WOMEN
For "run-down," "run-down," debilitated women, and overworked women generally, a well known citizen of Fredericton employed as an entry clerk at the Probate Court for the Probate Court for the appointment of C. M. Stocking as guardian of Clarence, the five year old son of Col. and Mrs. Hudson, on the ground that Mrs. Hudson was an unfit person to have the custody of the child, having brutally ill-treated him. Mr. Stocking is the agent of the Humane Society here and the action was taken on the advice of the society. The story of the late ill-treatment as told is a narrative of domestic brutality that would be incredible if not proved by the testimony of several witnesses, including Col. Hudson himself. It appears that Hudson, while opposed to his wife's conduct, was powerless to prevent it. It is alleged that one of her favorite modes of punishment was to double him up with his head between his legs, tie him in that position, place him in a bath tub, and then turn the water on him. If he kicked or squirmed she would take him out and beat him until his back was black and blue.

A MOST INHUMAN MOTHER.
A Detroit Woman's Terrible Cruelty to her Child - A Story of Almost Fatal Brutality to a Boy Five Years Old.
Detroit, July 25.-Col. C. T. Hudson is a well known citizen of Detroit employed as an entry clerk at the Probate Court for the Probate Court for the appointment of C. M. Stocking as guardian of Clarence, the five year old son of Col. and Mrs. Hudson, on the ground that Mrs. Hudson was an unfit person to have the custody of the child, having brutally ill-treated him. DOWNFALL OF SIR CHARLES.
What the Correspondents of the New York Sunday Papers Say About It.
New York, July 25.-Justin McCarthy still has faith in the innocence of Sir Charles Dilke. He cables to this morning's New York Herald as follows: "I have no intention of impeaching the verdict of the jury or discussing the details of the case, but one's personal knowledge of the man must count with him for something, and the decision of a British jury has never, so far as I know, been held to be infallible. Sir Charles himself said yesterday, after the verdict had been given, that he did not see how the jury could avoid finding him guilty of the charges made. With such evidence against him it was simply a question of 'Do you believe the statements of these several persons or the denial of this one man?' 'Well I know most of all of the people who were conspicuous in the case, and I make my personal choice as to belief. I want to visit Sir Charles Dilke yesterday immediately after the verdict, and had a long talk with him, and endeavored to induce him to give up one at least of his resolves concerning his connection with English public life, and I grasped his hand at parting. His fall is like that of a tower. He stood high above every other rising English statesman, and but for what has happened he must have been prime minister after Gladstone. He would have hardly even a competitor for the position. He has made his whole life one of training for political success. He had sought experience of the most varied kind, had travelled all over the world, and knew most European countries as well as he knows his own. He has worn the Geneva cross on many a battlefield in order to see something of the nature of the thing. He was intimately acquainted with politics and public men in Europe, America, Australia and China. He knew Russia as well as Turkey, India and China and was to all appearance actually cut out for the post of prime minister, who was also secretary of foreign affairs. He is still what we call in English politics a young man, only in his forty-third year, and now, as Evelyn says of Charles II., 'now in the full of his life.' The whole story of English public life contains no other example of such a career thus cut short; a splendid rise and so sudden a fall.

All special correspondents give Dilke's case prominence this morning. As a correspondent of the New York Times puts it: "Although Lord Salisbury is dining with his sovereign and discussing in the august presence the final details of the great historic political change, it is toward Osborne that men's minds are turning. All their thoughts are on the awful tragedy of mind and morals which, before all our eyes, has destroyed the root and branch of about the most promising career in Europe. There is no risk in asserting that if the scandal had not come out Sir Charles Dilke would today have been the bluest man in the liberal party next to Mr. Gladstone. Not only that, but in United Ireland says he would have been the man of all others best fitted to remove the differences existing in the liberal ranks to overcome English prejudices, and to change the tide toward home rule. Instead of all this, he is the most completely ruined man alive. Not a single paper gives a word of even tolerance, much less of credence to his last frantic denial. Some express pity for him, but more of them curiously discover him as a moral outlier. The Times roughly tells him to get out of the country as soon as he can. I am told by a lawyer who saw him last night that he is in a pitiable state of hysterical collapse, and that a close watch is kept to guard him against suicide. It is said that for a long time there was a conflict between Sir Charles Russell, who, as a keen lawyer, fought against the plan of reopening the case, and Lady Dilke, who, believing in her husband's innocence, was impatient under the merciless goings of the Pall Mall Gazette and was anxious to restore his political status. The wife, and the result is the most tremendous personal downfall of modern times, with a prosecution for perjury as an alternative to a lifelong exile or suicide. The New York Tribune's correspondent cables: The alliance between the liberals and parliament seems on the whole to grow closer. The defeat has not destroyed the confidence of either, or the conviction of either, that the objects of both can most surely be obtained by continued cooperation. It is a sign of the times that the so-called Gladstone candidates election fund committee has been enlarged and reconstituted as the United Kingdom Home Rule League.

Thomas Power O'Connor cables: Lord Salisbury had scarcely been in town an hour when he sent an urgent note to Lord Harrington requesting a personal interview. Harrington at once complied. Salisbury urged Harrington to join the Tory cabinet, but without success. He is reported to have gone so far as conditionally to offer Harrington the premiership. Harrington, however, declined all overtures to take office and all attempts to induce him to pledge himself to support the Tory government. He freely stated his views on the Irish question, indicating the policy he would be prepared to approve, such as an extension of local self-government greater than he would countenances when experience should justify them. He would not pledge himself to support the Tory ministry on these lines until details were before him.

A cablegram to the Times says: At the Carlton it is believed that Lord Salisbury's government will introduce a measure granting some form of local self-government to Ireland. The bill was prepared before the Tories last went out of office, at the time when the cabinet were balancing between conciliation and coercion. It has been slightly modified to catch the unionists and chamberlaine support and is believed by leading Tories to be calculated to achieve that object.

The international cable agency's London despatch says: Lord Salisbury waited on the Queen to-day in obedience to Her Majesty's summons to form a ministry. It is stated that Lord Salisbury presents Lord Salisbury for Lord of the party seat; the Duke of Argyll, a liberal-tyrannyist, for president of the council; the Marquis of Lorne, liberal unionist, Argyle's son, and husband of the queen's daughter, the Princess Louise, for Irish Viceroy. The other names submitted are not so well authenticated. Lord Randolph Churchill's name is mentioned as the probable secretary of state for the home rule department; Right Hon. Edward Stanhope for Irish chief secretary, the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, late secretary for Scotland, and Lord John Manners, late secretary for the colonies, are expected to retire in favor of younger men. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, late secretary of the exchequer, and Sir Richard Asquith, late secretary of the treasury, are recommended for peerages without seats in the cabinet, but possibly with lucrative appointments in the government. As regards Asquith, there is a strong feeling that he has not had a fair trial, and he will be pushed for another term as party leader in the house of commons, or a seat in the cabinet, not carrying that distinction. The above statements are unofficial.

THE OLD, OLD STORY.
It seems to be admitted that Salisbury will propose a home rule scheme for Ireland. After protesting throughout all England that an assent to the principle of home rule meant a vote for the dismemberment of the empire, the Tory premier is prepared to offer a plan of his own. This is the old, old story. Your true Tory always regards the country as going to the dogs unless he has the office, and once let him get in power and he will do the very thing he has most bitterly condemned, if by doing it he can make his position secure. Most disinterested observers will be unable to understand why home rule would be so disastrous if brought about by the liberals, and yet be perfectly harmless if accomplished by the Tories. We have been told all along that the danger did not lie in home rule itself, but in the fact that such a measure was the entering wedge for Irish independence. From such a proposition we dissent entirely, but if it is correct, we do not see how any measure of home rule can be granted. If the Irish people would not have been contented with a thorough measure like Gladstone's, they will certainly not be content with any such half measure as Salisbury is likely to propose. On the contrary they will be apt to argue that they can obtain so much from the Tories they have only to agitate a little more to obtain the fullest extent of their desires. Provided the wedge enters at all, it matters little in the long run whether it is driven in with a will or the first blow or a forced down by a series of gentle taps. We repeat that we dissent entirely from the idea that the Gladstonian idea of home rule meant ultimate separation, but if it did so, it could only be because the nationalist party are bent upon bringing about such a result. If they are it will not do to grant them any concessions, and what Salisbury proposes is as dangerous as the plans of his predecessor.

THE PROGRESS OF THE COUNTRY.

Twenty regular trains arrive or depart from Woodstock every day. A few years ago there was a train that went out in the morning and returned at night, and this was all the train service the people enjoyed. One can take an early breakfast at Grand Falls, New Brunswick, or Presque Isle, Maine, and a very late supper in Boston the same day. These things indicate that the country is rapidly progressing and that an energetic effort is being made to develop its business. There are probably persons now living who remember when there was not a house at what is now commonly spoken of as Woodstock. We are not so sure that there are not those who remember the erection of the first house at what is called "the lower corner," which is where the town originated. Persons yet claiming to be young will tell you that when they first visited the majority of the best farming communities on the upper St. John, the forest covered nearly every acre, and log cabins and fields thickly studded with stumps made up the landscape. The progress of the country from year to year may not be startling, but if one decade is compared with another the result will excite surprise. And best of all there is no reaction or prospect of one. The basis of the advance is agriculture, and with such a climate and such soil as this province affords there can be no reaction in the industry, unless by misfortune the market should fall, and of this there is no likelihood. Indeed the growing demands of the great nation to the south of us render it much more probable that the market will expand than that it will contract. The future of our province is bright with hope. The best of our soil is far from being all tilled. The wealth of our forests is yet immeasurable. What sources of property we possess in quarry or mine are yet scarcely known, but it is certain that they are large. We need better trade relations with our neighbors, but we need even more a firm faith in our country.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

Paris, July 26.—A violent anonymous attack has been made here on the Panama canal enterprise. The attack is made in a pamphlet strongly written, and contains many pages. The title is "Engineers' Letters on the Panama Canal." The cover bears the imprint of the French Republic, and the words "The Victims of the Panama Canal." The pamphlet describes the mortality among the thousands employed in making the canal, and describes in anecdotal form the state of things on the isthmus, tells of the losses of the French, and of the public's money, and in conclusion states that the canal only is yet in anything like an advanced state of construction.

ENGLISH POLITICS.

Lord Salisbury Asked to Form a New Cabinet.
London, July 26.—The Marquis of Salisbury arrived here to-day at noon from Osborne, where he went to receive the Queen's commands to form a government. Great crowds assembled at all the chief railway stations between Portsmouth and London and cheered the new premier on his arrival. He declined to address the crowds anywhere. At London station an enormous crowd had assembled to welcome the Marquis, and they greeted him loudly when he alighted from the train.

The Times says it believes that the Marquis of Salisbury offered to serve under Lord Hartington as premier if the latter would assume the work of forming a coalition government.

Lord Salisbury has convened a meeting of the Conservative members of the house of commons at the Carlton club to-morrow.

Lord Odo Russell will probably be selected as secretary for the colonies in the new cabinet.

There are rumors of a hitch in the formation of a cabinet on account of the conflicting claims of the two leading ministers of the last Conservative government.

The Marquis of Salisbury while at Osborne performed the ceremony of kissing the hand of the Queen and was appointed prime minister.

Paris, July 26.—A violent anonymous attack has been made here on the Panama canal enterprise. The attack is made in a pamphlet strongly written, and contains many pages. The title is "Engineers' Letters on the Panama Canal." The cover bears the imprint of the French Republic, and the words "The Victims of the Panama Canal." The pamphlet describes the mortality among the thousands employed in making the canal, and describes in anecdotal form the state of things on the isthmus, tells of the losses of the French, and of the public's money, and in conclusion states that the canal only is yet in anything like an advanced state of construction.
