Please The Children

by making bread that appeals to their taste as well as giving nourishment to their system. Ask the average child which it prefers, bread or cake, and it will invariably answer, "Cake". That is because the bread is not as tasty as it might be. It lacks that delicate, sweet, appealing flavor that children relish so heartily, and that is just as easy to provide as the nourishing properties.

"Beaver" Flour

is the stand-by of every thinking mother and housewife. You need not be a brilliant cook in order to get good results with this carefully balanced blend of Manitoba Spring wheat and Ontario Fall wheat. You don't have to bother about one kind of flour for bread, and another for pastry. "BEAVER FLOUR" provides the ideal qualities for both—the gluten, or nourishment, of the Manitoba wheat, and the lighter properties of the Ontario wheat that go to make bread white and sweet and pastry crisp and flaky. "BEAVER FLOUR" makes more loaves to the barrel than any other. It gives the best results in bread, pies and cakes because it adds appearance and flavor to the merit of nourishment.

Don't take anybody's word for it. Try "BEAVER FLOUR" yourself and convince yourself that good baking is easier than you thought it was.

Which Was The Heir?

CHAPTER XLIV.
(Concluded.)

"LET me go!" he gasped, struggling with her; but the long hands seemed endowed with the strength of a blacksmith's, and gripped him like a vise of flesh and bone; gripped him as if they were some sinuous snake, choking and strangling him. He raised his hand and struck her; but she seemed as if she did not feel the blow; and as they struggled and writhed they drew nearer and nearer the edge of the cliff.

"Take care!" he gasped. "You'll have us both over, you devil! Let me go! I'll give you the jewels; I'll marry you—curse you!"

It was his last word. Blinded by her fury, indifferent to her own danger she had dragged him. There was a cry, a faint, stifled cry, then all was silent.

One day, about a year later, a party of four was making its way through the Australian pine forest, which a boy and girl, weary and footsore, had treaded on that night which would ever remain green in the mind of one of them. They had left their wagon and servants at the beginning of the forest, for two of the party were making a pilgrimage which was as sacred to them as that which wends every year to Mecca. The evening was drawing nigh, and Geoffrey and Cottie walked hand in hand; for Eva and Edward Rashleigh had discreetly lingered a little behind. They were plain Geoffrey and Cottie no longer, but Lord and Lady Starborough, for the earl had been gathered to his fathers soon after their marriage, and had been happier in his death than he had been in all his life, for Geoffrey's and Cottie's affection had brightened and soothed the hours of his departure, and had won the heart which had been so hard to all the rest of the world.

These two walked hand in hand, looking about them with eyes which saw not only the present but the past; and every now and then those eyes turned toward each other with a long and meaning look.

"It is just the same," said Geoffrey, in a low voice. "Just the same, Cottie! Very probably no human foot has trodden here since we left; how plainly it all comes back to me!"

"And to me," said Cottie, in a low voice. "I have it, Geoff! I dream of it very often. And what wonder? for it was here that you and I were so happy. We've been happy since—"

"Ah, yes!" he whispered.

"But sometimes I wonder whether we have ever been happier or ever shall be happier than we were then."

"And yet we didn't know," he said.

"No." The colour came to her face, and she looked at him shyly.

"I didn't know—and yet sometimes my heart seemed to suspect that I loved you with a love different to a brother's. It was when you were very close to me, touched me, something used to flame up within my heart, something used to thrill me." Her voice broke, and his arms went round her, and she hid her face against his breast.

They were nearing the hut; but before they went to it they turned aside to a little clearing and stood hand in hand over a grass-grown mound upon which the pine leaves had softly fallen.

It was Ronnie's grave. They stood looking down at it, Cottie's eyes blinded with tears, then he drew her away, and they went down towards the hut. The grass had grown round the threshold; the climbing plants had almost covered the window. It was evident that no one had been there since they left; and Geoffrey drew a breath of relief and satisfaction as he unlocked the door. They went in and stood looking round, then Geoffrey hastily gathered some wood together, piled it deftly on the hearth and set it alight, drew up a chair to the table, and gently forced her into it. They were still bride and bridegroom, and she was still shy under his touch and glance; and she looked up with a burning blush as he said, in loving accents:

"Now get your books, Ronnie; we'll have a lesson!"

Edward and Eva Rashleigh—Edward more buoyant and light-hearted than ever; and with a good cause, for his friend, Geoffrey, Lord Starborough, had cleared away all Sir Edwards money troubles—when they came back to the hut, found the painting, and drew back as if loath to intrude upon so sacred a moment. But Geoffrey, with a love that knows no shame, drew his bride to his breast, and, looking over her bent head, cried:

"Welcome to the hut! Come in! We are all at home—Geoffrey and Ronnie!"

They entered, and Sir Edward looked round with flashing, eager eyes—for this was the sort of thing he had always longed for; and he had still before him the prospect of going over the gold claims in the Western Hill.

"By George! this is first-rate!" he exclaimed. "Good Lord! how I envy you! To think of having lived here, and found gold! I call it living, Lady Starborough; eh, Eva?"

Cottie had flown from Geoffrey to Eva, the friend of her heart, the true and tried friend, and she looked over Eva's shoulder, half-laughing, half-crying; for the spell of the past was upon her, and it was the present that seemed a dream and all unreal.

"Not 'Lady Starborough,'" she said, checking a sob which burst from a heart o'erbrimming with happiness. "Not 'Lady Starborough,'" but Ronnie. I am Ronnie here, at any rate!"

THE END.

Aggravating Courtesy.

In his "Life of Gladstone" Lord Morley somewhere notes that Mr. Gladstone affirmed that he did not remember ever to have been at a loss for a word. This was an error. Mr. Gladstone was once in the midst of a tremendous denunciatory speech in the British House of Commons.

"The right honorable member and his satellites!"—he thundered, glaring across at Mr. Disraeli. And then a sudden interruption threw him for once off his balance. Amid the tense silence Disraeli leaped forward, murmured sweetly the word "satellites," and Gladstone, bowing to the courtesy, proceeded with his denunciation.

THE USE OF DR. A. W. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD HAS BUILT UP MY SYSTEM WONDERFULLY SO THAT I CAN DO MY HOUSEWORK AND WASHING WITHOUT ANY TROUBLE, AND WANT OTHERS TO KNOW ABOUT IT."

It is on getting the genuine Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50 cts. a box, for $2.50, at all dealers, or direct from Bates & Co., Toronto.

THE FAIR IMPOSTOR.

CHAPTER I.
BEFORE THE BEGINNING.

"WORD of himself: that heritage of woe!"

Byron, when he wrote the pregnant line, knew the grim truth that lay in it; but what youth of two-and-twenty, with the world at his feet, health in his veins and the desire of life in his heart cares for axioms, true or false?

Certainly not Talbot Woodleigh, on whom the world was smiling as the world can smile on youth, strength and desire when they are embodied in one on whom the gods have bestowed most of the good gifts in their magic purse.

Talbot was not only young and "fayre to see," but the only son of a baronet, who was reputed to be the wealthiest of his rank and who idolized his son. It is not wise to spoil one's children, and the folly of the thing was exemplified in Talbot Woodleigh. His father had sent him to Eton with his pockets full of money and an allowance which was increased when he passed from the classic school fields of that aristocratic nursery for the rich and noble to Oxford. From Oxford he had sallied forth into the world with the golden spoon still protruding from his mouth.

And London, the society which is so delightful—and so dangerous—once followed his father's example and spoiled him. Mothers with marriageable daughters received him with a welcome that was loving in its warmth; men, old and young, met him halfway, sought his acquaintance and cultivated his friendship. The society and the sporting papers kept his name in type and chronicled the winnings and the losings of the handsome young heir to the Woodleigh baronetcy and vast wealth.

He had the most expensive rooms in the Albany, rode the best horses money could buy, gave entertainments which were the talk of the town; dinners, lunches, picnics, theatre parties, with suppers to follow, which made even the most sybaritic of his followers gaze with astonishment and appreciation. In short, Talbot Woodleigh was one of the most famous—shall we write "notorious"—young men of his day; and his father looked on proudly and stretched out no hand to stay.

For some time it was a life of dissipation in which the feminine interest did not enter, or so slightly as to be of little consequence. A marriage would have saved him; but Talbot had no time to think of matrimony, and no girl—that is, no lady—of the many who were presented at his head had power to hold his restless fancy.

After all, two-and-twenty is an early age for a wife, and Talbot felt that he had time to sow his crop of wild oats before he slipped on the gold ring which binds the giver as closely as the receiver.

Of the other girls, who were not ladies, and who were not eligible for the wedding ring, Talbot had a vast experience; but he passed them by, just stopping in his giddy flight for a moment to sip, as a butterfly stops to sip, the sweets from the flowers.

And the world smiled and said, exultingly, behind his fan, "Youth will be youth!"

But one night Talbot coming home from a supper party at which he had been the most joyous, the wildest of the party, saw a face whose owner was to influence not only his life, but the lives of those who were to come after him.

It was this wise. The night was fine and Talbot Woodleigh had chosen to walk from Eaton Square, the place of the supper, to his club, where he intended, late as it was, to finish "the evening." He sauntered along with his cigar in his lips, his opera hat a little on one side, his dress overcoat open and showing the spotless, creaseless shirt—a young Adonis waiting for a Venus.

The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

When you pick up a magazine what do you turn to first? If you are one of a sadly large class of magazine readers I can answer my own question.

You turn directly to the most interesting looking short story—the story that has the most alluring title, the most attractive pictures and the "best selling" name attached to it.

And when you have gobbled that story up, you read the next best, and so on down the line to the rather uninteresting story with a lot of solid print and only one or two illustrations.

Maybe you also glance at a poem or two, if they are short enough, and perhaps read the dramatic criticism.

But how often do you read any of the non-fiction articles—the true stories of what men and women are doing to better the world and make it a more livable world for other men and women, the descriptions of little known lands, the investigation and discussion of unsatisfactory conditions of Government and industry, the opinions of great men on the big economic and civic questions of the day, the stories of important inventions and discoveries, the memories of famous men?

Now I know that of course that there are a great many people who do read these things, or else they would not be bought and printed, but I also think there is an abominably large class of magazine buyers who seldom look at these non-fiction articles.

Tax anyone of these fiction-only readers with the habit and he will in all probability retort:—

"But I work hard all day, and when I get home and get hold of a magazine I'm too tired to try to educate myself. I want to be amused."

Listen, my friend. Will it really tire you so very much more to be intelligently interested occasionally than to be perpetually amused?

Some of these serious articles deal in technical terms and demand great concentration but these are decidedly in the minority, and the majority do not demand any more mental effort than is necessary to follow the antics of the characters in the customary love story and I think they will interest you full as keenly once you get accustomed to reading them.

That's the crux of the whole matter—the getting used to it.

For a person who habitually reads only fiction, to pick up a magazine and turn past the story with the alluring sketch picture of the lady with the big hat and big eyes and fuzzy hair poring tea for the man with the Greek god figure, and read instead how a certain judge has succeeded in alchemizing bad boys into good citizens, or who gets the extra five cents a pound he pays for his Sunday beef and what methods might be taken to persuade the culprit to give some of that five back, may demand self denial at first, but I don't believe you will require much after you have done it several times.

If you don't possess it, why don't you start acquiring the non-fiction article reading habit to-day?

Begin by promising yourself that in all the magazines you take up for the next month you will read at least one or two of these articles and by the end of the month I'm ready to wager you'll have the habit.

Now, don't think I'm decrying magazine fiction. I'm not. I think it would be sad indeed if one could not sometimes spend delightful hours forgetting one's self and one's cares in a clever magazine story.

I'm simply suggesting that it won't hurt you if you wean yourself from an unmixt diet of mental eclairs and cream cakes and affluar pastry—delicious though they may be—add a few literary beefsteaks and mutton broths to your magazine menu.

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, viable and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

"It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well. Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as 'just as good.'" Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drug. It is a pure glyceric extract of healing, native American roots.

HOUSEHOLD NOTES.

Watercress chopped with young onions, cooked slowly in butter and moistened with cream, is sometimes served by French chefs with veal cutlets.

Summer draperies should be free from ruffles. Ruffles are the greatest dustcatchers imaginable, and curtains with ruffles soon become unsightly.

For flavoring pudding or custard, shave a little of the rind of a lemon or an orange; it will be found a delicious change from the usual lemon extract.

Oil paints dissolved in gasoline can be used for tinting artificial flowers, and will give surprising delicate shades when properly manipulated.

To make sure that candles will not drop when used for decorative lighting, keep them in the refrigerator for several hours before they are used.

The best way to measure fractions of a spoonful, when dry materials are being used, is to fill the spoon level and then divide the contents lengthwise.

If a baby is restless at night, it is a good plan to give him a teaspoonful of water occasionally. Sleeplessness in infancy is often caused by thirst.

Dough made without baking powder can be kept in a cold place for several days, and many good cooks declare that keeping it makes the bread infinitely lighter.

If a food cutter is used to chop raisins, figs or dates, first squeeze in to the chopper a few drops of lemon juice. Then the fruit will not clog the machine.

For a delicious cake filling have ready a cupful of grated pineapple, a tablespoonful of lemon juice and sugar enough to make a consistency that will spread.

To remove grease from the top of soup, drop in pieces of brown wrapping paper while the soup is hot. They will absorb the grease and can then be thrown out.

Pastry to which baking powder has been added must be put into the oven as quickly as possible, as the action of the powder begins as soon as it is moistened.

Why Colder Sea Yields More Fish.

"Recent Hydrobiological Investigations" is the forbidding title of an interesting study by James Johnstone in Science Progress. The registration of temperatures and fish catches at the Lofoten cod fishery during the last five years shows that with the strength of the Gulf Stream flow the temperature rises, and the higher the temperature the later in the year do the cod shoals approach the fishing grounds. Conversely, a weak Gulf Stream flow corresponds to a lower temperature and to an earlier and generally good fishery. What leads to a good harvest on land leads to a bad harvest at sea. Now why should a colder sea mean a heavier catch? Further investigation has shown that in the fuller Gulf Stream, and consequently higher temperature, the fish are less mature, less well nourished, and their reproductive organs less fully ripened. The suggested solution of this problem is that the inorganic food-stuffs, compounds of nitrogen and carbon, on which diatoms and other protophyta feed, which are swept down into the Polar Sea from the Siberian and other rivers, are kept back by a strong Gulf Stream flow, and the fish therefore are deprived of their desired nutrient. When the Gulf Stream flows with less strength, then the current from the waters under the Polar ice comes down laden with this food-stuff, and at once lowers the temperature and provides the fish with their requisite nourishment.

Weird Missionary Tales.

LONDON, May 31.—After having spent eighteen years among the wild tribes of the northwest frontier of India, Dr. Theodore L. Pennell, a medical missionary of the Church Missionary Society, has just arrived in London on a brief visit.

"On the Afghan frontier a husband is very jealous of his wife's honor," he said, "and if he has a suspicion that anything is wrong, he just cuts off her nose. Some time ago a husband, who had shown his displeasure in this barbaric manner, brought his wife to our hospital at Bannu, and said he was very sorry. There was very little of the nose left, and there was, therefore, nothing that we could do.

"I told him that if he would pay the money, we would get his wife an artificial nose from England. He asked me how much it would cost, and I said $10. He began to hesitate, and I asked him the reason. 'Well,' he said, 'I could get another wife for about $28.' Eventually he agreed to buy the nose, and his old wife was patched up."

Dr. Pennell gave another illustration of matrimonial jealousy.

"One day," he said, "an Afghan chief, who had been across the border, came back and saw his wife speaking to a man over the wall in his compound. He at once drew his sword, cut off his wife's head, and threw it to the man, saying, 'if you want to speak to her now, you can.'"

Pork and Beef remain at famine prices, and BREAD is the most economical and health-giving food we can buy. But there is bread and bread. It depends on the flour. A chemical analysis will show that

OBITUARY.

We regret to have to record to-day the death of Mrs. Charlotte Sparkes, wife of the late Capt. John Sparkes, which sad event occurred at the residence of Mr. Eli. Tuck, Freshwater Road. The deceased had been a great sufferer for a lengthy period, and her death was not unexpected. The funeral takes place on Sunday at 2.30 p.m., from 46 Freshwater Road. To the relatives and friends the Telegram extends its sympathy.

The death occurred on Wednesday last at Robinson's Head, Bay St. George, of Mrs. Gertrude Shears, nee Crane, after an illness of some duration. Mrs. Shears who was only in her 23rd year at the time of her death was for several years Church of England school teacher and was esteemed and beloved not only by her pupils but all the people of the place. Her parents reside at Upper Island Cove and to them her husband and other relatives the Telegram extends its condolence.

Clothing for Honor and Beauty.

Let us see how garments were spoken of symbolically:—Aaron had to wear Holy Garments for honor and beauty (see Exodus XXV III. 2); Solomon said: "Let the garment be always white"; Isaiah says: "He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation." We are told in Zechariah that Joshua, the High Priest, stood in filthy garments, and the Angel was told to put on him clean garments. The garment, the apparel of a person, very oft bespeaks his attributes. The keen intelligent eye, discovers and dislikes uncleanness. So go to B. ### World's Record in Paper Making.

Grand Falls Mills Ahead of All Other Mills.

Last week we chronicled one day's world's record in paper making. Today we give a far larger record for a week's output as the following figures will show. The correct world's record for any one machine ere this was held in the United States, the turn-out for 24 hours being there 109,850 lbs. newspaper, 136 inch trimmed; against this on June 1st there was rolled off of No. 2 Machine at Grand Falls, 126,446 lbs. paper, 136 inch trimmed, in 24 hours. This day's work gives the Newfoundland mill 16,596 lbs. more paper rolled off in the above space of time than was ever known in the world's history. The production for the two machines for one week was according to official records:—

| PRODUCTION. |          |          |           |
|-------------|----------|----------|-----------|
| Date.       | Machine. | Machine. | Total.    |
|             | lbs.     | lbs.     | lbs.      |
| May 30.     | 115,573  | 123,920  | 239,503   |
| May 31.     | 119,817  | 122,305  | 242,122   |
| June 1.     | 117,647  | 126,446  | 244,093   |
| June 2.     | 121,532  | 122,438  | 243,970   |
| June 3.     | 104,919  | 119,989  | 224,908   |
| June 4.     | 113,137  | 117,577  | 230,714   |
|             | 692,625  | 732,685  | 1,425,310 |

It will be observed from the foregoing figures that for one day's work Newfoundland has for its best day 16,596 lbs. of newspaper more to its credit, and for the week she holds an average of 8,909 lbs. (for every 24 hours' run) over and above all other mills in the world to date. John P. Riley, the Superintendent, and John J. Gately, paper maker, their expert aids and Newfoundland workmen who were at this turn-out are receiving encomiums of praise from all sides on this splendid showing. It might be stated that more paper was turned out in 24 hours than this. If so, it is right for us here to explain that none but larger machines did so. Messrs. Riley and Gately had a 158 instead of a 136 inch trim they would no doubt knock out that record a badly as they have beaten the 136 inch one. Whilst a good deal of credit is due the workmen, the A. N. D. Co. are deserving of the highest praise for sparing no expense in installing the most modern up to date and record breaking mill in the world to-day at Grand Falls. A meed of praise is due Messrs. Beeton, Surcham and Scott for their indefatigable efforts in bringing this plant up to its present standard. Grand Falls throws down the gauntlet to the world and asks them to beat this record. In the opinion of many it will be a long while ere such a record is approached.

New Church at Grand Falls.

At a meeting of the Presbyterians, together with Congregationalists and Baptists, at Grand Falls on April 25th, it was decided to build a Presbyterian Church there (the building to cost about $3,000.00). A committee was appointed and authorized to place a contract to have the building erected as soon as possible.

The venture has been entered into very enthusiastically by all concerned, and although the congregation is rather small in numbers, they have responded so liberally when called upon that there is no doubt as to the success of the undertaking.

The A. N. D. Co., with their usual readiness to help along any worthy cause, have given the site for the proposed Church. The people have subscribed $1,000 themselves toward the building; and with some help from the Church in Canada, and from their friends in St. John's and elsewhere, are hopeful of entering their Church in a few months nearly, if not quite, free of debt.

Worms

"Cascarets are certainly fine. I gave a friend one when the doctor was treating him for cancer of the stomach. The next morning he passed four pieces of a tape worm. He then got a box and in three days he passed a tape worm 45 feet long. It was Mr. Matt Freck, of Millersburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. I am quite a worker for Cascarets. I use them myself and find them beneficial for most any disease caused by impure blood."

Lost a Man.

The barq. Ada Peard arrived here yesterday afternoon to Balne Johnston & Co. after a run of 21 days from Barbadoes with 528 puncheons of molasses. She had fine, moderate weather on the run. On the voyage to Pernambuco from this port the vessel had terrible weather for a time, and one day while this lasted a young seaman, an Englishman, named Payne, was washed overboard and drowned about 8 o'clock at night. A terrible sea ran, and the vessel on being hit with the sea, which swept the man overboard, had the wheel house carried away and the stanchions and bulwarks battered to pieces with other damage. It was impossible to save the poor fellow in the weather conditions which prevailed.

More Men Desert.

The barq. Dunure sailed this forenoon for Oporto. She had been delayed since Wednesday as four men of her crew had left the vessel and gone on a spree. Three of them were jailed by the police last night and a fourth went on board of his own accord. The men who were in the station were put on board this morning. When the men absented themselves the mate was sent to look for them, but he also refused to go in the ship and a new mate had to be signed on.

POLICE COURT NEWS.

To-day two drunks were discharged. Three seamen of the Dunure who were up for desertion were put on board the vessel. A disorderly in charge of a horse was fined $2 or 7 days. A young man who was recorded on a charge of having stolen $10, the money of his sister, and who purchased clothing out of the most of it was released. His sister would not prosecute, and he will give up the cash he has left of the amount ($27) and the goods which he purchased. In the Central District Court A. Carnell, wheelwright, summoned C. L. March & Co. for $28 for work done for deft. Several witnesses for pitf. were examined, and the further hearing was postponed until Friday next.

They were two of the crew of the banking schooner Musette, fishing on the Banks. Last Saturday week they were out overhauling their trawls and when they went to start for their vessel the fog closed down. They drifted about four days and five nights with nothing to eat only a few water soaked biscuits and a bottle of water. They rowed till they were exhausted and then fell down to sleep. On the fifth day the Lorna Doone bore down on them and took them on board. They were well cared for and landed at St. Anthony, where they waited till the Prospero was returning. The French Consul is now looking after the needs of the men and will send them to St. Pierre. The Musette is from St. Malo, France.

The local arrived from Carboneau at 12.10 p.m. to-day bringing J. J. Murray, H. Keeping, J. R. Goodison, Rev. Canon Temple, Rev. R. Willey and 20 others.

ENGAGED.—A young lady in a West End showroom and a young man in the employ of the Reid Nfd. Co. have announced their engagement.

CASH STOLEN.—Mr. John Kane, shoemaker, of New Gower St., after opening his place this morning discovered the desk had been forced open and all the cash—$11.00—stolen. He has an idea of the thief. Police are on the job.

ROSALIND HERE.—The s.s. Rosalind, Capt. Smith, arrived here from Montreal and Gulf ports at 10.30 this morning. She had fine weather down and brought a large cargo. Her passengers were R. Webber, Mr. and Mrs. Shears, Mr. and Miss Lomis, Miss McLeod, W. Herder, Mrs. S. Chamberlain and 5 steerage. She sails at 6 p.m. to-morrow.

The S. S. Prospero, Capt. A. Kean, arrived at 1 p.m. to-day. She had fine weather on the run up but had considerable fog on the run north. She brought a fair cargo and these passengers:—

Messrs. Howley, Morgan, Osmond, Hart (2), Christian, Ward, Dr. McDonald, Facey, Danvische, Revs. Facey, Butler, Penny, Bell and Ward and a number of ladies.

Last night a number of youngsters were playing rather noisily around Harvey Road and appeared to annoy some boys of one of the city brigades, one of whom in dispersing them with a hockey stick hit a girl named Rodgers and cut her pretty severely about the head. A relative of the girl brought her down to the police station and complained of the matter. She had to be attended to by a doctor and it is likely the person who struck her will be summoned.

"CLOTHES."

The Chicago Stock Co. opened their first season here last night before a big audience in the People's Theatre. They presented "Clothes," a drama which satirizes the foibles of dress and frills in smart society. The drama itself depicts the struggle between two emotions, the love which is implanted to men and women, and innate in humane nature and the ordinate love of dress, an artificial but fascinating emotion. The interplay of the two emotions gives rise to striking situations of perplexity and passion, and eventually ends with the shattering of the ideal of clothes and the triumph of the divine impulse which makes all the world akin. The stage settings are appropriate, ample and picturesque, the dresses charming and attractive, and the deportment that of the Society they hold up before the audience. We should imagine that the stage managers had some difficulty in adapting their stage setting to the small stage space at their disposal, but they undoubtedly pay great attention to every detail of stage management and have the most elaborate and beautiful sets of scenery that any troupe have placed before an audience here. The players themselves are masters of their art. There is no tearing a passion to tatters, or any outcropping of Herod. The enunciation is distinct, delivery effective and the playing smooth.

Mr. Dorente, the leading man, made a strong impression. Miss Brae was attractive in her role and charming in her gowns, illustrative of "Clothes" and their foibles and fascination.

We cannot go into further details as to the players who supported them, who are a fine and well-balanced combination. In short, the company are worth it.

made a strong and favorable impression last night, and should be able to hold big houses during their four weeks' season. We commend them to the attention of our readers. They are worth it.

College Cricket.
The Felldians and Methodists played at St. George's Field last evening. The game was decided in favor of the latter on the result of the first innings in which they put up a score of 55 runs against 47 made by the Felldians. C. Fenwick contributed 27 to the Methodists' score, and batted beautifully. Messrs. W. W. Blackall and C. W. Ryan were the umpires.
The Felldians have now a total of 4 points to their credit as against two each on the part of the other colleges.

Note of Thanks to Rev. Canon Smith

Editor Evening Telegram:
Dear Sir.—I wish to offer my hearty thanks to the Rev. Canon Smith for his advice and counsel re Catholicity of the Church of England. I have no doubt, whatever, on that point, and it was not for that reason that I wrote, neither was it to receive assurance of its being so; but being young and enthusiastic and alive to all such questions, especially those regarding my Church, I could not bear to hear such a remark passed without feeling hurt; and then when I saw it answered by the Rev. Mr. Hewitt I had to give vent to my feelings and congratulate him for doing so. I am sorry to see that he is the only clergyman in the country to take it up, and it was for that reason as much, perhaps, as for any other that I wrote. I think silence on the part of the clergy on such a question would cause their people to misrepresent them and perhaps cause some uneasiness if not harm among the illiterate, for there are many of our people who are not fully instructed on the subject, and it is very seldom that we get a sermon on sectarianism, in fact, I have never heard one, and I venture to say that half of our people if asked the question: "Why do you belong to the Church of England," would not be able to answer it; therefore, I say that such a statement made by His Grace the Archbishop should be answered so that our people may be made aware of the fact that we are not afraid to stand up for our Faith.
It is all very well to talk of peace but when ill-feeling is aroused, caused by such a statement how can peace be restored until the question is explained and settled satisfactorily; for as I said above, unfortunately there are a good many who are not well instructed and convinced on the subject or there would not be so many leaving the Church and joining other sects.
As to the Godly and Christian lives led by some of our Roman Catholic brethren I have no doubt. Certain it is quite natural for a man to follow the instructions of his childhood and as he is taught so he will live "Bring up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it." I consider that the doctrines taught in any Church whether right or wrong, will not deprave a man from entering heaven therefore, if the people believe in a wrong doctrine, which they have been taught, and which they have been learned to put faith in, it is not their fault, and, therefore, "will be beaten with few stripes." If a blind man put faith in a guide to lead him to a place of safety and the guide leads him into danger, whose fault is it—the blind man's or the leader's?
Sir, I did not intend to say so much when I commenced, and if I have said anything, whether in this or in the preceding article, to offend any of my Roman Catholic brethren, I will apologise and humbly beg their pardon; and rev. sir, I will in the future take your advice and have nothing more to say on the subject whether occasion rises or no, but if I should I will follow your example and simply laugh at it.
Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for space,
I remain yours, etc.,
H. DAWE.
Ronne Bay, June 6th. 1910.

Football Fives.

A large attendance of people interested in sports viewed the play by the preliminary football fives at St. George's Field last evening.
The Casuals beat the C. E. I. in the Senior League by two goals to one.
The Collegians defeated the Felldians by a similar score, and the St. Bon's gained lost ground by knocking out the Star by one goal.
The Highlanders beat the C. C. C. by two goals and one corner; and the Methodist Guards outshone the C. L. B. by one goal to nil.
The Methodist College won against the Bishop Field boys by a goal and a corner.
During the evening the C. L. B. Band played fine selections of music which greatly added to the pleasure of the evening.
The balance of the preliminaries will be played to-night.
Mr. W. J. Higgins did the referee work in his usual equitable and disinterested manner.

Trout Competition.

Yesterday some splendid trout were brought into the Martin Hardware store. They were caught by Waltonians who whipped the streams and lakes in the country on Wednesday. The fish were on exhibition in the window of the store yesterday. Mr. A. Pincock took the first prize with a rainbow weighing 3 lb. 1 oz.; Mr. W. Pittman was second with a German brown, 15 oz.; and Mr. E. O'Neill third, with a half dozen natives weighing 2 lbs. 4 oz. The prizes received were for 1st and 2nd two fine trout, and the 3rd a fishing reel.

MUNICIPAL METHODS The Way We Do Things.

Editor Evening Telegram:
Dear Sir.—Though the Torphy incident in its immediate consequences has been a misfortune for the city, we may hope that its ultimate results may redound to the city's advantage. It is no small matter to have discovered that our present Council is quite incapable of discharging the duties it was expected by the electorate to fulfill, for it may lead us to choose not only different men than those now in office, but a different class of men. If this result is achieved we may console ourselves and even rejoice that a discipline was administered to us which has been severe enough to turn us towards civic righteousness and efficiency. It may be thought that the Council has been already exposed as being guilty of every sort of incapacity which a municipal body can be charged with, but this is a mistake there is still another feature in their conduct which so far has not been presented to the public gaze. I propose now to develop this feature. Gentlemen, in whom such high powers and great responsibilities are vested might not unreasonably be expected to display ordinary judgment and discretion, when matters of moment come before them for decision. Their own unaided intelligence is inadequate to the determination of the issues, they have officially decided might also not unreasonably be expected that they would call to their assistance those of better judgment and more expert knowledge than themselves. This is all the more to be reckoned upon when the services of just such persons are not only available to the Council, but are expressly provided for the purpose of being consulted in such cases of difficulty. Yet it would seem that the egregiously body whose inefficiency I have been celebrating have studiously neglected the assistance of the experts who are retained to give advice and counsel, but some other inexpert advice has been taken and followed. We know that the Council wished to acquire the Torphy property for the use of the city, for the attempt to acquire it was made. And we give the Council the credit of not wishing deliberately to prevent their successors from acquiring the property—still less do we charge them with wilfully conspiring to make the obstruction they deprecated more extensive and more difficult to remove. Yet this is what they did. What reasons, then, moved them to this course? The reason first alleged was that, although the Council could prevent the erection of a new house, if it so desired it could not interfere with alteration to an old one, even though those alterations amounted practically to rebuilding, and though the foundations were permitted to thrust further forward towards the street. Now it is quite plain that such a construction of a statute as this is would never present itself to the singularly commonplace minds of this Council. Yet this construction did recommend itself to the intelligence of some person, who not only communicated it to the Council, or some member of that ### body, but had the address to secure acceptance for his notion. Now, to whom did this sapient notion occur; to which of the Councilors was it communicated? We know the person who did NOT suggest this idea to the Council, and that is the Solicitor, for the fact is that the Solicitor was not called in to advise upon the matter. Here, then, is a very singular circumstance in the conduct of our Councilors. They have at their disposal the services of a Solicitor whose duty it is to advise them whenever he is called upon in just such nice matters as this. And there need be no delicacy in requesting the benefit of his opinion, for he is very handsomely paid indeed for rendering it. Then why was he not called in? Why not his advice taken and followed? Surely this was just such an occasion as called for the professional advice of the Council's lawyer, for the Council saw itself not only balked of a design which it pressed at least to cherish, but saw that design in danger of being buried for all time, and, worse than all, saw themselves converted into the instruments for thwarting their own wishes and prejudicing the city whose welfare they were in duty bound to serve. And yet, from start to finish, so far as I can discover, the Solicitor's advice was never sought and never taken. And, to make matters worse still, advice which did not proceed from their own Solicitor, or from any Solicitor, or from any person competent to advise upon the construction of a statute, was actually taken. Whether it was sought or not does not matter. The point is that it was taken, and that responsible advice was not. It is difficult to express in polite terms one's sense of the fatuous folly of gentlemen who act like this. With these concluding remarks I have done, I hope, with the Torphy incident. I have dealt with this incident at length, not so much, perhaps, out of regard to its intrinsic importance, as for the sake of the illustration it gives of the methods of the Council which still misgoverns the city. This transaction alone should seal the fate of any member of the present Municipal Board who sought re-election, but I shall endeavour in a future letter or two to show that this is not at all an isolated instance of the mismanagement of our civic affairs which has been going on during the last four years.

On Military Road in some places it has been noticed that parts of the ties and track of the street railway line laid there a few years ago protrude in some cases the rails rising a couple of inches over the ground. This is especially so opposite Mrs. Summers' store. This is a great source of annoyance to drivers of vehicles, is a danger to horses, and this and other places like it should be covered.

The Papal Encyclical and the Reformation.

Special to Evening Telegram.
BERLIN, June 9.
Chancellor Von Bethman Hollweg, replying to an interpellation in the Prussian Diet to-day spoke with decided emphasis regarding the recently issued Papal Encyclical, which he construed as condemnatory of religious Reformers. The Chancellor said: "The Papal Encyclical contains judgments about Reformers and the Reformation and about Princes and people. This explains the profound emotion in wide circles, the effects of which must endanger religious peace. Immediately after the Latin text of the Encyclical had been read, representation made to the Vatican by the German envoy, who expressed the expectation of Germany that Curia would find a way to remedy the damage caused by the issuance of the Encyclical. The Vatican has not yet replied to the interpellation at this stage, so as to let the German people know the position of the Government, which has taken up the matter, and also to assure the House that the Government is determined to do everything to insure religious peace with the Vatican that can be done in the national interests. The Encyclical issued on the occasion of the third century of the organization of Charles Horretemet extolled Borromeo, as the champion of Catholicism, against the Protestant Reformation, and declares that at the time of the Council of Trent all the principles of Catholicism has been undermined by Martin Luther.

Mr. Roosevelt's English Visit.

Special to Evening Telegram.
LONDON, June 9.
Theo. Roosevelt's brief visit to England ending to-morrow, though unfortunately coinciding with the period of national mourning, and for that reason shorn of much of its splendour was nevertheless one of the most noteworthy foreign visits paid to England in recent years. No foreign ruler or man of eminence could have aroused more universal attention, received a warmer welcome or achieved popularity among every class of society. It is true that his lecture on Egyptian affairs occasioned political resentment in some quarters, but he was regarded as a privileged guest, in whom no unworthy or unfriendly motive could be suspected, and the frankness of his utterance is taken as a measure of the strength and friendship binding the two nations.

President McGrath's Comments on Longshoremen's Labour.

Editor Evening Telegram:
Dear Sir.—I notice by the daily papers that a meeting of labour employers was held in the Board of Trade rooms yesterday. The reason alleged why the meeting was called was owing to a shortage of labourers to work on all steamers which were in port a few days ago, and in particular the S. S. Mongolian.
With regard to this allegation I beg to say that there was no shortage of labourers upon any of the steamers in port except the S. S. Mongolian. Owing to the foggy weather which prevailed a greater number of steamers than ever before entered port, and on one of the number alone was there any shortage. Even on this one there would be no shortage of workmen to handle cargo if conditions from a labour standpoint were the same on Shea & Co's premises as on others.
Now, what are the facts? When Shea & Co. have a steamer to discharge they always make it a point to employ a less number of men to handle cargo, than any other steam-berth agents. For instance, when two derricks are working in the hold, eight men are employed at the two derricks; on other premises twelve men are employed. Of course Shea & Co. may think they are effecting a save in wages, but it takes a longer time to discharge a ship with eight men on two derricks than if they employ twelve. Longshoremen, in consequence, are not at all anxious to go to work on steamers which come to Shea & Co's premises, and would rather not go to work there at all, only circumstances, over which they have no control force them to do so. Numbers of them absolutely refuse to work on Shea & Co's premises for the reason that attempts are made to make them work harder, and do more work than any other employer of labour calls upon them to do.

When a shortage of labourers was reported to me in connection with the work on the S. S. Mongolian men were sent by me to the foreman in charge of the work, but he refused to employ them. If there was really a shortage, and anxiety to get work done quickly why were not these men employed? The Longshoremen have no desire to impede business or trade, on the contrary the more business and trade that come into the country the better for them, but, on their behalf I feel that I cannot allow this to pass without letting the public know the real facts.
By inserting the above you will oblige.
Yours truly,
JAMES McGRATH,
President Longshoremen's Protective Union.

Should Be Enclosed.

The evil of allowing horses to graze along the suburban roads at night has been referred to in the press, but remains unabated. In all sections animals wander about the roads, some of them very vicious beasts, and people from the city going countrywards run the risk, especially on dark nights, of being injured, if not killed, by these animals. Something should be done to keep horses enclosed in fields at night.

The A. P. C. nurse is continually meeting with consumptive cases in homes where adults who are more or less advanced cases are habitually sleeping with children. The latter are thereby placed in great danger of contracting the disease. The nurse has to insist that separate beds and bedding must be provided, so that the sound members of the family shall not be obliged to share the same bed and bedding as the consumptive. It is often impossible for these families to obtain such beds and bedding, and one of the greatest needs to be provided for, therefore, is beds and bedding of any kind. Invalid or easy chairs are also badly needed. Any such articles which the spring house-cleaning discloses, and which are not required, will be thankfully received and put to good use. If anyone wishes to make a donation, same can either be sent to the A. P. C. office (Harvey's Building), or if a post card be sent to C. Noonan, Acting Secretary A. P. ## The Fishery Question.

Light From History on the Dispute--Important Letter From W. G. Gosling, Esq.

(Concluded.)

After peace was thus declared, the fisheries were prosecuted in accordance with the provisions of the treaty. United States fishermen flocked to the Labrador in ever increasing numbers, until in 1809 it was stated that 1,500 vessels visited that coast. They always pursued the same route, going through the Gut of Canso, round by Bay Chaleur to the Magdalen Islands and to Labrador. They nearly succeeded in crowding British fishermen off that coast, and numerous complaints were made of their aggressive conduct. On the Nova Scotia coast also they are continually complained of, but in regard to Newfoundland there is complete silence.

The fishery reports of English naval captains contain no reference to U. S. fishermen, nor do United States authorities claim any use of Newfoundland waters by their fishery vessels. Petitions from the merchants of Newfoundland in 1812, and from the Legislature of Nova Scotia in 1816, make no complaint in regard to any fishery carried on by U. S. fishermen in Newfoundland. A witness before a House of Commons Committee in 1817 stated that prior to 1812 U. S. vessels were always kept by English cruisers at a suitable distance off the coast of Newfoundland.

It is therefore indisputably the fact that U. S. fishermen recognized their restricted rights in regard to the coasts of Newfoundland. Chief Justice Ross, of Newfoundland, writing a few years after the Treaty of 1783, says "That revolution has made an alteration in the value and importance of Newfoundland, which seems to me never to have been sufficiently considered. It appears to me that since the peace of 1783, Newfoundland has been more completely her own; that it has been a more genuine British fishery and of more value to the Mother Country than it ever before. There is no longer the competition and interloping trade of the New Englanders so much complained of heretofore by the merchants."

The war of 1812 terminated all fishery operations by U. S. fishermen in finally culminated in the Convention of London, 1818. During the negotiations, 1816-1818, temporary liberty to fish in unoccupied British-American bays was granted to U. S. fishermen.

The experiences of past years are again evidenced in the Treaty. The Legislature of Nova Scotia had protested so loudly against the use of their coasts, which were becoming rapidly settled, that the English negotiators succeeded in freeing them, and a clause was inserted whereby the U. S. agreed to abstain from fishing within three miles of the coasts, bays, harbors and creeks of British America not otherwise specified. This clause was inserted at the instance of the U. S. negotiators who wished their agreement to abstain put on record as evidence of their contention that they had rights to be relinquished. They were particularly willing to forego any privileges on these coasts because, as was afterwards disclosed, evidence had been furnished to the effect that the important cod fisheries were at some distance from the coast.

In regard to the Labrador, remembering the enormous fishery carried on by them before the war, and the above mentioned evidence having also impressed upon them the fact that the fisheries were carried on close along shore on the Labrador, they sought and obtained full rights of taking and curing fish on the coasts, bays, harbors and creeks, from Mount Joli in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, through the Straits of Belle Isle, and thence northward indefinitely.

The restricted privileges in regard to the "coast" of Newfoundland were renewed, with the following changes: Instead of its being the British section as in 1783, it was now confined to the disputed French Shore, with the addition of that portion of the south coast from Ramea Islands to Cape Ray, and upon this latter section they were also given the privilege of entering unoccupied bays, harbors and creeks and landing to dry and cure fish. The American plenipotentiaries had been again furnished with a careful letter of instruction containing a "sine qua non." During the negotiations this was revealed. They said they were forbidden "to assent to any article which did not secure to the inhabitants of the United States the liberty of taking and curing fish of every kind on the southern coast of Newfoundland, from Cape Ray to the Ramea Islands, and on the coasts, bays, harbors and creeks of Labrador." It will be seen that they had not asked for any rights on Newfoundland coasts except on a very small section, and the question may be asked, why the west coast of Newfoundland was thrown in as a make weight? No account of the negotiations furnishes us with any further evidence on the point, but the reason is not altogether unimaginable. On the part of the U. S. any addition was acceptable, and it was not their business to look a gift horse in the mouth, and as their treaty of alliance with France had been abrogated they were under no obligation to consider them. From the English point of view, the French had already set up their claim to the sole right of fishery on the so-called French Shore, a claim which was not very strongly contested at that time, and as the coast therefore was of no particular value to them, they let the Americans have a share in it; then the Americans and the French could fight it out. It would certainly strengthen the British claim to grant rights there to the U. S., which argument was, in fact, used all through the long disputes with the French about the coast.

It is interesting to trace the negotiations in regard to that position of the coast from Ramea Islands to Cape Ray. During the preliminary negotiations in 1817, Mr. Bagot, England's representative at Washington, made a tentative offer of this section, which was refused by the U. S. because they said that they could not learn that the coast had ever been used by their vessels, or was likely ever to be of any value to them. During the final negotiations they, however, stipulated for it because, no doubt, of the previous offer. So far as I have been able to discover this grant has been of no value to the U. S. They have made little or no use of the right to fish on the open coasts; have not attempted to fish in the bays or creeks and have not dried their fish on the shores.

In past disputes about the Convention of 1818 an endeavour has been made to prove that the words do not mean what they say. For instance that the terms "coasts of Newfoundland," "shores of the Magdalen Islands," and "coasts, bays, harbors and creeks of Labrador," all mean exactly the same thing. That a bay is not a bay if it is over 6 miles wide at the mouth, and so on; that the framers of the Treaty did not know what they were talking about, and used words loosely and without consideration. There could be no greater mistake. The plenipotentiaries on both sides were some of the most able men of the day, and on the American side at least, they were furnished with abundance of evidence as to what was wanted. When they said coasts, they meant coasts, and when they stipulated for bays, harbors and creeks, it was their intention to get all the inshore waters as well. One general principle underlies both treaties—a principle which explains many of their peculiarities, and the overlooking of which has occasioned many of the disputes which have arisen.

They were purely codfish treaties. At that period no other fishery was prosecuted in distant waters. This position was put very clearly by Mr. Dwight Foster, Consul for the U. S. at Halifax in 1878. He said: "There was no mackerel fishery then (1818). This controversy (prior to 1818) was in reference to the ocean fisheries, to the codfishery and whale fishery." "We relinquished this right (to the inshore fisheries of Nova Scotia) because our fishing at that time was entirely a deep sea fishing." "The cod fisheries were all the parties had in mind in making the Treaty of 1818."

"We got all that was then thought useful in the times of codfishery." Precisely. And most of the disputes which have since occurred have been occasioned by the United States endeavouring to make this codfish treaty suit the exigencies of other fisheries which have arisen, particularly the mackerel and herring fisheries, of which there was no conception in 1818.

This fact will have to be taken into consideration over and over again during the arbitration at the Hague. The conduct of the fisheries in the first years succeeding the Treaty is most interesting and important, throwing light on both the past and future.

United States fishermen hastened first of all to their favourite fishing grounds on the coast of Labrador. Freed again from interference, with full rights to the inshore fisheries and with the privilege of landing and curing their fish anywhere, for Labrador was almost entirely unsettled, they went there in hundreds. The history of their fishery upon that coast is told fully in my book on Labrador and need not be repeated here. As to Newfoundland, the Governors of that Colony reported year after year that the U. S. fishermen had made no use of their privilege of drying fish on the south coast and that some of their vessels had been seen upon that coast. Labrador was obviously more attractive.

On the west or northwest coast a few U. S. vessels had put in an appearance but were immediately driven off by French cruisers. Representations were at once made by the American Government to France, and a considerable correspondence ensued. The position was held by the United States that the French had only a concurrent right with the English, and the French as strongly maintained that theirs was an exclusive right. Sir Chas. Hamilton, Governor of Newfoundland, gave it as his opinion that the open coast fisheries were as much the common right of all as the Grand Banks, but that the French should not be interfered with inshore, and pointed out that it was immaterial to the United States which possessed much greater privileges on the south coast of Newfoundland and in the virgin fishing grounds of Labrador. Here the matter seems to have rested. The French never abandoned their claim to exclusive rights, and protested systematically against British fishermen on the coast, and to the Americans, on the rare occasions when they intruded. In Good's "American Fisheries" it is stated that "when there was a French fishing station foreign vessels were not permitted to fish," and instances a U. S. whalibuter having been interfered with. Prior to 1818 the U. S. had no right of fishing on the west coast, any rights that they had under the Treaty of 1783 being on the south and east coasts; they therefore had no occasion to be particular as to the wording of the fishing privileges accorded to them by the Treaty of 1818 on that coast.

From that time until after the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, we have no account of a United States fishery on either the south or west coast of Nfld. A careful search of the records has failed to reveal any trace of a regular or even spasmodic use of the Nfld. coast by U. S. vessels. While this is true of the coasts it is doubly true of the bays, harbors and creeks. This is not to say that isolated instances may not be found, but one swallow does not make a summer, nor one poacher a fishery.

The herring fishery was unknown and not prosecuted by anybody in 1818, nor for a generation and more afterward. The French Shore was almost abandoned by the English, and our latent rights were only gradually enforced as the country became settled. There was therefore no authority on the west coast except British cruisers to note the actions of the Americans, and it is more than probable that they would have supported any such American vessels rather than have obstructed them.

It was not until after the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 that we hear of United States vessels in the inshore waters of Newfoundland. In that year the frozen herring trade had its beginning and soon grew to considerable proportions. By that Treaty U. S. fishermen were made free of all British American waters; but again it is a remarkable circumstance that they did not exercise their right of taking herring in the bays, but invariably purchased them from Nfld. fishermen. There were but two exceptions to this rule—in Fortune Bay in 1877, and at Bay of Islands in 1905, on which occasion serious disputes and complications arose.

On the small strip of south coast it will be noted that there are no great bays as in other parts of Newfoundland. So far as history tells us there has never been any codfishery in the narrow inlets which are to be found there, and as the herring fishery was unknown in 1818, the U. S. could have no possible object in asking for liberty to fish in them.

In regard to this strip of coast, therefore, there has been no occasion to this day to raise the question whether the U. S. have or have not a right to fish in the bays, for no such fishery has been exercised, so far as can be ascertained.

The above short historical sketch of British North American fisheries in relation to the treaties of 1783 and 1818 will, I believe, explain many of the obscure or debatable points contained in them; but it is naturally impossible to enter upon a lengthy discussion in the restricted space of this article. I would like, however, to observe on the matter of jurisdiction raised by question 1 that the Americans as colonists never had any controlling or regulatory powers in British North America fisheries, nor even did the loyal colonists until long after the Treaty of 1783. It seems therefore absurd to suppose that England would have consented to convey any such powers in the liberty to fish granted to the U. S., or, in fact, that the U. S. would have dreamed of asking for such powers. The liberties granted to the U. S. were exactly similar in nature to the liberty granted by one gentleman to another to shoot on his estate.

I think it is clearly proven in the foregoing that—

- (1) Newfoundland was viewed by England very differently from the other colonies and was always carefully preserved.
  - (2) The Treaty of 1818 was framed for the codfishery.
  - (3) The plenipotentiaries of the United States knew exactly what they wanted.
  - (4) The language used in the Treaty was most carefully chosen to give effect to the meaning of both parties.
- When, therefore, liberties were accorded to "inhabitants of the United States" (question 2), Great Britain had as little intention of granting, as the United States had of securing, privileges for any other nation or people. By no species of sophistry can the fishermen of Bay of Islands be transmuted into "inhabitants of the United States."

When the United States bargained so carefully for privileges in the "bays, harbors and creeks" of Labrador but were satisfied with the "coasts" only of Newfoundland (question 6), they knew exactly what the different terms implied. They demanded and secured all they at that time thought would or could be of use to them, which Great Britain would grant.

When they renounced their liberty to fish within three marine miles of certain other "coasts, bays, harbors and creeks" (question 5), they included, and were willing to include, every bay, whether 6 or 60 miles across the mouth. "So it is nominated in the bond," for the words used, when extended, are as follows: "Three marine miles of the coasts, three marine miles of the bays, three marine miles of the creeks, and three marine miles of the harbors." If the word "coasts" included all its indentations, as has been contended by the United States, there was no necessity to insert the words "bays, harbors and creeks."

Questions 3, 4 and 7 would seem to depend rather upon the comity of nations than upon language used in the Treaty.

In conclusion, it must be stated that each dispute has been occasioned by some new attempt on the part of the United States to exceed their treaty privileges. For instance, the question of bays (5) arose in 1838 when the U. S. fishing vessels essayed to fish for mackerel in the bays of Nova Scotia. The question of regulation (1) arose in 1878, when the U. S. fishermen attempted to take herring on a Sunday in Fortune Bay. That of the meaning of "coasts of Nfld." (6) and "inhabitants of the United States" (2) in 1905-6, when the U. S. fishermen wanted to seine herring at Bay of Islands and to ship as crews the fishermen of that locality.

It will be observed that these circumstances were not dreamed of in the philosophy of the framers of the codfish treaty.

The Convention of London, 1818, has long outlasted its usefulness.
