this committee, so far as I understand it, he says, that the new agreement is an optional one, and that the Government has the option of either paying the cash, $1,600,000, or of going on with the old arrangement, which is tantamount to paying $2,100,000. Is that so or not? We have the right to have the document before us, and to know whether it is so or not; not only on account of the hon. gentleman's poor memory, but on account of these differences which we find displayed here in the evidence given before this committee, and what seems to be the common rumour at the present time, that it is to be a payment of $1,600,000 in cash, out and out. Everybody knows in this House, that, when this agreement was laid over for two years, the basis very largely being as to whether this is a good business arrangement or not, this House supposed it would have the benefit of about a year's experience to know how the traffic on that road would turn out. Have I not heard that argument in this House? Hon. gentlemen opposite have used it over and over again. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) specially took it upon himself to declare, that he knew that the traffic would more than counterbalance and pay the increase of the expenses, and that a great future in traffic was before the road, when once it was opened to Montreal. And, after the running of about a year, Parliament supposed that it would get some data for making up its mind as to whether this was a good business transaction or not. What happened? This House comes up to the discussion of the question, and a final judgment upon the question, and my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) comes down here, and coolly tells us, that he has not kept the accounts so that you can tell the least thing about what has happened as a consequence of the addition of these miles of road from Lévis to Montreal. It was his duty to have done so. It was his duty to have so arranged that matter that this House and this Parliament, in the experience of the ten or twelve months during which this line has been operated, would have some business experience to go upon as to whether it was well to make an arrangement of that kind or not. It means money; it is really equivalent to between six million dollars and seven million dollars, as laid up against the national debt. There is no getting out of that. Are we to go into this at the whim of a Minister; are we not, as business men, to ask, what has been the experience of twelve months' running of that added piece of road; what are the financial results consequent upon the running of the Drummond branch and the lines in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway? I think so. I do not think there is any business man on that side of the House who would go into an arrangement of this kind without having an answer to that question; and, if he had had a chance to make an experiment of ten or twelve months upon it before he had to decide whether or not he would go into it for ninety-nine years. I think he would have arranged his book-keeping so as to give him a pretty close idea as to whether that would be a profitable transaction or not.

There is information which, last year, my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) was ordered to give this House. It has not yet been placed before this House, and it has an important bearing upon this question. It was asked for by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell). If I mistake not, my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) promised me, before the House prorogued last year, that he would bring down this very same supplementary contract, and lay it on the Table of this House. I have not had time to turn up "Hansard," but I have, at least, a fair recollection of asking him to do it, and of his having promised to do it. He has not done it. My hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) has a most important motion designed to get information for the discussion of this very question. That notice of motion is on the Order paper, and, when my hon. friend (Mr. Pope) rose to put it, under the unopposed motions, the other day, the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, said, "Stand." What did that mean? It meant that my right hon. friend interposed himself and the authority that he has in this House, between my hon. friend from Compton (Mr. Pope) and the information which that hon. gentleman thinks is vitally necessary to the discussion of this question. That did not show a desire to give information to this House. This information ought to be given to the House; my right hon. friend will not for a moment try to sustain the position, that the House has not the right to full information on important questions of this kind—on all questions it has the right; but on important questions of this kind most assuredly it has the right.

My hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) is not in his element, when he attempts to read a lecture to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). He does not do it well, and I would advise him, as a friend—because I am a friend of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I appreciate it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) runs away with the idea that in some way I have some feelings of spite against him.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know you are too big a man for that.

Mr. FOSTER. I beg my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) to put that impression away from his heart entirely. My hon. friend sometimes thinks, and his friends sometimes say, that I am disposed to be a little envious or jealous of the success of my hon. friend. Oh, no; may the sails always set to a full breeze for my hon. friend. May there be nothing too good to give to him in purse or in store. But all the same, so long as he pursues those devious and peculiar political methods in which my hon. friend is a past master, so long it will be my duty, so long as I have standing place in the country, to oppose him politically. As for any personal feeling, I beg my hon. friend to dismiss from his mind all such considerations. But he exhibits profound sorrow when he contemplates my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. Now, the Minister of Railways in an attitude of profound sorrow or deep contrition is an interesting phase of his development; and I could not avoid philosophizing upon it. So far as we on this side of the House are concerned, we weep with and for each other, and my hon. friend may keep his tears and his sorrow for himself and his schemes, many of which are bound to come to grief, for my hon. friend must know that he is in a brighter and whiter light in this Parliament than he was when he was putting through his little devious schemes in the legislature of New Brunswick. He cannot bulldoze them through this Parliament. He must give the necessary information. The hon. gentleman must understand that the atmosphere is slightly changed, and he had better adapt himself to the atmosphere of the House of Commons and give us this information. Let him be honest and frank and open about it, and he will get along a great deal better than he otherwise would. The hon. leader of the Opposition has half the information, he says. He thinks that is certainly an act of grace, that somehow or other he has allowed the leader of the Opposition to pick around and get half the information, and with that he ought to be profoundly thankful and delighted. Now, Sir, joking aside, what we want, and all we want, is that my hon. friend will put this House in the position in which it demands, and has a right to demand, to be placed before he puts his measures before it; that is, to have a copy of the contract, so that we can have access to it, and just as full access to it as the hon. gentleman himself, and to have the information which we have been asking for last year and all this session, and which he has thus far failed to give us.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reply to the hon. ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), who says he has sat in this House since 1882, and has never known a case in which a matter of this kind came before the House, and the papers necessary to enable the House to consider the question intelligently were not placed upon the Table. Now, I will give my hon. friend a case. In 1884, when the hon. leader of the Opposition was Minister of Railways, he brought down a number of propositions to grant subsidies to railways. Among these was a proposition to grant to the Quebec Central Railway $211,000. Mr. Blake asked for information with regard to the company, and the hon. leader of the Opposition got up and admitted that he had nothing to lay on the Table of the House, and he laid nothing on the Table of the House; but he pressed the vote, and the money was voted.

Mr. FOSTER. Was there a contract entered into?

Mr. McMULLEN. No, there was no contract. There was no information laid on the Table of the House at all. The present leader of the Opposition was asked whether he knew who the stockholders were, and he could not even give that information. If the hon. gentleman will turn up "Hansard" of the 10th of April, 1884, he can see it for himself. I will give him another case. A bonus was voted to the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, and in that case information was asked for in regard to the bona fides of the company. Mr. Blake said:

There is no paper before the House with reference to this subsidy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, there is no paper, but I believe there is no doubt that will accomplish the object.

Mr. BLAKE. Why is there not any paper? I am sure the Secretary of State could write a paper.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He tells me that it was a very useful line to build.

That is the only information he had to give in regard to that matter. In that case there were no papers either. So that my hon. friend the ex-Finance Minister was mistaken when he stated that in all his experience from 1882 down to the present time there never had been a vote brought before Parliament until full information was given to the House on the subject. With regard to the action taken by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I must say that I have been rather surprised at his conduct of late. I cannot understand what has happened to him, because whenever he gets up to address the House he appears to boil over and get out of temper. I think it would be better to settle down and do business in a quiet manner. I cannot tell what the cause of it is, but the hon. leader of the Opposition constantly loses his temper and oversteps the mark of a man occupying the position of a leader in the House.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, the exhibition which the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has made would be amusing if it were not so absolutely ridiculous. He tries to draw an analogy between a proposal to vote a bonus or a subsidy to build a railway in some portion of the country where the inhabitants require a railway and a proposal to buy a railway out and out. There is no analogy between them. In the one case there was no railway built, and the people had petitioned this House to vote a subsidy to build a railway; in the other case the House is asked to buy a railway, part of which has been in operation for years, and we ask for important data which ought to be before this House to enable the representatives of the people to determine whether Parliament ought to buy that railway or not. It does seem to me that there is something about this whole transaction that is enshrined in mystery. When the first proposal was made to this House, there was no data placed before the House to enable the representatives of the people to judge whether it was wise or unwise to enter into the contract, though it was asked for again and again; and one excuse after another was given by the Minister of Railways for refusing to place that information before the House, and the proposal was forced through. We were asked to discuss it without the information; and we were told, while the discussion was going on, that although it was proposed only to rent the railway, it would be found that it would be a good paying investment for the people of this country. It was said that when we had the returns showing what the railway was earning, we would be convinced that the contract which the Minister of Railways was proposing to this House was a good one. Now, that contract was rejected by the other Chamber of this Parliament, and the Government for the time being entered into a temporary contract to rent the railway, and assured this House that they had no doubt whatever that Parliament would be satisfied, after the road was running for a short time, that it was a good contract, and that when they subsequently proposed a different contract, we would be in possession of the information that would lead us to accept the proposal. We now have the next proposal, and the Minister tells us that the information which he then intended to collect and submit to this House has not been collected. Why has it not been collected? Why are the representatives of the people denied that information which they ought to have to enable them to judge whether it is the part of wisdom or otherwise to saddle the country with this large expenditure? From all the information I can glean in regard to the running of the Intercolonial Railway, the earnings on this portion of the road are very small—so small that they will not pay for the cost of running the road up to the present time. To-day we are face to face with the same difficulty that we were at the time the former contract was before the House; we have no information or data to enable us to judge whether or not this would be a good contract. I say this House ought to know what the earnings have been on that road, which the Government rented temporarily, from the time they took it down to the present time. But we have not got that information. The earnings of that road are a sealed book to this House. They cannot be found in the report of the Minister of Railways or in the report of the Auditor General. Then I thought I might find the contract, as the Minister of Railways said we could get it. I went and got the return, but I found that the contract was not there. Part of it was contained in the answers given by the Minister of Railways when he was being questioned; part of the contract was here and part of it elsewhere; but you could not get the information you required. Then I thought there was surely a return somewhere containing the information. I went to the party who was in charge of the returns, but the information I got there was that the contract was not printed. If it is not printed nor in this report, it is not available for the members of the House; and if they do not get it, how are they to judge of the wisdom of the expenditure proposed by the Minister of Railways? It seems to me the greatest absurdity ever presented to this House or country. It is trifling with the intelligence of the House to expect us to deal with this important matter upon the meagre information in our possession at present. Yet the hon. Minister says he will not give us any more.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I have already sent a copy of the agreement to the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the leader of the Opposition 213 members of this House? Is he the only one entitled to the information? If this should come to a vote, every member who has to record his vote must have the information in his possession so as to enable him to judge and vote intelligently upon it. So far as I know—and I have endeavoured to get it—the information we require is not available to us at present. Ever since this motion has been on the Order paper, the Minister of Railways has been asked, from time to time, to give us all the information we ought to have, to enable us to deal intelligently with this question, but he has not brought down a single item of information. Is this treating the representatives of the people fairly? Is it treating Parliament fairly? One would suppose that we were sent here to vote blindly and ignorantly on any question submitted to us.

I was somewhat surprised at the position taken by Mr. Speaker, though I do not wish to criticise his action at all, but merely to refer to it in this particular. As I understand, when a motion of this character is presented, it is the duty of the mover to give such explanation as will justify the House in assenting to it, because, by our assent, we admit the principle involved. But the Minister gives no explanation which will enable us to judge whether or not we should assent to the principle involved in the motion.

Mr. SPROULE.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). You are not asked to do that, but to refer the matter to the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. We are asked by the Speaker to decide whether the House shall go into Committee of the Whole on the motion or not, and if we consent to go into committee we thereby give our assent to the principle of the motion. Why does the House go into committee? Simply to deal with details, and it should previously have an explanation from the Minister who makes the motion. I think myself the Speaker put his foot into it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has no right to discuss the ruling of the Speaker.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not understand the Speaker to give a ruling, but simply information to the House; and I believe I am quite in order in referring to this, because we are asked to assent to the principle of this motion without having the information on which we can judge whether we ought to give our assent to it or not. We are asked to assent to the principle without having a single word of explanation from the Minister. This is simply trifling with the House. The Minister of Railways said the conduct of the leader of the Opposition is childish. Well, I imagine the country will think it is a species of childishness which we are entitled to indulge in so long as we are treated in this manner. I think the people will regard it as something very serious and that the Government which denies us the information required will be held to be very remiss in their duty. They are not doing what the principles of responsible government require, in refusing to give us any information whatever when asking us to deal with this most important question. The hon. gentleman admits that Parliament is unquestionably entitled to the information. Then, why does he not give it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do give it.

Mr. SPROULE. He sent it to the leader of the Opposition, but that is not sending it to the 213 members of the House. Out of that number only one man has got it, and yet each of the others is expected to judge for himself and bring his own intelligence to bear on the question. How can he do that if he has not the information to which the Minister of Railways says the House is undoubtedly entitled. The hon. Minister cannot plead ignorance because he was warned several times that this information must be before the House before we can deal with the question. Surely he cannot say that it is at present. He says that if any member had dropped him a private note, he would have got the information. But why should each member have to do this, and would not the hon. gentleman save himself the trouble involved in replying to these private notes by laying the information on the Table. This sort of fencing is merely trifling with the representatives of the people.

It is a great injustice to the representatives of the people and to the country to ask us to deal with such a question on the basis of the meagre information in our possession to-day. Why have we not the data we ought to have? Were there any earnings of that road during the time the Government held it under temporary arrangement? If we knew what its earnings were we should be better able to judge whether it is wise to incur this expenditure. Do we know what has been the outlay upon it? Not at all. We do know that there are two or three roads running through the same section sharing the earnings of the territory. But the important requirements of Parliament is to know whether this road is going to be a paying investment; and how can hon. members judge of that, unless they know what has been spent upon capital account, and what are the earnings and operating expenses. Yet, we have not a single line or figure to convey to us this information. From what I have been able to learn from the Auditor General's Report, it seemed to me that the earnings of the road were a few hundred dollars, and that the earnings did not begin to pay the expenses of working. If that is the case, how is it going to be a paying investment? But, of course, one may easily be in error in attempting to pick out such information as this from the other items of the Auditor General's Report. The hon. Minister should have given us these figures. He knew that the question was coming before the House, and should have fortified himself by laying the documents on the Table.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). I do not intend to discuss the question of the resolution at present. But I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to some information which we have not now before us. The hon. Minister states that this information is before the House, that if hon. gentlemen had looked at the report of the Drummond County Railway Committee they would have found the contracts they desired. If my memory serves me well—and I think I have a good memory—I heard the hon. Minister promise last session to lay these contracts on the Table of the House. The original contract should be on the Table, and we should have an opportunity to consider it. The hon. Minister deals with these contracts in a very off-hand manner. He tells us that the amendment to the Drummond County contract is simply one by which the Government is allowed to change the terms of the payment into a lump sum.

instead of a yearly payment. That is not correct. There is a condition in this contract by which, in addition to the sum they are to pay, the Government are required to spend $100,000 on the road. There are other matters of information which we have not before us. What are the receipts from the Drummond County road? I see, according to the figures of the Intercolonial Railway, that there is over $8,000 from the Drummond road. We want details. I do not know whether, in the account of the receipts and expenditure, the $210,000 that we give the Drummond Railway Company and the amount we have to pay the Grand Trunk Railway are charged against the receipts. Perhaps the Minister will be able to tell us that. I would also draw the hon. Minister's attention to his report, and point out that it is almost impossible, with the details given in this work, to judge even approximately what the accounts of the road show. The hon. gentleman talks in a way that he may consider wise of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). It is so kind of the hon. Minister, who evidently thinks himself so superior to the rest of us as to be able to give lectures upon the proprieties, to say that he feels sorry that the hon. leader of the Opposition has degenerated. It is kind of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am glad you appreciate it.

Mr. HAGGART. We appreciate it very much indeed. But he goes further and says that the leader of the Opposition stands up every time as if he were the paid advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let us judge of men by their actions rather than by their words. Who could look more like a paid advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway than the man who gave that company $2,000,000 more to build the Crow's Nest Pass Railway than was necessary? But was that, after all, for the purpose of benefiting the Canadian Pacific Railway, or was it because an institution with which were identified some prominent supporters of the hon. gentleman in Toronto had been foisted upon the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that company was obliged to demand more than was originally promised for that reason, so that parties connected with a newspaper organ of the Government were enabled to draw large sums in connection with this affair. What has the hon. leader of the Opposition ever done in advocacy of the Canadian Pacific Railway interests that compared with this single act of the benevolence in connection with the Crow's Nest Pass Railway? We shall have an opportunity this evening to debate this Drummond Railway question in full. But what I wish to call to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals' attention—and I intend to make some remarks on it this evening—is the necessity of our having full information as to the contract of last session, as has been asked for again by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. Let me read from the "Hansard" of yesterday with reference to this subject :

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the leader of the House if it is intended to proceed with the Drummond County Railway resolutions to-morrow, because some papers have been moved for which are absolutely necessary to the discussion. Information has been asked as to the results of the working of the Drummond County Railway, the expenses and receipts, and it will be absolutely impossible to proceed intelligently with that subject unless the hon. Minister of Railways furnishes the House with full information with regard to the whole question.

The hon. gentleman states that it is impossible to divide the amounts so as to show what are the receipts and expenditures of this particular portion of the road. It may possibly be so. I have no doubt that the hon. Minister has been so informed by the officers of his department. But I would ask the hon. Minister: Has he not had an approximate estimate furnished by his department as to what the receipts and expenditures were?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, my information on that subject is incorrect. Of course, I take the hon. Minister's word. We have the original contract with the Grand Trunk, and the supplementary contract with the Grand Trunk Railway; and we have the original contract with the Drummond County Railway. We now want the supplementary contract with the Drummond County Railway laid on the Table. We desire also to know what are the receipts or what has been credited from the Drummond County Railway and also whether, in the accounts of receipts and expenditures of the Intercolonial Railway the sum of money we give in the form of payment to the Drummond County Railway and the $140,000 we give to the Grand Trunk appears in the railway accounts or in any other accounts of the Dominion.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have just a word to say to my hon. friends on the other side. For my part, I am quite unable to see what is the reason for this tempest in a teapot. Really there is nothing at all in this matter which should provoke this debate. My hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) said a moment ago that he is entitled to have all the information which is available for the purpose of discussing this important question. Nobody disputes that. The whole question turns upon whether the House at this moment is in possession of information which it should have in order to be in a position to enter upon the discussion. My hon. friend stated yesterday that he would bring down all the information that he could. I am within the judgment of the House in saying that during the present session the Opposition have asked repeatedly to have a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Drummond County Railway and of the Intercolonial Railway; my hon. friend has complied with that request in so far as he was able. But now, at the last moment, we are told that the House cannot proceed unless we have before us the contract, the second contract, the last contract with the Drummond County Railway. Sir, this is the first occasion that that contract has been asked for; we never heard it mentioned before to-day. We have repeatedly been requested to furnish a statement of the receipts and expenditures, but I am in the judgment of the House in saying that up to the present day no mention was ever made of the contract. And there was a very good reason for it, because that contract had been before the House for more than 12 months. This contract was referred to last year; it was before a committee of the House appointed to investigate this transaction. My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) said a moment ago that every member of the House was entitled to all the information in respect to this contract. Why, Sir, his pretension is simply childish; he knows well what the terms of this contract are, it is public property. Every member has a right to know the data upon which he is asked to pass judgment. But at this moment the tenor of that contract is well known, it has been published in the press, it has been produced in this House, it was produced before the committee upstairs, it has been discussed both in the press and upon the floor of the House. The statement has been made four or five times by hon. gentlemen opposite that as a consequence of the action of the Senate this second contract was to effect a saving of some $500,000. Therefore, everybody knows the tenor of that contract, and everybody is able to discuss that question, even though technically the contract is not laid upon the Table of the House. I have no objection at all that it should be technically laid upon the Table of the House. When my hon. friend proceeds with his statement he will have to allude to that contract, he will have to lay it on the Table of the House, and he is prepared to do so. My hon. friend is also prepared to give much of the information which is asked for by hon. gentlemen opposite.

The position was taken a moment ago by my hon. friend from Grey, and I think it has also been taken by the leader of the Opposition, that it was inconvenient to proceed with the discussion of this question in committee, that it ought to be discussed with the Speaker in the Chair. I need not tell my hon. friend that I take issue with him on this point completely. He is altogether in error when he says that if we allow this resolution to pass the House with the Speaker in the Chair, we commit ourselves to it. Nothing of the kind. We know that if a Bill is allowed to go to a second reading the House is generally understood to accept the principle of the Bill. But that is not the case when a resolution is moved. My hon. friend knows, and every hon. gentleman knows, that upon a money question the House does not settle the principle until the resolution is carried, and concurred in, that is the time when the House adopts the principle. My hon. friend knows as well as I do that all these money resolutions are surrounded with restrictions. They have to go to a committee, the report has to be received, that has to be concurred in; so that the House has many opportunities of discussing the question and of obtaining all the information in committee and otherwise before it is called upon to commit itself finally to the measure.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not the custom, before asking the House to go into Committee of the Whole on any resolution, that all the explanations should be made on that motion before the Speaker leaves the Chair?

The PRIME MINISTER. That has been done time and again. Sometimes that is the most convenient way to give all the information that is wanted upon a stated proposition. But if the Minister prefers to do so, if he can give the information better in committee than while the Speaker is in the Chair, he has always been allowed to do so; the hon. gentleman must have seen that done time and again. Now, my hon. friend is ready to proceed with his statement. In making his statement he will have to allude to these contracts, and in alluding to these contracts, he will have to lay them on the Table of the House. But surely my hon. friend cannot insist that the contracts should be laid at once upon the Table of the House when they have been common property for more than 12 months. I venture to say that when the contract has been laid before the House there is not a man in this House who will know more about it than he knows to-day. Now, Sir, I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to proceed with the business of the House, and not to fritter away the time which is so valuable to members on both sides of the House.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to the fact that considerable of the information that has been asked for has not been furnished. On the 19th of April, a question was asked on behalf of myself, when I was absent through illness. It is found on page 1904 of the revised "Hansard," and is as follows:—

What is the total amount of revenue collected by the Government (a) from passenger traffic, (b) from freight traffic at the stations, freight agencies and passenger agencies along the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Chaudière to Montreal, both included, (1) from the 30th day of June, 1898, exclusive, to the 1st day of March, 1899, exclusive; (2) from the 1st day of March, 1899, inclusive, to the 1st day of April, 1899, exclusive?

To that question the Minister of Railways and Canals made the following reply:—

A return will have to be moved for for this information.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I leave it to the judgment of this House to say if that was not a perfect evasion. I did not call for a tabulated statement, I did not call for any information that could not be given in two or three lines. I have no hesitation in saying that this answer is a simple evasion, shows a desire not to bring the information down. At a later stage, on the 24th day of April, in my absence, a return was moved for on my behalf by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), as appears on page 2085 of the "Hansard":

Return showing the total amount of revenue collected by the Government (a) from passenger traffic, (b) from freight traffic at the stations, freight agencies and passenger agencies along the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Chaudière to Montreal, both included, (1) from the 30th day of June, 1898, exclusive, to the 1st day of March, 1899, exclusive; (2) from the 1st day of March, 1899, inclusive, to the 1st day of April, 1899, exclusive.

That return was ordered by this House on the 24th day of April, 1899, and it is not yet brought down. Now, the information is at hand. I have no hesitation in saying, that this information could have been furnished by the Minister of Railways and Canals within a few days. The information is furnished year after year in respect to every agency, passenger and freight, and every station along the whole line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. In proof of this, of the statement that is given every year, and to show the truth of my statement that the information can be easily got, in the last Report of the Auditor General, which has been laid on the Table of the House, under "R," page 33, we find a detailed statement of the revenue of the Intercolonial Railway, and in that statement we find: "Collected by station agents," "Collected by outside agents," and returns are given from every station agent over the whole course of the Intercolonial. All that was necessary for the hon. Minister to do was, to send down to the accountant at Moncton and ask him to give the returns from these stations over the line of the extension from Chaudière to Montreal. But it does not end there. The desire to conceal the facts from the House, or to withhold the information, is more fully illustrated by what appears at page 2317 of "Hansard," April 28th. On that day, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) spoke as follows:—

I asked the hon. Minister of Railways to bring down, before the Drummond resolutions are considered, any report he has from the engineer in charge of the work as to the condition of the work, and all other information in the hands of the department. That will be very necessary for a proper consideration of the question.

To this request, or statement, the Minister of Railways and Canals replied as follows:—

If the hon. gentleman will give notice of a motion, I will have the return brought down as early as possible. Let him state specifically what he desires to be brought down. I understand that by some arrangement between the leaders, the Drummond County matter will not come up to-day, so that there will be ample time for him to have the return asked for.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then I go on to say:

Mr. POWELL. Keep your coolness. Mr. Haggart replies:

It is simply impossible that I should give notice of a motion and reach it in time, and it is not necessary, as the hon. gentleman can bring down the information without a motion.

And the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals made this statement, which is hardly consistent with his statement to-day:

I shall bring down any information I can.

Then, also, on April 21, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) moved for:

Order of the House—(1) Copies of all local and other tariffs and of all supplements thereto in force on the first day of July, A.D. 1898, on the Intercolonial Railway and on all railways leased, used or operated by the Government in connection with the Intercolonial Railway; (2) Copies of all such local and other tariffs and supplements thereto in force on the said Intercolonial Railway and other railways on the first day of April, A.D. 1899; (3) a complete list, statement and return, giving full and complete particulars of all special rates or other concessions to any merchants, traders, manufacturers or other persons for or in respect of the carriage of freight on the said Intercolonial Railway and other railways aforesaid, which were in force or effect on the following dates respectively: (a) the first day of July, A.D. 1898; (b) the first day of April, A.D. 1899. (4) Copies of all letters, reports, telegrams and communications in writing during the year 1898 from Mr. A. H. Harris as general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway to the general manager of the said railway respecting or relating to or concerning the re-arrangement or revision of tariffs on the Intercolonial Railway, or of the rules and regulations governing the carriage of either passengers or freight on the said railway.

In respect to that motion, the right hon. First Minister replied, that he desired it to stand. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that more essential or more pertinent information could be moved for than has been moved for in this motion, and which has been asked for by the hon. member for Lanark. Take the motion of the hon. member for Compton. We all know, in the maritime provinces at least, that last year, in order to swell the revenues of the Intercolonial Railway, the local tariffs of rates on the Intercolonial Railway were raised. In some cases they were raised so high as to be absolutely prohibitive. There is a case in the county of Westmoreland which I have in mind, of a farmer who did, as he had done in previous years—get out some hardwood to be shipped on the Intercolonial Railway to Moncton. It was shipped to Moncton, and, after it was delivered there, and after the cordwood was sold, he found, that he got for the cordwood a dollar less than the railway had charged him, such an increase had been made in order to swell the revenue. These freight and passenger tariffs are in the hands of the Minister of Railways and Canals himself. He would not think of sending them to Moncton, because they have to be approved by the Minister and by the department before they go into force. In respect to the demand for the contract, I do not feel much interested in that, because it was brought down before the committee of investigation upon the Drummond County matter last year, and I took a copy of it at that time, and I have my copy yet. In respect to the resolution that is before the House, I beg to dissent entirely from the right hon. First Minister as respects the action of the House when it allowed itself to go into Committee of the Whole. That is an endorsement of the principle; there is no question about that. What the House does when the report comes back from the Committee of the Whole, in accepting or passing a motion of concurrence, is that it concurs in the principle of the Bill. After being in committee, it concurs in the resolution in the state in which it comes from the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I wish to say a word further in reference to this proposition. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) states, that he will not discuss the matter until we go into committee, and, as was very properly pointed out by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), on the second reading of a Bill, the principle of the Bill is affirmed. But you affirm the principle of this resolution, when the Speaker leaves the Chair and when the House goes into committee to consider its details, not to discuss the principle. The Minister of Railways and Canals tells us, that he does not propose to discuss a word of the principle till the committee stage is reached. That really means, Mr. Speaker, that we are to accept now the principle of this Drummond County resolution. Mr. Speaker, on the face of it, I refuse to do so, and for several reasons. One of the reasons is, that our experience in the past of the course taken by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has not been such as to inspire us with the greatest measure of confidence in the administration of these matters. If we look at the history of the past three sessions, we will find, that these important matters are delayed during the part of the session that they should receive careful consideration, and that important railway resolutions have in past years been brought in at the close of the session, after most of the members of the House had gone away, and when those who were left had not the opportunity of fully considering these measures, because the Minister would say to us: We have not got these papers. They have forced Bills through in the last days of the session, and then if a question comes up afterwards they say to us; Why did you not oppose this Bill in the House; when it was before the House there was practically no opposition to it. Under such circumstances there cannot be that vigorous criticism and active opposition which objectionable measures should receive. The Crow's Nest Pass Railway Bill is a conspicuous example of a measure being brought down during the dying hours of the session. The members had been notified by you, Mr. Speaker, that their pay was ready, and they could go to their homes, and after that, this railway Bill which was a direct loss to the country of at least $2,000,000 was rushed through the House. We know that the Canadian Pacific Railway would have built that road without a subsidy from the Dominion Government, or probably from any other Government. Having acquired the British Columbia charter, which gave them enormous subsidies of timber lands and coal lands in unlimited quantities—they say the largest coal mines and most accessible in the world to-day; and being in the centre of a country where vast quantities of coal will be used for smelting ores; most valuable coal lands. They have there in close proximity to these Crow's Nest coal mines, the mines of the Kootenay district, the mines of the United States, mines that are only commencing to be developed, and with these coal lands—leaving out of consideration altogether the subsidies in timber lands, leaving out the subsidies in town sites which they received under that British Columbia charter—they could afford to have built that road twice over without a further subsidy. When the Dominion Government in the year 1896, had made a contract for 330 miles at $5,000 a mile, or total of $1,650,000 for the building of this road; at that time the Canadian Pacific Railway had no British Columbia charter giving them these immense subsidies, so that the Dominion Government of the day in giving them $1,650,000, was giving them a subsidy which might be considered reasonable in its character. But, when it was disclosed in the committee, and in the House, too, that the Canadian Pacific Railway had a British Columbia charter with all these advantages, I say, in the face of that, the addition of $6,000 per mile, making $1,980,000, or, in round figures, $2,000,000 additional bonus given by the present Government of Canada for the construction of that road, was unwarranted and unjustifiable.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) does not mean to insinuate, that the Minister of Railways and Canals had a retainer from the Canadian Pacific Railway, when he gave them $2,000, 000 more than they had agreed to build the road for.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, I would like to hear some sensible reason given for that increase of subsidy of $2,000,000. The Government told us as a reason, that they were going to control the rates on this line, but the Minister of Railways and Canals knows that the Railway Act gives the Government that control over the rates, without paying for it. That pretended reason, therefore, falls to the ground at once. But they made another statement in this connection. The Government told us that in the future they were going to have the freight rates on wheat from different parts of Manitoba to Fort William reduced by a fraction of a cent per bushel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). How much?

Mr. WALLACE. One and one-half cents per hundred pounds, which is nine-tenths of a cent per bushel. Well, what occurred? We predicted that the Canadian Pacific Railway, from business considerations, because of competition, and out of regard for their own interests would reduce these freight rates, and as a matter of fact that has turned out to be true, and they have reduced the rate, not nine-tenths of a cent per bushel, but twice as much, and they have done it of their own accord and without compulsion. Therefore, that pretense of the Government also falls to the ground. The Government told us also, that they were going to get great advantages for the people of the Kootenay mining country, by regulating the freight rates on the Crow's Nest Railway. That pretense also vanished into thin air when it was investigated. Their pretension that they were going to reduce the freight rates to the farmers of Manitoba and the North-west, experience has proven to be as mythical as the other. Then, Sir, if you examine into the history of every transaction of this Government in connection with railways—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) has not, I notice, connected the subject he has been recently discussing, with the motion.

Mr. WALLACE. I can easily make the connection, Mr. Speaker; there will be no difficulty about that. The connection is this: That the Minister proposes to-day that we go into committee to consider the Drummond County Railway resolutions, without the papers, without the contract, without the information that would enable us to give it a fair and impartial investigation. I say that we object to that, and we are justified in our objection by the history of the past to which I have alluded.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

Mr. WALLACE. Is it six o'clock?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. I am sorry.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock, I was pointing out the injustice of expecting the House to deal with this question without having the information which was necessary in order to enable us to form a correct conclusion on the proposal of the Government. The same state of affairs existed with regard to the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, in which case the Government made an exceedingly bad bargain; and that is one reason why we should not proceed with the present business without a copy of the contract, and without those details of information which the Minister should have been ready and anxious that every member of the House should have in his hands before coming to a conclusion. But, Sir, there are other reasons why we should not proceed. A year ago, in regard to the Yukon Railway the Government, without any notice other than a preliminary announcement in the Toronto "Globe" a few days before Parliament met, launched a scheme which was open to the same objections as the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, and open to the same objections which we have to urge against this Drummond County deal. What are the facts with reference to the Yukon Railway? Why, Sir, ignoring every principle enunciated by the Reform party for forty years, ignoring the principles of responsible government, ignoring those true and just principles without which honest government cannot be carried on, these gentlemen entered into a secret contract with Mackenzie & Mann to construct a railway beginning at no definite point and ending at no definite point. There was no justification for the haste shown, because, as we all know, in March of the preceding year, nearly one year before, they had information as to the immense riches of the Yukon district. Even before that it was not an unknown land. Two years before that, when I was Controller of Customs, realizing the necessity of collecting revenues there, I appointed a customs officer, and he was then gathering in large amounts of money. The country was becoming better known and its richness was being discovered. In March, 1897, Mr. Ogilvie's report, dated, I think, in the previous August, disclosed to the Department of the Interior the enormous riches of the district, such richness as was not known in any other part of the world. So I say there was no necessity for the secrecy or the haste they manifested on that occasion to complete a contract without regarding the rules of Parliament. They asked for no tenders; they received no tenders. They did not let the world know that they contemplated building a railroad. They gave no opportunity to any of those enterprising contractors whom we have in Canada, men of ability and experience and sufficient capital, who would have been delighted to go in and make offers to the Government. In that regard they had wilfully violated every law and regulation that was calculated to ensure honest government and to give confidence to the people in the righteous administration of their affairs. What do we find? Not only that they made a secret bargain, ignoring the law of the land, but that they made a bargain the extravagance of which could scarcely be realized. They proposed to give these gentlemen 3,750,000 acres of lands, and I have no hesitation in saying that the extremely valuable gold belt could have been included in one-fourth of that area; and if they discovered those valuable areas, they could collar one-half, at any rate, of the whole wealth of the country. It was said that they had only the opportunity, and that they had to take their chances with others. Not so, Mr. Speaker. Any one else going to the Government would have to pay the Government 10 per cent of the gross receipts over and above $2,500 at that time; but under the bargain made with Mackenzie & Mann they had only to pay 1 per cent. Suppose Mackenzie & Mann, astute men as they were, should say to a miner: If you go to the Government and make your entry with them, you must pay 10 per cent of your gross receipts, whereas if you come to us and disclose to us where your valuable riches are, we will only charge you 5 per cent. This would leave them 4 per cent clear profit, and they would have every alternate mineral claim in addition. No man would go to the Government and pay 10 per cent royalty if by disclosing the matter to Mackenzie & Mann he could get off with paying only 5 per cent, while Mackenzie & Mann would be getting 4 per cent of the proceeds of all the mines of the country; and the Government would only receive the 1 per cent royalty which Mackenzie & Mann would have to pay instead of the 10 per cent which the country supposed would be received from the mineral wealth of the district. So that scheme was frustrated. The Government did their best to carry it through, bulldozing the members who were not favourable to it to give their adhesion to it and vote for it. We remember one member getting up and speaking against the scheme, but not having the courage of his convictions when the vote came he bolted from the House. That indicated a desperate revolt, but it showed that the revoters had not the courage of their convictions. The party adhesion was too strong. I can conceive the righteous indignation of the hon. member sitting opposite me, the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I can well conceive the righteous indignation of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who spent every day of his public life, before he crossed over to that side of the House, denouncing imaginary evils, imaginary wrong-doings, having to get up to justify this wrong-doing that cannot be condoned. Yet I remember that the hon. gentleman was dragooned, not only into voting for this iniquitous scheme, but into getting up and telling this House that scarcely in the whole course of his political career had he seen such a splendid exhibition of statesmanship as the building of the Yukon railway, without tenders, without previously asking the advice of Parliament, and without informing the people of Canada beforehand that such a railway was to be built at all. What did they reply? Oh, they said, we are going to get this road built for nothing. They were going to hand over the half of Canada's enormous resources in that district, and a large percentage of the other half to those contractors. I have no hesitation in saying that these contractors could have sold that agreement, had they succeeded in securing its ratification by the Senate, for $30,000,000 or $40,000,000 at once. That agreement, however, was, fortunately for the country, not ratified by the Senate, and what have we here to-day? We have this scheme of the Drummond County Railway. What does the hon. Minister tell us? When asked for the contract, he tells the hon. leader of the Opposition that if he chooses to go up into the committee room, where an investigation was held, and look through the pigeon-holes, he will find there some documents, and that somewhere else he may find some other documents, and that between them all he may get a pretty fair idea of what the present Drummond County scheme is. I am surprised at a Minister of the Crown, in submitting an important contract to Parliament, should ask us to accept it without giving us a particle of information. When asked to-day what were the receipts of this branch, he is unable to say. He made the most astonishing statement I ever heard in this House. He said: We do not keep separate accounts. Why? This road was under his control temporarily during the last year and a half or so, and he promised to justify this session of Parliament the contract that he had previously made and which he was not able to justify last year. But after a year has elapsed, during which the railway was under his control, he is still unable to give us the results of his twelve months' experience in running that road. He is unable to point to us any satisfactory results that would justify the contract he asked us to accept a year ago, but he tells us: We do not keep accounts that way. Not only that, but he told us also this afternoon that he did expect the officials in his department would have kept those accounts separate. He shakes his head in dissent, but I am quite sure he did say that he thought his officials were keeping the accounts in that way. Yes, Mr. Speaker, and that he asked them to produce those accounts which the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) called for, and he found to his surprise that he could not get them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. gentleman quite misunderstood me. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. WALLACE. "Hansard" will show that he said that he expected separate accounts were kept and that he had asked for them. He cannot deny that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All right, we will see what "Hansard" will show. I am sure you are wrong.

Mr. WALLACE. I was listening to the hon. gentleman carefully, and I gathered from his statement that he had asked the officials of his department for those accounts, and they told him it was not usual to keep them in that way, so that evidently the Minister himself was disappointed. What are we to conclude from this? We can only conclude that the hon. Minister, at the end of the year, when he had to come to Parliament and justify the bargain of a year ago or the still better bargain he has made since, by the actual results, has no results to show us. So he told the ex-Minister of Finance. If he has any such results, we are entitled to have them placed on the Table, so that every member will have the opportunity of examining them before the question comes up in the House. But if there were no separate accounts kept, how are we to tell what the result is? Does the hon. gentleman intend to take advantage of that general prosperity which he and his colleagues tell us has prevailed in this country, and is increasing the earnings of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, presumably, in like or greater proportion, the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway, that he will say: We have increased our earnings 10 per cent or 20 per cent as the result of that Drummond connection between Montreal and Lévis or Quebec? No, Sir, he cannot do that. He asks us to ratify the bargain he has since made, and which is much better for the country than the one previously submitted, because the former one called for the payment of half a million dollars more money, and 5 per cent to the Grand Trunk Railway instead of 4 per cent and so on, so that probably $1,000,000 is saved by the present contract over the previous one.

But I would like to ask the Minister of Railways to tell us what he has not yet told us, namely, where is the necessity for the purchase of this road? We have the Grand Trunk Railway running from Montreal to Quebec, because, I take it, Quebec and Lévis are the same points, being only a mile or less apart, and that distance traversed by a ferry, and we are told that the Government intend giving a large subsidy for the building of a bridge to connect these two points. There is the Canadian Pacific Railway running from Montreal to Quebec, the Grand Trunk Railway running between the same points, and this Drummond County Railway also connecting the same points. We are told, and the statement has been repeated, that during this session—presumably when five-sixths of the members have gone home—a resolution will be sprung upon the House to grant a subsidy to the south shore line, or a fourth line between these two points. Can any one tell me, who has travelled over that part of the country, what necessity there is for a fourth line of railway between those points? Except for the purely local traffic, one of these railroads could easily do the business. This does away with the argument of the need of a through line. It is said that this line must reach the centre of business in Montreal. That is the slur upon the city of Quebec, which is our greatest natural harbour, having the greatest facilities for doing the business and having the most hospitable and generous people to be found in any city of Canada. This railroad has its practical terminus at the city of Quebec, which has had a business history in the past, and has great prospects for the future. Hon. gentlemen have not shown any reason why this road should be extended to Montreal any more than they have shown why it should be extended to Toronto or Winnipeg as a rival to existing lines. I contend that Government control of the existing railroads is better than building parallel lines. These lines will not compete with one another. Take the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway. They have points where they meet, competing points as they call them, but where there is no competition so far as cutting down the rates is concerned. They do the business more promptly, and in that way there is competition, but not in the way of lowering rates to the farmer or manufacturer. By having four railways, you have quadruple expense in every way, which the people have to pay. So, I contend, it is not good statesmanship or good business for these hon. gentlemen to quadruple these lines of railroads without any necessity for doing it.

And what are they paying? I remember hearing a gentleman who is a better authority than either the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) or myself make the statement that the sums that were proposed to be given to the Grand Trunk Railway for the maintenance of the bridge and to the Drummond County Railway were sufficient to build two railroads from Montreal to Quebec, give two million dollars to build a magnificent bridge across the St. Lawrence, and allow a million and a half to provide for right of way, stations and terminals, a sum amply sufficient for that purpose. This is the statement of an hon. gentleman who has built millions of dollars worth of railways, who has spent his lifetime in that occupation and knows what he is talking about—the

Mr. WALLACE.

hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan). The hon. Minister will have to furnish the House with the information upon which he proposes to justify such an enormous expenditure. The hon. Minister says that he will not discuss these matters until we get into committee—that is to say, he will not discuss the principle until we have adopted the principle. He is bound to give us all the information we can reasonably require. What I would recommend him to do is to propose the postponement of the consideration of this question until all the papers are brought down. This they must do before they can be permitted to railroad a scheme like this through this House—a scheme although, apparently, has not a single feature to recommend it, the real reason for urging it, I suspect, being that there is a crowd of robbers behind it who want to plunder the country. This railroad was offered for sale for $500,000. But last year they come to the Government and ask $2,100,000. It must not be forgotten that the Dominion Government and also the Government of the province of Quebec have subsidized this road very generously. The subsidies did not quite build the road, but very near it. Then they ask this Government, which contributed, we will assume $700,000, to buy the road for $2,100,000. If such a proposition were accepted there would be men constantly building railroads and selling them back to the Government. The Government would have to pay twice over for their construction. In that connection we hear of another scheme, which, no doubt, will come before this House in due season—the construction of the Rainy River Railroad. The Minister of Railways and Canals a year ago took power which was utterly unjustifiable in my opinion. In the early days of the settlement of the North-west a proposal was made that subsidies should be given amounting to $3,200 a mile for the construction of railways. The Minister of Railways and Canals last year brought in a Bill to give him power to double that grant under certain conditions—and those conditions could easily be made to fit wherever the necessity arose. We are told that the Government are going to give $6,400 a mile toward this road. They gave a portion of it last year. I say that the Government is not justified in giving a single dollar towards the construction of that road. The Government was bound to make a railroad across the continent, they completed that road with Government subsidies for branch lines of that road wherever the necessities of the case justified it. But this is the first instance we have had in that connection where one road practically parallels the other, and where it does not parallel the other, the only justification for its construction is the fact that it starts from Fort William and reaches to the city of Winnipeg. They propose to give an enormous subsidy to that road, $6,400 a mile; the Government of Ontario is giving $6,400

a mile; the province of Manitoba, I have no doubt, for their end of it, will give $6,400 a mile.

Mr. HUGHES. The Ontario Government only gives $4,000.

Mr. WALLACE. Very well; $6,400 and $4,000 make over $10,000. I say, the Government is not justified in giving a subsidy to these roads, because the Government has performed its whole duty in the past by giving railroad connection between the great lakes and the city of Winnipeg, and on to the Pacific Ocean. They are not justified in giving a subsidy to a line especially which will not be a rival to the Canadian Pacific Railway. It will be, so far as we can see, a line placed in the hands of Mackenzie & Mann, who are contractors and in closest touch with the Canadian Pacific Railway. But whether in close touch with the Canadian Pacific Railway or not, it does not matter.

Mr. SPEAKER. Could the hon. gentleman tell me how this is connected with the question in dispute? I understand, he is speaking of something that is prospective, and that is not in the past.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I shall have great pleasure in pointing that out to you. This is partly prospective and partly retrospective. We have given a subsidy to this road, and, if they intend to increase enormously the subsidies given to these gentlemen, perhaps one of the reasons is to recoup them for some supposed or actual expenditure made in connection with the Yukon railroad. Some say, that it is because Mackenzie & Mann are very liberal and generous.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not wish at all to judge of the method the hon. gentleman may please to adopt in his argument. It is not my affair to do that. But I must draw his attention to the fact, that it is not at all regular for the hon. member to go so far afield as he is going now. He must see that as well as I do.

Mr. WALLACE. Of course, I bow to your decision; but I want to point out, that this railroad is a very long affair, and once you have started on a railroad, you do not know where you are going to stop sometimes. You say we will have an opportunity on another occasion of discussing these matters fully.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not; you misunderstand me. I hope the hon. gentleman will be serious.

Mr. WALLACE. I am always serious, and I know the Speaker himself will not treat the matter with levity. I say, I am pointing out these facts because they are intimately connected with the course the Minister of Railways and Canals is taking to-day with reference to the Drummond County matter. He is pursuing a certain course to-day, without giving us the information, trying to railroad this Drummond County matter through. I say, we should be warned by the history of the past, by the events that have happened within the last three years, by their course in reference to the railroads that I have mentioned, the Rainy River road, the Crow's Nest road, the Yukon road, are on all fours with this one. In various ways, the Minister has prevented the House from having that information which we should have before we consent to vote all these large subsidies for the construction of these roads. We are justified in referring to their course in regard to other roads in order to furnish an argument why we should not permit them to proceed with this one until they have given us the amplest information. They have no business to spend the money of the people of this country in subsidizing lines that are parallel to other lines. But that is only on a par with the proposition before the House about the Drummond County railroad, where, as I have pointed out, there are three parallel lines to-day, and a fourth one to be subsidized in the near future. So that, when you object to the Drummond County railroad, they again point to the fact, that in the Rainy River railroad there are two parallel lines, one built by the Government, and the other subsidized at about the cost of building it. Now, in my opinion, we have come to a time when we should call a halt in railroad building, in one direction at least. While there are portions of this country that require development, a development which can only be obtained by the construction of railroads, this indiscriminate building of railroads, this building of parallel lines, should be strictly a commercial transaction, justified by its merits from a commercial standpoint, built by private capital, and not at the expense of the Government. The Government in the past have done their duty very fairly by the citizens of this country. They have launched into the construction of railroads in every direction where they could be justified, and in some places, I am sorry to say, where experience has scarcely justified them. But let that go. We have come now to a period when, I think, careful economy of the resources of the country should be practised, when we should not build parallel lines of railroad at the expense of the Government. If a commercial necessity for them exists, then let enterprising men build those roads at their own expense. It is only justifiable to spend public money in building railroads where a new country is to be opened up, where it would not be justifiable for men to put their own money in, because there would not be returns for many years to come. In those cases the Government of the country had stepped in and generously provided railways to open up every portion of this country where the opening up would be at all justifiable, but I say, in this case, that we must be furnished with a copy of the contract with the conditions and with the whole of the information that the Government had and which they must have. They must give us some information. This road has been running under their sole control and management, I presume, for fifteen or sixteen months; whatever time it may be, they should furnish us with ample information as to the cost of the running of the road, the number of passengers carried, the amount of local freight and through freight and all information which can be held to justify this contract. But, as I said before, I am afraid there are some men behind it, and we have heard it repeatedly said that there are these men behind it who are making a fortune out of it if it goes through in its present shape, and who would be making a still larger fortune if it went through in the shape it was presented last year. If that be the case, and, in my opinion, it is one of the great motive powers that are inducing the Minister, or compelling the Minister—I do not know whether it is with his consent or whether he is being forced into this position—but, in any event, I would ask him to give the most serious consideration to this matter, and not to attempt to push it through this House to the detriment of the best interests of the country merely because a few plunderers may be behind the Government, who wish to divide a certain amount of spoil, wrested from this Government.

Mr. ALEX. McNEILL (North Bruce). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals whether he can tell us if this railway is being run at a profit or a loss?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to make quite a full statement to the House, or to the committee, when the House resolves itself into committee, and when, I hope, to be able to satisfy my hon. friend.

Mr. McNEILL. In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman promised to give us some information on this subject before we went into committee and before the discussion came on, perhaps he would not mind informing the House whether the railway is being run at a profit or a loss. Of course, the hon. gentleman can withhold that information from us if he chooses. If he has information and refuses to give it to the House, he may do so, but I think, after what has occurred, he stands in a rather curious position. Of course, he must judge of that for himself. I think we have now surely found ourselves in this House in a very strange position. We are called upon to discuss this question with this information in the breast of the hon. Minister, which he locks up there, and refuses to give us until he chooses, of his own will, to condescend to give it. I had no intention of saying anything in regard to this matter, but, I venture to say, that the people of this country will look upon what has occurred in this House to-day with very considerable suspicion. I think the people of Canada have learned enough in regard to this Drummond Railway deal—I use the word deal because the term has become classic since the hon. Minister has used it himself—the country have had their attention called to this Drummond Railway deal sufficiently to watch carefully what is being done in reference to it. In view of the fact that the right hon. First Minister—at least, I so understood him this afternoon—said that the last time the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals asked us to accept his proposals in reference to this railway, he forced through this House a contract for $500,000 more than he now proposes to ask for it, I think the people will consider his conduct in reference to this question in the past, at all events, as not being very creditable. I would like to know from the right hon. First Minister whether I correctly interpret what he said this afternoon when I understood him to say that on the present contract there would be a saving, as compared with the last one, of $500,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, that is not what I said. What I said was that the existence of the terms of the second contract was perfectly known, because the argument had been largely upon it in which it was said that there would be a saving of $500,000.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman does not say that there has been a saving.

The PRIME MINISTER. I did not say that.

Mr. McNEILL. Well, it is all the more necessary that those of us who have not a copy of the contract should see it before we proceed to deal with this question.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to hear that my hon. friend has not seen the contract, yet it has been before the public for twelve months.

Mr. McNEILL. I think we are all entitled to have this contract before us.

The PRIME MINISTER. It will be laid on the Table of the House as soon as my hon. friend—

Mr. McNEILL. My right hon. friend knows perfectly well that, though it is laid on the Table of the House, all the members of the House cannot read it before this discussion comes on. We are entitled to have it in our own hands before the discussion comes on, so that we may carefully read it and study it. I think the people will hold us all responsible for what we do in reference to this matter. I think we are entitled to know everything connected with it to the smallest particular, especially because of what has already occurred, before we are called upon to deal with a grave matter of this kind. I think it is a grave matter to be called upon to vote away millions of the people's money without the fullest information, and I shall refuse to be a consenting party to any such course.

Motion (Mr. Taylor) that the House adjourn, negatived.

House divided on motion of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. DUGAS. I beg to call attention to the fact that the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. McCormick) has not voted.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am paired with the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dyment). I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. HUGHES. I am paired with the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Calvert). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. MacLAREN. I am paired with the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Logan). I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BEATTIE. I am paired with the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. MacPherson). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. BRITTON. I am paired with the hon. member for East Bruce (Mr. Cargill). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. LAVERGNE. I am paired with the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. CHRISTIE. I am paired with the hon. member for St. Antoine, Montreal (Mr. Roddick). I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. COWAN. I am paired with the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague): otherwise I would have voted for the motion.

The House resolved itself into committee on the resolution (Mr. Blair).

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I do not imagine, Mr. Chairman, that I shall be able to say very much that is new in presenting this resolution for the consideration of the committee. The subject of the Drummond County Railway has almost, it appears to me, become a hackneyed subject in a parliamentary sense, and I think the same might well be said so far as discussions on it throughout the country are concerned. We have had the subject of the Drummond County Railway in all its bearings ventilated on every conceivable occasion in which it was possible to drag it in, since the proposal was first submitted to Parliament. We have had it threshed out to a greater or lesser degree in the newspaper press which is friendly to the Government, and we have had it threshed out to an inordinate extent in the press which is not friendly to the Government. We have had it discussed on every hustings, I venture to say, during the by-elections that have taken place since the subject first came before Parliament. He would, therefore, be a very bold man indeed, who would suggest the possibility of putting very much that is new before the House in submitting this resolution. I may, however, cherish the hope that I can furnish some information which is not now in the possession of hon. members, and I do trust that our friends opposite will depart from their usual custom, and that they will profit by the information which I shall be able to lay before them. I know my hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) is in a very receptive frame of mind, for he looks it at the present moment; and, if he would only engage to give me the benefit of that more than ordinary intelligence which distinguishes him, I would not despair of making a convert of even my hon. friend. It looks like a large undertaking, but I would not despair; and if I fail, it will be because he shuts his eyes, closes his ears, and absolutely blocks his understanding to what will be a plain every-day matter of common sense. The resolutions which were first submitted do vary somewhat from those which I have now the honour of moving. They vary, not in principle; not as to the general policy which they were framed to carry into effect; but they do vary from those which were first introduced in matters of detail. Some hon. gentlemen who are very keen to make a point politically out of the transaction, will perhaps magnify and exaggerate the extent of this difference, and they will think it of immense importance. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) will no doubt visibly stagger under the load of adjectives which he will employ in order to indicate the enormity, and the monstrosity of the other proposition as distinguished from this. I will take occasion before I conclude my observations, to dwell a little more minutely and to present more fully for the consideration of the committee the precise features of this distinction, than at the present stage of this discussion.

Well, Sir, I say, that this resolution involves substantially the same principle, and that principle is the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I am not going to assume that that feature of this resolution will be much antagonized, for the result of the extended and repeated discussions which have taken place upon this question is to enable me in some measure to form a tolerably accurate judgment as to what will be the objections, as to what are the grounds upon which this proposition will be attacked by the opposite side; and among all these grounds, I venture to say, that no one will seriously contend that it will not be in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway system itself, that it will not be in the interest of the country that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended to Montreal. Sir, the Intercolonial Railway must be extended to Montreal. If any mishap should occur, and if the present proposition which we are laying before you should miscarry, the time must come, and at no very distant date, when the policy would be taken up; for in my opinion no Government could exist in Canada which was not prepared to make a home and resting place as it were in the city of Montreal, for the Intercolonial Railway system. I shall not argue that point to-night; I shall wait until somebody undertakes to attack the wisdom of that policy before I occupy your time in spreading before you in detail the reasons why this policy ought be approved. I would venture now to appeal to my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), that when he comes to speak his mind and to give his judgment upon this question, he will tell you that there are no arguments against the adoption of this policy, and that there are no reasons why this railway should not be extended to Montreal. Every consideration points to the importance and the necessity of that project being carried out. I know my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) will say that. I know that if he is asked the question in the House, he will say it, because he has not hesitated to say it on a previous occasion. He was called upon to give evidence on an occasion when the whole subject was undergoing investigation upon oath, and my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) did then state upon oath, that it had been and was his opinion, that there was nothing to justify any antagonism to that policy. I will, therefore, call upon my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways as a witness in support of the wisdom, and the supreme importance of adopting this policy.

I do not know, nor shall I assume, that the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) is going to take any stand against these resolutions. It is, perhaps, a little difficult for one to judge as to what he may do from what he has done, or to judge what he will say from what he has said, and, therefore, I must only conjecture that we heard enough from him already on this question to convince us that he has given up entirely and absolutely all thought of opposition to the policy of extension. He has lately been searching around (and I think vainly) to discover some other means of accomplishing this object which will not be identical with the means the Government has adopted. If I might refer to what was said upon a former occasion—I know it may not be quite parliamentary to do so, because the occasion I have in mind was since the opening of the present session, and is, therefore, in the nature of a past debate—but if the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) will not interpose any objection, I will refer to the fact, that he, in looking around to discover how he could get into Montreal with the Intercolonial Railway, without travelling the route we have adopted, told us, as you will remember—and hon. members must have heard it with amazement and surprise—that he was going to take us over the St. Lawrence River from Lévis to Quebec; he was going to take us over by a new bridge to be built across that river, and then he was going to run us up over the rails of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal. It was a mere matter of, just say so, and the thing was going to be accomplished. You were under no compulsion to appeal to anybody about it for assistance, for, according to him, the Government could give $1,000,000, and, presto! the thing is done. These million dollars, of course, would not be sufficient to carry out the undertaking, but it is to be supplemented very largely and very substantially by the Grand Trunk Railway and by the Canadian Pacific Railway. These two companies are to pay out of their coffers something towards the building of this bridge; and then, after you got across the river, you are to take the Canadian Pacific Railway. And the way the hon. gentleman proposes to manage it is by exchanging the use of 300 miles of railway between St. John and Halifax for the use of 150 or 160 miles of railway between Quebec and Montreal. That is the hon. gentleman's proposition. He found himself in straits. He felt the weight and the pressure of public opinion supporting the wisdom of this policy, and with all his ingenuity searching in every possible direction to find some more inviting means for carrying it out, he has hit upon this expedient, which, I suppose, we are to take as evidence of that supreme knowledge which the hon. gentleman possesses of his much-vaunted science of political economy.

Now, you will observe that the hon. gentleman disposes very summarily in this connection of the Grand Trunk. All the hon. gentleman has to do, apparently, is to say to the Grand Trunk, "You must give us two millions or three millions"—I do not know how many millions he would require, but a very handsome contribution. He does not seem to think that the will or consent of the Grand Trunk Railway Company to make the contribution is an element that need enter into the calculation at all. I venture to say, however, that the hon. gentleman has not consulted with the Grand Trunk Company, and is not authorized to speak on their behalf, or to say that they have the idea of entertaining for a single moment such a ludicrous proposition as he put forward. Though the hon. gentleman also feels very kindly towards the Canadian Pacific Railway, I venture to say that, close as he may be towards that great corporation, he has not had from them any authority to speak for them or to say that they would give one dollar towards building a bridge across the River St. Lawrence. I have myself heard, not very recently, but since I have had the honour of filling the position I occupy, leading officials of that corporation express their minds on the question; and I know, from what they have said, what they thought upon it; and if the hon. gentleman did not succeed in convincing them that they were absolutely and entirely at fault in the judgment they have expressed to me, he would not get a five-cent piece from the Canadian Pacific Railway towards the building of this bridge. So, you see, he is not going to make very great progress after all under this plan of reaching the city of Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway.

But what are we going to say as a Government, owning the Intercolonial Railway, to the other part of the proposition? What do you think of the hon. gentleman undertaking to hand over to any railway corporation the most valuable portion of the Intercolonial Railway system—that between Halifax and St. John—the most productive portion, the part which runs through the most thickly-populated and wealthiest section? He is going to hand over to the Canadian Pacific Railway the whole of that territory for the purposes of their business, to earn what they can out of it, to take all the profits possible, and he is going to take in return for it 160 miles from Quebec to Montreal. Now, I know very little with regard to what may be the value of that section of country between Quebec and Montreal, from a railway point of view, on the north side of the St. Lawrence, though I have travelled over it. I have enough knowledge of it, however, to know that it does not at present and will not for many years to come compare at all favourably with the locality lying between St. John and Halifax, the two most populous cities we have—a locality which is thickly populated by a prosperous and well-to-do people. I, therefore, say that the hon. gentleman has not brought that great knowledge of political economy which he frankly affirms he possesses to bear upon this question; and he surely does not think that he is justified in speaking for the party which he leads when he undertakes to present such an alternative scheme to the one which the Government submits to the House for their consideration at this time.

The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has spoken upon this question more than once. I am speaking within bounds when I say that he has spoken more than a dozen times upon it. He spoke upon it almost before it was introduced, on the occasion when it first came before Parliament. I think you will remember the avidity with which the hon. gentleman seized on these resolutions. He reminded one of some hungry animal which had been seeking for something to devour, and when the opportunity arose, jumped on it and caught it and tore it apparently to pieces. So the hon. gentleman exhausted all his energies, physical and mental, to destroy the proposition when it first came before the House. He has not studied the question to any extent; but he had been coached by somebody whose name I could not extract from him at that time, but whom he put forward as a gentleman of large experience as a civil engineer, who knew what he was talking about; and the hon. gentleman did not scruple, simply on the information of someone whom he knew was full of bitterness against the project, to denounce it in unmeasured terms. He did not simply condemn the Government's proposition; he did not simply say, "You are giving too much." I could have excused him, as the leader of a party whose business it is to oppose, for taking that position. But he did not do that. He denounced and ridiculed and degraded the character of this railway from every point of view. He could not say enough in discredit of the whole structure. It was a tan-bark road and a worthless road; it was something the Government had picked up without consideration; they did not know what they were doing; it was utterly useless and wholly unfit for the purposes for which it was intended. That was the judgment the leader of the Opposition expressed on this question before he had an opportunity of giving it more than a moment's thought. From this you can judge what value to attach to the criticisms which the hon. gentleman pronounces on any proposition that may be made by the Government in connection with this matter. Well, we have had some opportunity since then of giving people a chance to judge of the quality of that road. There must be—there are—a good many gentlemen on the other side of the House who have travelled over this line, and, who, I venture to think, would be frank and honest enough to get up in their places and say there is not a word to be said against the quality of that road. I know that the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) is simply aching to have an opportunity—

Mr. HUGHES. In a private car.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In any kind of a car. The hon. gentleman must not suppose that no car is good enough for him except an official car or a private car. We are putting upon the road some pretty good cars, and I think if he will only take the occasion—if he has not been over the road—to take a trip over the railway after we open for the summer season, he himself will not hesitate to give us the strongest possible testimony endorsing the quality of the road as a portion of the Intercolonial.

Mr. HUGHES. I will travel with the hon. Minister some time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very likely. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think I am justified in assuming, therefore, that there will be no complaint from the opposite side that the Drummond County Railway is a poor piece of road. If there shall be, I shall ask my hon. friend from the city of Halifax (Mr. Borden), who is an honest and fair-minded man, and who, I think, has travelled over that road, to say whether he thinks any reasonable fault can be found with it, or whether it does not compare favourably, so far as one can judge, with any other portion of the Intercolonial system.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may say to the hon. gentleman, since he has appealed to me—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not insist on my hon. friend giving his opinion now. I can make allowance for his anxiety to give his evidence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not in a hurry, if the hon. gentleman does not want me to give it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am perfectly willing. I suggested that if the quality of the road were attacked, I should appeal to him. He quite misunderstood me. I did not invite him to make any statement now. Just at the present juncture I am not needing his testimony, and am rather assuming that no testimony will be needed on that question. Again, Mr. Chairman, I venture to think that whatever other point of view there may be in which this proposition will be condemned, hon. gentlemen opposite will not again take that point of view, from which the integrity of the transaction, the bona fides of the Minister and the Government have been assailed. I do not know whether hon. members of this committee recall to mind the language which was used, the mean insinuations that were thrown out, when this matter was first mooted, in which almost everything was said that would reflect discreditably upon those connected with and concerned in the transaction—upon myself as Minister of the department—in which everything but a direct charge of personal corruption was put forward by the Opposition. I venture to think that that course will not be repeated to-day, and I tell you why I assume it will not. But before I do so, let me make good the statement that rather serious reflections were passed upon the Government. I do not know whether these gentlemen opposite really meant to be understood, when they used this language in a Pickwickian sense, or whether they really found it difficult to imagine that any Government could have a clean business transaction in connection with a railway matter, or what the difficulty is; but it is perfectly clear that at that time they did not hesitate to make very grave insinuations against those who were responsible in this transaction. They, of course, meant to refer to myself, and perhaps to my colleague the Minister of Public Works, because I think his name was dragged into the transaction, and they meant, no doubt, to make general reflections against the Government. The hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) was one of those. He is now in a different frame of mind, but then he did not hesitate to say this:

There are men who are not virtuous, who have not these pure and incorruptible ideas that the hon. member for Compton has.

The hon. gentleman was then, as you will see, having a little hit at the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope). The hon. member for Compton thought that the transaction was absolutely defensible in every particular, and voted accordingly, and that did not satisfy my hon. friend from West York, who said:

There are men who are not virtuous, and who have not these pure and incorruptible ideas that the hon. member for Compton has, and they are willing to go in and take the plunder, if there is plunder, and it looks as if there was, when a $360,000 job has paid over $2,200,000.

I pass that portion of the reference in which it is suggested that the value of the railway is $360,000, and that we paid over $2,000,000 for it, but shall deal with that in connection with other references of the same character at a later period. But that was what the hon. member for West York said.

Then we come to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), whom I do not see in his place at present. He said:

When it is proposed to pay $1,150,000 over and above the expenditure upon the road, that is a transaction that cannot be justified, and concerning which the wholesome sentiment of this country will be very suspicious indeed as to the motives that prompted the Government to enter into it.

That is what the hon. member for Westmoreland said about it. I pass by also the suggestion, the utterly offensive and visionary suggestion, that we were to pay $1,150,000 over and above the expenditure on the road, but before I conclude, I propose to show that that was entirely unfounded, whether he will acknowledge it or not.

I now come to the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). He said:

My hon. friend may rest assured that if he has the mind to face an investigation with reference to this matter, it can be shown that he has paid over and above everything they have put into the railway, a sum pretty close to $750,000, which will be divided among these gentlemen.

I will show how far the hon. gentleman's prediction has been verified, under oath, when the facts were elicited, and further that he was talking about something he had no knowledge of and simply casting this statement before the House upon the purest and most absolute imagination, without any ground at all on which to base it.

Then, we come to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). That hon. gentleman said:

I may say that if the Upper Chamber went into an inquiry into this matter, I think it would lay bare more of these things than we can do, as there are some transactions connected with it which, if I am well informed, will not bear the light of day, and are not to the credit of the gentlemen who are making that deal.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say "hear, hear," at this late day. I think he is scarcely conscious of the effect and meaning of the words he used when he approves of this statement of his, made in 1897.

Mr. SPROULE. Perfectly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says he is perfectly informed. Then, there is no testimony which could be adduced in the light of day, no matter how convincing it might be to every fair and impartial man, which would exercise the slightest influence upon the mind of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman says further:

This Bill commits the country to a very large expenditure of money, and it commits it to the endorsement of a transaction which, so far as we can get information about it, appears to be shady in the extreme.

Mr. SPROULE. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I simply stop at this moment to say to the hon. gentleman that the men who are responsible for this transaction have just as much respect for their characters as my hon. friend, and would be just as slow to tarnish their reputations and lives with a dishonourable and corrupt transaction as would the hon. member for East Grey.

Then I come to my hon. friend who preceded me in office, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and he delivered himself to this effect at that time :

What I complain of is not the extension of the Intercolonial to Montreal ;—

The hon. gentleman has always been frank enough to avow that.

—I complain of the manner in which the hon. Minister of Railways has entered into this monstrous bargain with the Drummond County Railway Company, which, to say the least of it, savors of wrong and corruption.

Mr. HAGGART. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Now, I do not think he meant what he said when he put that forward. I acquit him of any intention to say to us personally—the other member of the Government and myself—that we were guilty of corruption, because I find that later, when he had the opportunity of making good these charges, if they could be established, and when he was appealed to to bring witnesses before the committee who would have every opportunity and privilege to tell all they knew, he made haste to disavow any purpose or intention of reflecting upon the integrity of the Government in the transaction. Now, my hon. friend must not be too hasty in applauding the expressions which I have read, uttered by himself in 1897, because I believe he has some self-respect, some regard for appearances, and his own attitude before this House, and I say that he cannot reconcile the using and the endorsement of that language with what he stated publicly before the committee which had the investigation of this matter in its hands. Now, here is what occurred—and it will be found at page 158 of the report of the committee which had charge of the investigation. It may be well, perhaps, that I should tarry for a moment to remind the House of the circumstances under which that investigation took place. I need scarcely remind the House, that hon. gentlemen opposite, while they would create the impression that there had been corruption and wrong-doing in this transaction, were afraid to make their accusations before Parliament in such a form that they could be dealt with by a committee of this House. They gave to their newspaper press all over Canada the excuse—I will not say, the justification, because newspapers are not justified in publishing scandalous statements with regard to the conduct of public men merely on the strength of what may be said by gentlemen in Opposition to the Government, who have a political object to serve—of saying that the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Public Works and the Government generally had been guilty of corrupt transactions in connection with the acquisition of this road. And, when we failed to force the hon. gentlemen in Opposition into making any charges in such a form that they could be dealt with in a parliamentary way, it became necessary, if we were to vindicate ourselves against these aspersions, to ask for a committee to investigate. I felt it necessary, and so did my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works, to make a request to the Prime Minister to ask Parliament for this inquiry, in order that we might, at all events, be able to point to the result of the investigation in times to come as evidence that we had been grossly slandered by those opposed to us in this House, who attacked us in this manner, utterly without warrant and without being able to produce a tittle of evidence to support their accusations. The committee having been appointed, the investigation proceeded. Every opportunity was allowed to hon. gentlemen who had not hesitated to make these grave and serious reflections upon our conduct as Ministers of the Crown, to produce their evidence. They were called upon to summon witnesses and present testimony which they thought—to give them the utmost credit for fairness in the matter—might establish their accusations. There was not a particle of testimony adduced from beginning to end of the investigation, which gave colour or warrant to these slanderous charges. At the conclusion, when there were no other witnesses to be summoned, the chairman of the committee called the attention of the gentlemen present, among whom were the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden),—

Mr. BLAIR.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) was a member of the committee.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Oh, yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not appear by the record who were or who were not present. It says:

The committee met at 10.30. The Chairman spoke as follows :—

I am not reading all that he said, but all that is pertinent.

So far as I have been able to see, no evidence of corruption has been adduced, and if my friends on the opposite side of the committee, the Conservative members of the committee, have any evidence at all showing corruption, I ask them now to give the names of these witnesses, and we will have them brought here and examined. If, as Mr. Haggart says, it is a mere matter of policy with which he agrees, the policy of bringing the road into Montreal, then the only difference is as to the price paid, and of course the question of corruption does not arise at all.

Mr. HAGGART. That is my point of view. We never made any charges of corruption.

Now, I ask this House, whether, in the face of what the hon. gentleman had said, as found in the "Hansard" of 1897, page 4062, and in view of what took place before this committee, it is becoming in my hon. friend to re-affirm, or endorse, or to in any way approve of the language which he used in 1897? If, when the opportunity was offered him of establishing his case and proving the charges, so far as they involved conduct of a wrongful or corrupt character on the part of the present Government, and he expressly avowed that he never intended to make any such charges—I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) to say, "No." But look at what I have read :

If, as Mr. Haggart says, it is a mere matter of policy with which he agrees, the policy of bringing the road into Montreal, then the only difference is as to the price paid, and of course the question of corruption does not arise at all.

Mr. HAGGART. That was my point of view. We never made any charges of corruption.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. I suppose you read what was said in the press.

What can the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) say to justify himself before a fair Parliament, and, as I maintain, before a fair country, when he hesitates to repudiate immediately the interpretation that this language reflects on the integrity of the Government in this transaction? Well, Sir, I take it, that, under these circumstances, we shall not hear on this occasion, or on any future occasion, in connection with this matter, of any improper conduct on the part of the Government in this transaction. We come down, therefore, to what is a fair matter for discussion, and, perhaps, a fair matter, in some of the phases of it, for a difference of opinion. I am not going to say, that hon. gentlemen opposite are not free to criticise, in very strong terms, if they choose, any matter of policy that the Government proposes. I presume, there are here for that very purpose, and I feel that they are likely to act fully up to the measure of their privileges in this regard. If they find the Government doing one thing, they will most certainly affirm, that it would be in the interest of the country that they should do the other. If they find us going to the left, they will say that we should have gone to the right. I will not find fault with them for this. We are not worthy of the position we hold and of the almost unbounded confidence we enjoy of the country, if we are not able to defend our conduct in these regards. Therefore, this question is fully open for discussion. We are here to establish the fact, that we have made a good business transaction, that we have made an arrangement that cannot properly be attacked, no matter how critically it may be examined. I am prepared now to justify and defend in every particular the method by which we have endeavoured to carry out the policy of the extension to Montreal.

Now, the hon. gentleman, the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), has not found fault with the policy generally, so far as I have been able to discover. He has not told us that we had no business to get into Montreal; what he has said is that this is a most monstrous transaction, that it is a transaction of an extravagant nature. That is what the hon. gentleman said with regard to the terms upon which we proposed to acquire the Drummond County Railway. Now, Sir, is this an outrageous and an extravagant bargain? I suppose the hon. gentleman means by extravagance that we have paid altogether too much for it, and more than we could have acquired it for, or more than it cost. If we have been guilty of an outrageous or extravagant transaction, then the proposition which we make to Parliament unquestionably ought to be condemned. But I propose to join issue with the hon. gentleman, and I propose to call upon him to show us in what particular it is outrageous, and in what particular it is extravagant. I know that the hon. gentleman who sits beside him, and who leads the Opposition, has stated, not once, but many times, that this railway could have been bought for $500,000, and that we are paying $2,000,000 for it. Now, I would like to pause here and ask the hon. gentleman to give us the basis for his statement. I presume he will admit that it is his duty to approach something like accuracy in the statements which he makes to Parliament; I presume that the hon. gentleman does not regard himself as outside of the pale to such a degree that he ought not to furnish some little evidence, some little argument, in support of any statement which he makes. Well, he has made the statement unqualifiedly that that railway could have been bought for $500,000, and that we are now to pay $2,000,000 for it. You have all heard him make that statement. I challenge the hon. gentleman to furnish, not abundant evidence, but a tittle of evidence in support of that statement. The hon. gentleman, you will observe, would convey to the public mind and to Parliament the impression that the railway we are paying, according to his calculation $2,100,000 for, or, in round figures, $2,000,000 for, could have been bought and was offered for $500,000. Am I misinterpreting or misstating the hon. gentleman's statement? I think I am not. Well now, would it be believed, would anybody who had sat here in Parliament and is familiar with the facts, believe it possible that the leader of a great party, a party composed entirely of political economists, and he the greatest political economists of them all, would venture to make such a statement to Parliament, when the piece of railway about which the discussion took place on the basis of $500,000, was not this railway, but only half of it, or less than half of it? You would not infer that from the statement the hon. gentleman made. Well, do you imagine for an instant that the leader of the Opposition did not know when there was a discussion between members of the Government who had this subject in hand, and the owners of that railway in 1894, that there was not one-half of that railway built? Do you suppose that he did not know that? Do you suppose that he did not also know that there was expended in the completion of that road, according to sworn evidence, something near a million dollars after that date? Well, that is the fact. The hon. gentleman talks about audacity. What shall we say then of the supreme cheek—if I may use a milder term of a gentleman who applies the language which he applies to others—of an hon. gentleman who resorts to such attempts to mislead, not only Parliament but the country at large, upon these public questions? Sir, I ask that hon. gentleman again, when he takes occasion to speak on this question, to point to the evidence. Who is his authority? Did he hear any body offer this road for $500,000, even away back in 1894? Does he know of anybody of repute or credit in the community who will say that they could have bought that railway as it is now, or completed as it was afterwards, for any such money? I defy the hon. gentleman to name an individual upon the strength of whose credit he would venture to make that statement in this House. I think that if it were possible for these gentlemen to have shown that this railway for which we are paying $2,000,000 according to their way of calculating, but for which we are only paying $1,600,000 according to my way of calculating—if they could have shown that, it would have been a very proper thing to do, and it would have been a most useful thing to do, from their point of view. They had an opportunity of doing so when this investigation took place. All the witnesses from all directions, who had any knowledge of the transaction, were summoned and gave evidence under oath, and there was not a man that gave the slightest colour—I think I can fairly say that, when the evidence is read—to any such statement as that. We had the evidence of Mr. Farwell, and you know Mr. Farwell is a very reliable man. I believe he is the chief organizer and head of the Conservative organization in the eastern townships. He gave his evidence under oath, and what did he say with regard to this? When he was asked by one of the gentlemen on the committee whether he had ever offered this property for $500,000 to anybody, or the Government, he said he had never done anything of the kind. He absolutely and categorically denied having done it, but said that the proposition was that the Government should take the road at $100,000 a year, and that out of the capitalization of that amount of money there would be enough made to complete the construction of the line, and when divided among certain gentleman who were named by him, a very respectable sum would pass into their hands. That was the evidence which Mr. Farwell gave.

The hon. the 'ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) was a witness on that occasion, as I think I have already said, and it might be well that I should invite the attention of the committee to the evidence which he gave with regard to this question of the purchase at $500,000. He will not say that he could have purchased the road as it is to-day, he will not say that he could have purchased 71 miles completed, for $500,000. He will not say that for a moment. I will tell you why he will not say it, and if anybody wished it, he ought to know it. I will undertake to refer him to the report of the Drummond County Committee. The hon. leader of the Opposition has not got his information from the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). I will venture to say that he has not asked the hon. ex-Minister of Railways whether he would bear him out in making any such statement as that, because, if he had, the hon. ex-Minister of Railways would have told him unhesitatingly, that he could not do so. Let us see what was said by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways when he gave his evidence upon this question. At page 151 of the report of the committee you will find this question asked and the answer given:

Q. Do you undertake to swear that he gave you to understand the road could be bought for $500,000?—A. Oh, I do not think so. He told me the state of the finances of the road, and said that the Eastern Townships Bank was very anxious to realize; then, in the case of a sale to the Government, the road was to be put into the state it now is. He never went into details.

The hon. gentleman does not venture to say, on the contrary, he repels the idea, that an offer was made to him, or with his knowledge, of the sale of the road for $500,000. He had anticipated, that, perhaps, he might have arranged to get the road, as it then was, at a lower price than had been mentioned to him, but he does not pretend to assert that there was any offer or proposition on the part of the company to complete the additional miles of railway for any such money. He says, later on, as you will see by referring to his evidence at page 153 of the report, that, after he had these negotiations, he made a calculation as to what this road would cost. Putting it at the lowest possible price he estimated to complete the mileage then required to be completed, and he says he went into it in his own mind carefully, that the railway could be completed for $1,400,000. That was his calculation, made at that time.

Mr. HAGGART. Where is that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. At page 153.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think you will find anything of the kind at page 153.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says :

I understood I had an option for that part which is complete as stated, for $500,000—far less than his estimate,—

That is, Mr. Schreiber's estimate.

—and I inquired whether they had rolling stock on the Intercolonial to carry on traffic to Montreal, and I found that they had plenty ; and I made a calculation that for $1,400,000 we could have got the road extended in connection with the Grand Trunk.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the Grand Trunk, and you know it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) pretend to tell me, that that was what he meant, when he made that statement ?

Mr. HAGGART. Decidedly so.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, how much did he say it was going to cost to extend the road from St. Leonard to Chaudière ? What was his calculation as to that ?

Mr. HAGGART. I will tell the hon. gentleman what it was. It was my deputy's calculation—$11,000 per mile to finish it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But that does not explain his meaning, because it would cost $770,000 to complete the road from St. Leonard to Chaudière, even at the figures that the hon. gentleman has stated. Add $770,000 to $500,000, and you have $1,270,000 ; yet the hon. gentleman wishes us to understand, that, according to this calculation, it would cost only $200,000 to get into Montreal.

Mr. COWAN. One hundred and thirty thousand dollars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, $130,000. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman never went into any figures ; he never discussed the question with the Grand Trunk as to obtaining admission to Montreal. He never got down to figures at all. Does he pretend to tell us, that he could for $130,000, for ten times that amount, or twenty times that amount, or forty times that amount, get into the city of Montreal, obtain terminal facilities and running rights from the Grand Trunk from Ste. Rosalie, or St. Hyacinthe, or wherever he made the connection ? If this is the class of calculation upon which the hon. gentleman is building his opposition to the price proposed to be paid, then I can only say, that he is not reflecting a great deal of credit upon his calculating capabilities. Well, Sir, there is the statement which the hon. ex-Minister of Railways made on oath at that time ; never a word in regard to the Grand Trunk, and, mark you, this estimate of his was in opposition to the estimate that his engineer had given him, speaking of the probable cost of the Drummond County Railway. He says that his engineer had calculated, that it would cost $1,535,000, or something in that neighbourhood, to build the road from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière, but only $11,000 a mile, according to the careful estimate that he had himself made. How is he going to cut down the cost below the $1,500,000 that his engineer had estimated so as to reduce it to a figure which would enable him to pay even a mere nominal price to the Grand Trunk for the privileges and running rights over the 38 miles of their road, running rights over the bridge, and for the use of the terminal facilities in the city of Montreal ? I think I must leave the hon. gentleman where he has left himself in the testimony which he gave before this committee. And I take it that it would be difficult for the hon. gentleman to convince this committee that he has made any other calculation, though, for the moment, he dissents from the interpretation of the testimony I have offered to the committee.

The question is, whether we paid an outrageous price, or whether we paid a reasonable price for that railway.

Mr. HAGGART. Before the hon. gentleman departs from that point, he will do me the kindness to add to what he quoted, a portion. The question was asked :

Q. What would that amount to per year ?—A. I do not know, because I do not know the amount of traffic, but I can tell you this, that Mr. Schreiber estimated it would cost $300,000 or $400,000 to build the road. I understood I had an option for that part which is complete, as stated, for $500,000.

Then the hon. gentleman goes on with the debate in connection with the Grand Trunk.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, it was estimated, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, that it would cost $11,000 a mile to complete the balance of the road, and where does that land you ? If my view of this evidence is not correct, the hon. gentleman must surely see, that he has placed himself in a rather awkward position.

What I was about to say was, that the question is : Is this a fair price that we propose to pay for this railway ? Who is to judge as to whether it is or not ? I doubt very much, whether it is to be expected that we are to be governed by the opinions of hon. gentlemen opposite upon a question of this kind. They may be very fair and very impartial ; they may be willing to give us their honest judgment ; but there has not been a great deal of evidence of that, so far as I have seen yet, in regard to this transaction. If we are to test in Parliament what would be a fair price to pay for this railway, I am, however, not unwilling to summon hon. gentlemen opposite to produce their own record and show us, when they had new railways to build, when they had to extend the Intercolonial in other places, as they had from time to time, the price they paid to build railways in other portions of the country, as part of the Intercolonial Railway, and what those extensions cost. I think that, perhaps, may be a fair way for us to arrive at a conclusion as to whether or not our price is high, and as to whether or not these gentlemen opposite are at all candid, when they are criticising these figures as excessive. Well, Sir, we have had some evidence. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) himself undertook to extend the Intercolonial Railway after he had entered the Railway Department in 1879. He thought it necessary to carry it still further west from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, a distance of 125 miles. He bought a railway from the Grand Trunk Railway Company. That company happened to have 125 miles of road they wished to sell; they had been operating this section for a time; it had run down somewhat; the road-bed was in a somewhat degraded condition, and the line apparently was not very profitable to the company; but the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), contending that it was necessary, in the interest of the Intercolonial Railway, to extend it to Lévis, and, therefore, he made an arrangement with and purchased that piece of road from the Grand Trunk Railway Company. What price did he pay for it? That is an interesting question. If you compare these two roads, we have two sections of country very similar for railway building; we may perhaps be able to judge as to whether we are paying an exorbitant price. At all events, we can cite the hon. gentleman's own conduct as fairly good evidence, and we can produce himself as a witness on this question at issue between us. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) paid $12,000 per mile to the Grand Trunk Railway Company for their 125 miles of road. And what did he buy? He bought a road-bed without sleepers and without rails. That is what he bought. He bought a railway, the road-bed of which was in a very incomplete and unsatisfactory condition, and he paid for that, exactly the same price which we are paying for the Drummond Railway, finished and completed in all respects, except the rolling stock. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) got no rails, he got no ties—we have ties, and we have rails, and we have stations, and we have a telegraph line. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) had none of these things at all; and yet, he would tell you that $12,000 per mile was a fair and reasonable price to pay for a dismantled road-bed, but that $12,000 per mile is not a fair price for us to pay for a completed railway as the Drummond County Railway is. I would like to see how that thing is going to be reasoned out, and I would want no better test than to put this transaction of the Drummond County Railway before the House, against and alongside the hon. gentleman's transaction of the purchase of the road between Lévis and Rivière du Loup. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is, when it comes to a question of political economy, scientific to a fault, and I challenge him to see a possible ground for complaining of our purchase, when he puts it alongside his own purchase. He can see no reason, in making a comparison of the two, to entitle him to condemn this purchase of the Drummond County, and to make his purchase of the road between Lévis and Rivière du Loup worthy of approval.

I am not obliged to confine myself to a reference to the cost of only one addition to the Intercolonial Railway, for the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) or his party have effected several. As a matter of fact, they did extend the Intercolonial Railway from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, and after he got there it cost him, not $12,000 a mile, but $17,600 a mile. That is all! Only $17,600 a mile; $5,600 a mile more than we propose to pay for this present road. But the hon. gentleman and his party had other roads which he undertook to buy or to build in connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and I will just refer very hastily to some few of these. We will group them together, and you can see what the record of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is; we can see whether or not he is entitled to be a judge to sit in condemnation on this transaction of ours, and at the same time to justify his own.

He undertook to build what is called the St. Charles Branch of the Intercolonial Railway. This was fourteen miles of railway constructed for the purpose of making a short connection at Lévis with the main line. I do not know for a certainty whether this is a fact, although I am told by the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway that it is a fact; I am told that he understood it at the time; that the Government had an opportunity of building that fourteen miles of railway called the St. Charles Branch, and of making a contract for its construction, covering all cost, for $500,000. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) or the Government of that day, would not accept that proposition. That is as I am informed by the General Manager of the Intercolonial Railway. Mark you, I do not know from any information outside of that whether the statement is entirely correct, or whether the gentleman's memory may be at fault, but that is the information which he furnished me. Well, the Government refused to take it, and they went on to build this piece of line themselves, and what do you suppose the 14 miles of the St. Charles Branch cost? It cost $135,000 per mile. Now, there were no very great difficulties in the way of constructing that road; there was no very great cost necessarily involved in the construction of it; it does not compare unfavourably with the general run of our railroads, but no doubt a very large item in the cost consisted in the land damages which had to be paid. I want to do the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) absolute justice. I am not going to say that he or his Government were responsible for the large amount of land damages which were incurred, because I believe that in almost all cases the question of the amount was referred to the tribunal of arbitration which was then constituted, and that they awarded these amounts against the Government. That accounted for nearly half of the actual cost, but if you take off half the cost, you have got nearly $70,000 per mile remaining, as compared with the $12,000 per mile which the Drummond County road cost us. So much for the St. Charles Branch of the Intercolonial Railway.

We have another similar transaction of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. We have the Oxford and New Glasgow road. I suppose there are gentlemen who are now in the House, who may remember my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper), the political economist, when he came down to Parliament with that scheme and dwelt upon the glorious advantages which would accrue to the Intercolonial Railway as a railway system by the construction of this line from Oxford to New Glasgow. He told Parliament that he was going to save 45 miles in the distance in getting to Cape Breton, and in the effort he spent $26,700 per mile, and he did not save these 45 miles after all. How much do you suppose he saved? There is a difference of opinion as to whether it is five miles or six miles—nobody has ventured to say it was more than six miles, and there are some who limit it to five miles. Yet this hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), who always sees with such supernatural clearness, whose judgment is unerring, whose perspicacity is without limit, who is absolutely so saturated with a knowledge of political economy that you can see it oozing out of his pores, visible almost to the naked eye; this gentleman who came down to Parliament and predicted a saving in mileage of 45 miles by the construction of this railway from Oxford to New Glasgow, at a cheap rate, ended by spending $26,700 per mile and saved five or six miles. And after he has done that, how he howls out his indignation at the bare thought of the monstrous, the stupendous outrage of paying $12,000 a mile for a railway. Well, that is not all. His genius in administration, especially in railway administration, did not stop at that. He must needs build a railway through Cape Breton—a very proper thing to do, no doubt; but it cost $33,000 per mile to build it, not including the cost of the ferry at Canso or the bridge at the Narrows. This gentleman although he has been a Minister himself, when he is dealing with departmental matters, does not hesitate to talk about other Ministers as having their hand in the public chest—not a very worthy style of remark from an ex-Minister of the Crown and an ex-Premier of this Dominion. But he cannot discuss the question with the moderation and the propriety you would expect to be observed by gentlemen who have had his experience in public life; but he talks about a Minister exercising the duties of his department and expending the public money, as having his hand in the public chest. Well, if that is simply his mode of expressing his idea that an officer is simply administering his department, then I may say that when the party with which he was connected—because he was not connected with it all through these transactions—expended $33,000 per mile on the Cape Breton road—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to tell him that I was in England when that road was built, and had nothing to do with it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman always felt a keen interest in this Government, whether he was in England or here, and I wonder that he could allow himself to remain quietly and calmly in England when his former colleagues and those who afterwards became his colleagues, were carrying on the affairs of this country in such an outrageous, extravagant and monstrous way. Why, Sir, I would have imagined that the hon. gentleman would have taken the very first steamer, after he heard of these enormities being perpetrated, and, with that genius for political economy of his, would have simply wiped out all those people who were here in Canada playing ducks and drakes with the public finances, and violating those principles which he holds so sacred.

But, Sir, I am not going to ask this committee to draw a conclusion from these facts because I do draw a conclusion therefrom. I am not going to ask the committee to accept it as final, definite. I am going to ask the committee to draw the conclusion that these gentlemen, the late Conservative Government, never undertook the extension of the Intercolonial in any direction except at a cost of twice or three times or five times that involved in the present proposition. And yet these gentlemen have the temerity to condemn this transaction, and to feign indignation at our having put the matter through at the cost we propose. I will not, however, rest the case for the Department of Railways and the Government on the evidence of what these gentlemen have themselves done. I admit at once that it is very poor authority and very poor justification for us. I acknowledge unhesitatingly that I would feel that I had indeed a lame defence before this Parliament and this country if I had to rest it on ground furnished by the example of hon. gentlemen opposite. We have some better evidence than that. We have evidence which I think ought to appeal to every person whose mind is fair and at all open to conviction by evidence; and I will tell you what that evidence is. First, we have an estimate of what this road would cost, made before I came into the department, by the engineer under the ex-Minister of Railways. After considering the question somewhat carefully, he formed the opinion that it would cost between $1,500,000 and $1,600,000 to build the line from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière. Well, that is some evidence, is it not? At all events, you will say that we cannot go very far astray if we do not much exceed the estimate of the engineer; because general experience, I had almost said universal experience, is that the estimates of engineers are greatly exceeded in the actual construction of public works. I think it will be somewhat difficult for any hon. member of this House who has had any experience of the construction of works by Government, to point to an instance in which the estimates of engineers were not exceeded; and there is oftentimes good reason for that. They cannot get at many things that enter into the cost. They cannot tell for the life of them what the land damages are going to be in the case of a railway. I may say, in passing, that if we had as a Government to build this railway, and had to deal with the owners of the properties through which this railway passes, instead of its costing us $1,600,000, I believe it would have cost us another million; and I will tell you why I think that. I think it for the reason that when the Government built the St. Charles branch, although I believe they made reasonable efforts to keep the cost of the land damages down, the small amount of land required for fourteen miles of railway cost within a few dollars of a million dollars. The Drummond County Railway is nearly ten times longer than the St. Charles branch and in proportion you would very soon run up to a much larger amount, perhaps, relatively, than the St. Charles land damages amounted to. As we are supposed to be discussing these matters from the standpoint of reasonable men, I ask, would a reasonable man say that we would have been wise to have started to build a railway anywhere, relying upon the supposition that the engineer's certificate of cost would be in excess of the actual amount that the work would cost the Government? I doubt very much whether we would. So that we may start with the estimate of the chief engineer as having evidential value. We have something more than that. At the investigation to which I have already referred, there were engineers present, and also officers of the Drummond County Railway, who were closely and critically questioned with regard to what this railway had actually cost. They did not produce their books with respect to all the cost, nor with respect to the construction of all the miles of railway.

Mr. BLAIR.

They produced them from a certain date down, but they had copies of or, at least, abstracts from them prior to that date. I think that they had built some forty or fifty miles—I am not now speaking with absolute confidence as to the correct mileage—and had entered the cost of the construction in a series of books, which the witness did not have under his control. But Mr. Newcomb, who appeared to be a very respectable gentleman, whose word, apparently, was not questioned by any member of the committee, and who spoke from actual knowledge, having copied the statements from the books the time they were in his possession, said that the amount expended down to a certain date was so much. He swore that the book contained every item of expenditure which had gone to make up the totals he gave to the committee, under oath, from the commencement of construction down to that period, and he produced the books themselves from that date down to the present moment. These books were in the possession of the committee, open to examination, and were examined. Well now, the evidence that was produced before that committee was to this effect:—Mr. Newcomb showed that down to the 28th of February, 1897, there had been expended by the owners of the Drummond County Railway, in the construction of that line, no less a sum than $1,908,271. It is true that this amount included the subsidies which they had received from the two Governments and the municipalities, but with that question of subsidies I need not stop now to deal. I shall refer to it later. But that sum was shown by Mr. Newcomb to have been expended by the people who built the railway, upon its construction, and they had every interest in the world in keeping the cost of the construction down to the lowest possible notch. Is not that conclusive evidence? It was not doubted; there was no suspicion cast upon its correctness. Mr. Newcomb's veracity was not impeached, and the books were there covering a long period. The amount, I think, expended, and not shown by the books, was $729,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The books were never brought.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None of them were brought?

Mr. HAGGART. The construction books containing the construction accounts, were not brought at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Were none of them brought? My impression is that the books were all available from the date named by Mr. Newcomb.

Mr. McISAAC. They were all there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression corresponds with that of my hon. friend from Antigonish. There were $729,000 expended by this company up to a certain date, in constructing a certain number of miles. They did not have the books to that date, and could not give the items in detail, but they did have the books from that period down, and they had the railway to show, and there could be no doubt as to what the railway cost relatively to the rest of the line. But Mr. Newcomb made this statement, and it was accepted as accurate. In no sense was there any disposition on the part of any member of the committee to cast any doubt upon its accuracy; so that I start out fairly with the conclusive proof of the fact that up to the 28th of February, 1897, nearly $2,000,000 of money were spent upon this railway, and there have been spent upon it quite an amount since, under the arrangement made with that company, by which we were entitled to have $100,000 more spent upon it, to be taken either out of the rental or any purchase price we would have to pay. This made, therefore, according to the evidence—not supposition or conjecture at all—but according to the testimony, over $2,000,000 expended in the construction of that line.

Now, we have further evidence. Mr. H. F. McLeod was called as a witness. I do not know whether many hon. members know Mr. McLeod, but I think if any do know him they must know him as an honourable, straight-forward, thoroughly reliable man. I found him, not exactly in the department, but found he was an engineer of repute and standing, who had been employed a great deal in special work by the department, under the former Minister, and perhaps under his predecessors. If my recollection serves me right, he worked upon the Intercolonial Railway during its construction, and he was admittedly a gentleman of the highest character, capacity and reliability. Now, Mr. McLeod was asked what this railway was worth, and I take it that the evidence which Mr. McLeod gave upon the question is worth a cartload of statements made by members on either side of the House. Mr. McLeod told us that the road, in his judgment, unquestionably would cost between $16,000 and $17,000 per mile. If any of you have the report of the committee in your hands and will turn to page 111, you will find that Mr. McLeod gives positive, distinct and explicit statements as to the value of the road. "How much," he was asked by the chairman, "is your valuation of the road when completed under contract with the Government?" He said: "It ought to be worth more than $15,000 per mile for the portion to Moose Park." Then he was asked how much it is worth from Moose Park to the Chaudière. He replied: "It will cost about $16,000 or $17,000 per mile." Then he was asked: What is the value of the road from Moose Park to Ste. Rosalie? And he replied: "With the improvements it will cost probably $16,000 per mile." So that you have Mr. McLeod, a responsible and competent engineer, and a man of undoubted integrity, swearing—not simply guessing—but absolutely pledging his oath, that the road would cost from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière, throughout its whole length, between $15,000 and $16,000 per mile. What will the road be worth, he was asked. And he said: "It will be worth about $17,000 per mile." Now, there is a statement upon which I rely, and which I think ought to be accepted even by hon. gentlemen opposite, who know nothing at all themselves about the road, and who would not undertake to express any opinion with regard to the probable cost of any railway they might travel over. I think they ought to be willing to accept a statement made in that solemn manner by a gentleman of undoubted credit and respectability, and, I take it, a gentleman whom the ex-Minister of Railways will not say was incompetent and not able to give a good judgment on that question. I have, therefore, put before you, I think, the strongest possible evidence that could be offered as to what this road was worth, and it is idle for any hon. gentleman to tell us seriously in this Parliament that we are paying an excessive price, when we are only paying $12,000 per mile. Mr. McLeod was asked: "Do you consider or not that this price paid for the railway was reasonable?" He replied: "It was a very low price indeed." And he has sworn to it. Now, do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that, in the face of these facts, hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be a little slow in expressing the opinion, that we have paid an excessive price for the railway, when we have only paid the sum covered by the resolutions? I refer you to the page on which appears that statement of Mr. McLeod—page 112. It appears to me, that, if there has been anything outrageous in connection with this transaction, it has been the language of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) and the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), and in the conduct of the Opposition itself in dealing with this proposition. If there has been anything extravagant in connection with the proposition, that extravagance lies in the statements which these hon. gentlemen have been making.

It has been suggested, that bonuses were paid by the several governments in aid of the construction of the line. And I suppose the inference will be drawn, or the implication suggested, that we ought to have insisted upon having the amount of the subsidies deducted from the purchase price. I think that was seriously mentioned here two years ago. Well, I concede at once, that subsidies were paid to this railway. I have here a statement of those subsidies. The amount contributed by the Dominion by way of bonus was $287,956, while the province of Quebec contributed $347,430, and the municipalities gave $15,000. Now, when it is claimed, that it would have been proper for this Government to deduct the amount of the subsidies from the purchase price, or to insist that they should be allowed in estimating the value and fixing the purchase price, I am really lost in conjecture as to the ground upon which such a contention can be based.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there not an additional subsidence, that for a portion of the road that the company has built ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There has been, unquestionably, an additional subsidy, and it is not included in this sum. I did not include it, for the very sufficient reason that it was paid since we began negotiations with them, and we are taking that subsidy from the purchase price. But we have not proposed, and do not propose, and I think there is no responsible gentleman present who would say that he would propose, to take the amount of the subsidies that have been paid long since, from any purchase price that might be agreed upon. We deduct the present subsidy, because that was part of the condition on which the subsidy was given. Hon. gentlemen may recall the fact, that that was incorporated in the Act under which the subsidy was granted by Parliament. But I think it would be difficult for these gentlemen to point to any clause, condition or stipulation of a similar kind, when the subsidies were given to the Drummond County Road of the amount which I have mentioned here. It never was so stipulated, either in this case or in any other case of a bonus given by the Dominion to any railway, that, if the road was acquired by the Government at any time, the subsidy should be deducted. No such string has been attached to any subsidy given by this Parliament. Do these gentlemen seriously contend, that this Government ought to have imposed such a condition in this case? If so, it would be the first case of the kind that ever occurred, though this is not the first instance in which the Government of Canada became possessed of a railway which had received substantial subsidies from the Government. I do not think it would be right or fair, I do not think that it would be an honest business transaction, for the Dominion to impose any such condition, when it was not in the Act under which the subsidy was given. I think it would not have been an honest transaction, unless it was a stipulation made at the time the bonus was granted. If it had been a proper thing for us to do, it would have been a proper thing for the present leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) to do when he was Minister of Railways and bought the Rivière du Loup line from the Grand Trunk Railway. He would have been able to make a very respectable diminution of the price paid the Grand Trunk Railway, if he had insisted on that condition. He would have had an opportunity of deducting $10,000 a mile, and would have had to pay only $2,000 a mile to the Grand Trunk Railway for their dismantled railway. Now, I venture to think, that it will not be seriously contended by those who are opposing this proposition, that the Government were at fault in not taking that course. I presume, that the same gentlemen who contend this, are prepared to contend that we ought also to deduct the subsidies given by the provincial government of Quebec, and put the amount in the Treasury of Canada. I suppose we ought also to take the amount contributed by the municipalities. And I want to ask this committee, if we had deducted the Dominion subsidy from this railway, as these gentlemen have contended we ought to do, how long would it be before we would have the Government of Quebec knocking at our doors and claiming that their share of the subsidy ought to be paid over to them, that they ought to be protected in the same way as we have protected ourselves? What answer could we have made to the Government of Quebec, if such a claim were made?

I do not object to the hon. gentleman saying that we ought to have taken off the $247,000, and then seeing where the result would land them, admitting that when the Government was buying the railway the company ought to be paid what the railway actually cost them. If you proceed upon that principle, take the cost as I have given it from the sworn evidence, $2,008,271; deduct from that the price we are paying, $1,600,000, and you have $408,271 remaining as the sum expended more than the Government of Canada is paying for the railway. You can afford to deduct from that $408,000 the amount of the Dominion subsidy, $287,000, and you still have $120,000 left. So you see the transaction is just as good a transaction as if we had actually deducted it, though I am not going to say we had it in our minds when we made the arrangement which we did. Now, Sir, from the facts I have presented to the committee, I think I have clearly shown that, as a business transaction, put it on the basis of value, put it on the basis of cost, put it on the basis of comparison with any similar transaction that has ever taken place in the history of Canada, and there are none of them that compare favourably with this transaction, from every point of view which this question may be presented consistently with the facts, the proposition is absolutely defensible.

Now, I come to the question that I said I would take up and discuss respecting the difference in the proposal which we now make and the one which was first made with respect to the acquisition of the road. We then proposed to lease the railway from the company for a term of years, and in arriving at the amount of rental which we were to pay, we first set ourselves to ascertain what would be a fair sum to pay for the railway if we were buying it, and then we came to a conclusion as to what would be a fair interest to allow upon the sum arrived at in that way. We proposed by the terms of that arrangement to lease this road for 99 years, and to allow to the company 4 per cent interest upon \$1,600,000. The company was to complete the line to the Chau-dière, it was to build the balance of the road, laying 70-pound rails, it was to build it of a standard quality fully equal to the Intercolonial Railway, and out of the rental it was to set aside a sum which would be sufficient in 99 years absolutely to extinguish the principal amount, or the purchase money of the road. When the question first came before the Government, the only proposition which we had from the company was a proposition of rental. We had no reason to suppose at that time that the company would accede to an offer to purchase on the basis that we finally agreed upon with them. I do not say that the question of an out and out purchase for cash was not in our minds. I admit it was. We did consider whether it would be better for us, under all the circumstances, to pay 4 per cent to the company upon \$1,600,000, the value at which we placed the road, or whether we should purchase, paying the cash. We came to the conclusion that under all the circumstances the leasing transaction was just as favourable as the other. I am not going to deny that an element entered into our determination in that direction which, though not a strong element, still it had its influence. We felt quite sure in our own judgment that the result of the acquisition of this line and the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal would be beneficial; we felt that we would be able out of the earnings of the road, in addition to what had been its previous earnings, to pay the rental so that there would be no permanent addition to the public debt, we would be proceeding upon the same principle as a man rents a house rather than buys one. Year by year he pays his rent, and he has no capital obligation imposed upon him. We concluded that 4 per cent was not an exorbitant sum to allow to the company, was not an excessive or an unreasonable amount to allow them as a basis of rental. The reason why we thought so was this: We knew well that the Government could borrow at  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent, or somewhere in that neighbourhood. We had never at that time, as a Government, borrowed below 3 per cent, which, with charges amounting to about one-eighth of one per cent in addition, represented what the money had cost us. We believed that the company could not realize upon their bonds upon any basis lower than 4 per cent, and have a sinking fund to extinguish the \$1,600,000 in 99 years. We knew that very well, and I think it only requires a moment's thought on the part of any gentleman to come to the same conclusion. The company could not float its bonds and get its money at as favourable a rate as the Government, that goes without saying. They would have, it is true, to support their bonds something in the nature of a Government guarantee, if we agreed to pay them so much a year as rental for this railway; but when they went into the money markets to raise this money, there would always be the substantial difference between the rate they would have to pay in raising money on those bonds, and what the Government would have to pay in raising the money itself, perhaps, one-half per cent difference would be a moderate calculation. So we felt that in acquiring this railway, the company were entitled to be put in as good a position as if they were receiving at that very date the value of the road as we considered it, that is to say, in as good a position as if they received the \$1,600,000 in cash. But I am satisfied that no one could have had any assurance that that money could have been realized by them on their bonds, even with the Government rental as security, at any less rate than 4 per cent, allowing for the amount that would be required for a sinking fund. Now upon balancing the question as to whether we would do better to borrow the money ourselves and buy the road, or whether we should lease it, the balance of opinion inclined in favour of leasing instead of purchasing. That is the whole point of difference between the proposition as it was made a year or two ago and the proposition as it is made now. I venture to think that while there may be a difference of opinion as to whether it would have been better to lease the road or purchase it outright, it is not a difference in any point of view, it seems to me, which can justify any statement, much less the strong statements that have been put forward by the other side when they have discussed this question. I have tried to follow hon. gentlemen as to what the difference was when it came to be figured out in actual results. We heard one of them stating that the country lost a million of money or two by the last arrangement, and that it gained over one million by this arrangement. I think the hon. leader of the Opposition is the millionaire in that transaction. How he obtains that result I do not know; it is quite as unscrutable to me and as difficult of comprehension as a great many other results that the hon. gentleman arrives at. He says the difference is over one million. The hon. ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) does not agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition; he is not one of the million kind. Sometimes that hon. gentleman makes it three-quarters of a million, sometimes half a million, and sometimes a trifle less than half a million. I can very well see how he would vary in his judgment from time to time. It would depend upon the rate of interest the hon. gentleman could assume that the Government could borrow its money at. If he were to take a  $2\frac{1}{2}$  gait, that he has latterly been taking, he would place it at the second of these sums, but if he were to take a  $3\frac{1}{2}$  or 3 and a fraction gait, he would place it at \$450,000, whereas the leader of the Opposition has to get on a still stiffer gait than that in order to raise the amount up to a full million and upwards. So it is a mere caprice with hon. gentlemen as to what they would say as to this rate of interest that the Government are able to borrow money at, and they are not slow to conclude, you will have remarked, that the Government ought to have had prescience to see sufficiently far into the future to realize that when they were next going into the money market to make a loan, that they could make that loan at a substantially less rate of interest than the last loan. Is anybody of the opinion that we were censurable because we had not sufficient foresight to know that when we went into the money market the market would be so favourable, and that we could have borrowed at a less rate than previously. It appears to me that this tremendously big problem that has justified the use of such extreme and violent adjectives on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, all rests upon whether or not you are going to calculate that the rate of interest should be this figure or that figure or the other figure, whether you are going to calculate on a rate that the Government, up to that time, had not been able to borrow money at or whether we were able in a more favourable market to borrow at a lower rate subsequently to the transaction. I think it is fair to say that hon. gentlemen who are criticising this are taking a great deal for granted; they are criticising it for the sake of criticising it, and with very slim information upon which to calculate. When we are told that this transaction that we are now proposing is all the way from half a million to one million dollars better than the other transaction, it is a question as to whether one's mind will incline to the belief that we had better pay a rental yearly or add to the public debt by borrowing in the market and obtaining money at an even more favourable rate than we could previously obtain it at.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. gentleman be kind enough to answer the question as to whether they have run the road at a profit or a loss during the time that they have been running it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am going to tell the hon. gentleman the conclusion that I have arrived at upon that question. I might mention a rate of 4 per cent as being a reasonable rate of interest, and for this reason. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to look at this matter now in the light of recent events. During the time that we were negotiating for this railway I had occasion to look into the question as to the value of securities of this kind, and, in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway, I had the evidence before me as to what was the standing of the bonds upon that road in the English market. I had then a newspaper in my hands, and I think I have it in my office, containing the information that, at that very time, 4 per cent bonds floated by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, were only worth 85 in the London market.

Mr. POWELL. Were they guaranteed by the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, they were not guaranteed by the Government. But I am not assuming that the bonds which this Drummond County Railway would have issued would have been worth better than 4 per cent. I am assuming that they would not have been worth, perhaps, by one-half per cent as much as Government bonds themselves would have been worth. I am pointing to the fact that Grand Trunk bonds that only brought 85 in the market and were carrying 4 per cent interest, in a few weeks or a few months afterwards had risen in excess of par. So you see the very material change that took place in the money market in regard to securities of this kind.

I have anticipated, Mr. Chairman, that the House will expect me to furnish all such information as I have in my possession, and may be able to furnish in respect to the operating of the Intercolonial Railway under the new and altered conditions resulting from the extension to Montreal. I cannot, as I affirmed this afternoon, and I say it again, give to the committee any statement of any value showing the receipts and expenditures from the Drummond County line, or the Montreal extension, as distinguished from the rest of the Intercolonial. I cannot do that because, in the first place, the accounts are not kept in that way, and it would not, as the officers of the road tell me, be practicable to keep the accounts in that way. It is utterly impracticable. I have consulted, as I stated to the hon. ex-Minister of Finance this afternoon, with both the Deputy Minister and the general manager of the road as to whether the accounts could be kept so that we would be able to show Parliament precisely the result of the operating of this portion of the railway, but they assured me that it was quite impossible. They have not been so kept, and I have not that information before me, but I have what I think is very nearly as good. I have the information as to the general operation of the whole line, and I will be able to show the committee that the conditions that have existed in respect to the Intercolonial Railway are such as that there is no reasonable doubt about the extension to Montreal holding its own, or that it will come, in the near future, a very profitable part of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, in reference to this very matter, I had my attention called yesterday, while I was at a meeting of the Privy Council, to an article which appeared in the "Star." It purports to have been sent from Ottawa; whether it was sent from Ottawa or not I do not know.

It states that a statement had been prepared at Ottawa showing what are the operating expenses of the Drummond County Railway extension separately. It is as follows:—

It is now known that at the time the statement was made in the Senate, Mr. Blair had actually had prepared for him this information.

And then it goes on to say—I will not weary the House by reading the whole of it—that there were $300,000 lost. It says that, in effect, because it adds:

There were three hundred thousand good reasons why the Government did not furnish the statement that was called for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. "Hear, hear," says the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman knows all about it. He can see right into the books, accounts and papers and transactions just as clearly as if he had them before him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) consent to allow officials that I will indicate, to be brought before a committee of this House, and have their testimony taken on that question?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will consent to this. I will consent to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) instituting an inquiry into the persons who are furnishing false and unreliable information, and who are in the confidence and employ of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are threatening to seal people's mouths.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I will consent to. When my attention was called to this in the Council, I sent a note to Mr. Schreiber to the following effect:—

Will Mr. Schreiber please let me know if any statement of earnings and expenditure on the Drummond County Railway has been received, and if so, please let me see it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, "received."

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Having this statement put in my hand, I thought that possibly some statement had come, and if there was a statement, I wanted it, and I received immediately from the Deputy Minister this reply:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Nobody said, "received" here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman may sneer, if he likes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I believe the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) prevented its being sent here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) may believe what he likes; I do not think he is responsible. I believe he is in an entirely irresponsible condition at the present moment. I would not like to take the hon. gentleman seriously in respect to any statement he may make and I believe the most charitable view is to assume that he is irresponsible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You would not dare to let the officials be brought here and to be put on oath as to what the condition of these accounts is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I received at once the following note in answer to my inquiry of the Deputy Minister:—

The accounts of the Intercolonial Railway are kept as a whole, and the road is operated in like manner, and not in sections, so that it is not possible to give such information as you refer to regarding the Drummond County Railway.

Mr. WALLACE. When was that written?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My note was written to the Deputy Minister on the 8th May and I sent it over from Council, and I received, as I tell you, this reply, which came back immediately.

Mr. WALLACE. Then, the Minister knew before yesterday how the accounts were kept.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated to the hon. gentleman, and I have stated to the committee, that I conferred with both the general manager of the railway and the Deputy Minister long ago, as to whether the accounts could be kept in this way, and I desired to have it done, if it could be done—

Mr. WALLACE. Then, what did you write that note for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Having seen the statement explicitly made in the "Star," I sent over the note, asking if any statement had been received.

Mr. WALLACE. How is it, that other railways can keep their accounts in that way?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman had better inquire of other railways.

Mr. WALLACE. I am telling the Minister, that other railways do keep accounts for sections.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will complete the reading of the memo. which the Deputy Minister sent to me:

Memo.—A statement has reached the department of the cash collections at the stations on the Drummond County line and agencies in Montreal, but that means little, certainly not the earnings.

Now, I have pointed out, that it is, therefore, not possible for us to procure this, which we would be only too glad to procure for our own information, and which, if we had procured, there would have been no objection on my part to furnish to the House. I am absolutely sure, from the amount of business which has been done upon this Montreal extension, that it would make a good showing, and I would not be afraid to have that road absolutely separated and distinguished, in respect to its earnings and expenditure, from the balance of the railway. We would have nothing to fear from any such information, but it has not been practicable to give it, and, therefore, it has not been procured.

It would be rather unreasonable to expect, that, in starting out on a new venture in operating a railway, a considerable portion of the mileage of which had never been running before, that it would instantly begin to show the best results, or satisfactory results. That would be unreasonable to expect. I assume, that the same expectations should be formed with regard to the operating of a new railway by the Government, as would be formed with regard to the operating of a new railway by a private company. They would expect, that it would have to be got under way, and be running some time, before it would begin to gather trade. It would be unreasonable and absurd to expect, that the very first moment we opened that Drummond County Railway, the business would jump at once into a very large and flourishing condition.

Mr. BERGERON. It was promised.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend (Mr. Bergeron) is a little astray, when he makes that statement. I never promised anything of the kind.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister of Public Works did.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the matter with gentlemen opposite?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are only beginning now to get this road into good working shape. Hon. gentlemen opposite have endeavoured, since this discussion commenced, and at other times during this session, to discount the information which I would be able to furnish to this House in regard to the operation of this road. In the first place the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has asserted, that the rates have been put up on the rest of the railway, so that there would be an increase in receipts, and so that it might be claimed, that this increase was due to the acquisition of the Drummond County.

Mr. BLAIR.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And to that statement the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, subscribes unhesitatingly.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. POWELL. The Minister (Mr. Blair) does not deny that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do deny it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do deny it. I will tell the committee the circumstances under which that occurred to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) has reference. After we had put Mr. Harris in charge of the traffic arrangements of the railway, almost the first thing he did was to abolish the system of carrying cordwood irrespective of the quantity or weight which was piled upon the cars. He insisted, that there should be a limit to the loads that were put upon the cars, and he made an alteration in the schedule, whereby the patrons of the road who were having cordwood hauled upon it, would pay according to weight, and that immediately created a great agitation in some sections of the country which was traversed by the Intercolonial Railway. As it was at no time intended by the management of the railway, that there should be any increase in the rates which, at all events, would be burdensome, or which would operate unfavourably upon the poorer people who were using the railway, we had a correction made to the schedule in that regard, and the charges that were made were abated. I think I am justified in saying, that the excessive charges that were made were returned to the people. I am not going to say that with absolute confidence at this moment, but I am strongly of opinion that they were.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman is quite correct. A large number of these little claims that have remained over for a year were paid off within a few days of the election.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does my hon. friend know that, or is it only a suspicion haunting a guilty mind?

Mr. FOSTER. I absolutely know it, and so does my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, I can only say that it was long prior to the election that the subject was dealt with, and I think the amounts were paid back; so that the revenues have not been made up by any such increase in the rates. Now, Sir, the deficit of last year on the Intercolonial Railway is shown by the public accounts to be $209,000, including rental.

Mr. POWELL. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me before he passes to another branch. I am informed by merchants in St. John, in Moncton, and in other portions of the province, that the local rates have been increased. I know of my own knowledge that the hay freights have been increased in the county of Westmoreland, and I ask if there has not been a general increase in freight rates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say unhesitatingly to the hon. gentleman there has been no such general increase. There has been some little change in the classification, some things being put in one classification and some in another, and the effect has been to revise the general scale, making it more fair and equitable ; in some cases reducing and in some cases increasing the rates, but my officers tell me that the general effect has been not to increase the rates. The hon. gentleman may, no doubt, pick out one or two items on which the rates have been increased ; but he could pick out a great many other items on which the rates have been reduced, with the general effect that I have stated. As a general result of last year's operation, the Intercolonial Railway does show a deficit of $209,000, including the rental, and during four months of that year the Drummond County Railway, and the whole Montreal extension, were operated, that is, commencing with the 1st of March, 1898.

Mr. FOSTER. What rental does my hon. friend mean ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I mean the whole—one-third of $210,000—$70,000 were paid for the four months' rental, with all the other charges, whatever they may be, growing out of and incidental to the operating of the Montreal extension. Now, in 1895-96, the last year of the hon. gentlemen's Administration, the deficit on the Intercolonial was $55,000 ; in the year 1896-97, the first year of my administration, the deficit was $59,000 ; and, as I have said, the deficit for last year was $209,000, or $139,000 exclusive of rentals.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask my hon. friend a question. Does the return which he brought down to-day, showing the earnings and working expenses for the ten months, include the rentals ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Everything. I will come to that return in a little while. I want to say this, and I think I am speaking within the recollection of a great many of the members of this committee, and if not, "Hansard" will verify what I say : When the general subject of the Intercolonial was under discussion in Supply last year, I stated that during the year then current the showing would not be, on the whole, so far as the deficit was concerned, favourable to the Intercolonial—that it would not be as favourable as it ought to be under ordinary circumstances, even with the operation of the Montreal extension. I explained to the committee why I said that. I pointed out that during the year 1897-98 I would be practically paying within the fiscal year, from the 1st of July to the 1st of July, double the amount in the way of repairs and maintenance, that had been paid the year before. I stated that explicitly to the committee, and I explained how that came about. I pointed out that in the year 1891-92, those who were then managing the Intercolonial, for the purpose of making a good showing for that year—I know of no other reason in the world why it should have been done—in point of fact made little, if any, repairs and had very little, if any, maintenance charges.

Mr. HAGGART. Is that the year 1891-92 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was either 1891-92 or 1892-93. Why it was done was this. Up to that time the largest part of the repairs had been made as soon as the snow went off the ground in the spring, and they were concluded before the 1st of July. So that after the 1st of July there would be nothing until the next spring, but when the next spring came around, instead of doing it, they postponed the work until after the 1st of July, so that they had a whole period of twelve months in which there was no substantial amount of repairs and no substantial maintenance charges paid. It was felt that it was not in the interest of the railway that these repairs should be deferred to so late a period in the season. It was felt that they should be made as soon as possible after the snow left the ground, when the ground was soft and when they could be done more cheaply and to more advantage for the railway. But last year, instead of waiting until the 1st of July, and then making the repairs and paying the maintenance charges, I did it before the 1st of July ; and, therefore, within that one year I crowded outlays which would ordinarily be covered by two years, and I stated to the committee last year that such would be the fact. Now, I am going to furnish this committee with evidence to support my statement in that regard. The expenditure for repairs and maintenance of way was as follows, from the 1st of March until the 30th of June in the four years stated :—Two of these years are the last two years of my predecessor in office ; the other two years are mine. In this statement I have included every item as classified in the public accounts, which can be said properly to belong to repairs or maintenance. I shall furnish, before I get through, the items which I have taken out of these accounts, and by which the committee can judge whether or not I have made a fair and accurate statement. In those two years, the amount expended for maintenance and repairs by the ex-Minister of Railways, when in office, was $356,630.

Mr. POWELL. What months does this cover ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. From the 1st of March to the 30th June. In 1894-95 there was expended by him $142,744; in 1895-96, $213,936, making a total of $356,680. In 1896-97, between those dates, I spent $172,566, and in 1897-98, $329,738, or in other words, taking the two years together, I spent in these months $502,304 as compared with $356,680 by my predecessor.

An hon. MEMBER. How much was spent on the Drummond County Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Did any one ask the question how much of that was spent on the Drummond County Railway, because if so I shall be very happy to answer it?

Mr. FOSTER. Well, answer it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not a dollar of it. The excess in 1897-98 over 1896-97 was $157,172. The excess in 1897-98 over 1895-96—the last year of my predecessors—was $116,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That is awful extravagance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman says that is awful extravagance. Well, if $116,000 had been taken off the amount of deficit, it would have made a considerable hole in it, and I think that even the hon. gentleman would consider it, with his large ideas, to be a substantial sum.

Let me give you a further statement. I will now give you from 1st July to the 1st have given you from March to July, and I will now give you from 1st July to the 1st March, the other eight months. I expended in that year 1897-98, from the 1st July to the 1st March, $509,928 as against $451,888 in 1896-97, so that I spent $58,040 during the first eight months of 1897-98 over the amount spent during these months in 1896-97, and I spent $157,000 in excess in the last four months of the fiscal year, as I have shown you. So that altogether I spent $215,212 in excess of the amount expended by my predecessor.

Now if I had deferred these repairs until after the 1st July in the year 1897-98, for which we have full accounts, and if I had followed the example of my predecessor and only laid out the usual and customary amount, I would have spent but $178,000 or so, in round figures $175,000 instead of $329,000 which I did spend, and, therefore, would have had $150,000 better showing. I would have had that much more in the Treasury to reduce the deficit which I actually had. I spent $150,000 for the maintenance and repairs of the road in excess of what was spent by my predecessor, and I only would have had, if I had not made that outlay in that unusual and unprecedented way, a deficit of $50,000 instead of a deficit of $209,000. Those are the figures which, I think, establish entirely beyond controversy that while last year there was unquestionably on the showing—if any person just glances at the total results as they appear in the accounts—a running behind during the year to an unusually large amount, or at all events an amount larger than we had as deficits for a number of years past—that was owing to the circumstances I have stated. It was owing to the extraordinary expenditures I made, doubling up the outlays in the twelve months, and not owing to the fact that we were operating and maintaining the Montreal extension.

Now, Sir, I am going to call attention to a statement published in one of the leading Opposition newspapers.

Mr. FOSTER. Is my hon. friend leaving the point of expenditure?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not leaving it all, but for the moment I wish to refer to what appeared in one of the Opposition papers the 8th of April last. I refer to the Montreal "Star." I am going to treat this statement, which appeared in the "Star," as if it were a statement honestly made and made for an honest purpose. I do not think it was, but I am going to treat it as if it were, and intend calling attention to the details of this statement, because I suppose they have found credence in some quarters. I dare say that hon. gentlemen opposite believe in them, and will no doubt reproduce them for information later on, and, therefore, I propose to anticipate that reference. The Montreal "Star" starts out by professing to have been informed from Moncton. The information comes in a telegram, which they allege to have received from Moncton, dated 7th April, and in which they took up and published a report of the department, showing this deficit of $209,000. They attack the accuracy of that statement. They charge that it is misleading, that it has been cooked, and that if the facts were actually disclosed, instead of their being a deficit of $209,000, there would be a deficit nearer $500,000, and they furnish what they probably choose to call some little evidence in support of that statement. Perhaps I had better read some of the preceding portions of the article just to show what it leads up to:

An examination of the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals shows how the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway have been manipulated by Mr. Blair for the purpose of making the large deficit of last year appear to be smaller than it really is. General Manager Pottinger places the deficit at $139,978.66, which he acknowledges is arrived at by taking no account of the rental paid the Drummond Company and the Grand Trunk Railway for the Montreal extension. Chief Engineer Schreiber, on the other hand, included this rental, which, for the four months the extension was operated, would be $70,000, bringing the deficit up to $209,978.66, as compared with a deficit of $59,940.65 in 1897 and $55,187.52 in 1896, the last year under Conservative management, so that the deficit is approximately as stated in the "Star" six months ago. Last year's expenditure on capital account:

amounted to $252,756.80, much of it for works which, under Conservative management, were charged to operating account. The Liberal contention, in Opposition, was that all expenditures on the completed part of the line should be charged to operating.

Let me address myself to this branch of the "Star's" statement. In the first place, you will observe it is put forward that these accounts have been manipulated; then it is put forward that the deficit would have been very much larger than it is, would amount to $462,000, if it had not been that a large number of items of expenditure that usually have been charged or paid for as operating accounts by the Conservative Government have been charged to capital by me. I wish to state that, so far as this statement put forward by the "Star" is concerned, it is not a fact; it is absolutely misleading, entirely unauthorized and cannot be established. The amount of the whole capital expenditure of the Intercolonial Railway for last year was $252,756, and this newspaper has actually had the fairness to add the whole of the capital expenditure to the deficit of $209,000 in order to reach the sum total which it says was the real and actual deficit of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, let us examine a little into this question of capital expenditure. In 1897-98, the capital expenditure of the Intercolonial Railway was $252,756, as I have stated. In 1896-97, it was $149,112, or for the two years, $401,868. Now, examine the capital expenditure under my hon. friend the member for South Lanark. In 1895-96, his capital expenditure was $259,423, and in 1894-95 it was $327,034, a total of $586,457 during the last two years of the hon. gentleman's administration, or $185,000 more during my predecessor's last two years than during the two years under my administration. Now, the gentlemen who are furnishing the material, and the "Star" people who are publishing it, are putting forward as a fact and as truth that it is proper to add the whole of the capital expenditure which I have made, notwithstanding that my capital expenditure is less than that of my predecessor's, to the deficit acknowledged, and to claim that it is all a deficit; but when you are dealing with a Conservative administration, it is not fair to do that, you must take the statement which they give and accept it as absolute verity. If you add these amounts which I have given to the deficits under my predecessor, though they would not exceed my deficit—because last year was an exceptional one as I have shown—they would be far away in advance of what the "Star" gives as the usual and customary amount. I am going to weary the committee, I fear, but I want to put this forward completely while I am about it. I am willing to have this matter critically examined; I do not wish to have any statement accepted without close investigation, and I invite the committee to look at the items.

Mr. HAGGART. This is purely an Intercolonial Railway matter. I think we might keep as closely as possible to the Drummond Railway question and the entrance into Montreal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart's) leader travelled to Winnipeg and all over the North-west Territories.

Mr. HUGHES. But hon. gentlemen opposite objected to that kind of thing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I invite the committee to examine the items making up the capital expenditure last year and to compare the items with those that make up the capital expenditure under the ex-Minister's administration. I think it will appear that there is no material distinction between the classes of items. In 1897-98 there was added to the public debt for increased accommodation at Halifax $56,000. In the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Haggart's) last year this item cost $124,000. There was added for the same class of expenditure at Moncton during my last year, $94,000, and only a small sum on the same account during the last year of the ex-Minister. There was charged, the small sum of $2,099 on capital account for accommodation at St. John during my last year, and nothing in the last year of the hon. gentleman. For Lévis there was $300 during my last year and nothing in the hon. gentleman's last year. But the main items were substantially the same. We added to the rolling stock last year to the amount of $49,000. We expended at the deep-water wharf at North Sydney, $19,820. There was charged for the extension at Sydney $11,374 during 1895-96. So, you see, it is quite open to hon. gentlemen to compare the items of the two years. You will see on such comparison, there is no substantial difference which would justify the treating of capital expenditure any different in one calculation from the way in which it ought to be treated in the other. And yet this is one of the things that have been put forward by the opponents of this proposal. Now, the "Star" says that the figures do not show that the increased deficit is due to making repairs in the road-bed earlier in 1898 than usual, and they put that forward, I suppose, because they had seen it stated in the newspaper press friendly to the Government that that would account, at all events, for a portion of the excess.

Now, this statement, if true, ought to be established; if not true, it ought to be disproved, and it is capable of very easy proof if it is true, and very easy disproof if it is not true. There are certain items which go to constitute the class of expenditures on repairs and maintenance of way, such as track, rails, right of way, ties, repairs to engines and cars. These are substantially the classes which absorb the expenditure that is classified in the Public Accounts, and always has been so classified, as repairs and maintenance of way. Now, you cannot juggle with these figures at all, they are right there, and they will trip you up if you attempt to juggle with them. I invite examination of the cost for outlay for tracks, rails, ties, repairs on engines and cars during the two years I have administered the road, and the last two years during which my predecessor administered it. I think that would be a fair way to ascertain whether there has been any attempt at misleading the public or manipulating the accounts. Now, the "Star" does not do that. It takes what has been expended one year, one of many years, perhaps, and compares it with what has been expended in two years of my predecessor, or two of my years, and compares them with one of his. Those of you who may have read that article remember that it says that in the last year I only rebuilt six locomotives, whereas during the last year of my predecessor he rebuilt nine. But it conceals the fact that in the year before I built or acquired nine out of the revenue account, and that in the year before my predecessor's last year he only built six. So that taking my two years and his two years together they make up fifteen. I had fifteen and he had fifteen. The "Star" does not do that; it picks out the items wherever they are going to serve its unworthy purpose, its dishonest purpose, I would almost say its disreputable purpose, for so important a newspaper—it picks out the items that are going to serve its purpose and puts them forward, and, I say, wilfully and deliberately deceives and misleads the public. I am happily in possession of information which will enable me to show to a demonstration that what they have said, the inferences they have drawn, are absolutely and entirely unfounded. Now, the maintenance of way, you will understand, means the outlay of work which is expended upon the roadbed and tracks. You will find items running all through of expenditures under different heads, such as repairs and rebuilding of engines and cars. A great point is made in one of these statements in the "Star" to the effect that I only laid down nineteen miles of rails in my first year, whereas my predecessor laid forty or forty-five miles. Well, that is true, but they did not tell the public that there were only nineteen miles of rails remaining to be laid upon the main line of the Intercolonial Railway during that year, that finished it up. Upon these they were undertaking to lay sixty-seven pound rails in place of fifty-six. The hon. gentleman left me nineteen miles which were still carrying fifty-six pound rails. When I got these replaced with sixty-seven pound rails, I did all that remained to be done in that direction.

Mr. HAGGART. Suppose the hon. gentleman had laid forty miles, would it not have increased the charge against him?

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly it would. But I am saying that there was no manipulation, there was no withholding of a proper outlay upon the road, there was no disposition to degrade the road. The reason there was not more than nineteen miles laid, was because there was no more than nineteen miles to lay. I think that fact answers the suggestion that the road was being degraded in order merely to show a better result than would otherwise have been. Now, let us look at the amounts entered opposite these items, all through, year after year. I commence with car expenses, you will see them entered roughly, and I go down through repairs to passenger cars, repairs to postal cars, to freight cars, vans and snow ploughs, wages to train hands, oil and waste, small stores and fuel, miscellaneous, engineer's officers and assistants, wages, sleepers, rails and fastenings, timber for bridges, and there I stop. Now, those items I have carefully tabulated, and made up, with the result which I have stated to you. The difference in the amounts expended in the year 1897-98 will appear at a glance when I read some of the items to the hon. members. Take, for instance, the item expended upon passenger cars. I expended $86,371 on passenger cars, as compared with $65,534 expended by my predecessor in his last year, and $68,610 in his year preceding. I expended $232,118 on freight cars and vans, as against $205,191 the hon. gentleman expended in his last year, and $183,153 in the year before. But the Montreal "Star" says that I allowed the cars to run down, that I did not expend as much upon passenger and freight cars, and cars generally, as was expended by my predecessor during that year. I expended on wages of train hands $265,557, as compared with $255,412; $71,712 for small stores as against $62,477; $31,806 as against $30,501 under the head of miscellaneous; $404,230 as compared with $353,687 on wages of trackmen, which is labour performed directly upon the track. I expended $67,139 in rails and fastenings—I am speaking now of 1897-98—as compared with $54,041 in the year 1895-96. I expended $143,932 for sleepers, as compared with $87,920 by my predecessor during the last year of his tenure. I expended $99,540 for timber for bridges, as compared with $82,451 by my predecessor. You cannot go over these items and examine them closely without seeing that there is no foundation whatever for the statement that the road has been denuded or degraded or permitted to run down, or that its equipment in any respect suffered by the treatment it has received at my hands as compared with that of my predecessor. The last statement which I have read and which refers to the curves, will be a complete answer to the quotation which I take from the same reliable source:

It is quite evident that if Mr. Blair had done as much work on the road-bed and rebuilt as much of the rolling stock as his predecessor, his deficits, instead of being $59,000 and $209,000 for his first and second years respectively, would have reached much larger amounts.

The answer that I make to that is already in your possession. Take four years of the Intercolonial Railway, my two, and my predecessors two, and compare them. For the two years of my predecessor there was laid out upon maintenance and repairs, $2,428,105.87. During my two years there was laid out and expended, $2,672,307.99, or a greater expenditure during my two years of $244,202. Yet the statement is boldly put forward that, if my expenditure had been as much as that of my predecessor, my deficit would have been very much greater.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think in regular and proper course, I would go on to make some reference to the results of the operation of the railway for the present year, or, at all events for that portion of the year which has so far elapsed, of which I am in possession of the returns. From the 1st of July, 1898, to the 1st of March, 1899, there were some months during which the expenditure exceeded the income, and there were other months during which the income exceeded the expenditure. I will give you the total of those months in which the expenditure exceeded the income, and the amounts. The total of those months was $104,624.01. For the months in which the income exceeded the expenditure, the total amount of such excess of income was $104,259.92, showing for eight months, during which we were operating the Drummond County Railway and the Montreal extension generally, paying rents and all charges of every kind and description, we happened to realize a result on the right side of the account of $364.09. Last year, for these eight months there was a balance of loss against us, and the amount was quite considerable. During that period of last year, instead of having a little of something to the good, we were $71,203 behind. Now, we are in an improved position during these eight months of this year. Whether or not this is to be attributed to the extension to Montreal, I shall deal with later on, but I affirm, it is due to that, because I wish to say, lest I lose sight of it later, that there has been no such marked improvement in the general outlook of business in the maritime provinces; there has been no such prosperity in the maritime provinces as has been experienced in these more western provinces. There has been no such improvement in business in the maritime provinces as would account for this difference in the result of the operation of the Intercolonial Railway between the present and the past year. I affirm that, Mr. Chairman, with some confidence. I know that the lumber business has been in nothing like the prosperous condition that it was in before, but our people are getting very hopeful as to the immediate future. Prices have been low, and the business has been a dragging one during this year, and, as respects our railway operations, the lumber business has not been such as one would desire it to be. For the same period of eight months, from the 1st of July to the 1st of March, during some previous years, I am in a position to give a statement to the committee. For the eight months of the year 1894-95, from the 1st of July to the 1st of March, corresponding with the eight months' period I have given of the present year, there was a loss on the Intercolonial Railway of $140,276. Mark you, for precisely the same period of the operation of the line in which I am showing $364 to the good, there was $140,276 of a deficit. Of course, that was not the final result for that year, because we get into the good months later, but down to that period the figures are as I have given them to you. For 1895-96, the loss on the Intercolonial Railway to the 1st of March, as shown by the receipts in the one hand and the expenditure on the other, was $161,632. For the same period of 1896-97, the loss was $139,885. For 1897-98, the loss which we had was $71,000, and, as I have already told you, the gain for the corresponding period of this year is $364. Now, what is the result for the whole year? In 1894-95, there was a surplus upon the whole year. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) had $3,815 to the good on his year's operations, notwithstanding that he was $140,276 behind on the 1st of March. You will see at once, from that, that when you are past the 1st of March you are approaching a better season for business and for bettering the results. The months of April, May and June are always good months on the Intercolonial Railway, and in those months the Minister of Railways was able to overtake his loss of $140,276, that year, and to come out, not with a very large surplus, but still with a little surplus of $3,815. Now, in the year 1895-96, in which he had a loss of $161,632, up to the 1st of March, he came out with a deficit of $55,000. In 1896-97, in which I came out with a loss of $139,885, to the 1st of March, I came out at the end of the year with $59,000 of a deficit. I came out with a deficit of $59,000 in the year 1896-97, and in the year 1897-98, as you know, I increased my loss over the $71,000 which it was on the 1st of March, up to $209,000 on the 1st of July, including the Montreal extension rentals.

Now, how did that come about, largely? I have already stated it to you, but I will repeat it now in this connection. It came about, not because the business was materially less, not because the business was being carried on at any less profits, but because I spent $150,000 more than the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) did during that same four months of the year in which he had produced a surplus, or, in the years in which he had produced a smaller deficit. The actual figures of the result of the operations of the Intercolonial Railway for the present year will, of course, depend, in a very large measure, in the first place, upon the expenditure which is made during these four months on the one hand, and on the condition of business on the other.

I venture this prediction: That, without making any reduction in the expenditure for maintenance of way and repairs; without degrading the road or diminishing what is proper, and necessary, and usual, and customary, in the way of repairs, between now and the 1st of July—I venture to predict, that, as a result of the year's operations of the Intercolonial Railway between the 1st of July, 1898, and the 1st of July, 1899, there will be a larger surplus than there has ever been upon the Intercolonial Railway. I will almost venture to say, that there will be a larger surplus than all the surpluses put together that have ever been upon the Intercolonial Railway. I will ask the House to draw the inference, that this must be due to the fact, that we have given a very important piece of railway, a very productive piece of railway, to the Intercolonial, when we extended it to the city of Montreal. Any man who knows anything about the trains which pass over the Intercolonial now, carrying freight to Montreal, as compared with the trains that passed over the Intercolonial in times past, must see, that this extension has created business, that it has done what hon. gentlemen opposite said it would never do, namely, improved the business which that railway had been doing. I think, too, that we are by no means well advanced on the line of what we are capable of accomplishing. I think, that, when the Intercolonial goes into the business—as it has been doing, and as it intends to do to a still greater degree in the future—when it enters as an active competitor for business, not doing it for nothing, not carrying freight at less than cost, as the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition said we would have to do, but carrying it at a fair and reasonable profit, not, perhaps, the same rates as are imposed by the ordinary railway companies, because we do not insist upon rates up to that figure, and never have, but carrying at a reasonable profit, with our improved facilities and with the opportunities which our location in the city of Montreal will give us—I think we are only on the threshold of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway business, not only in passengers, but in freight. It does not require one to be of a very sanguine disposition to see the time in the future when we will have a very substantial, a very important, and a very considerable addition to the surpluses which shall result from the operation of that line.

The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) had a surplus in 1892-93 of $20,000. He got a very great deal of credit all over the country for that surplus. I know that some of his newspaper supporters almost felt like deifying him as a successful railway administrator. The year before he took the reins of office, there was something like within a few dollars of half a million dollars of a deficit.

Mr. HUGHES. That must have been near election times.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not by any means; it was not exceptional. The deficits had been large for quite a number of years prior to that. The deficit was $493,000 the year I allude to, and the deficit was $684,000 the year before that.

Mr. COWAN. That must have been the election year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps so; it was the year 1891. The election did not seem to have added to the deficit more than $90,000, because the year preceding the deficit was $547,000. So, you will see, that, after a period of three years' deficits, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) perhaps felt that he had covered himself with glory, when he succeeded in wiping out the whole of that half million deficit and actually showing a balance on the other side of the account. It was no wonder that, when these facts appeared, a great many persons regarded my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) as a Heaven-born railway administrator. He has been living—if I am doing him any injustice, I will willingly correct it—but I think he has ever since been living upon the glory and credit which he then achieved. I do not know, whether the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) would claim the credit for himself—perhaps he allows other people to load him up with the glory. He would, I think, be too honest to claim it himself. I think he would be willing to acknowledge, that, in a very large measure, the glory of that achievement was due to two causes. In the first place, to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, because Sir Mackenzie Bowell was acting Minister of the Department of Railways during the year which preceded the year 1892-93, and, I think, for part of the latter year also. I understand, that Sir Mackenzie Bowell, when Minister, hid himself down to Moncton, and he simply told the officials there: You have got to cut off so much money on this branch; you have to cut down so much expenditure on this, and so much on the other; I want two or three hundred thousand dollars of actual expense in those different branches taken off. The officials had no alternative; they cut off the employees; they took off the trains; they refused the accommodation which the public had been enjoying, and there is no doubt they made a saving of the half million dollars which I give the hon. gentleman credit for.

Mr. HAGGART. Who told you all this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have had the assurance of gentlemen who have been in the confidence of my hon. friend for many years to this effect. In giving the hon. gentleman credit for $514,000, the difference between the results of the two years, it must not be forgotten that whatever right of glory should attach to any person belongs to Sir Mackenzie Bowell for having taken this forcible means of accomplishing the result ; but that did not cover it all. There were $300,000 that went to make up the $514,000, and this $300,000 was made up in a way that did not contribute very much towards the improvement of the Intercolonial Railway. Besides the taking off of trains, besides the dismissing of employees, besides the cutting down of salaries, there was spent $40,000 less on engines and tenders, $70,000 less on repairs of the track, $75,000 less on rails and fastenings, $30,000 less on ties, $46,000 less on bridges and buildings, and $20,000 less on repairs of buildings, and $20,000 saved by closing up stations along the line. My hon. friend succeeded in reducing the outlay on the Intercolonial that year by $300,000 by making these substantial reductions in expenditures, which I venture to think were not particularly advantageous to the railway service or generally in the interest of the road.

Now, there is only one thing further which I will detain the committee by making any lengthened remarks upon. The operating of the Intercolonial Railway, I am free to confess has been carried on for some years past under rather unfavourable conditions, by reason of the contract which was entered into by the Government of Canada with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company away back in 1890. That contract was entered into for a term of practically eight years. You had to wait until the seventh year of that contract had expired before you could give any notice terminating it, and then it could only be terminated by a year's notice ; so that practically that contract had eight years to run. While I have no disposition to complain of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company succeeding in effecting that arrangement, I do feel that I have the amplest justification for complaining of the Government for having entered into it. I do not think it will be possible in the whole history of contracts between two different railway companies to point to one parallel to this. It seems to me it was entered into either without any knowledge of the effect which it would have on the interests of the Intercolonial, or in open and wilful disregard of those interests. I cannot say that the evidence is at all clear that the Government were ignorant of it, because I am assured by both the General Manager of the Intercolonial Railway and the Chief Engineer, the Deputy Minister, that they protested and advised the Minister of that day in the strongest manner against entering into that arrangement. The arrangement was made by no less a person than Sir John Macdonald. My hon. friend the late Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) did not make that arrangement, and he has no responsibility for it further than that he assumed the usual and ordinary responsibility when he entered the Government which had made it, and took the responsibility of its acts ; but I think the hon. gentleman will not question my statement when I say that he made reasonably strenuous efforts to carry that arrangement out on behalf of the Government. There were two or three things in that contract which I think were not favourable to the Government, and I maintain that the Government, as the owner of the Intercolonial Railway, and as having expended nearly $60,000,000 in its construction, was entitled to some consideration in a matter of that kind. I am disposed to treat the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other railway systems in Canada with the utmost fairness ; but I am not disposed either to favour them or to be a party to giving any one of them practically the control of the best section of Intercolonial territory, or allowing them to do business which rightfully belongs to us. I do not know that I owe any apology to the committee, even at this late hour for referring to this subject, because I do not think it has ever been presented to Parliament before. I do not think any occasion has arisen when anybody has called for any statement on the subject, or the production of the agreement itself ; it may have been so, but I am not aware of it. There were two or three phases of that contract which I say ought never to have been agreed to by any Minister of the Crown or by any Government that had the interests of Canada in their keeping, or had any regard for those interests. There was one provision under which the Government of Canada or the Department of Railways solemnly and firmly bound itself to observe, through its officers and employees, absolute neutrality between the Canadian Pacific Railway and its own line. Under that contract the Canadian Pacific Railway had the right to go into Intercolonial territory anywhere from St. John to Halifax or along that branch of the line and its connections—to send its agents and employees to solicit business for that line.

Mr. HAGGART. Can you not do it to-day?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell the hon. gentleman before I get through just what can be done to-day. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company had the right under that contract to send their agents to solicit that business for the Canadian Pacific Railway short line from St. John to Montreal in preference to its going by the Intercolonial Railway via Moncton and Lévis. And under this agreement the Government of Canada solemnly bound itself with the Canadian Pacific Railway, so that the employees of the Government could not solicit business.

Mr. HAGGART. I give the most emphatic denial to any such statement. There is nothing of the kind in the agreement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The agreement is that the Intercolonial employees should not solicit as against the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway. The hon. gentleman is willing apparently to take the responsibility of the agreement as entered into.

Mr. HAGGART. Bring it down.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that the agreement is in effect what I have just stated.

Mr. HAGGART. It is absurd to say that an employee of the Intercolonial could not ask for the traffic of passenger or freight along our own line. What it does provide is that they shall not tout for business as against the Grand Trunk Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway but were to be neutral.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that the contract tied the hands and closed the mouths of every employee on the Intercolonial from St. John east. That is what I said. And I say further that the Canadian Pacific Railway had the right to put their agents along that line or any portion of it.

Mr. HAGGART. So they have to-day.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One moment if the hon. gentleman will allow me. The employees of the Intercolonial could not enter into competition with the employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the purpose of securing business for the Intercolonial. Their mouths were absolutely shut.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, pshaw!

Mr. HUGHES. Could they enter into competition with the Grand Trunk Railway agents, who were there also? They could take freight from the Grand Trunk Railway just the same as from the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must ask some question a little more pertinent. It was not endeavouring to take some business away from the Intercolonial.

Mr. HUGHES. They might want to get over the Grand Trunk Railway in preference to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My hon. friend does not understand the question, evidently.

Mr. HUGHES. The whole question was fought out in this House before the hon. gentleman came here.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was not aware of it.

Mr. GIBSON. Nor anybody else. That was kept quiet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I state unhesitatingly, and without fear of contradiction, that not only did this contract bind the officers and employees of the Intercolonial to strict neutrality, so that they might not solicit business, but the agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway might solicit business right under the noses of the employees of the Government road, and the latter could not open their mouths. And I say that that was not only the terms and tenor of the agreement in the letter, but the practical working out of the agreement in fact. The officers of the Intercolonial and the department have to-day communications on file, as I am informed by my deputy and the general manager, of complaints which were made by the Canadian Pacific Railway against our agents on our own line trying to hold a little of that business for ourselves, and charging them with violating the neutrality obligations. Not only were they charged with this offence, but they were threatened by my hon. friend and the Government with dismissal from office if they continued that work.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman must have some evidence on which to found such a statement, and I challenge him to produce it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say that the chief engineer of my department and the Deputy Minister have told me that charges were made to the late Government by the Canadian Pacific Railway people against our officers, and the late Government threatened to dismiss these men if they continued further to violate that contract. I do not think it would be possible to imagine any more humiliating position for the Government or our railway to be in than that which I have depicted. Just imagine the employees, our paid agents, who would naturally have an interest in seeing us do the business, in seeing the business come over our own road—the long haul to Montreal, rather than leave it at Moncton and there take the Canadian Pacific Railway to the west—not being allowed to make an appeal to the patrons of our road to send their business over it, but being compelled to stand by and allow our road to be run down and all sorts of representations to be made derogatory to it without being allowed to open their mouths in dissent, under the penalty of being charged with violating the compact entered into.

Further, what did this arrangement provide for? It provided for the running of the Canadian Pacific Railway train after it had reached St. John on to Halifax in continuation of the maritime express, which is the name of the train from Montreal to Halifax and Halifax to Montreal. This agreement compelled the Government to draw their train. It is true that any passengers who might have taken local tickets from St. John to any point between St. John and Halifax or vice versa, would be paying into the Intercolonial revenue. In other words all the passengers who were carried between St. John and Halifax by that train were carried as Intercolonial passengers, and the Dominion or railway revenue got the benefit of the receipts from these local passengers; but there was a consideration in that connection which was most injurious to the road, and which it is my intention to discontinue, and that is that we should be obliged to run that train for the convenience of the Canadian Pacific Railway, when it was also necessary that we should follow it up by another train, even a short time afterwards, for the accommodation of other passengers on our line who might not be able to go by Canadian Pacific Railway, or at whose stations the Canadian Pacific Railway train would not stop. In other words, under the operation of that contract, we were compelled to run two trains where one would suffice. That is what we have been doing all these years and that does not satisfy us. It is no answer to say that we are getting all the benefit from the passengers we carry between St. John and Halifax, because we could and would carry these same passengers by our other train, which we have to run empty, and we could, therefore, carry them at no greater expense. We would, in fact, save all the cost and expense of the running of the Canadian Pacific Railway train.

There is another point in that connection. As a result of our having to run that train to suit the convenience of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have lost a very large number of passengers, who were led to go to Montreal via St. John rather than via Lévis and our long haul railway. We could haul these passengers to Montreal, just as comfortably, just as quickly, via Moncton and over our own road, now that the extension to Montreal is built, as they could be carried via St. John and then handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, to be carried by that road to Montreal. Our road is just as comfortable; our road makes just as good time; our road presents as many advantages; and I believe if we had not been obliged to haul this extra train for the Canadian Pacific Railway, a very large percentage of the passengers who have heretofore gone, or who are now going via St. John to Montreal, would go by the Intercolonial Railway; and if they did we should realize a very substantial additional sum upon such passengers. At present a through ticket from Halifax to Montreal, whether you go by the Intercolonial Railway or by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is $16. If the passenger takes the Canadian Pacific route, leaving the Intercolonial Railway at St. John, he pays us for that ticket, and we receive as our share of the price of that ticket, $6, while $10 goes to the Canadian Pacific Railway. If we did not lose any of these passengers to the Canadian Pacific, but carried them, as we should be able to do—except for the few scattering passengers there might be who would wish to stop at St. John—to Montreal, we would get $10 more for every passenger that we brought to Montreal, which sum we now lose to the Canadian Pacific. I do not know how much that would amount to, but I think it would amount to quite a substantial sum. And, mind you, the carriage of these additional passengers to Montreal by the Intercolonial Railway would not add anything to the cost of running our train; and there is further the enormous advantage we should get out of it, in having large earnings on our sleeping cars and on our dining cars, which we do not get now. Why, the condition of things with regard to the Intercolonial Railway would, I believe, be incredible by the people if they were told of it, and did not know of the facts themselves. If you come into the city of Halifax by steamer, say, by one of the Allan liners, what will be your impression? Your impression will be that it is the Canadian Pacific that you are to take there, that it is the Canadian Pacific that runs out of Halifax and carries you to Montreal. It will be the Canadian Pacific when you get to St. John, if you go that way—as most of the passengers do—but most passengers will not have the faintest idea that there is such a thing as a Government railway running into the city of Halifax. I speak of those coming by steamer, because I assume that any person who goes there in any other way as local passenger will know that he has reached Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway. But, coming in by water he will have learnt that the Canadian Pacific terminus is at Halifax, while the Intercolonial Railway is not mentioned or known. On the steamers, no matter how full we may load them with our circulars calling attention to the fact that there is the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax, through some peculiarity of conditions, our circulars disappear and nothing remains but the Canadian Pacific Railway circulars, and people are led, as I have said, to imagine that it is the Canadian Pacific that runs from Halifax. That is what I complain of, and I say that a contract which would permit of that state of things is not one, at all events, that can be said to have been framed in the reasonable interests of the Intercolonial Railway; it is a contract which, I think ought not to be permitted to continue in operation. We have been in this position, that although, under all railway law and usage, we are entitled, when we carry passengers or freight originating in our territory—that is, in territory that is drained by the Intercolonial Railway—to haul those passengers or that freight by our longest haul and deliver them to the connecting road, getting out of the traffic the benefit of the long haul, yet, under this contract, although a very large portion of the freight originates on the Intercolonial Railway, it is brought by the short haul to St. John and carried west by the Canadian Pacific. Though we have the facilities, the cars and locomotives—or will have very soon—in ample abundance, we have been deprived of the benefit of this business through the operation of this contract. And, I suppose, this is one of the best illustrations that could be furnished of the practical operation of Conservative political economy.

Now, I am disposed to treat the Canadian Pacific with the utmost fairness and have always so treated them. I only ask them to treat the Intercolonial Railway as they would be disposed to treat any other railway company they connect with. I believe in my heart and conscience that when they succeeded in getting the signature of Sir John Macdonald to that contract they were scarcely able to believe the evidences of their own senses. I think it must have taken these gentlemen some months to realize that they had actually got that contract finally executed, so monstrous is it—to borrow one of the favourite expressions of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) opposite—so monstrous is it in its terms from a railway point of view. I gave notice, as soon as the time under the contract permitted, of the termination of this agreement—one year's notice. When the year came around—it was the 1st of July last—there were reasons which, I suppose, perhaps, my convenience and the convenience of the Canadian Pacific Railway people contributed to bring about, that made it impossible for the officers to get together and negotiate a new and improved agreement—improved from the standpoint of the Intercolonial Railway. They have been negotiating from that time down to the present, but no agreement has yet been arrived at, and it looks to me as though there was no probability of coming to any arrangement which would be satisfactory to the Government. The result, if we are unable to come to any arrangement, will be, I think, very much to the advantage of the Intercolonial Railway; and I shall look for very substantial results if a contract such as we have had in operation for these years past is not entered into—and I can assure the committee it will not be entered into, so far as I am concerned, as a result of the negotiations, which are still pending.

We think, that it will be eminently fair to make such an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway as is made with the other railroads. Let them deliver to us any goods or passengers they may carry over their line, at the end of their long haul, and, therefore, at our shortest point of connection; let us deliver to them any goods, freight or passengers which originate on our line, at the end of our long haul. We are then treating each other fairly, and on the same principle, and I think I am rightly advised, when I say, that, in so treating with the Canadian Pacific Railway, we would be treating upon a basis on which these arrangements are always made between two railway corporations. Now, I have called attention to the existing condition of affairs in this respect, not out of any spirit of hostility at all to the Canadian Pacific Railway, for I have none. But I say to them, that they must agree to what is fair, from a railroad point of view, or else they can come to no agreement with us; and I think they have begun to realize and appreciate that that is the only point of view from which negotiations between us can come to any conclusion. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I have exhausted the patience of members of the committee in occupying so much time in presenting this subject. Before taking my seat, I have only this to say, that the committee may rely upon the correctness of the results that I have presented to them, and upon the statements generally.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you a report from your engineer as to the state of the road which is taken over?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have no report of that specific nature; our own engineer is looking after it.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you a report from him as to whether the conditions of the contract have been carried out as to the building of the road? Forty-three miles was to be up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway and certain improvements were to be made on the rest of the road that is the 73 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has forgotten what appeared before the committee of investigation last year. The conclusion that was arrived at between the Government and the company was that it would take $100,000 to bring the road up to the condition that we required.

Mr. HAGGART. I am asking if that has been performed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must remember, that we are spending that money ourselves, through our engineers; the company has no hand or part at all in the outlay.

Mr. HAGGART. That is what I am asking. Have you a report from the engineer, that that has been performed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, why should we get a report from the engineer? He has not expended all that money yet. He is expending it as fast as he properly can. I do not know how much he has expended; perhaps, $60,000 or $70,000, out of the $100,000. We are allowed, under the arrangement, to take the rental and spend it to make up the $100,000; and, if it should transpire that we should buy the company out before the rental has accrued to the amount of $100,000, we take the difference out of the principal money.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the contract under the Subsidy Act, the contract entered into with the Drummond County Railway, been performed yet?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, long since, and the subsidy was paid. It could not be paid, otherwise.

Mr. HAGGART moved that the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.10 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 10th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 115) to incorporate the Sudbury and Wahnapiatae Railway Company.—(Mr. Dymont.)

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 9) respecting the Calvin Company, Limited.—(Mr. Britton.)

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

William Henry Comstock, member for the Electoral District of Brockville, introduced by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), and Mr. Fraser (Guysborough).

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to mention that no one is allowed in the galleries of this House except on sufferance, and no demonstrations whatever are permitted in the galleries.

STORES OF THE 8TH HUSSARS.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

1. When were the stores of the 8th Hussars transferred from the custody of the officer commanding to Major and Brevet Lt.-Col. Markham ?
2. Was the commanding officer of the regiment notified at the time ? If not, why not ?
3. Was Major Wedderburn, regimental storekeeper, notified ? If not, why not ?
4. Who was entitled at that time to the custody of the stores of the regiment under the rules and orders of the militia of Canada ?
5. For what reason were the stores of the 8th Hussars taken away from the officer commanding and handed over to Major Wedderburn ?
6. What order was given at the time by the Militia Department of Canada ?
7. Was such order sent at the time to the officer commanding and then in charge of the stores, or a copy of the same sent to him subsequently ?

8. Has the officer in question ever applied for a copy of such order ? If so, has it been given to him, and if not, why not ?

9. Did the officer commanding the regiment give his receipt for the stores to the Militia Department ? If so, was he not responsible for any loss or damage to the stores under the rules and regulations of the militia of Canada ?

10. Is he still responsible for any loss or damage, and what steps have been taken to relieve him of any responsibility on that score ?

11. Is there any regulation that will permit the stores being taken away from the custody of the officer commanding ?

12. Has Major Wedderburn, the duly appointed regimental storekeeper, been paid by the Department of Militia the amount allowed for the care of arms for the year ending June, 1898, namely, $480 ? If not, why not ?

13. When was Major Wedderburn relieved of his position of regimental storekeeper, and what order was issued at that time, and by whom ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 30th November, 1898. 2. No. He was absent on leave. 3. Major Wedderburn was not notified. This is a regimental matter. 4. The officer then commanding the regiment. 5. I am unable to give this information. 6. The district officer commanding was ordered by the General Officer Commanding to make the transfer of the arms and stores of the 8th Hussars. 7. No ; he was absent. 8. There is no record at headquarters of any such application. 9. Yes. Yes. 10. He is no longer responsible. None. 11. The regulation referring to the transfer of stores is contained in the 39th paragraph of part IV. of the Regulations and Orders for 1898. 12. No. The allowance for care of arms has been paid to Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Markham. 13. I have no information.

COMMAND OF THE 8TH HUSSARS.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. Has Lt.-Col. Domville been granted permanent leave of absence from his command of the 8th Hussars ?

2. If so, was such leave applied for by him ?

3. If Lt.-Col. Domville did not apply for leave, under what circumstances was he placed on permanent leave ?

4. Has the command of the regiment in question devolved upon Major Markham ?

5. Is it a fact that Major-Gen. Gascoigne, when commanding the militia of Canada, reported adversely to Major Markham ever succeeding to the command of the 8th Hussars ? If so, what is the date of such report ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. No. 3. By the order of the General Officer Commanding. 4. Yes, while the order referred to remained in force. 5. Such reports are generally treated as confidential.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Is the following item, which appears in the "Sun" newspaper, St. John, N.B., 2nd May, 1898, of which Major and Brevet Lt.-Col. Markham, 8th Hussars, is manager and part owner, correct?

" MILITARY DISTRICT No. 8.

District Orders.

Fredericton, 28th April, 1899.

D.O. 10.—Leave of Absence.

Leave of absence is granted to Lt.-Col. Domville, 8th Hussars, pending his retirement under regulations and orders governing the tenure of commanding officers (A.G.O. 77703).

By order,

(Sgd.) B. H. VIDAL, Lt.-Col.,
District Officer Comdg. M. D. No. 8.

The above is promulgated for the benefit of those whom it may concern."

Did the department add to the order "the above is promulgated for the benefit of those whom it may concern" ? If not, why is it issued as part of district orders ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. No. 2. It was not issued as part of district order.

FRANCIS MCKENZIE, OF CHRISTMAS ISLAND.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

Why was Francis McKenzie, of Christmas Island, refused instructions in the military school at Fredericton, in 1897 ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Want of intelligence and educational attainments, showing that he was not likely to become efficient.

FRASERVILLE STATION, INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. GAUVREAU (by Mr. Campbell) asked:

Whether the hon. Minister of Railways received from the council of Fraserville, on 20th November, 1898, and on 20th April, 1899, copies of the following resolution:—

"Whereas acts of grave immorality and other disorderly conduct have recently been committed in the station of the Intercolonial Railway at Fraserville, in the ladies' waiting-room, and the said acts have been brought to the knowledge of this council;

"Resolved, that the attention of the Railway Department and of Mr. Abraham Ouellet, superintendent of this division, be called to the said facts, with a request for the appointment of a night constable, in order to secure the maintaining of good order, at night, in the station, and prevent a repetition of any such disorderly conduct."

If so, is the department going to appoint a night constable for the said station, in order to protect the travelling public and prevent the recurrence of any such disorderly conduct in the future ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The resolution referred to was received in the department, and immediately upon its receipt, directions were forwarded to the proper officer to make inquiry into the matters alleged. The report has not yet come to hand, nor has it been decided that it is now necessary to employ a policeman at that station.

Mr. DOMVILLE.

MANITOBA AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. DAVIS (by Mr. Richardson) asked :

1. How many miles of the Manitoba and North-western Railway have been built ?
2. How many miles of the said road is built in the North-west Territories ?
3. What amount of lands given by the Government as subsidy has the company earned ?
4. Have the lands been located ? If so, has any of the said lands been taken in the North-west Territories ?
5. Have the patents been taken out for the lands earned ? If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. 234.59 miles. 2. About fifty-five miles. 3. 1,501,376 acres. 4. A portion of the lands have been located and some of them are within the Territories. 5. Patents have issued for a portion of the lands selected. They have not been issued for all the lands, because they have not been asked for.

CHARGES AGAINST F. F. CHAMBERLAND.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Since giving his answer in the House on the 20th April to a question in relation to certain accusations made against one F. F. Chamberland, of Fraserville, by one Joseph Gagné, has the Minister of Public Works received a communication from one Achille Lebel, dated 28th April last, corroborating the said charges and asking that they be investigated ?

2. If so, is it the intention of the Minister to grant the investigation demanded ?

3. If it is not the intention of the Minister to grant such investigation, why not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). A letter from one Achille Lebel has been received, and as soon as the Minister of Public Works returns to his office, he will consider whether there are sufficient grounds for the holding of the investigation asked for.

PAYMENT OF STEAMSHIPS SUBSIDY.

Mr. ELLIS asked :

In what year was a subsidy first paid to a line of steamships between St. John, Halifax and London ? How much money was paid for the service in that year and in each year since, and to what line or lines of steamships ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). In answer to the hon. gentleman's question, I have to say, that, apparently, the first amount paid was in the year ended 30th June, 1883, $1,500 to Messrs. Troope & Son ; in the year ended 30th June, 1884, $12,000 to Halifax Steam Navigation Company ; in the year ended 30th June, 1885, $16,500 to the Furness line ; in the year ended 30th June, 1886, $24,000 to the Furness line ; in the year ended 30th June, 1887, $22,000 to the Furness line ; in the year ended 30th June, 1888, $28,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1889, $26,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1890, $22,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1891, $25,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1892, $23,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1893, $25,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1894, $25,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1895, $26,000 to the Furness line, including $1,000 supplementary for arrears, January, 1892; in the year ended 30th June, 1896, $25,000 to the Furness line; in the year ended 30th June, 1897, $25,000 to the Furness line, and $15,000 for a further direct winter service from St. John; in the year ended 30th June, 1898, $25,000 to the Furness line, and $15,000 for a direct winter service to Allan & Thomson line.

REPRODUCTION OF FACSIMILES OF POSTAGE STAMPS.

Mr. McGREGOR asked :

Whether the British American Bank Note Company, formerly contractors for supplying the Government with postage stamps, did whilst such contractors reproduce facsimiles of any postage stamps supplied by them, under their contract with the Government, for any other, and if so, what purposes, and whether or not such reproduction was with or without the knowledge of the then Government, and whether such reproduction is or is not contrary to law ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). The following answer has been furnished me by the department:—The only instance which has come within the knowledge of the Post Office Department of what might be considered a reproduction of facsimiles of any postage stamps on the part of the British American Bank Note Company, at one time contractors for the supply of postage stamps to the Government, was in connection with a "Perpetual Calendar" circulated by that company, and on which have been printed, together with other stamps and specimens of the work executed by the company, what very much resemble the major portions of the ½-cent and 2-cent Canada postage stamps, or facsimiles thereof. These two impressions look as if they had been produced from part of the dies used in the production of the ½-cent stamp which became current in 1882, and the 2-cent stamp of the 1868-69 issue. The Post Office Act contains provisions against the imitation of postage stamps.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON TERRITORY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Is it the intention of the Government this session to ask Parliament to provide for the representation of the Yukon territory in the House of Commons of Canada ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say, that it is not the intention of the Government, this session, to ask Parliament to provide for representation of the Yukon territory in the House of Commons.

TRANSPORTATION OF GOVERNMENT FREIGHT TO YUKON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Was the hon. the Minister of Militia advised, prior to the departure of Government freight for Fort Selkirk from Seattle, that the Boston and Seattle Steamship Company were bankrupt and unable to perform their contract ?

2. Did the hon. the Minister satisfy himself that the company could perform the contract ? If so, how and on what information ?

3. Did the hon. the Minister obtain any security for the performance of the contract ? If so, what was it ?

4. Was any payment made on behalf of the Government of Canada to the said company on said account ? If so, how much was paid ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. No. 2. Yes; by careful inquiry. 3. None beyond a guarantee of delivery on or before a given date, and the retention of all payments until completion of contract and delivery of freight. 4. No.

OPERATION OF BRIDGE AND FERRY OVER KLONDIKE RIVER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What company owns or operates the bridge and ferry, respectively, over the Klondike River ?

2. What is the toll imposed upon foot-passengers over the bridge coming and going ?

3. What is the width of the river where the bridge crosses ?

4. What is the fare on the ferry ?

5. Did the commissioner, Major Walsh, assist the companies, or either of them, to maintain a monopoly by booming each side of the river to prevent private boats from landing ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say, that my department has no information upon the subject of the hon. gentleman's question. If there is any information upon the subject, it has been received by the hon. Minister of Public Works, and, during his illness, I am not able to ascertain what the facts are.

SETTLEMENT PRIVILEGES IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. ROSAMOND asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to give to sons of farmers or others in Ontario who may wish to take up farms in the North-west, the same privileges and advantages as have been given to the Doukhobors, Galicians and other aliens ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman's question, the answer is, yes.

CANCELLATION OF SEED-GRAIN LIENS.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Whether the attention of the hon. the Minister of the Interior has been called to the following resolution adopted by the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories, on 20th April, 1899 :—

"That whereas certain abandoned lands in the Territories are encumbered by liens executed by persons formerly holding such lands as homesteads in favour of the Government of Canada, to secure the payment of the cost of seed grain supplied to the said persons ;

"And whereas, without amendment to the Dominion Lands Act, such liens must be paid by parties subsequently making homestead entries for such lands ;

"And whereas the settlement of such lands is often thereby prevented ;

"And whereas the public lands of the North-west Territories should and of right do belong to the people of the North-west Territories, and are held and managed in trust for them by the Government of Canada pending the establishment of provinces in these territories ;

"Therefore, be it resolved that, in the opinion of this House, the Dominion Lands Act should be so amended as to provide for the cancellation of all liens encumbering lands, the homestead entries for which lands have been or may hereafter be cancelled."

Whether the Government has decided to introduce legislation this session dealing with the subject-matter of the above resolution ?

Whether the Government will legislate this session on the subject in such a manner as to embrace all the features of the seed-grain question in the west ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman's question, I beg to say, that the attention of the Minister of the Interior has been called to the resolution referred to, by a letter from the Territorial Secretary at Regina, under date 3rd May, 1899, the letter having been received by the department on the 8th instant. The Government has not yet been able to give the matter consideration, and is not, therefore, in a position to say, that legislation will be submitted to Parliament this session.

ELEVATOR RESTRICTIONS.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Whether the attention of the Government has been called to the following resolution adopted by the legislative assembly of the North-west Territories on 21st April, 1899 :—

"That whereas the farmers in many parts of the Territories have suffered much inconvenience and loss by reason of the present elevator restrictions imposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the combinations and monopolies which resulted from these restrictions, and an apparent discriminatory railway policy in favour of such combinations ;

Mr. BORDEN (Rosamond).

"Therefore, be it resolved that, in the opinion of this House, legislation should be passed by the Parliament of Canada compelling all railroad companies to permit the right to any one to build and operate elevators, warehouses or grain chutes, and to give all reasonable and fairly distributed facilities to any person to load grain direct on cars."

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I have to say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that there is no correspondence upon the subject, but the attention of the Government has been drawn to the subject in connection with legislation now before the House.

PASS TO MR. EUGENE MICHAUD.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Whether Mr. Eugène Michaud, merchant, of Rivière du Loup (en bas), was given, since May 1, 1898, a pass, whether yearly or half-yearly, or for any special time, or any particular trip, on the Intercolonial Railway, between Rivière du Loup, Quebec and Montreal, or on any other part of the said railway ?

2. If the said Michaud did receive, or holds, such pass, from whom did he obtain it and on what grounds ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Upon inquiry, I find that Mr. Eugène Michaud, merchant, of Rivière du Loup, has not been given a pass since 1st May, 1898, but he was furnished with one on the 25th March, 1898, between Rivière du Loup and Montreal, good until 30th June, 1898. The pass was issued by the general manager of the Canadian Government Railways, as is usual, Mr. Michaud being contractor for the sale of newspapers, &c., on the trains.

DREDGING ENTRANCE TO HARBOUR OF FOURCHIE.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to send a dredge during the present season to complete the dredging of the entrance to the harbour of Fourchie, in the county of Richmond, Cape Breton ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answer furnished by the Department of Public Works is, that it is not probable that the engagements of the dredge will allow of her being sent to Fourchie this season.

BREAKWATER AT CHAPEL COVE, L'ARDOISE.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. Is the Government aware that a breakwater at Chapel Cove, L'Ardoise, in the county of Richmond, Nova Scotia, is a work of the most urgent necessity for the protection of the fishermen of that locality ?

2. Is the Government aware that a survey, estimate and plan of this breakwater was made by Mr. Bernasconi, C.E., in 1895, upon the instructions of the Minister of Public Works ?

3. Is the Government aware that the cost of this breakwater was estimated by Mr. Bernasconi at $5,000 ?

4. Is it the intention of the Government to have the necessary amount provided during the present session, for the construction of this necessary work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answer furnished by the Public Works Department is as follows :—1. It was represented to the late Administration, in 1895, that a breakwater at this point would be useful, but no action has been taken by them in reference thereto. 2. Yes. 3. So Mr. Bernasconi reported in 1895. 4. The supplementary Estimates for the next year not being yet presented, no answer can be given to this part of the question.

CLAIM AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. Has a claim been made upon the Government by or on behalf of the British Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company, for some $400,000 or any amount, damages ?

2. If so, upon what grounds is such claim made ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to tell my hon. friend, that no claim of any kind has been made upon the Government of Canada by the British Yukon Company.

I.C.R.—APPOINTMENT OF MR. A. H. HARRIS.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, in the absence of Mr. Pope, I beg to move for :

Copies of all letters, documents, memoranda, agreements and correspondence containing, embodying, relating to or referring to the terms and conditions upon which Mr. A. H. Harris entered the service of the Government or of the Intercolonial Railway as general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway or otherwise.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Stand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The right hon. gentleman has asked these two motions by Mr. Pope to stand. I would like to ask my right hon. friend, whether it is not very desirable that the motion regarding Mr. Harris should be passed, as it has relation to a subject now before the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Minister of Railways is not in his seat at the present moment, and I cannot agree to the motion in his absence. I will speak to him later on.

TORONTO POST OFFICE—APPOINTMENTS SINCE JULY, 1896.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (Toronto) moved for :

Return showing the names of persons appointed to positions in the Toronto post office since July 13th, 1896 ; the date of each such appointment ; the salary paid to each such person ; the office to which each such person was appointed, and by whom recommended for appointment.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There is no objection to this motion passing if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) will consent to strike out the last words, because the Government have not consented in any case to allow a resolution of that kind to be passed. The words I refer to are "and by whom recommended for appointment." The Postmaster General takes the responsibility for the appointment, and if the hon. gentleman consents to the omission of those words, the motion can pass, if not it will have to stand.

Mr. CLARKE. I have asked for information of this kind before, and this is the first time this session that exception has been taken.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) is mistaken. It is not the first time the objection has been raised ; it has been raised every time the attention of the Minister has been called to the matter.

Mr. CLARKE. With all due deference to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the objection has not been taken to motions of a similar nature. If there is any objection to these words, I beg to ask that they be struck from the motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is amended by striking out the words : "and by whom recommended for appointment."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

THE PROHIBITION PLEBISCITE.

Mr. MOORE (by Mr. Taylor) moved :

That it be ordered that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery lay on the Table of the House the poll-books and voters' lists for the counties of Beauce, Lévis, Montmagny and Kamouraska.

Mr. FOSTER. The motion calls for the poll-books and voters' lists. I think all that is wanted are copies of these.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I think so. It would never do to bring down the originals.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is very indefinite. I presume the hon. gentleman means the lists used in the plebiscite ?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. Well, that should be stated, because the motion does not specify any year.

Motion amended accordingly, and as amended agreed to.

THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. EDWARD F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to draw the attention of the right hon. First Minister to an article which appears in the Toronto "Evening Star" of yesterday. I may say that the "Star" generally supports hon. gentlemen opposite, and its utterances on a matter which is of importance to the House and the country ought to receive immediate consideration. The article is as follows:—

NOT WANTED HERE.

Over 75 Italians, brought over from Buffalo by the padrones, who keep an eye on the construction work in Ontario each spring and summer, are lodged in the ward awaiting work.

The "Star's" comments in reference to this state of affairs, are as follows:—

Where is the Government's boasted alien labour law, which should be in force, to keep out these people, who are virtually white slaves, bound body and soul to the boss who brings them to Canada to secure the summer work, and will herd them away as soon as it is over?

That is not the sort of immigration which Canada wants, and the Government's tender solicitude for the feelings of the United States should give place to a common-sense regulation that would bar out birds of passage such as are being herded into Toronto.

I find in the news columns of the same paper of the same day, the following despatch from Buffalo:—

Buffalo, May 9.—Inspector DeBarry's attention was called to-day to an advertisement inserted in a Toronto paper yesterday for 100 labourers. These labourers, it is said, are wanted in Buffalo to take the places of the striking shovelers on the docks.

"All I have to say," said DeBarry, "is, that if Mr. Connors brings into this country those 100 men it will cost him $100,000 in addition to costs. It is a violation of the United States alien labour law."

The inspector has written to Charlotte and Niagara Falls to look out for the coming of these men.

I draw the attention of the hon. Premier to these statements for the purpose of asking if it is the intention of the Government that our so-called alien labour law shall be put in force, and that immigrants of the character referred to in the "Star" editorial may be prohibited coming into this country to take the place of Canadians out of employment who are able to do all the work offering just now?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that our officer in Toronto has called the attention of the Government yet to the matter mentioned in the newspaper just quoted, and the Government will expect information from its officer before it takes any action.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

THE WASHINGTON CONFERENCE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the House if he has any information with regard to the rumour which appeared in the press this morning that owing to the action of the United States, the proposed conference, which was adjourned at Washington, will not meet in Quebec at the end of August, as then agreed to?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have not yet heard anything of the rumour to which my hon. friend alludes, and, so far as my information goes, there is no foundation for it.

THE ELECTORAL LISTS IN WINNIPEG.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the Government whether, as has been stated in a newspaper supporting the Government, it is the intention of the Government to use the old lists in the Winnipeg election?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have not seen that statement in any newspaper. Where did it appear?

Mr. WALLACE. In the Montreal "Witness."

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to say that the "Witness" is not as well informed as usual, because, as I have said already, the Government have appointed an officer to prepare the lists for the election in Winnipeg, and he is now going on with his work.

Mr. WALLACE. On the basis of the old list?

The PRIME MINISTER. According to the law of the province of Manitoba.

LIQUOR LICENSES IN THE YUKON.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I wish to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior a question, but as he is not in his place perhaps the right hon. First Minister will be able to give me the information. Mr. Ogilvie, it seems, has issued some liquor licenses which have been disallowed by the government, and the men who obtained these licenses and have invested large sums in the liquor, are very anxious to know whether they will be allowed to take this liquor in or not. I applied to the Minister of the Interior in his office, and he told me he would give an answer in two or three days. That was on the 24th April, and a week ago I wrote him a note across the House, and was informed by him in reply that the council had not adjudicated on the matter, but he expected they soon would. This is a matter of great moment to a number of men in British Columbia, and may simply mean ruin to some of them. If the licenses issued by Mr. Ogilvie or the council of the Yukon have been disallowed and are to remain ineffective, it may mean thousands and thousands of dollars lost to these men, and perhaps their ruin. Can the hon. gentleman give us any information as to whether the men who have these permits of Mr. Ogilvie and have bought the liquor and started with it, or even if they have not started with it, will be allowed to bring it in?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not in a position to give the information asked for, but now that I am in possession of the facts, I will give the information desired, probably at the next meeting of the House.

THE REPORT OF THE LOBSTER FISHERY COMMISSION.

Mr. G. V. McINERNEY (Kent, N.B.) Might I ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries what course he proposes to follow with regard to the recommendations of the Lobster Commission? It is now ten days since I asked him the same question, and he said he would refer the matter, which is one of considerable importance, to his colleagues in Council and give a reply at an early date. This is a question of great importance to a large number of people engaged in this very large industry, and I do not think its importance can be overlooked by the hon. Minister. I would, therefore, ask if he is now prepared to give a reply, as I would like to be in a position to send it down to my county and the maritime provinces generally.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The recommendations of the Lobster Commission have been very carefully considered, and we have come to the conclusion that, so far as they withdraw from the fishermen any rights which they had under the old regulations, they will not be adopted this year. If, for instance, the right to begin fishing in the month of January is limited by any recommendation, we shall not adopt it this year; but where these recommendations enlarge existing rights, I propose, before the time expires in which that enlargement can be taken advantage of, to state to the House whether, in whole or part, such recommendation will be put in force this season. On some parts of the coast, the commission recommends an extension of time for ten days, and in others as much as twenty.

Mr. McINERNEY. A month.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not pledging myself now that we will adopt the whole month's extension, but in every case where an extension is recommended, the probabilities are some extension will be given, though I am not going quite so far as to say that they will be adopted to their full extent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will soon be determined?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. McINERNEY. I think the fishing season, under the present regulations, terminates the 15th July, and it is recommended that it be extended to the 15th August.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In some parts.

Mr. McINERNEY. The hon. gentleman will see the importance to these people of knowing the decision of the Government without delay, so that they may be able to get in their supplies for the enlarged time, if the Government should decide to enlarge the time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are two months ahead before the old season expires.

Mr. McINERNEY. Yes, but they have to get in their tinned provisions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There will be no trouble about that.

INLAND WATER FISHERY LICENSES.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Has my hon. friend still anything to do with the fisheries in inland waters, under the judgment of the Privy Council, or is there any arrangement between the local governments and his department to enforce, as soon as possible, the old regulations? I am informed that licenses are being granted by the score by the local government of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). So far as the inland waters are concerned, if I understand the judgment of the Privy Council, we have no power to grant any licenses whatever, but have the exclusive power of making regulations.

Mr. BERGERON. I would draw my hon. friend's attention to the fact that local licenses are being granted in a way to destroy the fish altogether.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I dare say they are, but I have no control over the local authorities in that respect. I may entertain a strong opinion as to what will be the result of the transfer of the power to grant licenses to the local authorities.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You can restrict them by way of regulations, and in that way restrict the number of licenses.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is a very nice question as to how far we have that power. I have had a good many consultations with my hon.

friend the Solicitor General in order to get at the exact meaning of the Privy Council's decision; but, speaking broadly, it may be taken for granted that while we have the exclusive right of making regulations, so far as the inland fisheries are concerned, we have no power to issue licenses whatever. Ontario is giving licenses entirely within the boundaries of that province, and the province of Quebec is doing the same. With Nova Scotia and New Brunswick an arrangement has been made under which, pending submission of a case to the court to determine the relative power of the provinces and the Dominion in the waters adjacent to the sea-coast—that is, below water mark—we should continue to administer the fisheries this year in those two provinces as we did last.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My recollection is that the judgment resolves itself after all into a question of good faith between the Governments. For instance, the question raised whether the federal authorities could intervene and limit the number of licenses by regulation, and thus create a clash of jurisdiction and one of the Law Lords said the question simply resolved itself into one of good faith in that regard. But while the administration is in the local authorities, it is subject to regulation on the part of the federal authority; and it might become possible that the number of licenses would be limited by the federal power. I do not think that authority is gone from the hon. gentleman's department in that regard.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I do not admit that it has.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION AND ABDUCTION.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk) moved the third reading of Bill No. 2:

To amend the Criminal Code, 1892, so as to make more effectual provision for the punishment of seduction and abduction.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). This Bill surely cannot pass its third reading without some explanations from the Government benches, because it is a measure that, hitherto, has been opposed by the Government—by this as well as by the preceding Government—and on grounds quite strong. If those grounds have been removed, that should be explained. I find that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), who has charge of the Bill, apparently spoke to a thin House on April 20th, for his is the only speech on this very important measure. No one disputes its importance; nor do I deny that the hon. gentleman, on this very delicate subject, has behind him many people in this country, and representative people too. The churches have taken the matter up, and there is a very important, and, in some respects,

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

an overwhelming sentiment at the hon. gentleman's back on the subject with which the Bill seeks to deal. It is a delicate question to discuss and it is a delicate thing to resist that pressure which has been so continuous and so strong. But there have been men holding high positions in this House who have not hesitated to resist that pressure. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that this question of the age of consent is one that has been discussed and considered very carefully by the ablest minds among the law reformers in the mother country. And in that country the law as it stands is similar to that now embodied in our Criminal Code. The English Parliament, after a great deal of discussion, fixed the age at sixteen years. This was about the year 1885 or 1886. With the experience of Great Britain and of all the provinces here, with their several Acts for administering criminal justice under different Attorneys General, we have decided to follow the example of Great Britain in this matter. The criminal law was considered, if I remember well, by a joint committee of both Houses, and afterwards in the usual stages in each House of Parliament. This question was up at that time, and was one of the important questions considered by the gentlemen interested in the structure of the Criminal law of Canada. After debating all the various views, they decided to adhere to the English law, and fixed the age, as it is under section 181 of the Criminal Code, at sixteen years. Without going very fully into the reasons pro and con, I may say I have never heard the objection which was raised by the late Sir John Macdonald answered—the difficulty, that this puts blackmail into the hands of abandoned and absolutely dissolute women, an extraordinary engine of blackmail. This is the great difficulty with which the legislature, in considering this sort of question, always has to grapple. When I occupied the position of Minister of Justice, I was able to tell the House, when this Bill came up, the important fact, known to me as head of the department, that of the various Attorneys General of the provinces, who watch the trend of crime, and have to deal with the grand juries in the different counties, none had made any representation whatever from a public point of view. The only pressure for this legislation came from very respectable quarters, it is true, but not from bodies composed of those trained in the legislature or the court or having to deal with crime according to the most approved methods, either for the purpose of detection or for the purpose of punishment. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will recollect that he supported my view in the strongest manner, and with far greater weight than I could bring to bear, because he came then fresh from the active practice of his profession. He endorsed every word that I had said in objecting to going too fast with reforms of this character. And the hon. gentleman who has the Bill in hand was met, on that occasion, with such opposition in the House that, if my memory serves me right, he did not press the Bill to a division.

Mr. CHARLTON. Upon what occasion was that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When I was Minister of Justice, in 1895. I refer to that time because the views which I expressed after consulting with the officers of the department were confirmed and endorsed by the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who was then in Opposition.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is mistaken in the assumption that I did not press the Bill to a division.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may or may not be wrong. I said that, according to my recollection, he did not press it to a division, and that is my opinion still. The hon. gentleman thinks differently, but he is not positive on that point. However, I recollect that hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who had the advantage of experience in the courts and in watching the working of the criminal law brought to bear on this question, their experience, which was entirely against the necessity of taking a step that may be attended with some danger, which leading men in the profession and in Parliament have, in years gone by, certainly pointed out, would involve a very serious danger to the most respectable citizens of the land and put a weapon in the hands of a very dangerous class in every community.

That was no new argument here, and it is an argument that all this class of reformers are obliged to meet. The hon. gentleman himself has cited, on several occasions, precedents from the states of the Union. Well, those do not go for anything in comparison with our English precedents in regard to law reform. The hon. gentleman himself, I think, would admit that the legislation is very often ill-considered, hasty and ill-advised in some of the states of the Union; and there is sometimes a sentiment prevalent, in many respects praiseworthy, but in matters of this kind a sentiment that has to be very carefully considered here as to whether there are serious grounds for its justification. I venture to refer again to the language of the Minister of Justice in 1895. I only used that language because I was speaking with great care, and the force of my observations lay in the fact that I was making an official statement. I said:

This whole subject was very carefully considered by this Parliament in 1892, and it is my duty to call the attention of the House to the fact that I find further that from no Attorney General connected with the administration of criminal matters in the provinces, or any of the judges, who watch these matters and take interest in them, has there been any statement or representation which would warrant me in coming to the conclusion that there was a desire on the part of those concerned with the administration of criminal law to secure the changes proposed. In England it was not till 1835 that the age was placed as it is in our code in 1892.

I submit that if a reform of this kind is considered necessary now, and we have no evidence whatever that it is, this class of legislation should be preceded by some procedure or form that would enable information to be obtained. If the Government have no information on the subject, and if the departmental record is, as I explained it in 1895, then certainly I think this Parliament should pause before putting such legislation as this on the statute-book. I therefore would urge that the Government, if they have not given this very careful consideration, and have no further information than was at my command in 1895, should press upon the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the Bill, whose motives are of the very best, I have not the slightest doubt, and who represents a very important and influential portion of public opinion in Canada, to let the matter stand until the Government make some sort of inquiry and have more light upon the subject.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I consider that this is an important question, and one which should receive the careful attention of the members of this House. One reason why I second the motion for the third reading of this Bill, and why I think the Bill should receive the assent of this House, is that it has been asked for by a great many women in this country, especially by those connected with the Young Women's Christian Association of the country and the churches, who have come here in the past and waited upon the Premier asking for the passage of a Bill of this kind. A Bill was introduced two or three years ago which asked for more than this does, but the other parts of the Bill have been dropped. I think the Premier at one time expressed his approval of this part of the Bill, but he did not consent to another part of the Bill, and for that reason the former Bill did not go through. I think the opinion and desire of those ladies in the country who take a special interest in girls and young women coming to the cities from the country districts, ought to have great weight with the members of this House. They have a greater experience in looking after these girls, and they think that some legislation of this kind would be to their advantage. Another reason why I think the opinion of these women should have weight is that they have no vote in this House, and have no opportunity of expressing their views in this House except through the members of the House. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has urged the objection that there is danger of blackmail. I was a little surprised when he put the matter in the way he did and stated that there was danger that dissolute women would take advantage of this clause to levy blackmail. Now, I am satisfied that this is no real objection at all; I think if it is carefully looked at it will have no weight with this House. I hold that in these things men can look out for themselves. We are asked by this Bill to make a small provision for the protection of girls who have not arrived at the age of eighteen. It seems to me that the Bill is a very moderate one.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Would you make it twenty-one or thirty?

Mr. CRAIG. Well, I am perfectly satisfied with eighteen myself. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I would not want the country to have an idea that a Bill of this kind was treated by this House with levity and want of proper consideration. I do not say that to reflect on any members of the House. But I am afraid that sometimes, in dealing with Bills of this kind, there is a disposition to treat them in that way. Those of us who are in favour of this Bill think it is an important measure. It has received, as I say, the consideration of those women throughout this country, good Christian women, who are spending a great deal of time in work among girls, and who have come to the conclusion that this Bill is a good measure, and would result in good to those for whom it is intended. It is sometimes said that it is unwise to fix an arbitrary age. Well, the age has been fixed heretofore at sixteen, and it is thought that by fixing it at eighteen the Act will be a better one than it is to-day. That is the reason I advocate it, and I have much pleasure in giving my support to the Bill.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). I just wish to say with regard to this measure, that I cordially agree with the views of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who has spoken in reference to it. Certainly, I would be the last person in the House to desire in any way to reflect upon those who are anxious, and very properly anxious, to protect the persons whom it is intended to protect by this Bill. The sentiment which inspires them is a sentiment which, I am quite sure, will be respected by the hon. members of this House. I quite agree with my hon. friend who spoke last (Mr. Craig) when he said that the wishes of these ladies should have weight with us. I am satisfied that it ought to have, but, Mr. Speaker, I venture to think that there is something else that we should consider besides the wishes and opinions of these ladies. We respect their motives, and I am quite sure that we all, in every way, desire to give effect to their wishes. But the question is whether, what we are doing by this Bill, will give effect to their wishes or not. The question is whether these ladies are better judges of what is likely to produce a good result in this regard than those who have had practical experience in the courts of the country, and, for my part, if it should be a question as to whether we shall follow the example, in this matter, of the best opinion in the mother country, or the example which has been followed in the United States, by those who are, unfortunately, so often, driven by mob opinion, I would be prepared, always, to choose the opinion of those best capable of judging in the mother country. I entirely sympathize with the object, which, I am sure, the hon. gentleman has in view, who has introduced this Bill. I am sure we all sympathize with his object. It is not that any one in this House differs from him in respect to that; the only difference is as to what is the best way to give effect to that which he desires. I think the result which will inevitably follow from a measure of this kind will be, what my hon. friend has described, in other words, that we shall have a kind of blackmail which we have never before experienced in this country. For these reasons, however imperfectly given, I should be very glad indeed, if the Government would take this matter very seriously into their consideration before they commit themselves to legislation of this kind, which, I venture to say, will be regretted, if we place it on the statute-book.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond, N.S.) Mr. Speaker, any Bill that comes before this House, having for its object the promotion of law and order, will always have my sympathy and support, if it is laid down upon regular lines, and if it be brought up in a manner that should enlist the sympathy of the House. The object of the hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill is, no doubt, a commendable one, and, in that, he will have the sympathy of the House, but this is a subject that was well and clearly thought out and well thrashed out in 1892, when the Criminal Code was under consideration. That code was subjected to the fullest discussion in this House and in the Senate, and it was afterwards submitted to a joint committee of both Houses, comprised of the ablest lawyers of both Chambers. It seems to me, with all due deference to the ladies who are constantly beseeching this House for better legislation, in the interest of good morals, and that sort of thing, that the committee to which this Bill was referred, were better judges of the age that should be arbitrarily fixed for consent than they could possibly be. When this Bill was before the House and in the hands of the hon. gentleman who has charge of it now, I took the same stand that I am prepared to take to-day, that is, the age of consent having been fixed by the British Parliament at 16, after very full consideration, and having been fixed by this House at 16, after the consideration that was given to it, I took the stand, that, the matter having been then fixed, we should pause and think carefully before we further interfered with it. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) sympathized with that idea on that occasion.

Since then I have had no reason to change my mind; I am of the same opinion as I was then. I think the consideration given to it then, by the joint committee of both Houses, is entitled to the same consideration now as it was then, and if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who was then as strongly of the same opinion as I was, has had any reason to change his mind since then, he is bound to give the House the reasons therefor. If he has not changed his mind, then, he is bound to be in line with me in opposing this Bill, for the reasons he gave in 1895, when he spoke immediately after my hon. friend, the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who then opposed the Bill as Minister of Justice. Let me read to the House the opinion of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on that occasion, and I will ask his kind attention to his own words then. As I have already said, if he is of the same opinion now, that he was of then, he is bound to support my side of the question. If he is not of the same opinion now as he was then, some reasons must have arisen in his mind for the change, and, if so, he is bound to give his reasons. Let me read to the House what he then said; his argument was a most cogent one, and it eminently befits the present occasion. He said:

For my part, I concur in the reasons which the Minister of Justice—

That is, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) now.

—has given that this House should not assent to the Bill. When the hon. gentleman introduced his Bill some years ago, to make seduction a criminal offence, punishable by this Parliament, he had my sympathy and support. The question of the arbitrary age at which Parliament should make the offence a criminal one is one which aroused much discussion, and the matter was thoroughly threshed out at that time. The principle adopted at that time was that a child below a certain age ought not to be held, in the eyes of the law responsible, in the sense of giving consent, and Parliament fixed the age at sixteen years. We must fix some arbitrary age, although no one can say that it is absolutely correct; but the general consensus of opinion was that sixteen was about the age at which the line should be drawn. Nothing has occurred in the part of the Dominion from which I come to induce me to vote to alter the age. Government should not be tinkering with these laws every year. When we have a law which works fairly well, and the general consensus is that this law is working fairly well and requires no amendment, we would be taking a leap in the dark and moving in a wrong direction if we altered the age.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think the argument made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries eminently fits him at the present time, and if he would move, now, to fix the age, it would be taking a leap in the dark, as he has said. Are the conditions, at the present time, the same as they were then? If so, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ought to oppose this Bill; if not, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries must give his reasons for changing his base.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). As the last speaker said a moment ago, the age of consent was fixed in 1885 in England at 16, and in 1892 it was fixed at that age in this country. Now, I think, myself that it would be material and important, before we are asked to change this section of the Criminal Code, to point out in what respect the code, as it has stood, up to the present time, since 1892, has failed to meet the difficulties. We have a law which was adopted after very serious and very careful consideration.

Now, in order to change that law, it seems to me some better reasons should be given than that some persons who, by their character, are known to have little or no experience in matters of this sort, come and ask us for this change. If I may venture to make an observation personal to myself, I have had some experience in criminal courts, and it is not to my knowledge, that any occasion for this change has occurred. I have taken some trouble to inquire in the Department of Justice, if some representations have been made by those who administer the law: by the judges of the courts, by the Crown prosecutors, by the clerks of the peace, and so forth, and it is not to my knowledge, that any complaints have been made which would justify any interference on our part. It is all very well to endeavour to make people moral by Act of Parliament; that is clearly a very good object for all legislatures to have in view; but it does occur to me, that this thing of making good morals by Act of Parliament may be overdone a little bit. There is another principle which, I think, is of some importance for us to observe, and that is, that legislation should have the character of permanency, and that we should only change the legislation that has been adopted in this House, after careful consideration, when the occasion arises which justifies and calls for the change. It is very much more important to have permanency of legislation than to have those spasmodic attempts which are being made now and again, to give the people the impression, that in this country we require to be hedged around at every step by an Act of Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before this question is put to the vote—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Spoken.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have not spoken yet.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand, the hon. member (Mr. Charlton) has moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have never known objection being taken to the mover of the Bill being permitted to say a few words at this stage.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I merely wish to point out, that the rule is, that the hon.

gentleman can only speak by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Spoken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope the House will give its unanimous consent, if it is required.

Mr. BERGERON. I merely called the attention of the Chair to the rule.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The motion was put by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton), and the rule is, that he has not the right to speak again, unless it be by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. Go ahead with your speech, and make it short.

Mr. CHARLTON. I thank the House for its courtesy in this respect. I said nothing, when I moved the Bill, except to merely move it and mention the name of Mr. Craig as seconder. My hon. friend the Solicitor General takes the ground, that no attempt has been made, no successful attempt at least, to point out any necessity for the change that is asked for in the Criminal Code with regard to the age of consent. He inquires, whether the law has not already fulfilled its purpose, whether there is any necessity for the change whatever, and whether there is any indication of such a necessity. Of course, the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) conveyed the impression to the House—which is a proper one—that the law did have a purpose; and the purpose of that law was to protect innocent young women. The action of this House in that regard was taken very deliberately indeed. The question was discussed here year after year, for, I think, six or seven successive sessions, before the law went upon the statute-book. Now, my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) says, it is exceedingly desirable to have the characteristic of permanence in our legislation, and I am fully in accord with the hon. gentleman's opinion in that regard. It is not a commendable thing to be constantly tinkering legislation, and it should not be countenanced by this House; but that charge is not applicable in his case. The law has been upon the statute-book for thirteen years: it has had an ample trial. I believe, the law, as it exists to-day, fixing the age of consent at sixteen years, is generally acceptable, that the operation of the law has proved to be in the public interest, and, after thirteen years' experience of this law, there is a very large section of Canadian citizens who have arrived at the conclusion, that the extension of this limit to eighteen years would be in the interests of morality and in the general interests of the country.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton), if he has within his knowledge a single case which the law has failed to meet?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have not, Mr. Speaker, knowledge of a single case, in my recollection, that the law has failed to meet fully and perfectly to the extent of its provisions; but it does not reach far enough, and there are a great many cases that are not reached, for the reason that the law did not cover them. It is for that reason that the friends of this measure applied to this House by petition to have the age of consent extended two years, so that the law may reach further than it does now reach, and give more complete satisfaction than it has heretofore given, although that satisfaction has been perfect, so far as the law extends. It is asked, what evidence have we that there is any manifest public sentiment that requires this change in the law. I am not a lawyer; I have not the experience in courts that my hon. friend the Solicitor General has, and I presume I am not as good an authority as he is in regard to that matter, and I do not pretend to be. I will not set out my opinion to this House, in discussing this question, against the opinion of my hon. friend the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) or the opinion of the Solicitor General of this Dominion; but we have this fact: we have had petitions asking for this change in the law from numerous bodies of ladies, such as the Women's Christian Temperance Union, the Christian Endeavour Societies, the Epworth League Societies, the Council of Women; in fact, almost every female organization in Canada has taken an active interest in this matter, and has appeared before this House, by petition, asking for this change in the law. Then, we have the evidence on the part of the religious bodies: conventions of clergymen, the religious courts of this country, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, the General Conference of the Methodist Church, and other religious bodies, all manifesting their approval of this change in the law with reference to the age of consent. If we look the field over, we cannot fail to arrive at the conclusion, that there is an overwhelming pressure of public sentiment in favour of this Bill. That public sentiment may be ill-instructed, it may be asking for something that it is not prudent to grant; I do not say that, but I do say, that, in my opinion, we have no reason to decide that such is the case, because, as I have said, we are not dealing with an abstract question, we are not dealing with a matter in which we are moving in the dark, in total ignorance of the effect that this measure will have; but we are dealing with a measure which is merely a slight improvement or change, or modification, of the law already in force, and that has been in force for half a generation in this country. Therefore, I do not apprehend, that the objections raised by the Solicitor General of this Dominion have, in my opinion, as much force as to lead the House to the conclusion, that the evident desire of the religious and moral public of this country should not be granted. The Solicitor General has something to say about making people moral by Act of Parliament. Well, of course, that is an impossibility. I do not pretend, it is possible to make people moral by Act of Parliament; but it is possible, by law, to restrain immorality, to restrain vicious tendencies, and to do that, among other ways, by the punishment of those who transgress moral obligation. We punish thieves, we punish forgers, we punish murderers; we do not enact these laws primarily for the purpose of making these men moral by legislation, but we enact these laws for the purpose of punishing these men who transgress law, and for the purpose of holding them up as culprits, and as a deterrent in the case of others. It is exactly upon the same principle that the provisions contained in this Bill are pressed on this House.

My hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) says that the Bill, if passed, will lead to the evil of blackmailing. The same objection was urged against the Bill before, and the difficulty which the hon. gentleman imagines is just as likely to arise under a provision having the age of consent at 16 as having it at 18. That is one of the stock arguments used against this measure, that it places poor, innocent, defenceless men at the mercy of designing women who would play upon them and blackmail them. I do not think the practical operation of this legislation warrants any such conclusion. Certainly it has not warranted it in the past, and it will not, I believe, warrant such a conclusion against the operation of this Bill if it becomes law. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) informs us that the Bill involves serious consequences to certain classes. It certainly does. It is designed to involve serious consequences; if it did not do so, the measure would be useless. The Bill designs to punish the male who seduces an innocent girl under the age of 18 years. The object of that punishment is to have public virtue in the Dominion of Canada lifted higher, preserved, and guarded by legislative enactment. The hon. member for Pictou also refers to the examples of this class of legislation in the United States, and tells us in effect that these examples are worthy of very little consideration, because the legislation of those states is of a crude, sentimental, ill-considered character. Well, I hardly think the hon. gentleman is justified in making any such allegation. For instance, in the state of New York, with a population of over 6,000,000, a provision for the punishment of seduction has been a part of the Criminal Code for the last 60 or 70 years. The provision has had ample trial there, and has undergone various modifications, which in almost every instance have been in the direction of greater stringency, and so far from being crude, ill-considered and sentimental, that legislation has had the test of time and experience, and has been retained and made more effective, because experience has shown it to be in the public interest to protect morality by legislation of this character. My hon. friend from Pictou ventured the assertion that there was no evidence that a reform in this direction was asked for. I have shown that it is asked for. It was asked for last session by petitions from the bodies which I have referred to. The Premier of this Dominion was interviewed on several occasions by delegations in favour of it. The seconder of this Bill and myself attended on one of those occasions, and the arguments presented by the delegation were so forcible that the Premier pledged to them his support of the legislation embodied in this Bill. The hon. member for Pictou suggests that the matter should stand for inquiry. It has stood for inquiry. We have had for 13 years the law fixing the age limit of consent at 16 years. We have had this question under discussion year after year. As the seconder of this Bill says, this provision was incorporated with others on the last occasion on which it was presented to the House, and for reason it failed; but now it stands naked and alone by itself. The organizations asking for this legislation ask for it because of their experience of the law on the statute-book for the last 13 years, and their observation of that law leads them to believe that the extension of the age of consent for two years more is desirable. Therefore, they unanimously press for the passage of this Bill. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think the House would be justified in accepting the Bill as it is presented to them to-day. I, of course, can quite well understand that there may be cases where the provisions of this Bill will be taken advantage of, as my hon. friend from North Bruce fears; but these cases will be very rare, compared with the number of cases where the Bill will be a protection and a shield of defence for that class of society who have otherwise no defence, where it will serve the purpose of securing morality and public virtue and protecting young females from the wiles of seducers. I repeat that in proposing this extension of the age of consent we are not dealing with a measure that is purely theoretical, but are governed by experience. We have all the experience necessary to enable us to found a fair conclusion as to what the probable results of the extension of the provision that has been in force for 13 years will be. For these reasons I feel it a public duty to press upon the House the acceptance of this measure.

Mr. A. H. MOORE (Stanstead). Mr. Speaker, what I am going to say will, I think, please the hon. gentleman who has last spoken on this question, in two particulars. One is that it is going to be very short, and he is in favour of short speeches. Another is that I am in favour of the Bill which he has proposed, for the reason that I believe the best moral and religious teachers of this country and the best moral and religious institutions of this country are in favour of it; and, with such approval as that, I can do no other than vote for the Bill.

Mr. D. TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), endeavouring to answer the point that was so well taken by the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), as to the necessity for a change, made a statement which was so wide of the mark as to be no answer at all. It is true, he said certain people had petitioned for and advocated this measure, such as ladies' societies, and so forth. In my opinion, that is no reason unless the hon. gentleman goes further; and we should not interfere lightly with a matter so serious as the Criminal Code, particularly a matter of so serious a nature as the legislation he proposes. The hon. gentleman admitted frankly that the Solicitor General and the hon. member for Pictou were both in a much better position, from their experience and their practical knowledge of this question, than he was to judge whether any cases had been demonstrated which showed any necessity for raising the age of consent. That is the whole question. There is no evidence to show that any circumstances exist which justify him in asking us to make a crime what is not now a crime. The hon. gentleman justified this legislation on the ground that it would punish crime, and he brought in as illustrations thieves, robbers, burglars, and so on. But he is asking us to make that a crime which is not one now, and therefore clearly begging the question. Nobody objects to criminals being punished, but the whole question is, shall we make that a crime which is not one now. This is a most serious proposition. Whatever may be the opinion of people who claim to be more pious or religious or to have higher moral principles than myself, I have the courage of my convictions, and will not hesitate to express them, though gatherings of ladies, for whom I have the greatest possible respect—I will go further and say that, in the strictest moral sense, for whom I have the greatest possible affection any man can have—agitate in this matter without knowing at all the consequence to which their agitation may lead. We want something more than gatherings of ladies and clergymen, presided over by my hon. friend or anybody else, to convince us that such legislation would not be mischievous. The hon. gentleman asks us to make that a crime which is not one now, and a crime which will subject the one who commits it to a very severe penalty. He admits himself that a man holding the responsible position of Solicitor General is a better judge than he whether there is any necessity for such a law, whether any cases have arisen which would justify its adoption. I agree with the hon.

Mr. MOORE.

Solicitor General and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). My hon. friend has totally failed to convince me, and his argument was especially weak in his reply to the Solicitor General, whose opinion is entitled to greatest respect as an authoritative expression on law matters, so far as the Government is concerned, especially when that opinion comes from a gentleman of the undoubted ability of the present incumbent of the office.

I object to this measure on another ground, and that is, that it has been thoroughly discussed several times already, and the opinion of Parliament had upon it. I object to it also on behalf of the women of this country. In Great Britain they are satisfied with the age limit of sixteen years, and I am confident the sun does not shine upon any country whose women are more virtuous and more capable of taking care of their virtue than the women of Canada. They do not need the assistance of this proposed legislation. I know something of the opinion of many good women in this country, and I am confident that if you were to explain to them what this law means, so that they would understand it in the way we do, they would resent any proposal to give it a place in our statutes. If a woman who has reached sixteen years of age is not capable of taking care of her own virtue, she ought to suffer the consequences, because she has arrived at an age when she knows what consent means. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Craig) says there is a lot of humbugging in what I am saying, but I think that if he discussed the matter with any of his friends among the ladies, he will find that they are of my opinion. This is not a matter to be laughed at or trifled with, and I am very much mistaken indeed if after a proper discussion of it with ladies as audience, they would not, on understanding what the passing of this law means, express themselves as opposed to it. It is, in fact, a reflection on them. It is taking for granted that they are not as capable, after they have passed the age of sixteen, of taking care of themselves as the women of Great Britain are.

The hon. gentleman relies altogether on petitions sent in favour of this measure. Well, I have had petitions sent to me from my own riding—who prepared them I do not know. I have had letters from young ladies who wrote as glibly about the matter as I could, asking me to support these petitions, without seriously considering what it was exactly they were asking. They have simply got some ideas about it from a certain number of people gathered together, but I am confident that not one of these people in these gatherings would have ventured to assert that in her neighbourhood she knew of any young girl, between sixteen and eighteen years of age, who had been ruined for want of any such law. They simply go on the pure assumption that this law will do good, though no evil is shown to exist. I object to legislation merely on theory. There must be a necessity for it or otherwise we will make useless laws and bring our legislation into contempt. The first proposition which the hon. gentleman ought to have established is that girls between sixteen and eighteen years of age are not old enough to understand what is meant by consent or non-consent. That is where the hon. gentleman's difficulty is. We have the laws of England, we have the united wisdom of this House and of a large, capable and painstaking committee chosen from among the representatives of the country without respect to party, who, day after day, and week after week, went over all the questions of this measure, and agreed upon the law as it stands to-day, and it was so codified in our criminal laws only a few years ago. If the man and the woman are both willing, there is no offence under the law. But my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) says that he wants to make it a crime if the woman is under 18 years of age. And why? Because he thinks that girls, before they reach the age of 18, are not old enough to distinguish between right and wrong. I go with him to this extent, that it was wise to change the law from what it used to be when the age of consent was fixed at 14 years. I supported amending the law so as to make it 16 years. The hon. gentleman admits that that has served its purpose. He fails to show that there is a case where anybody has suffered in justice because the law has not been changed as he now proposes. I do not wish to be tedious or to detain the House, though I feel strongly about this making of a new crime. I agree with my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), that this change will have the effect of establishing a blackmailing system. In those states of the Union where such laws have been passed, they are found to be the weapons of blackmailers. A second objection is that you are tempting women to make use of their virtue to blackmail men—actually putting a premium upon it in that way. These are serious grounds of objection to the Bill. It is not a pleasant thing for me, as I am sure it is not pleasant for any hon. member, to express myself as strongly and as honestly as one ought to do on so important a question, when I know that many estimable people, including ladies, and societies composed of the best people in my own riding, have sent petitions in favour of this Bill. One does not like to rise and take the chance of being misunderstood. But there is a question of duty involved. Let us, like men, legislate upon principle. Let us hesitate before we declare that to be a crime which has not heretofore been a crime. Let us be certain, first, that this law is necessary, second, that it will do good, and third, that there is some ground of principle upon which to proceed, and not merely petitions of people who may or may not be better able to judge than we are ourselves. However much I may respect the ladies—and I am sure I respect them as much as any man does—my vote shall be given according to my convictions, after having considered as fully as I can the question we have before us, in the light of the experience of those who have gone before and have carefully considered the whole matter.

Mr. McNEILL. With the indulgence of the House, I would like to say a word in explanation. My hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) said, when I spoke of the age of consent being raised to 18 as being "likely to lead to cases of blackmail, more than if the age of consent was left at 16," that I was entirely mistaken. I think I should explain what I meant. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there are comparatively few girls of the age of 16 who could be described as dissolute girls—comparatively few, even in the cities. But I think that if we come to our cities, you will find, unfortunately, that there are a considerable number of the age of 18 who can be so described. If my hon. friend had a son, a mere boy, who was brought up in the country and who came down to the city for the first time and fell into the hands of one of these designing young women, the hon. gentleman would not like, simply because his son was unable to prove the girl to be dissolute, that he should be committed for two years to prison for having been seduced by that young woman. That is what I mean.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I think that the earnest appeal made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is worthy of consideration. But I wish to call attention first to the remarks made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. He has proved the case for raising the age of consent to 18 years. He shows that up to the age of 16, there are few girls who are dissolute. He will hardly deny that this is due in a large measure to the operation of the existing law. Let that law be extended as is here proposed and good results will follow. I know that this is a question on which we have to speak with bated breath; but the purity of home is a little too sacred for men not to express their opinion fairly. I want to say that in this country it will be found that up to the age of 18, girls are not taught—whether they ought to be or ought not to be—they are not so fully instructed in these matters as hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think. I do not speak of the city—I know nothing about that. All I know is that if you take an innocent rural population, I venture to make the statement that up to the time they marry, many of these young women have very little knowledge of the world. To these women this law will be a protection. I am not afraid of very many young women in the country blackmailing the young men. Where you find a case of that kind, you will find that it is because the girl has inherited very bad blood from her parents, and the majority of young women in this country are not of that kind.

I think there is not very much reason that we should protect the young men for fear that they are going to be blackmailed. If the hon. gentleman wants statistics he will find them in abundance to prove that in 99 cases out of 100, where wrong has been committed, the man has been to blame and not the woman. I refrain from talking about the city; but this is the experience, as given by the best statistics that can be obtained, concerning the rural population of this or any other country. An hon. gentleman near me says that that is worth nothing. All statistics are worth something. Those who carefully note individual cases in rural places, as has been done, agree that the facts are as I have stated them. Believing that in the immense majority of cases the blame of the wrong attaches to the man much more than to the woman, I am going to vote for this Bill. I believe that no harm will come of it. We shall have very few of these vagrant young men who are going to be blackmailed. The experience of every man in this House and out of it is that if he conducts himself properly, there are very few chances of his being blackmailed. A man has only to act right and there is no chance of a girl of eighteen looking around for a chance to blackmail him. It is in the lack of a like spirit that leads young men to engage in the like of that. I admit that there may be cases of that kind; but are we going to cease to legislate because exceptions of that kind exist? I think not. We raised the age from 14 to 16, and I think it was a good move. There is nothing in the proposition to change the criminal law in this respect, at which we should stand aghast, as the hon. member said. With progress and experience we must continually change the laws, and if the experience we have from raising the age of consent from 14 to 16 has been good, and there is no doubt about it, why not raise the age two years higher? The argument of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat proves that we have very few violations, so far as that is concerned. It will be discovered, I think, that the addition of two years will do one thing and prevent another. It will, at least, make the young men a little more careful; assuming, as I do, that men are more to blame in this world than women, they will be a little more careful when they know that there is criminal legislation on the statute-book.

Mr. McNEILL. Why not raise it a few years more?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Because at the age of 18 the young woman has so matured, has thought about these things, as she comes in contact with others, that she is better able to judge than she is at the age of 16. A young girl of 16 who has scarcely gone away from her mother's apron-strings, needs to be protected. There are many who need more protection at 17 than some do at 16; but if you take the age of 18, I think you will strike just about a right average. I am not afraid, in the second place, that there is going to be blackmail practised by these young women. I have had a fair experience in law, and I call to mind only one instance where a young man was blackmailed, and that was at the instance of a woman who was 24 or 25. Blackmailing is not so extensive as hon. gentlemen think. In the United States, if we are to believe the public press, there are women who do make a business of blackmailing. I know that, but I venture to make the statement that very few cases can be cited where any young woman under 18—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does not the hon. gentleman see that that argument is altogether against him? The hon. gentleman says that there is no blackmailing now. The argument is that if you increase the age you are in danger of having blackmail introduced.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I did not, it appears, make myself plain. I said that up to 18 there is no such thing as blackmail thought of among young women.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not now.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). But I do know that statistics prove that it is between 16 and 18 that young women in this country are chiefly led astray; therefore, I want to put some little preventive in the way to assist these young women as against the young men. Everybody knows, for we have all been young, that between the age of 16 and 18, when a young woman is in the flush of youth and beauty, and she meets with a young man, she needs protection, from the very fact that the force of body and of intellect of the young man is greater than that of the young woman, and among young men matters of this kind are more discussed than among young women.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." I am serious but I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not serious. I venture to say that the homes of this country demand a little more seriousness in the discussion of this question. I say that in the interest of the mass of the people of this country, and in the interest of our young women, I am going to sustain the motion that this Bill be read the third time.

Mr. JOHN H. BELL (East Prince). At the risk of wearying the House I will venture to express briefly a reason for the vote I propose to give. Let me read section 181 of the Act as amended:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable to two years' imprisonment, who seduces and has illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, of or above the age of fourteen years and under the age of eighteen years.

Now, suppose a seduction has actually taken place. Suppose by wiles and promises and false pretenses, the young girl under 18 has been defrauded of her virtue. Suppose the matter clearly proved—the facts beyond doubt. Is there any hon. member of this House but would say that if this be not a crime it ought to be made so by the law. I appeal to the sense of justice—to the common conscience of us all. There is—there can be—but one answer. Then if in our judgment it should be considered a crime what prevents us from declaring it so by the statute?

There is one objection raised, and only one of any weight. It is that the criminal feature of the Act will be taken advantage of for purposes of blackmail. There is little danger of this. Whatever danger there is is provided against by section 684 of the Criminal Code:

(Sec. 181.) Shall be convicted upon the evidence of one witness unless such witness is corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused.

Under this provision the evidence of the girl alone would not be sufficient to convict the man of a crime. She might swear till she was black in the face. Her evidence must be corroborated in some material particular. Hence a threat of criminal proceedings from a girl of unchaste character would be ineffectual for the purpose of extorting money. Hence there is no danger of blackmail. Hence the main objection fails. But now, suppose there were a real danger. That may be a reason for providing against it. It certainly is no reason for refusing to enact the law.

I have every respect for the opinion of the Solicitor General and for that of the ex-Minister of Justice. I give due weight to the fact that the age of sixteen instead of eighteen is fixed by the English statutes.

At the same time this is a matter on which every man of observation and sense and possessing a sentiment of justice, can think and act for himself—without regard to the opinion of others, and without respect to precedent.

Personally, I am not a protectionist, but there is, nevertheless a species of protection of which I am always in favour—the protection so far as law can effectuate it—of innocence and virtue—of the purity of our homes.

The House divided on the motion of Mr. Charlton that the Bill be now read the third time:

Motion agreed to.

DRAINAGE ACROSS RAILWAY LANDS.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Casey: That the Order of the House for Committee of Whole on Bill (No. 24) an Act concerning drainage on and over the property of railway companies, be discharged, and that the Bill be referred to a special committee composed of Messrs. Bain, Campbell, Casey, Cowan, Chauvin, Fortin, McGregor, Monk and Tolmie, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report from time to time by Bill or otherwise, and with leave to employ a shorthand writer if the committee resolve that it is necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I think the understanding was, the other evening, that a committee would be suggested, to whom this Bill might be referred, and if it is in order, I would suggest the names for that committee by moving in amendment to the motion :

That all the words after "discharged" be struck out and that the following be substituted in lieu thereof :—"And that the Bill be referred to a special committee composed of Messrs. Casey, Haggart, Tisdale, Russell and Bourassa, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report from time to time by Bill or otherwise, and with leave to employ a shorthand writer if the committee resolve that it is necessary."

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). When I proposed this motion the other night, I was following the practice we adopted last year. This Bill, being practically but a rough draft of the measure, I considered that the House, in passing it to its second reading, had merely adopted the principle that a Bill should be passed for the purpose of regulating this question of drainage across railways. The reference to the committee was for the purpose of going over this rough draft and elaborating the measure so as to accomplish that purpose without doing any injury to the interests of the railway companies or the public. I chose the same committee that had been chosen last year, with the consent of the Government, and did not expect that there would be any opposition to that choice of the personnel of the committee. However, on this occasion, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has seen fit to intervene and take the selection of the personnel into his own hands. Of course, my responsibility for the Bill largely vanishes on account of this action of the hon. Minister of Railways, and the responsibility of the Government, to a large extent, commences. The House has declared in favour of the principle that there should be a railway drainage Bill, and the hon. Minister of Railways has selected a committee to perfect that Bill. I am glad that, at last, the Government has taken a share of the responsibility for this measure. I do not criticise the names submitted by that hon. gentleman. I take it for granted that any hon. gentleman who accepts a position on that committee will, in accordance with parliamentary precedent and practice, not declare himself against the principle of the Bill after the House has already affirmed it, but will give his best efforts and attention to perfecting a Bill for this purpose which the House has ordered to be perfected. Taking this view of the case, I submit, of necessity, to the amendment offered by the hon. Minister of Railways, and will not at all object to the passing of the amendment he proposes. I hope, after having gone thus far, the hon. Minister will see that it is his duty, as it is his duty, to look earnestly into this matter, to give some attention to the Bill, that he will recognize the fact that such a Bill is absolutely demanded by a very large portion of the country, and by a large number of his supporters, and that we will, this session, at last, have legislation on this subject, which, though it may not be exactly in the present shape of the Bill, will, at all events, be effective for the purpose desired.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). Mr. Speaker, I just want to call the attention of this committee, if it is named, to a case that has very recently been decided, and which seems to throw a great deal of new light upon this question of the responsibility of railways to what may be called municipal legislation. The other day the Privy Council, in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company against the corporation of the parish of Notre-Dame de Bonsecours, decided that Dominion railways were liable to municipal law in so far as keeping their ditches and drains in repair is concerned. That goes a very long way in relieving the difficulty that is met by the Bill of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), but, of course, it does not go far enough. It does not go so far as to meet the case that I suggested when this Bill was before the House a few days ago. That was a case where there is a desire on the part of land-owners to drain a particular area, where they had put the law in motion for improving lands by draining it, and where, in order to get the water to an outlet they come to a Dominion railway. So far as I know, it has never been decided that there is any power to compel a railway company, when drainage work has commenced in that way, to put a drain through their road, or to allow it to be put through. The practice has obtained of carrying that water along the line of railway and outside the railway property so far as might be necessary to obtain a proper outlet. That seems to me to be the only point that it is necessary to consider in a matter of this kind. The case which I have given to the House is reported in the London "Times" of March 27th last, and if I have read that case correctly, it brings Dominion railways under the jurisdiction and subject to the municipal law as to keeping their drains in a proper state of repair. If that be the correct version a good deal of the difficulty is removed.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think there is any question but what the Railway Committee of the Privy Council can compel a railway company to allow the drains to go under the line.

Mr. CASEY. Of course; that is not what I have reference to at all.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Britton) said, there was no power that could compel a railway company to allow a drain of that kind, and I was surprised at that.

Mr. BRITTON. Perhaps I did not make myself plain. I said, there were two difficulties with reference to that, and I say.

there is a doubt as to whether the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has jurisdiction where it would interfere with the structural condition of the road.

Mr. TISDALE. The power of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is not limited at all.

Mr. BRITTON. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) will look at the Act, he will see, there is a doubt about that. The great difficulty is as to getting cases of this kind before the Privy Council. It is not the landowner, but the engineer, who has the obligation put upon him by statute, and he is not obliged to go before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and there are no funds at his disposal to enable him to do it.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I need hardly say, that I am in favour of the principle of this Bill, because I have supported it, or a similar Bill, on several previous occasions. I rise to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) to the fact, that the personnel of this committee is not what he should desire, if he intended the Bill to become law.

Mr. IVES. Hear, hear.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the levity of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives) all about?

Mr. IVES. I was laughing at the wisdom and sagacity of the hon. member (Mr. Sproule) in coming to that conclusion.

Mr. SPROULE. When I give my reasons for coming to that conclusion, perhaps the sapient remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Ives) may be directed against another source than myself. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact, that, under the rule, in selecting a committee, no members of the House who express themselves as opposed to the principle of a Bill, should be put on a committee to consider it. Rule 78 of this House says:

No member who declares or decides against the principle or substance of a Bill, resolution, or matter to be committed, can be nominated of such committee.

Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives) laugh now. It may be, that it would sound commonplace to him, coming from my tongue; but, if he respects the authority under which the business of this House is conducted, he will not laugh, as he has done. I call attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who is named on the committee, is opposed to the principle of the Bill, and, if I am correct in my assumption, there is more than he on the committee who is in the same plight. I do not think it right, that such a committee should be selected to consider this Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not dispute the correctness of the rule laid down by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), but I may remind him, that the striking of this committee is largely a matter of compromise. There was objection to have the Bill referred to a special committee. I would not say, there was a unanimous consensus of opinion against it—but a large consensus of the opinion of the members was, that the Bill should go to the Railway Committee. I do not say, that a majority of the House was in favour of that proposition, but a certain number of hon. gentlemen have still very grave doubts as to whether or not that might be the best committee to send it to. However, my hon. friend (Mr. Casey) insisted on a special committee, and I thought, on this occasion, we might depart from the rigidity of the rule somewhat and appoint a committee, which I look upon as a compromise committee, to discuss the principle of the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) is perfectly correct. I have privately urged the objection he has taken, but it was overruled, and, unless you, Mr. Speaker, rule that these gentlemen—I suppose I may name them—Mr. Haggart and Col. Tisdale, have not expressed themselves against the principle of the Bill, I do not see how they can go on the committee. If you rule to the contrary, of course, I must abide by your ruling. I am glad, however, that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has brought the point to your notice.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The objection raised by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is worthy of consideration. If the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) declares, that he is against the principle of the Bill—

Mr. CASEY. He and Mr. Haggart have both so declared.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If he does, he should not sit on the committee.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

COLUMBIA AND WESTERN RAILWAY

Mr. JOHN COSTIGAN (Victoria, N.B.) moved third reading of Bill (No. 26) respecting the Columbia and Western Railway Company.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). I beg to move, seconded by Mr. Bostock:

That Bill (No. 26) an Act respecting the Columbia and Western Railway Company, be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of making the following amendment:—"That all the words after the word 'Midway' in the fourteenth line of section 1 be struck out."

In support of this amendment, I wish to say that the proposition is to affirm the right and duty of this House to take cognizance of the necessity of the bonding privileges asked by any railway company before those privileges are granted. That principle was acknowledged with reference to this Bill in the Railway Committee by the company interested, who furnished to the committee evidence which the committee accepted as to the cost of a certain portion of the road for which bonding privileges are asked, that is to say, the main part of the road from Robson to Midway. The company ask for the extraordinary bonding privilege of $35,000 a mile. The committee having received evidence that the road would cost this amount plus the amount of the bonus to be received from British Columbia, unanimously agreed to the granting of this bonding privilege; but when the company was asked for evidence as to the necessity for bonding the branches contemplated under this Bill, they were not prepared to give any information whatever; either as to the location of the branches, their length or their cost. Therefore, in order to thoroughly affirm the principle, which was already conceded, it was felt to be necessary to move the amendment which I have now moved, the effect of which is to require the company to come before Parliament and the Railway Committee of Parliament and show cause why they should be granted bonding powers regarding the branches before those bonding powers are granted.

The reason why this stand is taken is that it is felt and known that in the excessive bonding of railways lies the greatest impediment to fair and reasonable railway rates. We have knowledge of this fact from experience in the North-west Territories. We have there a road called the Calgary and Edmonton Railway, which, according to the returns, is said to have cost $3,717,882, upon which bonds have been issued to the amount of $5,458,940, bearing 6 per cent interest. In other words, the people who furnish the traffic of that road are required to pay 6 per cent interest on $1,741,058, for which neither they nor the country, nor any part of the country, have received any value whatever. The total earnings of the road during the past year have been $327,536, and the interest on the part of the bonded debt for which no value is received, amounts to $104,464, or about one-third of the total earnings of the road. Roughly speaking, the rates required to pay the company's fixed charges are one-third higher than they would be if the road was bonded at its actual cost. What is true in regard to the Calgary and Edmonton Railway is true in regard to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway. That road cost $2,539,600, and it is bonded for $3,809,140, an excess of $1,269,540 over the cost. These bonds bear interest at 5 per cent and 6 per cent. The earnings of the road during 1898 were $79,000. At 6 per cent the interest on excess of bonds over cost amounts to $76,172, or within a fraction of as much as the total earnings of the road.

Mr. OLIVER.

In the face of these facts, we believe it is necessary to bring to the attention of the House, in connection with new railway projects in regard to which large bonding powers are asked, the effect of these bonding powers upon the people of the country. The idea that the amount of the bonds which a company issues is only a matter which concerns the company and the bondholders is, I think, exploded. It is the people who furnish the traffic for the road who are the interested parties. They are the people who furnish the money which pays the interest on those bonds. It is their section of country which is discredited if that interest is not paid. We are quite willing to agree that interest should be paid on bonds to the amount of the cost of any railroad; but it is a well-known fact that nowadays roads are bonded, not according to their cost, but according to their present or prospective earning power. This is where we consider the public interest requires to be protected. We are prepared to pay interest on the cost of the road, but we are not prepared to pay interest on the bonded indebtedness fixed according to the possible earnings of the road, or, in other words, on the basis of all the traffic will bear. It is because we wish to affirm that principle that we move this amendment to-night.

In regard to the particular road in question, it may be said that it is an exceptional case. It is an exceptional case in support of our argument. It is a case in which an important district of country is expected to be served by other railroads in the future; and it is with a view to preventing the overloading of the road now being built with bonded indebtedness, thereby bringing about a concentration of interest against the introduction of competing lines, that the great and imperative necessity of guarding against the overbonding of this particular road exists. As to competition in this part of the country, it may be held that last session this House affirmed that there should be no competition in the Kettle River country, and that it was contrary to the principle held by the House that railroads should be permitted to cross the boundary line into southern British Columbia; but I call the attention of the House to the fact that a few days ago we allowed a railway charter to pass its third reading, which permitted of the construction of a piece of road from the Crow's Nest Pass line to the United States boundary. I take it for granted, therefore, that that position of the House has been abandoned and that we are in full view of railway competition in that country, provided we use care in granting railway legislation at present.

Mr. JOHN ROSS ROBERTSON (East Toronto). I heartily concur in the remarks made by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in connection with the bonding of this Columbia and Western Railway. I think he has put the case as clearly as it is possible to put it and has given the very best arguments why his resolution to postpone consideration of this Bill should be carried. When the question of bonding this Columbia and Western Railway was before the Railway Committee last week, I had my doubts as to the sufficiency of the affidavit made by Mr. Peterson, the Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I know that Judge Clark, the counsel for the Canadian Pacific Railway, attached great importance to that affidavit, but being a layman I did not like to cross swords with him on that point. I have, however, made it my business to consult people who are not laymen, and they have confirmed me in my belief that the affidavit made by Mr. Peterson was nothing more or less than a mere guess. The maker of that affidavit takes no chances whatever, and he believes that the road can be built for $35,000 per mile. Supposing that the road only cost $15,000 or $20,000 per mile, I would like Judge Clark to tell me whether Mr. Peterson could be prosecuted for perjury on account of the difference between his estimate and the actual cost of the road? This is an important matter. This House should not fix the bonding power in accordance with either the sham affidavit of any Canadian Pacific Railway official or the word of mouth declaration of any officer of the Department of Railways. I think that the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) should obtain a detailed statement from his chief engineer. Then he could fix the bonding power according to that statement, and if experience proved that the chief engineer overestimated the cost of the work, this House would be able to hold the Minister to a close account.

In fixing the bonding power, we are adjusting the rate of taxation that will have to be paid by the people who use this road. This House has already declared that no railway whatever will be allowed to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway in this district, and if this House now declares that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be allowed to overbond this road, the people of southern British Columbia will be impaled upon both horns of the dilemma. The Canadian Pacific Railway will come down here, headed by Sir Wm. Van Horne and Mr. Shaughnessy and other officials, and will use their influence with the Government to keep out all competition, and I have no doubt they will succeed, and then they will bond the road so as to increase the fixed charges and thus keep up the rates, no matter how many commissioners the Government may appoint.

Just a word as to a remark that fell from my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). I understood him to say that the people of Ontario were paying $12,000 per mile for a railway in their mining region and were very glad to get it. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it has not been my good fortune to meet many people in Ontario who are glad to get a railway at that price. On the contrary, I have heard the action of the Ontario Government in proposing an exorbitant grant to Mackenzie & Mann, condemned in the strongest terms, and the Ontario Opposition is just as loudly and generally condemned because they allowed that grant to go through without protest. I know that this is beside the question. I have no objection to the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) speaking for the people he represents. They are, however, not the only people in Ontario, and it is my duty to speak for the people who are not quite so well content with every scheme which plays ducks and drakes with the public revenues for the benefit of railway promoters and charter mongers.

Before I sit down I would like to get some more distinct assurance from the hon. Minister of Railways, who, I regret, is not in his place, as regards protecting the rights of the people of Grand Forks. His promise, the other day, of a general law is all right, as far as it goes, and his action on behalf of the people of this district was all right with regard to the Kettle River Valley Railway, but his words and actions availed nothing when the votes came to be counted. I think that this high court of Parliament should not be deaf to the appeals of these people of Grand Forks, and not only of Grand Forks but other parts of this immense line of railway. It is very hard indeed that these people should have gone in and built a thriving town before the Canadian Pacific Railway showed its nose in this district to find this great railway attempting first to bulldoze and then to ruin a handful of struggling men. So far as I have been able to learn, the Canadian Pacific Railway has disgraced itself in British Columbia in its attempt to grab the property of its victims. If the history of the town site operations of that railway could be written, as I presume it will be some day, this country will have reason to blush that so great a railway should stoop to the highway robbery of people who own land in genuine town sites and of people who bought lots in the fake town sites started under the auspices of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is high time that this Parliament showed Vice-President Shaughnessy that he will have to drop his game of bleeding Canadians in British Columbia of half their land under pain of being sidetracked by a road which is being built with the country's money. I would like to have some final assurance from some member of the Government—the First Minister perhaps—that the rights of these people of Grand Forks will be safeguarded before I vote for this Bill.

Mr. HEWITT BOSTOCK (Yale and Cariboo). In support of this motion, let me say that I think there are points we have to consider, which I do not think were properly considered when this Bill was before the Railway Committee. I admit that we had a full discussion of this measure before that committee, but I find that a question which very materially affects this Bill was not settled—at least not to my satisfaction. Under this Bill we are granting the company the privilege of bonding this road for $35,000 a mile, and under its provincial charter it has the privilege of bonding it for $25,000. I am not satisfied in my own mind as to whether the effect of this Bill will not result in allowing this company to bond its road for $60,000, if it so wishes. I do not see anything in this measure that restricts or affects in any way the privilege of the company under its provincial charter, and this is a very serious matter in view of the rates that may be charged, and the fact that if any question concerning these rates ever comes up before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, the Council will have to take into consideration the amount of bonds issued and the interest that has to be paid on those bonds.

Therefore, I think that this question is one that ought to be decided before this Bill is proceeded with. It would be much better to have it referred back to the committee for the purpose of considering that point. Another question arises in regard to the matter of freight rates. I find that under the Railway Act, clause 227, it is provided that no tolls shall be levied by any railway company without first obtaining the permission of the Governor in Council. I find that a schedule of tolls has been issued for that part of the line that has already been constructed. This runs from Rossland and to Trail and from Trail to Robson. The tariff for the part already constructed was issued on the 28th June, 1898, and went into force on the 1st July following. So far as I can learn, that tariff has never been approved by the Minister of Railways and Canals or by Order in Council, which, as I understand, is necessary under the Railway Act. This, I think, very seriously affects that question, and ought to be taken into consideration. The public have a right to know that the clauses of the Railway Act are properly carried out, and that rates charged by railways are such as are approved by Order in Council and published in the "Canada Gazette," in accordance with the Railway Act. The effect, as I understand it, is that the company have fixed their freight rates at very much higher rates than would, in all probability, have been passed by the Railway Committee if the matter was properly put before them. I presume that it is on that account that they have not thought it worth while to submit their rates to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for their approval before putting them into effect. Of course, I understand that in all probability a railway company can set at defiance this House and the Railway Act, because where they are dealing with the general public, they can compel the people either to pay their rates in advance or to pay them before they get delivery of their goods. Consequently, every railway company practically has the public at their mercy and can set at defiance this clause 227 of the Railway Act. It is for that reason also that I wish to draw the attention of the House to this matter and to ask hon. members to take it into consideration. Inasmuch as we hope to see this question of freight rates dealt with in a proper way in the interest of the public, we should give these two points due weight before we proceed further with this Bill.

Mr. LEIGHTON McCARTHY (North Simcoe). I rise for the purpose of making plain the position I occupy on this Bill, and which I occupied in the Railway Committee. The issue involved is one of a very minute nature. It is an application really to increase the bonding powers of this railway. It is operated by virtue of a statute of British Columbia by which the company obtained its charter and by which it gets power to bond to the extent of $25,000 per mile and an additional right to bond to the extent of $25,000 per mile in regard to its land grant. With the land grant we are not concerned, if we are to take what the counsel of the railway said in the Railway Committee. He said that they intended to exercise an option they had and accept $4,000 per mile by way of subsidy from the British Columbia Government, instead of a land grant. Therefore, we are dealing with this railway which has the authority to bond to the extent of $25,000 a mile, and which is subsidized to the extent of $4,000 a mile. They come to the Railway Committee and ask that that bonding privilege be increased to $35,000 per mile. The information upon which that is granted seemed to me to be sufficient. It is only by reason of the insufficiency of the balance of the information that I take the stand I propose to take on this question. The chief engineer of railways told the committee that $35,000 per mile for the main line was fair. With that, therefore, we need have no quarrel. But they go on and ask that they be given power to bond branches to a similar extent—branches regrading which we asked information and got none. I am within the judgment of every member of that committee when I say that we had not one tittle of evidence as to how many branches they were to build or the mileage of these branches. I ventured to ask the question of Judge Clark, and got answer only of the mileage of the main line. When I asked the estimate of the number of branches and their length, we were told: We can only build twenty miles. I venture to say that that was not a correct answer to give to the Railway Committee; it is incorrect if I read correctly the statute of British Columbia. I quote from 59 Vic., chap. 54, sec. 16, of those statutes :

And the company may build branches from each, all or any such section or sections, to any mine or mines situate not more than twenty miles from such main line in a direct line.

That is, if the line is twenty miles in a direct line from the railway, they can build a branch to it. But no railway, as a rule, builds straight—they take a circuitous route. It might be that, in order to reach a mine twenty miles away, they would build fifty miles of railway. If they did so they would be entitled, under this proposed Bill, to bond that branch for $35,000 a mile. Suppose that line goes through valleys and plain country, they could build it for $8,000 to $10,000 a mile, and they could bond it for $35,000 a mile. And I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, and tell this House frankly the reason I took the stand that I did in the Railway Committee. Judge Clark was asked to explain this. He said: It is going to cost more than $35,000 a mile to build the main line, and we are going "to let ourselves out" on the branches. Well, it seems to me that the Railway Committee of this House had a right to know to what extent they were letting themselves out. What that means, I leave every hon. member to construe for himself. It seems to me that it can only mean that by building these branches—how many we do not know—they might so increase the indebtedness of that railway that when they come for approval of their freight rates they will be enabled to ask, by reason of the large indebtedness on their branches, to have the freight rates on a much higher scale than if we exercised the control we are entitled by the statute to exercise. We are giving them carte blanche to build as many branches as they like and to bond the branches for $35,000 a mile, irrespective of what it cost to build them. If that is right, I misunderstand what the duties of this Parliament and of the Railway Committee are. If we had had Mr. Peterson's affidavit or Mr. Schreiber's estimate of the cost, we should have something to go upon. But we are not given that, we are not given one tittle of evidence, and all Judge Clark can say is that he did not intend to evade the question. It seems to me clear that we should refer this question back to the committee for the purpose of obtaining that information. If it is obtained, and if it is satisfactory, the House will be in a position to grant the rights. The branches cannot be built till the main line is built. I assume, and they will then have an opportunity of locating the branches, and of telling us what is likely to be the cost, by knowledge of the country through which they have to run. Parliament always treated the Canadian Pacific Railway with fairness, perhaps with more than fairness.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). With generosity.

Mr. McCARTHY. In that case they have nothing to fear from this Parliament. But they have an idea, if we are to take Judge Clark's own words for it, that by virtue of these branches which we have given them power to bond as soon as they are built, they are going to let themselves out, and we may be sure that they will not "let themselves in" in that respect. Why should Parliament grant to them that which we have a right to control, that which will give them no trouble to come back and ask for, if it is found, owing to the nature of the country, that it will cost more to build the road than they now anticipate? I would not be so strong upon the point if it were not that by virtue of this very statute that I have read, they have not a right to bond their branches to the extent of $25,000 per mile. There is no evidence before this House, there was no evidence before the committee, that it would cost more than $25,000 to build any one of these branches, when they do build them; nor was there any evidence, beyond a general statement as to the nature of the country through which these branches would likely be built. That being so, it remains for us to consider whether the Bill in its present form should be adopted, or whether it should be referred back to the committee for the purpose of striking out that portion giving them the power, which, I submit to the House, they should not have until they furnish the information we have asked for, and which would entitle them to that which they are now about to obtain. But we are asked: Why throttle an enterprise, or endeavour to stop a railway in developing this new country? Far be it from me to endeavour to stop its development. We look to the Canadian Pacific Railway to develop that country. They have been spoon-fed by the country, not unduly, but their stock stands at par. That being so, we have a right to criticise, and to ask that now they get no more than that which they are strictly entitled to. Then, as to the freight rates and stations, I did not intend to refer to them. But there is a certain degree of disquiet in that country which the committee cannot refuse to heed, and which neither party in Parliament, I venture to say, wishes to see increased. Therefore, it behooves us to be careful of the way in which we deal with the railways in that country in order that the country may be properly and fairly developed.

Mr. D. TISDALE (South Norfolk). The hon. gentleman has expressed his views with regard to this matter, and he forgets some things that passed in committee. While there was no sworn evidence, it was conceded on all hands that this was a mining country, and the Act of Parliament itself shows that. It was also conceded that the mining regions of British Columbia are mountainous and render difficult the construction of a road. Therefore, it was not thought necessary by, I think, a large majority of the committee, that any further evidence was necessary. It was practically conceded, at all events the vote of the committee showed that they considered that answer to my hon. friend's contention as sufficient. You cannot find a charter on the statutes for a railway in a mountainous country, where we have not given willingly bonded powers of $30,000 to $35,000, not being particular as to two, or three, or four, or five thousand. We must not forget that it is against the interests of a railway company to bond too much, because they have got to pay the bonds first, and then they get their profit after that. This Columbia and Western charter was a myth. When I say a myth, I mean that there was no probable chance for it to go on. They were not speculators ready to take it up and build it, they had to get the Canadian Pacific Railway to do it, or it would stand on the statute-book like many other charters. The Canadian Pacific Railway says: Now, we will build it. We want two things; we want, for the main line, $35,000 of the promised bonds; we want also to have the power referred to in the statute. I do not agree with my hon. friend's construction of that statute. If the English language can be plain, it says plainly that they are limited to 20 miles. My hon. friend makes an ingenious argument that they might go 50 miles to get 20 miles, and that, therefore, we would be giving them power to build a longer road. I do not think you ever saw a railway company that would go any further than they were compelled. The charter is express. It was never contended in the committee otherwise. Twenty miles to go to a mine means 20 miles, or else I do not understand the English language. Now, mention has been made of the proceedings of the Railway Committee. Like himself, I was one of those who raised a point; I objected to the power to construct branch lines being struck out. Why? Not in the interests of the railway. I can tell my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) that I have no more interest in any railway, and have not had since I have been in this House, than he has. The hon. gentleman says that I represent my own constituents. So I do. And if he represents his well, he will remember that the city of Toronto has spent money on enterprises that they believed in, giving railway schemes a chance to build if they would furnish the money. The city of Toronto is the great capital of Ontario. I live 100 miles from it, and though I represent a country constituency, I have a right to my opinions as well as the hon. gentleman, and I do not want him to preach to me what my duty is in regard to these questions. I am quite willing to listen to his arguments and prepared to answer them. I say it is a very small argument to make that because one gentleman takes a different view from him, or because he only represents his own constituents, that therefore, he cannot speak on any question that does not concern his own constituents. These gentlemen think they know so much more than the rest of us, that they alone have a right to speak for the whole country. I would not have referred to this matter if he had not referred to me in the same way. I feel very strongly about this question, in the interests of the people. I have not a dollar's worth of interest in British Columbia, and do not know much about the country. I regret that I have not been able to go out into that mining country. I am too busy with my own affairs in this province. But I leave it to the good judgment of all practical men in this committee whether a $35,000 bonding power is too great to build a railway through a mountainous country. I objected to its being struck out, because I thought it was against the interests of the people that these gentlemen represent out there. It may be said that they who live out there know better than we do. They do in local matters, but on the question of the development of the mineral resources that are a part of this Dominion, I say that we want broad views. To tell me that it is a bad thing for this Parliament to give power to a great company like this to build these branch lines to mines with their own money, or the money they raise on the $35,000 bonded power, I say is to support a narrow policy that does not do credit to these gentlemen from British Columbia, who, on these questions, are all the time trying to make it appear that other gentlemen who have different views from theirs are not representing the public, but that they have some personal interest in it. I do think that is some excuse for me saying so much on this question, and I am prepared to stand or fall by it, that it is injurious to the development of British Columbia not to allow this 20 mile power to build to mines. Before they can commence to build a branch they have to come back to the House and obtain power to do so. They are restricted to the 20 miles in going to a mine; they have no towns or villages to go to, but only mines in that country. I am only taking this time to emphasize that conclusion, and I want to say, that we have a larger Railway Committee than there are hon. members in the House to-night. This matter was thoroughly threshed out before that committee, and, therefore, I do not think we ought to interfere with it. There may be hon. gentlemen present who were not present at the committee, and so I have trespassed for a longer time than I otherwise would, but I would say, that a majority of the committee approved of these provisions and they were accepted.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose the bonding privilege granted to this company, because I think the evidence produced justified us in giving the right to bond for $35,000 a mile, although I am in favour of the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman who moved the motion, because I believe, that it is not in the interest of the people, that railways should be bonded for more than they cost. In the case of this railway, I think it may fairly be assumed, that it will require $35,000 a mile to build. I got up to say a word in reference to the conduct of this railway company in passing by one of the most important towns in that district, Grand Forks, and in reference to the conduct of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, when building its lines of railway through Manitoba, the North-west Territories and British Columbia. In visiting that country some years ago, I was struck with that very remarkable peculiarity of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They have passed several important towns, one, or two, or three miles away, and the people who had these commercial centres built, and in which their money was invested, and for which the railway was to be built, were given the go-by, and many of them were obliged to move the whole of their buildings away across the country, perhaps two or three miles, to get near the railway station again. I think that conduct on the part of the railways was unfair to the people and unfair to the country, after giving the assistance which the country did, in the shape of money or lands, for the purpose of bringing to these pioneers throughout the western country conveniences in the shape of railway transportation. The question which naturally suggested itself to my mind was: What did we give this money to these railway companies for? It was these centres of settlement that induced us to give assistance to build railways in there for the benefit of the people who went in before there were any railways built. Yet the railway companies, to whom we give the money, do not give these people the conveniences which they require. If we, in older Canada, give a bonus to a railway company, we take good care to stipulate, that the railway company receiving that bonus shall build their railway and stations at certain specified places; but in the western country the people have no control over that; they are placed at the mercy of the railway companies, and the railway companies have not shown very much mercy for them. Take the town of Grand Forks. We had a great deal of discussion over that clause in the Railway Committee. I do not know that I am exactly in order in referring to it here, and I should not have referred to it but for the fact, that I would like to emphasize my feelings in regard to the conduct of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, or any other railway company, in giving these towns the go-by, the same applies to the town of Moyle. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said, that there were no engineering difficulties to prevent this company locating their station in the town of Moyle. The hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) stated, that he had been informed by his chief engineer, that he was satisfied, that the railway station could be built at Moyle without inflicting any injustice upon the railway company or without so cramping them in their operations as to make it difficult for them to carry on their business there. Whatever may have been their objections, in regard to putting the railway station at Moyle, there certainly could not have been the same objection put forward in regard to locating their station at Grand Forks, and it did appear, from the information which was given us by the hon. member from that district, that it was the clear intention of the railway company to give the place the go-by, unless it gave them far more than it could afford to give, and far more than any town ought to be obliged to pay, when a railway is being projected through the country. The sooner railway companies learn, that the country gives the money for the purpose of bringing these conveniences to the pioneers of the country, and that it is expected, that they will, as far as possible, give the people who have been the pioneers of the country, the railway facilities that they require, the better it will be for all concerned. I sincerely hope, that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals will take note of this, because, I believe, he has the power in his own hands to provide the remedy. Before a railway company build a station in the west, they must submit the location to the approval of the Governor in Council or the Minister of Railways for his approval. If they place a railway station anywhere that it should not be, all he has to do is to say, that he does not approve of that, and that the location must be changed. Railway companies ought to be compelled to put their stations, especially where there are towns and villages built up before they came into the country, in the most suitable places for the convenience of the people who have gone into the country and developed it. Take the case of Moyle, which is three miles away from the station. It is a town of 600 people. Grand Forks is much larger; yet these towns are given the go-by. When Judge Clark was asked, in the committee, "What is the population of Moyle?" some one said, "Six hundred." When the question was asked, "What is the population of the place where you put the station?" the reply was, "One—the station-master." "But," he asked, "are we to change our location in the interest of Mr. Campbell, who bought a lot of property for the purpose of putting money into his pocket?" It was not in the interest of Mr. Campbell, but in the interest of the people who located there, and were operating three mines at that point, and who require a railway in close proximity to those mines to enable them to operate them profitably. And every man with a dollar invested in those mines was interested in seeing a station built in the most convenient locality. Notwithstanding that these three mines were in close proximity to that station, the station was erected three miles away, because the town would not give the corporation more than they are disposed to give. I think we should come to an understanding, that there must be some control over railway corporations to compel them to consider the interests of the people in whose interests Canada is voting money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question, question.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, I presume it is still fifteen minutes yet before the hour expires, and I only intend to speak for one or two minutes; I have no desire to obstruct this Bill. I wish to say, that I think such a discussion as has occurred, both in the committee and in this House on this Bill is very important. I think, in the past, the Parliament of Canada has paid too little attention to the bonding powers that have been given to railways, and, because of this lack of care in granting these powers, railways throughout this country are loaded up with very heavy fixed charges. It will be unnecessary, perhaps, to reiterate the fact, that, when any railroad is heavily bonded, and when its fixed charges are extreme, the people pay for these fixed charges in freight rates, and it is in the interests of the people that Parliament should exercise the most stringent care in guarding the interests of the public in that regard. There would be some who, no doubt, think that $35,000 a mile is an extreme amount to allow any railway to be bonded for. We have the declaration of Mr. Peterson, the chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that that road will cost that amount of money. I am not prepared now, and I was not prepared in the committee, to dispute that testimony, although I felt that the Government itself should make inquiries on the matter and enlighten Parliament in regard to the facts. However, I think it was generally conceded in the committee, that Parliament would allow that main line to be bonded to the extent of $35,000 a mile. But, Sir, I believe I speak the general conviction when I say, that they ought not to have the power to bond branch lines of an unlimited extent to the amount of $35,000 a mile, because they may build twenty branch lines if they choose, as there are mines to connect with all through that country. I do not think we ought give them carte blanche to issue bonds to the extent of $35,000 a mile on all the branches they may choose to build.

There is another matter I wish to refer to in this connection. I propose to play the role of a prophet, when I say, it is my conviction that within ten years, this country will see the necessity of taking over all the railroads that exist in Canada. I believe there is growing such a feeling throughout the country, that the force of public opinion will be such that the Government, through

Mr. SPROULE.

Parliament, will ultimately be compelled to take over the entire railroad interests of the country, as has been done in the Australasian colonies, and in Germany, and in Belgium, and as I am told, in Switzerland. That being the possibility, it is desirable that this Parliament should exercise the very greatest care in extending bonding privileges, because we may have to pay back the exact amount we allow these railway companies to bond for. We have also a duty to perform to those who purchase these bonds, because when the country takes over these railways, we may see the necessity of expropriating them at their exact value, and if they are loaded up with enormous fixed charges and large bonded indebtedness, these bond holders will be compelled to lose, and the country may suffer by virtue of what some might regard as repudiation, although I would not consider it in that light. The member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) took the position in the committee the other day, that he was actuated, not so much in the interests of the railway company as in the interests of those who live in that district. I do not know exactly how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) voted on the Kettle River Valley Railway Bill, but I felt very strongly at the time that it was a peculiar position to take, when the Parliament of Canada last session deliberately refused to charter a railway company which offered to build a road throughout that entire Boundary Creek district without costing this country one penny; and coincident with that, this Parliament voted $3,630,000 to build the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, which did not serve the country that needed a railway any more than this Kettle River Valley Railway would. I would not wish to take the position that I am not anxious to see the settlers receive every consideration in that respect, but I believe that the time has come when a protest ought be entered against allowing railway companies to receive all the bonding powers they like, and I, for one, am prepared to take that position.

Mr. ROBERTSON. With the permission of the House I would like to offer a word of explanation to the statement made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). I did not state that he was interested in any railroad enterprise of any kind whatever. I am responsible to the people of East Toronto, for my actions in this House, and I can tell the hon. gentleman that the fear of not getting back here will not keep me from doing what I believe to be right while I am here.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Oliver).

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

DRAINAGE ACROSS RAILWAYS.

House resumed the consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Casey : That the Order of the House for Committee of Whole on Bill (No. 24) An Act concerning drainage on and over the property of railway companies, be discharged and the Bill be referred to a special committee ; and the amendment of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) thereto.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Mr. Speaker, before this Bill goes to the special committee to be dealt with, it seems proper that I should offer some few observations as to the character of the Bill.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (East Elgin). I think, Mr. Speaker, that the point of order that has been raised, and that was before you when you left the Chair at six o'clock, ought to be settled previous to any other discussion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The point of order which has been raised is this. By Rule 78 it is provided :

That no member who declares or decides against the principle or substance of a Bill, resolution, or matter to be committed, can be nominated of such committee.

It was declared this afternoon by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) had committed himself against the principle of the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was also mentioned.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not remember that the hon. member for Lanark was also mentioned.

Mr. SPROULE. I referred to the hon. member near me, but I could not think of the constituency at the time, and so I did not name it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not remember myself what the hon. member for South Norfolk declared. My impression is that he declared himself against the principle of the Bill ; but the discussion took place some days ago, and I have not the reference now before me. That is why I asked the hon. member for South Norfolk whether he was in favour of or against the principle of the Bill. Therefore, I am not in a position just now to declare whether he is in favour of or against the principle of the Bill.

Mr. CASEY. Speaking to the question of order, I suppose it would be in order for me to read what these hon. gentlemen did say, at the earlier stage of this debate, as regards the principle of the Bill. Although I did not raise this point of order myself, I think it is proper that it should be decided in a parliamentary manner. I therefore beg to quote what these hon. gentlemen said, and leave it to you to say whether they declared themselves as against the principle of the Bill or not. On April 20th, I find that Mr. Haggart said :

The legislation proposed is dangerous, and would lead to interminable litigation.

Mr. LARIVIERE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Has the hon. gentleman any right to quote a statement made by an hon. member in a previous debate ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It is not a previous debate, because it took place on the second reading of this Bill ; and it has been decided several times by the Speaker that on the different stages of a Bill members have a right to refer to debates which took place on the previous stages.

Mr. CASEY. It is all the same debate, of course, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Lanark said :

The legislation proposed is dangerous, and would lead to interminable litigation. You will find every railway company opposed to it, not because they are not perfectly willing to contribute to what is right and necessary in the way of building culverts or anything else, but because of the actions that they will be subjected to. * * * What I object to is leaving the railway companies subject to any number of applications and any amount of litigation. Parties who have control of municipalities are generally influenced by the citizens of those municipalities ; and it is in their interest to have as many culverts as possible, if they are made at the expense of the railway company. * * * The cheapest and most effective tribunal that can be provided is already provided.

That is, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Now, as the principle of this Bill is to take away jurisdiction from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in these cases and give it to a board of arbitration, I conclude that the hon. gentleman who objects to this Bill taking away that jurisdiction is opposed to the principle of the Bill. The hon. member for South Norfolk said :

Some years ago, as we all know, a Royal Commission suggested that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should deal with questions of this kind ; and that tribunal has been, on the whole, satisfactory and cheap. When the Conservative party had the responsibility of dealing with these questions, I contended that it was, on the whole, the best tribunal we could have, and I am glad to see that it is keeping up its reputation under the control of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House at the present time. Therefore, I object to the time of this House being taken up by the same question, submitted again and again ; but, as we must deal with it in some way or other, I think it should be sent to the committee upon which is imposed the responsibility of dealing with all legislation affecting railways.

So that both of these hon. gentlemen on that occasion objected to the principle of the Bill. On the second occasion when it came up, I do not find that Mr. Haggart spoke ; but Mr. Tisdale repeated his opposition to the Bill, and said :

The principle of this Bill is one that strikes at the root of the whole jurisprudence governing Dominion railways.

He repeated his statement that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council was the only tribunal that should deal with such cases. He said :

It would be a great mistake in my judgment to send this Bill to a special committee.

I would have to quote the whole of the speeches of these hon. gentlemen to prove more fully than these quotations do that they are both opposed to the principle of this Bill. But I submit, as they were opposed to the principle of the Bill, and opposed to its going to a special committee, that it is rather irregular, to say the least of it, and I believe out of order, that they should be members of the committee to which this Bill is referred. I did not raise this point of order myself. I was prepared to see what I could do to convince these gentlemen after they were on the committee ; but, as the point of order has been raised, I feel it my duty to say what their position was, and to leave it to you to decide what the rules of the House demand.

Mr. CASEY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, you have given your opinion already that if the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) have expressed their opinions as adverse to the Bill, they should be disqualified from sitting on the committee. The point of order may be well taken ; but I submit to my hon. friend the mover of this Bill, and also to my hon. friend from East Grey, who raised the point, that in fairness the point ought not to be taken. It is very true that ordinarily—and there must be sound reason for it, for the rules of the House so provide—that if a member pronounces adversely to the principle of a Bill, he is debarred from sitting on a committee on the same. But it very often happens that a subject of a technical nature is not fully discussed on the second reading of the Bill, but is referred to one of the standing committees and on such occasions the House, by its second reading, does not confirm the principle of the Bill but refers that principle to one of the standing committees, in order that the committee may investigate the matter fully and report to the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Is that the case with private or public Bills ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is the case with public Bills, and my hon. friend will agree with me that on several occasions Bills similar to this one—for instance, the Bill requiring the use by railway companies of certain mechanical appliances—were referred to the Railway Committee to look into the principle and take all the evidence necessary to arrive at a decision and then report to the House. In such cases, the House does not confirm the principle by its second reading, but refers the whole matter, both principle and details, to the committee. Not having confirmed the principle of this Bill by its second reading, I do not think the point raised by the hon. gentleman is well taken. For my part, although I suggested to the mover of the Bill to have it referred to a special rather than the General Railway Committee, I did not consider I was committing myself to its principle, though my views were in favour of the Bill, and a good many hon. members did not, by consenting to the second reading, pretend to affirm the principle of the measure but merely wanted to have the whole matter investigated by the committee. Under the circumstances, I do not think that the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) and the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), both of whom have great experience in the matter, should be debarred from sitting on the committee. If the point is persisted in and the Speaker maintains the point of order, I shall have to consider whether or not the Bill had not better be referred to the General Committee on Railways.

Mr. SPROULE. Though I was first in favour of sending the Bill to the Railway Committee when it was decided to send it to a selected committee which has been moved, I came to the conclusion that to do so would be to kill the measure. Therefore, I raised the point, which I think was well taken, and I find the authority of Dr. Bourinot in its support :

It shall be understood that no member who declares against the principle of a Bill or resolution or other matter to be submitted to a committee can be nominated on this committee.

That was the rule of the old Parliaments of Upper and Lower Canada and has been the rule followed in this House and in the Imperial Parliament. Therefore, I thought I was doing what was right in raising the point of order, especially when I believed it was for the salvation of the Bill which I desired to have become law.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I see that the principle of the Bill has been stated by its mover, Mr. Casey, and also by the hon. member for South Norfolk. On page 1963 of "Hansard" I find the hon. member for North Norfolk saying :

The important principle of the Bill is this, that it takes from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council the power of dealing with the railways under its jurisdiction in regard to drainage, the most important part of the cost and construction of railways, and that principle has been before this House for twelve years.

The mover of the Bill said it was the same measure that was introduced last year. It is the same Bill that was introduced last year, and it is modelled largely on the Railway Drainage Act of Ontario, an Act which is very carefully drawn, and which was passed under the auspices of Sir Oliver Mowat when he was Premier of that province. It is designed merely to avoid the necessity for reference to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Thus the principle has been laid down by these two hon. gentlemen, and I notice that the hon. member for North Norfolk, at page 2221, declared that this was a radical departure, changing the general principle of control of our railways. He said :

That control is in this legislature, and I do not want to see that power and authority checked, that protection both to the railway and the public made less complete.

I may say that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) also declared himself in opposition to the Bill, if I understood him rightly, and if I did not the hon. gentleman can set me right.

In my opinion, therefore, these two gentlemen having declared themselves against the principle of the Bill, they have not the right to be on the committee.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I have very little to say with reference to the merits of this Bill, because I presume that is a matter that will be brought up and fully discussed in the committee. But with reference to the operation of that measure, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I will just say a word or two. Substantially under this Bill, every municipality and land owner throughout the Dominion would have the right to drain the property of a railway company just as freely as a land owner might his own private property. I need not do more than point out the object in order to show the danger of this proposed legislation. But let me further draw attention to section 307 of the Railway Act, which provides that every railway which is under the control of the Dominion and every branch line shall hereafter be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada. But it provides further that any Act passed by the legislature of any province of Canada, prior to the 25th May, 1883, relating to any such railway or branch line and in force at that date, shall remain in force. In the province of Quebec we have in our Municipal Code, article 876, which provides how the rural inspector in a municipality is to proceed in the case of defective drainage on the part of any railway company, and I may say that in the case referred to by Mr. Britton, which was decided in the Privy Council, it was held that this question was a matter of merely local concern, and that this special section of our Municipal Code was operative, in so far as the province of Quebec is concerned. And I apprehend that some such legislation must exist in the province of Ontario.

Mr. CASEY. As it was enforced before 1883 ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. And so you find that in the provinces we have legislation now existing which meets the difficulties that may occur in those general provinces. Under these circumstances, I do not see why we should be called upon to pass the present Bill, which, if it goes through in its present form will be absolutely unworkable so far as the province of Quebec is concerned—even if it is intra vires of this House. As we have provision in the laws of the provinces which are satisfactory to the people of which I have heard no complaint, I cannot see why legislation of this sort, which is general in its operation, should be passed in this House—especially in view of the fact that I think it very doubtful whether we have the right to pass it at all.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I think the discussion has shown the great difficulty of dealing with a Bill of this kind. The objection pointed out by the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) may be very pertinent as affecting the operating of the Bill in the province of Quebec, but I think the object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey), who introduced the Bill, was rather to meet such cases as we find arising in the province of Ontario.

I am very glad to hear the right hon. First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) declare that he is in favour of a Bill of this nature—perhaps not just such a Bill as the hon. gentleman has introduced, but one that will meet the difficulties that have been pointed out. I confess that the Bill seems to me to be crude, and I can offer no better evidence of that than the fact that there are protests from the very municipalities that are more immediately concerned than any others in the Dominion of Canada. The hon. gentleman stated that he introduced a somewhat imperfect Bill. But to introduce a Bill which is imperfect and send it to a committee wholly uninformed, as I think I shall be able to show, upon such matters, means taking wide chances of the legislation that may result. A statement was made by the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), and dissented from on this as to the powers of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to deal with matters relating to the subject of this Bill. The hon. member for Kingston occupied a distinguished position in the province of Ontario, with great satisfaction, I am bound to say, as official drainage referee for some years, and no doubt, became possessed of a good deal of information that it would be impossible for any to become possessed of without a similar experience. I will only call the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact that this is a very much larger question, I think, than the House would be prepared to deal with just at this moment. In western Ontario, there are three townships alone that have spent more than a million dollars in these drainage works. That may seem a very extraordinary statement, but it is a fact. Many of those drains have to be constructed by dredges. In some instances, the railways have built their lines where the drains will need to cross them, and in other cases the drains have been constructed and the railways have spanned them afterwards. These drains have to be kept in repair by means of dredges, and the right of way for these dredges through the railway bridges must be secured. It will easily be seen that if these matters are to be dealt with by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, it is most important that the powers of the committee should be known. There is another phase of the case. Western Ontario is probably more interested in this matter than any other part of the Dominion. In eastern Ontario, and probably in the province of Quebec and the eastern provinces, nature has provided channels to carry off the water. But in western Ontario there is a large section of completely level land from which the water can be taken off only by expensive drains. The railway companies take possession of the lands, either by building before there are any drains or when the drains are small. Let me explain that in a new country even where ultimately there is developed a large system of drains, the drains are smaller at first. This must be so, because, in the first place, in the early days, the people are financially unable to build larger drains, and in the second place, the interests of the moment do not require larger drains. But, as settlement grows and wealth increases, other drains are run into those already constructed, and it becomes necessary that these should be enlarged and all must find one main outlet. Take a drain of that description made 15 years ago, and not crossed by any railways at that time. The railways have come in and taken possession of these lands, exercising their rights of appropriation and providing only small culverts for the drains already existing—in many cases very inadequate, or even no culverts. But the farmers are coming in with the representatives of the municipalities asking for outlets for these drains. The answer in many cases is: You can take the drains along the railways to an outlet. But see how unfair that is. In many cases it would be physically impossible, and in many other cases it would involve such a cost as to be ruinous to those who undertook it. It must be remembered that it is not the municipalities who pay for these drains, but the cost is assessed against a particular area, the municipalities being only responsible for the payment and for putting the machinery in operation. The people are seeking highways, if I may so use the term, for main drains. There will probably be an area of 15 miles square the drainage of which depends on one grand outlet, and it would be impossible to carry the water along the railway track to an outlet without great difficulty. I need only refer, as the Solicitor General has spoken of it, to the Act passed by the Ontario legislature. It was passed hurriedly, and it has been found to be absolutely a dead letter, as my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell) knows. It affords no substantial relief to those who are most concerned. I am not going to say just what kind of Bill should be passed, but I appeal to the right hon. the First Minister, as I am certain he is well disposed towards legislation of this kind, not to send this Bill to a large committee.

The right hon. gentleman will see, if he discusses this question with the hon. member behind him, that no committee could be possessed of that information which is necessary to enable them to deal with so complicated a question. There are the rights of the railway companies to be considered, and there are the rights of the people to be considered, and the committee is not possessed of sufficient information regarding those rights. I think we should have a commission to examine into the urgency and into the merits of the case; that is to say, that the question should not be dealt with at this session. I care not how diligently the committee may strive to frame a good Bill, it would be utterly impossible to deal with a subject of this magnitude at the present session. I am speaking now more particularly of the western part of Ontario, where we are more immediately concerned with this matter. If a commission were sent to examine the facts of the case, then alone could it deal with a question of this kind. I am not objecting to the personnel of the committee, but I think my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell), who lives in the atmosphere of the difficulties, should have been upon that committee, because he would be able to suggest witnesses who would give information that no one else could give. But I hope it will not be dealt with by the small committee which is now proposed, against which I have no complaint to make. Although there are a number of lawyers on it, it may be necessary to have some lawyers in order to draw up a Bill in the best form. But even lawyers must be possessed of accurate information in regard to this question before they can frame a proper Bill. I hope the mover of the Bill will consent to its being postponed, in order that the question may be dealt with in a more intelligent manner than this special committee can deal with it.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). I have been concerned considerably in municipal life. For fifteen or sixteen years I was reeve of the township, in which we had a large number of leading drains to construct. We have two drainage systems in the province of Ontario. We have what we call the Ditches and Watercourses Act, under which not more than six independent farmers or owners of land can combine to Act, and under which improvements can be made. If an individual wishes to get a drain constructed, he has to get a majority of his neighbours to sign a petition. That petition is sent into the township council, an engineer is sent on to examine the work, and, if all parties are agreeable, the work goes on. But, if it is a large work, it has to be done under what they call the Municipal Drainage Act. Under that Act, an engineer goes on and assesses the whole property, lays out all the work, and assesses each parcel of land, and then the work is let in contracts. People have great difficulty in getting drainage across our railways in the province of Ontario. I believe in the principle of this Bill, because it lays down a very simple principle, by which the owner of any lands can notify the clerk of the township, and each municipality in Ontario has a licensed engineer engaged to do the work in that township. The clerk of the municipality, under this Bill, would notify the engineer. The engineer goes and examines the work to be done, he draws up a plan and profile, and gives an estimate of the cost of the work. After that is done, either the engineer or the township clerk sends a copy of all this to the railway company. The railway company looks it over, and within a certain number of days, if they are agreeable, they notify the township clerk, and the work goes on. If they are not agreeable, they send down their engineer to meet the township engineer, where the work is to be done. The two engineers, in company, examine the locality, examine the plan and profile, and, if they can agree, that is the end of it. If the two engineers cannot agree, the matter is not taken entirely out of the hands of this Government, because it is left to the Minister of Railways and Canals to appoint a third engineer, who shall join their two engineers, and examine the locality with them, and try to effect a settlement. This is by far a cheaper and a more convenient system for the farmers, at least for the province of Ontario, than it would be for them to come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I have been in the Railway Committee of the Privy Council a few times, and I know, that, unless parties are represented by lawyers there, they have no chance whatever against these experts who represent the railway companies. But this Bill provides for a licensed engineer for the municipality and a licensed engineer for the railway company to meet together, and, if necessary, a third licensed engineer is sent by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and together they settle the question. But I would object, for instance, to section 10, which is, I think, one of the objectionable clauses. It says :

Where any existing bridge or culvert in the road-bed of a railway has to be charged, under the provisions of this Act, by the deepening or widening thereof, such deepening or widening shall be done by the railway company, but at the cost of the municipality or land-owner.

Let me say, that, if the railway has gone to work and built a culvert that is not of sufficient size, I do not think the loss would fall upon the municipality. I think it would fall upon the farmers. Therefore, this clause should be struck out, and let the engineers, when they meet, determine what portion of the cost the railway company should pay, and what portion each land-owner should pay. I think that would be the most simple system of dealing with this question, and a system that would do justice to the farmers in Ontario. A small farmer can easily go to the expense of bringing on an engineer, and then there is no difficulty, under that system, of getting the work done satisfactorily, in a great measure. Let me say, that the day is fast approaching when something will have to be done, because we all know, that in an old country the longer you farm land, the greater the number of drains you have got to put into that land, and the greater the number of drains you have, the greater becomes the flood of high water in the spring. You have to have greater space, in both drains and culverts, to carry off the water. There is another difficulty arising all over the province of Ontario. Many cleared farms have bogs. These are all being drained, and this also increases the flow of water. These things must be provided for. I hold, that a farmer who took up his land in good faith, if a railway has been run through, preventing him from getting that system of drainage that he would naturally have had but for the railway, should not suffer by being unable to get his land drained, or by having to go to a great amount of extra cost for that purpose. Some one has suggested, that in many instances the drain could be run along the side of the railway. Well, that is taking the water out of its natural course, and it is going to cut the farms up too much. Most of the railways do not put their drains deep enough on the side of the road to be of any benefit at all for the draining of farms. They only put their drains in to carry off the surface water, not to allow the farmers to drain, and they will not allow the farmers to go on their property and deepen these drains. I hold that the principle of the Bill is correct. There may be some clauses of it that require amendment, but I hope that the Government will give this matter their best consideration this session, and assist in perfecting some measure that will give relief to a great many farmers in Ontario—not only in Ontario, but also in other provinces. The Bill ought to be constructed, as far as it is possible, if it is to be a Dominion Bill, in such a way that it would meet the wants of all the different provinces, not of one province alone, so that the farmers in all the provinces would have the right that they ought to enjoy of draining their lands.

Mr. ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL (Kent, Ont.) Mr. Speaker, I think the House will understand that this is, as I believe, one of the most important Bills that has engaged the attention of the House. I think the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) deserves a good deal of credit for bringing this matter before the attention of the Government and the House. I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy), that in the western part of the province of Ontario this matter is one that is engaging the attention of the people to a larger and greater extent, perhaps, than in any other part of the province. In that part of the province the land is unfortunately very flat, and the necessity of draining the land, under the rails, is very great indeed. There are some drains cut there now from 100 to 120 feet wide at the top—canals—and quite deep, some of them being ninety feet wide at the bottom. The land, as was said by the hon. member for Bothwell, is constantly being improved, and new drains are now being made. There is a greater flow of water down these streams and the outlet under the rails is altogether too small. It has been found to be almost impossible to get the necessary right for an outlet under the railways. Some of the townships there have spent an enormous amount of money, having been sued on all hands, as the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), no doubt, will be aware. They have paid enormous sums in land damages—damages by reason of the land being overflowed and the farmers' crops being destroyed. They have tried in vain to get access under the railways. I have, in my mind, an instance that occurred a short time ago, where it was necessary to have a dredge brought in to carry on the work on a drain that was required. It was necessary to cross one of the important lines of railway, but it was found almost impossible. They could not get the right to bring that dredge under or over that railway, and they were put to an enormous amount of expense before they could get their dredge across, so that they could continue dredging. I think in this Bill now before the House, there are a great many commendable features; I think it is a move in the right direction, but, as the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) pointed out, I think there are some clauses that need a good deal of amendment, and, no doubt, when it comes before the committee it will be properly discussed. I must say to the Government that this is a question that is affecting the western part of Ontario particularly to the greatest extent. Every year the people are becoming more interested in it, and are feeling, more and more, the necessity of having some better legislation enacted so that they can procure the necessary right to drain their lands. Under the present machinery that we have on the statute-book, it will be found almost impossible to get the necessary permission to complete all these drains. I think in this Bill we have a modus operandi of providing what may meet the case, and if certain clauses are amended, as I think they will be, and if, perhaps, some other amendments are made in the Bill which will be suggested, I think we will have a Bill that will meet the wishes of the people and also meet the approval of the House. I therefore hope that the Government will give this matter their serious attention. I would say to the right hon. Prime Minister that it is worthy of the serious and earnest consideration of this Parliament, and that, if they cannot at the present time see their way to referring it to a proper committee, I would suggest to the hon. member for West Elgin that he should allow it to stand until a further day, so that the matter could receive the attention of the Government. But, at all events, whether it is referred to the Railway Committee or to a select committee, I trust that it will receive proper attention, and that it will be supported by this House.

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that this debate be adjourned. I do this with the view that, in the interval between this and the next sitting upon which the matter comes up we may organize a committee which will be acceptable.

Motion to adjourn the debate agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all unexpired leases and unexpired renewals and modifications of leases, and of all papers and plans relating thereto of all water lots, water power and hydraulic privileges in and along that portion of the River Ottawa and its various channels within the city of Ottawa, from the westerly boundary of the said city to the line of Kent Street, produced into the Ottawa River, and commonly known as the Chaudière, issued by the Government to any person, persons or company, and for plans showing the position of such water lots, water power and hydraulic privileges. Also, for a statement of the amount of power each lessee is entitled to use, and the date of the termination of the lease under which he is entitled to use it.—(Mr. Copp.)

Copies of all letters, documents, memoranda, agreements and correspondence containing, embodying, relating to or referring to the terms and conditions upon which Mr. A. H. Harris entered the service of the Government or of the Intercolonial Railway as general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway or otherwise.—(Mr. Pope, by Sir Charles Tupper.)

(1) Copies of all local and other tariffs and of all supplements thereto in force on the first day of July, A.D. 1898, on the Intercolonial Railway and on all railways leased, used or operated by the Government in connection with the Intercolonial Railway; (2) copies of all such local and other tariffs and supplements thereto in force on the said Intercolonial Railway and other railways on the first day of April, A.D., 1899; (3) a complete list, statement and return, giving full and complete particulars of special rates or other concessions to any merchants, traders, manufacturers or other persons for or in respect of the carriage of freight on the said Intercolonial Railway and other railways aforesaid, which were in force or effect on the following dates respectively: (a) the first day of July, A.D. 1898; (b) the first day of April, A.D. 1899. (4) Copies of all letters, reports, telegrams and communications in writing during the year 1898, from Mr. A. H. Harris, as general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway to the general manager of the said railway, respecting or relating to or concerning the re-arrangement or revision of tariffs on the Intercolonial Railway, or of the rules and regulations governing the carriage of either passengers or freight on the said railway.—(Mr. Pope, by Sir Charles Tupper.)

Return showing the dates upon which mails for Dawson were despatched from Vancouver or Victoria since July 1st, 1898, to the present, and the dates of arrival of them at Dawson respectively, and the routes by which they were despatched; also the dates on which mails were despatched from Dawson since July 1st, 1898, and when these reached Vancouver or Victoria, and by what routes.—(Mr. Foster.)

Copies of all leases, papers and documents of and concerning the lease of certain property on Isle aux Noix, in the province of Quebec, held by the Government, and under the control of the Department of Militia and Defence, showing the names of lessees since 1st January, 1895, to the present time, and the amount of rental paid by such lessees.—(Mr. Quinn, by Mr. Taylor.)

Copies of all petitions, correspondence, telegrams and instructions in reference to the granting of a bonded warehouse to John Gow Scrimgeour at Cardigan Bridge, Prince Edward Island.—(Mr. Macdonald, King's.)

Return showing the number of contracts entered into by the Government since the 30th

June, 1897, in which there is a clause prohibiting "sweating"; the total amount involved in such contracts; the name of the respective departments in which these contracts have been awarded; the names of the companies, or firms, or individuals to which such contracts have been given.—(Mr. Clarke.)

Copy of the report made by Mr. Frank Shanly, C.E., on sections Nos. 11 and 23 of the Intercolonial Railway, with his award respecting the same, including his award or finding on the claim of Messrs. Starr and De Wolfe, of Halifax, against the Government in respect to work done upon the said sections or either of them.—(Mr. Borden (Halifax), by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

Returns showing all sums expended to date upon the new wharf at Pointe Claire, P.Q. Also, how far the works have progressed; and a copy of the estimate of the cost of said wharf and statement showing how much it will cost to finish said wharf. Copies of all advertisements calling for tenders, as well as of all tenders and correspondence upon the subject.—(Mr. Monk, by Mr. Bergeron.)

Return giving the names of all the weirs now under license in the county of Charlotte, in the province of New Brunswick, with location of each, with date said licenses were issued, and with the name or names of the licensees of said weirs; also the names of all weirs licensed during 1898 that were not built and the names of licensees of said weirs, and the number of years said licenses have been granted without weirs having been built by such licensees.—(Mr. Ganong.)

Copies of the report of Mr. Hawkin, post office inspector, in reference to the inquiry or investigation held on the conduct of J. R. Leake, postmaster of Morton, in the county of Leeds, together with copies of all correspondence, complaints, affidavits or declarations and evidence taken at the investigation relating to said postmaster; together with a copy of the notice of his dismissal.—(Mr. Taylor.)

Copies of all particulars, applications, correspondence and grants respecting two and one-half miles of Hunker Creek, Klondike Mining Division, Yukon district, for the purpose of hydraulicing the same.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 12th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS

PROPOSED PACIFIC CABLE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) laid on the Table of the House certain papers concerning a proposed Pacific Cable.

Mr. CASEY. With the permission of the House, I beg leave to move :

That all the papers laid on the Table of the House during this session relative to the proposed Pacific Cable, be printed forthwith, and that rule 96 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said : The reason for haste is that it is necessary to have these papers printed at an early day in order that they may catch the Australian mail. It is very important that they should reach there at the earliest possible date.

Motion agreed to.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS .

Mr. PENNY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 116) to amend the Criminal Code respecting cruelty to animals. He said : Mr. Speaker, the explanation in reference to this Bill is, that a great many horses are shipped from the city of Montreal on steamships leaving for Europe, and it has been found by the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, that a great many of these animals are maltreated before leaving port ; while still in the stockyards. Their tails are docked by unqualified persons—persons who know nothing about veterinary surgery—and this Bill is introduced, more especially, for the prevention of cruelty to these horses that are being shipped to the other side. For instance, I am told that in one case a man was required to dock so many horses' tails in a given time, and he simply took up an axe and a board and went to work and chopped off the horses' tails, so many in a given time, and the horses, without being cauterised or otherwise medically treated, were put on board ship and left to bleed and suffer. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals for that reason asked me to introduce this Bill. Last year when I introduced a similar Bill at the request of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, both of London and Hamilton, they promised to make a test of it. They have failed to comply with their promise, and I am re-introducing this Bill with the hope that it will pass.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— ADDRESS IN REPLY TO SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows :—

MINTO.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you for the Address which you have adopted in reply to the Speech with which I opened the present session of Parliament. I rely with confidence upon your assurance that the important subjects commended to your attention will receive your serious consideration.

Government House,

Ottawa, 6th May, 1899.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

REDISTRIBUTION BILL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) when we may hope to have the redistribution Bill laid upon the Table of the House, or submitted for our consideration.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think early next week.

MEETING OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I also want to ask my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) why it is that there seems to be an intention to postpone the meeting of a very important committee of this House, the Public Accounts Committee. We are now in a very advanced period of the session, and, at last, it was decided that there should be a meeting of the committee on Wednesday next, it having been asked for last Monday. It has now been postponed, I see, until Friday. There are some very important questions that committee will be asked to deal with, which are practically before it now, or will be the moment it meets, and it is very important that it should not be deferred until a very late period in the session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). As my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) knows, this is a matter over which the Government has no control. The various committees are called by the chairman, but, my hon. friend knows, also, I presume, that the cause why some of the committees have not sat as often as might have been advisable, is that various committees have to sit at the same time, and there are, as my hon. friend is aware, some very important legislation before the Railway Committee, especially, and before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and it is not possible that two or three committees should sit at the same time. If that be not the reason, I do not know of any other.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask who had the power to postpone the meeting of this committee from Wednesday ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I may say that the committee was called, but the Bill fixed as the first order for special consideration, by the Banking and Commerce Committee, was considered by all the members present, representing both sides of the House, to be of such great importance to the country, and to involve such large interests, that it was unanimously agreed that the Committee on Banking and Commerce should meet on Wednesday next. The chairman of the Public Accounts Committee urged the desirability of having his committee meet upon that date. I do not think the hon. leader of the Opposition is mistaken in regard to the committee having been called and postponed. It was suggested, I think, that it should be called on Wednesday, but it was the unanimous view of the members of the committee that the other Bill was so important that the Public Accounts Committee would have to give away, and that the meeting of the Banking and Commerce Committee should be held on that day. It is unfortunate that in these two weeks, some important committees should have to meet on the same day, owing to the congested state of the business, but it is necessary to facilitate the business, in the interest of the public and in that of parties concerned in this legislation, that the Banking and Commerce Committee should meet. However, I think that, in this week, probably some of the most important Bills will be got rid of, and that we will be enabled to hold numerous meetings.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not quite yet understood who it was that came to the unanimous decision to postpone the meeting of the committee which was called.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to explain, he will understand that when either room is occupied, another committee could not sit.

Mr. FOSTER. But the meeting of the Public Accounts Committee was called for Wednesday, and I would like to know by whom it was postponed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Was an actual call issued? I did not get notice of it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. At page 251 of the Votes and Proceedings of the 9th of May, the Public Accounts Committee is called to meet on Wednesday, 17th of May, at 11 a.m. The next Order paper appears, and some one has taken upon himself to change it from Wednesday, 17th of May, to Friday, 19th of May.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Although it was agreed that the meeting should be called for Wednesday, the notices were not sent out. I went to the clerk and found out from him that, as the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) has said, it was impossible, on account of other business, to get a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Have you frequently objected?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I trust that a meeting will be held next week, or as early as possible. I may say it was not my fault or that of the committee; it was on account of other business being so pressing, and it was thought that no time would be lost as other business would be got through with when there would be time for this committee.

Mr. SPROULE (East Grey). I think some of these committees might have been called together long ago. It did seem to me that at the early part of the session there was no reason in the world why the Agricultural Committee could not have been called together. Week after week we had no committee work going on so that we could have got through considerable of the work of this committee. The Public Accounts Committee ought to have been called together as soon as the Auditor General's Report was laid before us. When we were doing no work in any of the other committees, we could then have got along with the work that committee had to do, and especially so in the case of the Agricultural Committee. There is no reason in the world why the Agricultural Committee could not have had half its work over by that time. I think we should bring the committees together so that we could go on with the work before we reach that stage of the session when there is a congestion of committee work, and when two important committees have to meet on the same day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not disposed to agree with the view of my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), that the committees should sit while the Address was being debated. I do not think it is according to the general rule that the committees should be called to meet until the Address has been passed, and until we know whether or not the Government has the confidence of the House. Of course, we presume it had that confidence, but we were not sure, and my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) knows we had to listen to long speeches, and to recover from the effects of them.

Mr. SPROULE. The committees were not called together until a long time after the Address was adopted, and that is one of the complaints I make.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 117) to incorporate the Ottawa Suburban Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

Bill (No. 118) respecting the Great Northern Railway Company and to change its name to the Great Northern Railway Company of Canada.—(Mr. Savard.)

Bill (No. 119) respecting the Red River Valley Railway and Coal Company.—(Mr. Somerville.)

SUPPLY—ORDERS OF THE HOUSE NOT COMPLIED WITH.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I wish to call the attention of the Government to the extraordinary delay in complying with Orders of this House for the production of public papers of great importance, which are absolutely necessary for the consideration of subjects before this House. The papers I refer to involve very little work in their preparation, and some of them should have been ready, if not submitted to the House, without the form of an order at all. It seems unnecessary to argue that in regard to the administration of the Yukon territory, where extraordinary powers are vested in the Governor in Council, and where the local authorities have been given extraordinary powers by legislation from time to time, that there should be any necessity to press the Treasury benches to furnish that information when it reaches the hands of the Government or the Department of the Interior, which is particularly concerned. And yet, although requests have been made across the floor of the House for information in that regard, and although orders have been passed requiring the production of papers, I am unable to ascertain that there has been any compliance with these orders. Some days ago the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was asked, for the sake of convenience to supply information that could be obtained by searching the official "Gazette" and the statutes with respect to the mining regulations in the Yukon, yet that simple request has not since been complied with. I call the attention of Parliament to the Orders that were adopted by this House concerning some of these papers; and, for my part, I do not see how it is possible to adequately discuss many items in the Supply Bill without these papers being before us. On the 19th of April, an Order of the House was adopted for:

Order for an itemized statement of the number of gallons of intoxicating liquors taken into the Klondike district since July, 1896, the number of permits granted therefor, with the names and post office addresses of those to whom said permits were granted and the amount paid therefor.

Now, the Minister of the Interior will remember that a large part of that work has already been done, but this return has not been brought down yet. The Minister will recollect that last session a somewhat similar return was made up to that date, and so the work of preparing the extended return cannot be exhausted, and might be easily accomplished. On the same day, the 19th of April, an Order of the House was passed for:

Statement of all persons appointed to office or assigned to duties of any kind in the Yukon district since August 1st, 1896, giving the names, post office addresses, rate of salary and allowances or expenses of each person, the duties assigned, the date of his appointment, the date of resignation or dismissal, and the reason therefor in the case of each resignation or dismissal. The above statement not to include the Mounted Police or Canadian Militiamen, but to include payments in each branch.

If during this year there has been any improvement in the postal communication between Dawson and Ottawa, it seems to me not an unreasonable supposition that that information is in the possession of the Department of the Interior, and that there cannot be any very great amount of work involved in the preparation of that return. On that same day, the 19th of April, there was an Address adopted to His Excellency the Governor General for:

Copies of any Orders in Council passed up to date respecting any officers of the Department of the Interior taking up mining claims; respecting any Government officers taking up mining claims, respecting officers of the Department of the Interior making homestead entries or buying lands.

This is a subject of some importance. It was referred to weeks ago in the debate in this House, and I should have thought that the Minister of the Interior would have been anxious to show some haste in bringing down that information. In general terms, I think the hon. Minister stated that there was such an Order passed, and stated about the time it was passed. So that the compliance with the Order of this House should consume no time. Then, on that same day, the 19th of April, an Order of the House was adopted for:

Copies of instructions given to Mr. F. C. Wade, whether before he left for Dawson to act in several official capacities or subsequently, more particularly a copy of the permission given him, if the permission was in writing, to stake claims in the Klondike.

That is a subject of information upon which, from the debate that has already taken place, there should be an official statement prepared without delay. I, perhaps, might infringe for a moment, not for the purpose of an argument at all, but in order that the Minister of the Interior might particularly understand what I mean. In the debate, the hon. Minister himself made a semi-official statement in regard to a conversation between himself and that officer. This return, however, would bring forth any official records, if such there be, in relation to that subject; and it seems to me, while that involves no trouble at all, the Minister, in all fairness, in dealing with the House, ought to show expedition and celerity in complying with a request of that character. On the same day, the 19th of April, an Order of the House was adopted for:

Copies of all communications, orders and instructions issued by the Department of the Interior to the administrator, or any of his officials, in the Yukon district, with the dates of their despatch.

There might be a question as to whether that return would involve labour; it depends on the number of the despatches which the Government are prepared to include in the return; and I shall not press upon the attention of the Minister any particular criticism in regard to that. But my point is that among these returns there are some that involve little or no trouble, and would yet afford considerable and exact official information. Then there was another Order of the House adopted on the 19th of April for :

Return of all liquors taken into the Yukon since July 1, 1896, giving the names of the persons or companies taking them in, the quantity in each case, the date of issue of permit and the authority granting the permit ; also, all correspondence had with any parties in connection with the demand for, or granting of, permits for taking liquors into the Yukon.

This, I think, is practically covered by a return moved for by another hon. gentleman ; it might have one particular or another not covered by that. On the same day an Address was adopted for :

Copies of all correspondence which has taken place between the hon. Minister of the Interior, or any officer of his department, and the government of the North-west Territories respecting the issue, granting or withholding of permits for the conveyance of liquor into the Yukon territory.

The hon. member will understand how important that subject is. It has been discussed in the legislative council of the North-west Territories at Regina. Without pressure of any kind at the hands of the hon. gentleman, so far as my recollection goes, the official information was given to the House there, and the subject was in a position to be discussed, from their point of view, with the full and official information before them. It seems to me a case where the hon. Minister, in view of the discussions of last session on that question and in view of the point of jurisdiction that was raised by some hon. gentlemen here, might have been expected to furnish this House with information without any such formal step being adopted as the moving of an Address from the House. These are some of the returns particularly relating to that territory, which Parliament ought to have been put in possession of by the Department of the Interior before this period of the session, unless something extraordinary intervened. Otherwise, it is obvious that should any expedition occur in the passage of the Estimates, and the business of the House proceed in the ordinary course, no opportunity at all would arise to consider the wisdom of much of the legislation with which those various subjects are concerned. Then, on the motion of Mr. Borden, an Order of the House was adopted for :

Copies of all letters, telegrams and communications from Frederick Peters, Q.C., of Victoria, B.C., to the Minister of the Interior, or to any Minister of the Crown, or to any Deputy Minister, applying for or relating to the granting of any permit to take or import liquor into the Yukon district, and all replies to such letters, telegrams and communications.

The point of that is obvious. The Minister of the Interior made reference to a portion of some such communication, and attempted to make a point in debate by that reference : that was long ago. I think, in fairness to all concerned, there ought to have been a very prompt compliance with that Order. According to the rules of debate, the hon. Minister was bound, as he himself is aware, to lay the whole of that document on the Table, when he took it from the files of his department, and made any allusion to it in the course of debate. Then, there was an Order of the House adopted on the 24th of April for :

A copy of all reports to the Minister of the Interior, or to the Department of the Interior, or to any officer of that department from William Ogilvie, or from the Council of the Yukon district, or from any member of such council, relating to the administration of the said Yukon district or relating to any matter connected with the administration of the said district.

That relates, too, to the point of my observations, that in connection with the necessities of that country, which is not represented directly in this House, there should be the greatest possible expedition observed, on the part of the Government in granting such information as is proper at any time to be put before Parliament. In this connection, it seems to me that information of that kind which existed at the time—and I am not aware what did exist on that point—should form a part of the report proper of the department. For instance, before the appointment of these officers in the Yukon territory, before the Act came into force there, there was information of such a general character given in regard to the territory as was in the hands of the department ; and the moment there became anything like an organization there, the report seems to have stopped dead short, where there was more necessity, in view of all that is alleged to have happened, to have put before the country such facts as could be officially stated, and that an Order of the House that should be complied with promptly. Then, there was another Order of the House adopted on the 24th of April, the importance of which the Minister himself will perhaps appreciate, as he has referred to it repeatedly in debate and endeavoured to make a point out of it :

An Order of the House for copies of all letters, telegrams and communications from Archer Martin, of Victoria, B.C., barrister-at-law, to the Minister of the Interior, or to the Deputy Minister, or to any officers of the Department of the Interior, relating to the granting or recognition of any permit or authority to take or import liquor into the Yukon district, or relating to the importation of liquor into that district, and all replies to such letters, telegrams and communications.

The hon. Minister will recollect reading part of a telegram, practically the whole of it, from Mr. Martin, but there was more of it from Mr. Martin, but there was nothing in his speech which indicated what a return to this Order would, namely, the whole of the correspondence was before the House. The hon. Minister may have referred to the only two communications between his department and Mr. Martin on that subject, but before the House is officially aware of that, a return to this Order is necessary, and I fancy, from the statement made by the Minister, there was not lengthy correspondence. There was some, however, and to prepare that would take very little time.

Then, coming to a later date, and while I am on my feet, I will refer to some further information that is not forthcoming on other subjects. I shall not refer to all the information on the subjects I have mentioned, but I will stop at that date, because we are at the 12th May now, and I would prefer to make my request on the most reasonable grounds. There seems to be a necessity to dwell on these subjects, and I propose to take advantage of my opportunities, as they occur when going into Supply, until some satisfactory result is attained. There seems to be an indifference on the part of the departments to these returns. I will not to-day, but may on another occasion, run over the list of Orders and Addresses on important subjects last session that have not been complied with up to the present. That makes it additionally necessary to press formally on the attention of the Treasury benches and the department concerned the Orders now outstanding. In so far as my knowledge of them goes, I would like to refer to an Address adopted on the first May for copies of all correspondence between the Government of British Columbia and Canada, since July, 1898, to the present date, respecting the Supreme and county courts, or any of the judges for the province aforesaid, the appointments of said judges, or any of them, or other matters relating to the administration of justice in the said province. That cannot cover any considerable work, and that particular department has not been at all burdened with requests for papers this session. But there are interesting questions involved in these papers with regard to what is reported to have taken place, namely, that arrangements were made, or negotiations had, between gentlemen who now occupy positions on the Supreme bench of that province, in regard to whether they could get the appointments or not, and the papers would afford the information upon which a discussion should take place, no matter what the view ultimately might be as to whether there was a proper regard had for the independence of the judiciary, and whether it was right or regular for the Federal Government to impose any conditions, for instance as regards residence of these judges—whether the commission contained these conditions or whether these judges had to give a certain pledge before they got their appointment. But the fact is notorious, in that province, that some such conditions must have been made, as matters of honour or otherwise, because we have had one judge compelled to practically move from Victoria and reside, or spend most of his time, in Vancouver, though the chief justice of the court is living in New Westminster, quite close to Vancouver, and is daily in Vancouver. Those are interesting subjects, involving very important principles.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier.) I have that return, and will bring it down on Monday. It was an omission on my part not to have brought it down to-day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman, and shall say no more on that subject. Then, with regard to the papers moved for by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), the hon. gentleman will see, that, on the 1st May, the Minister of Inland Revenue professed a desire for this motion, said that he had asked some one to have these papers brought down, and they involve a question which affects the honour of an officer in the civil service in regard to whom serious charges were made, charges characterized as almost cruel ones. In deference to all the parties concerned, both those whose honour is concerned and the officer who was summarily ejected from the service, there ought to be, on the part of the Department of Inland Revenue, the greatest possible expedition and despatch in laying the papers on the Table. If the hon. Minister expected and hoped, that the motion would be made, I take it for granted, he had a large part of the papers ready, and, therefore, there should be no delay in bringing them down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). There has been no desire on my part to keep back any information. The Orders were sent to the proper official of the department in the usual way, and, if the returns are not down, it is possibly because the matter was not specially brought to my attention, and I did not enjoin on the officer all possible haste; but I have taken note of the Orders which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and I will draw the attention of the proper officials of the department to them, and I expect, that, on Monday or Tuesday, the returns will be laid on the Table.

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER. There is one return which was asked for by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), with reference to which the Minister of Railways said, the other evening in his speech, that he had the information in hand. This return ought to be brought down before the Drummond County Railway resolutions are brought on again. I refer to the receipts in the different stations.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I did not say, I had it in hand, but that there would be no difficulty in getting it. Did I say, I had it in hand?

Mr. FOSTER. I think you said you had it; that it was in the department. But my hon. friend will easily see that the information is important to the discussion to the Drummond County Railway resolutions.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not aware that we have the information, but we can get it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will excuse me for writing him a note, perhaps he will allow me now to ask him to look up the matter of some returns granted by the House last session and not yet brought down from the Department of Railways.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who leads the Government, when it is the intention to go on with the Drummond County Railway resolutions?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). On Tuesday.

Mr. HAGGART. The first Order of the day?

The PRIME MINISTER. The first Order of the day.

SUPPLY—LIQUOR LICENSES IN THE YUKON.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether he can give me an answer to a question I asked yesterday with regard to the liquor permits?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The answer is not as complete as I would like. My hon. friend (Mr. Prior) will have it on Monday.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I desire to call attention to a clerical error in the first item. The figure for clerical assistance for last year is $4,370. It should be $4,070. So instead of a decrease this year of $110, as it appears in the Estimates, there is really an increase of $190.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of this "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act"?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. During the last session of Parliament, one of the first-class clerks, who was drawing a salary of $1,700 or $1,750, died. The item had been taken out, and when we came to concurrence, I reduced the general amount by the amount of his salary. Then I took a vote for an amount in the supplementary Estimates, using these words "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act"—for this reason: I engaged two men giving them $700 each, and, as I was not authorized to do that, I had to insert these words. These two men are still in the employ of the department, and I propose to give them an advance of $50 each.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are they?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are Fred. Norris and W. G. Bishop. Their present salaries are $700 each, and we propose to give them an increase of $50 each.

Mr. WALLACE. Are they new men?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Norris is a new man. Mr. Bishop was in the service at the port of Montreal.

Mr. WALLACE. How long was Mr. Bishop in the service in Montreal?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think about a year or so. Then we propose to give $30 increase each to Miss Daws, Miss Young, Miss Gauthier, and an increase of $100 to George Rathbone. He is an extra clerk. He has been working for $300, and this increase only brings his salary up to the minimum.

Mr. WALLACE. Has he passed the examination as clerk?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I believe so. He could not be employed otherwise.

Mr. WALLACE. He was a messenger before.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) has merely mentioned that he has employed two gentlemen, and he proposes to override the law in order to pay them $700 each. These belong to a class of clerical assistants provided for in the Civil Service Act, who are to come in at a certain minimum, who may get an increase of so much a year, and are to go to a certain maximum. How is it that my hon. friend has not complied with the law instead of employing two men at high salaries and overriding the law to do it? Why is he not paying $300 or $350 or $400 to clerks to do this work instead of paying two men $700 each? No explanation has been given of the necessity for this. Why is not the hon. gentleman paying $300, or $350, or $400 to clerks to do this work instead of paying two men $700?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The reason is that Parliament sanctioned it last year. This is continuing the services of those that I was authorized last year to employ.

Mr. FOSTER. May be my hon. friend will be kind enough to give us the benefit of the explanation. I cannot remember it from last year. The probabilities are that he slipped it through easily last year, and gave no explanation.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think I gave explanations. Colonel Ince was a first-class clerk, drawing either $1,700 or $1,750. He took ill and was granted leave of absence. He started for British Columbia, and when he got to Manitoba or beyond, he died on the train. We had already voted his salary in the main Estimates of last year. When it came to concurrence in the main Estimates, I asked that the sum we had voted for him should be dropped, reducing the main Estimates by that amount. At the time I stated that the reason was that I proposed in the Supplementaries to take a vote for $1,750 and use it in the employment of two men whom I could get for that same amount of money or less. On that understanding, and after a full explanation, as the hon. gentleman will find on looking up the records, Parliament gave me that permission, and under that permission, Mr. Norris and Mr. Bishop were engaged at $700 each. They are performing the work of first-class clerks, and I thought I was managing very well. As you can readily understand, the work in that department has been increasing very much, especially in the statistical branch. Owing to the preferential tariff, there is a good deal more labour connected with it, and also the work has much increased in the accountant's branch.

Mr. FOSTER. What do these two men do?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. One is in the correspondence office, and the other, I think, is in the statistical branch, but of that I am not sure. They are good men, I think I could not do better. If Colonel Ince had been able to remain, I should still have been forced to ask for another man on account of the great increase of work through the preferential tariff. I gave these explanations last year.

Mr. FOSTER. You are giving them an increase of $50 each?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, and the extra clerks $30, to such of them as may have it under the law, and this young Rathbone, who is only getting $300, I propose to give him $100 extra.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the increases given altogether for that clerical assistance?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Three were given the $30, and Rathbone gets the $100.

Mr. FOSTER. Are there any there who do not get their increase?

Mr. PATERSON.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, Madame Jolivet it at the maximum of $600. All who are eligible for increase have got it. This is all on the temporary staff. The reason we are able to give these increases is that one of the messengers, a very aged man, who had to have an extended leave of absence, has sent in his resignation. It was accepted, and a new messenger comes in at $200 less than he had.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that he is making ducks and drakes with the contingencies in several ways. I find, in looking at the Auditor General's Report, that the hon. gentleman has not, it appears, a legal adviser in his department, and so he has invested in a copy of that very valuable work, "Be Your Own Lawyer." I think, in fact, he has got three of them, for which he paid $1.50 each. This item is found on page T-17. Then, my hon. friend is trying to improve himself as an orator, and to make himself au fait in the controversial world, he has invested in a book of "Practical Quotations," for which $8 of the people's money has been paid, for the benefit of my hon. friend. But he has been more than ambitious. He not only wants this $8 book of "Practical Quotations," but he has gone into the study of "English Synonyms and Antonyms."

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Are you sure it is a book of "Practical Quotations"? I think it must be "poetical."

Mr. FOSTER. No, it is "Practical Quotations." The hon. gentleman has got the start of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Minister of Trade and Commerce bought one entitled "Poetical Quotations. My hon. friend does not incline so much to poetry as the Minister of Trade and Commerce; he has taken the one on the practical side of the question. Then, my hon. friend, anxious for the extension of his geographical knowledge, has bought "The History and Origin of the Streets of Montreal," for which he has paid $5 of the people's money, carrying out the general amendment which is visible in the party and which commences rightfully at the heads of the party. My hon. friend has also bought "The Life and Times of Queen Victoria," for which he paid $4.75. Then, "Men of the Times." One was not sufficient for my hon. friend, he had to buy two "Men of the Times," for which he paid with the people's money. Then, he has a "Merchant's Pocket Memorandum." Well, that is allowable, for he can use it in public business as well as in his own. But there is one thing that I think we have a perfect right to protest against as a party. If the hon. gentleman is anxious to have the portrait of his Premier, the right hon. leader of the Government, hung up in his bedroom or before his desk, he might very well afford to take a little of his pocket-money and buy it. Why should he frame this right hon. gentleman and stick him up in his department, and pay for him with the people's money! That old gentleman out in the North-west who was going to bless the Lord for the election of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, when he comes to pay his proportion of the taxes for the portraits of their leader for these gentlemen, he will begin to do something else than bless, by-and-by. Well, there are a great many other small incidentals that we might mention, but we will not. I forbear to harrow up the feelings of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). But these are extravagances which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) the other day condemned in round terms. He thought they ought not to be allowed, that it was a petty piece of business, and that the Minister should not be engaged in buying these "Antonyms and Synonyms," and "Practical Quotations," and paying for them out of the people's money.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Of course, I understand the hon. gentleman's tone in speaking of these things. But this likeness of the Prime Minister, if there be an item of that kind, is certainly not for my private use. If the hon. gentleman will call into my office, he will be pleased to see it there.

Mr. FOSTER. I have seen quite enough of the original.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Chairman, I earnestly hope, that the press of the Reform party will not treat my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) to such abuse as the "Mail and Empire" and other Tory journals used to treat me, when I undertook to do that which he is undertaking to do now. I congratulate my hon. friend, and I think that what he is doing is perfectly right. Sometimes things of this kind are done by officers in the departments, and the Minister in charge is not aware of it until he turns up and finds items of this kind in the Auditor General's Report. It is perfectly right, that the attention of the hon. Minister should be called to these things, and in future, I think, they should be stopped. I congratulate my hon. friend upon his criticism; I think that it is quite right, and I hope the head of the department will see that matters of this kind are kept within proper limits.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the explanations made by the hon. Minister of Customs are not quite satisfactory. He tells us, that he brought two young men into the department, one from Montreal and one from some place else, and gave them $700 during the current fiscal year, and that he proposes to make an increase of $50 to their salaries. As was pointed out by the ex-Minister of Finance, he is, in that, violating the law and the spirit of the Act for which hon. gentlemen themselves are responsible.

The rule was, that a clerk coming into the department, having passed his examination, should receive a salary of $400, and in that department there are other gentlemen who started at $400. I do not see the names of these gentlemen in the Civil Service List. Is it proposed to put them on the permanent staff?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. They are the extra clerks.

Mr. WALLACE. I know; but is it proposed to give them $50 of an increase and put them on the permanent staff?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I could not do that, except by paying them as second-class clerks, and giving them an advance of $700.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, the Minister could do that in the way that the law provides, and which is considered the proper way of appointment. The Minister proposes to violate the rule that has been laid down, and we were told that it was an excellent rule, by giving these men $750 each. We have officers in the Customs Department to-day who have been many years in the service, who have passed their examination, who have been drilled and trained in the work of the Customs Department, and who are becoming, year by year, more efficient public officers; yet these two men are pitchforked in, who, the Minister says, are excellent, good men, though he does not know much about their qualifications, because he tells us, that he is not able to say what branch they are in. Therefore, when he said, that they were excellent, good men, he perhaps meant it in a general way. But he tells us, Col. Ince died last year, and that another officer was superannuated.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, it was a messenger.

Mr. WALLACE. Was there not another superannuated?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not sure that it was during last year; I think it was during the year before.

Mr. WALLACE. Was Mr. Baker superannuated?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, but I think it was the year before; I am not sure.

Mr. WALLACE. No; it was certainly since the last session of Parliament. Notwithstanding that these two highly salaried officers have been superannuated and that a messenger has been superannuated, whose salary had attained the maximum, we find the expenses of the department not decreased, but increasing. You have a man whose salary goes up year by year. His duties are the same, perhaps, as he performed when he was getting the salary of a young man. A new man comes in, young, active and vigorous, let us say, in the statistical branch, who has good mental powers of calculation, and he does his work efficiently, but he only gets $400 or $500 a year. Then, there should be a great saving in that way, because, in the case of superannuation, it becomes a charge upon another branch of the service, and does not appear as a charge against that particular department. In this case these three officers in the inside service are no more. I would like to ask the Minister, who have disappeared from the inside service during the year, if he remembers.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. There were 31 in the inside service last year, as the hon. gentleman will see, if he turns to the civil service item, and 29 this year.

Mr. WALLACE. And the expenses are within $300 of the same amount.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes, on contingent account.

Mr. WALLACE. No, but this is not contingencies; this is salaries.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the contingent account, under consideration now, there is an increase of $190, but there is a decrease of $300 in the item of civil government for that department, so that the expenses of the department have not increased, on the whole.

Mr. WALLACE. One hundred and ten dollars.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. But there are these two salaried officers who were getting $1,800, and there is one messenger, who is getting $500, making $4,100 altogether, who are now out of the department, whose places are taken by others, three of whom, together, would not make a salary of one of these old officers, Col. Ince or Mr. Baker, and in that the messenger would come in also. An excellent clerk would be glad to commence at $500, but the Minister has started these gentlemen at $700 the first year, and is giving them an increase, because, as he tells us, they are most excellent officers. He has, however, no specific information. I presume, that these gentlemen have passed the civil service examination, though the Minister has not said so. Would the Minister tell us, whether they have passed the civil service examination?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I believe so.

Mr. WALLACE. Very well; they have passed the civil service examination, they have come in at a salary of $700 the first year, and they are getting $750 the next year. There are some excellent officers, whose names I see here, and who have been many years in the service, most efficient men—I need not read them, but I might mention: John Archibald Watson, Adélar Marie Lafontaine, and Herbert Victor Rorke, whom I know to be efficient and capable men.

Mr. WALLACE.

Mr. COCHRANE. How much are they getting?

Mr. WALLACE. Their salaries, after eight or nine years' service, are $700 a year. These two men are pitchforked in without experience, and they are getting $700, which, I think, is a very great injustice. Mr. Rorke was an accomplished shorthand writer, a thorough business man. I do not see the names of these men that the Minister has appointed, because I do not know them, but they will have to be very good men before they equal the class of Messrs. Watson, Lafontaine or Rorke. Mr. Watson compiled the regulations, under the direction of the then commissioner, and he is a most efficient officer. This gentleman's name stands at $700, while the new men coming in, and about whom the Minister knows nothing of their efficiency, get $750. The Minister is acting contrary to the spirit and letter of the law in bringing these men to the department and increasing their salaries year after year. If these men are necessary, and I assume they are, the Minister should avail himself of the law, and put them on the permanent staff, and thus do justice to these efficient and competent men who already have been appointed.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE. Did I understand the Minister to say that there were sixty superannuations in his department during the last two years?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. How many superannuations were there?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Do you mean in the outside service?

Mr. CLARKE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the information now, but I will be ready to tell when we reach the vote for the outside service. What I said was that there were 31 clerks in the inside service last year, and there are 29 now, but there are these two extra ones that come under the head of contingencies, so that there are the same number of officers employed. But, as I explained, this is accomplished at a less expenditure than before. I quite agree with my predecessor (Mr. Wallace) in office, in reference to Mr. Rorke, and some of the gentlemen he has mentioned; they are very good men indeed, and I am giving them their increase of $50, as I have done in the case of all the third-class clerks.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I call the attention of the Minister to the fact, that there does not seem to have been much care exercised in the purchase of books. Here is this "Encyclopedia of Practical Quotations," and I find it cost the Marine Department $12, whereas the Minister of Customs got it for $8. The price seems pretty high, but leaving that question aside, there should be an explanation as to why the same book, apparently, should cost $4 to one Minister more than to another.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is very hard to deal with the thousand and one applications constantly made to purchase books. It seems to me they are not purchased by the departments generally, but that each individual Minister may be persuaded to order a copy.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am not inclined to quarrel with a certain amount of freedom being allowed a Minister in the purchase of these books, although the purchase of such a book as this does seem to be travelling pretty far afield. I should like, however, to get some explanation in regard to the difference in price.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I do not understand how the Minister of Customs was able to make such a good bargain, but I did the best I could at the time. I may tell my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that I did not find the Marine Department library equipped as it ought to be when I went there. There were no books at all in the place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not take them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not charge that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This certainly does seem to indicate a certain degree of looseness in the purchase of these books.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was very remiss indeed in not supplying his department with this "Encyclopedia of Practical Quotations," I sent to the Library and got a copy of it.

Mr. WALLACE. Is it practical?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is very practical. Here is a sample of the quotations, which are extremely practical:

Continuis voluptatibus vicina satietas.

Jam satis est.

Populus me sibilat, at mihi plaudo. Ipsi domi, simul ac nummos contempler in arca.

Arcanum neque tu scrutaveris ullius unquam commissumve teges et vino tortus et ira.

I do not see how the Department of Marine and Fisheries ever got along during the regime of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) without that. Here is a practical quotation which my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries no doubt studies:

Mare quidem commune cert est omnibus.—The sea is certainly common to all.

My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) no doubt got that for the purpose of another Behring Sea arbitration. Here is another quotation: "Pari vantes in gurgite vasto." I do not think any criticism should be made on either of these departments for getting this book, for I certainly do not see how the Department of Marine and Fisheries ever got along without it, and if the Department of Trade and Commerce has a copy of the book, it must be equally beneficial.

Mr. SPROULE. The Department of Trade and Commerce will especially need it for use in the High Commission at Washington.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is taking a very unfair advantage of the ex-Ministers on this side of the House, for the Ministers to fortify themselves with this "Encyclopedia of Practical Quotations." How is it possible for us to hold our way in debate if this thing is allowed? I think, Mr. Chairman, it ought to be distinctly understood that ex-Ministers should be supplied with this book as well as Ministers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The other book, "Be Your Own Lawyeer," for $3, raises a very interesting question. The purchase of this book involves a very great reflection on the present Minister of Justice. When Sir Oliver Mowat occupied that position, none of the departments apparently departed from the usual course of taking their law from him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This was in Sir Oliver Mowat's time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I venture to say that the Minister of Customs will not assert that he required any such book in Sir Oliver Mowat's time. But this circumstance suggests many things in connection with the popular rumour that the present Minister of Justice had great difficulty in reaching that position. First of all, he had some difficulty in reaching the Senate, but he forced his way in there, and finally, if the rumour be right, he forced his way into the Department of Justice; and forthwith the various departments purchased copies of this book, "Be Your Own Lawyer." Now, in addition to its involving a grave reflection on the Department of Justice generally, I would like to call the attention of the Government to the fact that that book is not required unless for the purpose of coming to some conclusion in regard to questions of law; and, without saying what every lawyer on the Treasury benches knows, how dangerous a book of that kind is in the hands of a layman, no matter how bright a layman he may be, it indicates what other things have seemed to indicate, that there has been under this régime a departure from a very wholesome practice. Last session, for instance, it was clear that certain legal documents which had been presented to this House had never been revised by the Department of Justice. I speak in all seriousness in this connection, and I think I shall be able to make my point good. The Mackenzie & Mann contract was a document which was shown to be remarkable, by the admissions of members of the Government themselves, in not safeguarding the public interests in several particulars; and, after debate, the members of the Government were forced to promise amendments. The Solicitor General also practically admitted in debate that neither he, as Solicitor General, nor the Department of Justice had seen the document, which every one knows came from the hands of the solicitor of the contractors, nor was it revised by any officer of the legal department; nor had it been revised, so far as its technical features were concerned, by the chief engineer of the Department of Railways, as the Minister of Railways practically admitted. Consequently, in very important particulars, it was drawn without regard to the interests of the country. Now, there is a lease, which is evoking a great deal of discussion in the country, and apparently causing litigation in the city of Vancouver—a most disgraceful document, which does not pretend on its face to be complete; and yet it has the name of the Minister of Militia inscribed upon it. I venture to say that such a document was not drawn or revised or approved by the Department of Justice, for it is not possible that such a document ever came from the hands of a trained solicitor or from the regular legal department of the Government. And when we find such a book as this in the hands of the Department of Customs, it does indicate that each Minister is attending to his own particular business without reference to his colleagues in Council, and without reference to such matters to the department which is provided by the country with all the means for seeing that the legal work of the Government is properly done; and the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, representing that department in this House, are supposed to take the responsibility for all work of a legal character. I can remember that when the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace) occupied the office, in matters of a legal character, even in formal matters, reference was made to the Department of Justice, where the Controller himself had no doubt what the law was. He properly, as did all the other departments, put that responsibility on the Department of Justice. There was a discussion in this House, for instance, when we were asked that a law clerk should be provided for the Department of Railways and Canals, in connection with certain clerical work, as it was explained, and not involving responsibility for opinions in the way of guiding the department. Now, I mention two particular documents. The one was not in itself or in its language a disgrace to any department, in not being drawn by a lawyer. It was drawn by a lawyer, and a very astute and able lawyer; but it was drawn by the lawyer of the parties who were dealing with the Government, and was not revised by the department which the country appoints to protect the interests of the public. In the other case, the document has all the ear-marks of not having been through the Department of Justice. I do not believe for a moment, unless the Minister of Militia will state differently, that that document was ever drawn in the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him for a moment. He characterizes the lease he has referred to as disgraceful. I can only say that that lease is a printed form of lease which has been used in the Department of Militia for many years. I did not inquire where the form was made, or whether the Department of Justice had sent it to the Department of Militia or not; but I assumed that it was, in the first instance, a form that was carefully prepared by the Department of Justice. So long as I have been in the department, and I believe for long before, every lease of lands made by the department has been drawn in that form; and my officers have not told me that it was necessary to refer it to the Department of Justice, and I say at once frankly that it was not referred to the Department of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Without going back or saying whether any other Ministers have been lax in this respect, the admissions of the hon. Minister of Militia do strengthen my position, which is one in the interests of the country, that is, that there should not only be uniformity in the position taken by the different departments in regard to any legal principle, but in the matter of conveyancing no such loose practice should prevail as the Minister of Militia says prevails in his department and prevailed under his predecessor.

As to the question of forms being used, a form may suit a certain thing and not another. In this particular case, care had not been taken to fill in all the blanks, and so there has been a jumble, in connection with which the Queen's name is used, and most extraordinary expressions occurred. I have seen what is no doubt an authentic copy, because it is the one communicated officially to the Vancouver corporation. I would suggest to the Government the advisability of reverting to the practice which formerly obtained. I can recollect many instances of lawyers of great ability filling positions of heads of departments, but no matter what their ability was, having regard to the principle of uniformity in law matters, all such matters were referred to the law department, and there was a certain satisfactory result that might not be obtained if each department looked after these matters itself. The country would make a great deal more money in the long run if the Minister of Customs would burn that book and lose it and the three dollars paid for it.

Mr. CLARKE. Who is the author of this book ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have a strong suspicion that it is some lawyer who has succeeded in selling it to the department, because I know of no other way in which a lawyer can better do business with the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Marine would tell us where he got the book. I am surprised that any lawyer would buy this book : "Be Your Own Lawyer."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It must have been a remnant left over by my predecessors.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, I deny that.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is all very well for gentlemen on the Treasury benches to laugh this off, and get out of it in the same way as they have all the holes they have got into, by saying the Tories did it. It looks rather serious that the Minister of Customs should have taken upon himself to bring in two gentlemen at salaries exceeding those of men who were appointed years ago. These two men were given salaries of $700 each at the very start, when other men who have been years in the service had to start on salaries of $400 and were now getting less than the two new men appointed. I doubt very much whether these two men ever passed the civil service examination, and it is an insult to the intelligence of this House to ask us to believe that they could be efficient as men who were appointed eight or ten years ago, and have passed all their examinations satisfactorily. And not only has he given these men these large salaries to start with, but he is now giving them the $50 increase just the same as if they had been years in the service. Then, take that book, "Every Man His Own Lawyer." True, it cost only $2, but why should the country be asked to pay for it? Why should the taxpayers who, the Minister of Trade and Commerce used to tell us, were being bled white by the extravagance of the Tory party, be saddled with all these useless expenses? Why should they have to pay for the smiles of the right hon. leader of the Government transferred to canvas and lighting up from their glittering frames the offices of the Cabinet Ministers? I do not care how many of these pictures a Minister may have in his office; but if he wants to have the likeness of any man smiling on him from the walls, he ought to be able to pay for it out of his own salary, and not charge it to the country.

Mr. FOSTER. I see that the Postmaster General has been a sinner in this respect also. He has branched out a little on his own hook. He has bought two very compendious volumes of the "History of Canada." I do not know what history it is, but they cost $9 each. Surely he is quite able to pay out of his own salary for any books he requires to make up his library. He has also bought the "Canadian Men of the Times," three volumes at $6. What in the world does he want of these books in his departmental business? It may be all very well to be generous with those people who are hawking around these publications from one department to the other, but my hon. friend ought not to be generous with the people's money. He has also bought the "Encyclopedia of Practical Quotations," $8. In those trying times when he was endeavouring, by proclamation and otherwise, to bring about a change in the postal rates, he seemed to have had an eye aloft, for I see he has paid with the people's money for a copy of "Debrett's Peerage." No doubt he wanted to learn what ribbons and insignia belonged to the different orders. No doubt, by the midnight lamp, he was looking over the arcana of the knighthood of St. Michael and St. George, and taking a note of all the possible honours that might come to him from this great public service he was endeavouring to give the Empire. Then, my hon. friend has been getting an English and French dictionary. Altogether he has a pretty large list of books which are of no use to the department in departmental work, but simply figures for the use of the Minister himself, or some favourite of the Minister. Now, I think we all ought to have common sense enough to see that this thing ought not to go on. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries was inveigled into making a statement of that kind the other day—whether in a moment of frankness or in a moment of weakness, I do not know. But he does not seem ready to—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But you are not satisfied; you are bringing it up again.

Mr. FOSTER. But the hon. gentleman's colleagues do not seem to be of his way of thinking. I think he ought to have a word to say on the matter every time it is brought up. It is only by constant reiteration of these things that we can get a reform made. I think my hon. friend would qualify better as one of the Canadian men of the time if he would effect a reform.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) should have some sympathy with the occupants of the Treasury benches. We have great difficulty, I can assure him, in keeping the treasury from the men of the time, and the women of the time also. Not later than to-day I received a petition, signed by the members of the House and the Senate, and I think my hon. friend's (Mr. Foster) name was upon it.

Mr. FOSTER. A petition, what for ?

The PRIME MINISTER. To acquire "The Men and Women of the Time." If the name of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Foster) was not on it, the name of his neighbour (Sir Charles Tupper) was.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will not find my name on it.

Mr. ROGERS. I am entirely in sympathy with the criticism we have heard.

Mr. FOSTER. Where is the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell).

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, I am in sympathy, too.

Mr. ROGERS. If such things have to be done, it is all the more aggravating when it reaches the ears of the public. It is not the sum of money paid—though that is bad enough—but it is the idea—I would not like to put it in as strong language as it deserves, but let us say the ridiculous idea—of these things being charged to the public. The people are getting tired of this sort of thing. The great taxpayers of the country, the farmers, think there is no need of such expenditures. If such expenditures were spoken of on the platform, they would be severely criticised. We should judge them here as we judge them there. Anything done in this House should be such as can be made known to the people in any part of the country. These expenditures, trifling in themselves, it is true, could not be endorsed. If I were in the position myself, I would rather a hundred times pay the amounts out of my own pocket than be required to defend them here or elsewhere.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to call the attention of the Government to the high strain of morality of their supporter (Mr. Rogers) who has just sat down. He thinks that they should do these things, but should keep them from the knowledge of the people; that it is very embarrassing to him—and I am sure it must be a matter of very great embarrassment, after preaching against such "rascalities," as he used to call them—to get up and justify these acts on the part of the Government of which he is a supporter. So I think the Government might profit by the advice he has given them and keep these things hidden away and not let the world know that they have been indulging—

Mr. GIBSON. That is a Tory practice.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, the Tories, whatever they bought, published it to the world, and gave the member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) an opportunity to declaim against the transaction when on his political campaign. But now that he has to go out and defend these things, he very righteously and very properly, in his own interest—beseeches the Government that these things should be covered up so that he may not be placed in the difficult position of having to justify such purchases on the part of the Postmaster General as "Debrett's Peerage," and a large list of other books, which, no doubt, will adorn the library of the Postmaster General, but which he ought to be able and willing to pay for himself. For instance, we have here the "Army List Monthly," $4.90; "Debrett's Peerage," $7; a French and English dictionary, $6; "Journal of the Canadian Banker's Association," $7; "The Annual Register," $3.70—perhaps that might be in some way useful to the department, but I do not know that it is. Then we have the United States Postal Guide. No doubt that is required, but we know that the departments of various Governments exchange their documents, so there is no necessity to make such a purchase. Then we have in the Department of Customs, as has already been pointed out, these books which have no possible connection with the work of the department and which, I am sure, the hon. member for Frontenac would be delighted to be assured by the Minister of Customs were charged by mistake and would be paid for out of his own pocket, as they ought to be.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I cannot agree with that yet. It may have been a book ordered by my predecessor the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) when he was in office and paid for last year. No doubt it is in the Library there. I will have to learn a little more about the matter before I can speak with certainty.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I find that the only department of the Government that has not bought that wretched little book "Be Your Own Lawyer" was the Department of Justice. But here is a book I would like to see produced and laid on the Table. It was purchased by the Minister of the Interior, and is entitled "Dictionary of Our Faults." If we could get that book, it would save any amount of time and trouble.

Mr. GIBSON. That ought to be a big volume.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to know if the Minister of Customs is making provision for the library that seems to be rapidly growing in his department. Not only this year but last year and the year before some very expensive books have been bought, and, apparently, quite as useless as those that have been named. I find that last year a dictionary encyclopedia was bought. I do not know if it is the same character as the encyclopedia bought this year. The people will be curious to know what these books were bought for. In buying books the department should have some aim other than getting rid of a man who goes there to sell them. I can quite understand the pressure that exists, but it should not be yielded to, no matter what Government is in power. I must say that I dissent from the morality preached by the hon. gentleman from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers). He said that it is a scandal to buy such books, but the wrong does not reach its climax until the fact of buying them is made public. My hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) will have to answer when he goes before his constituents. I am afraid that he will have to say that at least he winked at this kind of thing if he did not directly sanction it. I hope that when the proper time comes he will avail himself of the forms of the House and will move a resolution condemning the Government for such action. If he does, he will be able to go back to his constituency, at least, making some external show of sincerity.

Mr. CLARKE. This book, "Be Your Own Lawyer," seems to be a general favourite with the departments. I would suggest that one or two copies be placed in the Library of Parliament. I have been sending into the Library to make inquiries about it, to see what kind of a book it is, but there is no copy of that work there. Might I suggest to some of the Ministers who have purchased more than one copy, that they might supply the Library with it? It seems to be a valuable work, and I think the members of the House should have an opportunity of consulting it during the session of Parliament.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to show the House how thoroughly the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) is going into the business of reform. We find, not only a "Dictionary of Our Faults"—that evidently refers to the present Administration—but we also find another one, "The Administration of the Old Régime." I think both these books ought to be laid on the Table of the House.

Ocean and river service—Maintenance and repairs to Government steamers $145,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the reason of the increase?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Previous to 1897-98, the appropriation for Dominion steamers was $132,400, exclusive of the supplementary votes for extensive repairs. But in 1897-98 the "Aberdeen" was engaged in the fishery protection service, and the large sum which is required to maintain her, was not, therefore, paid out of this vote, and it was reduced to $112,400. But the current fiscal year, the "Aberdeen" is employed in the lighthouse and coast service, and her maintenance will be paid out of this vote; therefore, it has been increased.

Mr. McINERNEY. I want to call attention to a mistake in the Estimates. The increase, instead of being $33,000, is $43,000. The difference between $102,000 and $145,000 is $43,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, the increase is $33,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the Minister mention the names of the steamers now in the service?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The "Druid," the "Lansdowne," the "Newfield," the "Quadra," now in British Columbia, the "Aberdeen," the "Quebec" and the "Stanley."

Mr. COCHRANE. Which of these is at the disposal of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte)?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. None of them. The "Druid" is on buoy service below Quebec. The "Stanley," in the winter season, is engaged in the service of the winter crossing. The "Aberdeen" was, the previous year, engaged in the fisheries; she is now in the buoy and lighthouse service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the hon. gentleman is constructing a new boat.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but only for winter service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman the particulars of the new boat?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; I gave them last year, but I can give them again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the vote include the maintenance of the steamer that is building?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; the steamer that is building will not be in the service this summer at all. She will take her place in the winter service next winter, and there will be a vote for her, in addition to this. I will give the hon. gentleman the particulars about this boat. The original contract was for £34,050. The addition for increased horsepower was £2,000. Some alterations were made in the stern of the boat, at the instance of the inspector, whose name I forget; but he was an engineer in Glasgow, a first-class man. Pistons and guides, and some other alterations run it up, altogether, to £37,403, or equal to $182,027. I think the vote the House gave me was $180,000. The vessel is being built at Dundee by the Gourlay Brothers. We had tenders from ten or twelve different firms, the Gourlay Brothers being the lowest. The style of the ship is the same as the "Stanley," only larger and heavier, with very little departure from the theory or the principle on which the "Stanley" was constructed. A good many suggestions were received by the department, and weighed. We consulted with Captain Finlayson and Captain McElhinney, and all those who had been engaged originally in the construction of the "Stanley," and those who had experience since in her working. The general opinion was, that the "Stanley" does about as good work as could be given. Strong efforts were made to induce us to adopt the new principle introduced by Russian ice-breakers, that of a double screw; but, after consulting with the best men we could get information from, we thought it would be rather risky. These double screws are at the sides of the stern, instead of immediately behind it, as the single screw is, and we could not understand how it could be made to work as effectually in the ice as the single screw, submerged to the extent that her screw will be. The name of the steamer, I think, will be the "Minto." I may say, that His Excellency has given his consent to the use of his name. As we have a "Lansdowne," an "Aberdeen" and a "Stanley," I thought proper that we should have a "Minto".

Mr. CLARKE. Was any opportunity given to Canadian firms to tender for the construction of the steamer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, not for that. It was not thought that we had shipyards sufficiently advanced, in the maritime section of the Dominion, at any rate. As to others, they could not get the vessel through the canals very well. I dare say, that there are in my hon. friend's city, as I understand, works perhaps capable of constructing a steamer of that kind. Certainly, if we were calling for the construction of a steamer for the lakes, we would have taken those works into consideration. But it was not done in this case, for these ice-steamers have to be specially constructed. I think this will be found, so far as I can learn, to be a first-class boat. She will be launched about the last of August, and will come across to this side under charge of Captain Finlayson, who will go home to bring her out. He has been for many years captain of the "Stanley," and we propose that he shall take charge of the new boat.

Mr. CLARKE. It seems to me, that the plans, specifications and drawings used for the model of this steamer might have been submitted to firms in the city of Toronto, so that they might have been given an opportunity to tender for this vessel. I believe it is a fact, that the class of work they are turning out now is of the very highest. I think, if the Minister had given them an opportunity of tendering for this boat, they would have been able to give him figures that would have been very satisfactory. I believe there is no insurmountable difficulty in the way of getting a vessel through the canal. It could have been brought through the canal in pieces, as is done frequently in bringing vessels from the upper to the lower lakes, and from the lower lakes to Montreal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not get the hon. gentleman's explanation in regard to the increase of $43,000, instead of $33,000, in this vote. I do not understand him in his explanation about one of the votes, that it has been charged to this service, having been in some other service, and after being charged to some other vote, coming back. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will repeat it. All I want to know is as to why the vote is $43,000 more.

Mr. ELLIS. If you will look at the first column you will find that it does not add.

Mr. McDUGALL. There is an error of $10,000.

Mr. McINERNEY. There is a mistake of $10,000 less in the first column, so that would make the difference all the greater.

Mr. ELLIS. The figure $102,000 at the top of the first column should be $112,000.

Mr. McINERNEY. The total is $323,300, instead of $332,300.

Mr. ELLIS. The figure $102,000 should be $112,000, and then it would be right.

Mr. McINERNEY. But I think that a $10,000 mistake occurs at the top of the first column.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The vote was $112,000, and it has been printed $102,000 by mistake.

Mr. McDUGALL. There is a further mistake in the last column where the total decrease should be $185,000 instead of $180,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, that is only dropped from the old vote. Will the hon. gentleman explain the $33,000 increase?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The explanation I have given is the only one I can give. There will be the same steamers, only the "Aberdeen," which was previously in the fishery service, will now be paid out of this vote.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the other vote be decreased?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, there will be a decrease, proportionately, of course.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman, in making up his estimates, taken out so much from the fishery service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, a lump sum. The hon. gentleman will see that we have taken that much, but, in respect to this particular vote, we have found that this year we are very largely behind, and will have to have a supplementary estimate to make up the vote for this year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How much are you behind?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We will have to have a supplementary vote of $20,000 for the present year to make up the amount that we require by which our vote is exceeded.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the reason for this?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The reason simply is that the vote was made up on the assumption that the "Aberdeen" would be in the fishery service, as she had been in past years, but she was transferred to the Quebec lighthouse and buoy service, and she has been engaged in that service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Do you have a surplus in the fishery vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course there will be so much left.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand the hon. Minister that simply means—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no increase whatever.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand the Minister it is this: The "Aberdeen" was estimated for in the fisheries vote. She was, during the past fiscal year, transferred to his marine vote, which was not sufficient to provide for her, and there will be a supplementary amount asked for, but there will be a decrease in the expenditure in the fishery vote of a similar amount.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The fisheries protection service is not decreased, I see, because we have, of course, as you know, a new boat put on last year, the "Osprey," built in Shelburne—a sailing ship.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That would not be anything to compare with the "Aberdeen."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But we have found that we cannot do with less money.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then there is an increase of $33,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, there will not be an increase of $33,000, but there will be some increase over last year. The hon. gentleman will see that the vote for the previous year was $132,000. The vote was put down for one year, but when the "Aberdeen" was put back on the service it was necessary to put it up again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that, and that would have explained it if there had been a decrease in the fisheries vote, but the explanation will not carry the hon. gentleman out in that regard. He has explained that his fisheries vote is to be the same, but it is increased because he had expected to provide out of the fisheries vote for the "Aberdeen." He has had to provide for it out of his other estimates, and in the place of the "Aberdeen" is a sailing yacht, the "Osprey." Of course, the expense of the "Osprey" would be a mere bagatelle in comparison with the expense of a big steamer like the "Aberdeen."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You see, a good many of these charges have been expenses connected with the "Stanley," which sometimes runs for a long time. Last year the expense was $35,529, but it does not follow that it will require all that, because on the other side of the account, the revenues of the "Stanley" are enormous during the winter months. An attempt was made to cut down the cost of the service in the first year after I came in, and most strenuous efforts were made to keep the expenditures within the vote, but we found it could not be done, and it simply had to be increased to the amount necessary to maintain the service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the Auditor General's Report, if it is any guide at all on this vote, there was only an excess in regard to 1896-97 of $244.39, showing that it was a pretty carefully estimated vote, and a much more liberal vote than $112,000 in 1898-99.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think the "La Canadienne" was in that service at all; she was laid up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It was $117,400 in 1896-97, and the estimate was very close, because there was only an excess of $244.39.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). The Minister said that there was a difference in principle between the construction of the new boat and that of the "Stanley." I think it is the intention to use a forward screw in this boat.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it is not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is in the Russian boat that there is to be a forward screw.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macdonald) to page 9 of the last report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, in which the dimensions of the new boat are given, as follows:—

The dimensions of the new steamer will be 225 feet in length between perpendiculars; breadth, moulded 32 feet 6 inches; depth, moulded 20 feet 6 inches. She will be heavily stiffened about the water line with heavy plating and intermediate angle iron framing. Similar plating will be placed on the bows and bottom, extending 70 feet towards midships.

We have followed out the same principle in our construction as was adopted in the construction of the "Stanley," which has been found to work admirably.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister to give me the estimates he has made for each of the votes he mentions of each of the steamers chargeable to maintenance and repairs of Government steamers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot give that. I can give you the expenditure up to April 30th on each of the boats, and it is on the basis of the expenditure that the estimates are made. The expenditure to the 30th of April is as follows:—"Druid," $14,370.69; "Lansdowne," $21,669; "Newfield," $21,756; "Quadra," $22,972; "Aberdeen," $390—she was engaged for a day or two doing some buoy work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that all she cost up to this month. I thought the hon. gentleman said she had been eating up his vote, and that she had come suddenly from the Fisheries into the Marine branch, and created a great disturbance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was slightly in error there. The expenditure which I am reading to you now is not for the nine months, but for the twelve months of 1897-98. "Aberdeen," $390; "Stanley," $35,339—the repairs of the "Stanley" that year cost $10,000, which is included in this sum of $35,339. The general account for printing is also included and that makes $117,644.39 for the year 1897-98, not including the "Aberdeen."

Mr. McDOUGALL. It appears to me that supplies for these steamers are bought in such a way as to make them unnecessarily expensive, and that must be the reason why the large increase appears in the cost of their maintenance. At page K-92, Auditor General's Report, I find very high charges made for goods supplied to the "Aberdeen," and I would like to ask the Minister if these supplies are furnished under contract, or if there is any kind of an agreement, or who has the authority for making these purchases.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nearly everything is purchased by tender; there are some things no doubt which are not.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is it not a fact that the commanders of these steamers have instructions from the department, or from some one on behalf of the Government, to call upon a certain person or a certain firm in the ports which they enter for their supplies, and that these persons who supply the ships are, as a rule, the friends of the Government? Is it not a fact that an order is given to a firm or a supplier of the necessaries for the steamer without any understanding as to the prices to be charged?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no; there is an understanding.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. If there is not an understanding beforehand, I say the Government is responsible for a great deal of the looseness that occurs in the purchase of the supplies. Here is Alphonse Girouard & Co., of Quebec, who charged $4.80 for two dozen of baking powder, and on the same page M. W. Coleman charges $3.60 for one dozen. There are twenty-eight pounds of biscuits at 15 cents per pound; thirty pounds of biscuits at 12 cents, and seventy-eight pounds of biscuits at 10 cents. Can the Minister tell me what kind of biscuits for a steamer's supplies would cost 15 cents per pound. I know of no kind of biscuit to-day required for supplies to these steamers but what should be delivered at a lower price than 12 or 15 cents per pound. I find that molasses is charged at 45 cents and 50 cents a gallon; chocolate, 40 cents a pound; corn, $2.40 a case; candles, 20 cents a pound, and one bucket, $4.80. Can the Minister tell me what kind of a bucket required by the steamer would cost $4.80? Then, again, I find 100 pounds of ship biscuits, ordinary hard tack, charged at $5, and that is an extraordinary high price.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are these supplies purchased by tender?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. None of these are purchased by tender.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is something for the "boy" in that.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I find that in a great many cases the bills are made up for "sundries," without itemizing the articles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in a great many cases. The Auditor General itemizes them all pretty nearly.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I find that throughout the whole list exceedingly high prices are charged the Government.

Mr. KAULBACH. It appears to me that my hon. friend the Minister (Sir Louis Davies) has made a mistake in not asking for tenders for the construction of this steamer in Canada, so that he might assist in encouraging our home industries. I am not quite sure but what a steamer of the description he speaks of could be constructed, if not in Toronto—for the want of greater length in the canals—she could, at all events, be constructed in Nova Scotia. There is an industry in steel plate in New Glasgow.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We consulted with them about it, and we found they were not able to take such a contract.

Mr. KAULBACH. I think I can safely say that a boat of that kind can be constructed in my own town. We build them of wood there, and for the winter service they would be very much stronger than all steel; if they were sheathed with steel plates they would do better service, and I think would last equally as long. If any accident happened, there would be no possible chance of their going immediately to the bottom. If there are any further contracts of this kind, I would ask they be submitted to tender, that we may have an opportunity of ascertaining whether such vessels could be constructed in our own province, particularly in my county, where ship-building is going on very successfully.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am glad to hear that the ship-building industry is prospering in the hon. gentleman's county, but I hardly think such ships could cope with the steel steamer "Minto," which we are having constructed at Dundee. We should have to alter the wooden ship and have it incased in iron, and the opinion of the experts is not in favour of that, after the experiment made with the "Stanley." The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), who refers to the prices, may rest assured that these goods are not bought without the greatest care. The agent has been there many years, and there has been no increase in the prices for the last eight or nine years. The practice has been, before any goods are bought, to obtain from the parties who are supposed to supply goods to the Government steamers, their list of prices for candles, molasses, and everything else.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to ask the Minister if he approves of the principle, not the amount, of this expenditure on the "Druid":

Mrs. Lemieux, Quebec, floral decorations on occasion of Premier's arrival from England..... $15

I could understand the master or captain of a ship putting up the ship's bunting on such an occasion, but I do not think the appropriation contemplates an expenditure of this kind. I do not see that the Auditor General has challenged it, though he has been exceedingly particular about other matters not a bit more important. The principle involved in this ought to be considered, whether the captains or masters of these vessels are to be at liberty to exercise their discretion in buying anything to join in a political celebration for any gentleman, whether the Prime Minister of Canada or anybody else. I could understand a Government ship hoisting its flag and decorating itself on the occasion of a visit of the Prime Minister or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or any other member of the Cabinet; but I think such an expenditure as this is the thin edge of a very dangerous wedge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not at variance with the hon. gentleman on the point; but the bills for the celebration of the Premier's arrival were paid by the people who got up the demonstration and were not charged to the Government at all. I am not saying that some gentlemen did not consider that the Government should pay the bills; but I was very firm about it and refused to pay anything of the kind, with the thorough approval of the Premier himself. But this item of $15 for flowers has slipped in, and the Auditor General seems to have allowed it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A jubilee decoration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I admit that the principle is bad, though the amount is small. I did not know of it, in point of fact, until now. However, it is a venial offence.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The hon. Minister said a moment ago that he was sure no higher prices are being paid by the Government. I notice that flour was bought for the Government from a gentleman in my county at $5 a barrel, and no flour was bought by anybody else at as high a price during that year.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We were not so fortunate in our part of the country.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I buy it and sell it, and I know this man did not sell to other customers for more than $4, or $4.50, or $4.75, the highest. I find the same difference in the prices of other articles.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I can only state that the instructions are very definite and severe, that the agents are bound to buy at the very lowest prices.

Mr. CLARKE. Do they ask for bids for these articles from different dealers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, from perhaps three, or four, or five different parties engaged in the sale of the articles required.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not mean that he asks for public bids?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the hon. Minister say that when they go into Cape Breton, they are permitted to go to Conservatives and buy their supplies?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. When I entered the department I adopted the very excellent rule which I found there, that, other things being equal, the friends of the Government should get the patronage.

Mr. CLARKE. Do I understand from the Minister that when these vessels enter port and need supplies, they go to the leading dealers and ask for prices, and then, other things being equal, they buy from political friends of the Government? Is that the practice?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not think a great deal of fault can be found with that; but, so far as I can see, in most of these cases the top price has been paid. It seems to me that competition must be very limited.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The officers of the Department of Marine are engaged in a constant taxation of the accounts of these people, in the continuous effort to keep down the prices. The consequence is that the department becomes very obnoxious to its friends because it refuses to pay more than the lowest prices for which these articles can be obtained.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the parties are asking exorbitant prices, and are compelling the officers of the department to spend their time fighting them to get their prices reduced, they ought to be struck off the list, and the patronage then given, according to the Minister's rule, to the enemy.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. Minister has disclosed a very important matter. First, we find these things charged for at the top prices. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what the prices were before they were cut down—the prices at which they were bought by an officer acting under instructions. If there were a capable officer, with character and stamina enough to purchase these things at the proper prices, there would be no occasion for the officers of the department to cut them down, and fight their own friends. I am not going to complain of the system, which is pretty well understood, of buying supplies from the friends of the Government. I do not object to that at all. But I do object to the Government defending prices which are entirely too high. I would not like to charge that the officer who purchases the supplies is in league with the seller, but it has happened in other cases, and the hon. gentleman had better inquire and see whether the officers comply with the instructions which he has given.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The accounts of all these people are critically examined by my officers. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows, I am neither able nor competent to do this myself, but I have officers who follow this up from year to year, and they are never interfered with by their political heads. They have the public interest at heart, and take good care that no imposition is allowed.

Mr. COCHRANE. How can they prevent it? You have an officer who buys his own supplies? Is there any official in the department, who, if these supplies are bought at too high a rate, can cut down the accounts? It appears to me, that, when these gentlemen go to buy supplies, the man with the strongest political pull, who has done the most party service, gets the contract.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not likely to be the case in my department, because, unfortunately for me, I have not been able to appoint any agents from my political friends at all. The agents at Quebec, St. John, Charlottetown, Halifax and in British Columbia—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All good men.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—were all appointed by my political opponents, long before I came into office. They are instructed to see, that there is competition, to get prices from all those in the business. These agents have their instructions, and, if in league with anybody to defraud the department, I should be very much surprised.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not want to criticise those agents, but I am of the opinion, that, if a captain goes into port, he does not call on your official, but goes and buys what he wants himself.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Wherever there is an agent, he goes to the agent; but, of course, if he goes into an outlying port and requires supplies, you will have to depend upon him.

Mr. CLARKE. The last explanation of the hon. Minister does not coincide exactly with the one he gave us a short time ago. We understood, that the rule adopted in his department was, that, other things being equal, political friends should secure the orders for supplies, and I am not quarrelling with that rule. But now he tells us, that the purchasing agents were directed to ask for bids for supplies only from the Government's own political friends. If the department wants best value for its money, it should ask for tenders from all those engaged in the trade, without regard to politics, and then, if the bids of political friends are not higher than those of the other parties, no one could object to their getting the contract.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We take care to ensure competition.

Mr. CLARKE. But you cannot, if you confine the officer to your political friends, and allow him to take prices only from those in the trade who are your political friends. If that is the rule—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the rule.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, that explains why we find such very high prices all through the Auditor General's accounts charged for supplies purchased for these vessels.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister cannot take the position of irresponsibility, if his officers are instructed to only deal with certain parties. If he wants to shirk responsibility, he must ask for public competition and tender. But, if he does, what I do not deny was done in my time, give instruction with regard to certain supplies for these steamers, and direct that they be given to the friends of the Government, all things being equal, he cannot avoid responsibility, because his officers are not free agents. The hon. gentleman cannot give his officers such instructions, and then hold them responsible for not getting the lowest prices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hold them responsible to see, that no goods are bought at higher prices than they could be obtained for.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman cannot hold them responsible for conniving at high charges or for gross carelessness; but, as the hon. member for Cape Breton has pointed out, these prices seem exorbitant, and the Minister cannot fall back and shift his responsibility on to officers who are not as free as they should be. They are trammelled by being told to deal with certain individuals, and would hesitate to pass over these individuals, and incur the hostility of the friends of the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad to see the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) in his seat, because he will be able to correct the statements I am about to make, if they should be in any way inaccurate. It is evident, from the prices I am about to quote, that political friends of the Government have the pull. On page 310 of the Auditor General's Report, I find that Mr. Cotter, who, I presume, is a supporter of my hon. friend opposite, supplied the steamer "Lansdowne" with 11 barrels of potatoes at $2.50 per barrel. That was in the year 1898. I know, that we imported potatoes from there last year, and sold them in our town at about 50 cents per barrel, and in the previous year you could hardly give them away.

Mr. CLARKE. They may have been sweet potatoes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then we come to turnips, which are worth about 10 cents a wagon-load. Mr. David Rae sold them at 10 cents to 25 cents to our farmers to carry them away by the wagon-load.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You mean, for a bushel.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, 10 cents to 25 cents per wagon-load. He had more than he knew what to do with.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How many thousand of those loads would you deliver at the different places at that price?

Mr. TAYLOR. Never mind that part of it. The hon. member for St. John will not say that turnips were worth $1.50 a barrel, or more than 50 cents a bushel. Then there is another friend of hon. gentlemen who figures for a bill of supplies amounting to $243.87, and every item at proportionately high prices. Then, on the next page, we find the name of E. J. Kennedy, St. John—

Mr. ELLIS. A very good man.

Mr. TAYLOR. And a very good and enthusiastic supporter of my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis), no doubt. It is evident that there was a division of patronage. They did not ask the hon. gentleman's supporters in any line of business to compete, but gave the account to one man one month and to another man the next. Mr. Kennedy figures for a bill of supplies to the steamer "Lansdowne," amounting to $700.94. Apples he charges at $5.50 a barrel. We know what they can be bought for. There must be at least $2 profit there "for the boy." The next item is fifty-nine pounds of baking powder at 50 cents a pound. Surely there was a commission of 25 or 30 per cent on that to Mr. Kennedy or to somebody else. Pease—we know what pease can be bought for—are charged here at $2.40 a bushel, and beans at $2 a bushel.

Mr. CLARKE. These must be French pease.

Mr. TAYLOR. No doubt—such as you can buy anywhere at 60 cents a bushel. You can buy white beans at from 60 cents to 80 cents a bushel. If this is the way this economical and honest Government are dealing with their political supporters in St. John and other places, this item must not pass until the matter is investigated, and a tabulated statement of items made up to show how two and three prices are paid for goods to friends of hon. gentlemen opposite. Can any gentleman rise in this House and say that apples in St. John last year were $5.50 a barrel?

Mr. ELLIS. How many barrels?

Mr. TAYLOR. One barrel.

Mr. ELLIS. A barrel of good apples was worth $4 or $5 last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. You could buy them in the city of Ottawa for far less.

Sir CHARLES HUBBERT TUPPER. But those are Ontario apples; the apples charged here are Nova Scotia apples.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Ocean and river service—Maintenance and repairs to Government steamers. $145,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand we are still on the item in regard to steamers. On page 4 of the last report of the Marine Department, I observe that the "Newfield," as usual, has been engaged in cable work, and I would like to know from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if the system that used to obtain, still obtains, and if the Department of Public Works pays for the running of that vessel while she is on cable work, and in that way the hon. gentleman reduces his estimate for the "Newfield."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same system prevails, but unfortunately I have not obtained from the Public Works Department the necessary sum which they owe to us. The vote of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) is exhausted, and he is applying for a supplementary to enable him to pay me. There is no change in the way of keeping the accounts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A question came up some years ago to which reference was made, I think, last session with regard to the fishery service. Does the Minister now retain as many as possible of the trained and drilled sailors of the fishery protection service, on the full payroll during the winter?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same system prevails that did before. The officers are retained on half-pay, and we give to the seamen who have acquitted themselves creditably, the prior right to re-enter the next spring; we always re-engage them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is a very important subject, and the reference the hon. gentleman makes to it, rather leaves me under the impression that he has not made much progress in the good direction in which the department started, and which I think would command the unanimous support of the House, even if it involved a little additional expense. When I had to do with that department, I learned that during the summer season we obtained from the very best possible recruiting class, a body of sailors for the fishery protection service, who, as regards physique and intelligence, were all that was required to make first-class and well-disciplined sailors. At the end of the season they had a natural preference instilled into them for that life, as compared with the hard and rough coasting life to which they had been confined hitherto, or the rougher life of fishing on the banks. But a large proportion of those men, unable to be idle, and unwilling to go back to their old life, were tempted to go into the neighbouring country and enlist on the ships of war in that country. In the case, for instance, of the vessel that was sunk in the harbour of Havana, there were ten or eleven Nova Scotians, first-class seamen, on that vessel, and I think some gunners as well. And it is so throughout the American navy. Unless great care is taken, while protecting our fisheries on the Atlantic coast, we would be training in this way men to supply ships in a foreign service. That is in no sense desirable; the Minister, I am sure, is with me in that respect. Now that having been brought to my attention, I began very gingerly, having the fear of the Minister of Finance before my eyes, to transfer men from the fisheries service in the winter months, on to such ships as remained in commission, the "Newfield" particularly, if I remember aright, and the "Langdowne" as well. I transferred the first-class men recommended by the commander of the fisheries service, without regard to any other consideration except their fitness for the service. I could not put them on the pay-lists of the marine service, that is to say, the marine service proper did not require them, but of course it increased a little the expenditure on those boats. That is a system that I believe should recommend itself to all concerned. I mention the subject now in the hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will go further than I did; for that was only a beginning, and secure an even more efficient service than he has now by reason of keeping them. Whether they go into a foreign service or not, they cannot be relied on by the Minister if they are not paid during the season when there is no necessity for their services in fishery protection. Although the service is most creditable at the present time, still by increasing the inducements to the men, the Minister would have a finer service than even now. From a national standpoint, I hope the hon. gentleman will very seriously consider the adoption of the system I have outlined.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am quite at one with my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in his contention, but I have not heard from Commander Spain—who takes a good deal of interest in the matter—that there have been any losses whatever among the men we desire to retain in the fishery service, owing to the fact, that we pay them off during the fishing season. If there had been any proportion of our men lost by reason of this cause, I should have been prepared to consider the matter in the sense indicated by the hon. gentleman, and to retain these men in the service, either by giving them pay in part, or by transferring them to some boats that are used during the winter. So far, the matter has not presented itself in a practical form, because, fortunately, we have retained all the men we desire to retain. I have in my mind a scheme for promoting much more than heretofore the efficiency of that service. I recognize the importance of making these men feel that they are a trained class, whose services will be retained as long as they discharge their duties faithfully. So far, I have been able to retain them all, quite irrespective of politics—there never has been the slightest sign of a dismissal among the men for any political reasons whatever, and I think they all understand that thoroughly. I am desirous of having, if possible, in the fishery protection service a class of men who are properly trained in the use of quick-firing guns and in the use of small arms. Special instructions were given to Captain Spain last year, and repeated this year, with a view to that. It may be possible for me to present to this House yet, during the session, some proposal for the training of these seamen under a scheme which I have more or less formulated, and which is under consideration, whereby these men can be fitted, not only to discharge the duties we ask of them, but to take their places on board a British man-of-war for four months of one or two years successively; and thus, having passed, in the first instance, our examination, and passed the four months' service on board a British man-of-war, and qualified themselves for the Canadian naval reserve—as I hope to see it established some day—to obtain the pensions which are paid by the British Government to the Royal Naval Reserve. That scheme I am not in a position to present to the House now, but I am not without hopes I may be able to do it at a day not far distant.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
This session?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would not like to pledge myself to that.

Mr. CLARKE. Has there not been some correspondence between the Canadian authorities and the Imperial authorities, respecting the sending of men to train on the British warships?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was some correspondence with respect to establishing a training ship, but when that had proceeded a certain length, we found a strong opposition to it, not by reason of any opposition to the scheme itself, but from the fact, that those who had studied the question believed, that the end would be better attained by establishing training stations on shore. The question now under consideration—which I hope to submit to my colleagues at an early date—is the establishment at different places along our coast of training stations, where the men can get the same training as on board a man-of-war. What we are trying to do is to obtain from the British Government a consent, that the armament, which is the most expensive part of it, shall be provided by them, and, if they provide us with that, we will provide the men, and provide the expense necessary to train the men by bringing naval instructors from the mother country to train them every winter. Then, such of these men as are willing can go on board the British naval ships, and receive a four months' training, or a six months' training—four months we hope to make it. That would put them in a position to establish themselves on the naval reserve, and would entitle them to receive a pension. The scheme is not yet completed, and we have not received the official approval of the English authorities, but it is being carefully considered. I do not like to say more now than to express the hope, that I may be able to present the scheme to the House this session.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I, for one, would be very glad, if, in discussing this scheme with the Imperial authorities, the Canadian Government can see its way clear, not to insist on the Imperial Government supplying the armament at its cost. There has been, in connection with all this question, so much feeling in England—a great deal of it, I think, unreasonable—as to our niggardliness in matters of defence, that perhaps it would be just as well not to be cheese-paring about a scheme of that kind: a scheme which, I think, would commend itself to the patriotic spirit of the country. I would be sorry to see the scheme delayed because of the chaffering between one Government and the other with regard to that particular item, but I have no doubt the Minister is considering that very carefully. I have not, of course, had an opportunity of discussing with Captain Spain the internal condition of the ships—perhaps it would not be altogether proper for me to do so—but I would ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) to really pay more attention to the point I raise. I would be glad, if he is right, and possibly he is, that the danger I have pointed out has been averted, and that these men who are not on the permanent pay-list, are not in the habit of doing what they certainly used to do, namely, leaving the country because of enforced idleness during the winter season. Unless Commander Spain has been given authority to continue in the line I have mentioned, I know of no reason on earth why these men would not do the same thing as they have done in other days. The prosperity of the country, or the reverse, has nothing to do with keeping them here, because these men, having been trained to nice clean duty on board our ships, are fond of continuing that life, and are anxious to go into a service where they can receive full pay all the year round. I would ask the Minister to make a mental note of that, and to inquire, whether he is right in saying, that the difficulty I refer to does not now exist.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I shall have a special report made on that particular point by Captain Spain.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I see a reference to two trips of the "Quadra" to Alaska during the greater part of the months of September and October, on business of the Department of the Interior. As in the case of the Public Works Department, is that made a charge on any vote under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, or are those trips charged to the maintenance and repairs of Government steamers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There were some extra expenses incurred in fitting out the "Quadra" for that special trip, and, of course, these extra expenses are returned to the department; but the ordinary expenses were not charged. The reason was, because the "Quadra" had to do a lot of lighthouse work on the way up; it was not as if she was going specially for the Department of the Interior and nothing else. There was a great deal of expense incurred in fitting her out, all of which was, as a matter of course, returned.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It really does not matter, in one sense, whether one department pays it or the other, but if at any time we are contrasting the expenditure of these different departments, it does become important how the accounts are kept. I know the ordinary rule is, that when you do work for the Customs Department—unless it be some hap-hazard thing in the course of your ordinary duties—the Customs Department would pay for that. So the Inland Revenue Department pay and the Public Works Department pay. According to this report, the two trips to Alaska occupied the greater part of September and October for the Department of the Interior, and it seems to me that according to the ordinary rule the whole of that should be charged to that department. Otherwise, we have not an accurate statement of the expenditure of either department; the Marine Department is bearing more than its share, and the Department of the Interior is bearing less than its share.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I am very much pleased to find that it is the intention of the Minister to do what is possible to assist in building up a naval reserve in this country, and to use the present fishery and winter service in connection with it. I regret to say that up to this time he has rather lost sight of that, and has dismissed some of the very best men in the service, I fear, for political reasons.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What, men dismissed from the fishery service?

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Yes, from the fishery protection service and the winter service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The winter service is an entirely different thing. Do not mix them.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) The great objection which the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had was to continue the service of the men during both winter and summer when possible, and in that way to keep the run of the men. I know that under the hon. the Minister's predecessor in office an effort was made in that direction, and the effort was backed up, so far as I was concerned, personally, to the extent that when a man was wanted for the fishery protection service I was always careful, as far as possible, to continue in the service men who were previously in it. This has given these men almost a claim on the department, and their efficiency, of course, is improved as their service is continued. Now, I have in mind the name of a man who was second officer in the good ship "Stanley," and who had been on the winter service from the time of the "Northern Light"—in fact, almost from the time the service commenced. He had the highest possible recommendation, he knew the service thoroughly, and he was trusted by his officers and the public; and yet, Sir, without any fault being found with him whatever, he was not re-engaged when the winter service came on. The same is true with regard to the general crew; and I am sorry to say, if my information is correct, that the work of the present crew, in taking on and discharging the cargo, is the laughing-stock of the public. Without blaming the Minister of Marine very much, I say there is too much politics in this matter. One party or the other is very apt to put on friends who are not suitable for the position. When I had anything to do with the furnishing of men for that service, I generally furnished two or three able-bodied men, and left the captain to decide which one to take. In that way you always get the best men; and when men are once in the service, I think they should be continued. There is no doubt that if a naval reserve were formed which would give employment to our hardy fishermen of the coast for four months in the year, it would be a great matter both for the naval reserve and for these men. The fishermen, as we all know, are not occupied the year through, and they are, I believe, as hardy a class of men as are to be found in the world. They have to encounter the roughest and hardest weather that falls to the lot of fishermen anywhere. I can see that the Americans are now coming over to Nova Scotia to try to enlist men for their naval service, and I think it behooves both the Dominion Government and the British Government to find some means by which a naval reserve shall be established in Canada. It would certainly be a step in the right direction. It would show our interest in contributing our share to the navy of the Empire, which I think it is our bounden duty to do, and I do not know any part of the world where a better class of men could be found than in the maritime provinces.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I thoroughly appreciate much of what my hon. friend has said; but I would be very sorry if the House were led to the impression, from anything that fell from him, that political influences were allowed to be introduced in the appointment of officers or crews for the fishery protection service or the marine service. I have no knowledge of any one single officer, be he first officer, second officer, boatswain or otherwise, who has been dismissed from any of the fishery protection service vessels or marine vessels on political grounds or on any other grounds than those given by the commodore in charge. The captains of the vessels are there to-day as I found them; the first officers are there as I found them, except that they resigned and went away. Our system has been a system of promotion, not in the particular vessel to which a man belongs, but in the service. So, that if to-day a man is boatswain of one of the ships, and the position of second officer becomes vacant in any vessel, the boatswain gets the promotion. You must offer some such inducement to the men to remain in the service. If they were kept in the same position, they would not remain. So I have resisted all pressure to induce me to depart from what I think an essential principle in building up a proper service, in the maintenance of discipline and in the spread of 'esprit de corps' in the service. The steamer "Stanley," to which reference has been made, is simply a passenger and freight boat for winter, and stands in an entirely different position. On that vessel mere labouring men are taken in winter to load and discharge cargoes. I do not mean to say that the same principle is applied to that vessel or ever was. But apart from that I make the statement broadly, that notwithstanding the extreme pressure which is being brought to bear upon me from all parts to remove men who are alleged to be more or less partisan, I have resisted it absolutely in that service, and I venture to make the challenge to any one to prove that any man has been dismissed from that service on allegations of political partisanship. You must instil into the minds of these men that they belong to the service and that if they discharge their duties efficiently they have a chance of promotion. Otherwise you could not retain them. We have good officers now, and I do not believe they indulge in political partisanship, although perhaps they were not desirable appointments for the party with which I am associated. I believe most of them are Conservatives, but so long as they discharge their duties well and do not take any part in politics the policy of the department which has existed heretofore, will be maintained while I am here. I know of no better way of promoting the efficiency of the service, and that has been and will continue to be my policy.

Mr. TAYLOR. At six o'clock we were discussing an item of expenditure which has largely increased—the item of maintenance and repairs to Government steamers, page 58. This one item was increased $32,000. According to the book it should be $44,000, but the hon. Minister has explained that last year, while he asked for $102,000 as printed, $112,000 was the correct amount. In the late Government which my hon. friend used to call a corrupt Government, the service was run as efficiently for a smaller amount.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You are quite mistaken.

Mr. TAYLOR. No ; my hon. friend thought he could run the department efficiently and save something, but we have the admission from him to-night that he is coming down with a supplementary Estimate for a very large amount, probably $20,000, to pay the debts of last year, and what is the reason of this ? Simply because, according to his own statement, he gave instructions that the goods should be purchased from his political friends without tender, and you will find from the Auditor General's Report that the prices paid were excessive. I referred to my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis), and was listening patiently to hear him say that those prices were not exorbitant.

Mr. ELLIS. You did not give me the slightest chance.

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes, I have been waiting since six o'clock, and the hon. gentleman will have his opportunity when I sit down. My hon. friend inquired how many barrels of apples had been paid for, and I said the number, and he retorted that $4 was not a very large price for a barrel of good apples. But the price paid here is $5.50, and was paid in the Annapolis valley, where you could have got them for $1.50 per barrel last year at the time these apples were sold to the Government at $5.50.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. ELLIS. You are making the statement now that the apples were bought in the fall of the year. How do you know ?

Mr. TAYLOR. I know that the Auditor General's Report is made up to the 30th June, last year, so that it was the crops of the preceding year that was bought. Or if they were bought in the spring and kept from the fall to the spring, they were not worth $5.50 per barrel.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman is making a very positive statement that these apples were bought in the fall of the year when the apples came in, but the odds are ten to one they were purchased in the spring of the year after the apples had been stored up all season.

Mr. TAYLOR. If so, they were not worth $5.50 per barrel.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. These apples were kept in cold storage.

Mr. ELLIS. That added to the price.

Mr. TAYLOR. We on this side have been asking for months passed for a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee. We will have these accounts before the committee, and will call the parties up that sold the goods and establish whether there was a commission given to the Government or the man who purchased them, because no man purchasing for his own household—and in purchasing for the Government he ought to be more particular—who will pay $5.50 for a barrel of apples.

Mr. ELLIS. I would consider that a fair price for good apples.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would these hon. gentlemen have paid these high prices unless somebody got a slice out of it or some of it went into the corrupt fund. This accounts for the increase of $33,000 which my hon. friend is asking for, and if that amount be allowed to pass my hon. friend will say: You approved of it. I propose that the amount be reduced to $112,000, the same as last year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I told the hon. gentleman that when the "Aberdeen" was not engaged in this service at all, but the fishery service, I cut the vote down. Now, the amount he speaks about as having been voted years past in Parliament was neither $112,000 nor $117,000. It was made $112,000, when the "Aberdeen" was not in the service, and her expenses were charged to the fishery protection service. The vote taken in years gone by for this service was $134,000, and in the supplementary Estimates a special vote was taken for these ordinary repairs of $12,000, which made $145,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Previous to 1897-98.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Your own report makes it $136,000 the last two years, 1896-97.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. $132,400.

Mr. TAYLOR. That was not under Conservative administration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and the vote asked for was about $132,000, but there was a supplementary vote of $12,000. This vote purports to cover ordinary repairs as well as maintenance, and, therefore, is not an increase over the ordinary vote granted year by year. I did attempt at one time to cut it down, and succeeded because one of the vessels was paid out of the other branch of the service—fishery protection.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend accepted office on the understanding that the department would be conducted on business principles, and he now admits that a large amount of the supplies purchased was given out to his political supporters without tender. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) has often stated that while he was Minister a paint brush was not purchased for the Intercolonial unless a tender was called for. But here are thousands of dollars of goods purchased without any tender. I turn over to the steamer "Stanley," to the amount of purchases made from political supporters of my hon. friend in Charlotte-town, and I find the same prices prevailing there. I ask my hon. friend here what he could buy these goods for, and he says they can be bought for one-half the prices charged here. Surely there is a commission for somebody, there is a campaign fund being provided for. The Opposition in this House would not be discharging their duty to the country if they allowed this vote to be given to the Minister next year to be expended in the same manner as it has been expended this year. The increase is due—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no increase.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Your estimate says there is.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nominally only.

Mr. TAYLOR. But the hon. gentleman deceived us last year. He asked for $112,000 to run the service, and now he tells us he is going to take $20,000 extra. This is necessary because he has paid to his political friends extra prices for supplies. This is the broad fact we have to face. The Opposition, if it would do its duty, should move to reduce this amount to what the Conservative Government used to conduct the service for. They gave just as good a service and had just as many vessels. If you will turn to the figures of 1894-95 and 1895-96, you will find that the amount is not more than $117,000 for any one year. My hon. friend from Frontenac made the statement here this afternoon that these amounts, even though paid, should not be made known to the public.

Mr. ROGERS. I deny that. I never made any such statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. What did you say then?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman that he must address the Chair.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We want the hon. gentleman (Mr. Rogers) to tell us what he said.

Mr. TAYLOR. He said that these small items appearing in the Auditor General's Report, such as books and the pictures of the Premier, even though the articles were purchased, should not be published.

Mr. ROGERS. I did not say that.

Mr. TAYLOR. We shall see "Hansard" to-morrow, and I will quote what the hon. gentleman said on some future occasion. When my hon. friend (Mr. Rogers) and his friends appealed to the country, it was their whole stock in trade as members of the Patrons of Industry to hold up the Auditor General's Report and show what had been paid for jack-knives, sealing wax and little items of that kind. I do not object to that, but I object to this department asking $33,000 more of the people's money in order to be able to pay their political supporters double prices for goods to be used on these steamships, no competition being allowed. Imagine paying $2.50 a barrel for potatoes, and $1.50 for turnips. Who ever heard of such a thing?

Mr. ELLIS. That is a fair price.

Mr. TAYLOR. You do not pay that much for such goods for your own household?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman should address the Chair.

Mr. TAYLOR. But when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ellis) interrupted me he did not address the Chair. When the hon. Minister last year asked for $112,000, we voted it because it was about the same sum that we had voted to the previous Conservative Government—a Government which the hon. gentleman claimed was a corrupt and extravagant Government. He said that he could run the service for a less amount. Now, he comes and tells us that he could not run it for that amount, that he has not money to pay the hands on the boats and will have to get a supplementary estimate of $20,000. If so, it is due to the fact that he farmed out to his political supporters the business of furnishing supplies to these steamers at two for three prices, as shown by the Auditor General's Report. And now he asks for this amount to conduct the business on the same principles next year. The Opposition will not be doing their duty if they do not oppose this demand of the Minister for this sum of money to be spent in the same extravagant way as last year. If I vote alone, I will vote to reduce this amount. If the service were conducted as it could be conducted, if there was competition in the furnishing of the supplies, as there should be, a great saving would be effected. I have no objection to the hon. gentleman favouring his political supporters, others things being equal. But some officers of the department go into a merchant in Halifax or St. John and says: We want $700 worth of goods sent to the steamer; here is the list; send in the goods; charge your own prices and send in your bill and it will be paid. Of course, so long as the party making the purchases will "O.K." the bill the Auditor General is bound to pay it, no matter what the prices are. The only way for us would be to get the invoices of these parties in St. John and Halifax laid before us and then summon other parties from the same places and see whether the prices in the open market are what they charged. No man in Halifax will say that apples at any time last year were worth $5.50 a barrel, or pease worth $2.40 a bushel.

Mr. CLARKE. They were French canned pease.

Mr. TAYLOR. They are pease to make good pea soup, and worth from 75 cents to 80 cents a bushel, if well cleaned. And they charge $2 a bushel for beans. Why, we have never, in this country, paid more than $1 a bushel. At the price charged there must have been $1 a bushel to some political heeler. No doubt, he will contribute to the campaign fund. We shall not be doing our duty if we thus allow the Minister to snatch more of the people's money to distribute among his political heelers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I gave my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) credit for more fairness than he has shown. Let me put the point to him again. In the year 1897-98, the "Aberdeen" was not on this branch of the service and we estimated to $20,000 or $30,000 less.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where was she?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She was on the fisheries branch. The service cost $117,000. We made the same estimate for this year, but the "Aberdeen" was put on the marine service, and, consequently, it will cost more by just the sum it costs to maintain her—about $20,000—and I must ask the House to vote that.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). How is it that she costs more in one service than in another?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She does not cost any more. I take different votes, one for the ships in the Marine branch service and one for those in the Fisheries. If a ship belongs to the fisheries branch, you must pay her out of the Fisheries vote. The Auditor General will not let you pay her out of the Marine vote.

Mr. CLARKE. It is as broad as it is long.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, over the whole expenditure; but the Auditor General will not allow you to take from the vote from one branch to pay for the services in another branch. In the year 1892, this service cost $145,899; and in 1893, $163,097.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are you reading from?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Fisheries Report, page 55. I am reading the figures for the years when the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was Minister himself. In 1894, the cost was $178,183; in 1895, it cost $169,661; and in 1896, $145,315.

Mr. WOOD. Pease were worth $4 a bushel then.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1897, the cost was $136,940, and in 1898, $117,644, because, as I have explained, this steamer was employed in the other service. This year she is brought back in the marine and buoy service—

Mr. MACDONALD. Then you will take less for the other?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course. My hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) may want to make political capital out of the price of pease, and so on; I do not object to that, but he must not represent wrongly the salient and vital facts of the case. There is no increase in the ordinary service.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is reading from his own report. But if he will send to the Library and get the Estimates submitted to this House for 1894-95 and 1895-96, he will find, that the statement I have made is correct. I do not know what he has written in his report, or what comparison he has drawn. But the member for Hamilton says, that pease were worth more than then. When my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries conducted these services, he did not say to the officers: Go and buy these supplies from the Conservatives of Halifax or St. John. Those supplies were got by competition. When the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries was on this side of the House, he attacked the then Minister, time and again, for the extravagant manner in which the steamer was run, crossing over to Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend ought to know something about hardware and oils. I can quote him prices that will astonish him, that were paid to political friends for these articles down there. He is not, perhaps, as well conversant with groceries as I am. I find one item here that I know will surprise him : 59 pounds of baking powder at 50 cents a pound.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). That is not too high.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there a merchant in the House that would say, that 50 cents a pound for baking powder is not too high ?

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Not for the best class of baking powder.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why, you can buy cream of tartar for less than 50 cents a pound. Fifteen or 20 cents is a high price for the best quality of baking powder that can be purchased in this country, and I know what I am talking about. My hon. friend may know the price of pills, or something of that kind, but he does not know much about baking powder, if he says it is worth 50 cents a pound. Any merchant in this House knows that 15 or 20 cents is an outside price for baking powder. Yet this Government have money to throw to their political friends, and say to them : Put in 59 pounds and make it 50 cents. You will have $15 clear profit, and you can give us $10 to the campaign fund during the next election.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). There is some baking powder for which they paid 25 cents.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, probably, he was a Tory they paid it to ; but this fellow to whom they paid 50 cents, was a good Grit. Let the hon. Minister send to the Library and produce the Estimates of the last three or four years of the Conservative Government, and see what they asked for these services. He will find the figures never exceeded $117,000, yet he is asking this year $143,000, and another $20,000, he says, in the supplementaries to make up for the deficit of last year, and, perhaps, another sum in the supplementaries for next year that may still come down. If he is going to give a slice to all his political friends in St. John, Halifax and Charlottetown, why, $143,000 would not go round. I think this House would not be doing its duty, if it failed to oppose any such a vote.

Mr. ELLIS. My hon. friend makes strong assertions, but he does not know anything about prices in St. John ; he is simply fishing. He has found a great deal of fault with the price of potatoes. Last season, when these vessels were fitted up, potatoes were more expensive than they are now.

Mr. TAYLOR. What time in the year ?

Mr. ELLIS. I do not think my hon. friend is very well informed on the subject. These steamers fit out, to a considerable degree, the first of the season. Now, nearly all this class of goods : potatoes, turnips, vegetables and that kind—I refer to these because he referred to them—were quite expensive. I looked through a list published in a paper that my hon. friend will not dispute, the St. John "Sun," and I found the market price of potatoes in St. John was 20 to 30 cents a peck. My hon. friend can calculate the price of a barrel from that.

Mr. TAYLOR. They ought to be new potatoes, the first of the season.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the date ?

Mr. ELLIS. The 4th of May. Then, my hon. friend is very much shocked at the price of turnips. I find the price of turnips quoted in that paper at 18 to 20 cents a peck. My hon. friend can make his calculation on that basis. While, no doubt, the wholesale price might be something less, it is not likely that steamers can purchase at wholesale figures. Then, with regard to apples. The hon. gentleman selects one barrel of apples, which he finds charged at $5.50. I know nothing about that, but, if I exercised my imagination, I could suppose the captain had, seeing an excellent barrel of apples in some place, concluded to buy it. I am satisfied, that such a good Conservative as he is would try to get the best supplies he can find, when starting out on his voyage. Then, with regard to the practice, it is precisely the same practice of purchasing that has been in vogue for quite a number of years. I would like to call my hon. friend's attention to another thing, and that is the expenses of these steamers. Take the steamer "Lansdowne" in the year 1896; the total cost of the outfit of the "Lansdowne" was $26,000. In the year 1898 the cost was $21,669; although peace should have cost a little more.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman able to say, how many months' work she put in in the one year, compared with the other ?

Mr. ELLIS. I will not undertake to say that, but I am quoting from the reports, as they appear for the year's service, and I am endeavouring to argue the question as closely as my hon. friend did. Then, take the steamer "Newfield," which is another steamer engaged in the lower provinces. The "Newfield," last year, cost $21,756; in the year 1896 she cost $26,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that 1896-97 ?

Mr. ELLIS. It is 1895-96. The whole argument of the hon. gentleman, with regard to prices paid in St. John, is based upon what he does not know, upon his lack of knowledge of the facts, as they exist in the city of St. John. The hon. gentleman should remember, that food is not as cheap there as it is in this part of the country. If the hon. gentleman will visit me, I will furnish him at any time with the best turnips that can be found ; but I am sure, that, if I were to visit the hon. gentleman, he would be able to feed me on those articles at a much cheaper rate than I can feed him. It is always to be remembered, that the prices mentioned in this report are not the prices at present, but when the vessel is outfitting.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). I cannot imagine, that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is so lacking in business qualities as to buy potatoes by the peck for one of his ships, or turnips either.

Mr. ELLIS. I did not say he did.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). It occurs to me, with respect to the whole business, that it is conducted in a loose way. I am not attributing motives, or anything of that kind, but I believe the whole business in connection with this service is conducted in a loose way. If there is not enough competition with respect to this service, then the public have got to suffer. From my little knowledge of the service under the late Administration, I can say, that, in connection with the summer service, and, I may add, the other service also at Georgetown, in Prince Edward Island, circulars were sent out to people who were in the habit of providing certain lines of articles of food, groceries and so forth.

In every case the lowest bid was taken, and the successful tenderer had to furnish meats and groceries as he was called upon from time to time, at the prices that he quoted. I remember that they, the contractors, often grumbled that they had to pay a larger price than the amount of their contract at certain seasons. But they had to abide by the prices that they had quoted. It is really necessary, in the interest of the public, that competition should take place in every case, and, while it is all very well for the Government of the day to put these matters in the hands of their friends, I think it would always be a safety-valve for the public if they got a bid from their opponents also, so that they could then pin their friends down to the lowest bid, and the public interest would be thus safeguarded. I have not gone over the Auditor General's Report to see what prices were paid, but, from what my hon. friends around me have been saying, it seems to me that the prices have been excessive to a tremendous degree, that potatoes at $2.50 a barrel, beans at $2.50 a bushel, and so on, are extreme prices. They are 100 per cent over regular prices; in fact, they are more than that in some instances. It is not right, in the interest of the public, and if steps have not been taken by the Government to guard against such a state of affairs, I think it would be well for the Minister, his attention having been called to the matter, to take steps to guard the public interest in such a way that the Government will not in the future be fleeced right and left in these matters. The Minister said, when on his feet a while ago, that he invariably continued the services of the officers, mates and second mates in the fishery and winter services.

Mr. ELLIS.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in the winter service.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). I understood the hon. gentleman to say in the winter service also.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I especially excepted that.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he referred especially to the winter service. The hon. gentleman ought to carry out the same policy in regard to the winter service, in fact, it is of greater importance that the policy of retaining the crews that are experienced in the winter service should be continued than in the summer service, because it is a service in which experience is very much an object as experience in the past has clearly proven.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) undertook to give a comparison of the expenditure between the steamers "Lansdowne" and the "Newfield," but he dropped it like a hot potato. He gave the figures for the "Lansdowne" as $21,000, and turned over to the "Newfield," but he did not say how much the expenditure had been on that vessel. The figures for the "Newfield" are $31,262.42. I just want to draw his attention to this fact.

Mr. ELLIS. You are not allowing for the deduction.

Mr. TAYLOR. There is a credit of $9,000 against this amount, but the expenses were $31,262, and I may tell the hon. gentleman how it is accounted for. The Halifax Grits were harder on the department than the St. John fellows, a good deal. I will ask my hon. friend to turn up page K-18 in the Auditor General's Report. Here is a firm named H. W. Wentzell & Co., of Halifax. They supplied beans; they did not sell them by the bushel; they sold them by the piece—two dozen at 95 cents; two dozen more at 90 cents. Who ever heard of such prices paid for beans as 95 cents and 90 cents a dozen? They consumed $135 worth. Four hundred and thirty-three were purchased.

Mr. ELLIS. You mean cans.

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I mean cases. We find many other things in proportion. Such luxuries as lime juice, $3; lunch tongue, 1 case, $6.50; toilet soap, 1 dozen, $3. This is 25 cents a cake for toilet soap, when you can buy, in any drug store down town, at from 10 cents to 15 cents a cake the best quality of toilet soap that you can get. But these sailors must have it at $3 a dozen. Perhaps it was not more than 50 cents a dozen, but there was a commission for some person, and they can well afford to pay this price. I do not wonder that the hon.

gentleman dropped the "Newfield," and would not compare its expenditure with that of the "Lansdowne," when they buy beans at 90 cents.

Mr. ELLIS. I was quite fair, Mr. Chairman. I quoted in both cases the figures as they appear in the book, with deductions, but, if it makes any difference to the hon. gentleman, I will give them in that way. I quoted both alike, giving the deductions in both cases.

Mr. CLANCY. I think it would be conceded by the committee that it was a sound and wholesome principle that the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) laid down as to the responsibility of the Minister when he steps in between those who are the purchasing agents for the Government and directs them as to what they shall do, and that they shall go to the friends of the Government and purchase from them. I stated before, and I say so now, that I have no serious objection to offer to the practice of purchasing from the friends of the Government, but when the Minister steps in and directs that this departure from sound principle shall be made, he must take the consequences of the wrongdoing of those persons whom he engages and so directs. Neither the hon. gentleman nor his friends have attempted to reply to the charges that have been made that the most exorbitant prices have been paid. Even the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis), who is always fair, and who consulted his paper very industriously since six o'clock, who came out and undertook to make a defence for the actions of the Government in his own city, was able to say that potatoes were being sold at from 15 cents to 20 cents a peck, as quoted in his newspaper.

Mr. ELLIS. No, I quoted from a good Conservative paper.

Mr. CLANCY. My hon. friend quoted from the St. John "Sun." Is that not his newspaper?

Mr. ELLIS. My hon. friend ought to know.

Mr. CLANCY. I am glad that my hon. friend goes to a good Conservative newspaper to get correct information. I will take the same authority that he does. He says that potatoes were sold in St. John at from 15 cents to 20 cents a peck. The hon. gentleman is quoting small retail prices when he should quote the prices of potatoes by the barrel. Let me quote the price of potatoes by the barrel on the same day. They were 75 cents to $1.10 a barrel.

Mr. ELLIS. The hon. gentleman is entirely wrong. I have the figures here. Potatoes were selling at $1.60 to $1.90 by the barrel on that day.

Mr. CLANCY. I may tell my hon. friend I am not quoting the same day. This takes in a later date, probably a later date in October—about the last day of September.

Mr. ELLIS. When the season is over.

Mr. CLANCY. Potatoes were being sold at 15 cents to 20 cents by retail, while they were being sold, at the same time, at from 75 cents to $1.10 a barrel. The disparity between the prices I have quoted and those quoted by the hon. member for St. John is very great. Take cabbages—these are small things to talk about, but they are things that figure into large sums.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CLANCY. An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but I venture to say that the hon. gentleman who says "hear, hear" will not go to his constituents and sneer at these things. While I do not think that you can profitably engage in discussion for the mere sake of discussing small affairs, I say that if you pick out such items as I have indicated, you will show the trend of expenditure. We are discussing these small items only for the purpose of showing the general trend of affairs and the general extravagance that characterizes the whole Government. When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries steps aside and directs the purchasing agents of the Government to purchase only from the friends of the Government, he must take the responsibility for these high prices. The Auditor General is an excellent officer, but he must be guided by the materials which come before him, and no doubt on small items like this he may not think it worth while to come into conflict with the Treasury Board. Can any one tell me what is the meaning of this item: "six bunches of carrots at 60 cents." That is wholly unintelligible, and neither the Auditor General nor any one else can explain it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the Auditor General's compilation.

Mr. COCHRANE. He has to compile it from the figures he gets.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is his own compilation.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Auditor General would not bunch the carrots.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister stated before six o'clock, that these accounts were carefully looked into. Now, I want to ask him who looks into the accounts of the purchasing agents, before they get into the hands of the Auditor General?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The agents of the department who are the appointees of our opponents.

Mr. CLANCY. That has nothing at all to do with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These agents hold their offices now as they did before the present Government came into power. When I took charge of the department, I looked into the system which was in vogue, and I found that the agents were required to certify to every bill that comes into the department, to certify that the prices were the fair market prices at the port and at the time the goods were bought. Every bill that comes up is certified by the agent in that way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the agent does not buy for all these ships.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nearly all these ships. The Halifax ships are supplied from Halifax, the St. John ships from St. John, and the Quebec ships from Quebec. If there are any casual supplies purchased, not at these ports, the prices have to be certified by the captains as being fair prices. Moreover, we have a general average of $10.50 per man per month, and if the bill for supplies exceeds that it is criticised very closely. It is criticised, not by myself, but the officer who has charge of it for years in the department, and I can tell you, that if the captain or the agent spends more than the average allowance, he is called to pretty sharp account by the accountant of the department.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman stated that they have cut these accounts down, and that they have made reductions in prices when larger ones were sent in. But how can that be done, if all these prices are sent up certified by the agent or by the captain?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The purchasing agents are Mr. Harding at St. John, Mr. Parsons at Halifax, Mr. Lord at Charlottetown, and Mr. Gregory at Quebec, and these gentlemen have had the responsibility for many years, and have to certify to the correctness of the charges.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The ships' officers buy the provisions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is an average of $10.50 per month per man, which keeps it down.

Mr. CLANCY. But that average does not take into account the fluctuation in prices.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The agent has to certify that the prices are the fair market prices at the time they were bought.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister has not stated whether the agent makes the purchases or whether the bills are presented to him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He certifies to the bill.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. CLANCY. And the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) tells us that the agents have absolutely nothing to do with the purchase of the provisions. Here you pay $2.50 for a bushel of beans at St. John, and, when every one knows the price in Toronto is 70 or 80 cents a bushel, no sane business man will believe that is a proper charge. I hold the Minister responsible for these outrageous prices.

Mr. COCHRANE. I will not discuss the price of beans and pease, but there is a principle involved in this, altogether outside the prices, which every one knows are extravagant. Some hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but they did not laugh when they were in Opposition and playing the role of economists. We can remember when the Conservative Government was in power, and when the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies) was in Opposition, how he would appeal to heaven, and putting on that innocent smile when he was playing to the galleries, how he would cry out against the Canadian taxpayers being burdened by the extravagance of a Tory Government. Now he is in power, and his friends behind him will bolster him up in his extravagance and justify the Government in anything they may do. Let them turn to the public accounts and see if they can justify the charges that are made there. When these gentlemen were in Opposition, they declaimed loudly that nothing should be purchased without tender, in fact they would hardly let you out to breathe without doing it under contract. Now, they are in power, and the Minister of Marine justifies his extravagance by saying that his officials are Tories. He knows as well as I know, and the Postmaster General knows as well as I know, that that has nothing at all to do with the question. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is very jubilant, and he goes down beside the Minister to tell him that $2.50 a bushel is a proper price to pay for beans. That is how the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) justifies extravagance nowadays. There is the Postmaster General alongside of him, who was such an economist on this side of the House when in Opposition, and he is also prepared to justify any extravagance of this Government. These gentlemen boast that this was done by Tory officials. Do not they know, as well as I know, that every Tory official in the Dominion of Canada is trembling in his boots. Do they know that the same human nature is in officials as in everybody else, and does not the Minister of Marine know that his officials will not, and dare not criticise his conduct. Because he has instructed his officials, the captains, to go to Grits and buy their supplies; and what check has he when that is done? He tells us that he has made no changes except in winter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say in winter. I said in the steamship "Stanley," which runs as a passenger and freight boat.

Mr. COCHRANE. Why should you make any change in winter time? Why should you adopt a different rule when the straits are frozen over from what you have in the summer time when nature thaws out, and the fields are green and sunny? I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, does he think his official, although he may be a Tory, dares to criticise the figures, when he knows that if he did he would get his walking ticket, and I dare say the reason given would be that he was an offensive partisan. We were told that we were extravagant, and that hon. gentlemen opposite were going to manage things differently; and what do we find? They take the utmost pleasure in trying to justify themselves by saying that the Tories did the same. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows, that a man may make a mistake and be perfectly honest; but I say that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as a public man, when he says that the Conservative party did something wrong and he denounced it to the country, and yet he does the same thing when he gets into power, is the biggest hypocrite it would be possible to find. A man with a grain of common sense in his head knows that $2.50 a bushel is a corrupt price for pease; and men who sent their apples last fall to Great Britain, would be happy if after sending them there they could get $5 a barrel for them. If the Minister had applied the wholesome rule which he applied when he ruled the destinies of Canada, he would have got pease and beans at half the prices he paid, and we would not have the scandal of buying beans by the dozen.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. Chairman, before you left the Chair at six o'clock, I referred to the price paid for flour, and claimed that 25 cents and 50 cents a barrel more than the market price had been paid. Since then I have discovered that as high as $7.50 was paid for flour for these steamers during that year. The prices paid were $5, $6.50 and $7.50; and everybody who knows anything about the price of flour, knows that it scarcely went over $5 a barrel in any part of this country during that period, and during the greater portion of the time it was as low as $4 a barrel. At one period last winter we had flour as high as it had been for a number of years; but it must be remembered that the last of these supplies were supplied about 11 months ago; so that the flour would not be bought at a time when flour was higher than it is now. For butter, I find that there was paid 18½ cents, 19 cents, 22 cents and 25 cents, whereas the hon. Minister must know that in his own province the farmers received only 13 cents, 14 cents and 15 cents a pound for their butter, very rarely anything more.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know nothing of the kind. You cannot go to the Charlottetown market and buy butter for any such price.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want my hon. friend to understand that I saw butter brought from his own province and sold in my county for 14 cents a pound. Last year farmers in my county, as well as in the adjoining counties, only realized 12 cents, 13 cents, 14 cents, and in some cases 15 cents a pound for their butter. I find that by some accident the Minister's agent or captain strayed into the store of a Conservative in a town in my county and bought some butter, and what did he pay for it? Fourteen cents a pound; and yet he pays his friend in Charlottetown 25 cents a pound.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would you like to know what was paid for butter in 1895? Because I notice it was exactly twice that amount.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I know that the price of butter was a great deal higher than it was last year.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the hon. gentleman not know that the price of butter fluctuates in different months of the year just as it does in different years?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do know it. I have handled butter for 35 years. The hon. gentleman need not instruct me about the price of butter. Cheese, everybody knows, was low in price last year, the producers only getting 8 or 9 cents a pound. What then did the Minister pay in the city of Charlottetown? Fifteen cents a pound. Bacon and ham were purchased during that period at 11 and 12 cents a pound, and sometimes lower; yet the hon. gentleman sanctioned the payment of 15 and 16 cents a pound. A dollar a bushel was paid for turnips. Pilot bread, which ought to be purchased for about $4 or $4.50 a barrel, sometimes less, the hon. gentleman paid $8 a barrel for. Raisins, which are worth 6 or 7 or 8 cents, he paid 10 and 12 cents for. Pork, which he ought to be able to buy in Prince Edward Island at $14 and $15 a barrel, he paid $17 and $18 for. Sugar, which almost everybody buys at 3½, 4 and 5 cents a pound, he paid 6 and 6½ cents for. Biscuits I find charged in one place at 7½ cents a pound. Coal he bought from the Dominion Coal Company in my county at $1.90 a ton; while in another instance, he went and paid a Grit heeler in my county $6 a ton.

Mr. GIBSON. Hard or soft?

Mr. McDOUGALL. If the hon. gentleman will assure me, that those steamers burn hard coal, I will allow him to take the benefit of the doubt. I am quite sure, that hard coal is not sold in my county in those quantities. I find, that as far away from the coal country as Port Hope, if I remember right, in Ontario, coal was purchased at as low as $3 a ton. I find, that coal was purchased as low as $3 a ton at Amherstburg.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where did the hon. gentleman see the coal bought at $6?

Mr. McDOUGALL. At Sydney, C. & W. Hackett, 29½ tons of coal at $6, page K-99, and delivering coal and sundries, $5.65. The hon. gentleman had to pay for the delivery of it in addition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is not talking about the vote before the House at all.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Is this not the expense of steamers on the fishery protection service?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, maintenance and repairs to Government steamers.

Mr. McDOUGALL. All the same I find, that at Gaspé $6.25 was paid, or 25 cents only more than what was paid in my own county for 290 tons. Coal oil, 23 cents. There is worse than that. I find a great many cases—in fact most of them—where goods were purchased from people and entered as sundries. I find $52.90, $5.66, $14.97, $16.02, $28.95, $10, $13.34, $47.72, $16.60, $15.08, $13.26, $53.80, $66.24, $18.28, $175.50, $121.49, $4.39, $30.21, $48.81, $58.88, $40.29, thus entered. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to justify the payment and entry of these large sums under the heading of "sundries," without giving the slightest information as to what they consist of? We find very small items in other cases particularized, but here we find large amounts, for instance, $175.50, entered simply as sundries. The only explanation that can be given is, that the hon. gentleman instructed his agents to go to his political friends and buy from them regardless of price; and the difference between the current prices and the prices paid has to be made up in some way, and it is made up by increasing the vote for the maintenance of this service. When, instead of paying 14 cents per pound for butter, he pays his political supporters 25 cents, the difference has to be made up at the expense of the people. No doubt, he has had to go to the Minister of Finance, and say to him: Look here, Fielding, I have some friends down in my county whom I have to pay more for their goods than what they charge to the public; will you help me out of this? You know that Paterson took $900,000 out of the people for the tobacco they smoked last year over and above what the former Government did; will you not share a part of that with me to give to our friends in Halifax, Charlottetown and St. John? The Minister of Finance is, of course, willing to provide the necessary to keep his political friends in Halifax and Charlottetown in good humour, and, therefore, we find these exorbitant prices paid. The people who live 5 or 6 miles away from Charlottetown, and have to bring their butter to market and sell it for 14 cents, find, that these parties to whom they have sold, dispose of it at 25 cents to the Government, and by this means the hon.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

gentleman compensates his friends for his violation of the promises he made to them, when seeking their support. He knows, that he is to-day standing by a policy he condemned to these people, and he has to satisfy them in some way, and does so indirectly out of the pockets of the people.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wonder how it is, that my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has got into the chair of the Chairman during the discussion of these supplies. I think that must have been the result of a conspiracy on the other side to deprive us of the very valuable assistance of one who is a past-master in discussing these accounts. I wish to refer particularly to the reference of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) to the past expenditure of the Marine Department in connection with the maintenance of these steamers for some years back. For the moment, I thought the hon. Minister was referring to the report. But he referred to a page in the appendix—page 55. There is a reference to the expenditure in each year for the Dominion steamers, and in handier form—and the same figures, of course,—at page 10. The following table is there given, showing these expenditures:—

| Year.   | Cost of Maintenance. |
| 1883-84 | $122,816.25         |
| 1884-85 | 148,864.26           |
| 1885-86 | 130,759.83           |
| 1886-87 | 141,424.42           |
| 1887-88 | 150,659.19           |
| 1888-89 | 126,629.33           |
| 1889-90 | 114,959.20           |
| 1890-91 | 111,437.03           |
| 1891-92 | 127,406.28           |
| 1892-93 | 146,521.77           |
| 1893-94 | 142,487.42           |
| 1894-95 | 129,899.80           |
| 1895-96 | 150,519.41           |
| 1896-97 | 136,940.11           |
| 1897-98 | 117,644.39           |

But these figures really assist the House very little in understanding this subject, because in these different years we have to face the facts that you have different steamers and different circumstances in other respects. One year, for instance, the "Stanley" comes in, a large and expensive steamer. Then you have the "Aberdeen" coming in. For instance, the year the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) happened to refer to, he took the Auditor General's Report for 1895-96. In that list appeared the several vessels that have disappeared altogether from the list.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Their places being supplied by some that are there now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, others took their places. But one cannot state how much more expensive one may be than the other. The hon. gentleman from St. John is not quite fair even in that comparison—I am not resting anything on a comparison of that kind, I am merely showing how misleading it is—for he happened to pick out one or two vessels, but did not take the "Stanley." Now, the "Stanley" cost to run $28,000 in the year the hon. gentleman referred to, whereas in the year just passed, the cost of the maintenance of the "Stanley" was $35,000. I think that possibly large repairs are included in that item. She is a vessel that has to be repaired very heavily after the winter season and in one season she may be more crushed or pinched by the ice than another. So, it is misleading to read the bald statement. But what strikes me is the excessive vote, combined with the absence of explanation from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. As I understood him when he discussed this a little earlier, he explained, satisfactorily enough, that the "Aberdeen" was not on that list when he asked $112,000, but she was going on now and he wanted $33,000 more, but the hon. gentleman, in answer to my question, said that we were still running the "Aberdeen," and were running her under another vote, but that, notwithstanding the change, that vote was not reduced. So, while the ship is the same and was run last year involving somewhere in the neighbourhood of $33,000, there is an actual increase to the country of that sum in the whole proposed expenditure, and there has been no reason given for that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is conversant with the whole fisheries service. I did not quote those figures to show that there was extravagance in the past and economy now. But my hon. friend knows well the "La Canadienne" was for one year not in commission at all. Well, the "Aberdeen" was put in the protection service to take her place. And so we were enabled to show a reduced vote that year. But the "La Canadienne" is in the fisheries service this year, and the "Aberdeen" is in the marine service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know; but in the last year the "Aberdeen" appears on the list for only $390, but both the "La Canadienne" and "Aberdeen" were charged in the fisheries vote—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in the year—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the year just passed. I have the list here, and I find that $13,781 was spent on the "La Canadienne."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But in the year 1898 you will see the "La Canadienne" was put in—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But in the year we are dealing with, where the "Aberdeen" appears for $390 in the marine account, having her expenses paid out of the fisheries.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have it under my hand. Take page K-92 of the Auditor General's account.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But the hon. gentleman is referring to the Auditor General's Report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But these are the hon. gentleman's own figures.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But take page 11 of the report of the Minister—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That bears me out. The "La Canadienne" does not come into the marine account. Unless the Minister explains, there is only one conclusion—that there is an increase in the two votes taken together. The hon. Minister says that he does not propose to reduce the fisheries vote by $30,000, but the reason for increasing the marine vote is that he is transferring the "Aberdeen" from the fisheries to the marine account.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is an increase over last year, and not over previous years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Last year she was not in it, but this year she has come in. But the hon. gentleman does not say that he intends to reduce the fisheries vote or that he is going to put a new ship on. So I think my hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has reason for the step he proposes, either to reduce the vote or to obtain some satisfactory explanation why the fishery vote is not to be reduced.

Mr. POWELL. I fail to see in the Estimates any reference to the expenses of this new steamer. Might not the explanation be in that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That will be specially voted—that is for the winter service.

Mr. POWELL. Does that not appear in these Estimates?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No, it will be brought down. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) criticises the way the Auditor General makes up the accounts and says the items do not appear in sufficient detail. I venture to say that most of the House think that he has gone into too much detail. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the details of a few years ago, in 1894-95, when he was perfectly satisfied, he will find that coal was charged in that year at $5.50. That was delivered on board the "Aberdeen" down in Halifax. Butter was charged 20 and 22 cents on board the "Alert." Then for the "Druid," butter was charged at 20 and 22 cents; that was in 1894-95. I suppose she would then be at Quebec. Then for the "Newfield," at Halifax, butter was charged 25, 24, 22 and 28 cents.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Quite right.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course it was, the hon. gentleman's party was in power then. I even see a charge of 30 cents a pound. The hon. gentleman complains that the items are not put in here with sufficient detail, although they are elaborated ten times as much as they used to be. If he turns to the accounts of two or three years ago he will find, for the "Lansdowne," sundry provisions, groceries, &c., $2,210;" that was for 1894. Did the hon. gentleman demand details then? He will see that all through the same plan was adopted. On board the "Quadra," sundry provisions, groceries, &c., $1,767;" "Stanley," "provisions and groceries, $1,449."

Mr. TAYLOR. Refer to the page of the details.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are the details. The hon. gentleman sees that nowadays the Auditor puts everything down in great detail. Up to the year 1895-96 the expenditure on this marine service was $150,000, and in the year 1896-97, $136,000, and we reduced it down in 1897-98 to $117,000. I explained the reason why we reduced it.

Mr. COCHRANE. But you did not pay your way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, we did in that year; that is all it cost. In the last year we took the same estimate of $112,000, supposing that the "Aberdeen" would again be in the fishery service, but as she came into the marine service the vote this year must be supplemented by $20,000, and when that is done, it will be nearer the expenditure of the previous years. The sum I am asking here to-day is a sum largely below the average expenditure of the last eight or ten years. The hon. gentleman may move to cut it down as much as he likes, but it simply means that one of our ships must go out of commission. Which will it be? Does the hon. gentleman want the "Newfield" out, and leave unprotected all the buoys in Halifax and around the south coast? Does he want to take the "Lansdowne" out of commission in St. John, and leave the buoys and lighthouses without attention on the Bay of Fundy? Does he want to take off the "Druid," and leave all the buoys and lighthouses below Quebec, and expose the shipping of this Dominion to great danger? What would the insurance companies say about it? I am going to ask this House for a large sum of money to improve the buoy service and the lighthouse service, and to do everything possible short of extravagant expenditure, to put those services in such a condition that the Lloyds at home, and the insurance companies and everybody else will be satisfied that we are not only not behind our American friends, but that we are equal with them, or ahead of them. I shall have to ask my hon. friends to deal generously with my department in this respect. During the 18 years that I have been in this House this is the first time that I have ever heard charges of extravagance made against the Marine Department. The officials of that department are most economical, and they run every branch on the most economical lines. I will be delighted if any of my hon. friends will come down to the department and examine the accounts, along with the auditors and the accountants, and if they can suggest any possible system of improving them, I shall be glad to adopt it.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What are you going to do with the "Stanley" this year?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She goes out of the winter service this year pretty well battered, she has lost three blades of her screw, and the plates on her side have been heavily dented. She was 18 days ripped in the ice at one time, and nine days at another time. I am having a complete report made upon her hull by the officers down there, and possibly we shall have to send the "Stanley" home to Glasgow to have the plates taken off, re-rolled and replaced, because the captain tells me that when she gets caught in the ice these dents in her plates stick, prevent her from backing out. She is to be supplemented by another boat, so that if one vessel is caught there will be another one ready for service.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) My attention has been called to several of these little items, some of which could have been supplied much cheaper by a friend of his own. I find he has been paying 50 cents for baking powder, even 60 cents a pound in one case, while he can buy it from a friend of his own put up in Charlottetown, a first-class article, at 15 cents. In British Columbia they put it in at 15 cents a pound. I find that condensed milk at Charlottetown, near the seat of manufacture, is put on the "Druid" at $9 per case, while out on the coast it costs $5.60, after paying freight all the way from the maritime provinces. Cheese is put in at 14 or 15 cents in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and after sending it all the way to British Columbia, it is put in at 11½ cents.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I am reading here from the Auditor General's Report, K-21: "Beer & Goff, Charlottetown, condensed milk, 4 dozen at $2."

Mr. TAYLOR. Look on page 11, and you will find the charge in St. John is $9.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.). Condensed milk is charged at $8, four dozen at $2, four dozen in the case, which is $8. I think I saw in another place it is $9. Out on the coast it is $5 or $6. There is something wrong about this. I would advise the Minister to look into it, because I do not think the people will submit to things of that kind being done. I see also that in another place down in Prince Edward Island they put in 175 pounds of beans at 4 cents, that is $2.40 a bushel. This is paid to the gentleman at Souris who brought suit against me at my election. I suppose the Government wanted to compensate him for his trouble, and bought these beans of him. Then there is cheese, 14 cents.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where is the hon. gentleman quoting from?

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Auditor General's Report, K-104.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not marine service at all.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Then there is flour, 4 barrels at $7, and 4 barrels at $6.50.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does the hon. gentleman wish to discuss the fishery protection service?

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Then there is molasses, 10 gallons at 40 cents, and other things in the same proportion, purchased from Archibald Currie. He is as well entitled to big prices, I suppose, as the other friends of the party, but I think there is something wrong in the whole of this kind of thing, and that we ought to look closely into it, especially when we find that we are paying two prices where these articles are manufactured as compared with the prices that we pay in British Columbia after carrying them three or four thousand miles and paying freight.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one item here, at page K-17, that I would like to get some information about. It is the item, soup digester, $3.55, paid Geo. Rent, Halifax. I do not know whether there is also such an article as a roast beef or an ice cream digester.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman has got beyond me.

Mr. TAYLOR. I just wanted to refer the Minister to the pages in the Auditor General's Report in reference to condensed milk.

At K-18 he will find that Fell & Co., who happen, I think, to be Tories, in Victoria, have supplied 24 dozen of condensed milk at $1.40 a dozen, or $5.60 a case, there being 4 dozens in each case. If he will turn to the account of the friend of my hon. friend from St. John, Mr. E. J. Kennedy, whom he describes as a fine man, he will find that the department got condensed milk, 4 cases at $9, and 6 cases at $8. That information is at K-11. These prices were paid in the town where condensed milk is manufactured, and after freighting it out to Victoria it was sold at $5.60 a case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In connection with rather an important statement, made by the hon. Minister, that he did not interfere with the personnel in command of marine steamers and fishery vessels, I would like to say that I think a large part of the statement of the hon. gentleman is correct, and it is for that reason that he has to-day a first-rate service all around. Certainly, the fishery protection service is a credit to the country. Yet, that statement is not altogether accurate, when I remind the hon. gentleman of the case of Captain Hector Mackenzie, one of the first men who went into the service, against whom, for years, there never was a bad mark, who, although he was not dismissed, was not re-employed. He was left off without any charge against him, and he went away on half pay, and when I last inquired into the case and mentioned it to the hon. gentleman, he had not received his half pay for that winter. As I have not heard from him for a long time it is possible that this is looked into. His name has disappeared from the service, and I observe a considerable number of strange names. He was in the fishery protection service from very early days.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. His ship disappeared, if I recollect aright.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, that was one of the reasons given.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was the reason.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But while his ship disappeared, a new man appeared on a new ship. That was not keeping the spirit of the law as it was understood. The ship upon which this man happened to serve went out of commission, while a new ship came into commission, and a new man became the commanding officer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I do not think so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, that is correct; and the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will bear me out, because, it was a gentleman from Shelburne who came into the fishery protection service, if I remember aright.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As commander ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As an officer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There may have been a vacancy, and he may have gone in below.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I can only say that by looking over the list of names it will be seen new men have come in. Therefore, the answer given indicated a determination on the part of the Government not to recognize this gentleman in the spirit of the rule, a rule that had been adhered to, and a good rule for the service that any man who was a captain of good character, and had showed himself worthy of being retained in the service without regard to any other consideration, would be moved from ship to ship. If a ship disappeared, and if he was the senior in the list of officers, should a vacancy occur to which he was entitled, he would be in a position to claim that vacancy and go upon that ship. That was the case in regard to the officer of whom I am speaking. He was a Conservative, but he was a first-class officer, and he never had been reported against in my time. I have just gone over the list in the Auditor General's Report; and I have seen the names of the men who have come into the service, so that the statement should be qualified somewhat, although, I am perfectly willing to admit, and I say that in this fishery protection service there are a good many names of men who were appointed by the Conservative Government, and they have not been discharged. The service is first-class and most efficient, largely because for that reason, not because they were appointed by a Conservative Government, but because they were experienced men and went there after a registered test as to their qualification and fitness, without exception. We had some unfortunate accidents, that led to the rigid rule being adopted in regard to the commands of these vessels, and I would not like, under no circumstances, to see any different policy adopted. I think there should be, in regard to these ships, as well as to the management of trains in the railway service, particular regard paid to the safety of the ships, in the one case, and to that of the people who trust their lives in the trains in the other. In these accounts I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, having passed the ordinary supplies, in connection with these large orders, such, for instance, as McAvity's, of St. John, for some explanation. For instance, at K-11, there are a number of accounts aggregating $582.85; at K-22, a further account in the hardware line, and other further amounts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is only $30 at K-22.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but you will find running through quite a number of items, and I mentioned one at K-11 of $582.85. At K-22 there is one of $30, and there are some others, which I have not taken the trouble to collect. Then, take the Halifax case of W. W. Howell & Co., at K-15, whose account amounts to $146.48. David MacPherson, Halifax, $2,833, besides items of $489 and $119. Now, these are all very heavy expenditures. For instance, we have Stewart, Bruce & Co., of Charlottetown, credited with the payment of $2,362.49.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is for repairing the machinery of the "Stanley."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We are dealing with a service that costs us $145,000 for maintenance. We are dealing with big firms, responsible enough, I have no doubt, but naturally anxious to take every possible opportunity to make profit for themselves. Is the Minister adopting the same policy with reference to these large accounts that he adopts with reference to the small accounts: does he give this work out as party patronage, or does he attempt to obtain competition by tender ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows, that, although these items may be termed heavy, in a sense, it is only in a sense. If you have a large steamboat, and at the end of the winter service she has to have her machinery repaired, it is absolutely and physically impossible to let the work out by tender. The different items of work that have to be done to the machinery cannot be enumerated, so as to have tenders called for. You have first to make sure, that you have a first-class engineer, and then you have to take the accounts certified by the chief engineer and by the agent. Take, in the case of the repairs to the "Newfield" by Mr. David McPherson. That bill was largely for workmanship and material. Mr. Parsons, the agent in Halifax, has to certify, that these men are employed at reasonable and proper rates, and that is all that can be done. If you have a specific piece of work, which a man can see and calculate as to its cost, well and good; you call for tenders. But, if you have numerous repairs to do on an old ship, you cannot call for tenders, because it cannot be told beforehand how much repairing has to be done. If you take care, that you pay a reasonable price for material, and a fair price for labour, and you have the account then certified by the agent of the department, I think you have taken every precaution the public interest requires.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister is not well instructed, if he states, that you cannot get tenders for repairing an old ship. I happen to know, from actual experience within the last month, of very heavy repairs upon steamers being done by contract, and I am certain the Minister is not properly advised.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am properly advised, and I know exactly what I am talking about. Take the work done by Bruce, Stewart & Co. upon the "Stanley." The chief engineer reported as to the condition of that ship, but he said it was impossible to tell what repairs would be required to the engine until it was taken down, and he saw the supports underneath. All that could be done was to get the best machinist you could, take out the machinery, examine underneath it, and see what was necessary. The chief engineer, McMillan, one of the most experienced men in the service, did not know, and could not know, what was to be done beforehand.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the ship was stripped, the Minister could discover all that was to be done, just as well as private shipowners do, and he could call for tenders. I admit, that the chief engineer very often has to get considerable latitude in that regard, but there should be no trouble about calling for tenders. Take the firm of McAvity & Sons, of St. John, and they appear in the Auditor General's Report, page 51, for a payment of $6,307, and I find, at R-141 of the Auditor General's Report, they are paid $22,827 on the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That has nothing to do with this.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, except that it proves, that this firm is dealing in very large figures with the Government. I have not the slightest information in my possession, nor have I heard a hint, that there is an improper charge in their account; but I do say, that it is in the public interest, as it would be in the interest of private parties, to have some wholesome check upon them. Every one knows, of course, that this is a friendly firm to the Government; it is a respectable firm enough in St. John, but there is where the interest of the public seems to require some check. Let me ask the Minister, what has become of the scheme formulated when I was in the department, under which Mr. Stevens, inspector of boilers, was appointed by Order in Council to have special charge and supervision of these huge expenditures in connection with all the vessels. The idea was, that this gentleman, who was peculiarly fitted for the work and most reliable in every way, should have charge of the Government steamers in regard to the machinery, so that he should specify, as he was perfectly competent to specify, exactly the repairs that were necessary. Formerly, we were in the hands of the engineer of the particular vessel, and the engineer, without being corrupt or anything of that kind, always wanted to have many things done, whether they were absolutely necessary or not. It was thought, that the appointment of Mr. Stevens would keep down that very large expenditure for maintenance. It was never represented to me, when I was in the department, that the Government could not call for contracts with reference to these heavy expenditures. Experience, since I have been connected with the department, confirms me in the statement, that in private business enterprises similar expenditures are made under contract and by tender, on specifications prepared beforehand. Mr. Stevens was intended to be an expert of that kind, a sort of technical supervisor of the various ships and their construction. Would the hon. Minister tell me, what Mr. Stevens' position is now, and whether he attends to any of this work?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman has been carried out, and with marked success. For instance, in the case of this very work on the "Stanley," performed by Bruce, Stewart & Co., when she was laid up. I did not rely on Mr. McMillan's certificate of what was required, but I sent Mr. Stevens to examine the vessel, and I have in the department a very elaborate report of his of what he considered necessary. I myself went through the steamer in company with the captain and engineer, and I saw what was required as far as my unskilled eye could see it; but it was on Mr. Stevens' report that we proceeded with the repairs. "La Canadienne" was very badly damaged; her stern post sprung, and we had a report from Mr. Brunel and some of the officers at Quebec, who certified that a very large amount would be required for repairs. The amount startled me; and, instead of complying with their request, I sent for Mr. Stevens to come up, and I had Mr. Adams go down from this city and report what was necessary; and it was found that many of these repairs which the local men alleged to be necessary were not required. I acted on Mr. Stevens' report, and found the cost of the repairs to be infinitesimal compared with what the local engineers reported as necessary. As I shall have to make some repairs to the "Acadia" this year, I shall have a report from Mr. Stevens as to her. The same principle is applied all through. I would not rely on the reports of the local engineers except in regard to casual repairs. In all cases where larger repairs are required, I have the advantage of Mr. Stevens' report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As I understand, Mr. Stevens' work is not confined to the supervision of repairs of steamers, but he also acts as inspector of steamboats?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was not the idea, because we went further, and appointed Mr. Esdaile, of Charlottetown, in order to relieve Mr. Stevens of that work.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but Mr. Stevens formerly was employed, if I understood my hon. friend aright, for inspection not only of Government steamers, but private steamers as well.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and now he remains as inspector of ordinary steamers, and is taken as occasion requires to some particular Government steamer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all. I have told my hon. friend that whenever special repairs are required for Government steamers, he is called upon. I speak under correction, but I believe he is exclusively employed on Government steamers, fog alarms and things of that kind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman refers to a man of Mr. Stevens' experience, I feel certain that he will say, as I am almost positive he told me at the time when that part of his work was suggested, that he himself can make a specification for those large repairs to Government steamers. Take, for instance, the repairs to the "Stanley," the heaviest of the lot, for which some $10,000 have been spent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How could you put up to tender the rivetting of all the water tanks?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Easily enough. In the town of Pictou, for instance, the vessel is brought out of the water, and is open to inspection of the men who are competent for the work, and a man of technical knowledge like Mr. Stevens could supervise the work and make the specification.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I differ with my hon. friend as to that; but on his suggestion I shall be very glad to take Mr. Stevens' opinion on that very point.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move that the item for maintenance and repairs of Government steamers be reduced to $33,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Surely the hon. gentleman does not intend to propose that. I thought he was indulging in a little badinage and chaff. I have assured the committee that I have to ask for $20,000 in addition to what was voted last year in order to pay the men and the cost of maintaining the steamers. In one year, from the fact that the "Aberdeen" was not in the service, we ran it for $117,000; but when she comes back, you cannot run the service for that amount, because you have to add her expenses. There is no use of talking of cutting down the cost of the service by $33,000, and this is a dangerous motion, and I will tell you why. Not a month has gone by when Lloyds have not told the Canadian Government that they are increasing their rates, on the alleged ground that we are not keeping our lighthouse and buoy service as we ought to, and yet the fact is the very opposite. We have spent $40,000 in building the best fog alarm on Belle Isle that can be built for money. We are building another lighthouse on Flower Ledge, opposite Point d'Amour, in Belle Isle Straits. On my return from England, I came by that special route, and took occasion to ask the captain of the ship if it was desirable to build another light on that route in the interest of the public service. He said the only place where it could be built was there, and we are taking a vote for that. At the Traverse, below Quebec, we are building, at an expenditure of $60,000, a permanent fixed light to enable ships to come up the River St. Lawrence; and I shall be prepared to ask the House for an additional vote for a lightship for the Bay of Fundy. In the face of these increased grants, we are asked to tell the public at large that we shall cut down the vote by $30,000 or $40,000 in order that the Bay of Fundy and the straits opposite Nova Scotia shall be without lights and buoys during the coming year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If we have not the ships to maintain the service, how is it going to be kept up? Who is going to put out the buoys? Such a proposition is perfect nonsense. If the hon. gentleman sees any item that will bear cutting down, let him point it out; but to cut down things absolutely essential to our commercial existence in that way is not an economy, but recklessness.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We are entitled to some better explanation why the hon. gentleman wants this increase of $33,000. He says it is because he is taking the "Aberdeen" from the fishery service; but he is not reducing the cost of that service by $33,000. The objection is not so much to voting the amount to the "Aberdeen," but to the estimate prepared, and no explanation given why, if the cost of the "Aberdeen" is taken from the fishery protection service, that service should not be reduced by that amount. We are face to face with an increase of $33,000 for both services.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is asking us to decrease this item because we are not decreasing another item which is not now before us. Will it not be time to decrease the fishery and protection service, when we come to it. When we come to that item, I will show what the facts are, and then let him take the responsibility of cutting it down, if he chooses. To select this item, of all others, this item for supplying buoy service and lighthouses, and ask us to cut it down, is absolutely indefensible conduct. Does the hon. gentleman want to take away our buoy and light service from the coast of British Columbia, for instance? Does he want us to tie up the "Quadra" to the wharf in British Columbia?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You have the "Douglas" tied up now.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Because she is not fit to use, and has not been used for years. If that $33,000 be withdrawn, you must tie up the "Quadra," or the "Aberdeen," or the "Newfield," or the "Lansdowne," and do away with that part of the light and coast service attended to by any one of these vessels.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think the hon. Minister should grumble so much because we protest against what we regard as an extravagance. No one can go through the items and come to any other conclusion, than that prices have been paid far beyond the market rates. Take beans, for which $2.37 a bushel was paid. Let any man in western Ontario understand, that he can get $2.30 a bushel for beans, and he will grow nothing else. Then, we find, in another place, that $2.40 per bushel was paid for beans. Then, take coffee, and we find 40 cents per pound was paid for it in 15-pound lots. There is not a man in the grocery line who will not tell you, that this price is 10 cents per pound too high above what this article is even retailed at by the pound. Flour, $6 a barrel. Why, we could send our flour down to Halifax, and sell it at $4.50 per barrel. Take split pease, $2.10 per bushel, and yet the farmers in my county think they are getting splendid prices, when they can get 65 cents per bushel.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In the city of Toronto, by retail?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, about 65 cents per bushel. Butter, 25 cents a pound, when last summer, the price was 13 cents. I do not pretend to say, that these prices were paid in all cases, because in some cases the prices were reasonable; but, when you find in one place a reasonable price paid and in another twice as much, you can only conclude, that one man got the fair market price and the other got considerably in excess of that. Take mushrooms, $3 per dozen, or 25 cents each.

Mr. ELLIS. This price is per can.

Mr. SPROULE. No, by the dozen. You will find it says distinctly, by the dozen, in the report. Take pears, $2.90 per dozen. They are sold both by the case and by the dozen. I take it that these are fresh tomatoes. Then we have baking powder at 50 cents a pound. I have been in the business where we have sold baking powder for fifteen years, and talking of 50 cents a pound is so absurd that one can hardly speak of it without growing angry. Why, 15 cents a pound is a high price. You can get it at that in any grocery store.

Mr. COWAN. That is poor baking powder.

Mr. SPROULE. In that case, it would be like the hon. gentleman's logic. Then we have $60 worth of coffee, the rate being 40 cents a pound. And this is buying it wholesale. I would like to ask the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), and he has been in the same line for twenty or thirty years, if he ever heard of paying that price for coffee?

Mr. McMULLEN. I can tell my hon. friend that pure, brown coffee, unadulterated, is worth 40 cents a pound.

Mr. SPROULE. And I can tell the hon. member for North Wellington that we have sold thousands and thousands of pounds at 35 cents retail—the best Java coffee. And if he will look at the quotations to-day he will see that this 40 cents a pound is too high. He has been out of the business for some years, but it is hard to believe that his memory is so bad as not to remember the price of this class of goods. Another item is biscuits at 20 cents a pound. If he will ask the Minister of Customs (Mr. Pater-son), I think that hon. gentleman will tell him that if he could sell all he produced at 20 cents a pound, he would devote his whole establishment to that business.

Mr. McMULLEN. What kind of biscuits?

Mr. SPROULE. I can only give them as I find them in the Auditor General's Report. It says "biscuits at 20 cents a pound." Blankets are charged at $4 a pair. Go into any store here or in Toronto and ask for the best blankets, and they will give you a fine class of blankets at $3 a pair. Another item is shovels, $1.75 apiece.

Mr. FLINT. These are a special kind of shovels.

Mr. SPROULE. Are they made of silver? They are special, no doubt, in that they are bought from a good Reformer. I would not say Grit as that would be offensive. But if they were bought from a good Conservative they would be worth 75 cents. Six bushels of turnips are charged at 65 cents a bushel. If we get 10 cents a bushel, we think we are doing well. These vegetables must be very hard to raise down there. Or, perhaps, these are some special kind of turnips. Cabbage appears at 29 cents per head; I can only say that the man who bought them must have been a cabbage-head to pay that price. You can buy them at 5 cents a head. When you tell the farmers of Ontario that their money is being paid to provide supplies at such prices for these steamers, they will not think we are doing wrong when we ask to reduce this vote by $30,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries tried to make a point by saying that unless this money was voted, the buoy and lighthouse service would go to the dogs. I find by the Auditor General's Report, page K-6, that the whole amount expended for 1897-93 on Dominion steamers was $117,644. This was on the steamers "Aberdeen," "Druid," "Lansdowne," "Newfield," "Quadra," "Sir James Douglas," and "Stanley," and steamers general account. This amount includes all these high-priced articles we have been enumerating. All that we ask him to save in that amount is $5,000 he has given in extra prices in the purchase of supplies as shown by the Auditor General's Report. This year he wants to share a larger amount among his friends and he asks for $145,000. And he says that unless he gets it he will have to call off one of these steamers, so seeks to blame the Opposition for destroying the lighthouse and buoy service. It is simply bosh for the hon. gentleman to try to bluff the Opposition in that way. What we ask is that he should advertise for tenders for these supplies, and there is no reason why he should not give a better service for $117,000 if he would carry on the work on business principles than he can get for $145,000 by spoon-feeding every Reformer who wants to make money out of furnishing these supplies. The late Government gave a better service for less money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Your statement is not correct. The "Aberdeen" was not on the service then. You have been told that a dozen times. I have told the hon. gentleman that in the year to which he refers, when $117,000 was expended, the "Aberdeen's" expenses were paid out of the fisheries protection vote, and this year it is being paid out of the marine steamers vote, and you must add to that $117,000, $21,000 for the "Aberdeen."

Mr. TAYLOR. Did the lighthouse and coast service suffer that year? Was the service not efficiently rendered with that vote?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). She was paid out of a different account.

Mr. TAYLOR. I say the money he is asking for can do the work, and has done it under the late Government. But if the hon. gentleman wants $30,000 or $40,000 to do as he is shown to have done by the Auditor General's Report, paying three or four prices for goods, he has got to ask his friend's behind him to vote it, because the Opposition are going to challenge every item in the expenditure where hon. gentlemen are violating their promises to the people, and asking for increases to do the same service that was done by the Conservatives.

Mr. McMULLEN. Nobody can blame the hon. gentleman for making a fair criticism on any expenditure. But if there is one thing to which the Government of this country should give special attention, it is the lighthouse service. Every man in this House knows that recently the Lloyds have largely increased marine insurance upon vessels sailing in those waters, owing to the supposed dangerous condition of Canadian coasts. This is greatly to be regretted, and if it is continued, the result will be a serious injury to the trade of our country, and will throw the shipping of produce into American ports. If the Minister of Marine and Fisheries asked for an increased sum to put in a first-class condition the lighthouse service on our eastern coast, I think it would be the duty of this Parliament to sustain him. We should protect our coasts so well that insurance companies will not militate against the trade of our country by charging higher rates of insurance, as they have recently done. I give the Minister of Marine and Fisheries credit for making every effort to put the lighthouse service on a most satisfactory and efficient condition, so as to remove all ground for the insurance companies levying rates that will militate against the trade of this country and drive it across the border.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The opposition to this vote is not based on a desire to cut down one dollar from the necessary amount required for putting the marine service and maintaining it on the best possible footing; but it is a protest against any Minister expecting that he can pass an estimate through this House on the unsatisfactory explanation that he has given. He says that he is going to maintain the "Aberdeen" out of the marine vote, and he, therefore, wants $33,000 for that purpose. He has told us that he spent $33,000 to maintain that vessel for a year out of the fisheries vote of last year. He says he is not going to supply the place of the "Aberdeen" in the fishery service; and when we ask him whether he intends to reduce the fishery vote by $33,000, the cost of the "Aberdeen" last year, he frankly says, No. We say that is not a business statement, that it is not an explanation that should satisfy this committee. We are not here to take the ipse dixit of a Minister who says: If you do not give me this, the whole service will go to destruction. The answer is that he should be fortified by good business reasons, and show us that his estimates are based upon good grounds. He cannot separate the fisheries vote and the marine vote, for ships that are one season in the fishery service and another in the marine service. The amounts should go together.

You ask this year simply to transfer that vessel from the fisheries account to the marine, and still you intend to ask the amount on the fisheries account that was required for the "Aberdeen," and are going to increase the marine side by $33,000, but there is no explanation forthcoming for requiring that $33,000. While we vote this money for the marine service, he can take the "Quadra" and send her on special trips. He has sent her on an expedition about which I would like some explanation. Last year we voted a sum of money for the "Quadra" to do duty on a large and extensive coast. We find that early in April, 1898, she made a trip to the northern part of the province, and to Alaska, in connection with the Public Works Department, conveying Chief Engineer Coste and party. The hon. gentleman's attention has been called to work done in the Interior Department for which, according to the Auditor General's Report, the Interior Department has paid $1,681.21.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I made the statement that they had paid me all the extra expenditure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Can the hon. gentleman tell me whether the Department of Public Works paid for that trip of the "Quadra," conveying Engineer Coste?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have not repaid any portion of the account so rendered to them for the service of that vessel. They thought it was too high, and the matter is in treaty between the two departments.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am told that the trip of the Chief Engineer Coste was not wholly on official business. I am told that Mr. Coste, who is now engineer of a large company floated recently in London, went up on that occasion, using the Government steamer, his expenses being charged to Government work. Incidentally, he acquired some 40 odd mining claims, and then proceeded to London, England, on official business, connected with the company, of which Mr. Coste now appears as chief engineer. I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman permitted the ship "Quadra" to be used in connection with work on that understanding, that Mr. Coste was to be at liberty incidentally to do private business for himself in Alaska.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose, the hon. gentleman has no information on the subject I have mentioned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, except that he has left the service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, is aware, that he has left the service as an engineer, but that he floated a company in London, while he was in London on public business.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I heard so, but I have no information.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That does not come directly within the purview of the hon. gentleman's department, but, I think, the fact, that the hon. gentleman was able to take the "Quadra," shows that he is equal to any emergency under an ordinary vote. When we know, that these vessels can be sent hither and thither on all these different services, we would not be doing our duty, if we accepted the mere statement that the hon. gentleman has given as a justification to increase the sum total of these two votes by $33,000.

Mr. WALLACE. I think we are justified in asking the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries for a better justification than he has yet given for the extraordinary increase in this first item. In the first place, his figures are rather incorrect, and he says, that this is a matter of no consequence. He says, there is an increase of $33,000, but the increase is $43,000, as has already been pointed out to the House. Upon the item, "Maintenance and repairs to Government steamers," there is an increase of $43,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is a misprint. The first column should be $112,000, instead of $102,000.

Mr. WALLACE. It is $112,000. Well, the Minister might have informed the House of that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did, but the hon. gentleman did not happen to be in at the time.

Mr. WALLACE. More than that, he should have corrected the statement, because we read $102,000 and $145,000. He says now, it is $112,000, but even then there is an undeniable increase of $33,000. He has not given yet any good reason to the committee why there should be an increase of $33,000.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have already explained—perhaps the hon. gentleman was not in at the time—that, in that estimate of $112,000, the "Aberdeen" was not included. Now, the "Aberdeen," during the year that that vote was taken for, was put into the marine service, and I have to come down and ask for $20,000 additional this year to pay for the balance.

Mr. WALLACE. Am I correct, in saying, that the "Aberdeen" was transferred from the fisheries service to this vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She was paid out of this vote.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the Minister propose to decrease the other vote by that amount?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I do not propose to decrease the other vote by that amount. I explained the reason why that could not be done. When we come to the fishery protection service, I will go into it fully; but I will repeat to the hon. gentleman, in two words, what I said. The "Aberdeen" is being paid out of the marine vote during the present year that we are running in. For the last year, $20,000 was necessary to be taken out of that, and I will have to have a supplementary vote to meet it. Add the expenditure of $117,000 and this $20,000, and it will make an expenditure, this year, of $137,000. I am asking for $145,000, for extra repairs to the "Stanley" and other boats. As the hon. member for Pictou has pointed out, we cannot make an accurate estimate of expenditure of this kind, because some years you will spend as much as $15,000 in repairing one of these steel steamers, whereas the next year you will not expend more than $3,000. This year we know we have spent $140,000, and I must have at least that amount for next year. We cannot do it for less.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. Minister says: We are asking for a large amount; we want $20,000 to make up for last year, and we want this year $33,000 more. We want reasons for this extraordinary increase in expenditure, and the Minister has not given us these reasons. The Minister said, that he wanted it because we found we had that expenditure. Of course, if you look over the items in the Auditor General's Report, you will see the reasons why the Minister wants these extraordinary sums. When you see, on the average—and I can say it without exaggeration—double prices paid for a great many articles, and when you see the department buying at single pound prices, you will see, that the Minister has no defence in regard to these items. Take the farmers of Ontario; take Farmer Mulock there; let any farmer read the Auditor General's Report, and he will see the prices paid for agricultural products.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Will you kindly read the Auditor General's Report to me?

Mr. WALLACE. I will read some items, and I am sure the Postmaster General will be glad to hear it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is too good; I do not want to miss any of it.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman will not miss any of it, if he consents to stay in the House, but he has such a habit of not being here, that he will not remain to hear it. I say, that, when the farmers of Ontario find such magnificent prices prevailing in the maritime provinces, they will be cultivating all these things and swamping that part of the country, when they can get $5.50, and in some cases $6.50, for a barrel of flour. I see, the quotations for "Straight Roller" in Toronto were $2.80 a barrel, and that the price of wheat has not varied half a dozen cents a bushel during the last six months. But, when it goes down there, the price is $5.50 and $6.50 a barrel for flour. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), in his magnificent statement, says: We ought to put our coast on a thorough and efficient basis. I would like him to get up and explain, what putting our coast on a thorough and efficient basis means. I cannot tell; I suppose, it means, that the member for North Wellington is anxious that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) should get out of the dilemma in which he has been placed by the publication of the statement in the Auditor General's Report and by the extraordinary amounts of money he asks this House to vote for this service. What are the services that these Government steamers, for which he is asking such large sums of money, are performing? In the first place, the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) takes a trip away up the coast in one of them. It was a pleasure trip; but let us assume, that he is going on Government business. If he is going on Government business, he is entitled to charge the expense of that trip to the Department of the Interior, and not to the Department of Marine at all. Again, when the Minister of Public Works makes a magnificent jaunt down the River St. Lawrence, to assist this Frenchman from France to drive the loyal Canadians off the Island of Anticosti, he takes a Government steamer on the excursion. Was that Government steamer charged to him?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. It was charged to the Public Works Department?

Mr. WALLACE. He went around the Atlantic coast the previous year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not in the steamer of my department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He went in the Public Works steamer.

Mr. WALLACE. It is no wonder that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries requires this large sum of $145,000, when he lets the steamers of his department out to the other Ministers to go on excursion trips. There is no necessity at all for this expenditure. Take the Trade and Navigation Returns and you find pork entered there at 4½ cents a pound, but the Government have to pay 12 and 14 cents for it. Sometimes the Marine Department pays 50 per cent in advance of retail prices and sometimes more. I am aware that the Minister (Sir Louis Davies) has not been able to give that personal attention which he would desire to these matters, so that he could inform the House that these expenditures were under his own supervision. When he comes before us with measures of this extraordinary character, we have the right to ask him to spend a little time in his department and ascertain what is required for the service. We should give him further time to consider why he should ask a larger sum of money that was ever asked before.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg your pardon, you yourself voted $150,000 for this service in 1895-96.

Mr. WALLACE. But there were extra services which had to be performed then, and which are not necessary to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all.

Mr. GIBSON. What were the extra services then?

Mr. WALLACE. There were a large number of services that were performed then that are not required now. If the Minister will strike off that $33,000 we will let the item pass.

Mr. SPROULE. For the benefit of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and other gentlemen opposite who contradicted me in regard to the price of coffee, I take the "Canadian Grocer," which is, I suppose, the best authority we have, and I find that the very best coffee, Old Govt. Java, sells in Montreal and Quebec at 31 cents a pound.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Old Govt. is cheaper than that now.

Mr. SPROULE. The Old Govt. Java is 31 cents a pound, and the New Govt. Java is 40 cents a pound. The highest price of coffee in Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Hamilton, London, St. John, Halifax, Manitoba, and British Columbia is 31 cents per pound, and the average price is somewhere about 27 cents a pound. Take that one item of 150 pounds of coffee for which you paid 40 cents a pound, and there is at least $15 more paid for it than should be paid.

Mr. DOMVILLE. From the sublime to the ridiculous?

Mr. SPROULE. What is from the sublime to the ridiculous?

Mr. DOMVILLE. The coffee.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes, it is getting from the sublime to the ridiculous when you pay 40 cents a pound for coffee which can be bought anywhere for 31 cents at the highest. It is a ridiculous and an indefensible price for the Government to pay. No stronger evidence could be given to the country that this Government is indulging in all kinds of extravagance, and paying more for the supplies than there is any justification for doing. Whether it is paid out to the friends of the Government, or whether it comes back to them, or what becomes of it we do not know. But we know that where you buy coffee by the wholesale and to the extent of 150 pounds, there is no justification for paying 40 cents a pound for it.

Mr. FLINT. I find on turning over the Auditor General's Report for 1893, that the Conservative Government paid 40 cents a pound for coffee. I refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) to that.

Amendment (Mr. Taylor) negatived.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before this item is adopted, I have something to say. The Minister (Sir Louis Davies) has spoken of the threatened increase in insurance rates because of the impression that the waters in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and around our coasts are not safe. That is a very serious thing. I want to ask the Minister, whether he intends to use one of these steamers for the tidal survey service, and to continue the survey which was being vigorously carried on some years ago. There was formerly a vote of $10,000 a year for this tidal survey, but the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has for some reason or other, starved out that service and rendered it of no use whatever. It is reduced to looking after a few tidal gauges. I read last session the strongest possible reports from the chief engineer of the Department of Marine, and from the technical officer in charge of that service, showing how essential it was to have the use of a steamer. In the old Estimates, the hon. gentleman knows, there was provision for the use of a steamer, representing, I suppose, $8,000 or $9,000 in cost and expense. That steamer was placed at the disposal of Mr. Dawson, and he was able to do a great deal of work. The absence of a proper tidal survey for the St. Lawrence and our coasts is a disgrace to this country. We are the neighbours of a country which has a magnificent survey long ago perfected and complete, and round the British Islands there has been a perfect survey for many years. Even in the waters of India, under the Government of India, all this work has been done. But here we are, with great aims and great hopes of trans-Atlantic travel, boasting of our ports, and without the proper surveys of these tides and currents. They are so serious that one of the finest ships that ever sailed out of our ports, the "Castilian," was lost last year: and while the investigation brought out the fact that there had not been that care that was necessary in her navigation. It also brought out the fact of a terrific current at the point where the vessel came to grief. There is no survey of that current; there is nothing to guide except the mere local knowledge of the pilots and the officers. All the underwriters understand this. Among our reports there is one from Commander Gordon, a man who devoted himself to looking into everything connected with navigation around our coasts, giving his experience of a Government ship, which he steered by all the known methods in the vicinity of Anticosti, and yet he found himself in twelve hours from seventeen to twenty miles out of his course. That is a serious thing.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That could not have been due to the current, because they were setting out the other way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was Commander Gordon's opinion, and it is a matter easily verified by reference to the report. Reports of that kind, from Commander Gordon, from men connected with McGill University, notably Dr. Johnston, and from the underwriters, have been backed up to the very hilt by our own nautical adviser, Mr. Smith, at Halifax, who was the old commodore of the Allan line, and knew the St. Lawrence as well, I suppose, as any man. All these men are of the strongest opinion as to the increased danger to vessels in our waters through the absence of these guides and aids to navigators such as are found in all the waters which these ships visit in United States ports or in the ports of the United Kingdom. With these facts before us, I say it was more than a pity that the Minister, though pressed, as I pressed him last session, armed with his own report, would pay no heed to the matter, but starved and cut down the service, and would not supply a ship to carry out the recommendations of his engineers. A ship is needed for that work, and I want to know if the hon. Minister proposes to use any of these ships included in the vote of $145,000?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, no; we cannot spare any one of them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the Minister is not so keen as he seemed a moment ago about meeting this feeling which is abroad in regard to our shores and coasts. There should be some evidence that he is taking reasonable measures to overtake that work and deal with it. He is spending some money on the service; and, while that admits the principle underlying what I am saying, it does not show any particular regard to its importance. Where we used to spend $10,000 a year for that service and use a Government ship as well, all we spent last year was $3,281.45.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is over $4,000. It will be $5,000 this year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. When we spent $10,000 for that service, and had a Government ship besides, these men who had looked into the question seriously—Prof. McLeod and Dr. Johnston, of McGill, and all these underwriters and their representatives, as well as my own officers—urged that the vote was too small to do expeditiously what was required. The calculation is in the reports of how many years, at $10,000 a year, would be required to do that work. Under the circumstances, I very much regret that the Minister has not seen fit to grapple with the question, and now makes the announcement that he does not propose to place on that service one of these ships or even to continue the service on the modest basis on which it was begun.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is a question that has been in dispute, like many other questions, between the scientists on the one hand and the practical seamen on the other. The scientists contend that we should make a survey of the currents around the coast and try and describe them more accurately on the chart than they are described at present, but I have not been able to find a practical seaman who shares that opinion, or an expert who recommends me to incur that expense. I do not say that I have closed my mind in the matter, because I have the most profound respect for the scientists, but the hon. gentleman is wrong when he says our charts do not show either the direction or the course of currents now. They do.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They cannot. If they do, they mislead.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have been examining within a week these charts along with Colonel Anderson and looking at the course of the currents in connection with the "Castilian's" loss. The currents had no more to do with the loss of the "Castilian" than the currents around the Skerrey lighthouse in England. According to the commission which investigated the matter, that loss was due to carelessness on the part of the captain in ignoring the fact that he had run into water so shallow that any prudent man should have known at once he was going off his course. I am taking every step to obtain all possible information. There are two reasons why I do not ask a vote for this purpose. One is I have not made up my mind that the expense would give sufficient result, and the other is that I have no steamer at my service. Then, Mr. Bell Dawson is ill, and has got three months' leave of absence, so that he would not be able to attend to the matter if I had a steamer. I am trying to come to a conclusion in the meantime, if I can, between the opinions I received from practical mariners on the one hand and scientists on the other.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am absolutely amazed at the statement of the hon. gentleman, and I venture to say it will cause equal amazement to the underwriters and shipping men. He has stated that this is a question of theorists on the one side and practical navigators on the other. With the experience of England, of the United States, and of other colonies of England, every one of which has grappled with this question and expended enormous sums on just such a survey as the hon. gentleman says is a mere idea of theorists and scientists—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have made no more surveys than the one we have here.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why, in the hon. gentleman's own department, on the very file connected with this work, he will find the names of the most experienced seamen. Every man in the Allan service—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am making a statement that the hon. gentleman had better consider before he contradicts it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I asked some of the Allan captains myself, and they said they attach no value whatever to this survey.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall move for the papers and show how little the hon. gentleman knows about the papers in his own department. I am surprised he should tell me that these papers do not exist.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not tell you that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I myself, as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, had long ago hundreds of petitions sent in to me. One of the finest navigators the Government ever had, Commander Gordon, who took perfect marks in the royal navy on the subject, and whose memory is revered by navigators around our coast for the great benefits he has done them, was anxious that this survey should be made and pressed its importance in and out of season. Captain Smith, the commodore of the Allan Line, who went through every stage and spent his time as an officer in the service of the Allan liners, sailing up and down the St. Lawrence, and who is at this moment an officer of the hon. gentleman, pressed this subject on the department time and again.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not since I have been there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose that when an officer finds his Minister will not supply the money or even look into the papers before him, he will hesitate before bothering him on that subject.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My nautical advisers have advised me the other way.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What nautical officer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Commander Spain of the fishery and protective service, advised me that he is not satisfied in his mind that this survey is required.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then Commander Spain has a pretty big contract on hand. I am responsible for his appointment and think a good deal of him, but I would not put his opinion against that of Commander Gordon on a matter of which Commander Gordon was master and in regard to which Commander Spain, who was a sub-lieutenant in the navy, could never have given anything like the attention that Commander Gordon gave it. It will be found that he has not studied the subject sufficiently to press upon his Minister the importance of this survey.

Mr. TALBOT. How do you account for his appointment?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not appoint him as tidal surveyor, but to the command of the fishery protection service on the recommendation of Commander Gordon, and I think the appointment was a good one. I think he discharges his duties well, but I do not think I am casting any reflection upon him when I say that he does not stand on the same footing as the men whose names I have given. I shall read with surprise any report from Commander Spain in which he makes light of the importance to navigators of a proper tidal survey of the coast waters and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. I should be amazed to see such a report. And as for the other point, I trust the Minister will not make it necessary for me to move to have the papers brought down, but that he himself will look at the papers—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I told the hon. gentleman that I was keeping an open mind on the subject.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the Minister makes the extraordinary statement that no practical navigators had declared in favour of the necessity of this service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. How can I help that? I have done all I could to inform myself, and I have yet to find a practical navigator who says it is necessary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But the point on which the hon. Minister contradicted me is that these documents were in his department.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not contradicting you at all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman admits—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I neither admit nor deny.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is fair. The hon. gentleman, then I will say, is not aware of most important information in his department on this subject, and I ask him, at the earliest possible moment, to look into it. He will find that practical navigators are on record on the subject, and have memorialized the department to push the service and make it as complete as possible. Finding that, he may change his mind, and induce his colleagues to grapple with this important question in connection with the navigation of Canadian waters. I do not see any argument on the other side. So far as the scientific view is concerned, the hon. gentleman has the fact that we are singularly backward in comparison with any other great shipping nation in the world. Others have this work done. They paid a great deal to do it, when work cost a great deal. We have begun it, and I hope we shall vigorously press it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to say to the Minister that, whatever may be the method, some steps should be taken with regard to this question of insurance, and that at an early day. The difficulty is that ports in this country that are not equalled by any ports in the world, are handicapped by this increase in insurance rates. I refer, for instance, to my own port of Halifax. There is no easier port on the Atlantic coast for shipping to enter or leave than Halifax. Within two hours after leaving the dock in the port of Halifax, a ship can be out on the Atlantic, away from shore, and with a clear course to Europe or other places. Yet this port is handicapped in competition with ports far inferior by the fact that insurance rates are higher for Canada than for the United States. Early and energetic steps should be taken, not only by the merchants—who are already moving, as, for instance, in Halifax—but by the Government of the country. For it is a scandalous thing that ports like Halifax and others in Canada be put at such a disadvantage, not only without cause, but when, as a matter of fact, they are superior to the ports of the United States, which are so much advanced in the race by the lower rates of insurance which they enjoy. Why insurance rates should be raised for all the ports of Canada I do not know. Perhaps the hon. Minister has more information on the subject than I have.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I appreciate fully the importance of the question to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has referred, and I beg to assure him that my colleagues are fully alive to the gravity of the situation. Like the hon. gentleman, I am at a loss to understand on what ground the insurance agencies and the companies at home came to the conclusion that our ports, some of which are among the best in the world, should all be included in this resolution of theirs. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the Government had already taken steps, at the instance of Colonel Bond, who submitted the matter to us some time ago, as to the possible danger of this resolution being passed. My hon. colleague, Mr. Dobell, when he made his last visit to London, went charged to represent this matter fully to the Lloyds' Company in London. About the time he was making the representations, the unfortunate accidents happened, one to the "Castilian" on Gannet Rock, off the coast of Nova Scotia, and the other to the "Labrador" on the north coast of Scotland. Singularly enough the loss of the "Labrador" on Skerryvore Rocks on the north of Scotland is charged against Canadian ports, because her registry was Canadian. That is a most unaccountable thing. There is a letter from one of Mr. Dobell's chief correspondents advising him to delay sending the representations to Lloyds which he was about to forward, because the loss of the "Labrador" had aroused feelings which would interfere with representations being listened to—that it would be better to wait a few weeks and let the feeling die away. No one can be more alive to the gravity and importance of the point the hon. gentleman raises than myself, and I will not allow anything to stand in the way of making, through Government channels, every representation to make it clear to the insurance people that they have no ground for the conclusion they have reached.

Mr. McMULLEN. It must be satisfactory to every hon. member on both sides of the House to hear the emphatic statement of the Minister with regard to the course of the Government in this matter of insurance. It might have been considered, perhaps, that I was turning aside from the question before the committee when I brought up this question; but I hardly think that my doing so merited a rebuke at the hands of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I am glad I did refer to the matter, and glad to hear what the hon. Minister has said. I hope that every effort will be made to remove this disadvantage under which the ports of Canada rest with regard to the insurance tariff, and that our ports will receive that recognition at the hands of those people to which they are justly entitled, and will be speedily relieved of this incumbrance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In regard to the wreck of the "Castilian," the tides and currents have no more to do with it than some conditions over on the other side of the ocean. This officer of his department reports as follows, in the report published by the Marine Department, of 1897:—

The currents on the south-western coast of Nova Scotia and at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy have also much importance, and to obtain the necessary tidal data for comparison a tide gauge should be established at Yarmouth without further delay. In the upper part of the Bay of Fundy and its arms, the currents are probably more nearly parallel with the coast line, as on the Lower St. Lawrence; but on the other hand, the navigation being entirely dependent on the tide, it comes to be of the first importance to determine the time and height of the tide itself correctly. An examination of these currents should be made while the principal tidal stations now established continue in good working order, as the currents are chiefly tidal, and their behaviour can only be ascertained by direct comparison with a tidal record.

I should say he was a bold man who would say, that a ship wrecked in those waters was in no way affected by the absence of that sort of information. I have also in my hand the report brought down to Parliament by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in 1898. On the question as to whether practical authorities regard this as of any importance, this is what his officer, Mr. W. Bell Dawson, tells him:

The leading marine periodicals and geographical publications, which give reviews of the reports of this survey and summaries of the results obtained, were mentioned in my last report. In addition to these two further summaries have appeared in the Dutch periodical "De Ingenieur." These occupy five quarto pages and are accompanied by two maps reproduced from the reports. The Liverpool "Journal of Commerce," in a review of the last annual report of this department, continues to express its high appreciation of the work of this survey, and the importance of the results from a commercial point of view.

Then, after referring to the tide levels at St. John, this is given, which shows some practical importance:

The tidal record at the mouth of the Fraser River has also been of service in the construction of an important coaling wharf at Vancouver. The record was examined for this purpose by Mr. H. J. Cambie, resident engineer on the Pacific division of the Canadian Pacific Railway; the object being to ascertain the level of the loading stages which would secure the greatest number of hours of work. The irregular and unequal character of the Pacific tide makes this difficult to determine without a tidal record for reference, and the difference of a foot in the wharf level, one way or the other, would make a wide difference in the number of hours per week for which it could be used. The character of the tide at the Fraser River is so closely similar to the tide at Vancouver as to afford reliable data for the purpose.

These instances may serve as examples of the accessory ways in which this survey often proves of value, in addition to its direct service to the shipping interest.

That corroborates the statement that I have made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not interfered with the tidal part of the service, but I have given it all assistance, enlargement and improvement.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The two officers of his department, the chief engineer and Mr. Dawson, both urgently ask for the old vote, and the old vote was not given; the hon. gentleman stating, that he did not intend to provide for it. I say, until that is done, it is absurd to say, that we have done what we should to make the waters of the St. Lawrence, or of the various parts of our coast, as reasonably safe as they ought to be, and as England and the United States have made their coasts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not pronounce any final opinion upon it: my mind is open.

Examination of masters and mates..... $5,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman find that men are not coming forward for these certificates?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, there is an enormous number of them. This vote, although being $5,000 every year, is not spent. For this year we have spent, up to the 3rd of April, about $2,800, with May and June yet to come. The expenditure is really about $3,500 for the year. Last year the expenditure was $3,335.40.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This item of $5,000 is a pretty liberal allowance.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have kept it at the same amount, $5,000, although we never spend more than $3,200 or $3,500. It is well to get it; it does not cost anything to get it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How long has Mr. Gilpin been a clerk in this office?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was there before my time, but I do not know how long before. He is now on leave of absence owing to sickness.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He was a good officer in my time and that is a few years ago. $500 is a pretty small salary, and as the hon. gentleman always has this surplus, and there is no likelihood of expending that $5,000, I think the case of Mr. Gilpin might be favourably considered.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter was considered; it was allowed to stand over owing to the delicate state of Mr. Gilpin's health. He has to go away for the summer. He has gone, and we are paying a man in his place. I frankly say that it was a case that might be considered.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can bear personal testimony to the fact that he is a very efficient officer, because I have had dealings with him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would be glad to take the matter into consideration. It has been under my consideration, and Capt. Smith has reported upon it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who is the examiner on the Pacific coast? There is one in Winnipeg, E. B. Tinling, but I do not see one for the coast in the Auditor General's Report, page K-24.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I apprehend his name is not in the Auditor General's Report. I sent out a man and he was appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He does not seem to have been paid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It would not be in the Auditor General's Report. He was appointed last year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What I want to ask the hon. Minister particularly about is in regard to the arrangement he has made in these far-away waters, where, I am told, the laws are in many respects disregarded, and this is working most unfairly to the marine interests. On the Pacific coast there are many Nova Scotians whom I know, who are masters, holding certificates, and their complaint is that the law in regard to masters and mates of vessels navigating Canadian waters in the Yukon district is practically a dead letter. Has the hon. gentleman no system at all to protect their interests? We have our own laws. They are enforced here and have been enforced here, and has the hon. gentleman any answer to the question as to whose business it is to ascertain whether these Canadian vessels are officered by duly certificated Canadian seamen?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That matter was brought to my attention by the members for British Columbia some time ago, by Mr. Maitland Kersey and by Captain Irving, and, as far as I made inquiries I think their complaints were not based upon actual facts. So far as my department is concerned, we could not have done anything more than we have done. I fancy there may have been some irregularities at the inception of the mining rush into the Yukon, because our officials were not there, and the customs-house officials were not as careful as they are now in seeing that captains of vessels clearing from ports had the proper certificates. When the matter was called to my attention by

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. Kersey and Capt. Irving, and by hon. gentlemen representing British Columbia, I wrote to Mr. Russell, the inspector, calling his special attention to these complaints, and I also wrote to my colleague, the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) requesting that he would give instructions to his officers in the district to see that the same law which prevails in and is enforced in other parts of the country was enforced there, and I have no doubt that this will be done. Nothing has been left undone in the matter that I could do.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Now that Russell's name is mentioned, I am doubtful whether there is much enforcement of the law. Russell is an officer into whose conduct I had to cause an inquiry to be made, and he was dismissed from the service. I was rather surprised that he was taken back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I sent out the chief engineer to examine the parties who might be competent to fill the position of inspector, and this man was reported as being the best man. Russell had discharged his duty for some months, when complaints were made to me that his habits were not what they ought to be. I made inquiry and found that there was a time when that was so, but that he had reformed, and that they were now all right. From the reports I received of his reformation, and from the work he is now doing, I took no action to remove him. I understand the hon. gentleman made an inquiry into the matter some years ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and he was dismissed from the service for cause.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was not a case which would necessarily prevent his re-appointment.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The cause was simply this, which the hon. gentleman seems to overlook, that this man, who was appointed as the inspector of individuals' property and to see whether it came up to a certain standard, was himself interested, contrary to the rules of the department, in a number of private matters. He was hired, employed and paid by the people, whose work he was doing instead of doing that of the Government. He was guilty of a breach of trust in the ordinary, fair sense of the term. Inquiry was made, and he was removed, not for any political reason at all, but because he had shown himself to be unfit for the position. I was surprised to hear of his re-appointment, under the circumstances, and, it may be, that for that cause the law was not observed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not fair for the hon. gentleman to charge the non-observance of the law upon him. It was rather due to the collector of customs. I do not want to say one word too much in favour of Russell. I do not know him, but I do not want to say one word against him, but, so far as his work is concerned, I have no complaint, that his inspection is not efficient.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman know that he had been dismissed for cause? Did he take the trouble to look at the record to see whether the facts of the case would warrant his reinstatement?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I did look at the record, but I did not suppose that the case was quite as grave as the hon. gentleman states it. I know that other officers on the coast had charges made against them in connection with property that they were surveying. In fact, an investigation was made under my own management, and, while a great deal of evidence was given against the man, on the whole case, I gave my judgment in his favour. I ordered the investigation and gave him the benefit of it.

Mr. CLANCY. I had in my mind Mr. Palmer, who was dismissed, and in whose case the hon. gentleman did not show as much leniency.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think the case was as flagrant a violation of the rules as would prevent him ever being appointed to a public office again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman looks into the record he will find that it is exceedingly serious.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will look into it again.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was going to observe, that I have called attention to this matter because I think my hon. friend had better make further inquiry into the case of that gentleman. Take the case of the vessel, the "John C. Barr," an American bottom, that was admitted to Canadian registry the other day, and she was valued at $10,000 by the customs authorities at Dawson.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What had my officers to do with this?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The masters and mates are making complaints, and the owners of vessels are making complaints, and here is the earliest opportunity that I have to speak of this vessel, which was valued at $10,000, as the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) told us.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would it not be fair to wait until the Minister of Customs is here?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This is my opportunity to speak, and why is not the Minister of Customs here? Complaints are made, that the law respecting these certificated officers has been practically a dead letter in the Yukon district, and the masters and mates have themselves protested to me. Mr. Maitland Kersey is my authority for the statement, that the "John C. Barr" is worth at least $60,000, and he asked me to ask the Minister of Customs, what that vessel was valued at by his officers, and the reply of the Minister was, $10,000. The complaint is not merely in connection with the "John C. Barr," but several times this season, while the competition is keen, vessels are having their flag changed, and are being grossly undervalued, in order to obtain the benefit of the low duty and get Canadian registry. Mr. Kersey does not expect anything but fair competition, but he wants to see that those laws are properly enforced. Now, as to the Canadian masters and mates: These men have passed the examination in good faith, paid their fees, complied with the Canadian laws, and they now find foreigners coming in, without certificates, and taking the work out of their hands. Some of those steamboat proprietors may take a cheap master or mate, and then take an American pilot, who would be practically master, and paid the master's wages. These are things that ought to be looked into. This practice is an evasion of the law, and I do not think the statute will allow it. There is a large amount of money involved in the one case to which I have directed attention, and, in the other case, there is the interest of quite a large number of Canadian masters and mates, who, on the decline of wooden shipping on the Atlantic, find themselves on the Pacific coast, and are being done out of their work, as they think, unfairly, by reason of the laws of their country not being enforced.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). In reference to the matter of Canadian masters not being employed upon the Yukon, which is probably the river to which the hon. gentleman has referred—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I spoke of the Yukon district.

Mr. MORRISON. The Yukon is the only river to which the hon. gentleman could have referred.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There are steamers plying on other rivers besides the Yukon.

Mr. MORRISON. I have heard of these complaints to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and they can only apply to the Yukon River. The Government could not very well have prevented the employment of foreign captains on the Yukon last year because nearly all the boats upon which they were employed, were built at St. Michaels, or Dutch Harbour, at the mouth of the Yukon. It is needless for me to point out the condition of affairs that existed last year on the lower parts of the Yukon. These boats were built there; I think Mr. Kersey's boats and the boats of the Boston and Alaska Steamship Company, to which the "John C. Barr" belongs. Unless they took the precaution of taking captains with them before the boats were built, they would have to take whoever they could get upon the spot, be they Americans or Canadians, and in many instances these boats did not get into Canadian waters at all. They only made the one trip in any event, so that, at the time they finished their voyage and had got through with the work, there was no possible chance of the thing being remedied. The Government could not possibly have prevented that last year, but, if they prevent a recurrence of it this year, it is about all that can be asked of them. I think these steamboat people on the coast were not at all too precipitate in drawing the attention of myself, and the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and the Government to the necessity of having a stringent enforcement of the regulations on the Canadian side of the line. I would go so far as to say, that, if the "John C. Barr," a boat which I have seen myself, and which I quite agree would be worth $60,000 or more, if that boat was valued at $10,000 by that custom official at Dawson, he should be dismissed at once. I am surprised to think that Mr. Davis, the incumbent of the customs office at Dawson, so far forgot himself, if such is the fact, as to value a boat like the "John C. Barr" at $10,000. If such a thing has been done, the Government ought not to overlook it, but should take steps to prevent its recurrence. The necessity of protecting the interests of Canadian captains and seamen in that district cannot be too strongly urged on the Government. I am quite confident that, on account of the statements made by members of Parliament and by men like Mr. Kersey, that the Government will not neglect the matter, and I myself have been assured by the Minister, it will be attended to.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Yukon River, to which the hon. gentleman refers, is, of course, outside the jurisdiction of the Canadian Government. I had reference to the fact, that these men are bringing these boats to run on Canadian waters between Canadian ports, and, to do that, they have to pursue a course which was not necessary last year at all.

Mr. MORRISON. That refers to this year, then?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Certainly, I am not making a point all the time against the Government. I am glad that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) has spoken on this subject, because he has knowledge of it, and he makes a very serious statement. Mr. Kersey might have been considered, and was an interested party; but naturally, he does not want this unfair competition that is being thrust upon him. Here is a foreign boat, the real value of which is $60,000, allowed in to compete with British vessels which have complied with all the regulations, and that vessel is only valued at $10,000. After the statement that has been made, I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will not stand on etiquette as to whose duty it is to look into this matter, but will communicate the statement without delay to the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). The people who are Britishers and have British ships up there, should not be subjected to competition which is promoted by the fraud or gross carelessness of Canadian officials. I hope the Minister of Marine will advise his colleagues so that not a moment will be lost to prevent this kind of thing.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Steps have already been taken. I did advise my colleague of the matter. It is as well for all of us to recognize the fact that the undervaluation of a ship which is imported has the same penalties attached to it as the undervaluation of any other article—that confiscation can be levied on the article, and penalties on the person guilty of the offence. The Minister of Customs and myself have talked it over, and I have no doubt he has sent his instructions to his officer as I sent my instructions to my officer months ago.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I hope the hon. Minister will see to it that that vessel is tied up without delay and that proper proceedings are taken.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will see that the matter is fairly represented to my colleague without delay.

Rewards for saving life..... $7,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How does that vote stand?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have spent $6,750 out of the $7,000 for this year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is this for saving life at sea only?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and for the life-saving stations besides.

Investigations into wrecks..... $1,000

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I direct the attention of the Minister to the necessity of moving with somewhat greater speed, if possible, than has been the case in the past?

I have in my mind the case of the wreck of "La Bourgogne." The hon. gentleman will remember that he has jurisdiction to order a preliminary investigation or a formal investigation, in case a wreck has happened elsewhere than in Canada or the waters of Canada, if any competent witnesses thereof are to be found in any place in Canada. What took place in regard to the wreck I have referred to? The "Cromartyshire," one of the ships in the collision, arrived at Halifax with her own crew on board and a number of the crew of "La Bourgogne." Owing to the delay in appointing the commission—I dare say it was unavoidable—the crew of "La Bourgogne" got out of the province before the investigation began, and, therefore, it was one-sided or incomplete. Such evidence should, therefore, be taken either before the formal commission is issued, or the commission should be appointed with greater speed. I know that was the opinion of the court; and, although the decision of the court was exactly that which the Admiralty Court and the Court of Appeal in England arrived at as to the cause of the wreck, nevertheless, it was felt by the court and by the community at large that if the evidence on the other side could have been taken, it would have been better.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That matter of delay has been brought to my attention several times, and in the last two investigations we acted with unusual promptness. I appreciate the hon. gentleman's view, and I will act wherever I can with promptness, because I know of the danger of sailors and officers leaving a port, and the benefit of their evidence thus being lost.

Registration of shipping..... $500

Mr. McDOUGALL. May I ask the hon. Minister when that publication was last made?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This year. It is now in course of preparation.

Mr. McDOUGALL. When is it likely to be ready?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In a few weeks.

Removal of obstructions in navigable rivers $1,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On what principle is the hon. Minister dealing with this expenditure?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Wherever I can, I ask the owner, if he can be found, to remove the obstruction, if it is a wreck, and, if he does not remove it, I remove it at his expense, and then sue him for the amount. We removed a wreck at Charlottetown a year ago, at a very large expense, and I am now suing the owner at St. John.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman dealt with the case of floating trees or logs in the river at Chatham?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The present Minister of Justice, when in this House, was continually calling attention to floating trees, stumps and snags in the river there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have never had my attention called to that.

Mr. CLANCY. I think the question was undecided at that time whether the duty fell on the Department of Marine and Fisheries or the Department of Public Works. Up to a very recent day it has not been decided where the responsibility rests. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has been able to settle that point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter has not been lately in controversy, nor have I been asked to use any portion of this money for the purpose the hon. gentleman refers to. I have simply been using it for the purpose of removing all wrecks which were left after the copper and iron had been taken away by the owners.

Mr. CLANCY. Has the hon. gentleman's attention been called to a sunken scow in the river opposite the town of Dresden?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, it has not.

Mr. CLANCY. Do I understand his procedure to be that when the owner of a wreck refuses to remove it, the department will take hold and remove it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and make him pay the amount or sue him if necessary.

The Committee rose and reported progress.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.55 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 15th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

YUKON DISTRICT—PUBLIC DOCUMENTS ASKED FOR.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to some pages of the "Hansard," and for convenience, I will give the numbers of the pages in the present "Hansard," in connection with public documents referred to by the hon. Minister, and which I should like him to lay on the Table of the House at as early a date as possible, since they have been referred to in debate and are public documents. At page 852 the hon. gentleman will see that reference is made to a communication with the chief executive officer of the Yukon, Major Walsh. The hon. gentleman there refers to a communication between himself and Major Walsh. If it is just as convenient to the hon. gentleman I will simply give the general reference and the page of the "Hansard." If the hon. gentleman would prefer it, as I go through the pages, I will at any time read the statement. On page 856 there is a reference to a recommendation of Mr. Ogilvie. I assume that recommendation was in writing, and, on that assumption, I would ask for the production of the document. Then the hon. gentleman, at page 857, refers to his own recommendation for the appointment of the Gold Commissioner. It was no doubt a report to Council, and I would like to have laid on the Table of the House, either the report or the Minute of Council. Also the hon. gentleman refers to his recommendation of the appointment of Mr. W. H. P. Clement, at page 857. Then at page 861 the hon. gentleman read a telegram, and that is in relation to a telegram he sent to Mr. Ogilvie, at Vancouver, in regard to which the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) asked the date. The hon. Minister did not have the date, but he was going to look it up, and, if there is no objection, I would like to have a copy of the telegram which would include the date. On page 872 the hon. gentleman refers to negotiations between the North-west Government or to an understanding, and though he does not say that this understanding was in writing, still, I suppose that it was in writing. It was an understanding with Messrs. Ross and Haultain, and if there is any correspondence in regard to it I would like to have it laid on the Table of the House. A little farther down on that page the hon. gentleman refers to a communication in regard to this, and a reply, and it reads as if that communication and reply were in writing. On page 873, on the same subject, the hon. gentleman refers to his having been informed that, no doubt, attempts would be made to get quantities of liquor into the Yukon district, and I should like to have any statement in regard to his information here, which apparently is a written report. If there be a written report I would like that it be laid on the Table of the House. Then the hon. gentleman read an official letter, date May 10, at page 873, which refers to an inclosed list of permits issued by the North-west Government. I would like the list to be laid on the Table of the House. At page 874, the hon. gentleman refers to advice in regard to that list from the Government of the North-west Territories, and said that this list comprised at that date all the permits. This is the same list, and I would like that communication laid on the Table of the House. Then the hon. gentleman referred to a reference to the hon. Minister of Justice of the question whether the permits were good and were in force, refers to the advice of the Minister of Justice and the advice put in another letter. I would like the advice of the Minister of Justice and his letters, to which reference is made, laid on the Table of the House. At page 875, the Minister (Mr. Sifton) refers to the amended list which came from the North-west Territories Government, and another letter was sent to the officer commanding the North-west Mounted Police. I would like the amended list, and the other letter, unless that letter be the one which he read later on, on the same page of "Hansard." Then, on page 876, the Minister of the Interior refers to Mr. Philp's written statement which he holds, in which the Minister says Mr. Philp is prepared to verify by statutory declaration, &c. I would like the written statement to which the hon. Minister refers laid on the Table of the House. On page 877, the Minister refers to a telegram from Mr. Philp, asking him to send him a certain letter and the Minister declining to send him such a letter. I would like the telegram and the reply. On page 877, the Minister says:

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Well, Major Walsh came to me, in pursuance of a letter written me that he intended to come as soon as he possibly could.

I wish to have that letter. Then, at page 880, the Minister promised—and perhaps has complied with it, although I do not myself know—promised to lay on the Table of the House the report of the proceedings in connection with the staking of a claim, and which the Minister discussed at some length stating that it came before him and that he gave his decision.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Is that the case of Donnelly and Nelson?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and the hon. gentleman said in the middle of a long discussion, that he would lay it on the Table of the House—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did so the next day.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very well; the Minister need not then refer to anything on page 880. At page 885, the hon. gentleman referred to certain records. I do not know whether the Minister is in a position to lay the actual records on the Table, but he spoke evidently from official information which must have been in writing. That has reference to the claims staked by Captain Charles Constantine. On that page, the Minister refers two or three times to the claims staked by Captain Constantine in January, 1898, and that he recorded something like 22 claims in the name of other men in the employ of the Government. Then the Minister refers to his recommendation, and the Order in Council, forbidding that practice, at pages 885 and 886; and on page 888, the Minister says, in referring to Mr. Wade, that when he went to Dawson, he consulted with Mr. Fawcett, and they came to the conclusion, according to the statement given to the Minister, that the occupation of a certain piece of water front was inadvisable for sanitary reasons. I assume the hon. gentleman was referring there to an official report, and, if so, I would like to have that. Also, on the same page, at the bottom, a reference is made to official documents from which the hon. gentleman quoted, and I wish to have them. Then, on page 889, the Minister refers to the confirmation of this transaction by Major Walsh, and if that was done officially, or by an official record, I would like to have a copy of that confirmation. On page 896, the Minister refers to other papers which he may have laid on the Table of the House since, but I have not found them. The hon. gentleman said, in regard to another case that came before Judge Maguire:

What are the facts? At three o'clock to-morrow I will lay the papers in this case upon the Table of the House.

That is in connection with Dominion Creek. I do not know whether the Minister has remembered that promise, but if he has not done so, I would like to have these papers. At page 904, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) refers to a preliminary note from Mr. Ogilvie touching the commission of inquiry. He said:

I have a preliminary note from Mr. Ogilvie saying the report will be forwarded in a short time, and then I will lay it on the Table of the House.

I would like a copy of that preliminary note. The Minister speaks of having referred my statement to Major Walsh. He says:

I sent word to Major Walsh at once that these statements had been made, &c.

If there was any correspondence other than the letter which the Minister wrote to Major Walsh, I think that should be laid on the Table; that is to say: if there was an official communication to Major Walsh touching my statements, I would like to see that document. That is all with reference to the speech of the Minister of the Interior. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) also referred to certain documents, and I would like those produced and laid upon the Table of the House. At page 1642, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said, that he had received personally a large number of letters from gentlemen who went there from the United States of America, congratulating him upon the fact that the difference was so marked between the Canadian Yukon and the American Yukon; and referring to the condition of the law prevailing there. I would like these letters laid on the Table of the House. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), "Hansard," page 1696, said:

The very next day the Minister of the Interior made his report to Council recommending an investigation.

I would like either the report or the Minute laid on the Table of the House in accordance with the rule. The last reference I have is on page 1879, when the Minister of the Interior, in answering a question put by Col. Prior, said:

The department has had information to the effect that Mr. Wade was accustomed to advise Mr. Fawcett respecting the recording of mining claims or duties of the office, &c.

I would like the report to which the hon. gentleman refers, giving him this information. I would feel personally a great deal obliged to the hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) if he would expedite a compliance with the requests I have made.

NEWFOUNDLAND FRENCH SHORE— REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION.

M. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if this Government has been put in possession of a copy of the report of the Royal Commission, comprised of Sir John Bramston and Admiral Sir James Erskine, appointed to inquire into the French rights on the coast of Newfoundland, under the treaties of Utrecht, Paris and Versailles. I am impelled to ask for this information because I intend at an early day to table a motion in reference to this matter, and I desire to be accurately informed. I desire to ask the Prime Minister if his Government has come into possession of a copy of that report; if so, will it be laid on the Table; and, if so, when?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). So far as my knowledge goes, we have not yet received that report.

REPORTS PRESENTED.

Report of the Experimental Farm for the year ending 30th June, 1898.—The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher).

Report of the Department of the Interior for the year ending 30th June, 1898.—The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton).

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Adverting to the remarks made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) a few days ago, I may say that I find on inquiry of the Under Secretary of State that all the Addresses and Orders coming from the House last session and presented to my department through the Secretary of State's office have been answered and the returns have been brought down. If any Address or Order has not been answered, it must be due to some mistake between the Secretary of State's office and the House; and if any hon. gentleman will call my attention to the particular case, I shall be happy to have it looked up.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I did not refer to any Order of the House with regard to the Department of the Interior when I mentioned that Orders of this House passed last session had not been complied with.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I may say that last session I moved for an Address in reference to the university land grant. About a month ago I asked the hon. the Premier if a return to that Address would be laid before the House. It was not brought down last session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It has been brought down this session.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I remember that it was sent to the Secretary of State's office some weeks ago, and the hon. gentleman will find that it was presented. While I am on my feet, I wish to make a statement with regard to a question that was asked by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C., (Mr. Prior) a few days ago with regard to the importation of liquor into the Yukon territory. The papers respecting the liquor ordinance passed by the Yukon council have just been laid on the Table of the House; and I wish to say, by way of particularizing, in answer to the hon. gentleman's request for information, that the ordinance was assented to on the 7th December, 1898; it was received by the Department of the Interior on the 21st March; it was disallowed on the 14th April, and on the 13th April notice was sent to the various collectors of customs and police officers forbidding the importation of liquors into the Yukon district except such liquor as had been shipped prior to that date. Copies of the orders which were sent to the collectors of customs and police officers will be laid on the Table of the House to-morrow.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman, in the absence of Colonel Prior, who, I think, mentioned the subject, whether this permission will apply to liquors that were bought and ready for shipment after the ordinance allowing them to come in had been published, and before it was disallowed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not according to its terms.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Only actual shipments?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to draw the attention of the Government to a return, moved for on the 18th April, 1898, with regard to the expenditure for salaries of customs, inland revenue and post office officials. I think that return has been prepared, and I would like to have it laid on the Table of the House.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 66) respecting the Lindsay, Bobcaygeon and Pontypool Railway Company.—(Mr. McHugh.)

Bill (No. 98) respecting the Cobourg, Northumberland and Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Guillet.)

Bill (No. 29) to incorporate "Le Chemin de fer de Colonisation du Nord."—(Mr. Bourassa.)

Bill (No. 35) to incorporate the Edmonton and Slave Lake Railway Company.—(Mr. Poupore.)

Bill (No. 46) to incorporate the Arthabaska Railway Company (as amended by Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines).—(Mr. Lavergne.)

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Central Counties Railway Company (as amended by Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines).—(Mr. Edwards.)

Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Russell Dundas and Grenville Counties Railway Company (as amended by Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines).—(Mr. Edwards.)

PAYMENTS TO 8TH HUSSARS.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked:

1. Whether, under regulations and orders of the militia of Canada, an annual allowance of $40 per troop is payable to cavalry regiments?
2. The 8th Hussars has eight troops for the year 1898—$320 was due to the regiment.
3. Was this amount paid over, or what amount?
4. If so, to whom paid?
5. Did the officer receiving this allowance pay over to each officer commanding a troop or squadron such money received?

6. If so, when did he make the payment ?

7. If he did not pay over this allowance, what reason is assigned for the retention of such allowance paid him ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. If drill instruction allowance is meant, yes. 2. The 8th Hussars has four squadrons, not eight troops. 3. $240 was paid, being at the rate of $60 per squadron. 4. Major and Brevet Lieut.-Col. Markham. 5. Not known, the distribution being a matter of regimental detail. 6. Not known, the distribution being a matter of regimental detail. 7. Answered by Nos. 5 and 6.

TELEGRAPH LINE TO SKAGWAY AND DAWSON.

Mr. PRIOR (by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asked :

1. Is it not a fact that the English representatives of the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company (Limited), now in Canada, have communicated to the Government the readiness of the company to commence forthwith the construction of the Dawson and Skagway telegraph line under their charter ?

2. Have the Government received information from the High Commissioner for Canada, in London, that the company which the gentlemen represent is quite capable of carrying out the work, and whether, under these circumstances, the Government proposes to undertake the work themselves, in opposition to an Act of Parliament granted last session to the above named company ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. The company mentioned only communicated with the Department of Public Works—which is in charge of the construction of telegraphs—about three weeks ago, its readiness to construct the telegraph line from Skagway to Dawson. Active steps had been taken by the department some time before for the construction of the telegraph line in question. 2. On the 22nd April, Lord Strathcona telegraphed, at request of company, that their finances were ample. I may remark, with regard to question 2, that it is argumentative in its character, as many questions are that are now being put on the list.

BRIDGE OVER KLONDIKE RIVER.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What company owns or operates the bridge and ferry, respectively, over the Klondike River ?

2. What is the toll imposed upon foot-passengers over the bridge coming or going ?

3. What is the width of the river where the bridge crosses ?

4. What is the fare on the ferry ?

5. Did the Commissioner, Major Walsh, assist the companies, or either of them, to maintain a monopoly by booming each side of the river, to prevent private boats from landing ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1, 2, 3 and 4. The Government has no information in regard to said bridge or ferry, the toll imposed on the bridge, or the fare on the ferry. 5. The commissioner, Major Walsh, did not assist anybody to maintain a monopoly by booming each side of the river to prevent private boats from landing.

INTEREST ON DEBT OF ONTARIO.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Has any Order in Council been passed reducing rate of interest paid on the debt owed by the province of Ontario to the Dominion ? If so, what was the date of order and what the reduction of rate ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). No.

ABANDONED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Gillies) asked :

Whether the Minister of the Interior has received the petition from the Dewdney school district, North-west Territories, 380, pointing out the hindrance to settlement by reason of abandoned homesteads which the department has failed to cancel ? Whether the Minister intends to grant the prayer of the petition, and if so, whether action will be taken immediately ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Minister of the Interior has received the petition referred to, and action has already been taken by the department in order to meet the wishes of the petitioners, as far as it is in its power to do so.

BALLOT PAPERS IN BROCKVILLE ELECTION.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. McDougall) asked :

1. At what printing office were the official ballot-papers used in the late Brockville election for the election of a member of the House of Commons for the electoral district of Brockville, printed ?

2. What is the name of the proprietor or manager of such printing office ?

3. How many of said ballot-papers were ordered to be printed ?

4. How many were delivered to the returning officer ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. At the office of the "Recorder" Printing Company, of Brockville. 2. The owners of the establishment. 3. Number of ballots printed, 5,650. 4. In parliamentary elections, the ballots are invariably printed at the instance of the returning officer, who receives all the ballots and distributes them in his own judgment.

CANADIAN AND FOREIGN TOBACCOS.

Mr. DUGAS asked :

1. How many pounds of Canadian tobacco have paid excise duty from 1st July, 1898, up to this date ?

2. What is the amount of said duties ?

3. How many pounds of foreign tobacco have paid excise duty from 1st July, 1898, to this date ?

4. What is the amount of the said duties ?

5. How many pounds of foreign tobacco have paid customs duty since the imposition of the customs duty of ten cents ?

6. How many thousand cigars, made from foreign tobacco, have paid duty from 1st July, 1898, up to date ?

7. What is the amount of the said duties ?

8. How many thousand cigars, made from Canadian tobacco, have paid duty from 1st July, 1898, up to date ?

9. What is the amount of the said duties ?

10. What is the amount paid to the employees of the Canadian tobacco department, from 1st July, 1898, up to date ?

11. What is the amount paid to the employees of the foreign tobacco department, from 1st July, 1898, up to date ?

12. Should no such division exist, what is the total amount paid to employees of the excise office for the tobacco department ?

13. What is the number of employees of the excise office in the tobacco department ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. Canadian tobacco, 1,480,080 pounds ; Canada twist, 65,584 pounds. 2. Canadian tobacco, $74,004 ; Canada twist, $3,279.21 ; total, $77,283.21. 3. Manufactured tobacco, 4,702,295½ pounds. 4. $1,175,573.87. 5. 16,700,845 pounds on which duty was collected by excise ; 2,016,775 pounds on which duty was collected by customs ; total, 18,717,620 pounds. 6. 93,014,455. 7. $558,086.73. 8. 553,240. 9. $1,659.72. In respect to questions 10, 11, 12 and 13 a categorical answer cannot be given, as the work of supervision is divided amongst officers who also have charge of other surveys. It would be impossible to designate specifically the cost of supervision under each head.

EXPORTS OF GRAIN.

Mr. BELL (Addington) (by Mr. Wallace) asked :

What was the number of bushels and kinds of grain the produce of Canada exported from Fort William, Duluth, Parry Harbour, Midland, Montreal, Winnipeg and St. John, N.B. ; giving the amounts from each port, the place of destination, also the number of bushels and kinds of grain from said ports, of goods not the produce of Canada : 1st, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1898 ; 2nd, from the 30th June, 1898, to 31st December, 1898 ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). We are not ready with the answer. Only the first part of the question belongs to the Department of Inland Revenue, and we have written in order to get the answer. The remaining question belongs to the Department of Customs, and the Minister of Customs is absent at this moment.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

PRINTING PLANT IN INDIAN SCHOOL.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

1. Did the Government lease the printing plant in Indian school, Elkhorn, to Mr. W. J. Thompson, of Elkhorn ?

2. If so, was lease cancelled, and for what reason ?

3. Who holds the plant now ? Has it been leased or purchased, and for what sum ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. The lease to Mr. Thompson was cancelled by the Indian Commissioner, the reason for the action not being given. 3. E. H. Garrison. Negotiations for the sale to Mr. Garrison are now pending.

PAYMENT OF OFFICERS AND CREW OF STEAMER "QUADRA."

Mr. PRIOR (by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asked :

1. On what date or dates were the officers and crew of the Dominion steamer "Quadra," in British Columbia, paid their salaries and wages for the months of January, February, March and April last, respectively ?

2. Were they paid their salaries or wages when they were due, or even during the months succeeding the months in which they were earned ?

3. Have they been paid yet for the above four months ? If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answer to the first question is : Pay-list for January, paid 24th January, 1899 ; pay-list for February, paid 23rd February, 1899 ; pay-list for March and April, paid 29th April, 1899. 2. Salaries are due at the end of each month, and in January and February cheques were issued before payment was due to enable cheques to reach Victoria before the end of the month. March payment was unavoidably held over, but payment for that month and April was made on the 29th April. 3. Yes.

INDUCEMENTS TO BRITISH IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Clancy) asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to offer similar inducements to English, Irish and Scotch immigrants as to building houses, seeding and making homes for themselves in the Northwest and providing for their most urgent needs, partially or wholly, until they are settled on their lands, or facilitating transport conditions as it has been doing to the Doukhobors and other foreign immigrants ? If not, why not ?

2. If any inducements have been offered to British immigrants of a character similar to those offered to immigrants from other countries, will the Government specify what they are, and at the same time state what inducements have been offered to Doukhobors and other immigrants from foreign countries.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say: 1. The Government has not built houses or done any seeding for the Doukhobors or any other foreign immigrants. In cases where there was urgent necessity for assistance being given to provide for immediate want of newly-arrived immigrants, a small amount of assistance has been given. It is the policy of the Government to extend this assistance to all English, Irish and Scotch immigrants as well as others. 2. The only difference in inducements offered continental immigrants and British immigrants is that the arrangement made by the late Government respecting continental bonuses has been continued, and the continental bonuses to booking agents is under that arrangement larger than the bonus to British booking agents. The reason for the policy was and is that it is necessary to meet the bonuses paid by other countries to continental booking agents. In the case of the Doukhobors no bonus was paid to booking agents, but in lieu thereof, a special bonus of $4.86 per head was agreed upon and paid to the English committee for the Doukhobors because their committee were prepared to give us a very large number of desirable agricultural immigrants with no expense whatever to the Government in so far as inducing the immigration was concerned, except the bonus. The Government is prepared at any time to make a similar arrangement with any persons who may be in a position to furnish a large body of desirable agricultural immigrants from Britain.

LIQUOR PERMITS IN YUKON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. Has the Commissioner for the Yukon, Mr. Ogilvie, issued or granted any permits for the admission of spirituous liquors into the Yukon territory?

(a) If so, how many and to whom?

(b) If so, under what authority has Mr. Ogilvie acted?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say: 1. The department has been informed that such permits have been granted. In regard to 2 or section A. No report has been received from Mr. Ogilvie as to the number of permits issued, or to whom issued. 3 or section B. It is presumed that he has acted under the authority of section 9 of the Yukon Territory Act.

"BENCH" AND "CREEK" CLAIMS IN YUKON DISTRICT.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. What constitutes a "bench" claim in the Yukon?

2. What constitutes a "creek" claim in the Yukon?

3. Have any "creek" claims been granted to overlap "bench" claims, or vice versa?

4. Are there any disputes pending or appeals before the department, the Minister or the courts, relating to any such disputes?

5. Who are the persons interested in such?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1 and 2. The definition of "bench" claims and "creek" claims will be found in the Mining Regulations, a copy of which I will lay on the Table, with the clause marked to which I refer. 3. Not in so far as the department is aware. 4. Yes. 5. So far as known the names are Ashby, Leak, E. N. Keys, Stephen Wilkinson and Harry Vaughn.

INSTRUCTIONS TO MAJOR WALSH.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. What instructions, if any, were given to Major Walsh, Commissioner for the Yukon district, when he went to that district, respecting (a) his powers and authority; (b) liquor traffic? (c) Is there any truth in the following report of an interview purporting to have taken place at Skagway when Major Walsh was returning from Yukon, when he is reported to have said: "I was given great latitude under the laws and was empowered to amend them as I saw fit, and in some instances I did change them somewhat"?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say: Major Walsh received no written instructions, except such as were contained in the commission which was laid upon the Table of the House last session. The Government has no knowledge of the alleged interview referred to in the question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior to the fact that he has not answered the question. I did not ask if any written instructions had been given to Major Walsh. I asked what instructions, if any, were given. The hon. Minister says there were no written instructions outside of the commission.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I misunderstood the hon. gentleman's question. If the hon. gentleman will allow the question to stand, I will answer it fully on the next question day.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question stands.

REPATRIATION OF CANADIANS.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked:

1. What is the number of Canadians who have returned from the United States, and what is the amount per head allowed for their repatriation?

2. What salary is paid to the several immigration agents, and the number of such agents employed in the work of repatriation from the United States?

3. The number and salaries of the several immigration agents in England and in Europe ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. It is impossible to state how many Canadians have returned from the United States—no separate record of such being kept. No amount per head is specifically allowed for their repatriation, but there are a large number of commission agents in the United States who are paid the usual commission on all settlers arriving in Canada, no distinction being made between repatriated Canadians and others. 2. The number of salaried agents employed in the United States to promote immigration, including repatriation, is fifteen, and their salaries amount to $15,300 per annum. 3. The number of salaried agents employed in England and Europe is thirteen, and their salaries amount to $20,825 per annum.

DREDGING LEASES IN YUKON AND N. W. T.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What number of leases to dredge for minerals in the Yukon provincial district, Northwest Territories, have been granted in 1897 and 1898 respectively ?

2. What amount of rental has been paid in on account of them ?

3. What amount of rental is still due on these years ?

4. Has the department extended the time for payment in any cases, and if in any cases, what ones ?

5. What is the total rental received to date for dredging leases in above district on account of 1897 and 1898, respectively, and how many of these claims are being bona fide worked ?

6. How many of these claims have been abandoned and cancelled by the Government, in accordance with the regulations ?

7. How many of the lessees have complied with section 5 of the regulations for dredging leases ?

8. What amount of royalty has been received from these lessees ?

9. Has Mr. Robert Anderson complied with the terms of his lease, as set forth in Order in Council, 12th January, 1898, and in what respects ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. None for 1897. Number of leases granted in 1898, 268. 2. Total amount of rent paid, $131,505.50. 3. Amount of rental still due for 1897, none ; 1898, $2,300. 4. A general extension of three months from the date the rental became due has been given to all lessees who have applied for it. 5. The total amount of rent received for 1897, nil ; 1898, $131,505.50. 6. Six leases have been abandoned. None cancelled by Government. 7. None of the lessees have complied with section 5 of the regulations so far as known. 8. No royalty has been paid by lessees. 9. Mr. Robert Anderson has complied with the terms of his lease by paying the rental and filing in the Department of the Interior the returns of the survey of the location leased to him.

Mr. MARCOTTE.

HOMESTEAD LAW—INTEREST ON PRE-EMPTIONS.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. McDougall) asked :

1. Whether the hon. the Minister of the Interior, or the Dominion Government, or both, have been memorialized by the Moose Jaw Agricultural Society and town residents and settlers throughout the district, respecting interest on pre-emptions, and setting forth—

That the homestead law, as it applies and was in force in pioneer days, enacted that a settler could take up a homestead and pre-emption and have three years to complete his duties, and was then supposed, but not compelled, to apply for his patent ;

That immediately on applying for and getting his patent, interest at the rate of six per cent per annum began to accrue on his pre-emption ;

That many settlers fulfilled their settlement duties promptly and applied for their patents, thus fulfilling, in the letter and spirit, the homestead law requirements, while others, equally if not more numerous, took advantage of the law not being compulsory as to the time when they should apply for their patents and held their pre-emptions many years without being charged any interest, thus saving $24 a year ;

That those who fulfilled their settlement duties in the letter and spirit of the law, felt and still feel aggrieved, that the Government thus favoured the law-breaker instead of the law-keeper, and accordingly stopped making payments on their pre-emptions, money being much needed for other necessary purposes ;

That they memorialized the late Government on the matter, asking that both parties should be placed on the same footing, not by retroactive legislation, compelling those to pay interest who were exempt by the letter of the law, but by cancelling the interest on the pre-emptions of those who fulfilled the law in the letter and spirit, and soliciting a decision on the matter.

2. Whether the Government have come to a decision on this question ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. No decision yet arrived at.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY—PAYMENT TO QUEBEC GOVERNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. Has the Dominion Government yet paid over the capital sum of $2,394,000 to the province of Quebec in consideration of its interest in the North Shore Railway, according to the legislation of 1884 and subsequent years ? If so, what was the date of payment ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). No.

YUKON—THE COMMISSION TO MR. OGILVIE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Has any communication respecting the commission of inquiry been received by the Government from Mr. Ogilvie ?

2. If so, what is the purport of such communication or communications ?

2. Has Mr. Ogilvie asked for an extension of his powers in the commission of inquiry ?

4. If so, what is the date of the request ?

5. Has any reply been sent to a communication of 27th February, 1899, from the Committee of Miners of the Yukon, referred to by the hon. the Minister of the Interior on the 1st day of May 1899 ("Hansard," page 2329) ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1 and 2. There has been no official communication on the subject. 3. Mr. Ogilvie has not asked for an extension of his powers, but in a private letter to the Minister suggested that it might be desirable to extend the period to be covered by his investigation. 5. No.

YUKON—APPOINTMENT OF A SECOND JUDGE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to take steps to appoint a second judge for the Yukon district ?

(a) If so, will the Government consider the advisability of appointing a judge who is familiar with the principles of common law and the Judicature Act system in force in that district ?

(b) Is the Government aware of the condition of the docket of cases before the Hon. Mr. Justice Dugas ? If so, what is it ?

(c) If the Government is not advised as to the condition of the docket, will immediate inquiry be made ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). As to the first portion of the question the answer is "Yes." The answer to subsection (a) of the question is : The Government will appoint a judge who will be thoroughly qualified to administer the law which is to be administered in the Yukon district. The answer to subsection (b) is : The Government has no information in regard to the condition of the docket of cases before Mr. Justice Dugas. The answer to subsection (c) of the question is : In view of the statements contained in the question of the hon. gentleman, inquiry will be at once made as to the condition of the docket.

YUKON—APPOINTMENT OF MESSRS. WADE, MCGREGOR AND NORWOOD.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What was the date of Mr. F. C. Wade's appointment to the following offices respectively (a) Crown prosecutor, (b) registrar for the district of Yukon, (c) clerk of the court ?

2. When did he first reach Dawson as an officer of the Government ?

3. When were J. D. McGregor and H. H. Norwood respectively appointed inspectors in the Yukon district ? (a) When did they respectively reach the scene of their duties ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Mr. Wade was appointed Crown prosecutor and clerk of court and registrar on August 26th, 1897. 2. He arrived at Dawson 26th of February, 1898. 3. Mr. McGregor and Capt. Norwood were appointed 4th July, 1897. Capt. Norwood reached Dawson 28th March, 1898. Mr. McGregor reached Dawson 26th February, 1898.

DISMISSAL OF MR. PIERRE SAMSON.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Has Mr. Pierre Samson, caretaker of Fort No. 1, at St. Joseph de Lévis, been dismissed by the Minister of Militia ?

2. Was he granted an inquiry ?

3. By whom has he been replaced ?

4. What is the calling of his successor ? Was he a carter ?

5. Is he competent ?

6. How long has he been so ?

7. Is he a relative of Mr. Demers, of Lévis, a member of the Dominion Parliament ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. No ; none was asked. 3. Arthur Bilodeau. 4. No calling given. 5. Yes. 6. Always. 7. Nothing is known on this point.

LEASE TO MR. THOMAS POWERS, OF LEVIS.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Whether Mr. Thomas Powers, contractor, of Lévis, has leased from the Government the ground at Fort No. 3, for the purpose of getting out stone ?

2. What price does he give ?

3. Was he foreman of the work at Etchemin bridge, on the Intercolonial ?

4. At what price did he sell the stone he took from the Government ground ?

5. Is he the furnisher of stone for the bridge, paid as furnisher and at the same time foreman of the work ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Mr. Thomas Powers holds a lease of sixteen acres of land at Lévis from the Government. No provision is made therein for removal or quarrying of stone upon the property by Mr. Powers or others. 2. $6 a year. 3, 4 and 5. The Militia Department does not possess any more information about this matter, which is not under its control.

Mr. DUGAS. Then, questions 3, 4 and 5 in that question will stand ?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). They will have to be put again ; there is no sense in allowing them to stand without the name.

Mr. SPEAKER. I suppose the question so far unanswered can stand.

CORDWOOD SUPPLY TO LEVIS FORTS.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Does Mr. Alfred Blouin furnish cordwood to the Forts at Lévis, and did he tender for the service ?

2. At what price does he sell his wood ?

3. Did the Militia or the Public Works Department advertise for tenders ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. The price paid for the present year is $6 per cord, and the two previous years $6.50 per cord, delivered at the forts. The price paid in 1895 was $8.25 per cord. 3. No.

STORM SIGNAL AT McKEEN'S POINT—TENDERS.

Mr. McDUGALL asked :

How many tenders were received by the Government for the construction of a storm signal at McKeen's Point, Port Hastings, Inverness County ? Who were the tenderers, and what was the amount of the respective tenders ? Was the contract for the work let on the lowest tender ? If so, to whom ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The matter is being attended to by Mr. Stupart, director of the meteorological service. 'On the 28th ultimo he reported that he had given instructions to the agent at Port Hastings to obtain tenders ; that he had done so, but the lowest being for an amount much greater than was paid for a mast before, Mr. Stupart suggested to wait until an inspector from his office could visit Port Hastings, which was approved. We have no information as to the number of tenders received by Mr. Stupart or the agent, nor as to the names of the tenderers, nor the amount of the respective tenders, nor has any contract been let.

Mr. McDUGALL. Will the hon. Minister promise to get that information ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, nor if I had it would I give it. It is not customary to give the amount of the tenders or the names of the tenderers before the contract is let.

GENERAL SERVICE MEDALS.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Kaulbach) asked :

1. Is it the case, as stated in the "Canadian Military Gazette" of 2nd instant, that the Canadian general service medal, 1866-70, is to be on the same ribbon as the North-west campaign medal of 1885 ?

2. And that those who served in repelling the raids and also in the North-west campaign will not receive the general service medal, but only clasps to attach to the North-west medal ?

3. If so, on whose recommendation was this done ?

4. And who is responsible for the course adopted ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. Yes. 3 and 4. The Right Hon. the Secretary of State for War.

Mr. MARCOTTE.

THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Kaulbach) asked :

1. Has the agent or officer appointed to enforce the provisions of the Alien Labour Law in Toronto and vicinity, or anybody on his behalf, been instructed by the Government or by any member or officer thereof, to hold in abeyance or to abandon prosecutions under provisions of the said law ?

2. Have any prosecutions been made under the provisions of the Alien Labour Law in Toronto or district ? If so, have the prosecutions been concluded, and what has been the result ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answer has been placed in my hands. There was only one prosecution begun—the Queen vs. McMurtry. The case was ready for trial in November last, but the agent, W. B. McMurrich, was instructed to take no further steps until instructed by the department.

THE REBELLION OF 1885—CLAIMS COMMISSION.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan) moved for :

Return of all reports and recommendations of the commission appointed to investigate and settle claims for losses arising out of the Saskatchewan rebellion of 1885 ; also a statement of all claims presented, the amount paid in each case, also all claims presented and not entertained.

He said : Mr. Speaker, some hon. gentlemen may consider that, in bringing this question before the House this afternoon, I am dealing with what may be called ancient history ; but as it is a question which directly interests a large and important number of my constituents, I think I need not apologize to the House for bringing it before them. That question is the settlement of the rebellion claims in the district of Saskatchewan. I am going to confine myself to these, and leave the claims in other parts of the territories to be dealt with by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver). I am going to confine myself to the Saskatchewan district, and in doing so, it will be necessary for me to speak at some length of the causes which led to the rebellion—not to justify the rebellion, but to give the House an inside knowledge of how that rebellion came about. That question has been discussed a great many times, but I might say that a true knowledge of the facts has not come out if the Government had exercised proper judgment in dealing with the matter, so far as the half-breeds of the North-west Territories are concerned, the unfortunate rebellion of 1885 would never have taken place. It is well known that previous to the opening of the North-west Territories some twenty years ago, and down to fifteen years ago, the Government then in office showed no wisdom in the selection of the officials they sent out to deal with the people of the North-west Territories. In those days there were very few people in that country of any nationality except the natives—those who had been born and brought up in the North-west Territories and Manitoba. It is well known that those people had never travelled outside of the country and knew no civilization except that of their own surroundings, and, therefore, could not be expected to use the same judgment that would be expected of those who had travelled and seen something of the great world beyond. It was on that account all the more necessary that in the selection of their officials, the Government should have chosen the best men possible to deal with those people. But I am sorry to say they did nothing of the kind. They did not select their officials because of their ability and efficiency, but on account, I suppose, of the good work they had done for the party in the east; and as the west was supposed to be a very good pasturage for men of that kind, we had all sorts and conditions of people, in the shape of officials, dumped on us in the North-west. I know something of the conditions out there, having lived in the North-west twenty years, having gone out there, in fact, when the country was first opened. A great many of the half-breeds on the Saskatchewan were born in the North-west Territories—especially most of those who had settled along the south of the Saskatchewan River. When the Government settled with the half-breeds in the province of Manitoba, they did so up to the year 1870, and gave them scrip to that date. The Government then sent their officials into the territories, who settled with the Indians by establishing them on reserves, furnishing them with agricultural implements and everything necessary to start in life as farmers, and also providing them with instructors. The Government further gave an annuity of $5 a year to each Indian, besides $25 per year to each chief, and $15 a year and a good suit of clothes too. But the half-breeds in the North-west Territories had never been in the province of Manitoba when the settlement there was made, and it was the duty of the Government, when treating with the half-breeds and Indians of Manitoba, to have also treated with the half-breeds of the territories. But they did not do so. Consequently, year after year, these people were agitating for what was undoubtedly their just rights. They were agitating to get the scrip to which they were just as well entitled as their relatives and friends in the province of Manitoba, then known as the Red River. Nothing, however, came of their agitation, because the officials in the country at that time did not, in their wisdom, see fit to instruct the Government as to what should be done, but on the contrary, pooh-poohed the whole thing.

Another cause was the fact that these people who had settled on their lands in the south Saskatchewan had done so, as their forefathers and friends had done in the old province of Manitoba. They expected their lands to be surveyed in the same manner and expected to get the same amount of lands as their friends had been given in Manitoba.

Now, there was not an official in the North-west who did not know that these people were agitating day in and day out to have these grievances redressed, but the Government did nothing; and this agitation went on from year to year, until at last those people turned to the only friend they had in the world. They had never travelled, they knew nothing of the outside world, and they turned at last to the only person they knew to get their grievances redressed, and sent for Mr. Riel. Mr. Riel came on the scene, and you would have thought that, after his arrival there, the Government would have had sense enough to send out a commission or to have done something to settle these people's claims. But in the place of sending up a commission to settle with these people, what did they do? They prepared for war. They started at once to put up barracks and that sort of thing, and sent a large police force into that part of the country. That would have been all right in itself, if the Government had used ordinary discretion, but instead we find that these officials gave wrong advice; and, instead of advising the Government to put up their barracks right in the heart of the country where the trouble existed, they advised the Government to select a place some twenty-seven miles away from the seat of trouble—an old Hudson Bay post called Fort Carlton, where there was a lot of old tumble-down buildings. This Fort Carlton had been built on a plateau, some thirty or forty acres in area on the river bank, surrounded by hills 200 or 300 feet high, and there they had the barracks erected. No doubt the reason was they wanted to stand in with the Hudson Bay Company. No doubt we had a sort of family compact at that time in the country in the shape of the Government officials. This family compact the chief factor of the Hudson Bay Company stood in with, and, therefore, the barracks were erected at this place. The question whether it was the proper place was not considered at all, but only the question that the Hudson Bay Company had a lot of old buildings there which they wanted to get rid of at a good price, and no doubt succeeded in doing so. Then, the other friends of the family compact came in and each of them wanted a little slice of what was going in the shape of contracts for lumber, stone and other things, and each one got his share. What was the result? The result was that the agitation continued growing and was taken no notice of, because the police were twenty-seven miles away from the seat of disturbance, and, therefore, not in a position to know what was going on in the centre of unrest, until at last one evening the rebellion broke out. It started with only eight men, headed by Mr. Riel, and if the police had been on the spot, where they ought to have been, that rebellion would have been nipped in the bud and never got beyond the little settlement of Batoche. Riel went from house to house, also among the simple inhabitants of Batoche, and, at the point of the gun, said to them: I want you to come out and take up arms and join me. These men looked for protection, but the police were 27 miles away. What could they do? They could only do as they were told, for there was nobody to protect them. So they marched out and joined the ranks of the rebels. And then, it is well known, that, after he got them together, Riel played on their fears and their ignorance, telling them: You are in the rebellion now, and, if you try to get out of it, you will be hanged. They were poor, innocent people; they had never been outside of their own country, and knew nothing of the laws, and they believed what he told them. That is the way the rebellion was brought about, as was well known. Now, after that unfortunate rebellion had broken out, the Government, of course, had to send up men to suppress it. But the best judgment was not used by the Government of the day in the selection of men sent out at the head of the transport and other services. We find, that these men sent up there to assist in suppressing the rebellion, turned out to be a lot of harpies and sharks—I do not know what to call them, but, if they were called brigands, perhaps it would be the most appropriate name for them. They proceeded to take everything they could lay their hands on. They evidently thought they had a license to rob and steal everything in sight. It is well known, that, at a place called Gabriel's Crossing, above Batoche, they went so far as to steal—I cannot use any other expression, for no milder word will express it—as actually to steal a billiard table belonging to a poor half-breed who lived on the banks of the Saskatchewan. Did they inquire whether he was concerned in the rebellion? Not at all. The property was there, and they wanted it; so they loaded it on the steamboat, and carried it away. They also stole a lot of bands of horses belonging to the half-breeds, and drove them to Winnipeg. I myself met several of these bands while they were on their way down. I said to the men: "Where are you going with these horses?" Their reply was: "Oh, these belonged to the rebels, and we have been ordered to gather them up and take them to Manitoba for Mr. Bedson." Now, Mr. Bedson did not inquire, who these horses belonged to. How could he? Here was a band of horses running wild on the prairie. Admitting, for the sake of argument, that it was justifiable to take the property belonging to rebels—how was Mr. Bedson, or anybody else, to know that these horses belonged to rebels? They might have belonged to loyal men; no doubt, some of them did. But it made no difference to these gentlemen. The horses were there; they wanted the horses, and they took them. More than that; I venture to say, that nine-tenths of the stuff taken in that country, whether stolen and carried away or stolen and destroyed, was taken after the unfortunate rebellion was suppressed and the half-breeds had laid down their arms. It must have been so. For instance, in Batoche—these gentlemen could not take anything until they got into Batoche, and, by the time they got there, the rebels had surrendered—we have a case in point in Mr. Champagne's horse. This was a beautiful grey horse, the property of Mr. Champagne. He said to these men, "Don't take the horse." But nobody inquired who owned it, and in a little while General Middleton was riding round in great state on this poor man's horse. This case was tried before Judge Burbidge, I believe, and he found that the horse belonged to Mr. Champagne, and had been wrongfully taken away, and ordered that $200, the value of the horse, be paid to him. But up to this time, the poor man has never received a cent. That is only one case. They took everything in Mr. Champagne's house. Mr. Bedson was there with the rest of the gentlemanly brigands, and they gathered everything they could lay their hands on, and took it away. That was after the rebellion was over. I wish to show what took place in Battleford in one case which has become historical—the case of Bremner's furs. It is a well-known fact, that in Battleford, in another part of my constituency, the robbery of Bremner's furs—I do not feel justified in using a milder name than "robbery"—took place. This Bremner was a comparatively wealthy man. He had been all his life gathering this bit of money, and so, probably, his forefathers before him. Ten thousand dollars was quite a fortune to a man on the Saskatchewan in those days. The rebellion broke out just about the time he got these furs together. It was a time of the year when his traders—he had traders all over the northern country—sent in their furs to Bresaylor. What did Bremner do with his furs, when the rebellion broke out? He did what any law-abiding citizen would have done, what any man in this House would have done—he sent the furs to the representative of the Government: he put them in charge of the police, that is to say, in charge of the chief officer, General Middleton, and the rest of the Government officials. The rebellion being on, and his property being in danger, he wanted the guardians of the law to look after it. And they did look after it. They looked after it so well that the man never saw any of his property again. And then, to make the matter worse, in the hope of justifying themselves for stealing this property, they trumped up a charge against him, and tried to make out that he was a rebel. I must say, in justice to the Crown prosecutor, who was, no doubt, a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, that, as soon as he investigated the case and saw there was nothing in it, that there was not a tittle of evidence against him, he dismissed Bremner. It is a well-known fact, that the evidence showed, that Bremner had done all he could to stop the rebellion, and that, after it started, he had done a great deal to protect the lives and property of settlers in that country. But he had these furs—six or seven thousand dollars' worth—and these gentlemen wanted them, and they took them. And I say, it is a crying shame, that this poor old man, is now living in the constituency of my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) in poverty. Now, let us look at what follows. A short time after the rebellion was over, the Government, in their wisdom, thought fit to appoint a commission to go out to that country to settle up the half-breed claims. Strange to say, this commission was appointed shortly before the first election that took place for this House in the North-west Territories. The troops had hardly got out of Prince Albert before scrip commissioners came junketing in behind them. These scrip commissioners sat, and gave these men everything that they had asked for in the way of scrip. Everybody was invited to come and have his claim settled. Had this been done years before, there would have been no rebellion, and all the bloodshed and all the loss of property and treasure would have then been avoided. Another commission was appointed to settle rebellion claims. The Government felt, that it was necessary to give the people of the North-west Territories representation in this House: so they at once put a Bill through to divide the Territories into electoral districts, and called for the election of representatives. It became necessary then, that the Government of that day should carry Saskatchewan. This was the best means to justify their action before the rebellion. They wanted to show this House and the country, that the people of Saskatchewan, the bone and sinew of that district, had nothing to complain of. If the Government succeeded in the election, they would be able to say: Why, they have sent a Conservative to represent them in this House; and, if they had had any grievances, they would not have done that. So they appointed a rebellion claims commission, and on that commission they appointed a gentleman named McKay, who lives in my district. Mr. McKay was getting $15 a day. We find that previously to the elections he was occupied electioneering in the district of Saskatchewan for three months, and during all that time he was getting $15 a day. We find also that notwithstanding that that was in the good old prohibition days when there was not supposed to be any whisky in the North-west Territories for the rank and file, at least, still Mr. McKay came up with a great supply of whisky with which to educate the poor half-breeds in that district how they should vote, because it was the first opportunity they had of using the franchise. I asked the question of the Minister the other day, and received the answer that during all this time Mr. McKay was getting $15 a day, and was paid his travelling expenses from Ottawa to the district of Saskatchewan and return. Well, we find that after he got through with this beautiful work that he had been performing up there, he was swelling around with all the importance of a rebellion claims commissioner. He was the man for the half-breeds; of course he could exercise a great deal of influence about election time. This gentleman was rebellion claims commissioner, and he could promise this and that. Now what do we find among those who put in claims? We find that many of these half-breeds, although they might have been in the rebellion, although they might have been rebels, if you wish, some of them got paid to the extent of $20,000, while other good honest settlers, men who had taken up arms to assist in suppressing the rebellion, could not get one cent. But then this gentleman had influence amongst the half-breeds, and the election was coming on. I have here, Sir, a list of claims that were paid, and it is easy to find out who fed at the trough and who did not. We find by looking at this list a gentleman who was, I think, speaking subject to correction, a councillor in Riel's government; if he was not, some of his relations were. He gets $6,461.63. Now that fellow was the biggest worker in Saskatchewan in favour of the Conservative candidate in that election, and why should he not be paid for it? We find another man named Eugene C. Boucher, he gets $373. That is a very fair price. I find his brother, John Baptiste Boucher, gets something like the same amount. Another brother gets 300 odd dollars. In all, this family gets about $1,000. The fact is that these men's father was Riel's high priest. These men were paid, while hundreds of other good people who had suffered in the rebellion, could not get one cent. But it all depended upon whom they were voting for at the time, and it happened that these gentlemen that I have alluded to voted in favour of the Conservative candidate.

Now there is another side to this question. We find that this man McKay, rebellion claims commissioner, had a terrible lot of relations. There was never a family in the Dominion before who had so many relations. We find in going through that list that every McKay in the district of Saskatchewan, with the exception of one or two, was paid his claim nearly in full; some of them were paid near $5,000, men, who, to my knowledge, were never known to be wealthy. Still, they were talking Conservative and working Conservative, and they got paid. If you go through this whole list you will find men being paid, one after the other, who had been connected with the rebellion. Take this man Batoche, he got $20,000. Mr. Batoche was right there, and had his house and everything. If he did not take an active part in the rebellion, it was not that his intentions were not good, but it was because he did not like cold lead. I have heard that Batoche was in the habit at that time of furnishing arms and ammunition to forward the rebellion. Where did all these new Winchester rifles come from? Mr. Batoche had something to do with it. Still he was a loyal man, and he got $20,000. I do not know what he got $20,000 for. I venture to say that everything he lost, if he lost anything, he gathered it up and sold it after the thing was all over. He knew what was taking place. I venture to say that he left very little for anybody to take in his house when the rebels came. Still, he got $20,000. I know another gentleman that had a small store near Batoche, by the name of Baker. His store was not more than 20 by 20 feet square. He had a stock of goods that he had been selling out the whole winter long. The balance of his stock was taken by the rebels, and I am sure the whole of it could have been taken away in a couple of cartloads. But this gentleman gets $13,000, or nearer $14,000, and he is a good Conservative. Now, let us come to another man by the name of Clinkskill. Clinkskill was another good worker in election time—he claimed $31,602.92., and he was paid $24,378. Two McKays put in a claim for $5,226.98, and they were allowed $4,740.98, very nearly the whole claim. I venture to say that they never had that much stuff in their lives. Here is another man in Battleford, John G. Oliver, a man who was wealthy. He puts in a fair and legitimate claim for $16,539.43. But he happened to be a Liberal, and he was allowed $589, without any cents. They wanted it to look well, so left out the cents. Now let us go on a little further. Here we find a Mr. Parker. He puts in a claim for $1,244, and gets $730. I am sure that is a fortune for Mr. Parker. I never heard of him having that much property in his life. He has been a good, faithful supporter of the late Administration ever since that day. We might go on and find hundreds and hundreds of such cases. I will give a few more because I want to make comparisons. Here is a gentleman by the name of Robert Jefferson, of Battleford, a good, honest man, who put in a modest claim for $309, and he gets nothing. He did not belong to the faithful. Then we go on and find another man named P. G. Laurier. He put in a modest claim for about $55, and he got the whole amount. He belonged to the faithful. Here is another gentleman named Malcolm Macdonald, a very good man but he happened to belong to the wrong side of politics. He put in a bill for $285, and got nothing. We find that H. McRae put in a claim for $40, and got nothing, another Liberal. Here is a gentleman by the name of Joseph Nolan. Now, there is Joseph Nolin, who put in a claim for $516, and got $380.25. Then, there was Duncan Nolin, who put in a claim for $667.25 and got $332.25. So it went on that any man who happened to belong to the right side got his claim paid. Pierre O'Kenass, who happened to belong to the wrong side, in a claim for $208, and got nothing at all. This is pock-marked all through; where there is a Liberal to be found he got nothing at all, while others were paid, if not in full, as much as they would be allowed to pay them. There is the case of Geo. Pichette, who put in for $50, and got nothing at all. This is a very honest old man, whom I know very well, and I think, judging from the size of his claim, $50, he probably did not put in a claim for what he had not lost. Here is a gentleman of the town of Prince Albert, a well known and respected man. I have gone over all these claims to show the men who were paid after the rebellion ended. Mr. J. C. Mackenzie, who came from Prince Edward Island, and who is a respectable man, sent his son to Duck Lake to fight in the ranks, when the rebellion broke out, to uphold law and order in the country, and who was killed in the fight. Mr. Mackenzie put in a small claim for $25, and it was not allowed, but on the other hand it was thrown out. That is the way the settlement of these claims took place in the Saskatchewan district. This man McKay, of course, looked after his own relations. As I mentioned before in this House, there were two widows up there who put in claims—one McKay and the other Kennedy; but only the claim made by McKay got paid. Mr. McKay, after the claim was paid, tried to explain it by saying: "How could the rebels have got any of the Kennedy property when they never came near the Kennedy place?" My answer was: "How did the rebels come to jump over the Kennedy place to go about ten miles further on and take the property of the Widow McKay? They must have jumped over her property to get it." He did not answer that. This is the way a great many of these claims have been settled. Now, there are a great many Scotch half-breeds in that country. The whole of these people took up arms for the Government as soon as they were asked, and, I may say, that when they arrived in the town of Prince Albert they were not treated very well. The organization there was not the best in the world; in fact, I never saw such an organization. I know that a portion of the battalion was armed with clubs, and it is a good thing that there is lots of timber in Saskatchewan, for, otherwise, they would not have been able to arm themselves. A gentleman told me a story which goes to illustrate the class of officers that we had in the Saskatchewan at that time, members of the family compact, as I said on a previous occasion in this House. A certain important colonel was in charge. One of those citizens, who was armed with a stick, said to the colonel: "I have been assigned to keep guard in this end of the town; what shall I do?" The colonel, in all his dignity, drew himself up, and said: "Sir, go out, and if you meet the enemy engage him, and fall back on your support." The Scotch half-breeds stood loyally by the Government, but when the question of the settlement of their claims came up, they were not treated with fairness or with justice. If a commission were appointed to look into that matter, a fair and honest commission, I think I would be able to prove that these parties have not been treated honestly and fairly as they should have been treated by the Government of that day. They all took up arms, and assisted in putting down the rebellion, and they all lost more or less. All of them have put in modest claims; except this family of McKays. I have heard a story that four of these McKays put in claims for the ox, and that when they got paid they ate the ox. I do not know whether that is true or not, but I give it as I have heard it. These half-breeds are honest people. I think, from my knowledge of them, that they have put in no claims but those which are just and honest, and they should receive some attention; at least, they should be informed as to why these claims were thrown out, although they did not see their way clear to support the Government of the day. This question has been brought forward time and time again in this House, and I hope the Government will see to it that something is done to investigate these claims. I do not wish that anybody who has not a just claim should be paid, but I think that, in justice, these claims should be looked into, and that all that are well-founded should be paid. Take the case of my friend Mr. Bremner. There is a case that the Government should have dealt with at once. This question was before this House, and a committee of this House, in both of which bodies it was discussed. A committee of this House found that $4,374.66 worth of this man's property had been looted, or stolen, or whatever you may wish to call it, and, up to this time, he has not been paid a cent. We have the best evidence in the "Hansard" in regard to this claim. Sir Adolphe Caron, in replying to Mr. Blake, said:

Now, I wish to state in the most frank and open way possible, that I consider the action of General Middleton is the result of a most unfortunate error of judgment on his part. It is stated in the report, and I know that when the General himself, Sir Frederick Middleton, after obtaining the information which, unfortunately for himself, he did not possess at the time, discovered that, through his error of judgment, he had committed an act which he himself to-day admits to be an illegal one, no one more than himself regretted what had been done.

He says further:

I have admitted that it was due to an unfortunate error of judgment on the part of the General that that order was given.

But I have here better evidence than that, the evidence of Sir John Macdonald, who, in discussing this question, said:

However, in this case, the General was decidedly in the wrong. My hon. friend from West Durham (Mr. Blake) has proved, beyond a doubt, if proof were required, that Sir Frederick Middleton's conduct deserves the verdict which has been passed upon it, and passed upon it, I think, in as strong language as could well be used. It is quite clear that the General acted wrongly and illegally, and that the strong language of the committee was perfectly justified. Still, I would be charitable enough to believe that the confiscation of the goods was an error of judgment; but as to the appropriation of the goods, it seems to me, that was not an error of judgment.

That is what Sir John Macdonald says, and it is admitted on all hands, that this property was taken from Bremner. He has been trying, time and again, to get a settlement of the claim which has been brought before this House. I myself brought it up two sessions ago, but nothing has been done, and I desire to say, in this connection, that as long as I am a member of this House, I intend to bring this matter up until this man is honestly and fairly dealt with. Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the House than I have already taken up, but I do want to say that, in the interest of everybody in this country, I think the best thing that the Government can do is to take immediate steps to settle all these postponed grievances amongst these people in the Northwest Territories. We all know that we have spent large sums of money in getting immigrants into that country, and we are all anxious that the people of Canada should get some return from this expenditure which has been made in that country, but, as long as we keep all these old sores open, this agitation is going to go on in this House and in the press of the country and is going to keep immigrants from going into that country. There is no question about that. More than that, it is going to have the effect of preventing capital being invested in that country. There is a very small amount in dispute, for I do not suppose that if these claims were investigated it would take very much to satisfy these people and satisfy them once for all. In the interest of the country in general, it should be done and should be done promptly. I am glad to see that the Government are taking a step in the right direction by settling with the half-breeds of the Athabasca district. The present Government in power are not doing as the late Government did, but they are settling with half-breeds up to the year 1885. I believe that the action of the Government in this matter will commend itself to the House and to the country. I do hope that after they have got through with their labours in the Athabasca district, the Government will see fit to instruct the commissioners to go into the district of the Saskatchewan, and to gather evidence which I know would prove that a large and important section of the people of that country have been wrongfully treated by the late Administration in the settlement of these claims. I believe it will not be hard to establish that. It is common talk; it has got to be a laughing-stock in Saskatchewan, the way some of these people have been treated. Up to the day the hon. gentlemen opposite ceased to be in power and went into Opposition, some of these men, supporters of the late Government, were coming forward with claims. I find my old friend Mr. Batoche was not satisfied with $20,000, but that he got another nice little pull out of the public treasury in the shape of three or four thousand dollars for an old and dilapidated building that he sold to the Government just before the elections of 1896. That old building is not worth 25 cents to anybody. As was shown, in reply to my question the other day, Mr. Batoche got this money while the Government were contemplating the building of a barracks, and had some of the material for the building on the ground. Mr. Batoche had the influence with the late Government and he got the money. It is the duty of this Government to see that the people up there should be treated fairly and honestly. All we ask is for fair and square British justice, and nothing more. I may say, that although these half-breeds may have a bad reputation with some of our friends on the Opposition benches, it is undoubtedly true that they have rendered many and valuable services to Canada. If we have been able to take peaceable possession of that great territory, running from the Red River to the Rocky Mountains, without a drop of bloodshed, as far as the greater Indian tribes, the Bloods, the Blackfeet and others are concerned—if we have been able to do that, we may thank the half-breeds of the North-west Territories for it. They have been the pioneers of civilization there, they have used their good influence with the Indians of that country, and for that reason we have been able to take peaceable possession, as contrasted with the trouble which our friends of the American republic had in a similar mission. The Americans had that trouble and bloodshed, because they had not the same class of half-breeds as we had in Canada, to exercise their good influence in favour of the Government. The people of this country should, I hold, take into consideration the great services which these half-breeds and their fathers have rendered to Canada. The Government should at once take this matter up, investigate all the claims, and when they find that a man has an honest claim, he should be paid. I do not care whether the man be a Conservative, a Patron of Industry, or a Liberal; if he has a just claim, that claim should be paid irrespective of his political opinions. I move for these papers, and I hope that the Government will take the matter into their earnest consideration and deal justly and leniently with the people of the Saskatchewan, as these people deserve.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word on behalf of this claim of Mr. Bremner, and to emphasize the difference between that claim and a large number of those mentioned by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). Most of the claims mentioned by him have no direct connection with the district which I represent, but the claim of Mr. Bremner has now to some extent, inasmuch as Mr. Bremner is now a resident of my constituency. In regard to a large number of those claims, there may be a dispute as to the amount, as to their circumstances, and as to the justice of acknowledging them; but I wish to emphasize, that there is no question whatever in regard to the legality, the circumstances, or the amount of Mr. Bremner's claims. These points have all been settled, and the only point that has not been settled is, that Mr. Bremner has not been paid. I am at a loss to understand why the payment to him has not been made, and it would be interesting to know the reason why. Mr. Bremner was arrested on the charge of being a rebel, and his goods were taken in charge by the authorities pending his trial for treason. The trial was held, Bremner was acquitted, but the goods in the meantime had disappeared. Now, the claim of Bremner against the Government is simply this: He asks payment for goods taken out of his possession, and taken charge of by the Government, supposedly for him. Had it been proven that he was a rebel, then his goods would properly have become the property of the Crown; but as Bremner was not proven to be a rebel, the goods should have been returned to him. They were not returned, and he asks the value of them. It is no concern of Bremner's that employees of the Government stole these goods. He does not care what became of them; all he knows is, that they were taken in charge from him by the Government, and he asks payment for them. The matter has been tried out and settled in Bremner's favour before a committee of the House, and I repeat that I would like to know why Mr. Bremner has not been paid. I now press upon the Government the desirability and propriety of paying him. By reason of this occurrence, Mr. Bremner is to-day practically a pauper. He is past the age when he can help himself, and I say, it is—well, I do not want to use strong language, but you can all figure for yourselves. This old man has a just claim against the Government of the country; he is to-day a pauper because the money owing to him by the country has not been paid.

In regard to the matter of half-breed scrip, I will take just a minute to mention to the House the condition which prevails in the North-west Territories. The Government long ago decided that the half-breeds of the country were entitled to scrip in consideration of their relationship to the Indians. That scrip was issued to them on the basis of the date at which the country was taken over by the Government from the Hudson Bay Company, that is to say, all half-breeds living in 1870 were held to be entitled to scrip. Had the scrip been issued to all the half-breeds in 1870, there would not have been any complications. The first scrip in Manitoba was not issued until several years after that, and, when it was issued, it was issued only to those living in 1870. As some of those who were living in 1870 had died before the scrip was issued, it was issued to their heirs. Scrip was not issued to the half-breeds of the North-west Territories until 1885, and then it was issued on the basis of those who were living in 1870. No scrip was issued to half-breeds who were born between 1870 and 1885. Now, the half-breeds of the Territories claim, it seems to me very reasonably, that they were entitled to payment up to date—that in view of the fact that they were not paid for their original right to the land in 1870, at the time at which they became entitled to payment, they were entitled to payment up to the date at which they received payment, that is, up to 1885; and upon that case they base a claim for an additional issue of scrip. They claim that they have not received their rights—that their title has not been extinguished unless they receive scrip up to the time of the settlement in 1885.

In regard to the Athabasca treaty now being made, I am not aware what arrangement the Government is making in that matter; but I consider that it is more than desirable that the issue of scrip should be on the basis of the half-breeds living at the time of the payment of the scrip, instead of at the time of the transfer of the land from the Hudson Bay Company. The purpose of the issue of scrip is to satisfy the minds of living half-breeds that they have been justly dealt with by the Government; and I submit that it is not a proposition which appeals to the half-breed to say that a man who died twenty years ago was entitled to scrip, whereas the man living to-day is not entitled to a settlement at all. I say the settlement should be on the basis of the living, and not the dead. It should not be on the basis of a date of which the half-breeds know little and care less. If it is a settlement with them, it should be a settlement in regard to them, and not with reference to the transfer made by the Hudson Bay Company to the Dominion of Canada, with which the half-breeds have nothing to do, and of which they know absolutely nothing. I again press upon the Government the desirability of making the issue of scrip to the half-breeds of the North-west Territories at least up to 1885, and the issue to the half-breeds of the Athabasca district up to date.

Mr. P. MACDONALD (East Huron). Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion, I wish to express an opinion upon this question. It is a question to which I gave considerable attention when it first arose, and I have always deemed it one of the most scandalous transactions that every took place in this country. The half-breeds of the North-west were not properly and honestly dealt with. They put in their claims for years before 1885, when they were forced to rebel; and had I been a half-breed in that country and owned land, and had I been dealt with as the half-breeds were dealt with, I certainly would have been a rebel, and would have taken up arms to defend my own fireside and my own family and children, even against the militia of Canada. Time and again the half-breeds sent deputations to Ottawa for the purpose of representing to the then Government their claims to a proper settlement. Their petitions and other documents which were sent here year after year were simply pigeon-holed in the departments here, and were never considered at all; and the half-breeds were threatened to be deprived of the property to which they had a right. Ultimately their loyalty ceased to exist, and they broke out in rebellion, as we all would have done if our property had been seized in such a way. They knew not what to do. They had no leader, and they went to the United States and got Riel to take charge of their affairs, and a rebellion took place which cost this country six or seven million dollars. If it had been proven that the half-breeds had not just rights or claims, they would have certainly been to blame; but after the rebellion was over, after so much blood was shed, and so many of our volunteers had lost their lives on the prairies in the spring of 1885—after all that, and not before, the Government sent a commission to investigate this question; and what are the facts? That no less than 2,200 claims put in by the half-breeds were settled, which was an admission that they had claims to settle, and in my opinion justified the action taken by those men on that occasion. During that rebellion many friends of the Government, who would not rebel, though suffering as much as Mr. Bremner and others, lost their private property, which was taken from them by parties in high rank in the militia; and I hold that the Government should justly and equitably settle the claims of these men. In 1891, while it was proven in the committee which sat for the purpose of investigating this matter, that Mr. Bremner's property was actually taken from him, it was admitted by General Middleton that the property had been taken, and that it was an error of judgment on his part. But whether it was an error of judgment or an error of conscience on his part, it was all the same to Mr. Bremner; he lost his property, and, therefore, if the late Government did not perform its duty in discharging its obligation to Mr. Bremner, it is the duty of the present Government to pay him for that property which was thus illegally taken from him. I hold that if there are any other claims made by the half-breeds in the country, it would pay the country well to appoint a commission to ascertain what those claims are. I am sure the present Government will settle those claims and establish peace and harmony among those people. If we settle their claims and thus remove every source of irritation, we shall find that those people will be more loyal and more attached to the country; while, on the other hand, if they find that the white people and the white Parliament will not listen to their proper claims, they certainly will not be in a frame of mind to abide by the laws and constitution of the country, as they otherwise would. Therefore, I feel confident the Government will take up these claims, deal with them justly and restore that harmony and peace among these people we all desire should prevail among them.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I do not know much about the question, but I know—and I speak as a friend of General Middleton, who is dead—that, although there was a good deal of blame attached to him in this country, when he went back to the old country, the highest honour was paid to him that the sovereign could well pay to one holding the position he did. I have no doubt that General Middleton never got any of those furs, but that the people around Ottawa got them and should pay for them. If there was any wrong done in taking these furs—and on that point, let us say, that, when you go into an enemy's country, these people whom you are sent to subdue, and who were not behaving as they should, have to take what they get—I would desire, that my hon. friend went further and asked for an investigation to find out what people got these furs, and I am sure, that he will find, that the people who did get them are perfectly able to pay for them, and perhaps are in Ottawa to-day.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). As I took part in the discussion in 1891 on that subject, I would like to say a few words with regard to it. If my recollection serves me right, General Middleton admitted that he got the furs; but whether he kept them or gave them to other people, the presumption is clear, that he took them, and somebody is responsible for his acts. This Parliament voted him for his services quite a large amount of money, and we have here a man whose property was taken, and who was a peaceable citizen, just as good a subject as any man in this House—

Mr. WALLACE. He was nothing of the kind.

Mr. FRASER. That was the evidence anyway. There was nothing of the rebel about this man whose property was taken, and I submit, that, even if it were shown, that he sympathized with the rebels or was one of them, that was no excuse for taking his property. That is not civilized warfare, and there can be no argument as to the question, that he ought to be compensated for the loss he was made to suffer. No modern civilized army goes into a country for purposes of that kind, and no civilized army would be guilty of forcibly taking the property of the people, unless stress of circumstances compelled them to forcibly take food, when they could not get any otherwise. No British army will go into any country to-day and take food without paying for it, even from their enemies. That is a thing British soldiers would scorn to do. But this was the case of a peaceable man, who did not join the rebellion, though he may have sympathized with it. Every one has his own ideas on these questions, and to sympathize with a cause does not necessarily make a man a rebel. I have met at Prince Albert Englishmen, Scotchmen and Irishmen who told me, that at that time they were ready and willing to sacrifice their lives in favour of the half-breeds, so strongly were their sympathies with these people, and so indignant were they at the treatment to which they had been subjected. These half-breeds were not opposing the Canadian Government or British institutions, but were law-abiding and peaceable citizens, fighting for what they considered their rights. At Prince Albert I came across a very intelligent man, a countryman of my own, who said he had come out from Scotland to that country, and had lived there ten years, and he told me, that, from his experience with these half-breeds, they were quiet, law-abiding citizens until exasperated beyond bounds; and I venture to say, there is not a province or county in Canada in which, if you were to try and take the land from the people who were tilling it and who were depending on it for the livelihood of their families, you would not find them uprising to prevent their being despoiled of their lands; and they would not be true British subjects if they acted otherwise. There is not a man in this Parliament who is fit to be a member of it, if he would not rise and fight for his household goods and lands, if an attempt was unjustly made to deprive him of them. These half-breeds were cultivating their lands peaceably; and though, no doubt, their system of cultivation was not equal to that followed in the other provinces, still they were tilling the soil according to their own light, and, when the Government refused to acknowledge their rights, they took what they considered the most effective means of vindicating them. I do not propose to bring up again the wrongs which both parties admit were committed on these people, but the fact remains, that we gave them redress even after they failed in arms. Certainly, the man whose property was thus unjustly taken, should be compensated for his loss, and I maintain, that the Government which is at the back of the men who took his furs, are responsible. The hon. gentleman (Mr Domville) talked about our having an investigation to find out who got the furs. Well, that is out of the question. We cannot issue a circulating commission to go round and examine every lady who happens to walk about the street with a fur sacque on, and make her prove that she did not get it from General Middleton: but we ought, none the less, to do justice to this man, by admitting our responsibility for the acts of General Middleton, as representative of the Government. Whether he kept these furs himself, or gave them away, does not affect the case at all, so far as indemnity to this poor man is concerned. When the Government failed to make General Middleton give back the articles taken, they condoned his act, and became responsible, and there is nothing left for us to do but to give redress.

Mr. DOMVILLE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. General Middleton never took the furs.

Mr. FRASER. He confessed he did.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I never saw it.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. gentleman was not in the House at the time, and, if my memory serves me right, General Middleton confessed he had part of them.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Oh, no.

Mr. FRASER. If the hon. gentleman will look up the records, he will find that I am correct. I was a member of the committee that sat on the matter. I do not care who got the furs, General Middleton took them, and this Government is responsible. Is it to be argued, that, because General Middleton did not keep the furs himself, this man is not to be compensated? Why, the Government might as well send out a dozen of thieves to plunder, and then, because these thieves have parted with the plunder and somebody else got the goods, say that they should escape and that the Government were not responsible. This is a just and equitable claim, and this Government can better afford to pay such a claim a thousand times than to refuse to do so. The country is able to pay it, and ought to do so, and, by doing so, we will teach a lesson to any other pilferers in a new country, by showing them that the country will not stand such conduct. I trust that the Government will see their way clear to remedy the wrong done. It is nothing short of theft, when a man takes property that does not belong to him, and such conduct is not condoned even by the rules of savage warfare.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). As regards the plea put forth by the hon. member for King's, N.B. (Mr. Domville), that we are not sure that these furs were appropriated by General Middleton, and that, if an investigation were held, it would be found some other people in the city had these furs, let me just read a short quotation from the speech of Sir Adolphe Caron, who was then Minister of Militia, which he made during the debate on that subject, on the 12th May, 1890. This is what Sir Adolphe Caron said:

I repeat, from what the General has told me, that he is prepared, after a proper valuation of the furs is arrived at, to indemnify the persons who may be shown to be entitled to that portion of them which he is supposed to have received, or which is supposed to have been removed on his order.

That shows that General Middleton acknowledged himself that he got possession of the furs, and there can therefore be no question on that point at all. But up to the present this poor man has not been paid for those furs. And whatever may have been the intention of General Middleton or any other gentleman, the fact remains that here we are some nine years after the question was discussed in the House of Commons, and up to the present time, that man has not had restitution of a single penny. Yet, his has been recognized as a fair and justifiable claim and one that should be honoured. What could he have done, under the circumstances, other than what he did do? He had his furs and he saw that the rebellion was on and the Indians were there. He did what any man would have done, as I have said—he sent his property, for safe-keeping, to the Government officials.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) will excuse me for interrupting him, I would like to say that he is mistaken. He misapprehends what occurred. The furs were confiscated, they were not handed over by the owner to the custody of the officers of the Government. It was believed that this man, Bremner, was actively assisting the rebels, and so his furs were confiscated. That is how they came into possession of General Middleton. The hon. gentleman is quite right in saying that some of these furs were afterwards taken from the police barracks—I think it was the police barracks—and a parcel or two parcels made up for General Middleton, and one for Mr. Hayter Reed, and one, I think, for some one else. In point of fact these furs never reached General Middleton's hands. Of course, that does not much matter. Still, General Middleton never got them.

Mr. DAVIS. It seems to me that the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) has made Bremner's case a great deal stronger than it was before. If the agent of this Government confiscated the property of a man who is not a rebel and made away with that property, it seems to me that Government is in duty bound to see that the man is recompensed. I did not know that General Middleton or any other person who was in control of the furs had any right or power to confiscate them for themselves.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) to tell the House who confiscated the furs, and by what power or authority?

Mr. McNEILL. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) will understand that I am simply endeavouring to give the facts. Whether it makes the case stronger or weaker, I only desire that the facts should be made clear. As I have stated, it is not the fact that this man handed the furs over to the charge of any one representing the Government. The furs were, rightly or wrongly, confiscated—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By whom?

Mr. McNEILL. General Middleton ordered them to be confiscated, according to my recollection. I may say that I was chairman of the committee that inquired—

Mr. DAVIS. Where were the furs when they were confiscated?

Mr. McNEILL. My recollection is that the furs were confiscated by General Middleton's orders. Whether—and the question turned largely on that—whether he had the right to confiscate them or not, I am almost positive I am correct in saying it was done by his orders. But the record of the proceedings of the committee would establish the point. There was a good deal of discussion, I think, as to whether there was any power on the part of an officer employed, as General Middleton was employed, to confiscate, and I think the opinion was generally held that he had not such authority.

Mr. WOOD. In whose charge were the furs?

Mr. McNEILL. The furs were taken from this man Bremner. It was considered by General Middleton and those who were engaged at that time in putting down the uprising there, that this man was really a rebel. I do not know that that ever was fully investigated; but there is no doubt at all, I think, that that was their opinion and belief at the time. According to my recollection there was no proof that Bremner had taken an active part in any encounter with our troops. Still, the belief was that he was actually abetting the rebels, and his furs were confiscated in consequence.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McNEILL. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Did the Government of the day take the position the hon. gentleman does, that these furs were confiscated?

Mr. McNEILL. I do not know what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) means by "confiscated." I am not using the term in any technical sense. My recollection is, the furs were taken by the authority of General

Mr. McNEILL.

Middleton out of the hands of this man Bremner and put in the police barracks at Battleford. I do not know whether that is "confiscation" or not.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I was not in the House at the time, as the hon. gentleman knows. But I think that the Government of that day recommended to Parliament to vote compensation to Bremner to some extent.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not recollect.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the Government did recommend a vote to compensate him, the Government can hardly have held that the furs were confiscated.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think I can explain, as I recollect the facts very well. This man Bremner had been trading in the north in the winter of 1885. He was arrested with the band of Poundmaker. But he gave an explanation to the effect that he was coming from the north and was not a rebel. At all events he was treated as a rebel at the time. The furs were taken from him and sent to Battleford. Then Mr. Hayter Reed, pretending to act on the authority of General Middleton, took away the furs from Battleford, under the plea of confiscation, as I understood. But, as my hon. friend said, it was a question whether, under such circumstances, the case having occurred in Canada and not in a foreign country, there could be such a thing as confiscation. But, however that might be, the pretense was confiscation. The confiscation was never reported to the authorities, and, for my part, I cannot see that there is any confiscation until there is a report to the authorities. The result was that Bremner lost his furs—there is no doubt about that. I think the result also was to show that Bremner was not a rebel.

Mr. McNEILL. When I used the word "confiscation" I did not make use of it in a technical legal sense. I meant that General Middleton had had the furs taken from the man and put into the police barracks.

The PRIME MINISTER. It was done in General Middleton's name, but I do not think he did it.

Mr. McNEILL. I think my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) is thinking of something else. Later on the parcels of furs were taken away, and whether at the request or with the authority of General Middleton or otherwise was a question. The committee found that it was with General Middleton's authority that some of these furs were taken away. I think there were, as I have said, three or four parcels of furs made up and sent away. These furs never reached General Middleton or anybody else, so far as I remember. They must have been stolen on the way.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Has the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) any idea where the furs went to? I am asking without prejudice and for information.

Mr. McNEILL. I have no idea where they went to. The evidence was that they were—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. I would remind hon. gentlemen that the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) has the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. I may say in reply to the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) that it does not make much difference whether these furs were confiscated or not. The fact remains that the man lost his furs. I believe, and I was in the country at that time, that the furs were sent by Bremner for safe-keeping to Battleford. When these officers got them in their possession, of course, it was an easy matter to confiscate them. But I do not believe that even if they had the right to confiscate the furs, that would give General Middleton the right to appropriate those furs for his own use. I was under the impression that if anything was confiscated it went to the Government, and I do not think any person has a right to put it into his own pocket. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said, in discussing this question, that if Mr. Bremner was a rebel, the Government could have confiscated his property, but he says that he was no rebel. I may say that I do not take that ground at all; I do not think the parties sent up there had any right to confiscate any man's goods, and if they took a man's property and used it for the purposes of the Government, or the troops in the service of the Government, the Government are in duty bound to pay for that property to the proper parties. If a man was a rebel, and the Government arrested him, and he was found guilty, he ought to be punished, but that does not give anybody the right to deprive his wife and children of the property that should belong to them. It did not give the troops the right to burn these people's houses over their own heads, as was done in Saskatchewan. I say that these men, being the agents of the Dominion Government, should be held accountable for their acts, and this Government should be prepared to settle any claims of that kind. It does not make any difference to me what hon. gentlemen opposite may say; call it confiscation or stealing, that is a matter of opinion. The fact still remains that Mr. Bremner lost his property, and it has been proved that that property was taken by Government officials, officials who were acting for the Government under those hon. gentlemen opposite, and Mr. Bremner has not been paid to this day. Now, I say this account should be paid, and I hope the present Government will take this question into their serious consideration and investigate it. I hope they will see not only that Mr. Bremner is paid his just claim, but that they will investigate all the other claims and find out those that are just and pay them. It is time that this agitation was stopped. The previous Government had already had one rebellion in Manitoba, and one would think that it would have given them experience enough to settle this question once for all. If they had appointed their commissioners before they sent up their soldiers, there would have been no rebellion. That country is filling up rapidly, settlers are pouring into that country by the thousand. It is time this thing was settled. I hope that the Government will not only settle favourably the rebellion claims, but also the scrip claims, so that we may have done with these difficulties, and settle on a permanent basis all these half-breed questions in the North-west Territories.

After Recess.

A CANADIAN MINT.

Mr. W. W. B. McINNES (Vancouver) moved:

That in the opinion of this House it is desirable and expedient that the Government should, at the earliest possible date, establish a mint in Canada, for the purpose of coining all the gold, silver and copper currency necessary to meet the commercial requirements of the country.

He said: As you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the question of establishing a mint in Canada has been discussed off and on for a number of years. Of late years the question has received an increased interest and importance on account of the extensive gold discoveries in our country, and the generally satisfactory condition of our mining properties. In this discussion, it has been contended by those in favour of a mint, and the contention has been generally concurred in, that the establishment of such an institution would be a material step in advance in our national life, that it would to some extent stimulate a national sentiment in the country, that it would prove a splendid advertisement to our mineral wealth, and in such like ways prove of general advantage to the country. I think we will all agree that a mint, as an abstract institution, is a desirable, if not a necessary, part of a fully organized government, and that if it can be conclusively shown that the establishment of a mint in Canada would not involve any drain upon the public exchequer, and would not lead to any monetary difficulties, there would practically be no objection to its establishment. Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, assuming that these points are admitted, I do not intend, in my discussion of this motion, to deal with what you might call the semi-sentimental aspect of it. I think it will be more profitable to the House if I present a few practical facts which, I think, will show conclusively that a mint can be established in Canada, not only without loss to the exchequer, but that, as a matter of fact, from the date of its commencement it would be a very large revenue-producer; and more, that it would be of material assistance to the trade and commerce of the country.

The first proposition which I would like to make along this line is that the process of minting is an exceedingly profitable one. The profit is derived from the minting of what you might call the token coin, that is, coins in silver, copper and nickel. There is no profit in the minting of gold coin, because, as hon. members understand, gold is worth its weight, whether it has the currency stamp upon it or is bullion. But with regard to the other metals, there is a very large profit in minting them. You will readily understand that if you can buy a certain amount of silver for 60 cents, and by simply putting the Government stamp of currency upon it, increase its value immediately to 100 cents, there must be a very large profit in that kind of business. Now, to give you some idea of the very large profits which some countries have derived from minting, I will quote a few facts taken from the report of the Director of Mints for the United States for the year 1896. That report, which is the latest one to which I have had access, shows that the profit to the United States on minting silver in that year alone amounted to no less than $2,503,056. Between the years 1878 and 1896, the profits derived by the United States from minting silver amounted to the enormous sum of $78,145,603. So much for the profit which has been made in the United States. Coming to Canada, we find that our Government has also taken advantage of the process and has derived a very considerable revenue from having its currency manufactured. We have only silver and copper currency; we have no gold, and I think it is a very humiliating position for a country to be in that we have to depend upon a foreign country entirely for our gold coin. I know of no other country in the world of anything like the same importance as Canada which occupies the same position. Our silver coin is minted in the royal mint, and our copper coin is minted by a private firm in Birmingham in the old country. I have a statement, which has been furnished by the Finance Department, showing the amount of silver and copper coined for Canada from the years 1882 to 1896, inclusive, together with the profit which has accrued to the Government from the coining of the amounts which I shall give. I regret that I have to read it, but it is the only way to get it on "Hansard," and it contains some valuable information. It is as follows:—

Mr. McINNES.

Table showing amount of silver and copper coin minted for Canada from 1882 to 1896, and the profit thereon.

| Year.      | Silver.     | Copper.   | Profit.      |
|------------|-------------|-----------|--------------|
| 1882 ..... | $650,000   | $20,000  | $110,321 94 |
| 1883 ..... | 500,000     | 20,000    | 69,364 26    |
| 1884 ..... | 300,000     | 20,900    | 65,695 66    |
| 1885 ..... | 130,000     | 25,000    | 33,007 70    |
| 1886 ..... | 185,000     | 15,000    | 55,150 11    |
| 1887 ..... | 260,000     | 15,000    | 82,194 17    |
| 1888 ..... | 180,000     | 40,000    | 75,826 08    |
| 1889 ..... | 186,585     | Nil.      | 53,774 33    |
| 1890 ..... | 155,000     | 10,000    | 49,763 26    |
| 1891 ..... | 190,000     | 10,000    | 34,821 88    |
| 1892 ..... | 398,000     | 16,525    | 132,517 08   |
| 1893 ..... | 160,000     | 10,000    | 67,924 40    |
| 1894 ..... | 144,529     | 20,000    | 83,454 60    |
| 1895 ..... | Nil.        | 12,000    | 8,678 33     |
| 1896 ..... | 140,000     | 10,000    | 76,608 22    |
|            | $3,462,114 | $242,525 | $998,101.92 |

Now, this sum of $998,101.92 is the profit which has come to the Government from having that amount of coin, which I have just stated here, manufactured. It is not the income, because we paid the royal mint for minting $3,462,114 in silver $103,863, being a percentage of 3 per cent, and we paid the Birmingham firm for minting our copper coin 10 per cent, or $24,252. Now, I arrive at the total income from minting the amount of money which I have just stated by adding $998,101.92 profit, and the expense of coining silver, $103,863, and the expense of coining copper, $24,252, which makes a total of $1,126,216.92. This is the total income from the minting of coin which we have manufactured between 1882 and 1896. Now, inasmuch as commerce is expanding in this country, and as population is increasing, there is every reason to believe that in the future even a larger amount of coin will have to be supplied to carry on the ordinary purposes of trade, and so by dividing the income from the money which has been coined for fifteen years, we find that, for the past, it would have amounted to an annual average income of $75,081.06; but, as I said, on account of the growth of commerce and the increase in population, we can fairly depend upon it that in future the income from the minting of silver and copper coin which will be necessary for commercial purposes, would be even larger than this amount, but, for the purpose of my calculation, we can assume that if we had a mint in Canada, there would be an annual income from it of $75,081.06. As against that let us make an estimate of what the cost of the mint would be. We had a mint in Canada once, in New Westminster, in the province of British Columbia. A mint was established there many years ago, and I remember, when a boy, playing among its ruins. On account of a certain jealousy between the old colony of British Columbia and the old colony of Vancouver, the mint was closed after a very few pieces were struck from it. Although it was considered a very well equipped mint, in those days, the cost was only $20,000. A modern mint, of course, would cost more, and I have received figures from a firm in New England to the effect that a thoroughly modern mint, equipped in every particular and detail, could be obtained for $25,000. A suitable building, could, no doubt, be erected for $50,000, so that would give a total outlay of some $75,000 to be accounted for and to be made up in some way. The interest and sinking fund on such a sum, I estimate, would be in the vicinity of $3,750. For salaries and maintenance, and such like incidental expenses, the annual outlay would be, at the outside, $12,000, so that for sinking fund and interest on the capital expenditure in the establishment of a mint, and the cost of maintaining it, you have an annual total of only $15,750. If, as I have shown, the income from the mint in Canada would certainly be at least $75,081.06, and if we assume that the annual expenses connected with the institution would be $15,750, you will see, as a result, that you would secure an annual profit from the mint of $59,331. I, therefore, submit that the proposition is clear, that a mint can be established in this country, can be maintained without being any loss at all to the exchequer; but that, on the contrary, if a mint is put in operation here, it would, as a matter of fact, be a very large revenue producer.

There is another practical aspect to this question to which I wish to refer briefly. Canada has been in the past a very great gold-producing country, and at the present time she is increasing in that respect. We have, up to date, produced in Canada a little over $90,000,000 worth of gold. Eastern Canada is credited with some $15,000,000; British Columbia produced some $66,000,000, and the balance is practically from the Yukon. With the output from the Yukon for the present year, the figures will run up to over $100,000,000 worth of gold. Now, it is not a pleasing fact to know, that practically every ounce of that $90,000,000 worth of gold has been shipped out of this country, has gone to the republic to the south, and there received the stamp of the American eagle. If a mint had been in operation for some years past in Canada—I do not say, that all that $90,000,000 worth of gold would have been minted in Canada, nor would all that gold bullion have remained in the country; but I believe it is fair to assume that a very large proportion of it would. And Sir, the fact of it being exported out of the country means a very material loss to the miner, who is the producer of that gold. It has been variously estimated, that the miner loses from 3 to 10 per cent of the gold, on account of the high rates of exchange, the cost of transportation, and the fact that he has to deal with the middleman, who is, in this case, the banker; for the banker, as a matter of fact, in the present instance, is nothing but a middleman between the miner who produces and the market which is the mint. If a mint were established in Canada, therefore, and within easy access of the great gold-producing centres, there is no doubt at all but what this very heavy percentage upon the produce of our gold mines would not be lost, but would be retained in our country. Furthermore, if a large proportion of this gold bullion had been minted in Canada and had received the impress of the Canadian coin, I submit, that it would have had a very salutary effect in giving confidence to trade. I am aware, that many of those who are associated with banks, are not of that way of thinking, but nevertheless, I contend, that there is nothing like the sight of the yellow metal throughout the country and in all commercial transactions so calculated to give confidence to trade and to give the appearance of prosperity. Sir, the advantages of having a mint in connection with the government of a country are so apparent, that they have been availed of by nearly every civilized nation. In the leading British colonies throughout the world mints have been established. In Australia there have been two mints established for several years, one at Sydney and one at Melbourne. In India there are two mints, one at Calcutta and one at Bombay. These mints in the colonies of Australia and India have been established under constitutional difficulties, because, while these colonies are to some extent self-governing, they have not the full power of self-government which the colony of Canada has, and the mints which are established in these colonies are established merely as branches of the Royal Mint of England. But, Sir, under section 91, subsection 14, of our British North America Act, the federal Parliament is given ample authority to deal with the question, not only of currency, but also of coinage, so that there can be no possible doubt whatever that there is no constitutional difficulty in the way of establishing a mint in the Dominion.

Now, I am fully persuaded, that the great mass of the Canadian people are in favour of having a mint established. When this question was agitated some two or three years ago, forty-two boards of trade throughout the country passed resolutions strongly favouring the establishment of a Canadian mint. The only class of the community that I know of who have any possible objection to the establishment of a mint, are the bankers. Their motives in the matter of opposition can be very easily traced to self-interest, and in all cases of this kind, if it can be clearly shown, that it would be a decided advantage to a great majority of our people to have a mint, I submit, that the self-interest of a class should not for a minute prevail against the general welfare. But, I am happy to say, that even the bankers are gradually coming to the conclusion, that they have nothing to fear by the establishment of a mint in Canada, and, within the last few months, one very large and influential association of bankers, after thoroughly considering the matter, passed a resolution in favour of a Canadian mint. I do not intend to burden this discussion by suggestions as to where a mint should be located, provided it is agreed to establish one; but, Sir, there can be no doubt, that a mint, in order to serve the purpose which is sought to be served, should clearly be located near to the place of the production of the gold. If a mint were established in the east, for instance, it is very clear, that the bulk of the gold being produced in the west, it would not be transported all the way across the continent, because the cost of transportation would be almost prohibitive, and the high rates of exchange and the delay would also be against it. If a mint were, we will say, established in Ottawa, it could not possibly compete with the mint at present operated in San Francisco. It is clear, that a mint, if established at all, should be established near the centre of production, namely, the gold centres of the west. Not only should it be established in the west, but those who may have to deal with the matter of locating it, will, I believe, sooner or later come to the conclusion, that the city of Nanaimo presents some unparalleled advantages for the location of that mint. However, we will leave that for the future. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think the time has certainly come when Canada can no longer postpone the establishment of a mint, either with credit to the country or credit to the Government, and I would earnestly urge upon the Ministry, that they take this matter into their very serious consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine, that my hon. friend from Nanaimo (Mr. McInnes) has moved this resolution with any expectation of pressing it to a vote, his object, I imagine, being rather to invite the attention of the House to a question which is, in one sense, a new one, as we have not heard of it for several years now, and the agitation of which, no doubt he thinks, may at some future time bear fruit in the direction he has suggested to-night. I can well imagine that hon. members who may not have had the opportunity of giving any attention to the question, and who have only heard of the matter through the eloquent words of my hon. friend (Mr. McInnes), may easily be persuaded, that the establishment of a Canadian mint would be a very good thing. There is, however, another side to the question, and we would do well to bear it in mind. I am not disposed to take the ground that, under no conditions, would it be well to establish a mint in Canada, but I think a little consideration will show that, whatever we may do in the future, at present it would not be expedient to take the step which my hon. friend advocates. In the first place, I may say, that the adoption of this plan would, of necessity, contemplate the enlargement of our metallic currency, and this could not possibly be done without disturbing our present financial system. It will, I think, be admitted by the House, that we have at the present time a very perfect system of currency in Canada, and it would require very grave reasons indeed to justify us in introducing any change which might have the effect of disturbing that system.

Our currency system, though known as a paper currency, is a very convenient currency, and has a gold basis. Practically, it is a gold currency, because it has a sufficient reserve of gold behind it to guarantee its redemption under all probable circumstances; and I am afraid that to change it to a metallic currency would create much disturbance, and would not be to the advantage of Canada. My hon. friend has pointed out that there is a profit on the minting of silver and copper. He has very properly called attention to the fact that there is no profit in the minting of gold, because gold in the shape of bullion is worth as much as gold in the shape of coin. The stamp of the mint does not add anything to its value. My hon. friend says we can make a great deal of profit in minting silver and copper. If we could absorb an unlimited quantity of silver and copper coin, we might make a great deal of money by establishing a mint and turning out silver and copper coins. But there is a limit, which would very soon be reached, to the quantity of silver and copper coins that could be taken by the people; and if we exceeded that limit, we should soon have on our hands a depreciated silver and copper currency, which would not be desirable. It is only because the quantity of silver and copper coinage in the country is kept within the limits of safety that it retains its value. It is true, we make a considerable profit on this coinage, but to do that it is not necessary to have a mint of our own. Indeed, were we to adopt the policy of my hon. friend, we should lose a considerable part of the profit which we are now enjoying. The difference between the value of the silver used and the face value of the coin would remain; but now we have that coinage made at a very small cost by employing the facilities of the royal mint, whereas, if we attempted to run a mint of our own, we should find it a very expensive institution, and we should have a less profit by reason of the increased cost in the minting of the money. According to my hon. friend's figures, the establishment of a mint would only involve us in an annual expenditure of $15,000 or $16,000. My impression is that my hon. friend's figures are somewhat low. But even accepting his figures as correct, the fact would remain that the cost of our copper and silver coinage under his plan would be much more than we are paying under the present system. The fact is, we cannot absorb a sufficient amount of these coins in Canada to make work for a mint. I am well within the mark when I say that a well-equipped mint would turn out in one month all the copper and silver coins required in Canada in the whole year; so that we would have an establishment with one month's work and eleven months of idleness. Perhaps my hon. friend contemplates work for the mint from the increased volume of gold which he expects. But there again we are limited by our conditions. We do not need a gold coinage in Canada to any great extent. Were we to convert all our gold into coin, we would find that we had no use for it. It is not desirable, except from a sentimental point of view, that we should mint gold coins. As my hon. friend has pointed out himself, there is no profit in the minting of gold; but that is not the whole story. Not only is there no profit, but there would be an absolute loss; because, if we could keep gold in circulation, we should disturb our note currency, which is practically a loan by the people of Canada to the Government without interest; and if you were to displace this note currency and put gold currency in its place, you would deprive the people of Canada of the opportunity to make a free loan to the Government, which they are glad to do, because they know that it is safe. We would lose in the minting by adopting a more expensive system for the manufacture of the money; and if we put more gold into circulation, it would displace our present currency, and we would be obliged to go into the market to borrow money to take its place. There is now $20,000,000 of gold in Canada, and you could not, if you would, by any process known to our business men, increase materially the circulation of that gold. Our people do not want gold. I venture to say that among all the members of this House now listening to me, there is not one with $5 worth of gold in his pocket. It is not that he has not got $5, or that he cannot get $5 in gold if he wants it. That $20,000,000 is in the vaults of the Government or of the banks, and if a man wants a $5 gold piece, all he has to do is to go down to a bank and ask for it. We do not want the gold, however, because we would rather have the note currency, as it is much more convenient. If we adopted the currency which my hon. friend advocates, we would find, after the sentimental reason had passed away and the novelty had ceased, that these gold coins would flow back into the vaults of the Government and of the banks. Our people would not want them and would not use them, and we would continue to have the note currency which we have to-day. My hon. friend says that it is humiliating that we have not a gold coinage of our own. Even if we wanted it, we could have it at much less cost by having it minted in England instead of Canada. It would be a waste of money to have a Canadian mint and work it for one month, as I suggested a moment ago, and have it standing idle for the other eleven months. I know that the question has been discussed from another point of view. It has been represented that because we have not established a mint, the gold passes out of our country. I do not think the disadvantage of that to the miner is as great as my hon. friend supposes it to be. At all events, our information is that the difference in the price paid to the miner at Seattle in the United States and the price paid on the coast by the banks is very small indeed, amounting only to a very small commission. The banks are competing sharply with each other, and, therefore, it is fair to suppose that they will purchase the gold from the miner at its fair value. I have not had any evidence which shows that there is any serious disadvantage to the miner in that respect. Another suggestion is that we should have an assay office on the coast; and perhaps there is something in that suggestion. I would not hastily commit myself against it, although even there it seems to me that the competition among the banks should bring about the favourable results we desire. It has been suggested that the miners look with suspicion on the valuation of their gold by the banks, and that if there were a Government assay office, where the stamp of the Government would be placed on the gold, that would secure to them a better price. I think that is a mistake. I think the banks in buying gold will not be influenced by the Government stamp at all. But there is something, perhaps, to be said for the assay office which could not be said for a mint. One circumstance might arise in which the establishment of a mint would be entitled to greater consideration than it is to-day. The Australian mints are branches of the Imperial mint. One reason why they are able to carry on such large operations is that the gold coins of Australia correspond with the gold coins of the mother country, and pass freely into the currency of Great Britain, and the currency of Great Britain is largely supplied from year to year by the coins sent from Australia.

Now, as our coins do not correspond with the currency of Great Britain, you will see at once that we could not expect them to be sent to England, and we are therefore not in so good a position as our Australian brethren for the minting of gold. But it is quite possible and well worthy of consideration that Her Majesty's Government might see their way to establishing a branch mint in Canada not merely for the purpose of making Canadian gold coins, desirable as that may be, but British gold coins, for which there would be a large market when made. If we had a mint for the manufacture of Canadian gold coins, for the reasons I have already pointed out I think the quantity of such coins which could be placed on the markets of the world would be small; but if we had a mint authorized to coin British sovereigns here, instead of sending the gold to the other side to coin—if the British Government could be induced to make British sovereigns on this side out of Canadian gold,—there would be a larger opportunity for a Canadian mint, and such a thing is not at all beyond the bounds of possibility. I would suggest, therefore, to my hon. friend—while I know he is warmly interested in this matter, and while I know it is a question likely to appeal particularly to those who come from the west and largely identified with the gold interests of that country—that having served all purposes now by drawing the attention of the Government to the matter, in order that his motion may bear fruit at a future day, it would not be wise to press it to a division at present, and I would, therefore, move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. G. E. CASEY (West Elgin). Before this motion is decided, I would like to say that it seems to me this question is hardly as one-sided in either direction as it appears to the two gentlemen who have spoken. I do not think that the profits from the mint would be nearly as large as supposed by my hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), nor do I think, on the other hand, that there is such a complete absence of a field of usefulness for the mint as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance thinks there is. The matter may be looked at, first, as a simple question of encouraging our own manufacture in Canada, and secondly, as a matter of sentiment connected with our own national feeling and standing amongst surrounding colonies and nations.

Looking at it from the point of view of the manufacturer, no doubt the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is perfectly correct in saying that it is cheaper for us to have our gold coins made in England, as they are required, than to mint them out here. That same argument, however, applies to some other articles, in the case of which we have not recognized it as of overruling force. For example, there is no doubt we can buy the ammunition which is required by our militia cheaper in England than we can make it in Canada, and probably have it better made also, but it seemed good to the late Government—and it has seemed good to this Government not to change the practice—to have that ammunition made in Canada by Canadian workmen, even at a greater expense. I would like to draw a sort of analogy between the two for the purpose of pointing out that the argument of cheapness is not a conclusive one against the course proposed.

Then as to the effect on the circulation of bank notes and Dominion notes, I do not think there is much in that argument, because I do not think that the amount of gold coin used in Canada would be sensibly increased by the establishment of a mint in this country.

The hon. Minister of Finance has pointed out that the use of Australian coins has arisen largely from the fact that the Australian mint makes British sovereigns instead of five-dollar pieces. I do not know why the Canadian mint might not be, although under Canadian management, authorized by Imperial Government, under stipulations as to oversight and so on, to make sovereigns just as the mint in Australia does, and I do not see why a mint conducted by this Government and authorized by the British Government should not make coins which would go into the general circulation of the Empire. In that case, the Canadian mint would have the same advantage that the Australian has—but, even apart from that, supposing we did not have that authority, supposing the Canadian mint were not recognized as a branch of the Imperial mint, why should we not obtain the same reputation for Canadian coin, as a form of export bullion, as the British sovereign enjoys. It is not always because a country is large or rich that its coins possess great value or reputation. The Australian sovereign is known to be quite as good as the British—generally more full in weight—and the coinage of Mexico has impressed itself upon the coinage of this whole continent and a great many eastern countries, where the Mexican dollar was the standard in value in silver long before Mexico was a very important nation at all, in fact long before she was a nation, and while the mint in Mexico was only a branch of the Spanish mint.

That brings me to the question of the coinage of silver. Admittedly in the coinage of silver there is considerable profit. Why is there not a good prospect that Canadian coin silver should become a circulating medium abroad just as the United States or Mexican silver? The mint in India does not coin gold to any extent. The rupee goes in certain countries in the east, but in certain other countries the United States dollar is largely used. In China and Japan, for example, even the sadly depreciated—what I might call the fraudulent—dollar of the United States has become a circulating medium. Why should not the currency coined in Canada become a form of coin bullion for foreign trade, even where our currency is not in use, just in the same manner as the coined silver of the United States and Mexico? If we were successful in obtaining this currency for our coined gold and silver, as a means merely of export of bullion, I do not see that the mint need be idle eleven months out of the twelve. If it were feared that a large mint would be idle eleven months out of the twelve, I think we could meet the case by not setting up such an expensive plant, and, therefore, not keeping it idle part of the time, and let it grow as the currency of our coinage increases.

The hon. Finance Minister speaks of the assay mark as not being of any use to the miner who sells his gold. I do not know whether it would. A stamp put upon a bar of gold is not as good for the establishment of the purity of that bar of gold as the Government stamp put upon a piece of gold or silver, as the case may be. I do not think anything would give the miner such an advantage for the disposal of his gold and silver as the establishment of a mint where he could sell it at its actual value and obtain in return coined pieces whose value was in evidence on their face. Between a lump of bullion and a gold coin, the difference is that the one has its ascertained value and fineness marked stamped upon it and the other has not. I am not in a position to say what the expense of minting will be. My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. McInnes), who is in much better position to estimate it, has put it at 3 to 10 per cent. I can easily understand, Sir, that notwithstanding all the competition between the bankers, all the bankers might agree to the value the gold or silver output brought to them at a little below what it would be worth at the Government mint. The Minister of Finance quotes Seattle prices. But there is no mint at Seattle; and the bankers there are quoting prices that will enable them to send to the mint and still leave them a profit.

Mr. McINNES. They send to San Francisco.

Mr. CASEY. The effect of this is that more people handle the product before it reaches the mint, and so there is a smaller amount received by the original seller. Gold and silver are like other commodities, and the nearer we can bring the final market to the producer, the better price he will receive. The exact percentages are beyond my power to estimate, but I can understand that where the product passes through many hands, there is a difference against the miner. I do not see that the banks should have any objection to the establishment of the mints, for the reasons I have pointed out—that I do not believe that the establishment of the mint would mean a sensible increase of the gold currency; its principal service would be to coin gold for export instead of having it exported in the shape of bullion blocks, as at present. Then, coming to the question of sentiment, I regard that as a question to which we must give a great deal of weight, even if it costs us a little money to carry out our ideas. If you meet five-dollar pieces or silver dollars in places at the ends of the earth, the coins bearing the mark of the Canadian mint, you feel proud of it. Moreover, the passage of that coin from end to end of the world draws attention to the fact that Canada is typically a gold-producing country. My own opinion is that this is going to be one of the great characteristics of Canada in the future, and anything that will emphasize it, I think, is worth paying something for. Australia was not known first as a gold-producing country—it was a grazing and wool-producing country. But early in the gold discoveries she established her own mint, and I think that has had a great deal to do with making Australia known as a gold-producing country. I do not urge the hon. Minister to say more than he has said, but I would like him to consider whether there are not advantages of this kind to be derived that would justify us even in facing some slight loss in respect to our currency.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). I do not enter into the discussion of the establishment of a mint in Canada. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has given his opinions on the subject, and I have no doubt that they will prevail. I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to a change which would be a very important improvement in respect of our coinage at this time. We have one coin now in circulation that is a great inconvenience to business men—the twenty-cent piece. Only a few of them are in circulation, but still there are so many that every business man who receives twenty-five-cent pieces must examine each coin closely to see that it is not a twenty-cent piece. If the hon. Minister would, as speedily as possible, take some means to call in the twenty-cent pieces, he would confer a great benefit upon all business men.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I have listened attentively to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance. I really do not think he has given a sufficient reason for not establishing a mint in this country. The statements and arguments used by the hon. member (Mr. McInnes), who introduced the resolution, I think, were pretty convincing that the establishment of a mint in this country would be of very great benefit indeed. Why, Sir, the United States, before they had more than about half the population that Canada has to-day and not one-tenth of its wealth, had established a mint. The Australian provinces, that even to-day have not as much wealth as Canada or as great a population, have established a mint, and they have found it profitable, and would not desire, I presume, to abolish that institution. These are strong reasons for considering the importance of this question. The sentimental question is an important one, too. We have here in Canada English sovereigns which are not suitable for this country, because the sovereign has a par value of \$1.86 $\frac{2}{3}$ , which is a very inconvenient figure. We have to import foreign coins from the United States for our purposes, which is not very satisfactory to us, and belittles us in the eyes of the people of the United States and other countries. I think that by this time it has become clear that the establishment of a mint is desirable. The hon. Minister of Finance has told us that it will interfere with the currency. He did not explain how it would interfere injuriously, and I think he is bound to do that before he condemns the proposal. I contend that if it would interfere at all, it would interfere beneficially. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) also tells us that we have a lot of Government notes representing a sort of forced loan to the Government, for which no interest is paid, and says that if a gold coinage were established these notes would be displaced. I would like the hon. Minister to explain how. It would not displace the one-dollar bill, because a gold coin of the denomination of one dollar is too small for business uses. It has never been adopted much in the United States, nor has any such small coinage come into practical use in England. Such coins are more matters of curiosity than of actual use in business. Nor would the two dollar bill be displaced to any considerable extent, because a two-dollar gold coin would be too small also. The Dominion issue also the four-dollar bills. But we know that these bills are practically out of circulation—you seldom see them in circulation, that they are hardly worth considering in connection with a matter of this kind. Therefore, the fear that this would interfere with the circulation of the Government bills is entirely groundless, I think. The Finance Minister tells us further that there is a limit to the issue of copper and silver coins. That is quite true. The Government ascertain the limit that is required now. But if they had a mint of their own they would not lose the power to ascertain what coin is required for the business of the country and what for foreign exchange and foreign business. So that we would have a further extension of the business of silver coinage instead of a contraction of it. Then there is the practical fact that a large portion of the immense quantities of gold that come from the Klondike region go to the United States, notwithstanding that our Government have practically established a bank there. They have given the Bank of Commerce certain powers and privileges there which enable it to control business somewhat; but in spite of that fact the greater portion of the production of gold, I assume—I do not know particularly, but from what we read every day in the papers, that gold is going down to Seattle, and Tacoma, and various other places; so that most of the gold of the Klondike, from our own country, goes direct into the United States. The Minister says that the banks control this matter, that competition among them will keep the prices up to the highest limit that can be afforded to be paid for gold. But as a matter of fact that does not occur, because gold does not come to our Canadian banks but goes to the United States, where either the establishment of a mint, or correct assaying, or correct valuation, gives more confidence to the miners and owners of gold, and they carry it to that country. So that all the arguments that have been used are in favour of Canada establishing a mint in our own country for our own coins of gold, silver and copper.

Now, there is another point. This is about the only manufacturing industry that the Government can exclusively carry on. Now that they are committed to the principle of encouraging manufactures, they should start the manufacture of coins in our own country. Private individuals cannot do it, it must be left to the Government, and, therefore, the Government should take this matter in hand and establish a mint in this country. The Minister says that there would be only one month's work in the year, and it would not pay to have a mint running one month and idle for eleven months in the year. But what is the history of the mints of other countries, of Australia, which has neither the population or the wealth of Canada? I think that is not the history of Australia. Is it the history of the United States in their earlier days when they had a mint established there? My hon. friend near me tells me that they have three mints in the United States to-day, and they are producing their coinage of gold, silver, nickel and copper as the necessities of the nation require. Here in Canada we have six millions of a population; we are in a growing time, which the Minister tells us about, and which we are all delighted to see; the production of gold, silver and all the precious metals is increasing marvellously year by year, and there is a desire that we should advertise our country as a great mining country. Taking British Columbia with its silver mines, with its gold mines—leaving out the Yukon altogether—with the Atlin Lake district, with British Columbia, with our own province of Ontario, with the production of gold in Nova Scotia more than doubling each year, I think the time has fully arrived for the Government to take up this matter and establish a mint. But, Sir, this Government, that is said to be the greatest business Government Canada has ever seen, when a business proposition is placed before it, always finds some excuse for backing out of it. I would like to see a little of that energy, of that progressive spirit, which should characterize and actuate a Government to take hold of questions like this, instead of shelving them, moving the adjournment of the debate, or giving it the six months' hoist, or taking some other way to dispose of the question. I would like to see the Government grapple with this question and make a proposal, because they must know that the people of this country are pronouncing themselves in favour of it. The president of the Toronto Board of Trade, at its annual meeting the other day, referred to this matter. He is a gentleman of large business experience and a leader among manufacturers; he has an excellent knowledge of the question, and I am told that he has come out strongly in favour of the establishment of a mint in this country. Those who have examined this question have all come to the conclusion in favour of the establishment of a mint. Then there is another point to consider, a very important one. The Minister is afraid we will have too much money. Well, I am not. We have not got quite enough. He said they had not got a $5 gold piece over on that side of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. Neither have you.

Mr. WALLACE. I deny it. Here, I can show you one.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Here, I can show you one.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, Sir, the Minister of Finance was slandering his own side of the House, he will have to retract that statement. We want our own coinage, and not have to take the coinage of other countries. We want in our pockets the coinage of Canada, not the coinage of the United States, or the coinage of Great Britain, which is not so valuable for business purposes in Canada.

Then, Mr. Speaker, this proposition raises the very important question of bi-metallism. In the United States that has become a very live question. In Canada we have not given it very much consideration. But this will raise the question whether we are afraid of having too much money in circulation among the people, whether we are going to have silver and gold in quantities that the people require, as well as the stamped pieces of paper that are circulated throughout the country. We want bills, we want silver, and we want gold, and the establishment of a mint in this country will furnish a silver and gold coinage, will promote the prosperity of the country, will raise the dignity of Canada among the nations of the world, and will be beneficial in every way. I have not yet heard from the Minister or any one else any valid objection against the establishment of the mint industry in this country, and the coinage of our own money and its dissemination, stamped by the Dominion Government, and its value recognized by the Canadian people.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). The question of a mint is one upon which bankers differ, many of them are strongly in favour of it, most of them, perhaps, strongly against it. The Government, perhaps, do not see their way, from a purely commercial or business standpoint, to establish a mint in this Dominion, because it would be a little expensive. But from a national point of view I hold it is one of the most important subjects that a Government can take hold of. I do not think that there is anything that will give us a national status, that will promote a spirit of nationality more quickly and more strongly than the establishment of a mint for the coinage of our own gold and silver in this country. I agree with the Minister of Finance when he suggests that it would be better to have a mint in Canada, like the mint of Australia, more or less in connection with the English mint. But that may be a long process, it may take a long time to accomplish that. But I think that not a day should be lost in establishing an assay office, and following that, a mint in British Columbia. When I was in Victoria last September I saw the miners coming in, bringing bags of gold with them, and taking it to the banks, to be sent out of the country to be stamped with a foreign stamp before it could become of value as currency. Now, there is a great deal of sentiment in connection with this matter. From a purely business standpoint, there are a great many reasons in favour of it and a great many reasons against it, but from the point of view of Canadian nationality, I think that there can be no objection raised. In the interest of practical and self-sustaining government in Canada, and for the advancement of the mining industry, which is now becoming one of our greatest industries, I trust that the Government will take this matter into its serious consideration with as little delay as possible, and that this consideration will be followed by the establishment of a Canadian mint.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, that new conditions existing in Canada within the last few years have put a different face upon the question of a mint for this country from what possibly could have existed in the years before. Recently, Canada was not a producer, to any large extent, of the precious metals; but to-day she is one of the greatest producers of those metals in the world, and is rapidly increasing the importance of her position. What was an argument against a Canadian mint a few years ago, may be an argument in favour of a Canadian mint to-day. In regard to the coinage of silver and copper, it appears, that there is a profit to the Government in that coining, but there is no profit to the Government in the coinage of gold. It has also been shown to be a fact, that there is a limit to the coinage of silver and copper, but it has also been shown, that there is no limit to the coinage of gold. While a profit on the coinage of gold does not go to the Government from the working of the mint, it seems to me, from what I have heard here to-night, that a profit does go to the producers of gold and to the trade and commerce of the country from the work of the mint, and that that profit is much more important to the country, and is a better reason for the establishment of a mint, than the mere profit on the working of the mint, or the toll that might be levied by the Government from its operations. If, then, there is a profit, be it large or be it small, on every dollar of native gold coined in the national mint that profit should be secured to the people of the country, to the miner on the one hand, and to the trader on the other. I say, whether it be large or whether it be small, it belongs to the public, it belongs to the people; it does not belong to any section of the people or any single business institution of the country. It is not by right any part of the profit of the banks of the country—of this or of any other country. Two years ago, this would not have been important, because the production of native gold was not sufficient; but, with a production from the Yukon alone this year estimated at from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000, and with a probably increasing production for the next five or ten years, I submit, that the question of a mint, to secure their proper share of the profit on that gold to the people of Canada, is an important and pressing question, well worthy of the attention of this House and of this Government. As to whether the gold that is coined can be used, as I said, it is plain, that there is no limit to the quantity of coined gold that can be used, because we can pay for our imports to both Great Britain and the United States in our gold coinage, if we should, perchance have enough to do that with, which is not by any means likely. The coinage of Canada, although it is not identical with that of Great Britain, is identical with that of the United States; so that, if there is room for the expansion of the coinage of Australia in Great Britain by reason of the similarity of the coinage, there is room, for the same reason, for the expansion of Canadian coinage in the United States. It has been proven, by what has been said, that at the present time there is, not only a certain loss to the miner on the price which he receives for his gold from the banks, but there is a much greater loss to Canadian trade in the fact, that it does not find its best market in Canada. With a Canadian mint in British Columbia, gold from the Yukon would be marketed in British Columbia, and, possibly, the goods that were required to be purchased with that gold would be purchased in British Columbia. But, as I understand it, the gold of the Yukon is today marketed in Seattle, and everybody knows, that a large proportion of the goods required in the Yukon are also purchased in Seattle. So that it is not only a loss of a percentage on each dollar of gold, but it is, besides, a loss to Canadian trade of a large number of the dollars of gold which are taken out of the Yukon.

Mr. A. W. CARSCALLEN (North Hastings). Mr. Speaker, one of the points in connection with this matter which probably the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is not aware of, is, that on every shipment of bullion made from Canada to the United States, of not less than $100 and up to $1,000, the miner contributes $4.50 to the United States Government. He has to pay $3.25 for consular charges, and he has to pay a war tax of $1 on every shipment. The miners of this country are contributing, on every shipment of bullion made to the United States, towards the war tax of that country. Such a state of things, it seems to me, should in some way be changed. We are just commencing the development of our mining industry, and we have in operation two small mines, and these mines are making two shipments per month to the United States, and on each shipment these miners are paying $4.50 of a direct tax to the United States treasury on every shipment of over $100 in value. These shipments will increase, as mining develops. It seems to me, that something should be done to change that condition of affairs.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one observation, in regard to the coinage of silver. It seems to me, that the profit that is made on the coinage of silver is made at the expense of the people. It is done largely for their convenience, and I think, if the idea of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) were carried out, and the silver were made available for the purposes of the world, that we could not make any profit at all, because, in order to export it, even in coin value, it must be made pure and fine. The reason the Mexican dollar went so largely into circulation was because of its real value. So, in that regard, we would be making nothing at all. It would be of no value for us to make silver into coin for the sake of sending it away. In regard to gold, it appears to me to come to the same thing in the end. We might export our gold in the shape of bullion or coin, as long as we get value for it. I do not see where there is any argument in favour of the establishment of a mint in the statement of the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). He admits, that the gold must go out of the country for some purpose or another. If we send gold out in the shape of bullion or coin, and we get value for that, it is the same thing in the end. If we go to the expense of making coin of it, all that we get is what was referred to by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler). Very well, it appears to me, that, if your coin carries upon its face the fact that it is the coin of this country, it makes no difference where it is made; the sentiment will just be the same.

Motion (Mr. Fielding) that the debate be adjourned, agreed to.

P. E. I.—WINTER MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) moved for:

Copies of all correspondence, telegrams, reports, contracts, tenders and all other papers and documents in connection with the change in carrying the mails for Prince Edward Island between the Intercolonial Railway and Cape Tormentine during the past winter.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I may say that the mail service from Prince Edward Island to the mainland of Canada, has always been in a very unsatisfactory condition, and especially has it been unsatisfactory during the winter season. The terms of union between the Dominion and the Island province contained a clause which provided for efficient and continuous steam communication, winter and summer between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, thus placing Prince Edward Island in continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway and the railway system of Canada. I need not tell the House that that provision in the terms of union, has never been carried out with Prince Edward Island, and as a consequence incalculable loss has resulted to the province. I may say also, that very little improvement has been made in that service for the last 25 years, especially during the mid-winter season which lasts for a period of two or three months in each year. There has no doubt been some little improvement, and I shall detail to the House what that improvement consists of. You, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members may know that the mid-winter service is carried on by means of ice boats between Cape Traverse in Prince Edward Island and Cape Tormentine in New Brunswick, a distance of about nine miles. That ice-boat service was the service which the province had previous to confederation, and as it is the service which prevails to-day, you will see that the terms of union upon which Prince Edward Island entered confederation, which provided for continuous steam communication, have been largely unfulfilled in this respect. The only improvement that has been made in the service is, that boat-houses have been built in Prince Edward Island for the protection of the boats, and a short spur line of railway was built from Cape Traverse to the main line of the Prince Edward Island Railway, in order more expeditiously to carry the mails and passengers from the landing place at Cape Traverse. A few years later, at Cape Tormentine, there was a railway built known as the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway which runs from Cape Tormentine to Sackville. That railway was also an accommodation in carrying the mails from Cape Tormentine to the Intercolonial Railway, thus placing the province in that respect at least, in communication with the railway system of Canada. But there is this much to be said about it. While we had a special train service from Cape Traverse over the Prince Edward Island Railway, connecting with the mail boats as they arrived every day a crossing was made, there was never a special train service from Cape Tormentine to the Intercolonial Railway, and the lack of that special train service was and is still a source of great dissatisfaction to the people of Prince Edward Island. I have no hesitation in saying that since the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway was built, it has always been a cause of dissatisfaction that there was no special train service from Cape Tormentine to Sackville. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on different occasions, called the attention of the late Government to the want of a special train service from Cape Tormentine to the Intercolonial Railway. I know also that at the beginning of last winter, when the board of trade of Charlottetown wanted an improvement in the service, that hon. gentleman wrote down to the board of trade stating that the service as it then existed was intolerable. But, Sir, a change was made in that service last winter by the Postmaster General. What is that change? Is it a change for the better or a change for the worse? When I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in place of carrying passengers and mails from Cape Tormentine, the landing on the mainland, to Sackville on the Intercolonial Railway, a distance of thirty-eight miles on a special train, the Postmaster General substituted a stage service, I think the hon. members of this House will have some idea of the treatment that has been accorded to Prince Edward Island. What is the result of that change? It is this: As soon as the ice-boats reach Cape Tormentine, the mails have to travel by stage a distance of thirty-eight miles, and the passengers, after passing over nine miles of straits at a very cold and inclement part of the year, are supposed to travel thirty-eight miles in open sleds to Sackville or lay over at Cape Tormentine till the next day, if ice boats are late in crossing. What is the object in making that change? It is to save a few dollars to the Canadian treasury. And yet some years ago there was talk of an expenditure of from five to nine million dollars in order to give Prince Edward Island that continuous steam communication to which, under the terms of union, she was entitled. But that was thought to be too great an expenditure, and now the Postmaster General has gone back to the antiquated system of the stage coach instead of using a railway which had been almost built for the purpose. In the name of the people of Prince Edward Island, I protest against that treatment. A few days ago when I asked some questions in this House in regard to this matter, I was told by the Postmaster General that the result of this change which he has made from a railway system to a stage system, has proved so satisfactory that it is intended at an early date to invite tenders for a permanent stage service between those two points. Now, if the Postmaster General and the Government of this Dominion are going to impose a stage service on the people of Prince Edward Island, I think they are going to humiliate them and degrade the service. Instead of there being another forward step, which we were entitled to expect, this is a retrograde step. Though I can easily understand this action on the part of the Postmaster General, who has no knowledge of the state of affairs there, I cannot understand how the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who should know the situation, and who has often stood up in this House and pleaded the cause of Prince Edward Island for an improved mail and passenger service, can sit silently by and allow a stage service for thirty-eight miles to be imposed upon the people of Prince Edward Island in place of a railway service to which that province is clearly entitled. I am going to read some extracts from statements of gentlemen who have passed over that route, and from the press of Prince Edward Island on both sides of politics. This is not a party question. The mail service of Prince Edward Island is not to be fought out as a party issue.

I have here an interview taken from the Charlottetown "Examiner" of February 18, 1899, with Mr. T. J. Dillon, a gentleman who is well known not only in Prince Edward Island, but all over the Dominion as a large exporter of cheese. The interview is headed:

OUR WINTER MAIL SERVICE.

The Delay between Tormentine and Aulac.—Monday's Mails turn up at Baie Verte; but Passengers by the Capes' Route go Right Through.

Mr. T. J. Dillon arrived here on Tuesday evening, and was visited by a representative of the "Examiner" on Friday. He hadn't anything in particular to say concerning the dairy industry, except that Prince Edward Island seems to be making as much progress in that regard as many localities, and more than some. But he had a great deal to say regarding our mails and passengers, and the service now afforded by the Government. "For instance," said Mr. Dillon, "the mails which left here on Sunday evening last, and which crossed at the Capes on Monday, were on the road between Baie Verte and Aulac on Thursday, and would probably be delivered at Aulac on Thursday evening, while the passengers who crossed at the same time went by train to Sackville, and on to St. John and Halifax on Monday night."

You see clearly the reason of that: the passengers went by the railway, the ice boats happening on that day to make a good crossing, but the mails went by the stage which the Postmaster General tells us so confidently has given satisfaction. Can any one defend this? To send the mails by a slow stage whilst the train is on the spot to carry them. The passengers went by train on the same night on which the mails crossed the straits, and here were the mails three days passing between these points only 38 miles apart. I hope the hon. Minister will pay some attention to that fact before he calls for tenders next year to make this a permanent service. I hope it will never be a permanent service, for if it be continued it will be a great injustice to Prince Edward Island. The writer goes on to say:

Again, the mails that left here Tuesday evening and crossed on Wednesday were seen kicking about John Tucker's hotel barn on Thursday morning,—

That is a nice state of affairs.

—while the passengers who crossed the same day were in St. John and Halifax on the previous evening.

Yet that is a good service in the eyes of the hon. Postmaster General. While the passengers who went on the train arrived days ahead, the mails which went by this antiquated stage service were two or three days behind.

Mr. MARTIN.

Further, the mails from the west that were landed at Aulac Monday night were delivered at Cape Tormentine three o'clock Thursday morning, and arrived here on Thursday afternoon.

That is great progress in these days of penny postage. Fancy taking that time to go over thirty-eight miles. It is all right for us to get penny postage, but I hope you are not going to saddle Prince Edward Island with a large share of the deficit which penny postage is going to entail on this Dominion, and at the same time furnish her with such an antiquated mail service. I am quite agreed that we should have penny postage, but I cannot agree that mail bags should take three days to travel thirty-eight miles. I believe it would pay the business people of Prince Edward Island better to meet the expense of that mail service out of their own pockets than submit to this injustice. I believe it would be more in their interest that they should pay that $2,000 or $3,000 themselves, if this Government cannot afford to have the special train service for the mails, which they ought to have had for the last ten or eleven years. And now if the Government are going to make a change at all, I hope they are not going to subject us to the retrograde change proposed by the Postmaster General, and I know the people will not submit to any such service.

Further, the mails from the west that were landed at Aulac on Monday night, were delivered at Cape Tormentine about three o'clock Thursday morning, and arrived here Thursday afternoon, and mails delivered at Aulac on Tuesday arrived here to-day (Friday). This is the kind of mail service which the business men of Prince Edward Island receive, and are almost persuaded to call good. More than that, Mr. Dillon said: "I have good authority for stating that a mail bag out of the Prince Edward Island mail was recently picked up on the road.

That would be very interesting to the hon. Postmaster General if he were in his seat.

Apart from all the accident and snow-storms, our mail service has been lamentably slow. I can show lots of complaints from consignees about bills of lading not arriving on time, and necessitating delay of goods and extra expenses in England, caused largely on account of the slowness of the mails. When the freight boats began carrying the mails gratis, consignees began to get their letters on time, and were saved quay rent, &c., and the Government woke up to the necessity of improved ocean mail accommodation and speed, and set about getting a better service.

Is there going to be any consideration to the business interests of Prince Edward Island? Are its merchants to be ruined to save a few thousand dollars to Canada? Now, here is something further:

Mr. Dillon himself came down to Cape Tormentine by train on Wednesday, arriving at 10.30, after the boats for Cape Traverse had gone. We were told in this House that there were good connections made. But here was a passenger who actually went over the route, and when he got to Cape Tormentine he was obliged to stay there until the next day.

He thinks that the forces of the Government in respect to the carriage of the mails and passengers ought in winter to be concentrated upon the capes route. If this were done, the public would obtain much better accommodation. Frequently it takes a passenger longer to come from Halifax to Charlottetown than it does to come from Vancouver to Halifax.

That is not a very nice state of affairs. Here follows a list of the names of ladies and gentlemen who went over that road :—

Mr. G. A. Toombs and Mrs. Toombs, Mrs. Perkins, Mrs. Loughram and others coming to the island a short time ago, were detained at Pictou several days; and then, after losing a lot of time and spending a deal of money, had to leave Pictou and come around by the capes.

That is the kind of service which is being lauded by the Postmaster General as the one he intends making permanent for Prince Edward Island. But it is one which, in the interests of Prince Edward Island and its business men, I hope will never become permanent.

I have also a letter from a merchant in Charlottetown who travelled over this road, and which I will read for the benefit of this House :

OUR MAIL SERVICE.

Cape Tormentine (on the Train), March 8, 1899.
To the Editor of the "Examiner" :

Dear sir,—I trust you, as well as the readers of the "Examiner," will or would like some facts as to the movements of the mails even on this side, between Cape Tormentine and Aulac. On Sunday last I drove from Amherst to Cape Tormentine, and the party who drove me from Port Elgin to the cape (who, by the way, is a strong Grit, but a reliable man), informs me, as well as scores of others, that the mails have only about six times this winter made the connections from Tormentine to Aulac, thereby holding all island mails on the road and at Aulac twenty-four hours more than necessary.

Again, he says :

The contract was let to parties who have teams that are not capable of doing the work in any way or time.

You remember, Sir, the hon. Postmaster General boasted he had a very cheap service, but when he got a cheap service, he got a very bad one and he had no hesitation in forcing a bad service on that province despite the fact that one of his colleagues, the hon. Minister of Marine, represents it in the Cabinet. I should think that that gentleman ought to raise his voice in the interest of that province and show that he has some regard for its interest. I hope at least that he will not consent to such a service being enforced on that province the coming season.

The contract was let to parties who have teams that are not capable of doing the work in any way on time. They frequently, both ways, leave part of the mails around the barns, awaiting another trip.

Just fancy Her Majesty's mail being treated in that manner. Fancy sending the mails, while a snowstorm was raging thirty-eight miles by a broken-down team of horses, and allowing the mail bags to be dropped on the way.

Yesterday all the mails did not arrive on time.

I ask the hon. Postmaster General if he had provided sufficient means to carry those mails, and he said he had, but here is a man who was on the spot, and what does he say :

Yesterday all the island mails did not arrive on time. Consequently the mail is twenty-four hours in Cape Tormentine. To-day all the mails are in the same condition, remaining at the boat-house—came in too late for the boats.

That is a nice state of affairs and something that will give you an idea of this cheap service of which the Postmaster General boasts and with which he has favoured Prince Edward Island.

If our Association for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals were here to see the old scrubs of horses, with sores wherever the harness touches them, I think that our Grit partisans would hide their faces in shame.

Not only are the mails delayed, but passengers are held until the trains move.

Here is a stage running parallel with the railway, and when the train arrives the mail has to wait until this stage comes along, perhaps nine or ten hours afterwards. Not only are mails delayed, but passengers have to wait. He continues :

I could go on and relate instances similar to those I have related, of which all residents on this side are familiar, that I think should induce the Government organs on the island for once to come out and ask for at least a mail service without stench of dirty patronage. I may add that if you ask any one in connection with the service about mails there, they are as dumb as an oyster. Every one seems to have a gag on him. That is the mail service foisted on the people of Prince Edward Island.

Now, I have also here an extract from a letter written in Charlottetown which I shall read. This appeared in the "Examiner" on March 13th last :

It has been openly charged and not contradicted, that mail bags and mail boxes have been lost on the road. It is against this service to and from Cape Tormentine that the public is up in arms, and not against the crossing at the capes.

I have extracts also from the press, the press of both sides. I have one or two from the "Guardian," a Liberal paper, which condemns this service. This is from the "Guardian" of March 8th :

It appears that the mail boats from Cape Tormentine yesterday left before the mail stage from Sackville had arrived.

Now, we are told by the Postmaster General that there is good connection. Here is somebody who knows all about it :

The question arises whether the blame for the failure to connect rests wholly with the team service or partly with the boat service. The latter is governed in its movements by the condition of the wind, tide and ice. It may have been possible for the boats to have waited the arrival of the mails and crossed later in the day. At this distance we have not sufficient information to base an opinion as to that point. The team service is getting severe criticism these days, and it remains to be seen what defence can be made for it.

There was no attempt to make a defence for this service, only perhaps by blind, very blind, partisans. The only defence was: When your party was in, you did not give a good service. There is nobody in Prince Edward Island who defends it. You can travel from end to end of the island, and you will not find a man, nor can you find a representative of the people in this House from Prince Edward Island who will defend the service from Tormentine to the Intercolonial Railway. What we want is a special train, and not only a special train, but we want to have a mail clerk on the train who will assort the mails on the way from Tormentine to Sackville, so that when they reach Sackville they may be ready for distribution for the different parts to which they are going. We also want a mail clerk on the trip to Tormentine from Sackville, so that when the mails cross to Prince Edward Island they will be assorted and those for the west can be sent on to Summerside, and those on the east can be sent on the eastern trains to Charlottetown. Here is another extract from the "Guardian." This brings another phase of this question to light:

In regard to the work of the ice-boats, it has frequently happened that the mail boats at Cape Tormentine have been unable to bring all or nearly all the mail matter that was there awaiting transportation across the straits. This, apparently, shows that there has not always been a sufficient number of mail boats to do the work. But, at the same time, there were opposition boats close at hand, which might have been temporarily chartered to bring the surplus bags across. Why was not some arrangement of this kind made? The people who had to wait for their letters and papers care very little whether a Government or an opposition boat does the work, but they do care that the work should be promptly done. It looks as though sometimes too much red-tape had interfered with our getting the best service, and to which we are entitled, at all times.

The mail bags arrive at Cape Tormentine, and for fear of giving the opposition boats any work they allow the mail bags to accumulate, leaving them 24 hours until the Government boats get back, in place of paying the opposition boats to carry the mail bags over the day they reach Cape Tormentine. I think I have shown sufficient to establish my case. My reason for bringing the matter forward is this. Before next season comes on, this session of the House will be over. I desire before the session closes to warn the Postmaster General and his colleagues, particularly the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who represents Prince Edward Island here, of the state of things in that province. But before I sit down, I would like to refer to an editorial in the "Examiner" of February 18th, 1899, entitled "The Mails":

The statement of Mr. T. J. Dillon, published in another column, justifies the worst fears of the "Examiner" regarding the carriage of the mails under the new arrangement, when the weather is stormy and the roads bad. From Sunday evening to Thursday evening, between Charlottetown and Aulac, while passengers leaving here at the same time went right along to Sackville and thence to St. John and the west, mail bags picked up on the road! Who can tell what has become of the their missing letters? Recollect that Mr. Dillon has just been over the route, and that what he reports he has himself seen or has heard from others who have been on the ground. He is not a politician.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, oh.

Mr. MARTIN (reading):

He attends strictly to business. It is as a business man and an exporter of a large and valuable part of our products that he speaks.

Mr. Dillon is an exporter of cheese. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries questioned the statement that Mr. Dillon was not a politician. But the hon. Minister cannot question in this House the degradation that has been put upon Prince Edward Island in imposing upon her such a miserable service as we have had last winter. I do not think the Minister has the courage to stand up and defend it. There is not a representative of the province in this House who can rise in his place and say that Prince Edward Island is satisfied with a stage coach service from Tormentine to Sackville. I think I have said enough to show the nature of the service that has been foisted on Prince Edward Island. I do hope that next season the Postmaster General will reconsider the conclusion he has apparently arrived at in regard to these mails, and will give Prince Edward Island a service at least somewhat nearer to what she was promised in the terms of union. Why, Sir, it was one of the terms in which Prince Edward Island joined the union that mails as well as passengers should be carried over that route. I do not see how any hon. gentleman can justify the placing of the province in such a humiliating position as to give it the service I have described.

Mr. J. H. BELL (East Prince). There is some degree of truth in the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who proposed this motion, but, unfortunately, his political leanings have somewhat distorted his facts. Now, if any hon. gentleman in this House will accompany me—in fancy, of course—down to Prince Edward Island in the winter, he will see exactly how the matter stands.

An hon. MEMBER. Will you pay his expenses?

Mr. BELL. In fancy—I will pay all expenses. We will go down by the Intercolonial to Sackville. We get off, and inquire what time the train leaves for Cape Tormen-tine. We arrive at four o'clock in the afternoon, and find, alas, that the train for Cape Tormentine had left, that it left that day at twelve o'clock noon. So, with no enjoyable feelings, we are obliged to stay over until the following day at twelve o'clock. In that way we lose some twenty hours of time, valuable time. Well, at twelve o'clock we start for Cape Tormentine, which we reach at about half-past two o'clock in the afternoon. There we inquire, what time the boats leave for Prince Edward Island, and we find they left that morning at eight o'clock. So, we are obliged to stay over until the next day at eight o'clock in the morning. In that way we lose eighteen hours more of valuable time. Then we cross over to Prince Edward Island. I am glad now your trip across the straits is only in fancy as the reality is very unpleasant at times. You have got to put a strap over your shoulder, and work your passage. The strap serves the double purpose of enabling you to pull the boat, and then, if you happen to get down through the lolly or broken ice, it serves as a means of pulling you out of the gulf. When you get over to Cape Traverse, you find that you have made a distance of 43 miles from Sackville, and in travelling that distance you have been exactly forty-three hours on the road—at the terrific rate of a mile an hour.

Well, that is how the matter stood under the administration of the late Government, and, so far as passengers are concerned that is how it stands to-day. It is possible, of course, that passengers can accompany the mails, hauled by team during the night from Sackville to Cape Tormentine, a distance of some 36 miles, through snow drifts. But it is as much as a man's life is worth to attempt it, and practically it is never done. Now, there was a representation made to this Government on the matter, and the Government attempted to remedy one of the grievances of which the people of Prince Edward Island complained. They arranged, that, as soon as the mails arrived at Sackville from the west, teams should be on hand to take the mails and convey them direct to Cape Tormentine during the night. In the morning they were ready to pass over the straits to Prince Edward Island. That is the change which this Government has made with respect to the mails. The result is, that Prince Edward Island now gets its mails twenty-four hours sooner than it did under the previous Administration. That is a change that we welcome; it is a change that the people of the Island duly appreciate. I know that some complaints are still made. Some of the newspapers have discussed the matter. Some have blamed, and others have praised the Government. My hon. friend quoted the "Guardian" as being the only independent newspaper on the Island. Allow me to quote also from the columns of that paper, to show how the matter fairly stood and what was the sentiment of the people after this change had been carried into effect. On the 21st of February, 1899, the "Guardian" contained these remarks about the latest we have upon this subject:

The "Guardian," in common with all other newspapers, has an especial interest in the promptness and regularity of the mails. We are independent of the Government or of parties to condemn or approve their course in regard to the carriage of the mails as the circumstances may require. If the winter mails from the mainland were more delayed or irregular than heretofore there would have been complaint of the fact in our columns. As a matter of fact, we are this winter receiving our mails from western Canada with regularity and usually twenty-four hours earlier than in previous winters. An independent newspaper ought to be both "a terror to evil-doers and a praise to them that do well." We therefore commend the Government for having, in response to the request of the island people, greatly improved the incoming mail service.

Now, with respect to Mr. Dillon, whom my hon. friend has referred to, I will only read a quotation from the "Patriot" newspaper:

In conclusion, we may state that Mr. Brecken (the postmaster) says the mail service was never as good as during the present season. And as the "Examiner" announces that the authorities at Ottawa are responsible for it, then we think they are entitled to commendation, not censure as indulged in by Mr. Dillon and the Tory organ. We are also of the opinion that the Board of Trade, composed of both sides of politics, will hardly relish such partisan fault-finding, with its suggestion, the carrying out of which gave us our mails twenty-four hours earlier than heretofore.

I produce these quotations for the purpose of showing the actual condition of affairs, not for the purpose of showing that we have no cause of complaint. They show, that, under the present Administration, the mail service is in a far more satisfactory condition than under the previous Administration. Now, with regard to the crossing at the capes, that service this winter has been operated under great difficulties; nevertheless, it has been absolutely satisfactory, much more mail matter had to be carried than in former years. But the men who have the management of the service sometimes made two trips a day, instead of one, to keep up with the work. The men exceeded what their duty required, and even crossed on Sunday to clean up the mail bags and make the service complete. In respect to the suggestion about an improved service between Cape Tormentine and Sackville, there is no doubt but that the proper thing for the Government to do under the circumstances is to do exactly what they have done in Prince Edward Island, viz.: To have a special train wait upon the boat service. When the boats arrive at Cape Tormentine there should be a train in waiting to take the passengers and the mails to the Intercolonial Railway. When the mails arrive at Sackville from the west, there ought to be a special train waiting their arrival to take them to Cape Tormentine. It is a very easy matter, as has been suggested by my hon. friend, to have these mails assorted in transit so that when they reach Prince Edward Island, the western mails can go west and the eastern mails can go east, thus avoiding the delay of separating and assorting in Charlottetown. That, of course, will involve some little expense on the part of the Government. I do not know what additional expense, but the Government have control of trains and men upon the Intercolonial Railway, and it certainly will cost very little to send special trains in charge of Government employees over the road for three months of the year. Of course they will be obliged to pay something to Mr. Wood, the owner of the railway, for the use of the track. This special train will be necessary in the future for another reason. My hon. friend (Mr. Martin), who made this motion, ought to have referred to a matter to which I now propose to call attention. He said that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis H. Davies), made promises that he would look specially after the interests of Prince Edward Island, but that he neglected to do so.

Mr. MARTIN. If the hon. gentleman will pardon me, I did not make a remark of that kind.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Well, that is how I interpreted his remarks—that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not fulfil certain hopes and promises made in regard to the interests of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. MARTIN. What I did say was that the hon. gentleman's friends expected that when he came here, the interests of Prince Edward Island would be looked after and that they would not be sacrificed in the way, his friends said, they were under the late Government, and that, when he came here we expected that he would carry out and fulfil the expectations of his friends in that respect.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) That is virtually the same thing. The statement now is, that the hon. gentleman was expected by his friends to look specially after Prince Edward Island, and that his friends have been disappointed. Under the previous Administration we had many causes of complaint in respect of our winter service. We had the "Stanley," a good boat of her kind, but in attempting to perform the winter service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland she was, unfortunately, very often stuck in the ice. She would be out in the gulf for days—sometimes for weeks—with ice jamming her under conditions that it was hard to tell whether she would ever get safely out of the ice floe. She would be away from harbour sometimes 50 to 100 miles going in a circuitous route to reach her destination, driven hither and thither by the currents and by the ice. The people of Prince Edward Island represented to the late Government: What would happen to the passengers if anything happened to the steamboat? There is no way of communicating with them; there is no second boat provided to save them. If the "Stanley" broke her propellor or was crushed in the ice when 30 miles from port, the boat and passengers would inevitably be lost, the "Stanley" being out in the ice for days and weeks. The people of Prince Edward Island protested and said: This is not the continuous communication you promised us under the terms of union. For two weeks and more our passengers cannot get across: freight is accumulating at Pictou and at Georgetown. The merchants complained and represented that one vessel could not carry the freight. In the interest of commerce we asked for a second boat. That was the complaint made to the previous Government by the people and by the press. They heard that complaint, but they turned a deaf ear to the entreaties of our people. When this Government came into power, when my hon. friend the Minister of Marine took a prominent place in that Government, then it was that the expectations of the people of Prince Edward Island were realized and not disappointed. At this moment we have building in England a boat at a cost of $180,000. That boat will be completed this fall, and will go on the service between Prince Edward Island and the mainland to supplement the efforts of the "Stanley." The Government that has done that—the Government that has listened to the representation and entreaties of our people—the Government that has rendered us this simple act of justice is certainly entitled to credit for the performance of its duty and the fulfilment of its promises. Where will that second boat operate? I understand it is the intention of the Government to place one of the boats upon the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, and if she cannot succeed in operating there during the whole of the winter, she is going on the route between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine. From the study I have been able to give to this subject and from an intimate knowledge of the locality, I have come to the conclusion that the natural and best mode of winter communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, or between the capes. I look forward with great confidence to the effort that will be made to place one of these winter boats upon this route. Why, Sir, look at the matter of the saving of distance. Suppose a passenger wishes to go from Summerside to Ottawa or St. John, N.B., on the main line of travel, what is the difference in the distance by this route? From Summerside to Sackville, via Georgetown and Pictou, is 270 miles, whereas, by the new route, it is only seventy-two miles, or a saving in distance of 198 miles. Just fancy what that means in time and money.

These are important considerations in this fast age. Under the new conditions there will be a saving of 140 miles in travelling from Charlottetown to Sackville. Even from Georgetown there will be a saving of sixty-four miles. Hence it is manifest that the winter route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, or between the capes, is the shortest and cheapest. It is also the safest. On the route from Georgetown to Pictou you are out on the "Stanley," sometimes for weeks, exposed to danger, not knowing when you will reach land; but, upon the other route, the short distance of eight miles between the capes, or fifteen miles from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, you are never out of sight of land, and never but a short distance from the board ice on either side. Again, on this latter route the difficulties in the way of winter navigation are more easily overcome. Off Georgetown and Pictou the ice is thick and heavy. It is northern ice that is driven south by the north-east winds and blocks these harbours. On the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine the ice is only what is naturally formed in the Straits, and is never very thick, and hence never very difficult to overcome. Between the capes the tides meet, and in the ebb of the tide there are always leads of water between the floes of the ice. The steamer could always take advantage of these leads either going across the strait or up the strait. That is a condition of things which does not obtain on the Georgetown route. I have pointed out these facts to show the conditions existing on the proposed new route, and to indicate the reasons why we hope for a successful experiment with one of the winter steamers. I point to these facts for another reason. I said a moment ago that it was necessary for the Government to run a special mail train between Sackville and Cape Tormentine. Now, when we consider the conditions that will arise during the coming winter, when we consider that almost all the passenger travel and possibly a large portion of the freight, will pass between the capes or from Summerside to Cape Tormentine, then it becomes absolutely necessary that this special train service should be afforded between Sackville and Cape Tormentine. I bring this matter to the consideration of the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) and the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis H. Davies), believing, as I have reason to believe from my experience of them in the past, that they will do everything that is possible to make this service complete and satisfactory to Prince Edward Island. Some reference has been made to the terms of union. The terms of union do not mean that passengers are simply to be taken over to Cape Tormentine and dumped upon that shore. It means more. One of the strongest inducements that led the people of Prince Edward Island into confederation was that we were to have proper and continuous communication with the Intercolonial Railway. We pay our full share of the cost of operating the Intercolonial Railway. We have paid our full share of the cost of its construction, and I say that the terms of union will never be fully or faithfully carried out until the people of Prince Edward Island are put into direct communication by rail with the Intercolonial.

Mr. B. D. McLELLAN (West Prince). Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that this matter has been brought to the attention of this House and to the consideration of the Government, for I expect that some good results will come from it. I cannot agree with my hon. friend from East Queen's (Mr. Martin) when he says that our mail service is not satisfactory. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) will have to qualify that statement, because in my opinion our summer mail service has been very satisfactory since the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) has taken charge of it. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) will agree with me in saying that during last summer and the summer before last, but particularly last summer, our mail service attained a standard which it had never attained before. We had a thoroughly good service. There was a thorough connection made all over the province, from Souris to Point du Chêne on the one hand, and from Tignish to Point du Chêne on the other, a service which we never had before. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) deserves great credit, and he deserves the gratitude of the people of our province for having brought the mail service in summer up to its present standard. But, Sir, with respect to the winter service it is a different thing. However, I believe it is only necessary to bring its defects to the attention of the Government, and the Postmaster General particularly, in order to have a satisfactory arrangement made. It is very true that the service last winter was in some cases better than the service given us by the late Government, but we are not satisfied with the service we had last winter, and that service was only better than the old service on certain days when the mail teams would succeed in getting down in time to catch the boats. What we do want, and what we are going to ask for, is: that a special train be run from Sackville to the capes. We are entitled to that much and we are entitled to it for the reason that it makes no difference how good the teams are, because no mail matter can be assorted between Sackville and Cape Tormentine when you convey the mails by horses. If we had a special train, we could have a mail clerk on that train from Sackville to the capes who would be able to assort the mail without any additional cost to the Government. As a matter of fact, we have now a mail clerk stationed at Cape Tormentine; but when the mail arrives just in time to catch the boats, the clerk is unable to assort it. So that all the mails for the province go to Charlottetown; and those for the west have to wait there 24 hours in order to be assorted and sent west; whereas if the mail clerk at Tormentine were put on the train, he would be able to assort a great deal of the mail between the capes and Sackville. Even if he were able only to assort the letters, it would be a great boon to the people of Prince Edward Island. I do not think the matter of cost is worthy of consideration at all. We are entitled to have a mail service, and an efficient mail service, whatever it may cost; and when the matter is considered by the Postmaster General, I think he will agree with me that the question of cost should not count in the matter. It must be remembered that these ice-boats carry across the straits not only our mails, but passengers as well, and the interests of the travelling public should be taken into consideration. I might remind the House, because they do not, perhaps, understand our situation down there, that for six weeks in the year, at least, crossing at the capes is practically the only way of crossing from Prince Edward Island to the mainland. It is, therefore, of great consequence that all the accommodation the Government can afford to the public should be afforded to them; and I say that there is no other possible way of affording complete passenger accommodation and a complete mail service, than by putting on a special train, which would meet the boats at Cape Tormentine in the morning, and the train coming from the north bringing passengers down to the cape. Any person who would take the trouble during the winter months of going to the library and looking at the island papers, would understand the very great delay there is in the arrival of the mails there. I have often gone to the reading room and found that the papers which were printed at Charlottetown on the 6th of the month did not arrive here until the 12th. This is an unreasonable length of time, it seems to me, for the mails to come that short distance. With respect to the service of the new boat that is going on, I do not know what the intentions of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are; but I have full confidence that he will make the best possible use of the two boats. I believe that the present boat, the "Stanley," has insufficient capacity for carrying all the freights that are passing between Prince Edward Island and the mainland at the present time. Every year we have an increase of the freights both going and coming. At the time I crossed, about the 12th of March, I was told that no less than 60 carloads of freight were waiting for transfer from Pictou to Georgetown. As the "Stanley" was stuck for some days in the ice, I have no doubt that 100 car-loads of freight were waiting for shipment from Pictou to Charlottetown. That shows that the capacity of the "Stanley" for the carrying trade between Prince Edward Island and the mainland is insufficient, and it will be necessary, perhaps, for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to keep both boats running. If he decides to do that, I hope he will, as a matter of right to our end of the province, place one of the boats on the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine. We cannot tell what this route may turn out to be, as it has never yet been tried, and the "Stanley," with some repairs, would be a very good boat to put on it. Some say there is not sufficient water in Summerside Harbour. Of my own knowledge, I do not know whether there is or not; but I was informed by the pilot of the "Northumberland" that there is better water in Summerside Harbour than there is in Pictou Harbour. So that, as a matter of right to our people, and also for the sake of trying the route and finding by practical experience whether it is feasible or not, it would be well for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to give his earnest consideration to the proposal for putting a boat on that route; and I have confidence that if he has sufficient justification for putting one of the boats there, he will do so. I hope this discussion, which has been brought out by the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Martin) to-night, will bear good fruits in the season to come, and that better mail and passenger arrangements will be made between Sackville and Cape Tormentine. In Prince Edward Island the conditions are good. We have an express train running from Charlottetown to Cape Traverse that makes connection both going and coming. We want equally good accommodation on this side, and I hope that when the next season comes around, we shall have it.

Mr. A. C. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.)
Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Prince Edward Island will feel very thankful to the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin) for bringing this matter of our mail service directly before the Postmaster General, the hon. gentleman who represents the province in the Government, and the Government generally. I am, therefore, pleased indeed to see the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) and the hon. member for West Prince (Mr. McLellan) corroborating the statement of the hon. member for East Queen's, and protesting as strongly as possible against that very retrograde movement on the part of the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) of going back to a horse service, instead of spending a few paltry thousand dollars to put on a train service between Sackville and Cape Tormentine. I think it is one of the shabbiest things that has been done. I am not blaming this Government for more than they have done; but it is a shabby thing for the Government of Canada to think for a moment of the expenditure of a few thousand dollars towards carrying out the terms of union between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. There has been a fair mail service from the Intercolonial Railway to Prince Edward Island during the last year from all accounts—at any rate, for the letters. The papers, I believe, were detained for unusually long periods; but the detention of the mails was not from Sackville or the mainland to Prince Edward Island, but from the island to other parts of Canada and other parts of the world. The service was never so bad, from the information I have received, as it has been during the past winter for the outgoing mails, and I trust that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will see that we shall never have during another season such poor accommodation in that respect as we had last winter.

Of course, we are all pleased to know, that a new boat is being provided for the winter mail service. This is a matter of necessity for this or any other Government. The present boat has been on the route many years, and the service is a very hard one for the best built boat in the world; and, as the present boat is getting up in years, it was a matter of necessity for the Government to procure a larger and more powerful one. This, I believe, the Government is doing, and I hope will succeed. The experience gained in the past will, no doubt, enable them to put on a boat that will be able to overcome the difficulties, possibly, which the present one was not able to surmount. The hon. gentlemen from the western section of the Island, naturally enough, want to get a mail service from Summerside to Cape Tormentine. I am sure, that, when the new boat is obtained, the opportunity will be afforded, possibly, of putting a boat on that route; but, from my own experience in crossing at the capes, I do not think a boat will work successfully on that route. The space is too confined, and there is not the same opportunity for the ice to spread in that portion of the strait as in the wider portion on the present route between Georgetown and Pictou. If my recollection is not at fault, I think that Captain Finlayson, of the "Stanley," has always said, that there was not sufficient water in the port at Summerside for a winter boat, when she is down to her proper depth in breaking the ice. My hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Bell) has said, that the winter ice comes down from the north of Gulf St. Lawrence on the Pictou and Georgetown route, and that it is not nearly so heavy on the Summerside route; but my experience shows me, that there is far heavier ice on the Summerside route than on the Georgetown route, and for this reason there is an idea prevalent, that northern ice comes down to our coast. That is altogether a mistake. The ice on all sides of our coast, to a very large extent, forms on those coasts alone. People talk of the northern ice and the Labrador ice coming down, but that is all moonshine. The ice gradually accumulates in weight and thickness in the narrow spaces. In the straits, between Summerside and Cape Tormentine, for instance, where there is a very strong current and great pressure, owing to the very narrow space, the ice piles up and becomes heavier than it does down in the eastern section, and for that reason, I think, the Georgetown and Pictou route will always be preferred to the western route. However, for my part, I will be very glad to see the people of Summerside accommodated, if there is any possibility of doing so. They endeavoured heretofore to get the "Stanley" to run, and I think there was an attempt made to get her up to the capes, but she found her own way back to Georgetown without much effort on their part. I think there was also an effort made to run her on the Charlottetown route, but on every occasion it was found that the Georgetown and Pictou route was the best for the winter service. When the late Government was in power, I was for years trying to persuade my hon. friend the senior member for Pictou, the late Minister of Marine, to put the "Stanley" on the Georgetown and Pictou route at the beginning of the winter season, as soon as the summer boats ceased to run at Charlottetown, and keep her there until these summer boats began to run again. It was a long time before he could see the matter just in that light, but finally he saw it was really the correct thing to do. I am glad to see, in connection with this new boat, that the hon. Minister is increasing its size and capacity, as compared with the present boat, which is insufficient for the increasing traffic. There was an accumulation of traffic, not only incoming traffic, but also on the Prince Edward Island side, at Georgetown, which it was impossible for the boats to accommodate. There were, I believe, fifty to one hundred carloads all the time there, waiting to be transported. The new boat will be larger, but not larger than necessary for the traffic of the province.

We have got a special train on the Island side. As soon as the mails land there, the Government have a special train to take those mails to Charlottetown. Why in the world cannot the Government have a special train on the other side to carry the mails from Cape Tormentine to Sackville? It is only a question of a very small expenditure for some three months in the year; and, as we are spending enormous sums in other parts of the country for railways and other public works, surely the people of other parts of Canada will not deny to the people of Prince Edward Island a part of what is necessary to carry out the terms of confederation. I do trust, that, when another season comes around, the Postmaster General will see, that we get a special train between Sackville and Cape Tormentine, and thus, to some extent, at least, carry out the terms of confederation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). My hon. friends from East and West Prince and from King's County, together with the mover of the resolution, have stated the facts in connection with this mail service so clearly, that very few words of comment are required from me. The whole difficulty arises from the fact, that, after the mails arrive at Sackville, the local arrangements on the local road between Sackville and Tormentine are such, that, if we depend on that road, the mails would not leave Sackville the day they arrived, at five o'clock, but only the next day at noon. They could not then reach the cape till next day in the afternoon, and would not reach the Island until the following day. That was the plan adopted by the late Government, and by that plan they succeeded in bringing the mails to the Island some twenty-four hours later than they reach there by the plan adopted by the hon. Postmaster General. He has made a move in the right direction, and I think the commercial community of the Island are grateful to him to that extent.

Looking at the contract made between the Dominion and Prince Edward Island for an efficient steam communication and the carriage of mails in winter, I am bound to say, that we are entitled to still better service than we are getting. I know that my hon. friend the Postmaster General endeavoured to come to terms with the New Brunswick road, which is a local road, not under the control of the Government, to so run its trains, in order to connect with the Intercolonial, that our mails might be carried from Sackville to Tormentine and proper connections made; but the local road standing upon its rights and in the hope of getting a round sum of money, did not see its way to do this for a sum which the Postmaster General thought was fair.

There is this to be said in connection with this road,—the Postmaster General pays a very large sum, in my humble opinion, to that road for conveying the local mail over that 36 miles. I, for one, fail to see, if the road will not change its timetable to connect with the Prince Edward Island mail service, the propriety of continuing that subvention. But I thoroughly agree with my hon. friends, that after passengers encounter the rigours and dangers of crossing by the capes—and there are very few gentlemen who have not been there, who have the slightest conception of what those rigours and dangers are—they should not be subjected to the further severe trial of a 36 mile drive in a cold sleigh before they can reach the Intercolonial Railway. I expect to press it with all the force I can upon my hon. colleagues that there is an imperative necessity for providing a special train so that passengers can go on until they reach Sackville and the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. POWELL. What amount does the Cape Tormentine line get for the daily mail?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I believe it is $1,600. Speak—
Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

ing under correction, I would say also that they wanted $4,000 for running a special to carry the Island mail to Sackville. I am sorry the Postmaster General was not here to hear the remarks made by my hon. friend, because I am sure that he would be impressed by them. I shall take good care to bring the report of this debate to his notice and to press upon him the great necessity there is for incurring a little more expense than he has yet incurred in order to make this service such a service as will reflect credit upon himself and will give greater comfort for passengers and greater speed in the transportation of mails to and from the Island boat. There is this to be said—and credit should be given where credit is due—that in the service last winter the Postmaster General saved 24 hours every day on the Island mail. That is on the incoming service. My hon. friend from King's (Mr. Macdonald) complains that the outgoing service is not so good. I am not prepared to agree that the service is as bad as he pictures it. The Postmaster General stated in answer to this question last month that only three times during the winter had the service he had prepared, failed to carry the mails from Cape Tormentine to Sackville and those three failures or omissions were caused by the failure of the boats to cross the nine miles between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine on time. I frankly say that I am not satisfied with the service by horse sleigh for these 36 miles. And I am sure that the Postmaster General, whose attention has been largely engaged in other important matters, when he has this question brought more clearly to his notice will do all that can be done to meet the just requirements of the people. When he considers the terrible rigours and hardships suffered by a passenger who has spent eight or ten hours battling with the ice and snow crossing the capes he will see that a man, and particularly ladies—for delicate ladies have to sometimes undertake this journey—should not be compelled to undergo a 36-mile journey in an open sleigh. When he considers this, I think he will be convinced that it is fair and reasonable, even if it does cost a few thousand dollars, that a special train, well warmed, should be run from Tormentine to carry the people forward. I remember that the Premier honoured the island with a visit, I believe in the month of January. I think he was accompanied on this trip across by the Minister of Agriculture. The terrible rigour of the journey almost proved too much for him. It was at the risk of his life that he crossed there.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). He ought to have a soft side for us.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So he has. I can bear testimony to the fact that he has the kindest feelings for the island, from his personal experience, he is prepared to back up our argument to the Postmaster General to induce him to give every possible accommodation, both to mails and passengers, in this difficult journey. Now, one word before I close, with reference to the new boat that we are getting. Some hon. gentlemen are under the impression that this is a very costly service that is being provided for mails and passengers between Pictou and Georgetown. But, as my hon. friend said, this is a growing trade. The passenger and freight receipts aggregated $12,000 this past winter; and if we had had the other boat there which would have been able to remove the freight accumulated at Pictou during a few months of the time, the receipts would have been nearer $20,000. Now, my hon. friend from East Prince (Mr. Bell) naturally contends that one of the two boats should be placed on the route between Summerside and Cape Tormentine. That, of course, will be an experiment. The route between Georgetown and Pictou has long since passed beyond the experimental stage. We know what we can do there. The boats can run there all winter, except for one nip of two or three weeks. With this exception, we can run with great regularity during the whole year. I can tell my hon. friend from East Prince—and I am sure that he will be pleased to hear it—that I applied to the Hydrographer for the Admiralty in Great Britain for an order for Captain Tooker of the Survey to proceed to Summerside and survey the harbour, to ascertain whether there is enough water to place the "Stanley" on this route. The survey is being made, and after the report has been placed in my hands and with the advice I shall receive from the navigators who have been in command of the "Stanley," I shall know whether it is well to try the experiment of putting one of the boats on the route this year.

There is no objection to passing the motion which the hon. gentleman proposes or to bring down the papers he desires.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Just a word in reference to a remark that dropped from the lips of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and that calls for a reply from myself. I may say, as respects the service, that I care not what the Postmaster General says—if he has made such a statement, as that there were only three days on which the mails were behind time when carried by horse and sled, all I can say is that the days of untruthfulness have not yet departed. I care not what the hon. gentleman's information may be. I know of my own knowledge that the mails remained in a barn or under some other roof at the village of Aulac for one or two days, and that on several occasions they failed to connect with the Intercolonial Railway trains.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Incoming or outgoing?

Mr. POWELL. Incoming. And I know further that for one fortnight there was not more than one or two occasions on which these mails connected in time with the Canadian Pacific Railway or with the Montreal express at Sackville station. Now, so far as the handing over of mails to private individuals to carry is concerned, I may say that the change was made on the eve of the local elections in the province of New Brunswick. And, Sir, it was proclaimed, not by the rank and file, but by the leaders of the Liberal party, that that change was a political change. And, Sir, there was announced on that occasion the further change of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has given notice to-night. That is, that this daily mail service will be taken away from the New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island Railway for the simple reason that the constituent members of that corporation were all Liberal-Conservatives. And, Sir, a more disgraceful act never was perpetrated by any Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) heard every member say that our mails were delivered 24 hours quicker.

Mr. POWELL. I will analyse that statement. The city of Charlottetown and points east of Charlottetown received their mails 24 hours sooner; but as the hon. member for Prince has said, points west did not receive their mails one hour earlier than under the previous arrangement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nonsense.

Mr. POWELL. Well, I will leave that matter to be settled by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the hon. gentlemen who sits behind him. My hon. friend is speaking of a matter within his own knowledge, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is drawing upon his imagination for his facts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not at all; I am aware of the fact, for I correspond daily with the island, that the miserable service which that railroad offered brought the mails to the island 24 hours later than they were brought by the horse and sleigh that travels from Sackville to Cape Tormentine, and everybody knows it.

Mr. POWELL. No man has denied that. Under the old management the mails got from the island to this side 24 hours earlier than under the new arrangement. But I was proceeding to point out a disgraceful thing. On the eve of this election, in order to favour a strong supporter of the Liberal Government and a man whose brother-in-law ran in the interest of the Liberal ticket, in the county of Westmoreland, they did what? Instead of having the mails delivered at Aulac station, which was four miles nearer Cape Tormentine and the point of departure at the breakwater there, they let them to a man in Sackville who had to carry them four miles to Aulac Station daily, and bring them four miles back from Aulac Station, before they left or took the train at Sackville. This state of affairs went on for three or four weeks. My hon. friend talks of it as if they met the railway every day. I make bold to assert that during those three or four weeks they did not, on one-third of the occasions, meet that railway to Sackville. Then the enormity of the transaction being disclosed, they had to back up and change the route from Aulac to Cape Tormentine. I may say that this route was the old route. For year after year and decade after decade, the mail service to the island terminated at Aulac. The hon. gentleman knows that, but I charge him that, in order merely to gratify a political friend in the parish of Sackville, he put the public to the inconvenience of missing the mails on 50 per cent of the occasions, the carrier having to carry them four miles extra to Aulac Station and bring them back again, while in his route he passed within 50 yards of Aulac Station. Now, a word in respect to the miserable service. The Cape Tormentine Railway is built to accommodate the local traffic, and to serve the interests of two or three parishes in the county of Westmoreland, as well as indirectly to serve, during the winter, the interests of Prince Edward Island. But owing to the fact that the Intercolonial Railway trains, the evening trains were generally behind time, sometimes from one to four or five hours, it was absolutely impossible to start the train at Sackville on the arrival of those trains. The local express from the city of St. John, and the local express from the city of Halifax, passing through Sackville, are always on time. They started the train then to connect with the express in the day time, ran down to Cape Tormentine and came up in the evening in time to catch the evening train. When the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries says he knows all about it, he knows no more than the man in the moon what he is talking about: He has been in Ottawa all the time. He talks about these delicate women last winter having to go on foot in making this excursion across from the island, and then drive in a sleigh to Sackville.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said if they went by sleigh they would have an arduous journey.

Mr. POWELL. There never has been a lady or a gentleman passenger from Prince Edward Island during the last winter that ever dreamed of coming from Cape Tormentine to Sackville by sleigh. Fortunately, the train was always there in time, and waited for the boats to come over, for the accommodation of passengers. That exactly shows the amount of intimate knowledge the hon. gentleman has of the facts. Now, coming to the last phase of this matter. He insinuates that this railway company, whose solicitor I happen to be, and I know something about it—

Mr. POWELL.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is where the shoe pinches.

Mr. POWELL. That is why I am stating the fact. I make that statement to the House and am giving the members the full knowledge of the relations I hold with that company. I will say this, that so far from that company endeavouring to make profit out of it, I challenge hon. gentlemen to mention a solitary case in the whole Dominion of Canada where a special service is provided for Her Majesty's mails, that the rate is not greatly in excess of the offer that was made by the president of that company. On the other side what is done? The Prince Edward Island Railway runs a special train to Cape Traverse in the interest of the mails, and Mr. Wood, the president of the company, offered, on behalf of the company, to do the service to Cape Tormentine at a less rate than the postal department paid the Government railway on the other side of the Straits. Now, Sir, so far as this company are concerned, they are able to bear the hon. gentleman's displeasure. I have no doubt, if the hon. gentleman has any satisfaction in taking away from them the small pittance of $1,800 that they have for running a daily mail and accommodating 39 miles of country, I am sure that those gentlemen can stand it. The hon. Minister can have whatever satisfaction there is in depriving the company of that subsidy. But there was one part of his speech that did flavour of some degree of liberality and some degree of statesmanship. He said that the Postmaster General could well afford to appropriate a few thousand dollars towards a service that looked to the improvement of the business relations of the people of Prince Edward Island with the mainland. It only requires two or three thousand dollars to run a special train, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that to-morrow, if it is necessary, or any time next winter that it becomes necessary, the directors of that company will give him a special train at a lower rate than any special train is provided in Canada for the accommodation of the mail service. The $1,900 that they get is only about $6 a day for every day in the year, for serving thirty-five miles of territory with a daily mail, including six post offices, and I think that when the bill is footed up and paid by the postal department of this country, you will find that there was not a remarkable degree of economy effected by substituting a carrier service for the special train.

Motion agreed to.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Return showing the actual expenditure on reconstruction of the pier at China Point, in the province of Prince Edward Island, the date of such payments, to whom the payments were made and the amount paid to each person; the amount paid for actual labour performed; the amount paid for material not used, and when; the quantity and kind of material purchased, and the price; the present actual condition of the pier; the progress made towards reconstruction; and all papers, correspondence and documents relating to or giving any information or particulars respecting the matters aforesaid.—(Mr. Martin.)

Copies of all correspondence between the Minister or any officials of the Department of the Interior and Mr A. Soper, of Port Perry, or other persons in reference to the suppression of the sale of liquor to the Scugog Indians.—(Mr. Foster.)

Copy of lease or contract under which the Intercolonial Railway management permitted or authorized the building of a restaurant on the railway right-of-way at Grand Narrows. Also, copies of all correspondence in reference to the granting of the privilege of erecting such building on the railway property, and also in reference to running the same.—(Mr. McDougall.)

Return showing the names of persons to whom payments were made of allowance or drawback on freight charges on the New Brunswick portion of the Intercolonial Railway during the months of January and February, 1899, the amount and date of payment in each case, and the date at which the overcharge was made.—(Mr. Foster.)

Copies of all complaints referred to on page 3 of the Report of the Deputy Minister of the Interior (Annual Report of the Department of the Interior for the year 1897), minutes of Council, commission, instructions, and report of Mr. Archer Martin, the commissioner, respecting the New Westminster Crown timber office.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

Copies of all Orders in Council, ordinances, commissions, appointments, bond certificates and oaths, relating to the appointment of the sheriff for Yukon territory; also, copies of the same papers respecting the appointment of the clerk of the court for the Yukon territory.—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

Copies of all correspondence between Mechanics' Assembly 10,061, Knights of Labour, and the Government or any member thereof.—(Mr. Ingram.)

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 16th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 120) to incorporate the Rutland and Noyan Railway Company.—(Mr. Brodeur.)

Bill (No. 121) respecting the Ontario and Rainy River Railway Company.—(Mr. Dyment.)

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, and while the hon. the Postmaster General is in his seat, I would like to draw his attention to the fact that an Order of the House was passed some days ago calling for a return in regard to the dismissal of Mr. Lake, postmaster at Morton. I require the papers before the hon. Minister's estimates are discussed, and I give him timely notice to have them on the Table.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I will have that matter attended to.

Mr. TAYLOR. It will only take a few minutes to make them out.

THE PUBLIC ACCOUNTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the attention of the House to a matter of considerable importance, at any rate to those who are interested in following the traditions and practices in parliamentary government. I refer to the extraordinary delay in calling together one of the most important, if not the most important, of the committees of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Does the hon. member propose to conclude with a motion?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I propose, Mr. Speaker, to conclude with a motion. This Parliament was called together on the 16th of March. On the 18th of April the Address in answer to the Speech from the Throne was carried. We have now reached the 16th of May, and the Notice paper advises us that on Friday next, being the 19th of May, the first meeting after organization of the Public Accounts Committee will be held. The practice of this House contemplated no such delay. I think I am safe in saying that no such delay ever occurred in the assembling of that committee. It is no good reason to suggest that the debate on the Address occupied a long time. There was no reason or rule of this House to prevent the organization of that committee before that subject had been dealt with or concluded. On the contrary, according to the invariable practice of the House up to this session, the Prime Minister, or some one acting for the Government, on the report of the Speech to this House, usually moved or gave notice that he would move for the striking of that committee. That committee can be, and I submit, according to the practice of Parliament, should be struck at any time after reasonable notice given to the members of this House. I admit that, as a matter of fact in past sessions, no active steps were taken to call the committee together for executive work until the

Address had been discussed, but when that debate was prolonged so many weeks, as it was this session, there was no reason—such as the meetings of other committees or the perplexities in connection with executive government—which could be urged in favour for delay in calling that committee together. If the Government had proper regard for the importance of the subjects that remained uncompleted by that committee last session, if they had examined, as they were bound to do, the reports laid upon the Table of this House, in which, by the evidence taken not only the honour of the Government was concerned, but also the honour of a member of this House directly challenged, this delay would not have occurred. Two investigations by that committee last session were held over, not concluded. The one, affecting the honour of a member of this House, was stopped in the middle, owing to the absence of that hon. gentleman, so as to give him an opportunity on his return to be present before the investigation was concluded, and the other was not concluded on my undertaking to be here at the earliest opportunity this session and ready to continue it to a proper conclusion. Those are unusual facts and incidents, but they are facts and circumstances which should have impelled the Government, without any urging from this side, to afford those parties I have mentioned the earliest opportunity of making good—the one his undertaking to be present this session and push the matter to a conclusion, and the other his character which was involved in the evidence taken. But, strange to say, this session we find no celerity on the part of the occupants of the Treasury benches in promoting the meetings of that committee. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) himself knows that his convenience and his wish is nearly always law to the chairman of the committee. In answering the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) this session, he practically admitted, what every one understands that he has control over the meetings and sittings of that committee; and yet we find the utmost indifference, to say the least, exhibited by that hon. gentleman and his colleagues in connection with the assembling of that committee. We cannot overrate the importance of that committee. In view of the action or want of action of the Government, perhaps it might be necessary for me to argue that question, but I shall content myself with simply referring to a very good exposition of the functions and importance of that committee given us by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in 1891, in which the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson, then leading the Government, cordially agreed, and at the conclusion of which a motion was carried unanimously. Adopting then this language of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I shall be relieved from arguing that the Government is bound to show a great deal more active co-operation in connection with its working than they have exhibited this session. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce on that occasion said, after introductory observations:

I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter of very considerable importance with respect to the safeguards which the practice of this House has provided for the purpose of seeing that the money placed in the hands of the Ministers of the Crown is judiciously and honestly expended. As the House knows, the main precautions which, up to this date and from the period of confederation, or nearly from the period of confederation, have been taken by the House for the purpose to which I have referred, are mainly these two: First of all, we created a special officer, our auditor general, who is placed by Act of Parliament in a position closely analogous to that of the judges of the various courts, to whom we are in the habit of looking for detailed information as to the expenditure of public funds, and also to see that the requisite formalities and vouchers which ought to surround such expenditure have been attended to and complied with.

I call particular attention to the words I have last quoted: "To see that the requisite formalities and vouchers which ought to surround such expenditure have been attended to and complied with."

The other measure of protection which the House has seen fit to take ever since confederation has consisted in this, that we have appointed an important committee of this House, containing at present rather more than one-quarter of all the members having seats in this Chamber, for the purpose of examining the accounts of the past year and such items of other years as the House may see fit to refer to the committee.

Later on in his speech, the hon. gentleman said:

Now, according to my understanding of the case, in the first place the Public Accounts Committee is strictly and in terms a committee of investigation, an inquisitorial committee, if you so choose to call it. This committee is bound, from the nature of the case, to ascertain whether the various sums of public money which this House places at the disposal of the Government of the day are properly and honestly expended.

I think, therefore, if hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House agree now, as they did then, in that exposition of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, they will not think I am putting it too strongly when I say there is not a committee with more important functions, if as important, as the Public Accounts Committee. Of these matters that stood over from last session, I have mentioned two. To show that I am speaking by the book in connection with the inquiry into the expenditure of a very large sum of money on the Manitoba prosecutions, I refer to the report of the committee of last year, which shows that when the evidence taken at that stage was furnished this House, it was reported in such a manner that the inquiry might be continued at the first available opportunity during the next session of Parliament.

And the first available opportunity, under the direction of the occupants of the Treasury benches, in a session of Parliament which began on the 16th of March, is to be the 19th of May. And the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches will not deny that they hope to conclude this session at no distant day from the 19th of May, that they have very little in the way of legislation to propose, and that as soon as they can get one or two measures passed and their supplies voted, we shall be expected to wind up the business of this session. Old parliamentarians, at any rate, will understand that it is absolutely impossible, if ordinary time be afforded to that committee, working from the 19th of May, to conclude even one of these investigations, without any regard to the public accounts of moneys expended during the last fiscal year. So the result of the action of the Government, or their want of action, is to frustrate the work of this committee, a committee that, I venture to say, never in the history of this country could render more valuable service than at the present time, when not only the members of the Opposition, but the whole country are alarmed at the extravagances and the recklessness of the Government in regard to the promises of public expenditure. It is hardly to be wondered at that the country is alarmed, considering the declaration of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) that notwithstanding the extravagance of the last year or two, we are to wait until we see them next year to see still larger expenditures. It is of the utmost importance that before they launch extravagant schemes next year this committee should have an opportunity to understand exactly on what principles the public money has been expended during the past year. And, in connection with this question of the Manitoba prosecutions, not only is there material that ought to be put into the hands of this House in complete form, but there is a chapter in connection with our finances absolutely unparalleled in the history of Canada. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who is peculiarly involved in this matter, cannot point for justification to a single precedent in the history of any Administration since confederation for the extraordinary and illegal course that was pursued in connection with the expenditure of $10,000 of the money of the people of Canada—money expended secretly, and, with two sessions of Parliament passing by, never a word of explanation or suggestion as to there being one dollar of that amount expended or warranted, money expended without the authority of Parliament, money expended in connection with a subject in respect of which Parliament never before expended a dollar. If it were a principle that was worthy of being adopted in this House, it should have been explained. But it is a principle that every member of the Government shrank from expounding before the money was spent and the obligation incurred. If, therefore, there ever was a subject that should be probed to the bottom and all the facts in connection with it gathered at the earliest possible day, it is that subject. And it is in a case like this that we are face to face with the fact that the occupants of the Treasury benches are hampering proper celerity in the work of that very important committee.

Now, before I deal further with the importance of this question, I would call attention to how this side of the House has urged that a meeting of this committee be held. The result we know. Take, for instance, May 5th, when there was nothing in the way to prevent this committee getting to work. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) appealed to the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) to call a meeting of the committee on the following Monday. And the promise of the Finance Minister was, as I shall read—and his position evidently involved an acceptance of the supposition that heretofore obtained, that he had some control and influence in the matter :

I at once placed skilled detectives at work, and range for meeting as soon as possible, but it is a day upon which we rarely call a meeting of the committee.

And again on the 12th of May. And the result is that that committee has not yet held a session except the formal one for organization. I will give you some idea of the importance of calling the committee together by referring to the records of this House. I shall refer particularly to one case, but besides this there are the questions involving in the bulky volume that has come from the hand of the Auditor General, and that cannot, in the ordinary course of things, even if we sit here until August, be properly considered and properly dealt with. In connection with the administration of justice in the province of Manitoba, I say that which no lawyer in this House will contradict, when I say that the Dominion Government has nothing whatever to do with the prosecution of criminals—that devolves entirely and exclusively upon the Attorney General of the province. The Dominion Government may act as a quasi prosecutor, but where the Dominion Government asks to put into force the machinery for the punishment of crime in the province of Manitoba, the responsibility financially as well as in every other way, devolves upon the Attorney General for the province of Manitoba. If authority were necessary for that position, we have it over the hand of the present Minister of Justice. And yet the report to which I have referred shows this House that, at the request of a gentleman who then occupied no position in this House, who was not a member of the Canadian Government, this Government, without any authority from Parliament, statutory or otherwise, without a single sixpence appropriated for the express purpose then or at any other time, even down to this day, by a secret correspondence—a secret and confidential and unofficial correspondence—arranged that the federal exchequer should be responsible, in the first place, for the detection of crime in the province, and, in the second place, for the prosecution of the criminals. The only excuse suggested is the one conjectured by the Minister of the Interior during the examination, that the province of Manitoba was not financially able to suppress crime within its limits; and the one afterwards given—not in the letter to the Prime Minister, if my memory serves me well, but I will read that letter—that the alleged crime was in connection with the holding of a Dominion election. But one of the most extraordinary facts in connection with this matter, showing a disregard from the start of anything like responsibility to Parliament, was independent and outside of that secrecy, that extraordinary secrecy, shame-faced at the very outset, according to these papers, a secrecy born of shame, and the knowledge on the part of those who were concerned in it, that the matter would not obtain the sanction of this Parliament, if the sanction of this Parliament was first asked—is that the present Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), when not connected with this Parliament in any shape or form, undertook to incur a bill which was ultimately saddled upon the federal exchequer, without authority from any one, and while the present leader of the Opposition was the Prime Minister of this country. Almost a month before the present Prime Minister accepted office and assumed responsibility for the Government of this country, his present colleague, his then coadjutor in the province of Manitoba, undertook to incur a huge bill of expense, undertook to employ detectives from the United States, undertook to employ counsel all over the city of Winnipeg, undertook to incur a huge bill that he says over his own signature, the province of Manitoba could not afford to pay; and then, if you please, he did, about the 17th of July, just after the present Prime Minister had settled down to his seat in his office in the Privy Council, conduct a secret, and private, and unofficial correspondence, which ends in a day or two, almost by the next post, if not the next post, in a secret and unofficial undertaking on the part of the Prime Minister of this country, that Canada will foot the bill; passing over all guards and checks of another character which this country has respecting the expenditure of public money, ignoring the Justice Department absolutely, the Prime Minister, or President of the Privy Council, gives his private and secret undertaking to Mr. Clifford Sifton, of the city of Winnipeg, that the funds of the Canadian exchequer will be at his disposal if he can fasten on the Tories in Manitoba

the charge of a conspiracy to defraud the electorate; without any evidence in his hand beyond this secret and private letter written by the Minister of the Interior, vague and indefinite, containing no specific charges, mark you, Mr. Speaker, no names, no dates, no business information, even, but the undertaking of a Mr. Sifton that he would unearth one of the worst conspiracies to defraud the electorate that had ever occurred. Then, with no other material before him, the Prime Minister undertook that which he had no right to undertake, which he knew he had no right to undertake, as events subsequently showed—he undertook to foot the bill, that is to say, that the Canadian taxpayers would foot the bill. There was a session of Parliament in August, the next month, or in September, 1896. Did the Prime Minister tell this House of the undertaking that he had assumed? Did his Finance Minister tell this House of this extraordinary and unparalleled obligation that he had privately and unofficially assumed? Not a word of it. They came down and asked for the ordinary supplies, they asked for the supplies for the Department of Justice, to be expended according to the traditional principal of that department, giving no hint, nor suggestion of this, though at that very time he knew that this agent of his, Mr. Clifford Sifton, in the city of Winnipeg, was scouring the constituencies of Manitoba, by the aid of Pinkerton detectives, to collect, as they did collect, what other people, whether Reformers or Conservatives, had to collect at their own expense, information that would technically unseat their opponents in the courts, and which they used, but which they did not pay for, putting that on the taxpayer. Months rolled by, meetings were held, Mr. Howell, one of the attorneys, comes to the city of Ottawa, and has a secret meeting with the Ministers of the Crown. And more than that, Mr. Speaker, treating the Governor General with extraordinary contempt, these gentlemen of the Privy Council meet together—the Minister of Marine and Fisheries called it a meeting of the sub-committee of the Privy Council of Canada—knowing, however, that their proceedings would not bear the light of day. That meeting did not result in a report to His Excellency, but in instructions to Mr. Howell to go ahead, passing His Excellency by with the most supreme contempt, giving instructions as a sub-committee of the Privy Council behind his back, without any record being made of it. Another session of Parliament is convened, but there is not a word of explanation in the Supply Bill, not a word of explanation is vouchsafed to Parliament, and no man in the country at that time knew that there was on foot this conspiracy, but not the conspiracy that Mr. Clifford Sifton, of Winnipeg, referred to, or the private correspondence referred to, but this conspiracy against the people of Canada. Two sessions of Parliament transpired after this correspondence that I will read, took place, and practically the first that we learn of what has occurred, is in the Auditor General's Report. For how did they manage to pay out money in the meanwhile? They had been passed by the Department of Justice; the matter was conducted, as I say, privately and unofficially, except when it came to pay out the money and officially to relieve private parties and private debts, as the evidence indicates. How was it, Mr. Speaker, that they managed this? Why, Mr. Clifford Sifton, the informant of July, had become the Minister of the Interior, and the Minister of the Interior, taking from the Department of Justice all conduct of this transaction, enters into it and becomes the leader "kiting" the transaction through the banks and drawing on the parties concerned, and he draws on them until this drafting business becomes a little intolerable to the banks, until the banks cannot stand it any longer; and down he comes one day with a report which puts at his disposal a large sum of the money of the people of Canada, to make advances, as the report says, but, as a matter of fact, to provide for the advances that had been made by Mr. Clifford Sifton, and which were charged to his account at a bank in the city of Ottawa. Every step in the transaction is secret, every step in the transaction is irregular, every step in the transaction in regard to the expenditure of that sum of money through these extraordinary channels, is in the wrong department and by the wrong officers. But the most ridiculous conclusion is reached, and the Department of Justice is asked, ultimately, the officials are asked ultimately, to tax, to adjust the accounts that Mr. Sifton paid to these various attorneys in the city of Winnipeg, to settle, as one of them explained, really how much the Minister of the Interior was to be recouped for the amounts that he had paid out for this local expenditure, which are ordinarily taxed and adjusted as accounts of a solicitor or counsel. In this case, as the evidence shows, these subordinates in the Government were called on to tax the accounts for the Minister of the Interior. He had at that time paid out, say, thousands of dollars, and the question was: Was he to be recouped to the extent that he had paid out, or would they, as his officers, or the officers of the Government of which he was so powerful a member as to be distinguished as the Napoleon among them—was he to refund anything to Her Majesty's exchequer? And, therefore, this ridiculous position confronts us, Mr. Speaker, from the sworn evidence that the Justice Department had practically to tax these accounts blindly when the ordinary, when the papers that, in ordinary cases, are under their control, were not forthcoming, when the correspondence had in regard to the transaction was garbled, when the letters relating to it were abstracted or taken from the files, and even the letters that they had received were not procurable by this committee; the letters which should have gone before this committee had disappeared, and, that the Administration were ashamed of the whole thing is the only point in that transaction, from the beginning to the end, that is to their credit. That they were ashamed was apparent by this, that whereas, they asserted that this was a justifiable expenditure, and, whereas Mr. Sifton said that this was a justifiable expenditure, justifiable not on the ground upon which they undertook it, but justifiable in view of the results, and we will see the results, that, whereas they insisted that it was justifiable, even they did not have the courage to take the whole amount that was expended. They scared up $10,000, but they had to pay $19,000 in connection with this transaction. If it had been a transaction that was justifiable in every respect, if it had been an expenditure contemplated by any vote of this House, they would have spent every dollar they could have taken out of the public exchequer. But the mysterious thing is this, that, whereas in February, 1898, in speaking in the Yukon debate, the hon. Minister of the Interior told the House that he had not a dollar, yet, the hon. Minister of the Interior appears in that committee, by the evidence, to have paid the difference between $19,000 and $10,000. It did not come out of his pocket according to his own statement, and the Auditor General says it did not come out of the public exchequer. But in that little transaction there is a flood of light let in upon the whole business. It does not need argument to show that, if that had been an account properly chargeable to Government, they would have paid the whole of it from the public exchequer. The Manitoba Government say that they did not pay the $9,000, but the Government of Manitoba did pay about $100 or so, in connection with some subordinate prosecution. They assumed responsibility for that, and that was all they did in connection with it. I think there might have been a reason that would have made the Government anxious to follow this up and give some explanation, but, mark you, Mr. Speaker, so far as the attempt was made last session, we could only examine the interested parties. We could only examine the lawyer who was employed, first of all, by Mr. Sifton, of Winnipeg, and later on, paid by the Government, though he himself, according to his evidence, thought that he was being paid by Mr. Sifton. Out of the mouth of Mr. Howell and from the papers that were left to us, though some of them have been kept back to this day, these extraordinary facts are apparent, and the answer of the Government is that, whereas we were cognizant or believed that grave frauds had been practiced to prevent a fair expression of public opinion in the general elections on June 25, the Manitoba Government, or a member of that Government, said that they could not afford to prosecute for that crime; we did prosecute and we convicted one man at an expenditure of $19,000. But the man that they convicted went into the witness box and confessed that he had to go with the informer, a drunken, miserable wretch, according to universal testimony, who was the chief source of information that the hon. Minister of the Interior, then Mr. Sifton, had—and that he had conspired with that miserable wretch to rob and cheat the Conservative party and not being able to do that he was able to obtain for a price Mr. Freeborn to act under the influence of the Minister of the Interior. The jury, not regarding the exact terms of the indictment, not unnaturally came to the conclusion that he was guilty of whatever he was charged with, and I am told that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) had such little confidence in the real crime that had been charged that he gave bail to the prisoner during the trial, and that afterwards the Manitoba Government elevated him to the position of one of the magistracy of that province, making him a full-fledged justice of the peace. That was the result of these extraordinary proceedings. I have referred to the manner in which this thing was brought about. The hon. Minister of Justice, the hon. Solicitor General, and the Deputy Minister of Justice could tell us nothing in regard to this matter, that, from first to last, had no connection with the Department of Justice. They had given no instructions; they received no instructions, and towards the end of Mr. Howell's examination, the hon. Minister of the Interior produces a private letter book, and, with the permission of the committee, is allowed to take out of his private letter book a private and confidential letter of his own and to read the reply which was private and confidential, or an extract from a private and confidential letter from the Prime Minister, and so this was the kind of information upon which these proceedings were taken. I call your attention particularly to it, Mr. Speaker, in this connection. We have had the doctrine laid down from the Treasury benches that in all matters in which charges are made in regard to our own officers, for instance, officers of this country, if you believe them to be guilty of wrong-doing, you are to specify your charge, you are to name the man who is willing to take the responsibility for making the charge, and then you are to go out on the streets and housetops and make yourself liable for all kinds of prosecution. Here is the letter of Mr. Sifton, for he was Mr. Sifton then, and I refer to him in that way simply to distinguish him from the hon. Minister of the Interior, as he became later on in the history of this transaction. Here is a confidential letter that he addressed to the right hon. Prime Minister of this country:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

(Confidential.) Winnipeg, July 17, 1896.
Hon. Wilfrid Laurier, Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Mr. Laurier,—The result of the late elections in some of the constituencies of Manitoba—
The result of the elections was they went Tory.

—indicated to me that a fraud of some kind had been perpetrated in the interest of the Government candidates.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. An hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," knowing that the very next thing that Mr. Clifford Sifton would do then would be to insist that before any one moved who had the responsibility of Government he should have laid before him the name of the man who committed the fraud on the public, if he committed it, and with the willingness of the charger to have his name published. But it is that what Mr. Clifford Sifton thought at that time would be the safest thing to do?

I at once placed skilled detectives at work, and have now in my possession conclusive evidence of an organized system of tampering with ballots, which constitutes the most colossal crime against honest electors which I have ever had any knowledge of.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I wrote a letter like that, or if some one more reliable, in the minds of the Treasury benches, in regard to the Brockville election, would they place skilled detectives at work and would they undertake, at the command and for the interest of some gentleman outside of the federal arena and exploit different sections of the Brockville constituency?

Mr. TAYLOR. Or West Huron.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Or West Huron.

I now know that two constituencies were secured by means of these practices. I think it can be proved eventually that others were secured in the same way. I am also in a position to say that there are strong indications that the same practices prevailed in Ontario.

Ontario is a long range from Winnipeg, where Mr. Sifton was writing this letter, and where he was busy during the whole election.

As I have said above, detectives are now at work.

Although he had conclusive evidence, as you will observe, yet he had detectives now at work, and for what purpose, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman.

My purpose is to promptly but secretly push the inquiry and secure evidence upon which to convict the guilty parties.

So far, not a name; so far, not a date; so far, not a direct charge against a single individual; yet on the 17th of July, you will observe, he had employed detectives, he would secretly push the inquiry and secure evidence on which to convict the guilty parties :

It is also important that no means be left untried to unearth these frauds in the province of Ontario.

I hope the Prime Minister will remember that. It is advice given by a Liberal to a Liberal in 1896, and is it to fall on deaf ears, when coming from a Conservative to a Liberal in 1899? If there is a particle of justification for expenditure of this kind, if the right hon. gentleman believes to-day, that he did right in 1896, I hope he will listen to these words :

It is also important that no means be left untried to unearth these frauds in the province of Ontario, and punish every one guilty of complicity. The bearer will explain the matter somewhat in detail. The expense of such an investigation here—

This is the delicate part. Here was a gentleman who, as the accounts show, began this work and employed the detectives before the Conservatives were out of office at Ottawa. He goes on to say, on the 17th of July, just after Sir Wilfrid Laurier had become Prime Minister :

The expense of such an investigation here is altogether beyond the financial competency of my department, although I have assumed the responsibility of inaugurating the work,—

The accounts will show that we paid for them.

—although I have assumed the responsibility of inaugurating and carrying it on so far, from my conviction of its far-reaching importance. I now think, after careful consideration, that it is the plain duty of your Government to furnish the necessary funds for the service, in order to carry on this work here, and to take the matter in hand in Ontario yourselves. I therefore request that the expense of conducting these inquiries and prosecutions should be borne by the Federal Government. The money will be fully accounted for.

I would like the Minister of the Interior to remember this particularly, for this money was all spent and paid out in 1897, when he made this private pledge in regard to public money, and yet in 1899 that pledge has not been redeemed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). That statement is absolutely untrue.

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think this statement is untrue, but I would not like to have said it myself.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I say, the statement which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is now making is absolutely untrue; for the money has been fully accounted for, and the public records so show it.

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I thought the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) was referring to the statement contained in his letter. I will not say, that his statement is untrue, because it would not be parliamentary to say so, but, after I have read for him a little of the evidence reported to this House, I will venture to say, that even he will not repeat the statement he has made. At least, I hope so for the hon. gentleman's own character and reputation; I hope he will refrain from making that statement.

The money will be fully accounted for in detail by me, as the officer having charge of the administration of justice in this province.

There is not, Mr. Speaker, in the whole of the papers brought down by the Auditor General's Department, a line accounting for the $10,000 so paid. There is not a line of an account from Mr. Clifford Sifton, or from Mr. Clifford Sifton's successor as Attorney General of the province of Manitoba. He has yet to put in an account.

I have spent a considerable portion of my time since the elections in connection with this matter, and I cannot conceive of any more urgent public duty resting upon you as Premier of the Dominion than to leave no stone unturned to expose these frauds and punish the perpetrators. You must be aware that representative government and vote by ballot are simply a farce if such practices are permitted.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

SIR CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And so do I say, "Hear, hear." An absolute farce would the ballot be, in view of the practices obtaining in the Ontario constituencies, West Huron and Brockville, where Grit boodle brigades moved in and camped in the constituencies from the start of the election until it was over—and, as I am told, even a Minister were connected with this extraordinary and new practice.

You must be aware that representative government and vote by ballot are simply a farce if such practices are permitted. In view of what I know, I am almost surprised that any Liberal was returned in a close constituency.

And, in view of what the Minister of the Interior knows now, I should think he would be surprised, if any Conservatives were this day returned in a close constituency.

I cannot impress upon you too strongly the necessity of an immediate and favourable reply.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) CLIFFORD SIFTON.

There is a statement, not an official statement, not a report from the Attorney General of Manitoba, but a secret letter from Mr. Sifton, who says the Manitoba Government cannot handle it; in a letter addressed to the Prime Minister of this country. The Department of the Interior had no record on this subject. The Minister of the Interior would not, apparently, trust even Mr.

Smart, and the Department of Justice was just as ignorant with respect to it. The Department of Justice could not assume responsibility for a matter in which they had received no instructions, and all that did happen was, that Sir Oliver Mowat was man enough to put his hand down and prevent exorbitant bills being paid, whether they were incurred under his instructions or not, and Sir Oliver practically cut these bills in two, and stood to his guns and his taxation of them. This was the letter written back to Mr. Sifton by the Prime Minister, also marked "private and confidential": It is dated the 24th July, 1896, and that would be, apparently, a very few days after the receipt of a letter sent on the 17th July from Winnipeg:

Hon. Clifford Sifton, Winnipeg, Man.

I feel confident that you will unearth the most odious conspiracy which has taken place for many long years, and we will most willingly furnish the necessary funds for the service in order to carry on the work in which you are engaged.

Now, if the Prime Minister thought that was a transaction in which the Dominion Government should be engaged, as a Government, and that public funds should be devoted to, why was it not put in the hands of Sir Oliver Mowat at the start? Why was the Department of Justice kept ignorant of that whole affair until there came to be a difficulty in obtaining the money to pay the bills? Why was it that Parliament, which met the very next month after the writing of that letter, was not advised as to the step the Government was taking for the first time in the history of the Federal Government? Why was it that, after all the expense had been incurred, and the money paid out, in the following year, while Parliament was in session, Parliament was not advised? And why was it, Mr. Speaker, that there appears, according to the report of that committee, a misleading and incorrect representation by the Government to His Excellency the Governor General, when they were endeavouring to pay these bills? Why was the misrepresentation made in the month of June, 1897, when the trials were over, when the expenditure was all incurred—an expenditure contemplated and authorized by that letter of 1896, that $4,000 were required to meet unforeseen expenditures? Unforeseen in June, 1897, though the Prime Minister, in June, 1896, with two sessions of Parliament ahead of him, was advising Mr. Sifton to go ahead, and was giving him carte blanche in the whole matter. Now, Sir, in connection with this matter the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) was examined, and he seemed a little surprised, after having stated his impressions, to find that there was no more evidence placed in the hands of the Prime Minister in the month of July, 1897, when that letter was written, than the evidence to which I have referred. He also told us, what I think somewhat surprised parliamentarians knowing anything of constitutional government, that this matter had been considered by a sub-committee, and that a solemn conclusion had been reached, of which the Governor General was never advised, of which no report was made to him, and of which no approval was given by him. In the report to this House we were told by the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies) that these were the facts. He is questioned as follows by the Minister of the Interior:

Q. I just want to ask Sir Louis to state what he knows about the authorization of the payment of the expenses of these prosecutions by the Government?—A. I cannot recall the exact dates, but I remember after the Government was formed, and many months before Mr. Sifton came down as Minister of the Interior, I was asked by the Premier to serve on a sub-committee of Council on this matter of the Manitoba election frauds, as they were termed. I cannot remember all who were present besides the Premier, myself and Sir Oliver Mowat; but I do remember that either one or more members of the Government than these three were present. We three were there at any rate, and the Premier submitted to us certain letters and information he had received in respect to these alleged frauds.

The Minister of Marine said he could not be positive as to dates; but it was obvious that neither he nor Sir Oliver Mowat was present when that letter was received, nor when the answer of the Prime Minister was written. They were away dealing with the Ministerial elections in the month of July, and were pretty well occupied with matters outside of a sub-committee of the Privy Council. But, as a matter of fact, the sub-committee met, and that is all that the Minister of Marine meant to say; and it is a most serious matter, because that sub-committee did not communicate in any way with His Excellency. The date is very important, because at this time nothing was known, if Mr. Howell is a credible witness; for notwithstanding the statement of the Minister of Marine, on July 17th, neither Mr. Sifton nor any one else had in their possession evidence that was worth a snap of the fingers. Mr. Howell testifies that having been called in by Mr. Sifton, he had to go on a fishing expedition—that he had to have not only detectives from the States, but lawyers and others to go about in assumed characters and under assumed names to catch people. In this way he was fishing for evidence for months; and he charged these men, before whom? Before a travelling magistrate, an officer appointed by the Government of Manitoba, who was picked up by Mr. Howell and carried around from place to place as the magistrate before whom parties should be haled when he thought he had fished successfully enough to obtain evidence to place them on trial. To make this sure, I asked Sir Louis Davies:

Q. Was this a sub-committee of the Privy Council?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you feel at liberty to state to this committee what a sub-committee of the Council said?—A. I did not say what it said. I only stated what took place before the committee, and what evidence was given. The result of it was that the Premier was authorized to write a letter to Mr. Sifton.

Again, I call the attention of the Minister of Marine to the evident conclusion in his mind before this letter had been written, that all this had occurred late in the fall, when Mr. Howell submitted to some members of the Government such information as he had fished out, at any rate, to Sir Oliver Mowat, and took his opinion as to whether he had better go on with the twenty or twenty-four cases, or pick out four or five as examples; and, as Mr. Howell says, there was only that one conversation with Sir Oliver Mowat. Mr. Sproule asked Sir Louis Davies:

Q. At what date was the sub-committee formed?—A. I cannot remember the date; it was a long time before Mr. Sifton came down here.

The Minister of the Interior did not come down, I think, until November or December, 1896. I asked Sir Louis:

Q. Just state the result of it.—A. The result of it was that the Premier was authorized to intimate to the Manitoba authorities that the Dominion Government would undertake the responsibility of prosecuting these parties.

Well, of course, the Dominion Government does not prosecute in the province of Manitoba; the Minister of Marine was a little careless there. Again, I asked him:

Q. You speak of this as a sub-committee of the Council. Was it appointed by Order in Council?—A. No.

Q. Did the sub-committee make a report to His Excellency?—A. No.

Q. No Order in Council was passed on the subject?—A. No; we were simply asked by the Premier to meet as a sub-committee of Council, and consider certain information he had received.

There have been Governors General in Canada who would not have passed lightly by that ignoring of him in connection with a matter of this kind, and the Prime Minister himself must be aware of that.

Q. In other words, it was an informal conference of the members of the Government?

That was a fair question, under the circumstances, to put to the Minister of Marine, but he did not wish to be relieved. He simply said:

You may describe it in that way—a meeting of the members of the Government called at the request of the Premier to act as a sub-committee.

Q. But no executive action was taken?—A. No; we simply requested the Premier that he would take the necessary action to carry out our decision.

If an ordinary Governor General had been asked to give his approval to an expenditure of this kind, is it an extravagant proposition to make in this House at this day that the Governor General would have promptly declined? He would have asked for authority. There is no statutory authority. He would have asked for an item in the Supply Bill that would cover this, and there is no item in the Supply Bill. There is no practice to appeal to, and the object is, at any rate, suggested by this evidence for passing over the Governor General until the whole expenditure was incurred. Then, to conclude that part of the history of the transaction, the Minister of Marine says:

No Order in Council was passed until later on, when authority was given to make payments.

Then Mr. Wood asked:

Q. If the meeting was held a long time before Mr. Sifton was sworn in as Minister of the Interior, then I say there were some payments made before that meeting?

The answer then indicated how little the hon. Minister of Marine really knew of the dates:

I know nothing of it. I cannot think it is possible that at that time payments were made by the Dominion Government.

Now, we had some more information from the Minister of Marine. The letter of Sir Oliver Mowat, then Minister of Justice, was read to him, to show that there was not such a lot of information before him, if he meant to say that the meeting took place in July. He was asked: "Do you recognize this?" Then the hon. Minister, admitting that this letter gave no specific information, answered:

That is the substance of the information, but I thought it went more into detail to show the alleged frauds that were perpetrated in Manitoba.

Q. Did you have others than this before you?—A. I do not know if that is the letter.

Q. You cannot say this is the letter?—A. I cannot say positively; I cannot recognize it, except that the letter you read contains information of the same character as the Premier gave us.

Q. Had you affidavits before you at that meeting?—A. Sir Wilfrid Laurier gave me to understand that he had more information than he gave us, that he had letters. I do not know if he had affidavits.

Now, it is clear that if there were other letters, they have not been produced. There is not a line from any one, though all the papers were ordered by this House and the usual attempt to obtain information from Government sources was made by the committee itself. Then the hon. Minister of Marine had this idea about the prosecution:

We were to authorize them to go on with the prosecution, and we were to bear the expense.

Q. There was no question of sharing part of the expense, or anything of that kind?—A. No.

That transaction took place absolutely in the dark, and not in the ordinary formal manner which affords one of the safeguards in connection with the expenditure of public money. There was an appropriation of $7,000 in 1897 in the Supply Bill, not referring to this particularly, but an appropriation a little larger than usual in connection with the expenditure of the Justice Department, and although, as I have said, the expenditure was authorized long before, there was no specific authority for that.

There is an item later on appearing in the vote of $6,964.41, and this is the reference to that item. On the 30th June, 1897, was the first time this matter came before His Excellency, after the whole thing was over, after all the expenditure was incurred and all the bills were paid. Through the Minister of the Interior and his banker, the accounts were all paid on this flying of kites, as the evidence discloses. Then on the 30th July, this is the representation that the Minister of Justice was induced to make to His Excellency by the gentleman who had all to do with the expenditure :

The undersigned have the honour to recommend that in connection with the recent prosecutions for election frauds in Manitoba, an advance of $6,964.41 be made to the hon. Minister of the Interior.

For what purpose was His Excellency told that this money was wanted? To lift the drafts of Mr. Sifton in the bank, to meet the obligations he had assumed and to provide for the advances he had made? Not a word about that, but this is what His Excellency was told :

To enable him to make advances on account to the several agents, pending the taxation of their bills, which amount in the aggregate to a very much larger amount.

But there were no agents of the Department of Justice—the evidence is distinct and clear on that point. There were no agents of the Department of Justice in the ordinary sense of the word. There were no officers in connection with the Department of Justice. The officers of the Department of Justice are Mr. Newcombe and Mr. Hodgins of that department, who have to do with the taxation of the bills. That was done in December, 1897. There was the ordinary mechanical drawing up of this order and its submission to Sir Oliver Mowat, but no officer under him had anything to do, according to the evidence, with this matter. These agents were officers of Mr. Sifton and were not even instructed by Sir Oliver Mowat, and the correspondence is not by any means complete. If this House is to sanction, if the country is to tolerate public business being entered up in private letter books and public money being spent under the management of gentlemen who write private letters, then every reason can be urged why those letters should be made public and sent down with the papers asked for in connection with the expenditure of public money. They are withheld. The remonstrances of Sir Oliver Mowat against the amount of these bills is withheld, though it once happened to come before the eyes of the taxing officer. But this great committee, of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce seems to think so much, is not, forsooth, to have before it that which a subordinate of the Department of Justice had before him when considering whether this expenditure was authorized or not. And this report goes on :

Make advances on account to the several agents, pending the taxation of their bills, which amount in the aggregate to a very much larger amount, such advances to be charged to the vote for miscellaneous justice and to be accounted for.

Now, as a matter of fact, I have shown that to make up the $6,964.61 there were bills of the agents of the Minister of the Interior, attorneys in Winnipeg, who had been paid at that time, mark you, their accounts in full. There was no advance, as stated here, to be made to any one on account of these bills which were larger in the aggregate. It was to pay the indebtedness which the Minister of the Interior had privately assumed and privately discharged, and the money was to go to the relief of the Minister of the Interior, and the actual accounts which he had paid were, six or seven months later on, disallowed to a large extent. The costs of Mr. Perdue were cut down nearly 50 per cent, yet the bill was paid by the Minister of the Interior at that time and the Minister of the Interior was repaid the whole of it. And this committee stands in this position, that from the start to the finish there is not a syllable to suggest that he ever recouped to the treasury one dollar of those overpayments and overcharges, which went, through him, from the public chest to those private parties, and a large amount of which the Minister of Justice said months later should never have been paid, and he went according to the law. The balance of the money, some $4,000, was at another date taken from unforeseen expenditure.

Now, I want to dwell particularly and at considerable length—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, at considerable length on the evidence that is before this House now, extracted from men who were certainly not favourable to anything that would look like condemnation of the Government, from men who were peculiarly interested, notably from the chief counsel employed, Mr. Howell, examined in the most extraordinary manner, as he was, by the Minister of the Interior, who violated every rule of evidence known to the courts, who led this witness time and time again to give answers, whether they related to written documents or whether his questions were leading or in the nature of cross-examination or not, that would put this transaction in as favourable a light as he could. And yet these facts must be regarded as important by any man who cares a brass farthing for the manner in which this country is governed by Parliament, and who thinks it should not be governed by Star Chamber, in regard to detail, and believes that details should be carried out by deputy heads, instead of by Ministers with private correspondence and letters they dare not put before Parliament and the committees of Parliament. The evidence there is sufficient to make one regard it as extraordinary that the Government should place any difficulty in the way of concluding that inquiry. And the fact, that the committee is put off, makes it necessary for me to take this opportunity to show the Government that it is necessary to expedite the meetings of these committees. They must call the meetings time and again, not once a week, or twice or three times a week merely, but they must, in every possible way, assist gentlemen who, like myself, have taken the responsibility first of pressing an inquiry. I was compelled, notably by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis H. Davies) and the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding) to give an undertaking, a personal undertaking, which they will remember, that I would press that inquiry at the first available opportunity this session, if they would abstain from doing what they purposed doing, and that was, reporting the conclusion of the investigation after I had examined their own counsel, and before I had time to test the statements made by their counsel, or other statements made before the committee. Well, referring to the facts that come even from these sources—and when I say, “even from these sources,” I refer particularly to Mr. Howell; and I am sorry I shall, whether in this speech or at a later date, after the conclusion of the whole investigation, have to criticise Mr. Howell as to the candour he exhibited in this matter. That is an unfortunate duty; but, of course, I will not shrink from it, and I shall make no statement in regard to Mr. Howell without giving to the House his own evidence, upon which my criticism is based. But there were other witnesses. I shall refer first—so as to have it in some order—to the evidence of the Deputy Minister of Justice, who was called in regard to this expenditure, which had to do with legal expenses:

Q. You are the Deputy Minister of Justice?—
A. I am.

Q. What is the practice in connection with that item in the Supply Bill of “Miscellaneous Justice,” as regards expenditure? Which department supervises and is responsible for the expenditure of the item as a rule?—A. You mean the ordinary item?

Q. Yes.—A. That is expended by the Justice Department.

This is the ordinary rule. Speaking of items making up this amount to which I have referred:

Q. You know that they were paid out of the Miscellaneous vote?—A. I believe they were partly paid out of that vote. There was a special vote taken in the supplementary Estimates of $7,000, which I understand was applied to that purpose.

But that, as an inspection of the Estimates will show, was the ordinary “Miscellaneous Justice” vote.

Q. So it was put under the original and supplementary miscellaneous justice item?—A. I suppose so, but that item of $7,000 was regarded as a special item, and it was not disbursed in the ordinary way, through the accountant of our department.

Q. Well, when do you recollect anything about this first coming up in the Department of Justice?—A. When the accounts were handed to me.

Q. You have no recollection of instructions preceding that?—A. No.

Q. Did you personally deal with the subject as Deputy Minister of Justice before the accounts were handed in?—A. No, sir, not at all.

And the accounts were handed in long after the payment of the order I have referred to, of December, 1897. I have already mentioned what Mr. Newcombe said, and I have already shown the same statement on the part of Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior, that he had nothing to do with the management or consideration of that subject. These are the two deputy heads of the two departments ordinarily concerned in all matters of this kind. Then, the Auditor General gives us some perhaps exact information, so far as the financial aspect of the case is concerned. I do not wish to go out of my way to criticise people, but, while on my feet and adverting to these matters, I may say, I cannot understand how the Auditor General gave such little attention and consideration to the question and the expenditure of this money, under the circumstances, as he did in that report. It may be, that, to some extent, it was a technical question, and he was not aware of the great importance of items connected with the subject of justice, or the administration of the laws of that time being managed by the departmental officers, or the expenditure being controlled by them and subject to their supervision. But he intervenes here, and says:

I may point out to the committee the statement at I-7 of the Public Accounts—Archibald & Howell, J. D. Cameron and W. E. Perdue, legal services and expenses in connection with the prosecutions for election frauds in Manitoba (including $4,000 transferred from unforeseen expenses), $10,964.41.—

That is the item in his report.

—This $4,000 was made up of the $1,000 which he handed to Mr. Cameron and the $3,000 which was afterwards given to Mr. Howell and which was acknowledged by him in a telegram from him to me. The $4,000 was paid at one time under an Order in Council from unforeseen expenses.—

That order has not been brought down to the committee even yet.

—but it formed part of this $10,964 ; the whole of the Government money that was paid was $10,964. If there was any other money it was not Government money, because that represents every cent paid by the Government.

And Mr. Howell says, there was more than $19,000 paid, and he got the money from Mr. Sifton, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) told us in the House, that even then, in February, 1898, he had not any money. I suppose it was after paying out the $9,000 that he got into that financial condition. Now, let me show how the promises of Mr. Clifford Sifton, as he was at that time, have been implemented. I am glad he has so pointedly called attention to the subject, and I will, in order that there may be no misunderstanding between us, again read the promise which, when I referred to it and suggested that it had not been kept, seemed to annoy him so much :

The money will be accounted for in detail by me as the officer having charge of the administration of justice in this province.

I think the examination of some of the statements in these accounts, the absence of vouchers, the absence of ordinary affidavits for witnesses' fees, the absence of books, the absence of statements, not to mention many other matters in regard to which I will give the exact evidence before the committee, will make even the Minister of the Interior sorry that he was so positive and exact in the statement to which I have referred.

Now, let us look at the account, the account that, in his lordly way, Mr. Howell told us was largely the result of the ingenuity of his clerk, a Mr. Shanks, and I am waiting to see Mr. Shanks before the committee, and to understand his ingenuity. But this is the manner in which this has been accounted for in detail : We have an account from Mr. Howell the responsibility for which Mr. Howell evades by saying it represents the ingenuity of his clerk. Let us see his own statement about the account, which is not in his ledger, the account produced before the committee. This witness was summoned in the usual way to bring his books, papers, correspondence, and all memoranda connected with this matter ; we did not wish to have merely his recollection in regard to a matter that had become so important, we did not wish to be dependent upon a gentleman who depended upon Mr. Shanks, we wished to know the very material he had in his possession, and to have it before us. But he came without his books, and without his Shanks ; he came before the committee in a happy-go-lucky fashion, and was examined with great license by the Minister of the Interior. None of those papers were produced, but he had a little bundle which was information that he had fished for for months while he was feed by this Government, while he was an official, practically, under the circumstances I have mentioned, of this Parliament. He had collected a lot of material, and when we wished to ascertain an important fact, that is, what did Mr. Clifford Sifton know about this matter when he wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada on July 17th, he was immediately surrounded by the majority of the committee, who thought that it would be a painful thing to force this gentleman to disclose the names, mark you, of the people who had made charges of offences against the criminal law of Canada. That was not the tune we heard sung from the Treasury benches this session, but it was the opinion of the Minister of the Interior and his friends, the majority of the Public Accounts Committee, that to compel Mr. Howell to give the names of the parties who had made the charges against Government officials in Manitoba, was to go against all precedents, and was really to obstruct the Department of Justice in ferreting out the crime. There was no demand for names, specific charges, and so on ; and so, the documentary information that Mr. Howell brought with him on that occasion, he was not permitted to give to a committee of this Parliament on the excuse that I have mentioned ; and so important a question was it, that a vote was taken, and the witness was protected by the majority from giving us that information. He was asked :

Q. Have you brought your books and papers with you relating to these accounts ?—A. Well, they are not mine any longer ; and I have not brought them because my firm is dissolved, and by the terms of our dissolution the books remain with my partner ; but the only entries I made in reference to this matter were in what I call just a little scrap-book, which I kept for that purpose alone—just the blotter.

Q. Then the other books you refer to would not relate to these accounts ?—A. Nothing except the ledger of the firm.

Q. And the ledger is where ?—A. It is in Winnipeg.

Q. In whose possession ?—A. In the possession of Archibald & Howell, in liquidation ; Mr. Archibald primarily has it ; I think I have copies of it.

Q. You have made copies of the ledger ?—A. I believe so ; I asked the book-keeper to do so, that I might bring them here.

Then, later on, I put the question :

Q. There never was a formal account made up ?—A. It was a formal memorandum of what I did, but it would not be in that language.

Q. Have you a copy of that memorandum ?—A. No, I have not.

Q. And this book, you say, is in Winnipeg ?—A. Oh, I do not suppose it would exist, because I would hand them over every month or two months. I had different blotters which I kept in my drawer, and they were handed over to the book-keeper.

Q. And the entries were made by him in the ledger ?—A. No, the accounts would be copied into what we call a statement-book.

Q. Where is that ?—A. It is in Winnipeg. The statement-book is an exact copy of what you have.

Further on, in regard to the accounts, after explaining that there was no memorandum kept of his work, he says :

Q. I put it the other way: Can you say that the whole of it was not made up after?

That is, the whole transaction covering the six months.

A. I cannot say that.

Q. So that it is possible the original statement in the statement-book was made after the whole of the work was done?—A. It is possible; the book-keeper would do whatever was done.

Now, as to the clerk, Mr. Shanks, Mr. Howell was asked:

Q. I understand, though, that these entries are taken from a blotter or memo. of your own?—A. But my own words would be something like: "Sifton, 2 hours re ballot boxes."

Well, I had some pity for Mr. Howell, and so I gave him an opportunity to explain what was meant by the words "re ballot boxes."

Q. So this represents the ingenuity of your clerk?—A. To a certain extent.

Q. What is the name of your clerk?—A. Mr. Shanks.

I need not argue, I hope, that so far there is not much evidence that there was an account in the language of the letter of Clifford Sifton of July 17th, of an account in detail, the large account that was before us was the account of Mr. Howell, which represented the ingenuity of his clerk. Now, then, the account sent to the Justice Department only shows $1,000 of public money paid up to the 7th of December, 1897; while the actual facts were, as shown in the committee, that $4,000 had been paid at that time. Whether it was Mr. Sifton or the Minister of the Interior who paid them, whether at the time he was acting personally or as the Minister of the Interior in this matter, is in itself a nice question. But even he did not take the trouble to keep the Department of Justice properly advised at the time of the taxing of the accounts, that is, when the accounts were in the Justice Department; and there had not been even a statement of these large figures accurately put before them. The counsel engaged, I have said, were not in any sense the counsel of the Department of Justice, the officer of that department repudiates them in the evidence:

Now, these—

Referring to the various accounts of Mr. Howell, and all those names, some of which are obtaining a celebrity in other respects.

—these were not agents of the Minister of Justice in the ordinary sense, Mr. Newcombe?—A. No.

Then, as to how Mr. Howell dealt with these departments, or whether he dealt with either of them, there is no evidence. Mr. Smart tells us:

Q. Mr. Smart, you are the Deputy Minister of the Interior?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you say whether this subject was dealt with by the department, the subject referred to in that file, namely, the Manitoba ballot-box prosecutions—was it dealt with by the department or by the Minister personally?—A. Altogether by the Minister.

I have referred already to the disappearance of private correspondence, and of letters, not, perhaps, called private correspondence, simply because they were following the lines of the Prime Minister and of Mr. Sifton at the start. As to all this kiting on the part of Ministers of the Crown and those gentlemen who are connected with the expenditure of public money, there is evidence of this kind:

(Exhibit O.)

Ottawa, June 18, 1897.

Two months after date, pay to the order of the Bank of British North America the sum of two thousand and ninety-three 75-100 dollars and exchange, value received, and charge to account of CLIFFORD SIFTON.

That is addressed to H. M. Howell, Esquire, Winnipeg, Manitoba. Did you ever hear of such an expedient as that of a Minister of the Crown? No, of course not, the officers of the department had never heard of such a thing. There is evidence on file, there is a memorandum in this report, that there was the greatest haste in getting out the order for paying this money to relieve Mr. Sifton from his financial troubles which were upon him in the shape of these drafts given in Winnipeg in June.

Winnipeg, June 19, 1897.

Two months after date, pay to the order of the Imperial Bank of Canada at Winnipeg, one thousand and twenty-seven dollars ($1,027), value received, and charge to the account of

J. D. CAMERON.

To Hon. Clifford Sifton, Ottawa, Ont.

That is the draft of Mr. Cameron on Mr. Sifton:

Q. Do you remember allowing him anything in this connection?—A. No, sir, I never heard of him.

(Exhibit Q.)

A telegram to the Auditor General of Canada on the 16th of December, 1897, as follows:—

"The firm of Archibald & Howell received from the Hon. Clifford Sifton the sum of $3,000 on account of ballot-box prosecutions last autumn.

"H. M. HOWELL."

Then some more acceptances are referred to, and there are some drafts, though not all of them, to Mr. Howell, which appear in the appendix of this report, and some further testimony on the next page. But before I leave that, Mr. Howell, I think, is asked something on that subject:

Q. You rendered your bills to Mr. Sifton, do you remember?—A. Yes.

Q. Not to the Attorney General of Manitoba, Mr. Cameron?—A. No.

Q. Will you look at your books and see if you rendered accounts to the Manitoba Government also?—A. I have also a memo., I believe, but I sent a copy of the disbursements to Mr. Cameron. When the prosecutions were going on it necessitated the expenditure of a great deal of money, and my firm's bank account is not unlimited, and when it became a question of $7,000 or $8,000 I got the treasurer to assist me, and we put in a joint note in the bank and discounted it, and took the money to Portage la Prairie, and I think I sent to him a statement of how we spent that money.

We have evidence that the Manitoba Government never paid a dollar, except some ninety odd dollars in connection with one small phase of this question. It was known that this would involve the country in a very large expenditure, and it appears in the evidence, where a reference to Sir Oliver Mowat is made, and this is the evidence that Mr. Howell gives on that point. He discussed the case with Sir Oliver Mowat in February, 1897, some six or seven months after the communication under the authority of the right hon. Prime Minister, in which he was given carte blanche to build up a case of the character that was described. In February he seems to have come in contact with Sir Oliver Mowat, and when the case is under discussion with him, he mentions to Sir Oliver Mowat the enormous expenditure that would be involved in going on :

Q. About what date—about what month, say ?
—A. I would say in February, 1897.

Then he goes on to explain :

I saw Sir Oliver Mowat, Mr. Sifton and several Ministers here, and pointed out to them the large expenditure already incurred, and the question as to whether we had better drop it—

The question, I think, would have been very carefully considered had it been submitted in the ordinary way to Sir Oliver Mowat or to the Justice Department in July instead of being kept in the private books of the right hon. Prime Minister and of Mr. Sifton in Winnipeg. Then Mr. Howell says he got $3,000 from Mr. Sifton in October, 1897. There was no record of that, so that the hon. Minister of the Interior had to wire, and this is the telegram that was then sent by Mr. Howell :

Rat Portage, Ont.

The firm of Archibald & Howell received from the Hon. Clifford Sifton the sum of three thousand dollars on account of ballot-box prosecutions last August.

H. M. HOWELL.

That was the way in which the accounts of public money were kept in connection with the matter, which began irregularly and was continued irregularly all through. Then we have the statement made by Mr. Howell that the first rendering from Archibald & Howell was for $15,428.08.

Q. That was disbursements and counsel fees ?—
A. Yes.

Q. $5,000 for counsel fees ?—A. Yes.

Q. And the balance disbursements ?—A. Yes.

Q. How much of that was paid ?—A. The whole of it.

Q. And when was the last of it paid ; by what time was it all paid ?—A. The 27th March, 1897.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.

We have an Order in Council asking for advances to the amount of $6,941.41 in June.

Q. And the accounts, it appears, were taxed on the 27th of December, 1897, and you were paid your full account in March of that year ?—A. Yes.

Q. So all this deduction did not affect you ?—
A. I did not know of it until a few days ago.

Then, again :

Q. Now, how much did you pay Freeborn out of all this money ?—A. That was entered into a general account among witnesses' fees.

Q. A "liberal allowance," you call it here ?—
Well, we had to give him a pretty liberal allowance.

Q. Why had you to give him a pretty liberal allowance ?—A. Well, he was doing nothing, and he had to live, and it was an everlasting fight between Freeborn and I as to how much he could get from me and how little I could get him to take. He would go away, and run up bills, and then draw on me, and I had to meet his drafts.

An hon. MEMBER. He had to pay.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, the people of Canada had to pay. Then, coming back to this :

Q. How much did he get out of you ?—

Mr. Howell says that he was paid $804.35, as he explains it on another page of the evidence.

Q. Was he drinking ?—A. Yes, I had to be careful of him.

There was Sir Oliver Mowat's opinion of this account after it had been paid. They went through the good old fashion of taxing the accounts half a year after they had been paid. Then he came before Sir Oliver Mowat and this is the letter that was on file. There was a letter on file before the taxing officer which will not be produced, and this is the reference to it. He had objected to it. It is included in the evidence before the House that Mr. Howell writes to Mr. Sifton on the 18th of May. The year is blank, but it is clearly May, 1897, or 1898. At any rate, after the taxing which was in December, 1897 :

My dear Mr. Sifton,—I was surprised to get your letter of the 12th, inclosing a letter from Sir Oliver Mowat, complaining of Richard and Bradshaw's bill, and also of ours.

There was a letter that would have been most important in connection with this examination into the justification for this expenditure. The evidence will show, that the other letter got to the Department of Justice, but, although the officers were asked to look for that letter and produce it, Mr. Hodgins' evidence will show, that he was unable to find that letter. Now then, we were to have, in connection with this grant to the Minister of the Interior, a statement in detail by him, as the officer in charge ; but we cannot even get the vouchers in connection with the moneys paid. Howell himself tells, in his evidence, that he could not give the vouchers. He is examined, as follows :—

Q. In your letter of the 27th March, 1897, you say "the witness fees I cannot give vouchers for" ?—A. These were paid at Portage la Prairie by men, and a lot of other witness fees. The only man I took receipts from was Freeborn, because I did not want to have any trouble with him, and I said there were no other vouchers with reference to others.

Q. Yes ; but your books will show the amounts paid to Freeborn and others ?—A. Yes.

Then, there was a large amount for railway tickets, and so on, and some way or another, in his evidence Mr. Howell said, that he could give the usual affidavits as to witness fees. We did not have even that, the taxing officer did not have that before him. But how Mr. Howell could have given that, in view of his own evidence, that he was not the officer who disbursed some $7,000 of witness fees, is more than I can very well make out. Again :

Q. Did you keep account of these bills as they came in ?—A. I rendered them to my book-keeper.

Q. Details ?—A. Only the gross sum. I checked all McDonald's figures each day.

Q. So that all the books show will be the bulk sum entered by the clerk ?—A. There is no memoranda made up ; the amount was $3,533.20.

Now, when the Minister of the Interior told us there was to be an account in detail, it is quite clear, if Mr. Howell is a credible witness, that this account in detail could not be given, because there was no such account kept, and yet, Sir, as the evidence shows, this account had to pass the officers in that condition. The accounts were sent along without any information, and, as one of the officers says, he knew the Minister of the Interior had paid them. That was a nice opportunity for the proper officer to audit them, when he knew that every dollar he took off, he took off the account of the Minister of the Interior, practically. Do I exaggerate, when I say, that the taxing officer was embarrassed by that fact, and that he had it before his mind, that these accounts were practically those of the Minister ? The taxing officer was reading all these accounts—J. D. Cameron, first draft, $1,000 ; draft of Mr. Cameron and myself, $6,428 ; Mr. Wade, $1,270.60 ; Mr. Perdue, $541.15 ; Mr. Metcalfe, $823 ; Mr. Clarke, $1,660.85 ; our own, $5,000 ; and the question was put to Mr. Hodgins, the taxing officer :

Q. So, when this bill was really taxed by you, you were really taxing what the Minister had allowed others to draw upon him to meet. The point is, if this statement is correct, that in March Mr. Sifton permitted drafts to the amount of $16,000, possibly $19,000, if the pencilling is correct, to be made on him, and the money had gone to these counsel who drew. When you taxed these accounts, were you aware of the fact that the Minister himself would have an interest in that if he paid out this money ?—A. Well, it occurs to me he would.

Q. That was present to your mind ?—A. Certainly.

Q. That he had paid out a large amount of money, and the question was, how much he should be reimbursed by the Government for his expenditure ? That is the way it stood in December, apparently ?—A. Yes.

And, notwithstanding that the amounts were of such a character, that the officer admits he did cut them down, if my memory serves me right, something like 50 per cent, and that brought about the correspondence, part of which only we have been permitted to see, but the part that would have been the most assistance to the committee was the letter of Sir Oliver Mowat, the Minister of Justice. You have heard, Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's statement as to how these payments were made, and Mr. Howell was examined, and there is considerable confusion in regard to his statement on this subject. He says, when examined about the $1,000 for which there are no vouchers—he was examined by Mr. Sifton :

Q. Mr. Newcombe must have taken that from the entry in Mr. Howell's accounts, because he says there has been $1,000 paid ?—A. We never got a $1,000 ; all we got was $3,000, on the 23rd of October, 1896.

Q. That is the $3,000 that I handed to you ?—A. Yes. Then, when I was away at court somewhere, there was pressing need of $1,000, and Mr. Cameron handed into my office a thousand in my absence, but I did not know that that was got from the Dominion Government.

Q. That was paid to you ?—A. Yes ; but I credited that in my account, of course.

Q. That probably is this $1,000 ?—A. Yes, here it is.

After having stated, that he had never got a thousand dollars separate, which appeared, according to the accounts of the Deputy Minister, certified for, Mr. Sifton asked :

Q. What I wanted to get at was that $1,000. You did not get the payment of the $1,000 referred to in Mr. Newcombe's certificate ?—A. No.

There can be no reflection on the officers of the Justice Department here, because the whole thing was in a higglety-pigglety state, when it reached them. The accounts were never properly made out, because it is a mystery where the balance of the $19,000 odd dollars came. Directly the balance came from the Minister of the Interior, and $10,000 came from the public chest. But the accounts in regard to the whole $19,000 made no distinction as regards the first or the second payment. So far from there being any account in detail, it is the most involved and mixed up, and confusing statement that was ever before the Public Accounts Committee since I have had anything to do with it. Again, Mr. Howell said there were no accounts kept :

Q. Did you render a statement of these disbursements ?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you got it there ?—A. The first rendering was $3,000, you know.

Q. But I understand that was in a separate account?—A. Yes.

Q. That explains it.—(No answer.)

We have seen, that the $10,964 did come from the public funds, and the statement of Mr. Howell that this gentleman referred to, is as to the transaction between Mr. Sifton and himself that ran up the account to over $19,000. To show how reckless these expenditures were, I will take a sample one. Mr. F. C. Wade was one of the many lawyers employed; Mr. Howell was, apparently, given a discretion to employ a very large number of Winnipeg lawyers. One account was said to be for $1,270, but, together with disbursements, it makes $1,560.60 that was paid to Mr. Wade. What did Mr. Wade do? It will shorten a good deal of my statement to read an analysis that has been made of that public account that has been submitted. This money was paid out, every dollar, in full to Mr. Wade, and I think I will be able to show, from the evidence, that the Department of Justice put this account down some 50 per cent. This account, which was sent in at $1,270, was cut down, with Sir Oliver Mowat's sanction, to $690.60. Mr. Wade was paid $1,500, or, with his disbursements included, $1,560.60. It mattered not to him how much the Department of Justice allowed him in December, 1897, when he had three times the amount in his pocket in the spring of that year. The items are in the report, but the explanation is of this character—I read a criticism of his account in the press:

Mr. Wade charges the country $40 per day for a total of thirty-two days, amounting in all to $1,280; two of these he makes up for work done in Winnipeg, the balance for his time in country points in the province. On December 23rd he charges $40 for the day, and on referring to the particulars of his disbursements it will be seen that he charges on that day for a return ticket to Glenboro'; I have no doubt he went to Glenboro' on that date, but the people of Canada pay Mr. Wade $40 for December 23rd, not as counsel in a court of law, but for riding from Winnipeg to Glenboro' in a railway train. Arriving at Glenboro' about 4 in the afternoon, he leaves home about 9.30 the next morning and returns home, for which we pay him another $40, and $5 for expenses, also $5.20 for a railway ticket, or a total of $90.20 for this little jaunt from Winnipeg to Glenboro' on one train and back by the next. This trip seemed to suit Mr. Wade from a monetary point of view, for on the 30th of the same month he repeats the dose, and another $5.20 for a railway ticket to Glenboro' and return, rides to Glenboro' in a railway train, for which we pay him $40. Arrives there at 4 p.m., stays in Glenboro' over night, for which we allow him $2.50 expenses, which, no doubt, included drinks and cigars, as his ordinary legitimate expenses would be only 75 cents; he drives from Glenboro' to Treherne on the 31st, for which we pay him another $40; stops over night in Treherne and leaves for Winnipeg on January 1st, and again we pay him $40 for this trip to Winnipeg on New Year's Day, and $5 for one night's expenses in Treherne, and in a temperance town; making a total expense for spending one evening in Glenboro' and the next evening in Treherne of

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

$132.70, and one of these days was a statutory holiday. Mr. Wade seemed to enjoy his trips to Glenboro', as we see by his account that he goes up there again on January 6th, 1897, pays $4 railway fare, stays there the 7th and 8th, and returns on the 9th of January, for which he charges $120 for his time, $8 for railway fare, and $7.50 hotel expenses, or a total of $135 for this trip. He takes another run up to Glenboro' on the 13th, and spends the night there, and comes back by the first train on the 14th, and we pay him $80 for his time, $8 for his railway fare and $5 for expenses, or a total of $93. On January 20th he makes another trip to Glenboro', leaves there by train the next morning, puts in two hotel bills for this trip, one for $5 and the other "Paid Nevin's hotel expenses, $6.80"; but the train is late in reaching Winnipeg, and according to Mr. Wade did not reach the city until 5 a. m. on the morning of the 22nd, but his rest had been disturbed, he could not sleep well on the train, so he puts in an extra $40 for this trip, calling it three days, making it $120 for loss of time, $8 for railway fares, and $11.80 for the two hotel bills, or a total of $139.80 for this little jaunt to Glenboro'.

On January 27th he goes to Treherne and returns by first train on next day, and the country pays him $80 for loss of time, $6.20 railway fares, and $5 hotel expenses for two days, in a temperance town, where the rates are $1 per day, making a total of $91.20 for the Treherne trip. On February 3rd he takes a run up to Holland, gets there in the afternoon, and returns home the next morning, for which trip he has been paid $80 for loss of time, $6.90 railway fare, and $5 hotel expenses in a $1 per day town. On February 8th he takes another trip to Holland, and returns next morning, and charges $80 for loss of time and $10.25 hotel expenses, &c., for the two days; but, strange to say, he does not charge his railway fare on this trip—no doubt this was due to an oversight rather than any question of conscience—making a total of $90.25 for this two days' trip. On the 15th of February there is another trip to Treherne and back the next day, and, of course, a charge of $80 for loss of time, $6.20 railway fare and $5 expenses in a temperance town, or a total of $91.20 for this trip. He also charges for two days, February 24 and 25, at Treherne—$80 and $5 expenses at hotel where no whisky is sold, and where the rates are $1 per day. He, however, does not charge for railway fare either way; is it not strange that he should have overlooked such an important item as the railway ticket, or did he travel on a pass? Mr. Wade charges in all for twenty-four days at $40 per day in connection with the cases at Holland, Glenboro' and Treherne, making a total of $960 for loss of time alone at these points, and yet his own account shows one of these days was occupied in travelling from Glenboro' to Treherne; twenty out of the twenty-three remaining days were spent in travelling to and from Winnipeg upon a railway train; and, as a matter of fact, only three days were wholly spent in conducting these cases, according to Mr. Wade's own statement; yet he received for this the modest little sum of $960, besides his railway fares and excessive allowances for hotel expenses. Then he goes to the assizes at Portage la Prairie, and is engaged there four days, yet he charges for six days at $40 per day, because you know he had to spend a couple or three hours travelling to and from Portage on the day preceding and the day following the days that were occupied in the court there, making a total for his four days in the court at Portage amount to $240, besides his travelling expenses and $10 for hotel bill.

What was accomplished by Mr. Wade in all these flying trips between Winnipeg, Treherne, Holland and Glenboro? The answer is a very simple one: Nothing—absolutely nothing. His bill was, however, paid in full to the odd cents, but six months afterwards his bill is taxed at $690.60, and the Government then discovers that they have paid him $870, or over 125 per cent more than he was entitled to, even had he spent his time conducting cases in a court of law instead of spending twenty out of the twenty-three days in the smoking-cars of a railway train, playing "pedro" for the cigars as a pleasant pastime, at the rate of $40 per day and expenses, including the cigars when the fortunes of play were against him.

This is a criticism by no means unfair, and it supports Sir Oliver Mowat's opinion. While Sir Oliver Mowat cut that bill down, it left room for this criticism even in regard to the amount that was paid. But what did Sir Oliver Mowat's opinion amount to in 1897, or the criticism which I have read, when Mr. Wade had $1,500 in his pocket in the spring of that year?

Mr. FOSTER. It is a model Government.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Now, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Howell tells us another extraordinary thing—that he never got a dollar from the Dominion Government.

Notwithstanding all this taxing and all this talking in the Justice Department about what the Government should pay him, here is a leading acute counsel, one of the foremost in Winnipeg, saying that from the first to last he never got a dollar from the Dominion Government. That is one of the mysteries we have to consider—the item which the Auditor General says represents the money paid. Mr. Howell did not recognize the Dominion Government as his client, but the present Minister of the Interior, then plain Mr. Sifton. Certainly the Attorney General of Manitoba did not employ him, for that province was too poor, and he certainly got no retainer from the Conservative Government. Mr. Howell admits that there was but one man personally liable to him until that man got relieved in some way, as he ultimately did, at the hands of the Prime Minister. This is the evidence of Mr. Howell:

Q. You said the Dominion was your client—we are all representing the Dominion here?—A. I was paid.

Q. Not by the Dominion Government?—A. No. I never got a dollar from the Dominion Government in my life.

There is the mystery and justification for the most rigid inquiry into this extraordinary transaction. The Auditor General is told that the public money is being so managed by the Ministers that Mr. Howell is being paid a certain sum, but Mr. Howell's relations and instructions are of such a character that he swore before the committee he had not got a dollar from the Dominion Government. The following is an interesting bit of evidence:—

Q. You rendered your bills to Mr. Sifton?—A. Yes.

Q. Not to the Attorney General of Manitoba, Mr. Cameron?—A. No.

Q. That does not change your statement?—A. I thought that I sent duplicates of these accounts to the Attorney General.

Q. You think you sent duplicates?—A. I think so; I remember seeing the book-keeper's entry.

Q. Will you look at your books, and see if you rendered accounts to the Manitoba Government also?—A. I have also a memo., I believe, but I sent a copy of the disbursements to Mr. Cameron. When the prosecutions were going on, it necessitated the expenditure of a great deal of money.

That explains that Mr. Cameron and himself kited a little, but the Manitoba Government did not ultimately pay for that kiting. There is a letter from Mr. Howell complaining of the manner in which his bills were cut down by the Justice Department here, and my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Wallace) suggests that that indicates a knowledge by Mr. Howell that he was dealing with the Dominion Government. But that would not assist Mr. Howell, because he was referring to the time when he was running up these bills and being paid the money. What he said was that he had Mr. Sifton to look to, that Mr. Sifton was the man to whom he rendered the bills, and that Mr. Sifton paid him the money and that he never got a dollar from the Dominion Government in his life. But from a letter put into my hands, wherever he got the money, the Dominion Government paid some of it, and it is clear the Dominion Government were relieving Mr. Sifton of the liability which he had then incurred and for which he could have been sued by Mr. Howell, if Mr. Howell's evidence is reliable.

I shall revert to that feature of the case in a little while, but I want to call attention to the justification that was given to this transaction. Remember that notwithstanding all the Pinkerton's detectives could do, notwithstanding the combined work of five or six attorneys of Winnipeg, under Mr. Howell's directions, and notwithstanding all that Mr. Sifton—and I refer to him by name because at that time he was not Minister of the Interior—could do to fasten these charges upon some one, and notwithstanding the co-operation of Mr. Sifton's colleagues, such as Mr. Watson and other leading Liberals, and the co-operation and support of those whose names Mr. Howell would not disclose to the committee—notwithstanding all this work on the part of two Governments and rabid political partisans, aided by the assistance of this creature Freeborn, only one conviction was the result, and that was the conviction of a man who, whether guilty or not of the charge in the indictment, confessed in the box that he and Freeborn had conspired to rob the Conservative candidate.

Let us see how this Government proceeded, for I have in my mind now particularly the view expressed in this Parliament, during the present session, with regard to the course that must be taken when an official of this Government is attacked, namely, that some one must risk his position, either here or outside this Chamber, that he must put before the House at once the day and date of the alleged offence and the name of the witnesses who will prove it, or else take the responsibility of making a charge, and some hon. gentlemen may have noticed that though no particulars are given in Mr. Sifton's letter of July, he tells the Prime Minister in that letter, which the evidence reported by his own counsel contradicts, that he has collected conclusive evidence of an organized conspiracy, and so on, and leaves the Prime Minister to believe that he was about to unearth a conspiracy and fasten a conspiracy upon some people in Manitoba. The Prime Minister, if he has read this evidence, cannot fail to observe that after all the help I have referred to, there never was, from that day to this, one individual in connection with the Manitoba election indicted for conspiracy. The evidence secured never enabled them to frame an indictment on that score, and so far as Mr. Howell goes, I do not believe they ever arrested or took before their own travelling magistrate a single individual charged with having been a party to a conspiracy of any kind. They did get what they could get with the expenditure of half the money. In this province, evidence, not that men had conspired, but had been dishonest, and like Freeborn ready to do, either for Liberals or Conservatives, for money a foul wrong and commit a crime. They did get evidence of that character, but the whole evidence in this report discloses that the time Mr. Sifton wrote that letter of July 17th, he had not in his possession any evidence to which any importance could be attached. He started on the assumption that because his party had been beaten at the polls on the 23rd of June there must be something rotten in the state of Denmark, and, without waiting even for the advent of the present Prime Minister to power as a result of that election, he began what was continued for months, and for long after July 17th, a fishing, a hunting for evidence of this fact that he supposed to exist. He did not possess the information. Let us see what information he had, and judge whether there is a particle of justification for the statements in the letter of the 17th July to the Prime Minister that he had conclusive evidence, and see whether it is not correctly described as a fishing inquiry to secure evidence. My point is, though I have expressed it a little vaguely, perhaps, that at the time of his letter of the 17th of July he simply desired to confirm a suspicion that the ballot boxes had been tampered with and some officials were guilty of crime or wrong-doing. Let me turn to the evidence which is to show what information came to the hon. gentlemen or any of them and what time it reached them. Here, for instance, is an extraordinary statement by Mr. Howell that before he wrote to Pinkerton it was arranged that the Dominion Government was to foot the bill. This, be it remembered, is the counsel in whose hands this whole business was placed. I have read the evidence from him in another place where he says he never got a dollar from the Dominion Government; and yet when he is reminded that before he wrote to the Pinkertons it was arranged that the Dominion Government was to foot the bill, he said: "I may be wrong as to that, as to this being before the Pinkerton men were written to. I would not like to say." But let us see when they were written to. The Pinkerton men were the detectives in the United States and they were written to in June, before this Government had come into office. There is a charge in the account of Mr. Howell, as on the 27th of June, for a letter to Pinkerton & Co. for three men. So we have them engaged at that time. I refer to this part of the evidence that it will assist us to judge of the statement that the evidence was in possession of Mr. Sifton at that time. The first item in this account is dated June 26th, and is as follows:—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Attending Mr. Sifton, two hours, going fully into the irregularities of the deputy returning officers and others, as to the balloting in the last election, and received instructions from him to investigate the acts of the various deputy returning officers.

The ingenuity of Mr. Shanks is quite apparent in the putting of that charge into the account. But it is somewhat misleading, for it is evident that these gentlemen did not on that occasion, according to the evidence, go fully into the irregularities. They had not the detectives' support, they had not these results of the investigation of the men who went around under assumed names, they had not anything like the evidence as Mr. Howell explains to enable them to go into anything more than a scheme, a plan to ransack the province for evidence to justify the suspicion that they had formed. The last part is probably correct. "Received instructions from him to investigate the various accounts of the various deputy returning officers." And, as Mr. Howell explains later, he went through riding after riding at his own sweet will following out a mere suspicion, or as he says, again and again on a fishing expedition. He went out to fish, to hunt for evidence, and he was hunting for months after the letter of July 17th which says, according to one reading of it, that the evidence was then in hand. Now, Mr. Howell tells us in another place in regard to Burrows:

Q. Who gave you the information respecting the Dauphin poll?—A. Well, I think Mr. Burrows gave me some.

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, who gave you the information concerning the Dauphin poll?—A. I think Mr. Burrows directed my attention to it.

Q. You are not able to say positively?—A. I think I am able to say he directed my attention to the poll, and I investigated it for myself.

Q. You are not able to give me any more positive answer?—A. No, he directed my attention to it, as something very crooked.

I think I am not unfair in commenting on that when I say that was the line on which he started, and not under instructions from Mr. Sifton. He would get a hint from Mr. Burrows or a hint or a whisper from Mr. Watson, and on that he would direct the attention of his agents and detectives, hired at the expense of this Exchequer to obtain the necessary information, and it is quite clear, if they had the information that one part of Mr. Sifton's letter suggests all that work and expense would have been wholly unnecessary. And just here I would like to call their attention to the odious conspiracy that the Prime Minister thought was going to be exposed and to the manner in which these two Governments or two combinations jumped upon this one individual who, apparently, was ready to confess that he was a scoundrel. After all this searching and hunting for this evidence, Mr. Howell is asked :

Mr. Howell, you did not charge any of these parties for a conspiracy of any kind, or if so, which?—A. I do not think so. I was just hesitating whether Waller was charged. No; Waller was charged for inciting, aiding and abetting.

Q. And this man, Saunders, who was convicted, he was bailed out by Mr. Rutherford during the trial.—A. For one night, I think.

So it is evident that there was mitigating circumstances even about that man.

Q. You are aware that Saunders, while denying the charges in connection with the ballot business, admitted that he had conspired with Freeborn to rob the Conservative committee—

That was an inaccuracy on my part in putting the question. There was no charge against Saunders for conspiracy, as Mr. Howell has explained—"I think he would have had a better chance if it had not been for that evidence." At another place in the evidence, Mr. Sifton puts his information in the form of a long and leading question in examining Mr. Howell, in which he says that in giving him instructions he had handed Mr. Powell some ballots, saying that his information was that they had been stolen. That was the charge, Mr. Speaker. What was the information he had—it was that there had been stolen ballots. Whether he was acquitted or not, he was never charged with that, because he tells us first of all in regard to this first conversation :

Q. Mr. Howell, in your evidence you stated, either to Mr. Sifton or to myself—I think it was to me—in referring to your first conversation with Mr. Sifton, in answer to the following question :—

"Q. That was anterior to your retainer?—A. Well, at the time. Then he produced ballots and admissions by deputy returning officers, and it was a staggering blow to me."

Q. Did he produce the admissions of the returning officers?—A. That surely must be wrong. He could not have done so.

Q. Is that correct?—A. Oh, no.

Q. He did not produce the admissions of the deputy returning officers?—A. No, there must be a mistake somewhere.

So, the only evidence that the Government or Mr. Sifton had anything like accurate information in detail, is destroyed when Mr. Howell is given time to reflect, and he qualified that first statement and says that no one in Manitoba, none of the officers of the law, had anything like the evidence in their possession for months after July, that Mr. Sifton pretended in that letter that he possessed—if you read his letter with that interpretation, though I say in his own behalf that it is capable of two interpretations. Then, as to what he was indicted for: Mr. Howell tells us that instead of being indicted for stealing, he was indicted for destroying a ballot, which would again show that such information as had reached Mr. Sifton was not definite when he was writing to the Prime Minister. He says :

One was for destroying the ballot, for we believed that taking a ballot from a voter and not putting it in the box was destroying it, and the other indictment was for putting a paper in the ballot-box which was not the voter's ballot.

Then, we are told in another place by this same gentleman that Saunders was found guilty of preventing voters' ballots going into the ballot box, and putting in other ballots in place of them. As indicating that Mr. Howell's memory was very bad indeed in regard to important phases of this transaction, he there shows, or else we must take Mr. Sifton's statement, that it was not what he told Mr. Howell, but he told him he had information that this man stole ballots. On that point there is a reference to the conviction of this one individual, the sole result of all this evidence. Mr. Howell is asked as to his report :

Your report reads: "Saunders went into the box and swore that he was never instructed by either Freeborn or Waller, and that he initialled those ballots merely for the purpose of assisting Freeborn in getting money from Boyd, in which he (Saunders) was to have a share," which is a conspiracy to rob Boyd. I ask you frankly, for the purpose of seeing how fair you were to all concerned in the evidence you have given here, whether that, in your opinion, would not have gone a very long way to secure the conviction of Saunders?—A. Certainly.

I have referred to the fact that Mr. Sifton entered into this inquiry on mere suspicion. Mr. Howell's account shows that he got instructions to investigate on or before June 26th, and that is an important date. He is asked how he was employed :

I was employed perhaps a little more than as counsel; I was employed as solicitor too.

Q. To take charge?—A. Yes.

Q. Who employed you?—A. The Attorney General's Department.

Then, he followed that up by saying :

Mr. Sifton employed me.

Q. But it was at that consultation that he told you of these gigantic frauds?—A. Possibly ; the interview of that date or the day before.

Mr. Speaker, I want to call your particular attention to these dates. They are of importance in connection with the information that was in possession of Mr. Sifton. He gave instructions on the 26th of June, the elections were on the 23rd, and Mr. Howell was then instructed to investigate. He goes to work and gets detectives, and at that time it is that he is told by Mr. Sifton of these alleged frauds. It was impossible for Mr. Sifton or any human being in Manitoba to be aware on the 26th of June of gigantic frauds at those polls in the province of Manitoba. The evidence clearly brings out that they started into this on mere suspicion, outside of the evidence of this worthless vagabond, who was undoubtedly receiving money paid by the country to be used in those prosecutions.

Q. Were you instructed by Mr. Sifton to employ Pinkerton?—A. Yes.

That, you see, according to the date, is also at that meeting of the 26th of June. Then, a letter is written to the Pinkertons on the 29th of June.

Q. Were you instructed at the start?—A. Oh, it would not be as early as that. Probably the employment of Pinkerton men would be at my suggestion, because I am a great believer in detectives in the elucidation of truth in crimes.

So it is clear that Mr. Howell, after his instructions from Mr. Sifton, was not in a position to arrest any one ; no one was arrested for a long time after that. But he did what, as he explained, is usually done, and no one cavils at that, under the charge of a proper department, he resorted to the employment of detectives for the elucidation of crime.

Q. The letter to Pinkerton & Co., on June 27th, was for three men ; you have not a copy of that here?—A. No, that is all it would be.

Q. Did you bring your office copies of these letters that are referred to here—for instance, the letter to Pinkerton & Co.?—A. No, that would simply be to send the man.

Speaking of the conversation with Mr. Sifton at this time :

Well, I think, Sir Charles, at that interview, or if not the first, very soon after that, we looked into the statutes as to what part the Minister of Justice should have in the proceedings.

The evidence I want to follow out just now is on another page, to which I will refer. But on this question that I refer to there was no proper and definite information in the possession of Mr. Sifton when he plunged into this expenditure at the cost of this country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Q. Coming back to the first matter, what was the substance of your first conversation with Mr. Sifton on this matter ?

There is a fair question on which it is quite evident that immediately after Mr. Sifton had not anything to say about that.

I would not like to say exactly what the first was, but amongst the very first at that time was a conversation in which Mr. Sifton told me there had been a gigantic fraud committed in the riding of Macdonald, and that ballots had been stolen.

No evidence was in his possession then. Mr. Howell did not discredit Mr. Sifton's statement, but he did not believe that Mr. Sifton's information was correct. That was the character of the information that was put before Mr. Howell at the start.

Then he produced to me ballots and admissions by returning officers, and it was a staggering blow to me.

I think I have already explained that that statement is incorrect. Mr. Howell took pains to correct it, because, as he said :

I had at no time admissions from the deputy returning officers.

But when he was employed and set to work with detectives, the only information he had was of such a character that the hon. gentleman's own counsel would not credit it. There is a great deal more to show the slim material upon which the machinery of the law was put in motion.

Q. Then Mr. Sifton knew nothing but what Freeborn told him ?

This is Howell, who is still being examined.

A. He only knew what Freeborn told him.

Q. Did he give you anything?—A. When I got information I laid it before him.

That is the way that they went to work. Mr. Howell has been very frank in this matter. We will see it coming out by-and-by. He is called in by Mr. Sifton, who had information that he could not credit at all. He gets carte blanche to proceed. Mr. Sifton gives him the information ; he puts it into the hands of detectives and follows it up, in what way ? As he explains—fishing for evidence :

Q. Then he did not give you full information on the 26th June?—A. As full as he had.

Q. You kept on getting information from time to time?—A. Yes.

Q. You cannot tell whether any conviction resulted from that information of the 26th of June?—A. I think all the Attorney General went into then was as to the method of the ballot-stuffing.

I have no doubt that he did instruct Mr. Howell very well, because Mr. Howell was exceedingly practiced in it, and gave us an exhibition, as hon. members will remember, using his hat for a ballot-box in the committee.

Q. Afterwards you got the detectives ? I suppose they were to get evidence?—A. Yes.

Q. And I suppose your instructions from Mr. Sifton on the 26th of June were to get these men and send them out over the country to look for evidence?—A. Yes.

So, I think, it was not an unreasonable statement that I made that there was a plunge made into this matter which was too reckless a plunge, and heaped up an obligation for which the local authority would not be responsible. This letter was written by Mr. Sifton to the right hon. Prime Minister, who was willing, regardless of expense, to foot the bill for that plunge that Mr. Sifton was to make.

Q. It was a sort of fishing inquiry?—A. Well, yes; all detective work is fishing.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, continuing the examination of the kind of information which the Minister of the Interior, when Mr. Sifton, of Winnipeg, had before him, and upon which he plunged this country into such an expense and the Government into such a responsibility, I refer now to a statement in Mr. Howell's evidence, as follows:—

You see, at first I was retained not to prosecute, but I simply gathered the evidence, and I think it was in the latter part of December they said: "Cause informations to be laid and go on and prosecute."

To make this intelligible to the lay mind, it is necessary now and then to repeat what I said at an earlier stage of the debate. I wish to show now that there was no warrant for the statement in the letter of July to the Prime Minister, that any one, not alone Mr. Sifton, of Winnipeg, was in possession of conclusive evidence, because his own solicitor and counsel, Mr. Howell, after he had the assistance of a little band of favourite lawyers, including connections and relatives of the Minister of the Interior, was not able to lay the information and to justify the initial stages of this prosecution until December of that year. That is according to his own statement:

I think it was in the latter part of December they said: "Cause informations to be laid and go on and prosecute."

I have mentioned two names to-day in connection with the payments that were made on this private understanding between a gentleman who afterwards became Minister of the Interior, and the Prime Minister; and when I see how much of that public money was thrown away and what fees were paid previous to taxation, it is perhaps not unimportant to say that Mr. Burrows, whose name I have mentioned in the discussion, was a brother-in-law of the present Minister of the Interior, and Mr. Clark was a cousin. At any rate, these gentlemen were intimate with the gentleman who induced, by this private correspondence, the initiation of this expenditure, and the cost to the Dominion treasury in the manner in which the evidence shows. I have shown that that preliminary information in possession of the Minister of the Interior, then Mr. Sifton, of Winnipeg, was not, in Mr. Howell's opinion, information that he would believe, and the Mr. Howell who arrived at this opinion had been prosecuting criminals all his life, both under the Norquay Government, when he was a Conservative, and under the Greenway Government, when he was a "good, solid Reformer," as he himself says. Thus we see how vague and general that information was. There is another reference which clears that up. Mr. Howell is questioned by Mr. Sifton and he says:

Q. Do you remember the general nature of the instructions I gave you at that time?

And the Minister's own solicitor, counsel and confidant, says:

I know you told me to hunt it out, and if it required a great deal of expense to find it, to find it, and bring the rascals to justice.

And one member of the committee said:

Called him a rascal, eh?

And Mr. Howell answered:

Well, I think it was I who called him a rascal. I think I can remind you, Mr. Sifton, that at the time I made that remark, that I did not believe a man could tear a leaf out of the Bible, and I did not believe he would steal a ballot.

Of course, Mr. Howell had left the province of Ontario before the advent of this Government to power, and before the election in Huron, and before the election in Brockville. I venture to say that after the recent election experience in these two ridings, Mr. Howell would not state on oath that he would not believe that a man could steal a ballot. That, however, is a matter subject to the light that further information will set on this subject, and set on it, not by aid of any public money of Canada, not by aid of a secret arrangement between the Minister of the Interior and the Prime Minister, which did not see the light of day until years had elapsed, but by the aid of private Canadian citizens who are anxious to have these nefarious Liberal election methods put down. There are other references in the evidence to show how these gentlemen proceeded on their fishing excursion, on vague rumours and suggestions, prying at the public expense into these rumours, and ignoring with absolute contempt, the opinion of Mr. Sifton, expressed in the July letter, when he said he was at that time in possession of conclusive evidence. For instance, we find that hearsay evidence was given by Mr. Watson, a member of the Manitoba Government. This occurred in regard to one of the lawyer's charges:

Q. There is an entry here, 11th July : "Attending the Attorney General, Watson and Burrows." Was not Watson a member of the Manitoba Government?—A. Yes.

Q. What was he doing there—what department was he in?—A. Public Works.

Q. Who was Mr. Burrows, a member of the local legislature?—A. Yes.

Q. A Liberal?—A. Yes.

Q. Holding any official position?—A. No.

Q. What assistance could these give you, were they witnesses?—A. Yes; Mr. Burrows gave me a detail of the alleged crookedness of a ballot in one division, I forget the name of it; but it was where the deputy returning officer, after the ballots were marked, each time before he put the ballot in the box opened up the ballot to the Conservative agent so that he could see which way it was marked, so that at the end of the day he said to the deputy returning officer: "You need not trouble to count up the votes, this is a statement of them," and that statement proved to be correct.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask your attention to the next question:

Q. Did Mr. Burrows tell you this of his own knowledge?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he used as a witness?—A. I found out the facts of this from him.

Q. Was it of his own knowledge, or what he had been informed?—A. What he had been informed.

Here, after Mr. Howell, a counsel learned in the law, had stated under oath that Mr. Burrows told him this of his own knowledge, after being pressed, he said: That it was not of his own knowledge, but what he had been informed. I propose to dwell at considerable length upon this, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, I propose to dwell on it in view of the situation we are face to face with to-day, and if anything encourages me to dwell upon it at length it is the jeers and derisive laughter from the benches behind the Government. If these hon. gentlemen had a particle of fairness in connection with these matters, we would find them active in coming to the aid of men who are now pursuing this same sort of injury in the province of Ontario. I have no sympathy with a Liberal or a Conservative who resorts to fraud or crime in connection with the ballot, nor has any other gentleman on this side of the House. The question is this: if you are going into this kind of work to purify the electorate, if the funds of this country are to be devoted to that purpose, there is not a fair-minded man inside of this House or outside of it, who will say that that work is to be confined to fastening these charges on men who have been Conservatives. It is not to be confined to a practice performed in the dark; but they are to come down in man-fashion, just in the opposite way to the way in which they have handled this matter from beginning to end, and ask boldly for a vote at the hands of the people's representatives to hunt down these rascals, regardless of their politics or of what party is in power. The contrast in this case is extraordinary. While in these particular districts in Ontario the attention of the public is drawn in a far more marked and open manner than was the case in Manitoba, there is not a Minister on the Treasury benches who has made an open or a secret offer to aid in hunting out the rascals; but, where the ox which was gored was the ox of the other party, they were ready to resort to secret and stealthy means for hunting down the rascals. We ask for even-handed justice. We say, before you go behind or in front of the Attorney General of the province, let us get the mandate of this Parliament, and let us put on the shoulders of the Government of the day, whether it is Grit or Tory, a responsibility, and hold them to it; but let us not follow the cowardly and secret practices indulged in by this third-class sort of Star Chamber to which I have been referring. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have given you this hearsay evidence that had come to Mr. Sifton first, to Mr. Watson, a colleague, and to Mr. Burrows, a relative or connection of the hon. gentleman; and the manner in which this hearsay and generally vague evidence, that could not be put into any specific charge or form, was used. Even at the late date when we examined Mr. Howell, I have shown you how they were able to tap the Dominion treasury and command its funds in working out this political scheme. Let us see the nature of the instructions, and whether Mr. Howell will corroborate a single line of the letter of Mr. Sifton, who said he had conclusive evidence. Mr. Sifton, examining Mr. Howell, says:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton).

Q. I intimated to you that I had received information to the effect that there had been extensive frauds practiced in connection with the elections?—A. Yes.

Q. And instructed you to proceed in the investigation of them?—A. Yes.

Q. How did that compare with the action which would be taken in any other criminal case?—A. I think it was practically the same. I am usually brought into criminal cases at a very early stage, and evidence is gathered very often subject entirely to my direction.

Q. The Attorney General, as well as counsel and others, might have charge of the prosecution before the case is prepared for trial, and before the information is laid. It is usual to employ detectives, and work up the case, as detectives say?—A. Yes, quite so. I think I have done it under your instructions before.

Q. Yes, I think so, several times. The Crown does not wait, as a rule, according to your experience until there is evidence enough to convict a man before a jury before it starts to make inquiries?

Need I again call attention to the importance of this leading question? Need I say that it has become, in view of recent events, of more than ordinary importance, as to what the Minister of the Interior appreciates to be the duty of parties who have general information in regard to crime or wrong-doing on the part of public servants; and the answer of Mr. Howell to that question is equally important :

A. No, that has not been my experience. When we get a suspicion—

I dwell on that word for the same reason that I mentioned before—

—When we get a suspicion we start, and I may say it is perhaps different in Manitoba from what it is in other places, certainly different from this province, because there are no county attorneys in Manitoba, as there are here, and the prosecuting counsel in Manitoba has to take a burden that is not taken in Ontario.

The applicability of that answer to the condition of affairs in the Yukon territory I need not expatiate upon. Those observations are particularly applicable to a case that has been under the consideration of Parliament. Then, said the Minister of the Interior :

Q. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper seems to think that there was some discredit to be cast on the proceedings because it was, as he said, a fishing excursion, that you sent out detectives. Did the proceedings differ in any respect whatever from the ordinary proceedings in any criminal case ?
—A. No, I have fished just the same in this case as I did in the Holland murder case under your direction.

And the Holland murder case, I believe, broke down ; but, nevertheless, no one quarrelled with that. That is not the question. I would not quarrel with any official, Dominion or provincial, for fishing or incurring expenditure under such circumstances ; on the contrary, I would commend the practice, where such officials are charged under the constitution of this country with the duty of ferreting out and punishing crime. But we have the unparalleled case in the history of this country, where the Dominion Government stepped in and assumed a burden and responsibility that lay on the shoulders of the local authority ; and we have another case, to which I need not now refer, where, having the direct responsibility, they declined to step in or employ detectives or counsel to ferret out crime ; where there is more than a suspicion, where the whole name of Canada has been affected by the extraordinary and unpleasant statements that have been cast widespread, not only over Canada, but throughout the world.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think I must draw the hon. member's attention to the fact, that he is obviously now entering into the discussion of a matter which has already been discussed, and is not the one to which he is drawing the attention of the House. I apprehend, that his reason for going into this evidence, as he has done, is to show the necessity of an early sitting of the Committee on Public Accounts, but to go into the question of the Yukon, does not, in my judgment, bear upon that point.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am perfectly willing, Mr. Speaker, to keep within the line of your ruling. I did not think, for the moment, that I was transgressing the spirit of the rule, which is a wholesome one, when I animadverted, by way of contrast, to a previous debate. Therefore, submitting most willingly to your ruling, I will simply pass on and marshal the evidence and the facts, as shown by this report, in order to emphasize my point, that the occupants of the Treasury benches have taken just that course which will bring upon them the suspicion, that they have endeavoured to burk a proper inquiry into the Manitoba case. I cannot conceive of any other reason why, after having compelled me, by force of their majority, to make a solemn undertaking, that, at the first available opportunity this session, I would continue this inquiry, they should so delay calling the committee as to make it impossible for me to obtain the witnesses on the other side, who were not in the pay of the Government, who were not in the position in which Mr. Howell was, of their confidential adviser, and conclude this inquiry in the ordinary course of a parliamentary session.

I was referring to the flimsy evidence upon which this prosecution was started, and the absence, so far as the record shows, of any specific facts of any kind in July. Not a name came from the lips of Mr. Howell ; not a name of an informer outside of Freeborn came from the lips of a single witness up to the date of closing the evidence last session. Though we had the reports of Mr. Howell, though we had the leading examination by the Minister of the Interior, not the name of a single individual was disclosed, charged with crime, or against whom evidence had been collected which would justify the letter that the Minister of the Interior, then Mr. Sifton, of Winnipeg, wrote in July, 1896, to the First Minister.

Then I went on to show, from the evidence, that there was the strongest testimony from the lips of Mr. Howell, that, when he was called in, he could not obtain evidence that would warrant him laying information until months had elapsed—from July until December of that year. I had referred to the statement of his instructions which he made in answer to the Minister of Interior. These instructions were to investigate, to ferret out information upon which he could prosecute or arrest individuals in the different parts of Manitoba. Let us see how much information we got from Mr. Howell, when pressed, as I had the right to do, for the information that he actually had in his possession. He had notes, he had memos., which, according to his statement, would tell us just what he had collected, and when he had collected it. Then, to clinch this matter, I asked for their production. We were then treated to a little legal by-play, to some technical rules which were pushed further than they ever were in any court of law ; and it was ruled, that because in a court of law this gentleman would be privileged as having acted for the Crown, therefore, he was not to be compelled to produce the memo. he had obtained, before the committee. That was a most extraordinary ruling. Mr. Speaker, as you can fully understand.

Mr. McMULLEN. Not at all extraordinary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knows nothing about this matter. He is not trained to it in the slightest particular. He surely does not pretend to know anything with regard to the practices of the courts of law. There was no privilege in that case in connection with the question upon which the Chairman ruled, and the majority supported him. Neither the hon. gentleman, nor anybody else, can produce a single authority from any court of law in support of this ruling, and does the hon. gentleman mean to say, that we are in such a miserable, incompetent position, that a committee of this House is not able to extract from witnesses evidence which an ordinary judge of the land can extract from him? That was the position taken by these hon. gentlemen. Had Mr. Howell been compelled to produce the memoranda he had in his possession, to show just what information he had on the 17th July, that would have exposed the whole business. But he was protected and shielded, although, before the Minister of Interior appreciated the importance of that evidence he himself suggested that Mr. Howell should give us that information. Nevertheless, when the importance of it was brought out by a vote in the committee, these letters and material and information were characterized as confidential. There was no insisting on the publicity of the names, and the men who would take the responsibility of having made reflections on their fellow-citizens, or by indirect means placing themselves in a position to be responsible in a court of law. There was protection afforded in that case not always afforded at Liberal hands, as this House may understand, without infringing on the rules of debate. For instance, this question was asked :

Will you explain now in detail what that information was, thus collected, upon which you subsequently laid the informations and instituted the prosecutions?—A. Well, to go into it fully would be very extensive. I have a detailed statement of all the cases here.

Q. What is this paper?—A. It is a sort of epitome I have among my papers of what I gathered during these investigations, and attached to it are some confidential letters written to me by people who might not want to have their names known.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I can remember when a man was considered a coward who would act upon information, when the informers were not willing to have their names known.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

I do not think it would be fair to them that those letters should be made public property.

Q. What is the nature of the particular letter you have under your hand now?—A. Well, it is a letter—I think a letter, from what I see, it is a confidential letter—written by a certain gentleman telling me what took place at one of the polls, which I have no objection to let you, Sir Charles, see. This document, I see now, is rather a compilation of my own from the material which came to hand from time to time, and I used it as a brief from which to make out indictments, and subsequently to subpoena witnesses. But I have far more than that. I have no objection to put it in.

Now, that was the introduction of a very interesting passage. I had Mr. Howell into such a condition that he was willing to make a frank confession. And I have referred—though I cannot now put my hand upon the particular question—to a question of the Minister of the Interior at one stage of the proceedings which indicated that he had a desire to get that same information. If the Minister of the Interior contradicts that, as I am not able to refer to the exact question in the evidence, I will not maintain that particular point. But that is my recollection. But, later, when we were within an ace of learning once and for all what the information was, a party majority in the committee voted that all this information was privileged, and one of the most important points to be found out in that inquisitorial committee, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) calls it, was left concealed. At another place, this question is asked by Mr. Sifton :

Q. That, briefly stated, was the information you procured?—A. More than that, I got from someone you sent me the written instructions given to one of the deputy returning officers how to do it. I employed detectives, and spent a great deal of money, and tried to find out whose handwriting it was, but I never found out

And then, later :

Q. Have you got that document?—A. I would not swear. It would be in my private safe at Winnipeg. I am inclined to think I have it. I did not think I would be called upon for it.

By Mr. Sifton :

Q. You have it in your possession at home?—A. I cannot say as to its possession. I may have left it with Shoemaker, the detective.

Q. You will send it if you can find it?—A. Yes. That document, I need hardly say to the House, has never been forthcoming. Then Mr. Foster asks :

Q. Was there anything to show the 'locus in quo' where the Grits purported to carry this election?—A. No, it was just headed : "How the Grits carry elections."

Again, he was asked :

Q. Who gave you this?—A. I do not think I should give you this information. It was confidential. I treat this committee and the Dominion Government as a private prosecutor.

By Mr. Sifton :

Q. Will you recollect the individual whom you got that from?—A. I did not get it from you, but my memory is that you told me where I could get it. I got it, and I think I am safe in saying this, that when I got it I was told that if ever I divulged where it came from a man would lose an important position.

And the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knows, and candour will compel him to admit, no matter what view he takes, as to the seriousness of this whole case, that Mr. Howell was protected by the majority of the committee from handing to the grand inquisition of this country the information that he said he possessed and that bore in so important a manner upon the inquiry that was then being pursued.

Now, as regards his retainer and the instructions to Mr. Howell. I never saw in my life, and I do not think there is any professional man on either side of the House who ever knew of a counsel who betrayed such bewilderment and confusion as to who was his client. I have given you the version of it from the sworn testimony of Mr. Howell. The Minister of the Interior, or any hon. gentleman who takes that report up, can contradict me flat by referring to another part of the evidence of Mr. Howell. There are four or five versions as to how he came into this case and who employed him, and with whom he was acting all through. But this might arise from the irregular and unprecedented and illegal manner in which he was employed, if employed, or, at any rate, in which he was paid from the federal exchequer. Had the proper course been followed, had the Government come down and asked an appropriation in a bona fide way at the hands of this House for the purpose of pursuing this course, a course never before taken in this country, the money would have been voted if the majority had approved, and the money would have been expended from the Department of Justice. And Sir Oliver Mowat, I venture to say, never in his history as Attorney General of the province of Ontario or as Attorney General of the Dominion of Canada, so disgraced himself as to arrange for the employment of lawyers or agents by means of private and secret confidential correspondence. I venture to say that in every case in which Sir Oliver Mowat, or the present Minister of Justice, or the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick), who sits in this House has spent public money for legal business, there has been ordinary and proper correspondence through the Deputy Minister of Justice and the proper officers of the Government, and that vouchers can be found in all these cases, so that you could have, not only an intelligible but an honest history of the case from beginning to end. We have no secret service money in this country. Parliament entrusts no such fund to the Minister, as the Finance Minister knows. It is, therefore, all the more heinous that any Minister should indirectly or by secret methods attempt to spend money on the secret service principle; and to have these monetary transactions conducted by means of documents that they are ashamed to lay on the Table of the House, by documents that they abstract or that some one abstracts from the public records. I make that statement by the book, for Sir Oliver Mowat's letter was before Mr. Hodgins in the Department of Justice and was taken from the file and not sent to the Public Accounts Committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Who took it?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I had no detectives employed at public expense to find out who took it. I state the bald fact, that the document was abstracted from the file. No Minister of the Crown has come down to explain to the Public Accounts Committee who took it. But I say this correspondence has been interfered with, that it has been mutilated, that a part of it has been abstracted. Who took it I do not know. If I knew that I should have some other motion to make in this House than the one I contemplate making on this occasion. But as the Minister of the Interior has asked me the question, I would like to ask him if he knows who took it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not the slightest notion of such an occurrence having taken place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And yet we have the printed evidence before us here, the evidence of Mr. Howell, which, apparently, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) has never read and never cared to consider—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not hear it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister says he did not take it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I did not say that. I did not think it was necessary to say that; I said I did not hear the evidence of Mr. Hodgins.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have read the evidence of Mr. Hodgins; and the hon. member for North Wellington, who was the chairman of that committee, although he has extreme views on these questions, followed the evidence closely enough, I am sure, to know that what I am stating is by the book. He knows that I asked Mr. Newcombe and Mr. Hodgins to make a search for that letter and tried to produce it before the committee, and that on his second appearance before the committee Mr. Hodgins said he could not find it. He said that he had seen it; and I have read the letter in which Mr. Howell refers to a letter of Sir Oliver Mowat, which is not on file, complaining of these inordinate and exorbitant charges of the agents of the Minister of the Interior. There is the circumstance that causes the transaction to be surrounded with suspicion. Is there an intelligent man of the profession of the law on either side of the House who can understand, from Mr. Howell's difficulty and confusion as to the parties for whom he was acting, whether it was for Mr. Sifton, or for the Minister of the Interior, or for the Attorney General of Manitoba, or whether it was for the Minister of Justice at Ottawa? I will give you a few statements from Mr. Howell that certainly place that gentleman in a very peculiar position. But that is not the only thing. It shows just the trouble that this Parliament will get into, and that the people's trustees will find themselves in, if they sanction this irregular and illegal conduct in connection with the expenditure of public funds. The Deputy Minister of Justice says, for instance, referring to the answer of the Attorney General of Manitoba in the House of Assembly at Manitoba :

Q. Was Mr. Howell retained by the Government as counsel in said cases, and if so, what fees have been paid him or promised to him for his services?—A. Mr. Howell was retained by the Government of Manitoba in said cases with the sanction of the Dominion Government. He has not been paid any fees in connection with said cases by the Government of Manitoba, nor has he been promised any fees.

Then we find that the report goes on to give this question :

Q. Was Mr. Howell retained by the Government as counsel in said cases, and if so, what fees have been paid him or promised to him for his services?—A. Mr. Howell was retained by the Government of Manitoba in said cases with the sanction of the Dominion Government.

He is asked :

Did you agree with that?—A. I should think so.

Further on, Mr. Howell is asked :

Q. Was anything said as to who should bear that expense ultimately, the Manitoba Government or the Dominion Government?—A. I am sure it was said in my presence that the Dominion Government would stand it.

Q. You are not aware that anterior to that, the Dominion Government had supplied some funds to meet these expenses?—A. I think the Dominion Government had prior to that. We had paid large sums of money out of our own pockets before we got any back, and I got $3,000 some time.

Then we find another extraordinary thing. I have read you what Mr. Howell is stating so far, and what the Manitoba Government is stating so far, and here is a bewildering fact. While the Manitoba Government answers that Mr. Howell was retained with the sanction of the Dominion Government, by the Manitoba Government, mark you, while Mr. Howell says that he was retained by the Manitoba Government with the sanction of the Dominion Government, his account shows his retainer to have been on June 26, when the Conservative Administration was in office, and can any man believe that that is a satisfactory answer, either of the Manitoba Government or of Mr. Howell? Was it suggested that he had been retained by the Conservative Administration? Not a man in the committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictor).

not a line of any paper produced, suggested any such extravagance as that. Mr. Howell, after having said that he was retained by the Manitoba Government with the sanction of the Dominion Government, and being reminded that the Conservative Government did not leave office, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier did not take office until July 13, he is asked :

Assuming that, would you still say that the answer I have read, that Mr. Howell was retained with the sanction of the Dominion Government, is correct?—A. You see, at first I was retained not to prosecute, but I simply gathered the evidence, and I think in the latter part of December they said : "Cause informations to be laid and go on and prosecute."

So that comes back with tremendous force, when we consider the facts, to the responsibility of Mr. Sifton, of Winnipeg, who said the Manitoba Government could not undertake that, but who himself assumed a financial responsibility that was ultimately redeemed in part, at any rate, by the Dominion Government.

Then you got your instructions from the Attorney General of Manitoba?—A. He told me that, and even if the Dominion Government instructed me I would not proceed without instructions from the Attorney General of Manitoba.

So that we are brought face to face with another state of things, and another phase of this transaction. Although we were supplying the funds, employing detectives, and employing lawyers, the control of the case was still in the hands of Attorney General Cameron. Then further on there is another extraordinary piece of testimony from Mr. Howell involving the Dominion Government in this affair. Now we come to a subject always interesting to any counsel, and I suppose Mr. Howell was not an exception to the rule, that is as to who was to pay them in the matter. He is asked :

Q. You said yesterday, if my memory serves me, that notwithstanding that you thought the Dominion Act was not sufficient to cover the case, you to some extent relied on the Dominion purse?—A. I do not think I ever relied on the Dominion purse.

Q. But while this state of doubt and uncertainty existed you drew upon the Minister of the Interior?—A. No, I did not draw upon the Minister of the Interior until long after he had given me money that he said came from the Dominion Government.

Then on this same subject as to the vagueness of the information :

Q. You mean that Mr. Sifton said that he had heard there was such a conspiracy?—A. Yes.

Q. But that is not giving you evidence of it?—A. Mr. Sifton, or some one for him, gave me written instructions assumed to be given to one of the returning officers of how to cheat the voter out of his ballot.

Q. If Mr. Sifton gave you instructions or evidence, you could not have considered that sufficient, for you at once went on a fishing expedition by employing Pinkerton detectives and so on?—A. Yes.

Q. If you were going to have a protest, I suppose it is well to have detectives and make sure?—A. Yes, I wanted to find out who it was who gave these instructions. We had a great deal of trouble in comparing handwriting of persons of whom we were suspicious.

Then when Mr. Howell is asked from whom he got his instructions, he tells us that he got them from the Attorney General of Manitoba. I ask you to mark that. He says: "Well, I got my instructions from the Attorney General of Manitoba." Then in regard to his relations, he says:

The reason he drew on Mr. Sifton was that he did not expect that the Dominion Government would accept his draft.

This is his own statement:

We paid $6,000 or $7,000, and I wanted the money, and did not think the Government would accept my draft.

Here is Mr. Howell giving a reason for drawing on Mr. Sifton, an individual, and his reason, notwithstanding what he says he understood to be his instructions, was that he did not think the Dominion Government would pay his fee. To make it clearer he says at another place that he relied upon Mr. Sifton to get the Government to pay his bill:

Q. In your examination yesterday, in answer to the question: "Whom did you regard as your debtor, the person retaining you, the Attorney General of Manitoba, or Mr. Sifton?" your answer was: "I am inclined to think that I was looking to the purse at Ottawa, for I remember very clearly we discussed the question of the Minister of Justice paying it. If that was not at the first interview, then it was at the second or third. Before I wrote Pinkerton, it was arranged that the Dominion Government was to foot the bill"—A. Yes.

Now, I unhesitatingly say this is not the case, and he contradicts that statement point-blank. He first wrote to Pinkerton in June. Will the hon. Minister of the Interior say now that this statement was borne out by the evidence? Mr. Howell made a serious mistake. It is not pretended by the hon. Minister of the Interior that that statement was accurate. Yet, this is the gentleman who disbursed a large amount of public money and has confessed his inability to supply vouchers to the Public Accounts Committee for the money that he has expended.

Q. By whom was it arranged?

That is the matter that was referred to.

A. Mr. Sifton told me.

Q. Then do you not consider you were retained by the Manitoba Government?—A. I was retained by Mr. Sifton, and I knew he would see that somebody paid me.

That was the statement.

Q. While you say that Mr. Sifton retained you, he was the Attorney General, and you knew you would get your money either from Manitoba or from the Dominion—you say Mr. Sifton assured you the Government would pay you?—A. Well, we discussed the question of the Dominion Government taking it up, and we looked over the provisions of the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, and I am sure he told me the Dominion Government would pay the bill.

Then he repeats that statement which is obviously absurd on the face of it.

Q. Then, if Mr. Sifton told you the Dominion Government would pay the bill, would you say that you could hold Mr. Sifton or Manitoba liable?—A. I always held Mr. Sifton liable.

And I wish you to note this, Mr. Speaker:

I always held Mr. Sifton liable, and the result bore out my confidence.

I have given you his statement on the record from this report of his evidence that he never got a dollar from the Dominion Government that he got his bills paid, and he got them paid in full. Though they were cut down and though they went through the form of taxing them in the Department of Justice he did not lose anything by the cutting down. So far as Mr. Sifton could get part of the bills out of the public treasury to pay the bills which he was held liable for and which he paid in full, that money was paid. In so far as the Department of Justice would not authorize the expenditure, some one—though the Committee on Public Accounts is left in the dark as to that—had to pay the balance, and, as Mr. Howell tells us, Mr. Sifton paid the balance. The Dominion Government, therefore, paid practically 50 per cent of the personal liability of Mr. Sifton, if Mr. Howell is a credible witness and that statement is correct, which is made on oath.—

I always held Mr. Sifton liable, and the result bore out my confidence.

When Mr. Howell is confronted with the fact that the Conservatives were in power before he wrote to Pinkerton, and that his statement could not be correct that the Dominion Government had arranged to indemnify Mr. Sifton, this is the statement he makes in regard to it, and it is fair that I should mention it as I have mentioned the other fact:

I may be wrong as to that, as to its being before the Pinkerton men were written to. I would not like to say.

Although, you will remember from what I have read of his evidence, it reads as if he were sure that it was at that time that this matter was arranged. At another part of his evidence he tells us that it was Mr. Sifton who retained him. Here he is coming before the Public Accounts Committee under these extraordinary circumstances. The Dominion Government, whether involved at that time he does not exactly know, the Attorney General of Manitoba technically involved all through, Mr. Sifton actually dealing with him and we are asking him to whom was his account made out—here is a business man asked to produce his books for inspection by the committee who comes with a partial statement of his account, who has destroyed his blotters and memoranda and who will not produce them and does not produce them before the committee, is asked—to whom did you charge this account in your books, and he gives the answer that he charged this account to no one. Fifteen thousand odd dollars—I have already stated the amount from the evidence of a liability charged to no one by a man who is supposed to be fit to undertake a prosecution and an inquiry of this kind. Then he is asked a question as having dealt with all the different Governments of Manitoba. He was a Conservative, as I say, under the Conservative regime, and a Liberal under the Liberal regime; he was retained by the Liberal-Conservative Administration, and retained by the Liberal Administration, acting for the Attorney General under both of these Administrations. This man is asked a question that you would suppose he could have answered, if he had been one year at the bar, and it was as to how he was dealing with Mr. Sifton, whether dealing with him personally or as Attorney General. Here is an extraordinary statement; whether it reflects upon the hon. Minister of the Interior or Mr. Howell, I care not, but Mr. Howell makes this statement on oath:

Q. Did you attend him in his official capacity as Attorney General?—A. I do not know.

He did not know. He dealt with him, as the evidence shows, personally, he got his money from him, and Mr. Sifton was dealing secretly with the moneys of this country without any responsibility to this Parliament, without any responsibility to the Manitoba legislature, without putting a single sixpence of this business upon the shoulders of the people of whom at the time he was a representative, or on the local administration—this is the way the whole thing was carried on, this is the counsel he got to represent this string of other counsel who was unable to say, after the whole transaction was over, after his accounts had been passed, not charged to any one in his books, paid after being taxed, though the taxing did not affect him in the slightest degree, reduced, though the reduction did not affect him in the slightest, says I do not know whether I attended on Mr. Sifton in his official capacity. But he did know that he held Mr. Sifton liable, and the report shows that he felt safe enough all through, no matter where the money should come from. He says:

Q. And you looked to Mr. Sifton in the end?—A. I drew on him. I was not disposed to be banker for the Dominion Government, and I told Mr. Sifton so.

Q. Who paid you?—A. I drew on Mr. Sifton, and the bank honoured the draft.

Q. You say the Dominion was your client?—A. I was paid.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Q. Not by the Dominion Government?—A. No, I never got a dollar from the Dominion Government.

Therefore, he held Mr. Sifton liable, and I read again from his evidence:

Q. Did you consider you were retained by the Manitoba Government?—A. I was retained by Mr. Sifton, and I knew that he would see that some one would pay me, and he was Attorney General of the province then.

I call your attention to this, Mr. Speaker:

Q. Then, if Mr. Sifton told you the Dominion Government would pay the bill, would you say that you would hold Mr. Sifton or the province of Manitoba liable?—A. Well, I always held Mr. Sifton liable, and the result bore out my confidence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, you will find that these detectives were employed, at great expense, earlier in the day, and were at work before the 17th July, when the letter of Mr. Sifton was written, and were at work for a long time afterwards. For instance, we have the following entry in the account:

July 8th.—All day going over the evidence with Shoemaker (one of the detectives) and his assistants, and laying down a plan of action and sifting the evidence already brought in.

We have the following entry in the account also:

One and a half hours with Shoemaker and Robertson, instructing the latter to proceed to Carberry as a picture-seller, and with full instructions and letters of introduction to gather evidence as to Clarke and Waller.

A wild goose chase as it turned out to be. It is monstrous to argue that Mr. Sifton, at that date, had any conclusive evidence against Waller and Clark. These men were cleared by a jury of their countrymen, and this fishing excursion in their case was a farce. We find from the lawyer's charges how correct it was for Mr. Howell to say he was fishing for months, and how incorrect it was for Mr. Sifton to state in his letter to the Prime Minister that he had conclusive evidence. Although that letter was dated the 17th July, the astute counsel tells us that he did not credit the information Mr. Sifton gave him at the start, and that he required detectives to fish for evidence. We have this evidence in his account:

July 31st.—Having heard about irregularities at the Rathwell poli—drawing up forms for 37 affidavits and long letter to Forbes for particulars.

They drew up the affidavits before they got the particulars, which showed that the ingenuity of Shanks was exceeded by the ingenuity of Mr. Howell:

August 3.—Having received the written instructions that were handed to certain deputy returning officers, searches of handwriting and interviews with many parties to get evidence as to who wrote it.

To tell me that on August 3rd, that charge was a reasonable charge, that that inquiry was a reasonable inquiry by Mr. Howell, and yet on the 17th of July Mr. Sifton or any other man in Manitoba could state that he held in his hands conclusive evidence, is asking me to believe what no jury in Christendom would believe, and which no intelligent man on either side of the House would believe. Either Mr. Howell is conjuring up excuses for charges, is fabricating a bill for useless work, or that statement made by Mr. Sifton on July 17th was misleading, erroneous and incorrect. You will find that the sworn evidence of Mr. Howell is corroborated by this account. On August 15th—here Mr. Howell is at work :

August 15.—Having considered it proper to get a gambler to endeavour to gather the evidence in Treherne—letter to Pinkerton & Co. for a man who would assume the role of gambler and tough.

August 17.—Attending Ballantyne and Freeborn, instructing them to proceed by the Manitoba and North-western Railway, to find what had been done as to the ballot-boxes along that line, both in Macdonald and Marquette, and drawing letters of introduction to various parties to be used on the journey—3 hours.

Here was one of the men who were being used at the public expense to manufacture evidence, though Mr. Howell does not put it in that way, but a man who must have known would not hesitate to manufacture evidence, a man who was a self-confessed scoundrel, a man who first conspired to rob the Conservatives, and then, when they would not come down with cash, turned informer, a drunken wretch who had to be paid liberal allowances to be kept in hand by these gentlemen who were fishing for evidence to fasten horrible charges on the Conservative party; a fishing inquiry which resulted in the conviction of another wretch, who, although not guilty, acknowledged the charge made against him; that is the reckless and extraordinary business for which this country had to pay out in cash some $10,000, and for which this country would have had to pay over $19,000 if a sense of shame did not happily come to the Treasury benches. And, though they had given this carte blanche authority on July 17th, they never dared to ask Parliament for a single dollar openly, even of the $10,000, not to speak of the balance of the $19,000. I have referred frequently to Mr. Howell, showing how long he fished at the expense of the treasury for evidence of the kind to which I have been referring. The references to that evidence are as follows:—First of all, in regard to the magistrates who were peripatetic, who were carted around to hold the preliminary investigation, were appointed by the Government, or by Mr. Sifton, as he says. Then, having got their magistrates, they submitted to them, late in the season, all the evidence they had successfully fished for by the aid of Pinkerton detectives, and by the aid of this informer to whom I have referred. There is a charge here :

July 13.—One and a half hours with Shoemaker and Robertson, instructing the latter to proceed to Carberry as a picture-seller, and with full instructions and letters of introduction to gather evidence as to Clarke and Waller.

Mr. Howell says : "That, I think, is what Mr. Watson told me"—another member of the Government of Manitoba who would not risk a brass farthing on this fishing excursion, but who induced the Prime Minister, together with Mr. Sifton, to saddle the expense on the Dominion. Then again :

They instructed you rather than you advised them?—A. Oh, they asked me to find if there was ground for prosecution. I gathered the evidence, and they told me to go on and prosecute.

Again, Mr. Howell says :

You see, at first I was retained not to prosecute, but I simply gathered the evidence, and I think it was in the latter part of December they said : "Cause informations to be laid and go on and prosecute."

Again, we have Mr. Howell telling us of the detectives gathering evidence, and we have the fact that Mr. Sifton was paying this man Freeborn to keep him off. Then, as to fishing, Mr. Howell makes this statement :

Q. You mean that Mr. Sifton said that he heard that there was such a conspiracy?—A. Yes.

Q. But that is not giving you evidence of it?—A. Mr. Sifton, or some one for him, gave me written instructions assumed to be given to one of the returning officers of how to cheat the voter out of his ballot.

Q. If Mr. Sifton gave you instructions or evidence, you could not have considered that sufficient, for you at once went on a fishing expedition of employing Pinkerton detectives, and so on?—A. Yes.

Then, there is a reference by Mr. Howell to an investigation of these charges, and he goes on to explain the result of his inquiries, and states how the detectives were used, and corroborates the evidence which I have already read. Then he says :

I employed detectives and spent a great deal of money trying to find out whose handwriting it was, but I never found out.

Then he tells how much he had to fish for evidence. He says :

I traced Scammell's movements on several days before the election, and found that he had paid two or three visits to Treherne and got a package of something on one of these visits, and I got the information from the man who went with him that he got a package of some kind, and seemed very well pleased with it.

He tells us how they followed him up. He testifies how he sent out canvassers to get cases to bring before the magistrates. I would call your attention to this statement by Mr. Howell :

Q. How long before January, 1897, did you get information touching him?—A. I got it all along during the autumn; I was gathering it from all sources, and some time in July.

Q. Was it in July or August?—A. It would, perhaps, not be long after August; it might be in August or September.

Again, he says, in answer to this question:

Q. Did you make any inquiries into the conduct of the balance of the deputy returning officers?—A. I did into some of them.

Q. Into how many?—A. It may have been some slight matters.

Q. It is important, because the money went there as well as to others?—A. I do not think it would be much.

Q. Did your investigations go into districts where others than Conservatives were returned?—A. There was Boyd's case, of course.

Q. I mean investigations as against deputy returning officers?—A. I looked carefully into the elections of Mr. Boyd, Mr. Hugh J. Macdonald and Mr. Roche. I looked into others, and into Mr. LaRivière's to a certain extent.

Showing that he went all over the field, with the result to which I have already referred to. There is this further testimony on this point:

Q. You gave the committee a description of what you called the night-school for schooling up officers in fraud?—A. I think Mr. Sifton told me he had gathered—

Q. I don't want to know what Mr. Sifton gathered; do you remember who gave you that information?—A. It would be a gradual collection of hints until I got the evidence.

So that we have undoubtedly, if Mr. Howell can be believed at all, the exact nature of his employment, and we have the flat contradiction of the statement of Mr. Sifton, so far as his letter of July 17th was concerned, that he was in possession of conclusive evidence. For, mark you, after all said and done, the reference to Sir Oliver Mowat, which is made later on, is that he would only sanction the following up of four or five cases; and if the statement in Mr. Sifton's letter had been accurate, there would not have been the necessity for the enormous expenditure between July and December of that year.

I think I have referred to sufficient of the evidence to show you how irregular the conduct of the Government has been from beginning to end. When the whole of this evidence is completed, it will be possible, I think, to argue with some force that there has not been irregularity merely, but extraordinary illegality, that there has been an absolute disregard of the ordinary safeguards in the expenditure of moneys, that there has been a misappropriation of the public funds, and that none of the ordinary checks or ordinary courses were taken usually followed in the expenditure of public money. The Auditor General's Report is absolutely unsatisfactory. In the department to which these accounts were sent, as a matter of form, the Justice Department, none of the ordinary means were taken to check the propriety of these expenditures, and undoubtedly—and I repeat it in the most emphatic manner—this promise of the Minister of the Interior that the money would be fully accounted for in detail by him has never been fulfilled. On the contrary, Mr. Sifton handed over the whole business to Mr. Howell, and Mr. Howell handed it over to a horde of political friends and supporters, including a connection of the Minister of the Interior—Mr. Wade, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Perdue, and all those gentlemen who disbursed money for which no vouchers were ever obtained. Witnesses were paid, and no affidavits produced, as in the ordinary course of payments to witnesses. In fact, the whole system of statement of accounts is so jumbled that neither Mr. Howell nor the Auditor General nor the department nor the Deputy Minister of Justice, could agree in the statements they made before the committee. That is why letters and papers have been withheld from the committee, even papers that already formed part of the history of the transaction, and which at one time were on the files of the department.

Now, I want to show how important it is that the Government should not pursue a policy of postponing the meeting of the committee, a policy that must result in jamming up all the time at the end of the session with the ordinary accounts, knowing, as they knew, because they forced the continuance of this inquiry to be undertaken, that that inquiry had to be gone on with this session, and how necessary it is to afford the greatest possible expedition and despatch by calling that committee together before Friday and enabling the various witnesses to be called whose evidence would be most material.

Sir Oliver Mowat undoubtedly will be a most important witness. He was shocked at the accounts sent in. His name has been traded upon and referred to time and again in connection with this matter, but it is significant that the only opinion he gave on it, so far as the records indicate, was adverse to the manner in which the money was being taken out of the public exchequer, and that letter, though referred to in the correspondence and referred to by Mr. Howell, has not been produced. Fortunately, Sir Oliver Mowat is in a position to give an intelligent statement upon this matter, but there has been no opportunity to examine him. We want also the first part of Mr. Howell's account that has not been yet forthcoming, and we want the order of His Excellency the Governor General, made on the report of the 30th June, 1897.

How that extraordinary liberty came to be taken with the Governor General, Sir Oliver Mowat must explain to the inquisitorial committee. He must explain how it was that he came to write to His Excellency that the purpose of this $6,900 was to make advances, whereas it really went to the credit of the account of the Minister of the Interior in the bank at Ottawa, and was used to pay for advances he had made before that date and to take up his acceptances and relieve him of his liabilities in the banks of this city. It is most important to ask Sir Oliver Mowat how much he knew about this question before he put his name to that report, representing a state of facts contradicted by the evidence from beginning to end.

Then, we want some explanation of his objections. For instance, the account paid by Mr. Sifton, on the authority of that Order in Council, of $541.15 was only considered correct and regular by the Justice Department to the extent of $330.15. We require an explanation as to what became of the balance, and if it is to be repaid, as well as the liability of Mr. Sifton in this connection, and the position of this Government. I ventured the opinion before in this House—and while I would not argue it seriously, nor did I argue it then, but ventured it merely for the purpose of consideration by the members of this House—I am open to argument myself on it.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I think you are.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If Mr. Howell is to be believed that he had the personal liability fixed on Mr. Sifton, and that Mr. Sifton treated it as a personal liability until the time he was recouped by the Dominion Government, I say that it was a private obligation of Mr. Sifton, and there is not a statute or authority of this Parliament that would warrant the Government in assuming that as a public charge. If they can assume that as a public charge, I ask the hon. member for Essex whether he, for instance, can distinguish it from the case of assuming any ordinary private debt in the community as a public charge. Suppose some gentlemen were exceedingly active in attending to matters that would assist the party—ordinary matters, not pursuing a man suspected of crime—does he think that, without a vote or any explanation to this House of the item, without a Governor General's warrant explaining the reasons and purposes of it, the Government would have the legal right to pay the charges.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I certainly do.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman does not understand the responsibility of self-government. He does not understand the first principles of public expenditure, and has forgotten that not one dollar of even the Supply Bill can be appropriated by the Government of the day without the direct and express sanction of the Governor General. He has forgotten all the checks supposed to exist upon any practice of that kind, and if his view is right we are simply wasting time—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As these hon. gentlemen evidently consider we are, in pretending to take part in the parliamentary government of this country.

Their's not to reason why,
Their's but to vote and die.

Simply to do as they are told by their masters on the Treasury benches, follow blindly, shout, hoot and yell on all occasions when they are unable to justify their opinions by argument. That is their conception of their duty. I have a different conception of the duty of a member of Parliament. I propose, for instance, that no matter what the majority on the other side may be, when they attempt to take unfair advantage of this House and to treat the minority here with contempt, when they withhold returns and lock up the committees of Parliament, particularly this Public Accounts Committee, which is a body of inquisitors, according to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to let them understand they can make very little progress in this House while they are in that mood. I propose, for one member of this House of Commons, to insist on the rights of the minority. I propose to see that there is ample opportunity before the supplies proposed in this House are voted, to inquire into the past expenditure of this Government; and that inquiry must be expedited very much better than it has been according to our experience of this session, when practically all inquiries have been stopped.

Now, in regard to the evidence that is required to be brought before that committee, which, in ordinary course, will take some time, there are several subjects to be investigated. There is the statement as to the imperfect vouchers so that the taxing of the officers of the Department of Justice were bewildered to know whether these items should be charged or not. That will be found referred to on pages 14, 16, 17, 19, 20, 22, 23 and 67 of the report I hold in my hand, and that report is known as Appendix E, Sessional Papers, 1898. The reference to Sir Oliver Mowat's letters are also important.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As the hon. member for Essex (Mr. McGregor) seems to agree with me and is following this matter with some attention, I will give him the evidence on this point. I asked Mr. Hodgins, the taxing officer of the Department of Justice:

Q. Did you see a letter from Sir Oliver Mowat to Mr. Sifton, criticising the bills rendered?—A. I saw there was one on the file; yes.

Q. And I suppose the opinion of Sir Oliver Mowat in regard to the charges would have been a very material thing for you as taxing officer to consider?—A. Well, it did not affect my judgment in the least, Sir Charles, because I had looked at the bills, and I had formed my own opinion before I saw that.

That is natural enough, because the information of the Minister of Justice turned out to be subsequent to Mr. Hodgins' taxation, in which he supported the reduction.

Then, referring to the letter :

Q. Did you see it on the file or on the copy-book?—A. On the file.

By Sir Louis Davies :

Q. Was it a private or public letter?—A. It was not marked "private," but I gathered that it was.

It was a letter sent to Mr. Howell, it was a letter adverted to by Mr. Howell, it was a letter that was on the public files and not even marked private, but it was a letter the Government were ashamed to produce, or, at any rate, did not produce, in the committee, though they were asked time and again. Referring again to the letter, Mr. Hodgins is asked :

Q. You have told that it was dealing with public accounts?—A. It certainly had to do with accounts placed in my hands for taxation.

And then, again :

Q. I will read from Exhibit "F" a letter from Mr. Howell to Mr. Sifton, in which he says : "I was surprised to get your letter of the 12th, inclosing a letter from Sir Oliver Mowat, complaining of Richards & Bradshaw's bill, and also of ours." Is that the letter of Sir Oliver Mowat to which you referred this morning?—A. I do not know.

Q. At any rate, you saw a letter of that character?—A. I did, unquestionably, on the file.

This witness is also asked, on the same page from which I am quoting :

Q. Can you remember what vouchers you had or the items, witnesses' fees, including railway fares, $4,405.60, of which you allowed $4,405.60, the whole sum?—A. No. The vouchers submitted were very imperfect, and I could not make them agree with Mr. Howell's account at all.

Does the hon. member for Essex think that is a satisfactory statement?

Mr. MCGREGOR. I think you are wasting a good deal of time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) thinks I am wasting a good deal of time.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. And so you are.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And other gentlemen sitting behind the Government agree with him. What do they think of the waste of over $4,000 of public money and the paying out of money on unsatisfactory vouchers? What do they think of passing accounts in the Department of Justice or in the Public Accounts Committee where the accounts of the party sent in and the vouchers do not agree. They think, and they do not blush to affirm it, that the man who rises as a representative of the people to expose these irregularities is wasting time. I venture to say that the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will not say that. If he did, he would damn himself forever, because all that he was distinguished for in the old Parliament was for denouncing the slightest irregularity in the payment of public money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. member for North Wellington will be damned, for some time, but to make such a statement as that would involve eternal damnation. Now, let us see how the taxing master investigated the accounts that had been paid by one of the members of the Administration six months before :

Q. Did this sentence strike your eye in Exhibit "A" : "In case of the witnesses before the magistrate, I made it a point not to pay them except where they had to take railway journeys or where they had to drive long distances at great expense. In all these matters I used my own discretion. Where we could not get the witnesses without paying them I paid them. In some cases I had to pay for teams to bring them. At the assizes the Mawhinney case alone cost us over $1,500 for witnesses' fees, and yet it was the very best I could do. The witness fees paid by me amount to $4,105.60. This includes payment to Freeborn, and he had to be looked carefully after. Did the sentence strike your attention in taxing the account?

Sir Louis Davies—Who was Freeborn?

Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper—An informer.

The Witness—I remember that sentence, and it did influence me in coming to the conclusion that the amounts stated were correct.

Q. When Mr. Howell says that this included the payment to Freeborn, and he had to be looked carefully after, did you suppose it was for witness fees?

And with the information before him, deluded and deceived as he had been by these meagre statements and accounts as he had been, Mr. Hodgins says :

A. Yes ; I did not know who Freeborn was, and supposed he was a witness who had to be looked after. I did not know Freeborn was an informer.

Q. So, the information given to you was so scant that you had not the slightest information as to who Freeborn was, and the importance of looking after him and paying him generously?—A. I had not, sir.

Q. Did you attempt to get any further information than Mr. Howell's information of that outlay?—A. No.

Q. Did it not occur to you that you should, in the ordinary course, for the payment of $4,405 for witness fees? In other words, are you satisfied, in taxing accounts in connection with the statement of an agent, that he has disbursed so many hundreds or thousands of dollars?—A. Not as a rule.

Then, at a subsequent page, referring again to the letter of Sir Oliver Mowat the witnesses have been asked to search the official books :

Q. Will you be good enough to do so? The impression you left on my mind was that you saw a letter from Sir Oliver Mowat in reference to this account, criticising it. The impression you left on my mind was that you saw that on the official file.—A. I saw a letter, certainly. I think I saw it on a file of papers handed to me at the time when the accounts came up.

When he is asked to explain some other receipts, a receipt, for instance, from Sarah Jane Smith for $50 in full of extra expenses, he says :

Q. Even if you had seen that voucher, you would not have dealt with the explanation of that charge?—A. Yes, I made up my mind that with the few vouchers before me it was impossible to make these things out.

Then, we have the inclosures from the Minister of the Interior referred to on page 25, but we have not the inclosures, which ought to be produced. On pages 27, 28, 42, 44 and 29 there are important documents, books and memoranda referred to by Mr. Howell in this matter, which have not been produced, notwithstanding the subpoena that was issued commanding him to bring them. Those are papers and documents, some of which he undertook to have forwarded, but they have never been forwarded. Then, there are the letters to the Pinkertons referred to on page 29, charged for in the accounts, that would show a good deal on the main question involved. Those letters are withheld, not a single copy of them was produced before the committee. Here the Public Accounts Committee are asked to consider these accounts mentioned on page 43, and the chief party concerned is unable to produce receipts, although Mr. Howell says he has the receipts. Those receipts are not in the possession of the committee, and they should be got. Then on pages 44, 45 and 49 are important letters asked for, but they have been withheld up to the present time. I need not argue how dangerous it is, where you have written documents, to be discussing the contents of those documents without producing the originals themselves, or certified copies of them, when that can be done without any great trouble or expense. So with the different accounts. There is a second account showing a statement of $1,000 on page 65, and another one for $6,428.08; but none of these documents are forthcoming. Then, other accounts for disbursements, which were in existence, according to page 66 of Mr. Howell's evidence, are withheld. Mr. Howell's accounts showing disbursements which he has not satisfactorily explained, are also withheld. So, a memorandum in regard to witnesses; also, on pages 75 and 109, a reference to affidavits that were given before the prosecutions were begun; these have been paid for by this country, yet they were not produced, notwithstanding that an order was passed commanding Mr. Howell to bring these things with him. So, a memorandum of expenses on page 87; so payments showed by the book referred to on page 99; so a statement of those who received moneys, on page 108; so the balliff's charge, on page 110 in connection with the huge disbursements. The Minister of the Interior had the audacity to make a most unparliamentary observation to me, such as he is in the habit of indulging in; he stated that my statement was absolutely untrue, when, in discussion to-day, I said that a sentence of his letter had never been complied with, where, in July, he promised, in writing, that the money would be fully accounted for in detail by him as the officer having charge. The record shows that the only accounts ever passed in the Department of Justice in this transaction were so uncertain and irregular that the taxing officer himself could not make head or tail of them, and had to lump them together, had to do away with the ordinary checks and safeguards, and as an explanation of it, he states that he knew he was taxing an account and reducing an account that one of the Ministers of the Government had months before paid in full, and that what he was disallowing on the account of these gentlemen was being deducted from the amount paid by the Minister of the Interior. As I say, the Minister of the Interior had the audacity to get up in this House to-day, before I had examined this evidence, and pretended that he had sent an account in detail of the $10,000 odd dollars. The Auditor General never got it, the Department of Justice never got it, the Public Accounts Committee has never seen it, and if there is such an account in existence, it is the duty of the Minister of the Interior to use his influence to hasten a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, and there, for the first time, to display it. On page 115, the stenographic notes are mentioned. The hon. gentleman says that time is being wasted now. What about time being wasted day after day by the Minister of the Interior who examined Mr. Howell, as the records show, as to what was said by A, or B, or C, when there was a record that the Government should of themselves have produced, when there was a stenographic report of the evidence in these various trials? But they shelter themselves behind the report of Mr. Howell, and a report in regard to the various trials was all that was produced. Though the stenographic reports in existence could have been transcribed, not a member of the Government had ever cared to see a single line, not a member of the Government had afforded an opportunity this session for the committee to be placed in possession of that. Instead of that, they keep on day after day asking Mr. Howell to give his recollection of the charge of the judge, and his views and opinions as to what he thought he had established where the jury disagreed with him. On page 115, those stenographic notes are shown to be in existence, it is shown that they can be got if they are ordered, and they should be got. The magistrate's account and the large item referred to on page 128, where are they? The consolidated memorandum referred to on pages 120 and 121, referred to again by a reference to the bulk sum of $3,315, where is that? Are we to have an explanation of that order in detail, or, at any rate, a reasonable explanation? Then, a record of the instructions referred to on page 79. They were asked to make a search to see what the record was, and not a particle of attention was shown to that request made at the beginning of the inquiry, as will be seen on page 9.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have gone over sufficient facts, I think. I have taken a great deal of time in doing so, for I know hon. gentlemen opposite are not inclined to accept my opinions as to what evidence amounts to, evidence that has been given in a matter of this kind which, to some extent, might be regarded as a political subject. I have taken extra time to show the members of this House that I am speaking by the book. I have not made a statement to-day where I have not, even at the risk of taking up a good deal of time, given them the page or given them the language on which I founded my own statement and my own conclusions. My conclusion may be wrong in some respects. I have given you, Mr. Speaker, the evidence upon which I based it, and what I do say is this, and I want to say it in all seriousness, that outside and apart from all this extraordinary and unparalleled prevention of the ordinary happening of events, of the delaying of the ordinary times for the meeting of this most important of all committees, outside and beyond that, the Government occupies a most extraordinary position when they themselves, represented by three or four or more of their own members, undertook last session to put me practically under bonds to go on with the inquiry and finish it. It was natural that I did not wish a report to be made on the evidence given by Mr. Howell. It was natural that I, at any rate, without being considered biased or partial, should not be satisfied with the statement of the man primarily responsible in connection with the expenditure of the money, who was the chief disbursing officer. I had not the opportunity, nor would time permit last session to call the rest of the evidence or to get the rest of the documents to which I refer. In every sense of fair-play, and that is putting it perhaps on the smallest ground, but having regard to the public interest and to parliamentary government, I say it was due to us that the Government should have expedited the meeting of this important committee this session, and I say it is doubly due now that I have pressed upon them the importance and necessity of a meeting of that committee before Friday. Friday is a late day; to-morrow will be a late day, but there is Thursday, and we should meet on Thursday, Friday, Monday, Tuesday, but at any rate the meeting on the first day ought to be Thursday, instead of Friday as there are witnesses who must be got from a distance and papers which must be copied. Take that stenographic report and you will see that it will take time to prepare the copy under ordinary practice as the notes of the report, when transcribed, will cover a considerable number of typewritten pages.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

I referred last session to them as documents that we would want. If the committee had been called together to order these reports, if the committee had gone on as far as that particular point is concerned, this work might have been performed by this time and long before this, yet a considerable period must elapse before the committee can get to work regularly upon this subject, which was left over from last session. Besides there are other items left over from last session, and we are face to face with the Auditor General's Report which has been laid on the Table of the House, and the delay due to the fault of the Government serves to prevent the necessary inquiry into the public accounts of this country which was dwelt upon with such emphasis, and with the entire support of this House in 1891 by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat does not expect an extended reply or an extended address from me. It is quite clear that he has been talking against time. Allow me to intimate to my hon. friend that if he intends to follow the course that he followed the last time that he addressed this House at length, that he has only 30 minutes to catch the train for the west.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to tell the hon. gentleman that I can bear the charge that I was afraid of the hon. Minister of the Interior, but it is pretty hard to say that I am afraid of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). That is the hardest cut of all.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend commenced his speech by saying that in his extended parliamentary experience there had never been an occasion when the Public Accounts Committee was so long from being called together as during this session. Now, my hon. friend on that point is far from being correct. If he will go back to 1893 he will find that when he was in power himself the Public Accounts Committee was not called together for seven weeks after the opening of the session, and I myself was the first person to call the Government's attention to the fact of that long delay. So that in that year there was a delay almost within a few days equal to the delay of this year, but we have had an unusual length of time spent over the discussion upon the Address. Not in sixteen years has there been four weeks of the session taken up with the discussion of the Address. Hon. gentlemen opposite, one after the other, made extended speeches on the Address, and the result was that the first four weeks of the session were consumed by the discussion of that subject. Now, we know very well that the committees were not struck immediately. On hon. gentlemen opposite offering an amendment to the Address the right hon. leader of the Government moved that the Address should be discussed from day to day and no other business be taken up, and I think it is the practice that the organization of the committees does not take place until the Address is closed. A short time after the committees were struck they were called together for the purpose of organization and a chairman elected. This is the present condition; eight weeks of the session have passed, but as I said before, in 1893, seven weeks had passed before we reached the same condition in which we stand now. I want to say a few words in reference to the investigation that took place in Macdonald, Manitoba. If ever there was an incident in the history of this country where we enjoy the privileges of responsible Government, and where every man is entitled to the free, untrammelled and sacred exercise of his franchise, if ever there was an incident that deserved the most exhaustive investigation, at the hands of the Government, in which every effort could be put forward to try to catch the individuals that were guilty of the offences which were perpetrated in that province, I say it was in connection with the election in Macdonald in Manitoba. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says that there was no evidence before the Government and before Mr. Sifton to rest any charge, but that he started on a fishing expedition. It is a well known fact, it is on record in "Hansard," it was proved before the committee, that in 1897 and 1898, at least in one polling subdivision 34 men came forward and actually swore that they had voted for the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), when there were only 23 ballots in the ballot box. There were other cases of a similar character under similar conditions. If these things came to the notice of the hon. Minister of the Interior he undoubtedly did what he ought to do, what any patriotic man would do, what was right for any man to do, and what the people of this country gave him credit for doing—he took immediate steps to try to catch and punish the men guilty of these transactions. I may say, and I say it in all honesty, to my hon. friend that if he thinks he is going to wake up this country to a feeling of indignation in opposition to the hon. Minister of the Interior or the Government, for the active steps that they took upon that occasion, I can tell him, and I believe I am telling him the finer sentiment and feelings of every honest man in Canada, that he is going to make no impression upon the people of this country by adopting such a course. More than that, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman in reviving this matter, is only reviving the shame of the party to which he belongs. It is merely retailing before the House and the country, the evidence of the crimes the Conservatives resorted to, to hold themselves in power prior to 1896. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has used a rather forcible expression with regard to me, and he prophesied, if I followed in a certain line of conduct, damnation would inevitably be the result in my case.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, and he added the word "eternal," too. I have sat for eighteen years in this House in opposition to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I earnestly hope, that, after death, I will not be consigned to a place where I will everlastingly have to gaze upon the form of the hon. gentlemen (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not want you to come with me.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) exhibits a confirmed bitterness against the Minister of the Interior. He appears to have a particular delight in turning his guns on that hon. Minister. This is the second long and tiresome speech this session in which he has tried to discredit the Minister (Mr. Sifton); but let me tell him (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that he, like the Prophet Balaam, who went one time to curse bitterly, but who remained to bless; and the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), instead of injuring the Minister of the Interior, is doing him excellent service, as may be seen in the result of the West Huron and Brockville elections, the latter a hive which the Tories expected to hold for ever.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Lost by ballot frauds.

Mr. McMULLEN. He said there was a Grit brigade—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A hoodie brigade.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That brigade went from the Conservatives.

Mr. McMULLEN. He said there was a Grit brigade, and they were headed by a Minister. Let me tell the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that we never had in our ranks a Freeborn who was guilty of such crimes as that man was proved to be guilty of. And allow me to tell the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), further, that, while he now calls Freeborn a scoundrel and a blackguard, there was a time when he thought Freeborn was an excellent character. Have we not a telegram from Robert Birmingham to Nat. Boyd, dated the 20th of May, and sent from Toronto, in which Robert Birmingham, Conservative organizer, tells Nat. Boyd, referring to this man Freeborn:

He was a first-class man in North Bruce.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) to be candid. He knows there was no legal evidence of any such telegram being sent, and he knows that Mr. Birmingham denied sending the telegram.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) permit me to say, that I have the original telegram in my possession?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Although the hon. gentleman from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) now says, that he has the original telegram in his possession, he sat in the committee of inquiry during the whole of last session, and he never volunteered to go under oath and prove he had the original telegram.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Permit me to explain, that I thought I had returned the telegram to Mr. Howell, who gave it to me, but, in looking over the papers in my vault a few months ago, I discovered the original telegram.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The original telegram cannot be proved by that statement of my hon. friend, as he will be advised by the Solicitor General, who sits beside him. The only proof in that statement is, that he had a telegram in his possession which somebody gave him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I appeal for corroboration of my statement to the legal opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies).

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) stated, that only one conviction had been secured out of the many prosecutions, but my hon. friend must know, that in almost every one of these cases, the judge charged pointedly against the prisoner.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have the evidence here, that the judge charged against the prisoners, but the jury, as is the rule, was composed of Grits and Tories, and so they disagreed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Grits were for conviction every time.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not a fact, as stated by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that these prisoners were exonerated. The jury disagreed, and they escaped the punishment they deserved, and the punishment which the judge held should be inflicted upon them. As to vouchers not being produced, I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he ever knew that money was spent by a Canadian Government previously without producing vouchers. My hon. friend remembers, as I do, that, when Sir John Macdonald was called upon to produce vouchers for the expenditure of secret service money, he refused to do so, and to this day

Mr. McMULLEN.

Parliament knows nothing about that expenditure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And there was a secret service vote at that time, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) knows.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt that, if Sir John Macdonald was justified in taking the course he did, just as I believe that, in this case, the Minister of the Interior and those associated with him were justified. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was fighting to protect the rights of the people of this country. He was fighting to protect the safety of the ballot, and, in doing so, he spent that money with good intent, and the people of the country will endorse his action. Now, this is the third session this matter has been brought up in the House, and, in bringing it up again, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) shows that he has nothing else to charge this Government with, and so he tries to create a mountain out of a molehill. Why, after a five hours' speech, did he close his remarks simply with moving the adjournment of the House? Why had he not the manliness to formulate a motion condemning the Government? Why did he close his long and loud speech, characterized, as it was, by fire, and brimstone, and fume, by simply saying: Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn? Why did he not formulate his charge, and challenge a vote of the House, and then he would have been able to say to the country, that he had tried to get a condemnation of the Government for the wrong, and had taken a vote of the whole House on the subject. But the hon. gentleman did not take that course. He simply wished to consume the time of the House, and he has done that very successfully.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows very well that I could not move any other motion.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend must admit that he was allowed every opportunity before the Public Accounts Committee to have a thorough and exhaustive investigation of that whole matter. There was not a witness asked for whom the Government did not make every possible effort to obtain. One witness asked for could not be found; but every other witness the hon. gentleman wished was brought before the committee at very great expense. The Government and the Minister of the Interior were so anxious to meet the hon. gentleman's wishes that on his mentioning the name of any man he wanted to be summoned as a witness, a telegram was sent at once to get him and bring him before the committee with as little delay as possible.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We nearly had to arrest Mr. Howell.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman was given every possible opportunity, and he said he intended to continue the investigation at the next session of Parliament. The reason he made that promise was simply this—and it was the opinion of every member of that committee—that he had so utterly and absolutely failed in proving any wrong-doing on the part of the Minister of the Interior that he wanted to let himself down easily. If he intended to carry out that promise, why did he not make this Chamber ring within the second or third day of the session, with his demands that the Public Accounts Committee should meet to continue that investigation? But he did not want that. He wants simply to use this old chestnut in order that he may speak five hours and take up the time of this House. He had it laid away, and he has trotted it out because he is not prepared to go on with any other business or to let the Government go on. Now, the hon. gentleman said that Mr. Howell did not bring his books with him and did not bring Mr. Shank. Well, the hon. gentleman did not ask Mr. Howell to bring his books or Mr. Shank; but after Mr. Howell came here, he found that it might be better to have his books and to have Mr. Shank.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman must know that the order of the committee was that he should bring with him all books, papers, and documents; and that order he disobeyed.

Mr. McMULLEN. He was not ordered to bring his books.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, yes. The hon. gentleman who is speaking wrote the telegram. It is printed in this report.

Mr. McMULLEN. There is one thing certain—Mr. Boyd never appeared, and the hon. gentleman never asked that he should be subpoenaed. I wonder if he is going to have Mr. Boyd subpoenaed this time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, we are going to have them all.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman never mentioned his name or said that he wanted him. In fact, I think he was ashamed to mention his name. Now, Sir, I would say to my hon. friend that this complaint is getting old. However, if he is disposed to go into a general housecleaning politically, we have no objection whatever. The Government have been in power three years, and this is the only thing on which they have been able to make anything like a charge, and the hon. gentleman claims that the Government have spent some $20,000, of which $10,000 has been paid by the country without the sanction of Parliament. He also charges that the hon. Minister of the Interior has been very kind to his friends in Manitoba, that this money was handed out by him from a feeling of kindness and generosity towards his friends to enable them to fill their pockets.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend says "hear, hear." Allow me to tell him what he did himself. My hon. friend was a member of a firm in Halifax before he became a member of the Government. He became a member of the Government as Minister of Justice on the 21st of December, 1894; but when he was sworn in he did not forget his friends. In 1894, the firm of Borden & Ritchie drew for legal services, $4,856.70.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Which they earned; but they had no detectives or fishing expeditions.

Mr. McMULLEN. That was in 1894. He was sworn into office on the 21st December, 1894.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In 1888.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, in 1894 he was sworn in as Minister of Justice.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was not a member of that firm after 1888.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not saying that my hon. friend was; but he was sworn in as Minister of Justice in 1894.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But I was Minister of Marine in 1888, and I left that firm then.

Mr. McMULLEN. Let us see what this firm of his drew.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not a firm of mine. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has no right, I submit, to misrepresent me or any other member of this House. He spoke of a firm of which I was a member in 1894, and I wish to state to this House that I was not a member of that firm any more than he was after 1888.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am not charging the hon. gentleman with having been a member of that firm in 1894. I am charging him, however, with not forgetting his friends after he was sworn in as Minister of Justice. In 1895, the firm of Borden & Ritchie drew from the Department of Justice $10,602.86, and in 1896, $10,944.48; or in two years it drew through the department where my hon. friend was Minister of Justice, $21,547.51.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That firm sent in vouchers for every dollar, and all the business was transacted on the open files of the Department of Justice, under the authority of the Department of Justice. Nothing was secret; there was no detectives, no brothers-in-law, no cousins or relatives of any other kind.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend feels a little irksome about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not a bit.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend must not forget that he has a record as well as some other members of this House. My hon. friend must not feel a little chafed when those things come up, because I am stating facts, as he will find if he turns up the Auditor General's Report. When he was Minister, he was favourable to his friends, as I think this item will show. I am not saying that his friends got the money for nothing, or did not produce vouchers, but am simply pointing out that there was a good deal of friendly feeling out of which that particular firm secured about $5,000 a year more after the hon. gentleman became Minister of Justice than they did previously.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I wish to correct that statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I rise to a point of order. I say, that the hon. gentleman is bound to accept my statement on a personal matter, and not leave it, as he has put it. He insinuates, that, after I became Minister of Justice, a legal firm with which I had been connected in the year 1888, got in 1894 $5,000 more per year than it was in the habit of receiving before I became Minister of Justice. I wish to deny that statement absolutely.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). A denial is not a point of order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The statement was a reflection on myself.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to make any personal reflection.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was there not an insinuation against my personal character in what he said?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am glad, Sir, that you did not see it; I was a little sensitive.

Mr. McMULLEN. In order to prove that I am right, let me read the figures, which I have taken from the public accounts. This firm was paid the following amounts in the following years:—

|            |            |
|------------|------------|
| 1890 ..... | $2,178 46 |
| 1891 ..... | 7,121 28   |
| 1892 ..... | 6,602 60   |
| 1893 ..... | 6,722 62   |

In 1894, the year before my hon. friend became Minister of Justice, they got $4,855.70.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was the year I became Minister of Justice.

Mr. McMULLEN.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows well, that he has not the right to interrupt except with the permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have the right to correct a statement which is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. No hon. gentleman has the right to deny a statement made by the gentleman who has the floor, without his consent.

Mr. McMULLEN. My hon. friend is disposed to challenge the accuracy of my figures?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not a bit.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can assure him, that they were taken from the Auditor General's Report, and, if he chooses to spend the time in the Library, he can in fifteen minutes supply himself with the same figures. In 1895 the amount was raised to $10,602.76, and in 1896 it was increased to $10,944.42.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I was not the Minister of Justice in 1896.

Mr. McMULLEN. During a part of 1896.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You were in and out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The expenditure was while I was out.

Mr. McMULLEN. I might add to what my hon. friend says, that he is now absolutely out. The entire sum drawn in those seven years by this firm was $49,637.84.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. What Borden was that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Militia, I think.

Mr. McMULLEN. No; the hon. gentleman sits behind the hon. member for Pictou. Another question the hon. gentleman raised was with regard to the refusal to submit the names of those parties from whom Mr. Howell had got information of the irregularities. The hon. gentlemen urged persistently, that these men should be exposed, and their lives, and property, and safety jeopardized in the section where they lived, by exposing them to the vengeance of those villains who had stuffed the ballot-boxes and would stop at nothing to revenge themselves on those who had exposed their rascality. I held, and conscientiously held, on that occasion, as I do now, that it would be unjust and unfair to insist that these men should be subjected to the vengeance of these villains, whose rascality they had brought to light, and who would, no doubt, use every means to whet their desire for revenge. There are many instances in our statutes where men who give information, are protected by not being compelled to disclose their names. In our license system in Ontario, the informer who tells the chief inspector the name of any one who breaks the license law, is not compelled to give evidence, and in such cases it is well that the law should protect these men. Otherwise, you would prevent exposures being made. If you were to publish the names of these men who had brought to light these scandalous transactions, you would prevent similar exposures being made in other constituencies.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Apply that to the Yukon.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman need not make another seven hours' speech on that subject. By the one he did make, I can tell my hon. friend, that he neither secured popularity for himself or strength for his party. The best answer to the long tirade of the hon. gentleman is to point to the way in which the administration of the Yukon has been conducted by the Minister of the Interior. That hon. Minister has done the very best he could in the interests of the people of this country by trying to secure a percentage of the wealth discovered, and by showing a balance on the right side of the ledger, as a result of his administration. If the hon. gentleman wants an answer to the charge he made against Mr. Walsh, let me tell him, that, in the history of this Parliament, since confederation down to the present day, there is not another instance of a member of Parliament rising in his place and making such a charge against the private character of any man as the hon. gentleman levied against Major Walsh. It was disgraceful on the part of the hon. gentleman to shield himself behind his privilege as a member of Parliament, instead of making his charges outside, where he could be called to account for them.

Mr. WALLACE. I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman is referring to a past debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman has not the right to refer to a previous debate, and besides must confine himself to the question of the calling together of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was endeavouring to do so, but wandered a little upon the subject, having been led astray by my hon. friend, whose line of argument I was following. I, however, have only been once called to order for digressing from the question before the Chair, and my hon. friend was called to order two or three times, so that I have two or three times yet to be called to order before I catch up with him.

Another thing he referred to was the letter of Sir Oliver Mowat, which, he says, was taken from the files of the Department of Justice. My hon. friend should have some respect for the officers of the Department of Justice, who, I believe, are largely friends of his own, and decent, respectable men.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. McMULLEN. And when the hon. gentleman charges that the letter has been virtually taken, or stolen, from the files of that department, he is making a serious reflection on these men. The Minister of the Interior has given his word of honour, that he knew nothing about it, and did not even see it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Oh, the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) knows perfectly well that he has the right to speak only with the permission of the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Have I not the right, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am asking for the Speaker's ruling. Have I the right or have I not the right in my place in this House to ask an hon. gentleman who is speaking whether he will consent to my correcting him in a statement of facts?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not obliged to answer the question, but I may say this: That I understood by what the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) said that he wished to continue his speech.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think the Minister of the Interior stated that he knew nothing of it—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not a syllable.

Mr. McMULLEN. I was led to understand that that was the statement made. I believe that is the fact. However, the hon. gentleman should not be so ready to cast reflections upon these men in the departments. I do not think they deserved that at his hands. Another question is as to having Sir Oliver Mowat as a witness. But my hon. friend said nothing about that last year. Sir Oliver Mowat could have been summoned before the committee last year without any trouble. He could have appeared before the committee and been examined. But the hon. gentleman did not choose then to subpoena him. In his speeches upon this and similar matters, the hon. gentleman makes no impression upon the country. I have watched with considerable interest the course of my hon. friend in this House, and I have watched the course of the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). Both appear to be loaded up the same way—with a bitter, determined opposition to the Minister of the Interior, ready for a never-ending trade against the Government with all sorts of expressions intended to belittle the Ministers. Well, my hon. friend will find, with the experience of the last two ridings in which elections have been held that the people of this country are not taking stock in these things. Some poetry has been indulged in by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I may be pardoned if I give them a line or two that I think states clearly the opinion of the people of this country with regard to the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House and the hon. leader of the Opposition. The people of this country are prepared to say :

Of Tupper young and Tupper old,
Two belted knights of the Tory fold ;
Of Tupper schemes and Tupper bluff—
Thank the Lord, we've had enough.

The best evidence of the fact that is the feeling of the country is the answer they have received in the by-election. I need not detain the House any longer. I think that in my rambling remarks I have answered all that my hon. friend has said, and I hope he will follow my good example and make his speech within proper limits instead of occupying five hours.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). If there is any hon. member of this House who ought to be slow to rise in defence of such transactions as are here called in question, it is the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)—a man whose record for fourteen years is before this country as one of the greatest sticklers for economy and the correct administration of affairs, and the expenditure of public money under proper regulations and restrictions. When hon. gentlemen opposite were in Opposition, no man took up more of the valuable time of this House than he, and no man was louder in his condemnation of extravagance. But now that he is supporting those who have charge of public affairs, he is the first to come to the rescue when a transaction requires explanation. I asked myself, when he was giving the very delicate lecture he has given as to the reason for it, and I can only presume that it is due to the fact that he has failed to secure that which he thought his ability and standing in his party entitled him to, and, having failed, he is endeavouring to earn a seat in the Upper Chamber, which he was accustomed to speak of as a place for old women. What the hon. gentleman was pleased to call argument was no argument at all. It reminds me of an explanation given by a celebrated professor of chemistry when asked what he would define chemistry to be. He said: You take an effervescent and add a deliquescent; this causes a precipitation which is a conglomeration, and amounts to a demonstration. The hon. gentleman's logic is about as clear as that. As to his poetry, I can only say that there is no danger of his being chosen as poet laureate of this country. He started out with the statement that if there was a case that deserved the most searching scrutiny and inquiry it was this of the Manitoba election frauds. And all that was said with regard to the illegality of the expenditure in carrying out this searching inquiry, he set aside by saying that in his opinion the expenditure was justified, making no reference to the fact that it was irregular and illegal. He thought that such an expenditure was justified because this case of the Manitoba election frauds was the worst case he had ever heard of. What did he give as an illustration? The fact, that in one polling subdivision so many voters had voted for Mr. Rutherford, and, when the ballots were counted, there were found to be so many less. That was practically all. I wondered at the time, if the hon. member was aware of the fact, that only recently, in the West Huron election, in one polling subdivision, where 43 electors had made affidavit that they voted for Mr. McLean, when the ballots were counted in that subdivision, there were found to be only 30. What had become of the others? If there ever was a case that deserved a searching inquiry, it was that of the alleged election frauds in Manitoba; but here is a parallel case, a much worse case, and yet the hon. member has not a word to say in advocacy of a searching inquiry. Take another polling subdivision, where 50 electors made a solemn affidavit that they voted for Mr. McLean, and, if it could be proven that they had made a false affidavit, they could be prosecuted for perjury. But, when the ballots were counted in that polling subdivision, there were found to be only 40 votes for Mr. McLean. Is not the West Huron case as bad, if not worse, than the Manitoba case? Yet the hon. member for North Wellington says not one word in condemnation of the frauds in West Huron; he does not ask for any inquiry, he does not ask for any expenditure of public money to be made in conducting a searching investigation into those frauds. Yet he justifies the expenditure of public money for the purpose of going on a fishing inquiry in Manitoba. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman, what is the result of all that inquiry? Simply that there was one conviction. After the inquiry had extended over several months, after examining witnesses by the dozen, and spending nearly $19,000, they only managed to secure one conviction, and that was scarcely worth the name. But here is a case that is far worse, and the hon. member for North Wellington says not a word about it. He made another statement. He tried to draw a red herring across the track and divert attention to something else. He asks: Did he (the hon. member for Picton) ever hear of money being spent without producing vouchers? He cites the case of some expenditure of secret service money that was voted by this House for that purpose, when no member in this House knows better than the hon. gentleman, that in such cases information and vouchers are never given to the House. He knows that, in the nature of things, it would be unwise and fruitless to use money for that purpose, if the information concerning it was made public. Yet he cites that case as a parallel to the Manitoba case. There is no comparison whatever between the cases. Then, he asks: Why did not the hon. gentleman move a motion of want of confidence in the Government, instead of moving the adjournment of the House? The hon. gentleman knows well, that that is the only motion my hon. friend could make. He knows, that he could not move a motion of want of confidence in the Government at this stage. But he endeavours to deceive the country by that statement, and assumes that, if my hon. friend did not avail himself of the right to move a motion of want of confidence, it was because he was not able to make good his contention. If the hon. gentleman did not mean that, what did he mean? I say, it is unworthy of an hon. gentleman of this House to advance such an argument, in face of the fact that he knows better, or, as an old parliamentarian, he ought to know better. But he said, that to let his friends down easy. Now, the next statement he made was, that Mr. Howell was not ordered to bring papers, books and vouchers with him. That is the statement of a man who was chairman of that committee, and he deliberately falsified the records before this House; at least, he either makes his statement in absolute ignorance of what he ought to know, or without taking the trouble to look up the records. I drew his attention to the fact, that the order to Mr. Howell was to bring these along with him, and he emphatically denied it. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was himself the chairman of the committee, and I have here the order, which he sent himself:

H. M. Howell, Q.C., Winnipeg.

Take notice that you are hereby summoned and required to appear at Ottawa forthwith, and give evidence before the Public Accounts Committee, House of Commons, respecting accounts relating to ballot-box prosecutions, and to bring with you all letters, books, papers, documents relating to said prosecutions and accounts in your possession or under your control.

What does the hon. member for North Wellington say to that? I think he has a right to get up and apologize to this House for a statement so unworthy, made, as I say, either in ignorance, or else designedly to mislead the House. I am charitable enough to believe, that he made it in absolute ignorance, because it is said, that some people will step in where angels fear to tread. That order was signed by the chairman of the committee, at least it was his duty to sign it. He went on to speak of the amount of money spent by the Justice Department, and the amount of money received by a firm of which the ex-Minister of Justice was at one time a member. Now, if he did not intend to lead the country to believe that the ex-Minister of Justice was a member of the firm at the time they received this money, what impression did he intend to convey? He was called to task for it, but still he went on talking, and did not withdraw his statement. He went on to say, that so much public money was received by that firm, but was it alleged that a dollar of this money was not spent properly, or was not authorized to be spent, or that the accounts were not taxed? Not a word of it. But what are the allegations in this case? That this money was spent improperly, that there were no vouchers, that there was no proper explanation forthcoming, and no legal authority for the expenditure. That is the reason why it was challenged in the Public Accounts Committee, as we had a proper right to challenge it. Now, what is the Public Accounts Committee for? It is for the purpose of inquiring into the expenditure of public money. The Auditor General may check the expenditures and block them, but he is frequently overruled by the Treasury Board. But, though they may overrule him, they have always before their eyes the knowledge that the expenditures may be inquired into by the Public Accounts Committee, and it is the duty of that committee to make such inquiries, where they think expenditures have been improperly made. They make inquiries in order to lay the facts bare before the country, so that the country may judge who is at fault. The Auditor General did not check this expenditure, therefore, it was the duty of the Public Accounts Committee to do so. It is said that this committee is not called together at the proper time. When you consider that the Auditor General's Report is a volume of about some 2,000 pages, and when you consider that the Public Accounts Committee has got to scrutinize every item of expenditure in that large volume, you will understand what an enormous work they have before them, and how long a time it will take them to do it properly. And then when we remember the fact that two months of this session have gone by, and that the Public Accounts Committee has not been called together to enable us to inquire into a single item, I say the country will see how impossible it is for us to exercise that check that we ought to have over the expenditures of this Government by doing our duty in that committee. The committee has not been called together, though the House has been in session for two months. Now, there is another reason, in my judgment, why this committee should have been called together at an earlier date than it has been. This question engaged the attention of this committee last session, and it was decided that we should continue the inquiry at the earliest opportunity this session; therefore, we ought to have been given the earliest opportunity of continuing this inquiry. I remember very well when the committee made its last report, signed by J. McMullen, chairman, by the hon. member for North Wellington. That report says :

The committee have had under consideration an item of $10,964.41 to Archibald & Howell, J. D. Cameron and W. E. Perdue for legal services and expenses in connection with prosecutions for election frauds in Manitoba (including $4,000 transferred from unforeseen expenses), as set forth under the heading "Miscellaneous Justice—North-west Territories," on page 1—7 of the Report of the Auditor General for the year ended 30th June, 1897; and in connection therewith have examined witnesses under oath, and for the information of the House report herewith the evidence given by such witnesses and the exhibits filed during the said examination, so that the inquiry may be dealt with and continued at the first available opportunity at the next session of Parliament.

That was the purpose for which that report was made. The committee refused to report findings upon the evidence, notwithstanding the fact that it was supported by the hon. gentleman's friends very strongly and very excitedly, but the committee refused to report findings in the case; they agreed only to report the evidence until such time as the inquiry was brought to an end. What was the purpose for which this report was put in?

So that the inquiry may be dealt with and continued at the first available opportunity at the next session of Parliament.

Now, we are asking why we are not allowed the right to continue that investigation at the first available opportunity. Though we have been here for two months we have not yet had an opportunity to continue that inquiry. I very distinctly remember the contention was made before the committee that my hon. friends did not intend to continue that inquiry. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) pledged his word as a man and pledged his honour as a member of Parliament that he would continue this inquiry at the first available opportunity this session. But the contention was that it was not the intention to go on with the inquiry at the succeeding session. We have been hoping for that opportunity up to the present time. This House has been in session for two months, and in the ordinary course of events we should finish the business in a few weeks more. How can we bring witnesses from Manitoba and continue the investigation as we should do. If this session ends in a short time there is no time to continue that inquiry or go into other items of expenditure with which this committee should deal. There is no time, and the hon. member for North Wellington and the hon. Minister of the Interior, who is not in his place, and their friends, will be held accountable for the delay which has taken place in connection with calling the committee together. They will be held accountable for the fact that this inquiry has not been gone on with, although they professed to be desirous that it would go on, into this unwise and illegal expenditure. This is only one item amongst hundreds and thousands within the two lids of the Auditor General's Report that we ought to deal with if we are doing our duty to the people of this country, and as we have a right to do with which we are not able to do because this committee is not called together. We have hundreds and thousands of items to examine into, but before we can get a hundredth part of the papers we require, this House will, in all probability, be prorogued, and it will be impossible for us to do our duty in that regard. Then, we are justified in claiming that this committee should have been brought together earlier, and we are justified in coming to the conclusion that there is a determined effort on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to prevent this inquiry, in taking the stand which they do to-day. It was said, in reference to another question in this House, that we do not want any fishing inquiries. The whole tenor of the information we gained in this matter was that it was a fishing inquiry from first to last. There were no direct allegations, no specific charges made; we only had it stated that so-and-so happened, and "I believe I can prove it." There is another thing which I think is not only discreditable to the Government, but is entirely out of keeping with what one would expect from a responsible Minister in this House. Here are charges laid especially against one Minister on that side of the House, and yet most of the time he is not here to listen to them. He does not deign to attend to his duties in this House so much as to remain in his seat and listen to the information that is being given. He seems to be perfectly oblivious to the rights of the House and of the country in regard to the fair discharge of his duty. This is also the case with most of the hon. Ministers on that side of the House. When the most serious allegations are made against their management of public affairs, they are away attending to their business elsewhere, entirely indifferent to what is going on in this House, and in this respect treating the House and the country with disrespect. It is their business, surely, to be present when discussion is proceeding relative to the various departments of government. It is humiliating to the country, and not creditable to the Government of the day to find that so many hon. Ministers are absent when these important questions are being discussed. They will not listen to the discussion; they do not hear what is being said, and so far as we know, they do not take the trouble to read up "Hansard" afterwards to keep themselves informed as to what is going on in this House. This is not what the country or what the House expects from Ministers, and it is not what they are entitled to. I can only say, as I said before, that in my humble judgment, these hon. gentlemen will be held responsible by the country for the delay in bringing the Public Accounts Committee together. Hon. gentlemen have created the impression that they have something to keep in the dark, otherwise they would have been more prompt in calling this committee together and giving us an opportunity of inquiring into all these expenditures, but so long as they maintain the position that they are taking to-day, they are occupying a most discreditable and a most disgraceful position as the party of Government. But I am not surprised, because their whole record has been one of inconsistency from the first to the last. No better example of that fact could be had than the illustration we have had given by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). It is on a par with many incidents that have occurred in this House during the last session or two, but the sooner hon. gentlemen opposite learn that they are the servants of the people and not the masters of the people, the better it will be for them. The sooner they learn that it is the right and duty of hon. members of this House and especially of the Opposition to inquire into the expenditure of every item within the two lids of the Auditor General's Report, the better it will be for this country.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). As there seems to be some doubt on the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite; at all events, on the mind of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), as to the character of this Mr. Freeborn, I should like to explain what I know about him. A telegram has been quoted from Mr. Robert Birmingham, saying that Freeborn was a good man in North Bruce. I do not know on what authority Mr. Birmingham made that statement, but he could not have been very well informed when he sent that telegram, because the character of Freeborn in North Bruce at that time was simply this: That he had defrauded a number of his best friends and the best friends of his family. He was dealing in farm produce, and he had gone to some of his friends and had borrowed $50, from one, and $100 from another, and $150 from another—I know some of the people quite well from whom he borrowed the money—telling them he wanted it only for a few hours to pay for a load of oats; and then, he went across the line with the money and disappeared. That was the character of Mr. Freeborn in North Bruce at that time. So far as politics were concerned, he was not a man in whom I personally had ever placed the slightest reliance; at least, had not had for a long time. I do not think there can be any doubt as to what sort of a man Mr. Freeborn was.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the House votes on this question, I think it is nothing less than my duty that I should call the attention of the House and the country to rather an odd state of affairs. We have had an address given this afternoon by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), an address of a good deal of length, going over a large amount of material, most of which was evidence sworn to by witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee. I have listened to the presentation of the case by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I was also a member of that committee during the investigation, and I have not the least hesitation in saying from my place in the House, that a more outrageous, a more unauthorized, and a less defensible piece of business I have never heard canvassed in this House since I have been a member of it. Mr. Speaker, I say that in all calmness and in all coolness, and yet, after this presentation of the question, there is not a single member of the Government that ventures to interpose either an apology or a defence with reference to it. Is that creditable to parliamentary government in this country? My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has been a member of a Government, he is a man of character; he is a man of knowledge, and he has made his statement as a member of the House, and what he stated cannot be denied, so far, at least, as I have been able to follow it, as regards its main allegations. The Government sits and listens and turns away before the country and before Parliament. It takes no notice. Why? The Government may think it is so strong in this House that it does not need to take notice of these things. The Government may run away with the idea, that the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) evidently runs away with: That the Liberal members are the people of Canada, and that when the hon. member for North Wellington says that any thing is right, the people will believe it is so, and the people will condone every lapse. He thinks he is speaking for the whole Dominion of Canada. There never was a greater mistake. Has any Minister or member on that side of the House risen to deny one thing? Can they deny, and dare they now get up and deny this proposition: That as far as the prosecution of the law in that case is concerned, it was the duty, the whole duty, and the duty only of the provincial Government of Manitoba, and of none other. Not one of them will deny that. Will a single member of the Government get up and state, that their proceeding was regular; that even if it had been the duty of this Government to have prosecuted, that it was regular, that a private party should commence it, a man who was not a member of this House nor a member of this Government should undertake to hire his lawyers, set the modus operandi going, without a vote of Parliament, and without the authorization of an Order in Council or anything of the kind, spend thousands and tens of thousands of dollars, and after it was all done, ask for an Order in Council "for the payment of advances," which was a lie upon its very face. They were not advances. These men had been paid. They had been paid out of private funds; they had been paid in pursuance of private orders to conduct the case given by a man of the name of Sifton, not the Attorney General of the province of Manitoba, and not a member of this Government. They had drawn on him, and kited notes to carry this thing through, and the Department of Justice knew no more about the prosecutions than the man in the moon. Is there a single member of the Government sitting before me, who will rise and say, that this was right or proper? Sir, there is not one of them who would have the hardihood to defend it. They had no more right to take that money out of the treasury, than they have to take it out of the public moneys of Canada for the prosecution of a criminal in Siberia. The Premier who promised that private gentleman in Manitoba, that he could go ahead and incur tens of thousands of dollars of expense, and that he would see it was paid out of the Dominion treasury, had no more right to make that promise than he would have the right to make a promise, that he would take Dominion money to bail Siberian exiles out of their exile in the wilds of Asiatic Russia; not a bit more. Every principle of responsible government was outraged by the right hon. gentleman when he made that promise. These prosecutions if they had gone on at all, under the Dominion Government, should have been carried on by the Department of Justice and by no other department, but the Premier put them secretly in the hands, first, of a private individual in the province of Manitoba, and afterwards reimbursed him for what he alone was responsible for, and the Premier did it under cover, and behind the back of Council, and behind the back of the Governor General. Will any gentleman say that such is a proper way for Liberals to administer the Government of this country? Why, Sir, that individual wrote to the Prime Minister that he had indisputable evidence that one of the greatest crimes of the century had just been perpetrated in the province of Manitoba, and then, after Pinkerton inquiries in the province of Manitoba under one of the ablest lawyers in that province, it was found out that he had not a particle of evidence. That individual is the man who is now the Minister of the Interior. That is the man who is now Minister of the Interior, and to whom the right hon. gentleman promised, on a statement like that, unlimited credit on the funds of this Dominion and the taxes of the people of this Dominion; and yet not one of the Ministers thinks that it is at all incumbent upon him to defend the Government or themselves from an act of that kind. The member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is put up for a defence, and it was pitiful to see the defence that hon. member put up in this case. The hon. member for North Wellington, when he was in Opposition, was a strong man, because he consistently pursued a certain line. Being a critic and in Opposition, he stood for what was right and regular through and through, and he gained a certain amount of strength by being consistent. He had to rise to-night and go against every principle that for years on this side of the House he had advocated and stood for, and he had to make the lamest kind of defence for the Government—not by presenting arguments, but by certain quotations of bad rhyme and certain statements, which, when they came to be answered by my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule), who sits at my right, were found to be exactly the opposite of what he declared they were. That is no defence of the Government, and the Government have made no defence. Have the Government heard the hon. member for North Wellington make any defence of that statement of expenses incurred by Mr. Wade, which was read this afternoon by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), amounting to some $1,500, which he was paid for almost no services at all—paid by whom? Paid by the private individual Mr. Sifton; paid before the Minister of Justice knew that this thing was going on at all; paid before there was any Order in Council authorizing it; paid before there was any vote in Parliament authorizing any expenditure of that kind; paid on the hope that it could be all filched afterwards from the funds of this Dominion. But the self-respect of one old man stood in the way, and Sir Oliver Mowat said: "No, not for $1,500; if anything is to be paid, let it be $600, which is a decent taxing of the bill." That is the extent to which this gentleman who is now called Minister of the Interior would put his hand into the public chest to pay his favourites for work they never did, for services they never performed, on the statement of Sir Oliver Mowat, the Minister of Justice. But that hon. gentleman, who skulks away from this House when his department and himself are attacked, who seldom has the courtesy to answer a charge that is brought against him, or an indictment of his own personal work or that of his department, unless he is shamed into it by his colleagues—that hon. gentleman's idea of honour, of public honour, was to pay Mr. Wade, a favourite of his, $1,500 for $600 worth of work. And he hoped he would be able to filch the whole $1,500 out of the treasury of the Dominion, and he would have done it if all the members of the Government had been like the gentlemen sitting before me, not one of whom would raise his voice against it. It was a decent, honest, honourable man from the province of Ontario, who, when at last it was brought to his notice, said: "$1,500 is thieving; $600 pays all Mr. Wade ought to have." But he got the $1,500; who paid the rest of it? I know who did not intend to pay it. I know who intended to pay it on a certain promissory letter written by the Premier of Canada. Somebody must have paid it. Mr. Wade got it. Mr. Wade never earned it.

And yet these hon. gentlemen think that is a right method of administration. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who used to pose as a man of honour and strictness in the administration of public affairs, thinks that is a proper method of administering public affairs. Does he think so? Let him rise in his place in this House and honestly make that statement. He cannot do it, Sir; he dare not do it. He knows too well what is right; and it is the veriest subterfuge to talk of this being authorized by a sub-committee which never reported to Council, or, if it reported to Council, never had the thing authorized by an Order in Council signed by the Governor General. My hon. friend put that forth to the Committee on Public Accounts as a justification why it should be done. Who is a sub-committee of Council? What right have they to authorize anything in the way of any expenditure of public money, especially without a vote, and against all precedent and all right? They are no more than three men on this side of the House would be. The executive of this country is the Council of the country, and the Governor General, and their decision and their signature is necessary to the authorization of an expenditure. Yet, Sir, the right hon. gentleman who now sits before me, is the gentleman who promised a private individual, against right, without a vote, without the authority of Parliament, without consulting his colleagues, that he would put his hand into the public till to an unlimited amount to oblige a certain gentleman of the name of Sifton in the province of Manitoba, who wanted to follow up a party advantage against his opponents. The right hon. gentleman says that he is a Liberal of the old Liberal school. Great heavens! has there been a Liberal standing in the English Parliament since they had constitutional government in Great Britain, who would promise a thing like that or do a thing like that? They would consider themselves eternally and everlastingly disgraced if they ever made such a promise or aided in carrying out such a promise as that. But this bland gentleman sits and smiles, and thinks he has done a cute and wonderful thing when he promised Mr. Clifford Sifton, not the Attorney General of Manitoba, and said: "Go ahead; take a party advantage of the Tories, and I will stand at your back, no matter how much you want." And Mr. Clifford Sifton does what? He hires Mr. Wade, and tells him he may travel in the smoking car at $40 a day, stay at hotels and charge for it, and that he may put in a bill of $1,500 for $600 worth of work. Mr. Clifford Sifton, not a private individual, but a member of the Government, keeps this entirely away from the Department of Justice, where it belongs, keeps it entirely away from Parliament, though Parliament sits, keeps it entirely away from the Governor General in Council, though it is there for him, and pays these enormous bills, relying on the promise of the complacent Premier that he shall have the money; and he pays Mr. Wade $1,500 for what Sir Oliver Mowat declares, as Minister of Justice, is not worth more than $600. And yet they consider that they have no answer to make to the country. In one sense they have no answer they can make conscientiously to the country, but in another sense they have an answer they ought to make to their own consciences and self-respect and this House which faces them and the country they will have to face by and by.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). We have heard a great deal of sound, and fume and fury during the last few minutes, and witnessed a great deal of simulated passion, and to one inexperienced in parliamentary life, it might appear as if there were some truth or sincerity in the passionate statement which the hon. gentleman has just made, but those who have experience in parliamentary life know that the hon. gentleman's assumption of earnestness, his simulated passion during the last quarter of an hour, is only a miserable attempt to escape from the very awkward position in which he and his friends stand. Why, last session they invited an inquiry into the conduct of the Government, and charged the Government, or some member of it, with improper conduct by the improper appropriation of certain public funds. The ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) took charge of the prosecution, and spent the whole of last session dragging in witnesses from every part of the Dominion to the Public Accounts Committee. As the ex-chairman (Mr. McMullen) has stated, he was given every scope to draw on the public treasury as he liked and bring what witnesses he liked and whenever he liked. And after having exhausted his witnesses and his evidence, he found himself at the close of the sitting of that Public Accounts Committee in the pitiable position that he had not a man behind him of his own party. He had failed and failed miserably, and what did he do? In order to cover his miserable failure, he asked that the investigation should not be closed. He said: Do not close the report now, but give me another chance, and at the next session, I will bring forward more evidence and prove my case. I have failed now, it is true, but give me another chance next session, and I will do it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not correct.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is quite correct.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I deny it absolutely.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the position the hon.

gentleman stood in when told by the Postmaster General that he must prove his case. Then he undertook to do it, and his undertaking is in writing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman cannot put words into my mouth which I did not utter. He says that I told the committee that I had failed. I deny that I ever said anything of the kind.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I say that the hon. gentleman failed. He is not going to escape that way. The hon. gentleman failed and then gave an undertaking that he would try and overcome that failure this session. But what a spectacle have we seen to-day. An ex-Minister of Justice, sitting as a member of the Public Accounts Committee, almost sworn to give a judgment upon the case he is trying, getting up in this House, while the case is still sub-judice, to protest that, if given another week, he will bring some evidence, and then proceeding to make an argument on the evidence printed and seek to obtain from this House a judgment on the case before that case is closed. He is trying to escape from the pitiable position in which he stands to-day. And then he gets his associate, the first lieutenant (Mr. Foster) to stand up and storm and rave about deception and dishonesty and want of decency on the part of the Government. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we are taking the dignified, the honourable, the decent course. I appeal to the independent members of the House on that side, if there are any, whether it is not the case that while the hon. gentleman stands pledged to bring more evidence, we are willing to withhold judgment until that evidence is all in. Is not that fair? We say it would be unfair on our part to ask the House to pronounce on a case which is sub-judice. Every man who has any experience in legal matters, or in ordinary business, will admit that the position we take is the proper one. The hon. gentleman tried to argue the case. He appeared very much concerned about a $1,500 bill which was sent in by a lawyer and was not paid in full. But if he will turn around, he will see behind him gentlemen of the legal profession who have time and again rendered bills for amounts which were not paid. There is probably not a lawyer in the Dominion, who has had business with the Department of Justice, who has not had his bills taxed. In fact, thousands of dollars have been taxed off such bills because the Department of Justice considered them too high.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But this bill was paid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The position which the Government takes is this, that it would only be decent and proper and fair to give the hon. gentleman the chance he is trying now to escape from. He thinks that if he could get a decision of the House now upon the case, it would be closed and the fulfilment of his undertaking would not be exacted. But he cannot escape. He has given his pledge and is now trying to escape from it. He finds that he has to go before the Public Accounts Committee and that he has either to acknowledge that he has no case and come down to the House and say so or withdraw his charges. In the meantime he said to himself: I will get up and make a five-hours speech, I will try and draw forth a reply from the other side, I will try and get a decision of the House, and then the House will say there is no occasion for any more investigation before the committee, because we have pronounced on the matter.

The hon. gentleman, without giving the slightest notice to the Minister of the Interior or anybody else, without putting a notice on the Order paper or even giving verbal notice, stood up, on a motion to go into committee on the Drummond Railway question, and interposed with a motion to adjourn the House. Then, for five hours he quoted extracts from the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, to a large extent irrelevant, and then got his coadjutor and colleague to stand up and denounce the Government because the Government did not make a reply. But is there any motion? Is there anything before the House? Not a single thing. The only motion the hon. gentleman has dared to make is that the House adjourn—a truly pitiable conclusion to his five hours' speech and attack. The evidence which was reported here bears upon its face that it is not complete, we have the undertaking by the hon. gentleman to complete it, and the House has already appointed a day to go on with the work—Friday, at eleven o'clock. But when the hon. gentleman saw the notice on the Order paper, when he saw that his time was approaching, and he had to do something, he got up in this House and made this long tirade to which we have just listened.

Just a word more in conclusion. I notice the concern which actuates the ex-Minister of Justice and the ex-Minister of Finance, owing to the fact that the Deputy Minister and the subordinates in the Justice Department were not consulted by my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) on all the details of his policy. It was not sufficient that he took the head of the Department of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) into his confidence and was guided by his advice. Sir Oliver Mowat gets a certificate of character from the ex-Minister of Finance—save the mark. Sir Oliver has had certificates from different sources, even from the Queen, but proud will he be to-morrow when he knows that one so distinguished, so pure, so politically decent, so honourable in his career, as Sir Mackenzie Bowell can certify any day, has given the veteran statesman of Ontario a certificate of character. He has declared that Sir Oliver Mowat is a decent, and honest and honourable man. Well, it may comfort the hon. gentleman to know that that decent, honest and honourable man was consulted at every step which the First Minister took in this matter and gave it his consent.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He cut the bills down 50 per cent.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And he cut the bills down, and it was his duty to, when he thought they were too high. But it appears that there are some gentlemen in that department whom they would prefer to have consulted rather than Sir Oliver Mowat. Why? I do not know. But I respectfully and humbly submit, that the proper person for the Premier to consult, in a judicial question of this kind, was the Minister of Justice himself. And the Minister of Justice, a decent, honest man, speaking with all the responsibility of the head of that department, and with a knowledge of constitutional law which I will venture, with humility, to say, is almost equal to the universal knowledge possessed by that marvel of judicial erudition, the ex-Minister of Finance—that experienced statesman advised the Premier in the course he should take, and the course the Premier took was taken with Sir Oliver Mowat's sanction. Sir, on what did he advise him? He found there had been committed one of the greatest crimes of the century.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One of the greatest crimes of the century—a conspiracy having for its object to defeat the will of the people in the elections of 1896; a conspiracy which, if it had succeeded, might well have defeated the will of the people throughout Canada; a conspiracy so vile that hon. gentlemen opposite might, by means of it, have been returned to power; a conspiracy to stuff the ballot-boxes of every constituency in the province and to return the minority candidate, where necessary. The hon. gentleman boasts, that the prosecution were unable to succeed in convicting the parties who were charged. Sir, it is true, that in many cases they were unable to succeed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There was not a man indicted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think that proves very much. One man, at any rate, was convicted and was sentenced to his term. But, whether they succeeded or not it is beyond controversy that if such a conspiracy could be carried out, it would render popular government unnecessary. It would place a dictator in the Premier's chair, and leave him there as long as he pleased to remain, irrespective of the will of the people. If an hon. gentleman, standing in the position of my hon. friend the Premier, and having the prima facie evidence before him of this conspiracy, refused to expose the conspiracy, he would be derelict in his duty. There is no use in arguing it now; there will be a time when it can be argued.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And not in a surreptitious manner, but after due notice and with some definite object in view. And the committee will meet on Saturday—

Mr. FOSTER. Not Friday? Are you going to take another day?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Very clever. That is an evidence of the hon. gentleman's wonderful ability. He caught me in a slip of the tongue, using the word "Saturday" instead of "Friday." Sir, I apologize to him. The Votes and Proceedings show, that the Public Accounts Committee is to be called for Friday at eleven o'clock. I hope the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) will be ready with his evidence.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How can that be?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Well, ready to take the initial steps towards securing the evidence. At any rate, the committee will be there for him. And now, having had this debate, I hope we may proceed with the Orders of the Day.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not want to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but I would like to ask one question. When Mr. Wade put in the account for $1,500, and that was cut down by that honest man, Sir Oliver Mowat, how does he explain the fact, that the whole sum was afterwards paid?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It had been paid before.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The payment of the bill will be explained in the committee, the proper place.

Mr. N. C. WALLACE (West York). The Minister of Marine and Fisheries had stated, that the course hon. gentlemen opposite were taking was the dignified, honourable and decent course. I suppose he refers to the fact, that, sixty-five days after the opening of Parliament, they propose to permit this investigation to commence. And this is the time chosen, notwithstanding the fact, that, before adjourning last session, they pledged themselves, as the chairman has declared over his own signature—"so that the inquiry may be dealt with and continued at the first available opportunity at the next session of Parliament." Is sixty-five days after the opening of Parliament the "first available opportunity"? To my mind, this is a plain indication, that these gentlemen are not taking the decent, honourable and dignified course, but are evidently determined to shirk the investigation. They say, there was a failure in the investigation. Look at the record in that book; look at the record that the late Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has presented to this House, which hon. gentlemen opposite have not answered, I presume, because they were not able to answer it, notwithstanding that many members of the Government are present. And I must say, that it is a wonder to see so many of them here. For we have noticed, that, when important charges were made against the administration of any particular department, the habit has been for the Minister charged with dereliction of duty to absent himself from the House. We see the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) putting in an appearance at this moment, after he supposed that the debate was to be concluded. Usually, when he is charged with serious dereliction of duty, violating the law, disregarding the constitution of the country, he does not come, like a man, to face the charges; he shirks the duty, and absents himself from the House. Nor is he alone in this course of conduct.

I was a member of the Committee of Public Accounts, and watched the proceedings, and noted the attempt of these hon. gentlemen opposite, including the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the late member for Lambton and others, aided by the chairman himself, to block the investigation and prevent the full exposure of the iniquities of this case. They say: Why did not you prove the case? How could the case be proven as fully as could be desired? We wanted Freeborn as a witness. He was a man in their pay, and under their control and direction.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
And very liberally treated.

Mr. WALLACE. And very liberally treated. He was wanted to appear before the committee. Was he brought before the committee? Not at all. Good care was taken that he should not be permitted to appear to give his evidence. And, when Mr. Howell and these other witnesses were called, what did we find? As has been pointed out by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), they were ordered to bring with them books, papers and other records relating to the investigation. And I was surprised—no, I was not surprised; but I would have been surprised, if anybody had told me, years before, such a thing could happen—to see the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who posed here as an honest man and one who wanted business conducted regularly and honestly, deliberately misrepresent the case, for he knows the duties of his office as chairman of the Public Accounts Committee too well not to know, that when a witness is summoned, he is summoned to bring papers. This particular summons which we have here says: "You are to bring with you all letters, books, papers and documents relating to said prosecutions, and accounts in your possession or under your control." Yet he had the hardihood to say that this man did not bring the papers because he was never asked to bring them. The member for North Wellington, Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, knowing his duty, knowing that every witness summoned in cases of that kind is summoned exactly in those terms, yet in the face of that, he has the hardihood to get up in this House and say that he was merely summoned to come here, but was not asked to bring any papers or documents. I will give the hon. member an opportunity of getting up and apologizing to this House for attempting to mislead it, because he had the record before him. I am willing to give him an opportunity of retrieving himself, of putting himself right before the country, and either to say that he wilfully stated what was not true, or that he had forgotten himself, or he may make any other excuse that he pleases. Now what is the meaning of all this? As has been pointed out by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), member after member on that side of the House have got up and solemnly denied that they were looking for positions, that they were looking for offices, yet almost the next day we find them accepting positions. We find the late member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister), to whom I have referred, getting up at the last hour in this House and solemnly denying that he was looking for an office, or would accept an office; yet prorogation had scarcely taken place when he was appointed to an office. Those members on that side of the House who get up and vehemently defend the Government, defend them where their course is indefensible—I say look out for those men. They are looking out for themselves. I was thinking of those members from the province of Ontario, men who have a reputation, men who have self-respect, men who have a regard for their past, and for their present, and for their future, too. Where are the Somervilles, the Macdonalds, the Bains? Where are the Landerkins, and all those men? We do not find them defending the course of the Government to-night, because they are ashamed to defend a course of conduct that the Government themselves are ashamed to defend. I am sure these men to-night are holding their heads with shame when they think of the great party who, in the past, has talked so loudly and, as we supposed, so sincerely in favour of honest government, in favour of regard for the laws of the land, in favour of economy. But now we see them disregarding every principle they had preached for 20 years, and violating the law, from the Premier down. They say they are doing it under the direction of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries said to this House that all these proceedings were gone on under his charge, and the Premier was guided and directed by the Minister of Justice in these affairs. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries where is the evidence of that? Did that evidence come before the Public Accounts Committee? I deny it, there was no such evidence. The evidence was to the contrary, because the officers of the Department of Justice came before that committee and asserted that they were entirely innocent of any knowledge of these transactions. Then where is the evidence that the late Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat, was directing the course of affairs? There has been no evidence but the unconfirmed statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and that I refuse to believe. But, Sir, still further. They say that the attempt to prove this investigation has failed. I say that it has not only failed but it has succeeded—far more than anybody could have expected, if you consider the obstacles that are placed in the way of an honest and fair investigation. I have been in this Parliament for 20 years, and nearly the whole of that time I have been a member of the Public Accounts Committee. I had the honour of being chairman of that committee during, perhaps, the stormiest period of its existence, in 1891; and, Sir, I never saw an attempt to block justice, to prevent an investigation, until I saw it in this case, and during the past two years. There has been in the past every effort made to have a fair investigation of the public accounts, to have a thorough review of all business matters; but in this case an attempt was made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and those other gentlemen to whom I have alluded, to prevent an investigation being made, to prevent the facts from coming out, and to shield something because something dishonest had been done all through this transaction. So I say that the member for Pictou has performed a duty for which I am sure the public will thank him. There was no other course to take when we found that the member for North Wellington, Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, disregarding the solemn injunction of that committee last year, has failed to call a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee together.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. He is not chairman this year.

Mr. FOSTER. They have deposed him.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, I am sorry for that, if it is on account of ill-health. But I think they could easily have got a judicial and disinterested man to occupy that position. I say that the thanks of this House and of this country are due to the hon. member for Pictou for having brought this matter before the House, and I think the effect will be to spur these gentlemen on to permit an investigation to be held. The country is watching them, and will be watching the proceedings of that committee when they meet, and will condemn a Government or a party that will dare to prevent a full and thorough investigation being made into these matters.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). I only rise to make a remark in connection with the meeting of the committee. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. Praise from such a source is high praise, and I am sure that no member of this House can appreciate it more than I do. I was appointed on that committee, and only 11 days ago was the first word heard from the Opposition about the committee being called. There was a hint thrown out that the committee was under the guidance of the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance never spoke to me about it, and did not require to.

Mr. FOSTER. He knew that it was right.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). If the hon. gentleman who has just volunteered a statement, and says he knows that it is all right, means that the hon. Minister of Finance knew that I could be trusted, in that sinister way in which he speaks, all I have to say is that I put my character for doing fair things on a par with his, and will allow members amongst his followers to be the judges. It will be decided in my favour. If the hon. gentleman meant that he knew it is all right because the proper course would be taken, he is correct; but he did not. It does not comport with that hon. gentleman's dignity to think that these remarks made by him, will enhance his reputation or lead the people of this country, or the members of this House, to think any the more of him. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) spoke about calling the committee. I at once saw the clerk, and I found out that there was very important business before two committees, and it was said that we would call the committee just as soon as these important matters were disposed of. There was no special reason why this particular case should be inquired into. I got four days ago the history of the calling of committees, and I find that the date of the calling of committees together is, this session, just about the same as on two other occasions. In 1896, I find that the House met on the 2nd day of January; the Address was passed on the 23rd of January, after a length of debate of twenty-one days. The Public Accounts Committee gave in its first report February 25th, or fifty-four days after the session opened. We met this year on the 18th of March. The Address was passed on the 18th of April, after a length of debate of thirty-three days. The Public Accounts Committee will meet on Friday and can present their first report, which is within sixty-four days after the meeting of the House, and, if you make the calculation according to the number of days spent on the Address, you will find that we have yet thirty days to bring in the first report of the Committee on Public Accounts over and above the time it took in the session of 1896. That is the way the thing has been, and that is the only question now before the House. Yet the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) rose in his place and told us that the reason for calling attention to this was that the Public Accounts Committee would only meet on Thursday.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Friday.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Friday. Does the hon. gentleman think that either this House or this country will credit the statement that a whole day should be spent within three days of the meeting of that committee, to say that we should meet one day sooner? Does the hon. gentleman think that any man, in his reason, believes that the purpose the hon. gentleman had in view was to call the committee on Thursday, demanding that it should meet one day sooner than Friday, and that it would justify him in spending a whole day to say that we should call the committee one day sooner? If the hon. gentleman will be honest, that is not his reason. The reason has been as plain as can be. Here he knew, he must have known, that when the committee met in three days from the time he was making his speech there would be the fullest opportunity on that day, and on all days, for him to call witnesses. Was there any need for discussing the evidence?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows that I could not call witnesses on Friday. I would have to get an order to subpoena witnesses.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Decidedly, but does the hon. gentleman think that one day is absolutely essential?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We asked to have the committee called on Monday last.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The hon. gentleman lately, when he gets speaking, cannot stop. He spoke for five hours, and afterwards during the whole discussion this evening he has been getting up and speaking again. He is like the man with a spring in his wooden leg, who, when he got going kept walking on for ever. Seriously, however, has the hon. gentleman any thought that one day sooner in the meeting of the committee is going to make any difference about getting his witnesses there?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I want to know if, when the hon. gentleman asks his questions, he desires to have them answered, or if he desires that

Mr. FRASER (Guysboro').

I should not answer them. When I attempted to answer the last question he put to me, he charged me with having a wooden leg, or something of that kind.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). No, no. The paralysis I would like to see in the hon. gentleman would be in his tongue, not in his leg. I did compare him to an apocryphal man that was for ever going with a cork leg with a spring in it. But, seriously, is one day going to make all that difference? Is the fact that the committee should meet on Thursday, instead of on Friday, going to make the country ring? The main reason, and everything in this whole question before the House to-night has been, that a motion was made to adjourn the House because the committee was not to meet before Friday, and the motion can have no point at all unless that is the point. The hon. gentleman surely would be content if his purpose was to read the evidence and make his own comments on it. He distinctly stated that he might put himself right, but his chief purpose was that this committee should be called sooner, and that he did it for the purpose of having this meeting of the committee sooner than the time appointed. I think it is hardly worth while, speaking most modestly, for the hon. gentleman to take up a whole day with a debate to get the committee to meet one day sooner. Does not the hon. gentleman and his friends see that all the discussion that took place to-day must take place again. If the hon. gentleman produces any other evidence it must take place again, and, if the hon. gentleman produces no evidence, he knows very well it must take place again, and is Parliament going to go over again and again the same evidence? I do not think the hon. gentleman himself could for a moment have considered the effect of what he is doing under the guise of wanting the committee to meet on Thursday. The committee will meet on Friday, which is the first possible time at which it can meet, when he will have the opportunity he wants, which is only twenty-four hours after the time that he asks. I could not for a moment understand why the hon. gentleman should have spoken upon the evidence at the last moment, as he has done to-day. It has been suggested to me that he was trying to beat his own record, and yet the spectacle of a five-hour speech on evidence that is not yet completed is something that is very extraordinary. The hon. gentleman, in delivering a five-hour speech on a partial statement of the evidence, has done the same thing as a lawyer who says that he has other evidence to go in, and calls upon the judge to give judgment. He knows himself how very ridiculous a position that is to take.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what the hon. gentleman wanted to do last year to give judgment before the evidence was all in.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Another hon. gentleman has spoken; I think he spoke too, but he wants to keep it up. That is a remark that shows us the way that wisdom will come out. The hon. gentleman could best impress the House by silence and looking wise. The hon. gentleman said that this was unparalleled in the history of the country. But was it not done in the session of 1896 and in the session of 1893, and you will see when we take into consideration the number of days we spent on the debate on the Address, the committee is meeting earlier in proportion to the number of days than it did in these two years. I trust the hon. gentlemen opposite will understand that there was no idea of an attempt at delay, and that when the committee meets we will at once proceed to business.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). As to the suggestion which has been made by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is desirous of avoiding going on with this investigation, I happened to have been present at the last meeting of the Public Accounts Committee last year, and I remember very distinctly what took place. There was an attempt by the Liberal members to present a final report, although the evidence had not all been taken, and although the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) stated distinctly that he desired to subpoena Sir Oliver Mowat and other witnesses. There was an attempt made on the part of the majority of that committee to force matters to a conclusion, and that attempt was only defeated by members on this side of the House, stating that they were prepared to stay there all summer rather than submit to a course of that kind. After it had been pretty plainly demonstrated to members supporting the Government that there would be that result, the report now before the House was made upon the undertaking of my hon. friend from Pictou that he would proceed during this session. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries cast out the sneer, that the only object of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to-day is to go over evidence partially taken, and to make an argument before the evidence is closed. As has been remarked already, that was exactly the course which the Liberal members desired to take last year. So far from there being anything in that taunt cast at my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I may tell you, Mr. Speaker, that when the hon. gentleman went to the west on the 31st of March, he left in my hands a full memorandum of the witnesses who were to be subpoenaed, if the committee were called together. I was in expectation, from day to day, that the committee would be asked to meet, and I was in possession of a written memorandum, given me by the hon. member for Pictou, of the motions that should be made and of the witnesses that should be called. But, Sir, day after day passed, and the committee was not convened, and, as I understand it, the speech made by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is in protest against the action of the Government in failing to call the committee together, under the special circumstances of the case. And, the circumstances are special. The members of the Government knew, and the chairman of the committee knew, that witnesses had to be summoned from a distance. They knew that two months of this session had passed, and they knew that unless promptness were used we would be exactly in the same position at the end of this session that we were in at the end of last session, namely, that the evidence would be incomplete, and that there would be no possibility of the committee making a final report, and thus that no discussion could take place, although properly speaking the motions before that committee should have been fully discussed last session. It does not lie in the mouth of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), nor in the mouth of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to cast such a groundless taunt at my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). The Minister of Marine spoke of the miserable failure which had attended the attempt of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to prove certain charges before that committee. Sir, the best evidence that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has made no failure, is to be found in the fact that although the evidence already given calls for some explanation from the Government, not one member of the Ministry, has been able to stand up to explain or to defend it. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) did not, and could not, offer a single explanation of the payments that had been made to these men, in excess of the amounts which were afterwards taxed by the officials of the Department of Justice. He (Sir Louis Davies) speaks about the young men in the Department of Justice, but he forgets that the taxation which was made by these young men was fully approved by Sir Oliver Mowat. I give as a single instance that one, Mr. Perdue, has been paid $500 and upwards out of the moneys of the consolidated revenue of Canada, and his account has been taxed down a little over $300. Although that charge has been cast across the floor of this House, in this debate and in the previous debate, not one word of explanation has been given by a member of the Government in regard to it. Sir, the Government owe it to their own self-respect, they owe it to the country, that they should give some explanation on matters of that kind, which do not need to wait further evidence. Instead of that, my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) receives from the Government only the groundless taunt that he is not willing to go on with the investigation before this committee.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries told us that there was prima facie evidence before the Prime Minister of Canada upon which it was proper to go on with this investigation into the so-called election frauds in Manitoba. It has been pointed out over and over again by my hon. friend from Pictou, and by others, that there was not the slightest evidence then before the Prime Minister, except the word of the Minister of the Interior—who at that time was not a member of this House, and was not a member of the Government—that he had a belief that a certain conspiracy existed in Manitoba. Now, was the belief of Mr. Sifton—as he was at that time—a sufficient justification for the Prime Minister of this country to give that gentleman carte blanche to spend the public moneys of Canada on a matter in which the Government of Canada were not interested, and as to which it was the duty of the Government of Manitoba to act. Will the Prime Minister of Canada say now, that if I produced in this House similar evidence with regard to the late election in West Huron, and with regard to the late election in Brockville, that he will give me, or any other member of this House, or any man outside of this House unlimited credit at the expense of Canada, to investigate these irregularities, and to prosecute the people who are guilty of that wrong-doing? What distinction does the Prime Minister, or does any hon. member on the other side of the House make, between these election frauds, so-called, in the province of Manitoba, and the election frauds in the province of Ontario. Mr. Speaker, I can tell the right hon. gentleman that evidence much more distinct, much more explicit, founded, not on belief but on solemn declaration, can be brought—

Mr. TAYLOR. And certainly will be brought.

Mr. BORDEN—showing frauds in connection with these two elections as to which there is no parallel in the Manitoba elections; and if the Prime Minister of Canada and the members of the Government hold that the defence put forward in this matter is a good defence, the Prime Minister would be bound to deal with these election frauds in Ontario exactly as he did with those in the province of Manitoba. Is any distinction to be drawn between the province of Ontario and the province of Manitoba with respect to a matter of that kind? If we bring 30 or 40 declarations of men who say that they cast their ballots for the Liberal-Conservative candidate in these elections at a certain polling booth, and if we show by the records now in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that only about two-thirds or one-half of the number of ballots were discovered for that candidate, will he say, standing in his place, that the credit of the Dominion of Canada to an unlimited extent will be used for the purpose of hunting down the men who did that wrong, and bringing them to justice? Perhaps the right

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

hon. gentleman will give me an answer with regard to that now, because it is rather important that we should know whether there is to be one rule with regard to Liberals in the province of Manitoba and another rule with regard to Liberal-Conservatives in the province of Ontario. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman cares to make any answer, but I venture to say that he will find it difficult to persuade the people of this country or even members on his own side of the House that it is proper to pledge the revenues of this country to punish wrong-doing in the one case, while he stands by and supports the wrong-doing in the other, simply because in the one case he can make political capital against his opponents and in the other case the wrong-doing happens to result to the advantage of his party. Under circumstances of that kind, I think here is something for the right hon. gentleman to consider, and something for the country to consider. Matters of that kind cannot be answered by a taunt such as has been the answer of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and to a more limited extent the answer of the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser). I venture to say, in conclusion, that I think my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) would have been wanting in his duty as a member of this Parliament if he had not seen fit to rise in his place and bring this matter to the attention of the House, and, by going over this evidence and showing the seriousness of what has been done, protest against the course of the Government in delaying, as they have delayed, the convening of this committee for the purpose of dealing with this matter.

Motion for the adjournment of the House, negatived.

Motion for the House to go into committee, agreed to.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

INSOLVENCY LEGISLATION.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Before the House adjourns, I would like to draw the attention of the right hon. First Minister to a statement which appeared in the evening papers of yesterday, and which is repeated in to-day's papers, respecting an arrangement or agreement which it is alleged has been reached by the right hon. the Premier and the hon. member of this House who has a Bill on the Order paper respecting insolvency. The statement which appears in the papers is that the right hon. First Minister has had a conference with Mr. Fortin, the result of which will be that the Insolvency Bill will not be brought up at this session of Parliament. The matter is creating a great deal of interest in the mercantile community of Toronto and elsewhere: and I would like to know if such an arrangement has been reached, and if it is the intention that the Bill shall be dropped this session?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have been in communication with Mr. Fortin, who has a Bill on the Order paper respecting insolvency. I understood that legislation had been introduced in several of the provinces which up to this time have had no law respecting insolvency, or respecting the disposal of the assets of insolvent estates. I am in conference with Mr. Fortin, and if, as I understand, such legislation has been passed in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, the Government will not favour any legislation on the subject of insolvency this session.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture when we may expect a return to an Order of the House for the correspondence which has recently taken place between his department and the Imperial authorities with regard to the cattle embargo. I want the information for use in the House, and I would be very glad if the hon. gentleman would expedite it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I will inquire in the department, and have it sent down immediately.

Mr. MONTAGUE. While I am on my feet, I may say that I gave notice to-night of a motion with regard to the superannuations which have taken place in the hon. gentleman's department in the last year and a half. May I press upon him the desirability of having the return prepared as soon as possible?

Mr. HAGGART. May I ask the right hon. leader of the Government what will be the first Government measure on the next Government day?

The PRIME MINISTER. The intention of the Government is to proceed with the Drummond County Railway on Thursday, and we will proceed unless we are obstructed then as we have been to-day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I wish to call the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to the fact that several papers that were ordered last session have not yet been brought down. I gave a list of those papers to the right hon. gentleman, and I would ask that they be brought down as soon as possible. I would add to the list already given an order of the 30th of March, 1898, in relation to tenders asked for by the Intercolonial Railway for ties for the division in the province of Quebec. The right hon. gentleman alluded a little while ago to obstruction. I would not like to make a threat; but if these papers are not brought down on Thursday, we may probably not be able to proceed with the Drummond County Railway.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am very sorry.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.25 (midnight).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 17th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SALE OF EGGS BY WEIGHT.

Mr. McMILLAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 122) in further amendment of the Weights and Measures Act. He said: In selling eggs in this country a good deal of difficulty and disagreement is experienced in regard to standard eggs. The Bill does not affect the sale of eggs in this country. It is intended to affect only the sale of eggs between buyers in the old country and sellers in this country, and between buyers and sellers in this country at a distance from each other; and it provides that a dozen eggs shall weigh a pound and a half.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MAIL SERVICE ON THE PACIFIC COAST.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. By what steamship route and by what company (United States or British) are Canadian mails forwarded on Pacific coast waters en route to Dawson?

2. What service as shown by sailings is now given on this route and to Atlin, B.C., weekly or fortnightly?

3. Is any effort being made by the Post Office Department to forward such mails to Vancouver direct?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. By steamers of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company, carrying United States mails. 2. The frequency of the service to Skagway is from five to six trips per month; to Atlin, B.C., weekly trips. 3. The department does not control the arrangements for forwarding mails from Skagway, which is in the possession of the United States. Application has been made to the United States Post Office Department to arrange or to authorize the Canadian Post Office Department to arrange for mails from the Yukon for Vancouver being despatched direct from Skagway to Vancouver, but no conclusion has been arrived at.

RAILWAY FACILITIES IN THE NORTH SASKATCHEWAN VALLEY.

Mr. DAVIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Whether the attention of the Government has been called to the following resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the North-west Territories, on April 28th, 1899 :—

"That whereas there are certain settlements in the valleys of the North Saskatchewan and its tributaries that have been in existence for a number of years without railroad communication or facilities for transportation of surplus produce ;

"And whereas these settlements have been maintained by the people in the hopes raised by the granting of numerous charters by the Dominion Parliament for the construction of railways since the first surveys for the Canadian Pacific ;

"And whereas the lack of such railway communication is seriously felt by the people residing in and near to the Saskatchewan Valley ;

"Therefore, be it resolved, that this House urges upon the Dominion Government the necessity for taking any steps needed to ensure the opening up of the North Saskatchewan Valley by providing for railway communication with outlets east and west, at an early date."

Whether the Government intends to take, and if so, what steps to meet the need for railway communication set forth in the above resolutions ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The resolution referred to in the question has been received, and the matters therein referred to are receiving consideration.

EXPENDITURE ON ST. PETER'S CANAL.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. What amount was expended upon the St. Peter's Canal from the 1st day of May, 1891, up to the 23rd June, 1896 ?

2. What amount has been expended upon this canal since the 23rd June, 1896, up to the present date ?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to make a sufficient appropriation during the present session to provide for the much required repairs to the east side of the canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The amount expended upon the St. Peter's Canal from 1st May, 1891, up to 23rd June, 1896, is as follows :—

|                         |                     |
|-------------------------|---------------------|
| On Capital account..... | $18,722 78         |
| Income account .....    | 87,535 09           |
| Revenue account .....   | 20,229 52           |
| Total .....             | $126,487 39 |

2. The amount expended upon this canal since 23rd June, 1896, up to the present date, is as follows :—

Mr. MULOCK.

|                         |                   |
|-------------------------|-------------------|
| On Capital account..... | Nil.              |
| Income account.....     | $ 319 52         |
| Revenue account .....   | 8,774 81          |
| Total.....              | $9,094 33 |

3. The subject will receive due consideration.

MR. ABNER SMITH, POSTMASTER AT RUSAGORNIS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Has Mr. Abner Smith, the postmaster at Rusagornis, Sunbury County, N.B., been removed from office, and if so, when ? How long has he been postmaster at the place ? Were there any complaints urged against the manner in which he performed the duties of his office ? Was there any investigation made in his case, and if so, by whom ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Mr. Abner Smith was on the 1st of May removed from his position as postmaster at Rusagornis, because of his taking an active part in party politics, which is regarded as inconsistent with the proper discharge of his official duties. There has been no other complaint against him. He was in office since 1874. The action complained of having been established beyond any reasonable doubt, an investigation would have been quite unnecessary to determine the facts, and, therefore, no such unnecessary procedure was held.

GRAIN EXPORTS.

Mr. BELL (Addington), (by Mr. Taylor), asked :

What was the number of bushels and kinds of grain the produce of Canada exported from Fort William, Duluth, Parry Harbour, Midland, Montreal, Winnipeg and St. John, N.B. ; giving the amounts from each port, the place of destination, also the number of bushels and kinds of grain from said ports, of goods not the produce of Canada ; 1st, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1898 ; 2nd, from the 30th June, 1898, to 31st December, 1898 ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). I am not in a position to give the answer at present, and as it will be so lengthy, it will be necessary to move for a return. If the hon. gentleman will move for a return, I will get the information as soon as possible.

MISS HUBERT.

Mr. McDUGALL asked :

What was the nature of the examination made by the Government and referred to by the Prime Minister on the 4th inst., into the subject-matter of petition of Miss Hubert, and will the Prime Minister give the facts in writing to Miss Hubert ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The nature of the examination was to satisfy the Government as to the correctness of the conclusion we arrived at. It is not the intention of the Prime Minister to give any more attention to this claim.

INTERCOLONIAL FREIGHT.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

1. What was the total number of tons of freight carried by the Intercolonial from March 1st, 1897, to March 1st, 1898, and from March 1st, 1898, to March 1st, 1899 ?

2. What were the total receipts on such freight for each period respectively ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The total number of tons of freight, carried by the Intercolonial Railway from the 1st of March, 1897, to the 1st of March, 1898, was 1,345,548 tons. The total number of tons of freight carried from the 1st of March, 1898, to the 1st of March, 1899, was 1,653,381 tons, being an increase of 309,000 tons. Total freight receipts from 1st of March, 1897, to 1st of March, 1898, was $1,743,385.61. Total freight receipts from 1st of March, 1898, to 1st of March, 1899, was $2,198,040.72, or an increase of $455,000.

ROADWAY ACROSS McLAREN'S CREEK.

Mr. HUGHES (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government this year to utilize or grant a sum of money towards opening the roadway across the mouth of McLaren's Creek, near where it enters Sturgeon Lake ?

2. If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). This question has not yet been considered.

COASTING LAWS OF CANADA.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Has there been any further correspondence in relation to the enforcement of the coasting laws of Canada on the Pacific or Atlantic coasts subsequent to the Address of this House, dated 30th March, 1898, or to the 20th January, 1898, the date of the last paper mentioned in said return ?

(a) If so, will the subsequent papers be laid on the Table of this House at an early date as a supplementary return ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). Further correspondence has taken place since 20th January, 1898, in relation to the enforcement of the coasting laws of Canada on the Atlantic or Pacific coasts. The papers will be laid on the Table as soon as practicable after a supplementary return is ordered.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman want a formal motion made for a supplementary return ? It is not usual when the terms of the original order are not limited.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). I shall not insist, but will have to put it in under preparation, and it will pass as an unopposed motion.

MAJOR WALSH.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

What instructions, if any, were given to Major Walsh, Commissioner for the Yukon district, when he went to that district, respecting (a) his powers and authority ; (b) liquor traffic. (c) Is there any truth in the following report of an interview purporting to have taken place at Skagway, when Major Walsh was returning from Yukon, when he is reported to have said : " I was given great latitude under the laws and was empowered to amend them as I saw fit, and in some instances I did change them somewhat " ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). No instructions were given to Major Walsh, Commissioner for the Yukon district, when he went there, except what are contained in his commission.

CAPTAIN JOHN IRVING.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

What action, if any, has been taken on the communication of Captain John Irving, dated 30th December, 1897, included in the return to an Address of the House of Commons, dated 30th March, 1898, respecting the enforcement of Canadian coasting laws.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). No further action has been taken.

ALLAN STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What vessels sailed, and on what dates, from St. John, N.B., in the season of 1897-98, in pursuance of the contract entered by the Government with the Allan Steamship Company for the winter service ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). In reply I beg to say :

| Name of Steamship. | Cleared from St. John. |
|--------------------|------------------------|
| " Mantinea ".....  | Dec. 20, 1897          |
| " Cheronea ".....  | Jan. 3, 1898           |
| " Livonian ".....  | Jan. 17, 1898          |
| " Mantinea ".....  | Feb. 7, 1898           |
| " Platea ".....    | Feb. 14, 1898          |
| " Cheronea ".....  | Feb. 21, 1898          |
| " Livonian ".....  | March 7, 1898          |
| " Mantinea ".....  | March 25, 1898         |
| " Platea ".....    | April 9, 1898          |
| " Cheronea ".....  | April 16, 1898         |

HON MR. JUSTICE MAGUIRE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

When did Hon. Mr. Justice Maguire first reach Dawson after his appointment as judge there ?

(a) When did he leave that judicial district ?

(b) When did his successor reach Dawson ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Hon Mr. Justice Maguire reached Dawson, so far as the information of the Government goes, on the 26th of February.

1897. It is not known when he left the judicial district and when his successor reached Dawson.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER
Might I ask the hon. gentleman if he could find out the answers to questions A and B. I suppose it is possible?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I shall give instructions to have a telegram sent to Judge Maguire.

MR. THOMAS POWERS.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

1. Whether Mr. Thomas Powers, contractor, of Lévis, has leased from the Government the ground at Fort No. 3, for the purpose of getting out stone?

2. What price does he give?

3. Was he foreman of the work at Etchemin bridge on the Intercolonial?

4. At what price did he sell the stone he took from the Government ground?

5. Is he the furnisher of stone for the bridge, paid as furnisher, and at the same time foreman of the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The subject of the two first questions of your inquiry does not come under my department. They have already been answered, I think, by the Minister of Militia and Defence. 3. As to the third question, I may say, Thomas Powers was foreman of the work at Etchemin bridge on the Intercolonial Railway. 4. I am not aware that he sold any stone taken from the Government ground. 5. No stone was purchased from Mr. Powers for the bridge, and, therefore, he was not paid as furnisher of stone for the bridge at the same time he was foreman of the work.

MR. AGAPIT OUELLET.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

1. Whether the Agapit Ouellet as to whom "Le Soleil," of Quebec, of 28th, 29th and 30th March, said: "To the electors of Lévis: Mr. Agapit Ouellet will be present at the town hall of Lévis, and take all necessary steps for entering or striking out the names of Conservatives, in behalf of the Liberal party," is an employee of the Post Office Department at Lévis?

2. Whether the same Mr. Ouellet, in order to get a position, caused Mr. L. J. Thibault to be discharged, alleging that he meddled in politics?

3. Is it true that the said Mr. Ouellet has caused the dismissal of several Conservatives under the pretext that they had taken part in politics?

4. Is it true that Ouellet himself furnished the evidence for the dismissal of the said Conservatives?

5. Is it true that he was engaged in providing the said evidence during the time when he should have been occupied delivering the mails on the train?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock.) In reply I beg to say: 1. A person named Agapit Ouellet is employed to transfer mails at Lévis station, but the department has nothing to establish his identity with that of Agapit Ouellet named in this question. 2. No. 3. No. 4. The department is not aware of his having furnished any such evidence. 5. This question is answered by the answer to No. 4.

EMPLOYEES ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

1. Who issued orders to change the employees on the train, during the provincial elections in December last, in the county of Lévis?

2. Is it true that the Conservative employees were sent to Montreal by the Drummond Railway, and others to Rivière du Loup?

3. Did Mr. Desjardins, the despatcher, at first refuse to make the said changes?

4. Did the Liberals at Lévis telegraph to Mr. Blair on the subject? Did the Minister of Railways himself give the orders to Mr. Pottinger?

5. Did Mr. Pottinger send orders to Mr. Desjardins to accept the Conservative employees and to send them to Montreal and Rivière du Loup?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. I have inquired but cannot learn that any person issued orders to change the employees on the trains during the provincial elections in December last in the county of Lévis. 2. I cannot learn that Conservative employees were sent to Montreal by the Drummond County Railway and others to Rivière du Loup. Mr. Desjardins says they were not. 3. Mr. Desjardins wires that to his knowledge no orders were issued to change the employees on the trains during the provincial elections in December last in the county of Lévis, and he says he could not have refused as he received no such orders. 4. The Minister received no telegram from the Liberals at Lévis on the subject, nor did the Minister give orders to Mr. Pottinger on the subject. 5. Mr. Pottinger did not send orders to Mr. Desjardins to accept the Conservative employees and to send them to Montreal or Rivière du Loup.

REVENUE OF GUAY POST OFFICE.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

1. What is the revenue of the Guay post office, kept by Joseph Verrault at Lévis?

2. What amount does the Post Office Department pay him?

3. What contract has he for the mail, and what is the price specified?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1 and 2. The legitimate revenue of Guay post office is about $304 a year. By certain irregular methods it was increased fictitiously, but the postmaster is not entitled to be paid upon a revenue other than the legitimate revenue of the office for postal purposes, and he has been paid upon that basis the sum of $144 a year. 3. Joseph Verrault holds a temporary agreement for carrying the mails between Guay and Lévis at the contract rate of $75 a year.

MAILS BETWEEN ORANGEDALE AND MARGAREE.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

What changes have taken place in the contract for the carrying of mails between Orangedale and Margaree, in the county of Inverness, since the 1st of July, 1896? Is the service at present performed by the contractor who performed the service under the first contract entered into after the 1st July, 1896? If not, why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The service for the conveyance of mails over the route between Margaree harbour and Orangedale railway station did not come into operation until the 9th July, 1897. Prior to that time the offices on this route were served under arrangements made before the 1st July, 1896, and it having been represented to the present Postmaster General that the services then in existence were both expensive and inefficient, an inquiry was made, and it was ascertained that by a re-arrangement of the services in the northern and western part of Cape Breton, the services might be improved and a large saving effected. Among the changes involved in this re-arrangement was the establishment of a daily mail route between Margaree harbour and Orangedale station. The contract was let to Mr. John Fraser, the lowest tenderer, after public competition for the period between the 9th July, 1897, and the 30th June, 1901, at the rate of $1,594 a year. On the 1st February, 1898, this amount was reduced from $1,594 to $1,577 a year, owing to a decrease in the distance to be travelled. On the 1st February, 1899, the contract was, on the application of Mr. Fraser, transferred to Mr. D. M. McFarlane on the same terms and conditions, the post office inspector at Halifax having reported that Mr. McFarlane was a fit and proper person to undertake the service, and that the proposed transfer would be in the interest of the service.

MAJOR D. C. F. BLISS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What is the position, or what are the positions held by Mr. D. C. F. Bliss in the public service, and when was he appointed to it or them?

2. What positions has he held, if any, in the Yukon district? (a) What, if any, positions does he now hold there? (b) What salary has been paid him and at what rate in connection therewith?

3. What travelling expenses, if any, have been allowed him in connection with such positions in the Yukon district, if any? (a) Has he been allowed a personal attendant, secretary, orderly or valet at any time, and if so, when, for what time and at what cost to the exchequer?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Major D. C. F. Bliss was appointed, on the 18th June, 1894, second-class clerk at $1,400. On the 4th April, 1896, a new position called Deputy Assistant Adjutant General, was created, and Major Bliss was appointed to this with pay and staff allowances of $2,000 a year. On the 15th December, 1897, the office of Deputy Assistant Adjutant General was abolished and Major Bliss was restored to his position as second-class clerk at $1,400. On the 18th of May, 1898, he was appointed transport and supply officer to the Yukon field force. 2. Transport and supply officer to the Yukon field force. (a) Still fills that position. (b) Draws the same rate as other officers on the Yukon force, viz., double rates. His rank being that of major, he draws twice $3.90, or $7.80, per diem. 3. The same as allowed to other officers, viz., his actual travelling expenses. (a) No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I call the attention of the hon. Minister to an omission, which may be the result in the form of a question. The intention in No. 3 was to ascertain the amount of travelling expenses, not the rate. Under these circumstances, that part of the question might stand.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Very well.

THE TIDAL SURVEY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Referring to the following statement of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in Supply, May 12th, 1899 ("Hansard," page 3152), on the subject of a "Tidal Survey":—"I asked some of the Allan captains myself and they said they attach no value whatsoever to this survey." (a) What are the names of the Allan captains referred to? (b) Will the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries lay upon the Table of this House Captain Spain's report referred to on page 3153, "Hansard," 12th May, 1899?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The name of the Allan captain I had in mind at the time of the debate was Capt. Moore, of the "California." There is no report in writing from Capt. Spain, nor is it referred to in "Hansard." The advice was verbal.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Referring to the following statement of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ("Hansard," 1899, page 3151):—"The scientists pretend that we should make a survey of the currents around the coast and try and describe them more accurately on the chart than they are described at present, but I have not been able to find a practical seaman who shares that opinion, or an expert who recommends me to incur that expense," made on May 12, 1899. (a) Does the hon. Minister adhere to this statement? (b) Are there on file in the Department of Marine and Fisheries petitions signed by practical seamen asking for a survey of the tides and currents in Canadian waters? (c) Will the hon. the Minister bring down and lay upon the Table of the House at an early date all such petitions, if any?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I have to submit to the hon. gentleman that it is rather an abuse of the rights of an hon. member in asking information on public questions, to cross-examine Ministers as to whether or not they adhere to statements made in past debates. The extract the hon. gentleman gives was only a partial statement. I adhere to my statements made during that debate. If there are on file any petitions signed by practical seamen, as referred to in the question, I shall be happy to bring them down, or any other papers that may be called for.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I desire to call the Prime Minister's attention, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think I am strictly in order. I do not rise to discuss the matter at all. I call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that I have asked a specific question that has not been answered—"Are there on file in the Department of Marine and Fisheries petitions signed by practical seamen asking for a survey of the tides and currents in Canadian waters?" The hon. gentleman says that if there are such petitions he will bring them down. I do not need to ask that. But what I have asked is whether there are such petitions?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am quite unaware whether there are petitions signed by practical seamen or not. I will bring down any petitions that are there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is not an answer to my question.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the point raised by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) with regard to the reference to a past debate in question is one which should not be lost sight of. I wish to call attention to the fact that such a course seems to be out of order. There are two decisions or more by Mr. Speaker Brand, in which he decides that questions referring to a preceding debate or of an argumentative character cannot be put. He also says in another place: "There can be no doubt that it is not in order for an hon. member of the House, in putting a question or making an answer, to refer to a former debate." Exception was allowed in the case where an hon. Minister was almost forced to refer to a former debate to give an answer demanded of him, but there does not appear to be any exception to the rule that reference to a past debate should not be made in asking a question. Of course, motions for papers, referred to by Ministers, are made in the ordinary way and the sense of the House is taken as to whether they should be produced or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I be allowed to make an observation, Mr. Speaker? I venture to think that neither of the references mentioned by Your Honour covers the case involved in this question. While these rulings refer to the ordinary member of the House of Commons making reference to a past debate, they do not cover the case of a ministerial statement, which is founded on departmental documents. It surely cannot be that a Minister, having at his command the files of the department, is at liberty to make statements as to what the files contain or do not contain, if he is not prepared to answer such questions as this. Otherwise, we should be at the mercy of a Minister who might make such statements and then shield himself behind a rule or supposed rule forbidding reference to what he had said. We should not be able to question the accuracy of his questions or the extent to which they are based on public documents. I do not think your decision has covered that point at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Permit me to say, Mr. Speaker, that I made no reference to any public document or any document on file in the department. I made a statement in general argument. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) asks me if I adhere to one single sentence which he extracts from my speech. I say that this sort of thing is calculated, if indulged in, to become an abuse of the right to question Ministers on public matters.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me, that the question as to the production of public documents which is referred to by Ministers, is an entirely different question, and I would not attempt to give a decision thereon today, because there are a great many difficult points arising out of it. I think, however, it must be clear that, in asking an ordinary question across the House, past debates must not be referred to.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), does he seriously ask me to put a formal motion on the paper in connection with sub-question "c"?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. "Will the Minister bring down and lay upon the Table of the House at an early date all such petitions, if any?" I call your attention to this fact, Mr. Speaker, that I am entitled to the production of these documents under the circumstances, these documents having been referred to in debate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They were discussed, I think, and under these circumstances it is carrying the matter pretty far for the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to ask me to give notice and wait in the ordinary course to get an answer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Permit me to make an observation, because my hon. friend is not stating the facts. I made no reference to these public documents, directly or indirectly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You denied their existence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not even deny their existence; I say I know nothing of them.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, you should.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perhaps I should, but I say I know nothing of them. But I tell my hon. friend, in all courtesy, that if he moves for any papers whatever that are in my department, they will be brought down without any delay, and I will facilitate bringing them down, instead of obstructing.

Mr. SPEAKER. The discussion which has arisen seems to justify the wisdom of the ruling I gave, that no reference to past debates should be permitted on such an occasion. It strikes me that the last two paragraphs of this question might be put without referring in any way to a past debate. The questions might be: Are there on file any petitions, signed by so and so? If so, will the hon. member bring those down? That would be a proper question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has not answered my question. He says, if I make a motion, he will answer it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. As I understand it, the Minister has answered the question. At any rate, it is not the Speaker's function to decide how far an answer is satisfactory. That is a matter in the discretion of the Minister, and cannot be discussed at this time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall take an early opportunity of discussing it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope I may be allowed to make this statement, that I can see no distinction between these particular papers he asks for and any other papers; and, if the hon. gentleman, after a question, can ask for any papers and have them brought down, he claims more rights than any member on either side of the House. I tell him I will facilitate the bringing down of any papers he desires, if they are in my department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will save a great deal of time, if he brings those down without a motion; I give notice of that.

Mr. SPEAKER. This discussion is evidently another illustration of the unwisdom of referring to past debates.

UNITED STATES VESSELS ON CANADIAN REGISTRY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

What instructions, if any, have been sent to Government officials in the Yukon district respecting the alleged fraudulent valuations in the rates and registration of United States vessels on the Canadian registry (see "Hansard," May 12, 1899, page 3163)?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Mr. Oglvie, Commissioner of the Yukon district, who is also an inspector of customs, has been requested to ascertain, by the best means in his power, the fair market value of the steamer "John C. Barr" at the time of application for Canadian register and report the facts.

GENERAL SERVICE WAR MEDAL.

Mr. CLARKE asked:

1. Has any design for the Canada general service war medal been yet approved of by the Canadian authorities; and, if so, what is the design, and on what date was it approved?
2. Has such design been forwarded to the Imperial authorities; and, if so, on what date?
3. Has any approval of such design been received from the Imperial authorities; and, if so, on what date?
4. Has any order been given to the Royal Mint for the execution of such design; and, if so, on what date?
5. Have funds been remitted by the Canadian Government to the Royal Mint to defray the expense of executing the medal, and, if so, on what date?
6. Has any demand been made by the Imperial authorities, or by the authorities of the Royal Mint, for the funds necessary to defray the expense of striking the medal; and, if so, on what date?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). 1. Yes. The obverse will bear the effigy of the Queen and will be similar to that now borne on the India (1895) medal. The reverse will consist of a wreath of Canadian maple, with the Canadian flag and a ribbon or scroll, bearing on it the word "Canada." Approved on the 22nd November, 1898. 2. Yes. 22nd November, 1898. 3. Yes. The approval is contained in War Office letter of the 25th February, 1899. 4. Yes, by the Imperial authorities, as intimated in War Office letter of the 22nd February, 1899. 5. No. 6. No.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES, 1896.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What are the items that go to make up the sum of $3,228,745 represented as paid out in the year 1896, under the heading of "Railway Subsidies" in Public Accounts, 1898, page XVa ?

2. Did the item of $2,394,000, North Shore Railway interest of the province of Quebec, represented as paid out, form a part of the $44,096,383 total disbursements of the year 1896, and of the $7,477,793, the difference between receipts and expenditures of the same year ?

3. Was the sum of $2,394,000, or any part of it, actually paid out in 1896, to the Government of Quebec as a railway subsidy ?

4. If not, was the interest paid thereon, and to what item was it debited ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding. 1. :

3. The sum of $2,394,000 was not paid to the province of Quebec in cash, but was placed at the credit of that province by being charged to consolidated fund and credited to Quebec railway subsidy account, in accordance with the Act 57-58 Vic., chapter 5. 4. The amount, $2,394,000, having been placed to the credit of the province, interest was paid thereon and charged to interest on public debt each year.

LOCK LABOURERS, BEAUHARNOIS CANAL.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. When were Joseph Lefebvre, Edmond Emond, Marcellin Bourque, Damien Cardinal, Damase Hainault, Joseph Julien, André Hébert, Hyacinthe Dandurand, appointed as lock labourers on the Beauharnois Canal ?

2. At what lock were they named ?

3. Are they still employed ?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

4. By whom have they been dismissed, and on whose recommendation ?

5. Why have they been discharged ?

6. Had they been notified of their dismissal, by whom, and when ?

7. What are the names of the men who have replaced those above named ?

8. By whom were they recommended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1 and 2. Joseph Lefebvre was appointed lockmaster at lock No. 10 in May, 1886; Edmond Emond was appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 7 in June, 1889; Marcellin Bourque, appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 8, May, 1894; Damien Cardinal, appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 9, April, 1896; Damase Henault, appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 10, June, 1871; Joseph Julien, appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 12, September, 1880; André Hébert, appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 12, August, 1886; Hyacinthe Dandurand, appointed assistant lockmaster at lock No. 13, June, 1889. 3. No, they are not. 4. By the order of the Minister. 5. They were discharged because their services were not acceptable. 6. Instructions were given to Mr. Marceau, to notify them, on the 5th of May. 7. C. Trepanier, appointed in place of E. Emond; A. Boyer, appointed in place of M. Bourque; Joseph Lynch, appointed in place of D. Cardinal; E. Lebeuf, appointed in place of Jos. Lefebvre; W. Lalonde, appointed in place of D. Henault; Joseph Dubois, appointed in place of Jos. Julien; D. Paquette, appointed in place of André Hébert; D. Poirier, appointed in place of H. Dandurand. 8. They were recommended by persons in whom the department had confidence.

PROPOSED PACIFIC CABLE.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the Government to an article that appears in the "Citizen" of Tuesday last, as follows :

London, May 15.—The Secretary of State for the Colonies, Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, had a conference to-day on the subject of the proposed Pacific cable, with Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal, the High Commissioner of Canada, and other colonial agents-general, who presented certain modifications of the original proposals. Mr. Chamberlain promised that they should receive the best consideration.

Has the Government modified its proposals for the construction of a Pacific cable in the manner here specified, and if so, what are the reasons ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government have received no such information as is mentioned in the extract from the newspaper just read, nor do I believe that Lord Strathcona has authorized or suggested any modification of the plan accepted three years ago by the Imperial committee, and the Government does not intend to depart from this plan.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid I will have to call the attention of hon. members of the House again to the fact that, on Wednesday, the Orders of the Day are not called until a little later.

DAM ACROSS RIVER JÉSUS AND CONSTRUCTION OF FISHWAY.

Mr. THOMAS FORTIN (Laval) moved for :

Copies of all papers, plans, maps, reports of fishery officers, correspondence and other documents relating to the existence of a dam across River Jésus, near the town of Terrebonne, and the construction of a fishway therein according to the requirements of the law.

He said : Mr. Speaker, the object of this motion is to call the attention of the Government and the attention of this House to a condition of things which, in my humble opinion, should not be allowed to exist any longer. It is well known to the members of this House that the river referred to in my motion, is one of the most beautiful rivers in the vicinity of Montreal, that the town of Terrebonne and the villages above on both sides of the river constitute one of the best summer resorts of the whole district of Montreal, and that a good many of the citizens of Montreal are going out there to spend the summer season. That river has also been, for many years, considered one of the best rivers for fishing and sporting purposes. For years it has been looked upon as one of the best fishing places in the district of Montreal. Now, it appears, in the year 1891 or 1892 a dam was built across the north channel of that river near Terrebonne by the Estate Masson for the purpose of obtaining motive power for mills which belong to that estate. Such a dam existed for several years before, but it was so constructed as not to obstruct the passage of fish. The last dam that was built was placed right across the north channel of the river, at right angles, obstructing the main channel of the river between the mainland and an island. From that time up to the present the fish have greatly diminished in quantity and in species, above this dam. It is apparent to all those who used to go on that river for sporting purposes and it is apparent to those farmers and others who live along the river and who, in former years, used to take a sufficient quantity of fish for food purposes, that since the existence of that dam the quantity of fish is nothing as compared with what it was formerly. In 1892, if my memory serves me right, a fish inspector was appointed who resided in Ste. Rose. The fish inspector was specially requested to make an examination of the dam in question and of both channels of the river—because there is a south channel on the other side of the island—and to make a special report to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. If my information is correct, he drew the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to the dam and declared, positively, that until such dam would be either removed or until a fishway would be constructed in such a dam, no fishing could be expected in all the localities above as far as Lake of Two Mountains. The following year, in response to an official circular issued by the Department of Marine and Fisheries, the inspector made exactly a similar report calling the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries to the existence of the dam. His name is Mr. Damien Filiatrault, and as he was a great fisherman himself he took an interest in the matter. In 1896, when the present Government came into power I also took an interest in this matter for a very good reason. I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that there can be any better sport than fishing and shooting. The hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Chauvin), who lives in my neighbourhood in Ste. Rose, can bear out my declaration that this is the main sport all along that river from Terrebonne to Lake of Two Mountains. I, also, take a great interest in all that relates to the catching of fish and the killing of game, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I may live some few years more to enjoy the same sport. Therefore, I came to call upon the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries early in 1896, after the present Government had come in power, and I inquired what means, if any, had been taken by the Government to have either the dam opened or constructed in such a way as to allow fish to ascend the river. After some verbal and written communication I received an answer from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) on the 9th of June, 1897, as follows :—

Ottawa, 9th June, 1897.

Dear Sir,—Since you were here on the subject of a dam over the River Jésus, I have examined the files more closely, and I see that before the Masson Estate will permit an order to establish fishways to be carried out there will be a lawsuit, and as the question of who has jurisdiction over these inland waters, whether the Dominion or provincial governments, is now on appeal to the Privy Council, I do not feel disposed to take any steps which would involve a decision of the local courts with a great deal of expense, until the Privy Council gives judgment. The question, therefore, of the removal of the dam or the provision of proper fishways cannot prudently be approached until that judgment is delivered.

I regret the delay, but, as you will see, it would be folly to take any steps until the question of jurisdiction is determined.

Yours faithfully,

L. H. DAVIES.

I accepted this reason as a good one, and still believe that no more proper answer could have been given, but the decision of the Privy Council was given subsequently. Again I wrote and the answer came, signed by the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in the following terms :—

Ottawa, 20th July, 1898.

Dear Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 15th ultimo, asking if this department is now in a position, under the recent decision of the Privy Council in the fisheries case, to exact the construction of a fishway in the dam belonging to the Masson Estate on River Jésus, I beg to inform you that as soon as possible the Minister will go fully into the several points affected by the Privy Council decision, with representatives from the local government, so as to arrive at a proper understanding with regard to the extent of jurisdiction held by the respective governments. The question of fishways will be one of the matters for consideration, and you will be duly advised of the decision arrived at.

Yours faithfully,

F. GOURDEAU,
Deputy Minister.

This was on the 20th July, 1898. Since then I saw by the newspaper reports that conferences have taken place between the provincial authorities and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Although I have had occasion to meet the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries several times and to speak of the matter to him, I have heard nothing at all about this question of constructing fishways. I cannot say that I have examined very carefully the decision of the Privy Council, but I have had an opportunity of reading a copy of the judgment, and if I understand aright that decision, it is made very clear that while the ownership of the fisheries belongs to the provinces, the Dominion Parliament has power and authority to control the exercise or the use of that ownership. In other words, the Dominion Government has the right to see to the preservation of fish, to the regulations as to the close season, and to see that licenses are not issued which will come into conflict with the powers that are to be exercised by the Dominion Government. There are other questions which have been answered by the Privy Council, but they have no reference to the subject matter at issue now. Under this decision of the Privy Council, it seems to me that it belongs to this Government to see that there shall be no obstacle in navigable waters, or in lakes or elsewhere, by which the existence of any kind of fish in these waters would be terminated. It seems to me, that such powers belong to the Government now, and it rests with the Federal Government to take the necessary steps to have these obstacles removed. There can be no more flagrant case of obstruction than the one to which I refer. Here is a river the main channel of which is undoubtedly obstructed by that dam. It may be said that there is on the south end of the dam, near the island, a vacant space of from probably ten to twelve yards, and that that is sufficient for the fish to ascend up the river. Now, that vacant space only exists in high water. There is no such vacant space when the water is low, so that this answer to the objection would only be good for a portion of the summer. Another answer which may be given is, that the large species of fish, such as the catfish, maskinongé, and sturgeon only ascend these rivers in the spring, but it is well known to any one who is experienced in the matter, that these large fish always ascend the river in the main channel where the water is deepest. The channel which is obstructed by the dam is exactly the spot where such fish would ascend. I have been living in Ste. Rose, on the banks of that river since 1885, and I distinctly remember that from 1885 up to about the time that dam was constructed, which I think was in 1891, big catfish weighing some forty pounds were caught in that river. I remember also having seen big sturgeon weighing sixty pounds caught in that river, prior to the existence of that dam, but no such fish can be seen above that dam now, and not a single one of them have been seen for several years.

Mr. CHAUVIN. I would ask the hon. gentleman, in what year was the dam on this side of the river near St. François de Sales, in Laval County, constructed?

Mr. FORTIN. I cannot give the exact date, but I can tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Chauvin) that it has been ascertained by the fishery officer, Mr. Filiatreault, that the Meunier dam which exists on the south channel of the river opposite Terrebonne, is no obstruction to the fish going up that river. I think the papers when brought down will show that Mr. Filiatreault was sent there in August, 1893, or 1894, to make a special examination, and if my memory serves me right. I think there are other documents in the department which show that some other officers have been sent, and they have all reported that the Masson dam was the dam which obstructed the fish on their way up the river. Now, Mr. Speaker, if the proper authority rests with the Government, I wish the Government would take action and enforce the provisions which are to be found in the Fisheries Act, especially section 13. It is therein provided especially:

Every dam, slide, or other obstruction across or in any stream where the Minister of Marine and Fisheries determines it to be necessary for the public interest that a fish-pass should exist, shall be provided by the owner or occupier with a durable and efficient fishway, which shall be maintained in practical and effective condition, in whatever place and of whatever form and capacity will admit of the passage of fish through the same; and the place, form and capacity of the fishway may be prescribed by any fishery officer by notice in writing.

Then a penalty is enacted for the violation of this provision. Another subsection says that fishways must be kept open and unobstructed, and shall be supplied with a certain quantity of water to fulfil the purposes of this enactment. Subsection 4 says that the Minister may—he is not bound to, as will be noticed:

The Minister may authorize the payment of one-half of the expense incurred by such owner or occupier in constructing and maintaining any fishway.

Subsection 5 says :

'The Minister, in order to procure the construction of any fishway, pending proceedings against any owner or occupier for the penalty imposed by this Act, may give directions to make and complete the same forthwith, and may authorize any person to enter upon the premises with the necessary workmen, means and materials, and may recover from the owner or occupier the whole expense so incurred by action before any competent tribunal

There was objection taken, I believe, whether by this Government or a former Government I do not know, that it was not very clear as to who would bear the expense of constructing this fishway, but it seems to me that by section 5 it is made clear that the cost of constructing this fishway can be recovered entirely from the owner or occupier of the dam. Mr. Speaker, these are about all the observations that I have to make on this subject. I think I have said enough to draw the attention of the House and of the Government to this matter. It seems to me absolutely unfair and unjust, that the people living above Terrebonne should be deprived of the natural benefit to which they have a right by the existence of that river, for the sake of the benefit which may be derived by the Estate Masson. I have nothing to say against the Estate Masson, or any members of that very respectable family, but it seems to me they should have no monopoly in any navigable streams or rivers, and that they have no right to deprive the public of the benefit to which they ought to be entitled. I do not see why that dam should not be constructed as it was formerly. It may be a little more expensive to construct a dam lengthwise ascending the river, but I am told by engineers that the motive power resulting from the head of such a quantity of water, would not be diminished in any way if the dam were so constructed. This would leave a proper channel for the fish to go up, and it would remove the subject of complaint to which I am now referring. If the decision of the Privy Council is as clear as I think it to be upon the subject, I hope the Government will lose no time in taking immediate proceedings to remove this obstacle, and I trust they will not defer it for months, nor even for weeks. We who live up the river, the inhabitants of the village and parish of Ste. Rose, the inhabitants of the village and parish of Ste. Thérèse, the inhabitants of the village and parish of St. Eustache, have a legitimate right to whatever fish may ascend from the St. Lawrence and are liable to be caught in that river. It is totally unjust on the part of the Masson Estate, or of any other estate or person, that they should obstruct the navigable rivers over which this Government has the control of as regards the fishing. I repeat the hope, that the Government will see its way to take immediate proceedings in order to have that dam either demolished, or a proper and efficient fishway constructed therein. As regards fishways, I know that a good deal of them are hardly worth anything. I dare say that the department may have in its possession such information as will enable it to have these fishways properly constructed, and prevent the construction of these mock machines which are not worthy of bearing the name of fishways.

Mr. L. A. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). The Department of Marine and Fisheries will find its way clear to decide in favour of the people of Terrebonne on this question, because as a matter of fact, the Masson estate dam there has a fishway already constructed, and that fishway has been accepted by the Government fishery inspector. The department is in possession of the report of the inspector, Mr. Lauzon, who accepted the fishway constructed on the Masson estate dam.

Mr. FORTIN. Will the hon. gentleman tell me when that fishway was constructed?

Mr. CHAUVIN. It was constructed at the same time as the dam was, in 1891 or 1892.

Mr. FORTIN. You are misinformed.

Mr. CHAUVIN. I am well informed, and the department will see that there is a report of Fishery Inspector Lauzon establishing that the fishway is according to the regulations of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and is accepted by that department. That dam is constructed in a part of the river between the island and the shore of Terrebonne, which is the narrowest branch of the river, and on the other side of the island, between that island and St. Francis de Sales, in the county of Laval, which is the largest branch of the river, there is opposite to that dam of the Estate Masson, another dam called the Meunier dam, in which there is no fishway at all. That dam, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) did not complain about, but as a matter of fact it has been constructed of recent date, and it obstructs the whole of the river there. One end of that dam touches the shore of Laval County, and the other end touches the island of the Masson estate. The first dam of the Masson estate was constructed in 1803 or 1804, and was without a fishway; but it was demolished, and another one was built in 1891 or 1892, and was constructed with a fishway, which, at the time, was accepted by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The Masson estate claims that it has followed the regulations of the Department of Fisheries; and, if there is anything defective in that fishway, it is ready to make it conform with the regulations of the department. We contend that we have compiled with the law, and that there is nothing wrong on our side of the river. If there are any who did not comply with the law, it was those who constructed the dam on the other side of the river, the Laval side. I do not see why my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) looks only to our side, and not to his side. We have a fishway on our side, and there is none on his side. The river is completely obstructed by that Meunier dam, which is a new one; and, as I say, that is the principal branch of the river, and the principal passage way for fish.

(Translation.) The best evidence that such was the case, namely, that the fish passed on the other side of the river is to be found in the fact that, when the people of Terrebonne wished to catch shad, for instance, they had to cross over to the other side of the island, as the fish were going up on the other side.

Let my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) allow me to tell him that if he pretends that the fish has greatly diminished in quantity and in species, as he told us, since 1891 or 1892, the Masson estate is not to blame for it; because, as I have previously stated, they have complied with the requirements of the Act, by establishing a fishway when they built their dam over the river, thus permitting the passage of the fish up the river; while, on the other hand, at the very time when the hon. member for Laval states that the fish diminished in quantity at Ste. Rose and St. Eustache, there was another dam built, called the Meunier dam, one end of which touches the shore of Laval County and the other touches the island of the Masson estate, thus obstructing the whole stream there, which, as I said, is the largest branch of the River Jésus. That dam is still in existence there, and the owners of that dam have not built any fishway, thus failing to comply with the requirements of the Act, contrary to what we have done on our side, and so they prevent the fishermen of Ste. Rose and St. Eustache indulging in their favourite sport, as the fish do not ascend the river in sufficient numbers.

When I heard the hon. member for Laval speak on that matter, I was forcibly reminded of Cato's "delenda carthago." The hon. gentleman, as is well known, is a great fisherman before God and before men, but I think, on this occasion, he is more likely trying to fish for votes. I am even afraid he is fishing in troubled waters, because, like the man in the bible, he sees a mote in his neighbour's eye, but does not see a beam in his own. The dam which was built on the shore of the county of Terrebonne is provided with a fishway, according to the requirements of the law, whilst the dam across the other side of the river, contiguous to the county of Laval, was not built according to the law, as it was not provided with a fish-pass. Fortunately, the fish are clearer-sighted than the hon. member for Laval, and I may also say that the department is better posted on those matters than the hon. gentleman, as it is stated by the fish Inspector Lauzon in his report that the dam alluded to was properly constructed, according to the requirements of the law, contrary to the statement of the hon. gentleman from Laval.

The hon. gentleman might well follow the example of King Xerxes who, incensed at the billows which had destroyed a portion of his fleet, ordered his soldiers to take up whips and to belabour the sea. I think the hon. gentleman might well arm himself and arm the department with whips and thrash both sides of the river, at the same time endeavouring to build a fishway on the side of St. Francis de Sales, so as to allow the fish to go up the river as was the case formerly, and snap at the bait of the great fisherman of Ste. Rose, among others; as the fish do not go up that part of the river in his county, in sufficient numbers to please the hon. gentleman.

Before resuming my seat, I wish to tell the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) that if he takes the trouble to look into the records of his department, he will find that the Masson estate has complied with the requirements of the law. But should it be shown that the fishway referred to was not built according to the requirements of the statute, we are ready to fully comply with the same.

Motion agreed to.

IMPROVEMENTS OF PORT COLBORNE AND PORT DALHOUSIE.

Mr. WM. McCLEARY (Welland) moved:

That inasmuch as there has been expended by the Federal Government of Canada, on the canals of the Dominion, up to the 30th June, 1898, $73,772,622, and of this amount there has been expended for construction and enlargement of the Welland Canal, $23,806,459, it is the opinion of this House that having regard to this large expenditure, which constitutes a heavy charge on the revenues of the country, that if the harbour of Port Colborne, on Lake Erie, at the southern end of the Welland Canal, and the harbour of Port Dalhousie, on Lake Ontario, at the northern end of same canal, were improved and sufficient elevator facilities provided so that large lake carriers could enter, it would not only give the most rapid and the cheapest route for the products of the great west to tide-water in the east, but as well utilize the water-way already provided at the large cost to the country above stated.

He said: Since I put this motion on the Order paper, Mr. Speaker, some time ago, deputations have waited on the Government, representing the various boards of trade in the towns and cities along the lines of the Welland Canal, and have set forth to the Government the objects embodied in this resolution. I ask the concurrence of the House to this motion, because I believe it is one of great importance to this country, affecting, as it does, the financial interests and the vested interests of Canada. The fact that these deputations interviewed certain members of the Government and placed before the Government fully the views I hold with regard to this matter, relieves me from dwelling on it at any great length, and I shall, therefore, endeavour to be as brief as possible in the remarks I feel called upon to make.

The transportation question is one that for years past has been foremost in the minds of the business community of this country. Both this Government and its predecessors have given a great deal of attention to it, and spent much of the people's money in advancing and improving our transportation facilities, but at no time in the history of our country has this question been more prominently before the people than it is now. Any one who, fifty years ago, looked over the map of the then province of Ontario and the great North-west, saw that the shortest and the best connection that could be made between the great inland seas on the west and tide water in the east, was to cut a channel across the Niagara peninsula. That was done some fifty years ago, and since then the Government of our country have, from time to time, spent large amounts of money in keeping in order, repairing, rebuilding and improving this Welland Canal, until now we have fourteen feet of water in that water-way. My contention is that Port Colborne, which stands at the head of our canal system, is the only port which opens up the traffic of the great west to tide-water, as a through water route. It will not be contended, I think, by any person that an all-water route is not much cheaper than an all-rail route, or a combined rail and water route. Let me give you an example. A vessel takes on her cargo at either Port Arthur or Chicago. Say she takes on cargo at Chicago. From Chicago to Buffalo by rail is 540 miles, and via Lake Michigan is 900 miles. Yet the rate per rail average 6 cents per bushel, while the water rate averages from 1 to 1½ cents per bushel, thus giving a preference in favour of the water-way of from 4½ to 5 cents a bushel. Wheat is shipped from California by Cape Horn to Europe for one-seventh of the cost of shipment from California across the United States, to New York, although the distance is less than one-fifth from California to New York than from California to Europe.

Besides Port Colborne, which is the head of our canal system, is nearer Montreal than any port on the Georgian Bay. From Port Colborne to Montreal there are 70 miles of canal and 300 miles of open lake and river navigation. Wheat is carried from Chicago or Port Arthur just as cheaply as to a Georgian Bay point, but with this greater advantage, that whereas a vessel going from Port Arthur or Chicago to a Georgian Bay port has no return cargo, if it goes to Port Colborne or Buffalo, in nine cases out of ten, it will have a return cargo. Let us see what would be the difference in the earnings of a vessel that would go to a Georgian Bay point and unload and a vessel that would go to Port Colborne and unload. She leaves Port Arthur, say, with 220,000 bushels of wheat, the freight is one cent per bushel, or $2,200. She would have a return cargo, say, of 7,100 tons, at 40 cents freight, or $2,840, making the gross earnings for the return trip, $5,040. Deducting for expenses, $1,000, that leaves $4,040 as the net earnings on the round trip to Port Colborne and back. But if she went to a Georgian Bay port, with a cargo of 220,000 bushels, she would earn just $2,200, and deducting $800 for expenses, would have a net earning of $1,400. Her earnings, therefore, as compared with Port Colborne trip, would be the difference between $4,040 and $1,400, or $2,640. Therefore, you will see that as a matter of earning power for vessels, Port Colborne stands far superior to any harbour on the Georgian Bay. But those who are contending that Georgian Bay should be the head of deep water navigation say that to go by the Welland Canal involves the long haul and occupies several days more. But, as a matter of fact, it does not take up so much more time after all. A few days ago the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), and the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) were in Toronto, and were interviewed by the members of the board of trade and had a pleasant time. The hon. Minister of Public Works, in reply to certain intimations that were made to him by gentlemen present at their lunch, intimated that he might be favourable to what is known as the air line railway. At least, the newspapers of Toronto took it for granted that he had committed himself and the Government and the country to that, and all the papers, not the Grit papers nor the Tory papers alone, but all, took this up as something that would be a great boon for Toronto. Now, these papers, in declaring in favour of this air line railway, tell us that this long haul is going to destroy the navigation trade by the Welland Canal, that it makes a difference of 400 miles. As a matter of fact, it does not make a difference of 400 miles. The mileage from Port Arthur to Port Colborne is 852 miles, and from Port Colborne to Montreal 370, a total of 1,222. From Port Arthur to Collingwood is 538 miles. This air line railway, no matter how directly it goes, cannot be less than seventy miles to Toronto, and the distance from Toronto to Montreal is 344, or a total of 952 miles. The difference, therefore, is 270 miles, instead of 400 miles. That means about a day or a day and a half for a boat. But, when she gets to Port Colborne, if coal is not there for her to load, she has only twenty miles for to go to get it, and it is put on the boat free of cost. And so she returns, as I have shown, with a net amount to her credit of $2,600 more than if she had unloaded at any of the Georgian Bay ports.

Now, I have nothing to say against the anxiety of these people in Toronto and the people on Georgian Bay to get the Government to spend money in their interest. All the ports of Georgian Bay, such as Midland, Collingwood, Owen Sound and Warton have railway connection. If they can get boats to come in there and unload their cargoes, and the railway take them in, well and good. But I submit that this House and this Government have no right to expend public money in developing new avenues of trade until we are satisfied that the avenues on which we have spent millions of the people's money cannot only be made the cheapest, but the best and quickest way of transporting great products of the west to tide-water in the east. They say we have lost our trade by the Welland Canal, that we have allowed the trade to go by us to Buffalo. That is simply due to the fact that the Welland Canal has not been completed and the St. Lawrence canals have not been completed. A great deal of money was spent on the Welland Canal, but knowing that canal as I do, I am here to say that that canal has never come up to the expectations of the Government that spent the money, and has certainly not fulfilled what was expected of it by the people of this country. I have not a word to say in condemnation of the work. I think that every dollar spent on the Welland Canal was well spent. But when you come to the head of the canal at Port Colborne, what do you find? You find that if the water is low in Lake Erie, instead of having fourteen feet on the mitre sills, you have only thirteen feet. A vessel comes in there drawing fourteen feet of water. She has either to stay there until the water rises in the lake to get into the canal where there is fourteen feet, or she has to go to an elevator and lighten part of her cargo of grain, to be brought to Port Dalhousie for the munificent amount of 2 cents a bushel. So, that canal has been handicapped because the harbour of Port Colborne never has been in a proper condition. Trade has gone by Port Colborne and gone to Buffalo because vessels were afraid to make Port Colborne harbour in any sort of bad weather. Port Colborne practically has no harbour. She ought to have a breakwater. And in this connection, I am very glad to see that the Government has placed in the Estimates a considerable sum for this purpose. My only object in speaking of this question now is to endeavour to have the Government proceed immediately with the expenditure of this money and put the harbour of Port Colborne in such a position that any vessel coming down the lakes drawing twenty or twenty-one feet of water may come in there. But they say to us: What is the use of going into Port Colborne with twenty feet of water when you have only fourteen feet in the Welland Canal? Well, Sir, it is proposed—and I believe that there are business men who have got their heads together for that purpose—to construct elevators at Port Colborne. There is an elevator there at present, but it is of antediluvian date, and not at all capable of doing anything like the business required of an elevator that should be prepared to unload cargoes of 250,000 or 260,000 bushels. If elevators were built at Port Colborne, there will be no trouble whatever in getting barges that would carry from 80,000 to 90,000 bushels down the Welland Canal on fourteen feet of water and go on to Montreal—that is, as soon as the lower canals are finished. First and foremost, however, Port Colborne harbour should be put in proper condition to receive a vessel. The money that has been put in the Estimates for this purpose this year is hardly sufficient, however, I think, to do anything like what ought to be done in this regard. Then, we want an up-to-date canal; we want it to be under the right kind of management. The truth is, that our Welland Canal has become unpopular with vessel owners. I know something of the opinion of vessel men in this regard. Wherever the canal crosses a roadway, the Government have placed their swing bridges on piers right in the centre of a canal, and, if a vessel coming down, towed by a tug, sheers a little bit to one side, if she knocks a sliver off a binder or strikes the piling, why, she is either tied up until she pays the damages, or she has to pay at once whatever may be demanded of her. If she knocks a stone out of the wall, she is charged for it. I think the Government ought to be above that kind of thing; it is too small and nigardly a principle for the Government of Canada to follow. These complaints are not of recent date, but there has always been trouble of that kind. Then, the operation of the locking is not satisfactory. In shutting or opening the gates the lock tender with lever in hand has to run around in a circle, reminding you of the old horse power used on the ancient threshing machines, and it takes them as long to open and shut the gates as it does to fill a lock. If the Welland Canal was put in an up-to-date condition in the way of operating it, and if Port Colborne harbour was deepened and widened, and a breakwater placed there, so that vessels could have security in entering, there can be no doubt, in my mind at least, that much of the traffic that is now going to Buffalo would go through the Welland Canal. If we were in that position, what would be the result? There are now tied up in Buffalo in the neighbourhood of 100 boats because of the strike going on amongst the shovellers, and a great deal, if not all, of that trade would go through the Welland Canal. But we are not in a position to take it, simply because of the slowness of the locking, and because of the inadequate condition of affairs at the harbour of Port Colborne. I had a lot of suggestions to make to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), but, although I have had no conversation with him on this question, I think that he already sees the necessity of doing something, a necessity that must strike every one who is not interested in some local scheme. The Welland Canal is the only route by which the great traffic of the lakes to the west and to the north must be carried to tide-water in the east; there can be no question about this. Take, for instance, the conclusions that were reached by the Deep Waterways Commission appointed by the late Government in 1895 and by the United States Government. The United States Government appointed a Deep Waterway Commission, who are now investigating that question, and Congress appropriated nearly half a million dollars for that purpose. They have already agreed that the Welland Canal route, no matter whether an all-Canadian route would be taken, or a route part Canadian and part American—they have all agreed that the Welland Canal is the only route that would be feasible. Therefore, I think it becomes the imperative duty of the Government at once to direct their energies to putting this link which connects the upper lakes with Lake Ontario, in such a condition that it will gather in, as we all expected and hoped it would years ago, the bulk of the traffic of the great lakes to the west. There is an enormous traffic going through those inland seas, Lake Superior, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan and Lake Erie. Over 40,000,000 tons were moved last year, and that means nearly the combined tonnage of Liverpool and London, the two great commercial centres of Europe, I may say. Therefore, I repeat, that it becomes our duty, as Canadians, not to lose one hour, if possible, in putting ourselves in a position to take our share of that which nature has provided us the facilities of taking, by putting in proper shape and condition the route which nature originally intended, and letting loose the vessels that are locked up in the upper lakes on account of the Niagara Falls. Then, we have our money invested there, and that is another thing, and we ought to guard against dealing with this great question in the style of ward politicians in towns and cities, where one ward is working against another ward. I am not speaking for any locality. I am not speaking for Port Colborne because it happens to be in my constituency, but I am speaking for all the people of the Dominion of Canada, because it is the money of the whole country that is invested in the Welland Canal, as well as in all the other canals under the charge of this Government, and these latter are of little use unless the Welland Canal is put in a proper condition. I hope that the Government will at once take steps to carry out these ideas which I have placed before the House in so fragmentary a manner, if not this summer, as early thereafter as possible.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I must apologize to my hon. friend for having been absent at the moment when he made this motion. I allowed myself to be called away, under the impression that other intervening motions would have occupied the time, and that I would have been able to return before this particular subject was reached. I am bound to say, Mr. Speaker, from my understanding of the general situation, and from the knowledge I have acquired by personal visit and examination of the Welland Canal, that I agree almost entirely with what the hon. gentleman has stated to the House. My own conclusion was, from the examination to which I refer, and which I made some months after I entered the department, that it was imperatively necessary that steps should be taken at the earliest possible date to improve the shipping facilities in order to utilize that canal to better advantage. My first feeling was, that, unless we were able to deepen the entrance at Port Colborne, we would probably accomplish very little by making any other improvements. The deepening of the entrance at that point and the construction of a breakwater, or the improvement of the harbour in some other form, seemed to me absolutely indispensable if we were to put ourselves in a position in which we could, with a prospect of success at all events, compete with Buffalo harbour. I had concluded, and presented that view to my colleagues in Council, that it was necessary to deepen the entrance to the canal and construct a breakwater as a protection from the heavy storms, from the winds and seas at the head of the canal. There seemed to me to be no reason in the world why these improvements being made and others to which the hon. gentleman has referred, following up in due course and with all reasonable despatch, we might not—I perhaps would not reasonably hope for so large a portion as he does—be able to get a substantial portion of the Buffalo trade. We would be, by securing to ourselves from eighteen to twenty-foot navigation, at the entrance of the harbour, in as good a position as they are in Buffalo. We would not only have to compete with whatever disadvantages there may be in connection with the St. Lawrence route and advantages Buffalo would possess from the fact that it is now largely in control of that business, and that the shippers and others who carry on the largest portion of the grain trade are already established at Buffalo. These would be the only disadvantages under which we would labour, and I think there is good ground for the confident hope that we would make a serious inroad upon that traffic. Now, Sir, having that view, and succeeding, as I have done in impressing my colleagues with the soundness of it, a very substantial sum has been put in the Estimates for the current year for the purpose of deepening the entrance to the canal. I am in hopes that the work will be completed during the present year. We are to proceed with all despatch in order to attain that end. We have in course of preparation specifications for the purpose so that there may be no delay in inviting tenders and having the work entered upon. A question, however, I think does legitimately arise as to whether or not it would be wise on the part of the Government to take up the work of providing elevator facilities, or whether it might not be more wisely and prudently left to private enterprise. I have not, myself, any doubt that, if we properly equip the canals, if we provide sufficient entrance and create a good safe harbour at that point and supplement that work with improvements at various points along the canal, we will find private enterprise equal to the other undertaking and taking up the work of building elevators and furnishing the necessary shipping facilities outside of that. I do not wish, in saying that, to be understood as expressing any final or conclusive opinion on the question. But, speaking at the moment, my opinion is that we will be able to count on private enterprise taking up that portion of the necessary work. As to the building of the breakwater and providing for the harbour, hon. members know that this is not within my jurisdiction. That work would not devolve upon my department, but the question is receiving the consideration of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) and, perhaps, before the session is over, it will appear to the House the hon. gentleman has arrived at a conclusion himself upon the subject. I can only speak at the moment in regard to the particular work which comes within my own department. I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot count with any great confidence, upon obtaining a better supply of water, or, I might put it more properly, or getting a greater depth of water than we now have. We can count, when the winds are favourable on the lakes, upon fourteen feet of water upon the mitre sill, but, when the winds are unfavourable, we cannot count upon more than thirteen feet, and there are occasions, when there is not even thirteen feet of water. I believe that we will cover the ground sufficiently for many years to come, if the elevator facilities are provided at the entrance, if the channel is deepened and the style of craft which will likely become in use on the lower stretches of the St. Lawrence is adopted, as I have no doubt they will be. Vessels drawing from thirteen to fourteen feet of water will be able, when the canal routes are entirely completed, and I hope they will be sufficiently completed for the purposes of navigation within a few weeks—the larger vessels which are now carrying the tonnage of the lakes will be able to go into Port Colborne as well as to go into Buffalo; they will then transfer to small crafts which will take the tonnage to Montreal, and, if we succeed in establishing this route, with a completed 14-foot navigation and make the improvements which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McCleary) has, to some extent, indicated to-day, upon the Welland Canal, we will stand in as good a position as we can hope to stand for many years to come. The question of deepening the Welland Canal has been somewhat discussed, but I think it is not a debatable question at present. I mean to say it is not a question we can consider as a practicable question now. That would mean, in my judgment, the practical construction of a new canal. We cannot deepen the present canal; it would be impossible to get over some of the obstacles with which the hon. gentleman is familiar and provide anything more than thirteen to fourteen feet of water. It would be necessary to practically construct a new canal, at all events, a large portion of it would need to be new so that the moneys necessary to do that would run up into the millions, $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 perhaps, would not more than suffice for the purpose. But we will be in as good a position when we get the Port Colborne entrance deepened as Buffalo will be in—I hope a better position, and I think we will then find it possible to complete for a substantial portion, at all events, of the carrying trade of the lake. I hope, Mr. Speaker, now that the hon. gentleman has, as I think, very properly called the attention of the House to this subject, he will permit the matter to drop at this stage, or, if he desires it, the debate could be adjourned, to be resumed later, if any object would be served by it. I will act upon whichever suggestion the hon. gentleman desires, either adjourn the debate or allow it to stand.

Mr. McCLEARY. I would prefer that the debate be adjourned, because there are other gentlemen who may wish to speak on the question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I judged that perhaps there were none that desired to speak on the subject.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, the constituency which I have the honour to represent is to a great extent interested in the transportation question; a question which to-day is probably one of the most important before the people of Canada; and, lest the debate, if adjourned, may not be reached again this session, I have a few remarks to make on the present occasion. The people of the United States, a good while ago, decided on a principle of transportation which is now carried out at the port of Buffalo, and which seems to be that you should carry the greatest possible quantities of grain at the greatest possible speed between two lake ports, and then, that with the quickest despatch that grain should be carried on to tide-water. That principle has been demonstrated in the case of Buffalo, and the capitalists of the United States, backed by the Government of that country, have directed all their energies towards concentrating the trade of the western states at that port. We have seen the handling of grain at Buffalo increase with the growth of the western grain trade, until last year it reached the enormous figure of 260,000,000 bushels. I regret to say, that some 10,000,000 bushels of that was Canadian grain, and it is not a very inspiring sight to see our Canadian products of the North-west thus pass through a foreign channel. Former Parliaments and Governments of Canada, as well, indeed, as the present Government, have dealt and are dealing with this question on an entirely different basis from that pursued in the United States. The capitalists of Canada and the Government of Canada, have, from time to time, assumed, that the route for the transportation of grain should be through the Welland Canal, thence to Kingston or Prescott, and thence by smaller barges to the seaport of Montreal. The result of that is to-day most disappointing to Canadians, and notwithstanding the immense amount of capital that has been invested by the Government in the Welland Canal and other canals, we still see, to our regret, that an immense quantity of Canadian grain is passing through the port of Buffalo, while at Kingston and Prescott there is very little grain being handled. Within the past few years the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and Mr. J. R. Booth, of this city—whose enterprise is most commendable—have marked out an entirely different mode of transportation for our grain trade, from that which has been pursued by the Canadian Government in past years. The Grand Trunk Railway Company and Mr. Booth have, to some extent, acted on the American plan. They have apparently thought, and their action in investing their capital, supported their opinion, that the day has gone by to attempt to fight the Buffalo trade by carrying grain down the Welland Canal to Prescott or Kingston, and thence in barges to Montreal. The Minister (Mr. Blair) has stated—and it is a very desirable thing to look forward to—that he hopes within a few weeks our system of canals will be deepened to 14 feet. We will then have an opportunity of seeing whether or not that new departure will be a success. As I understand it, with our canals 14 feet deep, vessels can be loaded at Port Arthur, or Duluth, or Chicago, and proceed direct to Montreal; these vessels being capable of carrying about 60,000 bushels.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). From sixty to seventy thousand bushels.

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, but not beyond that quantity. It is now contended that the day has gone by for transporting grain on the upper lakes in vessels of the capacity of only sixty or seventy thousand bushels. I and speaking for our own port of Midland, and the same also applies to Parry Sound, when I say, that a boat coming there with a capacity of 60,000 bushels, is a rare thing nowadays. Both of these ports are capable of accommodating the largest vessels plying on the lakes, and we have had the satisfaction of seeing at Midland, boats, not of 60,000 bushels capacity, but boats 450 feet in length and carrying 250,000 bushels of grain. When one considers the immense cargo of 250,000 bushels of grain, and the large number of boats on the upper lakes to-day, it must be seen that competition is, and has been, very keen—so much so, indeed, that it is not at all unusual during the summer months, when the rates of insurance are not high, to find the rate on grain from Chicago or Port Arthur to the port of Midland sometimes as low as  $\frac{1}{2}$  cent a bushel. When you consider that a boat that carries 60,000 bushels must, of necessity, employ a crew by night as well as by day, and that the crew of a boat of 250,000 bushels capacity is practically the same, you will see that, apart from the additional amount of coal required by the larger boat, the two boats are run at pretty much the same cost. For that reason—and it is being demonstrated every day—American capitalists are bidding good-bye to the building of crafts carrying only 60,000 bushels, and are investing in vessels carrying 250,000 bushels. It was stated, at what was known as the Deep Waterways Convention, that the time would arrive in Canada when a vessel would leave Port Arthur, Duluth, or some other of the upper lake ports, and, with an unbroken load of upwards of 200,000 bushels, pass, not only to the port of Montreal, but across the Atlantic to the port of Liverpool. I remember reading an account of that convention, at which Captain McDougall, of whaleback fame, was present; and, to the great grief, I presume, of the gentlemen advocating this great through route all the way to Liverpool or other European ports, he told them at once, that they must abandon that idea—that it would be the height of folly to attempt to take boats from Port Arthur and other upper lake ports clear through to Liverpool, owing to the fact that so much money would be invested in the boats, the crews employed would be so large, and the time spent in locking through the canals would be so great as to put the project out of the question. The general public, when they see a canal marked on a map, think that it is an uninterrupted water stretch. They do not consider that a canal means an enormous detention of the vessels passing through. I venture to say, that this House, in which there are so many gentlemen conversant with matters concerning their own constituencies or their own province, will rather be surprised to know that a boat carrying 60,000 bushels is lucky to-day, if it can be locked through the Weiland Canal in twenty hours. I may say, that the "Algonquin," a boat which created quite a sensation when she came out some years ago, takes upwards of twenty-four hours to lock through the Welland Canal on her down trips, and on the return trip an average of twenty hours. When you consider that the trip from Chicago to Midland or Parry Sound is made in fifty-two hours by the large vessels that ply on the lakes, you can see how much time is taken up in locking through the canal.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the time to Collingwood ?

Mr. BENNETT. The time taken to Collingwood is practically the same as to Parry Sound or Midland, that is, provided the vessel can get into Collingwood harbour, which she cannot do at present. I contend, therefore, in view of the statements of Captain McDougall and other gentlemen conversant with the carrying trade, that the idea of carrying grain through from Chicago to Liverpool is out of the question. We must consider whether or not it is going to pay to carry grain down the Welland Canal, and in turn, down the Cornwall Canal, when a uniform depth of 14 feet is established. Assuming that to be the case, we are going to carry from Port Arthur clear through to Montreal boats drawing 14 feet of water over the sills; and these boats will be capable of carrying from 60,000 to 70,000 bushels of grain. I do not know how many locks intervene after leaving Kingston and before reaching Montreal. I have been over some portions of the St. Lawrence Canal system, and it does seem to me, that, with the numerous locks that exist between Kingston and Montreal, we shall be in no position to fight the Buffalo trade.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). They have about the same number below as you have above, I think.

Mr. BENNETT. We will not, then, be in a position to fight the Buffalo trade. But we shall certainly be in a better position than we would have been in past years, with a depth of only 9 feet above the sills. Be that as it may, the great amount of money invested in the St. Lawrence Canal system is an accomplished fact; and, whether it fulfils all the expectations of the people of this country, apart from politics—because this is not a matter of politics, but a matter of great interest to the general public—we shall soon be in a better position with 14 feet of water than we have been in the past with 9 feet. There are a great many propositions to-day before the public; and I am glad to say, so far as the portion of the province of Ontario from which I come is concerned, we have nothing to ask from the Government except to promote an interest that will be beneficial, not only to us locally, but to the St. Lawrence system of canals.

Mr. BENNETT.

To my mind—as the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and Mr. Booth, and the gentleman associated with him in his railway, have laid down as a principle, which they are backing up with money—the proper way to make a bid, not only for the Canadian grain-carrying trade, but also for the trade, or a portion of the trade, that issues from Chicago or Duluth, is to carry it from a point on the Georgian Bay through to Montreal at the quickest possible speed, and then transfer it to ocean-going vessels.

Mr. POUPORE. Via the Ottawa River.

Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend from Pontiac says, "Via the Ottawa River." I have only this to say, that I do not believe private capital will be got in the old country to embark in the enterprise of building the Ottawa River canal. I hope and trust it may come to the front; but I think the Parliament of Canada will hesitate before investing in that canal the large amount of money that would be necessary to build it, after our experience with the St. Lawrence Canals and the Welland Canal. We are, and have been, handicapped at the port of Montreal, and we shall be, I fear, for a great number of years be handicapped by the fact that the tonnage that passes from New York to the old country is so much greater than the tonnage that passes from Montreal to the old country; and, consequently, ocean rates must, of necessity, be higher, as they have been, from the port of Montreal than from the port of New York.

How is this condition of things to be met? In the first place, we must take advantage of all the natural advantages which we have at the port of Montreal. We are handicapped at Montreal, first, as I have said, in the greater freight rates across the Atlantic than those from New York. We are handicapped, next, by climatic conditions which prevent the port of Montreal being maintained and kept open all the year round, as, I believe, New York is. Then, at present—the hon. Minister will correct me, if I am wrong—a boat or barge goes to Montreal with a load of grain from Kingston or from Coteau Landing; that grain has to be transferred to an elevator; it is in turn transferred to a small barge, which is taken to the side of the ocean-going ship; and it is then transferred by means of a floating elevator to the ship. I think I am correct in that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Yes, they have to transfer it by a floating elevator from one craft to the other.

Mr. BENNETT. We can easily realize the great cost of that handling. At the port of New York, as I understand it, the means of transshipping grain is altogether different. A train-load of cars is carried into a large elevator, the grain is transferred to the hopper of the elevator, and, while a portion of the cargo is transferred to the hopper, by means of the elevator appliances it is being raised into the elevator and transferred to the ship. So that, at the port of Montreal to-day, there are two handlings, as against one handling at the port of New York. There is the same advantage at the port of Portland, to which the Grand Trunk Railway carries from the port of Midland, owing to the fact that it controls that whole system, a large quantity of grain during the winter months, when they cannot ship from the port of Montreal.

Under these circumstances, what is to be done? Until the trade of the country increases to larger proportions, so that our outgoing ocean freights from the port of Montreal will be as low as they are from the port of New York, we can hope for nothing better than we have at the present time. As to climatic adversities, we cannot hope to overcome them. To my mind, there is only one thing to be done, and that is this: endeavour to improve the elevator facilities at the port of Montreal. How that is to be done is, and should be, a serious question for Parliament. I do not assume that the Grand Trunk Railway people are going into extensive elevator improvements at the port of Montreal, owing to the fact that to-day they can handle a large part of their trade at Portland, which, as I understand, is only some 290 or 300 miles from Montreal. From all I have gleaned on the subject, I believe that it pays the Grand Trunk to carry grain from Midland to Portland, by reason of their superior elevator facilities there, rather than to take it to Montreal, where they have the double handling which I have described.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Because they have bigger ships at Portland—that is the reason.

Mr. BENNETT. I cannot say as to the volume of shipping that comes into Portland, or whether the Portland rates are cheaper than the Montreal rates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think they do not send any grain to Portland in the summer season or while the St. Lawrence is open.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the hon. Minister is correct, that the Grand Trunk are not just now shipping to Portland a great deal of grain in the summer season; but they have erected at Portland an elevator having a capacity of over 1,000,000 bushels, and it is their policy, I understand, to fill that elevator in the fall of each year with grain brought from Midland, and ship it out in the winter, and also to store grain in the two large elevators now at Midland, having a capacity of upwards of 2,000,000 bushels, and from thence take it down to Portland. But I may say in this connection that while the Minister says that to-day they are not doing their summer business at that port, I would draw attention to this fact, that some six months ago the board of trade of the city of Portland tendered Mr. Hays, general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, a banquet and that in the course of his address Mr. Hays made this very striking statement, which affects particularly the interests of the port of Montreal. He said that it had been a cause of complaint by the people of Portland that while the Grand Trunk Railway afforded them a certain amount of trade at certain times of the year, that trade was not continued throughout the whole year, and he went on to add that more surprising things might happen than that the people of Portland might see a continuous grain trade at that port throughout the whole year. If his language bore out correctly his ideas, he intimated to the people of Portland that the Grand Trunk Railway, in all likelihood, would carry all their grain from Midland to Portland because of the superior shipping and elevator facilities of that port.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I understood that Mr. Hays afterwards questioned the accuracy of that report, and said he was not understood by the newspapers.

Mr. BENNETT. Possibly he was misreported on that occasion, and of course I am only speaking of what I saw in the public prints. But when one considers this fact, that there is an immense amount of expense in handling the trade at the port of Montreal and that when the grain is in the car at Montreal, by carrying it on an extra 300 miles to Portland, superior facilities would be afforded, it might be a question whether it would not be better to send the grain on to that port. As far as the trade that must go down the St. Lawrence canals is concerned, if it is successfully to cope with the advantages to-day possessed by Buffalo, then it must have the advantage of a superior mode of handling at Montreal. Often in conversation and in discussion on the transportation question, we are told that we can never hope to compete with the trade of Buffalo, because all vessels calling at Buffalo have the advantage of return freights, while those that go to ports on the Georgian Bay take in return comparatively little trade.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is only, after all, a moderate tonnage of back freight.

Mr. BENNETT. If any gentleman will stay over a day or two at Detroit or Windsor, he will find that vessel after vessel goes back up the lakes without any cargo at all, and when one considers the immense trade done in grain at Buffalo and the immense trade done at the different points along Lake Erie and Buffalo as well, he will see it would be an utter impossibility for the back freight, which, in the main, is made up of coal, to amount to anything compared with the down freight. He will find that seven vessels out of ten that come down go back light. So that, as far as Georgian Bay ports are concerned, we are on a par, or nearly so, with Buffalo in that respect. Keeping in view the fact that the climatic influences are against us at Montreal, and that the freight rates to the old country are against us, and likely to be for many years to come, we are forced to the conclusion that we must take advantage of everything which money can give to bring the trade to Montreal. That can be best brought about by providing superior elevator accommodation. If I am not mistaken, the Canadian Pacific Railway have to-day an elevator at Montreal, into which they can take their cars and in turn discharge the grain into the ocean-going vessels. The great thing to be done to-day at Montreal is to provide superior elevator facilities such as exist at Baltimore, New York and Portland. Let those be common to the grain carriers that come down the lakes and the canal system and to the shippers. Let those be common to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Booth system of railways, and also to the Grand Trunk Railway; and if we should have a greater output of grain from Montreal, the chances are that the freight rates to the old country, by reason of the increased demand for tonnage, will be lessened.

There is to-day another project before the people of Ontario, and that is the construction of a line of railway from some point on the Georgian Bay to Toronto, and then, in turn, handling the grain at that point by barges. But as this scheme is not in such a mature state to-day as to call for discussion, and as the Government are not prepared to come to its support and no capitalists appear ready to put their money into the enterprise, it would be inopportune, perhaps, for me to discuss it now.

I only wish to say, in conclusion, that I believe that the principle the Grand Trunk Railway Company have established and that Mr. Booth has established to-day is the right principle on which to fight the trade of Buffalo, and that is to carry the grain in vessels capable of holding a quarter of a million bushels or even more, because I believe that on the great lakes the day is not distant when we will have vessels carrying, not only a quarter of a million of bushels of grain, but 300,000 bushels. And when these vessels are brought to a lake port, then hurrying the grain across to the nearest tide-water point.

There are so many phases to this matter that one can hardly discuss them all in an off-hand debate, but when we consider all the advantages we have on the upper lakes as against Buffalo, we will find that we are in a position to fight that trade. Why, a vessel will make three trips from Chicago to Midland as against two from Chicago to Buffalo, and that is an immense factor in the transportation question. At first blush, on looking at the map, one would assume that a boat going to Buffalo runs at her full speed all the way; but that is a great mistake, because, owing to the artificial advantages or improvements that have been made on the St. Clair Flats, it is absolutely necessary there to slow down these large freighters from their ordinary fourteen or fifteen miles an hour to four miles an hour. I have followed out the figures with captains of boats plying into the port of Midland, and have found that a boat will make three trips from Chicago to Midland as against two from Chicago to Buffalo. And when you consider that in the fall of the year that freights are up to 5 or 6 cents a bushel, and that, by reason of the large cargo, the freights will amount to $12,000 or $15,000 per vessel, and when you consider that the round trip is made in five days, you will find that a vessel is worth $3,000 or $4,000 per day to her owner, and he can make three trips to Midland as against two down the lake to Buffalo.

Another point in that connection is this. From Buffalo to New York is not a greater distance than by either Parry Sound or Midland to Montreal.

Mr. COCHRANE. How many locks on the Erie Canal?

Mr. BENNETT. I am not in a position to say, but from the statistics of all the grain entering the port of New York, the Erie Canal only carries about 10 per cent. It is only fair to say that while between Parry Sound and Montreal and Midland and Montreal there is only one line of railway, there are seven or eight between Buffalo and New York, and of course, with that immense railway competition, freights will be less between Buffalo and New York than between Midland and the port of Montreal.

But Mr. Booth has demonstrated the possibility of carrying grain between Parry Sound and Montreal. Whether that has been a paying enterprise or not, I am not in a position to say; but there is this fact to be borne in mind: that last year Mr. Booth succeeded in carrying ten million bushels of grain by Parry Sound to Montreal. I believe that that was a quantity quite equal to that which went down the St. Lawrence Canals. Last year, owing to the increase of accommodation by elevators provided at the port of Midland, we shipped some six million bushels of grain from Midland to Montreal. And I know I am within the mark when I state that this year twenty millions will be shipped by the Grand Trunk Railway from Midland to Montreal and Portland. A trade which, a few years ago, amounted to about a million bushels per year now, in the first week of the opening of navigation, has amounted to a million and a half bushels.

I do not intend to detain the House at greater length, but I am here to say that I believe the Grand Trunk and Mr. Booth have struck the right principle, the principle that has been adopted by Buffalo—to carry by the greatest possible speed to the lake port and then convey by rail to the ocean vessel. Before I sit down I may mention a point which has just occurred to me. Last year we in the town of Midland had the satisfaction of seeing some Americans from Port Huron come along and build a million and a quarter bushel elevator. They were American born, and their sentiments and sympathies were naturally in the line of building in the United States rather than in Canada. And yet with the advantage of three trips to Midland as against two trips to Buffalo with the rate the Grand Trunk made with them, these gentlemen thought it advantageous to build this elevator at Midland rather than go to Buffalo and build it there. And I am glad to be able to say that Bradley & Co., the largest grain shippers at the port of Chicago, have acquired controlling influence in that elevator, and I believe that by acquiring that elevator they demonstrated that they preferred to have an elevator at Midland rather than at Buffalo. And, in conclusion, I can only say that if the Government introduce a well-considered measure to make superior elevator facilities at the port of Montreal, I believe that they will find in it the solution of the transportation question, and I, for one, will be pleased to support them in their proposition.

Mr. W. B. IVES (Sherbrooke). I think I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett), who last addressed the House that there is not the slightest danger of the Grand Trunk ever undertaking to carry grain to Portland in the summer season. Although the Grand Trunk Railway Company from Portland and the Canadian Pacific Railway from St. John, N.B., have been building up and developing the winter grain trade, yet, from the fact that they have shipped large quantities of grain from these ports during the last two winters proves neither that they would do it in the summer season nor that it is anything like as cheap to ship from these ports in the winter as it is to bring the grain to Montreal and ship it in the summer. They have done that business in the winter time because our own port was closed by ice, and they had to do the business that way or not do it at all. They have commenced now the practice of storing the grain somewhere near the field of its production during the summer season and keeping it there for winter shipment. The business grew very rapidly last year and the year before—much more rapidly last year. It, apparently, is going to become a regular business of the two railways to store the grain in elevators during the summer season and bring it in by rail and ship it from the respective ports of Portland and St. John during the winter. But I am certain that if you were to get the candid opinion of the manager of either of these railways as to the comparative cost of winter handling from Portland and St. John, even with the facilities we have in Montreal, they would tell you that the advantages were largely in favour of summer handling from Montreal. The fact that Mr. Booth handled ten millions of grain to Montreal last summer from Parry Sound does not prove that he made money out of it. He did handle it, but I believe if the truth were known, on the conditions he handled it, the business was not particularly profitable. The great obstacle to this trade in Montreal is want of elevators, want of trackage, want of room to handle the enormous increase of business. Montreal, until the last two years or so, has not been in the habit of handling any such amount of tonnage as she has been called upon, within the last few summers, to handle. The business is entirely new. The products seeking export are rapidly increasing, not only in the way of grain, but in the way of animals, butter, cheese and products of all descriptions. Our rapidly expanding export trade tells the story and shows that this business for the port of Montreal is rapidly increasing. Our people are just learning how to raise exports suitable for export. The demand is just beginning and is rapidly increasing. Montreal has been caught napping, her facilities are entirely behind the times. It is only a year or two since the harbour commissioners began to allow tracks to be laid along the water front. I can remember—and it was only four or five years ago—when it was considered a great privilege to allow a railway to shunt a car of freight down to the front. That space was kept for cab stands and for public convenience. It was considered a nuisance to have cars down on Commissioner Street and along the water front. All this is happily changing. The commissioners are anxious now to see tracks laid, and to see facilities afforded for handling this trade.

The only matter I wish to refer to particularly is a point in the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). I gathered from what he said that he was rather inclined to think that it was not the business of the Government to provide elevators in Montreal and elsewhere. I am quite prepared to agree with him that if the interests of the Government do not compel them to take that course, it is better to avoid it. But, taking the case of the great port of Montreal, if the city itself will not undertake that expenditure, if the railway companies do not feel inclined to undertake it, I think the Government would be quite justified, under the circumstances of the case, in assisting in the construction of large elevator capacity in Montreal, that would be free to all railways on equal terms. And I believe that expenditure to increase track accommodation and facilities of all kinds would be a proper expenditure for the Government to make. Montreal is the ocean port. If the railway companies provide their elevators at the point where they take the grain from the farmers, if they provide the road to bring it to the steamships at Montreal, then, if it is necessary for the Government to take an interest in the construction and preparation of facilities for the cheap and rapid handling of the enormous quantity of exports at the port of Montreal, the Government would be as fully justified in making the expenditure in a wise and judicious way as they are in deepening canals or aiding in the construction of railways.

One thing is quite certain, we shall soon have fourteen feet of water in the canal system. We have already magnificent railway facilities for transporting products to Montreal. What are we behind in? What is our chief difficulty at the present moment? It is in elevator accommodation of the city of Montreal, the want of arrangements for rapid handling and cheap and rapid loading. That is what we lack, that is what the Government must give their attention to. If some arrangement could be arrived at by which the railway companies would assist, and the city itself would assist and the Government would assist, and if, at an early day, proper facilities as good as can be found in Baltimore, or New York, or anywhere else, were provided in the city of Montreal, the Government would have done the one thing which, to my mind, is more than anything else lacking to enable us to handle a large amount of freight rapidly and cheaply. My own experience as a shipper last summer showed me what the great difficulty is. In the busy season last summer you could not get a car-load of lumber within ten miles of Montreal for nearly two months, you could not reach the vessel you had chartered to load. The result was that in some cases you had to pay freight, and pay for space that you could not fill. Vessels could not wait for you, and you could not get your cars down. I could not get my lumber down to the wharfs in the busy months of last summer half the time to meet the arrangements I had made with steamship companies to load lumber. I know that Mr. Booth's great trouble and great loss last summer was occasioned by the fact that the whole place was full, it was a sort of cul-de-sac into which all the railway companies were dumping loaded cars. The accommodation along the river front was too little, cars were piled in there, and they could not even get room to shunt out the empties. The result was that on Mr. Booth's road every siding from Coteau to Montreal was full of freight. The other roads were in the same way, there was no room to get freights to the wharfs in Montreal, and there was a regular blockade. That was the chief cause of the trouble, and to that point the Government should give their early and most special attention. The railroads are sufficient, the canals will soon be sufficient, but the facilities for handling merchandise in Montreal are becoming less and less adequate as the freight increases year by year.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

Mr. IVES.

UNITED STATES BOATS REGISTERED AT DAWSON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou) moved for :

Return showing the information asked for by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper respecting United States boats registered at Dawson, as contained in the question appearing on "Hansard," May 8th, 1899, page 2789.

He said: The Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) who, unfortunately, is not present, referred to-day to the ship "John C. Barr," one of the vessels concerned, and he stated practically this, that notwithstanding that it appeared in debate in this House that the "John C. Barr" had been entered from the United States registry to the Canadian registry at Dawson at a valuation upon which duty would be paid as of $10,000, the vessel was at least worth $60,000. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) corroborated the information that I gave to the committee that this vessel was valued worth $60,000, while the recent information involved in this return, or the subject covered by it, is that there is fraud being practiced on a wholesale scale at the suggestion of strong and influential companies, and that there is competition, which competition would be all right, if according to law, on the upper Yukon and Hootalinqua River in Canadian waters. These vessels that were plying on the Yukon River proper last season are being hurried into this new service and are being entered at a fraudulent and false valuation. They are being put in the names of British subjects in order to get the benefit of British register. When the hon. Minister of Customs said to-day, with this information corroborated in part by the statement of a gentleman who has recently been in Dawson, that he was simply sending an ordinary and formal communication, of the character he mentions, asking for a report, I would like to put it to the hon. gentleman's colleagues whether they hold that that is doing justice to the parties affected. These instructions ought to be full and complete, and if the officer in whom the Government have any confidence, is able to find that there has been a fraud practiced of that character, and if the vessels are and would be, under these circumstances, subject to being immediately seized and proceeded against for the purpose of confiscation, then I beg the hon. gentleman to see—the right hon. Prime Minister shakes his head. Does he mean that these vessels could not be confiscated?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I mean to say that the step taken by my hon. colleague (Mr. Paterson) is quite proper. He asked for information from his officer.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am amazed that the right hon. gentleman should think that this is a proper course.

Consider what the action means. These vessels can be out of Canadian waters altogether before the law can be enforced, and if the Government wants to give them an opportunity to get away there will be notice put in the hands of the officer of the Government by such a communication, and an opportunity given to these vessels to sail straight away and out of Canadian waters altogether. Consequently, the Canadian law will be violated with impunity. That does not appear to be a reasonable argument, surely.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, let us consider the situation a little further. The vessels are a long distance from headquarters here, and, in the ordinary course, if these vessels were within reach, these instructions are continually given by the Department of Customs when they have reason to believe that a vessel is running contrary to law. It is not contemplated, in the statute-book, that there should be a delay to allow of time to receive reports, and so on, but instructions are given, full and complete. The statutes make provision for tying up vessels so as to hold them, if there is any fraud committed or any attempt to run in contravention of any of these Acts—the Merchants' Shipping Act, or the Act relating to steamboat inspection. It is the usual course and it is an unusual and extraordinary course that has been followed under these circumstances, and the result will be that these vessels' owners or the owners of the other vessels who have attempted to practice that gross fraud on the Canadian laws will be able to have done it with impunity and get out of reach of the Canadian law. There never was a case where urgency was required more than this one. These vessels will be running while you go through the form of communicating with Dawson and that far-away country, of having a report sent back, considering it, dealing with it, and sending out official instructions. The profits and work of the season will have been secured by them. Under these circumstances an illegal and improper act will be done, damage will be inflicted upon citizens that cannot be remedied, and there will be no redress for the owners of British vessels who are complying with Canadian and British laws. The confiscation of this vessel will do them no good so far as the unfair and illegal competition of this season has gone, and consequently these people will have been injured without any means of redress, whereas, the ordinary course of sending out, under these circumstances, at a point like that, to an intelligent and able officer, full and complete instructions, would be acting according to law if these facts are found to be correct and the seizure of the vessel will prevent injury being done, and that was the object I had in bringing the subject to the attention of the Government.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection, of course, to the motion, but I may remark to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that we have a man out there who, I believe, to be an able and intelligent officer in the person of Mr. Davis, the Collector of Customs, and he has been there for several years. If Mr. Davis accepts an entry at a certain figure—he may be in error—I do not know, but for the Government, without a report to order him to seize a vessel that he has entered himself at a certain valuation because it is alleged that the vessel has been undervalued is a course that I do not think the Government should adopt. The proper course is to have a report from the officer. Surely the hon. gentleman does not want us to seize a vessel simply upon the ipsi dixit of any gentleman when there is no information in the department. We must have information in the department; we must have a report before we can adopt such a harsh proceeding as a seizure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I merely want to draw the attention of my right hon. friend to the fact that the position that he takes is entirely untenable. The Government orders seizures every day of goods that have been accepted by customs-house officers and entered at a certain rate whenever they have evidence put before them and their attention is drawn to the fact that there has been a gross fraud committed or an undervaluation made. The very officer who admitted them to entry and took the duties at lower valuation makes the seizure and confiscates the goods unless the parties can show cause and challenge the information upon which the action is taken.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the parties can show cause.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The fact of Mr. Davis accepting the entry is no evidence that there has not been any fraud committed. There is nothing to prevent him being instructed if he found the facts to be as stated, to seize the vessel.

Motion agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

LA BANQUE DU PEUPLE BILL.

Mr. PREFONTAINE (by Mr. Brodeur) moved the House into committee on Bill (No. 6) respecting La Banque du Peuple (as amended by the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce).

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). This seems to be a peculiar bill. If I understood it aright, this Banque du Peuple was one of the old institutions established before the union of Upper and Lower Canada, and under their charter the directors of this bank were liable to the full extent of their property for any loss to the bank. I do not know whether there are any actions pending or not in reference to it; but some of the gentlemen who are on the Banking and Commerce Committee might, perhaps, explain that. One thing which the Government ought to have considered in reference to the Bill is, that the Parliament of old Canada having given this bank its entity and made these directors liable to the full extent of their property for any defalcations, or any debts or liabilities of the bank; the Government should have considered whether this Dominion Parliament has any power to interfere in this matter. This bank was given authority to enter into contracts with the community at large and when these contracts were entered into and the directors become liable to individuals, it seems to me that this Parliament has no power to interfere in any right of action that an individual has against a director of this bank. It looks to me as if it were a question of civil rights over which this Dominion Parliament has no control whatever. I would ask if the attention of the members of the Government has been drawn to the peculiar features of this Bill?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have heard only the concluding portions of the remarks of the hon. member (Mr. Haggart), but I am bound to say there is a great deal of force in what he has said, and the same consideration has occurred to me. The Bill was sent to the Department of Justice for the express purpose of obtaining due consideration, and I am advised by them, that the parties concerned do not appear to have raised any objection to the Bill, and there does not seem, therefore, to be ground for our interference. While it is perfectly true that the House should exercise great care in this matter, I am informed that it has been very fully discussed before the shareholders at several meetings, and it appears to be their belief that their interests, and particularly those of the depositors, will be advanced by our passing this Bill.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I beg to tell the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that when this Bill was before the Banking and Commerce Committee there was opposition offered to it, and very strong opposition.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Then I was misinformed. I was not present at the committee, but I was told there was no opposition to it.

Mr. SPROULE. I was present at the meeting of the committee, and a gentleman who said he represented shareholders holding $12,000 stock in this bank, offered very strong opposition against the Bill passing in the shape it was. A few years ago, there was a law enacted which enabled the parties who were liquidating this bank to pay something like 50 cents on the dollar, which it was understood at the time should be paid in advance. In expectation, I presume, of its being so paid, the parties interested consented to the law, but this money was not paid, in advance and only a portion of it has been paid since. Application is now made to Parliament to amend this charter again, and a somewhat similar proposal is made—only the sum is smaller—that the money would be raised at the present time, and the depositors and bill holders paid off on a certain percentage on the whole. It occurs to me that the defect of the Bill is this. The directors of that bank were liable, under the old charter, to the extent of every dollar they were worth in the world, and now Parliament is asked to step in and say: We will exonerate them from that obligation; we will enable them to break faith with the people who put money in the bank, and we will give them the power to pay their debts with forty-five or fifty cents on the dollar. It does seem to me most irregular, and not a proper principle for us to follow in this House, if we pass such legislation. I opposed this Bill in the committee because I thought it was wrong, and I oppose it in the House because I still think it is wrong. The transaction appears to me to be simply this: Here are a number of men who are legally bound to pay a certain amount, and they are winding up the affairs of this bank. The assets of the bank may not realize the full obligations of the bank, but so far as they do not, these parties are individually responsible for the balance, and the parties holding claims against that bank can prosecute these claims against the directors individually. The directors say: We will pay 40 or 50 cents on the dollar and we will ask the Dominion Parliament to relieve us of any further obligation by making that a legal payment in full, and giving us a discharge. This Bill is equivalent to asking Parliament to give a discharge to debtors who are only paying 40 or 50 cents in the dollar. We have no insolvency law in this country, and there are thousands of men who become bankrupts and who have not the opportunity of starting in business again because they cannot get a discharge from their legal obligations. This bank is asking Parliament to do what the law does not do for a commercial corporation, or a private debtor, namely, to give them a discharge when they have paid a certain sum. Another feature of the Bill is this. We were told by the gentleman who opposed the Bill, that two of these men could raise the money and pay it, and it would not injure them much. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but assuming they are able to pay it, what right have we to discharge them of the obligation they entered into with the people whom they induced to put money into that bank? There is no doubt that the obligation which bound every one of these directors individually to pay to the extent of any loss that might be sustained, was one of the inducements which made the people invest in the stock of that bank. There is no doubt that the charter had that effect. Is Parliament to say now: We will relieve them of that obligation. Some parties appeared who strongly opposed this Bill, but they were unable to work up sufficient opposition to prevent its passage in the committee. Notwithstanding that, I believe that Parliament is doing wrong in passing this law, because we are giving these men a discharge when they have only paid part of their legal obligations. It may be a very good thing for the directors. They say: "We will pay so much money, and it is a big thing for us to pay that." There is no doubt that it is a large sum of money; but it certainly is a good speculation, all the same, because, if these men are able to pay it, and are paying less than their legal obligation to pay, every dollar of the difference is a dollar in their pocket. That is what we are doing by this Bill. I think it is a vicious Bill. It is establishing a bad precedent, and dealing differently with this bank from the way we deal with private corporations, by giving them a discharge from their obligations, when they pay 25 or 30 cents on the dollar.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) is under a misapprehension with regard to this Bill. Two years ago, this Parliament was asked by La Banque du Peuple to pass an Act in order to allow that corporation to wind up its affairs. Since that time the bank has managed, through liquidation, to pay 50 per cent to its creditors; and now the five directors, who are the only five that are solvent, and the only men responsible for the liabilities of the bank, come forward and say: "We are ready to give $200,000 of our money in order to enable the bank to pay 45 per cent on the remaining liabilities, in addition to the 50 per cent already paid, provided that, upon giving this $200,000 of our own money, we are relieved of further responsibility; and we will agree to pay this additional 45 per cent to the creditors of the bank within ninety days." These men are not millionaires, and, in order to realize this $200,000, they have to be in a position to show the institutions who are advancing the money, that they are relieved of all further responsibility; and, if this Parliament does not come to their assistance by passing this Bill, they will not be in a position to raise that money, and they will have to abandon any further attempt to settle the liabilities of the bank. The depositors, with very few exceptions, are in favour of this legislation, because they realize that, if it is not passed, they will not get the 45 cents in the dollar upon their claims against the bank; and, in their interest, as well as in the interest of the public at large, this Parliament is called upon to pass this legislation. I know that it is somewhat extraordinary that we should by legislation deprive certain men of their claims in the courts of justice; but, in order to avoid a greater evil, I think it is better for us to pass this legislation. It is not beyond the province of this Parliament to pass legislation of this kind. If we were to pass an insolvency law to-day, we would make provision whereby men who have paid so much in the dollar upon their liabilities, should be discharged from responsibility for the balance, as the old insolvency law did. In this case, it is a compromise between the majority of the creditors and the remaining directors—because there are only five or six directors who are actually responsible, and upon whose shoulders the responsibility of paying the debt now lies. These men now come forward and say, they are prepared to give $200,000, not equally, but according to their means, which will provide 45 cents on the dollar on the balance due the creditors, so that the creditors will get about 70 per cent on their claims. Most of the creditors are satisfied with that arrangement. There are only a few who are dissatisfied. Therefore, I think that it is perfectly justifiable for this Parliament to pass such legislation.

Mr. DOMINIQUE MONET (Laprairie and Napierville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a few remarks in connection with the Bill now under consideration. I am sorry to say that I cannot endorse the views given expression to by the hon. gentleman who spoke before me on the matter.

The House should bear in mind the circumstances under which the "Banque du Peuple" obtained the charter under which it was conducting its operations. The charter of the bank was a special one, under which the directors were personally responsible for all the obligations of the bank.

The Bank du Peuple had its principal place of business in Montreal, but it had branches in several neighbouring districts, and amongst other places at St. Remi, in the constituency which I represent in this House. I understand that such was the confidence placed by the depositors in that institution that, out of an aggregate of $112,000 which had been loaned in the county of Napierville and in the neighbouring parishes, only $2,000 had come out of the coffers of the bank, the balance of $110,000 having been supplied by the depositors themselves. This shows that the bank was realizing a profit of 8 per cent on the moneys so deposited, while paying only 3½ per 100 on the deposits. That was owing, as I just said, to the unlimited confidence placed in that institution, and that confidence was chiefly grounded upon the solvency of the board of directors and upon the absolute liability of the directors of the bank.

We are now asked under this Bill, to give an absolute discharge to the directors of the bank and to relieve them, for a small consideration, of all their obligations towards the depositors. In my opinion, in passing this Bill, we would be interfering with the law of contract and breaking faith with the people who have deposited money in the bank.

One of the inducements which made the people patronize the "Banque du Peuple" and invest so largely in its stock, was the belief that the directors were individually responsible for the management of the funds of the bank. About two years ago, they came down here and asked Parliament for a delay, in order the better to wind up the affairs of this bank. For my part, I did not offer any opposition to that demand, because I was under the impression that they were anxious to make the best arrangements possible, and such a settlement as would prove acceptable to the creditors. The Government granted their demand and what was the result? Instead of evincing any gratitude towards the depositors, they step in and say: We will pay 45 cents on the dollar and we will ask the Dominion Parliament to relieve us of any further obligation as to the balance.

Whenever a merchant, a manufacturer or any other business man becomes insolvent, he makes an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and there is no exception to that rule. The bankrupt merchant or business man has to apply for a settlement and he is bound to make arrangements with his creditors, if he wants to get a discharge from them and have the opportunity of starting in business again.

In this case, every depositor individually was not asked his consent to the proposed settlement. That agreement was entered into with some creditors only who held a meeting and consented to accept 45 cents as a settlement of their debts.

Mr. SAVARD. (Translation.) All the depositors were notified.

Mr. MONET. (Translation.) They may have been notified through the newspapers; but, at all events, I am positive that not one of the depositors in the district of Napierville attended that meeting, called together to accept the settlement proposed by the directors of the bank.

All those who have declined to accept that settlement would be deprived of their rights, should the Bill now before the House pass into law, they are certainly entitled to raise objection and strong opposition to the Bill, and I voice the sentiment of all those who are interested in the winding up of the affairs of this bank in asking my hon. friends not to vote in favour of this Bill.

This Bill goes still further, as clause 4 overrides the judgments rendered by the courts in favour of the creditors of the bank. I may be allowed to add a few words in this connection. I hesitate not to say that search and pry as you might into the records of Parliament, you could not find a precedent like this clause, which overrides the judgments rendered by the Superior Court in favour of those who have appealed to the courts. I am referring here to judgments rendered by the Superior Court, which may have later on been upheld by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of England. Now, according to this Bill, Parliament could override those judgments of the highest tribunals and declare, by a Bill, that those decisions affecting private contracts are null and void. Such legislation would be at variance with every notion of right and jurisprudence. I hold that you cannot force upon those creditors a settlement which they are unwilling to accept. They ought to be left perfectly free to take the course they like. On these several grounds, I declare that I cannot accept the Bill now under consideration.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). When the Banque du Peuple failed, my people were among the largest creditors, and I was appointed member of a committee to inquire into the situation and the financial condition of that institution. We spent several weeks investigating the affairs of the bank, and made a written report to the creditors. The Hon. Mr. Boyer, M. Kent, a very competent accountant of Montreal, and Mr. Dupuis, a business man, were on this committee, selected by all the creditors of the bank, and we came to the conclusion that although the directors had been, to a certain extent, negligent in not keeping a stricter check on the conduct of the cashier, they came out of that disastrous failure without any stain upon their honour; and from what knowledge I have of the affairs of the bank, the proposal embodied in this Bill is one which is favourable to the depositors. As I have said, the shareholders did not receive a single cent, and therefore it seems to me that their advice may be accepted as disinterested. I may say that since the bank went into liquidation, these gentlemen made every possible effort to secure all the available assets. It must be remembered that the charter of the bank was a special one, under which the directors were personally responsible to a far greater degree than those of any other financial institution, it seems to me that the proposal embodied in this Bill is one favourable to the depositors, and that Parliament would be doing the creditors an injury if it were not to pass the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. I notice that clause 4 provides that this Act shall apply to suits pending and judgments rendered. Are those creditors, who have suits pending or have obtained judgments, consenting?

Mr. MONK. I think that provision is only fair, because it places all the creditors on the same footing. A certain number of creditors took suits at the very inception of the difficulties; and if we are to make the same law apply to all the creditors, we must put the judgment creditors on the same footing as the others, because, under the law of the province of Quebec, all creditors are placed on the same footing. Because a man sues the bank or the trustees personally, is no reason why he should have any advantage over the creditors who, deeming it more prudent to wait, took no action. Therefore, I think, whatever disposal we now make of the assets of the banks or of the directors who are personally responsible, ought to apply to all the creditors—those who have taken suit as well as those who have not; and from what we, who made this investigation, discovered the directors are by no means very wealthy men. In fact, this liquidation, which this Bill is called upon to sanction, will leave them all very nearly penniless.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask whether or not, under the law of the province of Quebec, the rendering of a judgment creates any lien upon the assets of the bank.

Mr. MONK. No.

Mr. D. TISDALE (South Norfolk). With regard to judgments, I quite agree in what the hon. gentleman says, because when a judgment is obtained that only decides the amount of the debt in that particular case, but I have yet to learn that a legislature ought to pass upon the rights of those who are in the courts now, and whose rights are in dispute. As a general rule, such a condition is sufficient to prevent legislation, because we have no right to take those claims out of the hands of the courts. Then, the only evidence we have that the shareholders are satisfied with this liquidation is the schedule and the hon. gentleman's statement, which, no doubt, is correct, but we have no evidence that the shareholders are assenting to this legislation. The schedule recites that at a meeting of the creditors it was unanimously agreed that this settlement should be accepted. It does not state, however, that all the creditors were represented at the meeting, but simply that at a meeting of the depositors and creditors it was unanimously resolved. It does not state the number or even the proportion present. But assuming that all were agreed, the question then arises, have we jurisdiction? In my opinion, this is purely a civil right, and it is only the legislature of the province of Quebec that can give the release asked for. Why did not the promoters of this Bill go to that legislature to get a release? It seems to me that before we pass this measure, we ought to have the assurance from the Government that the Department of Justice has been consulted, and that it has advised that we have the right to grant this release. There are just two points. One is to be sure that the Banking and Commerce Committee had evidence before them that the creditors as a whole assented to this legislation. If this is all the evidence there is it fails to establish that point. It does not show the number of the creditors at this meeting or the share of the liabilities that they represented. If there was any evidence before the Banking and Commerce Committee, it should be made known to the House. There is nothing even to show that all the creditors were notified. It simply says "at a meeting of creditors and depositors, it was unanimously resolved" to do so and so. Now, I think that before we pass that into law we ought to be satisfied that, at all events, a large majority of the creditors were present. Then comes the second question. While the cases affected here may or may not be important, it is a very serious principle for us to say that we will terminate the rights of people who have appealed to the courts to establish those rights. As a rule, we have hesitated to do that. Unless we are certain of the amounts involved and the rights of the parties, we should hesitate before coming to this decision. I dwell more upon the second point than upon the first.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I happened to be in the Committee on Banking and Commerce when this question was discussed, although I am not a member of that committee. All the evidence to establish the points referred to was introduced there by the promoter of the Bill, Mr. Préfontaine, who, unfortunately, being sick, cannot be present to-night. There may be members of the committee who were there and heard the evidence that was produced. I would like to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Tisdale) if he thinks that an institution like La Banque du Peuple, existing under a Dominion charter, could very well go to the provincial legislature of Quebec and ask for such an Act as he says ought to be passed there?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) has spoken.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. But I was only putting the question to my hon. friend. I would like to ask him whether he thinks they could apply to the legislature for such an Act, and if they did and the Act were passed, whether that would affect the creditors in the other provinces?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The question of jurisdiction, in my judgment, can be easily settled by the consideration that this is a question of insolvency, and the Federal Parliament alone has jurisdiction on that subject. I can refer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) to a case that was decided by the Privy Council establishing that point. It was a case of a somebody—I cannot recall the name at the moment—against L'Union St. Jacques et Belisle. This was a mutual benefit society, which had obtained an Act from the legislature of Quebec to pay its creditors, not the full amount of its obligations but a certain proportion. This Act was decided to be ultra vires by the Privy Council on the ground that this was a matter of insolvency, and, as such, should be dealt with by the Federal Parliament alone. Bearing this in mind, there can be no doubt that not only would the legislature of the province of Quebec would have no jurisdiction in this matter, but the jurisdiction remains entirely with us. The other question is a question of very serious moment and one which cannot be too carefully considered. The Federal Parliament or any legislature should always be chary of interfering with private contracts. That is a principle which we should never forget. But after all we must be practical; and in this case it has been abundantly proven, as I understand, before the Banking and Commerce Committee, that the liquidation now proposed to be sanctioned is the best that could be obtained for the creditors. If it could be shown that by ordinary process the creditors could obtain instead of 45 cents, say 55 or 60 cents, certainly Parliament should stay its hand and not pass the legislation now asked for, because there we should be directly interfering with the rights of contract to the prejudice of one who would have the right to benefit by his contract. But I understand it has been proved, and abundantly proved, that the present arrangement is the most satisfactory and beneficial to the creditors, and if they do not accept it or if Parliament does not ratify it, the creditors instead of receiving 45 cents, as here offered, will receive much less than is proposed in this agreement. Under such circumstances, it seems to me Parliament can have no hesitation in interfering with the law of contract for it would not cause prejudice to anybody; it offers benefits to everybody. It would not do to stand on the bare principle of not interfering. We should not interfere if we cause a wrong to private parties, but, instead of causing a wrong we secure benefits, not only to the greater part of the creditors, but to all of them. It seems to me that, under these circumstances, there should be no hesitation. There is a clause which seems very broad and to which my hon. friend has alluded. This Bill is not only to apply to suits pending, but even to judgments. But the answer of my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) seems conclusive. The creditors are all to be treated alike, whether they have entered suit and the suits are disposed of, or whether they have entered suit and the suits are pending or whether they have not sued. All creditors, some with suits pending, some with judgments, and some ordinary creditors—all will be treated alike. In these considerations, it seems to me, there is cause abundant why the Bill should become law. I am sure the Bill has been very fully considered by the Committee on Banking and Commerce, and for my part I will always endeavour to maintain the decision of a committee of this House upon a matter, the office of looking into, which has been delegated to them, where it is shown, as it is in this matter, that they have given great care to the consideration of the subject.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. IVES. Is there any question of the liability of directors? And does the Bill deal with that?

Mr. TISDALE. Yes.

Mr. CRAIG. I happen to be a member of the Banking and Commerce Committee, and was present when the Bill was discussed. It was proved, I think, conclusively to the satisfaction of members present, or most of them, that this Bill was desired by the great majority of the depositors. Then it was shown that the three liquidators who had been appointed to represent the depositors some years ago were unanimously in favour of it. They were present and made a statement to the committee that by the passing of this Bill the depositors would receive about 15 cents on the dollar more than if the Bill were not passed. I was perfectly convinced that the Bill was in the public interest.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). The right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stated, that we had general jurisdiction over insolvency, and, if this Bill did not come under the head of banking and commerce, there is no doubt we could deal with it under the general powers respecting insolvency which were assured to us under the decision of the Privy Council. There is no doubt that we have exclusive jurisdiction over banking and commerce. We have a right to give to any bank its entity on any conditions we like; but I contend that, after we give it its entity and it enters into contracts with individuals in the community, we have no jurisdiction over those contracts in the slightest degree, they become a question of civil rights. When the right hon. gentleman says, that we have jurisdiction over the insolvency law, does he pretend that, because we have the right to pass an Insolvency Act, we can apply it in a particular case for the purpose of liquidating a bank or dissolving a contract between individuals? I contend that we have no such jurisdiction as that. The right to pass an Insolvency Act does not give us the power of interfering in that way; we have no right or jurisdiction over an individual case, because it is individual insolvency. I never heard the proposition made before. I have not the slightest doubt that power to pass a general Insolvency Act does not give us power to interfere in individual cases. I would like the case submitted to the Minister of Justice: I would like his opinion upon the subject. Though hon. gentlemen who are interested in supporting the Bill may say, that it is in the interest both of the creditors and the shareholders, and perhaps of the note holders, and perhaps of the directors of the bank, still, that is not a question for this House at all; it is a question of jurisdiction. Hon. gentlemen who support this Bill say, that the schedule shows that the creditors are supporting it. I have looked at the schedule, and I find there that there is no such thing. This is what they say:

Extracts of the minutes of a meeting of the creditors and depositors of La Banque du Peuple, held at Montreal on the 25th of January, 1899:

It was proposed by Hon. Arthur Boyer and Rev. Messire F. L. Adam, seconded by A. P. Ritchot and J. B. Coallier, and carried unanimously:—

“Whereas, at a meeting of the creditors and depositors of La Banque du Peuple, held on the 26th of November last, it was resolved unanimously to grant to the directors as liquidators of this bank, under the law passed at the last session of the Parliament of Canada, a further delay of two years from the first May next, on condition that they pay over cash and without delay the amount of guarantee given by them to the bank.”

If I understand the schedule, that is only a petition of the creditors and depositors; then the bank proceeded to pass these resolutions on the petition. But we have no petition in favour of this Bill from the creditors, depositors or shareholders, and I contend that the Bill is entirely beyond the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me, that, if we pass this, we are entering on a line that will give us no end of trouble in the future; we are practically making this Parliament an insolvent court; we practically propose to give discharges to insolvent debtors whenever we see fit. It is not that the insolvent debtors here have paid all that they are able to pay, or that they have assigned all their assets to pay their debts; they have only proposed to pay a portion of them, and we take upon ourselves the responsibility of giving them a discharge. Now, it is practically turning this Parliament into an insolvent court, and that is a bad feature of this Bill. I hold that, if we do this in the case of a bank, we may, with equal propriety, be asked to-morrow to do it in the case of a commercial corporation, because they have just as good a right to ask to be relieved of their obligations as this bank has of its. Another feature of the Bill has been brought to our attention. It is a principle we have invariably followed, that we should not interfere with cases that are in court. Now, these litigants have got judgments against the banks, and we deprive them of what the courts have given them, or at least a share of it, if this legislation is passed. Others have suits that are not yet finished. It is not known how much the court will allow them, whether all they claim, or a part of what they claim, or none of it. But it makes no difference; we are taking the matter out of the hands of the court, and we are dealing with it here. I think the Solicitor General ought to tell us how far this principle is sound, because, it seems to me, we should not pass this legislation in this trivial way, and say that, because we have the right to pass an insolvency law, we can interfere in individual cases of insolvency and become a court to wind up individual estates, and give a discharge to insolvent debtors who have paid a percentage of their obligations.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). There is very little for me to say on this subject. I think the whole matter is concluded by a decision given by Chief Justice Strong in a Supreme Court case, Quirt vs. the Queen, and also by a Privy Council case, L'Union Saint-Jacques and Belisle. According to those cases, this matter would be exclusively within the control of this Parliament, and, when I have said that, I have said all that can be said on the subject. I may add, perhaps, for the benefit of the House, that the same point was decided in another case which is referred to here, that is, the case of the Merchants Bank and Smith, in the Supreme Court Reports. Having said that, I have said all that I can say in favour of this Bill. Speaking now, not as Solicitor General, but merely as a member of Parliament, and as one having some knowledge of what has taken place in my province, I would like to add, that there are several cases pending in the courts that are going to be affected by this legislation, and I cannot really bring myself to consider that it is entirely fair that we should legislate these people out of court. The nature of the litigation pending is this: that this bank is not a bank incorporated in the ordinary way under our Banking Act; it is what is known in the province of Quebec as a ‘société en commandite’; it is a corporation brought into existence under the civil law of the province of Quebec long anterior to our Banking Act. I do not mean to say, that it is a question by any means determined or decided, but it is a question which, I think, is undecided in our province, as to whether the liability of the directors is a joint and several liability towards the shareholders and depositors. That question is now sub judice in our province, because cases have been brought by shareholders and depositors against directors. Now, it is not for me to offer any opinion as to whether this House should dispose of these cases by means of this legislation, because I must confess to the House that I have not read the Bill; therefore, I speak with considerable diffidence concerning this matter. I have not gone beyond the question of jurisdiction, which, I think, is absolutely conclusive. But, if it should happen that, as a result of this legislation, these cases are to be concluded, and we are going to legislate these people out of court, then I say, that it is not a very correct principle in legislation, in my humble judgment. That is the difficulty with me. As I say, I cannot go any further, because I have not read the Bill and know very little of its contents.

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I must confess that I am very much disappointed with the opinion of the Solicitor General. As I understand him, he tells us that the decision of the Privy Council in the case of L'Union Saint-Jacques and Belisle is conclusive that we have jurisdiction in this matter.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think my hon. friend did not understand me or did not want to understand me. What I did say was that the decision in L'Union St. Jacques et Belisle has been considered by the Supreme Court as being conclusive.

Mr. MONK. I do not know what the decision of the Supreme Court is. My hon. friend can look very flighty and very proud, but when he is giving his opinions, and his opinions do not prove satisfactory to this House, he must expect legitimate criticism, and he will not achieve much by looking over our heads. As to the decision in the case, to which he referred as having been referred to by the Supreme Court, I understand that the decision of the Privy Council was, and I am speaking from memory only, in the case of L'Union St. Jacques et Belisle, that the Act of the local legislature by which the assets of that association, which was a benevolent association, were to be distributed in a particular way, was intra vires, that the Legislature had the right to decide in what way these particular assets of that association were to be distributed, and that therefore the local legislature had jurisdiction.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Why, what is the reason given by the Privy Council?

Mr. MONK. My recollection of it, although the hon. gentleman does not seem to want to know anything about it except what is thought by him to be the 'obiter dicta' of the Supreme Court, is that the decision was on a question of civil rights, and not on the question of insolvency at all. It was the question of the distribution of the assets of this particular company which was incorporated under the statute of the province of Quebec. I am speaking, of course, from memory and subject to correction, but that is my recollection of it. It seems to me that we have jurisdiction in this question under that clause in the British North America Act which gives us jurisdiction in matters of banks and banking.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not at all.

Mr. MONK. Well, perhaps the hon. gentleman will be able to explain why he says not at all. He cannot do it. We have a general Banking Act, and, under that banking Act, there are provisions applying to the insolvency of banks in general, if I mistake not. There are dispositions in that statute which apply to the insolvency of banks in general. Why, therefore, should we be shorn of jurisdiction in this question of the Banque du Peuple. The Banque du Peuple has a special statute, an old Act of incorporation which places it in a position different from other banks and if we had jurisdiction to legislate as to the insolvency of banks in general, surely we have jurisdiction over the matters relating to the insolvency of this particular bank, although it had a special charter. It seems to me that there is no doubt about our jurisdiction, not, perhaps, because of our right to legislate as to insolvency in general, but because of that other section of the British North America Act which gives us jurisdiction over banks and banking. We have legislated as to the insolvency of banks in general. Here is a bank, with a special charter, which comes to us, being in a state of insolvency, and surely we have a right to legislate as to the manner in which the liquidation of that bank shall be conducted. As to suits pending, I can only repeat what I said before, and what has been adverted to by the right hon. Prime Minister. Perhaps we should make some disposition as to the costs of these suits, but surely all creditors of the bank should be placed on the same footing. It is not one man having a suit against the directors of the bank; it is the whole scheme of the liquidation of the bank that is involved.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw the attention of the Ministry to the fact that there is no petition from the creditors or the shareholders, or from the depositors, in this bank, in favour of that Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There was in the Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not in the schedule. There is only a petition from the bank authorities, and they have recited a petition or any agreement by the creditors and others connected with the bank, and this Bill is not in accordance with it at all.

The PRIME MINISTER. The point may be well taken, but this Bill has been investigated by the committee, and I assume that all these things—in fact, if I had a right to state what took place there, I have no doubt that all these matters in relation to the Bill were clearly investigated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose a large amount of costs must have been incurred in these outstanding actions. It seems to me that some provision should be made in regard to them. These actions were undertaken when there was no legislation standing in the way, and it seems to me that those who have taken them should have a right to rank for the costs they have incurred if for nothing else. It seems a hardship that costs legitimately incurred, in these suits, with nothing standing in the way, shall be lost to these people, and I think there should be a provision that these costs should be paid, or that the persons that brought the actions should be allowed to rank for these as part of their claims at least.

The PRIME MINISTER. I suggest that the Bill pass without taking the third reading to-night.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the Government ought to obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice in regard to this Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. I propose that we should not take the third reading this evening.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will my hon. friend give us the opinion of the Minister of Justice?

The PRIME MINISTER. I will undertake to give it.

Bill reported.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picou). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the Government to a return which has recently been laid on the Table of the House. The reference number is 51, and it is a return to an Order of the House under date of the 24th of April, 1899, for copies of all letters and so on, with Mr. Frederick Peters, Q.C.. The return is very incomplete, and the particular portion that I call the attention of the Treasury benches to is the first portion, and they will appreciate, I am sure, my objection to the return in its present form. I find the mere statement that a private telegram in cipher had been received, but I asked in connection with it that the date of the telegram should be given, and I beg to call attention to what purports to be, and no doubt is, a copy of the reply, but the date of it is omitted, and the particular feature in connection with moving for the return in its present form is in no sense satisfactory so far as I have not this omission. Then I beg to call attention to the fact that the date of the private telegram is not given. That is the one received and the reply is given without the date.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Will my hon. friend send me a note of this, so that I can send it at once to the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will be very happy to do so. I wish to call attention to an important subject in regard to a matter that was discussed yesterday. On the 30th March, 1898, last year, there was an order of this House passed for all papers and correspondence respecting the Manitoba prosecutions for election frauds, so called. This is a matter of some urgency, and the return should be expedited. It has not yet been brought down.

I call attention to some returns of importance to the House in general, which I personally would like to have brought down at an early day. I refer to an Order passed on the 19th of April in regard to the Yukon. Nearly a month has elapsed, and although some papers were laid before the House by the Minister of the Interior, they did not cover several important returns. I shall send a memorandum to the right hon. gentleman, with the observation, that I would be very glad if special attention were given to this matter, not because I ask it, but because it is a question of transcendent importance. These returns do not involve very much labour.

Mr. BELL (Picou). I call the attention of the Government to the fact that a return ordered by the House on the 19th of April, in connection with the report of the commission appointed to inquire into the treatment of the labourers on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway has not yet been laid on the Table of the House.

ACCOMMODATION IN THE COMMITTEE ROOMS.

Mr. PENNY. I wish to draw the attention of the Government to a question of some importance. I refer to the manner in which the committee rooms of this House are so crowded by strangers that members are deprived of their proper seats. Lately there have been one or two very important questions before both the Railway Committee and the Banking Committee, and having to attend other committees, when I got in a little late, I found it impossible to get a seat within the space allotted to members. I noticed that a great many strangers were occupying seats which should be reserved for the members of the committee. I certainly think the Government should take some action, so that these seats may be retained exclusively for the members of the committee.

Mr. MACDONNELL. A resolution was passed by the Railway Committee last session, to be reported to this House, asking the Government to take action to enlarge and improve the Railway Committee room. The facilities afforded there are altogether inadequate and are inferior to what some of the county councils in the province of Ontario afford for transacting business. Now that the attention of the Government has been called to this matter, I hope they will take some steps to enlarge and improve the accommodation in the committee room.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY ACT OF 1881.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask a question. In the Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, passed in 1881, the company was given power to build branch lines from points on its main line to any point within the Dominion by simply depositing a plan of the same with the Department of Railways. A question has been raised as to whether this power still exists. Sir Oliver Mowat, as I understand, furnished an opinion to the Minister of the Interior on that question, and I would like to know what that opinion is.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If the hon. gentleman will send me a memorandum of the information he wants, I will furnish the information as far as it is possible to obtain it.

GRIEVANCES OF YUKON MINERS.

Mr. A. F. MARCOTTE (Champlain). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to a letter I have just received from Dawson City. Some companies, it is stated, buy water grants from private individuals and the miners complain that when those companies become the owners of those water courses, they can no longer sell their claims, and they asked me to draw the attention of the Minister of the Interior upon that matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). (Translation.) Would the hon. gentleman repeat his question, as I did not catch it.

Mr. MARCOTTE. (Translation.) I have just received a letter from some miners in Dawson City. These miners ask me to call the attention of the Government to the fact that some companies buy water courses, and that the miners are thereby deprived of the opportunity of selling their river claims, water being a first requisite for washing the pay dirt, and they are deprived of it by those companies. They ask me to call the attention of the Government to the matter.

Mr. MACDONNELL (Selkirk).

SMALL FRUIT PACKAGES.

On the order being called,

Second reading Bill (No. 56) an Act to define the size of small fruit packages.—(Mr. Penny).

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he intends to go on with that Bill at present, or if he intends to drop it?

Mr. PENNY. I intend to go on with the Bill; but at the request of the Minister of Inland Revenue, I have allowed it to stand, because the Minister has suggested that it might be incorporated in a Bill that he intends introducing to amend the Weights and Measures Act.

Mr. BERGERON. You might as well drop it, then.

Mr. PENNY. No, I will keep it on, and introduce it as an amendment to the hon. Minister's Bill.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington) moved second reading of Bill (No. 63), to amend the Act respecting the Civil Service of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the second occasion on which I have brought before this House the system that has been in practice for many years of granting to civil servants in the several departments of the Government, in the inside and outside service, additional amounts to their ordinary salaries for services rendered either in connection with the department to which they belong, or in connection with another department. This system was inaugurated many years ago, I find that it is growing, and I contend that it should be stopped at once. If you look over our civil service list, you will not find a single name in it which has set down opposite it as salary the sum received for extra services in addition to the regular salary. On several occasions, when in Opposition, I found fault with this system, and I hold the same opinion still, that it should be abolished. Now, I do not want to detain the House at any great length, but I want to show how long this system has been in existence and how much money has been sacrificed under it; and I want to urge on the Government an amendment to the Civil Service Act, that will provide, as this Bill does, that no civil servant shall receive any sum in addition to his ordinary salary for any duty which he performs in the department to which he belongs. If you look at the Auditor General's Report, you will find in the commencement of that report every year a list of those who have received pay for more than one service. I have gone over that report for 12 years, and I have extracted simply the names of men who have received $900 or over. Men who have received less than that possibly might be pardoned for urging some additional allowance for their services; but men who receive over $900 should be fairly well content with their salary without urging for an additional allowance. In this respect the law—and I contend that it ought to be the law if it is not—has been violated in every department from top to bottom, from garret to cellar. Every civil servant is now standing at his desk every day trying with a hawk eye to find a hook on which he can hang a claim for an extra allowance for extra services. During the past year there have been 799 clerks who have received pay for more than one service. The following statement shows the number of persons who have received pay from more than one source, their regular salaries, and the extras received by those who had a salary of $900 or over:

taken. He gets, in addition, $800 a year as Commissioner of Standards, which is a mere sinecure—no work, no responsibility, because there is a person in charge of the weights and measures standard department. Then, there is Mr. McDougald, deputy head of the Department of Customs, who gets $2,800 per year and $800 in addition as chairman of the board of customs. So on, right through from the Atlantic to the Pacific, every man who has a position is trying to find out some means by which he can get an extra allowance for extra service. I notice one town, in which I think there is only one distillery, and yet there are no less than five Government officers there who get extra pay in connection with that distillery. It is high time the Civil Service Act should be changed. If the salaries of those men are not sufficient, give them salaries sufficient for their duties, pay them well, but do not keep each civil servant seeking means by which he can draw

Let me point out some of the cases which, I think, deserve special mention. The clerk of the Supreme Court gets $2,600 a year salary, but, in addition, he draws $600 per year for preparing the records of the Supreme Court for the printer, and the year before last he got $197 commission on stamps that he sold in the discharge of his duties as clerk of the Supreme Court, bringing his salary up altogether to $3,300 or $3,400. The clerk of the Exchequer Court gets $2,000 a year salary, a special vote of $275, some $300 allowed him for preparing the records of the court for the printers, and a commission on the stamps he sells in connection with the duties of the office. Then, take up the deputy heads in the city of Ottawa. If you turn up the civil service list, you will find that Mr. Miall, the deputy head of Inland Revenue, is down at a salary of $3,200. People would be led to believe from this, that that is all the salary he gets, but they would be mis-extra pay for some supposed extra service. The practice has grown to an extent that is no credit to this or any Government that will allow it to continue. Take again, the collector of customs in Victoria; he gets $3,000 a year as collector and $400 as assistant controller of Chinese immigration. Take the other collector of customs at Vancouver; he gets $2,000 a year and $400 or $500 per year as assistant controller of Chinese immigration. I do not know whether these gentlemen understand the Chinese language or not, but I hardly think they do. They find, however, that by making a demand of this kind, they have been able to add $400 or $500 a year to their salary, and every clerk and Customs collector throughout the country say: If these men can do it, why cannot I? And the system has grown to such an extent that it is the duty of this House and the Government to put a stop to it. I would like to know if a bank pays its clerks anything extra when they have to work extra hours, making up monthly and quarterly returns, and remain in their offices working on these returns until ten or eleven at night. There is no such system in any banking institution in this Dominion. Then, take wholesale clerks. We know that in the busy season men in this line very often have to work until eleven or twelve o'clock at night to finish up the day's business or to prepare the warehouse for next day. Are they paid extra for that? I think not. I have already proved to the satisfaction of this House that the civil servants are paid as well as any other class in this Dominion—yes, and better. Take bank clerks, school teachers, ministers, or any educated class, and compare their average salaries with the average of the civil service, and you will find that there is no class, taking them all in all, that are so well paid as the civil servants of Canada. That being the case, why should we be called upon to pay extra allowances for supposed little duties they may perform in connection with the every-day duties of their offices? We know that there was one clerk who received $60 a year for winding the clock in the office. I do not blame that clerk. He found, no doubt, that the Deputy head of his department was drawing extra money for supposed duties, and he desired similar benefits for himself. And so it goes from one to another. Take the case of railway station agents. On many occasions railway trains are late, and the agents are kept up waiting for them. Do they send in a bill for extra time that they put in after eleven o'clock? I do not think so. Take the salaried postmasters throughout the Dominion. When they need to put in extra hours in the discharge of their duties, do they send in a bill for the extra services? No. There is no other service in which the clerks are allowed to charge extra for extra work, as the members of our civil service do. I contend that we should alter that system, and alter it at once. Joint stock companies—insurance companies and others—do they pay their clerks extra, when a few hours' extra work must be done? There is a striking case, exemplifying the effect of this system. When the system was inaugurated of paying the clerks extra for overtime spent in computing interest, in the first year they did the work within their office hours, and the Auditor General refused to sanction the account, on the ground that the work was not done out of hours. Next year, the clerks took good care to do it outside of the office hours, and so they draw the extra amount for counting the interest on deposits, and they have drawn it down to the present time. That system should be put a stop to. If it is deemed necessary to pay these clerks all that they are now allowed, let it be paid in the form of a salary, and, if their work takes them to twelve o'clock, let them put in that time, and not continue the system that, in my opinion, should never have been started. I advocated the doing away with this system, when I was in Opposition, and I intend to advocate it now. I understand that the Government intend to recast the Civil Service Act. I should be very glad, if they did, and particularly glad, if a clause is to be introduced embodying the principle I advocate. I am glad to notice that the amount paid to those drawing over $900 has been reduced this year. But surely a great many amounts are paid that we should not pay. If the Deputy Heads, for instance, are entitled to the salaries and extras they are receiving, let it be paid as a salary, and let the public know what they are getting. When the people take up the Civil Service List, and look over the names of the men who receive these salaries, they have a right not to be deceived by that list. The list should state honestly the salaries which these men receive, which it does not do now. There is not a deputy head but is drawing some extra allowance for some supposed extra service. Then, take the clerks in the Supreme Court, and the Exchequer Court. One appears in the list as receiving a salary of $2,600, and the other a salary of $2,000, while in reality one receives $3,500 and the other $2,850 altogether. I say, that the Civil Service Act should be amended in this respect, and these men should be placed upon a salary, and let that cover all the duties that they perform. We should not continue a system that is actually producing a grasping, improper desire on the part of the civil servants to put into their pockets by some means money that is taken from the pockets of the people, in return for some supposed extra service they render. Look over the list, and you will find that a great many who draw large salaries have received extra sums for extra duty. This is my reason for moving the Bill. If the Government are prepared to give an assurance that they will recast the Civil Service Act and will incorporate a clause to do away with this system, I shall be glad to leave the matter in the hands of the Government. But I am not prepared to drop the agitation in favour of this reform, which I consider necessary in the interests of the country. We want to cut down expenses. I am prepared to support reduction, and where the Government are not making them quickly enough, I claim the right and liberty to show where they can be made. I have no feeling against civil servants, nor do I desire to find fault with them. I dare to say, we have a good class of civil servants. But I contend that they have evidenced a grasping desire to put money in their pockets by any possible means for some supposed little extra work they perform. They have been badly controlled in that respect. I hope that system will be brought to a stop. I move the second reading of the Bill, and shall be glad to know what the Government and hon. gentlemen on either side of the House have to say with regard to it.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). It is scarcely necessary for me to add anything to what has been so ably said by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I heartily endorse the sentiments expressed by him, for I did not think the case was as bad as he has represented it. It is no wonder that members of the Government and other members of this House are worried out of their lives by people applying for Government positions. One of two things is evident, either civil servants are paid too much for what they do, or they do not do enough for what they get, otherwise there would not be so many people after positions. I think if the civil service of this country could be let out by tender—although I do not like the principle—it could be done for 50 per cent less than we are paying to-day, and I believe would be equally well performed after a little training. I do not believe in cutting down salaries too much; I believe in paying well for the work. I am speaking now as I would speak before an agricultural audience, for it is after all the farmers of this country who foot the bills. No member should say anything in this House that he would not be willing to say before an agricultural audience, because they are the burden bearers, it is they who pay the bills for everything. If these things were presented to an agricultural audience as well as they have been presented by the member for North Wellington, I am sure it would be quite an eye-opener to them. Civil servants no doubt often begin at a low salary, the salary is oftentimes no object to them when they are applying for a position. The late Sir John A. Macdonald said to some one who asked him what his pay would be when he got the position: "Never mind the pay, look after the pay after you have got in." No doubt that is the feeling many have in seeking for positions, and after they get in they begin to clamour for more pay. I feel that in our present circumstances economy should be the order of the day; I know that is the order of the day with the agricultural classes. I heartily support the Bill, and only wish I was able to support it in a more forcible manner.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I could not but admire the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to-night when I heard him dilating upon the merits of this Bill. I felt like saying, but for the fact that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was before me, "Richard is himself again." The hon. gentleman seemed to be at his old work when he was on this side of the House and was accustomed, during many years, to comment upon the Auditor General's Report. It was a proof of the fact that sometimes one gets back to his old conduct by sheer force of habit. Now I am not criticising the hon. gentleman's Bill because it has some merit in it. The only question with me is whether the hon. gentleman is sincere. Parliamentary rules compel me to assume that he is sincere, though the invitation he gives to the Government to ask him to withdraw the Bill, rather shakes my confidence in his sincerity. But he wanted to make a show of doing something towards controlling these obnoxious civil servants. Well, there is a virtue in his contention that when civil servants are receiving pay from more than one source, it should be shown in the Estimates how much they are receiving from all sources, because Ministers are often unable to give us that information, and, therefore, when we are voting a salary to an officer we do not know how much he may be getting from other sources. I think we ought to have that information in order to enable us intelligently to judge whether we are doing our duty fairly to the country and to the civil servant. But while saying that, I cannot go the length that the hon. gentleman proposes to go in his Bill, because he says:

Any deputy head, officer or employee asking for or accepting any extra salary or additional remuneration, other than a permanent increase of his salary, shall be held to have thereby vacated his office.

I think that is going too far. There are many situations in connection with the civil service where it is desirable that the employee should receive payment from two sources, because if we were compelled to employ another man, more would be paid out of the treasury. Where one man can do two lines of work without any interference with the duties of either, so long as he is only getting a fair salary, there is no objection to his being paid from two sources. What I object to is the fact that we do not know from how many sources he is paid, and the amounts in the aggregate that he is getting. I think in looking over this Bill that it is crudely drawn, and I do not think it will answer the purpose that the hon. gentleman has in view. But if it did become law, it would work injustice to many of the civil servants employed to-day, therefore, I cannot support it.

Mr. R. HOLMES (West Huron). While I agree with the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) in general, so far as his remarks go, I also agree with the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that the Bill goes too far. The principle advocated by the hon. member for North Wellington, I think, is not a bad one. To adopt a common saying, I think it is time for a change. I believe that the public accounts ought to show the actual salaries that all the civil servants are getting. Whether they should be paid for overtime, is another matter. But it seems to me the easiest way to obviate that would be to simply pay them a stated salary and require that they should perform certain services therefor, and let it be understood that they may be called upon to perform any services in connection with their department. I am a little inclined to think, however, that some of these extra services are not usually performed in overtime, but I fancy they are performed during the usual hours of office. For instance, I would infer that the services of the Chinese collector, or whatever the office may be called that was mentioned in connection with the customs collector at Vancouver, were not performed after hours. I am in favour of the principle of paying a stipulated salary, and let that be recognized as the amount the civil servant shall receive, and no more. I am glad to find the hon. member for East Grey and other members of the Opposition endorsing the spirit of the Bill, because according to the figures given by the member for North Wellington, the Liberals are not responsible for originating a system that is bad in itself, and that is decidedly getting worse as it goes along. But I do think the Liberals will add honour to themselves by removing the evil when the evil is pointed out to them. I contend that it is an evil, and I am glad that a Bill has been introduced. I hope that, in some form or other, it will receive consideration at the hands of the Government, and that a measure will be brought in.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I have listened with great interest, as I always do to my hon. friend the member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). There is no doubt that the facts that he has brought before us are well worthy of the consideration of the House and of the attention of the Government. As he is probably himself aware, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), has it in contemplation to introduce a Bill dealing with the Civil Service Act. I have not yet had an opportunity of conferring with him on the details of this measure, and I am not in a position for assuring my hon. friend, definitely, as to the extent to which he may adopt his suggestion, but I certainly will cause the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to be brought to the proposition of my hon. friend, and to the opinions which have been expressed by various members of this House in respect to it. As one hon. gentleman has truly stated, this is not a new matter; to the best of my recollection it has been in existence, not only since confederation, but prior to confederation. The fact of the matter is that for a considerable time the higher officers in the civil service of this country, have not been paid adequately to the great importance of the duties which fall upon them, and the House will do well to remember that, if you wish to have a high grade of civil servants, particularly in the superior branches, you must be prepared to pay them something more or less equal to the sum which men of equal talent and capacity are obtaining in the ordinary walks of life. I am perfectly free to say that I think myself that our system should be reformed in the degree that we should boldly face the question and give to these officers the sums which the services they render appear to be worth. I have more than once, on both sides of this House, advocated that reform, and I should certainly deem it to be my duty to call the attention of the Government to the views which have been expressed. I may say, without pledging the Government, speaking individually, for I am merely repeating what I have often said before, that I think the higher officers of the Dominion of Canada on whom often depends whether hundreds of thousands of dollars are lost to this country or not, should be paid as well, at any rate, as bank managers and people of that class. I think I am within the judgment of the House in saying that it is not merely for the dignity of the country, but in the highest degree for the interest of the people of this country, that they should have men of high talent and capacity in the higher branches of the civil service. I will accept the proposition of my hon. friend and move the adjournment of the debate in order to give a full opportunity of considering it, and, I have no doubt, of incorporating some of the suggestions which my hon. friend has made.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I just want to say, in reply to what the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) has stated, that I do not want to deprive any man of a reasonably good salary for the services that he renders to the people of this country. I am perfectly willing that he should be paid what his services are worth, but I want it entered in the civil service list of this country what each man gets. I do not want anything to be hidden. I want the people of the country to know that if a man is receiving $4,000 a year, he is not set down in the public accounts as receiving $3,200. That is the principle I am fighting against. I do not want it set down in the public accounts that an officer is receiving $2,800 when he is receiving $3,600. I do not want the Clerk of the Supreme Court to be set down in the Public Accounts as receiving $2,600 when he is receiving over $3,300. I want the Government to recast the Act, and remove the pernicious system of doing something in an underhand way that the people of this country do not know about. I say that the system is wrong. I want the Government to recast the Act and make the provision that I have suggested. Now, I am quite willing that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), and I am sorry he is not here, shall have an opportunity of studying the proposition that I have made. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has stated that he has held the view that some of the higher class of civil servants are not well enough paid. Let us compare their salaries with those received by men in similar walks of life. Take the bank managers throughout Canada to-day. Do the bank managers of Canada, and they occupy very responsible positions, receive, man for man, such salaries as the deputy heads of the departments here receive?

Mr. WOOD. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I say they do not. I am talking of bank managers throughout Canada. I do not speak of those only in cities; I include those in towns and villages, the men that are the managers of the different banks. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Wood) says "yes," I say "no." I know better. I have gone over the list; we have bank managers whom I know are not receiving over $100 a month. Is there any deputy head of a department who is receiving as low a salary as that? I know whereof I am speaking. I know that in Hamilton, and possibly in Toronto, you have men who receive $10,000 or $20,000 a year; there may be a few; I do not doubt that you have some, but even putting them together, with all the bank managers throughout Canada, they will not average the salary that is received by the deputy heads of the departments. Take other responsible positions in Canada that are occupied by distinguished men and men of good ability; I say that on the average they are not receiving salaries as high as the deputy heads of departments are receiving. If it is considered that these officials are not receiving enough, I am willing that you should add to their salaries. I do not want to keep a dollar from them if they are entitled to it, but put it in the Public Accounts and in the civil service list. The public are entitled to it; the people who pay the taxes are entitled to it; every ratepayer who exercises his franchise and contributes to the revenue is entitled to it, and I say this is a system that should be carried out. We should not have men receiving a nominal sum and getting in addition perquisites and pickings in connection, for instance, with the stamps he sells; he should charge for the letters that he sends to the post office. I contend that this system should be wiped out. Do insurance companies pay their clerks when they have to keep them in for two or three hours extra to make up the quarterly returns? They do not do it; why should we?

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought this Government were going to stop all that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, I am anxious to stop it. I hope my hon. friend will help me to stop it, and I am prepared to advocate such a stoppage of it. If the Government will not take that question up and recast the Civil Service Act so as to put a stop to that system, I pledge my word and honour that I will give hon. gentlemen opposite an opportunity to help me to force them to do so. I do not think that there is any corporate body in Canada that pays its clerks for extra work, if they are called upon to perform an hour's work afterwards. It is a rotten and pernicious system which should never have been inaugurated and which should be wiped out. I do hope that the Government will wipe it out. I am willing, as the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce says, if the Government come to an honest conclusion that civil servants are not paid enough to add to their salaries. I am willing to pay whatever their services are worth, but let us know it, and do not let us be kept in the dark. I want the Government to wipe out this system, and let the people know what every civil servant is really getting.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I am very glad that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has had a chance to show a little independence, but I hardly think he has shown as much courage as we might have expected from him. One of the principles of the Liberal party was that there were too many Ministers in the Cabinet, and why does the hon. member (Mr. McMullen) start with an attack on the civil servants who are not here to defend themselves, when he has a golden opportunity to effect an economy by cutting down the number of Ministers. I was pleased to hear the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) defend the civil servants from the attacks of the hon. member for North Wellington. I myself do not know enough about the civil servants of Canada to defend them, but I do know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) would show more sincerity if he would start with the Ministers themselves and bring in a Bill to reduce their number. Again, Mr. Speaker, it would be somewhat refreshing if the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) would show some of this independence when we are discussing the Drummond County Railway matter and other such transactions, if he is such a great stickler for economy.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, no, he is not.

Mr. CRAIG. Well, he used to talk a great deal about economy when he was in Opposition, but it is astonishing what extravagance on the part of the Government he lends his aid to now. I do not know whether he is asleep or not, but he seems to be when these matters are being discussed in the House. I do not remember that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) raised the slightest objection to the money that was voted away for the Crow's Nest Pass Railway. It would not be parliamentary to question the sincerity of the hon. gentleman, but when he attacks the civil servants and is afraid to attack the Government for their extravagance, it seems to me that the country will hardly give him much credit for sincerity. Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a most absurd Bill, and I have heard nobody rise to defend it. The idea of introducing a Bill and saying: That Her Majesty by and with the advice of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada enacts as follows—

Mr. BENNETT. Her Majesty does not know anything about it.

Mr. CRAIG. Well, it is hardly a Bill that such a prefix should be put in front of. It says :

Any deputy head, officer or employee asking for or accepting any extra salary or additional remuneration, other than a permanent increase of his salary, shall be held to have thereby vacated his office.

There have been a good many crimes invented by the Government in order that they might vacate offices, but this is a new crime altogether, and it should go in the Criminal Code as a monument to the genius of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen). Suppose an employee is asked to work overtime and to remain at night to make out returns that can not be made in the regular way, and the deputy head gives him some extra pay with or without the knowledge of the Minister, he would, under this Bill, vacate his office if he accepted that pay. Well, I never heard of such an absurd proposition. I hold that at times it is necessary for these clerks to do extra work during the session when returns have to be made out, and if they did not do extra work, more officials would have to be appointed. I do not say that is the idea of the hon. member for North Wellington, but it looks to me that he is aiming at securing a good many more vacancies to which his friends can be appointed. It is possible this Bill may be designed for that. I repeat that this Bill is most absurd and to expect this Parliament to enact it is no tribute to our intelligence. There might have been some sense in introducing a Bill saying that no employee shall receive anything but his regular salary, but that is not what this provides. With all due deference to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I think it is fortunate for him that the Government will not accept this Bill.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (Leeds). When the late Government was in power and the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) was in Opposition, he used to be very fond of the Auditor General's Report, he slept with it every night, and he came here loaded with complaints against the Government because civil servants received extra pay. He assured the House and the country that when the Liberals came to power this should be stopped. The first session of this Parliament he introduced a Bill which he declared he would push through this House even if he had to get the support of the Conservatives. But one of the Ministers gave him a little toffy, promised the Government would look into the matter, moved the adjournment of the debate, and so his little Bill was killed until the next session. The next session the same Bill appeared on the Order paper and the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) waxed eloquent and warm about it.

Mr. CRAIG.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is not the same Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, we know it is a new Bill, but it amounts to the same thing.

Mr. McMULLEN. This Bill never reached the second reading last session, it was another Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was a Bill bearing the same title : To amend the Civil Service Act.

Mr. McMULLEN. I challenge the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) to look at the records of the House and he will find he is wrong.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) looks up the Order paper he will find that every session since this Government came into power, the hon. member for North Wellington introduced a Bill to amend the Civil Service Act, and made a similar speech to that he delivered to-night, only he is a little more vigorous this time.

Mr. McMULLEN. This Bill never reached its second reading last year. It was an altogether different Bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Trade and Commerce gave the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) a little more toffy to-night, promised to consult with the Finance Minister and the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) is quite willing to accept that without a vote, knowing that the Bill is dead for this session. I was somewhat amused that my hon. friend from Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) endorsed everything the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) said, and expressed himself as quite anxious that all these extra amounts paid to civil servants should appear in the books so that they might be discussed. We remember what occurred here a few days ago, when the ex-Finance Minister was criticising the extravagance of the Government for purchasing photographs of the Prime Minister, and useless books for the Ministers, the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Rogers) gets up in his place and states that if the Government have to do these little things they should not appear before the public. He said this : "If such things have to be done, it will be well, at least, that they should not get to the ears of the public."

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows that he cannot refer to a previous debate.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not referring to a previous debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The hon. gentleman has just referred to a previous debate.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the debate was going on, I stated to the hon. member for Frontenac, that he had made use of that language.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman must accept the ruling of the Chair. I will ask him to confine himself to the subject of discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, Mr. Speaker, I submit to your ruling, and I will not refer to the previous debate; but I will make the statement, that in the last general elections the hon. member for Frontenac and his leaders, Mr. Haycock and Mr. Lockie Wilson, whom I met on the platform with the Auditor General's Report in their hands, used, as their whole stock-in-trade and argument, the statement, that the late Government had purchased stationery for the members, and so forth. Now, the hon. gentleman says, that, if this Government, which he now supports, have to do these things, do not let them appear in print, so that the public will know them.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. When my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) brought the same charge, year after year, against the late Government, we thought that, as soon as his friends got on the Treasury benches, they would abolish this system that was adopted by the late Government. They always believed that, if they required some extra work to be done, and had in their employ a good and faithful servant who was conversant with such work, it was better to give him some small addition to his salary and have him do it, than to appoint an extra man for the purpose. I am glad to see that the hon. gentlemen now sitting on the Treasury benches have followed the same good rule. Notwithstanding that, the hon. member for North Wellington, having made that serious charge against the late Government, is trying to have the law amended by introducing his Bill year after year; but he only gets it as far as the second reading, when some Minister moves the adjournment of the debate, and he quietly allows the Bill to remain there till the succeeding year. That is where this Bill is going now, and by next year my hon. friend will probably be transferred to the other chamber.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), that, when he takes this Bill and lays it—I was going to say, on the shelf,—but before the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), as he promised he would, he might amend it by inserting subsection 3, which the modesty of the member for Wellington has prevented him drafting, and which I have drafted for him. Subsection 2 of this Bill, as drafted by the hon. member for Wellington, is:

Any deputy head, officer or employee asking for or accepting any extra salary or additional remuneration, other than a permanent increase of his salary, shall be held to have thereby vacated his office.

Now, subsection 3, which the modesty of the member of Wellington has prevented him putting in print, will read as follows:—

Any member of Parliament asking for a position in the civil service, or for a seat in the Senate, shall be held to have thereby vacated his seat in the House of Commons.

Mr. D. D. ROGERS (Frontenac). Mr. Speaker, I just rise to explain what was brought up to-night by the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor). If I am reported as saying, that, if we did these things, I did not wish the fact to appear in "Hansard," I was misunderstood. I never intended to convey any such idea. I said, if the members are bound to have them, for Heaven's sake, do not aggravate the people by telling them. But I wished that it should not be. As regards these little trivial things, knives and such trash, that are paid for by the people, I think it is very humiliating for the members of this House to take them. The hon. member for South Leeds dare not stand before an agricultural audience and say what he has said here. If he did, he would be called down. It is not the amount of money that the people care for so much; but the spirit of the thing. This granting of trunks and knives is the most humiliating and contemptible thing that any honourable body of men could do.

Mr. BERGERON. Where is your trunk?

Mr. MILLS. Frank your clothes home.

Mr. ROGERS. I will tell you where my trunk is, if you want to know. It is down in the hotel, and I left strict orders with the proprietor not to give it to any one, because some of them are so greedy for trunks that they would take two, if they got a chance. To think that such miserable, petty talk should be indulged in by members of this House. The people of the country, who sent us here, expect something more statesmanlike from us, and I look with contempt on any hon. gentleman who talks in that way across the floor of the House. I think it is humiliating; it is not statesmanlike. It would not be done by gentlemen. These trivial matters should be done away with. There was some discussion here, a little while ago, about the inferior quality of the stationery. If we did away with these trunks and jack-knives, and got stationery of a better quality, the country would not object. It is not the amount of money that they object to; but they look on men who do such things as unworthy to be their representatives. I was very glad to see the Government do away with the practice of giving trunks. When I asked a gentleman what he did with the extra trunk he got four years ago, he said one was enough to last him a lifetime, and he gave the other to some of his friends. As regards the Auditor General's Report, I think it is a God-send to the country. I do not know what would have become of the country, under the late Administration, if we had not such a man as the Auditor General to watch them; and, more than that, I say he is not well enough paid. I will go further, and say, that I have that much patriotism that I will give $5 myself, if every other man in this House will put up $5, which would provide another thousand dollars for the Auditor General for the good work he is doing. I say: Pay him well, for he is the salvation of the country. Those things should not be there at all, but, if you must have them there, do not aggravate the poor tax-payers of the country by showing them.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). I do not agree in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) nor with the manner in which he made that proposal. I always had the opinion that the hon. gentleman was a straightforward, courageous fighter, who never attempted to take any undue advantage of an opponent, but now I shall have to revise my opinion. He proposes that every member of the House of Commons who asks for a senatorship or a judgeship or a lieutenant governorship or a position in the civil service shall forfeit his seat in this House. What would be the result? The hon. gentleman knows that the result would be that the boasted majority of fifty on the other side would disappear and we would walk over to that side and rule this country.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not think of that.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it would be taking an unfair advantage of the Government, and so I hope my hon. friend will withdraw his motion. Now, with reference to the Bill itself, I think that it is a most absurd proposal. After all the long speech the hon. gentleman has made, in which he made some good points and pointed out abuses that undoubtedly exist in the civil service, does he come down with a bill dealing with those abuses? Not a bit of it. He evades them altogether, and asks us to do what should not be done on its merits. For instance, his Bill provides that no member of the civil service who asks to have his salary increased shall thereby forfeit his position.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not ask anything of the kind. What I ask is that any civil servant, who asks for any addition to his regular salary, unless the addition he asks be a permanent increase, should forfeit his position. He is at liberty to ask for a permanent increase, but not for extras.

Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. WALLACE. Supposing, as did happen when I was Minister, I should send a customs officer, who was receiving a regular, moderate salary, say in Ontario, out to British Columbia to open up and establish an officer there, where the expenses of living were three times what they were at home, I would not be at liberty to give him an extra allowance.

Mr. McMULLEN. Add it to his salary.

Mr. WALLACE. But as he was only sent out there temporarily, that would hardly justify a permanent increase of $600 or $800 to the salary of a clerk who is only getting that much. That would be, in fact, doubling his permanent salary. The most justifiable proposition, from the point of view of business and economy, the hon. gentleman proposes to make a crime. That is the proposal he made, and the only proposal in his Bill.

He has told us that officials who are paid from two sources or are paid anything in addition to their regular salary, should have their names published as being in receipt of this extra payment. But that is done in the Auditor General's Report at present. In that report, as the hon. gentleman knows, we have a list of the members of the civil service who get paid from two different sources. Therefore, what he was demanding should be done and the failure to do which he was stigmatizing as an outrage is done to-day and is found in the report of the Auditor General. In that list, the name of the officer is given and his regular salary and the extra money paid to him and the reason why that extra money is paid. I do not see, therefore, where the criticism of the hon. gentleman in that respect comes in.

Again he provides, in this precious little Bill, that if any deputy head, officer or employee asks for an additional salary or remuneration, he shall thereby vacate his position. Well, suppose that an officer is sent to a place where he must be paid an extra salary in order to live. Take, for instance, the officials sent to the Yukon. We are told that those sent to the Yukon who are on the military service, receive double pay while in that district. But if this Bill were passed such officers would have to be dismissed, or be given this increased allowance as a permanent addition to their salaries, even after their return from that district. So that these people would continue to get double pay after they had returned. Instead of effecting a saving, that Bill would establish a most extravagant and unfair condition of things.

No doubt there are reforms which can be made in the civil service. In that service there are men who perform diligent, faithful, effective service and receive very little remuneration or recognition, while others who do not perform such faithful, diligent service receive very large salaries. And we have a system adopted by this Government, which I consider most pernicious, and one practised by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) more than by any other Minister. That hon. gentleman said: I am going to pick out the men who do diligent and effective service and pay them. But how can he, who is here in Ottawa one day every week in his office, and who cannot supervise his staff, composed of hundreds of clerks, know who is doing this diligent service that requires extra remuneration? How is he to know the clerk who has not been diligent? The men who have been diligent, according to him, are those who got out the list that the Postmaster General himself was afraid to avow as his production. But these two men who were diligent in scouring out the private letters of members and having them published are the men whose salaries were increased.

If the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is in earnest, let him begin with reforming these Ministers. Let him not lecture the whole country, but lecture these Ministers and point out to them where they have failed in carrying out the law and doing justice to those members of the service whose faithful work should be recognized. But these members of the Government are too busy looking out for schemes of aggrandizement for themselves. The members of Parliament on that side, some of them at any rate, are busy looking for offices for themselves and their friends. So we can not expect, and we do not expect of them, any reform in the civil service. We do not expect and we cannot therefore expect efficient and economical government. But we may expect what we see is occurring—that the civil service list is increasing rapidly, that every department of the Government—or almost every department, I will not say every department, but the departments in the aggregate—are increasing their expenses abnormally; the public funds are being squandered in every direction, and instead of practising the economy which they preached when on this side, they are indulging in the wildest extravagance—and without a word of rebuke from the hon. member for North Wellington.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all papers in connection with the dismissal from office of Thomas Shannon, of Killarney.—(Mr. Richardson.)
