They were working for months to get - O Sawyer to put on a red ribbon and let whisky alone. Nearly every man in his neighborhood on Larned street wore the insignia, an "Old Saw" and no trouble to see that they had more to eat and more clothes for their children as soon as they stopped pouring down whisky. He discovered, too, that these men were busy where he could hardly find a day's work, for any man wanting to hire a sober laborer to one whose red eyes and thick tongue tell of a degraded nature.

"Old Saw" cursed the Red Ribbon business high and low. He said it was a tyrannical interference with the rights of a free citizen, and that it was an insult to him who was good and had for his neighbor him up as a sot, and waited for some influence—they could not imagine what it would do should finally set him thinking.
"Old Saw" poured down whisky, had less to eat, grew more ragged in looks and vile in nature, and one day when his drunken carriage was passing a snow-bank a woman who stood by exclaimed:

"That man has no more soul than the lost brute of the earth." The crowd in said street right, and the last hope anyone had of reforming the man was surrendered.
In the crazy old man called "home," a ragged, forlorn-looking wife and five children shivered around the stove, guarding the scanty meals, looked out of the ragged stuffed windows and waited for the bright sun—not for a storm to pass—not for good news—not for change for the better.
They waited for that hour to come "home," along with house-wraps and easy-chairs, and year old baby wailed itself dead. Temper-ment pointed out the family as a warning to drinkers; and the neighbors, who house, and pedestrians wondered why small pox did not take root there.
The father took it, but the words burned his heart like fire, and he sought to ward it, though he had to taste whisky the while day.

"No Not was in hospital," "Old Saw" was too much drunk to care, and he staggered against pedestrians as the news made his way to the hospital. As the doors were opened for him, and as people pattered on his head, he said to himself, "I had been a gentleman, he left against himself for the first time in ten years."

"I will come after you," he stammered, as he backed out, and he retraced to the street and walked up and down until his brain speech was clearer. He felt that he was ragged, and he knew that he would have returned to the hospital had not the memory of Little Ned's pale face and big blue eyes been stronger than his shame.

"Come right in," they said to him—"this man is here, suffering a great deal, but not fatally injured."

When "Old Saw" saw the clean bed, the room and well-furnished people, he felt that he had been in his face from those who were looking at him. When he discovered that his injured boy had been robbed in a long white night-gown, clean as the purest snowflake, a long, long, long the boy's throat, and he gasped:

"No! I'm all wrong!"
"Old Saw" said to himself, "I want to see him, to see him, to see him, to see him."
"Old Saw" said to himself, "I want to see

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Own Correspondent.)
Washington, D. C., Feb. 28

To take up and continue the thread of current events in and about Congress from week to week, involves a good deal of "harping" on the same subjects. The silver question, the returning board difficulties, and a few smaller affairs hold the boards pretty well. True they are very important subjects, and very prolific of interesting, not to say exciting episodes, yet, for all that, one gets tired of frequent reiteration when his space is neither sufficiently ample to cover the whole, nor is it plentifully to cover all the varying aspects and pulsations. It is too much like getting lost in a forest and wondering about it in a circle for a couple of years or so.
Two or three weeks ago when it became evident that two-thirds of both houses of Congress would vote for silver, it was thought that matter would be soon disposed of, and that, with rapid evolution of the panorama, we should have other scenes to gaze upon. But the grave and reverend seniors of the "fog bank" have held the fort to the music of their wind instruments amazingly. Talk about sudden death in all its forms, and then reflect how easy a thing it would be for a man to be "talked to death" in the United States Senate. And the "Cave of Winds," as Robertus dubs the popular branch of Congress, is little better as to the quantity of gab, but it is more so the high pressure order, and don't weigh quite so much to the ton. In this branch we have recently been treated, about every other day, to an airing of the Presidential struggle of a year ago, and a discussion of the virtues of Woodman Wadd.

Two important conventions have just been in session here whose work may have some bearing upon legislation. The Exporters convention represents the business interests of the country affected by our export trade. It is the purpose of these gentlemen to demonstrate that our trade is languishing, and that something must be done to build up American commerce. It is probable that they will suggest to Congress the propriety of extending Government aid to steamship lines between our principle ports and those of South and Central America. They will be able to demonstrate that we do not send to all South America the same amount of goods, while our imports thence are about $20,000,000. And yet, in 1874, England sold to Mexico, Spain, and American States $100,000,000, and France $62,300,543. The same class of merchandise which England sends to South America we are prepared to furnish in abundant quantities to Mexico, Spain, and the United States. The only thing that now in our way is the fact that English steamers are able to do the carrying business cheaply, and we are unable to furnish such relations to producing interests. About three months ago he came to the aid of the convention performed the passage of a resolution recommending Congress to consider the feasibility of government control of the great through line across the continent.

For many years Washington has not been so full of "speculators" and allmanner of jobbers as at the present. There are hundreds of smart fellows here looking around for some way to turn an honest penny, in connection with every imaginable scheme. These are outside of the thousands who want clerks and the like, though some of them are not averse to comfortable berth. "Great pressure" has been brought to bear to secure positions under the Paris Exposition Commission. Among the applicants is one man whose experience at the National Capital has been peculiarly unfortunate.
About three months ago he came here from the west armed with a few hundred dollars, in search of a consultancy. He failed to secure the office, and soon "boarded out" his money. Borrowing a few dollars, he commenced selling papers, and trying to scratch along while he kept an eye out for anything that might turn up. There is some chance for him now, as friends are urging his claims for clerkship, though his disappointment has taught him to cling to every customer for his money, and not yield a sure thing for two in the bush. Governor McCornick, commissioner general to the Exposition, states that he has got the most laborious of his work in connection with the American exhibit well worked up. He has succeeded in disposing of the American space in the exhibition building to the four hundred applicants for room there, and has rejected about twenty-five percent of all the applications presented, using his best discretion as to the quality and style of the articles or industries to be exhibited and rejecting the least deserving. He has his engineer in Paris allotting the space to the lucky ones, and now feels assured that the American exhibit is not going to be a failure, while you some idea of what it will be nearly up to the standard it would have reached, but the lateness in beginning preparations.
Many of the most prominent representatives of American industries have desisted to compete in the exhibition on account of not having time to make new designs and new work. However, the chances are at present that the United States will have a very respectable part in the great show. The first vessel load of exhibits will sail on Monday. It takes along a load of "marines" to get guard duty.
Of course the rumor that the Exposition had been postponed in consequence of a war complication was without foundation.

SCIENTIFIC NOTES.
Milne-Edwards, the great opponent of the Evolution theory has been elected President of the French Scientific Association.

A note is made in Hardenberk's Science Gossip of the discovery of a chimney-swallow brooding in the month of December. The bird was watched while building her nest in a cart-shed and the nest, with one egg, was taken while the mother was sitting.

Prof. Westwood describes at a recent meeting of the Entomological Society London a remarkable Mantis (Gonygys gonygoides) which mimics a flower, the deception being supposed to attract the insects upon which the Mantis feeds to its destruction.

3,000 stars (only) are visible to the naked eye. Countless millions are revealed by the telescope, some so remote that their light, travelling at the rate of 20,000 miles a second, cannot arrive at our planet in less than 14,000 years. Others' light would require two millions of years to reach the earth from their distant orbs to our own.

Loewenhock has computed that 10,000 threads of the full-grown spider are no larger than a single hair of the beard. He calculated, further, that when young spiders first begin to spin, 400 of them are not larger than one of full growth—making it appear that 4,000,000 of a young spider's threads are not as large as the single hair of a man's beard.

One of the most important results obtained by Prof. E. S. Morse from his study of Lingula in Japan, during the past summer, is the discovery of auditory capsules in the class of Brachiopoda. He determined these organs in a species of Lingula, and their position and general appearance recall the auditory capsules as figured by Cuvier in certain tubicolous Annelids.

Prof. Owen has described at length, in the Annals and Magazine of Natural History, the Solitaire (Pezophaps solitaria), an extinct bird whose remains were brought from the Island of Rodriguez by the Transit of Venus Expedition. The favorable conditions of its life on an uninhabited island amid abundant food, enabled it to attain its great size.

GENERAL NEWS.
Of the 658 members of the Imperial Parliament, only 14 are absentists.

A steamer built by the Yarrow Company has attained the extraordinary speed of 32 miles per hour.

Eighteen thousand out of twenty seven thousand voters in Montreal have been disqualified for non-payment of taxes.

The City Council of Hamilton have adopted a by-law placing saloon, shop, and tavern licences at a hundred and fifty dollars.

Ten thousand alligator hides are annually received at New York from the Lower Mississippi and Florida to be made into boots, &c.

President Hayes's nomination of Mr.
John Smith for the Consul-Generalship at Montreal has been confirmed by the United States Senate.

Flags with the motto "Hunger Knows no Law" were carried through the streets of Boston lately by a procession of five thousand laborers out of work.

A little girl, named Stover, aged thirteen, daughter of Mr. A. Stover, of Ridgeway, was impaled on a chair a few days ago, meeting with a horrible and speedy death. She was standing on the chair, when she fell, one of the rungs entering her body near the heart. She died in two minutes.

John McDonald, one of the secondaries of the late John C. Henman in his fight with Tom Sayers and Tom King, has published a statement in the London Sportsman, wherein he states that Henman deliberately sold the fight with King, and that he received £4,000 for so doing. McDonald says that prior to the fight Henman, with two sporting men, who accompanied him to England, and a prominent book-maker, met at a solicitor's office, in the Strand, London, where a written agreement was drawn up, signed and witnessed by all parties, and Henman agreed to let King win the fight for £4,000. The bookmaker, who is still living, deposited the amount with the lawyer, who is still in practice in London, and he paid the amount to Henman three days after the battle. McDonald was accused of drugging Henman in the fight in question, but he did not deny it. He claims that he would not have yet published the swindle had Henman been living, owing to obligations, which bound him not to do so.
