We are glad to say, that no mortality or accident occurred to may of the persons actually ac-companying the expedition, although one of the volunteer Artillerymen, Williamsen, who was somewhit advanced in years, and who was unable longer to bear the fatigues and haidships of the journey, unfortunately died when on his way back to Hudson's Bay sta-tion. He was accompanied by two Canaoi-ans, who were well acquainted with the coun-try, but having separated himself from them, he must have wandered out of the path, and perished. THE GREAT FIRE IN NEW YORK.

The following are the particulars as far as we are enabled to procure them for to day:

Fulton street .- Broke out in 111, 113, and 115, Fulton, (five story buildings. occupied as book stores, printing offices, and book binders.) all totally destroyed. A man named Blanchard jumped from the 4th story of 113, with his clothes on fire, and died in about five minutes after striking the ground .- This may have been considered rash, but it must be recollected that the fire broke out at an early hour in the morning when all were in their beds-that the buildings are extremely high, and the rooms and passages being small and filled with smoke, rendered escape by the staircase next to impossible. Mr. Scott, Mr. C. Baldwin, Messrs. Carlisle and Waite, printers, who slept in the same building, were buried in the ruins. Nos. 107, Mr. Jno. Budd, cabinet maker-109, Mrs. Prentiss's boarding house; and 117, occupied by Amb. Bell, & Co.-all three story, brick-totally destroyed. On the opposite side of Fulton, No. 116, Gale, Wood and Hughes, silversmiths-118, Joseph & S. Hall, gunsmiths-114, three story brick-all totally destroyed-112, (three story) partially; also the 5th story brick house corner of Dutch street, partially.

house corner of Dutch street, partially. Ann street.—No. 32, 1st story, Old Coun-tryman office; 2d. and 3d, a bindery, and 4th and 5th, Wm. E. Dean, printer—building entirely destroyed. No. 34, 5 story, totally destroyed—occupied in the basement as a press room, with two Napiers, belonging to H. Anderson, value $3000—insured $1500 m. that and printing office in third story,

How the architect will arrange, settling geometrical proportion, we know not. Hancock, the city ceach-maker, who died the other day, left a request in his will that all his workmen, after he was put into the ground, shuold be regaled with a prime tuck out of roast-beef, plum-pudding &c., accom-panied with plenty ale, pipes, tobacce, &c., which request was very properly complied with. We should be inclined to think, that with. Hancock was either a wag or a philosopher, and looked on "grieving as folly," and that "the right end of life was to live and be jolly;" at any rate he could not have devised a better scheme to secure a good word from his survivors. Commend us, we say, to all such funerals.

"I shall never consider myself a great man," said the erudite Derry Dawson to his brother in law, "until I arrive at the dignity of being caricatured." "True," replied Peel, " but you have the consolation of knowing what a capital subject you are for it.'

that we let the matter lie in abeyance until a fitter opportunity should arise for calling it forth. It is proper to state that several individuals took the project into consideration and through their examination of its merits, and the scrutiny of the Public, a conviction has arisen, that the undertaking is not only leasable, but one that would become most lucratize to the proprietors and of immense value to the Country. Were a Rail Road made from the River St. John in Woodstock, to our shores, this place would become the port of exit for the whole produce of the upper Country, and we pronounce the value of that produce to be immense. Lateral branches would run into it from all parts, and the supplies of lumber, which now depend on the uncertainty of season, would then depend on the certainty of orders for its shipment. In addition to such facilities, one of the most prominent advantages of the Rail Road would be the ease and cheapness with which the interior could be supplied with imports which it now receives through a circuitous route at an enormous expense
