Well sir, it took quite a while to find one, and this is what I learned: Before the union, the M. E. church had a society of this kind, it was not only for church purposes, but benevol-ent purposes as well; they helped to clothe those that were needy, and bought wood for others in winter son; bull, 1 year, S. McVeety; bull paid a nurse for the needy sick, and s great many things outside of church affairs, in short, sir, you would be surprised to know the amount they rais ed, and the good they did with it, the two years it was in running order. It took twenty-five cents to make a member, and the enormous sum of five cents a month and no work to do. only to get up an entertainment oc-casionally. Since Mr. Rogers came, they started the present society, sup-posing that united efforts would make a grand success, but there is just where union didn't come in. It has been a success as far as it goes, Ward ; we, aged, S. Frayne, R. Pat- there are such a few belonging to it, there are such a few belonging to it, ward; 2 ewe shearling, S. Frayne, R. Ward; 2 ewe lambs, S. Bisonett, S. Frayne; fat sheep, J. Patterson, E. to the old society of which I have spoken, and then another thing, some have joined and never paid their dues. I presume they belong to the number who believe in helping some other town or city to do their benevolent deeds in preference to home affairs. Why, Mr. Editor, if the ladies of that congregation had joined heartily in this almost mite society they could have done wonders, they could have leased a lot somewhere in the vicinity of Farmersville, and have removed ling, S. ### THE CHOICE OF THREE

A NOVEL.

Whatever those two women were looking for in his face, they had found is, and, to all appearance, it pleased them very little. Dorothy turned pale and leaned back with a faint smile of resignation; she had expeeted it, that smile seemed to say; but the blood flamed like a danger flag into Flor ence's haughty features—there was no resig nation there. And meanwhile Ernest was taring down the room, quite unaware of she little comedy that was going on round sim; so was Jeremy and so was every sther man who was there to stare. And this was what they were staring at

Up the centre of the long room walked, or rather swept, Miss Ceswick, for even at her rather swept, muss deswick, for even as her advanced age she moved like a queen, and at any other time her appearance would in itself have been sufficient to excite remark. But people were not looking at Miss Coswick, but rather at the radiant creature for it was she, was dressed in white soic de Chine, in the bosom of which was fixed a single rose. The dress was out low, and her splen-did neck and arms were entirely without ornament. In the masses of dark hair, which was coiled like a coronet round her head, there glustened a diamond star. Simple as was her costume, there was a grandeur about it that struck the whole room; but, in truth, it sprang from the atmoss periest beauty of the woman who wore it. Any dress would have looked beautiful upon that noble form that towered so high and yet seemed to first up the room with the grace of a swan and sway like a willow in the wind. But her loveli ness did not end there. From those dark eyes there shone a light that few men could look upon and forget, and yet there was nothing bold about it. It was like the light of a star. of a star.

On she came, her lips half parted, seemingly unconscious of the admiration she was attracting, celipsing all other women as she passed and making their beauty, that before had seemed bright enough, look poor and mean beside her own. It took but a few seconds, ten perhaps, for her to walk up the room, and yet to Ernest it seemed long before her avas mat his own and ong before her eyes met his own, and omething passed from them into his heart hat remained there all his life. His gaze made her blush a little, it was so unmistakable. She guessed who he was and passed him with a little inclination of "Well, here we are at last," she said addressing her sister in her musical, pure voice. "What do you think? Something went wrong with the wheel of the fly and we had to stop to get it mended."

"Indaed?" said Florence. "I thought that perhaps you came late in order to make a more effective entry."

"Florence," said her sunt reprovingly, "you should not say such things."

Florence did not answer, but put her lace handkerchief to her lip. She had bitten it still the blood ran.

By this time Ernest had recovered himself. He saw several young fellows bearing down upon them and knew what they were " Miss Ceswick," he said, " will you intro-

No sooner said than done, and at that moment the band began to play a waltz. In five seconds mere she was floating down the room upon his arm, and the advancing young gentlemen were left lamenting, and, if the truth must be told, anathematizing "that puppy Kershaw" beneath their breath.

breath.

There was a spirit in her feet. She danced magnificently. Lightly leaning on his arm they swept round the room, the incarnation of youthful strength and beauty, and, as they passed, even sour old Lady Asteigh lowered her ancient nose an inch or more and deigned to ask who that handsome young man dancing with the "tail girl" was? Presently they halted and Ernest observed a more than usually intrepid man coming toward them, with the design, no doubt, of obtaining an introduction and the promise of dances. But again he was man coming toward them, with the design, no doubt, of obtaining an introduction and the promise of dances. But again he was equal to the occasion

"Yes, we get on nicely. Here it is."
Ernest took it. The young man had arrived now and was hovering around and glowering. Erness nodded to him cheerglowering. Ernest nodded so him cubes-fully and "put his name" very much down indeed for no less than three dances and ar

"Oh, certainly," answered Ernest benignly, "I will be with you presently," and they floated off again on the rising

When the dance ended they stopped just by the spot where Mirs Ceswick was sitting. Florence and Dorothy were both dancing, but Jeremy, who did not dance, was stand-ing by her, looking as sulky as a bear with a sore head. Eva stretched out her band to him with a smile.

"I hope that you are going to dance with me, Mr. Jones," she said. "I don't dance," he answered curtly, and walked away.

She gazed after him wonderingly; his manner was decidedly rude.
"I do not think that Mr. Jones is in a good temper," she said to Ernest with a

Then the gathering phalanx of would be pareners marched in and took possession and Ernest had to retire. and Ernest had to retire.

The ball was drawing to its close. The dancing-room, notwithstanding its open windows, was intensely hot, and many of the dancers were strolling in the gardens, nos, Dorothy and her brother were Florence, Dorothy and her brother were also walking, all three together. It is curious how people in misfortune cling to one another. They walked in silence; they had another. They walked in stience; tasy had nothing to say. Presently they caught sight of two tail figures standing by a bush, on which was fixed a dying Chinese lantern. It is sometimes unfortunate to be tall, it betrays one's identity; there was no theri. It is betrays one's identity; there was no mistaking the two figures though it was so dark. Instinctively the three halted. And just then the expiring Chinese lantern did an unkind thing; it caught fire and threw a lurid light upon a very pretty little scene. Ernest was bending forward toward Eva wi hell bis soul in his expressive eyes and begging for comething. She was blushing sweetly and looking down at the rose in her botom; one hand, too, was raised, as though to unfasten it. The light was for a moment so strong that Dorothy afterward remembered noticing how long Eva's curling black cyclashes looked against her cheek. In another moment it had flared out and the darkness hid the sequel; but it may here be stated that when Eva reappeared in the ball room she had lost her rose.

Oharming and idyllic as this tableaus tres vivant of youth and beauty obeying the primary law of nature and making love to one another in a garden of E ien illumined with Chinese lanterns undoubtedly was, it did not seem to please any of the three speciators.

Joremy actually forgot the presence of ladies and went so far as to use unparitamentary language aloud. Nor did they reprove him; probably it gave their feelings

Forence said nothing, but she took her fan in both her hands and bent it slowly, so that the ivory sticks snapped one by one that the ivery sticks snapped one by one with a succession of sharp reports. Then she threw it down and set her heel upon it and ground it into the path. There was something inexpressibly cruel about the way in which she crushed the pretty toy, the action seemed to be the appropriate and unconscious outcome of some mental process, and it is an odd proof of the excitement under which shey were both laboring. ment under which they were both laboring that at the same time the gentle minded Dorothy saw nothing strange about it. At that moment the two girl twere neafer each other than they had ever been before or ever would be again; the common stroke of a misfortune for a moment welded their opposite natures into one. At shat moment, too, they knew that they both loved the same man; before, they had gusesed it and had not liked each other the better for it but now that was forgotten.

"I think, Florence," said Dorothy, with a little tremor in her voice, "that we are out of the running, as Jeremy says. Your sister is too beautiful for any woman to stand against her. He has fallen in love with her."

"Yes," said Florence with a bitter laugh and a flash of her brown eyes, "his highness has thrown a handkerchief to a new favorite and she has lost no time in picking it up. We always used to call her; the sultana," and she laughed again.

Dorothy said nothing. She knew that it was true, and they walked for a few steps "Dorothy, do you know what generally happens to favorites and sultanas?"
"No."

"They come to a bad end. The other ladies of the harem murder them, you

"No, certainly not," she answered.
"Ernest has a right to choose for himself and if your sister gets the better of ue, it is the fortune of war, that is all—though certainly the fight is not quite fair," she added, as she thought of Eva's radiant lovelines.
Florence glanced at her companion contempts unly.

I have only to shut my eyes and I can see it. On, here is Jeremy! Is the carriage there, Jeremy? That's right. Come on, Dovothy, let us go and say good night and be off. EVA FINDS S. METHING When Ernest woke on the morning after when briess wose of the high are the ball it was ten o'clock and he had a severe headache. This—the headache—was his first impression, but presently his eye fell upon a witherisg red rose that lay upon the dressing table, and he smiled. Then the dressing table, and he smiled. Then followed refrestions, those confounded refrestions that always dog the heels of everything pleasant in life, and he ceased to smile.

In the end he yawned and got up. When In the end he yawned and got up. When he reached the sitting room, which lo ked cool and pleasant in contrast to the hot July sunshine that beat upon the little patch of bare turf in front of the house and the glittering sea beyond, he found that the others had done their breakfast. Jeremy had gone out, but his sister was there, locking a little pale, no doubt from the late hours of the orevious night. hours of the previous night.
"Hullos, Doll! Good morning."

"Good-morning, Erness," she answered rather coldly. "I have been keeping your tea as warm as I can, but I'm afraid it is

She smiled as she gave it to him. Had she spoken what was in her mind she would have answered that she had " such a heart." He drank the tea and apparently felt better for it, for presently he asked her, in comparatively cheerful tones, how she liked the dance.

"Oh, very well, thank you, Ernest. How did you like it?"
"Oh, awfully. I say, Doll!"

"Yes, Ernest."

"Ian't she lovely?"

Why, Eva Ceswick, of course ! Yes, E nest, she is very lovely." There was something about her tone that was not encouraging. At any rate, he did not pursue the subject.

"Where is Jeremy?" he asked next.

" He has gone out. "He has gone out."

Presently, Ernest, having finished his second cup of tea, went out, too, and came across Jeremy mooning about the yard.

"Hullos, my hearty, and how are after your dissipations?"

"All right, thank you," answered Jeremy su'kily.

E chest glanced up quickly. The voice was the voice of Jeremy, but the tones were not his tones. "What is up, old chap?" he said, slipping his arm through his friends'.

Jeremy freed his arm and remained sulkier than ever. Ernest looked hurt, and the look softened the other.

He entered and scated himself upon the stuffing table, gazing abstractedly at a bit-tern that Jeremy had shot about the time that this story opened and which was now very much moth eaten, and waved one melanoholy leg in the air in a way meant to be imposing, but only succeeding in being
