway compared this bill, at the time she moved her amendment, to the 1930s and early 1940s in nazi Germany when there was also content control. One might say that this will not reach that point, but why does the government want in any way to have content control? That question has not been answered by the Secretary of State or by the Minister of National Revenue to the satisfaction of anyone. Government members are silent on this point. If they were given the opportunity to speak, I know many of them who are in sympathy with the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway would do so.

In recent months we have also witnessed other totalitarian governments exercise control over the press in their own societies. One need look only to the USSR and the role played by persons such as Sakharov and Solzhenitsyn. As I say, the New Democratic Party members are strangely silent about that. Such governments are quite willing to use thought control, press control and content control. Some members of this House and some Canadians might think we will never come to that. I say this legislation opens that door. In no way should the government become part and parcel of any regulation or legislation which allows any government or any minister to decide whether or not a publication meets the criteria of the government relative to content.

Let the government bring forward legislation relating to ownership and those involved in the editorial and publications business. Let them bring forward that kind of legislation, but not content control which is abhorrent to Canadians. This government, supposedly a Liberal government, surely cannot at this point in time justify a position whereby it will control content or give officials of the government an opportunity to interpret regulations relating to control.

One could mention many other instances in the last few months where governments have tightened up in respect of the press. The process we are witnessing in this House these days is not very dissimilar to what we have seen in other parts of the country. The importance of this bill to the government can be interpreted in only one way. The government is dedicating a disproportionate amount of the House time to this legislation.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, there are certain strange rumblings from the NDP again. No member of the NDP seems to want to stand and make a speech in respect of content and control of the press, but if there were a left-wing press involved I am sure they would be on their feet.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The hon. member may continue with unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) may continue for a reasonable period of time.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Epp: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the House. There is one last comment I wish to make. I believe the subamendment brought forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway should find support in all quarters of the House. It retains the right of advertisers in editorial publications, papers and magazines to have a privilege for tax purposes. I say to the government, again, that surely they can support that type of amendment to this type of legislation, but let them not become a party to a proposition which would also bring in content and thought control, as Bill C-58 does.

● (1710)

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to make a few remarks to support the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), because it seems to me it is not only a sensible amendment, one which is an attempt to improve the legislation, but it comes from a member who has a background in, and presumably a feeling for, journalism in this country. Too often in government lately inexperience and lack of knowledge are held up as virtues, and lack of expertise has a positive advantage in holding a portfolio or in espousing a particular cause. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is an experienced journalist and one would expect her colleagues to pay some attention to what she has to say with regard to this legislation.

As we on this side of the House have pointed out, the whole concept of this legislation is fraught with the most ridiculous and contradictory perceptions. Torpedoing magazines or periodicals which are first-rate in content, regardless of the national origin of the content, is not going to help to any extent their Canadian competitors. Whether it is in journalism, athletics or practically any field of human endeavour, one does not improve standards by eliminating competition, particularly in an unfair way. Good journalism is an art form, and Canada is being perceived by other nations of the world as trying to restrict the free flow of information and ideas to its citizens for crass economic reasons which do not even meet the test of business logic, much less more aesthetic considerations.

My general feelings on what is being done are summed up very well by a distinguished Canadian writer with one of Canada's finest newspapers, the Halifax Chronicle-Herald, in a recent column. I am referring to William Smith, commonly known as Bill Smith. Let us consider what Mr. Smith had to say, admittedly with tongue in cheek but also with a certain amount of irony and logic, on the general subject of content control. He writes:

> Some little while past, I had drawn to my attention that Canadians, including those in their formative years, are being exposed to the writings of a relatively ancient Englishman named Shakespeare. Not only is he a non-Canadian, but I gather there is some question about his authorship of some material put out under his name.
> A number of helpful people have since been in touch with me, recognizing and sympathizing with my concern that the Canadian content regulations are not sufficiently strong.
> It has been suggested that a blanket Canadian content requirement in the arts could include an escape clause in application to authors, composers, painters, sculptors, whose work was completed prior to confederation.
>
> Reluctantly, I concede that such an exemption might have some merit, provided that it were offset by a rigid requirement of Canadian content of 75 per cent or more in any work completed after July 1, 1867.
> Examining my own small collection of books the other day I was shocked to find it almost entirely made up of the writings of foreigners—many of them ancient foreigners whose works are out of date and obviously of no application to the Fortress Canada we are attempting to build today.
> I have an acquaintance who has some small familiarity with music, who tells me that the situation is no better in that field than in literature. Perhaps worse.
>
> Accepting his assessment as accurate, which I must do on past record, it appears that we are exposed to people named Handel, Bach, Chopin, Grieg, Lahar, Strauss, and on and on the list goes—foreigners every one.
> Obviously more, much more has to be done to encourage Canadian culture.
>
> The thought was expressed to me that our cultural guides in Ottawa might, after dealing with Time, Reader's Digest, cable TV and such matters, turn to the modern application of the excellent work of Thomas Bowdler, a onetime editor of Shakespeare.
> Mr. Bowdler had the public interest at heart.—

If I might make a comment here, Mr. Speaker, probably in the same way as the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner).

> —and in his editing expurgated the so-called Bard of Avon of words, phrases and suggestions "which cannot with propriety be read aloud in a family." He was so successful that to this day we recall him in the term "bowdlerizing".
> The approach might be—in the case of Shakespeare, for example, to leave the middle act as it stands, but have a Canadian write a new first and third act, thus bringing the whole into line with Canadian content standards.
> With some difficulty, perhaps, the same principle could be applied to Shaw, Pope, Shelley, Swift and all the rest.
> There would remain the problem of what to do about the mass of foreign material now in the hands of Canadians. I don't favour direct police action, at least until the carrot technique has been tried . . .
>
> We might, for example, call in all albums containing the works of Mendelssohn, giving in return a Canadian album of the works of a Canadian composer—the job financed by the government.
> Similarly, in the case of literature, and, of course painting. One could turn in a Titian and get in return a good, solid Canadian painting by a Canadian painter.
> Nor should we destroy the material gathered by the government. It would be sufficient to return it to the nation of origin, with a suitable covering letter.

Some of these comments obviously are satirical in nature but unfortunately, from the point of view of what this government has tried to do, they reflect with telling accuracy and Thurber-like perception some of the specious logic that my friends on the treasury benches are using. Mr. Smith continues and concludes his interesting column by saying:

> I know I am beginning to feel self-conscious about the foreign material, particularly the books that I have been reading for years, unaware of their subtle anti-Canadian influence. Without them I will be the better when they are gone, and are replaced by sound, nationalistic Canadian volumes.

The only problem is that it is not that easy to get meritorious works by Canadians unless they have some standard to which they can reasonably hope to relate and be measured in competition. With the various machinations of this incompetent government it is easy to lose sight of the basic raison d'être for Bill C-58. It is worth recalling, however, that the supposed reason we have this bill before us is the government's stated desire to assist the Canadian periodical industry. Perhaps it is worth taking a moment or two to analyse the kind of legislation we now have before us against that basic goal.

There is no magic to the rudimentary facts of life of the magazine industry. Stated in simplest terms, they are that a readable product and effective promotion produce circulation which in turn produces advertising, which earns the revenues with which both the product and promotion can be maintained and expanded. That is how the business works, and any government program which purports to assist Canadian periodical publishers must fit within that framework if it is to be effective. Bill C-58 simply does not meet that test. What we have before us is not a bill of any worth-while assistance to Canadian magazine publishers but, rather, an example of this government's dual penchant for the most narrow and chauvinistic nationalism and the most arbitrary and unfair use of administrative fiat.

I want to come back to both of those points, but first let me take a moment or two to examine C-58 in its present form within the basic context of how the magazine industry works. In terms of assisting Canadian periodicals to achieve increased circulation, this bill offers virtually nothing. There is no evidence whatsoever to suggest that running the Canadian edition of Time magazine out of the country, as this government seems bent on doing, will affect the end circulation of Time very much. It can either print and publish its U.S. edition here, perhaps with Canadian advertising inserted at reduced rates to offset the loss of tax deductibility, or it can simply mail the U.S. edition directly to its Canadian subscribers. Either way, as I say, there is no evidence that its circulation will suffer significantly or that Canadians will desert this magazine, with its unique style and format, for Maclean's or any other supposed Canadian alternative.

So the bill is a total failure in terms of being a negative aid to circulation, that is, by driving circulation away from the big, bad American competitors. In positive terms, in terms of offering any concrete assistance to Canadian periodicals effectively to promote and build their circulation, Bill C-58, of course, offers nothing whatsoever. Indeed it seems beyond the imagination of this government—and this Secretary of State in particular—to think in anything approaching positive terms when it comes to strengthening Canadian cultural institutions.

After all, it is much easier to punish the supposed villains than it is to provide positive encouragement to Canadians, and this is true not only of periodicals and the publishing industry but in business as well.

The claim of the government, of course, is that Bill C-58 will be of direct benefit to Canadian periodicals in that advertisers who are denied access to Time would reinvest these funds in other—in the government's terms—more suitable publications. That is pure sophistry and if the Secretary of State does not know that he is even more divorced from reality than his unbelievable performance on this bill would make us believe.

Advertisers or their agencies choose the media in which to place their advertising and their dollars on the basis of which outlets reach the largest number of consumers at the best price. The "cost per thousand" approach is what they use. On a more sophisticated basis, they will combine this basic factor with a medium's ability to reach a particular kind of audience which is seen as especially relevant to the goods or services they seek to sell: women's products in women's magazines, travel and luxury goods in media whose readers have an above average income range, and so it goes.

I defy the Secretary of State to tell me that, given the extent of Time's audience in mass terms, and given the kind of audience the magazine traditionally reaches, there are other more Canadian periodicals, periodicals with a higher Canadian content, available to pick up these advertising dollars. There just are not any and the minister knows that as well as I do. In terms of practical assistance to Canadian periodicals, this bill is a non-starter. As I have already said, it represents, instead, a startling example of this government's misguided sense of nationalism and its utter disregard for a sense of administrative regularity or fairness of any kind.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, at this point in the debate on Bill C-58 it seems that everything which could be said has already been said, but I should like to say a few words on this bill on behalf of my constituents. I might add that in my time here I have never seen a piece of legislation debated in this House which has met so much opposition from every corner of the House. Some of the most damaging statements made to date on this bill have been made by hon. members on the government benches.

Most, if not all, hon. members who have spoken on this bill have stated that mail from their constituents has been 90 per cent or more against the provisions of the bill, especially those relating to the status of Time and Reader's Digest. My mail has been almost 100 per cent in favour of leaving those two magazines as they are. However, we know now that the government does not care what the people of Canada want. The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) are out to get Time magazine, and after the recent accommodation which was made between the government and Reader's Digest it should be clear to everyone that that was the whole purpose of the bill.

The mere fact that the government chooses to ignore the weight of argument in this House against this bill, and that both the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Revenue know that the Canadian people have voted overwhelmingly against this bill with their letters, leads to only one conclusion: Bill C-58 is purely and simply a vendetta against Time magazine. We were told a few days ago that the government had backed down and made an accommodation with Reader's Digest, so all we have to do here is debate the merits of whatever the government accepts with regard to the publishing guidelines for Time magazine. I do not think a watered-down version of Reader's Digest is an acceptable compromise. I do not believe there has been any real purpose in tying up this House for days on end simply to lend an air of respectability to the private war of the government against Time magazine, crippling Reader's Digest in the process. This House has been used by the Secretary of State and the Maclean-Hunter interests to carry on a one-sided fight against two fo the finest publications in Canada, and it is a fight no one can win. Maclean-Hunter would not have to fear Time and Reader's Digest if they were able and willing to produce and publish a magazine of the quality of Time. The people of Canada will not win, because they will lose two of our best magazines and they will not be given anything in their place. It will just be a case of losing. Usually, when people are asked to give up something, it is because they are being given something else which is just as good, or better. That is not the case here.

There is another thing about this bill which concerns me and I know it concerns the people in my riding. There is little doubt that this bill will be passed, as my colleague the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) has pointed out, because there are enough hon. members on the government benches who will vote for it, knowing that their constituents would rather they voted against it. Once this bill becomes law, the government will be able to say that it has been given approval by parliament to exercise censorship of the press in this country. It has been pointed out over and over again that this will only be the starting point for this type of government interference and government intervention into the editorial content of press, radio and television. We have already seen recent examples of interference in broadcasting by the new chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, and this bill will help to tighten the circle.

I cannot believe that the Secretary of State, or anyone else in the government for that matter, has thought out the matter of editorial content. During the hearings of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts last December, the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) made a very good argument for the impossibility of determining the Canadianism or the non-Canadianism of a group of words as a mathematical percentage. The witness at that time for the Department of National Revenue, Mr. Hodgson, also made the point that this determination would have to be a matter of judgment. In other words, one person on a given day would make his or her own interpretation of a page of editorial matter in a magazine and make a judgment as to whether it was Canadian enough to meet these guidelines; on another day, another person might presumably arrive at a different interpretation of a similar page of editorial matter and therefore make a different judgment.

[Mr. Scott.]

Under the present structuring of the Department of National Revenue, it will be impossible for that department or any other department to undertake the mammoth task of reviewing and interpreting every page of editorial matter published in the magazines this government has indicated are suspect. It appears that the only answer to this dilemma is to establish a federal board of censorship, under a master censor, and it might also be a good idea to deny the right of appeal. As we all know, judgments of the Department of National Revenue can be appealed. What would happen if one particular magazine decided to appeal the judgment of the revenue department on a page by page basis? Each appeal would deal with a page on which someone had made a judgment, and this could go on forever. Mr. Hodgson tried to explain the manner in which these judgments would be made when he said to the committee:

> In a 100-page periodical, for example, we would be looking at each page in turn to see whether that page was the same or different from something else; and if it were the same, we would then ask ourselves, "Was that page procured under a continuing arrangement, or not?"

I wonder how many members of the government or of this House can make anything out of that nonsense. At the same time, the government, through the Secretary of State and the Minister of National Revenue, is talking about percentages the witness from National Revenue is saying that it will be a matter of personal judgment. We just keep getting deeper into a mess that nobody understands. It will get even messier and even more impossible to understand.

Considering the wave of opposition that continues to mount against this bill, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the government should release its members and allow a free vote on these amendments and on the bill itself. It is common knowledge that members of all parties in this House have received a considerable amount of mail on this subject, and common knowledge that the weight of public opinion expressed in that mail runs heavily in favour of Reader's Digest and Time magazine and against the government. Several members on the other side of the House have spoken against this bill, and there must be many more who are against it but who have not spoken out. Let us determine in the most democratic way possible whether the government can muster the support it needs on a free vote to pass this bill.

When I decided to speak on this bill I also decided to support motion No. 5, standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). After thinking it over I decided to take it a step further. Before I do, may I commend the hon. member for her courage in standing throughout the debate so firmly on a point of principle. I, and others in this House, watched the hon. member being harassed and hampered in her efforts by her own colleagues. They went so far as to deny her the right to sit on the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts while it considered the bill.

The hon. member's amendment is a step in the right direction, but I have thought about the whole question of ownership as spelled out in the law and cannot find any justification for specifying any degree of ownership for any corporation, commodity, or anything else, including magazines, other than the 51 per cent required by existing Canadian law. Federal, as well as Ontario law, defines ownership as being in the hands of anyone holding 51 per cent of the stock in a corporation, or 51 per cent or more of the established value. I do not see any reason for a new rule of thumb for magazines or anything else. If ownership is established in present law, why should we discriminate against magazines or any other types of corporate endeavours in Canada?

Present federal and Ontario laws concerning foreign ownership of corporations doing business in Canada specify that 51 per cent of stock in such corporations must be owned by Canadian residents. I would therefore move the following amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That amendment No. 4 to Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 1 by deleting the figure '75' in line 3, and substituting therefor '51 per cent or more'.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. We will take this proposed amendment under advisement and consider it.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my remarks with respect to the proposed motion to amend Bill C-58 will be quite brief. The government has made it clear that it intends, whatever the opposition might be within the country, within this House or within its own caucus, to force this bill through parliament as rapidly as possible. I think it is bad legislation. I think the government should take a second look at it before requiring it to be passed. I support the motions which would result in one year's delay in the implementation of the legislation because this would give the government a chance to reconsider its policy and reverse its direction.

There was an interesting development with the announcement by Reader's Digest that it feels the deal cooked up with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) will enable that publication to continue in business. This is an important development. We were told time after time, as government members spoke on this legislation, that it was vitally important to the survival of the Canadian periodical industry that Reader's Digest of Canada be put out of business and that its advertising revenue be made available to the other Canadian publications.

It is interesting that the government should have changed its mind on this issue. It does not feel this is important any more. It does not feel it is crucial that Reader's Digest be put out of business. The government felt the pressure within its own caucus, within the country at large, and it has finally retreated. It has recognized that it would be extremely unpopular in the country at the present time to force this legislation upon the Canadian people. So it has left one target. The government is not terribly concerned about peripheral publications such as MD of Canada which would be affected by this legislation, but it is concerned about Time.

I am sure hon. members opposite do not realize the difficulties they are apt to encounter from trying to proceed with this legislation at this point in time. There is no reason for this House to be asked to deal with legislation of this kind, especially in view of the information that came to the attention of members of parliament as a result of the circular all members received from Reader's Digest. What is to happen to other publications? Other magazines and periodicals will be affected by this legislation. What will happen to TV Guide, to our medical journals and other journals which the Canadian people like to read? I suggest that the House would be well advised to delay this legislation for 12 months, which is what the motion suggests, and to reconsider the entire gamut of the matter.

The statement of the Minister of National Revenue regarding the 80 per cent content, 80 per cent the same as, or 80 per cent different rule—whichever way you want to interpret it—was most unfortunate and dangerous. I do not care what the minister says, and I care less for the government. I say emphatically that the minute any government begins to decide what the Canadian people shall read, it becomes very, very dangerous. I am surprised that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) goes along with the government in this regard. You do not build up the weak by tearing down the strong. It seems to me that there are other ways to help Canadian periodicals develop, other ways to help them become strong.

The magazine Country Guide is not nearly as large a publication as it once was, mainly because of the cost of postage. I suggest we can support Canadian periodicals in many ways. Why are we not looking at those ways and means of supporting the industry within Canada? I am sure we in the opposition are just as great Canadian supporters as anyone else in Canada. Nevertheless, why do we have to try to tear down the strong in order to build up the weak?

The Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) mentioned that this bill has generated a lot of mail, pro and con. I agree with him to some extent. However, the great majority of mail that came into my office was in favour of continuing Reader's Digest. I would say it was about 50 to one in favour. I know at one time I had received about 500 letters or more. I point out to the Secretary of State that the letters are again starting to come into our offices. Therefore people must be concerned about this matter.

Many people have questioned the 80 per cent rule set by the Minister of National Revenue. They feel that Reader's Digest will not be as good a magazine. Many people stated in their letters that, of all the magazines that came into their houses, Reader's Digest was the only one they really liked and respected. They do not want anything done to change that. I hope the minister gives that matter serious consideration. The directive issued by Reader's Digest officials came as a shock and surprise to many members including, I am sure, some on the government side.

The government would be well advised to really consider this amendment. The bill should be taken out of the House for 12 months and sent back to committee. It is unfortunate that the minister has become dogmatic and is going to force this issue, even though there have been so many inconsistencies. Since the presentation of this bill, changes have been made. We had content rules requiring 50 per cent, 60 per cent, 70 per cent, and 80 per cent Canadian content. This is frustrating for anyone. We had to wait 12 months for this legislation, then at the last moment the statement concerning Reader's Digest was made. We have no guarantee that the statement will be lived up to, that there is provision for Reader's Digest to survive.

We then encountered a real difficulty. Who is to decide if any publication is 80 per cent different? I cannot accept the government's action. I believe the Canadian people have the right to decide for themselves what they want to read and when to read it. If there is to be more state control in all facets of our way of living, I suppose we will have to accept it. Yet merely because we are embarking on a program of economic controls which may last three years is no reason for accepting a publishing control which may last for all time.

It is most unfortunate that any minister, not necessarily this Minister of National Revenue, or any government, by any whim of fancy can change the whole aspect of this. This is a very dangerous precedent that we are setting here today. I hope the minister and the government will reconsider and accept this amendment. They should take the legislation back to committee where it can be reconsidered once again and dealt with adequately. This is an unprecedented move. It is beneath the dignity of this House of Commons. I hope the minister will give it further consideration

I think of certain members of the standing committee on the government side who were in fact against the bill. I think of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik), the hon. member for Vaudreuil (Mr. Herbert) and others. There are a great many more who may not have spoken, but those were members of the committee and they did their best to get the government to change its mind. That is one reason why I am speaking in favour of the amendment recommending that the bill be given a year's hoist during which the government can reconsider its position, allowing us to consider the matter a second time.

This is probably one of the most evasive bills we have had in this thirtieth parliament. It has generated more mail than any other piece of legislation. One need only read the speeches that have been made. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) has been on his feet twice with regard to this bill. It is very interesting to read his arguments. No one in this House will question his integrity and concern with regard to this or any other bill. I wish to read some of the points he made with regard to these amendments. I quote:

> Some years ago this House laid down the principle that if advertisers wanted to qualify for income tax deduction, their advertisements had to be placed in publications not substantially the same as foreign publications or, more accurately, that income tax deductions would not be permitted in cases where those advertisements were placed in publications substantially the same as foreign publications. I make the point that "substantially the same" could not, by any stretching of the English language, mean "80 per cent different." Neither can the English language be so tortured that "substantially the same" means "20 per cent the same." For example, to suggest that a publication "25 per cent the same" as another publication is "substantially the same" is a misuse of the English language. Clearly, the government is changing the law which parliament adopted, and not by asking parliament to change the law it is doing it simply with a ministerial interpretation.
> A few days ago the hon. member for Mississauga (Mr. Abbott) was surprised that I should be surprised at the Minister of National Revenue's interpretation of this law. The hon. member suggested that the minister and the department must as best they can frequently interpret the various laws they are called on to administer, particularly the Income Tax Act . . .
> I recognize that in connection with radio and television the CRTC is following a policy involving the determination of Canadian content. The CRTC lays down rules about what proportion of the programming has to be Canadian content; it determines what it will accept as Canadian content. I am not happy about this set-up. I am not happy about the fact that television and radio stations have to renew their licences every two or three years. I would think that in the six-month period before a licence has to be renewed, the owners of those stations are perhaps a little nervous about the CRTC's attitude. They might be inclined to be a little careful about what they put on their stations during that period. I emphasize that I am not suggesting any improper motives as far as the CRTC is concerned; I am just saying that it is an unfortunate situation. There may be no way of avoiding it.

These speeches go on and on. It is unbelievable that the government is being so adamant with regard to Bill C-58. I hope that the two ministers most involved with this bill and the members of their party who have so clearly spoken out against aspects of it will now give serious consideration to reviewing all aspects. With such strong feeling all across Canada, it is unbelievable that they are taking such a strong stand against the opposition and the Canadian people. I certainly hope the two ministers will reconsider.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I will add only a few words before pointing out that I almost entirely approve the amendment now under consideration. We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, when discussing that amendment and the bill that we recognize, that I at least recognize, the laudable intention of the government which is trying to promote the typical Canadian periodical. The intention is fine, it is even praiseworthy. Unfortunately, we are moving towards a rather narrow nationalism and there is sometimes a tendency to resort to law and show some pettiness.

That is why I think the proposed amendment would seem to correct the mistakes that occurred as this famous bill was being prepared. Mr. Speaker, a very objective analysis had to be made of the context of this bill to be able to judge it adequately. We all agreed on that, which is why I support the amendment that a periodical be considered Canadian if 75 per cent of its directors and owners are Canadians, if its writing and publication operations are carried out and controlled in Canada, and if no more than 40 per cent of its content, except advertising, had first been published in a single periodical outside Canada.

I think that nobody objected to control, owners and publishers being 75 per cent Canadian but progress stopped at a certain moment with the famous 80 per cent difference in content and that was a mistake and the minister himself seems to have recognized it by interpreting his bill in a particular way to provide that Reader's Digest be considered a Canadian periodical with a content of 80 per cent as set forth. That interpretation is still not as clear as if it were contained in the bill. That is why I think the amendment before us becomes very good since a point had been reached where things were being judged backwards. How can a periodical which by its very nature is a digest of articles relating what is happening all over the world and written by people the world over have an 80 per cent different content from what might be published abroad? We were faced with a dilemma.

Mr. Speaker, when the committee sat I asked the question to a representative of Maclean's who said that if Reader's Digest disappeared his own company could never create in Canada a similar magazine because that would cost too much. All that explained why we stood for the interests of Reader's Digest. It was impossible in any event to have a substitute. The minister and the government have forgotten certain facts that arise from the very nature of these periodicals. I am wondering why Time should not be considered as a Canadian magazine if it meets the same conditions that are imposed to Reader's Digest.

Even though I do not affirm that the bill has been strongly influenced by Maclean's owners, one must contemplate such a possibility. It is all very well to promote Canadian periodicals, we are all for that, but we should not create a monopoly of inferior quality to other magazines that seem to serve Canadian interests very well. Mr. Speaker, we should not make such a mistake.

That is why, in my opinion, this amendment is highly justified and all members in the House, including of course those on the treasury benches, should accept it. Thus would an issue which has been under study for far too long be settled in a reasonable and precise manner. There is a time when the government should curb their arrogance and accept what appears more and more to correspond to the opinion of the majority in this House, regardless of political allegiances.

[English]

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate on Bill C-58. I have just been reading the speech made by my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka who at one point quoted comments made by Mr. Gordon Sinclair. One of Mr. Sinclair's comments as reported at page 10755 of Hansard for February 9, reads:

> For months I have been saying and believing that the legislation being passed in Ottawa requiring that publications be 80 per cent Canadian content in order to be considered Canadian was discriminatory and immoral and was being rammed through parliament for one reason only, to get rid of the Canadian edition of Time magazine. By the way, if the rule was to be strictly enforced they might get rid of most Canadian newspapers as well.

My hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka then went on to quote Ian McKenzie of Station CJAD, who said on February 4:

> As you know, the Trudeau government has been trying to boot the Canadian editions of Time and Reader's Digest out of Canada, and now the government has backed down on Reader's Digest. That's good news for the hundreds of Reader's Digest employees in Montreal and it is also good news for anybody who values the free press in this country. The government should now back down on the Canadian edition of Time and withdraw Bill C-58 and its own interpretation of Canadian content. The real problem here is with the Canadian content rule.

He went on to say:

> More than 80 per cent of the contents of a Canadian periodical must be material which has not appeared in prior issues of foreign publications. And I should like to add here that "foreign publication" refers to one with which the Canadian periodical has a continuing arrangement. Now this so-called Cullen rule gets right down to the arrangement and size of photographs on a page. Suppose a photograph appears in the Japan publication and a similar view of the same photograph then appears in the Canadian magazine. It will not be considered Canadian content.
> But here is the rub. Who decides what is Canadian content and what is not? I expect it's the boys in the Revenue Department in Ottawa. They are the same gang which decides for all of us what is a dirty book.

He went on to say:

> Mr. Robert Stanfield said this legislation is not acceptable to anyone who still believes in the fundamental principles of a free democracy. Mr. Stanfield is right. The government should withdraw Bill C-58 and review its 80 per cent content rule.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): An amendment was introduced just prior to six o'clock. It was moved by the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Scott), seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

> That amendment No. 4 to Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 1 by deleting the figure "75" in line 3, and substituting therefor "51 per cent or more".

The House is presently studying an amendment to motion No. 4, and the hon. member's amendment does not seem to be relevant to motion No. 4. The Chair would advise the hon. member that at present it is not receivable as an amendment to the amendment to motion No. 4, but it could be offered later on after we have disposed of the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). The question is on motion No. 4 and on the amendment thereto. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: On division.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Pursuant to section (11) of Standing Order 75, a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

As the House is undoubtedly aware, there is some affinity between motion No. 5, standing in the name of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, and the amendment moved by the same hon. member to motion No. 4. This raises a question of procedure which perhaps could be avoided, at least for the time being, if the House would agree to standing motion No. 5 until a decision is taken on motion No. 4. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 5 stood.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock) moved motion No. 6:

> That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by deleting clause 2.

Non-Canadian Publications

He said: Madam Speaker, as the mover of this motion I ask leave of the House to have it stood until we have dealt with motions No. 7, 8, 9, and 10, and then to return to the debate later.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): This can be done only by unanimous consent. Is it so agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 6 stood.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock) moved motion No. 7:

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 12 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"of being extended or renewed; or

(c) a written agreement entered into after the coming into force of this section with a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if the Canadian Radio-Television Commission and the Minister of the Department of National Revenue have approved a plan submitted by the said Canadian subsidiary providing for compensatory payment by such subsidiary by the allocation of funds to Canadian television program production, extension of Canadian television service, development of Canadian talent, or otherwise for the benefit of Canadian broadcasting: the commission may require as a condition for entering into any such agreement that a percentage, to be stipulated by the commission, of the voting shares of such subsidiary be beneficially owned by Canadian citizens.".

Motion No. 8.

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 12 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"of being extended or renewed; or

(c) a written agreement entered into after the coming into force of this section with a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if not less than seventy-five per cent of the voting shares of the said Canadian subsidiary are beneficially owned by Canadian citizens and a percentage of the gross revenues of the said Canadian subsidiary, to be agreed upon by the said Canadian subsidiary and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, less only normal advertising agency and sales agencies commissions, is allocated directly to Canadian television program production, extension of Canadian television service, or other broadcasting objectives for the benefit of Canada: an allocation so made to be pursuant to a plan made by the commission and approved by the Minister of the Department of National Revenue.".

Motion No. 9.

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 12 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

"of being extended or renewed; or

(c) a written agreement entered into after the coming into force of this section with a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if a sum of money in the amount of twenty-five per cent of the gross revenues of the said Canadian sudsidiary less only normal advertising agency and sales agency commissions, is used for Canadian television program production, extension of Canadian television service, educational television or other broadcasting objectives for the benefit of Canada: the method of utilization of such amount to be determined by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission and approved by the Minister of the Department of National Revenue.".

Motion No. 10.

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended in clause 3 by striking out line 26 at page 2 and substituting the following therefor:

[Mr. Friesen.]

"aircraft not registered in Canada and which fails to observe guidelines for such foreign broadcasting undertaking jointly established by the Minister of the Department of National Revenue and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.".

Mr. Benno Friesen (for Mr. Wenman) moved motion No. 11:

That Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act, be amended by deleting clause 3.

● (2010)

He said: Madam Speaker, where is all that hearty response I got yesterday? It seems to have diminished a little today. I was sure there would be a standing ovation.

I have introduced these amendments and I rise now to speak on them, certainly not on my own behalf because I get to view television less and less all the time and obviously do not get to see it at home. I am speaking on behalf of the people of British Columbia, southern British Columbia in particular, and in principal for the people across Canada affected by the spirit of this legislation.

At the outset we should concede that there is, it is to be hoped, at least one area of basic agreement among hon. members, and that is that each country should have sovereignty over its broadcasting facilities. All of us need to determine the ownership and the direction of broadcasting in our country. We cannot ever give up that sovereignty and accede to the pressures of any foreign country. Having said that, it makes me wonder how genuinely and consistently we believe in that theory.

I recognize, as has been mentioned in this House I am sure on more than one occasion, that a company like Maclean-Hunter has a cable vision company in the United States, and that surely is a violation of the spirit of the philosophy we have in this country. If we do not want the Americans to control broadcasting in any form in Canada then surely we should not be invading the United States in that area.

Then I learned that there is a radio station in the Windsor area which calls itself "Detroit's largest rock station". Practically all of the advertising on it is U.S. advertising, and here is this station in essence a kind of pirate radio station. No one seems to frown on this at all.

It does not seem to bother Canadian viewers that much of the advertising we see on CBC is U.S. advertising. I think all of us are probably somewhat guilty of inconsistency in this matter of sovereignty over our broadcasting policy.

One of the things that bothers me about this legislation is that there is a lot of confusion. It is intermingled with cable policy. All the while we have been talking about Bill C-58 in the House, and we have been talking about it intermittently for a year now, there have been discussions going on in the country in areas relating to Bill C-58. For example, the whole matter of cable deletion, or commercial deletion of cable is being discussed at the same time. In the public's mind this is all one package. If this is true in the public's mind then surely it is our responsibility to sort this out and make certain we give a clear understanding of what the issues are.

Again there is another related problem, and that is that this is essentially a broadcasting policy, and again the government is coming in by the back door wanting to control broadcasting but not through a revision, an updating, or an amendment to the Broadcasting Act, but rather an amendment to the Income Tax Act. As one hon. member mentioned this afternoon, this is a case of trying to exercise control over cultural policy by tax policy. That seems to me to be inconsistent and not the way to handle this.

If anything exemplifies the confusion that has been perpetrated on the people of Canada as a result of the fusion of the two issues, namely, cable policy and Bill C-58, it is a little brochure that came to us a day or two ago from the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. I submit to you that this is a very reputable organization. I believe it is a good organization whose purpose it is to further the aims and goals of Canadian broadcasters.

There are several areas I will be discussing in this brochure to illustrate the confusion that has been brought about by this legislation. I might interject just at this point that all legislation ought to have some universal qualities about it. It should affect all people equally and not create undue hardship on anyone.

The fact of life in Canada is that there are regional differences. Everyone in this House has spoken of these regional differences at some time or another. This is certainly true in the area of broadcasting. It strikes me that one of the over-riding pieces of confusion in this literature, as well as in the public's mind, is the contention that there is essentially no difference between the Ontario experience in broadcasting and the west coast experience in broadcasting. That is where the error lies.

There can be really no prolonged argument that New York border stations have done well by Canadian broadcasting. They are reaching a high impact area with very little investment, or at least no extra investment. They have a ready market which probably has been highly developed by the Canadian broadcasting systems. There is minimal investment in Canada. Certainly there is little return to Canada. So, no one in that sense can argue that the United States stations in New York which are broadcasting into Canada have not been doing very well, thank you. But there is a great difference which exists in Canada which this legislation does not recognize.

I have introduced several amendments, and I confess I introduced some of these at the committee stage, but because of the way in which the committee was structured and handled there was no hope of them receiving full study and attention let alone passage. As I have already indicated there are differences in Canada. The amendments I have submitted are designed to alleviate the hardship created by this legislation if those differences are not recognized.

I refer again to motion No. 7, the first motion I have submitted in this group, which is designed to show the difference between the situation on the west coast and that which exists in Ontario. What strikes me forcefully is that when these amendments and this whole matter were before the committee two members from British Columbia at times were notably silent about the interest that should have been near to their hearts. I refer to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines), both of whose constituents are very greatly affected by this legislation.

They both refused to give these amendments adequate study and voted against them with the government. I simply want their constituents to know to what degree those two members have at heart the needs and desires of their constituents.

I should like to refer to this brochure I have mentioned to show the inequity is increased because of the confusion which exists in the public mind. The first question is:

> Why are Buffalo stations threatening to jam their signals to Toronto and Hamilton?

I suggest that is a cablevision problem. The answer given here is:

> Because the Buffalo broadcasters stand to make less profit if their commercials are deleted by cable TV companies in the Toronto area.

Then the question is asked:

> Why has the American TV station, KVOS-TV in Bellingham, been lobbying so hard against Bill C-58?

> Because the Canadian government is taking action to prevent stations, that are not licensed to serve Canadians, from making money in Canada. This threatens to reduce the profits of these American stations. KVOS derives about 90 per cent of its revenues from the Vancouver area, and Buffalo stations about 30 per cent from Toronto-Hamilton.

Is that why the Buffalo stations are threatening to jam their signals to Toronto and Hamilton? I suggest this merely perpetuates the confusion which exists in the public mind.

Then I would refer to question No. 9 which reads:

> Do American border television stations receive any special protection against Canadian stations?

The answer is:

> Yes. For example, American programme producers regard Detroit and Windsor, Ontario, as one 'market'. The end result of that attitude is that neither the CBC, nor CTV, nor Global, nor any Canadian television station can broadcast in the Windsor area any program broadcast by a Detroit station.

They forget to mention that the CBC does very well from the advertising it takes in from the Detroit area. The next paragraph states:

> If Canadian broadcasters buy these programmes, it is on the express condition that they not be shown in Windsor if Detroit has them already. This means that Windsor residents, Canadian citizens, cannot see the full Global or CBC schedule, or previously the CTV schedule, when CTV had a Windsor affiliate.

Now I ask what that has to do with the problem which faces KVOS television on the west coast. There is confusion in the public mind, and there is the inequity with which this legislation fails to deal. If this legislation were to pass, the immediate consequence would be the depreciation of programming on KVOS television in Bellingham. If we compound that problem with commercial deletion and that were to become a policy, the combination of Bill C-58 plus commercial deletion would totally destroy KVOS television in Bellingham.

I suggest to hon. members there is at least an element of a moral problem involved. KVOS television developed the market when there were few television sets around in British Columbia and when no Canadian entrepreneur was ready or willing to gamble on the market and wait for the long term profits. I remember those days when the boob-tube was being introduced in Canada. I remember when there was only black and white television and there were only two stations, channel 2 in Vancouver and Channel 12 in Bellingham.

When KVOS-TV first came on the air it really did not have a very good signal. It was very weak and very fuzzy, with many ghosts. Several years later its transmitter was moved and the reception increased dramatically. As I say, those were the days when there were very few television sets around, but KVOS-TV took that risk and invested in a market that was largely a Canadian market.

I want hon. members to know that Canadian businessmen of that day were mighty happy to see KVOS-TV come on the scene. They were looking for another avenue by which to advertise their products. They wanted another way to expose their products to the market place. When KVOS-TV came along they were mighty glad to see it. I might add that the fact that the CBC and KVOS-TV were there in itself developed a further market for television.

Because these two pioneers in the television industry developed that market this created another market which encouraged other television stations to be built. It was not a Canadian entrepreneur who did this. It was an American entrepreneur. Now we say, "Look, the market has been developed, you have done very well, thank you, and now we will take it away". I suggest what the government really wants to do is penalize the station for its success.

Perhaps it would be correct to suggest that this kind of penalty for success is more in keeping with a socialist response than a free enterprise response. I know the government always prides itself on being a free enterprise party, but when it turns around to penalize success and the entrepreneurial spirit in this way it betrays its own policy. It seems that you are great when you are an entrepreneur trying to make a go of it, but you are a villain if you are a success.

The next question which we must ask ourselves is what will happen if the combined programs of Bill C-58 and cable deletion take their full effect by taking television off the air. The first obvious thing is that it leaves the advertising market to the few remaining stations in the lower mainland of British Columbia. I think all of us would agree that CBC does not care; it is not much interested in the advertising market. With 80 per cent of its revenue coming from the taxpayer, it is not much interested in advertising.

There is another station being built at present by the Western Approaches group, that is a UHF channel which will certainly not be in a strong competitive position, certainly not for another year or two. Then there is the CTV station which has at this time what could be called a saturated advertising schedule. That is good. I would never berate a television station for having grown to the proportions that CTV, channel 8, in Vancouver has grown. I think that this is a compliment to their enterprise, to their managerial skill, and to their pioneering efforts, and I would compliment them rather than berate them for it. They took a risk in moving into a market which was already shared by two existing television stations.

But if the remaining two television channels have all that is left of the advertising medium and one channel already does not care for commercial advertising, namely, CBC, it simply means there is nowhere else for advertisers to go, there is a virtual monopoly of the advertising industry in British Columbia. If the law of supply and demand takes its full effect, it will inevitably mean increased prices for advertising.

But there is another effect which the loss of this channel would have for Canadians in British Columbia, that is, less view selection.

Mr. Leggatt: Nonsense.

Mr. Friesen: My hon. friend says, nonsense. We will hear from him soon. He will obviously show us that this is nonsense.

Mr. Leggatt: You can watch Mary Tyler Moore five times a week.

Mr. Friesen: Cablevision viewers will get all the same channels and programs they get now if they get the Seattle programs. I suggest to him that they will get the balance of them from the CBC. Nevertheless, he will have to concede that there are a number of locally produced programs on the Bellingham station that we could lose if the station went off the air. But leaving the cable viewers aside, as the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) knows there are still large sections of the lower mainland of British Columbia that are not on cable, that are rural in nature, and they will effectively lose another station if this station goes off the air. So they will lose infinitely more.

The truth of the matter is that while the base of operations of KVOS-TV is American and is owned by Americans, it has been in operation in Canada for more than 20 years and it has been a good landed immigrant for 20 years. It has taken its profits, it has paid its taxes, and it has reinvested its profits in Canada. In the past ten years it has returned to the Canadian economy something like $75 million.

An hon. Member: This does not mean a thing to the government.

Mr. Friesen: If the station goes off the air, it simply means $75 million over the next ten years or better than that with the inflationary spiral which we are experiencing, which the Canadian taxpayer will lose. But let us move beyond that.

I should like to point out to members of the House that none of the revenue produced by the two western film corporations created by KVOS television, Canawest Film Productions in Vancouver and Canawest-Master Films of Calgary, goes to KVOS-TV Incorporated; all of it stays in Canada. I suggest to you that that is a good landed immigrant. All of us have numbers of landed immigrants in our constituencies living among us and we have welcomed them and welcomed their entrepreneurial spirit and their investments. When they succeed, we are happy about it. But when a company such as KVOS-TV comes to Canada as a landed immigrant, we say, shame, they are taking money out of the country, when in fact they are making money for the country.

I want to illustrate for you how KVOS-TV is making money for Canada. Some time ago this station, wanting to invest more in the Canadian economy, made a proposal to CRTC which reads as follows, and I commend this for study and perusal to hon. members. KVOS-TV proposed to CRTC the formation of a television motion picture development society of British Columbia.

The Secretary of State has been evangelical in his zeal to bring before us the Canadian Film Development Corporation. This, he suggested to us, is a good way of helping the feature film industry in Canada because there are many producers, directors, designers, and so forth, in the industry who are underemployed and who do not have ways of exposing their talents to the Canadian people. Furthermore, he suggests, and I think with justification, that the market has not been very friendly to Canadian producers. So he is always advertising the merits of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. At this time I will not discuss the merits or lack of merits of that corporation, but I suggest that what the Secretary of State wants to do through the CFDC, KVOS-TV wants to do through the television motion picture society of B.C. Again I commend this to hon. members' attention. Let me read part of the proposal as follows:

There are at present two major television program production centres in Canada—Montreal for French television and Toronto for English television. Vancouver, and British Columbia in general can become a third major production source.

We propose that a corporation be set up under the name "The Television Motion Picture Development Society of B.C.". The primary and original funding source will be KVOS (B.C.).

KVOS (B.C.) will fund the society in three ways:

(a) by actual cash on a yearly basis calculated on a percentage of its gross sales in Canada, as will be set down in the following paragraph;

(b) by an original loan against future grosses; and

(c) by supplying Canawest executive personnel who will screen and evaluate projects offered to it for the appointed board of directors.

KVOS (B.C.) will contribute to the fund as follows:

● (2040)

A minimum per annum of $150,000 cash based on gross sales in Canada up to 4.5 million dollars	$150,000
6% additional cash on the gross between 4.5 million and 5.5 million	60,000
7% between 5.5 million and 6.5 million	70,000
8% between 6.5 million and 7.5 million	80,000
9% between 7.5 million and 8.5 million	90,000
10% between 8.5 million and 9.5 million	100,000

We agree to start this fund as of January 1, 1972 so that there will be an accumulation of available moneys to start operations immediately. Future payments to the fund will be made quarterly. KVOS (B.C.) will originally start the fund with $100,000 and lend the fund as needed another $100,000 at prevailing bank interest rates against future quarterly payments.

Canawest Film Productions Ltd. is willing to act as the screening and evaluating arm of the society to the extent that and as long as the directors wish. Eventually a full time executive director with appropriate staff will be required by the society. Until that time, it is estimated Canawest's executive help will save the fund up to $50,000 per year. The society's board of directors will decide in every case how moneys are to be invested and how administrative costs are to be allocated.

The society will be a non-profit organization and the fund will be a revolving fund similar to that operated by the Canadian Film Development Corporation. Profits will be returned to the fund for further investment.

Canawest Film Productions Ltd., if it is voted as the operating arm, will bring projects offered to it before the board. It will be the board's function to consider any project on an equal basis of merit be it from Canawest, British Columbia Television or any other production applicant.

Other sources of financial contribution to the revolving fund should be sought out. Some of these sources, which will be examined in the months ahead, include:

(a) the provincial government of British Columbia;

(b) federal government agencies;

(c) business corporations; and

(d) private foundations.

Assuming even modest returns from these additional funding sources and regenerative investments by the board over a period of three to five years, the society will become the third largest source of television production dollars in Canada; (after the CBC and CTV networks). It would thus extend and develop television and motion picture production into Western Canada where, without substantive help, development has been slow.

The details of the operation of the society are envisaged as being closely analagous to the operation of the Canadian Film Development Corporation or the National Film Development Corporation of Britain. That corporation is authorized to make investments in Canadian feature films, to make loans to producers of Canadian feature films and to make certain grants—all as contributions to the establishment of a feature film industry in Canada. The Television Motion Picture Development Society of B.C. operate against a background of similar general objectives with the discretion as to the fulfillment of these general objectives and the qualification of individual proposals being vested in a "board of directors".

I suggest that that kind of proposal does not sound like a company trying to bleed the taxpayers and industries of Canada of all the advantages it can get. That sounds to me like a landed immigrant who is trying to be responsible and responsive to the needs of Canadians. It took the initiative years before the Canadian government thought of putting any restrictions on the television industry in Canada. I suggest that this is a rather shoddy way of treating a good immigrant in Canada.

I suggest that the legislation before us is intended to have national application, but in this case, because of the national scope, it does not take into account the regional differences which exist in Canada. Because of the unfortunate experiences the industry has had in the province of Ontario this legislation will penalize the industry, the viewers, and the advertisers in British Columbia, and if we want to be responsible members of this House and representatives of our constituencies we cannot afford to pass a piece of legislation which will further restrict the selection of viewing by the Canadian people. I therefore ask hon. members to study the amendments I have presented carefully, give them honest consideration, and vote in favour of them.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Madam Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: As I stand here in support of the amendments I just cannot figure out who gains by this bill. I was deeply concerned about content control, and I am more concerned now about the Reader's Digest situation, where Canadian content simply becomes the rewriting of pages torn out of other magazines in the United States and Europe. As a journalist it is frightening to me that that rip-and-rewrite foreign is called something Canadian.

As I consider what will happen to television, particularly in my own area, I become more and more concerned. There are many more remifications to this bill than anyone ever dreamed of when the plan was drawn up initially. It seems that it must have been a negative plan or it could not have got into so much trouble. Law drafted with positive conceptions can only be good law if it serves the mass of people, but law drawn up with negative objectives is extremely dangerous, and we are seeing the results.

My argument is in support of the amendment and for doing everything we can to save KVOS. I can only speak for the west. I am not an expert on border stations generally. Canadian advertisers should have the right to buy in a competitive electronic market in the lower mainland of British Columbia, again it is freedom, the right of choice. Part of the available time is now provided by KVOS. I am sorry that I cannot use another word besides time, because I am not now talking about Time magazine. Even with the new Western Approaches station coming in there is less advertising time available in Vancouver than in any comparable market in North America. In other words, our networks are already jammed, and Western Approaches, the new baby which is coming to life in September, will be of some help.

If KVOS is taken out of the area, BC-TV, which is already saturated, can charge virtually whatever it wants, and I have no doubt that the advertising rates will soar. In addition, smaller advertisers, smaller retailers, and small brand advertisers will find it difficult to get efficient time in this medium. They will be literally frozen out. Once again it is the little guy and the independent advertiser, just as it is with the Canadian writer, the Canadian artist and others, who are going to be injured for the sake of saving the big conglomerates.

KVOS was invited to come into Canada, as many industries were, to build our country. It was 22 years ago KVOS was asked to come here to provide an outlet for advertisers. KVOS was in the area before BC-TV. Ray Peters, who is the head of BCTV, came before the broadcasting committee as a witness, and I heard his evidence. He said that the life of BC-TV was threatened by KVOS. That is a very interesting comment from a station with over $12 million yearly and which is part of a great and growing conglomerate.

They are on 25 cable stations in the state of Washington. That, for the edification of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), is in the United States of America. They are able to enter that market without suffering from the discrimination they would like Canada to impose on our invited guest, KVOS. I point out that BBC-TV came into the market after KVOS was established. No doubt it was difficult for BC-TV to get started. But it is always difficult to start a business, whether it is the corner grocery store or the little television station.

As I recall, the early years of CHAN-TV, part of the CTV network, was not exactly honourable. A friend of mine, a photo journalist, who founded the station and struggled to keep it going, was crowded out as the big money people took over and built the network into what it is now. Any business which is just getting started, whether it is a newspaper, grocery shop or TV station, must be prepared to lose money the first three or four years, must be prepared to spend money before making money. All the same, $12 million a year is not exactly chicken feed—with all respect to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan). In that period of early struggle no business ever gets rich.

I raise another point. CHAN-CHEK or BC-TV are now almost in the position in which the Vancouver Sun and Vancouver Province found themselves when they were charged under the Combines Investigation Act. The two newspapers, under the holding company, Pacific Press, were ordered to cease and desist from further combining in their advertising sales. I understand an advertiser must buy in Vancouver, Victoria and the Okanagan if he wants to be on BC-TV and if he has distribution in those areas. Hon. members will remember why we passed Bill C-2. It was intended not to restrict competition. Perhaps we will need to impose some of the provisions of Bill C-2 if Bill C-58 becomes law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: In the Vancouver area CBC accepts ads but is not over-zealous in taking ads. One major local advertiser said, "we have contacted CBC to give them a contract, but they can't be bothered." They have it easy—on the public purse.

Western Approaches will open new doors but not get advertising until it becomes a station people will watch and, therefore, has a measurable circulation. In other words, if there is not an alternate station to take the advertising, the advertising will probably go to the already overfat newspapers in the area and hot line radio shows. It is interesting to note that KVOS offered to work on a 50-50 basis, to share its advertising revenues to help Western Approaches grow. This offer, including the plan in 1971 to establish an all-Canadian television production studio to promote the work of our artists and actors, was turned down by the CRTC. The offer, among others, has been pushed aside, in an attitude strongly punitive to American culture.

I must say that the Americans have produced great culture. They have great sources to draw on and I do not know why we think it essential to treat them with contempt. Their history, as portrayed in art, literature, and the movies, is remarkable; yet we sit here because we are fat and think we can treat them with contempt. We will feel the repercussions some day.

Bill C-58 is actually an anti-competition bill. It nurtures big business and is in line with what the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has defined as the danger of nationalism. That is, it makes the rich richer.

Without KVOS-TV fully in the market place Canadian advertisers would be able to purchase only the product of a massive combine—BC-TV or a weak new UHF, Western Approaches, or the CBC. And you know what I said about the CBC selling advertising. As I see it, the effects of the bill are all negative. We want to save the arts in this country.

What are the negative effects? As already mentioned, BC-TV will be in such a position of power that it will be able to demand almost anything in advertising rates and conditions. The big multinationals such as General Foods, Proctor and Gamble, Lever Brothers, General Motors and other giants will monopolize the best times on a 52-week contract basis, which little advertisers cannot possibly afford. These small brand advertisers and retailers who cannot afford long-term contracts will be showed on to the least efficient time on BC-TV. The rich national brand advertisers will by-pass the new station and the smaller business people will buy bits and pieces of time without getting the equal competitive opportunity of the giants who advertise on BC-TV. With KVOS providing a necessary service in the lower mainland, the availability of time will mean that there is equal opportunity for all.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: There is one point which may pass unnoticed now, but you who sit here supporting this ill-conceived, dangerous bill will one day have to answer to your constituents for the results.

Some hon. Members: Right on!

Mrs. Holt: I am sorry, gentlemen, I say this with great sadness. It is very, very difficult for me to stand here, on this side of the House, and say this. But I say it because I feel a great duty to my constituents and to that larger constituency we all share, Canada.

An hon. Member: The people in Vancouver say the same.

Mrs. Holt: If this bill passes, one day we will have to answer for the results. I will have to answer for the results.

An hon. Member: You are all right.

Mrs. Holt: No, I am not all right. I say that more corporate Canadian citizens will be hurt than helped by the bill. As I said, you will have to answer for that if you vote for Bill C-58, without amendments. If we had only handled this properly in committee we would not have spent two weeks as we have. Why not compromise?

Some hon. Members: Right on!

An hon. Member: It's the Whip's fault.

Mrs. Holt: No, it is not the Whip's fault. The Whip put me on, but he cannot be everywhere at once. There are too many committees.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: Even those smaller citizens, the smaller TV stations, may not be aware of the inevitable result. All of you, whether you come from Halifax or Regina, or the other small towns and cities of this nation, will see what will happen to your stations, because the national brands will only be able to advertise in the big centres. Let me explain. National advertisers must have major markets, which in English Canada means Toronto and Vancouver. I don't know enough about Quebec advertising to say much about it, so I will only discuss KVOS and the English language market. If it costs more to get to those markets, the national brand advertisers will pay it.

Non-Canadian Publications

The big national brand advertisers operate on both sides of the border. They must advertise in the big market place, but they do not have unlimited budgets. Therefore if national advertisers are forced by Bill C-58 to pay huge increases because of the anti-competitive reaction to the bill in both Toronto and Vancouver, the money must come from somewhere—and that somewhere is right out of the budgets now being spent in less important marketing areas ranging from Saint John and Halifax, to Thunder Bay, Yorkton, Wingham—the constituency of the hon. member from Bruce—Regina, and Prince George.

Also, if advertisers cannot find efficient time available in the two big markets, they will not spend their money making their TV commercials. Incidentally, it costs between $10,000 and $25,000 per 30 seconds of film. Only because a spot campaign is purchased for the major markets do minor markets receive their share.

These are economic facts that any major advertiser or advertising agency will bear out if only you, as members, will do a bit of questioning and learn what is happening in Canada, happening right here.

I said, when talking about publishing, that this bill protects the big publisher but not the Canadian writer and Canadian talent. Protecting Reader's Digest does not mean you are protecting Canadian writers. Your are protecting people like Norman Mailer, and that was said in committee. The bill protects the rich, major market station, to the detriment of the small advertiser and the small Canadian TV station.

● (2100)

Further, to damage our U.S. signal in the west, KVOS-TV, is to eliminate opportunity for artists, animators, film technicians, writers and musicians in the electronic media and production—those talented people obtaining their first opportunities in these fields in western Canada. KVOS has been providing this for some time in Calgary and Vancouver. People are getting jobs in this. It is the largest production and animation studio in the west. The animation work is going out from Vancouver to all parts of the world. Canawest of KVOS (BC) Ltd. Studios are supplying work for Hollywood and England. This will be lost if this bill goes through.

Basic to all the amendments involving publishers there are guidelines given to allow them to become a Canadian industry. That is fine. We have KVOS (BC). It is prepared to do the same. Over the years it sought repeatedly to become Canadianized, but somehow the CRTC always put blocks in its way.

In the case of the electronic media we are just slamming the door on them and not giving them the opportunity or the guidelines to Canadianize, even though such Canadianization should be the objective of everyone of us here. I cannot help but feel that this bill was not designed for the good of Canada but with simple immature motives of destructions to destroy Americans who came here many years ago, often at our invitation. I remember when we were searching for American investors. I remember the headlines saying "New Industry to Come to Canada". The premiers would brag that they brought investors here.

That is how KVOS came to Vancouver. They became good corporate citizens. Now like some banana Republic we want to throw them out. It is so easy to destroy, and so hard to build.

An hon. Member: Tell us about "Terror in The Name of God."

Mrs. Holt: Terror in the name of Bill C-58.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: In fact it rather reminds me of George Bernard Shaw's line, "Assassination is the extreme form of censorship". That is what they are doing here—Assassination of KVOS, Time, Reader's Digest, MD, and the rest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: My constituents have let me know by hundreds of letters and phone calls what they want me to do. Now, some here say it started when Reader's Digest, Time and KVOS began their campaign. But I received letters even before I became a member of parliament asking me to write about this and, after, asking me to fight here for them. The citizens know their rights. They are not stupid. The citizens know as much as we do. We have an educated, well informed public. They resent any action by government or government agencies such as the CRTC to remove their right of choice, to get Time with Canadian content? Why should we in the west not get Time magazine with Canadian content? Over here on this side of the Chamber they say you can still get Time. But that is the imported version. My constituents and I are entitled to get a magazine with six, seven or eight pages Canadian, and all the world news at the same time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: I want Reader's Digest. Reader's Digest has provided true Canadian content, not Toronto content.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Holt: It is produced by Canadian writers, editors and printers. KVOS is a television signal that we enjoy. If you don't watch it, Stu, that is not my problem. It is yours. I am sorry, Madam Speaker, we get very personal around here when we get to know each other too well. I should have said the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Canadian advertisers and Canadian agencies composed of Canadian citizens also know their rights. They believe they still have the right of choice and opportunity, whether rich or beginners in business, whether large or small agencies selling advertising. It is remarkable that the big companies, the rich multi-nationals which can afford it, can advertise outside Canada and deduct it as an expense toward earnings.

You can send a salesman down the west coast of the United States to sell commodities, and that is deductible. However, how incongruous, how patently petty and discriminatory that we can behave so crassly toward Canadian settlers, these landed immigrants of 22 years who settled in our city, in this case KVOS. That is 30 miles. Do hon. members know that the border is only 30 miles from Vancouver? They are not only neighbours; they are friends.

An hon. Member: Trudeau is out there pacing it off.

Mrs. Holt: Yes, and I wish I could be there so I could share in his glory.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but her time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): There is not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that before we go on with the discussions of the various proposed amendments to this bill, we should indicate from the start that all these amendments aim more or less at granting special status to a foreign radio station. In the final analysis, that is about all was said in each of the proposed amendments to this bill.

All the measures which are included in each of these amendments make possible the exploitation of the Canadian market by an American station—and this is precisely what is happening in the situation we are now discussing: American stations are coming here to exploit the Canadian market. All those measures which would enable—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Sauvé: . . . which would enable them to continue—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. For the time being the minister has the floor. If the hon. member wants to participate later, he will be given an opportunity.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: And the measures proposed by hon. members of the opposition would certainly be contrary to the purposes of the Broadcasting Act.

But in practice, because of our tolerance, those TV stations operate in a country where, we must admit, they are not even licenced. And we must react promptly, something we should have done long ago, in front of a situation that built up slowly because it is so easy for American programs or publicity to penetrate into Canadian territory.

Traditionally our country has no frontiers and obviously, when dealing with waves, it is still more difficult to mark the boundaries. It remains that ads which normally should be placed here to support Canadian industry cross those frontiers.

[English]

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like an explanation as to whether the minister rose for the purpose of asking a question of one of her own backbenchers or whether she has been recognized by the Chair to participate in the debate. If that is the case, then I would think that the order of speaking has been determined well in advance, that after a government member has spoken a member of the opposition has the right to speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It has been common practice to recognize a minister when a minister wants to participate.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Thank you, Madam Speaker.

● (2110)

[English]

Mr. Brisco: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, it has been common practice since I have been in this House for Speakers, including Madam Speaker, to draw to the attention of those who are debating that they are wavering from the point that is up for discussion. Frankly, I do not think the minister is dealing with the amendments which are before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): We are studying motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 and I am sure the minister is speaking on one of those amendments.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Thank you, Madam Speaker. Indeed I rose to participate in the debate on Bill C-58 to discuss the amendments under study tonight, to answer the arguments of hon. members of the opposition as well as those of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) and I shall come to the statement she made during her intervention a moment ago.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway is not at her desk.

Mrs. Sauvé: Nevertheless I wanted to say that our policy in opposing the amendments moved by the opposition is important because how could we require, Madam Speaker, what we require from Canadian broadcasters if we did not have at the same time a policy to protect their income? The Canadian television and radio industry is in a precarious situation in many ways. We do not have as large a market as our American neighbour. It is not possible for us to get as large an income as that which feeds the American industry. If we want to develop a Canadian industry in this country, it is absolutely necessary for us to protect its income, because without income there cannot be any really Canadian production; there cannot be any original production in this country; above all, there cannot be any possibility for us to protect the income of the many Canadian actors, artists and artisans involved in the professions related to television and radio.

If we want to attain a certain level of quality in our production, a certain level of excellence in our—

[English]

Mr. Friesen: On a point of order, I am sure the minister would not want to mislead the House in the remarks she has made in that there would never be any money for the film industry in Canada. If she had listened to my speech very carefully she would have noted the proposal made by KVOS TV in Bellingham. The proposal was that $100,000 would be invested in the film industry—

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Friesen: —which would not be tax money but would be direct investment on the part of the company.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the speech of the hon. member. The compensatory payments suggested in his amendment, that is that a foreign company which received authorization to obtain revenues in Canada would contribute to a compensation fund which would be allocated to Canadian production, will never have the value of a truly Canadian production, made with Canadian funds, by Canadian workers and producers. In spite of the optimism of the hon. member, this fund could never reach the proportions which will be possible if we protect our industry in such a way as to allow it to sponsor its own production. The hon. member is much too optimistic concerning the possible effects of this fund, which would moreover be created by foreigners.

I reread Motion No. 7 in which it is stated that this fund created by foreign production companies could even aim at increasing television and radio coverage of the Canadian territory.

I do not think that the hon. member should like to delegate to people who are not Canadian these responsibilities which are essentially ours. I believe that these responsibilities must remain solely in the hands of Canadians who know their own territory and the coverage requirements of their own country. We are the ones who must decide what our priorities are and how we can best serve Canadians. In the place of the hon. member, I would be ashamed to leave that up to people who are not Canadian.

These amendments as well as the others proposed by hon. members constitute for all practical purposes unfair competition for Canadians companies which try to produce acceptable programs in Canada with the means provided by the market.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) suggested that the provisions of Bill C-58 are negative. Of course, legislation aimed at forbiding something always seems negative. But we took those steps for positive reasons, precisely to protect the Canadian industry. All countries in the world protect their cultural agencies, the creativity of their country, their cultural activity. Canadians should do otherwise? Specially when one is aware of the existence of a neighbour to the south, endowed with considerably more powerful means of developing its cultural production, its radio-television production? Extremely powerful countries do so; there is therefore that much more need for us to protect our Canadian production.

These measures are not negative; on the contrary they are positive; they are designed to help Canadian industry,

Canadian artists and artisans. It is merely sane realism on our part, and not anti-Americanism, despite what some hon. members opposite may say. We opted for this bill, not as an anti-American gesture but because we have to protect our own interests. Moreover, the very principle of the provision providing exemptions is debatable, for it creates a special tax status for the advertisers of a given area which may not necessarily be granted in others. The very principle of some of those amendments is quite agreable.

● (2120)

Moreover, the proposed amendments transfer the responsibility for the application of the legislation from the House to the CRTC or the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). Now, in my opinion, Parliament alone has the authority to confer a special status to a foreign television station. Only Parliament can do that. Do hon. members realize that the CRTC only has the responsibility to deliver Canadian licences and to administer Canadian affairs? How could it administer what hon. members propose? This would create such a delicate situation for the CRTC that I think it would be unable to carry out its mandate with regard to the Broadcasting Act without facing many conflicts. I therefore think there is no reason whatsoever to believe that exemptions such as those proposed would be of any advantage to the Canadian broadcasting system, and that is precisely what we are talking about, advantages for the Canadian broadcasting system. Obviously, hon. members are forgetting that.

[English]

Mr. Brisco: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister has referred to the fact that the CRTC cannot accept responsibility for managing or being involved in any way with KVOS.

Mr. Roy (Timmins): What is your point of order?

Mr. Brisco: Don't get excited. I should like to ask the minister how she relates that statement to the fact that KVOS is now paying $75 million in taxation to the Department of National Revenue. I will now sit down and let the rabble on the other side continue.

[Translation]

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, again I say there is no ground at all to believe that deductions would help the Canadian broadcasting system. But there are many reasons to think and to believe that if American broadcasting stations bearing their signal toward our markets were given a stronger status, then our industry would be affected and get a blow with everlasting consequences. This is why it is urgent to indicate immediately to hon. members on the other side of the House that we will not second this amendment because we on this side want to protect our Canadian broadcasting and television industry at any cost.

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I suppose some members will ask why I, a member from Ontario, am concerned about this matter since the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) is primarily interested in a station in British Columbia, KVOS. At least the action is in the province of B.C.

[Mrs. Sauvé.]

I must say I listened to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) in utter amazement and misbelief. She conveniently forgot to indicate to the House what a good corporate citizen KVOS has been and will continue to be. Then she started to talk about special status, conveniently forgetting that just a couple of days ago the government brought about a particular type of special status for Reader's Digest. She then has the nerve to say that we on this side are talking about special status. It was the government that introduced special status as a result of its decision on Digest.

I want to know what is the rush here. Unless I am mistaken, Mr. Speaker, commercial deletions will not come into effect in the immediate future, until such time as an arrangement has been made between the CRTC and the FCC. What we are talking about here is the removal of some $20 million of revenue spent on advertising through U.S. stations. The Americans at the border stations are in an uproar about it, and as a result of that uproar the government has indicated that it will search for some solutions.

All the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock is trying to do in his three amendments is to ask the House to hold tight for a minute and try to arrive at a solution in order to save a good corporate citizen. This organization has been in existence, I understand from listening to the debate this evening, for some 20 years and has proven itself. It is paying taxes, it has invested in Canada, it has employees in Canada, and it has an unblemished record in regard to Canadian interests. There is a question of principle here involving Canadian nationalism versus a good corporate citizen which happens to be a subsidiary of a U.S. corporation.

I think it is time we took stock of what is going on in Canada. I had no intention of getting into this debate and I said that yesterday. I am not even prepared. But looking down the road the government is travelling in terms of Canadian nationalism, I am becoming a little scared and so are a lot of other members, mostly on the other side. It is our job to put forward constructive criticism, but when three or four Liberal backbenchers stand up and join in the debate there must surely be something wrong with the direction the government is taking.

What I see in this debate is a very dramatic attempt to save a good corporate citizen. After hearing the reasoned arguments of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock, for the life of me I cannot understand why this matter cannot be held in abeyance. This corporation has been of some significant benefit to Canada and Canadians, yet with one stroke of the pen we are trying to destroy it. With the implementation of Bill C-58 and commercial deletions, station KVOS goes down the drain. Is this what we want to do, Mr. Speaker? Let me also put this to hon. members; I do not want to go too far.

An hon. Member: You never do.

Mr. Alexander: If my hon. friend wants to get involved in this debate, let him stand up. I am trying to do the right thing because I think a lot of Canadians are concerned. I have just returned from a trip—I will not say where—and it seems to me that this is just a small irritant or one of some insignificance. But when you start thinking, Mr. Speaker, about the number of irritants that can come about at any particular time, then I am wondering whether there can be any retaliation by our cousins or brothers or friends south of the border. I think we have to be very concerned about this situation, because I understand that a certain executive said last night that if Bill C-58 went through we can expect retaliation.

Mrs. Sauvé: What's the matter, are you scared?

Mr. Alexander: I did not interrupt the minister but perhaps she would stand up and answer this question. Can she assure this House and the Canadian people that if Bill C-58 is passed there will be no retaliation? I will sit down if she will answer that question.

Mrs. Sauvé: I will answer that question, Mr. Speaker. I am not guided by the kind of retaliation that can come from our American friends. We have policies for Canadians and we apply them as best we can. We stand on what we do, no matter what retaliation may come, and we accept that.

Mr. Alexander: Well, that is an unacceptable answer to me. I want to know why we cannot work hand in hand with our American friends.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: That is no answer to me, so do not give me that nonsense, Madam Minister. I have seen some funny things happening around here in the past couple of weeks. I do not want to digress, but first of all, there was the Cuba trip. Who did that help?

An hon. Member: Canada first.

Mr. Alexander: I am talking about irritants, and that is another one. Now, what did the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock have in mind?

Mr. Railton: Two out of three is a good average.

Mr. Alexander: Doctor, perhaps you should have stayed with medicine. No, I will take that back. It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to jibe at my favourite members. I know that that hon. member goes back to his riding from time to time and says what a good fellow the hon. member for Hamilton West is, and I know that that hon. member is a great Canadian.

● (2130)

Perhaps hon. members will now give me a chance to continue with my remarks. What the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock is proposing is a pause. He very ingeniously in motions Nos. 7, 8 and 9 is proposing a pause in the government's action because, as I understand it, it seems that the government thinks it can do anything—

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). We had a discussion earlier in the day, at which time it was understood that the debate would cease at 9.30 and a vote would be taken. I am sure it would be the wish of the hon. member for Hamilton West to facilitate the carrying out of that undertaking on both sides of the House. I would suggest further that, if my impression is also the impression of the minister, we should now proceed to take the votes according to that understanding we reached earlier in the day.

Mr. Faulkner: That was our understanding, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have been following my leader since 1968 and I will continue to follow him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The question is on motion No. 7, moved by Mr. Friesen, seconded by Mr. Alexander (Hamilton West), that Bill C-58—

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Shall I dispense?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): And on motion No. 8, moved by Mr. Friesen, seconded by Mr. Alexander (Hamilton West), that Bill C-58, an act to amend the Income Tax Act—

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The question is on motion No. 7. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, the agreement was in respect of the four deferred motions. Surely someone is in charge of the House. What is going on here?

Mr. Alexander: My speech excited everyone.

Mr. Faulkner: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it was understood that the votes would be on the motions that were deferred at an earlier date; that is motions No. 1, No. 2, No. 3 and No. 12.

An hon. Member: If you can count that high it is one to four.

An hon. Member: Get the House leader.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Fairweather: Get the House leader. What kind of a shop is this?

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I think that everything that has been said up till now should be thrown out.

An hon. Member: Call in the members.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): The question is on motions Nos. 1, 12, 2 and 3 deferred from earlier dates.

Call in the members.

● (2150)

Mr. Speaker: The first question is on motion No. 1. I take it the sense of the House is that the vote on motion No. 1 will also take care of motion No. 12.

The House divided on motion No. 1 (Mr. Fairweather) and motion No. 12 (Mr. Fairweather) which were negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I therefore declare motion No. 3, as amended, lost.

Motion No. 3, as amended, negatived.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment to motion No. 4 in the name of the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Cafik)—

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the understanding was that we would vote only on the deferred votes that have now been taken. I think all votes that it was agreed would be taken tonight have been taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House is aware that until such time as a decision has been taken on the amendment to motion No. 4 it will be difficult to proceed, in a procedural way, with motion No. 5. However, if there is no understanding—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the understanding was that we would take all votes that had been deferred up to this afternoon when the arrangement was made. At that time the vote had not been called on the amendment of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt). Therefore, I believe the point of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) is well taken and that all votes that have been agreed on have been taken.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—PROPOSAL TO LEASE LEOPARD TANKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION—ALLEGED OVER-PRICING OF TANKS BY SENIOR OFFICIALS

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I rise this evening to discuss briefly a question I posed a week ago Monday, on February 2. As reported at page 10518 of Hansard I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) about the forthcoming trials between the German Leopard II tanks and the American XM-1. I specifically asked:

—will the minister and the government now consider the opposition suggestion that Canada consider leasing Leopard I's until the winner of the U.S.-German competition is determined?

To which the Minister of National Defence replied in part:

—we are at this time considering the two main options which are to refit the Centurions or to purchase the Leopard I.

My further question to the minister was the following:

Mr. Speaker, the minister, the deputy minister and the chief of the defence staff have priced the Leopard I at anywhere between $1.4 million and $1.8 million. The Economist says the competition winner will be in the "just over $500,000" class.

Those are the two parts of the question to which I wish to address myself tonight.

The confusion in prices quoted for LRPA's pales when compared with the shambles surrounding the tank replacement program. On November 25, 1975, General Dextrase said a retrofit of the Centurions would cost about $400,000 per tank, while new Leopards would cost $1¼ million each. However, he went on to say:

On the basis of retrofitting 113 Centurions, the cost would be $85 million (i.e., $752,000 per tank) and $200 million to acquire 113 Leopards.

—which is $1¾ million each.

The minister added to the confusion by telling a press conference, according to the Ottawa Citizen of November 28, 1975, that to refit 233 Centurions would cost $80 million, that is, $343,000 each, while 180 new tanks would cost from $180 million to $200 million, or just over $1 million each. I phoned the German Embassy and they assured me that they would sell Leopard I tanks complete with spare parts for $700,380 each.

We have the minister claiming that retrofits cost less than half of the price quoted by the chief, and the German Embassy claiming they will sell us new tanks for half the price the chief says they cost. It gets even more ridiculous when we consider that for slightly less than the refit to the old Centurions at the price quoted by the Chief of the Defence Staff, the Germans would sell us brand new tanks.

I am disturbed by the answer given me by the minister on February 2 when he said:

—we are at this time considering the two main options which are to refit the Centurions or to purchase the Leopard I.

This in fact discards the other option of waiting for the competition between the American tank and the Leopard 2. This was spelled out in last night's Ottawa Journal in a story headlined "Detroit vs the Leopard". It refers to the two tanks, stating:

Both also carry a price tag of $507,000. General Motor's entry is a bit faster, getting 48 miles an hour from its 1,500 horsepower engine compared with 45 m.p.h. for Chrysler's.

It mentions the Leopard 2, a West German tank already in production. This is all in spite of the fact that the Chief of Defence Staff told the defence committee a couple of months ago that it would be years before the Leopard 2 would be in production.

I should like to point out one thing that was omitted from the Journal story of last night, and that is the rather startling new tank motor that Chrysler is putting into their version of the XM-1. In the Chrysler version the power is provided by a regenerative turbine engine using diesel fuel. This may be a great leap forward in respect of tanks in coming years. I should like to quote something about these tanks which I have obtained from the International Defence Review. It states:

In some tests, the XM-1 has traversed the cross-country course at speeds three times greater than the M-60A1 thank over the same course.

The M-60 is a tank in use at the present time by U.S. forces. The article goes on to state:

A large part of this high-speed capability is due to the 1,500 horsepower engine.

It goes on to refer to the new Chrysler version using the diesel fuel turbine engine.

● (2230)

I would also like to point out that another article mentions that these tanks are to go to the United States army for three months competitive testing in January, 1976. The winner will be selected in July or August of 1976. Starting in September the winner is to be evaluated against the German Leopard II.

There are a few things the House should know about the difference between the Leopard I and the Leopard II. the first Leopard, which is the only modern tank the minister says they are considering, left the production line on September 9, 1965, over ten years ago. The old Leopard tank, the Leopard I we are considering buying, has an 830 horsepower motor while the Leopard II has a number of new interesting features which will doubtless set the trend for future MBT's. It is powered by a 12-cylinder engine which develops 1500 hp.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in the process of deciding which is the most suitable tank for use by the Canadian Forces our specialists are keeping a close watch on the development and trials taking place in the tank field in many countries, including the United Kingdom, Germany, and the United States.

To put this into perspective one has to appreciate both the short term and the long term implications, and it should be noted that the Economist article to which the hon. member referred in his question on February 2 made the point that the trials of the Leopard II and XM 1 in the United States will not be completed until late 1976 at the earliest and that it will then take some time to select the winner. The competition winner is then still a long way from production. The hon. member should understand that the trial of the next generation of Leopard tank and its American competitor will not produce an in-service tank until the late 1980's, more than ten years from now.

The immediate problem for the Canadian Forces is that at the end of 1976 the existing Centurion tanks will require replacement or rebuilding, and therefore the military staff is examining two options.

The first option is the replacement of the Centurion tank by the Leopard I tank now used by Germany, Belgium, Italy, Norway, and Denmark. For your information, Mr. Speaker, there have been over 4,000 Leopard I tanks produced to date which have a useable life of about 20 years. Within the spirit of the NATO Alliance, acquisition of the Leopard I would strengthen our position through the procurement of an effective, current piece of equipment with logistic and standardization advantages.

The second option is to refit, that is to modernize, the existing Centurions to give them continued life, possibly an additional ten years. However, at the moment it is considered unwise to state any conclusions at least until the present technical assessment is complete and we have analyzed all aspects of the alternatives. We expect to receive the results of this analysis and the recommendations of the military staff early in April.

Again referring to the Economist's article, the cost of the new tank referred to was a general design estimate for the unit cost of the vehicle in 1972. As we all know, there has been considerable inflation in both Europe and North America, and we think it would be most unwise to put a firm price on the cost of a tank which we will not see in production for probably 8 to 10 years. Certainly our indications are that the Leopard II will be considerably more expensive than the Leopard I. Finally, I should point out that the figure which the hon. member quoted for the Leopard I was a gross estimate of the program costs per tank, that is, it includes such things as spare parts, manuals, training aids, and so on, whereas the price quoted for the Leopard II was obviously basic unit cost.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member might procure more reliable figures than those one might expect to find in the Ottawa Citizen and in the Ottawa Journal.

Adjournment Debate

HEALTH—LASSA FEVER—POSSIBILITY OF INTERFERENCE WITH REGULATIONS BY WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION—EFFECTIVENESS OF QUARANTINE MEASURES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, they say there is nothing new under the sun. This does not apply in the field of medicine. Quite recently a new disease called Lassa, a virus, was discovered and isolated in 1970 at Columbia University.

It is true, we do know that viruses mutate. We also know that in a family, three or four children can come down with chicken pox and one of them will also come down with herpes zoster. We know that these viruses jump around like this. However, I have been very interested in this new disease which was discovered in 1970. It is a virus which was labelled Lassa fever. It is endemic, so far as I know, only in west Africa, which includes Ghana, Nigeria, and Sierra Leone.

This disease was first discovered, as I have said, in 1970 when three American nurses attended a sick patient in west Africa who was thought to have a flu-like disease. He was first treated with quinine because of his malaria-like symptoms; he had fever and chills. When that did not help him, he was given an anti-typhoid inoculation. All three of the nurses died one after the other, but before the third one died she was flown home to New York, and at Columbia University they were fortunate enough to isolate the virus which caused the sickness.

Lassa fever is hard to diagnose because it comes on with flu-like symptoms, high fever and chills, and then the disease continues on its course. It has a mortality rate of 20 per cent to 25 per cent among adults, and the mortality rate among pregnant women is as high as 50 per cent. It is generally believed that the immediate host is a rodent, but it is not known whether the disease is transmitted through food or through a bite. Certainly this lack of knowledge points out the necessity for a good deal of research to be carried out to find out a little more about this disease and its causes. Its existence was not discovered until the death of the three nurses. Blood samples were taken from the third nurse who was flown to the United States, and the virus was isolated at Columbia University. This was in 1970.

I understand that the United States has gathered some immune serum from known cases of Lassa fever. It is difficult to be sure how valuable this serum is at present. However, most of the pool of immune serum is banked in Nigeria, with small amounts being kept in New York City, Sierra Leone, and Ghana. Most of the immune serum on the North American continent is kept very carefully in Georgia.

One wonders whether the native population in these west African countries have developed any resistance to this endemic disease which might not be possessed by the North American population. This is my concern. A good example of it was when the white man came to North America and brought with him tuberculosis, measles, and other disease which almost exterminated the North American Indian.

Lassa fever is hard to diagnose and very serious if it is contracted. I feel that the Canadian people should be protected by keeping a strict isolation on those people coming from West Africa until the incubation period of the disease is over, and that runs for a period of from 14 days to 21 days. I feel this should also be done because we do not know how an epidemic could come to the population of North America because there are rodents here, and yet we do not have Lassa fever. As I stated before the disease is very much like 'flu. Muscles and bones ache, and there is high fever and delirium.

I hope that the people who are put on an advisory committee with respect to health precautions at the Olympic Games will be people with skill and some knowledge.

I also hope that in another five years we will have learned much more about this disease, its diagnosis and treatment. In the meantime we should not subject the Canadian people to risks which are not necessary. It was with this hope that I brought this strange new disease to the attention of the House, and hopefully by doing so that will stimulate research, further study, and observation of this very interesting disease about which we know so little.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by assuring the Canadian people that all precautions are being taken to protect them from this odious new disease, Lassa fever. As the hon. member indicated, it was discovered on the west coast of Africa, and it is believed to be spread by a species of field rat. While the primary source is believed to be the wild rat, there is also an indication that secondary infection can occur from direct contact with an afflicted patient. Health personnel working in a mission hospital in Africa have contracted the disease in this manner; however, spread of infection beyond these health personnel is rare, and it appears that such spread is unlikely.

Since Lassa fever was first discovered there has been no accidental transmittal beyond the borders of the west African countries other than a small outbreak which occurred in laboratory personnel who were involved in culturing and handling the live virus in the United States. One European, who contracted the disease in Africa, was evacuated by air to Europe from Africa, and no secondary infection of health personnel occurred in Europe.

With respect to the Olympic Games in Montreal in 1976, as the minister has already stated in response to earlier questions put by the hon. member, the government intends to seek amendments to the Quarantine Act to allow the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) to detain any person arriving in Canada from abroad who is suspected of carrying an infectious disease in either the incubatory or active state. These amendments will also safeguard the civil liberties of any person suspected of having a disease such as Lassa fever by requiring the minister to make an application to a judge of the superior court of the particular province within 48 hours, if the disease has not yet diagnosed, to request further detention.

A committee has been established with the provincial government of Quebec and the city of Montreal to review requirements for special precautions to arrest and prevent the spread of infectious disease should any prospect of danger arise.

[Mr. Rynard.]

I am pleased to inform the House that the federal government is also in close contact with the United States and United Kingdom authorities who have first hand knowledge of Lassa fever. Moreover, the Department of National Health and Welfare is in continuous contact with the World Health Organization, which monitors and reports outbreaks of infectious diseases on a global basis. Contrary to the fears of the hon. member, no interference from this world body is anticipated. Rather, a close, co-operative and harmonious relationship exists with the World Health Organization.

As I indicated previously, a committee is presently investigating the feasibility of developing a new isolation facility in which patients suffering from extremely infectious and dangerous diseases, such as Lassa fever, can be treated. The results of the deliberations of this committee should be available within the next few months.

May I conclude as I began by reassuring the Canadian people that all due precautions are being taken, and consideration of the problem is well in hand.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY—ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—POSSIBILITY THAT INSURANCE CORPORATION WILL BE ADDENDUM TO AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I intervene this evening because the reply of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to my question of February 5 was unsatisfactory. Usually the replies to that minister in the House are succinct and useful, but I am afraid his answer left a good deal to be desired.

My question was prompted by a meeting involving the federal Minister of Finance and provincial ministers of finance. After the meeting the federal minister issued a press release saying that certain minor difficulties needed to be worked out. A great many people in British Columbia hoped that the difficulty could be ironed out and that rates charged by the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia could be brought within the government's anti-inflation guidelines.

I did not ask the Minister of Finance whether the subject was negotiated or discussed; I asked the minister to go on record and say, on behalf of the government, that the rates charged by ICBC, a Crown corporation, ought to be brought under the federal guidelines and that the government would thereby offer relief to British Columbians who are being charged absolutely incredible insurance rate increases for the cars they drive.

The minister did not reply to that specific part of the question asking for an indication of the government's position, an indication vitally necessary if the government is to give some leadership in controlling inflation and the rates charged by ICBC. It is time the federal government and the provinces stopped playing their perpetual game of ping pong, stopped saying, "Shall we put it under the guidelines or not?"

I hope the parliamentary secretary can make some positive statement this evening on the government's decision to include ICBC in the addendum to the agreement made with British Columbia and make the Crown corporation a controlled Crown corporation. There is ample precedent for this. For example, the Globe and Mail of February 3 mentions inflation rules governing 17 Crown corporations. Most of those corporations provide services, as ICBC does. There is ample precedent in the Province of Ontario. We hear, for example, that Ontario hydro rates now are under AIB guidelines.

It seems passing strange that two things have not happened. First, Mr. Pepin, of the Anti-Inflation Board, has not said anything publicly about ICBC rates. He was quick to interfere with teacher negotiations in Ontario, but strangely slow about speaking of the insurance rates in British Columbia. He was strangely silent, even though a consulting actuary to the Crown corporation said that ICBC rates in British Columbia are unnecessarily high. He said that the corporation is adopting the most pessimistic view on the basis of past experience, and charging unnecessarily high rates. Surely the AIB ought to control the rates charged by the corporation in British Columbia, rates which are unnecessarily high.

Consider the human implications of the high rates. For example, a driver under 25 years old of a 1974 Ford Fairland will pay, even though he has not been involved in any accidents, between $315 and $1,102. Such a young driver will, typically, very likely be employed in one of our local industries, say a mill. His wages have been frozen but he is asked to pay one-tenth of his salary for car insurance. When he turns to his shop steward and asks what is to happen to his wages the answer will be, "I'm sorry, the federal government froze your wages." So far the government has done nothing to bring ICBC rates within anti-inflation guidelines. Is it any wonder little consensus has developed on the federal government's program? The sooner the government recognizes that there are poor people in this country who are not prepared to fight inflation alone but want the rest of the community to participate in that fight, the sooner it will have some chance of seeing that program obtain some success.

I will resume my seat in the hope that some positive statement may come forward from the government that in fact it does favour ICBC rates being placed under the anti-inflation program so that they can make a judgment that they represent not merely the federal presence, but individuals in the province of British Columbia, many of whom placed their faith in the government in the last election. I hope that faith was not misplaced in terms of its attitude toward inflation.

I would welcome from the parliamentary secretary a positive statement that now we can see that ICBC rates will come under the anti-inflation guidelines, regardless of the position taken by the province of British Columbia.

Mr. Jacques-L. Trudel (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the issue of whether or not the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia, know as ICBC, will be specifically covered by a Canada-B.C. agreement on the anti-inflation program, I would note that we have made it clear to the provinces that we would, of course, be quite prepared to discuss the inclusion of provincial agencies under such an agreement. The procedure that has been followed with provinces that have signed an agreement has been to annex to any memorandum of agreement a specific schedule listing such government bodies that are to be covered. The final decision on which bodies will be covered by the agreement remains with the provinces.

Where pricing for government services is concerned, the federal government and provinces have agreed, as a matter of broad principle, to follow the guidelines in the pricing of particular goods and services to the extent possible except where otherwise required to meet fiscal policy and program management needs and objectives. It remains the responsibility of the government of British Columbia to determine where these considerations might call for a departure from the strict application of the guidelines in certain circumstances.

With respect to the specific concern on the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia's proposed rate increase, we are given to understand that ICBC incurred a substantial deficit in the fiscal year 1974-75 and it is estimated that it will continue to do so in the fiscal year 1975-76. The proposed rate increase reported in the press has apparently been based on the reports of independent actuaries who have examined ICBC accounts and is designed, I understand, to put ICBC on a break-even basis for this year's operations. Hon. members are aware that the application of the guidelines to the private sector does not require a company to operate at a loss, and the Anti-Inflation Board will permit increases in prices from a loss position to enable a company to reach a break-even point.

Finally, I would also wish to note that, until the government of British Columbia signs an agreement with the federal government, none of the provincial public sector in that province would be covered under the anti-inflation program.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

RADIOACTIVE CONTAMINATION OF SITES IN OTTAWA AREA—REQUEST FOR INQUIRY IN DISPOSAL OF RADIOACTIVE MATERIAL—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of reports by William Bush, a scientific advisor to the Atomic Energy Control Board, that waste material from one extraction process has contaminated several sites in the Ottawa area, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River:

That this House direct the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to launch an immediate investigation into the alleged contamination of a number of sites in the Ottawa area by radioactive waste material, and report these finding to the House along with those remedial measures he intends to take to protect the health and safety of Ottawa area citizens.

And further:

That this House direct the government to initiate a public inquiry into the methods by which radioactive material is handled by industry, and monitored by the Atomic Energy Control Board to assure the safety of citizens, not only in the Ottawa and Port Hope areas, but across Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Under Standing Order 43, unanimous consent is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT ON PENSIONS FOR PRISONERS OF WAR PROMISED BY MINISTER—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move, seconded by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe:

● (1410)

That this House reminds the Minister of Veterans Affairs that tomorrow is Thursday, the day he has promised to make a statement regarding legislation respecting Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war, and that we await with hope the statement we trust he will be making.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure all hon. members are agreed that a matter which has been under constant discussion and which anticipates a statement by a minister is scarcely a matter of urgent and pressing importance, but I am sure that both hon. members will understand their point is being pressed again in another way.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO INVESTIGATION OF POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important issue.

Considering that every citizen is entitled to be considered and treated fairly and with deference, considering the aggressive and arbitrary manner of the RCMP officers making inquiries about several citizens who have contributed in good faith to the financing of political parties, as set forth in Canada Elections Act and considering that those same officers have extracted statements with threats, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That the government undertake a legal investigation on the manner in which the RCMP conducted the said inquiries.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimous consent, the motion therefore cannot be put.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE WITH FREIGHT COSTS ON FEED GRAINS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I also rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, that matter being the federal government's feed grain policy in so far as it relates to the total lack of action in the area of feed freight assistance. The federal government promised over two years ago to take the necessary steps to remove or modify the feed freight assistance program, at least as far as the Montreal area is concerned, but there has never been any effort made to do so. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the federal government move immediately to settle the question of feed freight assistance and to ensure equity between feed freight rates on grain and animals.

A balance in feed freight rates between grain and meat would ensure the development of agriculture according to natural advantages.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF FREIGHT OPERATIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43. Widespread concern by Newfoundland railway employees makes suspect the CNR's intentions with regard to the future of rail freight in the province. Evidence indicates a downgrading of rail movements in favour of road transport, which taxes the present low-standard trans-Canada highway and is contrary to government thrusts in conservation and economic considerations. In order to remove the danger of a repeat of the elimination of rail passenger service in the province, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath):

That this House orders that the Canadian Transport Commission investigate the CNR freight operation in Newfoundland with a view to determining the future intentions of CNR as it concerns rail freight operations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT ON COLLECTIVE BARGAINING—SUGGESTED STATEMENT BY BOARD OF WAGE INCREASE PERMITTED RAILWAY EMPLOYEES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. It arises out of the pretence of himself and many of his colleagues that the government's controls policy does not restrict the scope of collective bargaining. What position will he take now that the Prime Minister has admitted on national television that that program does substantially restrict the scope of collective bargaining; and in particular, will the government now have the courage to do its duty and arrange, after proper hearings, for the Anti-Inflation Board to indicate to the parties to the railway dispute exactly what is the maximum settlement that is acceptable to the board and the government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement referred to by the Leader of the Opposition. It is true, of course, that the Anti-Inflation Board can affect agreements that have been entered into voluntarily. That has always been the case and, so far as I know, there is no intention of changing the procedures or the scope or the methods of the Anti-Inflation Board at the present time.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder when my hon. friend, whom I try hard to respect from day to day—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: —will stop pretending that a program designed to, amoung other things, restrict the scope of wage settlements does not restrict collective bargaining? In view of this, and in view of the important and possibly disastrous effect a railway strike could have, why does the government insist on following this farce through to the end rather than exercising the very substantial powers and responsibilities it recently sought and received from parliament?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I shall miss the hon. gentleman when he is no longer in the position he is at the present time. I should like to thank him for the co-operation and respect he has shown me, at least in the past. On the particular question he has raised, we have debated this on many occasions. The position of the government is that collective bargaining should proceed and then the Anti-Inflation Board should make a judgment on the outcome.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the fair-minded Acting Prime Minister whether he will not agree that the present position being taken by the government in respect of wage settlements, and the pretense that free collective bargaining is being preserved and the government will not restrict this, is just as hypocritical as the attitude it previously took toward wage and price controls in general?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, since I want to be perfectly frank and honest with my hon. friend, the answer is no.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

THREATENED STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—SUGGESTION ANTI-INFLATION BOARD SET OUT PARAMETERS OF NEGOTIATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Acting Minister of Labour. Since the public demands of the railway union which resulted in a breakdown, or followed with a breakdown in negotiations, seem to far exceed the guidelines imposed by the Anti-Inflation Board, and in view of the fact there is in essence no free collective bargaining because the Anti-Inflation Board is the final arbiter, is it the intention of the government through an industrial commissioner or a conciliation board to inform the union of the parameters within which they have to negotiate under the contraints laid down by the Anti-Inflation Board?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has suggested exactly what I suggested two days ago. When and if an industrial commissioner or a conciliation board is set up, the chairman or the individual might want to inform or discuss with the Anti-Inflation Board the parameters of the wage settlement. We are talking about free collective bargaining, and certainly in the case of the railways we are talking of hundreds of clauses that are non-monetary, and in many cases more important than the monetary matters which must be settled outside the Anti-Inflation Board. Certainly the Anti-Inflation Board imposes a restraint but does not eliminate collective bargaining, because in theory some fair settlements could be substantially lower than the parameters set by or acceptable to the Anti-Inflation Board.

THREATENED STRIKE OF RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE DETERMINATION BY LABOUR RELATIONS COUNCIL OF ESSENTIALITY OF RAIL SERVICE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but admire the minister's optimism, but since we seem to be heading for a national rail stoppage because of the government's head-in-the-sand attitude toward the situation, and because of the essentiality of rail services to the economy of this country, may I ask the Acting Minister of Labour whether the Canada Labour Relations Council, which is empowered to study specific proposals, has been asked to make a determination as to whether rail services are essential to the national economy, and if such designation or such finding by the Canada Labour Relations Council, which I understand is meeting today, will be made public?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not think we need the council's advice in order to reiterate that rail services are essential to this country. The question is, how essential are they and when does any particular labour dispute become so dangerous to the economy there must be an intervention. The point is, the hon. gentleman is talking about a strike as if it were inevitable when in fact the normal process of the law has not even begun. There has yet to be the conciliation stage or the commissioner stage, or mediation. What the hon. gentleman is doing is reflecting the usual cynicism he reflects everytime collective bargaining is discussed and anticipating the results of collective bargaining which has yet to begin.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—REQUEST OF MONTREAL GROUP FOR FIELD HOSPITAL TO AID EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. On Monday in the House both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence indicated the government was doing all it could to help the unfortunate people in Guatemala at the time. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question concerning a request made of the government for a civil defence field hospital providing some 200 beds. Could the Acting Prime Minister confirm that such a request was made sometime ago to the government by Dr. Cohn of Montreal supported by OXFAM Canada, and could he confirm also that the government has not yet accepted that request; if not, would he explain to the House the reason?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government did receive such a request. It has been re-examined in conjunction with the particular agencies which have responsibility in this area and my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs will give a full reply.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is not true that medical supplies have been held up by the government because of red tape as has been suggested in the newspapers. The need at the moment in Guatemala is for cash, food, milk powder and orthopedic equipment. Yesterday the Guatemalan consulate in Montreal issued a statement on clear instruction from the Guatemalan national emergency co-ordinating committee that no further medical assistance could be handled at the present time. A subsequent request was made to the Canadian government to hold any further preparations for sending medical teams either official or voluntary until authorization has been received from Guatemala. The plain fact is we are ready to assist in any way possible as we have been doing but at the moment the advice from the Guatemalan authorities and from the League of Red Cross Societies is that it would be counter-productive at the present time to send in further medical teams.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, that part of the answer I say seriously is reassuring, but concerning the specific request for this field hospital of some 200 units, which I understand has support from OXFAM Guatemala and from Guatemala at the appropriate time, I should like to ask the minister if the government is prepared to accede to the request in principle that this unit will be provided when they are able in fact to incorporate it in their plans in Guatemala.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I believe I can give the assurance to the House that if the Guatemalan authorities and the League of Red Cross Societies indicate that additional medical teams or hospital equipment are required or could be utilized at the moment we would bend every effort to make that available. I can give the hon. member that assurance, but we have discussed the generous volunteer proposal made by Dr. Cohn with the Guatemalan authorities and at the present time the advice is it would not be appropriate to add to what seems to be already developing adequate medical assistance when considered in relation to the ability of the Guatemalan government to provide the necessary logistical support.

GUATEMALA—AVAILABILITY OF FIELD HOSPITAL UNIT TO AID EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): I have a final supplementary question for the minister and I direct it to him in the absence of the Minister of National Defence. Given the commitment made by the government in its white paper entitled "Defence in the '70s" to have at the ready a mobile field facility for such disasters, I should like to ask the minister if we have now in Canada such a facility which could be transported almost at a moment's notice if so requested.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without replying directly to what was in the defence white paper, I should tell the hon. member that at the present time a Canada forces Hercules is carrying 18 tons of milk powder to Guatemala, a Canadian forces Boeing 707 will carry additional milk powder arriving today, and another 18 tons will be sent by a Canadian forces Hercules aircraft as well. These three flights have been provided for—

Mr. Broadbent: What about my question?

Mr. MacEachen: —by the armed forces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. With all due respect, it seems to me that the minister is answering a question that was not asked.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

INDUSTRY

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF POLICY ON FOOTWEAR

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

On a number of occasions I have drawn the attention of the House to the serious problems which increasingly affect the Canadian footwear industry. Since the situation has been getting worse, the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada has been in touch with the minister to ask for a meeting at the earliest possible moment. Could the minister inform the House whether he is aware of this request and, at the same time, clarify the issue by indicating where the case is now resting?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of a request for a meeting and I have indicated that I am quite prepared to meet with them. I do not have an actual date set as yet but it will be in the very near future.

[Translation]

SUGGESTED LIMITATION ON FOOTWEAR IMPORTS

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): I have a supplementary question.

Since one of the major problems facing the footwear industry in Canada seems to be that imports are allowed to invade our market more and more, while our production declined by 18 per cent in 1975, can the minister inform the House whether he intends to take the necessary steps to restrict these imports in order to support this important Canadian industry?

[English]

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it is essentially a question of determining in the first instance whether in fact an added degree of tariff protection would provide the desired result. Of course, that has to be considered also in the context of our general international trading patterns and a whole series of related questions. There is a view being expressed that tariffs alone may not be the solution. In fact we have moved within the past few months to bring the footwear industry, or certain portions of it, within a general policy of rationalization which the government undertook some time ago. But these matters are all ones which I hope to clarify when I meet with the shoe manufacturers. If it is purely and simply a tariff matter, then of course we can look at it from that point of view. But I repeat, there are those who feel that the problem goes significantly deeper than that.

ENERGY

LOCATION OF SITES IN OTTAWA AREA CONTAMINATED BY RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources arising out of reports today that there are several sites in the Ottawa area contaminated by radioactive waste material. In light of the gravity of the reports, I am sure the minister has acquainted himself with them and has sought some answers. I wonder if the minister might advise what are the exact parameters of the areas contaminated by radioactive material in the Ottawa area and their proximity to the polluted areas.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there are a number of assorted sites in the Ottawa area where radioactive levels have been identified. I can assure the House, based on the information that I have received, that there is no public health question involved. As to the precise location of these areas, I hope to be able to make those public when I provide the list which I have already indicated to the House I will do with respect to locations in Ontario and other locations in Canada as well.

● (1430)

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO METHODS OF DISPOSING OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, when the minister is making that report, would he advise the House how long he and his ministry or the Atomic Energy Control Board or any other agency has been aware of the situation in Ottawa and what remedial action was taken prior to these reports? Would the minister undertake to launch a public inquiry into the way in which radioactive material is handled by industry and monitored by the Atomic Energy Control Board so that the safety of all Canadians, not just those in the Ottawa area, can be assured? I advise the minister that there are other areas in Canada where some of these sites might be located.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I already indicated in answer to questions in the past week or so that I have yet to be presented with evidence which would suggest the need for an over-all inquiry. I do not rule an inquiry out, but I have not yet been presented with that evidence. As to the question of the clean up, plans have already been made for remedial action, the removal of the wastes at the sites in the Ottawa area, and that should be completed by early spring.

NATURAL GAS—GOVERNMENT MEASURES TO PREVENT SHORTAGE IN EARLY 1980'S

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The National Energy Board last year forecast imminent domestic gas shortages, the solution to which appears to be the construction of the Canadian Arctic gas pipeline, which requires Prudhoe Bay reserves, In view of Governor Hammond's statement before the federal power commission in Washington yesterday regarding Alaska's endorsement of the E1 Paso proposal, has the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources alternative means of preventing a gas shortfall in the early 1980's?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member will understand, the National Energy Board is completely seized with this question at the present time. It is presently conducting hearings. At the moment they are recessed for reasons of which I am sure the hon. member is aware, but they will be restarted very shortly to consider two applications in Canada.

As the hon. member is probably also aware, the regulatory proceedings in the United States are going forward, and there are two applications there. One is the El Paso route, and the other the Gas Arctic. There are bills in the United States house, and a recent one was introduced by Senator Mondale with respect to the Gas Arctic, so I think the regulatory process is continuing in both countries.

NATURAL GAS—GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO SUPPLYING DOMESTIC MARKET

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): In view of that response, I ask if there are any studies under way at the present time to determine alternate gas supplies if the United States opts for the El Paso route, or is it the intention of this government to provide the Mackenzie Valley pipeline access on the basis of only about a 12 per cent provision for the Canadian market?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I have already indicated to the hon. member that the National Energy Board is seized with this question. It is considering the questions of needs, time frame and the competing claims by two applicants.

URBAN AFFAIRS

COST OF LAND—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PREVENT INCREASE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for either the Minister of Finance or the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. They can decide between themselves who will answer.

In light of the constantly escalating cost of housing in this country, placing even modest accommodation outside the reach of most Canadians, and in view of the fact that the cost of land is a very substantial element—a recent survey indicates that the cost of land has escalated at an enormous rate—does the government intend to place any restrictions on the increase in the cost of land?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member asking about restrictions within the context of the anti-inflation program?

Mr. Baldwin: In any context.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In the context of the anti-inflation program, this question has been discussed with the representatives of the provincial governments. The question has been postponed until some of the other more immediate questions facing both the Anti-Inflation Board and the provincial governments could be dealt with, but very definitely the price of land has been an important factor in the increase in the cost of housing in Canada in recent years, and it is a matter of concern both to the provincial and federal governments.

EFFECT OF INCREASED COST OF LAND ON HOUSE CONSTRUCTION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the rather bland answer of the Minister of Finance, I will turn to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs and ask him if it is the view of the government that any restrictions on the increase in the cost of land might be counter productive to the making available of adequate land for the construction of houses.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in response to a rather bland question, I should like to say that I am sure the hon. member appreciates the jurisdictional differences here. This has been a matter of discussion with provincial housing ministers, and it is a matter of great concern to the federal government. We have assumed our responsibility in many ways by assisting municipalities to service land by granting rather extensive loans, many of which are not repayable, to try to bring more land on stream. However, on the whole question of reducing the cost, one aspect comes within the parameters of the anti-inflation program, and the other one is under provincial jurisdiction, which we are discussing with great regularity with the provinces.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE NO REDUCTION IN ASSISTANCE TO MENTALLY AND PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

Mr. Mike Landers (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister assure me that the government's efforts to fight inflation will not include cutbacks in projects to assist mentally and physically handicapped children under the age of six? That is to say, will developmental day care projects be continued?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to state unreservedly that the government does not intend at all to reduce its contribution under the Canada Assistance Plan. These contributions will continue in the future as in the past and they will even be larger since I am discussing with the provinces the possibility of extending coverage under the Canada Assistance Plan to the disabled mentioned by the hon. member.

UNEMPLOYMENT—STATISTICAL TREATMENT OF SEASONAL WORKERS—POSSIBLE REVISION OF DESIRABLE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance, who seems to be doubling as a spokesman on the new figures from Statistics Canada regarding unemployment. Now that the new method has placed seasonal workers in a statistical limbo, can the minister explain how seasonal workers will be treated in the unemployment figures?

[Mr. Danson.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if a worker, though he has been working on a seasonal basis, is actually engaged in seeking additional work or is in the work force, of course he will be within either the employment or unemployment figure.

Mr. Saltsman: Since this change of taking seasonal workers out of the calculations for unemployment figures has taken place in Statistics Canada, is the government now prepared to revise its target, which was originally 3 per cent unemployment, but which included at least 1¼ percentage points as unemployment for seasonal workers? Is the government now prepared to revise its figures for desirable levels of unemployment down to 1¾ per cent or 2 per cent?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am certainly prepared to consider that.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POSSIBILITY OF MANIPULATING UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE AND LIP GRANTS IN VIEW OF NEW LABOUR FORCE STATISTICS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but he does not seem to be here, so I will direct it to the minister responsible. Statistics Canada recently submitted statistics with regard to the new labour force survey, and its background paper indicated that data users can and, in fact, are encouraged to formulate definitions of unemployment which are best suited to their particular applications, which to me smells of hanky panky and manipulation, and can call for manipulation with respect to the Unemployment Insurance Commission and LIP. I should like to ask the minister responsible at this time what effect this new labour survey will have on contributions by the government with respect to unemployment insurance, the extension of the benefit period and, of course, what effect it will have on LIP grants?

● (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration who unfortunately cannot be in the House today as a consequence of illness, I shall make a note of the hon. member's question. However, I must say that I do not agree at all with the charge against Statistics Canada. I think such a charge is unworthy of him.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: There is no attack on Statistics Canada. I am just reading from this report and I will just read it again so that the minister will understand it:

> . . . the data users can, and in fact are encouraged to, formulate definitions of unemployment which are best suited to their particular applications.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF ALTERATION IN GRANT AWARDING CRITERIA AS RESULT OF NEW DEFINITION OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. As the new labour force survey produces lower unemployment rates in certain areas because of the new definition of unemployment, can the minister inform the House whether his department will find it necessary to adjust the grant awarding criteria of unemployment levels to compensate for the structural alteration in the survey or whether DREE grants will be altered in any way?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is of course concerned with this problem, and we are making our own findings and our own studies about it. DREE grants to businesses in various areas are awarded according to the importance of the jobs created and the products involved. It is clear, with respect to unemployment levels in the Atlantic area as well as in some areas in Quebec, that the department I run is watching very closely the development of the situation and that we will do everything possible within our jurisdiction to improve the situation as we have succeeded in doing so up to now and that we will of course continue to accomplish this task.

REASON PORT OF HALIFAX NOT PERMITTED TO TENDER ON NATIONAL DEFENCE CONTAINER TRAFFIC FROM EUROPE

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services and the Minister of National Defence. Would he use his good offices to find out why instructions continue to be issued by the Department of Supply and Services directing the Department of National Defence not to permit the Port of Halifax to tender on the movement of container traffic, Department of National Defence traffic, from points in Europe to points in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not necessarily accept the premise of the question but I will look into the situation.

HEALTH

ALTERNATIVES FOR TREATMENT IN VIEW OF CLOSING OF HOSPITALS—POSSIBILITY DOCTORS ALLOWED MILEAGE CHARGE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address the question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the proposed closing of several hospitals across Canada which are cost-sharing by both levels of government over the years and which will leave several thousand people unemployed, may I ask the minister, as a result of the discussions held recently, what alternatives are to be offered for the cheaper treatment of thousands of cases still requiring medical care that have nowhere to go?

An hon. Member: Ask Frank Miller.

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows well, it is a hospital insurance program whose cost is shared 50 per cent by the federal government. However, the decisions concerning that program are made by the provincial governments.

As regards the specific question of the hon. member, I would say that negotiations with the provinces were begun last year with a view to permitting the federal government to share the cost of certain services that are less costly than hospital care. The provinces suspended those negotiations for a certain time, but I am glad to tell the House that the provinces now seem ready to resume these discussions. A meeting of officials is scheduled for the month of March and will be followed, I hope, by a federal-provincial conference of the health ministers at the beginning of April.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: May I ask the minister if any proposals were made to allow mileage charges as an incentive to have doctors treat patients in their homes, particularly in rural areas?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, nothing in the Medical Care Act or the Hospital Insurance Act prohibits such a practice. But again, this is a decision strictly incumbent to the provincial authorities, and none of them raised that matter with me last year.

GUATEMALA—SUGGESTED OFFER OF HELICOPTERS TO OVERCOME COMMUNICATIONS PROBLEMS

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Since it seems that internal communications is one of the serious problems facing those anxious to distribute emergency aid in Guatemala, and since helicopters would appear to be the best way of overcoming this problem, may I ask the minister whether an offer of helicopters has been made to the Guatemalan authorities or fuel for helicopters and if so, with what result?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have a six man Canadian team in Guatemala working with the Guatemalan authorities and attempting to assess need and evaluate aid. To my knowledge, no request has come forward for helicopters but I will investigate the suggestion made by the hon. member as quickly as possible.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON FREEZE OF LICENCES

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Fisheries. May I ask if, as a result of his meeting with some provincial fisheries ministers last week, the minister will be making a statement to relieve the anxiety of certain fishermen in their preparation for the forthcoming seasons with regard to the freeze on the transfer of licences and the general situation, especially with regard to fishermen who wish to withdraw from the fishing industry and transfer their gear and so on somewhere else?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of State (Fisheries)): Mr. Speaker, the ministers of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island supported the general thrust of the program, although they recognized the difficulties involved. As for the matter of the freeze on licences, when I made the announcement I indicated this would be a temporary freeze. Fisheries officials are receiving applications for transfer, they are putting dates on them and keeping them on a file of pending decisions which could be made in a couple of weeks or more. Meanwhile, the appeal boards are setting up their operations and I hope to meet with maritime members of parliament—my staff tell me it might be tomorrow—but I hope to meet with them soon.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

INQUIRY WHETHER QUEBEC CONSULTED ON PROBLEMS OF LOWER ST. LAWRENCE

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

As the special agreement concerning the development of the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé and Magdalen Islands area will soon come to amend, more specifically on March 31, 1976, and as the problems have obviously not yet been solved, would the minister tell the House and particularly the people of that area, who are most anxious to find out what fate awaits them, whether the authorities concerned of the province of Quebec have been in touch with his department, by way of the related agreements to the general development agreement with regard to the completion of the work undertaken under that soon to end agreement, and, if not, would the minister welcome such a request and would he give it his vigorous support in cabinet?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed the officials of the provincial department and those of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion have met several times and explored jointly the possibility of either extending the agreement, or signing a related agreement within the general development agreement.

We trust that our hopes to that effect can materialize in the near future, and that we will be in a position to announce what a special agreement could contain with a view to continuing and completing, if possible, the development of that part in the province of Quebec.

THE CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

POSSIBILITY OF PATRIATION BY UNILATERAL ACTION OF CANADA

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice on a political safari in British Columbia, I shall direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Before the Prime Minister left he stated that consideration was being given to unilateral action to the patriation—and I say patriation rather than repatriation because we have never had the constitution—of the constitution. I would ask him the simple question, as this is a most unusual suggestion and it has been regarded as an unconstitutional course ever since confederation, has the government had the Clerk of the Privy Council or anyone on behalf of the Privy Council ask the law officers of the Crown whether there could be patriation of the constitution by action other than through a statute in the Parliament of Westminster?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether any such advice has been sought. I will make inquiries.

COMBINES

BRYCE COMMISSION—POSSIBLE REMOVAL FROM COMMISSION OF PIERRE NADEAU BECAUSE OF CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. In December, a couple of months ago, a member of the Conservative party asked the Prime Minister whether he had decided on a conflict of interest or possible conflict of interest and possible removal from the Bryce Commission of Pierre Nadeau because of the fact that he is director of the Royal Bank which has had some intimate ties with Power Corporation. The Prime Minister said he would refer the matter to the chairman of the commission. Has a decision been made and, if so, what has been the recommendation of the chairman?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): As far as I know, Mr. Speaker, the chairman has made no recommendation. I will see whether he intends to make one.

Mr. Nystrom: While checking into that, because it has been over two months since the question was asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, and in view of the legitimate widespread concern that the commission and staff take a clear corporate line, will the Acting Prime Minister undertake to broaden the commission to bring in people who have a background other than just with corporations?

Mr. Sharp: On a matter of this kind, Mr. Speaker, it is important that the people making the inquiries should be very familiar with the problems. The government has no intention of enlarging or dropping any member from the commission.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDONESIA—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT LOAN FUNDS REACH THE PEOPLE IN NEED

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister in a position to indicate to the House the specifics or conditions of the recent loan by the government of Canada to Indonesia? In particular, do the conditions ensure that the funds or the results of the funds will get down to the people who need them and will not be siphoned off by the powerful elite of that country?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a press release was issued on the details of the loan to Indonesia following a general agreement made between Canada and Indonesia when the president of Indonesia was in this country a year ago. I believe I would be doing the hon. member a better service if I sent him the material directly rather than attempting to recall it now.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON PENSIONS FOR PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government House leader. In view of the January 28 and February 3 statements in this House by the Minister of Veterans Affairs that he would make an announcement concerning the unanimous report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs relating to former prisoners-of-war within two weeks of the former date, a period which is expiring, will the House leader give the paring knife to someone who knows how to trim the fat from less essential programs in order to re-allocate funds toward implementation of that report, thus enabling the Veterans Affairs Minister to satisfactorily fulfill that commitment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should say to hon. members that this question is still under consideration in cabinet. I know it had been the intention of the Minister of Veterans Affairs to make a statement tomorrow. I do not know whether in fact this will be possible since the matter is still being considered in cabinet.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Shame!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

DATE OF AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Since the minister has very quickly come to an agreement with the new government of British Columbia regarding highway expansion in northern British Columbia, something that did not happen with the old government, and since there is not an agreement between the federal government and the government of British Columbia with regard to DREE grants, the only province in Canada that does not have an agreement, when will an agreement be made with the province of British Columbia and what form will it take?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed I had the honour to be in Victoria last Monday and to meet with the minister responsible for development as well as with the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Phillips, with whom I signed an agreement for the development of a road system. We also took the opportunity of this first meeting to consider the development possibilities within this big and magnificent province. I hope that during the next weeks, our officials, federal as well as provincial, will have the opportunity to get in touch and that they will be in a position to make recommendations. The minister and myself agreed to meet again, next May or June, and at that time some decisions will probably be taken. Obviously, we have to wait until such time to announce them.

TRANSPORT

REQUESTED REVIEW OF GRADE CROSSINGS IN SCARBOROUGH

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It now being some two months since the fatal train/bus tragedy in Scarborough, will the minister indicate what steps have been taken to review the adequacy of existing safety standards at the 35 level crossings in the borough of Scarborough where grade separations are not yet in place, including the site of the tragedy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the same standards of safety and review are applied throughout the country, having regard to the kind of traffic that presents itself. Much of the initiative in relation to grade separation, of course, rests with municipal bodies, although we have a facility for assisting in a very major way with these matters. We have, as the hon. member knows, made some progress in improving grade separations, in this particular area. We are now looking at another one which is important to the hon. member. I hope we will have some news for him very soon.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND TELEVISION STATION AT RIMOUSKI

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the minister responsible for the CBC.

While I agree with the CBC's intention to set up a French television station in Vancouver, even if people seem to be opposed, I would like to ask the minister if he would consider the possibility of granting such stations in areas where people are very keen to have one, such as is the case in my constituency of Rimouski which has been hoping for many years for a CBC station?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister responsible for the CBC, I can tell the hon. member that indeed discussions are under way with CBC officials in view of setting up another French channel, in keeping with the expressed desires of the people of that area.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same minister. For many years some parts of Canada have not had regular CBC coverage. I refer to the northern parts of Newfoundland. Will the minister investigate the continuing procrastination of the CBC to extend television services to these people and report to the House on her findings?

Miss Coline Campbell (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly bring the hon. member's problem to the attention of the minister. As he knows, this problem is common not only to areas of Newfoundland, but to other areas of Canada.

REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS

SEVENTH REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions:

December 18, 1975—Mr. McCleave (Joint Chairman of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments):

[Mr. Lang.]

That the seventh report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1975, be concurred in.

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, relating to the item Your Honour has just called. As it will form the basis of the discussion tomorrow there has been some consultation among House leaders and it might be for the benefit of hon. members if I were to make a short comment, with the agreement of all those concerned.

The report in question, while approving the concept of freedom of information generally, deals with the extension of the powers of the committee into the next session. At the time this report was brought in the committee was confident that the government House leader, with the aid of his colleagues, would so expedite the business of the House that we would now be in a new session. The hon. gentleman has somewhat disappointed us in this regard, and as several months may now elapse before a new session is called, the motion standing in the name of my hon. friend has, by agreement, been extended to include terms of reference for the balance of the present session. That will form the basis of the subject matter of the debate tomorrow. I have given the House leaders of the respective parties copies of the motion in question.

Mr. Sharp: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that for reasons that are well known—the difficulty of getting our legislative program through—it is, unfortunately, necessary to extend these terms of reference and I can assure the House that a motion in those terms is acceptable to us.

Mr. Speaker: It is not clear to me whether the House is of a mind to withdraw or accept the motion of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave). In any case, he is not here today.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I have before me a motion in terms which include the motion of the member. I could read it now and the House could then make an order. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) has agreed that I could read this motion so that the House would then be put in possession of the details of the subject matter we shall be discussing tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: The motion is as follows:

That the Seventh Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1975, be concurred in, and that the committee be authorized to examine the matters referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the said report during the balance of this session.

Mr. Speaker: Is that the motion which is to be discussed tomorrow, by agreement?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE

REFERENCE TO QUESTION RAISED BY MR. MacKAY ON MATTERS SUB JUDICE

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before calling upon the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) with respect to his proposed motion pursuant to Standing Order 26, may I take a few moments on the matter raised by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and others, in connection with the rather important question of matters sub judice—there is a considerable weight of material having to do with this question, and the arguments put forward by hon. members yesterday are most interesting—it is abundantly clear that in any event a decision by the Chair, and I hope all members are agreed that it would be worth while, but it would be difficult at this point for the Chair to attempt to review the matter not only as it relates to criminal proceedings but to civil proceedings as well and try to make a definitive pronouncement if possible.

It is clear to me at this point, however, that in any event no restriction ought to exist on the right of any member to put questions respecting any matter before the courts particularly those relating to a civil matter, unless and until that matter is at least at trial.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Therefore, in any event, bearing in mind the customary practices of the courts, it will be some time before any restriction might be visited upon the hon. member for Central Nova. I make this observation at the present stage only because I believe it would permit the Chair to take a little more time to deal further with this matter.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EFFECT OF INTERVENTION BY ANTI-INFLATION BOARD ON PAPER WORKERS' STRIKE

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), to move the adjournment of the House under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the strike of some 20,000 paper workers which has continued for over half a year causing severe hardship to the families and economies of the regions involved, and which is no nearer to a settlement in most regions due in large part to the intervention of the federal government's Anti-inflation Board which has rejected a wage settlement arrived at between the union concerned and the Irving Paper Company of New Brunswick, an intervention which has given paper companies elsewhere in Canada an excuse not to negotiate realistically and in good faith, and which has caused provincial governments, under whose jurisdication labour matters normally fall, to leave this dispute in the hands of the federal board which to date, through the Administrator, has not made a definitive ruling in the Irving settlement, and the necessity that this matter be debated in parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question which has been put forward in the form of a proposed motion by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes), pursuant to Standing Order 26, is one which has given the Chair considerable difficulty. The hon. member gave the Chair notice of his proposed motion yesterday, and consequently the Chair has had some time in which to reflect on the consideration which should be given to it pursuant to Standing Order 26.

First, may I say that the subject matter would appear to have all the necessary ingredients to qualify it for consideration under the Standing Order. It certainly is one of extreme importance. If for no other reason than the length of time during which the situation referred to has endured, it certainly has severity of impact. Moreover, it transcends parochial considerations. Its scope extends across several provinces; indeed, over the past several weeks many members have taken occasion to put questions on it. Those questions were not restricted to members from any particular party or to any particular region. In addition, of course, it is well known—and this has been pointed out—that the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) raised the question as a possible subject for debate prior to the Christmas recess but the proposition was rejected, primarily on jurisdictional grounds.

As I say, the subject would seem to lend itself ideally to consideration under Standing Order 26 except for two very serious problems. The first is, again, one of jurisdiction. The fact is that the subject matter really concerns a strike in the private sector affecting private companies and private unions. To this extent, really, it is totally beyond the jurisdiction of parliament. On the other hand a new ingredient has now been introduced by the hon. member, one by which he proposes to connect the dispute with the federal jurisdiction—that the strike, which has now been continuing for some time in the private sector, is being prolonged as a result of the introduction of a federal policy and the creation, existence, actions and decisions of the federal Anti-inflation Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: That, I may say, is not an easy question to resolve. It has been extremely difficult and, frankly, after much consideration, I find myself unable to reach a decision on it. If such a proposition were accepted it would be, for example, most difficult to resist the tendency for this parliament to get into a discussion of a decision respecting, for instance, the recent difficulties with the Toronto high school teachers, which is clearly a matter of provincial jurisdiction but which is, or was, affected in its progress by a decision of the Anti-Inflation Board. The Chair has to wonder from a jurisdictional point of view, on the basis of that argument, if this particular strike is accepted for discussion in this Chamber, whether or not it would open up the possibility of discussing every strike in the private sector that might have been affected either by the guidelines or by the board in one way or another.

● (1510)

That may, on some sides of the House, be desirable, but the fact of the matter is that a precedent like that could be dangerous. As I have indicated, I do not in the circumstances find it necessary to resolve that particular point, at least not at this moment.

I might point out that the changes made in 1969 to the procedures of this House removed by design—and I certainly do not disagree with that removal—debate on the application itself made under Standing Order 26. It is, in other words, no longer possible for the Chair to entertain a discussion of whether or not this House has jurisdiction to look at the proposed motion of the hon. member. That is, I think, a better procedure than the previous one, but in this instance, on the jurisdictional question, it does leave the Chair short of some advice and discussion that it would very much seek from members of the House. Therefore while the matter is under further consideration, in remarks I will make in a moment I propose to invite comment by the House leaders, and in fact by any other members who are interested in bringing to my attention matters or points of view that might affect the jurisdictional decision. Perhaps that might take place while this other matter is under consideration.

I said that there were two very difficult problems. The second is that by the very description of the hon. member's proposed motion the Administrator, pursuant to the anti-inflation legislation, is involved in the follow-up, as is the ordinary procedure envisaged in the legislation, after the decision by the board. The intervention of the Administrator, in other words, is in accordance with the legislation.

I would have to take the view at this moment that, if we could eliminate the jurisdictional problem in hypothesis, it would seem to me the situation is very similar to that of a strike, which would fall within the jurisdiction of this House clearly, in which the parties, after a prolonged work stoppage, had agreed on the nomination of an arbitrator or mediator, as the case might be. I think the Chair ought always to take the attitude that while some process within that bargaining system had the capability of resolving the dispute, this House ought not to address itself to the problem pursuant to Standing Order 26. The actions or presence of the Administrator at this time seem to me to be the beginning of the work that is envisaged by the legislation. Therefore, if it has the effect of resolving the dispute, it seems to me that while there exists a reasonable opportunity for success in that particular area we ought not to take the matter under consideration pursuant to this Standing Order until that reasonable possibility has run its course.

Tabling of Document

Therefore, as in previous cases, my decision not to proceed with the setting aside of time for debate pursuant to Standing Order 26 at this particular time is entirely without prejudice to hon. members to raise the matter again if the efforts of the Administrator are in fact not successful and the matter remains with us after the efforts of the administrator have run their normal course. In the meantime I have indicated that, because of the rather difficult jurisdictional problem, I will pursue that subject and seek the advice of the House leaders and consultation with them, and in turn the advice of and consultation with any other hon. members who are interested in expressing themselves to me on the subject of jurisdiction.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would appreciate it, and I suspect certain other members of the House would, if you would clarify certain parts of your remarks. You suggested at one point that you would welcome advice or opinion from the party House leaders and other interested members of the House on the issue you raised in connection with jurisdiction. I had understood when you said that that you expected those views to be expressed publicly here in the House. I would appreciate Your Honour clarifying that.

Mr. Speaker: I would ordinarily welcome the expression of such views in the House for the benefit of the public record. The fact of the matter is that Standing Order 26 was amended, along with a number of other Standing Orders, in the last major revision of the rules so as to eliminate that kind of debate. What in fact took place under the previous Standing Orders was that what was intended to be a debate on the question of whether or not a subject should be debated pursuant to Standing Order 26 turned out, of course, to be a debate on the substance as opposed to the procedure.

In the revision the House, in its wisdom, deemed it appropriate to eliminate that kind of debate. Therefore it is not possible to have such discussion on the public record now, as much as I would take some considerable benefit from that. I am therefore inviting hon. members to communicate with me privately if they have any points of view respecting the jurisdictional matter.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final question on the same point of order. I understand Your Honour is ruling against the acceptability of the motion at this time, or are you simply postponing your decision?

Mr. Speaker: Again the provisions of the Standing Order indicate that the Chair ought, if in fact it is not required, to delay no more than 24 hours in making a decision. Therefore I am indicating that because of the presence of the Administrator and the fact that he has a job to do which is just beginning, debate is not appropriate at this time. However, I leave open the right of hon. members to re-raise the question at a later time if in fact the efforts of the Administrator prove unsuccessful.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I have a different point of order to raise having to do with a confusing situation that arose during the last two days concerning a document that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Richardson) tabled. Yesterday's Hansard would certainly leave doubt in anyone's mind as to what actually happened.

[Mr. Speaker.]

The minister stated that he had tabled a document, and I have been looking for it. I would like to point out to Your Honour that yesterday morning I asked sessional papers for a copy of the document tabled and they said that they did not have it. Yesterday at 2 p.m. I asked the House officer whether he had seen the document that had been tabled, and he said that it had not been tabled. I therefore asked a question as a point of order concerning that.

It appears that the unthinkable happened yesterday and that the document that the minister handed to a page never arrived at the table, that it went instead to the Hansard reporter and took several hours to get back down here. I would not want left on the record the possible implication that the minister had not in fact tabled the document that he said he had tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I certainly thank the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon) for raising the point of order; I had intended to make a comment about it. Our information is exactly as the hon. member for Victoria has described. In the course of his remarks the minister made clear his intention to table the document, handed it to a page, who mistakenly took it to the Hansard office instead of taking it to the Table, under the impression, I suppose, that it was to be printed as an appendix as opposed to being tabled. The minister was under the very clear impression that he had tabled the document, though in fact the Table had not received it. That is the reason for the confusion.

Votes and Proceedings of February 10, 1976, has indicated by way of a corrigendum that that has taken place, and I certainly welcome the intervention of the hon. member for Victoria in straightening up the record for Hansard as well.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, February 10, consideration of Bill C-58, the amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, last night I was saying that the government can do anything it pleases if the circumstances warrant. In this regard we have seen how it has flip-flopped with respect to wage and price controls and how it has flip-flopped with respect to Reader's Digest.

We on this side of the House are attempting to give some due consideration to the sound if not ingenious proposals of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) that there be some special circumstances involving KVOS, which is a Canadian subsidiary of a U.S. parent company and which, as I understand it, has contributed some $76 million to the economic development of this country.

Even more than that, Mr. Speaker, the motions moved by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock indicate that there is a need to give some credence and acceptance to the needs of the consumer vis-à-vis the province of British Columbia. What is wrong with that type of approach, particularly when the CRTC has ruled that commercial deletion regarding cable and television is something we will have to get used to in the future? As I understand it, such a policy will not be implemented until such time as the whole matter which affects not only border stations but the viewing audiences in Hamilton, Toronto, etc. can be solved equitably.

We have seen an equitable solution supposedly in respect of Reader's Digest, even though it was made through the back door. At least this shows there can and must be flexibility in respect of Bill C-58. All we are asking in this particular regard is a reassessment or a review of the government's position in order that it does not tread, run, or jump hastily into a very precarious situation.

We are talking about a good corporate citizen, and I will not go into the reasons why I can make that statement. It is most unfair for a government to move in such a disastrous way that will unquestionably mean the end of this particular broadcasting station. Surely that is not the way we should operate, particularly after the station has been around for a significant number of years making a solid contribution to the development of our national economy.

We must pause and ask ourselves if there is some possibility of negotiation or arrangement. We must ask whether there is the possibility of a solution being found regarding the particular situation in which we find ourselves, and that is Canadian nationalism versus United States parent companies. I suggest there is a possibility, in that the government found one in respect of Reader's Digest. What I am saying, in other words, is that we should not let this bill preclude the possibility of any plan which may benefit Canada and the Canadian broadcasting system. We are calling for flexibility and I know it can be found because the precedent has been set.

What is the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock trying to do? He has put before this House for the edification of the Canadian people three proposals which are the same in substance and principle but which vary because of the particular circumstances we may confront. His first motion is No. 7 in which he calls for a written agreement, once a plan has been approved by the CRTC and the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen), providing compensatory payment by the allocation of funds to enhance Canadian television. Is that not what we are seeking? If that could be accomplished you would then enhance Canadian broadcasting and television, as the case may be, at the same time giving relief to stations such as KVOS.

Motion No. 8 is in the same vein. In the event that the first motion is not acceptable it calls for a written agreement by a particular subsidiary, one similar to KVOS, with not less than 75 per cent of the voting shares being held by Canadians and directing a percentage of the gross revenues, to be determined by the company and the CRTC, to be allocated for the benefit of Canadian television. Is that not a solution worthy of some consideration?

I am looking at the minister responsible for the Treasury Board.

An hon. Member: He has already got problems.

Mr. Alexander: Perhaps he has enough problems, but with the power he holds sitting in that particular portfolio I wish he would look seriously at Motions Nos. 7,8 and 9. I am sure he would come to the conclusion in a minute that these proposals make sense in terms of equity.

If motion No. 8 is not acceptable to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) and that elite group which sits in the front benches maybe No. 9 is attractive. Motion No. 9 is in the same vein. It also calls for a written agreement in respect of approximately 25 per cent of the gross revenue of a particular subsidiary being directed for the benefit of Canadian television, with the utilization of such amount to be determined by the CRTC and approved by the Minister of National Revenue.

The most important aspect of these motions is that the scheme or proposal will be under the direct supervision and control of the CRTC and the Minister of National Revenue. They will set the guidelines and the percentage, and will determine how the distribution is to be made.

I think it is significant to note the problems we have in respect of the acceptability of U.S. television programs in Canada. I should like to quote from the Vancouver Sun of August 28, 1975, from an article by James Nelson under the headline "Why does Canada Buy U.S. TV Shows? It pays!" Bill C-58 is not going to stop that. It will not stop the CTV and CBC from buying U.S. programs, and let there be no misunderstanding in that regard. This article states:

> The most popular U.S. television shows imported by the CBC and CTV television network last season cost $2,000 to $4,000 for each episode and yielded the networks $24,000 to $46,000 each.
> By contrast, all major Canadian-produced shows were heavy money-losers, of as much as $49,000 a week.

Later in the article it is stated:

> But the figures that were revealed showed the disproportionately high revenues from the airing of American TV shows on the Canadian networks compared with their costs, and the high cost of Canadian shows in relation to the revenues they brought in.

The last part of that sentence is important, "in relation to the revenues they brought in". The proposal of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock would provide that a percentage of the gross profits, less advertising expenses, etc., would be directed by the CRTC and the Minister of National Revenue toward reducing those deficits. Surely that is a step in the right direction. Is this not the type of arrangement we are seeking?

I know that hon. members opposite realize the government is wrong in the direction it is moving, trying to kick out, without ceremony, a station that has been operated for years within the guidelines of the law in Canada. Does it not make sense to try to reach some sort of an agreement?

If one of the proposals of the hon. member were accepted this would assist Canadian television program production; it would assist the extension of Canadian television services; it would assist in the development of Canadian talent; it would assist in the furtherance of educational TV, and it would assist in respect of any other broadcasting objectives for the benefit of Canada and Canadians. This is why I have no hesitation in standing here pleading with hon. members to accept these proposals. I am not suggesting that the minister or the ministers responsible have not looked into this matter very thoroughly. What I am saying is that they should look again.

I compare my point vividly with the situation that existed with Reader's Digest. I realize there was a problem, but three months ago the government said there was no way it could move, and Reader's Digest was out and completely finished. Lo and behold, what happened? We now find the government in its wisdom—and now and again the government does have some wisdom, but not often—came up with a solution, particularly, when faced with the possibility of losing thousands of votes in the province of Quebec.

● (1530)

I do not want to pursue that any further because I pay a compliment to the people in the province of Quebec because they were able to beat the minister, the Prime Minister (Mr.Trudeau), and everybody else over the head and say that this was wrong. They found a solution. Should not equity and justice prevail? What about trying to save another situation, that in respect of KVOS? It is the same set of circumstances.

An hon. Member: But it is not in the interest of Canada.

Mr. Alexander: I would not want to say that. But surely someone other than myself may think this is unfair treatment and is discriminatory.

I do not know who the member is across the way who just interjected. What is his riding? I would like to refer to him. If he wants to get into Hansard I will see that he does. He is a nice chap. We are all here trying to do our duty. Some of us know where we are going and know what we want, but some others on the other side do not know where they are going or what they want.

I am glad the hon. member mentioned our American friends and not our American enemies, because the way I look at it the government is hell-bent on trying to see how much further it can antagonize, as my friend over there said, our American friends.

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I think I have made the position quite clear for those on the other side who have difficulty in understanding positions. I can understand that these things are technical and difficult, but I ask hon. members to accept the argument the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock has placed before the House, and to accept with some compassion the arguments I have sincerely placed before the House. I hope it will be accepted that these proposals are worthy of consideration to the extent that this particular aspect of the bill should not come into effect.

Once this bill is passed it will be rammed down our throats. Let us at least withdraw the particular clause which applies and re-word it so there can be some sense of equity and relief. Or let us do what many of us over here really think should be done which is to refer the whole bill, in light of the several new matters and concerns; that have come before the House, back to the committee for consideration.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I should like to spend a few moments addressing myself to some of the points made last evening by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), in fairly specific terms in reference to the amendments he has put forward.

In the early moments of his speech the hon. member pointed out that the Maclean-Hunter organization, which has come under considerable discussion in this debate with reference to the other parts of the legislation, in fact owns and operates a United States Cable Company, and asked if indeed Canadian Companies can go down to the United States and operate that kind of broadcasting or communications system why do we suggest disincentives for Americans here. Certainly these motions refer to what would be a special deal for an American station to operate from the United States into Canada.

I think the answer is very clear, if the hon. member and his colleagues will listen to it. First of all, the Federal Communications Commission in the United States, which is the counterpart of the Canadian Radio Television Commission in Canada, forbids the owning of broadcast outlets by non-Americans.

When we talk about the specific case of KVOS, to which these amendments apply, we are talking about a broadcast outlet. In the United States you cannot own a broadcast outlet if you are not American. So certainly I think it is a bit of a red herring to get into the cable situation because cable is quite different from an actual broadcast outlet. If, however, one wanted to say there is not that much difference I would simply argue that the FCC is now seriously considering taking action to prohibit ownership in the United States of cable by foreign interests. We may find very soon that Maclean-Hunter is not able to carry on with that operation. In the United States they are thinking exactly the same way we are thinking here. Thus I suggest the first argument of the hon. member simply is not valid.

The hon. member went on to say we should consider the situation of the Detroit-Windsor market place, or in fact one particular radio station operating out of Windsor which beams into the American market place and calls itself a major Detroit station. Again let us tell the whole story, which is that last fall the CRTC asked that station to stop attempting to solicit United States advertising. I must say we have not quite had the FCC doing that on our behalf.

The Canadian Radio Television Commission, having acted in an honest and proper fashion by saying that what is good for the goose is good for the gander, I want to go on to say that we also have a situation where the FCC, the American counterpart of the CRTC, has ruled that the Windsor-Detroit area—Windsor the smaller area with the potential of getting to the Detroit area which is larger—in fact would be classed as a total American market place. As a result we are not allowed to play in Windsor any of the programs we buy from the United States for some $25 million a year even at the same time as they are played on the Detroit stations. The FCC clearly has acted to protect its own market place while a smaller Canadian market place might otherwise threaten the larger American market place. Do we not have the same situation with Buffalo and Toronto? Of course we do.

Hon. members cannot argue out of both sides of their mouths. I hope hon. members will consider that when they talk about the situation in Detroit and Windsor. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock went on to say that this is in effect a tax bill to update the Broadcasting Act. Of course nothing could be further from the fact of the matter. It is indeed for the very reason it is a tax bill that it means to give incentives to Canadians to operate in Canada, and to encourage Canadian businesses to deal with other Canadian businesses to which they interrelate. It is precisely for that reason we are presenting this action here in the form of a tax bill.

That is also precisely the reason why none of these amendments make any sense because if we accepted them we would be doing exactly what the hon. member tried to attack us for doing. If we took his amendments we would be saying, "OK, let us through a tax bill make a special exemption which would change the whole purport of the Broadcasting Act." Surely that is the fundamental reason why these amendments cannot be given serious consideration.

It was also suggested by that member in presenting his motions that we were using a tax for the development of cultural policy. Well, no more so than we have tariffs in some cases for the encouragement of agriculture or industry, and no more so than we have tax forgivenesses and deferment in order to aid and assist our own businesses in competition around the world and here at home. There is nothing unusual in an attempt to encourage our own industry within its own market place, and especially to encourage broadcasting where in the private sector it is heavily harnessed by responsibility to the Canadian public in programming and content.

I was somewhat disappointed to hear the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock attack both the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Raines) for not having addressed themselves to these amendments when they were discussed in the committee. Quite frequently on this side we had had discussions in committee. I certainly had discussion with those two members of parliament, since I am the parliamentary secretary dealing with this area.

It was agreed that since these motions were so outlandish, were contravening the Broadcasting Act, and were inappropriate to be brought into a tax bill, that only one person would address himself to them, and that was me. That is why they did not address themselves to that point. It is unfortunate that they cannot defend themselves because they are in their constituencies working with and for their constituents for the next couple of days, and we all have those responsibilities. But the fact of the matter is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: I seem to have touched a responsive chord. The fact is that both these members were active in committee and thoughtful about this legislation. They reached their conclusions after considering them fully.

During the committee stage the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts heard a spokesman from British Columbia, specifically a spokesman for the major private sector, an entrepreneur in broadcasting, a senior executive of CHAN-CHEK television. Not once during the time he was before the committee, nor in any formal or informal conversation, did I hear him suggest as a private businessman from western Canada—members opposite say they have a real interest in private enterprise and competition—that he thought it was fair competition to continue with the current situation with KVOS in Bellingham. He did not think it was best to support the kind of motion that is put forward here. There is a specific reason why it is difficult for CHAN-CHECK, because to compete with KVOS the CRTC awarded him with a licence after he made application, following which he was faced with certain heavy responsibilities over a period of years, the kind of responsibilities to which members opposite object from time to time.

I should like to refer to a statement I made specifically on CHAN-CHEK, what they have tried to do, and what the CRTC has pressured them to do because they are responsible to a Canadian institution of government. First I should like to read part of the committee proceedings on December 4 of last year as recorded at page 31:97. I said at that time:

> First I want to point out that BC-TV which is CHAN-CHEK did not declare a dividend for its shareholders in the first ten years of its operation. I think of your criticism that perhaps they have not been—with all fairness, I listened and I want to reply. I do not think you can too often expect private enterprise to quickly leap forward and hand off the profits they have been making. However, in those first ten years they did not declare a dividend. When they became profitable they were required by the CRTC to undertake an expansion program and in five years they have extended service to the Okanagan. They have undertaken as well to off-set what that competitive situation might do in the Okanagan by giving the established TV stations in the area a payment of $500,000 per year currently, and they have extended service up to Prince George, with a financial protection, although a smaller amount. In the next two years they will go into the Kootenays with a total cost of $2 million to $3 million. They have future plans, and of course the CRTC has played a role in muscling for those—I do not deny that—in terms of kilowatt. Then in the Vancouver Island-Mainland area they have gone from three to 30 broadcast transmitters.

When you are in Canada under Canadian control as a private enterprise trying to survive in broadcasting, that is what you have to do. They have done all that in improvements. Tell me what KVOS has done in the 15 or 20 years to expand programming and to get T.V. to more Canadian viewers in the interior. Not a thing. They have had no news and public affairs demands on them, although 90 per cent of the advertising revenues from broadcasting came to KVOS from Canada, in news and public affairs programs the budget for CHAM-CHEK television last year was $1 million and, as I understand it, KVOS admits to an expenditure of about $100,000. Who is living up to the obligations, and who must face the licensing and competition? Obviously Canadians. We have an unfair situation when KVOS is allowed to continue to carry on business in Canada as it does.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock said that if you put together Bill C-58 and cable deletion you will destroy KVOS. If that day should come, and I honestly hope that a happy and an acceptable resolution of the cable deletion issue is reached between the United States and Canada in the talks that are taking place now, I would not feel overwhelmingly unhappy about that particular company when I consider the tremendous competitive advantages they had over the years they have operated and the massive revenues they have gained as a result. So far as the continuation of the kind of programming that has been available to the Vancouver market place is concerned, as it was discussed in the committee, it clearly will be.

The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock said last night that in the early days KVOS took risks. Of course they did, as any business venture does. They took risks to profit, and they profited far better than could their Canadian competitors who did not spend $100,000 on news and public affairs programs, little of it Canadian, but instead spent ten times that amount. They did it to profit, and that is fair enough if your competition is fair.

You have to remember they had the massive advantages of not having the Canadian content requirement and not having the public affairs or news requirement. They also had the advantage of moving fully into that Canadian market place without any comparable demands. OK, but are we being fair? Watch out, the United States will get angry if we keep on plugging them in the nose. Let us be very careful. We have been good friends with them before, let us continue to be good friends with them." I find it interesting that there are two Mexican radio stations currently broadcasting into southern California and at present the FCC is trying to find ways of shutting them down. What is the difference? The U.S. is trying to protect its industry in the same way that we are trying to protect our industry.

KVOS made a proposal to the CRTC which was described at some length in debate last evening. I only want to ask, if I may, why we did not hear about that in 1955, 1957, 1959, 1962 or 1965. I understand that it was presented only in the last couple of years. It was put forward in the terms it was presented to the CRTC in the last couple of years. I have read the argument last night.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fleming: I seem to be touching a responsive chord in members opposite, but they will have a chance to speak shortly. I simply want to point out that while the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) argued that they have been a good corporate citizen, we must recognize that if 90 per cent of your revenue comes out of Canada and you are operating in the United States and if you do not have the requirements that your competitors have, and as a good corporate citizen you make an arrangement with the Canadian government that you will give it 50 per cent of your proceeds, why should you be considered such a good corporate citizen when 90 per cent of your revenue comes from Canada in the first place? I think that is a nonsensical argument.

The hon. member for Hamilton West said also that we should think this over, that we should be careful, that we should wait for a while. My only caution there is that we have the Western Approaches television going on the air next fall and it will be very important that they be encouraged to operate in that market. That is one reason why we should continue with this. In Toronto we have both Global and City television, especially City television, trying to do some progressive and positive programming. But they are having a hard struggle because of the competitive situation they face with Buffalo which is acting, if anything, in a less responsible way than KVOS, Bellingham.

I want to make some specific points as to why I do not believe these motions should be supported. They propose to give certain foreign broadcasting undertakings a special status. The Broadcasting Act allows no status to foreign broadcasting outlets, so through a tax bill we would be contravening that. It would contradict the government's policy that broadcasting stations should operate financially only in the country which licenses them, and we know that the FCC has much the same attitude. Furthermore, these amendments are unsound in principle because they provide for exemption from a taxing statute and would create a special legal status for advertisers in one region. No matter whether you have special broadcasting requirements or circumstances in a particular region in Canada, surely our federal law should apply equally across the board.

Finally, there is not the slightest reason in the world to believe that these amendments could result in any real advantage to the Canadian broadcasting system. There is no guarantee or assurance that they would be of real advantage to the Canadian broadcasting system. But there is every reason to believe that by entrenching foreign broadcasting outlets in our system we would threaten its entire future.

● (1550)

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the debate on this bill and its amendments has been taking place, off and on, since January of 1975. That is really a very long time to examine what is essentially a page and a half of legislation which comprises amendments to the Income Tax Act. A great deal has been said about censorship, and freedom, and the press, and the great principles which are involved, but the fact is that this legislation is to amend the Income Tax Act. It immediately affects people who are advertisers, publishers, and broadcasters, but our constituents will continue to read the same publications and watch the same broadcasts. Therefore this great agony of filibuster we have experienced seems strangely misplaced.

In this House from time to time we make changes in medicare and do some very important things with regard to individuals in our ridings, and I wish the House would spend the time on those issues it has spent on this issue which, as I say, immediately affects only three groups of people, but not the average constituent because the average constituent, in spite of all the rhetoric in this House, will continue to read Reader's Digest and Time, and will continue to watch KVOS.

I will try to support that argument a little bit, but before I do I should like to look back at some of the philosophy with regard to broadcasting, because we are dealing with broadcasting in these amendments. I want to quote from a notable Tory authority on broadcasting who has provided much input in terms of Tory policy, a man called George Grant. He is fairly well known in this country, and this is what he said about the national broadcasting system, which was sponsored by R. B. Bennett and which was a Conservative approach to broadcasting:

It was forgotten that the CBC had been established by a Conservative government under Bennett, in order to maintain national control over broadcasting and to prevent the airwaves being used simply for private gain. The encouragement of private broadcasting must be anti-nationalist: the purpose of private broadcasting is to make money, and the easiest way to do this is to import canned American programs appealing to the lowest common denominator of the audience.

George Grant had much to do with the development of the Conservative broadcasting philosophy over a long period of time. However, that theme was followed in January of 1975 when the announcement was made concerning the question of removing the tax exemption for the two publications, and when the broadcasting statement was made. When this initially came before the House the response by the hon. member for York Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who is engaged in other pursuits at the moment, was as follows, and I hope his colleagues will take note of what he had to say at that time:

Mr. Speaker, in responding to the statement just made I would first like to say, on behalf of the official opposition, that we are pleased the government has clarified this matter at long last. We believe that the move to eliminate the income tax advantage shared mainly by two magazines, Time and Reader's Digest, is a good one.

Later on with regard to the broadcasting provisions he said the following:

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that we would be in agreement with the thrust suggested by the Secretary of State in eliminating advertising that is now being put through foreign broadcast stations.

That was the purpose of the legislation. Many of us were bitterly disappointed by the decision of the minister to make a sweetheart deal with Reader's Digest. Now in this ingenious amendment there is the possibility of another sweetheart deal with KVOS.

I should like to say a word about KVOS because the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) suggested that somehow I do not like KVOS. I like KVOS. I watch it. It is a very good station. It is a station which began very early. I think it was the third station in the Vancouver area. It carried a duplication of programs which channel 7, the first channel in the area, carried, and of necessity it tried to be a good corporate citizen, since the majority of its revenues were derived from the lower mainland market.

Therefore, in an understandable burst of enthusiasm, KVOS developed production facilities in Canada to protect itself. However, I do not think the argument that somehow if this bill passes we will not see channel 12 bears serious examination. The cable system in the lower mainland shortly will have the capacity to carry 36 separate channels. There is no indication that channel 12 will be replaced on any of the existing cable systems.

Mr. Brisco: Who is going to buy the converters?

Mr. Leggatt: We will deal with the convertors. Don't get excited.

Dealing with the question of freedom of choice, which is the theme we have heard so much about in terms of broadcasting, the lower mainland now has available to it on the existing cable system channels 4, 5, 7, 9, and many have channels 11 and 12. Those are all United States channels.

Mrs. Holt: Why not?

Mr. Leggatt: We have channels 2, 6 and 8 available to us. I do not object to those being available, and I am sure they will remain. If the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and others would closely examine what the cablevision companies themselves propose, a great deal of the hysteria which has been whipped up over this subject would simply subside. Let us read what Premier Cablevision has to say about the question of replacing any of the existing channels available on the lower mainland. This is an advertisement of January 21 of this year, and it reads as follows:

. . . open the door to an almost unlimited freedom of choice in the future, all present stations plus Tacoma plus new local programming will be on the cable. As some of these developments get closer we will keep . . .

—you informed. There will be no loss of any program of any kind. Clearly there will be a loss of revenue to KVOS if this bill passes and the amendment does not. As I indicated earlier, the amendment is an ingenious one, and I congratulate its drafter for attempting to meet what the purpose of the bill was in terms of developing revenues for Canadian production and maintaining advertising in Canada.

However, the argument which has not been dealt with, and which has not been met in this House is simply this: if we are going to make a sweetheart deal for KVOS, where is the sweetheart deal for CHAN, for CBC, and for all the Canadian channels broadcasting into the United States? Why are we looking only in one direction on this subject? Why are we not looking in the other direction in terms of the treatment Canadian stations are given by FCC regulations and in terms of the way they are carried on the American channel system? Until we have an across the border convention on broadcasting, there is not much point in passing these special amendments for special cases.

I have some sympathy for KVOS, but I am also aware that KVOS could cut its revenues in half and continue to broadcast the same kind of programming, although perhaps with a little less Canadian content. The KVOS channel will continue to be available to my constituents in the area. There probably will be more advertising revenue generated to the existing stations. They then will have the opportunity of going into Canadian production and expanding programming for the province of British Columbia. It seems to me, therefore, that unless or until and appropriate international agreement is developed with regard to the treatment of our stations broadcasting to the United States and United States stations broadcasting to Canada, this amendment is premature and should not be supported.

● (1600)

What do Americans do in terms of Canadian television channels? I am going to read an item from a pamphlet issued by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters where the subject is discussed by question and answer as follows:

The Americans have cable television. Does the FCC protect American off-air broadcasters?

Cable TV operators in the United States are required by the FCC to protect local broadcasters in their communities by deleting whole programs, not just the commercials, from the signals of non-local stations brought in by cable.

The Canadian Radio-Television Commission provides for simultaneous substitution. If a Canadian local station is broadcasting a program and non-local stations (including foreign) broadcast the same program at the same time, the Canadian cable operator substitutes the Canadian local signal on all the cable channels with the same program. The FCC procedure provides for simultaneous and in some instances, non-simultaneous "black-out" on American cable systems to protect the local station. Thus many "distant" stations cannot show the same program by means of cable in a community where the local American station already has the same program.

We cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker. If we are going to give special exemption to American stations broadcasting into the Canadian market we have to give consideration to Canadian stations going the other way. That has not been the case to date.

If we look at the nature of public policy in public broadcasting and understand that this country is a string of small communities huddled along the United States border, as we can see when flying across the country, we realize that our chances of maintaining any cultural identity have a lot to do with the way we communicate from one end of the country to the other. If we decide to take the easy free enterprise route on broadcasting we can kiss goodbye to any hope of there being a Canadian identity.

We must consider another aspect of freedom of choice when we talk about whether American channels should or should not continue. I am arguing that we should continue to have flexibility. You cannot tell me it is freedom of choice to have Mary Tyler Moore at eight o'clock on KVOS, at eight o'clock on channel 2 and eight o'clock on channel 7. That is not freedom of choice.

People want a variety of programming, different things to suit individual tastes. That is what public broadcasting should be all about. If we are to zero in on the free market approach to this kind of thing we will not get more variety, but less. What we need today are more options open to people who watch. No country worth its salt would substitute foreign programming for its own. I do not believe that any country would give serious consideration to that proposition.

Mrs. Holt: They buy it cheap.

An hon. Member: CBC does it every day.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce): So what?

Mr. Leggatt: We have spent a lot of time in this House on two short amendments to the Income Tax Act when there are a lot more important things with which to deal.

KVOS can present further proposals in regard to that station and the lower mainland market, but I think they should be proposed not to the CRTC but to a joint meeting of the United States and Canada to consider the whole problem of broadcasting. You cannot isolate the problem to the lower mainland. We need an across-the-border dialogue on the question of television broadcasting to either area.

There is no question that what we are really debating is the conflict between Canadian nationalism and the use of broadcasting in a free market. An inherent principle is involved that somehow the air waves are the property of the advertisers or owners of television stations. I do not think any party in this House has ever adopted that principle in convention.

The fact is that the public airways are public property. The public must have licensing procedures for those properties, and those licensing procedures must take into consideration the national interests of the country. If they do not, we might as well pack up, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin and end my remarks with the same statement. The thing I am concerned about is that the Canadian interest will be best served through the passage or rejection of Bill C-58. With many other members of this party I am convinced that will not be the case. Testimony given before the committee showed very clearly that the national interest would not be served and the outcome would not be more Canadian writers, more production and more revenue, if the bill were passed.

I want first of all to talk briefly about some of the things that went on in committee and then comment on the remarks of the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) and of the parliamentary secretary in this debate. I should compliment the parliamentary secretary for at least having a grasp of what he was talking about, which is more than can be said for the minister. Perhaps she can be forgiven because of her newness in the job and the fact that she was not able to attend committee meetings. But I wondered if she had read the minutes.

The intent of clause 3 of Bill C-58 is clearly to promote the creation in Canada of a broadcasting system with a strong Canadian identity by ensuring that all Canadian advertising revenue is channelled to Canadian stations, thereby repatriating the substantial portion of this revenue which currently accrues to American border broadcasters. Were there even the most remote possibility that this legislation could achieve that goal, my colleagues and I might be persuaded to support it. There is, however, no such possibility.

Testimony given before the standing committee by the American television stations involved and by the Association of Canadian Advertisers made it abundantly clear that the enactment of this clause will not aid Canadian broadcasters, especially those most in need of additional advertising revenue. Even if more revenue were made available it would not necessarily flow to the weaker television stations that require assistance.

The central point, which was emphasized repeatedly by Mr. Blakely and Mr. Hopkins of the A.C.A., concerns the purchase of advertising time on Canadian outlets. They put it this way, that it:

> ... is and will continue to be based strictly on the ability of those outlets to attract Canadian audiences. This bill will not induce advertisers to buy time that does not have adequate audiences. Advertisers will, however, of their own accord, buy time on programs and stations that have a high level of acceptance by the Canadian public.

On the larger issue I am sure the parliamentary secretary is only too well aware that the listening choice of 56 per cent of the viewing audience in the lower mainland of British Columbia is for American television stations. This 56 per cent represents a majority choice. Hopefully the parliamentary secretary still believes in freedom of choice—certainly freedom of choice of the majority.

The parliamentary secretary would attack that freedom of choice, and I should like to speak again on this subject at third reading. He would have us believe that British Columbians do not know what they want to see. He is somehow going to tell us, "We will switch off the dial and put something on here that you do not want." The choice is abundantly clear. In effect, if you have cable deletions along with Bill C-58, you wipe out KVOS-TV along with all the American stations. Hon. members know that is true. All British Columbians know it is true.

If the minister has his way it is only a matter of time until all American channels are wiped off. If the minister does not believe that, he has his head in the sand and it is about time he pulled it out. Mr. Hopkins illustrated this point in the situation in the Toronto area. Briefly, he said:

It might be helpful, Mr. Chairman, if I were to expand a little more on this concept of effective time because I think there is some misunderstanding on occasion on this. When an advertiser is planning his advertising campaign he has an objective of delivering messages to his customers and he wants to deliver his message to a substantial number of customers, and this is normally looked on in terms of being a reach objective. He wants to reach 50 per cent of his potential customers or 60 per cent. If we look at the Toronto market, if I may take that as a good example of the issue, there are a limited number of stations that are in a position to deliver to him the reach of that market. I think if we look at CFTO television, for example, and here I am referring to some BBM Bureau of measurement data, BBM reports that CFTO on a weekly basis reaches 75 per cent of the people in the Toronto market, and averagely it has about a 19 per cent share of the viewing in that market. That is an effective station for reaching Toronto.

I will not go through every station, but if we look at CFTO and CBLT and CHCH, those are effective stations at reaching that market. The same is true of the three Buffalo stations which reach 68 per cent of the market in a week, 65 per cent in the case of WKBW, 62 per cent in the case of WGR.

The developing stations in those markets, however, have problems in this regard on their own. If we look at Global—and I am referring to fall 1974 data—in the fall of 1974, only 36 per cent of the people in the Toronto central area had tuned at least once to Global; that is to say, 64 per cent had not. In the case of City, we are looking at very similar numbers: 35 per cent had and 65 per cent had not. So while there is time available on those stations, they alone cannot deliver an effective campaign to an advertiser who had something more than a very, very modest reach objective.

It is clear then that the Association of Canadian Advertisers does not believe that the provisions in clause 3 of Bill C-58 will in any significant way improve the financial situation of the less prosperous Canadian broadcasters. The results of this legislation, as they see them, are largely negative—an increase in the advertising rates on those Canadian outlets which are already effective and largely sold out in terms of available advertising time and the continuation of advertising on American border stations, even at an increased rate, to take advantage of this continuing wide appeal to Canadian audiences. That relates to the earlier point. The reach objective for the advertising is what people are seeking. They will pay more for that rather than use a less effective advertising media. They also see the diversion of substantial amounts of advertising revenue to other media, particularly radio and newspapers.

Compounding this problem is the fact that the American border broadcasters have indicated their intention to maintain their Canadian advertising clients by reducing their rates to compensate for the loss of tax deductibility of advertising expenditures as a result of this legislation. Obviously there is not going to be more money to divert to other aspects of the Canadian advertising media. When this occurs the final nail will have been driven into coffin of this bill as an effective means of supporting Canadian broadcasters. The government will have succeeded in reducing the revenue of the American stations without benefiting in any way the Canadian television broadcasting system.

It is precisely to avoid this result that my colleague, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen), has moved the amendments to clause 3 which we have before us. These amendments will ensure that, at least in western Canada, this legislation will result in some improvement and benefit to Canadian broadcasting.

As I stated first, and now in the middle of my speech, the objective is to benefit Canadian broadcasters, audiences, writers and producers. If Bill C-58 does not accomplish these objectives, we have to rethink it. If in fact we can find an alternative to benefit Canadians in any or all of these capacities, along with preserving this freedom of preferential choice as demonstrated by the ratings, should that not be what we are trying to do? This amendment will ensure, at least in western Canada, that this legislation will result in some improvement and benefit to the broadcasting system of that area.

They recognize the fact, which the government seems intent on ignoring, that foreign broadcasting operations can be of significant benefit to Canada and Canadians. Why is the government so persistent in insisting that if it is American, it is bad, wrong, corruptible, and there is no way that it can be of any benefit to Canadians? Why is that assumed on that side? There are many fine things that have come and will continue to come from the United States. We have more in common with that country than we have that are different. I do not think hon. members opposite should have this great fear.

What would be the result if these amendments carried? In the words of Mr. Royce Frith, counsel to KVOS-TV, before the standing committee, and I quote:

The proposal we have discussed is to allocate a minimum average of $2 million a year to Canadian program production,—

Will that $2 million be there next year if Bill C-58 passes? The answer is no. If that $2 million will not be in that market place for Canadian writers and producers, where is the improvement or benefit to Canada? It is some ethereal concept that cannot be defined by anyone on that side or, in fact, by anyone in this House. I continue the quote:

—the extension of Canadian television service, and the training of Canadian talent. These, or other objectives equally to the benefit of Canadian broadcasting, can be worked out under a plan to be approved by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

I challenge the parliamentary secretary or any backbench member opposite to explain to me how this proposal could fail to be of significantly greater benefit to Canadian broadcasting than the provisions of clause 3 of this bill as they are presently constituted. Anybody with that kind of reasoning can say we do not have any money to do it, we do not have a vehicle to do it, but we are going to do it anyway. It is some kind of pie in the sky wishful thinking. That is very unfortunate.

I also ask that hon. members opposite, in considering these amendments, bear in mind that Bellingham is not Buffalo, just as Vancouver is not Toronto. The government, in reaching an accommodation with Reader's Digest, has demonstrated its recognition that legislation aimed at one magazine may not be applicable to another. I ask that this same willingness to differentiate specific cases be extended to the broadcasting provisions of Bill C-58. We ask only that through these amendments good citizenry is recognized and that we recognize Canadian interest, as I have previously described it in the form of development facilities and good corporate citizenship.

● (1620)

Although I have spoken at some length in support of the amendments in the name of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock to clause 3, I trust the House will not sense any contradiction if I address myself now to my own motion which asks that Bill C-58 be amended by deleting clause 3 entirely.

While the amendments we have been discussing so far would indeed, if adopted, mitigate some of the damage done by this legislation, especially in the west, the net result for the whole of Canada would still be negative and destructive. If the government is sincere in its desire to strengthen Canadian broadcasting, the way to do that is not by inserting isolated clauses in a bill such as Bill C-58 which is primarily concerned with the medium of print. What is called for is separate legislation dealing with the entire complex and confusing issue of the Canadian television system.

The absurdity of trying to deal with this measure in isolation from the rest of the government's television policy was illustrated by the opening comments of the chairman of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts at the hearings on December 1, 1975. He recognized the futility of such an attempt when he said:

> There is one other important point I would like to make before proceeding. Bill C-58 does not deal with commercial deletion. I want to try to limit the discussion to the subject referred to us by the House, namely, Bill C-58.
> It might interest the committee to know that the sub-committee on program and procedure even decided to refuse to allow an important witness to appear before our committee because he wanted to speak about that very subject.

Later the chairman underlined the point by saying:

> I shall try to prevent anyone from using the expression "commercial deletion".

In response to this ridiculous statement, my hon. friend from Kootenay West had this to say:

> I think I understand you, Mr. Chairman. I just wonder how on earth the committee can separate the intrusion of the CRTC into this situation when it is such a one package sort of deal . . .
> Is the steering committee suggesting to us that we must listen to the presentation by the Buffalo stations without regard to the CRTC involvement through their ruling . . .that the Buffalo stations continue to broadcast to our cablevision companies but without having the commercial content? Is that your recommendation to us? I just wonder how it is possible.

Of course there could not be any response from the chairman because he knew how right the hon. member was, and the subject was more or less dropped. The hearings continued in this emasculated fashion, forever skirting the real issue of Canada's over-all approach to U.S. border broadcasters. No one, least of all those foreign broadcasters whose future hung in the balance, came away from our committee hearings with any feeling that justice had been done or, indeed, with the belief that any effort had been made to ensure that justice be done. I think this is completely agreed upon by all members of that committee. I would be hard-pressed to imagine that any member of the committee from either side of the House could bring himself to stand up and say that a democratic committee had given a just hearing to all the witnesses who were called. I do not think they would have the audacity to say so.

Recently I had another experience of the same kind when I presented an intervention on behalf of my constituents at the CRTC hearings held earlier this month in Vancouver. The surface issue involved was an application by the CBC for a licence to operate a French language television station in Vancouver. The real issue, however, was another aspect of the CRTC's cable television regulations. I refer to sections 6 through 8 of those regulations which empower the CRTC to dictate which stations may or may not be carried by cablevision operators.

The intent of these regulations is to ensure that local Canadian broadcasters, and particularly the CBC, shall have access to exposure on cablevision. In practice, however, they ensure that only Canadian stations will be seen in the lower mainland of British Columbia. As a result it will soon be the case that the 83 per cent of Vancouver residents equipped with cable will no longer have access to American programming which constitutes the viewing preference of 56 per cent of the citizens in the area.

Not surprisingly, there has been widespread resistance and hostility toward the policies of this government agency, policies which constitute nothing less than a severe infringement on the right of freedom of choice. Indeed, these rulings by the CRTC amount to out and out censorship and appear to be part of a concerted effort by the government to remove American programming from Canadian television screens. "If deleting their commercials doesn't work," they say, "why then, we'll just cut off their advertising revenues. And if all else fails, we'll simply bump them right off Canadian cablevision systems."

In my view this can only be seen as an expression of a particularly narrow-minded form of nationalism, the expression of a sense of national inferiority. The suggestion is inherent here that Canadian broadcasting can succeed only in an atmosphere free of competition or even of influence from any outside source. This is the suggestion which I view with abhorrence. It is an idea which I reject, and one moreover which has been rejected by the vast majority of Canadians who value their freedom of choice, who value the free flow of information, and who welcome the inflow of other cultures and ideas. It is a policy which has been rejected by all who feel that culture and taste cannot, and should not, be legislated, and who believe that no government, and no agency of government, has the right to control what Canadian citizens may view or read.

This is not an issue I intend to discuss at any further length today. I wish only to make the point that clause 3 of Bill C-58 does not stand alone but is a component of the government's entire approach to broadcasting in this country. It is an approach which meets with greater and greater resistance every day in all parts of Canada; it is an approach which raises serious questions about censorship and the freedom of choice; it is an approach which must be fully debated in this House, not as part of a bill such as the one before us which deals primarily with the publishing industry, but as an important issue in its own right.

I would say the best expression of the need for this part of the legislation to be deferred is the intervention of the minister herself. The hon. member for Ahuntsic (Mrs. Sauvé) will, I think, be a good minister. I believe she has the competence and the ability to be a good minister, given time. I think she has the competence to make fair, equitable, and just decisions, but how can anyone expect her to make decisions on the basis of the little time and information she has had since assuming her portfolio? I think we are crippling her by imposing this legislation upon her at the present time. Instead, we should give her an opportunity to bring her ideas to bear on her department, to bring her proposals on broadcasting to the House, refer them to committee and there have a full and fair discussion. This opportunity will not be afforded her. If it were to take place after this legislation is passed it would mean we would have to bring this bill back in order to wipe out this particular clause. It would be necessary for us to start all over again.

The minister said her greatest concern was that Canadians might never have the value of truly Canadian productions made with Canadian funds, by Canadian workers, and under Canadian producers. This indicates her complete lack of awareness. I do not believe the hon. lady has been west of Ottawa. If she has I would be surprised. She obviously has not been to British Columbia; she obviously has not been to KVOS-TV; she obviously has not been to Canawest Films.

I want to say to the minister: this will destroy, not create more. In 1974 there were 173 employees with Canawest Films, part-time, full-time and free lance. Who were these 173 employees? Were they some villainous Americans from the south coming to corrupt Canada? No, these were just the kind of people to whom she was referring. They were Canadian workers and producers. They were engaged in a Canadian production, even made with Canadian funds. They exported Canadian culture throughout Canada, the United States and the world.

What will happen to these 173 people? If you dry up the source of revenue that is subsidizing them, obviously they will cease to operate, or their operations will be considerably reduced. Is this desirable? Hardly. Ask the employees of Canawest who are writers, artists, and producers working in western Canada. Ask the would-be employees who are now hired part time. If the government would but give KVOS an opportunity to be heard by the CRTC, this would mean the potential employment of 200 additional Canadian writers and employees during the next year, with more to follow. In other words there would be massive expansion. If we pass this bill obviously this cannot happen because we have dried up the source of revenue flowing from Canadian advertising. The very thing we are trying to do is to get Canadian advertising dollars flowing to Canadian producers and writers.

As I make these points and throw them across the way, if hon. members have been listening I just do not understand how they cannot see their simple logic. The only alternatives that seem to be in place are rather unpleasant ones. What else is the government trying to do? Sometimes I feel that the government is more interested in a mini-confrontation with the United States, in trying to slap the United States in the face, than it is in our own Canadian interests, such as jobs, Canadian culture, and, the development of Canadian writers and producers. I would ask the parliamentary secretary through you, Madam Speaker, whether he has been to KVOS-TV and seen the facilities there. Has he seen what the situation is? Has he been to Canawest and talked to Canadian writers, artists, producers, film makers? He cannot even shake his head to indicate the answer is no.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, on a point of order I simply want to make it clear that nodding my head in any direction is not going to be recorded in Hansard. If I choose to indicate my views on any subject I shall do so properly by taking the floor.

Mr. Wenman: Madam Speaker, if the hon. member does not get a chance to answer when I am finished, I hope he will answer that one to the press. I think he is destroying something that he has not seen, that he does not know anything about, that he does not even care about. He is like the minister who said "We stand on what we do, no matter what retaliation may come, and we accept that". No matter what happens, the government does not care about writers and producers and that kind of programming. She might as well have added "We don't care what may come or what the negative results may be for British Columbia".

This is sheer arrogance. It is why we have a big delegation of ministers visiting British Columbia. The government refuses to listen and understand and the west is getting sick and tired of it. We asked the government to make a minor amendment, yet it does not even look at it and find out what it does. As a western representative it is very tiring to have this arrogant bouncing back and forth and to listen to statements like "We don't care what happens". We do care in British Columbia, as do many of the government's own backbenchers; and it is about time the government started to listen to them.

The parliamentary secretary said that one of the reasons why this bill is so appropriate, just, and fair, is that the majority of the members of the committee were from British Columbia.

An hon Member: No, that is not so.

Mr. Wenman: Well, certainly there were a lot of members from British Columbia on the committee. However, Madam Speaker, having sat through the committee hearings as one member from British Columbia I can assure you that I was not given my full opportunity to speak and to ask questions, but was cut off time and time again, as were members on the government's own backbenches. I want it recorded in Hansard that my time was limited, restricted, and cut off; that there was no just and fair hearing.

Hon. members talk about BC-TV, and here we have agreement. Perhaps I can just mention some of the matters upon which we are agreed. I want to see British Columbia television grow. I want to support British Columbia television and see it expand. I want to see new television stations operating in British Columbia. I want to see the dial expanded and British Columbia move toward converter systems so that freedom of choice is enlarged and there is full and adequate outlet for the cultural expression of Canadians. Certainly I support this move, but I have demonstrated very clearly that this is not going to happen if this bill is passed. As a matter of fact exactly the opposite will happen because the money will not be available.

The parliamentary secretary also made some misstatements. He talked about apples and oranges and tried to compare them and make them the same. He compared KVOS indirectly with a Mexican station.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): The hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Leblanc) on a point of order.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Madam Speaker, it seems to me the hon. member who now has the floor is discussing many topics which are not germane to the bill now before the House, and I know how strict you are in that regard. That is why I wish to draw your attention to the fact that he could perhaps discuss the bill instead of the provinces, one by one, the parliamentary secretaries and so on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. Might I remind the hon. member that we are now studying Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11 which deal with radio and television broadcasting. The subject if very broad and I feel the hon. member has stayed within the scope of the motions before the House.

[English]

Mr. Wenman: Might I commend Madam Speaker for her ruling. I have always found her to be just and fair, and she has demonstrated once again that I was answering the comments made by the hon. member's own colleague, the parliamentary secretary. I was commenting on what he had said. If I am irrelevant then he is even more irrelevant for bringing those matters forward. It was he who brought forward the question of the Mexican television station. The point I am making concerns the difference between a Mexican television station and KVOS. In one case you have a corporate citizen. There is a vast difference between a corporate citizen such as KVOS-TV, which develops Canadian talent, and a Mexican station. I think he should recognize that.

Then the hon. member talked about the unfairness of the FCC in the United States. Every time that the FCC has made a ruling and developed some new policy, it has followed that policy firmly. It does not destroy existing institutions; I defy the hon. member to find one example where it has. It would write in a grandfather clause for a good corporate citizen. That is the sort of thing we should look at, but we only have the right to be heard.

Then he said, "KVOS-TV, where have you been? How come all of a sudden they are on the scene?" I am afraid that the reason he does not know that they were on the scene is that he was not on the scene. They were on the scene. They were here in 1971 with a major presentation, but the problem was that they could not be heard. The CRTC said, "We are sorry, we are not able to hear your proposal". They came but they were not heard. The hon. member asked where they were, and I am telling him. Yet in spite of not being heard they have stated they have faith in Canada and in its artists and writers, and they went back and created a company known as Canawest with their advertising revenue. They did so without anyone telling them they must. They did so because they were good corporate citizens. They subsidized it and it continues to be subsidized, and I think that is very much to their credit.

● (1640)

We have heard talk about the FCC and the CRTC in this regard, but let me point out that the FCC goes by the law of the market place and competition rather than by arbitrary rules and regulations such as we are attempting to establish.

There are many things that need to be said about this and I would like to take much more time, but there will be another opportunity.

An hon. Member: You are lucky.

Mr. Wenman: Yes, opportunities are getting shorter, fewer, and further between. I hope the government is listening and still believes in the democratic process. Obviously it does not believe in its backbenchers, and that is pretty clear. However, this is not on the bill, Madam Speaker, and I should get back to the bill.

I started and will conclude by saying the objective of this bill is somehow to increase the productivity of Canadian writers and producers. It is to develop Canadian culture through the infusion of capital, and capital infusion is to come from the advertising world. We have evidence to show that capital will not come as a result of this bill. We have evidence to show there will be more unemployed writers, producers, and others associated in this field because of the non-growth or the cutback or destruction of Canawest. We know at the same time that there will not be an expanded market next year for 200 more of these people. We are talking about less, and I say this is injurious.

This clause should be struck from the bill at this point and the whole matter referred to the next parliament. We have a parliamentary secretary who is keen and enthusiastic. I am sure this parliamentary secretary and his colleagues here in this parliament, along with his minister, want to do the right thing, but they need time for consideration. I should like to give them that time and that is why I know they will support my amendment, and that is why I have moved it today.

Mr. Fleming: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Pursuant to Standing Order 37, if that is the correct reference, I want to take about 30 seconds to correct two facts I referred to in my speech. First, I should like to say it is not the FCC, but the United States program producers who refuse to allow programs purchased from them to be played in Windsor in competition with the same programs on U.S. stations. Secondly, it is the Windsor TV station and not the radio station which has been ordered by the CRTC to desist from soliciting advertising in the United States. It is the same argument, but it is TV rather than radio.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, my intervention in this debate at this stage is prompted by a couple of important considerations, and these considerations were rather underlined by a comment I am almost sure I heard from the hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Blais) to the effect, "if you are lucky". That comment was in relation to something which did go on the record, as said by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman), that he would be intervening to complete his argument on another occasion. This suggested to me that there was a slightly threatening tone to this comment "if you are lucky", and that is one of the considerations which prompted me to enter this debate.

One of these considerations directly concerns the wishes of my constituents as expressed to me in letters, and through the press, and the second, closely related to the present issue, even if of a general and more indirect nature, is related to the attitude of the government toward parliament, the parliamentary process, and members of parliament, whom we have heard described by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as "nobodies". Parenthetically, I suggest if we allow things to go on unchallenged and unchanged this is exactly what we are going to be, and we will merit that designation of "nobodies".

Even the first of my reasons has an element of the second in it. I have been deluged over the past month, as I am sure all my fellow members from the island and the lower mainland have been, with letters from constituents expressing their opposition to developments that seem designed to deprive them of their TV viewing enjoyment, or at least to inhibit it—specifically, moves that will inhibit to a considerable extent their ability to see TV stations with transmitters in the United States over the receivers they now have in their homes.

What baffles me about the government, with all due respect, is its attitude toward citizen participation in the governing process. We have had dished out to us grandiloquent phrases referring to the just society. We hear little about what that just society is or was intended to be, who defined it, and how it is to be brought into being. Perhaps we have passed beyond the just society, and maybe there is no possibility of bringing it into being. We are now hearing about the new society. If that is so, we need all the help we can get to preserve the society we want, by whatever name it is called. We are not getting much justice from the government.

The whole purpose of the government, my experience both as an administrator and as a parliamentarian demonstrates clearly to me, is that with the advent of that just or new society, by whatever name it is to be called, Canadians are being told, "You just wait, you will get the society we design for you since you really do not know what kind of a society you want". This government is Edmund Burke stood on his head and transposed from the individual to the party context. This government, in its own view, was returned in the last election on the basis of specious promises and campaign slogans, not to represent those who sent it here but rather to devise what the master minds within the party feel is good for the Canadian people.

Non-Canadian Publications

This attitude can be seen in the government's every move. Take the death penalty debate, the debate within the Canadian community and not the one we can expect here in this House. There is no doubt in my mind on the strength of polls taken by fellow members of this House and by the press, and just by reading the press and my correspondence, that the general public wants the death penalty retained as part of Canada's law. My correspondence is full of such demands—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am afraid that the motions we are debating do not touch on the death penalty. Perhaps the hon. member would limit his remarks to the motions.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, I rather anticipated being called to order. I am using this simply as an illustration of the manner of the government in devising policies which the rest of this parliament is expected to concur in, and with which Canadians must live.

My next comment is, what has all this to do with the amendments to which I address myself today? Madam Speaker, you anticipated my notes. It is simply this; if the government is not aware that the people on the west coast, the lower mainland and the island anyway, do not want to lose the ability to watch the programs available on KVOS with the convenience now available to them, but will have to buy some sort of an attachment, then the government is not listening to what the people are saying.

The same applies, of course, in point of volume demand—popular demand—for the continuation of the Reader's Digest, with which we have been dealing. I have been deluged with letters on that matter.

● (1650)

The government forces through measures on simply this inverted concept of Edmond Burke's definition of a parliamentary representative. It is also of course a manifestation of the Liberal party's self-satisfied assurance—the overweaning arrogance of power—that it knows better than the general populace. A just society indeed! If this is the new society, God help us! Now who has been had? A just society by any definition I can think of should rest on government action that takes into account the needs and concerns of the public, and as the public itself defines those needs and concerns. This brings me to the point at issue today.

What I am urging in citing these various examples is that in this debate, and in many other debates, we should have a free vote. This is not a matter on which the government should stand or fall. The government must have its supporters to support it when it brings forth its legislative proposals, but I urge through this medium, with examples I shall cite further, that the government must take action to allow a free vote, and if it did the other parties would certainly follow suit.

This brings me to another attitude of the government which I find so unacceptable. It claims to be innovative in stimulating consideration of new ideas and in encouraging debate on these public issues. It also claims that it responds quickly and readily to the consensus arising out of this debate. I defy anyone to cite one issue that found legislative form as a result of this process so proudly proclaimed but so arrogantly denied by the government. My experience, both here in the House and in my previous career, tells me that the very opposite course is followed. Cabinet decides the policy to be followed. The gesture of consultation is made in one form or another.

We have heard a lot about Burke. I think there is another part of Burke we sometimes forget. A little further in that statement of his he says:

> But government and legislation are matters of reason and judgment, and not of inclination; and, what sort of reason is that in which the determination precedes the discussion; . . .

That is this government's attitude.

> . . . in which one set of men deliberate . . .

That is us.

> . . . and another decide;

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I merely wish to invite the hon. member, if he wants to discuss the legislative process, to take part in the debate tomorrow, at which time part of the legislative process will be discussed. Today, we are dealing with television and Bill C-58.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Indeed, I was about the call the hon. member to order for the second time but I was waiting to see if he would tie in his remarks with the motions before the House.

[English]

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Madam Speaker, the connection between the comments I have just made I think should be obvious to all in this House. I have said that many letters have been received. I have not given the exact number but I suggest all of us have received innumerable letters urging that this legislation be not passed. Therefore I call for a free vote so that all members in this House may respond in the manner in which Burke urged we respond to the representations made to us by our constituents.

An hon. Member: It won't work because they have no conscience.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I suppose that is the situation. I am sure that if we all went through our correspondence and archives and counted the number of letters we have received, certainly from British Columbia, in opposition to this particular legislation, we would find that the number is considerable. I include members from the opposite side, some of whom have had the courage to stand up and defy the party whip. We should all be able to stand up and defy the whip when we are here to represent the views of our constituents.

This is the connection I am making. I am using this particular material simply as an example of the sort of legislative process that would be meaningful to the Canadian people who sent us here, because I am satisfied the Canadian people are becoming more and more disillusioned with parliament. They have asked us to come here, look at the problems which concern them, and try to find solutions. We are not doing this because of the over-weaning confidence of a government which refuses to listen to what the populace is saying.

We have dealt with the Reader's Digest. We found there was a shift in parliament. I do not think it was in response to any appeal from the public. I do not remember any 80 per cent notion being brought to my attention. There was merely a desire to continue to have Reader's Digest. It is the decision of this particular government that it knows better than anyone else, and that the people do not matter. I insist that the last election which put the government into power offered no five-year mandate to the majority party to force its will on the public.

The public will can express itself differently on different issues at different times. Let that be reflected by members as they respond to what they hear from their ridings. They should vote on issues that are of concern to their ridings and if they should be wrong more often than right, then let them live by the consequences of that when they face the electorate the next time around. They should be good parliamentarians and should not be a bunch of sheep or seals. If the government wants to be truly innovative it could begin with this bill and allow a free vote and abide by the consequences. I should like to see a start made in this direction now.

With regard to the bill itself and the amendments and what they provide, the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) has introduced a number of amendments which reflect truly the correspondence he and I have been receiving from the listeners and watchers in southern British Columbia asking that they be given ready access to programs of their choice. I support these amendments.

The UHF attachments that would be required to capture these transmissions may, in the course of time, become unnecessary. New developments may occur in television technology which would permit a wider spectrum of listening capability, but likely there is an attachment which is required, and which is almost more expensive than the sets themselves. I think we should respond to the demands our electors make upon us. The suggestion I have made is that here is a starting point in terms of a free vote. It cannot be carried through to all legislation obviously, it cannot be carried to the budget, it cannot be carried to the speech from the Throne. There are a number of matters that the government should put forward on which it should say, "We stand or fall on this." If it can get the whips on and keep them on, fine, but let the members stand up, speak for their constituents, and live by the consequences.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Madam Speaker, it was once said in this country by a person uncertain of his stature that the government has no business in the bedrooms of the nation. One would be amazed to learn now that the same government which made that statement now feels it can tinker with the minds of the citizens.

To make an analysis of what is happening with the bill which might be amended, one might simply say that the bill as it now stands without amendment is heading in the opposite direction to the one it should be taking. Certainly one of the things we no longer hear about is people getting scurvy when travelling across the ocean from the old world to the new. You can make that trip now in less than a few hours. The Concorde has it down to about half the time it used to take. We live in a world that is condensed and shrinking, and I submit that if we are ever to have peace or understanding in the world in which we are living we need not a constriction of communications but in fact an expansion of them. As a nation we should be trying not only to extend to the United States but to virtually every country and culture which exists in this world.

I submit that if there is anything that we need in our living rooms it is a bigger dial on our TV sets. To take a position, for whatever reasons, that we ought to be cutting back and watching fewer programs is simply a step in the wrong direction and does not take into consideration the world in which we are living.

On that theme I would like to express some thoughts which demonstrate that in the last couple of decades we have been living in a world that is different. Let us take, for example, the resistance in the United States of the young people to the Viet Nam war. We see here a very unique and interesting concept. It was the first war in history against which the citizens of one of the combatting nations rose, the first war which was the cause of opposition to a government which was trying to tell its people that they should involve themselves in that war. It was also the first war in history which the people watched day by day and night by night in the living rooms of their homes.

I submit that what has happened is a cultural change and a change in attitudes which took place because of television. I also submit that one of the things that should be happening in Canada is that we should have more communications coming in, not just from the United States, not just from Canada or from the north European countries, but from virtually every corner of the world.

Let us take a look at some of the situations at present. I suggest that the government has no business trying to restrict, control or shape the minds of its citizens. If we take a look at the border stations that are giving service to Canada—I think we have to underscore that it is a service that they are providing—we find that we are getting a service which we are purchasing in the same way in which we purchase products or any other services that are imported from another country. One of the agreements we have when we bring in products or services from another country is that one pays for them. We also have an agreement under GATT that we should not tax a product once it is imported. But that is in effect what this bill is doing.

Under this bill we are importing a service from another country, and then when it gets here we propose to apply a tax to it. It is inconsistent to suggest that Canadians who have the privilege of living next to a friendly and important country should simply overlook the spirit of GATT, bring in a service which is supplied to Canadians, and then place a tax on it. I make that statement in the sense that I think there is a marked difference between a government which questions where we are going and one which is intent on destroying the traditions that made up the fabric of our past.

It is one thing for any government to say that it may want to change the direction in which the country was going, but that is not what is happening. This government is saying "let us destroy what we had." In effect what would happen is that irrespective of the feelings of many people who have watched, in some cases for more than two decades, programs with which they have become associated, irrespective of all the traditions in the past, stations such as KVOS in Vancouver, or other border stations in Canada, will be destroyed.

It is the wrong position for the government to take, even if it is of the view that things should be changed in the future. One might respect the notion that one should look at the situation and make recommendations for a new and different future, but it is quite different to cancel out and take a hard line on all that has gone on before.

So we have a situation where we need to broaden our scope and our understanding of the world. We note that television should be a service like any other service in the spirit of GATT, but I wish to put forward the view that there is an inconsistency in the government's position which is so striking that it really confuses me to think that in good conscience it can take a position against the border stations while at the same time allowing its own CBC stations to commit the same sins for which it is branding others. In effect it is saying that KVOS, to be specific a station which has a gross income of around $22 million per year, 20 per cent of which stays in Canada, which means that $17.6 million goes to the United States, is not acting in conformity with the regulations and the government will pass legislation to prohibit that station, when in fact the government's own CBC imports $35 million worth of American programs into the country.

The government may look at the mirror, but all it will see is its hypocrisy not only in this legislation but in other pieces of legislation. The truth of the matter is that all TV stations in Canada spent considerable amounts of money bringing foreign products into this country. To take the position that some of the border stations should be condemned for doing what all of us are doing is simply inconsistent, especially when we note that stations such as KVOS have made such an effort to be good Canadian citizens. It was that station which put many Canadian programs on the air.

It was that same station which established—and in part in my home province of Alberta—Canawest, a film company which not only makes animated films for Canadian advertising but also sells them into the United States and into other countries of the world. It has also done a tremendous job as a good corporate citizen, yet the kettle is calling the pot black, or vice-versa, on the notion that it is of the opinion that it wants to kill, censor, and stop border stations from doing the same thing that its own government-run operation does with regard to other Canadian television stations.

I should like to refer to something which has previously been referred to, and that is that in many cases the citizens who listen to these stations do so because they want to listen to them. It amazes me that any government would say, "We do not care what you want; we know what is good for you." It is amazing that any government dealing with matters affecting the minds of people and what they choose by way of entertainment should try to make those matters subject to the government's position that, although people might like something else, the government really knows what they ought to have.

The amendments put forward simply stop us from overstepping or overstating the position. It might be one thing to take a new direction for the future, but it is quite another to cancel out all the institutions and traditions of citizens. The government should take a second look at this matter, not necessarily at the principle it has put forward, but at the notion of uprooting. Obviously there is a difference between pulling people out from their traditions and changing the direction which affects our future, but the government has not recognized that.

Irrespective of the feelings of the people, the government will do what it thinks is right. If that is the attitude of the government, then why does it not be honest with the Canadian people and tell them to save their eight cent stamps, to quit writing and phoning, because the government does not listen anyway? Why does the government not simply take the honest approach and say that it makes the decisions and the people should not bother writing? If the government were at all sensitive it would know that the vast majority of people, especially in southern British Columbia, are extremely opposed to the bill in its present form.

It would be a simple thing to pass an amendment and achieve the desired result without destroying the principle of what the government is intent on doing, that is, to change the direction for the future. But the government need not uproot the trends of the past. I say that because some of these stations have proved their corporate citizenship to an immeasurably high degree.

There is an inconsistency with regard to how the government has treated publications as opposed to broadcasting. With regard to publications there is a clause which says that, if publishers meet certain requirements, they are accepted as Canadian; yet there is a blanket condemnation of the broadcasting industry. When did the government obtain the wisdom, the right or the privilege to say that certain principles exist for the publishing industry, but there will be different principles for broadcasting? That is an unacceptable position.

If some sense of policy and direction is to be put forward for the nation, one of the factors ought to be consistency. Publishers are told that if they meet certain requirements they will be accepted. The government took it upon itself to say that even though Reader's Digest formerly did not meet the requirements, it is now accepted. Then with regard to the broadcasting industry the government said that United States border stations cannot broadcast into Canada, irrespective of how much they pay in taxes, how well they have performed as corporate citizens, or how many shares are owned by Canadians. That is a blanket condemnation.

I challenge any hon. member on the government side to tell this House where the government gets its guiding light to make decisions which have so many internal conflicts, and why, while one position can be taken, another cannot.

[Mr. Malone.]

That must be answered, and it certainly has not been up to the present.

Even if the government were strongly bent on its intent that there be no broadcasting into Canada from the United States and that it will curtail such broadcasting, this approach will not work because people choose information, listening, and entertainment according to their personal preferences. They will continue to listen to the stations of their choice and to buy advertising on stations which have the largest audiences, be it KVOS in Vancouver or the border stations here in central Canada. Without the amendment and leaving the bill as it is the government still defeats its position because the citizens will still listen to the same stations. That has been established. Surveys have demonstrated they will. Therefore advertisers will pay because they will buy where there is a market.

On the one hand we have a piece of legislation which is inconsistent and which suggests that no attention be paid to the wishes of citizens, and on the other hand, even if implemented with all these evils attached, this legislation does not achieve the purpose it set out to do.

Canada and the United States share the longest free border in the world. This country has a history of continually agitating our most friendly partner. We have trade agreements and many associations, and yet here we have another piece of legislation which does not seek to extend a spirit of co-operation, but seeks to clash directly with the nation with which we should be seeking to be the most friendly.

It was mentioned earlier by an hon. member of the New Democratic Party that there is not enough broadcasting into the United States, and therefore why should we be accepting American broadcasting into Canada. I agree with that position, but I think it is wrong to say that we ought to be cutting the Americans off. We should be doing just the opposite. We should be lobbying and doing everything in our power to ensure that in broadcasting and in the extension of our culture we reach more and more of the American market.

If the Liberal government is really intent on developing artists in this country and on extending our publishing and broadcasting activities, should we not extend our market from 20 million people to something near 250 million people? If we really want to extend opportunity and allow Canadian television corporations, companies, and influences to grow, then we should not cut off the market and make it smaller; we should make the market bigger, and that is just the opposite to what is proposed by the bill.

Whatever the intent of the legislation might have been, the fact is that it achieves the opposite. If the government wishes to have legislation that protects the broadcasting industry in this country it ought to do everything possible to open up the border and make arrangements with the United States for them to accept considerably more Canadian productions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret I have to inform the hon. member that his time has now expired.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to speak this afternoon in this debate on broadcasting and television on the west coast and on the border between Detroit and Windsor, and Toronto and Buffalo.

Those of us from the west coast cannot think of television without becoming immersed in the debate that is going on among our constituents as to the advisability of the course of action to be taken by Bill C-58 as well as the recent CRTC hearings on the west coast. As we all know those hearings have been left in a state of suspended animation awaiting the outcome of an appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Dubé concerning the right of Capital City Co-operative to challenge Victoria Cablevision Company, the present holder of the franchise for cablevision in Victoria. Everything on the west coast appears to have come to a halt pending the result of that appeal, as far as changes in cablevision, television, and radio are concerned. I would have preferred the CRTC to continue its hearings as I believe this bill is tied in with them.

When one speaks to people on the west coast about the loss of the channels they are accustomed to watching from Portland, Seattle, and Tacoma the conversation usually gets around to KVOS. People invariably say that the government is going to look after that with Bill C-58. This is the kind of flying in the face of public opinion which leads to our constituents feeling they are not being considered, and this bill is an example of that.

I was interested in the answers given by the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) during question period the other day to my colleague, the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro). She seemed to think the entire problem was in Vancouver, but the CRTC difficulties concern Victoria cablevision. I do not think it is any secret that Victoria is in a prime position regarding two things in Canada—one is good weather and the other is good television.

This good television on the west coast is a blessing and that did not come about because of the free broadcasts of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation; it came about because Canadians wanted to watch stations other than the CBC. On the west coast, without cable we can watch channel 2, the CBC station in Vancouver; channel 6, a station which broadcasts largely CBC programs in Victoria, and CTV on channel 8. If these are the great disseminators of information and entertainment that they pretend to be, one would assume that a cablevision company would have had a hard time getting people to pay, but this is not the case. Cablevision in Victoria and Vancouver consistently presents 10 or 11 good channels for viewing, and the programs offered are the ones that the people in the area want.

There was a time when I was a proud supporter of Canadian television in that I thought it was usually in better taste than the television that flowed across the border into the Toronto area, or the Niagara Peninsula or Windsor areas, and some into the area of Vancouver. That is no longer my opinion. By chance, as I was listening to the debate earlier this afternoon, I was trying to sign some correspondence and came across a letter from a constituent dated January 25, 1976. This is what she says:

Dear Mr. McKinnon:

May I ask you to protest on our behalf the program re contraceptives on TV-CBC news Saturday night, January 24, 1976. This disgusting program beamed into our homes was paid for by our money! It is absolutely impossible to understand the mentality and dishonesty of the program's producer, i.e., CBC and we wish to make our objection fully known.

Yours truly,

I get many letters like that. The point I am trying to make is that the plan of the government appears to be to give us less and less choice of what we watch in our homes. If Bill C-58 should pass without amendment it would limit us even further.

There are many things that bother me about this bill and I should like to mention one of them now. That is the very integrity of this House and of Canada. We are debating the broadcasting portion of Bill C-58. If this were to pass without amendment we would destroy services enjoyed by Canadian citizens for over 20 years. I am not saying it is all good or all bad, but there should be a reason to do so in Canada's best interest.

No one in this House can say that the Time and Reader's Digest portion of this bill has not so obscured the broadcasting section that no in-depth analyses of broadcasts have been made by members of the House and the press.

Again and again we hear in the corridors, in the caucus, and read in the newspapers descriptions of Bill C-58 as the publishing bill, or Time and Reader's Digest bill. In some circles it is known as the Maclean-Hunter monoply bill. But I say to you, Madam Speaker, that this portion of Bill C-58 will affect more directly the lives of millions of Canadian citizens than the publishing side ever will.

I spoke of the integrity of Canada and this House. Let me list some points. First, we are accepting a service from the United States stations that our citizens want. This has been amply demonstrated in British Columbia in recent weeks and at the CRTC meeting in Vancouver. As a citizen of Canada I say that if we take the service we have to pay for it; otherwise, we have to turn down the service. Then what howls we would get from one end of the country to the other! That is how important our constituents think this is.

Second, has anyone from either side of the aisle taken the time to analyse this bill and this portion of it from the trade point of view? I do not think we have, and we are remiss in not doing so. There is a basic difference between publishing and broadcasting. Publishing, that is Time and Reader's Digest, is clearly a Canadian industry. The publishing, printing, and circulation is done within Canada. In publishing we are dealing which an internal tax. Broadcasting is an imported service. It is imported into the Detroit area from stations in Windsor, and into Toronto and Vancouver from stations in Buffalo and Bellingham.

Again I refer to our integrity. Have we analysed the Canadian signed agreements under GATT? We have agreed as a sovereign nation that we will place no tax on imported products, which can be defined also as services, to the detriment of the imported product over a domestic product. The broadcasting portion of this bill is not imposing an internal tax, but rather under agreements we have signed it is a subverted tariff. That is what the British Columbia lumber industry has been trying to tell the Canadian parliament this week when it speaks of retaliatory legislation. When we give up our integrity we can expect a reaction from any government involved. We in this House, and Canada as a whole, would do the same.

I would also caution the members of this House to read the U.S. Trade Reform Act of 1974, an act of the U.S. Congress. It has made news in Canadian newspapers over the past weeks in various pieces of correspondence referring to the broadcasting portion of Bill C-58, with correspondence between the U.S. Senate Commerce Committee and the U.S. Secretary of State bringing up the very points I am making here.

I wish to read an excerpt from a letter addressed to the Hon. Henry A. Kissinger, Secretary of State, Washington, D.C. It is signed by Warren G. Magnusen of the United States Senate and Henry M. Jackson of the United States Senate. I do not intend to read it all. There is one paragraph, however, that is pertinent to the amendment before us. I quote:

● (1730)

Dear Mr. Secretary:

Thank you for your recent acknowledgment of our correspondence regarding the harm experienced by United States television stations situated near the Canadian border caused by governmental actions taken or contemplated in that country. Unfortunately, we do not believe the Department of State's response to this problem has been adequate to date.

Your letter of September 29, 1975, failed to give an opinion on the four points we suggested in our letter to you of September 9: (1) Actions which injure United States broadcast stations carried on Canadian cable systems injure Canadian viewers; (2) United States broadcasting interests are indirectly subsidizing current Canadian domestic television production; (3) Canada is injuring its own business community by discriminating against United States advertising media; (4) the Canadian policies are trade discriminations against United States exports of advertising services.

When the bill has doubtful benefits, when it clearly contravenes existing commitments, and when retaliatory laws will naturally flow between two of the world's largest and closest trading partners, I think we need at the very least to leave an opening for mature negotiation, which is all these amendments do. It is what we would expect of our friends and what they have a right to expect of us.

How much money are we talking about anyway? It is $22 million, of which 20 per cent stays in Canada through agency and sales commissions to Canadian firms. That leaves $17.6 million. Do hon. members realize that we buy and sustain our Canadian broadcasting system on $35 million worth of U.S. film shows every year? If the U.S. put a 100 per cent excise or export tax on those films we would still have to buy the shows anyway—they are cheaper and get more audience than most Canadian productions—but we would negate the effects of this bill, costing our broadcasting stations an extra $17.5 million rather than getting that amount back. Believe me, most of the money now going to U.S. stations will not go to Canadian broadcasters just because of C-58.

This is the time for sober last thoughts. Our integrity and good sense are at stake. Let us accept the amendment to clause 3, non grandfathering anyone into any situation, but merely permitting negotiation where, if the negotiated settlement is better for Canada than the punitive effects of Bill C-58, Canada is not precluded from accepting the negotiated settlement.

I wish to speak for a few minutes on the use of United States material. One of the bizarre effects of Bill C-58 is to be able to double-think. One can pick up this ability from the book "1984" by George Orwell. If you study that bill you might better understand what I have to say about U.S. material.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

We condemn Time Canada because they bring in editorial matter from the United States and we say that is bad because this makes for low cost competition to Canadian periodicals that must research and write all their own material, yet at the same time, in broadcasting, the Canadian broadcasting industry exists on U.S. product. The Canadian cable industry exists at a $120 million plus gross purely on the importation of U.S. signals. Without these signals there would be no reason for the Canadian cable industry to be in existence.

The independent Canadian stations and the CTV network exist on the exploitation of American programs already paid for by the networks and the stations against whom this bill is aimed. Canadian Trade and Commerce Magazine 1975 has some interesting facts on this. I quote:

The business of private television is to make money. This is less a concern of the CBC which has been supplied with a key to the public treasury.

And the fiscal facts of life are these: all the popular U.S. imports make money for the two Canadian networks: all major Canadian produced shows are heavy money losers.

"All in the Family" cost the CBC network $2,000 a week last season and brought in revenues of $24,000. "Rhoda," "Mary Tyler Moore", "Maude," "Chico and the Man," and, "Mash," all pull in the revenue.

The CTV network paid $4,000 a week for "Ironside", and "Harry-O" and each produced revenues of $46,000. The highly popular, "Kojak", cost the network $4,000 a week and yielded revenues of $46,000. "Marcus Welby", "Streets of San Francisco," "Medical Centre" and "Nakia", brought similar returns.

The CBC's most popular Canadian produced show ran up a weekly loss of $72,000 a week. "The Beachcombers", dropped $41,000 a week. That's the price the taxpayers pay for Canadian content. The CTV's Montreal-based situation comedy, "Excuse My French", cost $30,000 a week and returned revenue of $16,000 a week.

Canadian content . . . has little value in the market place. Advertisers shun it like the plague and viewers switch channels. Mediocrity is just not a saleable product.

It is a question of how much we are willing to pay our local artists. I am willing to pay a certain amount, but I do not think it should be at the exclusion of what we wish to see, laudable though the aim may be of supporting Canadian talent. The avenue of supporting Canadian talent should not be by depriving listeners and viewers of what they want to see.

I wish to point out a few programs regularly carried over KVOS which will likely be severely hampered if not put off the air by this legislation. First, there are the children's programs during the day. Most kids in British Columbia have grown up on these. From four o'clock until 5:30 every afternoon, there is "Funorama". Other shows include "Merv Griffin," "Mike Douglas", "Dinah Shore", "Candid Camera", plus all the top CBS programs including NFL football and NBA basketball. Why should we object to those programs? NFL football is one of the mainstays of the CBC.

The popular hour shows on KVOS are "All in the Family", "Rhoda", "Phyllis", "Maude", "Doc", "Bob Newhart", "Carol Burnett" and documentaries such as in CBS Reports", "Channel 12 Special", "Page 12," "Anchor" and "Outlook", all the CBS specials, which average two or three a week, plus news and news specials. This is not all. It is just a smattering of what B.C. citizens want to view.

These amendments seem to be well-founded. I see no reason why we in British Columbia should not have an opportunity to watch the kind of television we want to watch.

We are having other difficulties there. Somebody in government or one of the agents of government, the CBC or CRTC, have plans for the viewing edification of people on the west coast which are extremely unpopular.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

● (1740)

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, in addressing myself specifically to the amendment to Bill C-58 concerning television I find myself obliged to address myself to the speech made last evening by the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé).

I must say I listened with stunned amazement to the words of the minister. I felt there was only one course of action I could take, and that was to seek an opportunity such as I now have to respond to the some of the specious and shallow arguments she presented—I feel, by the way, that I am dealing with her remarks in a most generous manner.

Perhaps it would be best to deal with her address piece by piece. I begin by referring to her words in the first paragraph—"all these amendments aim, more or less, at granting special status to a foreign radio station." Apart from the fact that the word foreign is used to constitute a minor but insidious put-down—and I think this has all been very carefully orchestrated—let us talk about what KVOS has done with reference to taxation. If any special status was granted, why was the federal Department of National Revenue so pleased to participate in arrangements for such special status?

Why was the treasury so keen to obtain some of the revenue which was generated, funds which could just as easily have gone to the United States? No. KVOS is a Canadian subsidiary and during the period from 1964, I think it was, to date, it has contributed some $76 million to the revenue of Canada. I would say, Madam Speaker, that this particular station granted a special status to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen). There was an arrangement worked out between the Canadian revenue department and the United States revenue service. And that is special status! Other examples of a similar kind could be cited.

The minister then went on to say:

All the measures which are included in each of these amendments make possible the exploitation of the Canadian market by an American station—and this is precisely what is happening in the situation we are now discussing: American stations are coming here to exploit the Canadian market.

Well, really! If we are going to talk about exploitation I suggest that the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) address himself to certain facts which he was careful to avoid mentioning in his speech today, and advise the House of just how much money the CBC has taken out of the United States through its radio station facilities in Windsor. If we are going to talk about exploitation, I would say that $5 million is exploitation. That is a pretty fair chunk of money. But the hon. member was very careful to avoid mentioning that.

Mr. Fleming: The owner agrees not to do it any longer.

Mr. Brisco: If the parliamentary secretary wishes to speak he will have an opportunity to do so. I am calling attention to something he failed to mention. Later on in her speech the minister said that the measures proposed by members of the opposition would certainly be contrary to the purposes of the Broadcasting Act. Madam Speaker, as late as last week the provision of the Broadcasting Act were infringed upon at a hearing of the CRTC in Vancouver. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

We also saw last week an application by the CBC to establish a television station in Vancouver. That government body, the CBC, violated the regulations, violated the Criminal Code, and violated the Broadcasting Act by erecting a tower three months in advance of that hearing without ever applying to the CRTC. If we are talking about violations of the Broadcasting Act, let us consider the whole scheme of things. The CRTC violates its own regulations every day, and so does the CBC. The trouble is that members on the other side never bother to notice these things.

Look at pages 14 to 17 of the information presented to those members who are interested in what happens to KVOS. Consider the responsibilities of this station with reference to codes of ethics, the amount of advertising allowed during children's programs, and so on. This is the big, corporate, rip-off giant, this foreign company to which the minister referred.

Immediately upon receipt of information that Canadian-based stations would be under new regulations to program less commercials per hour in programs aimed primarily at children, KVOS-TV (B.C.) Ltd officials advised the CRTC in writing that the station would voluntarily adhere to these regulations . . . We are now programming under those guidelines.

Hon. members opposite may say: so what? Well, they could have acted quite differently.

KVOS-TV has for 20 years voluntarily followed all restrictions that Canadian-based stations have in the broadcast treatment of Canadian elections and election news.

Now, with regard to the wording of commercials.

When writing for and/or filming commercials for Canadian or Canadian-distributed products or services, both federal and provincial laws, regulations and codes are adhered to.

The station adheres to the stricter of Canadian or United States codes. For example, it schedules a minimum of two minutes less commercials per hour in the 6 p.m. to 11 p.m. period than do Canadian privately-owned stations. This is the nasty menace which has been referred to by the Minister of Communications. The hon. lady then went on to refer to tolerance. She said:

In practice, because of our tolerance, those TV stations operate in a country where, we must admit, they are not even licensed.

I ask; what tolerance? Tolerance to KVOS? Perhaps we should set the record straight. This afternoon the hon. member for York West made some high-sounding statements which do not stand up under close scrutiny. He said that U.S. cable discriminates against Canadian television signals. He takes this from the CAB brief. If that is the type of research the CAB has done, I wonder about the rest of their submissions. The fact of the matter is that the FCC does not discriminate against Canadian television signals, and I challenge any member of the House to prove to the contrary. It treats all signals, U.S. and Canadian, alike. I think that had better be underlined, Madam Speaker. It treats all signals, U.S. and Canadian, alike.

● (1750)

It is indeed unfortunate that if this bill passes without amendment we will not be in a position to say the same thing. It is indeed unfortunate that the words of the minister last night imply that it will not be the same. The FCC sets rules for local and distant stations, protecting in a very limited form local stations from distant United States or Canadian stations. The protection is exactly the same. That is a sensible thing. I accept it and I think anyone who applies any reason would accept it. Of course the local station should be protected.

Let me put it another way. If I were the operator of a television station on the U.S. border I would want the Canadian government and the CRTC to treat my signals in exactly the same way the United States treats Canadian television signals. That would be all I would ask. Frankly, that is all KVOS is asking for, but I am afraid the message has just not got through to those on the other side.

Mr. Paproski: Never will.

Mr. Brisco: Precisely. Their mind is made up and they don't want to be confused with the facts.

The minister went on to state:

Traditionally our country has no frontiers and obviously, when dealing with air waves, it is still more difficult to mark the boundaries.

I could not agree with the minister more. That is a tradition that Canadians are proud of and should be proud of. I think it is a tradition many Americans are proud of. In a very real sense the people of Kootenay West are very much aware of this, perhaps more than many members of the House, because of the close liaison we have and enjoy with our American neighbours. After all, the southern boundary of my riding forms the 49th parallel.

Before we had the benefit of any signal from the CBC we received television from the United States. We did not have the CBC prior to the U.S. station in Spokane. We asked for it and we are still asking for it. Heavenly days, half of my riding, geographically speaking, receives no television signal! I asked for service in Vancouver but the CRTC and CBC, working in collusion, concern themselves only with one thing, which is establishing a French language station in Vancouver and to hell with the rest of British Columbia and those people who have no television or radio. They could not care less; they have their blinkers on. The same is true here.

I ask, where are the government's priorities? I have no objection to a French language station in Vancouver. Indeed I would welcome it. Perhaps it would help me learn our second language in Canada. Well, perhaps I should say one of our official languages in Canada. I am sorry I referred to it as a second language because it is not; it is one of the two official languages, but I am a westerner and I suppose I think as a westerner.

Perhaps I am digressing for a moment, but let me make this point. Does the House not think that the government's priorities are mixed when it wants to spend $3 million on a television station that the majority of the people of British Columbia do not want, when it wants to force it down their throats, yet the government is not prepared to spend the same amount of money on the provision of radio and television services for the hamlets and small communities of British Columbia that have no signals? These communities are then jumped on because they establish their own pirate stations. What kind of blind thinking is this? This is the reason why the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is in Vancouver with his cabinet today. They are trying to straighten out the way they have alienated western Canada, and the chickens are coming home to roost.

To get back to this bill, what I am trying to point out is that simply because there are U.S. television stations sitting on the border is no reason why the government should suddenly be so concerned about these horrible monsters. Quite frankly, we have been damned glad to have them. Heavenly days, if we had not had them the birth rate in Kootenay West would have multiplied out of hand!

With regard to motion No. 7, the minister said that the Canadian television and radio industry is in a precarious situation in many ways. Once again the minister made a statement with which I heartily concur. But I have only just reviewed one of the reasons why Canadian television and radio is in such a precarious position. It is not that it has not got the dollars; it is the manner in which those dollars are spent. This is what inflames and irritates so many Canadians. Until the government, the CBC and the CRTC get their priorities straightened out, that inflammation will continue. It will be a boil on the side of the federal government that can only be cured by a darned good lancing.

The minister spoke last night about protection. She said that above all there cannot be any possibility for us to protect the income of the many Canadian actors, artists, and artisans involved in the professions related to television and radio. That is precisely what we are trying to do, protect the jobs of people working for a Canadian company in Vancouver. But this bill would deny them the right to work. The government wants to cancel the whole thing out and start all over again with its own grandiose schemes which have never worked. At the moment we have something that works. It is paying good tax dollars to the government and employing Canadians who are happy with their jobs. Yet the government is not satisfied. It wants to remove them and to start all over again with its own ball of wax. We have seen this happen before with the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), and quite frankly he just messes his nest. I should like to call it six o'clock so that I can continue, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PROPOSED REPORT BY PRIME MINISTER ON TRIP TO BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Since the Prime Minister and about ten of his ministers are paying a one week's visit to British Columbia while the House is peacefully in session, and since British Columbia has been administered for several decades by Social Credit governments, which accounts for the fact that that province is ahead of many Canadian provinces as far as the prosperity of its people is concerned, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That this House immediately consider the opportunity of asking the Prime Minister as soon as he returns from his training session in administration and management by the Social Credit government of British Columbia to table in the House a complete report about all he has learned about efficient administration, so that all Liberal backbenchers who were unable to take the trip may profit from the British Columbia experience.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Since there is not unanimous consent, the motion cannot be put.

PROPOSED INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE OFFENCE AGAINST FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I should like to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. It appears that Security Advisory Services of the United Kingdom is the body recruiting mercenaries in England for service in Angola with funds provided by the CIA. This organization has caused an advertisement to be put in the Globe and Mail of February 10, 1976, in effect seeking to enlist the services of Canadians as mercenaries, contrary to the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, section 11, which prohibits any person from recruiting or otherwise inducing any person to enlist in armed services operating in another state.

Therefore, and in view of the resolution passed by this House opposing all armed intervention in Angola, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) be directed to investigate this matter forthwith and if the facts disclose an offence or offences against the Foreign Enlistment Act, to take the necessary proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED DIRECTION TO ENERGY BOARD TO EXAMINE ALL EVIDENCE TO ENSURE SAFETY OF TRANS-CANADA PIPELINE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the evidence produced by a former safety inspector for Trans-Canada Pipelines and offered to the National Energy Board by the CTV television network to substantiate allegations that welding done on substantial sections of the Trans-Canada pipeline running through Manitoba and Ontario are of such poor quality as to constitute a safety hazard has yet to be examined by the National Energy Board, although it is freely available, and further that the chairman of the National Energy Board, Marshall Crowe, has issued a press release expressing his complete confidence in the safety of the line without having examined the evidence, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That this House directs the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) in his responsibility for the National Energy Board, to instruct the chairman of the Board itself to examine any evidence offered to them by the CTV television network to assure the safety of the Trans-Canada pipeline beyond any reasonable doubt, before any further reports are released by the Board for public consumption.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion cannot be presented without unanimous consent.

REPORTED INTENTION OF PRIME MINISTER TO RESIGN IF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT APPROVED BY HOUSE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the CBC radio this morning carried a news story to the effect that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has been reported as stating in Victoria yesterday that he would resign as Prime Minister if capital punishment were approved by the House of Commons, and in view of the fact that there are some abolitionists in all parties who have now been placed in the most difficult quandary of determining what this nation needs most, that is, capital punishment, abolition, or a new prime minister, I move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt):

That the Prime Minister be invited either to withdraw his statement or resign, preferably the latter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF INSPECTION OF IMPORTED WOOL FROM A HEALTH POINT OF VIEW—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that Canada's inspection of imported wool and wool products is insufficient to protect human health, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That the matter of imported wool and its inspection from a health point of view be referred to the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare for study and report.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the said motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

PROPOSED COMMITTEE STUDY OF REDUCTION OF IMPORTS—PURSUANT TO STANDING ORDER 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

Given the difficult situation of the economy of this country and the pernicious influence of this situation on the purchasing power of the people and on the rising unemployment rate, and considering that Canada has the potential necessary to produce almost everything which is essential, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That a special committee of this House be established to investigate the means to be taken to avoid importing foreign products which we can or could easily produce here in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

ALLEGED INADEQUACIES OF FIRE INSPECTIONS AND ALARM SYSTEMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity arising from the recent extensive fire that occurred at the Quebec summer residence of the Governor General. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That the government account to this House for circumstances surrounding the fact that government personnel were aware that the fire alarm system at the Governor General's summer residence was not functioning for some months prior to the recent fire resulting in a one-hour delay in discovery of the fire, why a fire inspection of the summer residence by the appropriate personnel had not been made for over a year and similar inspection of Rideau Hall in Ottawa has not been made in over three years and, finally, the House requests a complete investigation to correct reported serious inadequacies of fire alarm systems and fire inspections in all federal government buildings including the parliament buildings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE WHEN PROGRAM EFFECTIVE IN CONTROLLING PRICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, bearing in mind the statement of the chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board that the price control mechanism of the anti-inflation program is now in place, can the Minister of Finance tell the House when the Canadian people may expect some relief from high rates of price increases, as exhibited by this month's quite substantial increase in the consumer price index?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I note that in respect of many of the commodities which are controlled under the program there has been no increase in these particular figures. Indeed, from the Statistics Canada report, among other things, the return to the 7 per cent Ontario sales tax as well as higher utility costs were most responsible for the increase. As the hon. member knows, there are certain aspects of this including government taxation which are not subject to the direct control of the Anti-Inflation Board.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the fact that the consumer price index today reflected a decrease in the price of food, which was a direct consequence of the self-imposed freeze by the major supermarket chains, and bearing in mind the fact that we can anticipate further increases in food prices as reflected in statements by the vice-chairman of the Anti-Inflation Board and the president of one of the major supermarket chains, does the minister have any plans on behalf of the government and the Anti-Inflation Board to protect Canadians against the effects of uncontrolled food prices, having regard to the fact that this will call into question the whole credibility of the government's anti-inflation program?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's term "uncontrolled food prices" is scarcely justified in view of the fact that the operations of the major chains are subject to scrutiny by the Anti-Inflation Board, as indeed are the operations of marketing boards where they are protected in particular from import competition. In that sense I feel the controls will be effective, although we recognize the fact that particularly at this season of the year in relation to imported commodities, with the variation in prices of other commodities, there will be a variation in the food index.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF ANALYSES OF IMPACT OF CONTROLS ON PRICES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary is prompted by a statement attributed to the Prime Minister in which he said the following in respect of the impact of prices:

> We are very satisfied with the analyses we make from time to time on the effects of the program.

May I ask the minister if he is prepared to lay on the table of the House those analyses and any evidence the board may have on the impact of the program to control prices, especially food prices.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I must say I think what the hon. member is asking for is a continuous report in the House day after day on the activities of the board day after day. I think that would be rather difficult to do. Of course, the law does provide for reports to the House and there will be opportunities to examine the members of the board when the estimates come before Parliament.

URBAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO CONTROLLING COST OF HOUSES AND LAND

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Despite the decline in the food component of the consumer price index, the increase in the cost of home ownership excluding land costs remains at an unacceptable 13.8 per cent year over year. What concrete measures has the minister in mind to curtail the rising costs of home ownership?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the measures that were passed just before Christmas will go a long way toward reducing housing costs and making housing more available for people of moderate income. It will speed the production of land and serviced land. It will assist the municipalities in providing additional services which should reduce the cost. It will make it possible for moderate income people, and all people indeed, to buy modest housing at low carrying costs. It will do many of these things and many more, as well as stimulate the activities in the construction industry on a four-year sustained high volume basis which should help achieve economies of scale. If in the process this helps bring down inflation and reduces inflation even more the cost will be reduced even further.

Mr. Darling: Mr. Speaker, in view of this rapid increase in home ownership costs, and considering that the Minister of Finance has declared that land costs are even more culpable in contributing to aggregate housing costs, can the minister inform the House which area has higher priority insofar as curbing increases go?

Mr. Danson: Mr. Speaker, I do not quite understand which area. Of course, I have indicated several areas where we are taking specific action. I indicated yesterday in the House we are making efforts, in co-operation with the provinces where the jurisdiction lies and the municipalities to speed up the processing of land which I think, with the exception of interest rates, is perhaps the one most troublesome area in keeping costs high. If we can be successful in bringing down the land costs and speeding its processing and getting it on the market I think we will make a great deal of progress indeed.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

ALLEGED LACK OF RESOURCES TO CONTROL PRICES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Considering the fact that the Anti-Inflation Board has not ordered a single roll-back in price increases since the program began, will the minister confirm the board has at its disposal resources to monitor only 350 corporations in Canada and that the real reason for the board's not making its pricing decisions public is not alleged reason of confidentiality but the fact that because of its scarcity of resources to act in monitoring prices, public revelation of this fact would reveal its total incapacity to control prices.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I might point out that the hon. member's initial statement is quite mistaken. For example, in the B.C. Telephone case the Canadian Transport Commission has rolled back the price that would have been proposed. As to the hon. member's suggestion that there should be a larger and more elaborate bureaucracy created in this area, I will consider that in the light of the earlier statements made by the hon. gentleman that one of the difficulties with the program was that it might create a bureaucracy.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON FOR PERMITTING PRICE OF OIL TO INCREASE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Increasingly the minister is refusing to answer questions. Perhaps he will tell us in his second answer why there have been no rollbacks in prices, other than the one in which the board was indirectly involved. I should like to ask him, since the cost of fuel and utilities increased by 16.7 per cent over the past year and by 2.6 per cent over the past month, whether the government will now reconsider its extraordinary decision to permit the oil companies to increase their prices of oil once again, eventually going up to world price levels.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No such decision has been taken.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to pursue that point. The minister has said that there has been no decision to permit the oil companies to increase prices of oil. If that is what he said now, I should like him to check the Prime Minister's earlier statements, and I am quite sure statements by the minister himself, in which it was indicated the government is committed to permitting oil companies to increase prices up to world price levels.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member would like to go back and check the record, he would see we indicated at the time we were prepared to move over time toward world prices, but no specific decision has been taken at this time to increase the prices of oil and natural gas in Canada. That is a question which, as in previous years, will have to be discussed at the federal-provincial meetings which will be taking place in several weeks at which, I am sure, the western provinces such as Saskatchewan and Alberta will be pressing for higher prices for hydrocarbons. That, of course, is a question to be discussed and decided then. No such decision has yet been taken.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY IF INCREASE IN PASSENGER FARE SUBMITTED TO BOARD

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

In view of the decision taken by the railway companies to increase their ticket prices by 15 per cent, and in view of the fact that this increase affect particularly the oftentimes very poor people almost exclusively served by this means of transportation—and this is the case for the whole northern part of my riding—would the minister tell the House whether this increase which seems to go beyond the guidelines laid down by the Anti-Inflation Board has previously been submitted to the Board?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I think I indicated in answer to a question from the hon. member for Laprairie, this kind of increase might be looked at by the Canadian Transport Commission but would not ordinarily be looked at by them in advance of the announcement or indication by the railways. The commission would follow guidelines which have been given to it for examining increases in this area.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Would the minister tell the House how come the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways have in fact increased their ticket prices by 15 per cent since February 1, without any prior consultation and without any decision made known by the Transport Commission in this respect?

[English]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I can assure hon. members that the CTC is aware of increases which occur. There will be a general examination by the CTC of railway operations to determine whether they have offended the 95 per cent margin rule, and in addition they will be looking at specific cases to determine whether other and more specific rules apply to them.

CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED FOR LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TECHNICAL PROBLEMS—DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF WORK

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. On February 2 the minister told the House that there were technical problems in the way of signing the contract with Lockheed for LRPA. Would he tell the House what is meant by the phrase "technical problems" and, in the light of the difficulties now being experienced by Lockheed, have these technical problems increased or decreased in the last few days? Has the contract been signed?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): These technical problems relate strictly to long-term financing.

Mr. McKinnon: In view of the fact that the contract has not apparently been signed, when will there be movement of tools and plant to Canadair to begin work on the LRPA? Does the Japanese decision to cancel their purchase of the P3-C affect either the cost of the plane to Canada or the amount of work which will fall to Canadian industry?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the contract we intend to sign with Lockheed Aircraft Corporation of Canada has been subject to a long study by an interdepartmental committee, under the direction of the Department of National Defence, and for which the government paid a considerable amount of money to have the program finalized. This contract has finally been negotiated through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to establish what would be the best economic repercussions for Canada.

We thought we had all the possible advantages to meet our needs and our economic objectives. This is why we are considering the possibility of signing the contract with Lockheed Aircraft once the arrangements concerning the long term financing are completed.

CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED FOR LONG RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—ASSURANCE NO COMMISSIONS PAID

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what questions the Minister of Supply and Services is answering, but they are certainly not the questions I am asking.

My supplementary is for the Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement of the Solicitor General to the House on February 10 that the RCMP is not investigating the question of possible Lockheed kickbacks in Canada for the sale of the LRPA, does the minister have anything other than an assurance from the chairman of the board of Lockheed, who is hardly a disinterested party, that commissions have not and will not be paid on the Canadian LRPA contract?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there is no evidence of any wrongdoing or bribery related to the LRPA program, and if the hon. member has a specific accusation, I wish he would make it. Otherwise, I do not think we should engage in a witch hunt.

Mr. McGrath: Why don't you make a statement and reassure the Canadian people that there is no bribery?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY GOVERNMENT MEMBERS NOT PERMITTED A FREE VOTE ON CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question. Last evening the Prime Minister stated that he was going to try to persuade parliament to abolish capital punishment, and if he was not successful, he would resign. I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether he had a discussion with the Prime Minister in this regard and whether the Prime Minister was, in fact, indicating a free vote on capital punishment would not take place on the Liberal government side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I did not hear all of the question. There was too much noise in the House.

An hon. Member: Louder, Eldon.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the greatest compliment I have had for a long time. My hon. friends opposite say I am getting weak, but I will put the question again.

Last evening the Prime Minister stated that he would try to persuade parliament to abolish capital punishment, and that if he was not successful, he would resign. I should like to know whether the Solicitor General had a discussion along these lines with the Prime Minister and whether the Prime Minister was in fact indicating that a free vote on capital punishment would not take place on the government side, but rather a vote on the retention of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Allmand: I cannot accept that the Prime Minister said exactly what was reported by the hon. member. I have not had a chance to talk to the Prime Minister or to read his exact words, and I will have to see him when he comes back.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to quote briefly what the Prime Minister said so that the Solicitor General will have this information.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: "If it's against my conscience to hang . . ."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Solicitor General has given his answer about having to talk to the Prime Minister before making an answer.

Mr. Woolliams: I can assure the Solicitor General that the Prime Minister did say that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Woolliams: I can wait. I should like to put this question to the Solicitor General: did he have a discussion with the Prime Minister, and is there an arrangement that certain members of the cabinet would resign if the bill did not pass? Is that the arrangement, and is that the kind of free vote the Solicitor General recommends to the House?

Mr. Allmand: The hon. member knows the policy of the government with respect to the bill in the House, but I believe the government has said there will be a free vote on this issue. There will be a government bill. Again, I must say that I cannot accept a report from a newspaper article as being the exact words of the Prime Minister.

● (1430)

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary. We can get away from the opinion of the Solicitor General, but I should like to ask him pointblank if he can assure the House on behalf of the government, and particularly members of cabinet, that there will be a free vote in this House on capital punishment when the bill is presented?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it will be similar to the last occasion when we dealt with this. There will be a government bill to which the government will be committed, but members of this House who are not with the government will be free to vote on it as they see fit.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: You have said it all now—no free vote.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY CONTRACT FOR 20 MULTI-PURPOSE SHIPS PLACED OUTSIDE CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and refers to the need of maritime command for an additional 20 multi-purpose intermodal ships in the foreseeable future. Is it a fact that agreement has been reached in principle by the government, and perhaps partly arising out of contractual link talks with our European partners in NATO, that this order and the engineering design work for it will be placed outside Canada?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is much too early in the shipbuilding program to have entered into any negotiations either outside Canada or within Canada. Of course, we would all prefer that the contract be completed in this country.

Mr. Forrestall: I take it from what the minister has said that consideration has not been given to letting this approximately $400 million contract outside Canada as a result of requests from the Prime Minister or members of cabinet. Is that the position or in fact has the matter been considered, is it currently under consideration and is there a possibility that a final determination might be made some time this year? The final determination I am referring to is a decision by the government to let this work go outside Canada.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, that is not being actively considered at the present time. I think it would be a most unlikely result of any studies.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGATION MR. MRNAK MURDERED IN ST. CATHARINES HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR RE-OPENING OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Gilbert Parent (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. In the last few days a Mr. Frolick, a Czech defector, testified at a Senate subcommittee hearing in Washington that a former constituent of mine, a Mr. Mrnak, was allegedly murdered while being treated in the Hotel Dieu hospital in St. Catharines. I understand that Mrs. Mrnak has asked for another investigation. In view of the fact that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police were involved in the original investigation, would the minister please tell the House if there are any plans to reopen the case?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, at the time of Mr. Mrnak's death there was an investigation by the local police and the RCMP. They found there was no foul play involved in his death. There is no plan to have another inquiry by the RCMP. If there were to be another investigation it would have to be undertaken by the local police force.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED BREACH OF PROVISIONS OF FOREIGN ENLISTMENT ACT—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Would the Acting Prime Minister make inquiries into the publication in the Globe and Mail on Tuesday, February 10 of an advertisement which seems clearly to envisage enlistment of Canadians as mercenaries for hostilities in Africa contrary to the provisions of section 11 of the Foreign Enlistment Act? This section forbids any person to recruit or otherwise induce any person to enlist or accept any commission or engagement in the armed forces of any foreign state or other armed forces operating in such a state. Will the minister look into this and take the necessary action of the facts—it is quite clear there is an advertisement—but will he take the necessary action if it appears that someone is breaching the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly shall have inquiries made. I am not quite sure on whose initiative action would be taken but if as the hon. member suggests, this is contrary to the law I shall see that appropriate action is taken.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO RATE OF INTEREST ON LOAN TO SOUTH KOREA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister thinks he can have the same success I have had in pushing up popular support for my party by talking about resignation. Has the Acting Prime Minister had time to reflect on my question about the rate of interest the government agency is receiving on the $300 million loan to the Republic of Korea to finance the sale of the reactor? The Acting Prime Minister has said previously he would not refuse but I ask him again because surely he cannot pretend this is an ordinary commercial transaction.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have reflected. I looked back at the words I used and I think I have come to the same conclusion, that it would be inadvisable in transactions made by the Export Development Corporation, to reveal information that could be used to the disadvantage of Canadian industry. Essentially, what the Export Development Corporation is doing is promoting the sale of Canadian goods. The rates of interest quoted are competitive. As I pointed out to the hon. gentleman, there has been no loss to the Canadian taxpayer in the operation of the Canadian Export Corporation.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether a loan has been made by other corporations in anything like the amount of $300 million. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister or anybody on that side of the House what possible justification there can be for keeping from the Canadian people the rate of interest on such a vast loan which could involve a tremendous subsidy on this sale. Why is the government afraid to let Canadians see the full terms of this transaction?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it has been traditional policy on this, supported by all concerned including the House and businessmen—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is state to state.

Mr. Jamieson: I am grateful to the hon. member, but if he would keep quiet for a moment I was just coming to the fact that it was state to state. It has not been the policy, even on state to state, transactions to disclose interest rates or other specific details on this kind of transaction. If hon. members opposite wish us to increase our export sales they have to realize that this is a highly competitive operation and we must maintain a degree of confidentiality regarding it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON DISCLOSING DETAILS OF SALE OF NUCLEAR REACTOR TO SOUTH KOREA

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether it is their view that the sale of a nuclear reactor by Canada is simply a commercial transaction and whether the Canadian people are not entitled to know the details of such a sale?

Mr. Lawrence: There is more than money involved in this.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentleman and I am sure he knows already that this is one of the most competitive aspects of world business at the present time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You are a bunch of carpetbaggers.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

POSSIBILITY PRIME MINISTER MIGHT RESIGN IF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT BILL NOT APPROVED BY HOUSE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Solicitor General arises from an earlier question asked by the hon. member for Calgary North. The Solicitor General has stated that if the House votes in support of capital punishment he would have to resign. Now, he has been followed by the Prime Minister making the same statement. If the Prime Minister made that statement and it is clear that he did—

An hon. Member: He did not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —does the minister not think that if members of parliament can get rid of the Prime Minister only by voting for capital punishment, that is placing a ridiculous temptation before parliament?

SOCIAL SECURITY

POSSIBLE REPEAL OF SECTION 85 OF CANADA PENSION PLAN GIVING MINISTER RIGHT OF APPEAL

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government considering repealing section 85(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, which gives the minister, supported by a battery of judges, lawyers and the federal treasury, the right to appeal to the Pensions Appeal Board in order to prevent an applicant, one Canadian, from receiving his pension even after the case was decided in the applicant's favour by a review committee, after the applicant had gone through a process of medical examination?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there can be no question of amending this section of the legislation for any reason whatever. This matter was debated last year by the Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, when the last amendments were made to the Canada Pension Plan. However, when the government appeals the decision of the board, the government pays the cost of the judicial representation for the person against whom an appeal was made. So I think that the government truly considered the requirements of the persons eligible for pension in such circumstances.

URBAN AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO RAPID TRANSIT WITHIN MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Some time ago the government announced the details of its implementation of election promises with regard to grants for modern rapid transit between communities. My question is this: Has the government made a decision with regard to grants relating to rapid transit within municipalities? If not, when is the decision likely to be made? I ask this because the minister's response to me some time ago was delightfully obfuscating, and he sort of put off the question. Will he now tell us if this is to be done now or in the foreseeable future?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the specific question about commuter systems between two communities, certainly the object of the legislation is to tie in communities, and the fact that they may be in the same municipality is no objection. Indeed, as recently as a week ago I spoke with the mayor of Edmonton on this matter. Firm regulations will be drafted shortly. But the object of the exercise is not to pay for systems that were in place or committed previously. The object is to encourage new systems, so that we can deal with the decentralization and growth of great urban centres such as the great city of Edmonton.

AIR TRANSPORT

INCREASE IN AIRPORT USER CHARGES—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF COST-BENEFIT STUDY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport is supplementary to the question asked on Monday by the hon. member for Capilano. In view of the criticism of the Air Transport Association regarding the $22 million increase in airport user charges, has the minister conducted or will he conduct and table a cost-benefit study, to ensure that the increase is equitable and in line with the anti-inflation program? My question arises from a report which indicates that the increase will amount to approximately 30 per cent across the board for general terminal charges and landing fees, and there is to be more than a 600 per cent increase for landing fees connected with pilot training. Can the minister answer this question?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, it should be recognized that the guidelines have not restricted the opportunity of any government in the country to re-examine programs and priorities and obtain a larger amount of revenue from the user rather than from the taxpayer, as, otherwise, collecting more money could have an interesting and important impact on the economy and the services being offered. We are proposing user charges and the 30 per cent figure is accurate. In some cases a higher increase is proposed because the charge was very low, compared with the real cost of the service being provided.

It is part of our over-all proposition that, in many cases, those who use the services should pay a higher proportion for the benefit they receive rather than that the general taxpayer should be expected to help.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton-West).]

INCREASE IN AIRPORT USER CHARGES—POSSIBILITY OF CONFLICT WITH ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the answer the minister gave the hon. member for Lisgar. Would he help those working on the transport committee and answer the following question: Does the minister place a higher priority on implementing the new user pay program than he places on the anti-inflation objectives of his colleague, the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is, no. It should be obvious from the first part of my earlier answer that there is an impact on inflation and on Canadians if tax dollars have to be raised from taxpayers generally, thus reducing their take-home pay and money which they can spend, or if the money is raised by borrowing, therefore increasing tax deficit in the economy. The government must balance these items and their impact on the economy. I should add, in answer to part of the question asked a moment ago, that we are doing a careful analysis of real costs and the appropriate portion of those costs to be borne by the people who fly and the various services provided to them. This study will take somewhat longer. We are satisfied that the increased charges we are imposing are well below the total value of the service.

ENERGY

ALLEGATION OF FAULTY CONSTRUCTION ON TRANSCANADA PIPELINE—REASON ENERGY BOARD HAS NOT CONSIDERED EVIDENCE

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relates to the allegations that the welding done on sections of the TransCanada pipeline running through Manitoba and Ontario is of such poor quality as to represent a hazard. These are allegations made by a former safety inspection contractor. As, on January 28, the secretary of the National Energy Board wrote to the president of CTV to request that CTV present the NEB with all evidence it has, including radiographs of pipeline welds, and as the president of CTV offered to comply with the request and asked for an immediate meeting with the NEB, to turn over the evidence, can the minister tell the House why no meeting has yet been held and, in particular, why the chairman of the National Energy Board would have issued a news release on Tuesday stating that the allegations had been carefully investigated and rejecting outright any claim that the Board's investigation has been superficial?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in my answer to the House that the Chairman of the National Energy Board had said that the Board had investigated claims in the past to the effect that the line was unsafe but had found those claims to be totally unfounded, further, that they were prepared to consider any new evidence from CTV, or, indeed, any other person. I mentioned one particular man in my last answer. I have not been told that the evidence has been supplied to the National Energy Board. I will be pleased to check with the Board, to learn why the meeting has not been arranged.

Mr. Beatty: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for his offer. The president of CTV wrote to the secretary of the National Energy Board. In the letter, a copy of which was sent to the Minister, he said:

> CTV certainly wishes to co-operate in a further, and complete, investigation into safety on the TransCanada Pipelines. In that regard, we would request that a representative from the Energy Board arrange to meet with Rudi Carter, W-5 Field Producer. At that time, Mr. Carter will turn over evidence he has received concerning the pipeline.

In view of this, why has the minister not followed up before now, to ensure that the meeting takes place? Will the minister, when he reports back to the House, indicate whether he feels the decision of the chairman of the National Energy Board to issue this news release on Tuesday in which he stated that all allegations had been investigated and found to be completely false was in any way justifiable?

POST OFFICE

ABUSIVE LETTERS FROM UNION TO CERTAIN EMPLOYEES—POSSIBLE ACTION TO REINSTATE EMPLOYEES AS UNION MEMBERS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Postmaster General. I wish to ask whether he is aware that employees of certain post offices which did not receive the ballot during the last strike have since received very abusive and insulting letters from the Postal Workers' Union, letters which really come very close to being the subject of some kind of criminal investigation?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Postmaster General): The hon. member, with his usual courtesy, showed me one of these letters. I hope it did not come from the president of the local because it is a letter which reflects a very sick mind. The letter was unsigned, so I would not want to say that it was written by the president of the local. If it were, I can only say that it is a sad day for labour when any local should fall into the hands of such a sick person. On the positive side, I can assure the hon. member and many people across this country that the workers who crossed the picket lines and went back to work because they had the courage of their convictions and because there was no mechanism by which they could express their opinions democratically, can work secure in the knowledge that their job security, their promotions and their grievances will be processed just as though they were members of the union.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Malone: I thank the Postmaster General for his response. In cases where post offices did not receive ballots, is the Post Office Department doing anything to ensure that the postal workers concerned can continue to be members of the union ongoing since a number of them were disenfranchised or had their entitlement removed?

Mr. Mackasey: I must remind the hon. member that the constitutions of all unions, including that particular union, provide for an appeal against suspension. It is not automatic. People who are suspended have the right to appeal. Fortunately, the overwhelming majority of the members of that union are decent people and the advice I can give to the members who were disenfranchised, either accidentally or intentionally, is to appeal the suspension and let the public see precisely the degree of democracy or lack of democracy that exists in that local.

BILINGUALISM

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON DECLARATION OF BILINGUAL DISTRICTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Serge Joyal (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to the President of the Treasury Board.

Considering that the report of the Bilingual Districts Advisory Board was tabled in the House on November 21, 1975, and that pursuant to the Official Languages Act, 90 days must elapse between the tabling of the report and the proclamation of bilingual districts, can the President of the Treasury Board tell the House whether he has finished his consultations with the groups concerned and the provinces, and whether he intends to proclaim bilingual districts on February 21, 1976, as the act requires?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the act does not require that we proclaim them after 90 days, it only gives us authority to do so. We do not intend to proceed immediately, because we have not consulted all the persons who want to make representations to us on that matter.

HOUSING

REQUEST THAT ANTI-INFLATION BOARD PREVENT INCREASE IN PRICE OF LUMBER

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

Can the minister tell the House whether he is aware that the price of lumber, and especially structural lumber, has increased by 40 to 45 per cent since December 1? If so, would he request those in charge of the Anti-Inflation Board to attend to the matter and put an end to it, or at least improve the situation, with a view to achieving the objective he announced to the House, namely the construction of thousands of new homes?

[English]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I am not in agreement with the precise figures given, though I do not mean to argue them now with the hon. member. I should like to check them with him. I shall certainly speak to my colleague responsible for the Anti-Inflation Board. We are watching every area where we can keep costs down believing, basically, that it is a matter of increasing production and keeping expectations and the type of housing down to that which is affordable. We are certainly watching those price rises but the industry indicates to me that even, though increases in prices are expected this year, if they can maintain continuity, of supply and production they should be able to reduce prices. We certainly want to watch to see there is no infraction of those things which come under the responsibility of the Anti-Inflation Board.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

REASON FOR EARLY DECISION ON APPLICATION OF DOME PETROLEUM FOR DRILLING PERMIT FOR BEAUFORT SEA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I should like to welcome him back from British Columbia where I hope that at least the weather was warm. During the hon. gentleman's absence the hon. gentleman's parliamentary secretary indicated to the House that a recommendation would be made on February 18 with regard to the application of Dome Petroleum for drilling permits offshore in the Beaufort Sea. Dr. Milne, a member of the minister's departmental staff, has indicated that the likelihood of human error makes a blow-out almost a certainty in terms of drilling in that ocean and, also, that new technologies are not available either for clean-up or control. Can the minister advise the House why there is such urgency about making a decision on this question in view of such statements by officials in his own department and also, of course, in the light of the Department of the Environment's report dealing with the environmental impact of drilling in the Beaufort Sea?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The basic decision in principle with regard to drilling in the Beaufort Sea was taken a couple of years ago, but the permits to be issued were to be subjected to environmental restrictions and conditions to be imposed after the tests and the roughly $12 million worth of environmental studies had been carried out. This is a matter which I am currently discussing with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment as to just what these conditions would be. A decision has not yet been taken.

Mr. Leggatt: The minister did not answer the question why there should be such urgency. In view of the fact that the public is now paying for the Berger inquiry which is looking into environmental and social conditions in the high Arctic, why is it that the terms of reference with regard to drilling offshore have not been extended clearly to the Berger inquiry? Again, why can the minister not wait for the full facts to be developed and revealed before drilling permits are issued? In other words, why cannot the Berger Commission take this matter fully under its wing and make a report on this aspect as well as on pipelining in the Arctic?

Mr. Buchanan: The final phrase dealt with pipelining in the Arctic. Mr. Justice Berger's mandate is quite precise. It deals with the application of Canso and subsequently we added to it the aspect of the Foothills application where it deviated from the Canso. That is the limit of Mr. Justice Berger's mandate. As for the time factor, I doubt it will be done by the middle of February. This is something I shall have to pursue with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FERRY SERVICE—STEPS TO PREVENT INTERRUPTION OF SERVICE IN VIEW OF COURT DECISION

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the recent federal court decision which found the Dominion Government was in breach of the duty imposed upon it when it allowed the ferry service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland to be interrupted, has the minister anything to report on a solution to prevent further interruptions, or even a contigency plan, which could be brought into use in the event of a situation arising which might cause future interruption?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I have not, of course, yet had a chance to examine those words. The question of interruptions, particularly as it relates to labour problems, is one which has caused some concern. An attempt is being made to create an atmosphere that may allow for these services to be continued, even when ordinary labour tactics might stop them, with the general co-operation and agreement of all who are concerned. I cannot, of course, indicate that that assures service in all circumstances, but it has improved the likelihood that interruptions can be avoided.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the government House leader about the business for this week and next week? While doing so, I should like to ask whether he would report the government's position on the suggestion discussed between the House leaders as to the disposition that the House would make of its time next Thursday and Friday, in light of the very important and dramatic even that will be taking place in the city of Ottawa at that time. I ask him to bear in mind that the New Democratic Party took similar advantage, and it is not impossible that the government party themselves might be interested in a similar arrangement in the not too distant future.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, following today we will be continuing with consideration of Bill C-58. If there is completion of the discussion of motions tomorrow, I hope there would be general agreement that any votes would be deferred until Monday. In any event, Bill C-58 will be continued at the report stage for the time being, and then as soon as possible we will take third reading. When that is disposed of, we will continue second reading of Bill C-68. I should like to express my hope that we can also fit in Bill C-82 and Bill S-10 and complete consideration of them.

As the House leader of the official opposition has reminded us, there is a very dramatic event next week which may or may not elevate one of the members of his party in the House to the position of leader. At any rate, this great event is an important one and I quite agree that the courtesies of the House should be extended to all parties when they enter upon these considerations. There were various adjectives I could have applied, but I will not do so. Therefore, I propose that we should not sit on the evening of Thursday, February 19, and that we should stand adjourned until Monday, February 23. I wonder whether there would be unanimous consent to make the following order:

That the House shall adjourn at five p.m. on Thursday, February 19, 1976, and shall thereupon stand adjourned until Monday, February 23, 1976.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There having been some discussion on this matter, since at this point we are discussing a point of order raised by the hon. member for Peace River, such a motion, if it were to be entertained by the House, could only be presented to the House at this time by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jones: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There not being unanimous consent, such a motion cannot be considered at this time.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask a supplementary question regarding the House business. There were reports this morning on CBC radio about what I can only call leaks respecting the confidential report now being reviewed by a joint committee of the House and the Senate having to do with employer-employee relations in the public service of Canada. I had originally thought that this might be a question of privilege, but the only action that could be taken in that event would be to have the matter go to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, which would probably be futile.

I think that our anxiety, which I am sure is shared by the Chair, is to establish procedures of some kind where this kind of thing ought not to happen; indeed could not happen. Perhaps it might be better if I asked the government House leader whether he would consider accelerating the formation of the special committee that has been discussed regarding rights and immunities of members of parliament. Rather than have an examination of this particular matter, I think we ought to have an examination of all the matters affecting the security of documents in so far as this might apply to documents in House of Commons committee reports and other reports. Not doing so could only lead to embarrassment, and on many occasions could only lead to misleading of the public. Since this matter does affect the rights and privileges of members, I would ask whether or not any thought has been given by the government House leader to dealing with the matter in the way I suggest.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I must say I had not given consideration to that particular aspect of the matter. However, I did view very sympathetically the suggestion made by the House leader of the official opposition, and I hope we can get together to discuss the terms of reference.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the point of order with regard to the business of the House. May I say that when it looked as though the motion for the adjournment for sake of the Progressive Conservative convention would be accepted, I was going to ask whether we should not consider the possibility that the Conservatives might not be able to finish their balloting on Sunday, and that maybe we would have to take Monday off as well. I should like to make that offer, provided, of course, it would get the support of the hon. member for Moncton.

With regard to the business of the House, may I ask the minister two questions? My first question relates to Bill C-208 which, according to notices posted in the lobbies, is to be dealt with at four o'clock tomorrow. In view of the wide support for this bill having to do with Heritage Day, especially on the government side, can the government House leader say whether the government will make additional time available, if necessary, to get this bill through third reading, if that does not happen in the one hour allotted to it tomorrow?

My second question relates to the statement that the Minister of Veterans Affairs was to make today on the proposed legislation regarding Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war. This is a promise that has been made to us on four separate occasions, namely, that we would get such a statement today. May I ask whether we are to have that statement?

Mr. Sharp: First of all, with regard to Bill C-208, this is a private bill. The government is also concerned about the matter, and if this particular bill is not approved it is the intention of the government at a later stage to introduce a bill that will deal not only with the subject matter of that bill but other related issues. It is our view that it would be better to put these matters all into a complete package; but, of course, if the House approves this bill, one part of the package would be approved. However, it is not the intention of the government to give any more time to this private bill because it believes that the subject matter can be dealt with better and more expeditiously through a government bill that also deals with related aspects of the subject of the hon. member's private bill.

On the question of the statement that my colleague the Minister of Veterans Affairs had intended to make today, as I said yesterday in reply to the question, I was not sure whether he would be able to make it. We did have a further extensive discussion in cabinet this morning which was not completed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, of which I gave Your Honour notice. Your Honour may wonder how I can see a question of privilege in this, but I remind you, sir, that you have frequently told us that a matter of privilege has to be something which interferes with a member's capacity to do his job in parliament.

It seems to me, sir, that when we have been told on four occasions that a statement was going to be made today regarding this important matter, and when this news has been spread widely across the country and those who are concerned have had their hopes raised, for the government not to keep that promise is a violation of the privileges of members of this House. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that in fact even yesterday you were of the impression that a statement was coming soon. On Wednesday, January 28, the Minister of Veterans Affairs said it would come in two weeks. The next day, on Thursday, January 29, the President of the Privy Council confirmed it. On Tuesday, February 3, the Minister of Veterans Affairs confirmed it again, and on Thursday, February 5, the President of the Privy Council confirmed it, once more, for Thursday, February 12.

Mr. Speaker, I just do not think this is the way to treat parliament. We are talking about something for which some veterans have waited over 30 years, and we have been waiting for specific action on this matter since June 12 of last year, when our committee's report was tabled, and we have had this commitment for the last two weeks that there would be a statement today.

You may ask me, sir, what redress there is if I insist that this is a question of privilege. At least there could be a reference of this matter to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, where we might find out what is going on. If you find that I have a question of privilege, I would be prepared to make that motion. At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I protest most vigorously the fact that Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war in Hong Kong or in Europe are being let down as a result of there being no statement today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member knows well—and he has very accurately described his intervention as a most vigorous protest—that his point can scarcely, by any stretch of the rules as we understand them, be accepted as a question of privilege. I am sure the hon. member and others realize the result if I were even to begin to recognize every broken promise as a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Sharp.]

An hon. Member: Especially by the Liberals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

FLYING OF UNITED STATES FLAG FROM PEACE TOWER

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the balance of routine proceedings, on Friday last questions were raised, particularly by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), about security implications relating to an incident involving the flag on the Peace Tower. I do not propose to make any further statement in the House, but I do want to assure hon. members that I have received a very thorough and detailed report as a result of an investigation into the incident. I have had an opportunity of discussing that report not only with the House leaders but also with the right hon. gentleman who raised the point of order. The advice I have received has been most helpful and perhaps remarkable for this chamber in that the conclusion we reached and the recommendations we considered were unanimous.

I simply want to assure all hon. members who are interested in the subject that they are welcome to discuss it with me privately. I have the report and the recommendations under review and will continue to keep the matter under very careful study. As I say, it will not be the subject matter of any further comment in the House.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I intended to rise on a question of privilege but I have changed my mind and rise instead on a point of order. It relates to the "no" voiced by someone in response to the request for unanimous consent. While I have been given to understand where that "no" came from, that is not my point. Let me point out to you, Mr. Speaker, and to hon. members of this House that the motion brought before the House by the government House leader was one that had been anticipated by many people throughout the House, including the protective staff, the cleaning staff, members of the restaurant and others, including hon. members opposite.

Far be it from me to question anyone's motives and our system allows for a dissenting voice. However, we will have many occasions involving leadership conventions and campaigns of one kind or another during which many members of the House belonging to the various parties will not be in a position to be here. While our system allows for a dissenting voice when unanimous consent is requested, I think the system must be changed in order to bring it into line with contemporary thinking. Without making any slurs in the direction of anyone whatsoever, and speaking in terms of co-operation, equity, justice and decency, I would hope that this motion can again be brought foward at eight o'clock this evening after everyone has had the opportunity of looking into the matter, at which time I hope a sense of justice, equity, decency and co-operation will prevail. If the motion is then refused, I would hope—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In all fairness to the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) and his comment in respect of the withholding of unanimous consent,

I sympathize with his point of view but I think I ought not to let him continue further. The fact of the matter is that the withholding of unanimous consent today, for whatever motive, really had to do with the introduction of the motion at this particular moment. There is nothing to prevent the introduction of the motion in the ordinary way with proper notice. In that way, the motion does not require unanimous consent and at the appropriate time after the notice period has expired, the House may direct its attention to the matter in the normal way. In that event, the matter will be debatable, but the duration of the debate is then very much in the hands of hon. members of the House and the outcome will depend on the vote on the motion. The question of unanimous consent had only to do with the introduction of the motion today, without notice.

Motions.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, in view of my understanding as to the subject for debate today, I am prepared to wait until the end of routine proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has perhaps anticipated what might become a point of order. The fact is that the order of the day which has been agreed upon is not specifically the hon. member's motion, but is so similar that the debate in respect of the one would certainly be considered a debate in respect of the other. I do not know whether it is necessary to make a disposition of the motion at some time. Perhaps the simple course would be to proceed with that which has been agreed upon as the order of the day when orders of the day are called and, depending on the outcome, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) may wish to withdraw the motion at that time. However, this if something that can be considered then.

Mr. McCleave: I am prepared to proceed whenever I am recognized by the Chair.

SCULPTURE ON LAWN INSIDE GATE AT PRIME MINISTER'S RESIDENCE

Question No. 3,471—Mr. Cossitt:

What is the stone or concrete sculpture or artifact on the lawn inside the gate at the Prime Minister's offical residence, 24 Sussex Drive (a) what is its purpose (b) who designed it (c) is it considered a work of art (d) what was its cost?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): The "Pierced Vertical Form" which graces the grounds of the Official Residence of the Prime Minister is on loan from the National Gallery of Canada. It is the work of Dame Barbara Hepworth, D.B.E., whose contribution to twentieth-century sculpture was so significant as to achieve for her early international recognition. In the decades from her first exhibition in London in the year 1928, until her tragic death in a fire at her Cornish studio in St. Ives on May 21 of last year, she had exhibitions in numerous countries including of course the U.S.A. and Canada. Her works can be found in scores of collections and museums around the world. In Canada, the Vancouver Art Gallery and the National Gallery own some of her works. Among many distinctions accorded her are the Commission by the United Nations, in 1963, to make the abstract bronze in memory of Dag Hammarskjold to stand outside the United Nations Secretariat in New York City, and in 1970, the award of Le Grand Prix International de l'Art Féminin. The "Pierced Vertical Form", made of Nebrasina stone, is part of the acquisition program of the National Gallery of Canada aiming at gathering in Canada representative works of outstanding artists. Public funds for this acquisition program are subject to Parliamentary approval in the normal way through the approval of estimates. It is judged preferable not to disclose as a rule the acquisition cost of individual items as it might invite comparisons between artists or their agents or preclude the possibility that items might be acquired at a cost below their market value. The "Pierced Vertical Form" was acquired by the National Gallery of Canada in May 1966.

3. The CBC does not agree with the suggestion that its coverage is unbalanced.

Mr. J.-J. Blais (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the House that the questions enumerated by the parliamentary secretary shall be deemed to have been answered.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to reassure hon. members that I will be putting down a notice of motion on the motion that I proposed be adopted, by unanimous consent, today. I will be putting it down today.

Mr. Speaker: There are one or two minor procedural matters to be clarified before we proceed with orders of the day. A motion stands in the name of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) and it is to be seconded by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson). It is substantially a motion which has remained on the order paper for some time in their respective names. On the other hand, it has been slightly modified.

It has been agreed that this subject matter will be debated today, that an allotted day would be used for the purpose of that debate, and that the motion would come to a vote at 9.45 this evening. However, it is not to be considered as a votable motion upon an allotted day. These are some understandings I have. What has happened is that the motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants has been rolled into today's subject and it will therefore dispose of that motion. This is an allotted day that will culminate in a vote, but it is simply the consecration of an allotted day to the vote and discussion of this matter and is not to be considered a vote of confidence in the way a vote on an allotted day would ordinarily be considered. Is that understood and agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS—CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants) moved:

That the Seventh Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1975, be concurred in, and that the committee be authorized to examine the matters referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the said report during the balance of this session.

He said: Mr. Speaker, some years ago when I first came to this place I was told one should always make one's speech as if it were one's last speech. Feeling the way I do today that might be more prophetic than otherwise. In any event I can claim to be about as representative of my area of Canada as anyone could be in this regard. My area is ravaged by approximately 30 per cent influenza and I think that after I have battled it for a week I probably have at least 30 per cent influenza. In any event, Sir, I will try to do the best I can on a subject which I regard as important and on which the House has given certain of us special responsibilities for more than a year. I hope we can persuade the House that the motion which stands before the House today amended somewhat should receive the favour of the House.

Perhaps my main job will be to outline more or less what we have attempted to do in respect of the task that was set before us, and how we have handled it in the last year or so. The task originally started in the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. In addition to the multitude of orders in council, regulations and other directives from government or government departments that could be considered to be statutory instruments, all of which amounted to at least 1,000 documents a year, it was also considered that this particular committee, which was a joint committee of both Houses, should look into two other matters. One concerned the guidelines the government uses in dealing with notices of motions for the production of papers. The second reference to the steering committee concerned the subject matter of a bill that has been dear to the heart of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the House leader for the Conservative party, for a good number of years.

I think it can be said, without paying exceptional favour to one member, that to consider the matter of freedom of information, which is what we are dealing with, without knowing the role of the hon. member for Peace River would be like staging Romeo and Juliet without at least one balcony. The hon. member for Peace River has over the years, going back at least a decade in my recollection, and surely for most of his parliamentary career, concerned himself with the subject of freedom of information. I hope he will be taking part in the debate later today, so I shall not dare to anticipate the wisdom he will give the House.

We had these two references to the committee: first, the guidelines which should govern us in dealing with notices of motions for the production of papers and, second, the subject matter of the freedom of information bill. How have we responded thereto? I think we have responded in a pretty reasonable way. We held 15 or 20 meetings to deal with those two topics. I should like to acquaint the House with the witnesses who appeared before the committee. We had the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp); we had Professor Donald C. Rowat of the academic community; we had Dr. Davidson Dunton who is now president of the Ontario Press Council. Dr. Dunton, as many of us will realize, was president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, a noted academic as president of Carleton University and one very familiar with the intricate relations, if I may use that term, between government, government departments and the public.

We also had before the committee the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) in his then capacity as parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council. We had before us Miss Lise Paquette, who had an official position in the Privy Council office, I believe, with regard to the answering of members' questions, and we had the hon. member for Peace River. We had such distinguished public servants as the former Clerk of the Privy Council, Gordon Robertson, Dr. Gordon Smith and Mr. D. F. Wall. We had some young civil libertarians from the Ottawa community. We had that well known intellectual public servant, private servant and university servant, Dr. Maxwell Cohen, and we had the awesome figure of Robert Cooper who is the ombudsman for CBC. Those were our witnesses in addition, I might say—and I will refer to this again in a few moments—to people of the committee itself.

We arranged a trip to the U.S.A., to Washington, where we studied the freedom of information act which came out originally in an early Kennedy year and then was amended in a Nixon year—quite a remarkable piece of legislation, more particularly as it was amended in the post-Watergate situation. We dealt there with members of the executive and members of the Senate and the House who were responsible in large measure for bringing this act about. We dealt there with what I would call the Nader group for short, but I would identify them as those who espoused particularly the interests of special or general consumer groups. We had the advantage of all those people in dealing with how a freedom of information act should operate. We heard from the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River on their impressions of the operation of the acts dealing with freedom of information in Sweden, in Finland, in Russia and in other countries: we had the advantage of all their thinking. After hearing all this evidence, we have found ourselves probably with more questions to be answered than when we started out—very important questions as to whether a freedom of information set-up can properly be advanced in Canada.

I will not argue this afternoon for any particular school of thought with regard to freedom of information, but I might well venture one or two of my personal prejudices on this subject. What I am doing, on behalf of the members of the committee, Mr. Speaker and members of the House, is asking that the study be extended. I think we have to hear, for example, from people such as the dominion archivists about the release of information in its time. I think we should have the parliamentary librarian, and other witnesses probably from the academic community.

[Mr. McCleave.]

I suspect that as a result of what we have heard from the Federal Bureau of Investigation in the United States we must have before us either the RCMP or at least representatives of police associations to deal with the matter of freedom of information. I hope I will be allowed to beg off these particular specialties as to police information, because I am confident that my parliamentary colleagues will rush to a rather fading voice and tell us something about what was heard in Washington when we talked to members of the Federal Bureau of Investigation to find out the problems they have encountered under the freedom of information act.

I should like to put a couple of quotations on the record. The first is an excerpt from a hearing which the committee held on Tuesday, February 25, 1975—almost a year ago—when we had before us Professor Donald C. Rowat who was then, and perhaps is now, president of the Canadian Political Science Association. He made the following point about going to Sweden to study the openness of the Swedish system with regard to the provision of information. At page 15:9 of our proceedings of that day he is recorded as having said the following. He is referring to a reporter of the Swedish equivalent of the Canadian Press, that is, the big, national press agency in Stockholm. He had discussions with them and they asked him to accompany one of the reporters who was going on his rounds to government departments the next day. That was arranged, and he went with the reporter. This is the eye-opener, and I hope that the following words will be remembered by everybody when they make up their minds tonight on this debate. Professor Rowat said:

> So I went with him and, to my amazement, I found that in every government ministry and department there was a press room where the incoming and outgoing mail was laid out each morning for an hour. Now, this did interfere a little bit with government work as these documents and files were not available to the civil servants while they were laid out in the press room.

In other words, there was an opportunity for members of the press, at least on behalf of the public, to go into these government departments and find out what was in the mind of the citizens of Sweden. To me that was an eye-opener. Even the prime minister's office in that country could be held open to inspection as to what occupied people's minds. We simply do not have that sort of system here. Whether we want it here is another question. It may be that members would think that this is going a little too far, or they may think it goes very much too far—I do not know that—but I would think that, at first blush at least, it is a recognition that a more candid view of the operations of government should be available to the public.

The other quotation I would like to put on the record is from Dr. Davidson Dunton who gave evidence to the committee on Tuesday, March 4. There is a lot of material that should be read and studied by hon. members with regard to this important topic, but I will not attempt to read much more. I thought that Dr. Dunton put it as well as anybody when he said, as recorded at page 17:5 of that issue:

> It is our view that in a situation like this, government should be much more open than it is. Citizens—not just people in the government—should have a right to the greatest possible amount of information about things the government is doing or will do and therefore will affect the lives of citizens and which, incidentally, citizens are paying for.

Over and over again we had, in the deliberations of the committee, in the correspondence that each of us received and, I dare say, in the correspondence that members of the public sent to us for our attention, the question as to why they cannot find out about this or that. They say that the government commissioned a study on, let us say, the safety of snowmobiles, and why should all that be stuck away behind some departmental privilege? Should it not be out in the open? When people are paid through our taxes to carry out studies which involve the health and well-being of the citizens of Canada, why cannot everyone know about it?

These complaints have come in. Mr. Cooper, the CBC ombudsman, gave us half a dozen. One of the reasons I hope the House will accept the motion today is that we are now getting answers from government departments, but because we referred the subject matter to the House, as we did just before Christmas, it is felt that these answers really cannot be studied or made public until we have our terms of reference back again. That may seem like a very technical point, but in this business where technicalities sometimes are very important we have to consider that sort of thing. I have tried to give my remarks some flavour; I realize not perfectly, but others will make up for my deficiencies with hearts, spades and more pizzazz that I am able to muster.

With regard to the future of the operations of the committee, there is at least one group which would like to come before us to make its presentation. The members of the Canadian Bar are starting to assemble some thoughts on the matter of freedom of information. From time to time overtures have been made to the parliamentary press gallery, the lone representation of which today is certainly a fighter for freedom of information. He is the man who took on the Nova Scotia censor board singlehandedly and has done rather well for himself. In any event, we hope the parliamentary press gallery will concern itself with a topic which must bother its representatives in their day-to-day activities in Ottawa.

I said I would not give very many thoughts of my own on this topic, and I will not, except that I hope two things will happen. First, I hope that the whole matter can be turned around and the basis will be that there should be such a policy of openness that departments, bureaucrats, ministers and the like who want to keep something back would have to establish why information should be withheld. That is just a personal feeling. The second thing is that from the moment of inception of a freedom of information act it would be regarded as essential by all ministries that from the moment a file is opened the material in that file should see the light of public scrutiny at the request of any reasonable person who comes, without any special animus, to see it.

While I have not presented the matter with any great nerve—and I cannot—I hope that with those two thoughts in mind the House will give consideration to the motion which stands in the name of myself, seconded by the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore, and that we will be given back the mandate to carry on the studies. I think the House would indeed be pleased with what we come up with in, say, several months' time.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate the chairman of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments, and also his co-chairman, Senator Forsey from the other place, for the job they have done in leading the committee and trying to keep the committee on the rails in spite of its particular desire to go off and follow its own hobby horses. It would be remiss of me, also, if I did not congratulate the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who should be feeling quite happy today—a man who has fought to have this subject aired before the House of Commons. He has had some notable accomplishments and has seen some progress being made with regard to resolving the problems which he has been prominent in bringing to the attention of the House.

I believe this is an important debate because to some extent it will dictate the kind of government we will have in the future. The kinds of solutions to the problems the government faces are largely wrapped up in the amount of information which is made available to citizens in the complex world in which we live.

I come to the matter of dealing with freedom of information, not out of any ideological bent but from a practical point of view after having served for 2½ years as parliamentary secretary to presidents of the privy council. One of the things which has sparked my attention has been the fact that the person or the group which is hurt most by the secrecy of government is the government itself. One of the difficulties we have is that in a complex society there is a tendency for governments and others to think that they, indeed, have all the information required to make a particular set of decisions. In point of fact, when one looks at those decisions and when one looks at the supporting information behind those decisions, it becomes perfectly clear that the greatest victims of secrecy are governments themselves.

I do not think it is necessary to give many examples: two will be sufficient. The first example is that since we have entered into the anti-inflation program nowhere have I seen, in any of the documents the government has provided, a reasonable, full and complete explanation of why the government changed its mind at the time it did and went into the program. In view of the fact that there are some sectors of our society opposed to the program, it seems this is a rather unfortunate omission, particularly since most of the statistical information and other arguments are readily available. Here is an example of how the government has managed to hurt itself.

Let me give another example of the limitations the government automatically imposes upon itself by not making available to citizens the data bases on which it bases its decisions. When we went into the anti-inflation program, the government in its wisdom considered that there were approximately 1,500 firms in Canada which fitted under the guidelines, that is, those which had more than 500 employees. Now that we are into the program, what do we find? We find that the number now is approximately 6,500, and still rising. Out of a desire to protect itself and its own deliberations, the government has made decisions and has hurt itself in trying to convince Canadians of the adequacy of the course it is following, and it has made decisions which seem to be incorrect on the basis of the information that was its own data basis.

It seems to me that in the complex society in which we live, where the issues are very difficult to comprehend, even for the experts—and there are too many experts—we very often do not have an opportunity to have their discussions and preliminary decisions aired to a wider range of people so that the holes therein can be picked at, discovered and corrected; and the people who suffer most are the Canadian people who elect a government which has a fear of providing this additional information. So I want to say at the onset that I fully support the motion. I hope the House will support it, and I hope the government will take to heart the findings and discoveries which are slowly coming to it, one of them being that the government itself and the party in power often is hurt more by this excessive devotion to secrecy than anyone else.

It seems to me that the function of debate in the country and in the House is to explore in a reasonable way the alternatives available to the country, and for the House and the government to decide just what is best for us all. Nobody wins in the game of politics when we make wrong decisions based on inadequate information, which so often is the case and as we have before us in the current set of circumstances. I want to emphasize my support and the fact that I believe we are on the verge of making some significant progress in this regard. I think credit should be given to the joint committee which has laboured on this matter and provided a focal point for Canadians interested in the subject.

I have noted the dilemma the government faces in terms of the inadequate data base and the assumptions it makes that it has an adequate one. It is difficult to have debate in this country if we do not have some information on the data base. One of the most frustrating things is to see debate in the House of Commons or in the country where participants are using separate bases of fact. In such cases, there can be no meeting of minds. In most cases, however, one can have fruitful debate where there is agreement on the basic facts. It strikes me that the government is the institution most capable of synthesizing the facts. Through a wide variety of sources it has a greater opportunity to make available the information in the bowels of its operations than it now does.

It is extraordinarily difficult to get the information out, and there are two reasons for that. The first is the desire of people within the civil service to protect their position, and the second is to some extent the socialization that goes on. When a person enters the civil service he feels that he must protect his data base and hold it for his superiors and the government. That means that when the ordinary citizen asks for information he is often met with a refusal, mainly because of this socialization. People prefer to protect themselves by not giving out information. It is built into the system, and that built-in bias is one of the things that must be dealt with. I do not deny that it will be difficult.

The second element often is the particular desire of departments or sections within departments to protect information they have obtained. The saying "knowledge is power" applies here. Very often it is difficult for the other sections of government to get that information or research. In my experience of trying to ferret out information for members of parliament I have found this one of the most difficult obstacles to overcome. It is also a psychological problem, and it has to be beaten.

I believe the first thing the committee should do is recommend that the existing guidelines for the production of papers—which is a matter before the committee now as a separate reference—be brought down in the form of legislation. I believe that psychologically that would give a great deal of impetus to breaking down the internal barriers that exist not only within the civil service but also among ministers. I think the very fact of putting those guidelines into legislation and amending them where required, so that the committee could come back with the recommendations and also the precise wording the government might use, would be helpful: it would be a constructive step. We would accomplish the end of putting the guidelines into statute law. If we were to include as a preamble the first sentence of the guidelines to the effect that the basic premise was to be that all information should be freely available, with the exceptions, the premise would override a great deal of the objections hon. members might have.

If we were to make that recommendation, we would also provide a speedy way of resolving the inevitable differences that occur, that is, that the government can choose who can have information and whether it should or should not be released. The system I would recommend, ideally, would be that used in Sweden. The hon. member for Peace River and I were quite surprised to find out that when there was conflict between members of the public for information and the bureaucracy which did not wish to provide it, those cases were settled within one day. If the matter went to the supreme administrative tribunal, it could take two or three days. The settlement of cases under freedom of information was considered a priority issue and was done swiftly, not by the courts but by the administrative tribunal. Perhaps one might want to think of a system that could be incorporated in a bill that would provide speedy resolution of these problems in a manner fair and consistent with our conditions.

My suggestion is to adapt the system used in the Unemployment Insurance Act. Where there is a dispute after the board of referees has made a decision on an appeal, one can appeal to the umpire. The umpire is a federal court judge acting as the final court of appeal under the system set up under the Unemployment Insurance Act. I believe that if one were to put in a proper time limit—say one working week—perhaps the federal court judge might not be available for this, but some other court could be developed and that would provide a speedy resolution to the problem of what was and what was not acceptable. It seems to me the jurisprudence would be relatively simple and there would be a quick way of solving the problem. At the present time, cabinet is the final court of appeal as to whether documents or information requested shall be released. This is, clearly, not satisfactory to all members of the House of Commons. In my experience, it was not always satisfactory to me as the person having some responsibility for the administration of the guidelines. I believe these would be a valuable series of recommendations. I believe the committee should take them and deal with them as its first item of business once the current round of hearings has been completed.

The other problem that comes to mind is quite important, and that is the conflict between privacy and freedom of information. The example given by the chairman, of the Swedish system, whereby incoming mail to the government is exposed to the eyes of the world, and also the replies, strikes me as being a very unique set of circumstances and not one that I should care to see duplicated in Canada. I believe any citizen has the right to write to his member of parliament, his government, and to be sure that information is confidential between him and his government, between him and his member of parliament or, indeed, anybody else. I do not believe that I, as a third person, have the right to look upon anybody's correspondence with the government; that is correspondence that is private between the individual and the government.

I think for any kind of freedom of information we should be looking upon it from the point of view of whether there is conflict between freedom of information and the right to privacy. We should put emphasis on the right of privacy of individuals or organizations communicating with the government. That is fundamental to our kind of society, and I would hate to see it destroyed. This means that what we are doing, unlike the Swedish example, is ensuring that if I write to the Unemployment Insurance Commission or the Canada Pension Plan, my correspondence is private to those government organizations; it is not exposed to the press or to my neighbours. My relationship with my government should be on the same basis as my relationship with anybody else. They are private relations with the government; they are not open to the press and to neighbours.

Mr. Speaker, the other point I want to raise in conjunction with the privacy area is the related dilemma of organizations and individuals who have given information to the government, upon request, on the basis of its confidentiality, or even cases where the government has established programs where people are allowed to go in and participate and the information given to complete the application is also confidential. I believe that kind of confidentiality should continue to be engrained in our system. At the same time, I recognize there are going to be severe difficulties. It seems to me this will be a different question for the committee to work its way through.

There are also some related issues: the right of the government to discuss its policies and alternatives in privacy; the right of civil servants to make recommendations to their superiors and to the cabinet; the right for the internal dialogue in government to continue unabated; and the right of the government itself to reach its own conclusions in its own due course.

I distinguish between the concept of material and information that is factual and material and information based on opinion and conclusion. There must be such distinctions. The former minister of finance, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner) said that only about 10 per cent of what is in a cabinet document really has to be secret. The only difficulty is that nobody agrees on which 10 per cent should be secret and which 90 per cent should be released to become public knowledge. If hon. members look at cabinet documents which have been published basically in the form of green papers, or at other cabinet documents which have been leaked from time to time, they will readily see that even cabinet documents, because of their structure, can give rise to different claims, different conclusions and even different recommendations. Without doubt, many other government documents structured in the same way should be dealt with in the same way. I submit that the result would be more information being made available to the Canadian people.

In the short time available to me I shall suggest a number of matters to the House and the committee which we must deal with as we consider these difficulties. First, there is the cost of the operation. Clearly, if we are to make more open our process of government and release more information, it will be more costly. An information network will need to be created; it will need to span the country; it will have to provide information quickly, and not delay it. Second, the issue of bilingualism arises. With the development of a bilingual capacity in the civil service, and as more and more high level civil servants can read and understand both languages, an inquiry can be brought to the attention of a civil servant in the language of the originator. The question then is, are the documents requested to go out in both languages or only one? Since we are discussing the principle of freedom of information, should not a document provided be in the language of the originator?

Third, we should look at time limits within which documents and material should be provided. Although I do not have any positive information, it strikes me that the ten working days provided in the American legislation is too short in view of the complexity of material being requested. That has been the complaint with regard to the American legislation. Perhaps we should consider a series of graduated times depending on the complexity of the information requested, or we might set a limit of 20 days. The committee should consider this. Fourth, we must remember, as we become more open, that there will be changes in the operation of the bureaucracy. We should consider this seriously and learn if this process will make the bureaucracy more efficient or less efficient, what the cost benefits will be and what the ultimate effects on the bureaucracy itself will be. I have mentioned the psychological impact which I think will take place even if we accept existing guidelines in legislative form. In my opinion, that should be counted as a considerable plus.

Fifth, we must consider the possible abuses which could arise under the legislation. It was clear, from the experience the hon. member for Peace River and I had in the Scandinavian countries, and clear from the experience in the United States, that there is a potential for abuse under the legislation, particularly in connection with regulatory bodies and regulatory functions. In that area there is tremendous potential for abuse. Sixth, I should like to see a more precise definition as to what information is to be released if indeed we go beyond the guidelines. Information I touched on previously, such as that dealing with privacy, personal records and references to individuals within documents, should be considered as well.

I know my time has almost ended. Let me make one more suggestion. Now that the committee is reaching the end of its work and has come to the end of its hearing of witnesses, the time has come for the government to come before us and present its position in clear terms. This would be most helpful. I invite the government to come before the committee and put forward a position which can be put into legislative form. It is time to do this. We can develop such ideas together in partnership and produce thereby a much better piece of legislation and a much better system of practice than we now have.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I begin by commenting on the last suggestion of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). Of course the government will have to be consulted. We must know what they want to do. I hope the committee will formulate its own recommendations. If the government approves, very well; but the committee should tell the government what it thinks should be done in this area: the government should not tell the committee, as my hon. friend suggested. I do not object to consulting the government. If they have plans, I am sure we shall be glad to learn from them about those plans.

The core of the report we are considering has to do with support in principle for freedom of information legislation, which I regard as highly important. The committee's very name deters any great interest in what it does; its very title, "Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments", is calculated to keep people disinterested in the discussion in the committee. The freedom of information aspect of the committee's work affects every citizen, the operation of parliament and government generally. We should seek to destroy secrecy in government and its agencies. There is too much secrecy. Therefore, I personally approve the motion before the House. At least we can debate the principle or the idea that legislation dealing with this subject is necessary.

Without doubt, the events summed up in the word "Watergate" interest and concern the people and legislators of the United States. But Watergate does not affect them only. There is a widespread need for fuller information. We need to have an open, instead of a closed, society. Ralph Nader put it well when said:

> A well informed citizenry is the lifeblood of democracy . . .
> In our policy, where the ultimate power is said to rest with the people, a free and prompt flow of information from government to people is essential to achieve the reality of citizen access to a more just governmental process.

What Ralph Nader said applies to Canada and other countries. We must consider two aspects of this matter: the right of parliament and members of parliament to secure information through the giving of notice and asking for disclosure of documents, and the right of the general public to secure information. Both aspects are highly important. Almost every member of parliament can think of matters on which he or she wished to obtain information but with respect to which the government, or an agency of government, refused to disclose information. This has happened to me in matters in which I take special interest, and no doubt almost every other member has had experience similar to mine when trying to secure information concerning various spheres of government.

[Mr. Reid.]

I am thinking, for example, of external affairs. We have an agency known as CIDA, and this agency spends—rightly, in my judgment—a very substantial sum of money. I believe it is essential to the proper operation of CIDA that it should provide public access to information concerning its affairs. Yet a situation developed last session in which a document was prepared, at public expense, by chartered accountants dealing with the subject of the turnover of personnel employed by CIDA. Information contained in this document was refused us, initially by the president of CIDA but later by the then secretary of state for external affairs, now President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp). The matter was since raised once in the House and I know that the government used its majority to prevent disclosure of the document in question.

I think of another item which is very recent. We were told by the newspapers in the last day or two that a conference has taken place in London between representatives of seven countries able to produce nuclear reactors and nuclear materials. The conference related to safeguards and agreements as to safeguards so that those materials, when sold, could not be converted into nuclear weapons or, at least, that there was a better prospective of their not being so converted. This conference, Mr. Speaker, was supposed to be secret; no one was supposed to know about it. Here we find the people of the world, whose survival may depend upon effective safeguards, being told, "These matters are being discussed, but you cannot be told anything about what is taking place." I agree there are scientific details which perhaps ought not to be disclosed, but the substance of the discussions is something with which the world as a whole is concerned. Yet, as I say, the public in all countries was denied access to this information.

Again, most people who are interested in the environment know of reports on this subject which have been kept secret, perhaps because they do not suit the particular views of certain elements in bureaucracy, or else disclosed only under great pressure. The fact that they have been made, very often at great public expense, has little bearing on the attitude taken toward publication. In the field of immigration, for example, I know that material of great importance to the immigrant affecting the right to a hearing, review proceedings, and so on, are kept secret, sometimes in the form of guidelines which are never disclosed—not even in the Canada Gazette where one can sometimes find these things if one knows enough and looks long enough. Some of these documents which are relevant to the rights people have to a proper hearing are not disclosed, and the Department of Immigration says it has no intention of disclosing them. Indeed, in the special committee only after considerable effort were we able to obtain these documents. Many members of parliament could give similar illustrations of material which could be disclosed without the state being endangered in any way or without harm resulting to anybody. It is time this sort of secrecy became a thing of the past.

I commend the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) upon his bill—it is a pioneer measure in this field—and for the fight he is putting up on this subject. He will probably agree with me that the bill he put forward is capable of improvement. Nevertheless, the fact that he has brought it forward is an important link in the chain by which we are seeking, through the committee and through the work of parliament, to open the door a little upon what goes on in government. I believe this constitutes a great service to Canadians.

Of course there must be exceptions: nobody doubts this. There are matters of secrecy and there are certain types of confidentiality which require exceptions to be made. We should be careful, though, to ensure that those exceptions are carefully scrutinized to see that they are not a cover for the refusal of information which could perfectly well be disclosed. The framework should not be so loosely drawn as to enable anybody who felt so inclined to say that a particular document or piece of information fell within one category or another of exempted material and thus could be withheld.

I went, with other members, to Washington where we spent an extremely useful day discussing with officials there the United States freedom of information act. This is one field where they are ahead of us, Mr. Speaker. We do not like to think that in a political matter the United States is ahead of us, but in this particular area they are well ahead of us. They have had a form of information act for some time, but they found it to be defective and replaced it with a new one.

We spoke with people responsible for enforcing the act, and we spoke with people on the other side of the fence seeking to obtain information. We found that all parties agreed, in general terms, on the value and importance of the act and their appreciation of an open, as opposed to a secret, society. The 1974 amendments conferred upon every person the right to apply for information. Another thing they did was to provide for tribunals, with a right of appeal, of course, capable of enforcing disclosure and judging whether a claim for exemption was sound or not. This is absolutely essential.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is not in the House at the moment, but he mentioned that under our system—and this was confirmed by the President of the Privy Council when he gave evidence in the committee—when there is a dispute as to whether something should be disclosed or not, the issue is always decided by the government. Members of the House who are learned in the law know there is an ancient Latin maxim which says that no one should be a judge of his own case. Until there is a tribunal to enforce a decision, to interpret and apply it, we are left with paper which is really not worth too much. There must be provision for judicial or quasi-judicial review.

There are bound, of course, to be difficulties in working out the act, but those difficulties are in no way insuperable. I am sure there might be some nuisance applications for information, but I suppose procedures could be developed to deal with them. We should look to providing applicants with what they have in the United States through the activity of a sort of public interest agency, as they call it there. It is headed by Ralph Nader. I have in mind a body which would assist citizens who are seeking information and would advise them about the legal steps which may be necessary, including the filling in of required forms. I think that is absolutely essential.

Then we must study any proposed freedom of information act in relation to rights to privacy. I would take issue, to a certain extent, with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I do not think it is a case of "either/or". I think on some matters the right to privacy should prevail; on other matters freedom of information on matters of public interest should prevail. I should not like to be categoric and say that the right to privacy always takes priority over the rights of the public.

As I said some time ago, the President of the Privy Council produced a series of guidelines which were supposed to be binding on parliament regarding production of papers, and suggest that we should legislate to make them effective. I think they are so defective that it would be better if we started at the beginning rather than copied them. There are all sorts of very vague exceptions. There is no adequate enforcement procedure. Indeed, the President of the Privy Council said that the decision whether something should actually be produced should always be left with the government. Be that as it may, I guess it was a step forward when these guidelines were produced.

There has been ample British precedent on this matter. We are supposed to have inherited our tendency toward secrecy in government from the British, but they have moved forward. The Franks commission, which made a report in 1972 on the Official Secrets Act, suggested there was a necessity to repeal the Official Secrets Act and replace it with another act that was far more limited in the exceptions it made in regard to publication of material. Here, again, I think we find a useful precedent. As has been mentioned, Sweden has had long experience in this regard. If we are inclined to think that it is a sort of easy option to make information available, that it will somehow damage the state or the security of the state, then I would remind hon. members that Sweden is a nation outstanding in many respects for its good government, lawfulness and the way in which it manages its own affairs.

I join with my colleagues in hoping that this motion will be passed and that it will give the committee the green light to proceed by taking the general principle that is already approved and putting it into some sort of detailed proposals or legislative form, as the case may be, so that a blow can be struck for freedom and for real democracy in Canada.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for the words they have spoken in connection with any slight participation I have had in this matter. Once again I would extend my thanks to the members of the committee for the objective and useful way in which the subject matter has been dealt with. When one looks back at the history of this particular project and other projects, one realizes that what we do today is simply the result of things that have been done before. While walking this morning through the corridors of this building, I met Mr. Barry Mather, formerly a distinguished member of the New Democratic Party in this House. Both Mr. Mather and I had bills along this same line of subject matter, at the same time, for two sessions. What has happened? We carried forward this idea for a while and today the idea has been merged into the report of the committee. I hope that when this day is over the proposal will be merged into a report from the committee to the House on which the House will have pronounced itself. The torch will then go to the government in due course and the government will have some decisions to make.

There is a broader attitude to take toward this issue. For the last month or so, we in this House have been debating issues dealing with economics, inflation, employment and unemployment, law and order, stability, and social benefits for the people of this country. From what I have read of history, parliament in this country and parliaments in other parts of the world were debating issues like those 100 and 200 years ago. If I do not miss my guess, parliaments which succeed us—if parliaments still exist, as I hope they will—will be debating the same issues 200 years from this date.

It is very important to remember that these subject matters are not going to vanish. We are not going to pass laws to make all things good for all people. However, it is very important to make certain that the mechanisms and means that we adopt in this parliament for dealing with these problems are improved. This is something that lies squarely within our competence. There are some problems that we cannot solve, but we can solve the question of our ability as members and our capacity as a House to deal more effectively with these issues. I submit that to do so we have to bring into the decision on these issues the people of the country. We represent the people of Canada in a democracy, but in actual fact people in general participate only to a very slight extent in the decisions that are made. I think this is not because governments and civil servants are vicious or corrupt or bad; it is because they are remote and removed from the impact of the decisions that are made and from policies and spending programs.

When we pass an act that provides that parliament acts by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons, it is not really the case. Formally it is, but in actual practice it is not. I think the mechanisms and means by which we in parliament operate have to be altered and improved so that the people come into the picture as partners, even if only as junior partners, and feel that they are playing a real part in the decisions that are taken.

There is no doubt that in the few democracies that still exist in the world there is a growing gap between the governed and the governors. This is due to a number of factors. There has been cynicism, distrust, doubt, wonder and a feeling that the people are both helpless and hopeless. They have no means of knowing what the government is doing and why it is doing it. I think Watergate was a typical illustration of this. If you remember, Mr. Speaker, Watergate was only a fourth-rate burglary; but it was an attempt by people in authority to cover up problems that ultimately led to the downfall of a president of the United States. It is in that light that I think we should approach this matter as well as the more detailed issues that were raised by hon. members of the House who preceded me. I hope we will get the unanimous approval of members of all parties in the House, and that when the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) speaks he will indicate that the government accepts the views set out in the committee report calling for acceptance in principle of freedom of information legislation and for reference back to the committee of certain terms of reference that they have felt essential. In that sense, it may not then be necessary to call for a vote, as Mr. Speaker indicated was possible.

● (1630)

I say that because a unanimous decision of this House to support the view set out by the committee will have a very considerable effect on people in the civil service regarding the question of freedom of information. When they find they cannot beat us, maybe they will join us. Then, subject to the exceptions which I know must exist and to which the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) and others have referred, there will in due course be put into place in this House, in this parliament and in this country, a method by which information will be made available. In 1972 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said in this House that the—> —democratic process requires the ready availability of true and complete information. In this way people can objectively evaluate government policies. To act otherwise is to give way to despotic secrecy.

I should like to think the Prime Minister meant those words when he spoke them in 1972 at the time of the debate on and presentation of the task force on information. However, the conduct of the Prime Minister and the government since that time certainly has not given effect to what the Prime Minister said in 1972. I have the suspicion that he was persuaded by his advisers that there had to be a gap between what he said then and actual practice. His principal advisers were quite reluctant in respect of providing information, for a number of reasons, some of which were put forward quite persuasively by the civil servants who appeared before the committee. I think most people who ascend, collectively, the steps of government to the throne feel the same way. I suspect that if I were ever a member of the government—which does not seem very likely at my stage of political life—I would probably feel the same way.

It is essential for us to put into place in this House mechanisms and means by which it will not be possible from this time on for people in the bureaucracy and in the government to refuse to provide in a reasonable way the facts on which parliament must operate. The right to know and to be told the true facts is essential to government.

Today the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked about the details of certain agreements in respect of the sale of a CANDU project. He is entitled to that information on his own behalf, and on behalf of members of this House, just as the residents of the Port Hope area are entitled to be told the degree of radioactivity of the waste being poured into the lake and dumped in the vicinity of their homes. This matter is as important to the Leader of the Opposition, in his position, as it is to the people in the community of Port Hope. This principle is important to the members of this House who were inquiring a year ago about reports of bad meat being sold in the province of Quebec, and just as important to the native people living in the Yellowknife area who wanted to know the details of a report about arsenic poisoning in waters near the city of Yellowknife.

It is as important for the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and other members of this House to find out from the government details of the tendering practices in respect of enterprises such as Sky Shops, and harbour dredging, as it is for individuals to find out what is in the medical records who may have been discharged from institutions. It is important to people who want to know the efficacy of new drugs and the evaluation of consumer goods. Knowledge will always govern ignorance, and people who intend to govern themselves must provide and equip themselves with the power that knowledge gives. That is the motivation behind this debate in which members of the House are engaged at the present time. I received a letter just the other day from a former civil servant in which he said that he——was disturbed by the attempts of government employees to prevent ordinary people from obtaining even the most mundane information. Decisions to release documents apparently depended on personal whims of minor public servants. Frequently reasonable requests were simply ignored.

In my opinion, the principle that government information is the property of the public—who, after all, pay for it—should be a right guaranteed in law—

That is from someone who apparently is in the know and realizes precisely what the problems are. For three or four minutes I should like to go over some of the systems which exist in other parts of the world. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) spoke of the Swedish system, and I agree with most of what he said in that regard, although I do not think he was being quite objective. There is no question that, while it is not as free and easy as some people have indicated, the Swedish system in respect of freedom of information has been in effect for 220 years and in that period civil servants have been nibbling away at and eroding the principle originally established. Today we see committees in place there which are considering the situation. There is no doubt in my mind that they are attempting, like termites, to erode the system which was put in place.

Because of Watergate, the bill which was in effect in the United States in 1966 has been replaced by an even more stringent measure. Perhaps to some extent they have bitten off a little more than they have been able to digest. But I was told, along with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and other members of the committee, that by and large even those public servants who agonize over the problems of dealing with numerous requests for information agree that this is good legislation and a sound principle. They said they would like some changes as to detail, but they thought it was good. They also said that because of the legislation in the United States, the bureaucrats were writing reports as though members of the public and of Congress were looking over their shoulders. What they are getting in the United States is better prepared reports and, as a result, better decisions. I think we in this parliament and the people of Canada are entitled to the same sort of arrangement.

There is in existence in the United Kingdom an all-party committee consisting of members of the House of Commons, members of some of the learned society and members of the medical community and other groups which is looking into this matter. This committee has proposed a bill that is now being discussed and considered by Mr. Roy Jenkins, a member of the British government who has been indicated by the cabinet as the man responsible. It is my guess that before too many months have passed we will see in place a law in this respect in the United Kingdom.

About 1½ or 2 years ago in Australia, a comittee of civil servants was established by the then prime minister to look into this particular issue and come up with a report. It recommended that the United States' practice and the United States' law with due regard to the differences between the congressional and the parliamentary systems—should be established there. I suggest, therefore, it is time for us to act. I know there will be some argument about detail. We will all agree there must be exceptions. Government cannot be asked to conduct all its discussions in a goldfish bowl. When there are working papers leading up to a decision, then I am quite prepared to accept the fact that those working papers should not be available during the time the decision is being considered. But once the government has arrived at a decision, it would be my submission that all working papers of a factual or statistical nature should be made available so that members of the House, members of the media and members of the public would be able to examine the bases upon which the government acted, and evaluate whether or not the government's decision was sound. So I have no objection to these working papers being treated in that way.

In matters dealing with a criminal offence, obviously it would be fallacy to recommend that during the course of the investigation the material the authorities are looking at should be made available to the public. Matters of true national security—not fictional, but true should be placed outside the ambit of disclosure. This would also apply to matters relating to the protection of privacy. I think we must bear in mind the matter of true privacy and the duty of the government and the people to operate in the interests of all people and the need to balance and to reconcile freedom of information with protection of privacy. However, I suggest that in all these cases the onus must rest on the government, when it wishes to deprive the public of information, to substantiate the fact that the documents in question fall outside the ambit of disclosure. Whenever it is shown that there has been a capricious and unnecessary withholding of information, some punitive action should be taken.

I have in my bill, of course, the suggestion that civil servants who do not comply with a court order to disclose might go to jail for five years. On reflection, I think we do not have enough jails in which to keep all the people who might be involved. But if there should be a determination that the withholding of information in the first instance was irregular and improper, I think there should be some form of action taken as is the case in the United States. I think this is a matter we should consider. We can work it out. We will not agree on everything: that is the nature of this institution. I have discussed this matter with hon. members opposite. I know the President of the Privy Council and I are apart in some areas. I think that probably is because of the difference between his background and mine. But we are together to a remarkable extent on some questions.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not take up too much more of the time of the House because other members wish to participate. I suggest we have a responsibility in the committee and in the House to press ahead to secure a workable bill, not only for the specific purpose of providing information for the public, who should have it, to the members of parliament, who need it, and to the press or the media who, in the course of their function of informing the public have a right to it, but also in an attempt to restore some measure of confidence and trust in the processes of government. I say, with all solemnity, that the passage by this government, with the full approval of the House first of this motion and second of a workable bill, will go a long way toward rectifying the distrust and lack of confidence which now exists.

All we ask is the right to seek the truth. We cannot wait. Time is not on our side. I ask for the support of all members of the House, and of the government in particular. I ask the government to indicate specifically that it accepts the principles involved in the motion. In fact, I would like to see my friend, the President of the Privy council, indicate his position with regard to the passage of legislation. I do not ask him to agree to terms—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Baldwin: I have finished, Mr. Speaker. I pass the torch to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support the motion before us which would continue and, indeed, expand the terms of reference of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. This is an additional duty we are imposing on the committee, but I think members of the House generally would agree this is the most appropriate committee to deal with the matter of freedom of information.

It would be easy to take an extreme position on access to government information. The libertarian extreme would be to say that all government reports, papers and correspondence should be available to the people all the time without regard to context or circumstances. The closed-door extreme would be to insist that, because of the collective cabinet responsibility imposed by our system of responsible government, the only information which should be made known to the public would be statements formally released by the government. Most Canadians will find one extreme as unconvincing as the other.

If all government operations, without exception, were carried out in the public eye, the first casualty would be honest differences of opinion in the public service. Public servants would put in writing only what they thought the public was prepared to hear. In Sweden, for example, in every government department there is a press room where incoming and outgoing mail is laid out every morning for an hour for press and public inspection. Even such personal matters as income tax returns are open to public scrutiny. Consequently, what has happened is that paper has become much less important in government, and everything that really matters tends to be dealt with orally. Taken to the extreme, complete disclosure would seriously impair the effectiveness of government. On the other hand, to limit public knowledge of government to what the government wanted the people to know would amount to a system of managed news and would be a step toward the horrors George Orwell saw for 1984.

Most Canadians would probably agree that the solution has to be a compromise, with a presumption in favour of disclosure, so that the people's right to information should receive maximum possible respect and attention. The thorny question is, what ought to be published? The exceptions allowed cannot be so extensive as to swallow up the rule of disclosure. Since the policy of making available as much information as possible must be balanced against such considerations as effective public administration, protection of the security of the state and rights of third parties to privacy, even the best-intentioned government finds it all too easy to resolve doubtful cases in the direction of secrecy.

The criteria to be applied might well be generally agreed. Security documents, personal correspondence, records and tax returns, legal opinions and matters relating to possible prosecutions should probably not be disclosed. Our system of responsible government also makes the disclosure of proceedings of cabinet meetings and draft government bills inappropriate. On the other hand, government green and white papers and royal commission reports should clearly be published, subject to the withholding of information on possible prosecutions. There should also be no question about the release of task force reports, studies by consultants or, generally, any government report or departmental document on a matter on which work has been completed. The grey area will probably lie in the determination of when work has been finished.

● (1650)

Given the natural inclination of any government to favour its own interest, and the fact that borderline areas do exist, what is needed is a device to strengthen the resolve of a well-intentioned government to disclose and to punish politically a government wishing to conceal. Canada needs an independent information authority which would be able to participate in the decision-making process—to decide what ought to be released and what ought to be withheld. Some suggest the judiciary as an outside authority with the public credibility to do the job. But the task, as I see it, is not of the odd-job variety—to scrutinize documents now and again. It would be an onerous daily task. In order to cope, I believe that the authority involved has to be close to the government process itself.

On the other hand, it would not do to confer the responsibility on an existing minister or department as, for example, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has been assigned the duty of reporting to parliament on federal laws which infringe upon the Canadian Bill of Rights. There is too much scope for conflict of interest to allow the government to be responsible for its own self-examination in so fundamental an area.

My proposal is for the establishment of an independent information advocate. This new office would be answerable to parliament rather than to the government itself. It would recommend what government information should be made public and what should not. As an agency within government, the office of the information advocate could, if necessary, pry open every filing cabinet in the government service. In status and independence I would compare the information advocate with the Auditor General, who also exercises a supervisory authority, by parliamentary appointment, for the benefit of the public. In order to assure the advocate's public credibility, the government should propose to parliament, for appointment, a man or woman of unimpeachable independence and integrity. Perhaps he or she could be drawn from a panel recommended by the information media across the country. The advocate's tenure should be either indefinite or for a substantial length of time such as ten years. Within whatever term is adopted, tenure should be on the same basis as a judge's to ensure independence.

Because of the government's collective responsibility to govern, I would leave the ultimate decision whether to release information or not to the cabinet, but I would require the information advocate to report to parliament any instances in which his or her recommendations were not followed by the government. The government would then have to make a public defence. I believe that such a system would create a healthy tension between the cabinet and the advocate in which the government would be publicly challenged when it tried to withhold information which he or she deemed ought to be released. The information advocate, like the Auditor General, would be able to inform the public about things which might otherwise have been swept under the carpet and to require the government to reveal and defend its information practices when necessary.

It seems to me that such a system would preserve both the integrity of the government process—because the review would be from within—and the public's right to know what the government is doing so as to be able to judge it—because of the review itself. It would provide a necessary check on the government, but through a political rather than a legalistic remedy. Ultimately, the failure to disclose would itself be disclosed and that information would be put into the hands of the people for their decision.

It has been objected that, if the advocate made a report indicating reasons why a certain document ought to be disclosed, the content of the document would then be compromised. If reasons were not stated, I agree that public credibility would be lost. Obviously, at least general reasons would have to be advanced and the advocate's discretion as to the degree of disclosure trusted. We can do no better than to rely on the usual political processes and safeguards in such cases.

A freedom of information act enshrining the principle of public access to information would be a useful beginning, but in the absence of an independent authority to interpret it, it would not be a giant step forward. A belief that every government needs independently applied restraints is basic to democracy. As Francis Bacon wrote in a different context centuries ago, knowledge is power. The special committee on statutory instruments, which I had the honour to chair, put it this way in 1969:

> There can be neither responsibility nor accountability when there is no knowledge of what has been done. In political matters knowledge is the beginning of power, and its lack, impotence.

In a democracy, the people can have only as much power as they have knowledge; and an open government will want to ensure that as much power as possible remains with the people, because identification with the people provides a government with the best possible source of power. In conclusion, I might again say that I am pleased to support the motion which is before us today.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, this issue is one which will not go away. I feel somewhat as if I had been around the track several times, because it is the third debate in my time here on the matter of accessibility, accountability and openness in government. I recall very well the time when a person who is now on the treasury benches, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mackasey), years ago took part in a debate. Of course, he was then supporting the concept of openness.

I think the issue was put very well, if I may paraphrase the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), when he said that it is time for the government to state its intention on the issue of public information. I think that is what the resolution proposes, that the committee will continue its deliberations and consider this question. But I had always hoped that Canada would be the bellwether country in the world. Perhaps other countries have long since made it difficult for us to catch up to them in the matter of openness, but I thought some years ago, when the Pearson government took a look at the whole matter of the Official Secrets Act, that there at least would be a rather forthright report. It turned out, rather sadly, that, through no fault of the then prime minister, it was a rather orthodox document, very much looking backward instead of forward, and very few changes were made in the Official Secrets Act. Now, as a result of the Franks Report in Great Britain and the commitments made by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, fundamental changes will be made to the Official Secrets Act in England. This, of course, was an opportunity that Canada once again missed. We could have led the western democracies. Instead of that we are stumbling along and still have not made a commitment.

I think it is right that we recall another important report that was made by a couple of excellent, dwas never allowed the free rein that the commission report recommended for it.

In the few minutes which I have, I propose to deal with the matter of ministerial responsibility and administrative secrecy and suggest several things dealing with government and the bureaucracy which have worshipped far too long at the altar of secrecy and anonymity. The attainment of greater freedom of information and openness in government will not come easily. We have seen that. It is 1976, and many of us are still worshipping at this altar. Several times over the past years I have spoken in the House about the need to, as Professor J. A. G. Griffith has stated—> —take the lid off the machinery of government, to see how it works, who says what to whom, at what level decisions are taken, what private criteria are used, how far politics is allowed to override those criteria, on what statistical and other facts the decisions are based: this wish does not derive only from curiosity or from party animosity but also from self-interest, from quis custodiet, and from a feeling that government represents another group interest.

● (1700)

Perhaps I should identify the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) as being one of the few who might recognize that Latin phrase. I want his children and grandchildren, when they read this debate, to know that at least there was one. However, experience has demonstrated that there exists both in government and the bureaucracy tremendous resistance to scrutiny, openness and accountability. Such candour affronts ministerial and bureaucratic sensitivities. Douglas Fisher described this environment rather well when last December he wrote the following:

> The bureaucrats will appeal—
> As they have to the committee.
> ... to the principles of ministerial responsibility and their own anonymity. The politicians in power shiver over any eclipse of official secrecy. They fear the lot of the emperor without clothes.

We are confronted here with ministers clothed in secrecy, private dealings and anonymity. When I speak of private dealings, I do not mean the word "deal" in any pejorative or evil connotation. I mean that a deal has been made or an arrangement has been made, within the process, clothed with secrecy and probably if the arrangement was open to the public, the natural suspicions of the public would be sated. Just this past week we saw the example of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) reaching a private accommodation with Reader's Digest. I read a somewhat mysterious press release. The newspapers and political commentators spoke about it, and then we heard ministerial statements. The difference between what we are told by unofficial and by official sources makes us conscious of the existence of another hidden world. Many of us, even though we resist this tendency, become cynical. The evasions, the half truths and the falsities shine through the words and we are angered because we are treated somewhat like children. I submit to the treasury benches that only if politicians trust the public can they expect to deserve trust.

An editorial appeared in the Australian Federal Law Review and clearly stated the case when it said:

> Unnecessary secrecy ... has demonstrated an unfortunate pessimism as to the worth of the democratic process.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) makes statements, as he has been doing, calling into question the system and asking Canadians to join in the public debate about our institutions, I suggest—with much sincerity—that the very issue we are debating today is one of the reasons the public is profoundly cynical about the government. Ministerial responsibility is only possible in an open system where parliament—government and opposition—together with citizens gain knowledge of and access to greater information. "It is not that democracy functions better when there is open administration—until this exists, it is doubtful whether there is any democracy at all." So ends the editorial in the Australian Federal Law Review.

The truth is that if anything useful and significant is to be done in a free society, it must be done publicly and in such a way as to consult, involve and carry with it those affected. We are in an age where the legislator has assumed, I submit, a new role—that of building acceptance of government policy. It is not a role many people believe the opposition should have to carry, but in fact it is very much a part of our role because a good deal of the legislation here, and a good many of the decisions of modern government, of course, have no ideological or partisan overtones. Therefore, we who believe in this institution are left with a responsibility to try to build public acceptance. But understanding and consent do not spring from some previous interaction of government and voter at a general election. Rather, it is the constantly renewed product of a continual exchange of information. In his book "Secrecy and Publicity", Francis Rourke observes:

> —in so far as secrecy in government seriously impedes the free flow of communication among citizens, it constitutes a real threat to the informed public discussion that is at the core of democracy. Where this occurs, it is not at all certain that a community should not choose, from the point of view of its own value system, to tolerate some measure of insecurity in order to gain access to information it needs in order to exercise influence over decisions on vital matters of public policy.

I think that the public is mature enough—indeed, backbenchers opposite have shoulders broad enough—to deal with great issues such as the about-face of the Minister of National Revenue on Reader's Digest or a broader national debate prior to this government's agreement, for example, to sell nuclear reactors to South Korea and Argentina. I am not now debating whether that is right or wrong; I am debating the fact that we had information after the fact. Now, apparently, even the matter of interest is not to be disclosed. As the Globe and Mail's lead editorial of Tuesday, February 10, 1976 stated:

> It is hard to conceive of a case when it should be more necessary that the government should act, not by executive, but by parliamentary decision. What is at stake is enormous ... It has almost reached the point of cliché to call this government arrogant. Unfortunately, it is a cliché full of truth.

A third example of where this government in recent weeks has demonstrated a gross lack of candour, openness and confidence in the ability of the public to examine the decision-making process in the bureaucracy is the stonewalling by the government of the efforts of the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments to gain information from the Department of Justice necessary for its deliberations. I feel genuinely concerned about the former minister of finance, the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mr. Turner), and the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) who spoke so eloquently just now—who have made the statutory instruments committee such an integral part of their contribution to the House over the past few years. Here we are, with the statutory instruments committee set up, the legislation in place, and we are being thwarted in our work by the Department of Justice because it takes a much too narrow and legalistic view of statutory instruments themselves. I really deplore this, and I deplore it doubly because the stonewalling comes from the Department of Justice of Canada.

In this regard I want to share with hon. members an eloquent statement made by the former minister of finance when he was minister of justice. In a speech at, I think, Harrison Hot Springs, when the Liberals were trying to give policy delineation for the years ahead, he said:

> We have allowed, by enabling powers and statutes, legislation to be delegated to the cabinet, to ministers, to boards, to commissions by way of regulation ... beyond the control of parliament, beyond the power of parliament to review and revise, and thereby beyond the power of the people to challenge.

● (1710)

Now we have a committee which is attempting to make such regulations and administrative instruments accountable; in other words, to do what the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton wanted and give a major part of the government's policy initiatives to the Department of Justice. The government and its supporting bureaucracy continue to place roadblocks in the way of the efforts of this committee to do its job effectively. I think it is time these roadblocks were noticed by the public.

I, for one, deplore the fact that we have reached the unfortunate situation where governmental decisions affecting entire populations seem to be made by a few individuals operating on the basis of information with which they alone are familiar. Mr. Speaker, this is an intolerable situation. What can be done to combat this resistance to scrutiny, openness and candour? First, we should be told much more about the background against which decisions are made. Second, there is a vast, shaded area about which most of us know nothing and generally suspect the worst. Flitting in and out of the shadows are those "in the know" and those who wish to appear to be of that number. Goodness knows, in this city there are a lot of the latter. The nearer we are to the source of truth, the more we will hear—though not necessarily the more truths. Foreign affairs and defence are deepest in the shadow. We accept the necessity for some of this, but surely it is much overdone.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) reminded us that no rational member of parliament would ever think there should be disclosure of matters affecting the real, the genuine matter of national security. Nobody would expect such secrets to be open. But there is a huge, other area—up into the 90 per cent bracket—which has no possible bearing upon the security of the state. Third, when the government consults with private interests before finally taking decisions, could we not be told something of the bargains struck, the compromises reached, the promises given? I do not indict the compromises. Compromises are part of modern government. What I indict is the fact that nobody knows, except those intimately involved, what the options are.

Fourth—and not generally, I hope—the cabinet, its individual members and its supporting bureaucracy could afford to be much more open about policy objectives and national goals. Ministers seem to be genuinely fearful of being specific even about the ends they are seeking to achieve. Here is another caveat. If the Prime Minister hopes to enlist the public of this country in discussion—discussion with all of us in the new society—there have to be more slogans. The public is entitled to some declaration of the path the Prime Minister wishes to take us on behalf of his party.

I have to think that the reaction to the speech the Prime Minister made over Christmas was hilarious. If I have an objection to the speech, it is that it was so unclear—not that he made it. I think had such declarations been made in England, where there is a national press and a good differing of views and all the spectrum of political thought, they would have been scrutinized and recognized for what they were before the weekend was over. Instead of that, a good number of people in the Canadian Manufacturers' Association had cardiac arrests.

Mr. Speaker, the problem we debate today is crucial to the creation of an environment in which our society can deal with the pressing economic and social issues which confront us daily. It seems apparent that we will have to deal increasingly with active government. In this milieu, the central question was put in a most interesting book written by Andrew Shonfield in 1965, wherein he asked:

> The central question is how far an active government wielding great and varied economic power, intervening in the detailed conduct of private business affairs, discriminating between one citizen and another on the basis of subtle and complex judgments of the community's needs 10 or 20 years ahead, driving bargains with particular interest groups as administrative convenience dictates, can be subjected to effective democratic control.

That is the core of the debate in which we are engaged. I have not noticed very much partisanship here. This is surely the basis upon which the motion is put. It is surely the basis upon which the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments was brought to life by people who have honoured places in this House. On this issue we can agree that in eloquence nobody seeking this openness can match the hon. member for Peace River who has almost made a career of the subject.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner (London East)): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, I cannot think of a better place at which to stop.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in this debate in support of the motion of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) whom we all know as co-chairman of the committee. His enduring efforts in the committee went a long way toward helping the committee function as well as it did. I was most impressed by his speech today in spite of his influenza. A lesser man would no doubt not have shone as he did today.

I should like to discuss the seventh report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments in terms of my views and impressions of the progress made by the committee and on the general subject of freedom of information and the closely related subject of the protection of privacy. Mr. Speaker, your committee's report was tabled together with more than a dozen issues of the relevant Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence containing testimony from a wide range of witnesses including high ranking public servants, academics, citizens' groups and media representatives. These witnesses provided opinions, criticisms and suggestions and presented briefs or reports on the general subject at hand. In addition, the committee travelled to Washington, D.C., to interview officials and congressmen on their freedom of information act to try to ascertain how it was working. Also, some members visited England and Sweden and other countries to observe how their systems of providing information were operating.

In short, the joint committee has for over a year spent a great amount of time and effort on this subject of availability of information. In reviewing the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence, the briefs, the reports, the studies and my own notes, I was at first somewhat struck by the lack of unanimity among those who made a contribution to the committee. While everyone agrees on the importance of finding an acceptable system to distribute information, and the difficulties and complications in attempting such a task, and while everyone to a greater or lesser degree is dissatisfied with the present system operating in this country, there appears to be little agreement on what exactly the solutions should be, at least in terms of degree and emphasis. However, this apparent lack of unanimity really stems from the general agreement which I have just mentioned, that is, recognition of the very real importance of information and the complex, complicated, many-sided nature in which it presents itself.

In reviewing this subject, one continually comes across such statements as "to govern is to inform, to be well informed is to be well governed", "secrecy is within the centre of power itself", and other such statements which equate knowledge with power. While the statements reflect what the availability of information can mean, different individuals view this meaning from different angles. A senior public servant's perspective is considerably different from that of, let us say, Ralph Nader or someone associated with his group. This also applies to ministers and opposition members of parliament.

This is not necessarily to say that the question of information and its availability or access is one of confrontation between those who have and those who want. Rather, it is a question of degree. It is difficult for even those who are reasonably well acquainted with the general subject to have an objective view of it. An individual's situation, quite naturally, colours his approach to how, what and when information should be made available.

I found that in most cases witnesses and committee members themselves, although holding differing views on what were considered basic points, were able to embrace many of the ideas put forward by the other person and generally show respect and understanding for that person's differing views. This was not done merely to be non-partisan, diplomatic or even polite; rather, I feel it was done because there is a realization that there are no easy, ready or absolute solutions to the problem.

When we talk about access to and availability of information, we are talking about a subject which is a many-headed monster that can be debated and viewed from a number of levels and angles. Perhaps I can mention some of the issues which arise when dealing with this subject. The seventh report of the joint committee suggests a few such areas. One of the most important, I feel, is the relationship between freedom of information and the protection of privacy. The two must be considered together if we are to avoid some of the difficulties which the Americans have run into in regard to their protection of privacy act and freedom of information act. In the United States case there was apparently little communication between the groups who were working on the legislation in question.

[Mr. Robinson.]

The report which we are considering today also points to the question of automatic data processing. While I must confess to only a rudimentary knowledge of the subject, I believe it is obvious to most observers that this is becoming an increasingly important forum for collecting information. Without controls, there could possibly be serious abuse of an individual's privacy.

I have already mentioned that it is difficult to get agreement on change in our system partly owing to the different situations from which individuals view the freedom of information question. One witness who appeared before the joint committee, Dr. Maxwell Cohen, Macdonald professor of law at McGill University, described this as the forum within which debates between the individual and the state over confidentiality take place. Dr. Cohen named four such forums: first, the citizen versus the state; second, the parliamentarian and the state; third, the scholar and the state; and, fourth, the media and the state.

I do not want to take too much of the time of the House, for I know a number of members wish to contribute to the debate today. But I should like to put on the record some of the questions concerning confidentiality, for I believe it helps to show the complexity of this matter. There is the question of "leaks", the question of cost, the whole field of classifying documents, and the problem of deciding how long information should be withheld. There is also the broad technical or functional area of providing information, which includes information personnel and their attitude to the public, ways and means of gathering and distributing information, regular flow and access to information, its quality and selectivity, and the direction and form of government information.

After all this we are still left with the most difficult questions of legislation or policy and the criteria for exclusion. I am beginning to wonder if, in asking the House to concur in the joint committee's seventh report, we are asking for a task which will bury us up to our eyeballs in work. Nevertheless, I know that committee members, and I think all members sincerely want to see some real progress on this issue.

So far I have given an overview, attempting to show how, by its very importance and complexity, unanimity on the question of information was difficult to obtain. This is not to suggest that there exist no areas of agreement. That would be far from the truth. For example, I believe it is generally accepted that there is often a legitimate need for confidentiality in matters involving finance, foreign relations and defence—that is to say, a willingness to accept the status quo as the criterion for exclusion in these areas. Conversely, I see agreement on a number of areas where change is needed. Perhaps I could comment on four such areas.

First, there is the government's attitude toward information. Not only must the government attempt to do a better job of explaining its actions and initiatives, but it must provide information to the public in order for it to have greater participation in the formulation of policies and programs, even if this information contradicts or conflicts with the government's approach. The onus is on the government to prove the sincerity of its commitment, as expressed in the first recommendation of the task force on information. In its report to the government on August 29, 1969, it recommended:

The right of Canadians to full, objective and timely information and the obligation of the state to provide that such information about its programs and policies be publicly declared and stand as the foundation for the development of new government policies in this field—

Second, an area in which I think it was generally agreed changes are needed has to do with stating reasons for not providing requested information; that is to say, this kind of reply, "The information cannot be made available because it cannot be made available and is not available" is totally unacceptable. Members of parliament and the public must be given satisfactory explanations as to why their requests for information have been denied. Perhaps this is even more important in dealing with the public, for in a few cases which came before the joint committee the individuals concerned must have been left completely dazzled and frustrated with the kind of "No you can't have it because you can't have it" reply which was given. I believe there is a lot of room and need for improvement on this point.

Third, an area of change where I feel there is a certain degree of unanimity concerns how long information should be considered confidential. Obviously, the 30-year-old rule is too all-encompassing in many instances. Often after the government decides on its course of action, reports and studies the government used as a basis for action could be made available to the public. The Pickering situation is, I feel, one such instance.

The fourth area in which I feel most will agree change is required is in what I would call the functional area of providing information. By this I mean information personnel, their training and attitude, the distribution of information and its selectivity. I believe we have to start trying different approaches and techniques in the whole field of information. We must experiment with some of the suggestions and ideas which have been put forward. I am not calling for radical or drastic changes but, rather, for gradual changes which will permit us to observe how some of these ideas are working in practice. While I cannot claim to have a great many years of experience as a member of parliament—perhaps this would rule me out as a possible contender for the Tory leadership—

Mr. Peters: That is about the only reason.

Mr. Robinson: —nevertheless, I have noticed, as I am sure most members have, a tremendous increase over the past few years in the amount of correspondence from constituents. I feel this is due to two things: first, an increasing desire to participate in, or at least play a larger role or have more influence in the formulation of policy; second, the increased number of services and programs coming from the government which directly affect individuals. In both these cases, information plays a vital role. Without information, or the proper kind of information, my constituents are at a serious disadvantage in influencing policy, participating in programs and taking advantage of services which are offered.

Constituency offices having been established in our constituencies during the past couple of years and we now have what I consider an ideal vehicle for distributing information directly to the public. The potential of the constituency office in this information role has been badly neglected up to now, I feel. Information Canada having been phased out, I feel there is an even greater need to utilize the information service potential of the constituency office.

I hope that all hon. members will be able to support the motion presented today. Specifically, I hope that the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments will be authorized to examine the subject matter of Bill C-225 introduced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who has over the years demonstrated both his concern for and knowledge of the right of the public to information concerning public business. Second, I hope that the joint committee's terms of reference will be expanded to include consideration of other laws relating to freedom of information and the protection of privacy. I hope, third, that the committee will examine the question of automatic data processing and its effects on the privacy of people.

In conclusion, if this House should decide to give the committee the authorization requested, I feel the second session of the thirtieth parliament will produce legislation which will enable real progress to be made in the fields of freedom of information and the protection of privacy.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will there ever be a second session?

● (1730)

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to take part in this debate. I feel that possibly, in view of the fact there has been evidence from both sides that there is no dissent from this resolution, I should not try to promote the cause and thereby raise issues which might cause someone to vote against it. Since there is such uniformity of thought I want to lend my support to the report and to the recommendations made in it, and to pay my tribute to my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who has, over a long period of time, supported the concept of freedom of information. The hon. member indicates that the publicity may be coming to him late rather than early, in his career, but I pay him this tribute now in the hope that if we keep praising him now he may be persuaded at the last minute to let his name stand for leadership at the convention when it comes up next week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Having been elected at the last general election I mentioned this in debate earlier this week when it was first indicated I was going to be placed on the committee I thought it was a form of punishment. I have some knowledge of regulations through the practice of law and the statutory instruments one comes across in the day to day activities of a law office, and I thought this was something the party whip or the people in charge of assigning duties had chosen to demonstrate to me, so I would not get too big for my breeches "We are going to put you in a small room looking over these regulations and considering them."

To a certain degree the fact is I have suffered with my colleagues on that committee looking over mounds and mounds of regulations. As one wag put it, one finds out more about regulations than one would ever care to know. It has been, in fact, a rewarding and challenging experience, certainly in respect of the discussions covering the freedom of information bill which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Peace River, and with respect to the reference to the committee of the guidelines for the production of papers presented by the former President of the Privy Council. I want to deal with both those elements of the report, that is to say, the guidelines for the production of papers and also the freedom of information act, because they seem to me to be logical steps in the direction in which we are moving in this debate.

I would say at the outset that I support wholeheartedly, as all hon. members have indicated up to this point, the concept of some type of legislation which in fact would mean there would be some freedom of information not only to members of parliament but also to the average citizen. The hon. member for Peace River in his remarks mentioned the fact there had been much discussion recently of economic matters in the House of Commons, and certainly we have been wrapped up in economic issues. It seems to me that in Canada we are moving, as in the case among other democracies, toward greater centralization of power in the hands of the executive branch. Coupled with this trend has been a growing reluctance on the part of all bureaucratic institutions to divulge any information throwing light on the reasoning involved in their decision-making.

I should like to quote from the Administrative Law Review of 1968, a paragraph citing the Attorney-General's memorandum on public information:

> If government is to be truly of, by and for the people, the people must know in detail the activities of government. Nothing so diminishes democracy as secrecy. Self-government, the maximum participation of the citizenry in affairs of state, is meaningful only with an informed public. How can we govern ourselves if we do not know how we govern?

In view of the growth of government and the fact that we are getting to be a complicated society today, the right of people to obtain information about the actions of their government must be secured especially in the light of reversing the tendency to isolate power in the hands of an executive body. The idea of government possessing a cloak of secrecy must be taken away and we must have, in effect, as has been pointed out in other jurisdictions, a sunshine law which will allow people the fullest information as to the activities of the government and the bureaucracies supporting that government.

It seems to me there has developed in our own country, unfortunately, a spill-over of developments south of the border, in essence a distrust of government, so it is essential that we in this parliament deal seriously with the recommendations made in the report with respect to legislation on the freedom of information. I have indicated there are two aspects to the consideration the committee has made over the past year and a half or two years.

The first part of our consideration in the committee was with respect to the guidelines brought down by the President of the Privy Council affecting the production of government papers in parliament. My observation since since I have been in parliament has been that the pragmatic rule with respect to the production of papers is that the government can refuse to produce any document it deems appropriate. This is particularly evident in times of majority government where there is a degree of support, where there is majority support, for the government's decision with respect to the production of particular papers. So when we look at the guidelines which have been brought down and presented to us setting out the rules the government says it will follow with respect to the production of papers, one is inclined to be encouraged but one must express a caveat with respect to the optimistic view taken by the government in bringing forward these guidelines. This is because of the fact that the interpretation is left in the hands of the government.

In other words, one of the serious shortcomings of these guidelines is that there is no provision for an independent assessment as to whether or not the refusal of the government to bring forward legislation in any instance is justifiable. I maintain the whole climate of the obligation of the government has been affected by the so-called Watergate situation south of the border and the question arises here, as it arose down in the United States, whether refusal on the part of the government to publish certain information is in fact based upon the national security, or whatever, or whether the decision to refuse information has, rather, been taken in the government's own interest. So it seems to me one of the serious shortcomings of the guidelines brought down for our consideration is that decisions in the final analysis are reserved to the government. In other words, parliament is at the behest of a majority government in regard to that particular decision and does not determine its own course either in actual fact or in practical terms.

The suggestion was made, which I fully support, that if we are to have these guidelines, at least in the initial stage some provision should be made for an independent tribunal to assess whether or not there is justification for the government to refuse disclosure. I suggest that some official could be appointed similar to the Auditor General who, as we know, in connection with reviewing the books of government has been given under statute some fairly broad powers, and hopefully will be given broader powers in future legislation.

The fact of the matter is that if we had someone similar to that official dealing with requests, who was sworn to secrecy, to assess the individual request and the response given by the government, and make a decision based on representations made by the cabinet minister in question, this would ensure that, in part at least, an independent review of the request and of the reasons given by government for refusing to disclose the information to parliament would be made.

Moving on to the matter of a freedom of information act, the foregoing would all be somewhat academic if in fact we do bring forward a realistic and reasonable piece of legislation concerning freedom of information not only for parliamentarians but for the citizenry at large. In this connection I think that the terms of the bill put forward by the hon. member for Peace River provide for an independent assessment of whether or not information should be given out to the general public. I think his bill provides for reference of the matter to a court. I do not think it makes much difference whether there is a reference to a court or to an administrative tribunal so long as there is an independent review that enables people to know that they are receiving fair and reasonable treatment with respect to any request for information.

As a member of the opposition it seems to me that I am at a bit of a disadvantage when it comes to obtaining information. I have always felt that members on the government side may have some advantage. I suppose there should be some "perks" in supporting the government or in being part of the government, but it is my observation that members on the government side often have better access to the resources of the bureaucracy. Certainly in the case of members of the cabinet and the executive, they have full access to the resources of the public service in research and investigation for the determination of government policy.

It has been estimated that something in the vicinity of $1 billion at least is spent by the federal government on research programs, which is more than the budget of some provinces. This kind of expertise is working for the government in the determination of policy. Much of this research that has taken place is of a technical or factual nature and I think should be available to the general public to assist the general public in the formulation of decisions respecting general policy. If we are to have, as some politician has said, participatory democracy in this country, the benefit of this technical and factual information that is received by the government should be made available to the electorate as well.

I think the public should also have the fullest knowledge of government expenditure and that of its agencies. There are instances that all of us can bring to mind of failure to obtain, on request through the order paper or through requesting documents, this kind of information. One instance that occurs to me is that when I first arrived here I received information that the CBC had spent a quite incredible amount of money on the development of their new logo. This is an example of the kind of information that is withheld from members of parliament, let alone the public. There was no question of policy of the CBC involved; I was simply asking for financial information that I felt it was important to know, requiring some inquiry which would ascertain whether or not there had been reasonable expenditure in regard to part of the CBC's operation.

The answer I received from the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) was simply that this was not the type of information that it is customary for the CBC to disclose. That struck me as being an incredible answer to what I thought was a rather straightforward question asking for information of a factual nature from the government or a government agency. I think that if I were a shareholder of the CTV, for example, and I wanted to know how much they had spent on developing a logo for that network, it would be a matter of a very few minutes before the accountant or auditor would have the information for me. So at a very early time in my experience as a member of parliament it was indicated to me that the government and its agencies were actually reluctant to give what I thought was rather straightforward information respecting government expenditure. I bring that example to the attention of the House to show the way in which government agencies tend to be secretive about their expenditure and about information that, I think, rightfully belongs in the public domain.

Let me give another example. Recently there was some communication with the Department of Transport covering an alleged defect in steering wheels in 1969 Chevrolets. On behalf of a constituent I wrote to the Department of Transport's motor vehicles safety branch and asked them to provide me with some information respecting investigations that had taken place into these defective steering wheels. I was not able to obtain that information. When a man drives along in his automobile and then finds that the steering wheel comes off in his hand, detaching itself from the steering column, then he should be entitled to some information about what the government's investigation had determined in regard to that defect in that particular model, and also that information should be made available generally so that some warning can be given to other people driving that particular model.

I see my time is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker, but during the last few minutes I want to refer to the fact that we as a committee have made an investigation of the freedom of information act in the United States. I think our American neighbours are often much maligned by us in Canada. When one reads the newspapers, listens to the radio or watches television one almost gets the impression that everything that happens in the United States is negative. I think we tend to forget that there are many areas in the United States where there has been progressive legislation and where the Americans have been leaders. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) alluded to this when he said he felt that the freedom of information act in the United States was one example of where the Americans are ahead of us in Canada in regard to obtaining information from government.

I want to say in very general terms that the visit that the committee made to the United States certainly satisfied me that enactment by us of freedom of information legislation would be a worth-while process. I grant you that there are problems in respect of this kind of legislation. There is the question of the increased work load on civil servants to comply with requests. There are questions as to whether the exemption category should be a broad or narrow one. There are questions of abuses that may arise in respect of seeking and obtaining information, and there is the question of cost.

● (1750)

The conclusion I came to is that among the people involved in the public service in the United States, with legislations and with those involved in the seeking and obtaining of information, there was unanimity that this was a worth-while bill, notwithstanding some of the problems which arise by virtue of the legislation. I see you moving toward the edge of your seat, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude by saying I think this is something in respect of which we in Canada might do well to emulate the United States. I hope hon. members will support the report and the freedom of information legislation.

VACANCY

RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR OTTAWA-CARLETON

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) I wonder if I might just take a moment to inform the House that I have received a communication informing me that a vacancy has occurred, as follows:

The Honourable James Jerome, M.P.,

Speaker,

House of Commons,

Ottawa, Ontario.

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I am writing to you as the member of parliament for the electoral district of Ottawa-Carleton. I hereby resign my seat in the House of Commons, effective immediately.

I have enjoyed every moment in parliament. I shall miss the companionship of the House and the honour of sitting amongst the most distinguished assembly in the country. The give and take of debate was one of the most stimulating experiences of my life as each of us strove to serve the best interests of our country in a meaningful way.

On a personal note, may I thank you for all the courtesies you have shown me. To Mr. Fraser, the Clerk of the House, and all the people who make parliament such a congenial place, I say—a heartfelt thank you.

That is signed by the Hon. John N. Turner and dated Thursday, February 12, 1976. It is witnessed in the proper form by two persons who are members of the staff in Mr. Turner's office.

Accordingly, on verifying the form and content of that letter of resignation, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—REGULATIONS AND OTHER STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS—CONCURRENCE IN SEVENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McCleave:

That the Seventh Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments, presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1975, be concurred in, and that the committee be authorized to examine the matters referred to in paragraphs 1, 2 and 3 of the said report during the balance of this session.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) wants to begin now, or is agreed that we call it six o'clock?

An hon. Member: Six o'clock?

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

Mr. Speaker: Accordingly, it being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate in which there is so much unanimity among members of the House. I anticipate that the motion by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) will be accepted. I enjoyed the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) in this regard, as well as the remarks of some of the government members who have participated in the debate.

Today is an excellent day for this motion to be brought forth. Earlier today during the question period the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Jamieson) indicated he could not give the House certain information which obviously should be available to the general public. He said this information could not be made available because it would be detrimental to a government operation.

I think the general public and most members of parliament would be very opposed to the situation if they were given the information concerning the CANDU reactors we are now selling under various methods to countries which perhaps should not have them. Today the minister used the same old argument that this information cannot be divulged because we are dealing in an international market with a commodity that is highly competitive, and if we were to indicate what terms were advanced to some of the countries with which we are dealing this would hurt our position. What a lot of clap-trap!

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is a government agency which deals with other governments. It is not some private corporation. It operates through the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The deal in question undoubtedly was financed by the government. It was probably financed without interest. More than that it was financed through the supply of uranium, which itself is in short supply in this country. How short the supply if we do not know because the information has not been released to the public.

It seems to me this is something which should be kept in mind by some of the members on the government side who have said they are in favour of this motion, which really is seeking to make information available to the members of parliament, the press, and the public in general. I am sure many of us think this situation is very marginal in respect of whether or not it should be morally supported, because we are selling the CANDU reactors to countries like South Korea which is in a precarious circumstance to say the least, economically and politically, and to Argentina where there are considerable difficulties and where, if the executions continue, probably there will be no members of the present government alive in a matter of a few months.

When we sell CANDU reactors our government says we should allow it exclusively to indicate under what terms they are sold. I do not think there is a country in the world that sells atomic reactors to any other country in a deal that is made between one government and another which does not make the information readily available.

● (2010)

I am sure there are members on the government side who say that they believe in the right to privacy of the individual, and who believe that the dissemination of information by government agencies is highly desirable and even necessary in a democracy. But over the years the government has acted in quite the opposite way. With reference to the Nuremberg trials that took place in Germany, the German public in my opinion was largely responsible for the development in that country of totalitarianism, Nazism, and the abuses of fascism, by curtailing information given to the general public to such an extent that many of those who were on trial in Nuremberg were able to say that they did not know what was going on, and that they were not given information to allow them to make objections if they had wished to make them. I think this is an extreme example of the result of withholding information from the citizens of a country which would allow them, either through the due process of elections or through the establishment of some type of opposition, to put forth their views if they are aware of the facts.

Government members always say that to divulge this information would be detrimental to security and to the safety of the nation. They say it would be detrimental to our international trade. Why then is it not possible for the government, if it had the wish or the ability to divulge such very simple information as an indication of what our gas reserves are, to make this information public?

I am shocked when I find the general public saying that it does not matter if we have big cars or if we waste gas, or if we put on pollution controls which are not effective but which use up more gas, or if we do not insulate our houses sufficiently or turn down the heat, or if we do not conserve our industry resources, simply because they do not believe there is really a shortage of fossil fuel. They do not believe it because the government has never told the people what our reserves are. I do not believe that the civil service is so incompetent that it does not know what our reserves are. I am also of the opinion that the authorities are not so incompetent that they do not know that the oil companies are playing a game with them.

I am sure there are people on the National Energy Board who have a pretty good ballpark figure as to what our resources are. Yet we heard the gas and oil companies saying that our reserves were sufficient to last us for 100 years, but very shortly afterwards a crisis erupted, and then we were told that we have reserves only to last us for the next eight years. In fact our resources may be sufficient to last us for 20 years, but the government has never been able to tell that to the Canadian public.

Yes, I am sure there are people on the National Energy Board and in the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources who have a pretty good idea of what our resources are. The government does not tell us what they are because it wants the industry to have an advantage both when there is a shortage and when there is a surplus. So who is beaten? There are members of the House saying that they are not able to sell oil reserves in their areas and that this is causing lay-offs, and there other people who find that a resource is becoming very scarce in some other areas. All this is to the advantage of the oil industry. Either the government is totally dominated by the industry and by its friends in the establishment or it is totally incompetent.

An incompetent civil servant can put a stamp on a letter or a report saying "confidential", "for eye scrutiny only", and stating that the document must not be taken out of the room. If it is such a bad report the wisest thing may be not to let it out of the room so that nobody will read it, otherwise there will be all kinds of incompetent people making incompetent reports with other people analyzing them at great cost to the country. But if people can look at these reports, they can also make the decisions necessary.

One of the problems we have had in this country is that there have been incompetent people who have got into the habit of stamping every piece of paper confidential. Once these reports can be examined and assessed by the press, by members of parliament, and by the general public, the public will be able to reach a pretty good decision on their worth and can interpret their content.

There are many areas in which there is lack of information, and many reports are written which the government does not release because it says the information should not be divulged because that would not be in the interest of the department concerned. It says this about unemployment insurance, about manpower, and about reports from various other departments of which I have some knowledge.

When I telephone senior officials in these departments any day of any week, I find that they are holding a conference. I telephone the chairman, the deputy chairman, the heads of the departments, but they are all at the same damn meeting, all preparing confidential reports which only they can read, and they spend half their time at meetings discussing matters which they consider to be confidential. These reports might enable me to reach an opinion on the subject, but I am not allowed to see them.

The Liberal party has a new gimmick now which really delays everything. They say that a document cannot be released. The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien) has this down pat. He says he cannot release any report now until it is prepared in two languages. So if a report cannot be held up for any other reason, one can say it will not be released for two months because of translation. There are all kinds of ways in which information can be kept from the public, but it seems to me that it does not make for a very informed public if these documents are not being released.

There is another factor to be considered. The press in this nation is often highly excited every time one of the cabinet ministers or one of his senior officials leaks a document. That makes it believe that this is an immensely important document, and as a result it is given more publicity than is warranted. If the government wants a document released as a kite, it always leaks it to the media, and the media give it all kinds of precedence which they would not give it otherwise.

Not long ago I attended a meeting in Sudbury where the Canadian Transport Commission was holding a hearing, only to find that the day before the hearing took place a report was issued by a senior member of the Department of Transport in Ottawa under the direction of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). That report said that Nordair, which was making an application to land at Sudbury, would not be allowed to land at the airport because the runways would not carry 737's. It was already carrying DC-9's, and DC-9's only weigh about 1,000 pounds less than a 737's, so that they are almost the same size.

It is interesting to note that the district office where the reports and measurements are made, and from where all the information comes, made a report not long before that saying that, if necessary, the largest planes flying in Canada at that time, 747's, could be handled. It was interesting because the manager of the airport, who was not an employee of the Department of Transport but an employee of the city of Sudbury, telephoned the district director in Toronto and asked him what was the state of the runways. He was given a report that they were better than they had been, in excellent condition, able to handle any loadings in the foreseeable future, there was no difficulty for landings, and the underbase was sufficient to carry anything which would be landing.

The airport manager went back and told the hearing about this. Where does that leave the commissioner, who is a former member of this House? He was sitting there with a report saying that no matter what was done with relation to that application, the airport was not going to be certified to handle that type of plane, and whether there was a hearing or not, there was not going to be a licence granted to land at that airport.

I am sure that report was confidential. I am sure if it existed at all it was highly confidential, and for no one else's eyes except a senior official and the minister. This is one of the very great abuses taking place in a particular field.

There have been advances made in the Statutory Instruments Committee. I think it made some excellent recommendations. The people who attend that committee are to be congratulated for the work they have done. They are not out to destroy our form of government, this government, or the operation of our civil service, but they are out to see that the Canadian public is given all the information possible, and I think they should be supported and given a new mandate to continue their discussion.

In all sincerity I ask the government to give very serious consideration before using the lame excuse, every time, that information would be detrimental to Canada if it were released. If each minister looking at information provided by his officials would consider whether he agreed that it should be confidential, he might be able to release much of this information and make members of parliament, members of the press gallery, and the citizens of Canada much better informed. That would considerably strengthen the parliamentary process and democracy in Canada.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, this is the first time since the provisional revision of the Standing Orders regarding the business of supply that advantage has been taken of the device permitting hon. members in the opposition to make use of allotted days to propose motions which must come to a vote but which, if accepted by the House, do not constitute, by definition, a vote of no confidence in the government.

When the rules were altered in 1968 it was provided that opposition motions which were required to come to a vote were, by definition, no confidence motions. Before that time opposition motions on supply had often been affirmative in their wording and at least three times in the previous 20 years such motions have been adopted. At least in part because of the present provisional Standing Orders I am happy to inform hon. members that the government finds the motion today wholly acceptable and commends it to the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: For the first time since 1963 a government has been able to accept an opposition member's motion on supply, and not a little credit must go to my friend, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). He has been a firm advocate of a less restricted approach to government information, and yet by avoiding a strident or partisan approach he has been able to bring the matter closer and closer to a positive resolution.

Perhaps I may be permitted a slight digression by observing that the hon. member has applied this honest, constructive, but hardly uncritical or unduly compliant, approach to his role as opposition House leader as well, and I am sure that our fellow House leaders, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin), would agree that this approach has proved invaluable, not only in the daily management of the business of the House but also in making progress toward procedural reform.

I do hope the hon. member will stay long enough so that we can continue to make even greater progress in procedural reform, and I know he links the subject of our discussion tonight with that other matter, and I have some sympathy with him in this respect. I think the two matters do have a relationship.

The Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments has been seized of the question now before us, or matters bearing on it, for almost three years. It has been in the last 13 or 14 months that the greatest progress has been made. It is interesting that nobody's approach, either on the side of the opposition parties or on the government side, has become static. This reflects the constructive manner in which the joint chairmen have conducted the proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sharp: I should like to pay tribute to the chairman from the House side, under whom I have given testimony, and who certainly has conducted the proceedings in a very non-partisan and constructive way. If I may also mention the major contribution which has been made by such other interested participants as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid), he has taken a very special interest in this subject.

As the House knows, I have appeared before the committee, and therefore I will endeavour not to repeat here what already lies on the public record. As I have already indicated the government supports the motion before us, and this is in the hope that the committee can pursue its investigation to a full and comprehensive conclusion. The greatest difficulty for the committee will be in finding a suitable balance between the goal of maximizing, if I may use the word, the amount of information made available and protection of the national interest and the security of the state.

The committee must also take into account the relationship between the principle of freedom of information and the functioning of government or, if hon. members prefer, of effective administration.

In 1973 my predecessor in office, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. MacEachen), tabled guidelines relating to notices of motions for the production of papers. When I succeeded him I referred these guidelines to the Standing Committee of Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments for study and report, and they form one of the documents before that committee. I shall not, as I have already indicated, read those guidelines into the record again, but I should like to read the general principle upon which they are founded. The purpose of the guidelines was stated in the general principle as follows:

To enable members of parliament to secure factual information about the operations of government to carry out their parliamentary duties and to make public as much factual information as possible consistent with effective administration, the protection of the security of the state, rights to privacy and other such matters, government papers, documents and consultant reports should be produced on notice of motion for the production of papers unless falling within the categories outlined below in which case an exemption is to be claimed from production.

When I appeared before the committee I asked for comments on the various criteria to be applied in determining if government papers or documents should be exempt from production. It is fair to say, I think, that there was no substantial dissent as to the criteria proposed for this purpose by the government. There was some comment, and I invited the members of the committee to give us their frank views as to the adequacy of those criteria. Although the list proposed by the hon. member for Peace River was shorter than the bill he put forward, it covers roughly the same area of privileged information and documents.

The essential problem that concerned the committee while I was before it—and I gather which still concerns the committee—the one upon which there are and can be legitimate differences of opinion is this: how can members be sure that documents, access to which is denied, really fall within the exempt categories?

This is also the essential problem in relation to the demands of the public outside parliament for information about the activities of the government. I hope that the committee in its further studies will provide some advice and guidance on this crucial point.

There is a case for having some outside arbitrator or a court to which appeals could be made against the decision of the government not to disclose a particular document, but one should be careful not to impair the principle of responsibility of the government for the decisions made by ministers or officials.

In the end it is my view that it should be the government that makes the final decision as to the disclosure of documents, because under our system of responsible government it is the government that must accept responsibility for the consequences of disclosure. I have had some discussions with the hon. member for Peace River and I think we agree that this is one of the crucial points. In his bill he has proposed a system of appeals for the public seeking information. I assume this would also relate to members of parliament seeking information. It is an extremely difficult and vital point because I do not think one can transfer the responsibility to whoever is the appeal court for the consequences of the disclosure of documents that the government does not feel it is in the public interest to disclose.

It may be that even though a court takes into account all the factors of which it is cognizant, it may make a mistake and the burden of the mistake must be accepted by the government itself.

May I go to another point raised by the hon. member for Peace River? He referred earlier today to working papers prepared by civil servants. As I recall it, he said something like this: he agreed that there should be no disclosure of working papers until the government had made a decision, but that those papers of a factual nature should be released after the decision had been made. Madam Speaker, I have had the privilege of being on both sides of this issue. I have been a civil servant and I have also been a minister. I have prepared working papers and I have received them. I think I may suggest that if my hon. friend had had the same experience he probably would not have made the suggestion he did.

Mr. Baldwin: I remained a virgin.

Mr. McCleave: Professional, but still a virgin.

Mr. Sharp: If he is in that position he probably did not give good value for his money.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: I would use as an example a report that I signed in 1957 about the economic outlook for that particular year. I suppose it could be considered a factual report. It contained all kinds of statistics and analysis on the basis of which some forecasts were made about the economic outlook for that year. It was one of the documents which was before the government of that day when budgetary policy for the 1957 budget was under consideration.

That particular document was released in 1958 by the new government which assumed office in 1957. It became known as the "hidden report" and was used extensively in the 1958 campaign. At that time I protested the release of that report because it threatened to interfere with relations between the government and its civil service advisers. That report represented the best advice of those civil servants who prepared it. It was provided on a confidential basis for the use of the government. If the civil servants concerned had known that their report was going to be published either then or later, they would have asked their ministers what they should say for publication so as not to be at cross-purposes with their political masters, or they would have given the report orally and not on paper. This is an issue of great complexity and delicacy and I trust the committee will explore it in depth before tendering their advice.

Moreover after many years of experience in government as a civil servant, and more recently as a minister, I am literally appalled at the immensity of the problem of providing access to working papers or even, if I may add, of providing a list of the working papers which would seem to be called for if disclosure were to have any meaning whatever.

It would be a fatal error, in my judgment, to institute a system which compelled civil servants to rely on word of mouth in giving their advice on complex issues, or to resort to devices such as draft memoranda, a device which I gather is resorted to in jurisdictions where full disclosure is the law.

I do not think there would be any difference of view if I were to say that it is of the essence of our system of parliamentary government that ministers make the decisions and take the responsibility for those decisions. They are free to accept or reject the advice of their civil servants, who do not take the responsibility for the decisions. I ask this question: if working papers were to be disclosed at any time would it be expected or permitted for civil servants to go public and defend their advice, or would they be expected to accept the criticism without any opportunity for reply? I make this point because this seems to me to be the essence of the problem we face: either we have a system of responsible government in which ministers make decisions and take responsibility, or we do not. If we bring civil service documents into the argument it seems to me we are altering the very principles upon which we now function.

Another point which seems to cause confusion concerns the classification of information. The system now in use is designed for internal administrative purposes, not for external purposes. The philosophy under which documents are classified in the Canadian government, and I assume it is the same in other governments, is that information should be available to those in government who "need to know."

If a document is marked "secret", it means that it is for the attention of ministers or very senior officials. More junior officers in a properly organized department or agency may require some of the information in a secret document but they are unlikely to require all of it, or perhaps not in the manner in which it is presented.

"Confidential" is the term applied to information required by a wider range of officials, but not necessarily all of them.

There is another classification called "restricted", which really only means "for internal use only."

The problem, as I suggested, is that these terms used for administrative guidance are the same as words used for external purposes. They should not be confused.

In defence or foreign affairs "top secret" means that the disclosure of the information would result in exceptionally grave damage to the safety of the nation; "confidential" refers to information that, if released, would be prejudicial to the interests of the nation.

The system of classification of other internal documents is not really related to whether they should be revealed publicly at all. It relates to how far they shall circulate within the circle of the civil servants, or of the ministers. When it is suggested sometimes that such and such a document has been overclassified, that argument is irrelevant as to whether it should be published. All documents prepared within the civil service are meant for circulation within the government and they are not to be published. The "secret", or "confidential" or "restricted" means that they are to circulate within a certain circle. One could sometimes think, when one hears discussions about information, that, somehow, when the government marks something as secret, it is secret from outside. It is not. All documents are secret from outside. They are intended for internal use only. The "secret" refers to how far they can circulate within the government itself.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What label do you put on a document that is supposed to be leaked?

Mr. Sharp: "Secret."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Sharp: I fully support the extension of the mandate of the Statutory Instruments Committee and urge the committee to continue in this thorough manner. As much information as possible should be made available by government. Only the most narrow definitions of national safety and stability, personal privacy, and justice and equity, should serve as restrictions on information. It is to the advantage of government to release as much information as possible. I may add this: I have been in government and connected with it, one way or another, for almost 30 years. When I compare the volume of information that was released when I entered government and the volume of information that was requested with what is done today, I can only say that there has been a vast increase. Indeed I do not think it is too much to say that we are polluted with information.

Mr. Stanfield: You mean you are polluting the country?

Mr. Sharp: It could be, but information is certainly released. Far more information is released today about government operations and about facts upon which decisions are made than was ever released in the past. For example, I can recall previous ministers of finance preparing the budget.

When I first was in government I worked in the Department of Finance. The then minister of finance presented a budget not quite as long as those which have been presented in more recent years. There were no accompanying documents, except the accounts. There was no analysis of the economic outlook, no white paper, and so on. All this has developed in recent years. This example should be multiplied many times in government.

I think citizens have become more aware of problems and of actions that governments propose as solutions. I welcome this. I think it is essential. Citizens, by being made more aware of problems and the activities of government will, no doubt, endeavour more often to contribute criticisms and suggestions. That will lead not only to a more responsive government but to a more effective government as well.

In conclusion may I make a comment about comparisons with other administrations, other countries with differing institutions. Most of these comparisons—

Mr. Baldwin: You are better than Russia, anyway.

Mr. Sharp: —are irrelevant to the problems we face here. We do not have the same system of government as in the United States, or as in Sweden. We do face special problems to do with the parliamentary form of government of this land.

An hon. Member: You mean, the Liberals?

Mr. Sharp: In this country there are special circumstances. I might say to my hon. friend who interrupted that the same principles were followed by the previous Conservative administration as are followed today. I am sure that when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was the premier of Nova Scotia he followed much the same principles as are being followed here. Therefore I suggest that the committee, in looking at solutions, should not be guided too much by the example of other countries but should, rather, seek original solutions suitable to Canada. I say, on behalf of the government, we hope the Committee is successful. The government is anxious to provide all the information which can possibly be provided.

Mr. Baldwin: Madam Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Will the minister accept a question?

Mr. Sharp: Certainly.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question which the committee may find useful when it resumes its deliberations. I was going to ask him a question which I need no longer ask, namely, if he accepts all the principles in the motion, including the principle of the enactment of some type of freedom of information legislation. He and I might differ as to what is in it; I understood from his comments that he accepts the principle set out in the motion, that there should be some kind of legislation along those lines. If I am wrong the minister can correct me.

May I ask him a further question? He and I have discussed who should have the final decision, the government, or the court, on whether a document lies outside of documents which can be publicized. Without prejudice to my right to urge the committee, and later the House, to adopt the other end of the argument, namely, that the court should have the final decision, may I ask if the minister will give or has given favourable consideration to an alternative I put before him, at least for purposes of discussion, and it is this: If the government were to have the final decision as to whether a document falls within the excepted class, should not the tribunal at the very least have the right to publicize the fact that it made its decision and that the government saw fit, for its own reasons, not to comply with it?

May I ask another question? Actually, I am asking a double-barrelled question—to give the minister a chance to consider the first part of it. I am raising the matter of working papers. I accept the view that, if a working paper contains informed opinion, it might not be necessary to make it public. But what is the position with regard to a working paper which is entirely statistical and/or factual, and does not contain opinions or recommendations? It seems to me that this is merely a matter of mechanics. It is possible for a civil servant to make a recommendation and attach it to a factual or statistical document, so that there is a plain difference between the two. Would that situation affect the hon. gentleman's approach to this issue as to what working papers, if any, could be publicized after the decision has been made?

Mr. Sharp: Madam Speaker, the first question the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) directed to me involves one of the most crucial issues we face. I expressed the opinion in my speech that the final decision as to disclosure of documents should be made by the government, so as to retain the principle of responsibility. I agree with this.

There could be a legitimate concern on the part of those who ask questions, or ask for the production of documents—and I am not referring only to this government; I am referring to any government—there could be a legitimate concern that the government may be withholding information for other reasons, information which may not be in the exempt categories. It may be put under that category for purposes of withholding information. I ought to stress that, when I say this, I am speaking personally; I am not speaking on behalf of the government. This is a question to which we have not addressed ourselves in Cabinet.

I feel some sort of ombudsman or official might be given the responsibility of advising whether the document in question does in fact fall within a certain category. This opinion would be made public, and the government could then decide whether it wished to disclose or not. I think it would help those who are asking the questions to know whether in fact the government was justified in its attitude. If the answer from the official was, "Yes, there is information in the document which falls within the category", it would be one thing. But if he said, "There seems to be no information in the document falling within the category referred to", that would be quite another. That might be a direction in which we could move, but as I say it is a personal opinion.

On the question of the working papers I have thought a good deal about what the hon. member for Peace River has suggested and, frankly, I am skeptical. My own feeling is that what would be prepared, if that were the rule, would be documents intended for purposes of publication.

If it were known that documents which contained only factual material were the only documents which could be disclosed, a minister might well be inclined to say, "Prepare a document which contains only factual material and which can be published if necessary." I believe it is vital for good government that ministers should have access to the frank opinions of their advisers, and these will only be given when officials are confident that their advice will not be revealed. Otherwise an official would say, "What is it you want me to tell you, because I cannot be at odds with my political superior; if I were I would be in politics?"

Mr. Jim Balfour (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in support of the motion and to offer some observations with regard to the need for legislation with respect to the principle of freedom of information.

I begin with the principle that all government documents, records, and other forms of information should be accessible to the public unless the release of such information is withheld for a good and specific reason supported by provision for a judicial review of any withholding decision made by the government.

I believe it is axiomatic that no government will willingly surrender information that might embarrass it, inconvenience it, or simply make its life more complicated. To expect otherwise would be naive. When governments demonstrate reluctance to provide public access to information they must expect grave suspicion that their motives are impure. It is also true to say that even the most ardent proponent of open government action agrees that there are situations in which official information can properly and legitimately be withheld from the public in order to protect either individual privacy or the national interest. What we are confronted with, therefore, is the need to strike a balance.

While the withholding of information can sometimes be justified, the indisputable fact remains that the people cannot govern themselves in a democracy if agencies of government withhold access to information concerning issues on which the public is expected to form a view. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, once secrecy is legitimized in any area there is a natural tendency for it to spread—secrecy provides an opportunity to conceal mistakes or misbehaviour, to permit officials to shape policy without outside consultation, to permit elected officeholders to avoid accountability for their actions.

Others have spoken, or will speak, of the rather feeble attempts of the government to satisfy demands for freedom of information. I propose to focus my remarks on the steps taken by governments in other countries, notably Sweden and the United States, to provide the citizens of those countries with ready access to government records.

The Swedish system of open information dates back to 1766, and since 1809 the Swedish government has guaranteed the citizen a right of access to government documents. At the present time the freedom of the press act spells this out. Denial of access can only be justified by reference to an omnibus secrecy law which enumerates exceptions on the basis of criteria established in the constitution. And everyone in Sweden has the right to see all official papers not made secret by the 1937 secrecy law.

The procedure for exercise of this right is very simple: the claimant simply demands the paper or file he wishes to see from the civil servant who has it. At his peril the civil servant must decide whether the document is public or whether the paper, or part of it, is secret. He must then make available what is not secret.

When an official refuses delivery, the claimant may appeal to a superior authority. If it is not proven that there is a constitutionally supported basis for denial of access to a specific document, then a custodial official is required to supply the document upon request and without cost, immediately or as soon as possible. A decision not to deliver may be appealed within the agency, to the supreme administrative court, or to the parliamentary ombudsman. The services of the ombudsman are free and he assumes the burden of moving forward once a complaint has been lodged with him.

The exemptions are very carefully and precisely contained in the secrecy act and generally cover the same sort of material as is accepted under the American system and proposed under Bill C-225. National security, defence matters, certain types of criminal investigation, exchange of documents with foreign powers, information which would breach the privacy of individual, all qualify as secret. In addition working papers with one or two exceptions are not made available until the decision in respect to which the papers have been prepared has been made.

In addition to these laws the Swedish parliament has also passed an automatic data processing law. This law makes provision for the registration of all who wish to gather material through computers; the establishment of rules under which the material is gathered and disseminated, and the establishment of an appeal board. Sweden seems to be the only country which has a specific law in this connection.

In Norway and Denmark there are laws which are much more recent in origin and which provide for a statutory right of access to certain documents, again with certain exceptions. One notable addition in the Danish system is that where, in the preparation of material for a policy decision, an oral communication is made, that oral communication should be reduced to writing and is then considered a document.

A common thread in all these countries is the attitude of the public servants. It is quite apparent that over a long period of time there has been a gradual eating away of these rights by the civil servants and the bureaucracy through actions of the government and the parliament from time to time.

Similarly, in Norway and Denmark, where preparations to proceed with legislation came much later, the civil servants made certain they would move very slowly and cautiously.

In the United States the freedom of information act, first passed in 1966 and then amended in 1974, is said to be founded on the principle that access of information to the public is necessary to determine whether the government is protecting the public interest. It recognized that access to such information is the life blood of a democracy and if it does not flow to the citizenry, democracy withers.

A second basis for the legislation is to make it possible for citizens to have access to facts that can be personally helpful to them. Regulatory agencies, for example, possess large amounts of data, such as inspection reports, consumer complaints, and product tests on a broad spectrum of goods and services, the efficacy of drugs, the nutritional content of processed foods, corporate product and merchandising practices, the on-time performance and safety records of airlines, and so forth. The department of health, education and welfare makes inspections of federally supported nursing homes. The department of agriculture has data on pesticides and the purity and quality of meat and poultry. Housing and urban development makes FHA mortgage appraisals and monitors the practices of many large housing developers. The national highway traffic safety administration has safety and efficiency information on all makes of cars. The general services administration tests a wide variety of consumer products that are used by government agencies.

The freedom of information act in the United States provides in essence that any person has the right of access to, and can receive copies of, any document, file or other record in the possession of any federal agency or department subject to nine specific exemptions. Government employees face the possibility of sanctions if they arbitrarily or capriciously withhold information. In addition the act permits agencies to disclose records, even though they fall within an exemption, when there is no compelling public interest for withholding.

I am grateful for the opportunity recently afforded me as a member of the Standing Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments to spend some time in Washington where meetings were held with various government departments and agencies deeply involved in the implementation process of the freedom of information act. The American experience has identified problems and pitfalls which we would do well to avoid. However, even in the short term in which the legislation as amended has been in effect, it has had a salutary effect on bureaucratic practices and abuses previously in existence.

As a result of the freedom of information act there is a fast growing tendency in the United States on the part of the bureaucracy to declassify documents at the time of their genesis, and thus in effect get rid of the documents by consigning them to the archives where they are totally accessible to the public, in the process relieving themselves of future problems in connection with people seeking access to such documents. In one case they point to an example of a body of documents containing some 45,000 pages, all of which had originally been classified as confidential. On re-examination, however, in the face of requests for access, it was found possible almost overnight to declassify 35,000 of the 45,000 pages. That is to say, 78 per cent of what had been considered in the first instance to be confidential was found upon reconsideration not to be confidential at all and was therefore declassified. Ultimately we were told that well over 90 per cent of this particular body of information was declassified.

This demonstrates, I suggest, the tendency of the bureaucracy to treat as confidential a vast body of material that is not really confidential at all and ought to be accessible to the citizens of the country. Let us not forget that it is the taxpayers who support the bureaucracy and for whose benefit the bureaucracy exists.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like simply to reemphasize the need for access to information legislation. As was said by the Attorney General of the United States in 1968:

> If government is to be truly of, by and for the people, the people must know in detail the activities of government. Nothing so diminishes democracy as secrecy. Self-government, the maximum participation of the citizenry in affairs of state, is meaningful only with an informed public. How can we govern ourselves if we do not how how we govern?

Now in 1976, when government affects each individual in so many ways, it is more important than ever that the right of the people to know the actions of their governments be secure. As government secrecy grows with the size of its operations, so does public mistrust of that government. Mistrust of government by the Canadian people is seemingly at a high point and it is most important that this trend be reversed. As the situation now stands, there is nothing that guarantees members of parliament access to the information which is needed for us to carry out our responsibilities.

I would like to quote from an article written by Harrison Wellford entitled "Rights of people—the Freedom of Information Act". He wrote:

> In a democratic government, information—Especially timely information is the currency of power. The relationship between free access to information and responsible government is direct. Excessive secrecy blocks the citizen's ability to hold officials accountable.

Government must be aware in its decision-making that it is accountable to the people. It is my belief that Bill C-225 would go some distance toward impressing this fact upon cabinet ministers and civil servants alike, and thus improve the quality of our Canadian democracy.

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, about the same time last year, the House discussed and rejected an opposition motion which accused the government of being too secretive. This phrase impressed me from the very first time I was elected because it is one of the usual charges made in the House against the government side, and echoed by political commentators.

Therefore I wondered to what extent this accusation was justified particularly because the public at large and the people who elect us generally, whatever our political affiliation may be, mostly express their frustrations in regard to government departments and agencies by saying that they cannot cut through the red tape, that they get lost in the bureaucratic maze. Government officials are not interested in their problems and concerns. People say: They don't care, and never will: They are too secretive. It remains that—and the previous speaker just said so—we come up against so many barriers when we look for some very basic information, often to answer requests by those same constituents, that I got to accept openly the idea that many data kept under secrecy should be publicized, either at the very time when they mean something to the citizens and their elected members, or directly 20, 30, or 70 years later, according to the regulations of the Canadian Archives.

In this regard, I appreciated the declaration of the member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who emphasized the continuous process of informing the citizens, as opposed to releasing information during election peaks. In other words, I can summarize this first comment by saying that this information will have a certain value at a certain time, that is when it comes off the press, not six months, three or five years after a parliamentary crisis or election promises. In my opinion, this is not a way to manage the circulation of information.

In a way, this is the conclusion of the seventh report of the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments on which the House is probably unanimous today. This positive work atmosphere is thus much different from that of February 20, 1975, when, if I remember well, an agency was accused of refusing to release a staff study report. Then, we must admit, we were playing politics and everything was based on the political concept as well as the adversary system derived from the legal milieu.

Before going further, I hope I will be allowed to say clearly what many members thought after some recent elections about this adversary system in politics. Evidently it comes from the newly elected members who are not used to the legal milieu and have no legal training. This political concept applied to the distribution of government information would rather restrict as much as possible the information which could be used by members of the opposition.

While I understand the political aspect of information accessibility, I am often embarrassed, if I may say so, by the scarcity of the information made public—I do not dare add, by the minister. And I speak as a government member. Is it due to a lack of experience? I am sure the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) would spontaneously say so, or is it perhaps a new sensitivity to the concept of politics or to forces ratio that exist in the House of Commons, since it now comprises new players—the media. I think that only the future will tell.

About this political dimension of withholding information as much as possible from the "adversary", although not a member of the committee I read the most interesting evidence given by Professor Maxwell Cohen at the November 25 meeting of the Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments. He does not hide the problem, he says non-equivocally:

● (2110)

[English]

When one thinks of power, then, one should think of it as a kind of centrepiece for the whole political process. And secrecy is within the centre of power itself. It seems to me that no political system operates without some degree of confidentiality.

[Translation]

It is clear, honest and realistic. But on the degree of information that should be standard, I continue to think that, generally, the government could give a lot more and still remain in office.

After the technical and specific statement made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Chrétien), I cannot and I dare not get into the details of the titles of documents to be held confidential or to be released, but I would like to present tonight the view of an ordinary member of Parliament speaking on behalf of his constituents and anxious to support the principle of free circulation of information. Personally, I cannot understand why cabinet has not yet reversed the present rule that any document, and often any information, be regarded as confidential until further notice. It seems to me that on the contrary any document should be considered as public property, unless a decision to the contrary has been made, and the burden of proof, if I may use that phrase, lies or should then lie on the cabinet or the minister responsible. But I understand, in this regard, the distinction established by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) about the decisions made in court. I think that the only acceptable reasons should generally be related to a code on national security, the success of industrial, commercial or other negotiations and the respect of the individual, to a code pertaining to the standards of privacy in Canada, for Canadians of course.

Until now, I have spoken without making any distinction between the government and the bureaucracy. I may have done so spontaneously, for I have yet to decide, having been on both side of the fence myself, which of the players mentioned are most guilty of withholding information the public and their elected representatives are entitled to. Who is the most guilty? The minister who does not publish a document, or the deputy minister who failed to advise him even of its existence, or again the civil servant who hid the report received from an expert—department or hired by contract—because the quality of the report would not be acceptable if the taxpayers were ever to suspect that some of the texts we have to accept are paid for with their money. I may sound as if I am joking, but I certainly am not. On the first day of my first session here, one thing struck me to which no one dares refer in public but to which we are all, I believe, subject to various degrees: fear.

All political men, and nearly all civil servants, and particularly senior officials, are afraid. If I had some books by Bernanos here, I am sure he could express better than me this dimension of human nature, which we are able to live, which I do not deny and which I should not want to deal with lightly in this House. Thus it is very realistic to ask that everyone, both hon. members and civil servants, work in a general atmosphere where there is an element of unknown and of stress associated with partisanship, which results in fear and paralyzes many private initiatives.

The proposal before us tonight asks us to approve in principle a piece of legislation concerning wider circulation of information. I am not sure that a piece of legislation will help people better understand what should be made public, or that it will not force these people to protect themselves against possible prosecution, by writing reports for publication or establishing an even more complex system of various communications which could not be published and which would be in fact the real reports. I must say I am worried by this question. A piece of legislation will try to define the criteria for the documents which should be made public. I do not think we can oppose this although I made some reservation on this.

But I do not understand why an effort is not made, well before a legislation is ready, to change by positive guidelines or urgings the atmosphere, the climate that prevails in many government offices. And, of course, this is something for each minister to do because the word is good only if it comes from the boss.

To give a concrete example, all my colleagues who worked for months on a special committee on immigration will know what I am talking about when I recall the hours of energy and efforts wasted trying to unravel the procedures and practices followed by officers in the selection of new immigrants. The object of the crime, so to speak, happened to be a miserable manual nearly unreadable to a layman, published every three months, I think, and giving the rating of trades and professions according to their demand in Canada by area. In fact, that material is so confidential that when I wanted to find it in my own office to quote it in exact terms I never found it.

Hundreds of federal employees have been working with that manual in Canada and elsewhere for probably two years, a manual which, incidentally, and I emphasize this, is a key document for anyone wanting to do a good job according to the regulations on immigration.

It is really impossible for me to accept, and I am not the only one who thinks so, that parliamentarians who ask for it and need it for their work do not receive a copy as soon as it comes off the press. Personally I go even further. I do not understand why landed immigrants who sponsor a new applicant, or applicants themselves, are not explained the rules of the game and what their trade corresponds to in terms of the needs of this country. Abuse? The trickery of the system? That is a joke! My working experience with the public in the public service before my election tells me that the percentage of smart guys who would fool the system and lie, for example, about their occupation would be very low, everything considered, and second would be easy to check out.

Anyway, I assume that generally people are rather honest on our side and among the public. That frame of mind, that compulsion to withhold everything rather than release information is an insult to the intelligence of the people and members of parliament.

Here is another example just as commonplace. I cannot begin to understand why certain of our constituents have to take the time to write to us, asking that we get in touch with officials in some departments in order to find out why they were not hired for such or such a job awarded under a public service competition. I cannot see why we should be sent from one official to another, why everybody should lose expensive time, when it would be a simple thing to send a circular letter that would not flatly indicate: "Sir or Madam, you are not accepted". A blank space could be provided for various statements such as: "You have been awarded rank 464 of 5,000 candidates, unfortunately 100 only were hired." People would get a more concrete view, and very few would pursue the matter any further. After all, this is their most basic right.

Mr. Speaker, I would conclude with a renewed suggestion. Since I was first elected to this House three and a half years ago, I have heard it suggested by members from all sides that we should have freedom of information, as the point has been made in a rather moving way by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

I believe that we would have to be masochists to say that we do not have enough information. Our desks are full of all kinds of papers that are given to us at any moment of the day or evening. However, I prefer the subtle interpretation given by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who spoke of a continuous process, to which I would add the time dimension of information. Information is a living thing, and is valid, if I may say so, only as soon it is printed.

Some very factual and statistical documents must of course be used afterwards for a very long time, but the information is much more valuable when it is new. I will close with my hobbyhorse, which expresses in a way the fear of many politicians, men and women, and which, in passing, could be the symbol of the freedom of information, that is the wish that all our debates be televised for the public as soon as possible.

● (2120)

Mr. Harvie Andre (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to say that most of the time spent in this Chamber by members in discussion, in debate and so on, is spent on issues of the day, bills, and problems which come up that are important in terms of the circumstances of the day, or a problem which exists today.

Seldom and too infrequently do we have the opportunity to discuss a subject which perhaps does not affect us immediately and does not have an immediate effect on our constituents or the country, but yet which over the long haul may have a profound effect. Today we have that opportunity in discussing the report of the Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments by means of the motion brought forward by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), which deals with freedom of information. As I have indicated, this is not of immediate importance to the people of Calgary Centre, Peace River, or any other constituency, in the sense that it will affect the way they live tomorrow, next week or next month. However, in terms of Canada and the type of government and society we will have in the future it is of vital importance.

It has been acknowledged by many people that to a great degree knowledge is power. There is, therefore, a very natural tendency on the part of the government to hoard knowledge in order to retain power. The hon. member who preceded me, the hon. member for Saint-Michel (Miss Bégin) said, and I think I am quoting her accurately, that the government could give more information than it is giving, and still remain in power. I agree with that statement. Yet that is symbolic of this concept that knowledge is power. There is in that statement a sort of recognition that the giving out of knowledge may in some way result in a weakening of the holding of power. Of course it is that fact which causes the civil service, the government and the cabinet to want to retain as much knowledge as possible and to be reluctant to give out knowledge.

On occasions such as today, when we have the opportunity to debate this subject, it is important to remind ourselves that this is a democracy and that it should be the people of Canada who should have this power. In a survey of the world situation it would appear that democracies as we have known them are diminishing in number. Whether or not they are being threatened may be a subject of debate. However, the people of Canada and the people who live in countries which are fortunate enough to be democracies are firmly convinced this is the best system. Nonetheless it is threatened.

Democracies can be retained in a serious way only if we retain in a serious way the fundamental concept that it is the people in democracies who have power. If they are to have real power they must have knowledge. They must have access to all the knowledge that is accessible. Certainly if any meaning is to be given to the phrase "participatory democracy" it quite clearly is participation by people who are knowledgeable and therefore people who have access to all the knowledge available.

● (2130)

Let me make the observation that the debate today on all sides has been on a very high level, and indeed if the government reflected in its policy in regard to the dissemination of information the opinions expressed by members who spoke today, I suggest there would be no reason for this debate and no reason for the motion of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, which was based on the work conducted for many years by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I do not mean to imply that the hon. member for Peace River is getting old. We should all be so young!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are all getting younger.

Mr. Andre: I hesitate to throw a partisan note into this very high level debate, but the attitude expressed by government members today is not reflected in the wooliness with which they have been dispensing information under their control. That is why this debate is necessary, and so is action on a freedom of information act. If the government were more free with information than it has been and than it is, such an act would be an aid for it, particularly now when the government is endeavouring to introduce a restraint program on the growth of public spending.

It is interesting that in the 1975 review by the C. D. Howe Research Institute, a study which dealt in large measure with inflation and the extent to which government spending contributes to inflation, a document which dealt in an even handed manner with this problem, there is a recognition that one of the major contributors to inflation is government spending. The study also acknowledged that there are tremendous pressures on the government to spend more on health, regional problems, transportation, etc. The document also pointed out that in a democracy there is only one answer to that sort of pressure, that is, full and complete information provided to the public.

I should like to quote from the 1975 review which states:

> It is clear that governments will have to impose a new form of spending restraint on themselves because there are not sufficient natural restraints forcing them to assess the productivity of their spending. As a first step in this process of self-discipline the public should be given more and better information on the spending process.

So that far from a purely negative thing, giving out more information being a reduction of power which the government might hold, in fact it would be very beneficial if the government were more forthcoming with information on the spending processes. It would find it far easier to introduce the type of spending restraint that is now required if the anti-inflation program it is attempting to implement is to be successful. So I think it would be of benefit to the government if it divulged more information.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Sharp) indicated in his remarks that budgets nowadays are far more elaborate than they were when he was a civil servant in the Department of Finance. The fact that they are thicker and more elaborate does not mean they contain more information. The C.D. Howe Research Institute study states quite plainly that there is a difference between verbosity and communicating information, and the type of thing the minister was referring to, the production of huge documents on how our dollar is spent, in a green or a white paper, does not constitute freedom of information. What the public needs to know are the facts before the spending process, the facts before the fund raising processes, not opinions put in fancy documents primarily intended to back up the judgment of the minister.

I can give a few examples of where the government is being overly secretive. A press release was issued by the former minister of industry, trade and commerce now the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) stating that Canada sold a CANDU reactor to South Korea for some $300 million. He also indicated that this would be financed by the Export Development Bank. When we asked for the interest rates charged for this money, the minister refused to give us the information. Again today the minister refused to answer questions on this subject put by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield). Without that information the figure of $300 million is absolutely meaningless.

A small part of the information is sometimes worse than having no information. If my wife came home and said she spent $10,000, I would be ready to faint, but if she told me that she spent that over a period of two or three years on groceries, that would not be so bad. So part of the information is worse than having no information, and that is what we have on this CANDU reactor. Without the figure on the interest rate, the figure on the sale of the reactor is meaningless.

I recall the time when we were discussing the bill to establish Petro-Canada. The minister was asked whether his department had undertaken a study of national petroleum companies in other jurisdictions. He indicated that such a study had been undertaken, but when we asked for that information he said it was an internal document which could not be made public. In the end we were almost forced by closure to pass the bill to set up a national petroleum company which was authorized to spend $1.5 billion of public funds. We had to pass the bill without having the background papers which led the government to conclude that such a company was desirable.

The President of the Privy Council spoke about ministerial responsibility, and said that under our system civil servants must be free to provide frank information and opinions so that the minister can be in the best position to make decisions. We do not argue with that, and perhaps this comes from the fact that the minister has spent too little time in opposition because he forgets that in fact it is parliament which passes bill, and which takes the responsibility for the implementation of legislation. Yet time and time again parliament is asked to make these decisions without information.

If working papers are to be kept secret, this assumes that working papers are opinion and not fact, or that they contain more opinion than fact. I would be shocked to think that the government is making decisions on legislation and policy based entirely on the collective opinions of civil servants rather than facts. If the government has access to facts in its decision-making process and then puts forward to parliament a bill based on its decision, then the government has an obligation, I maintain, to make all the facts associated with that bill—not just the facts which support the government's case—accessible to members of parliament, because it is parliament which is called upon to make decisions.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Give us just a couple of minutes.

Mr. Andre: Don't you have a plane to catch, Joe?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): No, but I want to speak. You are talking it out, and you haven't said anything yet.

Mr. Andre: You have been talking so much that you cannot hear. You cannot listen and talk at the same time, Joe.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Give us a couple of minutes.

Mr. Andre: Keep it up, we are just about finished.

As part of a freedom of information package which would govern the handling of information, I think it is absolutely essential, if we are going to maintain any illusion at all of parliamentary democracy, with parliament enacting laws, that parliament have complete and total access to all information. It is unsatisfactory for a minister of energy, mines and resources to tell a committee, as was the case with regard to a committee I was on, that the committee cannot see a study made by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources on petroleum companies.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I simply wish to inform the hon. gentleman that we are dealing with a motion which is specified in the order paper, and I should have preferred that he close the debate on the same non-partisan note in which the debate has been conducted.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I must say that I was listening very carefully to the remarks of the hon. member, and they were quite related to the motion.

Mr. Andre: Just very quickly in conclusion, all background information related to bills must be made available to members of parliament. All consultant studies must be made available and public. All facts in working papers—we are not looking for opinions—must be made available, and committees of this House must have the right to question civil servants on any aspect of public policy which they feel would be relevant and important to members of parliament.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being 9.45 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question to dispose of the motion now before the House. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that we call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At 9.47 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

SUGGESTED DELAY IN VESTING IN CANADA OF THOUSAND ISLANDS BRIDGE PENDING CONSULTATION WITH ONTARIO—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise to propose a motion under the terms of Standing Order 43 arising out of the government's disregard of existing statutes of the year 1936 which state that the Canadian section of the Thousand Islands International Bridge will revert to, and become the property of, the government and the people of Ontario as of March 1, 1976. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling):

That this House condemns the illegal and unwarranted attempt by the government of Canada to seize without compensation as of March 1, 1976 the Thousand Islands International Bridge and all its assets in Canada valued at more than $25 million from the government and the people of Ontario to whom it rightfully belongs by law as of March 1, and further the House orders the government to immediately desist from proceeding further without full consultation with the provincial government and full public disclosure on this matter to the taxpayers of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PUBLIC SERVICE

FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO CORRECT PRACTICE OF RUG-RANKING OF SECRETARIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the second anniversary of the St. Valentine's Day march on Parliament Hill by federal government stenographers, protesting the despicable practice of rug-ranking whereby secretaries are paid, not according to their qualifications but according to the person for whom they work. The federal government promised fast action some two years ago and, despite all the pious speeches of International Women's Year, rug-ranking even on Parliament Hill still exists.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), and I should like to present in conjunction with this motion this valentine to the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Drury):

That this House condemns the government for its lack of action in dealing with a matter of considerable concern to some 18,000 of its employees—the practice or rug-ranking—thereby showing, once again, that it is quite heartless.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Such a motion cannot be presented without the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon Members: No.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON PENSIONS FOR PRISONERS OF WAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I therefore ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 43, to move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman):

● (1110)

That this House deplores the fact that no statement was made yesterday, as had been promised, concerning legislation respecting Canadian veterans who were prisoners of war as recommended unanimously by the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs in its report of June 12, 1975, and calls on the Minister of Veterans Affairs to make such a statement without further delay.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

INDUSTRY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PLANS FOR RATIONALIZATION OF AEROSPACE INDUSTRY AND FITTING DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT INTO SUCH PLAN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Max Saltsman (Cambridge-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that Douglas Aircraft apparently intends to lay off some 1000 members of its 1,650 member work force, and in view of the fact the North American aerospace industry has been experiencing difficulties especially in regards to finding markets for commercial aircraft, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent):

That the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce be instructed to report immediately to this House his progress and future plans regarding the rationalization of the Canadian aerospace industry and how Douglas Aircraft of Canada fits into such a rationalization. The immediate nature of this matter cannot be over-emphasized if we do not want to see a repeat of the loss of skilled craftsmen and technical personnel that occurred when the Avro Arrow program was abruptly ended.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

APPEAL FROM GUATEMALA FOR LUMBER AND GALVANIZED TIN TO AID EARTHQUAKE VICTIMS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. The head of the Guatemala Forestry Institute has appealed to Canada to rush lumber and galvanized tin to build at least 20,000 cabin type houses for earthquake victims before the rainy season starts in May. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Firth):

That Canada immediately answer the appeal.

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—DATE OF DECISION ON EXPORT LEVY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who on Friday last indicated that reconsideration of the export levy would come up before the cabinet sometime this week. When the minister made that statement he presumably knew that half his colleagues would be in British Columbia this week. Before going into the question of how the government reaches decisions on matters, may I ask the minister if the government has taken a decision with regard to any reconsideration of the export levy and if so what is the result?

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know if there is any use asking the Minister of Finance when the decision will be taken since he seems to have been such a poor forecaster last week, but would he tell us when this very important decision will be taken and when it will be announced to the House.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The cabinet will be discussing the question. It is a matter to be discussed. I cannot predict exactly when it will arrive at a decision.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—NUMBER OF PROVINCES SIGNING AGREEMENTS TO JOIN PROGRAM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will see if the minister knows—

Mr. Baldwin: Anything.

Mr. Stanfield: —anything about this. Can he tell us whether any more provinces have signed the agreement or have committed themselves definitely to signing an agreement with relation to the anti-inflation program, since some two weeks ago the minister said there were only some special problems of a minor nature standing in the way of such signatures and it is now some four months since the Prime Minister invited the provinces to join this marvellous crusade of the federal government.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there have been no fresh signatures. There is some indication there might be several more next week. We naturally would very much like the provinces to resolve their internal discussions in this regard and participate as soon as possible. But I go back to the point I have made frequently that this is a program in which we are seeking the support of the provinces and we recognize there are difficulties for the provinces in imposing these kinds of restraints on the people in their own public sector. Therefore, we have been discussing the individual problems before their signatures.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister feel he will have all the ten provinces in by the end of three years?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I appreciate the support of the hon. member for the three year period. That is just another change in his position.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON OPERATION OF PROGRAM

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance with respect to the program which was just alluded to in the question of the Leader of the Opposition. Yesterday the minister said that he would not give the House continuous reports with respect to the operation of the program but, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, the program has been in operation for some four months. Would the minister not agree to give the House a full report next week on the talks with the provinces and on the activities and price initiatives of the Anti-Inflation Board, particularly in view of the cost of living increases that were announced yesterday?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would be pleased to do so, but of course within the context of the appropriate parliamentary opportunities.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—EFFECT ON INVESTMENT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In view of the importance of this program in relation to the whole question of the economic position of Canada, and in view of the statement on January 22 of the treasurer of Ontario who echoed the concern of the chairman of the Economic Council of Canada about the potential inflationary dangers of inadequate investment and the difficulty that this program might create for investment, does the government have a prediction as to the capital investment and the increase thereof in 1976, which the Economic Council of Canada cited at 2 per cent for itself and which the treasurer of Ontario called a potentially disastrous situation for Canada? What is the government's prediction for the period?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As I have indicated to previous questions, that is the kind of question which I think could be dealt with most effectively in a general economic statement that accompanies the budget. I do not think there would be much usefulness at this point in trying to make such statement.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF DATE FOR BUDGET IN VIEW OF INCREASED COST OF LIVING

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Having regard to the statement just made by the minister with respect to the budget, if that is where it is to be made, has the minister reconsidered the date he set for the budget in view of these things that are important to the Canadian economy as a whole, and in view of all the unanswered questions with respect to the anti-inflation program and questions that were brought home to us all yesterday by the increase in the cost of living in this country?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): It seems to me that the hon. member is confusing two things. In the course of the budgetary statement, of course, the government attempts to set out what it feels will be the trend in economic factors, including the levels in investment, and it really makes no sense to do that except in the context of a budget. As to the anti-inflation program, as I mentioned yesterday, there will be opportunities within the House proceedings to discuss either details about this or the program in general, and I would be quite happy to do so within these opportunities.

Oral Questions

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

NUMBER OF CORPORATIONS SELECTED FOR PRICE MONITORING—REQUEST FOR LIST OF NAMES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, in reply to questions put to him by me the minister did not deny that the government had selected only 350 corporations for its price monitoring procedure. I should like to ask the minister explicitly today: has the Anti-Inflation Board selected only 350 corporations for such monitoring and, if so, what was the basis for that selection? Will the government take steps to provide a list to the House, and therefore to the people of Canada, of these corporations?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I am not sure of the figure to which the hon. member is referring. The government has in fact sent out the requirement to file to 6,500 firms.

Mr. Broadbent: I am aware, as I think other members are, that the board sent out a list in January to 6,500 firms, but it is also a fact that they are only looking at some 350 within that list, and it is on that point I want confirmation from the minister. Have they or have they not simply selected 350 from this list of 6,500, which is only in the neighbourbood of 5 per cent, and if so, does the government really believe it can have an effective price control program by monitoring such a few firms?

• (1120)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think it would be more accurate to say that while it may not be possible to continuously monitor 6,500 firms, selective monitoring, as indeed occurs under our income taxation system, of the returns—

Mr. Broadbent: Very different.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is exactly the same thing. The sampling would be an effective means of putting those reporting on their operations under scrutiny, and it will be known that a scrutiny is being conducted.

REASON FOR GIVING SOME OFFICIALS ADVANCE NOTICE OF DIVISIONS—REQUEST FOR NAMES OF OFFICIALS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): With regard to the efficacy of the same program, would the minister confirm that the Anti-Inflation Board is giving advance notice of its decisions to seven government officials in government departments outside the Anti-Inflation Board, including the Prime Minister's office, before such information is made available to the public and to other members of the House of Commons? If it is in fact providing such information to seven or so government officials, would the minister inform the House why these people are being informed in advance, and would he provide a list of the names to the House?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I am not sure whether there are seven. It seems to me to be common sense, however, that a board which reports to the government—indeed, through me to parliament—should be keeping in close touch at all times with other aspects of the Government of Canada. I fail to see any sensible objection to this being done.

STATISTICS CANADA

OMISSION OF QUESTION CONCERNING SPOKEN LANGUAGE FROM QUINQUENNIAL CENSUS FORM

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister responsible for the census or to the Acting Prime Minister.

As the next quinquennial census will begin on June 1, 1976, can the minister tell the House why the question on the use of language at home will be withdrawn and what about the recommendation of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism suggesting the question which was maintained in the 1971 census?

Mr. Marcel Roy (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the census will be made on a five-year period; but for the next census in 1981, the matter will surely be considered.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

I want to know why it has been removed. Is it not believed that it will have a tremendous effect on statistics in Canada?

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, as I said, it is the five-year census and when we will take a much more complete census with a much larger sampling, in 1981, this question will surely be considered for its application.

TRANSPORT

FAILURE OF RAILWAY COMPANIES TO REMOVE SNOW FROM BRANCH LINES—REQUEST FOR ACTION—ATTITUDE OF COMPANIES TOWARD BRANCH LINE OPERATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works as Acting Prime Minister. It has to do with the serious situation with regard to the railway lines in western Canada, and particularly in northern Saskatchewan. I refer to branch lines where no serious effort is being made with regard to snow removal, with the result that small towns and villages are actually isolated. Will the minister get in touch today with both the CNR and CPR and impress upon them the necessity for immediate action?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to see that the officials in the Department of Transport do proceed along the line of action suggested by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was asking the Acting Prime Minister to do this himself because nobody knows where the Minister of Transport is perambulating today, whether politically or otherwise, and this situation has to be faced now. I therefore ask as a supplementary question if the minister agrees with the widely held view—and I am of that opinion too—that there is a concerted effort on the part of the railway companies to bring an end to branch lines in the western provinces and, in particular, to have no concern for a continuance of passenger service on branch lines?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that view.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the kind of answer the government has given in connection with this whole problem.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION MR. IVAN HEAD BRIEF MEMBERS OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON RESULTS OF PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT TO CUBA

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. When Mr. Ivan Head returns from his trip to London and other capitals to brief ministers and officials on the results of the Prime Minister's discussions with Premier Castro, would it be a courteous gesture if he were to brief the Standing Committee on External Affairs? Would the hon. lady discuss this proposal with the chairman of that Standing Committee?

[Translation]

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel like taking rather lightly the suggestion made by my hon. colleague from Fundy-Royal, who should know better, as we say in English.

Of course, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is the first to be informed of such visits made in the name of Canada. In any event, I shall convey to the Minister the remark just made by my hon. colleague.

HEALTH

RESPONSIBILITY FOR MEDICAL SERVICES TO WHITES AND INDIANS IN NORTHERN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Doug Neil (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the minister is probably aware there are claims from northern Quebec that isolated communities are receiving no medical facilities because the federal and Quebec governments are in a quandry over jurisdiction. Will the minister please clarify the state of negotiations with Quebec and state who is responsible for medical services for whites and Indians?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have asked for a report on the situation in Mistassini. This detailed report has not yet been handed to me. As soon as I get it, I will be pleased to give a detailed answer to the hon. member's question. However, I can tell him that it happens occasionally that positions are vacant and difficult to fill immediately, whether in Northwest Quebec or in communities located in the Arctic. This can have been one of the situations where some vacancies have not yet been filled.

[English]

Mr. Neil: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It has also been claimed that provincial doctors visiting reserves have been asked to stay away by federal nurses. Will the minister clarify this statement and state what interim steps his department is taking to provide proper medical services?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, I have read the same allegations as did the hon. member, and, as I said earlier, I am not able at all to confirm or deny anything in this respect, but I find it strange to read in the same press report that they complain about the lack of nurses while they say two lines further that the lack of nurses would prevent doctors from going there. Therefore, this seems to me at least incoherent or inconsistent within the same press report.

ALLEGATION ANTHRAX SPORES CARRIED ON IMPORTED WOOL—INQUIRY AS TO INSPECTION PROCEDURES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of reports that the spores of anthrax have been brought into North America and Canada on wool yarn imported from outside this country, and in view of the danger this poses not only to the health of humans but also animals in Canada, can the minister indicate whether the government carries out any inspection on this type of imported material and if not, could he tell us why not?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I refer the hon. member to the news release which was issued jointly by my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and myself on February 12, in which we reported that spores of anthrax had been found in a certain quantity of the wool imported in Canada. I think that this was found as a result of inquiries and inspections by the inspectors of the departments concerned.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question. It appears that no routine inspections are carried out on these imported processed wool products, and indeed inspection of raw wool is only a partial inspection and that if raw wool fails to pass inspection the treatment of the raw wool does not include anything that would necessarily destroy the spore of anthrax. Are these procedures being reviewed and updated in the interest of the health of the Canadian people and Canadian animals?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUATEMALA—EFFORTS TO LOCATE MISSING CANADIANS FOLLOWING EARTHQUAKE

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I direct my question to his parliamentary secretary? As many as nine Canadians, mostly in one group, from Guelph, Ontario, have been missing in Guatemala since the recent earthquakes began. Since their disappearance is causing great anguish to their parents and the public, could the minister consider taking special measures beyond those already being taken to locate these people and so end the suffering?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can report to the House, to answer the concern of my colleague which is shared by many Canadian families, that special measures are being taken. We think, on the basis of telephone calls received from Canadians here, in Canada, the work of our embassy in Guatemala and the work of our special task force, that the total number of Canadians in Guatemala can be evaluated at 600. Of these, 460 have been located, if I may use that word. The Department of External Affairs is maintaining communication with families to the greatest extent possible during days, nights and weekends.

PENSIONS FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR—DATE OF STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs? In view of the keen disappointment which will be felt by many who are concerned about the fact that no statement was made yesterday concerning legislation respecting former prisoners of war, may I ask the minister if this matter is still under urgent consideration in cabinet and whether we may anticipate a statement by the minister before the end of February?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yes, the POW matter is still under study, intensive study, by the way. I think, if the hon. member will look at the comments I have made over a period of time concerning the statement to the House, he will see that I said I hoped to be able to make one in two weeks. I still intend to make a statement after I have finished consulting with my cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, within two weeks of what date?

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I prefer not to tie myself down at this time.

PENSIONS FOR FORMER PRISONERS OF WAR—POSITION OF MINISTER IF CABINET FAILS TO SUPPORT MEASURE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs? As the cabinet has not supported the minister in his intentions to introduce legislation with regard to prisoners of war, and I should say that everybody realizes the minister's concern, what will his position be in the cabinet if the cabinet will not support him in his intentions?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to my position in the cabinet, I am the one who made the presentation to cabinet and when making my presentation, it was quite obvious what my intentions were.

ENERGY

PRODUCTION OF OIL FROM COAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF GOVERNMENTS ATTITUDE TOWARDS PLAN

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. As stated in December, the plant of the South African coal, oil and gas corporation is producing petrol, oil and gas from coal. A second plant is now into production. It could eventually lead that country toward greater self-sufficiency in oil from coal. The minister promised, when I first asked a similar question in December, to send an expert to South Africa, to check on this process. I should like to know if this has been done. If so, would the minister tell the House what he has learned and if he is contemplating the construction at an early date of such a plant in Nova Scotia, in order to use our coal, ease our unemployment and help to make us more self-sufficient in oil.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it is too soon to say that we have reached the point where we can make a decision with respect to such a plant. I can tell the hon. member that members of my department have been to South Africa. They are familiar with the technology and have been looking at other technologies. They have been talking to the various coal-producing provinces concerned, to the Canadian Coal Association and to various companies within the association trying to interest them in a co-operative approach to new coal technologies.

Mr. Baldwin: Have you talked to the CTV people yet?

[Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan).]

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO NEW PLANS FOR ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT OF CAPE BRETON

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. I regret not having given him notice; I think he is familiar with the problem, because he visited Cape Breton Island some weeks ago. As the residents of Cape Breton Island are suffering economically from the lack of jobs on the island, is the minister, with his departmental officials, formulating new plans for economic development on the island?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member said himself, there have been recent consultations between the representatives of the Sydney area, members of the provincial government and representatives of my own department. During that meeting, they naturally analyzed the situation with regard to unemployment in Cape Breton and attempted to set up, by creating a special committee, a program to be implemented quickly and remedy the difficult situation in which the citizens of that area now find themselves. I know discussions are being pursued and we can hope that, in the near future, the various levels of government will be in a position to make concrete proposals with a view to setting up a program, at least on a temporary basis for the time being, to face present difficulties. But, with regard to a long term development program to create jobs on a permanent basis, the hon. member knows full well that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is now in the process of studying jointly with the provincial government a number of very important industrial files. We still hope that the time will come soon when we will be in a position to give more specific information in this regard.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT OF ANGOLA

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but, in his absence, I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

In the light of recent events in Angola, and more particularly the recognition of the People's Republic of Angola by the OUA and the effective control the MPLA seems to have on virtually the whole territory, does the minister or the parliamentary secretary consider recommending, in the very near future, recognition of the MPLA as the legitimate government in Angola?

Miss Monique Bégin (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has clearly established the position of Canada as regards the recognition of Angola, in his public statement of January 20. According to the news, a faction seems to progress in the country, but it remains that the rules governing recognition of the state of Angola did not change and that they

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I realize that our targets and accomplishments are high and that they may appear up in the air to the hon. gentleman, but we have been able to reach them on each occasion and I hope we continue to enjoy the same degree of success.

As to the specific question asked, we are not, of course, attempting to judge where people should live—that is a free choice to be made in this country—but we do work at making practical alternatives available. The specific example I can give the hon. member is the $100 million commuter-rail program designed for new commuter projects which allow for decentralization so that people can live away from the major centres and yet have relatively easy access.

I could refer, also, to our housing programs, and I would be delighted to give the hon. member some details on these, but I am sure you would cut me off, Mr. Speaker. They are intended to provide an effective alternative of a family home for those who are prepared to live outside the larger cities. Present programs also recognize the difficulty young families experience in finding single family homes in major cities. We are making it possible for them to find attractive housing in more concentrated form—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Danson: —in the major cities. This leaves, as a further alternative, the possibility of moving out from areas of major concentration.

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Would he please tell us whether the administrator has made a decision in the Irving pulp and paper case.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): I thank the hon. member for letting me know he intended to ask this question. I have received a report which I shall be tabling at the appropriate time under Standing Order 41(2). The administrator has, in fact, found Irving Pulp and Paper in contravention of the anti-inflation guidelines and has ordered the company to make payments totalling $125,000 to the Crown and set the per cent increase at 14. I might say that $100,000 represents a portion of the payment and $25,000 is a penalty for having knowingly contravened the guidelines.

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It has recently been brought to my attention that some of the banks in Canada have been refusing farm improvement loans to farmers who are eligible for those loans. I should like to ask the minister whether this legislation is still on the books and whether the banks are supposed to adhere to it. The same thing happened about a year and a half ago and at that time, the hon. gentleman's predecessor made a statement in the House which improved the situation.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing this matter to my attention. I would be glad to inquire further into it and if he has any specific examples which would assist me in this regard, I would be glad to hear about them.

Mr. McKinley: That is not really answering my question. Are the banks supposed to adhere to this legislation or not?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The banks are supposed to adhere to all the legislation passed by parliament which refers to them. As to the specific question asked, the banks are not obliged to make a loan to anyone, irrespective of the quality of the risk. There is an element of judgment involved. As I said to the hon. member, if he has examples in mind I would be glad to have details and to pursue the matter.

Mr. Allan B. Is it true that after eight years of study and two years in the final definition stage at a cost of $11 million, the contract has been in the hands of the government since September last, and the president of Lockheed came to Canada for the formal signing in January before anyone noticed that the Canadian government was to pay to Lockheed some $100 million in front-end or progress payments?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying the problem of long term financing. The Minister of National Defence is taking a very close look at it and I would not like, for the time being, to disclose anything which might harm the negotiations. This is why I am requesting the hon. member to be patient. I think that within a few days the Minister of National Defence and I will be able to say exactly what has been the fate of this contract.

Mr. McKinnon: Patience is a great Canadian virtue, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know whether it is true that the Canadian government almost unbelievably assumed that

Lockheed would provide the so-called long-term financing and did not have the required funds available itself—that it came as a shock to the Canadian government that it was expected to put up the money, and that for the last six weeks it has been looking for the funds?

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister consequent upon a speech made by the Minister of Manpower to the Toronto Sales Club when he was discussing the subject of national population growth. In connection with a national demographic agreement, including national population goals, have the provinces and territories indicated that they are not prepared to assist in the drafting of such an agreement and, if so, is it the intention of the government to introduce a form of policy statement on national population goals prior to the introduction of amendments to the Immigration Act?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): I would be glad to discuss that question with the Minister of Manpower when he recovers the full use of his health.

Mr. Stanfield: You mean the full use of his faculties.

Mr. Alexander: I do hope the Acting Prime Minister will be forceful in that regard in terms of indicating to the minister that it is necessary to have this policy prior to the introduction of amendments to the Immigration Act.

GOVERNMENT POLICIES TO AID POPULATION SHIFT FROM MAJOR CITIES TO SMALLER TOWNS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the minister responsible for housing, who is involved in the discussion with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In that same speech in Toronto—perhaps the minister did not hear me—the Minister of Manpower made some reference to national population goals and said it was necessary that government do more to encourage a population shift from major cities to small towns, adding: "in my view this affects transportation, education, housing, communication and social services". Could the minister advise me whether he will be introducing any policies more successful than those he has introduced in the past concerning housing which would allow such a shift from major cities to smaller towns? Is he thinking in this regard or is he still up in the air?

Mr. J. M. CONTRACT WITH LOCKHEED FOR LONG-RANGE PATROL AIRCRAFT—ALLEGATION RESPONSIBILITY FOR LONG-TERM FINANCING REASON CONTRACT NOT SIGNED

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services and it concerns technical problems relating to the long-term financing of the long-range patrol aircraft. Is it true that after eight years of study and two years in the final definition stage at a cost of $11 million, the contract has been in the hands of the government since September last, and the president of Lockheed came to Canada for the formal signing in January before anyone noticed that the Canadian government was to pay to Lockheed some $100 million in front-end or progress payments?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, we are now studying the problem of long term financing. The Minister of National Defence is taking a very close look at it and I would not like, for the time being, to disclose anything which might harm the negotiations. This is why I am requesting the hon. member to be patient. I think that within a few days the Minister of National Defence and I will be able to say exactly what has been the fate of this contract.

[English]

Mr. McKinnon: Patience is a great Canadian virtue, Mr. Speaker. I should like to know whether it is true that the Canadian government almost unbelievably assumed that Lockheed would provide the so-called long-term financing and did not have the required funds available itself—that it came as a shock to the Canadian government that it was expected to put up the money, and that for the last six weeks it has been looking for the funds?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, of course the hon. member has the right to make his comments but I shall stick to what I said in the first part of my reply.

HOUSING

GOVERNMENT POLICIES TO AID POPULATION SHIFT FROM MAJOR CITIES TO SMALLER TOWNS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a question for the minister responsible for housing, who is involved in the discussion with the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In that same speech in Toronto—perhaps the minister did not hear me—the Minister of Manpower made some reference to national population goals and said it was necessary that government do more to encourage a population shift from major cities to small towns, adding: "in my view this affects transportation, education, housing, communication and social services". Could the minister advise me whether he will be introducing any policies more successful than those he has introduced in the past concerning housing which would allow such a shift from major cities to smaller towns? Is he thinking in this regard or is he still up in the air?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): I realize that our targets and accomplishments are high and that they may appear up in the air to the hon. gentleman, but we have been able to reach them on each occasion and I hope we continue to enjoy the same degree of success.

As to the specific question asked, we are not, of course, attempting to judge where people should live—that is a free choice to be made in this country—but we do work at making practical alternatives available. The specific example I can give the hon. member is the $100 million commuter-rail program designed for new commuter projects which allow for decentralization so that people can live away from the major centres and yet have relatively easy access.

I could refer, also, to our housing programs, and I would be delighted to give the hon. member some details on these, but I am sure you would cut me off, Mr. Speaker. They are intended to provide an effective alternative of a family home for those who are prepared to live outside the larger cities. Present programs also recognize the difficulty young families experience in finding single family homes in major cities. We are making it possible for them to find attractive housing in more concentrated form—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Danson: —in the major cities. This leaves, as a further alternative, the possibility of moving out from areas of major concentration.

INQUIRY AS TO DECISION IN IRVING PULP AND PAPER CASE

Mr. Joe Flynn (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Would he please tell us whether the administrator has made a decision in the Irving pulp and paper case.

Hon. Jack Cullen (Minister of National Revenue): I thank the hon. member for letting me know he intended to ask this question. I have received a report which I shall be tabling at the appropriate time under Standing Order 41(2). The administrator has, in fact, found Irving Pulp and Paper in contravention of the anti-inflation guidelines and has ordered the company to make payments totalling $125,000 to the Crown and set the per cent increase at 14. I might say that $100,000 represents a portion of the payment and $25,000 is a penalty for having knowingly contravened the guidelines.

ALLEGATION BANKS REFUSING FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It has recently been brought to my attention that some of the banks in Canada have been refusing farm improvement loans to farmers who are eligible for those loans. I should like to ask the minister whether this legislation is still on the books and whether the banks are supposed to adhere to it. The same thing happened about a year and a half ago and at that time, the hon. gentleman's predecessor made a statement in the House which improved the situation.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I thank the hon. gentleman for bringing this matter to my attention. I would be glad to inquire further into it and if he has any specific examples which would assist me in this regard, I would be glad to hear about them.

Mr. McKinley: That is not really answering my question. Are the banks supposed to adhere to this legislation or not?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The banks are supposed to adhere to all the legislation passed by parliament which refers to them. As to the specific question asked, the banks are not obliged to make a loan to anyone, irrespective of the quality of the risk. There is an element of judgment involved. As I said to the hon. member, if he has examples in mind I would be glad to have details and to pursue the matter.

HEALTH

EVIDENCE OF MERCURY POISONING AMONG INDIANS IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROVIDE ALTERNATE SOURCE OF PROTEIN

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it concerns his responsibility for the health of the native people of Canada. A report issued by Dr. Barbeau of the provincial health department in Quebec states that out of 48 Cree Indians examined 20 have signs of Minimata disease and three are confirmed as having brain damage. Since the main source of protein in that area, as it was in Grassy Narrows, is fish, and since the summer season for these people is approaching, what plans has the government made with regard to providing alternate protein sources for these people? Are we going to say again, "don't eat fish"?

● (1150)

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all, Dr. Barbeau is not a civil servant of the provincial government, but an eminent doctor practising in a Montreal hospital. About the question relating to the protein and the food taken by the Indians concerned, we are in very close consultation with the provincial government in an attempt to correct the situation and plans are under review on this matter. As the hon. member knows, the mercury contamination in this area seems to stem from natural elements. It is an exceptional situation. Comprehensive measures therefore will have to be taken throughout the whole region.

[English]

MERCURY POISONING AMONG INDIANS—SUGGESTED MASSIVE EXAMINATION OF NATIVES TO IDENTIFY VICTIMS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That "exceptional situation" appears to be arising all across the country. The National Indian Brotherhood have identified vast areas where there is potential Minamata disease. In view of the fact that there have only been 48 examinations in this particular area of complaints, would the minister's department make some kind of massive examination of those people who are now living in areas which appear to be contaminated? In other words, when are we going to start doing something to prevent an epidemic of mercury poisoning in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would not want the hon. member to spread panic among the people concerned. In each area involved, doctors regularly perform intensive tests. We have asked for the cooperation of the population everywhere there seems to be problems. Most of the times, we are dealing with a nomadic population which is hard to get in touch with, but all possible efforts are made, with the cooperation of the provincial governments, to contact the Indians concerned. All I can say to the hon. member is that we are trying our best to trace as soon as possible everyone likely to carry this disease in order to take the measures to prevent the recurrence of such situations.

OLYMPIC GAMES

GOVERNMENT INTENTIONS CONCERNING FINANCING

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board, in the absence of the Prime Minister.

Last week, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont suggested publicly an apparently painless way for Ottawa to redistribute the tax receipt surpluses generated by the Olympic Games and claimed by Quebec. At the same time the Minister of Communications stated that the federal government had already done enough and should not—as Mr. Bourassa claims—again pay part of the costs and deficits. Is the minister today in a position in the public interest to say to this House which of the two statements is closer to the position of the federal government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (President of Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the position of the government is well known; we contributed substantially to the self-financing of the games by passing legislation with respect to the lottery, the stamps and the coins, and in addition we made commitments for the broadcasting of the games and their security. That is the contribution of the federal government—a very substantial contribution—and that is the policy of the federal government.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In view of the statement made by the minister, can he say to the House whether the statement by the Minister of Communications represents the position of the government?

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the minister on television and I think she put the position of the federal government very well when she said that the contributions of the federal government are well known and will remain what they are.

Mr. T. C. I want to ask the minister whether he can give this House categorical assurance that there will be no legislative action taken by the government for the construction of the Mackenzie valley pipeline until the National Energy Board and the Berger hearings have been completed, the reports have been received by the government and considered by this House?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it has been made very clear in the past that we intend the regulatory process, the NEB hearings and the Berger hearings to be completed before any action is taken.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I know that has been the stated policy of the government, but in view of press reports that the government has refused to rule out the possibility of legislative action, do I take the minister's statement today to be categorical assurance that no legislative action will be taken for the construction of the Mackenzie valley pipeline?

Would the government agree to halt the attempted seizure as of March 1 of the Thousand Islands International Bridge in view of the fact that existing statutes provide that it belongs as of that date to the province of Ontario, or as may be otherwise directed by the province of Ontario by order in council, since such order in council has never been passed? If the federal government does intend to proceed, would they agree to pay the province of Ontario at least $25 million compensation?

VANCOUVER—REASON FOR INCREASE IN WATER LOT LEASE RATES

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I should like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. ● (1200)

Hon. C. M. Drury (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I should like to attempt to give the rationale in answer to a question during this period. However, the fact that Vancouver has a very successful economic record of port operations does not mean that the basic rental and operational rates should not be brought up to date.

Mr. Huntington: Mr. Speaker, would the Acting Prime Minister assure the House tht the cost benefit studies behind the very high percentage increase in tariffs being imposed by the Minister of Transport to overcome "deficits" do not include such unrelated items as the St. Lawrence Seaway deficit, the port deficits at Halifax, Montreal and Quebec City, the capital losses at Pickering and the champagne, caviar, tear gas party at Mirabel?

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact it has been some two months since the offer was made by DREE in respect of Crocus Foods in Manitoba, surely the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion must have some indication now as to the position taken by the province of Manitoba regarding that DREE grant.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, indeed it was two months ago that an offer was made to that Manitoba corporation known as Crocus Foods and we are still waiting for that business to inform us of its decision. Of course. after an offer is made the business must consider it in terms of its project and analyze all its implications. I presume that is what they are doing now and it should not be long before they contact us to tell us about their decision.

[English]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with reference to both a motion under Standing Order 43 and a question asked during the question period by the hon. member for Leeds. I simply wish to call the attention of the House and the hon. member to Bill C-82 standing on the order paper which offers a complete explanation to both the point raised in the motion under Standing Order 43 and the question raised by the hon. member for Leeds.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I missed the first few remarks of the hon. parliamentary secretary, but I gathered he was referring to Bill C-82 in respect of the subject of the Thousand Islands bridge and suggesting that in fact it answers the motion under Standing Order 43 and the question I raised.

With all due respect, I must say that—I am sure unintentionally—the parliamentary secretary is misleading the House because the bill is the reason I asked the question and raised the subject in the first place. It most certainly does not answer the question. The province of Ontario has not passed an order in council; therefore, the act being proceeded with is not in accordance with the Statutes of Canada. I feel I am quite in order in asking these questions, in view of the fact that the province and the people of Ontario are further being milked by this government of $25 million in assets which rightfully belong to them as of March 1, or as they may otherwise direct. May I say that they have not otherwise directed.

The only thing in existence is a letter from the Premier of Ontario to the Prime Minister of Canada saying that Ontario is not interested in getting into the bridge business and suggesting further consultation. I believe that is exactly where the matter stands. Therefore, the information being given to the House at this time is not entirely correct and I would ask the government to provide the House with a proper answer to the question I raised.

Of the total amount claimed in the Constituency of Laval and the City of Laval, what was the amount of money and the number of claims accepted for reimbursement under the federal-provincial agreement for (a) individuals (b) the provincial government (c) municipal governments (d) school boards (e) businesses or industries (f) others?

3. Of the total amount accepted for payment in the Province of Quebec, what amount will be provided by (a) government (b) provincial government?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): 1. (a) During the fiscal years 1970 to 1974 only the 1974 spring floods in Quebec were of a magnitude sufficient to warrant federal assistance. The federal government offered to share with the province the cost of relief and reconstruction in accordance with the established formula and guidelines. The disaster assistance program established by the province has now been completed and the province is in the process of preparing an official claim for payment of the federal share of costs. The claim has not yet been received but is expected shortly. (b) and (c) The province has not submitted a detailed statement of account showing the amounts expended on a regional basis. It is expected however that this information will be obtained in the course of the audit.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of informing the House, it is the government's intention to proceed with Bill C-58, and if that bill should be completed, all the votes will be deferred until Monday, I would suggest at eight o'clock in the evening. We would then proceed to Bill C-68, which is the medicare act.

Mr. Baldwin: That is perfectly all right, Mr. Speaker. However, in light of the very interesting exchange which took place a little while ago between the hon. parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Leeds, the hon. member might like to have Bill C-82 introduced and we could then see what sort of legal argument he is able to make.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, if we dealt with Bill C-82, the facts would come to light and we would destroy all the publicity the hon. member for Leeds might have gained.

Mr. Baldwin: Why don't you do it, then?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the statements made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council do follow from our discussions, but it seems to me there is one point that was not made clear and which perhaps should be explained. When the parliamentary secretary suggested that when the debate finishes today the votes would be deferred until Monday, should it not be clear that we cannot proceed with the discussion of motions Nos. 5 and 6 until there has been a vote on motion No. 4, both the amendment and the motion itself? In other words, we are not in a position simply to wind up the debate today and say we will take all the votes on Monday night. After there has been a vote on motion No. 4 we will still have motions Nos. 5 and 6 to deal with.

● (1210)

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, that point ought to have been made clear and I thank the hon. gentleman for having done so.

Mr. Speaker: It may very well be that it ought to be made clear. However, it has not been. The fact is that it is not possible even to consider the procedural regularity of motion No. 5 unless and until the House has made a determination on motion No. 4. It may very well be, after our division on motion No. 4, that motion No. 5 cannot continue on the order paper. Therefore, the House will recall that when discussion on motion No. 4 was completed, discussion on motion No. 5 was deferred until that division can be taken, and motion No. 6 was stood.

The House could either go on, presumably, to discuss any outstanding motions which remain, or else go to some other business until such time as the House divides on motion No. 4, which I understand, and which I take it is agreed to by the House, will in any event not take place this day. In other words, if the discussion on the motions presently before the House concludes today, the House will defer any divisions until some time on Monday and then either go to motions other than Nos. 5 and 6 or to some other business. Is that agreed?

Mr. Blais: That is the understanding that has been reached between the parties, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cossitt: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, stemming from what the parliamentary secretary said just a moment ago.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the interest of fairness, comments about the bill that were referred to by the parliamentary secretary were made by him by way of a non-point of order. I therefore permitted the hon. member for Leeds to make a lengthy rejoinder, in a sense of fair play. The non-point of order was not raised by the parliamentary secretary but by the House leader of the official opposition. I permitted a very brief comment by the parliamentary secretary. All of them were non-points of order, and I have no intention of letting it go on as a discussion between the parties about the merits of that particular piece of legislation. Orders of the day.

Mr. Cossitt: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say I did not rise on anything pertaining to the bill itself or anything said previously. I was rising in respect of a statement made by the parliamentary secretary that if he were to proceed with the introduction of this bill he would therefore be destroying the publicity that I, as the member for Leeds, was getting out of raising this matter. I think that is a completely ridiculous, uncalled-for an unwarranted statement. I have raised a matter of grave concern to thousands of my constituents and the people of Ontario who are being robbed by the government of approximately $25 million. To be told—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I thought I made it clear to the hon. member for Leeds that I allowed him to go quite considerably beyond the bounds of ordinary procedure in making a rather complex statement on what I thought was a rather full statement about the matter, on a non-point of order, and I think the matter ought to end there. Orders of the day.

INCOME TAX ACT

REMOVAL OF PROVISIONS ALLOWING DEDUCTION OF EXPENSES FOR ADVERTISING IN NON-CANADIAN PERIODICALS

The House resumed, from Wednesday, February 11, consideration of Bill C-58, to amend the Income Tax Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to the bill, which I should like to present. Perhaps I might read it now. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That motion No. 7 be amended by deleting the proposed subparagraph (c) and substituting therefor:

"(c) a written agreement entered into after the coming into force of this section with a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if the minister of the Department of National Revenue has approved a plan submitted by the said Canadian subsidiary providing for compensatory payment by such subsidiary by the allocation of funds to Canadian television program production, extension of Canadian television service, development of Canadian talent, or otherwise for the benefit of Canadian broadcasting:

The minister may require as a condition for entering into any such agreement that a percentage, to be stipulated by the minister, of the voting shares of such subsidiary be beneficially owned by Canadian citizens.

This subamendment is in response to a statement made by the hon. member for York West (Mr. Fleming) and is designed to eliminate his objections to the amendments recorded in respect of motion No. 7.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I take it that the seconder should be the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. McKinley). Is it agreed, pursuant to the motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie), seconded by the hon. member for Huron-Middlesex, that motion No. 7 standing in the name of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) be amended in accordance with the terms of the motion just read by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre?

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, this debate has been carried on for a number of hours. I should like to say at the outset that the debate in no way is meant to be critical of the Canadian broadcasting systems, the networks or any of the stations affiliated with the Canadian Broadcasting Association, or the television stations. I have noticed, from reading Hansard, that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications has made some statements regarding the statements I have made in relation to the situation involving KVOS-TV, Bellingham. I have pointed out that I am not only very pleased with the work BC-TV has done in Vancouver, but I wish it well and trust it will continue to do well.

I believe in the free enterprise system in a competitive market. I think BC-TV has prospered because it is in a competitive system and has good business management. The parliamentary secretary objected to the amendments I have submitted in order to protect the competitive system. He objects because he says this is an infringement of the legislation or, rather, an infringement and interlacing of tax legislation with the CRTC. As recorded at page 10849 of Hansard, the parliamentary secretary said:

Hon. members cannot argue out of both sides of their mouths. I hope hon. members will consider that when they talk about the situation in Detroit and Windsor. The hon. member for Surrey-White Rock went on to say that this is in effect a tax bill to update the Broadcasting Act. Of course nothing could be further from the fact of the matter. It is indeed for the very reason it is a tax bill that it means to give incentives to Canadians to operate in Canada, and to encourage Canadian businesses to deal with other Canadian businesses to which they interrelate. It is precisely for that reason we are presenting this action here in the form of a tax bill.

That is also precisely the reason why none of these amendments make any sense because if we accepted them we would be doing exactly what the hon. member tried to attack us for doing. If we took his amendments we would be saying, "OK, let us through a tax bill make a special exemption which would change the whole purport of the Broadcasting Act." Surely that is the fundamental reason why these amendments cannot be given serious consideration.

[Mr. Speaker.]

● (1220)

Actually, Mr. Speaker, all I am asking is that hon. members of the House recognize that while there must be a national broadcasting policy, surely, in the interest of fairness, there must also be consideration of regional differences. I think that if we want to talk about inconsistencies, we might well point to the other matters in Bill C-58 which is under discussion at this time.

It seems somewhat ludicrous for the parliamentary secretary to say that we cannot make these kinds of distinctions, when the government has made a very great distinction between the situation facing Reader's Digest and that facing Time magazine, when actually it has launched an attack on Time magazine and yet has been able to find a way to spare Reader's Digest. I compliment them on sparing Reader's Digest and I am happy to see that it will remain in operation in Canada. As others have said, let me say that Reader's Digest is certainly not yet out of the woods on this issue, because it is still faced with the vicissitudes and whims of the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) when interpreting the regulations. He did not operate outside the Income Tax Act when he made the special provision for Reader's Digest.

That is simply all that we are asking for, the same kind of treatment for KVOS-TV, Bellingham. We are not denying the need for a national broadcasting policy, the need for sovereignty of broadcasting facilities within Canada and the need to have a licensing policy which deals with all the broadcasting facilities in Canada. That must be safeguarded by statute. But the government has already violated the statute by making special deals for one publishing company, operating outside the statute and by way of regulations. In a matter of two or three months it has changed its own interpretation of those very regulations which it says it will use as guidelines for the publishing industry.

Time and time again we heard the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner) state in committee that 80 per cent different was the rule which would apply to Reader's Digest. We believed him and we were all convinced, as the witnesses said in committee that under these regulations Reader's Digest could not continue to survive. Yet, what happened a few months later? Suddenly the Minister of National Revenue had a ray of light. He got an insight which he had not had before, and he admitted candidly in the House that as a result of discussions in committee and in private he realized that Reader's Digest could not function under the regulations as they had been interpreted.

That is exactly what we are saying about KVOS-TV, Bellingham, that under the present circumstances it would do a grave injustice to KVOS to operate within the statute as it is in its present form. If we want to talk about inconsistencies, I would refer hon. members to Hansard of February 4, page 10641. I asked the minister:

> I wonder if the Secretary of State would not agree that if a writer is restricted by regulation as to how he can write, and the publisher is restricted by regulation as to what he can publish, it is not reasonable to suppose that there is a comparable restriction on the free flow of information?

The Secretary of State replied:

> If I understood the question, and I am not altogether sure I did, I think I would probably have to agree. But I do not see that that is relevant to Bill C-58 or to the debate.

Yet, just ten minutes previously, as recorded on page 10638 of Hansard, the minister said:

> Let me reiterate that the government is not seeking in any way to control the freedom of magazine publishers and editors. Nor do we want to impose our will upon the people of Canada and regulate their reading habits. Bill C-58 in no way impinges upon freedom of expression.

I would ask the Secretary of State to please be consistent in what he is saying. On one hand he says he does not want to impinge upon freedom of expression, and on the other he concedes that Bill C-58, if interpreted according to my question, would impinge upon freedom of expression. That, to me, is a blatant inconsistency. If the parliamentary secretary wanted to look for inconsistencies in this bill, let him look at the words of the Secretary of State.

I say, again, that we are asking to have freedom for people in southern British Columbia to enjoy the viewer selection that is theirs today without the injurious restrictions placed upon them by the prejudicial clauses in Bill C-58. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), in the debate on Wednesday, made what I think is a very helpful proposal. He suggested that where matters of broadcasting come into conflict with international relations, when broadcasting crosses the forty-ninth parallel from both sides and creates problems of international communication and tax problems, these matters should be referred to a commission which would adjudicate on them.

I think that is a helpful suggestion, and we have a precedent for this. The International Joint Commission, which has been operating for generations, sits down yearly—almost constantly nowadays—and brings together both sides in an area of dispute and conflict regarding water and fishing rights as they affect our international relations. Those of us from British Columbia are well aware of the IJC discussions recently concerning fishing rights in the gulf waters of British Columbia. There is no other way of handling these matters, because each country has vested interests in fishing rights for its own citizens and the problems of water, rivers, lakes, oceans, sharing coastlines and rivers, can be solved in no other way, with friendship being preserved, unless we have a joint commission adjudicating these matters.

I suggest to hon. members that that is a creative way of dealing with the conflict which we are facing today. I think the hon. member for New Westminster has come up with a creative proposal to get us out of the jam because, as all members of the House know, one of the leading executives of the lumber industry in B.C. this week met the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and told him of the concern that people in B.C. feel as a result of conflicts issuing from this kind of legislation. He told the Prime Minister that if Bill C-58 passes, the U.S. Congress will prepare retaliatory legislation. That is the kind of conflict we are facing, and the tragedy is that this conflict is completely unnecessary. Why should we fight with our best friend, when both sides can find a way of bringing the conflict into the open where it does not have to antagonize and where it can heal rather than create a rift? I commend the suggestion the hon. member for New Westminster made to us, and I suggest that government members present to their caucus the opportunity of resolving the differences which exist between Canada and the United States with regard to communications. That would take care of this and other problems facing Windsor and Toronto people as they watch upper New York stations and Detroit stations.

Certainly it would take care of the prejudicial situation existing in British Columbia. KVOS television is facing an impossible problem of having, if this legislation passes, to grade its production and having to create an inferior kind of production because of the loss of revenue it will face as a result of the legislation. There will also be a compounding of that problem if the deletion of commercials comes into effect. The combination of Bill C-58 and the policy of deletion of commercials would effectively wipe out another television outlet which brings enjoyment and pleasure to thousands of homes in the lower mainland of British Columbia.

I ask hon. members to consider this subamendment. Speaking specifically to the objections the parliamentary secretary raised about the amendments which I presented earlier, I wonder whether this subamendment does not meet his objections and eliminate them. I believe that hon. members on the government side could support this subamendment, give it speedy passage and so continue to provide for the people of British Columbia the kind of viewing they have enjoyed for a generation and want to continue to enjoy.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, during the past few days we have heard a great deal from the opposition about the broadcasting side of Bill C-58. I wonder how much contact members of the opposition have had with Canadian broadcasters. During the speech of the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) I was beginning to wonder whether I was listening to a Canadian parliamentarian or a congressman or senator from the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It is about time we became concerned about Canada and Canadian broadcasters to the extent that they deserve our concern. I happen to have spent 20 years in that business, and I am concerned and broadcasters are concerned with regard to what is happening over Bill C-58. What will happen to Bill C-58 and communications in the broadcasting industry in this country if the amendments which have been proposed by members of the opposition are allowed to come into effect? No matter how hon. members opposite describe it, they are asking us to allow an American broadcasting station to become a Canadian broadcasting station without receiving a licence; it is as simple as that.

Mr. Wenman: Have you been to Vancouver?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Yes, I have, and I have spoken to Canadian broadcasters in Toronto, Ontario, and in the rest of this country. I think it is about time hon. members opposite started doing the same. That is the whole point. I should like to deal primarily with some of the remarks made recently in the House by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman) and the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco). I refer, first, to the following statements made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West which are found at page 10852 of Hansard:

> Testimony given before the standing committee by the American television stations involved and by the Association of Canadian Advertisers made it abundantly clear that the enactment of this clause will not aid Canadian broadcasters, especially those most in need of additional advertising revenue.

I was there when the ACA presented its comments. They were very good comments, but they were comments I would expect from people who do not want to lose an advantage. If I were in their position, I would make the same comments. But what about broadcasters in Ontario? In Toronto, Global and City TV stated quite emphatically before the committee, as well as at other times, that there are advantages to third party stations. CHAN-CHEX in British Columbia and BC-TV stated quite emphatically that there would be advantages to third level broadcasters in British Columbia.

Let us consider why people advertise. The statement has been made that they buy advertising because of the size of the market. They buy advertising for many other reasons also. They buy advertising because the prices involved and the size of the market determine the price which will be charged. Let us consider an example. Have hon. members ever heard of the A. C. Nielsen report?

Mr. Friesen: Never heard of it.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It is about time you did. It is for September, 1975—the latest available, as a matter of fact. I shall refer to the average household from 4 p.m. to 11 p.m. Monday through Friday. By the way, this happens to be for the Toronto area, just so we cannot be accused of being regional, as hon. members on the backbenches of the Conservative party have been and so have made this debate into an entirely regional confrontation, east versus west, which I think is shameful. Let us talk about Canadian broadcasting and the Canadian industry. CFTO had a 20 per cent rating and WKBW, one of our American broadcasting stations, 14 per cent. There are three grouped together, Global, CBLT and CHCH, with 12 per cent. WBEN and WGR, our American friends, had 10 per cent of that rating.

Mr. Whittaker: What have you got in your area?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): We have some pretty good Canadian broadcasters up there, if the hon. member must know. They are proud to be Canadian, want to stay Canadian and want to grow as Canadian, and passage of Bill C-58 will allow them to do so.

Mr. Wenman: How many people want to hear them?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): There are quite a few people in our area who want to hear Canadian radio and television stations, and if the hon. member is submitting that Canadians do not want to hear their own Canadian stations, I think he should run for a seat in the United States Senate, because I am not too sure Canadians want to hear him say that.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I simply point out to the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) that I began my remarks by complimenting the Canadian industry. I do appreciate it. The amendment is in no way prejudicing Canadian broadcasting, because all of us enjoy it.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I do not think that is really a point of order, but let us see if we are prejudicing Canadian broadcasting.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

An hon. Member: You mean Americans are allowed to talk in this House?

Mr. Whittaker: The hon. member told us that in his constituency there is Canadian broadcasting. In my constituency of Okanagan Boundary, due to regulations of the CRTC, there are many stations which do not have Canadian broadcasting.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I ask the hon. member to resume his seat. He will have a chance to make a speech in due time after the hon. member who has the floor has finished. Points of order are supposed to be related to the conduct of hon. members and their right to speak, not to the content of speeches which hon. members make.

● (1240)

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): In a brief answer, Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member will look at the accelerated program that has been introduced in this House to allow places of 500 population or more to receive programming.

An hon. Member: Thirty years without in B.C.!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members will co-operate with the Chair and the House and allow the hon. member to complete his remarks. Other members had their chance to speak without being interrupted. If some hon. members are not interested in listening to the remarks, I would hope they would at least allow the Chair to hear what the hon. member is saying and follow the debate.

An hon. Member: Those fellows will not be here when the facts are out.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): We were talking about the Nielsen survey which simply proves that if a buyer in the Toronto market wished to buy Global on two occasions, he would have a better audience rate and better receivership than if he bought WBEN. For that matter, if he bought two spots on City Television in Toronto, where there are plenty of openings, he would have a better showing than on either WBEN or WGR. It is worth commenting that on February 10 the hon. member for Kootenay West interrupted the speech of the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) when he said he would like to ask the minister how she related the statement to the effect that KVOS was paying $76 million to the Department of National Revenue.

KVOS, a broadcasting station, paying $76 million to the Department of National Revenue? The $76 million is the total alleged contribution of Wometco to the Canadian economy. To be correct, the total income tax paid by Wometco was $5.4 million over the last ten years. That is quite a bit different from $76 million. KVOS itself has never claimed—and I must congratulate them on that—that it contributed $76 million. The contribution is the total alleged contribution of Wometco, the parent company of KVOS. That includes KVOS, BC-TV Ltd., Canawest Master Films, Canawest Film Productions Ltd., and Wometco, B.C., Limited. How do these all tie in with broadcasting? Let us find out.

Canawest Film Productions is not affected by this bill in any way because we are talking about a tax on advertisers. Wometco, B.C., Limited is the principal owner of a Coca-Cola bottling company. If that ties in with broadcasting in any way, I fail to see it. This leaves $19.7 million as the alleged contribution of KVOS. The board of the parent U.S. company has a subsidiary sales office in Vancouver and claims that it is the means by which Canadian advertising revenues flow to the United States, and nothing else. So I think we had better get a few points straight before we go any further, Mr. Speaker.

If hon. members opposite had bothered to check, they would have found out what is actually happening. I have checked with stations in Toronto and others across the country. Some advertising firms anticipate passage of this bill and have already started to place options for time on some of the smaller stations as a direct result of our discussions. Some $20 million has been taken by three American stations, two in Buffalo, and KVOS, Bellingham. That is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment is suggesting that KVOS should become a Canadian broadcasting station through this $2 million a year. I do not think anybody in this House or anywhere else would say one is a bad businessman if he can pay out two and take in seven. Ninety per cent of the income of KVOS comes from the Vancouver area. They pay 50 per cent of their tax to the United States and 50 per cent to the Canadian government. It seems to me that if a business was taking 90 per cent of the revenue out of the country, it would be expected to pay tax on 90 per cent and not 50 per cent of 90 per cent.

An hon. Member: How is that different from other companies?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It is different because this company comes under the regulations of the Broadcasting Act. I have talked with people from KVOS, and they are fine gentlemen. When asked if they would become a Canadian broadcasting company, however, they would not. No matter what we do and no matter how we discuss it in this House, that is the fact. The fact is that they want to become a Canadian broadcasting company without being Canadian.

An hon. Member: That's right.

An hon. Member: How can they?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): They can apply for a licence and move to Canada.

An hon. Member: Tell us how.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): In the same way that any other Canadian businessman can apply for a licence in any other part of this country and build and develop a business. It is the building and development of a business that this bill tries to protect. As hon. members may or may not know, the early years of development are the most important in any station, and in some instances the most disastrous.

We can look at City TV in Toronto and Global and see what has happened to them. It is the flow of capital that can be generated and brought back into Canada though the passage of Bill C-58 that will allow Canadian companies, whether in British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Newfoudland, or the smaller prairie settlements to give local broadcasting. Let us consider some of the money that is going to be spent in this country. They say they are going to give us $2 million a year, and that is great. But what is $2 million a year going to buy in new broadcasting facilities for British Columbia? There is the accelerated program which in five years will spend $50 million, or in seven years more than $50 million—about $10 million a year.

As a matter of interest, what does KVOS do now about providing news coverage for people in Vancouver? What does it spend on local programming to which the people of Vancouver have a right? They say they put $2 million some place in the broadcasting economy. It appears that one of the B.C. television stations, however—CHAN or CHEX—is spending $6 million to meet the Canadian content rules, the very rules that KVOS want to buy their way around. After six years of service they are going to give up $6 million a year and give us $2 million. It costs $11 million a year to operate.

An hon. Member: How much do they get back?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): From whom? We have talked about that wonderful suggestion of $2 million. I wonder how many members opposite have discussed this problem with the broadcasters in their areas. I did; personally I contacted all the broadcasters in western Ontario.

● (1250)

Mr. Whittaker: Have you ever been to western Canada?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I talked to the B.C. people. Every one of these people, without exception—they are Canadian broadcasters—agreed totally with the broadcasting provisions of Bill C-58. They see the money they so desperately need for their programming going south of the border where it should not go.

Mr. Whittaker: There is not a B.C. member on the other side of the House right now.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): There is not an Ontario member in the House, either, on the hon. member's side, I might note.

Mr. Whittaker: Where are you from?

Non-Canadian Publications

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Statistics Canada presents some pertinent facts. The Statistics Canada report of August 31 deals with the after-tax income of private television stations in Canada. There are about 400 privately-owned Canadian television stations, not including CBC-owned stations. We shall also consider the income of three United States stations. Mr. Speaker, the after-tax revenue, or profit, last year of the 400 privately-owned Canadian television stations was $6.1 million.

Now I turn to a statement made by the authoritative U.S. company, Faulkner, Dawkins and Sullivan. According to the company, estimated net, after-tax income of the two Buffalo stations, WBEN and WGR, and KVOS, was $4.7 million. So here we have three United States stations making profits equivalent to two-thirds of the total profit of the Canadian industry. About 90 per cent of the KVOS profit comes from this country and about 30 per cent of the WBEN and WGR profit comes from this country. To me, as a Canadian, that makes no sense. Those three stations serve the Canadian public and take our profits. One of them was built primarily for that purpose. One of them makes 90 per cent of its profit from serving Canadians. Put together, the three stations I mentioned make a total profit equal to two-thirds of the entire profit made by the 400 privately-owned Canadian television stations which operate from coast to coast. Where do members of the opposition stand on this issue, or are they adopting their present position in the hope of becoming members of the U.S. Senate? Their arguments would be well received in that august body.

An hon. Member: What about an appointment to the Canadian Senate?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): The hon. member has little hope of getting there even if he sits in this House for a long time. Let me now refer to something the hon. member for Kootenay West said on February 11 as reported on page 10863 of Hansard. He said that KVOS is a Canadian subsidiary and during the period 1964 to the present has contributed some $76 million to the revenues of Canada. I question that. If it contributed anything, it contributed about $5 million, not the $76 million mentioned by the hon. member. The hon. member referred to the Canadian Association of Broadcasters. The Canadian Association of Broadcasters happens to be exactly what its name suggests, Canadian. For that reason we should pay heed to what it says. It represents Canadian broadcasters and hopes Canadian broadcasts will stay Canadian. He suggested that United States cable companies distinguish against Canadian television signals. The hon. member referred to the CAB brief and to a statement made earlier by a member of the NDP.

An hon. Member: That was the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt).

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Perhaps it would be best to quote part of the CAB brief. It is clear that CAB said they discriminate against distant signals. The association says, on page 5 of its brief:

> Cable TV operators in the United States are required by the FCC to protect local broadcasters in their communities by deleting whole programs, not just the commercials, from the signals of non-local stations brought in by cable.

[Mr. Whittaker.]

> The Canadian Radio-Television Commission provides for simultaneous substitution. If a Canadian local station is broadcasting a program and non-local stations (including foreign) broadcast the same program at the same time, the Canadian cable operator substitutes the Canadian local signal on all the cable channels with the same program. The FCC procedure provides for simultaneous and in some instances, non-simultaneous "blackout" on American cable systems to protect the local station.

It is clear that there is discrimination against distant signals, not Canadian signals. I bring that point to the attention of the House. All this was summed up by the chairman of the CRTC, who is Canadian, has always been Canadian and has always devoted his utmost in time and ability to what is good for this country.

An hon. Member: That is just romance.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It is not romance; it is fact. He said recently:

> We stand in Canada on the threshold of a flowering of our own cultural endeavours. After a continuing struggle our writers and artists are beginning to flourish. Music, books, painting, theatre—by and for Canadians—are beginning to emerge.
>
> Our broadcasting—radio, television and cable systems are beginning to emerge—and they must—and they will, if Canadians recognize that to protect our own against unfair, unwarranted and deleterious actions is a virtue and not a sign of weakness.
> There are those who say that our mandate to secure broadcasting as an integral part of Canadian life is chauvinistic. The original Sergeant Chauvin caused himself to be lowered into the grave by knotted tricolours—the flag of France.
>
> That may be a surprise to some who toss the expression around so freely. I say chauvinism is truly the property of an individual such as the good sergeant—but devotion to encouraging a healthy sense of being aware of the circumstances of the country of your choice and your inheritance is a natural and fulfilling role.
>
> It is the role I choose willingly—and if it be labelled nationalistic—then so be it. Four generations of ancestors nurtured and cherished in the soil of western Ontario has had its effect. I want my children and your children to be worthy members of the family of man—but to be so—they must be aware of where they come from. It is not something they will learn if our broadcasting and communications become only mechanical retransmissions of the history and values of those who choose America in place of Canada as a new home.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before calling it one o'clock, I must tell the hon. member that his time has expired. I allowed him three or four extra minutes to compensate for interruptions.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would accept a question after lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House must give unanimous consent for the hon. member to reply, as his time has expired. Or does the House consent to allowing the hon. member to put his question now?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is here at two o'clock, perhaps I could ask my question then.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have arranged to leave after lunch. Perhaps the hon. member wants to ask his question now.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. There not being agreement, and it being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak to the subamendment offered by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie). May I say, first of all, that I support this subamendment; I believe it to be well-founded.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas). In my opinion, he gave a fairly well researched speech. He adopted the Liberal party policy that in broadcasting one must first be concerned about the people who are making money, and only second—if at all—about what the people want to hear or watch. His speech seemed to be devoted almost entirely to the quantities of advertising revenue being generated. Not once did he suggest that people might wish to express their own opinions as to what they wanted to watch or hear. It seemed to me that whenever there was a question of advertising revenue versus various other ill-defined quality objectives, advertising revenue won every time.

On the west coast in the Victoria-Vancouver region a great number of our constituents prefer to select the channels they want to watch or listen to rather than those they are ordered to watch or listen to by the CRTC and the CBC. The recent ruling by Mr. Justice Dubé, preventing the CRTC from extending the licence of Victoria Cablevision Company for five years when it came up for renewal, is significant. Mr. Justice Dubé found the CRTC could not renew that licence without hearing an application by Capital City Co-operative to take over the facilities of Victoria Cablevision Company together with the licence.

This presents a real problem for the CRTC. If the ruling of Mr. Justice Dubé is upheld, we will see in future, every time a licence lapses, not only an application from the station that has been producing programs but an application by one or more organizations. The licence holders will be presenting their cases on the basis of their performance, and the new applicants will be presenting theirs on the basis of their promises. There will be no basis upon which to judge what their performance is likely to be. It will call for the wisdom of Socrates to determine the matter in some of these cases, to determine whether a station which has been operating passably should be preferred over one which promises to do better.

The simple economic facts of life have made the licences of radio stations and television stations things of great value. The licence itself should not be of great value. I think we can all accept that proposition, and it is the case presented by Capital City Co-operative. A licence for a cablevision station, or radio station for that matter, should not be a thing of great value, yet over the years this has been the case. I suspect that the blame has to reside with the CRTC, which makes the rules under which these stations operate. Compliance with the rules has always been accepted as sufficient reason for renewal of a licence; hence the likelihood of a station that has been complying with the rules losing its licence was extremely rare.

I compliment Mr. Boyle on the start he has made as chairman of the CRTC. He started off with a tremendous handicap in that his predecessor as chairman, who had the golden handshake, as it were, had the job of allotting licences over many, many years all across Canada. Since these licences were so valuable, it was of prime importance that the CRTC be purer than Caesar's wife. Imagine the consternation among objective-thinking people in Canada to find that the chairman of the CRTC was able to drop his role of judicial impartiality on very short notice and run for the Liberal party in Hochelaga. It is the questionable impartiality of his predecessor that has made it extremely difficult for Mr. Boyle to start work as the new chairman of the CRTC, but despite this handicap left to him by his predecessor I think he is doing a remarkably sound job. I sympathize with him in the difficult position he is now being placed by the ruling of Justice Dubé.

I would have preferred the CRTC to continue with their hearings on the west coast, excluding cablevision from its considerations. I do not think that cablevision and radio station renewals are so closely allied that the CRTC has to freeze everything at this time. There are many radio stations on the west coast, and a couple of new television stations are commencing operations or transferring shares or changing licences. All of this has now come to a stop. Some offers of shares in various companies had deadlines on them. I do not know whether it is legally possible to extend deadlines, but there is at least one radio station in Victoria that was due to appear before the CRTC to have its shares change hands. As I say, this procedure has been stopped, as has everything else.

Two other licence applications of great interest have been stopped. One is the CBC application for an English language television station in Victoria. This was of great interest, of course, to the people on the west coast, partly because it was going to rule another station off the cablevision channels. One of the stations due to leave the cablevision channels would be KVOS, although some people on the west coast thought that KVOS would be ruled out by Bill C-58. It is, of course, not known at the present time whether in fact this bill will ever pass. In the opinion of many of us KVOS has been operating as a pretty reasonable Canadian subsidiary. I hearken back to the speech of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey who was worrying about the money that KVOS had promised to funnel into Canadian television program production according to the subamendment tabled by my colleague for Winnipeg South Centre.

I should now like to speak for a moment or so about what these rulings and what the general attitude of the government toward electronic media is doing to the viewer on the west coast. He is being ignored completely. Men and women on the west coast who have grown accustomed to watching certain channels or programs are not willing to change. I should also like to say a few words about a very touchy subject in Vancouver and Victoria, and that is the French language television station that was to go on the air in Vancouver.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I do not want to restrain the hon. member in his remarks, but I think he is getting farther away from the amendment in front of us at this time. He is entering a completely different subject, although somewhat related. I hope that he will direct his remarks to Bill C-58 before the House at this time, and in particular to motion No. 7 and the amendment thereto.

Mr. McKinnon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to relate the allocation of channels and licences to television and radio stations to Bill C-58. In my area, cablevision channels are in part held by United States stations, KVOS being one of them. I think it is agreed that this subamendment relates directly to KVOS. It relates to about five television stations in the U.S., the main one of which is KVOS. As I read the subamendment, it makes specific reference to the Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking.

I have twice started to make some comments about the French language station in Vancouver. There is no room on the cablevision band for that station at the present time unless some other station is dropped. I should like to point out that the CRTC, the CBC and the Canadian government, showing a total lack of political sagacity, decided to bring on this application for a French language station at this time when channels are scarce. If the CRTC had waited one or two years, both cablevision companies on the west coast have applications in now to go to mid-band broadcasting, which would open up a dozen or more new channels. At a time like that we could transfer some of the favourite programs to those new channels. People would buy transformers which would allow them to listen to the new channels, and the people who wished to have a French language station on the west coast would run into very little opposition.

It is not that people do not want a French language station on the west coast. What they do not want is to have one of their favourite programs pushed off the band. I deeply regret that the government did not have the wisdom to wait another year or two until all the people in that area had converters on their sets. If the cablevision application had been approved, we could have had these converters on our sets within a year or so. With all the extra channels that would be available on the mid-band, the ultra high frequency band, I am sure that the application for a French language station would have run into minimal objections on the west coast and would have been accepted without furor.

I have been wanting to make that point for some time, Mr. Speaker, and I appreciate your allowing me to make it. I think that the public outcry that there is against a French language station on the west coast is due, not to racial or language differences but to the annoyance at being placed in this difficult position when there is no need for it at all. A delay of a year or two until the cablevision companies were allowed to go to mid-band and ultra high frequency broadcasting would have completely obviated this problem. I hope that members on the government side will carry that message to their cabinet masters.

I am pleased with this subamendment that would make an exception for a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if the minister of the Department of National Revenue (Mr. Cullen) approves a plan submitted by the said Canadian subsidiary that would provide for compensatory payment by such subsidiary by the allocation of funds to Canadian television program production. This is the part that is really hurting in Vancouver. KVOS has established in Vancouver quite considerable program production expertise. They use a lot of artists. They are particularly good at the type of programming that calls for art work, and it would be truly a pity if such an industry were forced to relocate in the United States.

This additional money would go to the extension of Canadian television services. I am thinking of money being put into public service, such as in Cable 10 in Victoria or its equivalent in Vancouver where the general public is allowed to present programs which are of local interest. This is certainly done by Cable 10 in Victoria. I have the privilege of appearing on a program on that channel one night per month, as do most of the local elected representatives. The time is divided on party lines. The station operates a telephone call-in service and the people of Victoria are permitted to conduct a dialogue with their representatives. This is the kind of public programming that can be carried out. This type of public programming carried out at the present time in Victoria and Vancouver seems to be far ahead of anything I have seen elsewhere in Canada. These channels were among the first to install colour cameras, and their productions are a credit to the community. I do hope this heavy-handed type of legislation will not do away with the allocation of funds to Canadian television program production, particularly of the community type.

These talk shows which are popular on the west coast—this seems to be a west coast phenomenon—help to train the technicians necessary to operate cable, television and radio stations. For all of these reasons, I most heartily support the subamendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Perhaps I can take one moment to point out, as did the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt), that Bill C-58 is most unreasonably unfair to some of the periodicals Canadians have grown accustomed to receiving and count on for coverage of news events around the world. Maclean's magazine is apparently to replace them. I can only say of Maclean's magazine that it is nice looking and fairly Canadian. One of the problems is the lack of depth in its reporting. When I read Maclean's I rather feel I have surveyed a beautiful lake and found it is only two inches deep. However, that is getting pretty far from the subamendment we have at hand.

In conclusion, let me commend the amendment to hon. members opposite. I do not have to commend it to all of them because some are already convinced of the ineptitude and mischief created by this bill. I highly recommend it to those members who are as yet unconvinced. Perhaps they will consider this matter further this weekend, or next, when members of this party will be labouring at their duties and members on the government side will be sitting idly watching the excitement created by the choosing of the next leader of this country. Perhaps during that time they will decide to give up this hopeless bill and let us get on with something else.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, one of the necessities for this amendment is the fact that the minister is not now in attendance, has participated only slightly and has not attended most of the debate in this House. As a result, I suggest she does not understand the issue in this case.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I should like to bring to the attention of the House, in view of the remarks of the hon. member, that the minister in question has been replaced here this afternoon by the minister to my left, so there is a minister in the House in respect of this matter.

Mr. Wenman: I appreciate that observation, and I appreciate the fact that the whip on that side has done an excellent job of making sure that his ministers are covered. Unfortunately, the decisions that must ultimately be made in generating policy must be made by the ministers themselves. The real issue involved in this amendment is one of time. Time should be given for consideration of this bill and this amendment. This amendment will provide the time for the minister to consider the bill and the amendment in order that she will then understand the matter. The minister did not participate in the committee hearings and she has only briefly participated in the debate in the House. While I am sure she may have read some of the speeches, I think her attendance here is of importance. Because of her non-attendance during the debate, her limited participation here, and her non-participation at the committee, this amendment should be accepted in order that she will have the opportunity to hear representatives from the broadcasting area. I would ask the minister who is here to make representations to the minister to determine whether the issue has been thoroughly aired and understood and if justice is being done. I am sure when she does that she will decide there is no harm in giving us more time on this matter.

Many of the conclusions expressed in the speeches of hon. members from both sides of the House would indicate that the main issue has not been thoroughly aired or understood. The fact that this is a regional issue does not seem to be understood. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the members of his cabinet who are visiting the province of British Columbia will take the time to visit the Canawest production facilities in Vancouver, and perhaps KVOS-TV, in order to have a first-hand look at the situation. If they do not, I am sure when they return they will feel obliged to spend more time on this issue.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) not only attended the committee meetings but has done a considerable amount of research and has spoken in this House about those things in which he believes. I congratulate him on that effort. Because the minister has not participated, and in my opinion does not understand the issue, it is even more important that we spend more time on this matter. I hope that the backbenchers who did attend the committee meetings will speak out very clearly to the government calling for the extra time which is required. I hope they will also persuade the government to accept this amendment which does little more than give more time.

While individual responsibility is inherent in any definition of freedom, what is even more true is that freedom is based upon the absence of restrictions. While freedom of movement is perhaps a very basic and important freedom, the most important freedom is freedom of the mind. Freedom of the mind involves, under any circumstances, freedom to hear, to read and to see what we choose. That opportunity is being restricted and limited in this case. I suggest that even if that freedom to choose is limited in the smallest way, we as members of parliament have a right to recognize that this freedom is being eroded or attacked even if in the most minuscule way. That is the case in respect of this legislation.

If I could make any point, I would make this clear point. Fifty-six per cent of the people in the lower mainland area choose to watch and listen to American television. Because of the penalty involved and the proposed commercial deletion we, in effect, are wiping out this choice of the people. This freedom of choice must be retained, because if we do not have it then there are restrictions in respect of what the mind can see and hear. These limitations are completely unacceptable, I would think, to any parliamentary democracy. On that issue alone I ask people to look very closely at this amendment.

According to the government, this bill is tied together; it is one bill referring to broadcasting and periodicals. If we were to relate the two elements and were to find something that has an 80 per cent application to periodicals, if it were applied to television it would be easy to find the 80 per cent. So the most objectionable feature of this periodicals bill could be complied with by a television station. However, we are attempting to wipe it out. The United States government has just begun negotiations with Canada. One unsatisfactory meeting has been held. Further discussion is required. I suggest this subamendment should be accepted so that time would be provided for all the broadcasting media, not just KVOS-TV, to make presentations on this subject to the government and to the CRTC and perhaps, through them, to parliament.

How could anyone object to giving time so that those concerned would have the right to be heard and would be heard? We may not like what we hear. We may not agree with it. We may decide after a period of a year to take the same course of action, but without this sub-amendment we would merely be closing a door which we should be opening. It was stated earlier that this is a subject which concerns all Canadians and has nothing to do with regionalism. I suggest it is related to regionalism and the kind of thing that was demonstrated in Weekend magazine this week in an editorial headlined "The Ugly Canadian". This concerned, on a smaller scale, the same kind of impact which Canadians have on the people of northern Washington.

Americans are concerned about the impact Canadians have in that country, just as we are concerned about the impact on Canadians of American broadcasting. Just as we would expect them to be tolerant of Canadians and good corporate Canadian businessmen, at the same time should we not expect the same kind of justice to be given to United States corporate citizens who have demonstrated their capacity to make a contribution? The contribution they have made is that of promoting Canadian culture. They have established a major firm in Canada for the production of films. This firm is called Canawest. Canawest will be affected by this bill. Since a contribution has been made to our Canadian culture, I respectfully suggest that we should reconsider the matter of "The Ugly Canadian" in relation to the good corporate citizen in America.

Unfortunately, the point was missed by the good member for Bruce-Grey when he claimed the bill would not do certain things. He failed to tell us what good the passage of this bill will do for Canada. Unfortunately, it will do no good. The whole principle of this bill and the amendment is to increase the flow of advertising dollars to the news media. It has been shown that this will not increase the flow of advertising dollars to the news media. If this purpose is not accomplished, I ask what we will have accomplished other than injury to existing Canadian cultural facilities, and I include Canawest as a promoter of Canadian culture and identity.

I have a message for the minister which I hope will be passed on to her by the minister listening on her behalf. I would suggest to the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé), our fair Portia, that the quality of mercy is not strained should she provide the option of the right to be heard to KVOS-TV and other broadcasters in the same situation, because really what we seek is an element of time. The option to delete this amendment during the next parliament obviously would be open to the government, and in the meantime we would be providing, through this amendment, a period of time in which the government could hear representations from the broadcasting industry.

The most we would be doing would be allowing one more year, or the period of time between now and the next parliament when this entire bill could be presented or when this amendment could be changed if it proved to be unsatisfactory. Surely that is not too much to ask. It is unfortunate that one should be reduced to the position of having to ask for mercy, but I do not hesitate. Although our land might well be disallowed full justice, let this amendment show how mercy can reason justice. If the government continues not only to deny justice but also mercy, the people will have justice more than thou desirest at the next election; because, make no mistake, the members of parliament from this region of Canada have spoken up time and time again. All members have spoken, not once but twice and three or four times in an attempt to get the message across.

● (1440)

Vancouver is not Toronto, just as Toronto is not Vancouver. There are special problems there to which this amendment relates. If it cannot understand what these special problems are, I suggest the government should listen to its own backbench members from British Columbia. The only one who spoke was the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway who made an impassioned speech urging that not only this amendment but that amendments she had put forward be passed. If she were here this afternoon I am sure she would speak on the amendment before us urging that the government accept it on behalf of the people of British Columbia.

I think the statements made by the parliamentary secretary about Canadian stations selling advertising on the U.S. market and the fact that the CRTC has stepped in and stopped this, following which the hon. member had to explain that this was an error—

An hon. Member: The argument was not.

Mr. Wenman: —underscore a basic problem in the broadcasting section of this bill. Actually, there are two problems but the first one is major; that is, that even the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Fleming), who probably knows more about broadcasting than most members of the House—and I give him credit for that—is confused about the various points at issue in this debate. The broadcasting section of this bill has been completely obscured by the publishing side. Because this affects the lives of many millions of citizens who are viewers, voters and citizens, I urge that we take time to give either the broadcasters who have served Canada for many years an opportunity to present a positive program which could be of benefit to Canada, as proposed in the amendments which we are discussing, or that we send this portion of the bill back to committee so that a clear-cut analysis can be made by members. By that I mean that members analyse that portion of the bill with an open mind to find the best way to improve the Canadian broadcasting system.

Secondly, over and above the fact that we have not had time to analyse the broadcasting section of the bill is the fact that was emphasized by the parliamentary secretary when he said that CKLW had no restrictions on selling in the U.S. market. He might have pointed out that the Americans put no restrictions on selling by CKLW-AM. There is no immorality there. By that I mean that CKLW-AM is a powerhouse, the maximum power station in Windsor, Ontario, which has been serving the Detroit market for more years than any U.S. border television station has served Canadian markets. In fact, the tax structure of KVOS-TV B.C. Ltd., when it was set up in 1955 by both the Canadian and the U.S. tax departments jointly, was based on a method that had been used for many years by CKLW-AM and its U.S. subsidiary, CKLW Inc. I might add that CKLW Inc., at its headquarters in Detroit, employs U.S. citizens and bills itself in magazines throughout the United States not as a Windsor, Ontario, station but as Detroit's number one radio station, which in fact it is. It is the number one audience station in the major market of Detroit, Michigan.

The point I am making is that it is not immoral to receive revenues for services rendered. We cannot say that the U.S. stations are doing something wrong when they sell in Canada, when for many years—more years than the U.S. stations—we have been, and still are, doing the same thing in reverse; in other words, selling from a Canadian market into a major U.S. market.

I should like to take issue with another point made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). He read from the brief submitted by the Canadian Association of Broadcasters which referred to the treatment of Canadian stations by U.S. cable companies. After checking with lawyers in Washington, D.C., who are attorneys specializing in broadcasting law, I can state specifically that Canadian signals are treated in exactly the same way as U.S. signals, with no exception anywhere in the United States. By this I mean that, instead of calling a signal either a domestic or a foreign signal, the designation is either a local or a distant signal. Because Canadian signals are not located in a U.S. city, they are designated as distant signals, but they receive the same treatment as distant U.S. signals.

If I were a U.S. border station, all I could ask of the Canadian government in terms of taxes, and of the Canadian cable system in terms of carrying my signal, would be that they do exactly the same to me as their U.S. counterparts do to Canadian signals. It is that simple. CAB should have no complaint whatsoever about the way in which Canadian signals are handled in the United States.

This is the time for sober thought. Our integrity and good sense are at stake. Let us accept the amendment to this section and not "grandfather" anyone into any situation, but merely permit negotiations in such a way that if the negotiated settlement is better for Canada than the punitive effects of Bill C-58, Canada is not precluded from accepting the negotiated settlement. I am not asking that we, as members of the House, make a judgment. All we are asking is the right to be heard. Having heard us, the Minister of Communications will be in a position to grasp the situation, with the help of her parliamentary secretary who has been following the debate closely, following which I am sure we will be able to decide what is rational and right for both Canada, the U.S. and our corporate citizens.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to rise once again in the House and speak in support of an amendment which I think deserves the consideration of hon. members opposite. Apparently up to the present they have not paid attention to what has been said on this side of the House. I think it is a great misfortune that the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) was not here today to hear the comments of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas). I am sure she would have straightened him out, because he is looking inward rather than outward. I am also sorry that he is not here this afternoon to hear what we have to say, because in my opinion he made a hit-and-run speech.

The issue at stake in Bill C-58 goes beyond one television station or even three or four television stations. What we are actually talking about here is communication. One of the misfortunes of people in this world is that they allow communications to break down. I am sure you would agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that many of the problems that families have are caused by a breakdown in communications. This is what happens when people stop speaking with each other. The same is true with regard to families within communities, with regard to regions within Canada and even with regard to nations. The minute they stop communicating with each other, trouble commences.

Therefore, I am deeply concerned about what we in Canada are doing as we unilaterally make decisions which only serve as confrontations with our neighbour to the south. Let me impress upon the House that if the crunch ever comes, the United States will be our last resort for help because of the fact that we share this continent together. What is good for one part of the country certainly has to be good for the other, and if it is good for the regions of the country, it is good for the people who live in those regions. For the last several years I have been concerned about the way Canada has treated the United States. I could relate several instances where we have backhanded the United States and they, being the older and bigger brother, have taken it and said nothing.

I am as pro-Canadian as anyone living in Canada. Some of our families are now fifth, sixth and seventh generation Canadian, and many of our ancestors came to this country from the United States. So from anything I may say it should not be inferred that I am anything but pro-Canadian. However, I am firmly of the opinion that I can be a stronger Canadian if my country grows in conjunction with the United States.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Towers: We have much to lose because we are much smaller than the United States. We have discussed the probability of bringing down a trunk line for the movement of gas and oil from the northern part of the continent, and the reason we are having problems in negotiating such an agreement is that the United States has now come to the point where it can no longer trust Canada and Canadians. It is not sure where it stands. We must realize that the United States is the only country in the world upon which we border. It is north of us and south of us. Therefore, we must consider the fact that the United States is our neighbour, and a good neighbour. However, I am sure the American people are human, and if we continue to backhand them, as we seem to be doing with all the legislation we are passing, petty or otherwise, eventually they will say that that is enough and then we will suffer the consequences.

With regard to television stations, I think this is a small thing. I am sure the dollars which would be saved by Canada would be few in the over-all picture. The hon. member for Bruce-Grey was too close to the trees to see the forest when he spoke this morning. If you want to grow big and strong, you cannot do that at the expense of your neighbour. You can only do that if your neighbour does it with you. I feel very strongly that we must give greater consideration to our friends south of the border in order to have a proper means of communication between the two countries, and not to build a great deal of ill-will, animosity and misunderstanding.

There has been a difference of opinion over the past two years with regard to our beef industry. This matter is very close to us in western Canada. It is as close to us as television is to those in southern British Columbia. A problem developed because we allowed the communication system to break down. I would be very happy if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or the cabinet would give some hon. members opposite who are really interested in the negotiation of an equitable deal with the United States a means of trading and understanding which will be to the benefit of all of us.

I must take exception to the actions of the cabinet, this government and the support it has from some of its backbenchers with regard to the unilateral actions being taken without any discussion with the United States. I am sorry the minister is not here this afternoon to tell us whether he had any discussion with our friends in the United States about the program. Has he discussed what share of the dollars we will get out of television in British Columbia or in southern Ontario? I realize we are entitled to a share and we should have a fair and proportionate share.

In any dealings I have had with Americans, I have found them to be fair, intelligent and very understanding, and I am sure that an equitable arrangement can be worked out whereby we can maintain our status as an independent people and also be held in esteem and trust by our friends. This is of fundamental importance and goes far beyond the amendment we are dealing with today. While I realize that I have been dealing primarily with our neighours to the south, to a degree this could affect our relationship in the whole world of communications. We all know that the world has become smaller as technical means of communication have been developed.

In recent years, and during the past five years in particular, the relationship of this country with her neighbour to the south has deteriorated to a dangerous degree as a result of our lack of consideration, discussion and even common courtesy. The policy of this government seems to be to create dissension by implementing ill-timed and poorly conceived decisions directly affecting our friends to the south. In earlier years, leadership in Canada was exemplified by open negotiation, dialogue and knowledge of that country's interests and their effect upon our own. When leadership exactly the opposite in nature took over our country, the closeness from which every Canadian benefited gradually diminished, and in more recent years one could almost come to the conclusion that the Prime Minister and his ministers feel that our southern neighbour is an enemy rather than the best friend Canada has.

On reflection, this continuing disagreement of Canada with the United States government and its officials appears to be personal revenge on the part of the Prime Minister. Recently he said on his visit to Cuba that he wanted to go there prior to any representation from the United States. He did not say why, but I am sure there must be a question mark in the minds of Americans, and perhaps while he is out in British Columbia he would be well advised to go on one of those television stations—perhaps KVOS—and tell our neighbour why he made that statement.

In my opinion, personal spite or grievance of a leader of any country should not be imposed upon its population through policies at the national level, just to prove one man's authority and to fulfil his desire to get even. If people in public office followed that pattern at every level, a country would be placed in an impossible position and would have a very black image indeed. When a prime minister and his cabinet set this type of example, everyone suffers, on both sides of the border. To be a good leader one must first learn to be a good follower. There is no place in our country for childish behaviour by a government leader at any level.

[Mr. Towers.]

• (1500)

Incidentally, this is not the time for people to be looking inward; they should be looking outward. Why do the government and the cabinet insist on proceeding with these unreasonable and unnecessary restrictive policies which operate to the detriment of our loyal and friendly neighbour to the south?

The bill now before the House, without amendment, is just one more example of decision without forethought, without consideration, and without discussion. I believe that if the minister responsible for the bill had made a trip south of the border to discuss the problem we would not now be spending all this time debating it. Instead he delivered it as a bolt from the blue, and he feels it must be put through regardless of repercussions within Canada or in the United States.

How much longer does the government think it can bulldoze its way through with this type of legislation and expect our neighbour to turn the other cheek? If the shoe were on the other foot the protests of cabinet ministers opposite would be heard around the world, similar to a pampered child who fell on his face because of his own clumsiness yet tried to place the blame on someone far removed from his come-down. I can visualize all the reports stressing what we did for the United States, plus the imaginations of every anti-United States person within and beyond the North American borders.

If Canada wants to create enmity why not choose a country which is opposed to our way of life, which does not believe in basic freedoms or the right of the individual? Goodness knows the world has more than enough countries under dictatorships. I hope we can still maintain our friends among those countries which think and act as we do. Canada needs, and her people desire, the friendliness of the United States and its citizens.

The good will and understanding between Canadians and their southern neighbours is constant and deep. The border does not enter into their minds. There cannot be a line drawn when it comes to friendliness, co-operation, admiration, and communication among people. I would venture to say that relations between people of the maritimes and New England, between Ontario and the central United States, between the prairie provinces and the Dakotas, and between British Columbia and Washington are more loyal and closer than ties between the different regions of our own country because of the fact that two thirds of our population live within 300 miles of the United States border. The United States can get along without us, but we would have a difficult time getting along without the United States as long as there is that 4,000 or 5,000 mile unprotected border.

For what reason did the Secretary of State (Mr. Faulkner), or whoever had the brainwave to formulate Bill C-58, take action which could only heighten the doubt the United States now has about the reliability of the Canadian government? This arbitrary piece of legislation, added to Canada's several ill-conceived agricultural policies, implemented on the spur of the moment by our federal government, must only underline the question: can the United States rely on Canada with her on and off again, up and down restrictive policies initiated at the apparent whim of a government careless of our historic ties and overlooking the strength we automatically have as a nation bordering on the United States? That country has a ratio of about ten to one in population, production, and resources compared to us. Regretfully I would have to say that the ratio would apply as well to public relations, international policies, brotherhood, and loyalty.

What would happen for instance if our neighbour decided without negotiation, forewarning or consideration to legislate its land as out of bounds to Canadians for ownership or publication purposes? How could the Prime Minister and the cabinet explain such retaliation to Canadians that was caused by their policies? As a matter of fact many residents of this country feel more at home across the border than they do here. This is another result of the inconsiderate, biased federal government policies.

Communications between the people of the United States and Canadians are open, friendly, and constant. Communications, whether through television, radio, magazines or people is vital; but communication between the two governments is a basic essential if Canada is to regain the proud image which has been so continuously and vigorously eroded in recent years by those governing this country.

Does the government place pettiness and its persistence to exercise a stubborn, unfriendly attitude above the standing of this country with our strongest neighbour, thus blackening Canada in the eyes of the free world? Mr. Speaker, I hope the government gives credence to what we are saying on this side and recognizes that as the United States grows, so grows Canada. We are both going to grow better and stronger if we grow one in conjunction with the other.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary): Madam Speaker, I was not going to enter this debate until I heard the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas) speak earlier about how similar television and broadcasting were in Ontario and British Columbia. I doubt very much if he has travelled beyond the small orbit of his own riding because I do not believe he knows what he is talking about when it comes to television or broadcasting in British Columbia.

An hon. Member: Where is that?

Mr. Whittaker: Somebody from the party to my left asked where British Columbia is. Well, they used to know because at one time they had a few members from British Columbia but 1974 fixed that up. Now they have only a small contingent and they are not heard from too often.

An hon. Member: The Tories didn't do that.

Mr. Blais: All you guys are going to run in Oregon next year anyway.

Mr. Whittaker: I put the question, what has the elimination of KVOS-TV from Vancouver got to do with the station in my riding as far as television is concerned? There are 250 miles of the Canada-United States border in my riding and those people who live along it will have to rely on American broadcasts if they want to see television. They tell me that they cannot get Canadian television and only know what is going on in the United States.

Non-Canadian Publications

The city of Grand Forks has CBC and CTV but people are also able to get broadcasts of American television from just across the line, a very short distance away. There is a move afoot for cable television in this area. A lot of people are writing to me and asking what is going to happen to the broadcasts from across the border when Canadian cable is installed. They wonder if they will not be able to get it because a lot of them will not be able to get cable. The cable companies just service those who are the easiest and most economical to service, and leave others without. These people have a real concern. For many years the only television they were able to get was from across the border. This is exactly what happened in Midway.

● (1510)

I know the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) to my left will not understand this kind of thing. He comes from a part of the prairies where there is not much concern about TV or radio broadcasts. But what I am raising now is something real; it affects people. I think the hon. member understands people; I don't really know. But this is a real concern to people.

The people in the community of Midway were able to get CBC-TV because they took the initiative and formed a company which bought the necessary machinery and put it on top of the mountain. They were then able to get CBC-TV. Their mainstay has been a broadcasting station just across the border, not too far distant. That has been their main broadcasting station and they have had to get by with it over the years, when they were not able to get television. Then a forest fire burned their equipment, and once again they had to rely on television broadcasts from across the line in the United States.

They tried to interest the CRTC in building a broadcasting station under the accelerated program about which the hon. member for Bruce-Grey was talking. At any rate, they wanted the CRTC to do something under the accelerated program so that they could have TV broadcasts in the area. They were not very successful. Let me read what the Secretary of State's department had to say. An official wrote:

> The situation in which the people of Midway find themselves is indeed a difficult one. Officials of the CBC inform me that the corporation can offer no financial assistance in the rebuilding of the installation in Midway, but that they would be pleased to help by giving engineering assistance and advice to the TV committee in the restoration of its installation.
> Plans to install a CBC-TV transmitter in the general area are part of the CBC's accelerated coverage plan, but this, of course, offers no immediate solution to the problem of television coverage for Midway residents. This could be done through the CBC's Vancouver regional headquarters.

That letter was written on October 3, 1973. Since then the government has tried to do a lot of things in Vancouver with TV but it is not doing anything constructive in communities like Midway along the border which need help, have not got access to Canadian broadcasts, and rely heavily on television and radio broadcasts from the United States. They say to me, "We don't know what is going on in Canada."

Part of a letter sent by one of the people in Midway reads:

Non-Canadian Publications

Technical advice we have had enough. After all, we had enjoyed satisfactory TV reception long before the CBC even knew about us. What we expected the CBC to do was to accelerate their accelerated coverage plan just a little more, mainly for the fiscal and political reasons outlined in my resumé to you.

We don't think that the total expenditure of about $1,200 would have bankrupted the CBC, but it surely would have created a lot of appreciation from a number of taxpayers who in the past years have contributed at least this much to the CBC as their share of income taxes on top of the $15 they pay annually for the upkeep and maintenance of our signal translator.

That shows the kind of thing going on in my riding.

I mentioned Grand Forks and I mentioned Midway. Christina Lake does not even have TV. They cannot get CTV or CBC-TV. They have to rely on broadcasts from the United States.

Let's look at Princeton. Princeton is a fairly good sized city in my riding. And what do they have by way of TV? They have private enterprise repeaters broadcasting equipment up in the mountains. They were supposed to subscribe for one of these and pay for it. They have CTV equipment up there, but it is strictly on cable. That means that only those who can afford to hook up to cable, only those in the area where the cable is, can have that kind of broadcast.

My hon. friend from Bruce-Grey talked about the accelerated coverage plan. If any people deserve a broadcasting station, a CBC-TV station built under the accelerated coverage program, it is the people of Princeton. I ask you, what are all these goings on in Vancouver, and what has the kicking out of KVOS from the Vancouver area got to do with these kinds of accelerated programs?

As far as CBC radio is concerned the people in heavily populated communities like Kelowna and Penticton, where there are more than 75,000 people, have been trying for 30 years to get a CBC radio station in the area. They have now been promised it. The subject was supposed to come up just when the CRTC meeting in Vancouver was adjourned. After 30 years of constant bickering and of trying to get the government to put it in, they are now going to get it. I do not know if it is to come under the accelerated program, but I do know that we have been told that we are going to get, in 1978, a French TV station in the Okanagan area. It did not take long to come in, certainly not 30 years. It is to come in very quickly under the accelerated program. But we are not getting, and we have not been told we are getting, TV stations in our border areas where there are a lot of deserving people and where they must rely to a great degree on American broadcasts.

I thank the House, Madam Speaker, for allowing me time to speak, and I hope that some of the members opposite from eastern Canada now know what goes on in British Columbia.

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Blais: Let's hear about the real British Columbia, Stu.

Mr. Leggatt: I agree with much that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) said about the provision of CBC programming for border areas, and about the accelerated program provisions. However, I suggest that we should direct our attention to the amendment before us and consider if we are to vote for or against it. The amendment would leave open the opportunity for station KVOS to negotiate a special deal. That is what we are talking about at this stage of the debate. To be consistent, we opposed the special deal worked out with Reader's Digest and on the same principle we oppose a special deal for KVOS in terms of its somewhat unique position in broadcasting in British Columbia.

[Mr. Whittaker.]

I guess we could get to the history of KVOS. They entered the market very early. They attempted, I think, to be a good corporate citizen in their Canadian operation, but we are still faced with a fundamental problem and it is that KVOS is an FCC-licensed station which is licensed to broadcast to the Bellingham area. It is not licensed to broadcast to the lower mainland. So unless and until we have an across-the-border convention where there is some kind of joint licensing provisioning, so that the market area for the individual television stations is determined in the licence, the hope of making this kind of special arrangement is very slim indeed.

I want to go on record about something else which is connected to this. I oppose the provision under the CRTC for cable deletion. I think it is wrong that American programming with advertising should be arbitrarily deleted by Canadian cable companies which are allowed to substitute their own advertising into the programs.

I know the law says that there is no title to the cable signal. But I think it is offensive to most individuals, to their sense of propriety and morality, that programs that are produced at a cost should arbitrarily have the advertiser, who in fact helps pay for the production of those programs, suffer by having his advertising arbitrarily pulled off and Canadian advertising inserted. Surely to God many of us in this House have already suggested that we have a look at the whole question of broadcasting on both sides of the border, and it has to be looked at in terms consistent with the Canadian nationalism problem. Nevertheless the idea of arbitrarily deleting advertising on cable is offensive to the majority of Canadians who have a sense of what is right and what is fair.

Again the amendment to some extent is an amendment to protect a private broadcaster, so I want to make sure that what I am saying is related to the motion. I must say that the Conservative position on the question of private broadcasting is one which is giving me some concern. Therefore, like the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), I thought I would do some digging on this thing and I went back to an MP from British Columbia. His name was Mr. Fraser, and it was in 1935 that he spoke for the Conservative party in British Columbia. He said the general complaint throughout the province was that they could only get reception from United States stations.

There was a plea from many Conservative members in British Columbia in those days for the expansion of public broadcasting, for the development of communication in this country between east and west to resist the very heavy cultural pressures that tend to run north and south. In fact all he was doing was supporting his leader at that time, Mr. R. B. Bennett, who had a great deal to do with the beginning of a public broadcast network in Canada and the beginning of the idea of developing a Canadian nationalism.

In fact, I suppose that when we get back to the traditional question of who were the free traders and who were the protectionists it would seem to me the Tories have a pretty good record in terms of protecting Canadian industry. We in the west never liked that because it meant we had to pay higher prices for products produced in the centre of Canada. But it is rather inconsistent now that we should have had so much debate on the virtue of free enterprise broadcasting when it was the Conservatives who, through George Grant and through R. B. Bennett, had a great deal to do with establishing public broadcasting in Canada, and it is to their eternal credit that they did.

It was only in latter days that we had this continuing attack on the CBC, saying that great monolith should be attacked, but sometimes the attacks get pretty irrational. The CBC has a pretty tough job to do in terms of trying to satisfy the myriads of interests in the country. I wish to quote Prime Minister R. B. Bennett who said on June 6, 1935:

> We in this country are in an exceptionally difficult position. We have ten and a half million people and we have to rent several thousand miles of wire to broadcast on an efficient scale. That is very expensive having regard to the existing rates for wire, railways and telephones.

I urge members of the Conservative party to read what R. B. Bennett had to say about public broadcasting in Canada because I think they should not abandon what really was good judgment and good sense expressed by that Prime Minister at that time.

Mr. Towers: If you had listened to what we said you would know different.

Mr. Leggatt: I did listen carefully.

An hon. Member: We did not say anything against the CBC. You started it.

Mr. Leggatt: When we get into broadcasting I want to say something about the fact that the finest channel coming into the lower mainland is not a Canadian channel. It is American channel 9 out of Seattle. It is an educational channel. Again those of us in this House who do not support the amendment also do not support the idea that existing programming should be deleted from the cable.

There is every reason to have full choice in the lower mainland of British Columbia. In fact if we stop thinking of just today's debate and think ahead a little, a converter before long will become standard equipment on television sets. We will go to 36 channels in the foreseeable future, within a few years, and this will provide us with all the variety of programming we need. Commercial programming fulfils a responsibility all right but it does not fulfil the democratic need for variety of programming because stations are at the whim of the advertiser.

Without proper ratings all you can appeal to is either the lowest common denominator or the largest audience. But there is a significant audience out there for something different than Mary Tyler Moore three times a week, plus re-runs, or "I Love Lucy". We will have a chance to reach all those different audiences under the converter system. We do not need to be narrow about allowing American programs on to the cable system. We could cope with all of them, including a French station in Vancouver, and we could expand our service into areas which do not normally share in television.

Let's have an original play once in a while. Let's have a little educational television which we have not had for a very long time. That is why I want to mention once again channel 9, a public service channel out of Seattle which has used some CBC programming too, because it seems to me to be satisfying an audience which is very unhappy with commercial television programming. I remember when Sunday mornings used to be called a television ghetto hour, when we had a few public discussions and something worth-while in terms of satisfying the intellect. That is gone, because if programs do not measure up under the rating system advertisers will not touch them with a ten foot pole.

As I see it one of the main functions of public broadcasting is to extend to everyone a variety of choice. Then we can protect Canadian nationalism. We do not need to shut off the border or to blank out signals from a certain direction. Nevertheless it is important that we support stations within our own borders, particularly in terms of revenue, and this is the objective of Bill C-58.

● (1530)

As I say, we cannot support the amendment that has been put forward. Television station KVOS is to some extent an innocent victim of this legislation, but we really do not have a solution to the problem. In fact there is no solution for KVOS because it is an FCC licensed station in the Bellingham area. I would be pleased to see them given a CRTC licence and establish themselves in Vancouver so they can go into production with revenues from the Vancouver area. That would be satisfactory. But since it is not licensed for the Vancouver area it is not really under the jurisdiction of the CRTC. I therefore submit the amendment before us should not be supported.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Madam Speaker, I just want to interject at this time a few comments specifically on the amendment dealing with broadcasting as it comes into Canada from foreign countries. Perhaps I may commence with some remarks with regard to the comments made by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt). If he had to go back to 1935 to find some difference in consistency in the Conservative party's philosophy, that does not exactly show too much of a threat, especially when it was a period when most people were still using D-type battery radios and did not know television was an instrument that could be used in the home.

I think the particular issue of concern here is that this is another piece of censorship being promoted and put forward by the government of the day. It is another way in which the government has told the people, "We know what is good for you". I agree with the comment of the hon. member for New Westminster that these in many ways are regulatory kinds of concerns. They can be dealt with and handled by regulation. It is not a problem that needs to be handled and dealt with by banning or controlling foreign broadcasting into this country.

I think this is a view that is not compatible with the whole history of the development of KVOS operating into the southern mainland of British Columbia. Anyone who has thoroughly and educatedly analysed the situation of KVOS has to come to the conclusion that few stations have taken such a strong and advanced good corporate citizenship attitude as they have. I submit their establishment of Canawest, a film industry operating out of Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver, employing several hundreds of people in the artistry of making animated films, films projected not only across Canada in Canadian advertising but also very extensively in the international market in the making of commercials for other countries, demonstrates quite clearly the fact that that particular corporate structure has taken seriously its Canadian obligation.

At one fell swoop with Bill C-58, which is both a censorship bill and an anti-Christian bill, we—

Mr. Leggatt: Anti-Christian?

Mr. Malone: Yes, it is, because the bill also provides foreign content in public materials cannot exceed 80 per cent. Since the Bible comes into Canada in this way, it is also anti-Christian.

I will make that point in another way. If I might digress for a moment, Bill C-58 has a very marked effect on at least one specific area of the province, the Mormon communities in southern Alberta whose religious materials are all published basically outside the border. If you apply this legislation to its full extent, it discriminates in a religious way, and challenges quite strongly the notion of freedom of religion, because it excludes material more than 80 per cent of the content of which is published outside of Canada. I am afraid this bill is a threat not only to the normal kinds of reading material but religious as well.

Essentially the amendment asks for time for the Canadian government to decide how to spend foreign dollars on Canadian culture. It is almost an irrefutable kind of amendment. First of all it does not put the government in the position of taking a decision that in any long term way is going to hurt it; it simply requests that time be given for further study of the bill in the committee. That seems to me a very obvious proposal that government members ought to accept.

Secondly, it puts forward a proposal that can do nothing but lead to advantage for the Canadian people, because its acceptance would mean an increasing amount of dollars would be pumped into Canadian culture.

We are dealing, then, with the whole question of freedom of choice. Let us look at the very obvious subjective judgment being made by the government, subjective in terms of how it is tearing down the traditional stations that people on the lower mainland of British Columbia and the border areas of central Canada are accustomed to. I note this action is just as consistent as the government's claim that 80 per cent of the content of newsmagazines must not be published previously somewhere else; at the same time the government again subjectively takes the position that that does not apply to newspapers.

The fact of the matter is that if you pick up any paper, the Ottawa Citizen, the Ottawa Journal, Toronto Globe and Mail or Star, or any paper anywhere in the country, you will find that paper has more than 80 per cent foreign content. Yet the government, again subjectively, without first establishing criteria, is taking the position that the bill's provisions apply to the broadcasting industry.

As the hon. member for New Westminster said, there ought to be a cross border convention on broadcasting. While it was his position that we should have the convention first and then follow through with some kind of special deal, I think it really ought to be just the reverse. The fact of the matter is that a number of these border stations have established their roots. They have become good corporate citizens, in many cases pouring large percentages of their money—not just large amounts but large percentages of their money—into the Canadian cultural system, building industries in this country and hiring Canadian people—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Is the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt) rising to ask a question or on a point of order?

Mr. Leggatt: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Would the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) allow a question?

Mr. Malone: Yes.

Mr. Leggatt: On the question of a cross border convention, the hon. member indicated that his position was that we should pass this amendment and then enter into negotiations. Would he respond to this question? Would we not be in a stronger position in such negotiations, instead of giving away part of our bargaining stance by passing this amendment favouring one station, to negotiate first?

Mr. Malone: No, I would still have to disagree with the hon. member for New Westminster. To do it in the order in which the hon. member suggests would simply mean a great deal of the stations presently operating would have to go out of the business of broadcasting in Canada, or cut back on their revenues from Canadian sources. That puts us in the position of taking action against those people who traditionally have been good corporate citizens working in the best interests of Canada. Then following the adoption of some convention we would reinstate them. That is kind of a long road for anyone to have to tread.

Perhaps the government can handle this cutting back and rejuvenation, but it is certainly not something to which we can subject the corporate structure. If we were to do such to a corporate structure it would simply take its broadcasting system out of Canada and establish it somewhere else.

The point is well taken by the hon. member for New Westminster. In countries with borders such as the one which exists between Canada and the United States it is probably true that a convention of some kind should be established considering the whole nature of broadcasting. As I have said in respect of other amendments, the way to increase Canadian culture is not by restricting or severing our relationships with the United States, or by allowing only Canadian content, or a high percentage of it in our publications and in our television and radio broadcasting. The way to extend Canadian culture is in fact by playing upon that larger market of 220 million people to the south. I believe such a convention between Canada and the United States ought to be aimed not at destroying border stations or cutting off U.S. broadcasting into Canada, but quite the reverse. We should be increasing Canadian influence into the international market, and we should be increasing significantly our intake of cultural matters from all countries of the world.

It must be recognized that our world is not getting larger, it is getting smaller, and this is not the time in our history to shut off our borders, limit information, and restrict the flow of communication. This is the time to open up and begin to communicate more and more with international markets, creating more opportunities for our artists, and all this by developing situations in which they can broadcast into the United States.

In much the same way we found that other parts of this bill represent censorship. The 80 per cent figure is in effect censorship in that we are using a mathematical concept to deal with something that has no mathematical unit. The whole thing becomes a subjective judgment, and therefore censorship. The same applies to the broadcasting regulations.

This House should give full consideration to an acceptance of this amendment because in essence all it is asking for is more time in which to conduct an in-depth study, and a chance for those who are to be affected to appear before the committee to make recommendations and suggest other alternatives. This time would allow a more thorough study of the issue, and I see no reason why anyone in this House would oppose the suggestion that we allow a minimal amount of time for greater participation and for greater study.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, since this debate has been going on for some time I think it would make sense to read again the amendment now under discussion. It is:

> That motion No. 7 be amended by deleting the proposed sub paragraph (c) and substituting therefor:
> (c) "a written agreement entered into after the coming into force of this section with a Canadian subsidiary of a foreign broadcasting undertaking if the Minister of the Department of National Revenue has approved a plan submitted by the said Canadian subsidiary providing for compensatory payment by such subsidiary by the allocation of funds to Canadian television program production, extension of Canadian television service, development of Canadian talent, or otherwise for the benefit of Canadian broadcasting: the Minister may require as a condition for entering into any such agreement that a percentage, to be stipulated by the Minister, of the voting shares of such subsidiary be beneficially owned by Canadian citizens".

In participating in this debate I should like to refer again to the comments of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey (Mr. Douglas). Far too aften when members representing regions in Ontario speak in this House they portray the attitude that the Canadian border ends when it reaches Manitoba. I do not find this as evident on the part of members on this side of the House, but far too often Canada is considered to be Ontario, and nothing but Ontario.

In the speech of the hon. member for Bruce-Grey he made an extremely strong case for the province of Ontario, and I commend him for that because he has a responsibility for that region. The amendment now before the House would have a great deal more effect on the residents of the province of British Columbia than on those in Ontario.

As an Albertan I feel there is more at stake than just this broadcasting issue. The issue is whether we want to see the government prying into many aspects of our private lives. We in the Progressive Conservative party are aware that in equities in the broadcasting industry exist and that legislation is required to correct these. The present legislation before us fails to take into account the needs of our regional areas.

It was of interest to note the other day that an hon. member of the Creditiste party complained about not having a French-language station in his area which is predominantly French-speaking. At this time some of our friends opposite are attempting to do something that is perhaps contrary to the beliefs of many of us. They are planning to put a French CBC station in Vancouver over the objections of the local residents. This is an indication that the government fails to recognize the regional needs of the country. We have an area in Quebec which would very much like to be served by a French-Canadian television station, but seems to be having great difficulty in getting one. Yet in Vancouver where the need does not exist the government is pushing such a station down the throats of those residents.

Many northern areas in British Columbia and Alberta do not have decent television reception, yet we do not see a great effort on the part of the present administration to provide such service to those areas. On the contrary this administration, as we see by this legislation, is attempting to eliminate existing stations in southern British Columbia.

After listening to the speech by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey I find it difficult not to agree with him. Perhaps it is difficult not to agree unless one has his fingertips on the very complex facts. Herein lies one of the problems. Very few people have bothered to take the time to get the facts in respect of broadcasting. Most of the time during this debate has been spent in respect of publishing problems involving Time and Reader's Digest.

It is all very well to say that we should protect Canadian broadcasters, and by doing so automatically great sums of money will flow to Canadian stations. That sounds good and it reads well in print. It is also nice to hear people say that we should be patriotic and protect the Canadian broadcasting industry. It is all well and good to be patriotic, but I think it is also essential that we be realistic.

This is not a simplistic piece of legislation. We must protect a number of Canadian entities, and among those entities is the Canadian broadcasting industry, but we must also protect the Canadian businessman who advertises in order to sell his merchandise. No one has talked very much about him during this discussion. We need to protect the Canadian viewer, the Canadian citizen we all represent whose freedom of choice this bill and other government action threaten.

● (1550)

It is easy to speak about a national policy. But I ask why, just because it is nation-wide, is it nation wise? It takes an eastern problem and transfers the problem and the solution to the west. The problems and solutions are totally different. I think it is essential that we, as parliamentarians, understand that there are different regional problems in the various areas which must be approached on a regional basis.

We are attempting to have the government explore the optimum method of meeting the objectives of the Broadcasting Act. All these amendments say is that if a plan submitted by a border station is good for Canada then these punitive effects of Bill C-58 should not take effect until Canadians have an opportunity to explain the alternatives. What in the world is wrong with that? In the case of British Columbia the circumstances are different from those in eastern Canada. Everything is different. No one from the east will take the time to realize that what is good for Ontario and Quebec is not necessarily always good for British Columbia and Alberta.

Let us examine the practical results of Bill C-58 in British Columbia and Alberta rather than in Ontario. In order to survive KVOS-TV will have to cut its rates probably by 50 per cent to meet this tax bill. This would result in a loss situation for several years while the market grows. Be that as it may, that station will remain on the air. Its revenue will be cut by over $3 million. This money will not be available to Canadian stations or for the Canadian broadcasting objectives. Instead of that $3 million plus being lost to broadcasting let us do what mature neighbours should do; let us work out a compromise whereby everybody benefits.

Let us put $2 million a year into a non-profit society with a board of directors of distinguished B.C. citizens. This board, not KVOS, would spend the money in any way worth-while in order to further our broadcasting objectives. Some suggested possibilities include sharing costs with Canadian stations in extension of the Canadian station services into such places as Skeena, Prince Rupert, upper Vancouver Island, and the Kootenays. They would also include the building of a major production centre in British Columbia with the cost sharing funds that would bring in other money from the United Kingdom and the United States.

While Canada's major production facilities are in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, why do we attempt to deny the province of British Columbia the opportunity to build a comparable production empire operated and staffed by Canadians with funds from Canadian advertising? We could set up training centres on the Vancouver mainland, on Vancouver Island and in the Okanagan for the training of Canadian writers, directors, actors, and the development of the other skills needed in production. There are no skills of this type in B.C. This plan is a positive one. We have always said we are interested in exploring alternative ways of achieving the results we want.

Bill C-58 would accomplish nothing in B.C. The plan submitted by KVOS-TV (BC) Ltd. is good for the citizens of B.C. and is just plain good business. I say again that all these amendments do is permit the exploration of plans such as this. If they are better for Canada than Bill C-58 why should we stop Canada benefiting?

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey this morning brought up some good points in his speech. As you can probably tell, Madam Speaker, by the many speeches of B.C. members from this side of the House we have been closely analysing the TV picture in B.C. We sincerely believe the western problems are not the same as eastern problems. The television side of Bill C-58 is not simplistic. It is complicated in many ways.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey said that he had spoken to numbers of TV stations and that they all said this bill is good for all Canadian broadcasters. The Institute of Canadian Advertisers submitted a brief on this subject. That institute presents a different type of background. It gives a good outlook on this topic. It is very different to the view expressed by the hon. member for Bruce-Grey. In summary may I say that this is not a simplistic problem. It involves dangerous economic effects. We need to study this broadcast section so that we are all in agreement that we are doing the best job for Canada and for the Canadian businessmen and Canadian viewers. I believe that this bill will be a bad influence over-all on our broadcasting outlets. I urge the members of the House to support the amendment presently before us.

On this note I should like to quote from the brief we received from the Institute of Canadian Advertising. That institute states:

—we ask ourselves what would happen to various groups if advertising expenditures by Canadian advertisers on U.S. border stations were made a non-deductible business expense:

Madam Speaker, I see it is four o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being four o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

HOLIDAYS ACT

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL HERITAGE DAY

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville) moved that Bill C-208, respecting Heritage Day, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Carried!

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Madam Speaker, in rising to participate in this debate I must say I am somewhat surprised that the sponsor of this bill did not take the first opportunity to express his reasons for wishing this motion to pass today. In fact I do not even see the sponsor of the bill in the Chamber. I am sorry; he is present.

Mr. MacGuigan: I want to see it passed because there have been enough speeches.

Mr. Schumacher: The hon. member says he wants it to pass because there have been enough speeches. It is my recollection that there was very little debate on this measure at the second reading stage.

An hon. Member: You were not here.

● (1600)

Mr. Schumacher: That is quite true, I was not here. I was somewhat surprised when I came back and found that it had passed second reading without debate. It went through the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs in pretty short order. What we are faced with now is a measure which has not really been debated in the House, and I think it deserves at least one hour's debate before it finally becomes the law of the land.

The main object of the bill is to create a new statutory holiday for Canadians. As I understood the unemployment statistics which were released earlier this week, we have a great number of Canadians on an enforced holiday. While the figures seem to have dropped substantially for December, the January figures are not comparable in any way. In fact there were some 100,000 more people out of work in January than there were in December. On the other hand we hear people from all sides, irrespective of party, saying that the country has problems.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) says that the system under which we have been accustomed to live is not working properly and that changes must be made. I suggest that it is certainly not the way to make the system work by lessening the amount of work done in the country. All of us being human, the great majority of us would rather work less than more if we had the choice. I do not think there is anything magic in improving the soul by being forced to work, and therefore we should always be looking for measures which would give us more time to fulfil ourselves without being engaged in drudgery. Nevertheless, as I have said, we have heard calls from all sides to make Canada more productive. It does not seem to me to be appropriate at this time to be calling on people to work less.

If this measure is passed the wage bill for the month of February would be increased by a minimum of 5 per cent, if one considers the normal working days to be 20 days a month, but of course there are certain jobs that have to be done whether or not there is a holiday, and those people who are compelled to work on that day will probably get time and a half as a minimum for the work they do, and in some cases double time or more.

As a country we already have a very high cost economy. I know there is at least one group in the country which feels that this holiday was promised to them. I refer of course to the railway workers. Apparently when the Hon. Emmet Hall was arbitrating in the pay dispute with the railways in either 1973 or 1974, the last time there was a strike in the industry which resulted in the House passing legislation to force railroaders back to work on the understanding that their claims would be arbitrated, that learned arbitrator inserted a clause in the settlement stating that the workers would receive another holiday called Heritage Day. I find it passing strange that that learned gentleman would think that whatever he said would be binding on Canadians at large. I know he was given wide powers to settle that dispute, but I do not ever recall any legislation setting up that arbitration giving him the power to establish a new holiday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member not aware of the fact that at the time the Hon. Emmet Hall made that award a bill approving Heritage Day had already been passed in a committee of parliament, so the idea did not come from him? He was simply working on something that parliament was talking about and was expected to pass.

Mr. Schumacher: Madam Speaker, I am certainly aware of that but I find it very surprising that the hon. member should now be espousing the view that if a measure is passed through a committee of one of the houses of parliament, that gives it some sort of legislative authority.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It gives it a good start.

Mr. Schumacher: The hon. gentleman has been here a long time, I know, but I have never heard that type of philosophy espoused by anybody associated with the legislative process in this country, that just because something has received committee approval it will become the law of the land!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I wanted the hon. member to tell the House the truth.

Mr. Schumacher: I was not telling anything but the truth. The fact is that the Hon. Emmet Hall at one time was a member of the Supreme Court of Canada. I would have thought that if the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did not understand the legislative process, maybe the Hon. Emmet Hall, being a learned student of the law, might have had some understanding of it. It seems to me that it was a complete misrepresentation of the situation for railway workers to have an arbitrator produce something like that in his report.

I understand why railway workers might feel they have been "had" to some extent by that award. I suppose you could criticize their own representatives before the arbitration tribunal for allowing that learned gentleman to make the finding he did, but it would seem to me to be only common sense for anybody to understand that nothing is the law of this land until it has passed all stages in both Houses, and received Royal Assent.

Nevertheless, we could look at the railraod situation as it applies to holidays. Throughout history the western part of Canada has suffered problems in the transportation industry.

When driving west last summer when the House recessed for the summer I was passing through the prairies on a weekday, not a week end, and I noticed there was a great number of trains moving on the transcontinental tracks, whereas in September when I was returning to Ottawa, also by car, and I travelled through the same part of the land on a week end I did not see any trains moving on the tracks. I wondered at the time what was the difference.

I made some inquiries about why trains do not move in this country on the prairies at least on weekends in the summertime, and I was advised that for one reason or another the railway companies are unable to make up crews to operate the trains on week ends in the summertime in western Canada. I am sure there are shift differentials and added pay for working on week ends, but it appears that employees of railroads like their week ends off and are not too concerned about working on week ends. If they will not work on week ends even for added pay, I think it would be a mistake to create a situation which would shorten the amount of time available for use by Canadians of their railway facilities. Of course that does not apply to Canada at large but is one of the added expenses. At this time when we are trying to cut down costs why we would be proceeding to do something which would add cost to our economy is just beyond my comprehension.

● (1610)

We have been told that we need to stabilize the situation, to work harder and produce more. We have been warned by the government that that will happen even if we do not want it to happen. The Prime Minister pointed out in pretty clear terms at Christmas time that Canadians could expect a great deal more government intervention and direction if they did not get hold of themselves and get things moving on their own. Yet here we are with a measure proposing another non working day.

As I pointed out before, a high rate of unemployment continues to plague us, and it does not matter which way the statistician serves up the figure, there is still an increasing number of people out of work this winter. I wonder how those people who are unable to work and want to work feel about our creating an enforced holiday for everyone. Upright and responsible Canadians who want to find work, restore a feeling of individual independence and self-respect, and perform a productive function within our work force are denied that opportunity. I am sure that when those people look at their dwindling savings and consider their future and the future of the families they are committed to feed, clothe and house, there is a feeling of deepening bitterness and resentment that their elected representatives should be wasting the time of the nation discussing holidays when our real function should be to come to grips responsibly with the problems and to do our utmost to fulfil the promises made during several election campaigns in the past.

We hear constant complaints from parents and others about the increased number of holidays granted in schools today. Most of us, I believe, sympathize with this view. After all, we in this House can hide behind the fact that that is a provincial responsibility. The issue of the creation of a new national holiday is one we cannot hide behind. It is a federal responsibility which we should look squarely in the eye and reject this proposal, even though it may not be a very popular decision with some elements within our society who are all too eager to jump at the chance of a day's pay for no work, which is what this boils down to in reality.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

We all know how the Liberal government talks out of both sides of its mouth from time to time, and I suggest it is doing it on this occasion. Of course it has the valiant support of its friends in the New Democratic Party. The Liberal government says work harder and produce more on the one hand, while on the other it is encouraging us to take another holiday.

The government spoke out of one side of its mouth with regard to wage and price controls in 1974 when it ridiculed this as an answer to our economic difficulties and won a campaign on the strength of this ridicule. Now wage and price controls are in effect, and that is just something from the other side of the Liberal mouth.

For the rest of us to follow this duplicity would be completely irresponsible and would constitute a betrayal of what we were sent here to do and what was vested in us by the constituents who elected us in the last election. They sent us here to try to restore some credibility in the government of the country.

How can we tell Canadians to cut back, tighten belts, work harder, bend their backs and produce much more, and yet at the same time create another holiday? The last time this issue came before us I stood against it, and I am standing against it now, notwithstanding some editorial criticism in one of Alberta's leading newspapers. I must say that on the other side of this question I received a great deal of correspondence and other messages from people who agree with the point of view I am putting forward, not just from my constituents but from people across the country. It is interesting to note that of the very few who did not agree with me one writer suggested I was advocating he slave away until midnight. I never suggested longer hours for anybody. I merely stated that we should not shorten the work cycle more than it is now.

I should like to give someone else a chance to participate in this debate, but it boils down to the fact that if the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), who proposed this bill, has his way, we will have a holiday which is a movable feast. It would not commemorate any particular thing. There are two or three things suggested in the bill, and from then on it would be up to the cabinet to decide what we would commemorate each year. That bothers me, because if there is not one thing we are commemorating, what are we doing this for? If there is not one particular thing which is worth-while having an annual holiday for, then I suggest it is not worth-while, leaving aside all other considerations.

In summary, I cannot see any purpose for creating another non-working day in this country at this time.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Madam Speaker, with my usual brevity I should like to say that I am highly enthusiastic about this bill, and I am always depressed that in these private members' hours we rarely get to motions and make decisions. I hope this House will make a decision and support this measure. In my long years here I have noted that far too often when a private member comes up with a good idea it is talked out for years and years, and then the government introduces it.

I remember the suggestion that we have the likenesses of our prime ministers on the currency of the realm, and even while there was a bill on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Stewart), the government made the announcement right under his nose, so to speak. I should like to see the House, on this day when the private member is king for one hour, make a decision.

I am enthusiastic about this measure because in a certain non-Mafia sense I am one of the godfathers of this bill. It embraces the recognition of the founding father of confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald. I tried for many years to promote a holiday on his birthday. He was, unfortunately, born on the 11th day of January, and that was not a good time for a holiday, but believing with Edmund Burke that all good government is founded on compromise, I was pleased in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to go along with the suggestion that we designate Macdonald, the national flag, and the native peoples, and as the years go by that we reach into our heritage and set aside aspects thereof to which we would turn the attention of the Canadian people.

I would be very sorry if in the discussion of a heritage day bill we got into the realm of merely computing a number of working days. The principal purpose of this bill and those asking for it is to try to foster in this representative body a greater feeling for the old fashioned word patriotism, a greater feeling among Canadians for the great men and events of their past and for the essential ingredients of what makes this country tick.

If I can get the chief whip of the government party and the mover of the bill to stop talking, I think other hon. members would hear me a little better.

It seems to me that while the economy of the country may be in a precarious state, and it is, I do not think we would really shore it up, and assure solidarity and prosperity merely by taking a stand against awarding another non-working day. I believe it is not a question of how many days people work but rather of what they accomplish. If we are smart enough in this country to increase our productivity—although it looks very bad now, comparatively—we may move into an era when the working week will not be longer but shorter.

● (1620)

I am happy that we are making some effort in this bill to honour Sir John A. Macdonald, master statesman, architect of confederation and, incidentally, the man under whose regime the legalization of trade unions was accomplished. I think it is appropriate that Sir John A. Macdonald should be linked with this proposed legislation.

I want to commend the legislation to my colleagues in the House as a useful gesture toward increasing our feeling of Canadianism. This country is more than lakes, mountains, and railways; it is the spirit of the people, the unity of the people that gives a sense of Canadianism.

For too long we have been afraid to let our Canadianism show—afraid we might be accused of being nationalist or romantic, or of getting excited. It took years to get Canadians on our stamps, for instance. We are afraid to display pictures or portraits of former prime ministers in our schools in case we be too partisan—even though they have been dead for three quarters of a century. Once in a while we come close to letting ourselves go, as we did during Expo. We do not injure our country, however, if we speak for an hour or two, as we have today, of symbols. Surely a civilized society is one that realizes that symbols are more important than mundane things. It is the spirit of the cathedral, not the bricks and mortar that put it together, that makes it a true place of worship.

I am in favour of asserting our belief in the great heritage of Canada, and if we direct our people to that for one day we will have achieved some useful purpose.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Madam Speaker, I too appreciate the opportunity to speak on Bill C-208, respecting National Heritage Day, the private member's bill presented to this House by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan).

Last night I had the opportunity of attending a Kinsmen's club meeting in Ottawa with the hon. member and heard him speak in regard to the bill. One thing we were all made very much aware of by the hon. member was that Kinsmen's clubs across Canada are participating to a very great degree in the celebrations of a heritage day. Because the Kinsmen are so closely associated with this bill I feel it appropriate to commend them not only in this area but in their many areas of involvement in serving the greatest needs of communities.

Kinsmen International is the only true all-Canadian service club we have. I consider it an honour and privilege to be a member of this outstanding group.

Bill C-208 provides:

> —that the particular aspect of our heritage to be honoured on this day should be varied by proclamation from year to year and that the focal point of the celebration for the first year should be the Canadian flag.

On this note I should like to quote from a brochure put out by the Kinsmen's Club of Sherwood Park in my constituency. The brochure deals with Heritage Day and what we should all anticipate. If this bill is passed, in the first year the focus will be on our flag. I think it is worth while to take two sentences from the brochure issued by the Kinsmen's Club of Sherwood Park as follows:

> The national flag is a symbol of Canada which identifies our country throughout the world. It is natural, therefore, that Canadians will wish to treat the flag with respect that such a symbol warrants and will expect others to do the same.

It also says:

> This land means many things to many people. Our common bond is represented by the flag. Wherever it flies, we can be proud.

As I stated earlier, this is a quote from a brochure put out by the Kinsmen's Culb of Sherwood Park. Since they are so closely associated with Heritage Day I think it appropriate that we put some of the accomplishments of the Kinsmen Club organization and its contribution to the community as a whole, on the record.

Kinsmen was started in Hamilton in October, 1920, by a dozen young men serving their community. Today there are over 500 Kinsmen Clubs in Canada with more than 15,000 members in the association.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. I am afraid the bill does not stretch as far as to talk about Kinsmen Clubs.

Mr. Prud'homme: They make a good contribution to the community.

Mr. Elzinga: Madam Speaker, I stand corrected. When I took several courses they instructed us to use a certain amount of quotation in a debate such as this, and that is what I was attempting to accomplish. I will abide by Your Honour's ruling, however, and not quote the contribution of the Sherwood Park Kinsmen's Club to the community. I think it should be pointed out, however, that Kinsmen is Canada's only service club that is totally Canadian.

I should like to put a question to the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville who has expressed deep concern about our heritage by the introduction of this bill. I should like to know whether he has ever been a member of Heritage Canada?

Mr. MacGuigan: Yes, I am.

Mr. Elzinga: Thank you. Heritage Canada is truly concerned about the many dominant factors that have made Canada what it is today. In this it is like the Kinsmen Clubs because they have shown their concern for our heritage in many ways.

Even though there are many positive aspects of this legislation I feel it is also imperative that members on both sides register some of the negative aspects of the bill. It has been under the rule of our present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that Canada has dropped from being the nation with the second highest income per capita to the eighth highest. I question whether we should introduce a bill that is going to give us another holiday when we are in such a situation. This is not an accomplishment of which we can be proud. The bill asks for another holiday and, as the hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) said, it will be a paid holiday. I question whether we as a country, as a people who are constantly decreasing our productivity are in a position to endorse this. We are becoming a country that is over-pricing our exports and this trend will continue if our productivity declines as it has in the past years.

I make one final point in regard to this legislation, Madam Speaker. We cannot condemn the government for it because it is a private member's bill, but I wonder how much investigation was made prior to its introduction. Alberta and, I believe, two other provinces already have a Heritage Day under their provincial jurisdictions. The Alberta Heritage Day falls in August. It appears that this legislation introduced in the House of Commons is in conflict with provincial legislation.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, if we are to be a nation structure in Canada as a whole, it is time we paid more attention to the various provinces and their needs.

● (1630)

Mr. Frank Maine (Wellington): Madam Speaker, at the outset I should like to assure hon. members that I am not opposed to holidays. I am also in favour of recognizing some aspect of our national heritage by holding an annual holiday. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) deserves the congratulations and appreciation of the House and the Canadian people for his work toward that goal. There could not, however, be a more inappropriate time than the present to be giving consideration to the implementation of such a proposal. This country just cannot afford to lose a day's production at this time. To declare a national holiday would be to lessen the sincerity with which we have been approaching the whole problem of returning the economy to a healthy state with a good potential for growth in the next few years.

[The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin).]

The Economic Council of Canada, in its twelfth annual review, indicated that it will be difficult, if not impossible, for this country to maintain throughout the next decade the record of strong economic growth experienced in the 1960's. Until now we have been able to draw on a steadily increasing labour supply to ensure an annual rise in national productivity. Now that the number of young people entering the work force each year has begun to decline, other options for growth in productivity are having to be considered.

We can attempt to offset the decline in the birth rate by increasing the number of immigrants to Canada every year. Indications are, however, that this approach would be unacceptable to a large number of Canadians. Another option would be to make industry more capital intensive rather than labour intensive. The major problem here is that much if not most of the money needed, assuming it is available, would have to come from foreign sources. We would, therefore, be in the unpleasant situation of having to decide between maintaining what independance we enjoy now and accepting a lower level of productivity, or opening our country up to more foreign influence in order to continue to enjoy the benefits of an expanding economy. The danger that the later choice will become acceptable to many Canadians is very real.

Certainly if there has to be a choice between maintaining our high standard of living by losing more control of our manufacturing and resource industries, and accepting a lowered standard, but with more national independance, the present attitude of Canadians is not reassuring to those concerned with maintaining our ability to act as an autonomous nation.

The Economic Council of Canada reports that Canadians are, in general, relatively complacent about the future of their country's economy. The council warns that our recent slow growth in productivity and the consequential increase in foreign influence have contributed to the erosion of those indigenous capabilities that led to dynamic and innovative behaviour in Canadian industry.

Canadians on the whole are not aware of how badly our country has slipped in relation to other highly industrialized nations. The relatively rapid increase in total national output until now has been based on one of the fastest growing labour forces in the world. When we examine individual productivity, the figures are less than reassuring. Based on data from the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the average annual increase in output per employed person in Canada was almost the lowest of all industrialized nations during the period between 1960 and 1970. This raises the question of just how efficiently we are utilizing human and natural resources in Canada. It also should cause each individual to re-assess his contribution to the economic growth of this country.

I feel very strongly that this is not the time to reward poor performance with another statutory holiday. We are presently preaching restraint, and to provide for another holiday would only contribute to the present economic malaise.

I am in favour of providing for a national holiday in February and I will be glad to support such a move when the economy regains its strength, but our present situation makes this proposal undesirable at this time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Yewchuk: Don't talk too long, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I shall be only a minute or two. I fully support the bill. I deplore its not having been passed in time for Heritage Day to be celebrated in February of last year. I deplore the likelihood of its not being passed in time for Heritage Day to be celebrated this coming Monday. I have feelings about some of the arguments which have been put forward this afternoon which perhaps I had better keep to myself.

I still think that Mr. Justice Emmet Hall was fully justified in saying to the railroad workers, when he gave them their arbitrated settlement, that he would agree to the workers getting the holiday if and when parliament passed the bill.

Without further ado I say that I support the bill and hope it will pass third reading this afternoon. As a number of members to my right still want to speak on third reading, and as there is not much time for them to speak between now and five o'clock, I wish to propose a motion under Standing Order 6 (5). I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this day's sitting be continued beyond five o'clock, until the proceedings on the third reading of Bill C-208, now before the House, have been concluded.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order, please. All those who oppose the motion will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

● (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): I declare the motion negatived.

Motion negatived.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some of those ten were Tories and some were Liberals.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): On a point of order, I should like to make it clear to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that even though ten members did get up to say no to his motion, the bill could be passed before five o'clock, and if anybody knows that, he ought to know it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, while all of us are very proud of Canada's heritage and wish to make reference to Canada's heritage from time to time, I think this bill is simply a demonstration of laziness on the part of the government and perhaps on the part of the member who has put it forward.

Heritage Day

The Liberal party and the government have a long record of leading Canadians down the slippery slope of the disruption of the work ethic, the destruction of the belief that the people of this country have to work in order to keep the country producing. It seems to me there are many ways of celebrating Canada's heritage without having to stop eight million workers from doing a whole day's work.

The cost of eight million man days of lost work comes out to a substantial figure, and we should give this idea a good deal of thought before asking the country to face a financial loss of that sort.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has become famous for his scoffing at the notion of work and creating the attitude that Canadians need no longer work, that the government would set up a guaranteed income plan and that all people have to do to be acceptable is to be good consumers. I have to take issue with an approach of that kind. We know that in order for Canada to remain productive and maintain its standard of living, which is still one of the best in the world, although not as good as it was, everyone must accept some responsibility for work and productivity.

If we want to celebrate our Canadian heritage I suggest we might do so on July 1. We already have a day off on that date. That is a day which commemorates Confederation, and it seems very appropriate we should celebrate Canada's heritage at that time. As things are, nothing very much happens on that day except that everybody gets a day off and perhaps some communities hold a picnic or arrange a baseball game. The holiday is not utilized to its fullest extent.

As everyone knows, the country is facing a severe inflation problem. The former minister of finance who resigned his seat a day ago, the Hon. John Turner, constantly reminded us that the way to solve our inflation problem was through increased productivity. In my view the proposal in this bill would contribute both to the cost-push type of inflation and to the demand-pull type of inflation, and neither of them are desirable. We should not be looking for ways of getting an extra day's pay without working for it.

Most of us like the idea of taking a day off once in a while, but I would point out that we already have provision for a substantial number of official holidays and I cannot but feel that the hon. member, in putting forward this bill, is catering to the natural desire of some people to be lazy.

The Economic Council of Canada in its last report suggested that because of the decreased birth rate which followed the postwar baby boom fewer people are entering the work force today. We are at the point at which we must decide whether Canada wishes to continue to experience growth in its gross national product or whether it is satisfied to experience no growth. If we choose a growth rate of 5 per cent, for example, it will be necessary to bring in some 300,000 new immigrants a year to do the work which will be required or, alternatively to attract 300,000 women, not presently in the work force, to enter the work force.

Today we are suffering from severe unemployment, but if some growth occurs in our economy over the next five years the Economic Council it suggests is conceivable that in the absence of the immigration to which I have referred, or in the absence of women joining the work force in substantial numbers, we may experience a labour shortage. It would be ill-advised in these circumstances to give up eight million man days of work.

Mention was made that we might in some way recognize native Indians through this method of taking a day off. That, to me, is utterly ridiculous. If we want to recognize the Indian people, we should fulfil this desire by doing something for them which is meaningful, such as recognizing their aboriginal rights and trying to settle them in an equitable way. Or we should be coming to grips with measures for securing the economic development of their land, or solving the educational difficulties they are experiencing. Or, perhaps, if we want to take time off, spending a moment of silence would be more appropriate in view of the government's record in dealing with the needs of the Indian people. It seems to me the suggestion of a Heritage Day devoted in part to the recognition of the Indian people is a supreme example of tokenism toward people who are experiencing serious problems which must be met by serious proposals so that solutions can be reached.

You may have gathered by this time, Madam Speaker, I cannot support the measure before us, and I hope it will not pass or gain approval during the course of the debate.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Labelle): Madam Speaker, I find it ironic that Bill C-208 should follow immediately Bill C-68. If members of the House were listening attentively to the words spoken by some of their colleagues I think they would have come to the conclusion that Canada does not need another national holiday. If a Canadian is not ready to be deprived of his favourite American program to increase his Canadianism, what are we doing speaking of adding yet another Canadian holiday.

I was flabbergasted listening to contributions made by others in this debate to the effect that all this means is another paid holiday. To my mind Canada is much more than a paid holiday. I do not believe we should have another holiday until it means much more than that.

[Translation]

And this interpretation, Madam Speaker, is not more honourable than the one we hear now and again from those for which Canadianism does not extend beyond the profit dimension. If federalism is profitable, it is good for them. They consider themselves as Canadians. But I find absolutely unacceptable that this Canadianism, this federalism be restricted to some arithmethical consideration and as far as I am concerned the Canadian heritage extends much beyond this consideration, Madam Speaker.

For some people, this paid holiday would be the only benefit from this bill. Some of my colleagues defended quite well the case of our economy which is an economy of austerity particularly when the productivity of Canadians is much lower than our neighbours'. This is no time to toy with the idea of yet another holiday; we should rather be asking ourselves what we could do to streighten out our economy. What could Canadians do to straighten out the economy of their country?

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

● (1650)

I should not like to be rude or unkind, Madam Speaker, but I wonder if it is not typical for Canadians to say: "What's in it for me?" If it gives me a paid holiday, I am all for it, period. But we should consider what Canadian heritage means to Canadians. And if it is the only reason, Madam Speaker, I believe we can multiply holidays as much as we want, but this will never enhance the celebration of Canadianism.

It is time to examine all the advantages we have as Canadians. You just have to go abroad in countries a little less privileged to see all our advantages, the wealth we have in Canada not only in the central area of the country but also in the east, in the west and in the north. In creating a new holiday, in February or on the third Monday or in the fall, the first concern should be the celebration of this Canadianism. It should have a certain meaning. It should represent something for Canadians. But, if it is a paid holiday, I suggest it is not worthwhile and that we should not study this bill any longer. I am convinced that the hon. member responsible for this legislation felt the same way I do about this idea of a national holiday. We could call it Flag Day or Sir John A. Macdonald Day or someone else's day. It could simply be Canadians' Day, because in fact Canadians have benefited from this rich land. And I cannot find a better way of expressing this than by saying in English:

[English]

People should count their blessings and evaluate all the advantages that there are for Canadians in having inherited this rich land. This is why I am having difficulty in following the reasons that have been invoked for adding another holiday. This debate may last long enough for me to discover from my compatriots the reason for an extra holiday, apart from the ones to which reference has already been made.

Perhaps we should also try to seek the opinion of the Indians of Canada as to how they see another Canadian holiday. What conception do they have of a truly Canadian holiday for Canadians? Since we are speaking about a national holiday, why not consult the provinces and territories and ascertain their views on what form it should take, on what it means to Canadians? Should it be called "Confederation Day", what I call "Canada Day", or something else?

[Translation]

National holidays can be created which have no real meaning. I know I will offend some people but I will give this example: In the province of Quebec, by tradition, June 24 was Saint John the Baptist's day, the patron saint of French Canadians. But in recent years June 24 has been politicized to the point where it is the feast of a small group which celebrates in its own way and according to its capacities. They find that the only way to celebrate is to have an orgy that lasts three or four days, makes a lot of noise, and has no meaning in the province of Quebec for the majority. That is why, Madam Speaker, I am opposed to creating a national holiday if it has no meaning.

As much as June 24 used to have a meaning for French-speaking Canadians in the province of Quebec, today it does not mean anything at all to the very large majority. It is the lot of a small minority of noisemakers who have been looking at their belly buttons for ten or twelve years. Madam Speaker, I am seriously in favour of finding a formula acceptable to all Canadians to create a holiday for Canadians. But I do not think that the formula being considered is the proper one. We should perhaps start by consulting Canadians in all parts of this country, the provinces, municipal authorities, Indians, natives, so they too will feel part of that holiday. It should not be a holiday made against them but for them and for all Canadians. For that reason, Madam Speaker, I find that the committee perhaps did not spend enough time on this bill, very commendable and deserving as it is of a lot more consideration than it was given.

An hon. Member: Question! Question!

Mr. Dupras: Madam Speaker, when the motion by my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), was introduced we were able to sense that the House was opposed to passing that legislation. And I imagine that it is for the reason I indicated, Madam Speaker, that the matter was not given sufficient consideration and was not examined by enough Canadians to be able to determine if really that idea of a new national holiday could be celebrated in February, and I find that the date is very well chosen for amateurs of winter sports. Since winter sports are the main industry in my riding, and it is in that part of my country that it is best practised, and in the best of traditions, because we have been dedicated to that touristic industry for so many years—

[English]

Perhaps I should say this in the other official language of my country. We are dedicated to tourism which has been most successful in my area. Perhaps I would accept such a day because I think it would be a great occasion for Canadians to spend some time in the beautiful part of the country that I represent in this House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let us take the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McKinley: Madam Speaker, I see it is five o'clock. I wonder whether the acting House leader on the government side would confirm that on Monday we will continue with Bill C-58?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Morin): It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).
