GRAND PRE LADY SPEAKS AT TORONTO FAIR

Miss Annie Stuart Makes Notable Address on Orchardling.

"I was here yesterday—and it drew me back today," declared a woman who yesterday appeared at the Women's Institute wing of the Toronto Building shortly after noon. As the visitor proceeded to draw up a chair close to the platform she explained that while she lived in the city she was eager to know more about the activities of the country woman. From the amazing manner in which the daily audiences in this wing are increasing it appears that there are many city women with the same splendid interest. Members of the Ontario Women's Institute gather in large numbers each day to learn of the activities of the Institutes in the sister Provinces.

"If each member is loyal to her Institute, the Institute will be loyal to the Province and the Province loyal to the Dominion," said Miss Annie Stuart, of Grand Pre, Nova Scotia, as a part of her message to rural women, in which she stressed the importance of loyalty to themselves and to each other. Miss Stuart is the successful owner of Basilhurst, a beautiful farm in Grand Pre, where she has fifty acres of fine apple orchard.

In 1905 she started with seven acres of young apple trees on a clay hill, with a north slope. These undraining features she overcame with underdrainage, and by the second year got splendid results. Steadily Miss Stuart, by dint of good judgment, expert labor and favorable conditions, has climbed to the pinnacle of success which she now occupies. Last year 2,000 barrels of her apples were sold in England. "My better half," said Miss Stuart, "is my cousin, Miss Una Magee, who has been with me for 27 years."

After giving a brief address on "Women in business, especially that of an orchardist," Miss Stuart gathered around her many women who were eager to get sound, solid advice on this subject, and there followed a splendid heart-to-heart and mind-to-mind talk. "It can be done, but there is a lot of work and worry to making an orchard a success," she declared.

One thing we must get after is the co-operative packing and shipping of apples, in order to reduce expenses which threaten to eat up our profits." This was Miss Stuart's parting admonition to the orchardists.—Toronto Globe.

REID—SHAW

The bride was dressed in a travelling suit of navy-blue broadcloth, with hat to match, and was given away by her father.

After congratulations luncheon was served, following which the happy couple left amid showers of confetti and rice on a wedding trip which will include a visit to the upper provinces. On their return Mr. and Mrs. Reid will reside in Wolfville. THE ACADIAN joins a host of friends in congratulations.

MARITIME BAPTIST CONVENTION

Closed Interesting Session Sunday Evening—Over Three Hundred in Attendance

The seventy-ninth annual session of the Baptist convention of the Maritime Provinces, which closed on Sunday evening, was one of the most interesting and helpful gatherings of its kind held in recent years. Over three hundred delegates and guests were in attendance and received much inspiration from the various meetings held in the Baptist church.

The convention opened at 9.30 on Thursday morning when Rev. Prof. J. L. Gilmour, D.D., of Toronto, gave the first of his series of devotional addresses. At 11 o'clock the president, Rev. N. A. McNeil, D.D., called the convention together for business.

A number of distinguished visitors including Revs. Prof. J. L. Gilmour, D.D., C. W. Rose, D.D., D. E. Hatt, D. B. Hemmison, D.D., Prof. J. E. Barrs and others were invited to seat in the convention.

Rev. A. N. Marshall, D.D., pastor of the Wolfville church, welcomed the delegates to the church and community, to which a response was made by J. P. Gordon, Charlottetown.

Rev. E. S. Mason, Wolfville, presented the forty-fifth annual report of the Home Mission Board. The report showed that in the past year about twenty times as much money was spent and about twenty times as many members received by baptism as in the first year of the board's work.

Mention was made of 32 student missionaries engaged in work with churches during the summer. 240 churches have been served by home missionaries, 408 preaching places and 6735 families are connected with these churches. 3719 weeks' work has been done, 22028 pastoral visits made, 414 baptized, the board has expended $27,722.

The afternoon session opened with another address by Dr. J. L. Gilmour speaking of "The Substance of the Christian Message."

Mrs. Mary K. Ingraham presented the report of the historical committee. The committee contemplates a full index to all records of Maritime Baptist Historical collection. Many valuable records of churches have been received during the year.

gun near the end of May are now ready to receive the roof on which work is now proceeding. It is hoped that the roof may be finished before the autumn rains so that the inside work may go steadily forward, and if sufficient funds are forthcoming, that by Feb. 1 a number of the rooms may be ready for student classes, and that the structure may approach near enough to completion to permit the holding of our May convocation in the new auditorium.

A representative of one of the leading educational boards of the United States recently inspected our educational plant and good authorities that the structure may approach near enough to completion to permit the holding of our May convocation in the new auditorium.

The report of the treasurer of Acadia University notes gifts to the university during the year amounted to $75,390.04. Of this amount $75,145 was for the new forward movement and $164.00 for current uses. Thanks is given to the contributors. In addition to the amounts received through gifts, the board of governors has received the proceeds of a legacy from the late Paul MacPhee, of Prince Edward Island amounting to $2,187.77. Owing to the death of Mrs. Annie Welsh, her contribution of $1,000 made on an annuity basis became available for use. Since these gifts were made without restriction as to their use they were placed to the credit of the new forward movement.

Dr. Gilmour continued his addresses at the afternoon session, Christian giving, he said, has high devotional value. It helps to develop character and in the New Testament is regarded as a sacrifice, with which God is well pleased. Mr. Hunt, Secretary of the Y.M.C.A., spoke of the matter of Immigration to Canada.

In the absence of the denominational treasurer, J. Wesley Dimock, his report was presented by Dr. H. T. DeWolfe. The report shows receipts of $66,766.48. The churches making the largest contributions are German Street, St. John, $4,417.52; Moncton First, $4,264; Brunswick Street, Fredericton, $4,200 and Amherst First, $2,825.56. The reports from churches exceed those of last year amounting to $1,274.89. Legacies amount to $1,148, against more than four thousand last year.

CIVIC PARLIAMENT

Holds Rather Quiet Session—Town Threatened with Action for Damages.

At the regular monthly meeting of the Council on Wednesday evening Mayor Chambers and all the Councillors were present except Councillor Reid, who was out of town on a rather important mission. Town Clerk Ford, who has been enjoying a month's vacation, was back on the job and Town Manager Stairs was in his accustomed place.

After the reading and confirming of the minutes of previous meetings the Manager gave a statement of the expenditures made in the various departments. On the streets there had been expended during July $376.86, which makes a total of $3096.68 laid out so far for the year, out of an appropriation of $4000. For water the amount was $117.46, with a total of $614.21; for sewers, $49.00, with a total of $169.71; for police, $15.20, with a total of $461.11; and for poor, $99.55, with a total of $1118.03.

Coun. Balcom, for the Finance Committee, read a detailed statement of the town finances, approved by the auditors, which showed the credit balance at the bank at the end of August to be $1542.35. A letter was read from Miss B. K. Sexton, asking that her assessment on millinery stock, which she regards as excessive, should be reduced and a refund made to her on taxes paid under protest. The circumstances were investigated by the Council and the amount was reduced from $600 to $300 as requested.

The clerk read a communication from the Health Officer, calling attention to certain conditions existing in town and asking for action. Dr. DeWitt also appeared before the Council and spoke in explanation. The matter was referred to a meeting of the Board of Health, which will be held at 7.30 o'clock on Friday evening.

The following bills were presented for payment by the Manager and ordered paid: Woodman & Co. $12.10. Priest & Sons. 7.15. Odd Fellows Convention Com. 20.00. George Stephens. 39.90. J. H. Baltzer. 63.78. R. E. Harris & Sons. 614.00. F. W. Woodman. 18.50. Municipality of Annapolis Co. 117.00. Jas. Robertson & Co. 87. A. W. Bleakney. 27.10. T. McAvity & Sons. 12.20. D. A. R. (rent of ground). 30.00. Davidson Bros. 6.00. A. F. Newcombe (gravel). 41.30.

The clerk was authorized to procure a copy of the latest Revised Statutes of the province for the use of the town court. Coun. Peck reported for the Fire Committee recommending that the use of the new fire engine be restricted to the town limits and on motion this recommendation was adopted.

The Town Manager made a suggestion that the town reimburse him for the expense of gasoline for his car used in connection with his duties, and on motion the adjustment of this was left in the hands of the Mayor, to be reported to the Council at its next meeting. The Manager also asked that he be given a vacation of a week or ten days, which was granted by the Council. The Mayor reported that a claim had been presented by the husband of a lady tourist who in July met with mishap by falling into an excavation on Linden avenue. Some time ago a letter was received requesting the payment of one hundred dollars for medical treatment and a further sum of five hundred dollars in recompense for the injury sustained. Subsequently notice was received that action would be taken against the town to recover one thousand dollars damages. A Kentville legal firm has the case in charge.

FULL OF YEARS

Mr. William B. Hardwick, for many years a resident of Wolfville, who now makes his home with his daughter, Mrs. F. K. Trenholm, at Grand Pre, was in town between trains on Tuesday. Now in his ninetieth year he retains his physical and mental powers to a wonderful degree. In conversation with THE ACADIAN Mr. Hardwick stated that with his axe on his shoulder he had started that morning for the woods. Changing his mind he returned home and made ready to come to Wolfville by train. The station is more than a mile from his home and in order to make his train he was obliged to almost run, which is a pretty good record for a man of his years. He was stepping off like a boy, however, as he left us to proceed to the railway station on his way home. For many years Mr. Hardwick carried on a carriage making business in Wolfville and also owned a saw-mill at Black River. He was the very efficient superintendent of our streets and wood-works for a considerable time. Many old friends here will wish for him continued health and vigor.

WINDSOR ADOPTS TOWN MANAGER IDEA

Windsor is the latest town to adopt the idea of a town manager. There, as in Kentville, the office will be associated with that of town clerk. When Wolfville had under consideration this method of conducting its affairs its citizens were confronted with the representation that the provincial government had ordained that no person other than an associate engineer was eligible for the position. Since in the legislation passed by that body, so far as we have been able to ascertain, no provision is made for the work of a town manager, we were at the time inclined to question the logic of the ruling and it now transpires that the whole story was a myth. Our idea of the qualifications of a town manager is that he be possessed of good judgment and a proper vision, coupled with ordinary business ability and a fair amount of common sense. Given these qualities and a determination to conduct public affairs wisely and economically a town manager should be a valuable adjunct of any small town.

When this subject—which has become a live one of late—was under discussion at the meeting of the Union of Nova Scotia Municipalities last week one of the speakers asserted that a good mayor is the best manager that a town can have—a statement that might be correct under certain circumstances. It frequently happens, however, that the man elected to the position is lacking the necessary qualifications, or may be a busy man who is not able to devote the time required to look after the town affairs. There is also the advantage of having in charge a permanent official whose familiarity with municipal routine is able to keep the civic machinery running smoothly. Any tendency on the part of the mayor or councillors to shirk the duties imposed upon them and leave administrative responsibility to the manager should be discouraged, as under the law, as it is at present, these duties cannot be delegated.

OUR NATURAL RESOURCES

It is a significant fact that a very large proportion of the natural resources of Nova Scotia which should constitute the chief asset of our people has passed under the control of foreign capital. This would not be so bad if a reasonably adequate price had been paid for it or if the transaction had been so safeguarded as to have made certain that its exploitation should not have been at the expense of home industry. Such raw material as the products of our forests and mines that are shipped to foreign countries for a mere pittance are there manufactured and sold at prices which ensure profitable labor for hosts of workmen and a handsome compensation for those who direct the enterprise.

While the fault may primarily be placed at the door of those of our people who are unwilling to invest their capital in undertakings that would provide employment for our people and bring prosperity to the home land, there is no question but that the policy of those who govern our affairs should be to prevent the ruthless sacrifice of the natural wealth of our land. If, as has been suggested, a ban was put upon the export of pulp-wood it would be but a short time before there would be established large paper-mills to convert this raw product into a commodity that is much in demand. The product of the plaster quarries of this province alone if manufactured within our own borders would make Nova Scotia so prosperous that the returns now received from their operation would sink into insignificance.

STORM CAUSED SMALL LOSS

Considerable difference of opinion appears to prevail regarding the loss sustained by orchardists last week in consequence of the severe wind-storm of Tuesday night. This is due, probably, to the fact that some sections suffered more severely than others. Some growers with whom we have talked place the loss as high as one-third of the season's crop. Others are inclined to minimize the consequences of the storm so far as the apple crop is concerned. In an interview with the Halifax Chronicle Hon. Joe A. McDonald, M.P.P., of this county, places the loss at not more than five per cent.

CANADIAN HEROES

THE ACADIAN is very glad to be able to present to its readers this week, through the courtesy of the author, an article from the pen of our clever young townsman, Mr. Arthur Hunt Chute. It is entitled "Canadian Heroes" and deals with a matter which deserves the close attention of all loyal citizens of this country. The suggestions made THE ACADIAN regards as most valuable, and we have in mind no person better qualified to perform this national service than Mr. Arthur Hunt Chute.

MADE WOLFVILLE HIS HEADQUARTERS

Even a newspaper that is usually so well informed as the Windsor Tribune can sometimes make mistakes. In its reference to the recent visit of Premier Ferguson and party to the Valley it adds "they had been in Kentville over night", which was not correct. Wolfville was made their headquarters while in this section of the province. They arrived here on Tuesday afternoon and remained until Thursday morning.

NOT THEIR FAULT

Don't blame the mail order house if it reaches into your town and takes business from the local merchant. The mail order house spends tens of thousands of dollars annually in advertising and must get the business from somewhere to pay for it. The mail order house seeks out the field where the local merchant is most lax in his advertising and there camps with catalogue for business.—Ex.

THE HOME PAPER

"By escaping the heavy overhead, which the city stores must stand, the small town merchant is able to equal, and, in some cases, better the city prices. But, if your small town store is to compete with its larger rival, it must advertise in its home paper just as the big concern does in the city papers."

Partial failure of the British apple crop, especially of the dessert varieties, is expected to give Nova Scotia apples an excellent opportunity for a wider market in Great Britain at better prices.

NEXT! PLEASE
Frits: "Only a loan, Mr. MacDonald. Sir, I will you in goods repay. Yah."

NOVA SCOTIA AT TORONTO EXHIBITION

Splendid Exhibit Doing Much to Advance Province
The Province of Nova Scotia has made a fine effort this year at the Canadian National Exhibition to bring its attractions and resources forcibly to the attention of the more than a million visitors who will come to the great annual fair which opened in Toronto August 22. This is the first time in the history of the exhibition that Nova Scotia has been represented in a concerted, official manner, although individual Nova Scotia industries have previously had booths there.

The Nova Scotia exhibit consists of three adjoining blocks of attractive booths in the Government building, one of the finest buildings in the Canadian National Exhibition grounds; the first indeed to meet the visitor who enters by the Dufferin Memorial gate. In this building are not only elaborate exhibits from Ontario, but exhibits from as far west as British Columbia and as far south as Bermuda. In fact, the Nova Scotia booths have as neighbor the beautiful Bermuda exhibit; and as a background real pines from the northern Ontario forests, with live beaver at the exhibit of the Ontario Department of Lands and Forests.

This fine location of the Nova Scotia exhibit means that it will be in the pathway of thousands of visits seeking out the unique things of the great fair. In the Nova Scotia block is an official booth, under the direction of W. B. MacCoy, deputy minister of the Department of Industries and Immigration, with A. M. Bauld, of Halifax, assisting him. In addition ten of the leading industrial concerns of Nova Scotia occupy adjoining booths. Thus the total effect of the combined display is indeed convincing.

Mr. MacCoy keeps open house in the official booth. He is maintaining not merely an information bureau which answers all kinds of questions about industries, resources, beauties and touring, but also a sort of home-away-from-home for Nova Scotia exiles.

Scores of native Nova Scotians now resident in Ontario or New York and the adjacent states drop in to have a chat about their old home province. It is also in a sense a rest room where visitors, weary of wandering round the exhibition, are made welcome. Easy chairs are there for lounging, and those who wish may write letters. In addition, Mr. MacCoy has two books of choice filled with tinted photographs of beautiful and historic scenes in Nova Scotia, over which the visitors may pore at leisure.

The total effect is publicity for the eastern province of the very best sort given in pleasant homeopathic doses. There is nothing to sell. Visitors are merely given a chance to learn something of the present development and future potentialities of their Atlantic brethren. The display is having a big effect in opening the eyes of Ontario folk and thousands of American visitors to the charm and the economic greatness of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacCoy has many pamphlets telling about his home province: even road maps for distribution to prospective tourists.

Forming a frieze round the top of the Nova Scotia official booth are a series of transparencies, depicting scenes in the province, the fisheries of the coast, the apple orchards of the Annapolis valley, the plants of the British Empire Steel Corporation, agricultural activities and the types of fine dwellings which may be seen in the province. These transparencies are colored and lighted from behind by electricity so that they form an arresting and beautiful display.

At the back of the booth is another picture gallery, of tinted photographs, showing views of seascapes and landscapes which open the eyes of the visitor to the charm of this maritime province.

The chance is not lost either to drive home the economic standing of the province. A banner shows that the total production for 1923 from fisheries, minerals, manufactures, building materials, farm products, forest products and game and fisheries amounted to $164,840,700. "Per capita," the banner concludes, "no other province in Canada leads Nova Scotia in the value of its natural products."

In addition such slogans as the following are displayed with striking force: "Nova Scotia—the annual coal production is 60,000,000 tons"; "Nova Scotia—the front door of Canada"; "Nova Scotia—the land of opportunity, rich in agriculture, minerals, forests, fisheries and manufactures."

On each side of the booth are stands displaying samples of the many and varied economic minerals found in the province, gypsum, limestone, white marble, veined marble, limonite, dolomite, magnetite,ankerite, galenite and a dozen other examples of the richness which lies hidden in Nova Scotia rocks and beneath Nova Scotia soil.

And then, to cap all, on a table in the heart of Nova Scotia's official bureau is a cluster of gold nuggets, which prove it a worthy competitor of the gold fields of northern Ontario. This greater lines than the present, if the present turns out to be the success which is predicted in drawing the attention of the people of Ontario and central Canada and of the adjacent states of the union to the natural and economic glories of Nova Scotia.

Altogether Nova Scotians have every reason to be proud of the showing of their province at the Canadian National Exhibition. It has been arranged that a display along the lines of the present day one will be made for three years, of which this is the first. There seems no doubt but that after that an annual display at the great Toronto fair will become continuous, perhaps along even greater lines than the present, if the present turns out to be the success which is predicted in drawing the attention of the people of Ontario and central Canada and of the adjacent states of the union to the natural and economic glories of Nova Scotia.

PINS

The pin of ancient times was just a thorn or sharp fishbone. Then some of the plutocrats had jewelers hammer out some in gold or silver. They were not made in quantities, however, until the 16th century, and even then they were very expensive.

Nowadays, after the wire that pins are made of is reduced to the proper size and condition, the pins are all made in one machine. They are not tempered or polished as needles are. After they are finished they are sorted by hand, but there is a machine to put them in the neat rows in paper in which we buy them.

Something will have to be done about law compelling the manufacturers to make motor tires thicker or there should be a law compelling the manufacturers to make their tacks shorter.—Medicine Hat News.

Here and There

Although Alberta only became a province eighteen years ago, its population has increased fourfold, while the grain yield has increased twentyfold. The total agricultural products of Alberta in 1923 were worth $223,000,000.

The scheme for the settlement of British emigrants in Canada may assume a new aspect as a result of the presence in London, England, of the Hon. J. A. Robb, Canadian Minister of Immigration. Canada favors the movement of entire families to Canada from Great Britain, rather than that of single men.

Among the biggest muscunlages caught this year was one landed at the Canadian Pacific Railway's French River (Ont.) Bungalow Camp, by Samuel Franklin, Southern Sales Manager of Claffins, Inc., New York City. Mr. Franklin had a light tackle and had never hooked a lunge before. He had a hard fight to secure the fish, which slipped the scale at 38 1/4 pounds.

A total of 12,743 Canadians, most of them native-born, has been repatriated from the United States during the months of April, May and June, according to figures announced by the Department of Immigration. During these three months 53,425 persons immigrated to Canada, which represented an increase of 12,292 over the same period of last year.

Marquis wheat, originated at the Dominion Experimental Farms and now world famous, has successfully invaded South America, being grown in the Argentine Republic last year with results that, according to authorities there, exceeded the expectations of the most optimistic advocates of the grain. Further shipments of seed are being made to the Argentine by the Canadian Seed Growers' Association.

One of the most diverse and interesting aggregations of passengers ever assembled in Canada left Montreal for Europe on August 20th aboard the Canadian Pacific liner Minnedosa. It included Majors S. de Belres and Brito Paia, who recently flew from Lisbon to Macao, China, a large party of scientists returning from the recent convention of the British Association for the Advancement of Science at Toronto, Colonel Geo. Ham, general and internationally known "ambassador of the Canadian Pacific" and "Soldier" Jones, Canadian heavyweight boxer.

The first all-British direct cable service between Montreal and London was opened on August 18th by the Canadian Pacific Telegraphs. As business warrants, this service will be extended to embrace other Canadian cities with which it is now connected but which, as yet, cannot offer a reasonable return for a regular service. Messages were exchanged between the London Chamber of Commerce and the Montreal Board of Trade and between the Canadian and the English headquarters of the Bank of Montreal, conveying expressions of mutual goodwill and prophesying closer relations as a result of the improved cable facilities.

EARLY APPLES

When apples as good in quality as the McIntosh, Fameuse, and Northern Spy, and as attractive in appearance, can be obtained on the general markets in Canada there should be a great increase in their consumption. The people are keen for apples when the season opens in late July or early August, but the sour varieties then offered for sale, such as Yellow Transparent, Red Astrachan, Crimson Beauty and Duchesse, do not agreeably satisfy the palate nor tend to increase the demand for apples as a table fruit. There is no good reason why we should not have early apples of as good quality as the later Spy and McIntosh. The old Early Harvest apple was better in quality than any of the mentioned early kinds, but it is not very hardy, scabs badly, and is little planted. But new varieties are being bred for the early market, and it is believed that in a few years such fine sorts as the Melba, a seedling of the McIntosh, originated in the Horticultural Division, Experimental Farm, Ottawa, of fine color and high dessert quality, ripening before Duchesse, and the Early McIntosh, originated at the New York Experimental Station, Geneva, N. Y., and others will become very popular and in great demand. Trees of Melba will be available from nurserymen in the spring of 1925, and a considerable number of trees have been planted already in different parts of Canada.

LOST TO AMATEUR HOCKEY

CANADIAN HEROES

BY ARTHUR HUNT CHUTE. (Copyrighted by Arthur Hunt Chute Syndicate.)

We were standing on the American side of the line, looking toward Canada. Just across the Niagara River, dominating all else, was the monument to Sir Isaac Brock.

An American friend found his artistic temperament ruffled by this monument.

"What's the matter with it?" I inquired.

"Well, I don't hardly think it's good taste for you Canadians to stick that thing up there, so that everywhere we turn, one of your heroes hits us in the eye."

I could sympathize with him, in a degree, had I not had the same experience on our side. Almost every time I went to a moving-picture show, in Canada, an American hero "hit me in the eye," to say nothing of my experience with books and magazines.

My Niagara friend, I do not object to the contemplation of tall figures across the border. For a Canadian, of any bigness of mind and heart, there must be a willing homage to such as Lincoln and Roosevelt, who represent the best of the New World, a proud heritage on either side of the International Line.

There is plenty of room in Canada for American heroes. Nay more, we welcome them as blood brothers, next of kin. But the time has come when as a nation we should begin to concentrate on our own National Divinities.

In the days of the splendor of Athens her gods were Greek not Persian. Are we satisfied with the young Canadian who can tell us all about George Washington, who knows nothing about James Wolfe, who revels in the pages of Buffalo Bill and never heard of Sam Steele, who knows more about Babe Ruth than he does about MacKenzie King?

Strange Gods

One reason why we have gone after strange gods is because our own have not been presented to us.

North of the Tweed is a country called Scotland, a small country whose stamp is indelible upon the world. Scotland never borrowed heroes from her neighbor to the south, she bred her own in "the Land o' Cakes," in this particular she is a worthy exemplar of this Dominion.

No matter how we may esteem our neighbor's men of mark, we should esteem our own still more. "Of course, that goes without saying," someone remonstrates. But let us not be too sure. Personally, I feel that one could depend upon Scotland in this matter of hero-worship, when one could not always depend upon Canada. Contemplating certain Canadians, saturating themselves with American magazines of the success variety, it is not surprising that these chaps can recite to the last detail how Mr. Wrigley made millions in chewing-gum, how someone else gained the plutocracy on a shoe-string, or to what heights another attained on the gimcracks of a ten cent store. These half-baked success artists can tell us such cases ad nauseum, but they can't tell us how Sir John Thompson died at Windsor Castle, at the foot of the throne, and having attained the fullness of power left behind him a life insurance policy of three thousand dollars; how Sir John A. MacDonald could not even bequeath that much insurance; how after fifteen years in public life Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper retired, twenty thousand dollars in debt; how Alexander MacKenzie and Sir Wilfrid Laurier gathered no moss.

Failed—Yet Won

These were great public servants, gentlemen of the old school, who had something more to do than chase the dollar. While we are hearing so much about how various citizens of the Republic to the south became millionaires, it might not be amiss to think how certain distinguished Canadians failed to become millionaires, and how their country was enriched thereby.

With so many hired-mouths blaring forth on the deeds of Mammon, there is need for caution, lest we are tempted to forget services beyond the dollar-yardstick.

In presenting our own national heroes accessibility is the crux of the whole matter. The trouble in the past has been that while the story of Mr. Ford or Mr. Carnegie was common property, the story of Lord Durham or Sir Isaac Brock was locked up, except for the favored few. There is need to get these Canadian stories out in a form to reach all the people, not merely in ponderous works reserved for the rich and erudite.

The bane of modern biography is that we have to wade through so much excelsior to get to the heart of the package. We have the life of this and that mediocrity in massive volumes, at the same time the life of Our Lord is presented in the few short pages of the Gospels; the former is buried in dusty libraries, while the latter covers the world.

Warts and All

"Paint me as I am, warts and all," said Oliver Cromwell. That is the type of character sketching we desire. The Bible, writing of a hero, says point blank, Abraham lied, and called Sarah his sister. We prefer that style of frankly presenting blemishes, to the George Washington-never-told-a-lie method.

It is weakness as well as strength that softens a hero to our hearts. Therefore, we crave to know both the brilliance and the waywardness of Sir John A., both the climax and the anticlimax of Sir Arthur Currie at Vimy, and we cherish no less its contrasts at Vancouver.

If a true university is a library of books, how about a news-stand university of Canadian heroes? There is certainly need for short, pithy biographies written in a popular style, and sold at a popular price; (I mean five or ten cents, not five or ten dollars).

There was a time in England when one could buy on the stalls the best of the works of Labor's great teachers, like Carlyle and Ruskin, and William Morris. Today, labor, over there, is twenty-five years ahead of labor over here. This, I believe, is mainly due to the accessibility of good books of the English workman. I remember how John Burns in his fine library showed a penny edition of Moore's Utopia, dog-eared and worn; this was his most prized book. All the later development of John Burns was made possible because of a thurst created by that penny edition.

Borrowing a leaf from England, why couldn't our Press give us a series on Canadian Characters, jazzed-up, short and snappy with punch and ginger, written for all the people, and accessible to all through that wisest popular medium, the news-stand?

ANOTHER OUTBREAK OF THE ZEBRA CATERPILLAR

A yellow and black striped naked caterpillar has recently been doing considerable damage in some parts of the province, stripping whole fields of turnips, potatoes, beets, mangolds, beans, peas, and even the apple and other plants. This insect is known as the Zebra Caterpillar, and, unlike the potato stem borer, is a native insect. It is a periodic pest and only rarely occurs in destructive numbers. A serious outbreak occurred in the western end of the province in 1917.

Life History and Habits

There are two broods of the zebra caterpillar, one feeding in the early part of the summer, the other in the late summer and fall, the second brood being more destructive than the first. Therefore, when a few of the first brood individuals are seen farmers should prepare themselves for the more serious depredations of the second brood which is sure to follow. The eggs are laid in flat masses on the leaves of various plants, those of the first brood hatching during the latter part of June or in early July and those of the second in August. The larvae of the first brood feed for about six weeks, then enter the ground where they remain for two or three weeks, when they emerge to lay eggs for the second brood. Individuals of the second brood may be found feeding from late August up until freezing weather. The winter is passed in the pupal state.

SALVING THE SUNKEN GERMAN FLEET AT SCAPA FLOW. Our photographs show a destroyer and a battleship just as they made their appearance above water. They are entangled in sea-weed and covered with rust. Note the diver about to descend.

Control

A rapid and effective method of controlling the pest is by dusting with powdered arsenicals, e.g. arsenate of lime, arsenate of lead or with Paris green diluted with eight to ten parts of hydrated lime or with Bordeaux dust applied liberally to the leaves when they are wet with dew by the means of a duster, or, on a small scale, through coarse sacking. Liquid spraying is practiced, one to two pounds of arsenate of lead in forty gallons of water, to which is added four pounds of soap shaved fine and dissolved in hot water, to assist in spreading, is equally effective. In all cases, however, the material must be applied soon after the insects hatch to give perfect satisfaction since the large caterpillars are difficult to kill.

W. H. BRITAIN, Provincial Entomologist.

Advertisers, Attention!

The Acadian has just installed the Bonnet-Brown Advertising Mat Service and Stereotyping Machine.

You will now receive the same ad service that the large metropolitan newspapers render their advertisers.

Illustrations that Help Sell

Under this splendid New Service Plan, we receive fresh each month, ads and illustrations for every kind of advertising.

We receive these illustrations in matrix form—a paper mold of the cut-to-be. This new stereotyping machine enables us to pour hot metal into this form and make a plate for printing the illustration in THE ACADIAN or on a circular. Advertisers who receive matrices of their merchandise from their manufacturers or wholesalers can bring them to us and we will make cuts for use in their advertising.

This service, we are confident, will result in greatly increased business for every advertiser who takes advantage of it.

You will be better able to tell the people of Wolfville and vicinity about what you have to sell or what you want to buy.

And you can put your message across in a concise, easily-understood manner that will be pleasing to readers of THE ACADIAN and most satisfactory to you in the greater results obtained.

Advertising Service for Every Business

And, in addition to being able to supply you with suitable cuts for illustrating your ads, we are prepared to furnish advertisements covering practically every line of business.

These ads have all been written by competent advertising experts—and are so planned and executed that they exert the maximum amount of pulling power possible in the space used.

So, when you want to run an ad, instead of spending time to write it yourself, come in and let us help you. We'll give you one that fits your needs—illustration and all.

BIBLE THOUGHT FOR TODAY

SEPTEMBER 5 PURE RELIGION and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.—James 1:27.

SEPTEMBER 6 IS IT NOT to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him; and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh?—Isaiah 58:7.

SEPTEMBER 7 IF I HAVE WITHHELD the poor from their desire, or have caused the eyes of the widow to fail; or have eaten my morsel myself alone, and the fatherless hath not eaten thereof; if I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; then let mine arm fall from my shoulder blade, and mine arm be broken from the bone.—Job 31:16, 17, 19, 21.

SEPTEMBER 8 SEEK YE THE LORD while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near: let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to the Lord our God, for he will abundantly pardon.—Isaiah 55:6, 7.

SEPTEMBER 9 A NEW COMMANDMENT I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.—John 13:34, 35.

SEPTEMBER 10 THE RIGHTEOUS shall inherit the land, and dwell therein for ever. The law of his God is in his heart; none of his steps shall slide.—Psalm 37:29, 31.

SEPTEMBER 11 O COME, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our maker. For he is our God; and we are the people of his pasture.—Psalm 95:6, 7.

WINDSOR MAN FOR PEKING UNIVERSITY

VICTORIA, Aug. 30.—The first Canadian to be appointed to the faculty of the Peking University, Harold G. Etter, B. Sc., formerly of Windsor, N. The supervision of a general famine prevention plan for China will be one of the chief duties of Mr. Etter in his capacity of Professor of Horticulture in the Peking University.

CANADA AND THE WEMBELY EXHIBITION

Pressure on Overseas Dominions to Reverse Their Unofficial Decision Not to Take Part Next Year

LONDON, August 29.—There is no doubt all possible pressure will be applied to the overseas Dominions in an endeavour to make them reverse their unofficial decision not to take part in the Wembley exhibition next year.

This is the general opinion expressed in London and by the exhibition authorities. All Canadian visitors who have seen the great fair at Wembley are unanimous in declaring that the exhibition is the finest possible advertising and that the closing of the Canadian building next year would be unwise and a deliberate waste of excellent opportunity. It has been unfortunate that consistent bad weather has greatly reduced the expected attendance, but the authorities are already planning some spectacular and sensational attractions to be staged in the stadium during the summer of 1925 which, it is hoped, will draw many more millions.

NOVA SCOTIA WON MAJORITY OF THE TENNIS PLAY-OFFS

But Short Beat Professor Mercer and Hallisey and Short Defeated Butler and Edwards.

SACKVILLE, N. B., Aug. 28.—While Nova Scotia won three out of the five events in the Inter-Provincial Tennis Championship matches played here today, yet New Brunswick won the two feature events, the men's doubles and the men's singles.

On the morning play, Hagen Short and Phil Hallisey won from Jas. Butler and J. C. Edwards, 6-6, 6-4, 6-3. Mrs. J. W. Allen and Miss Mary Currie won from Miss Cotley and Miss J. Knight, 6-3, 6-2. In this afternoon's play Short defeated Prof. Mercer, 4-6, 9-7, 6-2, 6-1. Miss Currie won from Miss Henderson, 6-1, 6-1. Miss Douglas and Prof. Mercer won from Miss Frith and P. Hallisey 6-1, 6-2.

A large crowd followed the games and the matches were all keenly contested.

The news of a large apple crop in Ontario is of academic interest only to city dwellers, says the Toronto Globe. They will have to eat fruit from the Pacific Coast this year as usual because Ontario apple growers insist on packing in barrels and Ontario fruit dealers insist on buying in boxes. And it is almost the same story in the finest apple-growing Province of all.

ROUND-THE-HOUSE "TIPS"

A pleasant and efficacious means of driving mice away from cupboards is to strew the shelves with sprigs of freshly-gathered mint.

If you have a musty cask which you desire to sweeten, burn a little sulphur in it. Put in the bung and let it stand for a day or two.

Cut flowers will preserve their beauty and freshness for a considerably longer period than is usual if a little baking soda is added to the water.

If by chance you have pricked your finger and a tiny spot of blood has spoiled the appearance of your needlework, lay over the spot a thick coating of starch. Make it as for laundry purposes and put it on quite wet. When dry it will brush off together with the offending stain.

PULPWOOD REPORT BROUGHT JOY IN U. S.

OTTAWA.—The American comment on the Pulp Wood Commission's report is being read here with much interest, for it makes possible the getting of a line on the opinion held by that trade over there.

"Paper," a pulp and paper trade journal, published in New York, says: "There is joy among the paper manufacturers of the United States for the report of the Canadian Pulpwood Commission, just out, does not recommend the placing of an embargo on exports of pulpwood."

"This is one spot of hopefulness in the entire paper situation. Perhaps it is the rainbow in the sky after the storm. May the sun now come out."

MARITIME BAPTIST CONVENTION

that the new officer be both treasurer and office secretary.

The budget for the year for denominational work was set at $76,000. It is recommended that this convention year be made a special denominational year.

The convention endorsed the recommendation that the minimum salary standard be $1500 and free parsonage.

In the evening Rev. W. H. Main, D. D., secretary of the American Baptist Publication Society, Philadelphia, brought the greetings of the Northern Baptist Convention in a splendid address.

President F. W. Patterson told again the story of advance at the Acadia schools. He had dedicated his life to the ministry, and in coming to Acadia he had felt no change in the current of life. The work of the college is the work of the ministry, he said, because of the ministers it educates. The reverend study of science is at heart religious, and the work of science is impossible but for the University.

Ideal teaching, Dr. Patterson said, brings the professor into such contact with the student that what the student learns approximates what the teacher attempts to teach. The task of the presidency of Acadia is a real job for which the fine foundations had been laid. The building programme calls for $800,000. The minimum additional endowment required is $700,000. To date $430,001 is assured. Dr. Patterson is fully confident that the $1,500,000 can be secured. $100,000 has been paid in, and good prospects are in sight.

The Convention opened Saturday morning with the fifth address by Dr. Gilmore, speaking of "The Work of the Holy Spirit".

Rev. S. S. Poole, D.D., reported for the Examining Council, recommending the ordination of J. R. McGorman, Mahone Bay church; W. A. Geldert, First Elgin church; Robert Plant, Hammond's Plains church; W. H. Elgee, Oxford church; H. K. Grimmer, Jenseg church; I. A. Meister, Debert, and Great Village; Clarence L. Chute, Greenfield church; G. S. Beckett, Penfield church; A. B. Gibson, Newcastle Creek church; E. L. Curry, Bayview church; M. L. Anderson, African Association. These young men constitute a very valuable addition to the ministry of the convention.

Rev. H. E. Stillwell presented the report of the Canadian Baptist Foreign Missionary Board. This being the jubilee year of the mission, the report reviewed the work in India, from the beginning to the present status of 2,503 communicants, with 2,139 baptisms last year. During the 50 years seventy-two lady missionaries have gone to India. In the Bolivian Mission, nine were baptised. Mr. and Mrs. A. Howard Plummer, B.S.A., of British Columbia, go to Bolivia to take up the work at Peniel Hall Farm.

The receipts of the ten months of this year thus far are $142,831 51, of which $44,677.63 was from the Maritime Provinces. The estimates for the year call for $185,165.

Rev. R. E. Gullison passionately appealed for a fully fitted man to go to India at once. At this point, consideration was given to the proposed Mission in Africa. The case for the mission was stated by Frank Irig, of Toronto.

A. H. Chipman reported for the Board of Minister's Annuity, showing total expenditure of $16,721. The Board was instructed to continue the group insurance.

Rev. A. J. Prosser reported for the Social Service Board. The convention supports the Home for Girls at Truro. The Home for Women at Moncton will also be supported. Juvenile Courts have been established in Nova Scotia. There is need of such courts in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. Gambling in social life was condemned.

The Social Service report was completed by giving the section on Temperance, deploring the activity of the liquor traffic, the lack of enforcement of legislation, and the necessity of amendments to existing legislation.

Rev. R. Osgood, Morse reported for the committee on the State of the Denomination. Migration has reduced the constituency by thousands.

Rev. A. H. Whitman submitted the obituary report, noting the passing of Rev. F. S. Todd, Rev. Isaac Chipman Archibald, L. N. Nickerson, Rev. M. P. King, Rev. John Church Spurr, Rev. John A. Marple, Rev. C. J. Steeves, Mrs. Albert C. Smith, Mrs. Irene Elder Morton, Mrs. David Hutchinson, Mrs. M. S. Richardson, Mrs. George Churchill.

Miss Minnie B. Alward was elected Treasurer of the Denomination Funds, to be under direction of the Board of Promotion and Finance.

An interesting incident of Saturday afternoon was the opening of the Home for Missionaries recently purchased and fitted up in Wolfville as a home to be occupied by missionaries while on furlough. A large number inspected the house, and a short service was held dedicating this home to its use.

Rev. R. E. Gullison and family are the first missionary family to occupy this home.

The speaker Saturday evening was Dr. J. G. Shearer, General Secretary of the Social Service Council of Canada, who gave an interesting address on the work of the Council. Dr. Shearer said Baptists have a large share in the work of the Council, which is reaching 4,000,000 readers through six hundred papers in Canada. He urged Christian folk to resist social evils, and said that even the wettest parts of Canada are largely dry. The Council opposes gambling, sexual and social vice. In 1921 Canada waged $84,000,000 on horse racing. Dr. Shearer strongly protested against artificial family limitation.

Prof. L. A. Therrien, Principal of Feller Institute, graphically told the story of evangelistic work among French speaking Canadians.

Lowering skies and threatening rain did not prevent a large gathering Sunday morning, when the Convention met at 10 o'clock as an Ordination Council to ordain to the gospel ministry, at the request of the churches with which they are connected, W. H. Elgee, of Oxford, and E. L. Curry, of Port Maitland.

Rev. J. H. MacDonald, D.D., read the authorization for Ordination and received the vows of the candidates, Rev. Wellington Camp offered the prayer of Ordination. Rev. J. A. Huntley, D.D., gave the charge to the candidates. Rev. E. S. Mason gave the hand of fellowship into the ministry, and the Benediction was pronounced by Rev. Emerson L. Curry.

A full house assembled for the morning worship at 11 o'clock. The pastor, Rev. A. N. Marshall, D.D., opened the service. The vested choir of the Wolfville church led the music. President McNeil was assisted by Executive Secretary, Rev. Henry R. Boyer, and Rev. C. R. Freeman, D.D., in the service.

A resolution of sympathy with Rev. E. H. Cochrane and family, because of the serious illness of Mrs. Cochrane, was ordered wired. Mr. Cochrane was to have preached the Convention sermon, which was preached by Rev. C. T. Clark, of Fairville, N. B.

The Sunday afternoon session was in the interests of religious education, with Rev. N. A. Whitman, Vice President, in the chair.

Miss Marjorie Trotter, who spoke of work with and for girls, is the daughter of the late Rev. Thomas Trotter, D.D., a former pastor of the Wolfville church, and later President of Acadia University, at a critical period of its history. Rev. Waldo C. Machm spoke for the last time in his official capacity as Director of Religious Education, in which position he has done notable service for six years.

The closing meeting of the Convention was a great mass meeting in the interest of Foreign Missions. The speakers included Secretary Stillwell, of the Canadian Baptist Foreign Mission Board, and Rev. and Mrs. R. E. Gullison, recently returned from India, where they have spent over 25 years in Missionary work among the Telugus. Mr. Gullison is a master of a passionate type of oratory, flowing naturally from his intense conviction of the imperative necessity of Missionary work among the Heathen. With passionate eloquence Mr. Gullison drove home the call for consecration to the great task. Mrs. Gullison is of poetic temperament and of rare fluency, and so presents very vivid pictures of the work to which her life has been given.

"THE FLYING DUTCHMAN"

One of the most novel and original screen offerings ever to play this town is "The Flying Dutchman", the smashing picturization of Wagner's famous opera, which shows next Monday and Tuesday at the Orpheum Theatre. It is absolutely different from any other picture ever made—and every fan owes it to himself to see it.

In picturizing the centuries old legend of the little Dutch village of Vandenham, Lloyd Carleton the producer, gives the tale of the phantom mariner a new treatment, which strengthens it atmospherically and invests it with greater plausibility. He introduces the ghostly visitant in the midst of a social gathering at the burgomaster's home. It is a stormy night, the blinds are drawn, the lightning flashing. Flashes of glowing, soul-warming wine are being drained as the burgomaster relates the old legend of the fated mariner who only the love of a true maiden can redeem from the curse of eternal condemnation of the high seas because of a taunting of the gods. The listener's imagination also is aglow, stimulated by the flow of the nectar, and when there is a rap at the door, they start up in surprise and awe. And as it proceeds, surely enough, there is the certain figure of the legend himself, framed in the doorway, as if fanned into the presence by the blustering weather.

To tell the rest of the story would be unfair; at any rate, students of mythology know it by heart.

900 YEARS!

LONDON, Aug. 31.—Arising out of an article in the "Times" on longevity C. G. Kirkpatrick, of Rock Ferry, Birkenhead, writes to the effect that he is acquainted with a family of children, all of whom are alive, and this year their respective ages are: 55, 54, 53, 52, 51, and 47. The difference between the oldest and youngest is 28 years, and the ages show an aggregate of 900 and an average of 90 years.

GETTING THE BUSINESS

Manufacturers and merchants, and Canadian business men in general, who are glooming about conditions and hoping for a return of the boom days of a few years ago should talk with Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canada's High Commissioner to Great Britain. Mr. Larkin declares that Canada is the most prosperous country on the face of the globe. He speaks in highest terms of the material things which Canadians enjoy. The people of no other country in the world, he says—not even excepting the United States—are on the average able to buy the necessities and luxuries of life to the same extent as the people of this country.

Mr. Larkin's statement indicates that the people of Canada can and are buying. This bears out the idea that business today is closer to normal than it was during the days of inflated prices and inflated profits. It is a question of rather than waiting for conditions to adjust themselves to business. The manufacturers, the wholesalers, and the retailers who have realized that conditions are always changing—and who have adjusted their methods accordingly are not complaining about business.

On the other hand those who are still trying to operate with organizations which were built up during the abnormal boom period and who are waiting for the "good times" to come back again, are looking in vain for the profits they used to be able to show—profits which in many cases were merely book entries and disappeared when paper values were adjusted to a sound basis.

Mr. Larkin knows world conditions. He knows whereof he speaks when he says that in no other country are the individuals as good buyers as they are in Canada. If buying power is improved through increased income from crops and other sources, well and good, but the big point is that the business concerns which have adjusted themselves to conditions rather than waiting for conditions to change, and have gone after trade aggressively, are not complaining about "hard times"—Financial Post.

THE TINY SPARK

Now comes a report from Vienna purporting to tell how the World War was really started. According to the story told by one Colonel Seliger, in 1914 chief of the press bureau of the Vienna war office, and now writing his recollections for the Vienna Tageblatt, the Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria had been stubbornly withholding his signature to a "scrap of paper" which would declare war on Serbia. In order to press his hand, the Austrian Foreign Minister, so the story goes, showed the old emperor a telegram which declared the Serbians had raided Bosnian territory and killed 400 soldiers. Francis Joseph thereupon is said to have sworn that war was now unavoidable. The telegram was forged.

That story may be true; it may not be. Apparently there is no reason for Colonel Seliger's writing thus falsely. Surely it is in keeping with many another true story that has been uncovered long following the conflict. History shows that some of its most vital truths were made known years, decades, centuries after certain events had taken place. Experience of centuries proves also that some of the world's most significant and far-reaching events received birth and impetus from intrinsically insignificant occurrences. The coquettish lifting of a woman's eyes embroiled nations; the challenging of an upstart's "honor" has been as a fountain head of human bloodshed. So why should not Colonel Seliger's little tale be accepted and believed true?

And if it is true that a forged telegram caused the war, how tremendously compelling becomes the significance of the proverb about the importance of little things!

Results of Interesting Experiments Carried out in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa.—Thanks to the radio, fruit growers will hereafter be able to determine through the sense of hearing whether apples and other fruits are wormy. Dr. C. K. Brain, professor of entomology at Stellenbosch University, has conducted a series of experiments along this line, as a result of which he has drawn the conclusion that worms and bugs can be detected with certainty by radio.

Dr. Brain's method was simply that

THE INVERTED PYRAMID

BY
Bertrand W. Sinclair
Author of "North of Fifty-three"

But that knowledge did not lessen Rod's growing anger at such tactics, nor still a little fear of the effect on Mary. This—this sort of thing precisely—was what she had foreseen and feared and shrank from. It was only a passing phase, Rod knew, but he could see that it rankled. She bore herself stoutly as impassive as a Chinese mandarin. No more than Rod himself would she or did she retreat under fire. She did her duty as a hostess in a difficult situation. But when they withdrew to their own rooms, at the end of an interminable evening, the key back in a chair silent and thoughtful while Rod spilled a vial of wrath on his brother's head.

"Don't get fussed up about it, Rod," she said at last. "It doesn't matter much, does it? If what I've seen of these people this afternoon and evening is a fair sample of their normal behaviour, I wouldn't get on with them even if they wanted me to. I've overheard more suggestive things and double-edged remarks in the last few hours than I ever heard in all my life put together. If that's smartness, I'll never be smart. I don't feel as if I'd been slighted. I'm glad they didn't fall on my neck. I don't like them."

"Nor I," Rod growled. "Grove always did prefer damaged goods. But I don't like them trying to put over anything like that on me—on us. That's all. It's dirty."

"You can't do anything," Mary pointed out. "You can't challenge the assembled company to bestow courteous attention on your wife under pain of what? If you even notice it, you'll only amuse them—make yourself ridiculous."

"Certainly. That's why it's so damned annoying."

"Forget it," she smiled. "Come and sit down with me. What does it matter?"

"I'll lock horns with him yet," Rod muttered.

Then sitting on a hassock beside her with Mary's fingers weaving tangles in his hair, Rod forgot his irritation. It returned the following day. Grove moved about among his guests, bland, courteous, engaging. He was at home in the polite ratiery that passes for wit in such gatherings, where open homage is paid chiefly to the social trinity of food, liquor and feeling, and where sex is so shrinkingly veiled that never his eyes met Rod's. Rod detected a malicious sparkle. Grove was enjoying the situation. And Rod yearned to make him smart for his petty, useless triumph. His exasperation grew with his helplessness.

"Come on," he said to his wife at four in the afternoon. "You can leave the dinner arrangements to Stagg. Let's go across the channel and get the taste out of our mouths."

"They had dinner at Oliver Thorn's," Rod thought, as he sat on the creak-splintered porch steps watching the smoke curl and weave from the end of a cigarette. "Funny what an atmosphere can do to you. 'Better a dinner of herbs where love is than a stalled ox and hatred therewith.' The ancient wisdom is still wisdom. If Grove can pull off that sort of thing whenever he likes, we'll have to leave Hawk's Nest. There's no defence against it."

"They rowed home at dusk," Phil had come back. The three of them sat out on the porch and observed the meriment quickening to a livelier tempo as the evening wore on. Phil made no comment for a long time.

"One would imagine," he observed at last, rather dryly, "that we three were taboo. We don't seem to be very popular with this crowd."

"There's been about thirty hours of this semi-glacial period," Rod informed him. "It's getting old with me."

"What about you?" Phil turned to Mary.

She shrugged her shoulders. "I'm like the minister when he was kicked by the mule. I consider the source," she said.

"Proper attitude," Phil said. "I've been taking notice. I know our elder brother's pleasing little tricks. I would not let it annoy me, sister Mary. Grove often starts things he can't finish. I didn't think he was quite stupid enough for this."

The Kowloon departed early Monday morning. Thinking it over as he watched her whip around the Gillard light, Rod decided that honors were easy for the time being. But he very nearly determined to force an open clash if Grove tried to carry it off again.

This clash, which Rod foresaw, and which he perhaps subconsciously welcomed, was nearly due. They had Hawk's Nest to themselves, its cool quiet rooms and corridors, the pleasant porches and grounds bright with flowers and scented shrubs, its sweep of velvet lawn and rolling acres of parked forest, where the great trees lifted plumed heads to the sun. Into that blended atmosphere of peace and permanence and beauty no farring note came until another week-end brought back the Kowloon. This time Norquay senior was home. Rod sat back to see if Grove meant to carry on with his design of making Mary's road as rough as lay in his power—and also to see how their father would take such obvious malice, if it were shown.

But Norquay senior missed all the calculated slights Grove and his guests adroitly managed to put on Rod and his wife. It seemed to Rod that they played up to Grove's lead with accomplished skill. It was a new sort of game and Mary Norquay was "it". They found it amusing. Or was it only that they were an illbred lot? Rod was not sure of Grove's company, but he was sure of Grove. Grove saw to it, subtly, that Rod should understand what he was driving at. Grove enjoyed the situation. Rod's self-control didn't deceive him. He knew that Rod was fuming inside. He took opportunity to let Rod know that he knew.

But something more fundamental brought matters to a head. Lacking that, Rod would probably have ended by complete indifference to what Grove and his friends did or said.

The Kowloon was due to leave Monday afternoon. At ten in the morning, Rod sat reading in the library. Phil was writing letters at a desk in one corner. Norquay senior was walking in the grounds with Mary. From his seat Rod could see the tall tweed-clad figure sauntering beside his wife. His ill-humor vanished. That was answer enough to Grove and his clique. He glanced indifferently up at Grove's entrance. That gentleman didn't seem so gay and festive this morning. He bit off a cigar end with unnecessary force and sat smoking. He scowled. His eyes were a trifle glassy, the lids reddened. Faint shadows showed beneath the lower lids.

"The morning after the night before sits heavier on him than it used to," Rod thought cynically. "The pace is beginning to tell. Damn fool." He resumed his reading.

The butler came in. "The foreman of the Valdez camp and two men want to see you, sir," he addressed Phil.

"Send 'em here," Phil replied, without looking up. Rod continued to read. There was nothing unusual in men from the camps coming to Hawk's Nest with complaints or for instructions. Disputes between men and logging bosses had been threatened out times without number in that pleasant, book-lined room. The Norquay policy had always been patriarchal.

Stagg ushered in Jim Handy and two men. One was Andy Hall. He nodded to Rod with a genial grin. Handy looked frosty. His short, white mustache stood out at the aggressive angle it always took when things went wrong. All three had shed their calked boots and working garments. They wore their town clothes. Above clean white collars their faces were burned to the brown of weathered oak by summer sun and hot winds.

"I got a strike on my hands," Handy announced to Phil. "They want fifty cents a day raise all round. They want regular hotel waiters to sling hash for 'em, too." Handy permitted himself a logger's criticism. "These two guys represent the crew."

Phil turned to the loggers. "Striking is rather a new kink in the logging business," he said casually. "If you don't like the job, why don't you quit?"

"Quitting wouldn't change things," Andy Hall replied. "You want to get out timber because it is profitable. We want to work because we have to work for somebody. But we would like better working conditions. Seems more reasonable to ask for 'em on the job than to quit the job."

"Are you two a self-appointed committee?" Phil inquired. "We were picked by the crowd to act as spokesmen. A hundred and forty men can't all talk to a boss at once. You can take it for granted we speak for the entire crew."

"All right, we'll take it for granted," Phil returned. "Just step out into the hall for a minute or two. After I've had a word with Handy you can state your case."

"You're foolish to waste time discussing anything whatever with these fellows," Grove remarked, as the door closed on them. "I'd pay off the works and have a new crew sent up. The bird that spoke is so smooth-tongued for a logger. He's got agitator written all over him."

"Best high-rigger I ever saw," Jim Handy growled. "All loggers agitators now and then."

Phil paid no attention to his brother's comment. He addressed Handy. "When did they pull this strike?"

"This mornin'." They chewed the fat till midnight in the bunkhouse. After breakfast not a man turned out. They wouldn't talk. They said these two would talk for 'em. I've told you what they want. Fifty cents a day raise. Six bathtubs."

"Bathtubs!" Grove snorted disdainfully. "Short notice," Phil ruminated. "H'm. Have they been kicking?"

"Loggers always kicks," Handy grumbled. "They've been growlin' some. We told 'em they always got the privilege of quittin'. I've fired three or four of the mouthy ones. When they all laid down at once, I reckoned I'd better put it up to you."

"What do you think about it yourself?" Phil asked him. "Can you get another crew together and go ahead?"

"I hear men's scarce in town," he said. "If I can dig up a crew, of course I can go ahead. But no pick-up crew will get out as much timber. Not for a month or two anyhow. Most of this bunch has been on the job since the camp opened."

"We're paying standard wages," Phil observed. "If it were left to you, Handy, would you give them the raise?"

"I don't know but I would," the logging boss brightened. "Cheapest. One or two of the big Island camps have tilted wages. This crew can sure get out timber. Breakin' in new men costs money. Breakin' in new men costs money."

"Just what have you told them?" Phil inquired. "If you haven't stirred them up, I may be able to talk them out of it."

Handy grinned. "I was darn careful not to stir 'em up. I know loggers. I'm a logger myself. I didn't say much of anything. When I seen they was set, I just said, 'Well, we'll put it up to headquarters. I hire and fire, but the owners sign the pay checks.'"

"All right. Send those two in as you go out," Phil said finally. "I'll see you down on the boat after I get through. Andy Hall and his companion entered."

"Tell me what you want," Phil said briefly, "and why you consider yourselves entitled to it."

"We ask for fifty cents a day raise for every outside worker on the job, from whistle-punks to hook-tenders," Wright voiced their demands. "We ask for you to put in at least half a dozen baths, tubs, or showers; showers would suit us best and they're easily installed. That's all."

"Why go on strike at snap notice?" Phil complained. "Why didn't you ask for these things? Does it seem to you that the way to get your claims considered is to disorganize the work first and then make your demands?"

Wright motioned to Andy Hall. "You tell him."

"Mr. Norquay," Hall began quietly, "if you'd ever worked as a logger in a logging camp you'd know that asking for changes doesn't bring them about. There are a hundred and forty men in your woods on Valdez. We are, if I say it myself, as skoomum a logging crew as ever was got together on the B. C. coast. And we have been asking for these things. Jim Handy is your representative on the job. We haven't anything against old Jim. He's as fair as the average woods boss. But he has exactly the same idea as most employers—keep wages down and prices high—get all the work possible out of the men. His own job as foreman depends on getting results. For the last month every time anybody has tried to talk to him about wages or camp conditions, somebody has got fired. This particular crew is tired of a take-it-or-leave-it basis of employment. That's why there's a show-down. Neither of the things we ask for is unreasonable. It is unreasonable to fire a man for wanting to talk about his wages and the conditions under which he must live."

Phil eyed Andy Hall searchingly for a second or two. Grove had twisted aside in his chair and glared at the logger with visible displeasure.

"Let's take up the matter of the bathtubs," Phil resumed. "Why should we supply casual labor with baths when there is a running stream through the camp and the sea is at the door?"

Rod shifted in his seat. It sounded rather odd. He thought of the unclean, with which he had heard worthy people declare that cleanliness is next to godliness.

Andy shrugged his shoulders. "I can't easily justify bathing facilities on moral and sanitary grounds," he said impassively. "I'll simply put it this way. Most men prefer to be clean. If it's impossible for them to be reasonably clean, they'll be uncomfortable. A man who is uncomfortable gets discontented. A discontented workman is a poor investment. There are a hundred and forty men coming out of your woods every night, stinking with sweat and dust in the summer, plastered with mud in the winter. There is one shallow wooden trough with tin washbasins and a half-inch tap. We make shift with the creek and the salt-chuck in summer. But a man who has had a hot shower in the woods can't stand naked outdoors and bathe in cold water."

"I never before heard of bathing as an issue in a logging camp," Phil smiled. "Well, we'll concede the bathing facilities. We'll agree to build a bathroom and install pipe showers with a hot-water supply."

"Now this raise in wages," he continued judiciously, after a brief pause. "I really don't believe we can go that far. We're paying the standard wages—a fairly liberal scale, it seems to me. I suggest that you go back and get the crew out to work on the understanding that you'll have a claim for wages between now and next payday. This strike is too much in the nature of a hold-up. Wage questions can't be settled offhand. Don't you think that would be the most amiable way of ending the tie-up? The shower-bath matter will be decided to at once."

Andy Hall shook his head. "I'd like to be polite and agreeable," he said. "But I'm not acting for myself as an individual, you must remember. The men threshed this out pretty well before they took action. They won't move a stick unless they get this raise. They've tried to talk to Handy and Jim simply grinned and faced the men who insisted on talking. The point is this. There is no such thing as a standard wage in the logging industry. You are paying as much as most camps, more than some, less than others. The International on Vancouver Island, employing over four hundred men, is paying what we call a standard wage. So are two or three smaller concerns."

"And," Hall continued without heat, as deliberate as if he were intoning a column of figures, "we are working under a foreman who is a driver. That's nothing against Jim Handy. We're not sure on him. A logging boss holds a boss's job by virtue of ability to get out logs. But old Jim keeps a crew on his toes. If a man isn't up and coming, he doesn't work long for Handy. We're putting more timber per man per day into the booming ground than any crew on the coast."

"How do you know that?" Phil demanded sharply. "We have made it our business to find out," Hall answered imperturbably. "You know it's so—if you keep tabs on your business. That's why we want more money. We're earning it. We're entitled to it."

"And we can get other jobs," Hall replied unflinched. "But we'd both be loser. No, that wouldn't benefit either party to this dispute. You have a reputation for being fair, as fairness is reckoned in logging camps. That's why you have efficient crews and a minimum of labor trouble. We know we are entitled to what we ask. If we don't get it, we'll be good and sure it isn't a question of the Norquay Estate being unable to pay such wages and still show a profit. We'll know the refusal is purely on the grounds of policy. And if a logger's frank opinion is anything to you, you'll find it damned poor policy."

Phil sat tapping his pencil on the desk, smiling a little to himself. "Go down to the landing and wait for me there," he said. "I'll give you a definite answer inside of half an hour."

The door closed on the two loggers. The three brothers looked at each other. "Quite unnecessary," Grove broke out with quietness, "and why you consider yourselves entitled to it."

"I'd hardly call two men a mob," Phil commented dryly. "It is scarcely dictating for men to state the conditions under which they are willing to work."

"Are you going to let them stick you up like that?" Grove demanded unpleasantly. "Your way of putting it is offensive. But I know what you mean," Phil maintained his placidity. "I rather think I shall. I'm considering. We can certainly afford to give them a raise. Handy is a driver. He does get out."

"It isn't a question of affording it," Grove broke in. "It's a question of principle. You simply cannot afford to allow a crew of dissatisfied loggers to imagine for a minute that they can tell you how you're to run your business."

"Handy, as I said," Phil went on unheeding, "does get out timber."

"You mean," Rod supplemented, on the spur of an impulse, "he has the faculty of keeping a crew going at top speed, and they get out timber. Well, I can vouch for that, after twelve months under him. If these fellows were paid on the basis of production, they'd get bigger wages than they're asking. I made some calculations myself from time to time before I left the camp. Hall's figures are conservative. I got cost figures from the town office and reckoned the output. That Valdez camp for six months straight put out twenty per cent more timber per man than Hardwicke Island. I suppose you know that?"

Phil nodded. "That high-rigger is almost too clever to be a logger," he observed. "I know anything about him, Rod? Notice the beggar's language? Most reasoned and unemotional presentation of a case I ever heard a logger make."

"He's a good man on the job. He has been there since the camp opened," Rod prudently refrained from mentioning Andy's economic heresies. He asked Andy Hall and the foreman Andy marked as an "agitator", that abused term which once tagged to a working-man makes him anathema to most employers. "In fact, I'd say old Jim has a crew it would be a pity to break up—if getting out timber efficiently is any object—for so small a matter as fifty cents a day—and bathtubs."

"They never bathe," Grove sneered. "They don't look as if they did. I never got close enough to smell 'em, but I suppose they don't mind it themselves."

Rod sat silent. It struck him that Grove was thrusting at him. And it struck him, too, how little either of his brothers knew about the men they were discussing. They didn't discuss them as men, so much as material—a commodity, a necessary part of the producing machinery which had the inconvenient quality of voicing its wants. As if a donkey engine should protest against an overload. Rod himself had got under the logger's skin. He would never be able to think of them except as men, to deal with them otherwise. They had their vices and virtues, but they were not impersonal machines. He could not impart this knowledge, convey such an attitude and feeling, to his brothers.

"First time I ever heard 'em kicking for baths," Phil grinned. "Did you start a movement for cleanliness while you were among them, Rod?"

"It wasn't necessary," Rod assured him. "Most loggers like to be clean if there's a chance. I bathed in the creek like the rest. I've scrubbed myself off in a handbasin in the winter. I didn't think much of the inconvenience. I suppose because I knew I could get away from it any time I wanted to. They can't. I'm for plenty of baths, in every camp we run. It's only common decency."

"That's simple. I expect, on the whole, we'd better give them what they ask without quibbling. I've always found it pays to keep 'em reasonably satisfied."

"You'd better consult the governor before you commit yourself," Grove said meaningly. "I'm opposed to it myself."

"My dearest elder brother," Phil shot back instantly with exaggerated, icy politeness. "When you elected to pursue a career in finance, the directions of the timber operations of the Norquay Estate devolved on me. So long as I have the authority I shall use my own judgment. You're not to reason with me. You're not to reap the profits that accrue. You try putting your fingers in 'is pie and you'll get them pinched. Do you get me?"

"You know," he went on sarcastically, after a brief silence, in which Grove's face reddened perceptibly, "you really aren't in any condition to give an impartial opinion on anything so early this morning. Too heavy a hang-over. Too many cocktails. Too much of a muchness. You can't stand the pace the way you used to. You come out of your morning bath grousing instead of singing. So leave the loggers and logging to me. I have about decided to concede them both points."

"I would," Rod impulsively put himself on record. "Not only as a matter of policy, but as a matter of simple justice."

"Oh, you," Grove turned on him. In his voice repressed fury and utter contempt seemed to struggle for mastery. "One would naturally expect you to support any extravagant claim you get from such a source. You fraternized with them. No doubt you find yourself quite comfortable on terms of equality with them. Particularly since you went the length of picking up a wife from among them. I have had about—"

Rod got to his feet. Something in his face cut short Grove's sentence.

"What you've had is not a patch to what you'll get," Rod said. "You yellow dog!"

The open palm of his hand popped with a dull smacking sound on his brother's mouth.

But characterizing a man as a yellow dog does not necessarily make him one. Grove spat out the crushed cigar and bitter ashes and lunged at Rod. He missed. While he was off balance, Rod knocked him down.

He rose, stood one hesitant moment, his hands up like a boxer, hunched between his shoulders. But when he rushed it was not to strike, only to grasp. "Don't let him get hold of you," Phil warned sharply.

Rod didn't need the warning. He knew Grove's strength, was aware of his purpose. In school, Grove had been a hammer thrower, a putter of the shot. He had never been beaten at his weight as a wrestler. And though he was ten years past those athletics, he was dangerous still at grips. Rod twisted aside, evaded his reach, struck and dodged, struck and dodged again, quick sharp punishing blows that jerked Grove's hands defensively up to guard his face. When he did that, Rod put all his weight into a blow that would have ended the scrimmage if it had reached Grove's jaw. It was deflected by his forearm, smashed his ear. But it staggered him against a bookcase so that broken glass fell with a tinkle. Rod followed up his advantage, and Grove went down again.

Phil had his back against the door. "It's locked," he announced calmly, in the brief time it took Grove to rise. "May the best man win," Rod panted.

He tingled. A fine exultant feeling that he dealt justice in the only adequate manner uplifted him. He had seldom fought in the twenty-three years of his existence. He had never imagined it would give him so keen a satisfaction to knock a man down. Yet it didn't surprise him. He knew in that moment that for years he had been longing to punish Grove as he intended to punish him now. Even in that stress of passion his brain, the rational, critical part of him, found time to wonder why so brutal an action seemed so eminently fit, so natural, such a pleasure.

Grove came at him again, striking wild, blood trickling from his mouth, from his nostrils. In the shift and exchange he trapped Rod against a heavy chair. They grappled, went to the floor with a crash. Grove's arm pinned him by the neck. Rod felt the other seeking a crotch hold. He made a violent effort, broke loose, thrust himself clear, bounded to his feet.

He had matched strength for strength and beaten Grove at his own strong man's game. There was a thrill in that. He could break any hold Grove could put on him. When he realized that, he dropped all defense. He crowded within the scope of Grove's arms and struck as hard and quickly as he could drive his arms, sets thudding against Grove's body, over his heart, on his face, until Grove's legs buckled under him and he sank on all fours.

Rod stepped back, dropped his hands. "Enough?" he asked briefly. Grove nodded, voiceless. His face was an ugly mask.

And as Rod opened his mouth to speak further, the library door rattled, an imperative knock sounded. The voice of Norquay senior demanded testily to know why the door was locked. Phil flashed a look of mild dismay at Rod and turned the key. Their father walked in.

BRITONS IN UNITED STATES

Where are most people of purely British origin to be found. The obvious answer would seem to be, "In England." But the answer would be wrong. The number of people of pure

British blood in England is perhaps 35,000,000; in Scotland about 3,000,000; in Canada about 5,000,000; in Australia about 4,000,000, and in South Africa about 3,000,000. This appears on the surface to be conclusive, and to leave England miles ahead; but we forget the United States.

An American a few years ago, crossing from England to France, strongly objected to being called officially a "foreigner" on the ground that, as he said, he had as pure Anglo-Saxon blood in his veins as any man in the British Army could boast. And he was right.

According to the census figures of the United States for 1920 the United States contain more people of British exclusive of Irish, origin than 38,000,000 in England, Scotland and Wales. That is, for every two representatives of the British race found in Great Britain there are three in the United States—London answers.
