Political Independence: It is a fact to be deplored, but cannot be gained, that the people of Canada have lost much of their patriotism.

Rest of mankind because of traditions which have only a fabulous foundation.

Even among the Jews who have not sunk into the materialism against which the pope so bitterly inveighs, there are many who no longer see any merit in stubbornly adhering to ancient religious customs.

They are not in harmony with the life around them. They do not deem them of essential importance, and think that the hardships their observance imposes on Jews are altogether unnecessary.

Very likely, too, the preservation of those customs and the rigid enforcement of them by the synagogues may tend rather to create unbelief than to preserve the old faith.

They may be altogether driven away from religion. They may rebel against such interference with their individual liberty of action, and so gradually lose the religious spirit and prejudices of their race.

The keeping of Saturday as a holy day may be especially inconvenient for vast numbers of Jews, for whether they will or no they must also refrain from work on Sunday, when trade generally ceases and all the business exchanges are closed.

With many of them it is hardly possible to observe the Jewish Sabbath. Take the Jew brokers in Wall street, for instance; how can they now be away from their excitement on the last day of the week?

For them to abandon business on Saturday may be to imperil their whole property; and even if they are found at the synagogue, will not their hearts be where their earthly treasure is?

But this effort to change the Jewish day of worship from Saturday to Sunday of course provokes violent opposition among conservative and orthodox Jews.

Such a change, they reasonably say, would be a first step toward the abandonment of all the distinctive customs and observances of the race.

They do not want the barrier between Jew and Christian to be broken down, but would keep the chosen people forever separate from the rest of mankind; they bemoan the increasing tendency of their young men to escape from the traditions of their fathers and their growing desire to be as other men are.

Yet it seems to be inevitable that in this age of general religious skepticism the liberalism against which the orthodox Jews contend should extend further and further among their people, and one by one sweep away the prejudices and customs which have so long kept them apart from other races and men of other religious traditions.

The New Cross. Full many a flower is born to blush unseen, and waste its sweetness on the desert air.

True, oh poet, but wert thou to strike Toronto this semi-centennial year (full quickly would'st thou discover that the question hath another side.

There seems to be a regular floral craze. Walking displays of cut flowers are constantly met with on the fashionable promenades of the city, flowers of gorgeously gorgeous gorgosity.

Through Mark Twain we have heard the enquiry made as to Christopher Columbus: "was he often on a bust?"

In Toronto we see that flowers this season are constantly on busts—very much so.

If the rage continues we may prepare ourselves to see the bosoms of Toronto's fair laid out as flower gardens, with imitation gravel walks and diminutive hedges, with possibly geraniums and fuchsias in pots; and hanging baskets filled with trailing plants suspended from necklaces and from brooches.

This will likely prove beneficial for the corset companies, as to support a fair sized garden of this sort more area will be required and artificial aid must be invoked.

Unless the fashion dies away before the chilly nights and days of autumn arrive it will be in order to erect small greenhouses to preserve the tender plants, and then indeed will the climax be reached, and the hanging gardens of Babylon be rivalled by the walking gardens of our own fair city on the Bay.

The editor of the Mail is imposing upon his readers. When he heard that Sir Charles Tupper was to leave the government he sat down and while the inspiration was on him dashed off an ode to that distinguished man, affixing thereto the word "midnight" as well as the date.

Now the Mail building was on fire on Saturday morning, but the inspiration therefrom did not seize the editor till midnight of May 25, when he gave forth seven stanzas of four lines each duly separated by roman numerals. The poetry is so bad that we are sure it was not dashed off at white heat, but that it was the product of several hours of continuous labor.

The postal telegraph project has been practically agreed to by the senate committee on postoffices at Washington, and the chances that it will pass the house and senate are excellent. In the report made by the committee it is unequivocally declared that the immense stock watering of the Western Union system has had the effect to increase rates. The same committee stoutly maintain the constitutional right of governments to build and maintain telegraph lines.

Two weeks from next Wednesday the republican party of the United States will meet in Chicago to nominate a presidential candidate. Blaine, Edmunds and Arthur are the three leading candidates, but there are many dark horses, including Secretary Lincoln.

Meat Every Meal. To the Editor of the World. Sir: It's all very well for Mr. Doremus to speak of health of non-flesh v. flesh-eating diet. We have two hundred thousands in this city who eat on an average two pounds of meat a day. Now put 200 non-flesh eaters to compete with them in any feat of strength and endurance, or in fact down right work of any kind, and how would flesh v. non-flesh eaters come out? And as for sickness, and long livelihood.

Without Argument. He was a young lawyer, and was delivering his maiden speech. Like most young lawyers, he was florid, rhetorical, scattering and weary. For four weary hours he talked at the court and did not until everybody felt like lynching him. When he got through, his opponent, a grizzled, practical, earnest, looked sweetly at the judge, and said: "Your honor, I will follow the example of my young friend who has just finished, and submit the case without any further argument. Then he sat down, and the silence was large and oppressive.

He Kept His Place. From Figaro. The clerkly omnibus goes towards the Hudson is full. In the Rue Richelieu four ladies get up from their seats in the gentleman gets up from his seat in the rear and coming out to the platform, says: "My friend, which is the oldest among you, I wish to offer her my place?"

The Mail Fire. To the Editor of the World. Sir: It seems most extraordinary to an outsider that there should be so much confusion and so little real judgment displayed in our large fires.

No man can be braver and no chief can show more than ours, but in their desperate hurry to get water on the fire they seem to overlook the best means of accomplishing the work they are there for, i. e., the subduing of the flames.

To an outsider who has seen fires managed in most of the large cities on this continent, it appeared the morning that I was in the city from the steamer with small nozzles attached had been taken to the top of Mrs. Cavithra's house on the east side of Bay street.

The Mail building could have saved the tower. If the Dominion bank should get on fire to-day we have no arrangements whereby we could get water on the fire. Suitable appliances are to be had, and the cost of this morning's fire would pay for apparatus which would make our brigade invincible.

Will our city fathers, some of whom are spending their time squabbling over the amount of respect which should be paid them by their subordinates, now wake up to a sense of their duty?

GRUMBLER. Delay on Deeper Street. To the Editor of the World. Sir: I read in a paper last week that the "repairing of Draper street had been begun."

About ten days ago three men, with a theodolite and chain, appeared on this street and spent the evening there apparently very greatly to their satisfaction.

The time passed and four days ago a second detachment put in an appearance and drove three or four wooden pegs into the mud, and finally retired. Nothing has been done since, and the residents are waiting with some curiosity to learn what the next step is to be.

The colored people of Chatham have a grievance. It is this: That they are compelled to send their children from one school to another, either to a first-class school, to an inferior school or the other extreme. In some cases this involves a walk of two miles, and for children of tender years, either in the heat of summer or the cold of winter, is out of the question. They hold that they are entitled to a school near their homes, and at a public meeting Wednesday night they resolved to memorialize the proper parties.
