For some reason best known to themselves the men are tired of it. Each season it becomes more difficult to secure partners, and as the dreamy waltz is the only terpsichorean effort in which the fair sex will indulge it is evident that the waltz must go or the men will. The matter having been brought to his notice, Herr Strauss is said to have modified the rotating dance into a walk waltz, which, taken arm-in-arm, enables two persons to circulate about a ball-room more or less rhythmically, converse on the most abtruse subject, and at a moment's notice drop into more exciting gyrations. The promenade musicale is on the carpet and it remains to be seen whether it will suffice to lure young men from their retreats in alcoves and staircases. If this fails the waltz and the dance itself are doomed, for the men must be kept for utility if not

The pretence that because a person happens to serve the defeat with which the Times threatens it.

The session has been in one respect remarkable. It was marked by the bitter and most fruitless opposition that ever was developed in the New Brunswick legislature. The opposition did not score a single point. The reason is plain. They adopted an unwise and a totally unjustiflable course. They confined all their efforts to defaming the members of the government personally - a very poor piece of business, indeed, which they had by far better leave to the journalistic curs which follow them. Men who seek to gain the confidence of the house and the country ought to show at least a grain of good judgment and ought not to exhaust themselves in scurrility. They ought likewise to preserve the appearance, at least, of fairness. Our opposition friends took just the contrary course to this with the result that they have succeeded in convincing even those who were favorably inclined towards them that they are unfit to administer affairs. The session closed with signs of disintegration visible all over the opposition combination.

On the other hand the government has gained in strength. Just after the elections there were some persons who were somewhat disposed to question the ability the St. John representation was arrayed against the administration and in the opinion of some people this was equivalent to a political earthquake. But instead of the government avoiding investigation into its administration of affairs, instead of its avoiding the attacks of its assailants, it met everything fairly, and one of the first indications of the impression produced upon the members was the declaration of Mr. Melanson, who, elected an independent voted against the government on the first trial of strength, that he could see no reason for continuing in opposition, and that he was prepared to give the government a reasonable support. Other indications in the same direction were not wanting, but the gentlemen. who showed a disposition to follow the example of the member from Westmorland, no doubt, felt bound by their election pledges to continue in opposition for one session.

Much strengthened in the house, the government will be yet more strengthened in the country when the people have had an opportunity of looking at both sides of the political situation. Already there are indications that the efforts made by the opposition to discredit their opponents are reacting. This is to be expected. A party which exists solely for the purpose of pulling down and blackening the reputation of its successful rivals has no claim for popular support, and when its plans all miscarry it inevitably comes in for the contempt of every body.

THE ELECTION LAW.

The controverted elections act has been a failure. It has not secured purity in elections and the public at large has had very little respect for it. So low had it | (imported); dam Colleen, 158 N. B. H. B. fallen in public estimation that to be un- | Calved December 15th, 1882 (without restricseated because of a petition under the act had become the surest guarantee of reelection. Amendments were necessary and the legislature has made these—a large majority of the members of both houses supporting them. The changes are to the effect that the question whether the election of a candidate has been due to corrupt acts shall be fully tried out by the judge, and a defeated candidate who has not violated the law may be given the seat of legal conduct of his opponent. Penalties are also provided for persons who employ improper means to secure the election of a candidate. These new provisions remove from the statute book what were very objectionable features of the old law and give candidates a motive to run elections purely while placing heavy burdens upon those who do not. The opposition in York are very angry over the passage of this bill; but a little rejection ought to show them how unfounded their ill-temper is. They have told every one that the government candidates were only elected by bribery and corruption and that they had kept within the strictest letter of the law. Now here is an act passed for the express benefit of such people. They ought, one would think, to hold up both hands for it. They can now demonstrate their own purity and the corruption of their opponents. Their long sought opportunity is at hand. They must be very hard to suit if when they are given the very thing they have been clamoring for they are still discontented. The act will, we are satisfied, commend itself to the good judgment of the majority of the people. Of course those who wanted new elections, whether there was any real reason for them or not, will be very much disgruntled; but these though they talk the loudest are after all in a very small minority. The unreasonableness of their clamor is shown by the fact that they objected to the passage of a section preventing a member elect from being unseated on account of a clerical error of an officer -as in Victoria, where the deputy returning officer forgot to sign the return, and Other articles, including farm wagons and The scene which followed was terrible. in Albert where in one parish one of the revisors omitted to sign the revised list.
