Select Poetry,

RELIEVO.

BY WARD HOLM.

Down by the banks, where the rough waters flow
Over the falls' mouth the bridge above,
Through the mazy past of the long ago,
This legend comes with its wealth of love
Constancy stanch as the great solemn wood;
Passion as fierce as the burning sun;
Glimpses of Paradise, and then to brood
Tragely dark, and the tale is done.
Then a few flowers from a fair young hand
Are lightly dropped on the river's breast;
But the angels watching will understand,
It marks the grave of her loved one's rest.
And I looking back on my troubled past,
Of the faded hopes of bygone years,
I a nosegay make, while the tears fall fast,
And toss it down with my scattered fears.

Interesting Story.

Claytonville's "Fourth."

"The Declaration of Independence, eh? Well, I guess the poor fellow had it about right, if he was drunk. I've seen little independence there is about it! For my part, I'd as lives be under British rule as the rule of rum, and that's what Claytonville's under to-day. Hump! much patriotism there is in our celebration! A good time to get drunk—that's what they mean."
"Oh, don't, Aunt Esther, don't! You make my heart ache!" and a pair of deep, wistful eyes were turned imploring toward Miss Estelle's bright, black orbs. The black eyes softened; they always did when they met Estelle's sympathetic gaze; but the voice was as brisk and snappish as ever as she continued:

"Well, ain't I tellin' the truth, child? You know how it was last Fourth—you know how it will be this. There ain't a half dozen out and out temperance men in the town. No, these ain't on. There's some that talk temperance, I grant, but how do they act? Afraid to do one thing towards shutting up rum-shops, for fear they'll injure their business! It makes me sick! The last time old Deacon Downing got up in meeting and talked about the temperance people 'concentrating the forces' and waiting till the time was 'ripe for action' I got up and left the church. I declare I had to. If the time wasn't 'ripe for action' after last Fourth of July, I'd like to know when it will be. Poor Jamie Cushing! And there'll be another this year, you see f—"

"Oh, auntie, auntie!" and the girl's bright head was buried in the sofa pillow, as she burst into deep, heart-rending sobs. The old lady said nothing for a time, only stroked the fair hair softly, and wiped, furtively, the tears from her own eyes; then, as the sobs grew less violent: "Hush, darling, hush! We can't help it! I'd stop the business quick enough if I could; but what's the use of breaking our hearts over a thing we can't help?"

"That's just it, auntie," and the girl sprang to her feet with a resolute bound. "Can't we help it? Have we the women of Claytonville done our part? I believe we can stop it through God's help. Auntie will you help me?"

"Yes, child," was the solemn answer; "if God has given you this work I'll help," and they stood for a moment with clasped hands and bowed heads, as if the chrism of a holy mission were already being poured upon them.

Claytonville was a town not wholly unworthy to be called representative of a large class, even in our enlightened east. Nestled in among green hills, eight miles from a railway, with no manufactories and no little interest to invite a new population, it seemed, in some way, left behind by the great advancing wave of our nineteenth century life. Many of its young men had gone west; it seemed strange that all should not go; but many had chosen to remain, and were plodding on as their fathers had done before them.

One interest alone was flourishing in Claytonville, and that was the liquor interest. With a population of about five hundred the town boasted seven licensed liquor saloons, with perhaps an equal number unlicensed. No temperance interests had ever been awakened there. The families who boasted wealth, boasted, likewise, an aristocratic descent, which effectually precluded them from so plebeian a thing as the temperance society. They used liquor, too, those stanch old farmers 'in moderation,' of course, and it was a well-known fact that even the parson considered Paul's injunction to Timothy as being especially binding upon himself.

Of later years there had been a marked deterioration among the young men of Claytonville; the fathers had awakened to the fact that their sons were no longer drinking in 'moderation'; but then 'boys will be boys, you know,' seemed always logic sufficient to quell all fatherly fears. The mother's—God pity them—grew daily sadder.

The Cushing and St. Clairs—or Sinclairs as they were called—were Claytonville's 'oldest families.' Their broad lands lay adjoining each other, and the families had always maintained the closest intimacy. Aunt Esther Sinclair was the town oracle, freely privileged, throughout the length and breadth of Claytonville, to say what she pleased and to scold ad libitum. With her in the queer old mansion lived her niece, Estelle. Between Estelle and Jamie Cushing there had been a boy and girl friendship; which as the years went by, had bidden fair to ripen into something more.

On the 3d of last July Estelle, a 'sweet girl graduate,' had returned from Boston, where she had been attending school for the past five years. Jamie had called on her that evening, and she wondered a little at his flushed face and the strange voice with which he had told her of the fun "we fellows 'll have to-morrow." She had awakened next morning to find the town a pandemonium; and at ten o'clock had seen her boy lover racing madly by, so intoxicated that he could hardly keep his seat in the saddle. He had yelled out some madman sentiment to her in passing, and within another hour, she had seen him born in at his mother's door cold and stiff and dead.

Is it any wonder that, with the memory of that day still fresh before her, Estelle Sinclair dreaded another Fourth of July in Claytonville? Is it any wonder that she should dedicate her fresh young life to the work of saving other boys from Jamie's fate, even though 'woman's rights,' or woman's public work, were things counted in Claytonville as from the evil one?

She held a long council of war with Aunt Esther that evening, and as its immediate result, they started out early the next morning, Estelle to call on the saloon keepers, Aunt Esther on the minister.

"Really auntie," the girl said, earnestly, "I am giving you the harder work. I would rather face a hundred saloon keepers than Dr. Parsons."

"I don't wonder you said so," said her aunt, with flashing eyes, as, at the dinner table they talked the matter over. "I listened to a very interesting discussion on Paul and the miracle at Cans, but not one word could I get from him as to the present state of Claytonville's morals; and, Estelle, for I saw him with my own eyes."

"Well, my saloon keepers were very good; they were too astonished to be anything else. Only one was at all impudent, and two promised me not to sell any liquor on the Fourth. Now we must see the women."

A busy week followed—a week of earnest work and earnest prayer; a week of sacrifice, too; for, when that band of earnest women were first assembled in Miss Sinclair's parlors, listening to Estelle's eagerly unfolded plans, one practically minded sister had inquired where the funds were to come from. There had been a little hush for a moment, and looks of consternation had been visible on many faces: then Estelle's clear voice had answered bravely:

"I will go without a single new article of clothing for the coming year, and spend my money for this work."

And I, and I, and I, cried a score of voices, and the wave of enthusiasm swept so high that there was a little storm of applause from woman's hands—even in a Claytonville parlor.

"But I see no need of quite such a sacrifice," said Esther; let those who can afford to pay, pay for the dainties; they would pay for their liquors. Give only to the poor."

"I hadn't thought of that," said Estelle, slowly. Still, if the girls are willing, I would rather we paid for this—so far as we may, then whatever surplus funds there may be, can go to the establishment of a permanent reading room."

And so the matter was settled.

Great astonishment was awakened in the many breasts of Claytonville as, on the 3d of July, a large booth was seen in process of erection on the village green, the grand centre of their patriotic demonstrations. The mystery was not explained until, as the central feature in its tasteful decorations, from beneath a festooning of flags stood forth the mystic letters, W. C. T. U. In God we trust.

"Humph!" said Deacon Downing and Mitchell Flaherty, the saloon keeper, in the same breath. "Some woman's tomfoolery!"

It seemed a very attractive piece of tomfoolery the next day. The girls were in their places at early dawn, each in her prettiest dress and with her prettiest smile; and when it was found that Aunt Esther's famous coffee was likewise on hand, there was such a raid from the youthful cannoners as bade fair to exhaust the supply. It was not very hard, after they had eaten of the smoking beans and brown bread and drank the luscious coffee, to persuade those boys not to go near a saloon that day. The girls were surprised to find how easily it was done; hardly one left the table without a white ribbon in his button-hole.

By ten o'clock it became evident that provisions would not hold out, so a foraging expedition was organized, with orders to call at every house. How they roared over the fires in their hot kitchens that day—those mothers of Claytonville!

Then there came a slack movement. The saloon keepers had been waiting patiently for their custom. At first they had only felt vaguely uneasy, but now they were genuinely alarmed; so placards were posted about telling of free drinks, and all the old veterans were sent down to the green to decoy the boys. The girls felt that the life or death struggle had come, and with a pathetic bravery they prepared to meet it. The ice cream, which had been held in reserve, was now brought forward, and Marian Cushing stood for half an hour with a plate in her hand trying to persuade Tom Bryant to come with her to eat it, while Michael Flaherty was at his button-hole urging him saloon-ward.

She always felt that she should have lost him if, just at the right moment, help had not come. From such an unexpected quarter, too; Dr. Parson's son, who last year had been intoxicated on that very green, had returned from college, the night before, and with him a young friend. They had no thoughts of attending the celebration that day, but rumors of the women's work reached them, they hurried down to help. For Jamie Cushing's death had burned deep into Frank Parson's soul, and Harvard held no more earnest temperance advocate than he, unless it was his friend Harry Emerson, the young theologian.

How they worked! It seemed as if they were everywhere in the same instant and everywhere with just the right word, Tom Bryant found himself eating his ice cream with a very solemn face, for Frank had wrung his hand and whispered, "Oh, Tom! remember Jamie!" and then Jamie's sister had placed the dish in his hand and turned away with a sob.

For two hours the battle raged, but when, at one o'clock precisely, Aunt Esther brought forth her first chicken pie the saloon keepers gave up with a groan. Some of them were even wise enough to close their saloons and join in the festivities. All that afternoon there was merriment—croquet-playing and an impromptu dance on the green, while the display of fire-works in the evening was said never before to have been so fine. The reason may have been they were never touched off by a sober hand.

As the last rocket shot skyward Frank Parson sprang upon the platform and said, "Friends, such a Fourth of July as this has never been known in Claytonville. Not one drunken man or boy! Some one originated this movement. I want to know who!" "Who? who?" came in loud chorus; "we want to thank her," and then to everyone's surprise—her own not less—Estelle Sinclair came forward. Her face was very pale, but her eyes shone like white stars as she stood quietly by Frank's side and said, "Dear friends, you remember Jamie. I remember him. I have tried to do to-day what, if he could speak, I am sure he would ask me to do. I do not want thanks; you have given me higher than thanks to-day. I want to save the boys of Claytonville!" and then there was a deep hush, broken only by sobs, until Harry Emerson, in a husky voice, said "Let us sing 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow.'"

And to this day they sing that at the close of every Fourth of July celebration in Claytonville, and while they are singing the eyes of Rev. Harry Emerson look very lovingly into those of his young wife, for as he often says, though I never before believed in woman's rights, I yet fell in love with my wife while she was delivering the most effective Fourth of July oration I ever heard.

"Aye, there she goes, God bless her! cry the women and children as she passes by. It's her we have to thank that there's not a drop of liquor sold in Claytonville."

Where Our Soda Comes From.

Along the Peruvian coast, stretching for hundreds of miles, are the famous beds of nitrate of soda, which purified is saltpeter. These deposits, more profitable than silver or guano, were discovered accidentally by a vagrant Englishman named George Smith, but were not operated to any extent until recent years. Now nitrate having been found a valuable component of a hundred chemical forms, it is demanded of the world over, and millions of dollars' worth is shipped from the ports along the coast annually. Before its value was fully known a number of far-sighted men located "claims," after the fashion in vogue in mining-camps everywhere, and then the government stepped in, and forbade any further pre-emption. But the original location cover enough of the deposit to supply the market for a century or two, and to keep up prices they have formed a pool, the monopoly combination, under which they charge from two to three dollars per cwt. There is apparently no limit to the stuff, the bed stretching up and down the coast for 300 or 400 miles.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., AUGUST 7, 1885

Are we to have a Jail?

Wolfville is deficient in a great many things that other towns of like size and importance have, and which it ought to have. The ACADIAN has always since it has been published advocated reform and one thing it has especially agitated has been to have a lock-up and proper police constable. The matter has been brought up a great many times and yet no active measures have ever been taken. Once a committee was appointed and a certain building was spoken of and estimates were procured as to the expense of fitting up &c.; but before any definite arrangement was made the matter was allowed to drop. Now we see no reason why Wolfville should not have this very necessary institution. Other towns have it and find that it pays. Instances could be given where towns that were notorious for disorder and rowdiness have been made quiet, orderly and respectable, and though Wolfville, as a rule, may have little need of a jail, yet there are times when it is necessary that it should have one. In the past offences have been passed over for the reason that our nearest place of imprisonment is seven miles away and it has been thought that it was better to pass over a small offence than to put the County to the expense and trouble of carrying the offenders so far. This has the effect of making the offenders bolder and consequently we may expect crimes to become more common. We hope this matter will be given the attention that it deserves and that some active measures will be taken at once. In this time of civilization and enlightenment there must be changes from the old "tracks," and what would do very well sixty, fifty, or even forty years ago is too cramped and antiquated for the present generation. The effect of having a thorough system of enforcing the law and keeping order could not help being beneficial to all interested in the place and would dispel the stories that have been circulated by a contemporary in the past, at every possible opportunity, about the "rowdiness of Wolfville."

Sentence of Louis Riel.

The trial of Louis Riel at Regina closed on the 1st inst., and resulted in sentence of death being passed upon him by Judge Richardson to be carried into effect on the 18th of September next. The result of the trial has been anticipated from the first and cannot be a surprise to the public. It is well known that he was the real leader of the rebellion and that he incited the Indians to take up arms and is responsible for the cruel and cowardly murders committed by them. The evidence against him was strong and conclusive and had all been true that his counsel claimed for him it would have been no justification for his acts. The defence relied mainly upon the plea of insanity, but so uncertain was their witness on this point that it completely failed to convince the jury, who were able within one hour after retiring to return a verdict of "Guilty," whereupon sentence of death was passed upon him which nothing but the decision of a higher court will likely prevent from being carried into execution. Louis Riel is of all men the least to expect a commutation of the sentence now passed upon him, for if ever a man merited the doom to which he is under sentence he is the man. Not being satisfied with his past endeavors to incite the North West to acts of rebellion, his murder of Scott, and, as he alleged, receiving money to leave the country, he returned, not for the purpose of redressing the grievances of his countrymen, but purely and simply for the purpose of personal gain to himself, as he proposed to abandon his movement if the Dominion Government would pay him a sum of money, and return to the United States, to which country he claimed to owe allegiance.

Native Potatoes.

Four years ago a man named McInnes was cultivating turnips, sowed on burnt land on the Falmouth mountain, he discovered a number of plants, which were different from anything he had ever seen and yet resembled the potato plant. Finding one larger than the rest, he resolved to hoe it and see what would come from it. In the fall when he pulled his turnips he remembered the plant and on digging it up, found about a pint of what looked like potatoes, except that they were only about as large as peas. He took care of the seed and the next year planted them and in the fall harvested more potatoes and larger. Last year being wet they did not amount to anything; but this year he planted about half an acre and they are already the size of his other potatoes. Mr C. A. Patquin, of this place, visited his farm a few days ago and procured a few of the potatoes, which he brought into our office. They are different in appearance from any potato we have ever seen and Mr P. tells us that the plant and also the blossom are different. This we think is quite a curiosity and the only explanation we can give is that they are natural Nova Scotia potatoes. No doubt scientific men will tell us that this is impossible and that the potato plant is not a native of this country, and if this is correct we would like to hear the matter explained. These are the facts and we would like to hear somebody's opinion. The field was in the midst of dense woods and two miles from any other cultivated land.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONTRADICTION.

CORNWALLIS, 1st Aug., 1885.

To the Editors of the ACADIAN.

In your paper of yesterday you say: "Mrs H. H. Gordon, of Saxon Street, has built a new barn; size 30x40 feet." If I am the person spoken of, and I know of no other by the name of Gordon in Saxon Street, I beg to say that Mr C. Harrington put up a small building for me, of perhaps 20x25 or 30 feet, to be used for wood-house, cart-shed, and such purposes. I have no use for a large barn, have not more than 10 or 12 acres of land that has been plowed, I keep very little stock as I have to hire pasture in summer and buy hay for winter. I think it unfair to be ridiculed on account of small means, as there are so many others in Cornwallis who are in similar circumstances, altho' they do not pay one third as much taxes as is demanded of me. I do not feel flattered to see my name in a newspaper or think it any advantage, especially when both name and circumstances are misrepresented. Probably your correspondent was so much occupied minding his own business, or the want of a business to mind, that he forgot to observe whether the little building was a barn, wood-house, or pig-pen. Hoping you will kindly correct the mistake in your next, I remain

Respectfully yours,
HARRIET L. GORDON.

[In reference to the above we would say that we are entirely innocent of any intention of misrepresenting, nor do we think that the item was intended in that way. Probably our correspondent was simply mistaken in the size, and use to which the building was to be put. At any rate we published the item in good faith. We hope our correspondents will be more careful in the future.—Ed.]

"MUSIC IN WOLFVILLE."

To the Editors of the ACADIAN.

MESSRS EDITORS.—A writer in the New Star who signs himself "A lover of Music," and whose style betrays him with as much certainty as an Irishman's brogue indicates his nationality, advises the choir of the Wolfville Baptist church to spend more time in "regular practice." It is a mystery to me why a Wolfville writer should send his suggestions to the Wolfville choir through a "Kentville paper." And what has that writer got to do with the choir, or the church, of which he is not a member? What has he been pounding at? Does he not know that the choir, the organ, and one-half the organ seat, are wholly and entirely and completely under the control and management of the "Chorister," who is quite capable of judging how often and when his pupils should practise. When he says "Practise" they practise, when he says "Don't" they emphatically "Don't." When he has leisure, "they sing"; when he is busy, they patiently wait until he can hear them in their "do, sol, mi, do." If "Lover of Music" feels more than usually "seedy" because the pieces are not rendered in good style, let him "Steal awhile away" and be awfully busy in minding his own business, and not feel over anxious about the affairs of the Wolfville Baptist choir, the members of which, suitably directed by their "Superior," feel quite equal to looking after the music of the church. Yours,
W. X. Y. Z.

"A LECTURER FROM PALESTINE."—The Rev. Ghosn El Howie, a native of Mount Lebanon and a graduate of Edinburgh, arrived in this province in April last, and is now engaged in preaching and lecturing in various places. He lectured several times in Wolfville during last month, on the following subjects:—"My home and history," "From Jerusalem to Bethlehem," "Life in Palestine." On Tuesday he delivered his lecture "Lebanon and my school days," in vestry of Baptist church. The substance of Mr Howie's lectures is a popular exposition of the history, habits and customs of Syria. While the information is valuable on its own account, the main object of these lectures is to illustrate and explain main passages in Scripture which depend for their clearness upon knowledge of the locality, and life of the east. In the addition to the opinion of the public press, Mr Howie carries a large number of printed and written testimonials from eminent men (both in Britain and here) and all agree in commending and recommending him as a lecturer. He proposes to conduct a course of lectures in the interests of temperance, and bring his experience to bear on the subject. Although Mr Howie is not supported by any society, he appears to be willing to accept invitations and give his lectures upon the easiest terms. In some cases his expenses have been defrayed by means of a collection. He makes no charges lest any who can't pay should stay away on that account.

Local and Provincial.

FOUND.—Near Wolfville railway station, on Tuesday, Aug. 4th, a silver watch. The owner can have the same by proving property and paying for this notice. E. W. Abbott.

We would recommend that the commissioners of streets have the grass neatly clipped out of the streets and gutters. It would greatly improve the looks and besides be quite a saving of labor and money next year.

The Rev. Dr. Welton, LL. D., of MacMaster Hall, Toronto, preached an able sermon at Tremont last Sabbath evening, and at Torbrook in the afternoon. The learned gentleman returns to Toronto next week.—Weekly Monitor.

THE WEATHER.—We have had quite a change in the weather since last issue, and this week has been quite cool, followed on Tuesday night and Wednesday by heavy rains, which will no doubt be of great value to the crops—except the hay.

The express from Annapolis on Tuesday was delayed about two hours and consequently was obliged to "cross" the freight, and accommodation from Halifax here. A number of visitors arrived from the "States" and made things look quite lively.

The Hon John B. Finch, R. W. G. T. has concluded his present labors in the provinces, having visited the grand lodges of Nova Scotia, P. E. Island and New Brunswick. Col. Sobieski has just returned from Newfoundland, where he and Prof. A. O. Crozier, of Ann Arbor, Mich., have been laboring to introduce the order.

A YOUNG man named Allen from Parrsboro', while working in the shipyard of Messrs Churchill, Hantsport, last Saturday, by some mischance gave his broadaxe a wrong twist, when it struck on edge against his foot, just below the ankle. The cut was very bad, but Allen bore the process of making up the wound very bravely.—Hants Journal.

We learn that Dr Rand has been offered, and has accepted, a professional chair in McMaster Hall. His subjects will be didactics and ethics. While the Dr's removal will be a serious loss to Acadia and the Province generally, we feel that he is eminently suited for this position and wish him every success.

The temperance picnic at Mount Uniacke next Wednesday promises to be the event of the season. Extensive arrangements have been made and everything possible has been done to make it an enjoyable day. The picnic is confined to temperance people, and persons wishing to go must have certificates before they can purchase tickets. In Wolfville certificates can be obtained only from Mr A. M. Hoare, W. P. Wolfville Division, and Mr W. S. Wallace, sec'y of Acadia Lodge, I. O. G. T.

Thirty years study and experiment have been given to perfecting the formula for Parsons' Pills, and the universal judgment of the highest medical authorities, scientists, and men of learning, is that our formula is the best yet devised by the brain of man, and should rank with the wonderful discoveries of the world. OLD SONGS.

SPARKLE, LEADVILLE, COOL.
 "Like springtime's fairest flowers,
 Or birds across the sea
 Returning to their bowers
 The old songs come to me."
 Some time ago one of the members asked me what short poem was dearest to my heart. The question occurred to me to-day and many cherished memories were brought forth as I sat musing over what reply I should make, before the question—like the name of the inquirer—
 should have escaped a somewhat treacherous memory. Dearest of all cherished memories, to my heart, are those beautiful words.

"Rock of ages cleft for me, let me hide myself in thee."
 Many poems may be sweeter, but none can so vividly bring to me the memory of a dear patient mother, who, during the most severe hours of suffering and afflic-tion, would raise her feeble voice in song, and those dear, pleading words seemed like a fervent prayer ascending to the throne of mercy. It was my mother's favorite hymn, and but a few hours before those dear lips were sealed with the great mysteries of that unknown land she called me to her bedside and, as the bright light was fading from her beautiful eyes forever, she said to me, "Sing Rock of Ages." It was with breaking hearts we sang, the words which whispered such promises of perfect peace to that departing soul, and as the last words melted away in a stifled sob she whispered, "Sing that at my grave," and in a few moments more I had lost my dearest, earthly friend, but another had gained that safe refuge of peace, the "Rock of Ages."

"Welcome Home" was also one of her favorites, and at her request was sung during her funeral services. Another—that well-remembered little cradle song
 "Hush, My Dear, Lie Still and Slumber," is dearly cherished, for it carries me back to childhood's hours when I was cradled in that pure, loving breast and mother's voice soothed my childish cares away. If there remains one link which binds us more firmly to the past than others could,
 do it is surely these old and well-remembered songs—songs which awaken the tenderest memories and link our hearts
 with the fond recollection of the past.
 Like our immortal poet we sigh

"For the touch of a vanished hand
 And the sound of a voice that is still."
 "Home, Sweet Home," has ever been cherished by true and loyal hearts and will be for time immemorial. When far from home and loved ones how often have those words awakened the tenderest memories in the heart of the wanderer, brought him into closer acquaintance with pure and noble thoughts—thoughts which strengthened the heart and helped him to bravely meet life's battles, the thoughts of home and loved ones. Then that old but soul stirring song, "America,"

is not every impulse of the patriots heart stirred to action as the glorious words swell out over "the land of the free and the home of the brave." There we have the old songs, "Just Before the Battle Mother," and "The Vagant Chair."
 Many years have passed since these old songs were warbled in every city, village and hamlet from the pine clad hills of Maine to the fertile valleys of the Pacific slope; from the frozen North to the sunny South, they echoed and re-echoed for four long and never to be forgotten years.
 Every house throughout the length and breadth of our own brave land was waiting and watching between hope and fear and many were the fervent prayers which went up from those humble homes for the husbands, fathers, brothers, sons and loved ones while those dear songs were wafted to the breeze, and to-day as those old songs are again revived we see many tear-dimmed eyes, which tell in their silent way of battles and hearts that have yielded up their lives, and of heroes that have given their life for the noble cause of freedom.

How dear to the true born sons and daughters of that little green isle—that royal gem of the sea—are those plaintive little Irish ballads, each telling its story of hearts that are loyal to "the land where the shamrock grows green." How the old songs carries the wanderers back to the home-nest among "the bonny hills o' Scotia," and other homes "across the deep blue sea." Those dear links in memory's chain! How they carry us back to the days of long ago—the days
 which we would so gladly recall were it in our power to do so. What beautiful visions they bring to us, and so vividly are they brought to mind that we almost seem to hear the voice of loved ones which have long been silent, and feel the hand-clasp
 of those who long ago left the home nest
 and scattered far from the familiar scenes of our childhood.

"Those dear old songs remind us
 Of friends on the other shore;
 Those dear ties—may they bind us
 To those loved ones evermore.
 Oh! how my heart rejoices
 As I think of that bright shore;
 For we shall hear those voices
 Singing those 'dear old songs' once more."
