real there has been during the past couple of years considerable contention on that subject, some contending for one plan and some for another. But I have this to say, that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), who I am very sorry to know is not in good health, and is prevented from being in this House—I am very happy to know that that hon. gentleman, through his statesmanlike grasp of public affairs, which he has developed during the past two or three years that he has been in this Government, will succeed, if that project is carried out in its entirety, in making Montreal one of the largest cities on this continent. No man has ever had more vilification or more abuse in regard to that very matter than the hon. Minister of Public Works, and no man ever deserved it less. For my part, I can say this in all sincerity, that there is no man more thought of throughout the length and breadth of Canada than the hon. Minister of Public Works. He is a gentleman whom the people of the province of Ontario have confidence in. He is a gentleman who, if he has anything to say, says it, and if he has anything to do, does it. He is a man of pluck, a man of energy, a man of honesty, a man of truth and a man of ability. When he had anything to say before this Government came into power, he said it, and he proved that he was right. We have heard a good deal of abuse of the hon. Minister of Public Works, but we have not seen any man who had the pluck to do what he did—rise in his place and bring a charge against him, and ask for a committee and prove that charge. These are things that are endearing the hon. Minister of Public Works not only to the people of Ontario, but to the solid delegation that stands behind him in this House of Commons. Now, the harbour of Montreal is, after all, the great heart of the commercial interests of Canada. As every business man knows, the city of Montreal should have the very best equipment possible for the transshipment of the products of this country into ocean-going steamers. That harbour is at present antiquated. The harbour of Portland has had $12,000,000 or $15,000,000 spent upon it; the harbour of New York has had $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 spent upon it; the harbour of Boston has had $20,000,000 spent upon it. These ports consequently are so fitted out to-day that they take the products of the United States and Canada as well at one-half the price that is charged at the port of Montreal, and until that is rectified, all that the Government may do for the transportation of the products of the farm at Montreal will be of little avail. The Government can foresee the millions of people that are going to settle in this country, and the immense traffic that is going to result from the settling of lands in the North-west. We already see what this country is able to do in the way of development; we can see the great expansion of our foreign trade during the past three or four years. In three years the foreign trade of this country has increased $104,000,000, and its domestic trade has very nearly doubled. What is the result of that expansion? Throughout the length and breadth of the land every manufacturing industry, every mercantile establishment, every workman is busy. We see the cessation of the former exodus and every evidence of prosperity, from one end of the country to the other. We see the good effects of the administration of this gentleman who has been so violently and frequently assailed, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), in the thousands of immigrants that are coming to this country. If you look up the papers in the United States, you will find in them everywhere inquiries about Canada; you will find that people from Michigan and the northern states are taking up and conning all the reports about Canada, and many of them, including many Canadians, are leaving the United States to settle in our North-west. Only the other day, I saw it stated in a newspaper that the ex-mayor of that city was leaving Detroit and going to the North-west Territories, in the vicinity of Alameda, where he is taking up a ranch, and where he intends to live. He says that he is tired of politics and is going to cast in his lot with the Canadian people. You will find the same thing everywhere. We hear of large bodies of people making a general move into our Canadian North-west. We find people in all the Scandinavian countries, in all the northern parts of Europe and Russia—people who are fleeing from their homes for one reason or another—coming to settle into this country. It is the duty of this Government to see that nothing is left undone to make this prosperity of Canada continuous and permanent; not a prosperity by fits and starts, not a momentary prosperity, because of a good crop this year and then a set back on account of a poor crop, but a prosperity of a permanent character; and by putting the equipment by which the products of this country can be sent out across the ocean, in such a position that it will be practically impossible for any other country to compete with us, or for the country to the south of us to do better, we shall make that prosperity permanent.

I have a few figures here to submit with regard to freight rates. I find that the freight rates over the railways to Fort William are the same, but down to Buffalo the rate is three and one-eighth cents, including elevator charges. Vessels carrying 25,000 bushels of grain, going down to Montreal through our canals, have to pay from six to seven cents per bushel, but if we have the canals deepened to fourteen feet, then vessels carrying 100,000 bushels of grain through to Montreal will do so at the same price as to Chicago or Buffalo or New York, and probably just a little cheaper. Will not that be a great benefit to the farmers of Canada? Will that not give them fully two or three cents a bushel more for their wheat? In the province of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, which export 30,000,000 to 35,000,000 bushels of wheat, that would mean practically $1,000,000 more in the pockets of the farmers. Will that not take away their grievances and their continual cry against heavy freight charges? Will not $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 put into the farmers' pockets instead of going into transportation and dock charges in Montreal be a benefit to the country and justify all the expenditure now being made by the Government in deepening these canals and putting this country in a position to ship cheaply our products at the very lowest possible expense?

Then we have, of course, the fast line service which is coming. Also, the Pacific cable which is coming. Our Government is a Government of business men. They see the great possibilities and potentialities of Canada and can look ahead. They see what a tremendous advance has been already made since they have assumed office; and judging by what has been done, we may imagine what our progress will be in three, ten or fifteen years more. It is the duty of this Parliament to see that nothing is left undone and that the Government are supported in carrying out the great National Policy, which their policy is.

Mr. TAYLOR. The National Policy.

Mr. FROST. The difficulty is that my hon. friend supposes there is only one National Policy, and that is their policy of keeping on increasing the tariff until they nearly tarified the whole of our manufacturing industries out of existence. But there is a National Policy better than that one, that gets right down to the root of things, that puts the people on a prosperous basis first, and once we get the people prosperous, every manufacturing industry and every other industry is bound to prosper.

I just want to say a few more words with reference to the port of Montreal, because I look upon the improvement of that port as a very important feature of the Government policy. Montreal is naturally a great exporting outlet. On looking at the reports of the Montreal Produce Exchange for last year, I find that while the receipts of grain there were pretty large, nearly the whole of those received were re-exported. They re-exported 90 per cent of wheat, 96 per cent of corn, 90 per cent of peas, 92 per cent of oats and 98 per cent of barley. I merely give the percentages and contrast these with the percentages of other cities. Philadelphia re-exported 32 per cent, Boston 48 per cent, Baltimore 44 per cent, and New York only 45 per cent. So that naturally Montreal is a great centre of export; and if you can just improve our antiquated system there and make that port a modern harbour fitted up with every equipment for loading and unloading of products, you will have in Montreal one of the greatest ports of distribution, not only of our country, but of the entire north-western states, and you will build up one of the greatest transportation businesses through our country, both by water and by rail, that there is upon the continent of America.

But there is no doubt that this policy has been very greatly promoted by the statesmanship of the hon. gentlemen who compose the present Government. All these hon. gentlemen have been more or less connected with the work which has resulted in the wonderful transformation we have seen in the past few years. The Minister of Agriculture, as I have already stated, has been very active in placing before the farmers every improvement that could increase the productions of the soil. Our other Ministers have also done their full share. And not only have they done their share within the borders of Canada, but they have been attracting to Canada the attention of the people of other countries. In the recent changes made by the Postmaster General, we have one of the brightest periods in the history of the whole Post Office Department. In carrying out of the Imperial system, in which so much has already been accomplished, the Postmaster General has filled a worthy part. The penny postage system is a great success. I heard the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) say that penny postage had only benefited the business men and no others. Personally I can say, speaking for our own company, that a very few days after the penny postage came into use, our firm took the amount that we would save and increased the wages of our workmen ten per cent. Penny postage has been the means of assisting every business man in this country to widen his business, to increase the pay of his employees. More than that, it has been the means of binding the Empire together in closer bonds than ever. In connection with the efforts made by the Premier, it has done more in this direction than ever was done before. It has also been the means of drawing the attention of other nations of the earth to this country, and we are feeling the effects of that to-day. We are told sometimes that our prosperity is due to the fact that Providence gave us good crops. It is true that Providence gave us good crops, but Providence has also given us sound business men to take charge of the Government of the country and we have every reason to thank Providence for what he has done. To the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) also great credit is due. No member of the Government, however, has been more fiercely assailed. We had a six-hour speech a few nights ago denouncing the alleged mismanagement of the Yukon. Yet let me point out a curious circumstance. An opening has been afforded for these hon. gentlemen to go before the people with these charges, by reason of a by-election in the neighbouring constituency of Brockville. Two members of the Opposition went to speak in that constituency, and so little did they think of these Yukon charges that they did not deem it worth while to press them, or even to mention them. Yet these hon. gentlemen were speaking in the very town where lives the late commissioner of the Yukon, whose character has been assailed in the most villainous and assassin-like manner. And still we are called upon, and the country is called upon to condemn the Minister of the Interior and to say that there is something wrong in the management of the Yukon. I venture to say that during the whole course of the election campaign of Brockville not one word will be spoken in regard to this maladministration in the Yukon. That is quite in accord with the record of hon. gentlemen opposite since this Government assumed power. Every charge they have brought before the country has been so flimsy and of such a cloudy nature, as to afford no basis whatever for a conclusion in the minds of reasonable men. But in the speech of the hon. gentleman reference is made to a railway from Bennett to Skagway, the fact of its being built being given as the justification for the Senate in blocking the Yukon railway scheme of this Government last session. It is a most singular thing that a railway owned by Americans, and by the very Americans who sent a man by the name of Livernash down here to influence the Senate against the Government's proposal, should be cited as a justification for throwing out a proposal to build a railway that would keep the trade of that country in the hands of Canadians. These Americans have captured the trade to a very large extent, to the detriment of the business men of this country and this just at a time when we were expending large sums of money for the completion of our canal system and the completion of our transportation facilities, to place us in a position of independence with regard to our own trade. We are now told that we have a railway that did not cost us anything. We have not a railway in our own country, but we should have had it, and should have controlled the whole trade of this country had the Government's proposal been accepted. Moreover, we should have towns at Glenora and all the way up to Dawson. We should also have had a splendid line of electric-lighted steamers on the Stikine River. We had them when the season opened last year, but they had to be taken off the route. Today we are asked to believe that this whole arrangement was contrary to the interests of the country and that the Senate did a wise thing in blocking it. We cannot know how much has been lost to the business men of the country by the blocking of that railway last session.

I do not intend to detain the House for more than a few minutes longer. I wish to draw attention, in closing, to the parrot cry of broken pledges. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to forget that the Liberal party has a platform on which they went to the country and which was accepted by the country returning the party to power. Ever since the party has been in power they have carried out every pledge made in their platform.

Now, are we to be held responsible for every isolated statement which any member, or defeated candidate, or any one else has chosen to make throughout this country during the last ten or fifteen years? I say you cannot hold the present Government to those pledges. Who to-day would hold the hon. leader of the Opposition to the promise he made in 1887, that there would be 20,000 men making pig iron in this country if he were permitted to increase the duty to $4 a ton? Who would hold the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) to his pledge to give this country prohibition if he got into power, a pledge that he made years ago? Yet he never mentioned the subject after he got into power. We were told by scores of candidates, and by members now sitting in this House, that if the National Policy was adopted there would not be one dollar's worth of manufactured goods brought into this country. Has that proved true? Did they keep that pledge? Why, Sir, we know that millions of dollars' worth of manufactures were being brought in every year. We cannot understand this iteration, and reiteration, this "damnable iteration," as Manton Marble would say, going on all the time about the alleged broken pledges of this Government. Sir, the policy of this Government during the last three years is shown in the abundant prosperity of this country to-day, in its increased business, in its great expansion of trade, in the added opportunities for growth. Their magnificent policy is now before the country, and every constituency which has been open since the general elections, has commended, supported and maintained that policy. Is it possible that hon. gentlemen opposite can bring forward no other charge against the present Government? Is it possible that no other attack can be made upon the general policy of the Government than a repetition of the parrot-cry of what somebody said three, or four, or six, or seven years ago? Why, Sir, times have changed; everything has changed; the Government have changed; we are all different from what we were, and we have not time to stop and answer all the cries which we hear in regard to broken pledges. I hope our friends in Opposition will rise to the occasion, I hope they will be able to appreciate the change that has taken place in the country, and confine their criticisms upon the Government to something that they have actually done or failed to do, instead of relying upon so small a stock in trade as broken pledges. The old troubles have passed away. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to know that in this great country of ours we are no longer troubled by cries of race and creed; we are no longer to be set up to be knocked down by this faction or that faction, but we all appeal to the country upon the broad lines of improvement, and progress, and prosperity. Now, Sir, I have no political strength apart from the grand record which the Government, during the three years they have been in power, have made for me in my constituency, and all the members of the Liberal party will say the same as to their respective constituencies. This Government have shown by every act, by every move they have made, by the magnificent handling of the finances by the Minister of Finance, by the splendid achievements of the other Ministers in bringing about the condition of affairs that we have to-day, that they are worthy of the confidence the people have reposed in them. I say that we have never before had a Government in Canada that can appeal to this country with greater confidence than the present Government; and if we are to-day a prosperous, a contented and a happy people, I say that we owe it largely, in addition to what Providence has done for us in bringing about the great change which has taken place, to the ability and to the energy of the present Government of Canada.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Mr. Speaker, I am not fond of speaking. I have taken up but very little time of this House since I have been a member, but I now consider it is my duty, as it is the duty of the other representatives of the various constituencies represented, on this side of the House, to give expression to my opinions upon the conduct of the Government now in power. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat claimed that this Government had a policy. I never knew a time when hon. gentlemen opposite had a fixed and properly defined policy. Certainly it is a conundrum to the people of this country to find what their policy is at the present time. Nobody knows it. They have had a great many of them, but they have gone back on every one of them, and now they have accepted ours, and adopted the National Policy as the hon. gentleman who preceded me says. I have no doubt that the Government met the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Frost), before the general elections, and made him a pledge, as a manufacturer, that they would see that he would be all right. When those hon. gentlemen were in Opposition they constantly decried the country, they could not say too much against it. Their speeches were of a most disloyal character. They preached blue ruin, they said that the country was going to destruction, that the people were bled white by taxation. They said that if we did not get commercial union, or unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, this country could not continue to exist. They cannot deny this, their record is in the "Hansard," every man in this House knows it, they know it themselves. Naturally they do not like to hear us recall their past record. But their record is such as I have described it. During the last few years the Conservative party were in power there existed all over the world the greatest depression that the world ever saw. At such a time you would expect that all loyal men, especially the representatives of the people, would assist in tiding over that depression so far as this country was concerned. But when that depression was at its greatest height they did everything they could to increase it. Now, the Conservative party, by wise and prudent legislation, succeeded in tiding over that depression. They introduced a banking system which was the envy of the whole world. We found that the people of the United States were coming to this country to deposit their money in the banks along the border, because they knew it would be safer here than in their own country. This was a result of the legislation of the Conservative party. It was also a great satisfaction to the people generally, to the mechanic, to the labouring man, to the farmer, to know that their money was safe when deposited in the banks of Canada. There was nothing to affect it; it was perfectly safe. There was not the slightest danger of losing one dollar, one hundred dollars, one thousand dollars or ten thousand dollars, if it was deposited there or if there was a note in their pocket. Now, Sir, you find that there is a very pronounced difference between the two parties; you find that the Conservative party are patriotic and loyal to the best interests of the country. Though there were such speeches made by hon. gentlemen, who were formerly in Opposition, you cannot find a leading Conservative or any Conservative, or any Conservative newspaper from the Atlantic to the Pacific, saying one word against the country in which we are living. As hon. gentlemen have talked of policies, let me draw the attention of this House, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that hon. gentlemen had several policies during the time that they were in Opposition. There was free trade, but free trade did not work and they changed to tariff for revenue and they changed from tariff for revenue to commercial union, from commercial union to unrestricted reciprocity and they made great promises in regard to unrestricted reciprocity. When Mr. Wiman introduced commercial union into this country it was explained at the time and it is not necessary here for me to bring these old matters up. Every one knows that it was not a true Canadian policy. It was in favour of the United States, a thing which Mr. Hill well knew when he said that annexation would follow Commercial Union. This was well exposed by Conservative leaders, and then came unrestricted reciprocity, free trade as it is in England, free trade, continental free trade and a go-as-you-please policy, and this is the policy upon which they went to the elections. They were elected on the go-as-you-please policy. They tried to get the confidence of the people by saying, at one place, that they were free traders, at another place that they were in favour of free trade as it is in England, and at another place that they were protectionists. The hon.

gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Frost) is a protectionist, and they preached protection to him. They dealt with each section of the country as it would best suit the particular section to which they were appealing. Hon. gentlemen are confident now in their seats; they feel that they are safe. They say: We are here, and you are there; we have won the by-elections. Let me remind hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that there was a Government in power from 1874 to 1878 and that they were very confident that they were going to remain in power. They were elected by sixty of a majority, and they were confident that they were going to remain in power because they won every by-election that came along until they had nearly 100 of a majority. They were as safe in their seats as hon. gentleman now are, and much safer. I was in the west at that time and people there were betting freely that the Reform party would be sustained by over fifty majority, but they were turned out by a majority of sixty-eight, notwithstanding their confidence during the time they were in power. The hon. gentlemen think now that they are going to remain in power, but the Government of that day was very much better than the Government of to-day, and, before I am through, I will try to deal with some of the points that I have taken very particular pains to look into rather than attempt to speak upon the merits and demerits of both parties in a general way. Let me say at once that bad as the Government of 1874-1878 were they were not nearly so deserving of condemnation as the Government of to-day. Now, the gentlemen who composed the Government in power from 1874 to 1878 were, as I have said, very confident. The right hon. Prime Minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and some others were in that Government, and they were perfectly confident that they would carry the election if they went to the country again. They had the same success they now have in regard to by-elections. They won many by-elections, but I am sorry to say that I have very little faith in by-elections in which you have the prestige of two Governments and all the forces that they can bring to bear concentrated in one county against the opposition. In addition to that, you have to contend against the officials of the Ontario Government, in our province at least, which does not engage men unless they are pronounced tricksters and can make themselves useful in the constituencies. As it will be found in Brockville now, the county will be honeycombed with the officials of the two Governments doing their utmost to carry the election. These men are trained in this work, many of them in this House and under the Ontario Government, and with the money and advantages they have and their opportunities for canvassing, it is almost impossible to carry a by-election.

Mr. SCRIVER. You want to give it up in advance.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). However, I hope we will be more successful in future. The Reform party, from 1874 to 1878 bungled matters as the Government are doing now. They seem to think that to say to them they are incapable of managing the affairs of the country is a statement not warranted by the facts, but I think the records of the country will show distinctly that the statements are thus warranted. During the whole history of the country, up to the time of the present Government, there was no such bungling and incapacity as was displayed by the Administration from 1874 to 1878. We know that they adopted a plan for building the Canadian Pacific Railway by way of water stretches which hon. gentlemen are now ashamed to hear of. They know that they failed in their policy in regard to the construction of that great road, just as they failed in every policy they ever placed before the country. They know that their judgment was not good then, and we have seen that it is not good now. They know that every policy they have ever placed before the country has been a failure. They have gone over the many policies which I have just mentioned, and as none of them would stand the light of day for any length of time, they changed their policy almost every year. The Government in power between 1874 and 1878 found no man with confidence enough in their railway scheme to take any stock in it and it is a fortunate thing for the country that they did not, although the Mackenzie Government offered larger subsidies for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway at that time than the road has been built for under a Conservative Government. We know that they could get no man of financial standing, or any practical man, to take hold of any such ill-considered and impracticable scheme as they then proposed. They built a canal at Fort Frances, which is now filled up with sawdust, and which cost nearly half a million dollars, and it is not worth five cents to-day. Any one who is familiar with that route knows that it would be utter nonsense to think of taking through it the millions of bushels of grain raised in the North-west. That, Sir, is a specimen of the ability displayed by the Liberal Government, when it was in power twenty years ago.

You remember, Mr. Speaker, that in this very debate the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) challenged the leader of the Government to put his finger on one jot or tittle the Liberals had contributed to the progress of the country; and the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was indiscreet enough to take up that challenge, and to reply in these words:

I accept at once the challenge which he (Sir Charles Tupper) threw down yesterday. He defies us, in stentorian tones, to say what we had done for the country, and in speaking of the Administration, he said we had done nothing whatever, and that in everything we had done we had shown utter and complete incapacity. Well, Sir, I accept the challenge of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper). He asked us to say what we had done for the good of the country. I will try and tell him.

And a very poor attempt, Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister make at telling what his Government had done for the country. He enumerated seven things, which, he claimed to be great acts of statesmanship; but I will take those seven things, one after another, and show you that the claims made by the Premier in respect to them are utterly without foundation. Here are the seven things he claimed credit for: Settling the Manitoba school question; preferential trade; penny postage; tariff reform; cold storage; extension of the Intercolonial Railway, through the Drummond county deal; and lower freight rates. The right hon. gentleman came to power three years ago with a large majority at his back, and he has been Prime Minister during four sessions of Parliament, but this is all he could claim credit for. It is a most humiliating position for the Prime Minister of any civilized country to be compelled to admit that he has done practically nothing as I shall be able to show. And how did he tell us he had settled the school question? He said:

We removed it from the federal to the provincial arena.

This, Sir, is an admission that his Government has done nothing to settle it, and is not entitled to any credit therefor. Is it not a fair question to ask: If his Government merely removed it from the federal to the provincial arena, how did they settle it? With whom did they settle it? Did the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) settle it between themselves? Did they settle it with the minority in Manitoba, who are most interested? Certainly not. The very statement of the Prime Minister shows that his Government has done nothing towards a settlement. And yet, Sir, this is one of the seven wonderful things he says he has done for the country. Let me ask: Have they placed on record in any statute of Canada, or any statute of the province of Manitoba anything which provides for a settlement of the school question? The right hon. gentleman made great pledges before the election as to what he would do in this matter, but he and his Government have gone back on these pledges, as they have on every other pledge which they made to the people. According to the right hon. gentleman's own statement, he has placed the school question in the hands of the Greenway Government, and there it is. But, Sir, the school question was in the provincial Government's hands before the legislative council in Manitoba allowed themselves to become extinct. That legislative council was promised that every justice would be extended to the minority if they would allow themselves to be wiped out, and, very foolishly, they did so; and the Greenway Government took advantage of the situation and perpetrated acts of injustice that they would not dare perpetrate, had the legislative council been in existence. We now find that the Manitoba Government is making further demands on the Federal Government, and Mr. Greenway and Mr. Cameron not only want the $300,000 that was promised last year, but they want all the school lands, and all the school funds, and, in fact, everything in sight. They are coming down here to make a raid on the Dominion treasury, and if they succeed, they will be masters of the situation, for the money will be very useful in their elections, which they expect shortly.

Another great deed for which the Prime Minister claims credit is, that his Government has given preferential trade to England. We know, that before the right hon. gentleman crossed the Atlantic to the Jubilee celebration, the people of this country were very anxious for preferential trade. The people are anxious for it yet. The hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), before he was Premier, advocated preferential trade very strenuously; and the present Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), speaking at Toronto, and London, and other places in Canada, favoured the principle that Great Britain should give the products of Canada and of the other colonies a preference over foreign goods in the British market. The people took the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) at his word, and believed that when he went to England, he would advocate preferential trade; but, Sir, they were grievously disappointed. Hardly had he set foot on English soil, when, addressing a meeting at Liverpool, the Canadian Premier said:

What we give you by our preferential tariff we give you in gratitude for the splendid freedom under which we have prospered. It is a free gift. We ask no compensation. Protection has been the curse of Canada. We would not see you come under its baneful influence, for what weakens you must weaken us.

This is a very extraordinary statement to make after the promises that had been given to the farmers and the people of this country, who expected that their interests would be looked after by the right hon. gentleman. He had a different story before he was elected by the people of Canada to his present position; but when he went to Great Britain he tried to please the people of that country and not the people of Canada. He will find out later that he has not pleased the people of Canada. He expressed himself so strongly in favour of free trade in England that he was presented with a Cobden medal, and here is what he said in reply after

Lord Farrer had presented him with that medal :

I am more touched than words can give you an idea of, for the very kind, and more than kind testimonial which is conveyed to me by the Cobden Club for the poor effort which I, not alone, not individually, but as a member of a large party in Canada, have made in the cause of free trade. I was a free trader before I came to England.

He did not say that in Toronto and London, and elsewhere in this country.

I am still more a free trader, having seen what free trade has done in England, in building up this great Empire. To deviate from the principles of freedom would be to much weaken the ties and bonds which now bind us together.

The hon. gentleman has not acted in good faith with the people of Great Britain; he and his Government have deceived them, as he has the people of this country in everything. In the first place, he led them to believe that he would reduce the duty on goods from England 25 per cent. Has he reduced the duty 25 per cent from what it was at that time? He certainly has not; but he increased the duty 25 or 30 per cent on goods that largely come from Great Britain, and then he took 25 per cent off. In that way this Government have deceived the people of Great Britain, as they have deceived the people here. They have not kept their promises and their pledges, as I will undertake to prove. At the same time, they have reduced the duty on goods that largely came from the United States. The consequence is that the trade of Great Britain has fallen off since that supposed great boon was given to that country. In 1896, the last year of the Conservative Government, we imported from Great Britain $32,979,742. These figures are taken from the Trade and Navigation Returns, prepared by hon. gentlemen opposite; and I have every confidence in those returns—much more than I have in hon. gentlemen themselves. In 1898, the last complete year of hon. gentlemen opposite, Canada imported from Great Britain $32,500,917, or a decrease, compared with the last year of the Conservative Government, of $478,825. Comparing the same two years, we find that our imports from the United States increased $20,131,566. Does this show that this so-called preferential tariff has done Great Britain any good or done this country any good? Our imports from the United States amount to $14.25 per head, while they are taking from us only 60 cents a head. Now, it may be said that this is not a fair comparison. Well, in order to make the comparison as fair and reasonable as possible, we will compare 1895-96, the last two years of Conservative rule, with 1897-98, the last two years of hon. gentlemen opposite. We find that in the last two years our imports from Great Britain were, compared with 1895 and 1896, decreased by $2,198,374, while our imports from the United States increased $27,146,086 in the same time. During the eighteen years the Conservative party were in power, our average imports from Great Britain were over $40,914,203, whereas in the only year for which hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible our imports from Great Britain amounted to $32,500,917, a decrease of $8,413,236 as compared with the average during the eighteen years of Conservative rule. Fix it as you please you cannot show that you have done anything in this preferential trade that is an advantage to Great Britain, and you have done nothing that is an advantage to Canada. It is all very well to say that you have, but I challenge contradiction, as far as these figures are concerned, because I have taken them from the books prepared by hon. gentlemen opposite themselves.

Now, I will come to the reduction of postage. On that question I do not propose to say very much, because it has already been fully dealt with, but I would simply draw attention to the remarks of the right hon. leader of the Government himself, which, I think, will suffice to prove to this House and everybody else that this Government did not inaugurate penny postage throughout the British Empire. My right hon. friend said :

I do not claim that we gave it by legislative authority, nor even by administrative authority. We had not the legislative authority or the administrative authority. Sir Charles Tupper would not give any credit to my hon. friend, the Postmaster General, but claimed credit for Mr. Henniker-Heaton. I agree that Mr. Heaton is entitled to all praise in that respect, and the first man to proclaim it was my hon. friend, the Postmaster General, and the second man to proclaim it was my humble self.

If, then, Mr. Henniker-Heaton is entitled to the credit, why does the hon. gentleman claim that this Government has done a great thing for Canada by this penny postage. The fact of the matter is that they have not benefited some classes of the people by that postage at all. They say that by the reduction they put many hundreds of thousands of dollars into the pockets of the people. I would like them to show how they have put anything into the pockets of our farmers and workmen. Our farmers, while they are as intelligent people as can be found in the Dominion, do not require to write many letters. Their business is such that their correspondence is necessarily very limited, but it is the lawyers, the insurance companies, the great corporations, the large wholesale houses, who make the great saving, in many cases, of $500 or a $1,000 a year each by this reduced rate. I doubt whether, on an average, our farmers save 50 cents each year by this policy, and we know very well that they will have to bear the heaviest proportion of the deficit, which the Government admit is going to be the result. This reduction in postage gives no corresponding advantage to the people of the country generally, but, on the contrary, will add to their burden, because it is they who will have to meet the deficit. I do not want to take any credit away from the Postmaster General. No doubt he did all he could to help this along, and perhaps among certain classes it is not unpopular; but certainly the farmers, the mechanics, the labouring men—the men who ought to be considered in this country—are the men who will suffer by this legislation, and the richer men—the lawyers, the insurance men, and the wholesale merchants, and people of that kind—are those who will profit very largely by it.

Then comes the question of tariff reform. They promised to reform the tariff. But they have succeeded in deforming it. Let me quote from figures prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce, showing the results during the seven months of this financial year. The exports for the seven months from the 30th June, 1898, amounted to $106,570,000, and during the preceding seven months they amounted to $111,274,000, showing a decrease in our exports during seven months of $4,704,000. Whereas our imports for the seven months of 1897-98, from the 30th June, amounted to $72,588,000, and for the corresponding months of 1898-99 they amounted to $89,447,000, being an increase of $16,858,000 in our imports as compared with a decrease of $4,704,000 in our exports. Every one will admit that it would be a great deal better for us to have more exports than imports, because we know when we import our money goes out of the country, but when we export we bring money in. The facts, however, show that the balance of trade is gradually going against us. Though these hon. gentlemen had a streak of prosperity immediately after they reached office, I am sorry to say—because we all want to see the country prosperous—that the position of our trade is not as good this year as we expected it to be. And taking the same ratio for the remaining five months of the year, our exports will show a decrease of over $8,000,000, and our imports an increase of $28,900,000. Basing a calculation of the total imports and exports for the full year on the record of the first seven months, the balance of trade against Canada will amount to over $13,000,000. Compare that with the position when the late Government left office? Though we had gone through a period of depression, such as was never previously experienced in the world, the trade of Canada in 1896, the last year of Conservative administration, was in a better position, for we exported over $3,000,000 more than we imported, or 78 cents per capita of the total population of Canada. Now I take up the question of the duty collected. This is what the hon. gentlemen opposite used to call “bleeding the people white.” I have no doubt that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) will remember about that. I would like to hear him make one of those old-time speeches that he used to make; but they say he cannot sing the old songs. The average of customs taxes collected since confederation has been a little over $17,000,000 a year. Now, the average of customs taxation during the last six years of the Conservative party was $19,848,000. I think that this is the fairest way to consider it—to take an average. The reason why I choose six years is, that this is the time I have been in this House. I do not pretend to have regulated the tariff, except as a private member may be able to have his views embodied in such, but I know more about it, perhaps, than about the customs taxation of the years before I came here. The customs taxes for the first year, with hon. gentlemen opposite in power, were $22,157,000, an increase over the average of the last six years of the Conservative Government of $2,309,000. There has been a further increase during the seven months of the current year of $2,475,000. The proportionate increase for the remaining five months will be $1,767,000. The total increase of taxation since this Government came into power over the average of the last six years of the late Government will be $6,552,000. Now, let me remind hon. gentlemen opposite of some of their former speeches. I find the following at page 309 of the “Hansard” of 1894. The speaker is the present hon. Minister of trade and Commerce. He says:

I believe there has been extracted from the people of Canada during the last fifteen years in real taxes not paid into the treasury, but into the hands of manufacturers, no less than $1,000,000,000.

This, Sir, would be about 66½ million per annum. Why has he not put a stop to this? Why does not the hon. gentleman rise in his place and raise his voice against that sort of thing now? Reasons have been given why he does not. He said also: “Protection and corruption are political Siamese twins.” Let the hon. gentleman’s party look in the mirror, and they will see that illustrated clearly. Protection and corruption—they have both in any quantity; there is no question about that. Hon. gentlemen opposite have declared that they had reduced the tariff. They reduced it, perhaps, to the United States, but not otherwise, and not very much any way. At page 7 of the Trade and Navigation Returns will be found a table, which conveys some interesting information. The first column gives the percentage of duty on total value of goods imported, dutiable and free. The percentage during the last year of the Conservative Government was 16·68, and the average for four years under them was 16·41. The percentage last year was 15·79, making a reduction of ·62 per cent. That is to say, the reduction in the customs duty amounts to about one-half of 1 per cent. In the second column of this table you have figures showing the percentage of duty on the total value of goods entered for consumption, dutiable and free. The rate last year, under hon. gentlemen opposite, was 16·95, while our average for four years was 17.56, a reduction there of .61 per cent, a shade over one-half of 1 per cent. In column No. 3 we have the amount of customs duty paid per head of the population. Our average for four years was $3.79 per head, while last year, under the present Government, the average was $4.22 per head, or 43 cents per head increase over what was collected under the Conservative Administration. Take the present population as 5,248,315, as on page 7 of Trade and Navigation Returns of 1898, and multiply it by 43 cents, you have an increase of taxation upon the people of the Dominion by $2,136,000. A great deal has been said about Estimates. We find that last year the Estimates that passed this House amounted to $50,000,000. The Main Estimates accounted for $44,912,571.28; the first Supplementaries for $3,058,376, and the second supplementaries for $1,460,354.91; the third supplementary estimate was $68,500; the fourth supplementary estimate was $2,731. Now, they loaned $2,000,000 to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal; they passed legislation here to give Manitoba $300,000 of the school trust fund, and they also paid for the cost of the legislative buildings, $498,601. These sums amounted to $52,301,153. But take off the loan for the Montreal harbour, and take off the $300,000 that the Senate very properly refused to pass, and there is left $50,301,153 that was passed by this House last year. A small portion of this sum was passed to pay up something that was due on the year before, but that would be done probably this year just as it was last year; so that we have left over $50,000,000 passed in estimates by this House last year. Now, Sir, the leader of the Government, speaking in Toronto, said:

Has the expenditure gone down? No, it has gone up. It went up three, five, ten millions or more, until it is now $38,000,000, and the Conservatives do not shrink from it, but swallow it all. If we get into power we will follow the example of Mr. Mackenzie, and although we may not be able to bring back the expenditures to what they were under him, we can reduce the amount two, yes, three million dollars per year.

We find the expenditure is $15,000,000 above the figure that he promised to keep within, when he spoke to the people of Toronto.

Now, hon. gentlemen opposite have given to the people of the United States free corn. I understand one of the commissioners writing to a friend in Winnipeg, stated that they had made a mistake in giving to the United States free corn, that they could do nothing with them in regard to getting free barley. But the Conservative party were nearly all opposed to free corn. It is a question with me whether it is a sufficient advantage to men who are fattening cattle and making pork in this country to have free corn to justify the removal of that duty as against the interests of the producers of coarse grain; it is a question whether the advantage is sufficient to counteract the loss the people of Canada sustain through corn being admitted free. We know that if we had not made corn free we would have had an advantage in treating with the United States, we would have had something to offer them for the admission of our barley into their markets; but having given them free corn, we have no longer any inducement to offer them to get our barley into their markets. We find that there is a large amount of corn imported into this country. Take the statistics for the province of Ontario. About 83,000,000 bushels of oats are grown in that province. Now, everybody will admit that a large importation of corn will affect the price of coarse grain in this country. When you import 20,000,000 bushels of corn, there is no doubt that it will affect the price of oats, pease and the native corn grown by the farmers of this country. Reckoning the depreciation in the value of oats at a cent a bushel, in the province of Ontario alone the loss amounts to $830,000. In the province of Ontario the farmers raise 17,500,000 bushels of pease. Reckoning the reduction in the price of pease at three cents a bushel, the loss would amount to $525,000. A loss of three cents a bushel on 12,000,000 bushels of shelled corn would amount to $360,000. Altogether the province of Ontario alone therefore loses $1,715,000 in the reduction of the price of coarse grains owing to the free corn. I estimate that the rest of the Dominion would raise as much as the province of Ontario, at least, probably a good deal more. But if we only double the loss in Ontario, we find that Canada at large loses $3,430,000 in the depreciation of the price of coarse grains. We also find that there is a loss to our farmers in not getting our barley into the markets of the United States, which we might have succeeded in doing if the Government had acted more wisely in the matter of corn. We find that 205,187 bushels of corn were imported into this country for distilling purposes, and 19,771,000 bushels of corn, not elsewhere specified, the value of which is over $7,000,000. No man will say but that this great importation of corn has a very serious effect upon the value of the coarse grain grown by our farmers. There are other grains besides coarse grains. There is the frozen wheat and the damaged wheat in the North-west that is affected by the introduction of free corn. There is no doubt that grain for feeding purposes would be much more valuable than it is here but for free corn.

Now, let me say a few words about the great coal oil combine. The great oil combine negotiations were held in Paris a few years ago between the Standard Oil Company and the Russian Oil Company, resulting in a division of the markets of the entire world between these two great distributing and producing agents. A territorial division was made which, it is said, consists of a line drawn north and south through Europe in a somewhat irregular manner. The Standard Company is to have a monopoly, it is said.

of the British Islands, France and most of the western portion of Europe, including a part of the German Empire. Canada is now added to the Standard oil monopoly, and we find that Canada is now paying three to five cents a gallon more for their oil. Yet we all know how hon. gentlemen opposite used to dilate upon the way the Conservative Government had saddled the people of Canada with an additional price of oil. Now have they reduced the duty as they promised? Have they kept their pledges with the farmers or with the people of the Northwest? No, they have not kept their pledges in any particular.

Now, Sir, a word or two about the steamship line. I am glad to see the hon. gentleman who took part in the debate in this House during the first session he was here, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) in his seat. He placed himself on record then in regard to the fast line of steamers.

Mr. HUGHES. He is on record since; he is a record breaker.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). He has broken every record. The matter was arranged before the Conservative Government went out of office. The contract was ready to let; they had negotiated with the British Government, who were willing to pay their proportion for this service. The steamers for which they stipulated were to run twenty knots an hour, and were to be provided with ample cold storage facilities. When this matter came up in the House the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) said, "Hansard," page 1389, second session:

I have always held the ground, since I have been in this House, that twenty-knot steamers are too extravagant for this country; such a service can never be carried on to advantage. I think we can give finer accommodation, and more comfortable—I dwell largely on comfort, because we Canadians, I find, like a great deal of comfort for a very little money. Canadians, and western Americans, too, want to cross the Atlantic for $75 to $80, and if you ask them for more they will see if there is not a cheaper line going, and they will take that.

Now, here again he speaks of something about a telegram.

I was writing a letter in my own room, when I received a telegram stating that dissatisfaction existed with my expression respecting the fast line. I did not write the reply myself, but said to my secretary: "Write a telegram that the fast line will be all right, and that the country will gain by the delay." * * * I consider that eighteen-knot steamers would be such an improvement that it might fairly be said that the country had gained greatly by that delay.

Now, what does that mean? It means that hon. gentlemen opposite did not want this fast line service or they would never have placed this enterprise in the hands of an hon. gentleman who had put himself on record against it. But they do very peculiar things. They did before then, during the time of the Mackenzie Administration. The Minister of Militia of that day, Mr. Jones, of Halifax, and what I say of him directly applies to this hon. gentleman—Mr. Jones expressed himself as a disloyal man; he said that he would be overjoyed if the British flag was taken from the citadel at Halifax, and because he said that, because he lacked in loyalty and patriotism to Canada, they made him Minister of Militia, the very contrary of what they should have done. This Government have done the very contrary of what they should have done by appointing the hon. member for Quebec West to take charge of that steamship line.

Now, what about cold storage? One of the few things that the right hon. Prime Minister said the other day was that the Government had established cold storage. Surely he did not seriously claim that they had established cold storage. This was explained in the House the other night several times, and I do not think that I need now say anything further, but I think that the right hon. gentleman was taken by surprise and that he was not prepared to answer the challenge thrown out to him. I have here a question asked in 1896, when our party was in power, by the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Bain) of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) about what the Government had done in regard to providing ships with cold storage. The hon. member for Haldimand explained the whole matter, and told how much they paid for fitting up these steamers with cold storage to carry Canadian produce across the Atlantic. It is rather long, and perhaps it is not necessary for me to go into the whole question, but I have the figures here, and if any hon. gentleman opposite wishes me to give them I will do so. However, I will go on further. We find that the Dairy Commissioner in his report in 1895 says that ten steamers were fitted up with cold storage compartments, and that the expenditure of the department for this service was as follows:—

| Paid for fitting up.....                                  | $6,623 03 |
| Paid on guarantee of earnings on space                    | 3,438 34   |
| Paid Montreal Ice Exchange.....                           | 233 11     |
| Grand Trunk, for cold storage service.                    | 1,439 98   |
| Canadian Pacific Railway, for cold storage service .....  | 1,329 95   |
| Paid Intercolonial Railway, for cold storage service..... | 37 50      |

From the beginning thus made the cold storage service was extended, carried on and improved. It gives us the number of parcels and packages sent over, and so on. This is what the blue-book, the commissioner's report says, and here are the records of the House. Now, I do not think hon. gentlemen will dispute the fact that cold storage was established by the Conservative party. There is no question about it, so that I will not deal with it at any greater length. Here is the statement of a Reformer, well known to the people of Ontario, and to the dairymen of the country generally. Speaking in October, 1895, Mr. Dan. Derbyshire, of Brockville, said :

If it had not been for what the Dominion Government did, the butter-making business would be flattened out, and everybody connected with it would have been discouraged. It would have been disastrous. But now our butter is on a firm basis in the English market, and we are building up a great trade. If those who opposed the Government's action, and argued against it, and did all in their power to block it, had had their way, the dairying interests of the country would have received a terrible set back.

But, fortunately, the Government knew what to do, and did it just at the right time, and every succeeding day of the increasing prosperity of our export creamery butter trade justifies more and more the wisdom of what was done. This was during the time that the Conservative Government was in power, and I do not think that hon. gentlemen can expect to claim any credit for that.

The right hon. Prime Minister said that the Government had brought the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal by the Drummond County line. Let me draw the attention of the House to a few facts concerning the Drummond County Railway deal. I have a quotation here from the "Mail and Empire," which I will read :

The Drummond deal was mooted in January, 1897, and on February 3rd, the "Globe" said :

"A mild agitation has sprung up for extending the Intercolonial Railway by continuing it from Lévis to Montreal. It added that the Montreal "Herald" had interviewed prominent citizens on the subject, and that it was encouraging to see that a few raised their voice in protest. The protests were cited and the "Globe" proceeded to argue that there was no justification for paralleling existing roads." On Feb. 6th, the "Globe" returned to the attack, pronounced against a second road between Montreal and Lévis, and said that instead of buying such a road the Government ought to make for the Intercolonial Railway running arrangements over the Grand Trunk Railway. On June 15th the Drummond deal was laid before Parliament. On June 19th the Crow's Nest deal, with the coal mine grab attached, was submitted to Parliament, and on June 21st, the "Globe" switched around and was strongly in favour of the Government.

Now, Sir, what do we find about this Drummond County Railway? We find that Mr. Greenshields, who was president of that road, had made advances—and this is not disputed—to the extent of $50,000; $10,000 was in cash, by cheque given to the sons of the Minister of Public Works for "La Patrie," and a $20,000 note was also given to them. The cheque was cashed in the Hochelaga Bank, and subsequently the note was cashed in the same bank. Then, Mr. Greenshields gave a note for $20,000 more just before the election in Champlain. That note was cashed and endorsed by a leading Liberal, and the people around Three Rivers say that they never saw so many of the Hochelaga Bank notes in that place before. The Drummond County Railway cost the promoters of it $700,000, as has been clearly proved in this House; and they got bonuses to the extent of $800,000, making the total cost $1,500,000. Now, Sir, the Government agreed to give $2,300,000, or its equivalent, for this road, which was $1,600,000 more than the road cost the promoters. Mr. Greenshields was apparently to be well recouped for what he had done. He was throwing out a sprat to catch a whale, and no doubt he would have caught it, if the Senate had not stepped in, and the first deal had been consummated. But, Sir, thanks to the Senate, this iniquitous transaction was prevented. It was quite apparent that the Minister of Railways had no reliable information before he consented to the purchase of that road. We listened to him in this House, and it was evident that he did not know much about the Drummond County Railway. Before the Order in Council was passed for its purchase, he never sent a surveyor, or an engineer, to ascertain what value the Government was getting, and it was only after the Order in Council was passed, he sent a man to inspect the road. The Minister of Public Works was, of course, running the deal. He was boss of the situation there, as the Minister of the Interior was in the west. The Minister of Railways did not appear to meddle much with his own department until there was nobody else to take charge of it. Although the Government was prepared to spend so much money for that road, it is a fact that via the Drummond County Railway it is 76 miles further from Montreal to Halifax than by the Canadian Pacific Railway, and 248 miles further to St. John, N.B. Of course, neither distance nor price made any difference to the Government, for they were simply going it blind. Let me show the bungling and unbusiness-like contract entered into by the Minister of Railways. He proposed to pay for the simple right of using the Victoria Bridge into Montreal $40,000 yearly, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, is equivalent to $1,333,000. For the extension of the bridge he paid $300,000. For the right to use the terminals he was to pay $62,500 per year, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, is $2,080,000, and to get from Ste. Rosalie to the Victoria Bridge he was to pay $37,500 a year, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, would be $1,250,000. Therefore, for the use of the Grand Trunk Railway to Montreal and the terminals they would require to set aside $4,963,000, or nearly $5,000,000. The Drummond county deal itself is bad enough, but the concessions made to the Grand Trunk Railway, which was part of the deal, were even worse. The Drummond County Road was to be leased on the following terms for ninety-nine years for the right of use, and, after expiry of lease, possession, from the 1st of November, 1897; we were to pay $70,000 per year, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, amounts to $2,333,000. We find, then, that this arrangement would cost $7,296,000, chargeable to capital. But more than that : from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal the Grand Trunk Railway at any time could make improvements to the road or bridge, and the Government were obliged to pay 5 per cent on the half of the cost. They could build a double track, they could build new bridges, they could do anything they liked, and the Government would be responsible for half the cost. I estimate this at about $25,000 a year, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, would make $835,000. Thus, the total cost on the whole arrangement in connection with this road, including the payment to the Grand Trunk Railway in coming into Montreal, would be $8,131,000. The Senate, very much to their credit and the interest of the country, stepped in and prevented such a monstrous transaction being carried out. The Government made a new arrangement for $1,600,000, instead of $2,333,000, and the company was to complete the 42½ miles, which was the unfinished part of the road. The Grand Trunk Railway received only 4 per cent, instead of 5 per cent, on mileage of trains, instead of mileage of road, and it is generally admitted by those who know best that the Senate saving on that deal is between three-quarters of a million and one million dollars. The length of the Drummond County Railway is as follows :—

|---------------------|--------|
| Length of road..... | 132½   |
| Old road .....      | 73     |
| Branch .....        | 17     |
| Portion built ..... | 42½    |

They claim that the road cost $2,100,000, and they got in subsidies from the Dominion $287,936. Now, Mr. Haggart, who I look upon as one of the most practical men in the country with regard to public works and matters of that kind, said that if the Government had decided to build a road from Lévis to Montreal it could have been done for $1,700,000. He said the payment to the Grand Trunk Railway for the right of way from St. Rosalie and across the bridge to Montreal would not be more than $25,000 per year. Now, I have no doubt that the ex-Minister of Railways at that time was in a position to know what it would cost to bring the road from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal; but there might be some reason why this Government would pay more than the company was willing to take before this Government came into power. This $25,000 a year, capitalized at 3 per cent, would amount to $833,300. That is, a road crossing the bridge and all would cost $2,533,000; and yet this Government are paying over $8,000,000. Now, if the credit of this country is as good as it was when this Government came into power, when they made a loan on the credit of the position in which the Conservative party left the country, there is no doubt that they can raise money at 3 per cent; and the total cost of the Drummond County Railway deal capitalized at that rate would amount to $8-

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry).

131,000. Now, I have no hesitation, as a practical man who has spent his whole life in railway building and constructing public works, in saying that if I know anything I should know something of the cost of railway construction, and I say without fear of contradiction that this amount would build two distinct and separate railways from Lévis to Montreal, and also build a bridge across the St. Lawrence to bring them both into the city. Mr. Haggart puts the cost of the railways at $1,700,000, and the railway and the use of the bridge at $2,533,000. I say that the two distinct railways from Lévis to the River St. Lawrence could be built for $4,500,000, and a bridge across the St. Lawrence as good as the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge could be built for less than $2,000,000, making a total cost of $6,500,000, leaving for stations, terminals and right of way, $1,631,000 out of what hon. gentlemen opposite paid for one railway to get into the city of Montreal. I say this remembering that I have served my whole lifetime in contracting and building railways; and I say that I could to-morrow get good contractors to undertake the construction of two distinct railways from Lévis to Montreal, with a bridge across the St. Lawrence, for the sums I have mentioned. How can these hon. gentlemen hold their heads up and say that the Senate has acted badly in protecting the country from such iniquitous legislation as that? If they examine the figures I have given, they will find that they are liberal, and will leave a contractor a profit on the work of from 10 to 15 per cent. Now, I think that is ample justification for the Senate stepping in and saving the country—as they did. If that is one of the reasons hon. gentlemen opposite have for wishing to reform or do away with the Senate, they should be ashamed to open their mouths on the subject.

The last of the seven great things which the leader of the Government has stated they have done for the country is to secure a reduction of the Canadian Pacific Railway freight rates. We know that railways in new countries always have higher rates at first, and as the country fills up they gradually reduce them. They have to do that in their own interest, because if they did not, the people would not stand them, but would soon have opposition railways. Hon. gentlemen claim that in securing reduced rates they have put so much money into the pockets of the people. Let me draw hon. gentlemen's attention to the fact that the railways in the western United States have done the same thing. From 1892 to 1897 the Baltimore and Ohio Railway reduced rates by 18 per cent. The North-west system, representing many railway companies, reduced rates from 1890 to 1896, 17 per cent. The Northern system, representing the Delaware and Hudson, the New York Central, the West Shore, the South Shore, and others, from 1890 to 1896, reduced rates 20 per cent. The Pennsylvania Railway, from 1892 to 1897, reduced rates 29 per cent. What has the hon. gentleman done? The fact of the matter is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have more business capacity than this Government. They do not deal with their rates as this Government dealt with the duty on corn, reducing them without any compensating advantages. Many of these railways are drawing grain from the North-west Territories to the Atlantic ports for shipment across the ocean. Now, Sir, I have dealt with the seven distinct claims made by the Prime Minister when challenged by the leader of the Opposition, and have proven in every case that he is not in the slightest degree entitled to credit for anything in connection with these matters, and we cannot draw any other conclusion than that he and his Government have done nothing that is in the interest of the country while in power.

I have a few words to say about the Yukon. Mr. Ogilvie reported to this Government in March, 1897, that there was $100,000,000 of gold in sight in that district—that is a district of 25 by 35 miles, including the Bonanza, Eldorado and Indian Creeks. The Government had further information in the following July. They had done nothing in the meantime, no doubt deeming it necessary to look into the matter. But they then had ample time to advertise and let by tender. What did they do? Without calling for tenders, they gave a contract to build a tramway from Telegraph Creek to Teslin Lake, a distance of 150 miles, and the contractors were to get a land bonus of 25,000 acres per mile, or a total grant of 3,750,000 acres of land. The railway was to be a narrow-gauge road with 27 or 30-pound rails, and such gradients and curvatures as the contractors might think fit.

Now let me draw the attention of the House to the conditions of the contract and the advantages, restrictions and monopoly given to this company. They gave the company power to build wharfs and docks—to acquire and operate steam and other vessels in connection with the railway—to erect telegraph and telephone lines—to carry on mining and smelting operations and other incidental powers.

They were at liberty to select their blocks of land where they chose, and were given three years from 1st September, 1898, to select one-half, and six years from same date to select the balance.

Parliament was to refuse to grant for five years any charter to a competing company, or to a company from the boundary to the Yukon country. The contractors were entitled to receive during ten years from 1st September, 1898, in preference to any other company, such land or money subsidy as the Government might authorize to be granted in aid of the extension of the road from the Stikine River to an ocean port in British Columbia. Their lands would be free from taxation for ten years. The Government reserved a royalty of one per cent on all gold mined by the company—other miners to pay 10 per cent.

The land selected by the company would be in fee simple, and would include all precious metals and minerals, reserving only a royalty of one per cent.

The land, 3,750,000 acres, was valued by Mr. Sifton at $10 per acre, or $37,500,000, equal to $250,000 per mile. The road would belong to contractors who were bound to run it for one year, and then they might, if they chose, close it up.

Mr. Jennings' estimate of the cost of a first-class road, not tramway, is 150 miles at $19,000 per mile, $2,850,000.

So that in operating this road for two or three years contractors would pay cost of road and have several million dollars to the good.

This contract, Mr. Speaker, was a most peculiar one, giving most extraordinary advantage to the contractors. I have had to do with many contracts and have seen a great many contracts and specifications in my time, but I have never seen nor do I think any one else has ever seen any contract so absurd as this one. I have based my calculations on the most favourable estimate for the Government. I have assumed that only 50,000 people would go into that country, but the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) told us last session that he had been informed by agents of transportation companies that 250,000 people would go in there in the course of the year 1898, and that other people had estimated the influx at 100,000, but that no estimate was so low as 50,000 and 50,000 tons of freight; and that lowest figure is the estimate I have taken.

I have no doubt that the parties interested waited until they could make such arrangements as would suit themselves. They knew that there was any quantity of gold in that country—the richest deposits of gold probably in the world—and no doubt they made arrangements to suit their own purposes. It took the Government some little time to understand the thing fully, but when they arranged matters to their own satisfaction and to the advantage of those who were interested—who they were this House and country may judge—they were in a great hurry to let the work and they let it nine days before Parliament met, and I am credibly informed that the parties interested could have floated their scheme on the money markets of New York and London, and in less than two weeks could have sold out for $30,000,000 or $40,000,000. This is the amount which was saved to the country by the action of the Senate. Had this contract been ratified by the Senate, no other company would have been able to go into that district and build a railway, because it gave the contractors the monopoly for a number of years. Everything was fixed to satisfy them. They were to make what terms and rates they saw fit. In fact, the contract was of such a nature that I fail to see how any business man could possibly have consented to it. I am sure that the Minister of Railways, with his capacity for doing business, would never have consented to such a contract, as an ordinary business transaction. Let him compare this contract with those for canals let by the Conservative party. Let him look into this contract, and he cannot but see that it is the most ridiculous contract ever made. It is perfectly plain that parties who were interested in it drafted that contract. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) estimated the land as worth $10 an acre. That would be $37,500,000. Then, the Senate of Canada has saved the country that amount of money, besides preventing the establishment of a monopoly in the North-west, British Columbia and the Klondike. Can the saving of this money by the Senate be the reason why hon. gentlemen want to destroy it? Other railways can now build in there, and they are building. There is a railway built over part of the route, and I hold in my hand the time-table of it. That road is to be extended to Lake Bennett in June or early in July. And the company are doing this without a dollar of money or an acre of land as subsidy. And they are going by a shorter and better route than the Government proposed. Now, I am not the only man who believes that that was not a proper Bill. Mr. Joseph Martin, at one time a member of this House, said of the Yukon Railway deal:

That it was the craziest scheme ever proposed; and if the Government wishes to obtain the support of British Columbia it must frown on such promoting deals.

That is from a Liberal. Nobody will question Mr. Martin's politics. Mr. Morrison, Liberal M.P. for new Westminster, if he is here, can say whether he is correctly reported in what I am about to read. I find it attributed to him in the public press:

Mr. Morrison has been to Dawson City, and says that the preposterous and suicidal policy of the Government is hindering the development of the Yukon, and must be entirely reversed. The Government supporters of the Yukon administration are only those who never saw the Yukon. The fact that such an immense area of land was monopolised would prevent immigration.

Now, I have here a letter from Dawson City, from one of the most reliable men in the country. This letter was sent to a friend of mine in Glengarry, and he forwarded the letter to me. In doing so, he says:

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry).

In reading the papers, I see that the debate on the Yukon troubles are up in the House. You will find inclosed a letter from my partner, which speaks for itself. I have sent for some customs papers, and also what some of the other miners say about the conduct of the officials. I expect to have some valuable information before long.

Now, this is a Grit of the first water: there is not a man, from his grandfather down to the present day, that has not fought in the ranks of that party. He goes on to say:

Use this letter as you see fit, and when you are through with it I would like to have it back.

This is what the gentleman says in his letter:

I have been procrastinating writing you and Finlay for a long time. One reason for such conduct was owing to the expectation of letters from you or Finlay since your arrival at home. The mail service has been wretched since navigation closed, owing to the mail contractor throwing up the contract. Nothing in the way of mail matter came in from the time of the closing of navigation till the middle of January, and all the old mail is still on the road or at Skagway. The last mail came direct from the coast, and hence all December letters have arrived, and any letter you may have written is on the way, and when they will get here no one knoweth. Well, Duncan, I hope you have opened some of the eyes of the blind followers of the Liberal party who support the action of the men who are responsible for the devilish corruption perpetrated on the people between here and Skagway, and particularly here in the Klondike. It is since you left that the worst has been done. All the force in the recorder's office had combined, as it were, to record claims only to those who bribed them either with money or a share in the claim. The older they got to be in office, the bolder they got. It came near to a crisis; and I believe that if a good clean-out had taken place, it would have been the best thing that could have happened, to clean out the corruption, and would have opened the eyes of the Canadian people to the wrong they were inflicting on this section of the Dominion. Since Mr. Ogilvie came in as commissioner and a new recorder in Fawcett's place, things are beginning to change for the better. But Mr. Ogilvie did not take the right course. Had he done so, matters could have been done satisfactorily to the public. What he should have done was to suspend all the officials as soon as he arrived. But he did nothing of the kind, and the general opinion of the people here is that he is more in sympathy with the corrupt officials than with the public, and all his actions have shown it. But he is now forced to take action, as he has received a Royal Commission to investigate charges against officials. One sitting has taken place, and charges have been filed. The commission will be open till March 15th to file charges. Ogilvie is not the right man at all. He may be a good man to survey, but to govern a mining section he is incapable. If the Canadian people knew him as well as we know him, they would think very little of him.

I refrain from giving the names; I have the names here, but I do not think it would be in the interest of those men that their names should be given. From the conduct of the officials and the way men are dealt with generally, I think it would be very dangerous, if it were known that these men were writing anything here. They would probably be boycotted and treated a great deal worse than they are now. The letter continues :

I send you some papers giving some of the charges. It is impossible to exaggerate. Only a small portion comes to light, because briber and bribed cover their tracks in most cases.

He says something about personal matters, and then goes on :

Col. McGregor calls on us once in a while. This is the gentleman whose letter was read the other night by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) :

He has perhaps done more than any other man to purify things in this corrupt corner of the Dominion. Had this place been filled by men like McGregor instead of such men as Major Walsh, Ogilvie and Fawcett, Canada would be saved from the disgrace that it will take her many years to recover from. All Canadians here are ashamed of the actions of the Government. All they do is to rob and plunder the people. As a speaker said the other night at a miners' meeting, the Government is one of blunder and plunder.

That is the reputation that this Government has got in the Yukon district, and they have well earned it. As the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall) remarked to-day, there is a scramble apparently among all the members on the Government side to get into office. Those who do not get into office are looking for something else, something more substantial.

I will now say something about the Crow's Nest Coal and Railway Company. It is well known that the leader of the Opposition, when he was in power, offered $5,000 per mile, for 330 miles, to build this railway, or $1,650,000. He proposed to make a loan at 3½ per cent. The company could borrow money at 3 per cent, making a profit of one-half per cent, or $500,000, which would bring the subsidy down to about $1,150,000. Yet this Government, for some unaccountable reason, saw fit to give the Canadian Pacific Railway Company $11,000 per mile, or $3,630,000, or $2,000,000 more than the Conservative Government offered. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company are business men, and they drove a good bargain. Under the offer of the Conservative Government, the security was to be of the very best, everything owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway outside of their present obligations, was to be security for the repayment of this loan. I have made an estimate of the cost of that work. I know something about it myself, and I have met a good many people who were there, and a good many people who travelled over it and know all about it. I am satisfied in my own mind, because I have the figures here in detail, that the $11,000 per mile given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would build that road, and did build it. They drove a tight bargain, they found they had men they could do business with in that way. I think everything the Government has done on these contracts has been done in pretty much the same way. I have had a great deal to do with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I have found them very good men. But that would not prevent me from doing my duty as a representative. I say that the $11,000 per mile given those people was sufficient to build that road, and did build it. The work was light. Now, a word about the Crow's Nest Coal Company. The British Columbia Government gave 20,000 acres per mile of the enormously valuable coal lands to the British Columbia Southern, and some of the directors of the "Globe" newspaper got hold of it. This was only a few months after the Liberal party got into power. They were active. If there is anything in sight or within their reach, the whole party is making for it. Those that got there first had it, and this Government backed them up in getting it. They took hold of the Drummond County road first, and the Yukon came soon. Now, we find that this Crow's Nest Pass district contains one of the richest coal mines in the world. We find it to-day in the hands of the "Globe" directors. They sold the right of way to the Canadian Pacific Railway for $85,000; I do not know what further interest they have given the Canadian Pacific Railway. The directors purchased these coal mines. We find that Prof. Selwyn of the Geological Survey, estimates the yield at 30,000,000 tons per square mile. The value of the town sites is another item of great profit. Mr. Tarnie, the engineer for the Crow's Nest Coal Company, estimates the coal deposits at 17,000,000 tons. The average thickness of the coal seams is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 290 feet. The Canadian Pacific Railway figures the quantity at 39,375,000,000 tons. At one cent a ton the valuation would be $393,750,000. If the coal were worked at $1 a ton, it would give a return of $39,375,000,000. In the "Globe" of April 1st, 1897, it is asserted that five cents per ton on the supposed quantity would yield $1,248,800 per square mile, or $179,827,200. The "Globe" says there is no doubt there is an area of 144 square miles. Taking Prof. Selwyn's estimate, the smallest estimate made, that coal basin has a probable tonnage of 7,200,000,000 tons. Then this amounts at 50 cents per ton to $3,600,000,000 equal to an annual income of $36,000,000 for 100 years. With these enormous figures in view we can at least imagine the extraordinary magnitude of the wealth captured by the directors of the "Globe" and its friends. It is written in the report of the Crow's Nest Railway Company owned by the "Globe" :

Received from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, $85,000.

Real estate, coal mines owned, in fee simple, and other properties now being earned under the agreement that was made with the Canadian Pacific Railway, $1,415,000.

That is $1,500,000 captured by the directors of the "Globe" newspaper as a starter. So that the "Globe," while advising the ordinary Reformer to be loyal to the party and to be honest—you can almost imagine that it is only one degree from a saint—was grabbing this large amount. Though it was at first against the Drummond County deal, from the moment it found that this Crow's Nest deal was to be put through, it was willing to support the Drummond County scheme. We see that from the time these gentlemen came into power they have been very active in grabbing everything in sight. They were after judge-ships, offices and positions, and while some members of this House profess to be safe in their seats, I will venture to say that many of them do not feel so, and I think you will find that they are not safe. The Government will find that they cannot settle matters out of Parliament so easily as they imagine they settled the school question. They probably think that they have settled the temperance question just as they settled the school question—out of the Federal House. After we were in power for eighteen years there is not a man in the Conservative party that went out with money. It is reported that some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who were poor, are getting wealthy. I do not object to this, if they are doing it fairly, legitimately and honestly, and by their own energy, but when it is not done in this way it is a question for the people to consider whether they have a right to what they have got. The Drummond deal first came before the public in January, 1897, only six months after hon. gentlemen got into power. I have no doubt that it was arranged and settled before it came forward in the House. On June 15th the Drummond deal was laid before Parliament; on June 19th the Crow's Nest deal with the coal mine grab attached, was submitted to Parliament. The "Globe" was against the Drummond deal up to this time. Two days after, on June 21st, the organ wheeled around and was in favour of the Drummond deal. Ogilvie's report in 1897 saw $1,000,000 in sight, and they at once became active, and were completing their arrangements before the contract was made. They saw that they could make a great deal of money and they were doing what they could to carry through the deal, which was prevented by the Senate. They had, no doubt, arrangements made that were very satisfactory to themselves.

I would like to say a few words concerning some of the works carried on by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. I find that the hon. gentleman has advertised for tenders, and that at the bottom of the advertisements is this clause:

Contractors are specially notified that the conditions requiring the works to be wholly completed by the 31st January, A.D. 1899, will be rigidly enforced, and all penalties for delay exacted.

Whether the Minister intended to frighten contractors from tendering or not, this clause requiring the work, which was only commenced in the fall of 1897, to be completed by January, 1899, would certainly have that effect, as it was impossible to finish the work within the time limited. No practical man would let such works expecting them to be finished in the time mentioned, as any one with the slightest knowledge of public works must know that it could not be accomplished without very great additional expense to the country. There can be no doubt that men tendering for the work to be completed in the time specified, would take into consideration the threat of the Minister that the penalties for delay would be rigidly enforced, and put in a price large enough to enable them to try to comply with the conditions. Under these circumstances any practical man will see that the work would cost the country 30 or 40 per cent more than if there was a reasonable time given.

I believe, Sir, that the men who did undertake the work knew that it was impossible to carry it out in the time mentioned, and the Minister himself, if he had any practical knowledge should be aware of it. They have asked for an extension of time and it has been granted to them. What has the Minister of Railways and Canals accomplished by this unnecessary rush? He has simply accomplished an increase of the cost of the work. Mr. Speaker, I will now draw the attention of the House to the bungling and extravagance in connection with the work now in progress on the Farran's Point Canal, the Galops Canal, between Cardinal and Iroquois, and the North channel, which will cost the country $4,000,000 or $5,000,000. I claim that these new canals and this channel was not necessary and the work is a complete waste of money, and I will undertake to show this House that such is the case. Here are extracts from a speech delivered by the hon. the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) last year. He has been in a position to obtain every information necessary and no doubt had a better knowledge of the conditions of the river and as to the necessity of these canals than the present Minister. Here are his words:

I believe there is not any necessity for constructing this work. The canal will be no use after 14-foot navigation has been secured, for there will be plenty of water in the river, which will be utilized by the vessels then going up and down. The present canal is large enough for the needs of transportation at the present time.

The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) says:

There may be a difference of opinion on that point, the decision of the department was made, and it has been necessary to proceed.

The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) says:

I enter my protest against the building of any such lock as that. If our canals are ever to be utilized for practical purposes we must adopt the American system of each barge having its own propelling power, and doing away with tows of barges altogether. The locks at present in use on the St. Lawrence are plenty large enough for the barge traffic. The canals were enlarged, not for barges, but for utilizing these steamboats which have become quite common on the upper lakes. The idea of a boat with con-sorts is being done away with altogether.

If you are going to divert the trade to the St. Lawrence you must do away with the system of barges, and I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) that in my opinion there was no necessity at all for the building of these two large locks. They are not utilized by the barges going down, and if you want to use your canal in the most economical manner, you must have a propelling power at least of ten knots an hour, because, if I remember rightly the strength of the current between these two particular points is in the neighbourhood of four or five knots.

NORTH CHANNEL, STRAIGHTENING AND DEEPENING.

Mr. Haggart, "Hansard" page 6535 :

Immediately above the Galops Canal in the American channel, there is a width of nearly two miles and an ample depth, and for the purpose of getting through our own territory, it is proposed to expend about $400,000, under the Treaty of Washington. We have as much right to navigate that water as the Americans have, and there is no need of the expenditure of one dollar for the deepening of the north channel. I know that this is one of the pet ideas of Mr. Rubidge, but there is no difficulty in going to the head of the Galops Canal through the American channel, and this expenditure is pure waste.

The American channel is now used by every boat that goes down. The North channel is only used by one boat of very light draught. My information is that all that is necessary is to blast off a little point on an island to go direct to the Galops Canal. If the charts of the channel are correct, there is no more than 14 feet of navigation from the head of the Galops Canal through the American channel. Surely you would not have deepened the Galops channel if the entrance to it was not deep enough.

Therefore, we see that Mr. Haggart condemns the thing altogether, and he knows what is he talking about, having had full opportunities of getting the information when he was the Minister of Railways and Canals. The Farran's Point, Cardinal and Iroquois canals have cost about \$4,000,000, and it is well that the people should be made aware that this vast sum of money has been thrown away where it is not necessary. Mr. Haggart told us that the engineer in charge always had a fad to have this work done; and Mr. Haggart tells us with regard to the North channel that it is not necessary to spend a dollar on that navigation west of the locks. We have a perfect right to go on the American side under the provisions of the treaty without our spending one penny. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) wanted to improve the present channel, he could have done so at a very small expense by blasting some rock there, and the route would be less than half a mile longer than that on which they are spending \$750,000. I have it from people living in the neighbourhood of the works referred to that a steamer can go up the current of the river opposite Farran's Point canal as fast as an ordinary horse can trot on the shore, and parties have gone up outside in a skiff with a small sail without using an oar. There is only a fall of 3 feet 6 inches, in three-quarters of a mile at that place, and that is only a rise of one inch to a hundred feet, and even in building railways two feet per 100 feet is not an unreasonable grade. The whole thing is altogether unnecessary. The line boats go up and down there without attempting to use the canal, and tugs can and do take tows of several scows up and the yacht owned there runs up and down and never thinks of using the canal. But it was not enough in order to carry out this fad, to build an ordinary canal there, but he had to build two 800-foot locks at an enormous expense when the other locks on our canal system, with the exception of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, are only from 200 to 270 feet. It is the most unreasonable piece of mismanagement you can possibly imagine. Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Conservative Government was to build, and they did build, a short piece of canal just at the high pitch at the west end of the Cardinal Canal, which would be quite sufficient to overcome any difficulty in the way, but Minister (Mr. Blair), and I hold him responsible, saw fit to run a line across at a place where it was necessary to make an immense cut and to take out several million yards of earth and put another 800-foot lock there. Notwithstanding all the steam shovels the contractors could get to work they could not complete their contract in the time specified. The fact of the matter is that the money of the people has been recklessly squandered. In the advertisement calling for tenders, the Government stipulated that the contract should be finished in a certain time, and after frightening other men out they gave it to the present contractor at a cost of 30 or 40 per cent more than the work could be done for under ordinary circumstances. What was all the rush about? And, Sir, would you believe it, that notwithstanding all that, they extended the time, the contractors agreeing to tow all vessels up the river past their contract, until the work is completed. If the contractors can tow vessels up, where is the necessity for the canal. In the case of the work east of Cornwall, and at the mouth of the canal west of Cornwall, they put a similar time limit clause and threat of penalties in their advertisement, stating that it was to be finished last year, but it is not finished yet. They called for a deposit of \$17,000 so that many practical men and competent contractors were knocked out from tendering; but before the work was let, some favourite contractors were informed that \$2,000 deposit would do for one piece of the work, \$5,000 for another, and \$10,000 for another. Are contracts to be altered in this secret way? Will the people of the country stand a system like this which makes the cost of the work forty or fifty per cent more than it should be? Mr. Haggart, in speaking of the North channel, told us that the engineer in charge, Mr. Rubidge, was so very patriotic that he did not like to run steamers in an American channel. Well, if his patriotism is going to cost this country four or five million dollars the best thing the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) can do is to hand him over to the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) who will send him to General Hutton to build fortifications that would be of some patriotic use to the country. To put an 800-foot lock to overcome a fall of  $3\frac{1}{2}$  feet in three-quarters of a mile, is no more necessary than to put a fifth wheel to a coach. All this money has been spent for nothing. This North Channel contract has been let to Mr. Cleveland, and I presume he is doing his work all right; but Mr. Haggart explained that he had gone into this matter fully, and even if his Government did not care about using the American channel, a means could be adopted to get splendid navigation there at a comparatively trifling cost. The present Minister was not satisfied with the contract that was let, and he drew a straight line across an island necessitating a cut of 45 feet deep and increasing the width to 300 feet. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals says there was no necessity for spending one dollar on this; and yet here is an expenditure of \$750,000. I say this is the worst kind of mismanagement, and the whole thing has been managed in that way. Even on the Soulanges Canal they first let the contracts, and then changed the time for doing the work. A gentleman named Hogan put in a bid for a part of this work and his tender was the lowest. After the tenders were in the Minister of Railways and Canals reduced the time allowed for the completion of the work. Mr. Hogan knowing it was impossible to complete the work in the time fixed without an enormous waste of money, declined the contract. The Minister then let the work to Mr. Onderdonk, without calling for new tenders, at a price \$60,000 higher than Mr. Hogan's tender. But Mr. Onderdonk has not finished the work yet and will not for another year; so that, if they had given the contract to others, they would have saved that \$60,000, and have got the work done just as soon. They cancelled Mr. Stewart's contract on the Soulanges Canal, rented his quarry for three years, and after the three years expired he refused to let them take any more stone; then they expropriated the quarry for two years more. But they found they could not legally do that, and now they are in litigation again. Mr. Stewart has entered an action against the Government for \$600,000, and the probability is that owing to the manner in which they have blundered he will succeed. This is the way the railways and canals have been managed, and I think other public works have been managed just as badly.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry).

Now, a word about the plebiscite. The right hon. Premier has made the statement that there was an implied agreement, or understanding, among the members of the Reform party in regard to the result of the vote. He says the temperance people never asked for prohibition, and that he made no promises or pledges to them—that the promise he made was to the Liberal party, and that there was an arrangement among the Liberal party themselves as to what they would do. When he went to the country with the plebiscite, he never told the people what that arrangement was. He has treated the temperance people of this country unfairly, and I venture to say, that if there had been 50 per cent of the total vote in favour of prohibition, he would not have given prohibition. But there was an arrangement in the Liberal party, and they kept it secret from the temperance people, and allowed them to go through the country, spending their time and money; and the Government themselves spent $250,000 of the money of the people of this country upon this bogus scheme. Here is an extract which I cut from a paper, and it will explain the feeling of the honest temperance people generally throughout the country:

Rev. G. C. Huxtable, of the Methodist Church, is one of the clergymen to whom Sir Wilfrid Laurier romanced on the subject of the plebiscite. Sir Wilfrid, answering an inquiry put to him at a public meeting by that gentleman, said he would give a plebiscite, and according to the answer of the people "such legislation they will have at the hands of the Government." Mr. Huxtable, in a letter to the Montreal "Witness," says the plebiscite was a mockery pure and simple, a political dodge, and a fraud of the first magnitude.

He adds: "I have been a Reformer all my life. I gave my vote in the late election for Sir Wilfrid; but I will regard it henceforth as a duty I owe to my conscience, my country, and my God, to withhold from him my support."

Surely it would have been better, if the Government had acted in good faith with the temperance people. Having granted a plebiscite, they should have carried out their pledges, and they never should have promised prohibition, if they did not intend to carry it out. The right hon. Premier, the other day, said:

Who carved the province of Ontario into monuments of shapeless deformity to every instinct of right and justice? We are here in the consciousness of our strength, and, so help me God, I think we shall have that strength in the hearts of the people.

They used to promise all sorts of things to the people; and, when a man pledges himself to anything, particularly men in high positions, they should carry out their promises, and such promises would be all that honest men should require of them. When they are constantly breaking their promises, how can you expect any one to have confidence in them? Finding that the people were becoming suspicious, they said they would do this upon their honour, but they again broke their word, and now the Premier adds to his promises in this House "so help me God." Now, if their last promise of fairness is not kept, the people will come to the conclusion that they must have a statutory declaration, or a cast-iron oath, from these men that will make them amenable to the criminal laws of the country.

Let me show you, from some maps I have in my hand, how these gentlemen have deformed the constituencies in Ontario. Here is East Wellington, as it is represented in the local legislature, and this is the work of Sir Oliver Mowat—and the Premier in this House swore that "So help me God" he was going to set right these monuments of shapeless deformity. Here is his chance. Look at this map and see how Centre Bruce appears as carved out by the Reform party. Who carved out Ontario and made such "monumental deformities" out of the constituencies?

An hon. MEMBER. Sir Oliver Mowat.

Mr. McLENNAN. Here is another one.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Show it to your friends behind you and not to us. They have not seen it.

Mr. McLENNAN. They have seen it, but the trouble is you do not want to see it, and there is no man so blind as the man who does not want to see. Look at South Wellington. We have had some of these hon. gentlemen opposite declare that they would vote against the Government if these wrongs in the redistribution were not put right, but they are prepared to support such abortions as these I am showing you. I have several other maps, but will not trouble the House with them. Now, let me draw your attention to the Dominion Atlas, and particularly the attention of the right hon. gentleman who cast such reflection on the county divisions of Ontario, under the Franchise Act of the late Government. If he will look over that atlas, he will find that the constituencies are in better shape in Ontario, under the Dominion Act, than they are in his own province. There can be no doubt about it, as he will see on looking through this atlas.

Now, let me quote from a book prepared by a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Magurn, who was here as reporter for the "Globe" newspaper, and whose work is published by the Winnipeg "Free Press," the organ of the Minister of Justice of which Mr. Magurn is now the editor. Here is his analysis of the vote at the last general election, in 1896:

We find that the Liberals had 28.96 per cent of the whole vote, the Conservatives 30.85, the Independents 4.10 per cent, and the Patrons 2.28 per cent. The total vote polled by the Conservatives was 417,685, by the Liberals 392,108, by the Independents 55,522, and by the Patrons 30,955.

You see, therefore, that the Conservatives polled a larger vote in the Dominion than the Liberals at the last general election, and this percentage will stay by them. Notwithstanding all the changes in the constituencies that hon. gentlemen opposite may make the Government need not flatter themselves with the idea of carrying the by-elections. They carried the by-elections between 1874 and 1878, but were defeated and beaten out of sight at the next general elections, and the same fate will meet the present Administration. In the by-elections it is very hard to keep up with these gentlemen, who have at their command the provincial as well as the Dominion official heelers and personators.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). What are they, those personators?

Mr. McLENNAN. Ask your chief whip, and he will tell you. I would not like to say anything that would hurt the feelings of the chief whip, because he is a good fellow, but let me tell you that that gentleman goes into a constituency the most modest looking fellow you ever saw. He stands around, goes to the best hotel, as he should, somebody tells him there is an election on, and he appears to be surprised. He has just heard of it, and is there travelling for his health. The people of this country are beginning to understand that they are unsafe in the hands of this Government. The business men, the manufacturers, do not know what the policy of the Government is going to be. They do not know what the Government will do next. They do not know what we can expect of them now. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is a feeling of unrest among the people with regard to the position of the Government. There is the uncertainty which makes capitalists afraid to invest their money without a definite and consistent policy. These gentlemen got into power simply by a fluke, and they have not since strengthened themselves, and if they were to go to the country to-morrow they would be beaten clean out of sight. One hon. member talks of protection and another calls himself a free trader. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), I believe, made a speech, in the course of which he said he was an out-and-out free trader. You have reduced the tariff one-half of one per cent in four years. If you keep on you will make a great reduction. But we do not know. We would like to know that you are going to stick to the Conservative policy which you have taken, not being able to formulate one for yourselves. It was a policy that you decreed for 18 years. By accepting that policy you have paid the Conservative party a great compliment, showing that we were right and you were wrong. You have accepted that policy and thrown to the winds everything you have said.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BOURASSA. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member (Mr. McLennan, Gleggarry) should address the chair.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have treated every hon. member of this House as a gentleman. I do not trouble the House very often, and I think these interruptions are altogether uncalled for.

Mr. BOURASSA. I raise the point of order that the hon. gentleman should address the Chair. He is addressing the Government.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have been addressing the Chair and criticising the conduct of the Government. You cannot get out of it by a quibble of that kind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER (Mr. Brodeur). Order. The hon. gentleman should address the Chair.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have been addressing the Chair, but I must say something concerning hon. gentlemen opposite at the same time. I was about finishing, and as it is now late, I shall not claim the attention of the House any longer. I thank hon. members for the attention they have given me. I trust the Government will mend its ways and will be more consistent in future, so that, hereafter, the people may be able to rely on them to a certain extent. When they make people a promise they should not deceive them; let the people to whom the promise is made be temperance people, manufacturers or whatever they be. If they introduce honest legislation, we on this side will help them. We are interested in the welfare of the country. Though we are in Opposition, yet we are loyal and devoted to the interests of Canada. We will never say a word against the country, even though we should have the misfortune to remain in Opposition for 18 years, as our friends opposite did. But I do not believe that we shall be here for 18 months.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 57) respecting the British Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company, and to change its name to the British Yukon Railway Company.—(Mr. Campbell.)

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry).

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to call the attention of the First Minister, in the absence of the Minister of the Interior, to an order of the House for some returns, notably a return of all dredging licenses and leases of mining lands granted, which was ordered in the early part of last session, and which has not yet been brought down. I hope the First Minister will make a note of that, and see that it is brought down early. I would like to have it up to date, but of course, that is not implied in the motion.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bell (East Prince), for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his Speech at the opening of the session.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Sidney A. Fisher, Brome). Mr. Speaker, during the course of this debate, a good deal of reference has been made by hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that I happened to have been more or less out of the House, and several conclusions have been drawn from that fact, which I suppose the gentlemen drawing them intended to be rather uncomplimentary to myself. If, Sir, during the course of this debate, which has now lasted about three weeks, I have been guilty of some absence from the House, I think I shall have the sympathy of the large number of the members of the House; for hon. gentlemen know that I have been so in the most excellent company of the large majority of the members of the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite, I think, should be the last to accuse me of this remissness, not only because their constant repetitions of the old story which has been going on for the last three weeks might weary out the patience even of Job, and give a fair excuse to any one for not listening to them, but because the hon. gentlemen themselves have been considerably guilty of the same thing; so that if I am guilty of remissness in this respect, I have been guilty in company which hon. gentlemen opposite at least ought to consider very good company. I would draw attention to the fact that when these hon. gentlemen address the House, their own friends are not sufficiently interested in their speeches to stay in the House and listen to them. I would draw attention to the remarkable fact that when the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) the other night made what was certainly a notable speech, what was evidently intended to be a great speech, the utterance of the party of which he is a prominent member on a great question with which the Conservative press of this country has been ringing for months past, by actual count there were only at any one time during that hon. gentleman's speech, from a dozen to fifteen members of his own side of the House doing him the honour of listening to, or encouraging, or applauding him. Is it possible that this is to be accounted for in the same way as another extraordinary fact? The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster) went down to Brockville the other day and fired the first gun of the great Conservative party in the by-election which is now going on in that constituency; and the next day I read in an independent Montreal newspaper a report of his meeting, which stated:

A notable feature of the meeting was that no reference was made in any way to the Yukon charges, which it took Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper six hours to elaborate in the House of Commons, nor was the name of a Tupper mentioned in any way by any of the speakers, and the Yukon charges were left severely alone.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend allow me one word?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly, with pleasure.

Mr. FOSTER. I am going to take the earliest opportunity to remedy that defect in my speech. It was due to my not having more than about 45 minutes in which to speak.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. member, I suppose, wanted time to emulate his former colleague and friend; he wanted six hours to elaborate those charges. The hon. member's party press and the hon. member's party are telling the people of this country that these Yukon charges are the greatest blot upon the present Administration of Canada, that in the administration of the Yukon territory the Government of Canada has shown its unfitness for the government of the country; and yet the hon. gentleman says himself that in three-quarters of an hour, the first occasion in this by-election on which he or any of the leaders of his party have had an opportunity to strike the key-note of their accusation against this Government, he did not see fit to refer once to those charges. That the statement in this newspaper is correct, the hon. gentleman's very lame excuse here to-day is abundant proof. He is convicted out of his own mouth of either one of two things—I leave it to himself to choose whichever horn of the dilemma he pleases: either he has no sympathy with those charges, or he feels that the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) so completely disposed of them that it was not safe for the Conservative party to continue them.

Mr. FOSTER. No, but you have so many great sins that it is not easy to deal with them all.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. friend need not get uneasy. He knows in his conscience why he omitted to mention the name of a Tupper in Brockville, and why in the home of Major Walsh he did not dare to bring forward or repeat, where he could be held responsible for them, the charges which his colleague, the ex-Minister of Justice (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), made on the floor of Parliament, where he knew well he could not be held responsible for what he said. Sir, the hon. gentleman has made accusations against the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), but my hon. colleague disposed of these accusations so completely that the supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite dared not repeat them on the hustings.

The hon. leader of the Opposition tried, however, to put the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) before the country in another light. He accused him of misrepresenting the feeling of the western country on the tariff, and of having forfeited the confidence of the people of Manitoba whom he represents in this Administration. These hon. gentlemen say that at a meeting held in Winnipeg, a little while ago, a vote of want of confidence was passed against the Minister of the Interior. Well, I have here a telegram, which gives the result of the meeting in Winnipeg in its true light. What was the result? Let me read this telegram and you will see. It is dated Winnipeg, March 11th, and is as follows:

The leader of the Opposition quoted a resolution moved in the Liberal Association here to establish dissatisfaction among the Liberals with the Government tariff reform. First suitable speaker to-day should quote the fate of that resolution at the meeting last night, when it was unanimously rejected at the largest meeting in the history of the Liberal Association of Manitoba, A. B. Bethune alone voting contrary. Even G. R. Heney, the mover of the resolution, voted for the following amendment:—

This association recognizes the courage and ability shown by the Government in dealing with the tariff in the face of the country's requirements, and its economic conditions; especially approves the preferential clause favouring the mother country, the relaxation of the duties on raw materials, and the important additions made to the free list, and congratulate the Government on the increased trade of the country and a rising revenue, thus enabling it to regard with security the great reduction made in imperial and domestic postal rates; and this association feels confident that with due consideration to the varied productive industries of the country, the Government, in so far as the just demands upon the revenue will permit, will continue to apply the principle of placing the taxation upon a basis of revenue tariff, having special regard to the development of the great resources of this western Canada.

That, I think, thoroughly disposes of any question as to the confidence of the Liberal party in the Minister of the Interior; and while hon. gentlemen opposite may have tried to find a very cold comfort indeed in some few remarks made on the tariff question by Liberals in the west, they can see from this that the Liberals of western, as well as the rest of Canada, are satisfied with the tariff arrangements of the present Government and have every confidence in their administration.

I may be allowed to take up a few minutes of the time of the House in dealing with one or two matters. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have been worrying themselves a good deal concerning certain credit which they think ought to be given the late Government for certain reforms effected by this Administration in the interests of the agriculturists of this country. They have spent a good deal of time in this debate insisting that I, personally, deserve no credit for anything I have done in my department since I took charge of it. They have been asserting repeatedly—and I suppose they imagine that by repeated assertions they will get the people to believe them—that my predecessors had inaugurated everything that I have been doing in the interests of agriculture, and that all the credit for anything that I have done is due to the late Administration. Well, I am not going into the details, I do not intend to worry myself over this matter, but I must confess that these hon. gentlemen remind me of that man out in the west who tried to hoist himself by tugging at his own boot straps. Over and over again, when they were in office, they told the people that the country was prosperous. They insisted upon it so often and so vehemently, that I really think they brought themselves to believe it. If persistence can be taken as any evidence of sincerity these hon. gentlemen certainly were sincere, and they no doubt thought that by reiteration they would make the people believe in the end that they were prosperous. The facts, however, were against them. We, on the other hand, do not need to go to the people and insist that they are prosperous, for the people come to us and tell us that their affairs are prosperous. We do not have to go to them.

If I may liken a small matter to a greater, I may say that we have the same spectacle with regard to the establishment of cold storage facilities, with regard to the doing away with the quarantine between Canada and the United States, which I succeeded in having removed, and all the rest of the work I have been doing in the Agricultural Department. I have no need to go to the people and demand from them, at the point of the bayonet, credit for these reforms. I leave it to the people themselves to give credit where they think it is deserved. I leave the matter in their hands and trust myself to their judgment. Therefore, leaving this matter to these hon. gentlemen to settle with their own conscience and their own followers as best they can, I would ask leave to say a few words with regard to the work done in the Agricultural Department within the last two years. In the first place let me say—and I say it in all deference and friendliness—that I am glad to perceive that the late Minister of Agriculture, the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) does not take the line his friends took. I am sorry the hon. gentleman is not here to-day, but I must congratulate him on the moderation of his tone and the good debating characteristics of the speech he delivered in this House, and I would tell his friends opposite that they might take his example well to heart as one to be followed. I must give the hon. member for Haldimand this credit, that he, at all events, is not responsible, to any great extent, if any, for anything that occurred in the Department of Agriculture before I came into office. He was my immediate predecessor in the Department of Agriculture, but he was only there six months when I succeeded him, and during that term he was away in England two months. There was a session of Parliament going on during his incumbency, and during the last two or three months of his term, he was so busily and rightly engaged, from a party point of view, in the campaign which was being carried on in the early half of 1896, that he had very little opportunity to exercise his ability in the Department of Agriculture. A good deal has been said about cold storage. As a matter of fact, what is the case? In 1895, under the recommendation of Professor Robertson—and speaking of that gentleman, I wish to say here that the earnest activity and energy he brings to the service in which he is engaged is only equalled by his capacity and foresight in carrying out the schemes he is able to originate—in 1895 ten steamships were furnished with insulated cold storage compartments to be cooled with ice. The Government bore the expense of this service. But these facilities were availed of but very little. As a matter of fact, the ice cold storage was found not to be very successful. In 1896, instead of doing anything more, instead of taking any steps in advance, the hon. gentleman who preceded me continued the same system without any change—except the change that the system was even less availed of by the exporters than it had been the year before. The expenditure on the part of my predecessor was not quite so great, in consequence. Coming into office, I felt the necessity of improvement, and I prepared an elaborate scheme, which I laid before this House, and into the details of which I need not go. As a consequence, in 1897 there were 16 steamships fitted, not with insulated compartments for ice, but with mechanical refrigeration, which is thoroughly understood to be the only really practical system of refrigeration for large cold storage warehouses or for steamship service. That gave a large service from Canadian ports to ports in the old land. In 1898, having found the success of this system—and here I may say without digressing too much, that the success was so great that I received demands from various parts of the country asking me to go on and increase the service—in 1898, 20 steamships were fitted with mechanical cold storage, and, besides, there were two small vessels for special work, which were fitted only with the insulated compartments. In addition to this, cold storage was provided on the railways. In 1898 this applied to 21 different roads, converging upon the points of shipment, a service which has been availed of very largely, especially by the butter exporters and cheese exporters. In addition to this, the system of bonusing cold storage accommodation at creameries, which was entirely new, was carried on, resulting in a most magnificent stimulus to our butter trade. To illustrate this, I have only to say one or two words. While in 1894-95, and up to 1896, Canadian butter of the best quality ranged from 72 shillings to 85 shillings per cwt. in England, the finest Danish, the top of the market, ranged from 100 shillings to 105 shillings, making a difference of fully 20 shillings per cwt. between the best Danish and the best Canadian. In the same month of 1898 the difference between the best Danish and the best Canadian ran under 6 shillings per cwt., as against 20 shillings in the former case. There was a comparison also which I noticed myself in England, last summer. On the 16th August, 1898, on the London market, Canadian butter was quoted at 88 shillings to 94 shillings per cwt., and the best Danish at 76 shillings to 94 shillings—an actual parity or a slight advantage in favour of Canadian butter. Another comparison will not be out of place. In 1896 fancy Australian ran from 10 shillings to 12 shillings above the best Canadian. In 1898, throughout the whole season, there was not a single instance in which the Canadian butter was not higher than Australian butter. This result has been accomplished, not through any material improvement in the manufacture of Canadian butter, but through the mechanical cold storage on steamships, the cold storage on the railways and the cold storage chambers in the creameries themselves; for, through these means, Canadian butter is placed upon the English market in the same splendid condition in which it leaves the creamery—and Canadian butter at the creamery in Canada is not surpassed in quality by any butter on the face of the earth. Now, before I go on to deal with another point, I might allude incidentally to the immense increase of the cognate industry of pork, ham and bacon products. In 1891 we exported $632,000 worth of these products; in 1892, $1,159,000; in 1893, $2,000,000; in 1894, $2,900,000; in 1895, $3,800,000; in 1896, $4,400,000; in 1897, $5,800,000; in 1898, $8,000,000, and in the first six months of the current fiscal year, $5,690,000, or at the rate of nearly $12,000,000 for the fiscal year. The export trade, which we thus see advancing by leaps and bounds, is dependent largely upon the fact that Canadian creamery butter can be made at a satisfactory profit and placed on the English market at its true worth, because it is the skim-milk from the creamery that is the foundation of the successful raising of hogs. The other point to which I wish to allude is one to which hon. gentlemen opposite have paid no attention, and I do not much wonder at that, because the facts are not creditable to their administration. Those who know anything about the agricultural interests of the country are aware that in 1892 the American Government established a quarantine of ninety days against the importation of Canadian cattle. This quarantine lasted until the 1st February, 1897. In the autumn of 1896 I was in western Ontario, attending what was known as a fat stock show, which is the great occasion for the gathering of the stock-breeders of the province of Ontario, the home, I may say, of the live stock interests of the continent of America. We discussed the matter there a little; and a prominent Conservative told me that if there was one thing I could do to aid the live stock interests of the province of Ontario, it would be to remove the quarantine against American cattle coming into this country. That struck me as being a rather curious thing to advocate, and I asked the reason for the opinion this gentleman had expressed. "Oh," he said, "we have been trying for years to remove the quarantine against our cattle going into the United States, but without effect. But I think that if you would take the first step in that direction, our friends on the other side of the line would, perhaps, follow your example." I said that I thought it would be better to make a bargain with them and have the quarantine restriction removed simultaneously on both sides of the line. But my friend said: "You can't do that; our Conservative Minister of Agriculture has been trying for some years, and he has not succeeded; so, there is no earthly use in your trying to do it." All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is, that within three weeks of that date I had made an arrangement in Washington with the Minister of Agriculture of the United States to remove the quarantine restriction upon cattle going across the American frontier. I did it without difficulty; I did it simply by going to Washington on the invitation of that gentleman, and meeting him in a practical, business-like way.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman will allow me to ask him a question. I would like to know if the Postmaster General, who was so strongly in favour of protecting our cattle from contamination from the United States cattle, approved of that move?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will tell the hon. gentleman in a moment, if he will allow me to get through with what I am saying now. I did this without any great difficulty. I went to Washington at the invitation of the Minister of Agriculture of the United States, and in a few days of practical business-like discussion with him and with the officers of his department, and with the assistance of Prof. McEachran, chief of the veterinary branch of my own Department of Agriculture, the difficulty was removed, a convention was signed by us jointly, and Orders in Council were issued here, and the Department of Agriculture in the United States issued their orders. Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say much about the results. The result is shown by the facts I am going to quote, that while during the four years and a half under the restriction I have indicated, the Dominion of Canada sent to the United States 3,763 head of cattle, of the value of $52,000, in the two years which have elapsed since that restriction was removed, we have sent to the United States 180,849 head of cattle, of the value of $2,514,000.

Mr. WALLACE. How much is that per head?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have given you the figures, just figure it out for yourself.

Mr. WALLACE. Under $14 a head.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and the hon. gentleman, if he knew anything about the state of our stock interests three years ago in Canada, would have known well that our farmers here could not at that time sell the class of cattle which went to the United States for $8 or $10, let alone $14 per head. The hon. gentleman is probably not aware of the fact that these cattle going across to the United States are chiefly young cattle, unsaleable animals, which could not go to the English market, and which were resting like an incubus on the cattle market of Canada, and the absence of which has relieved our cattle market of that incubus. Let me here quote the words, not of a Canadian politician, not my own words, but the words of Mr. Ironsides, of the great firm of Gordon & Ironsides, the largest cattle dealers and exporters in Canada. Mr. Ironsides said, speaking of this phase of the administration of my department, that the farmers of Canada owed a debt of gratitude to the Government of which I am a member, because, through the work of my department, all the young cattle under two years of age in Canada had been increased in value to the extent of double. Mr. Ironsides made this statement last fall, when he was asked to say something about the things for which the people of Canada ought to be thankful on that occasion, Thanksgiving Day, at a time when the people of this country were praising God for the blessings which had come to them in the year past, at a time when the people of this country were asked on what grounds they should base that thankfulness which they felt all over the country; Mr. Ironsides said that one of the reasons why he, as a cattle dealer, and why the people who raised cattle should show their thankfulness, were the very facts I have detailed to this House.

An hon. member opposite (Mr. Ives) asked me a moment ago if the Postmaster General agreed of this piece of administration. I will relieve the hon. gentleman's anxiety by telling him that the Postmaster General does and did agree with it, and that in doing so, the Postmaster General is in no sense inconsistent with the position he occupied a few years ago on the floor of this House when he criticised the hon. gentleman himself and his colleagues who were then on this side of the House, at a time when there was danger, at a time when they were allowing American cattle to come into this country without the people of Canada being able to send their cattle into the United States, at a time when there was an embargo existing upon our cattle going into the English market, due to the remissness of hon. gentlemen opposite in allowing those American cattle to come into this country and affect the health of our cattle.

Mr. IVES. The hon. gentleman will allow me to say that from the statements he makes, I think the personnel of the commission that went to Washington should have been changed, and my hon. friend should have gone down.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman compliments me highly, but while I had my work to do, my hon. friends who went to Washington had their work to do, and I have no doubt did it with the same success.

Mr. IVES. That was not much.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman does not know, perhaps, that at the time he refers to there was pleuro-pneumonia in the United States, and there was pleuro-pneumonia in England, and both the people of England and of Canada were afraid of that pleuro-pneumonia being introduced into Canada. But when I made this arrangement with the United States in December, 1896, pleuro-pneumonia had been completely stamped out, there had not been a single case in the United States for over four years, and it was only in consequence of that fact, and in consequence of proof afforded by the Department of Agriculture at Washington, and after an investigation on the part of my own officer, Dr. McEachran, who found that there was no pleuro-pneumonia in the United States and had not been for several years, that I dared to make this regulation; and, as a matter of fact, I have been justified in so doing, for since that time up to the present day there has not been found a single case of pleuro-pneumonia either in the United States or in Canada. Sir, I said a few moments ago that I was not going to fish for credit in regard to these matters. I will, however, confess that I am human, and that I am pleased and gratified when I receive assurance of satisfaction from the farmers of the country, not only Liberal farmers, but Conservative farmers, who speak of these things in their agricultural meetings, where, thank God, politics do not enter; in their farmers' conferences, dairy associations, live stock associations and fruit growers' associations, and who invite me urgently to attend their meetings and meet them face to face, who invite me to discuss with them the business interests of their calling, and who have passed resolutions thanking me for my presence there, and thanking me for the work I am doing. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I am gratified at those expressions of satisfaction on the part of that great class of the community whose interests are in my charge as a member of the Government. Sir, I am glad to know, and I am encouraged to know, that in doing this work, I am, perhaps, contributing to the material advance of agriculture in this country and to the prosperity of the farmers of this country, but I am content to leave these expressions of gratitude to the men for whom I am doing this work.

Mr. Speaker, I will leave that question now and proceed to another one on which, again, hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House seem to be worrying themselves a good deal, and that is as to what my position is in the Government, and whether I am going to resign. Well, I will relieve them at once by saying that at the present moment, and so far as any question at present before the public is concerned, I am not going to resign. The reason I am not going to resign is this simple fact, that there is no cause of difference between myself and the leader of the Government, or between myself and my colleagues, no difference whatever. The hon. gentlemen opposite, sitting in the front benches, know well enough what reasons require a member of the Privy Council to resign, and my reminder to them of those reasons is a sufficient answer to them. A few days ago it was necessary for me in the course of my private business to go away for a couple of days, and I was away from Parliament and from Ottawa. The hon. gentlemen opposite, and their press, seem to take a great deal of interest in my movements, and some of them suggested that I was sulking, perhaps. Others, again, attributed to me other intentions. As far as sulking is concerned, I can tell hon. gentlemen, that it is not a characteristic of myself and, so far as I know, it is not a characteristic of any member of the Government. I am glad to be able to say that we have a mutual confidence and a mutual trust, and that we have seen no reason, in any way or shape, to lessen that trust since we have been working together in the Council chamber. But there was one thing which, I must confess, rather tickled my vanity, if I may be allowed to make use of the term. It was attributed to me here that I was going to leave, not only this Government, but this House and this country, and it was said that I was going to England to take my position as High Commissioner. Well, now, Mr. Speaker, that might have tickled my vanity, but I am going to say a few words or two in regard to the matter and I will say it did not tickle it very much. At the present time that position is occupied by Lord Strathcona, and I want to have this opportunity of saying, and of saying it emphatically, that from having had a good deal to do with that gentleman in the position which he occupies in London, I trust that Canada is going to be long spared his services in the position which he so worthily and actively occupies. Lord Strathcona, as the High Commissioner of Canada, is possessed of qualifications and characteristics which are eminently adapted to that position. A peer of the realm, giving him unexceptional and great social position in London, in the world of diplomacy, in society and in commerce, a man of great wealth, occupying positions of trust on the boards of several of the great companies and corporations of the world, a man of high public standing, not only in this country, but of experience in the affairs of the empire, he is eminently fitted for the position. When Canada was a younger country, and when, notably there was a portion of Canada, now happily joined with us, which was then in open rebellion, and when the authorities of the old land, in 1871, sent Lord Strathcona, then Mr. Smith, to Manitoba, he was able to be of great service to the empire by holding that province to Canada at that time. In his work now he shows an activity and energy that are almost incredible in a man of his years, and which would be marvellous in a man in the prime of life, and that energy, that activity, that capacity, that wealth, that social and financial position in London, he is giving frankly and freely for the service of his country, and I trust and hope for a long time to come his health will be such that he may be spared, and that the Government will be able to retain the services of such an eminently fitted High Commissioner in London. Even were it to be the intention that I should occupy that position, I should shrink from it, for the attempt to follow Lord Strathcona would be greater than my powers or capacity would enable me to do. But I come back now to this question upon which I am supposed to be sulking, and wishing to leave the Government. It is the question of prohibition. I do not find that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are worrying very much about prohibition; they are worrying a good deal about me and about what the Government is going to do. It is an extraordinary fact, but it is a fact, which anybody who has followed the debate, must have noticed, that there is but one song and one burden of the song of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, and it is this: You naughty Government: why do you not propose a prohibitory law? Nobody on the other side of the House has proposed a prohibitory law; nobody on the other side of the House has said what he is prepared to do, and although this attack upon the Government has been made, the fact that it is not prohibition which hon. gentlemen have at heart is shown by the circumstance that whether it be the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), or the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Moore), the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Ganong), or whether it be any other hon. member on the other side of the House, it matters not what may be his opinions or his views on prohibition, the burden of his attack is exactly the same. Everybody knows, who knows these hon. gentlemen, that the hon. member for Compton and the hon. member for Stanstead are diametrically opposed on the question of prohibition, but the speeches that these hon. gentlemen made in this House on this question were almost identical, and why were they almost identical? Because their whole aim and object has been apparently to accuse the Government and to put it in a hole, and not apparently to benefit or help prohibition at all. Mr. Speaker, the hon. members opposite are accusing the Government. Has any hon. member on that side of the House, has the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), got up and said what he would do upon this question if he were in office? Has he got up and said that he is prepared, or desires, to go to the country and test the people upon this question from a party point of view? Not a bit of it. Nobody on the other side of the House has done it any more than anybody on this side of the House has done it, but the question is just this: We have had a vote upon the question of prohibition, in this House known as the plebiscite. Now, the plebiscite is a thing of very old origin. I will not go back to its first institution in the days of ancient Rome, but in modern days it has been chiefly made use of in France. The plebiscite has been made use of there, under the Third Empire, to obtain endorsement from the people of a political question which has already been un fait accompli.

Mr. FOSTER. The referendum.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Excuse me. The referendum is an entirely different thing from the plebiscite. The referendum is the submission of a definite or particular law to the people of the country to be adopted, just as the Scott Act is referred to the vote of a constituency, county, or a municipal or other division.

Mr. FOSTER. Was I right in understanding the hon. gentleman to say that the plebiscite had to do with something which was already un fait accompli.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I understood the hon. gentleman to say.

Mr. FISHER.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood me entirely.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think I misunderstood the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I say that in France the French authorities use the plebiscite for the purpose of obtaining endorsement from the people upon un fait accompli. After the revolution of 1848 Louis Philippe's Government was overthrown, the republic was established and a plebiscite was taken to secure endorsement of the republic, when afterwards the Third Napoleon overthrew the republic and established the empire, a plebiscite was taken to endorse that action of his. But later on, on two different occasions, the Third Empire employed the plebiscite to obtain the endorsement of the people in reference to actions which he had already taken. That is what I said to the hon. gentleman and that is what I meant to say.

Mr. BERGERON. Are there any cases in England?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There have been no cases of the plebiscite in England in my historical researches. The plebiscite here lately was on a different line, and for a different purpose. We used the plebiscite for the purpose of obtaining an expression of opinion, of obtaining the views of the people of the country, on the question of prohibition, not upon un fait accompli, and not as a referendum for the purpose of adopting a particular law. But hon. gentlemen opposite know perfectly well, that the temperance people of this country did not wish a referendum. They felt, rightly I think, that if by a referendum a special law were to be submitted, for vote in the country, a series of side issues would be brought in, and the people of the country would be deterred from voting in consequence of the details of that particular law. The Government had that request of the temperance people in view. Furthermore, the Government carried out their pledge to give a plebiscite to the people of this country, as the people asked it, and as the party when in Opposition had said they would do. The hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) in his speech, stated that we have deceived the people, and he implied, if he did not do any more—and other speakers on the opposite side of the House have done the same thing—that the Government were derelict in their duty and their policy on account of the manner in which they took the plebiscite. As to that I will not go into details, but I will quote what the representative of the temperance people said when in November last they came into this Chamber, and approached a committee of the Government who met them. Mr. Spence then said:

It was only eight months since a delegation of the Dominion Alliance had waited upon the First Minister and his colleagues asking that the question to be submitted to the electorate be not trammelled by the introduction of any side issues. For the straightforward and honourable way in which the Government had dealt with that petition they owed their thanks.

This, I think, fully disposes of the objection brought forward by the leader of the Opposition as to the manner in which the Government had carried out their pledge to the temperance people, that they would give them an opportunity of expressing their opinions at the polls.

Now, Sir, what are the results? I say emphatically this: The plebiscite was for the purpose of enabling the electorate of Canada to give expression to their opinion upon the question of prohibition. That is the whole and sole thing in connection with the plebiscite; it was for that purpose and for that purpose alone. The people of the country had that opportunity given them in a straightforward and honest manner, as was stated by the representative of the temperance people when they came to us in November last.

Now, then, how did the people of Canada take advantage of that opportunity, and how did they go to the polls? The figures are about these in round numbers: Taking 100 names on the voters' lists, 44 per cent voted, and 56 per cent of the whole number enrolled on the list did not vote. Twenty-two and a half per cent voted "yes," and 21½ per cent of the whole list voted "no." I am not going to take these bald figures and argue upon them, for I appreciate that the whole list is not quite a fair thing to make a comparison on.

Mr. FOSTER. What would be a fair thing?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am going to tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster). If he will abide his soul in a little patience, he will get it all in a few minutes. The right thing and the fair thing would be to take the average vote at the ordinary elections which are held in this country. And as a matter of fact, of every hundred names on the voters' lists, in the elections of 1887, 70 per cent of the people voted; in the elections of 1891, 66 per cent voted, and in the elections of 1896, again 66 per cent voted. Sir, I want to draw this fact to the attention of the House. The voters' list in 1896, was a list which was about three years old. In 1898, when the plebiscite was taken, in most of the country, not all, the list was a new list. In the province of Quebec it was an absolutely new list; in the province of Ontario, I understand, it was a new list; in some of the smaller provinces it was not a new list; but on the whole, it averaged a much newer list than the list used in the elections of 1896, which was all over Canada, about three years old. We may, therefore, fairly take that the average vote on the plebiscite comparing it with ordinary elections would be about 66 per cent, and I think I am giving the benefit of the doubt fully and entirely to the question. In other words, of 66 per cent, which would be the probable and fairly to be expected vote, only 44 per cent voted, or two-thirds. Of those, practically about one-half voted for prohibition and about one-half voted against, or in round figures, one-third voted for prohibition, one-third voted against prohibition, and one-third did not vote at all. I do not think that any exception or any cavil can be taken, on this statement of the case, because I believe that I have given the advantage in every respect and in every way to those who may cavil at my figures.

Mr. FOSTER. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) allow me a question? I do not want to interrupt unless he wishes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) lays that down as a rule which would be fair to abide by. Did my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) take the trouble to do that before the plebiscite was taken at all?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not. It was before the whole people of the country; it was an absolute fact, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) and everybody else knew it.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) another question. The statement has been made over and again as to something that my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) did express—I have never heard him deny it; I have never heard him say it was not true. But I would like to read what it is, and then ask him if it is a true statement of what he said.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is, I think, poaching a little on one's patience.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is fairly connected with the discussion.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All right, go on; but I must ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) not to interrupt me any more after this.

Mr. FOSTER. Only one other question. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) is reported as having said, in 1893, at the Liberal convention:

I propose to read the resolution which pledges the Liberal party, if returned to power, to give the people of Canada an opportunity to express their views upon this question, and the Government in power must necessarily carry out the expressed will of the people. There is no doubt that that is what the Liberal party would do, for we know their pledges can be trusted.

That, I believe, is the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) as made.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Speaking from memory, I think it is.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, might I add as my question this: Whether my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) meant there, as his words say, that it should be the expressed will, and as the "expressed will" was only the will as was shown in the votes for and against, and as a majority of that vote was in favour of the principle of prohibition, whether he does not think his own words hold him to the "expressed will" as being shown by the majority of those who came out to vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will answer the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) very frankly, that I do not think it does. As I have said, the plebiscite was for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the people upon this question. If the people did not have an opinion or did not express that opinion, the plebiscite does not show the true opinion of the people of this country as expressed in the vote. And, until the responsible advisers of the Crown in this country, can be assured of what they believe to be the opinion of the people, they can only carry that out by their judgment. I say this emphatically: That it would be a folly, and that it would be not consonant with the good government of this country, or with the duty which the Government of this country owes to the people of Canada, if, on the vote as expressed in the plebiscite, this Government was to undertake to put in force a prohibitory law.

Mr. IVES. Will the hon. gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order; sit down.

Mr. IVES. I certainly shall not ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member who has the floor wishes to permit an interruption, and he only has the power to do it, he will be kind enough to sit down and then we will understand he gives the permission.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). And if he does not sit down, he does not allow the interruption.

Mr. FOSTER. We are anxious for information.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You need it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What is the question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives)?

Mr. IVES. The question I wanted to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fisher) is not an offensive one. It is one which, I am sure, he will be glad to answer. It is this: Whether he himself, at the time of the Liberal convention at Ottawa, was aware of the understanding as stated by the right hon. the leader of the Government, that between the different elements of the Liberal party that met there, it was understood that the vote must contain a certain preponderance in favour of prohibition in order to be acted upon?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will answer the hon. gentleman when I come to that. I must really ask these hon. gentlemen to allow me to get on with my speech. I try to be good-natured and to give them every opportunity to satisfy that laudable curiosity of theirs and also to relieve themselves of that uneasiness which seems to affect them. But I must ask them now to make their speeches themselves, and not to interpolate them in mine. Now, I said a few moments ago that we would be lacking in our duty to the people of this country if, on the evidence which is presented to us by this vote on prohibition, we were to conclude that the people of this country were desirous of a prohibitory law to such an extent that it could be enforced. I am not going to go into a long series of quotations to illustrate the opinion of the people on this question. When the temperance people of Canada had an opportunity, as they had on the 29th of September last, to go to the polls and register their convictions in favour of prohibition, I take for granted—and I think it would be an insult to the temperance people of this country to believe otherwise—that every temperance man who was not either absent or sick went to the polls and cast his vote in favour of temperance. If they did not, a much more serious imputation must lie upon them—an imputation which I certainly am not going to lay upon them. I know that at the last moment a good deal of agitation was made and a good deal of work was done on the part of the temperance people to bring out the vote. They had that opportunity, they took advantage of it; and, as far as the results of this plebiscite vote are concerned, it seems to me that it would be folly to assume anything beyond the bare facts as shown by the vote. The temperance people had an abundant opportunity to vote; they had the vote presented to them in exactly the way they wanted. As Mr. Spence said, they owe a debt of gratitude to this Government for the honourable way in which we have fulfilled our pledge to them; and to suppose they did not take advantage of that, to suppose they were so indifferent to the matter that they did not come out to vote, is to insult the temperance people of this country, and I am not going to take part or lot in such an insult. I have seen a great many temperance people since the vote was taken; I have had correspondence with a great many others, and one remarkable fact was that immediately after the vote there was a general consensus of opinion on the part of temperance men as well as others that on that vote no prohibitory law would be passed. That sentiment was almost universal over the length and breadth of the country. It was so universal that afterwards certain leading temperance men complained to me of the fact, saying that it was extraordinary. But, Sir, the common sense of the people of Canada appreciated that the result of that vote was no cause for introducing a prohibitory law—a measure so radical in the way in which it would affect the whole economic condition of the country that it must have for its successful enforcement the great preponderance of the sentiment and practical work of the people of this country behind it. This vote does not show that. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not say that it does. The temperance people themselves do not say that it does. I have here the Alliance resolution. Read the resolution through, and you find the temperance people asking the Government to pass a prohibitory law; but they do not themselves in this statement say that the plebiscite vote justifies such a law. They do not say that the vote is such as to show that the law could be enforced. All they do is to ask that the Government should pass a law. I do not wonder at it. I sympathize with them. The temperance people want prohibition; I do too. They ask for it; they hope to get it. They leave it to the Government, to Parliament, to the public men of the country, to say how they will get that law, and how, after they have got it, it shall be enforced. But, Sir, temperance man as I am, strongly in favour of temperance as I am, long as I have worked in its cause, I stand here, in the full responsibility of my position as a Minister of the Crown, and say that if we were to pass a prohibitory law which had not the overpowering preponderance of the sentiment of the people of Canada in its favour, the passage of that law would not only lead to anarchy, difficulty and danger in the country, but would result in discrediting temperance and prohibition itself to an extent which would not be got over in a generation. It was only a few years ago when one province of Canada, the province of New Brunswick, adopted a prohibitory law. It was done apparently hastily and without due consideration. At one moment the whole license law of that province was swept out of existence. What was the result? Within less than a year the law was repealed, and temperance received a set-back and check in that province which it took a generation to overcome. I venture to say that if this Government were to submit a prohibitory law and this Parliament were to adopt it, and it were to come into effect to-morrow, within a year it would be repealed, and the people of this country would blame the Government and Parliament for having created such a disturbance in the economy of the country to such little effect.

Mr. BERGERON. Why did you spend $250,000 to learn that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because we wanted to find out the exact opinion of the people of this country upon that measure. Because there was a difference of opinion on that point. Temperance people said that Canada was ripe for prohibition; the liquor people said that Canada was not ripe for prohibition; many indifferent people said they did not know anything about it. We wanted to find out the exact position and status of the temperance sentiment of the country, and this vote has shown it; and, showing as it does, I do not feel, on my responsibility as a public man, that I can fail to recognize the conclusion which every sensible man must draw from that vote. Some will say that this has been a waste of public money—that $250,000 has been spent to no advantage. I do not think so. For long years back, in my temperance work in Canada, I have found that the progress which has been made has been made through constant agitation and discussion of the subject. I have found that the best way to secure discussion and agitation has been to bring up what may be called legislative or political action on the part of the temperance people. By bringing the question forward in that way, we could arouse a greater interest in it; we could get men to discuss it who, without that interest, would have left it alone, and would have been utterly indifferent to it. In this view, this plebiscite campaign has done greater good and has brought about a more thorough discussion of the temperance question than it has ever had before in the Dominion of Canada; and I have faith enough in the temperance cause and in the principle of prohibition to feel that the more it is discussed the greater will be its progress, and the nearer will come its final triumph. If for no other reason, I would gladly see the expenditure of a quarter of a million of money to bring that about. But there is another and perhaps a greater result from this plebiscite. It has removed all doubt about the position of this question in the country. We know now that in this country about one-third of the electorate are ardent prohibitionists, devoted men who have the temperance cause sincerely at heart, who are ready to sacrifice their time and go to the polls and declare for it. There were also about one-third of the population who went to the poll and declared they would have none of it, and there was another third who were too indifferent to take the trouble of going to vote. We know now where we are, and the temperance people know what they have to overcome, and where their chief difficulties are. Those who are indifferent never before had the opportunity which they have had of appreciating the consequences of their indifference. If they had only a cold, lukewarm sympathy for temperance, they know now what discredit and discomfort they have brought upon their friends. If their desire was not to see prohibition enforced, they have injured their own side of the question, because they have given the prohibitionists the opportunity of showing their strength in the country to be such that it must be considered in the future.

This is not a party question; it was not brought forward as a party question. When the Plebiscite Bill was passed last year, there were very few in this House who ventured to take any exception to it. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not challenge a division, but helped to put it through. Therefore, I am warranted in stating that it was not a party question, nor was the result a party question. Hon. gentlemen opposite are not now making it a party question in any sense or shape, except in their desire to make a little party capital out of censure of the Government, which has the responsibility of deciding what should be done. It is not a party question, because we find that men of all parties are speaking about it differently. Let me read one quotation out of a great many, but this one I read particularly, because it comes from a gentleman who avows himself an opponent of this Government, who is also a prohibitionist and a man of standing and position in one of the churches of this country. I refer to the Rev. Mr. Ker, of Grace Church, Point St. Charles. Mr. Ker writes as follows:—

I am afraid I do not sympathize with those members of the Dominion Alliance who accuse Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Government of bad faith in the matter of the plebiscite. On the contrary, so far as the Premier is especially concerned, he deserves, to my thinking at any rate, the thanks of the prohibitionists for giving them an opportunity to show what, as a party, they could do at the polls. I make this confession all the more gladly as I did not vote for Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the last election.

This great opportunity—not likely to come again in a hurry—we had on September 28, and the best we could do was to make plain the fact that while somewhat less than 25 per cent of the electors desired prohibition, somewhat more than 75 per cent were, in part, possibly indifferent, and in part actively opposed to it.

Here seems to lie the very centre and crux of the situation. Surely it is idle to beat the air touching "understandings" or "misunderstandings," as to what this or that member of the Government did or did not mean, when the matter was under discussion last year. Unpalatable though the statement may be, it is nevertheless true, that at the present time the vast majority of the electors of Canada are by no means on fire to attain a prohibitory law.

That is the statement of a gentleman of whom the Montreal "Witness" speaks as follows:—

The Alliance does not pretend to consist of members who all think alike. It consists of all genuine prohibitionists, and can excommunicate neither those with whom Dr. Ker rightly differs, nor Dr. Ker himself, who is certainly a genuine prohibitionist.

Then the "Witness" goes on:

Mr. FISHER.

A fair statement of the result of the plebiscite as recorded would be that one-third of the people—possible voters—voted for prohibition; one-third—a little smaller—voted against it, and one-third did not vote.

The "Witness" thus makes identically the same statement that I did in the earlier part of my speech.

There are one or two other questions, Mr. Speaker, on which I would like to say a few words. When the Scott Act is to be adopted, the Act required that 25 per cent. or one-quarter of all the voters on the voters' lists of a particular county should sign a petition in favour of the submission of the Act. This is required, not to adopt the Act, not to adopt prohibition, but before you can submit to the electorate whether they shall adopt the Act or not. Before that question can be submitted to them, 25 per cent of all the electors of the particular constituency in question must sign a petition to submit the Act to the popular vote. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not ask that we should submit a prohibitory law, but they say that we are remiss in our duty because we do not enact one when less than 25 per cent of the voters on the lists voted for it.

Let me refer to another point. We have various license laws in this country. In the province of Quebec the law requires that applicants for a license shall furnish the collector of provincial revenue with a certificate signed by one-quarter of the residential municipal electors, or by a majority of the residential municipal electors, if they number less than fifty of the population of a township or village; and in the cities of Quebec and Montreal an absolute majority of municipal voters residing within the municipal polling district shall signify their opposition to the license, before it can be refused.

This shows that, not a certain number of those who voted, but a certain number of those upon the lists have to express their opinions on the questions submitted. I shall not go into details, but practically the same thing is true in Ontario, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

But hon. gentlemen opposite have been making a good deal out of the plea that the Liberal party holds office on a less or very little greater vote than was given for prohibition in the plebiscite. The facts, however, are unfortunately not with these hon. gentlemen. I have taken the trouble to go through the figures in every constituency in this Dominion, where there was a straight fight, that is, where there was not a three-cornered fight or anything of that kind. Where there is such a fight, it is difficult to estimate how many votes were cast for either the one party or the other. I think it is only fair, therefore, to take those constituencies where there was a fair fight between the two parties; and, taking all those, I find that the Liberal party had 34 per cent of the votes on the lists and the Conservative only 32 per cent, making 66 per cent of the votes on the lists which were actually cast in these constituencies. In other words, while in the plebiscite prohibition had only 22½ per cent of the votes on the voters' lists, in the elections in those constituencies where there was a straight fight, the Liberal party had 34 per cent, and not 28 per cent, as an hon. member so boldly declared the other night. As a matter of fact, in the plebiscite the prohibition party had less than one-quarter of the enrolled vote in its favour, whereas the Government had, in the election of 1896, more than one-third of the enrolled vote, thus presenting a very different contrast from that which hon. gentlemen opposite have been hugging themselves with so often in this debate.

Now, Sir, there is another point I wish to deal with, and it is an important one. A number of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I regret extremely to say, amongst them, are several from the province of Quebec, have been making very rash statements as to the plebiscite vote in the province of Quebec. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) the other night—I think it was he—said that he had proof that there were gross frauds in Quebec in this vote. We know that in the press of Ontario, immediately after the plebiscite, there was a good deal of chaff, and perhaps some little display of bitterness. It was said, for instance, about a week after the plebiscite, that the people in Quebec were still voting. I am not much concerned about these statements; they were, no doubt, the rash utterances of ignorant people. But to see hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec, particularly such hon. members as my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who represent constituencies the people of whom are mainly French Canadians, standing in their places and declaring that the men who were entrusted with the taking of this vote in the province of Quebec were dishonest, had been fraudulent in the carrying out of their duties, seems to me a most extraordinary spectacle. Not that it is necessary for the gentlemen from the province of Quebec to defend the honour of that province, for that honour, I believe, stands unsmirched in this Dominion and elsewhere; but to find these gentlemen showing so little knowledge of the condition of affairs in the province of Quebec as to make such statements, so ignorant of what is going on in their own counties, so ignorant of the character of the men who were entrusted with the taking of this vote, seems most extraordinary. These hon. gentlemen, some of them, come from counties where these frauds are said to have taken place. They must know the returning officers who were accused in these rash statements of having perpetrated frauds. What are these accusations? We had them published in the "Journal" last night, and to show what they were, I will read a few of them:

In every case, without a single exception, fraud was apparent and could be proven.

This is the report of a gentleman who was sent to investigate.

His report showed in detail, that, say, in the county of Quebec, in Poll No. 1, in the parish of Beaupré, such a man as deputy returning officer, that at the day of voting 36 votes were polled, and yet the next day the deputy returning officer would add from 50 to 120 votes against prohibition.

This emissary returned from Quebec and brought a letter purporting to be written by E. Pacaud, editor of "Le Soleil," the leading Liberal newspaper in the district, which contains a promise that the department would offer a position under the Government to the emissary if he did what was requested of him. He did what was required.

In the case of Three Rivers,—

A constituency represented by my hon. friend (Sir Adolphe Caron) who is not in his place, but who is a friend of these hon. gentlemen and one of the leaders of their party——a deputy returning officer did the work only on consideration that he was to be made a forest ranger. This position was promised, and he is at the moment in the woods as ranger, drawing pay from the provincial Liberal government. In another case the deputy returning officer of one of the polling places, believing that the whole thing looked like a farce, as the officer was not sworn, went up to Quebec to ask for instructions as to what was meant. He saw there some of the chiefs of the Liberal party, whose names were given, and asked them what was required. They laughed and told him that if he did not know enough to know that, he had better resign his position and allow others to be appointed. This hint was enough for the gentleman, and the day after the election he put 75 votes in against prohibition.

Mr. IVES. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives) says "hear, hear." I suppose he believes it, does he? Will he rise in his place and make the charge on his responsibility as a member of this House? Will he rise and on the floor of Parliament as a member of this House and upon his responsibility, ask for a committee of investigation? If he does, I promise him he shall have it.

Mr. IVES. Do not be too certain. You may have just that state of facts to face.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All right, let us have it. I can tell the hon. gentleman something about this gentleman. These statements are given on the authority of one Parent.

Mr. FOSTER. Ah, now we are getting it.

Mr. IVES. Where have you sent him?

Mr. BERGERON. Who sent him out to investigate?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The Quebec Alliance, and the Good Government Association of the province in the person of Major E. Bond. He was instructed to find if frauds had been committed, as had been rashly stated. He went and brought back a report to the Alliance, which report was examined. In that report Parent stated categorically the names of the deputy returning officers who, he declared, had committed these frauds; and he gave, categorically, the numbers of the polls, the names of the parishes, the names of the counties, and he gave the number of votes that he said were really polled at these several polls and the number of votes fraudulently inserted by these returning officers.

Mr. BERGERON. Did not he swear to that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He swore to that. And what was the result? Those names and those figures were submitted to me, and I was asked to conduct an investigation into the matter.

Mr. BERGERON. Asked by whom?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. By the committee of the Alliance in the city of Montreal, headed by Mr. John R. Dougall and Mr. Carson, the secretary. I said to these gentlemen that I did not believe a word of it; that I did not believe that men in the province of Quebec who were sufficiently respectable to have been appointed returning officers in the various electoral districts of the province would so far forget their duty as not to swear their subordinate officers—not only neglect their duty but lay themselves open to prosecution and to a penalty of $200 in every case in which they had omitted to swear these officers. Nor did I believe that the men who had been sworn in as deputy returning officers would so far neglect their duty to the public, or were so dishonest as to have done these things charged against them; and, even if they had been so lost to the respect due to the community and to themselves, I did not believe that they would be so rash and foolish as to do these things and thus lay themselves open to a penalty for their crime. I examined the lists which are in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in which the actual and true names of all the returning officers in the province of Quebec are recorded—

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Speaker, I ask—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) rises to a point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. FISHER.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Point of order.

An hon. MEMBER. State your point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, if hon. gentlemen will give me an opportunity to state it, I will state it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen call out in such a riotous way that I have no opportunity to state the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. State it then, and sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, my point of order is that the hon. Minister (Mr. Fisher) having made reference to certain public documents and quoted information from them, should at once lay these documents upon the Table.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). That is not a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The contention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is to this extent right—that when a Minister quotes from public documents, those documents must, as soon as can conveniently be done, be laid on the Table—but not necessarily at the moment.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is not going to turn me from my point. He has deliberately interrupted me—

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Speaker, I claim your protection.

Mr. FOSTER. The point of order is that the hon. member (Mr. Fisher) has insinuated that I rose for the deliberate purpose of breaking his speech. In my character as a representative in this House, I state that that is not so. The hon. gentleman must not impute that motive.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not a point of order.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) mistakes. I have not quoted from any document either of the Government or anybody else. I have stated that I had made an examination of these documents, and the result of that examination shows that these statements of Parent naming the deputy returning officers in the several polls were, one and all, absolutely false and wrong.

There was not a single name given by Mr. Parent to the Alliance in Montreal which coincided with the names really on the lists in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; there was not a single number given as a return at any poll which he said had been fraudulently stuffed, in which the figures coincided with those in the official documents in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The statements made by hon. gentlemen on the floor of the House in this rash manner, based on newspaper reports, based on the reports of a scoundrel who seems to have deceived the men who were employing him, who had not even the common sense to try and find out the names of the returning officers—a thing he could have done without difficulty if he had wished to do so—these statements, Sir, are based, as were the charges made the other night by the hon. member for Picton (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), against my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), on mere newspaper reports which they cannot substantiate, and which they know perfectly well are not correct.

Sir, I want to put this matter right before the people of this country as well as before the House, because I regret to say that a large number of people in Canada have been led to believe that there were men in the province of Quebec so lost to their sense of public duty, so lost to a sense of honesty, so lost to a sense of self-respect, that they would commit these crimes. But, Sir, as a member coming from the province of Quebec, though neither speaking French or being of French origin, I want to tell these hon. gentlemen that they mistake the people of the province of Quebec, and above all the French people of that province, if they believe and assert these things of them. It is true that in the province of Quebec there was a large majority against prohibition, it is true that in the province of Quebec there was poll after poll in which there was no representative of prohibition. Why? Simply because in those particular neighbourhoods there was not a man who believed in prohibition, there was not a man who believed in total prohibition. But, Sir, in those very districts there were hundreds of municipalities and of parishes in which, while the people voted and worked against total prohibition, there is not a single license issued for the sale of liquor. I have a return here of the municipalities in the province of Quebec showing the condition of affairs in that regard. In the whole province there are 928 municipalities, and there are only 225 of those municipalities in which there is any license for the sale of liquor; that is to say, out of the 928 municipalities there are 225, or about 24 per cent only, who have licenses; there are eighteen counties in which there is no license at all within their bounds; there are five counties with only one license; there are eight counties with only two licenses; there are six counties with only three licenses. Only one-tenth of the municipallties in the county of Ottawa have licenses, only one-fifteenth of the municipalities in the county of Pontiac have licenses. Sir, I think Quebec compares pretty favourably with the other provinces of the Dominion. But the people of those municipalities, while they do not want to have licenses in their midst, while they object to the evil, the danger and the uproar which they believe are attendant upon the retail sale of liquor in their own villages, are not in favour of total prohibition; they have expressed that opinion at the polls, and I believe, while I do not agree with them, that their opinion is just as much entitled to respect as the opinion of voters in any other part of the Dominion of Canada.

Just one word more about this Mr. Parent. He represented himself to be in the post office of this city. He was there employed as a temporary clerk. After he made his report and found that the secretary of the Alliance came to Ottawa to verify it, he disappeared. This statement in the Ottawa "Journal" the other night says that he had been sent away by the Minister of the Interior as an immigration agent in the western states. The statement is just as false as the rest. The Minister of the Interior has never employed him, nor given him any promise of employment as an immigration agent. He disappeared because of his conscience, knowing that by reason of his making an affidavit to these lies and slanders, he was liable to prosecution, and that he would have been put through for these lies and slanders had he remained. The man has gone, and probably he will never be seen again in this country.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask my hon. friend a question with reference to these voters' lists? I do not quite understand a portion of his remarks. By an examination of the returned lists and the poll books, he says he has been able to satisfy himself that in no given poll, for instance, was there any irregularity?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, I did not.

Mr. FOSTER. Then how could my hon. friend disprove an assertion that there had been an irregularity at one of the polls by simply looking at the poll books here, unless he were to confront the results as shown in the poll books here with the actual voters or non-voters in the polling district?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman must remember that there is a point of order that I must not quote from the poll books; therefore, I will not quote from them. But the hon. gentleman has entirely misunderstood my point, or he does not choose to take it.

Mr. FOSTER. Give me the benefit of the doubt.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Let me remind the hon. gentleman that I have not in any way or shape stated that the investigations I have made prove that there were no frauds. What I have stated is that Mr. Parent's statement that such and such a returning officer, that John Jones, for instance, at such and such a polling district, had done so and so, is absolutely and entirely discredited and knocked on the head by the fact that John Jones was not the returning officer at that poll. When he says that John Jones stuffed 25 ballots into the ballot box and made a return of 125 against prohibition at that poll, we find that there were not 125 votes against prohibition at that poll, but that there were only 25, or 30, or 40, or whatever the number may have been. These facts show that his statements are absolutely foundationless, that he is a liar, and that we cannot believe him—but the hon. gentleman may believe him if he chooses. I say that the statement which hon. gentlemen opposite have been so rashly flinging on the floor of this House, that the statement which has appeared in the "Evening Journal," are based on the sworn affidavits of a man whose statements, so far as we can verify them, and verify them easily, verify them without the slightest difficulty at all, by the records in the hands of the Government, have been shown and proved to be absolutely false in every individual particular. Therefore, I say that this entire accusation against the people of the province of Quebec falls to the ground, and those hon. gentlemen who have made it ought to acknowledge their fault, and apologize to the people of the province of Quebec.

Now, Sir, this question is one which I do not want to leave here. There are a large number of people in Canada who are disappointed at the result of the plebiscite. I am myself. I have worked for a long time in the cause of prohibition; I have believed there was a large public sentiment in the Dominion of Canada in favour of prohibition; I have believed that that sentiment, if properly manifested, was sufficient to justify a prohibitory law. This result of the plebiscite does not seem to justify it. I believe that in saying that, I have with me all reasonable men of the country, all the sensible men of the country who appreciate the facts of the case and do not try to make these facts square with their desires. I do not blame them for their desires. I have that desire for prohibition as strongly as any of them, but I have a desire for effective prohibition—prohibition, after it is passed in this country, which can be held up to the world as a model to be followed, because it is effective and successful. I want to say that I do not believe that, on the results of this plebiscite, effective prohibition can be had to-day in Canada. I am satisfied, however, from the expressions of opinion I have received from all parts of the country, that, in saying that, I have with me and at my back the great mass of the reasonable people of this country. I cast no reflections upon those gentlemen who are to-day ardently demanding that we shall pass a prohibitory law.

Mr. FISHER.

The Dominion Alliance, which is demanding a prohibitory law, does not commit itself to the statement that this plebiscite vote justifies or demands this law. The hon. gentlemen opposite who are blaming the Government for not introducing a prohibitory law, do not say that the plebiscite vote justifies that law or demands it. They say that they demand it; they want us, as they say, to fulfil our pledges, but they do not pretend that the result of such a vote as this demands that law. Now, then, what is the alternative? There are a large number of earnest, ardent men in this country who, while they feel in their hearts, honestly and squarely, what I have just said, still want something, still want a step in advance, still hope that they can find something which, as a result of the plebiscite vote, may show the progress of temperance sentiment in this country. I am anxious to do the same. I hope that, some day, such a thing may be found, but I confess that, at the present time, the suggestions that have been made to me by some of these men do not appear to me to be practicable. Some want provincial prohibition, some want the Government to take charge of the liquor traffic and carry it on, some propose the enlargement of the Scott Act, so that it will include provinces, as well as counties and municipalities, some desire the introduction of something upon the lines of the South Carolina liquor law, some suggest that we adopt the Gothenburg system of Sweden, others are advocating giving the provinces power to deal with the question. We have only discussed in Canada two points of the prohibition question: one is local option, as exemplified in the Scott Act, and the other is total prohibition. We have never seriously discussed, as a practical problem, any of these other propositions. It might be that after we had discussed them thoroughly, after the people had become thoroughly familiar with them, after they had been thoroughly threshed out in public meetings and the public had had time and opportunity and knowledge to form an opinion upon them, one or other of these plans might be found applicable to the condition of affairs in this country. I am not prepared to say which it would be; I am not prepared to say whether any of them would be applicable, because I feel that before any such new proposition could be fairly brought to a practical application in this country it must be thoroughly discussed for a long time by the people, thoroughly understood by them, and all the pros and cons thoroughly considered. There is, however, one thing which the returns of this plebiscite bring rather prominently forward, and it is the remarkably local character of the vote. In the first place, of course, everybody is familiar with the fact that the province of Quebec is largely against a prohibition Act; at all events that is the way most of them feel to-day. In the second place, we find particular localities in other provinces, for instance, in Ontario, the county of Waterloo, against prohibition. The cities of Toronto and Montreal, of Hamilton and London, and generally the cities, with one or two notable exceptions, are against prohibition. The rural municipalities, as a general rule, are in favour of prohibition. This leads me to think of local option as a thing which, perhaps, is the best alternative, under the circumstances, to total prohibition. I know that a majority of temperance people at first sight, will feel that this is the old story; I know that a majority of people, especially in Ontario, have been condemning local option, and have refused to enforce the Scott Act, and they were in hopes that this country had got to-day within reasonable distance of prohibition. One other remarkable thing, which is noticeable in these returns, is that where local option has been most largely availed of by the people, the prohibitory vote is largest. In Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the vote is overwhelmingly in favour of prohibition. These are parts of the Dominion where local option has been availed of, and where it has been effectively enforced, where they have known the beauties of prohibition, where the people have been educated up to the point of total prohibition. In Quebec where local option is known and has existed in a municipal way only, in Ontario where local option was not greatly availed of, where I do not think there is a single municipality which has it, the vote in favour of prohibition was not nearly so overwhelming. These are things that have led us to two conclusions. The first conclusion is that local option is the solution of the difficulty, in the face of this unequal temperance sentiment in different localities in the country. And, secondly, the conclusion is that where local option exists and has existed for a time sufficient to prove its advantages and benefits, temperance sentiment is educated up to a point where it is ready to take the responsibility of declaring in favour of total prohibition. It seems to me that this is a conclusion and a lesson, which it would be well for Parliament to study and consider, and even although, for the moment, it may be thought by some to be no forward step, though it may be thought by some to be the old story, I feel that it is probably the best solution that to-day offers itself to the people to be adopted for immediate working. There are amendments possible to be made to the Scott Act, but I do not propose to go into them now. The Scott Act has achieved the result of local prohibition. The people think it to be a good Act. I know that in my county, and in other municipalities it has been successful, and very well enforced, and I believe that in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick under it, a temperance sentiment has grown up which has been reflected in this plebiscite. I notice that in other countries in the world where the temperance question is not so far advanced as it is in Canada, where the people are not so thoroughly aware of the harm of intemperance, the Scott Act is held up to them as an example to be followed by these more retrograde countries. I think it is well for us that we should no longer neglect or ignore what has to a certain extent been neglected and ignored, and it is the fact that the advantages of prohibition under the local option system will gradually educate the people up to a point where they will perhaps give their votes, in sufficient numbers, to justify the introduction of a total prohibitory law over the whole country. Now, Sir, I have detained the House at greater length than I intended. I have been carried away somewhat perhaps by the interruptions of hon. gentlemen opposite, but I feel that this question is one which is still in the arena of political fights. It is one which, so long as there is a large number of people in the country, will be in the arena of the political fight. I would like to see it as much as possible divested of party politics. I have always taken that ground at temperance meetings and in temperance discussions, because I have found that, in the case of these questions which are brought into party politics, the party gains, but the question at issue loses. And, Sir, I have seen nothing in the debate which we are now carrying on in this House to change my opinion on that, for I find hon. gentlemen opposite still harping upon this question, not at one with themselves upon prohibition, and only in unison with one another and supporting and endorsing one another in their attacks upon the Government. This being the case, I repeat, that it is better that the question should be kept out of party politics, and only by doing so can we hope it will make substantial progress. Mr. Speaker, I trust that this debate will draw to a close before very long.

Mr. IVES. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) seems to be about to resume his seat, may I remind him of his promise to give me an answer to the question I had the honour of putting to him a little while ago?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.
What was that?

Mr. IVES. I asked, if you were cognizant of the understanding between the different members at the Ottawa convention upon the subject of the vote and action to be taken after the vote. The statement was, that it was understood by the prohibitionists and the anti-prohibitionists who met together in the Ottawa convention, that there must be an actual majority of all the votes on the lists recorded in favour of prohibition, in order to have it acted upon. The question I ask is, whether you were cognizant of that understanding.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has put a question which is evidently agitating the people on the other side of the House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives) must go to the Prime Minister for an answer to the question. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ives) must know perfectly well that the Prime Minister has made a statement here on the floor of this House, and he is bound to accept that statement. I have nothing further to say in the matter, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. gentlemen opposite that, so far as I am personally concerned, I shall endeavour to confine my remarks to as brief a space of time as will enable me to confute, as far as I can, some of the arguments which have been presented to this House in the intricate and rather ingenious cold-storage and cold-water speech which we have listened to from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). I regret that I had not the pleasure of hearing the whole of that speech, but, when I entered the Chamber, the Minister of Agriculture was demanding that hon. gentlemen on this side who take part in the campaign which is now in progress in Brockville, should deal with the question of the Yukon scandals, and he stated that, in the speeches we have already on record in that campaign, no reference was made to this matter. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) may possess his soul in patience. The campaign has not yet been completed, and, before the Brockville election is over, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) and his friends will hear more about these Yukon scandals than they have heard yet, or than they dream of hearing. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) read, evidently to the intense satisfaction of his friends, a telegram which he had received from the Winnipeg Liberal Association, stating that the policy of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and of the Government had been approved and endorsed by those present at a meeting of that organization. Sir, I hold in my hand a report of that meeting which appears in a truly independent paper, the Toronto "Telegram."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. CLARKE. Yes. The Toronto "Telegram" of Tuesday, April 11th, has a special despatch from Winnipeg respecting this meeting and the resolution passed there which seems to have given hon. gentlemen opposite such general satisfaction. Here is the report I refer to:

The Liberal Association meeting last night was considerable of a farce. There was a horde of civil servants present, Dominion and local, including Dr. Blakely, Commissioner McCreary, Cory, A. Martin, Bishop, Elliott, and dozens whom your correspondent might name. Highways and byways were searched for Siftonians for a week previous to the meeting. Bethune, Haney and other speakers denounced the machine tactics of stuffing the meeting with hirelings of the Government, and characterized as a liar a man who had permitted false reports of the last meeting to appear in the "Free Press," which statement was not contradicted by the man aimed at, who was present. The original motion, commending the policy of the Government on the tariff, was passed. The breach between Liberals is wider than ever. Two candidates for vacant judgeships, and candidates for a possible vacancy in the collectorship of customs, were in evidence at the meeting.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is the opinion of an independent representative of the press appearing in an independent newspaper, and it puts a somewhat different complexion upon the proceedings of that meeting than that which the House would be justified in putting upon it from the telegram read by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher).

Sir, after having had the pleasure of reading the speech which the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) delivered at the commencement of this debate, I regretted very much I did not have the privilege of hearing it delivered. I regard it as one of the ablest, one of the most conclusive, and one of the most patriotic speeches that was ever delivered on the floor of this Chamber. It was a speech worthy of the man and worthy of the occasion. I did have the opportunity of listening to some of the replies made to that speech, and I regret very much that they were not spoken from that high plane that was due to the leader of the Opposition, and that we might reasonably have expected from some of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Sunny smiles appeared to be, for the time being at least, abandoned, and language was used with reference to the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) which his long services to the country and to the Empire might well have spared him from listening to. The language of the Premier on that occasion was such as was unbecoming a gentleman—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CLARKE. The language of the Premier on that occasion was, I say, such as was unbecoming a gentleman occupying the position of Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, if I am not in order, I wish that you, Sir, may say so, and I shall take my seat. I wish, Sir, that you, if I am not in order, may state what language I have used that is out of order. I repeat, that the language which the right hon. the Premier used on that occasion was language unbecoming a gentleman occupying the position of First Minister of this country. That language contained such expressions as "reckless," "extravagant," "unreliable," "ever ready to pander to passion and prejudice," "ever ready to gamble away the most sacred interests of this country for the chance of party advantage." Sir, the record which the hon. the leader of the Opposition has made during his long and honourable career in the service of his country does not justify the use of such language respecting him. And the lieutenant of the Prime Minister, the gentleman who sits to his left (Sir Richard Cartwright), not to be outdone by his leader, used such violent language that the hon. the Speaker of the House had to call him to order for it, and force him to retract it. Is it creditable to the Commons of Canada that a man occupying the distinguished position of the leader of the Opposition should be assailed by political opponents in such virulent language as I have described? What is the House to think of the Minister of Trade and Commerce describing the leader of the Opposition as a mischievous demagogue? Sir, that language is unworthy of the gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) who gave it utterance. It is quite evident, Mr. Speaker, that the speech of the leader of the Opposition must have been felt keenly by hon. gentlemen opposite. They must have writhed beneath the sledge-hammer blows which that veteran parliamentarian dealt out to them, and not being able to meet his charges by fair argument, they resorted to abuse. But, Sir, after having abused the leader of the Opposition and the party of which he has been the able and eloquent lieutenant or leader for the last thirty years, these hon. gentlemen, when opportunity offered, have been only too glad to make a complete volte face, and to accept and adopt the policy of which the hon. leader of the Opposition was such an eloquent and able exponent, and to claim that policy as their own. Prior to the 23rd of June, 1896, what was the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and what is their policy to-day? At that time the representative men of the Liberal party went from one end of this Dominion to the other, exhibiting on banners which every person might read, the principles which they proposed to carry with them into the government of this country, if the people reposed confidence in them. They had a policy to suit every province, every county, almost every township of Canada. Emblazoned on some of their banners was to be found "Unrestricted Reciprocity;" on others "A tariff for revenue;" on others "Purity of government;" on others "No more superannuation—a cessation of the alleged abuses in connection with the administration of the superannuation fund." I might enumerate a dozen or twenty banners which these hon. gentlemen carried in their appeals to the country prior to the 23rd of June, 1896. If these hon. gentlemen went through this country to-day exhibiting the banners which did service for them prior to the 23rd of June, 1896, and which were furled immediately afterwards, what a ludicrous spectacle they would present! Every pledge, every principle, every promise they made prior to that time has been abandoned and ignored. What would be thought of a procession of hon. gentlemen opposite carrying aloft such banners as these: The right hon. Premier carrying a banner with the legend emblazoned upon it, "The last vestige of protection must be removed from the tariff"; the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) carrying a banner emblazoned with "Retrenchment, reduction of taxation, no increase in debt"; the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) carrying a banner emblazoned with "Purity of administration—public works not to be let without competition"; the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) carrying a banner with the motto, "A tariff for revenue only"; the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) carrying a banner on which is emblazoned "Down with nepotism"; the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) carrying one declaring in favour of "The independence of Parliament"; the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) carrying one respecting the superannuation fund; the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) carrying one with the legend "A plebiscite—the will of the people to be respected"; and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) carrying aloft one emblazoned with the motto "Unrestricted reciprocity." Such a combination, if it paraded the country to-day, would be laughed at and jeered at from one end of the Dominion to the other. They would far excel that famous ragged regiment of Falstaff's of which we have all read. After the election of the 23rd of June, 1896, for some time no banners were hoisted, until the banner of buccaneers and pirates at length made its appearance—the banner on which was emblazoned "Business is business." But the unbusiness-like methods of the Government speedily brought that banner into ridicule; and now, that banner having been furled, the only one exhibited with which hon. gentlemen feel any reasonable confidence in appealing to the country is the banner with "Cold storage" on it. That is the only policy hon. gentlemen have left to-day on which they think they have any chance to make a favourable appeal to the country.

We had an elaborate speech on the question of cold storage by the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon. But in all honesty and fairness, I appeal to this House that that hon. gentleman should take no special credit to himself for what has been accomplished in the development of the system of cold storage. When that hon. Minister was not a member of this House at all, his predecessors in office, some of whom he has had the courtesy to refer to this afternoon, were perfecting that system of cold storage, and, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture deserves credit for what he has done—and he does—it is the credit that is due to a man who, coming into office, and finding a department honestly and efficiently administered, has carried out the policy of his predecessors as far as he could. It must not and cannot be forgotten that the Departments of Agriculture, both in this Dominion and in the province of Ontario, were instituted by the same man, Sir John Carling. He it was who, on the motion of two Conservatives in this House, established the Department of Agriculture and the experimental farms which have done so much to improve the farming of the country, and to give our farmers a better knowledge of the requirements of other markets, and to enable them to compete with the farmers of other lands in those markets. The late Minister of Agriculture provided not only the machinery, but the brains as well, for it was he who secured for this country the invaluable services of a gentleman who is practically and de facto the head of the Department of Agriculture to-day; and the hon. Minister of Agriculture did only simple justice to Professor Robertson when to him he attributed the very great success which has attended the efforts of that department in promoting and developing the system of cold storage which the hon. Minister's predecessors set in motion. But, Sir, if the policy of which hon. gentlemen opposite were the exponents for so many years had prevailed, we would not have required the elaborate cold storage system which is necessary to-day. Those hon. gentlemen, in season and out of season, from one end of the year to the other, proclaimed that the best market for the farmers of Canada was to be found, not across the Atlantic, but across the border in the country to the south of us; and it was because the leaders of the Conservative party unswervingly directed the attention of the farmers of Canada to the markets of the old land as the greatest and most profitable markets for them, that the cold storage system was rendered necessary, and that the trade between this country and the old country in agricultural products has so rapidly and satisfactorily increased.

May I be permitted to refer to what was accomplished before the Minister of Agriculture took office in regard to the cold storage system? That system was introduced by the Dominion Government in 1894. In 1895 cold storage was provided on the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway trains running into Montreal, and arrangements were made in that city for keeping cold and chilled the provisions brought by those trains until they were placed on board ship. In 1895 nearly a dozen steamships were secured to carry produce in cold storage across the Atlantic to the seaports of Liverpool, Avonmouth and Glasgow. In 1896 the late Minister of Agriculture had made further arrangements and special provisions for carrying in cold storage butter at 10 shillings a ton, and cheese at 5 shillings a ton in addition to the ordinary freight charges. Under the direction of Professor Robertson, the late Government purchased butter and shipped it to England to demonstrate to the farmers of this country the fact that there was an unlimited market for it there, provided it was made properly and sent in proper condition. The Minister of Agriculture has called attention to the rapid and satisfactory progress made in the butter trade during the last few years; but he did not tell this House that during the years from 1893 to 1896 the export of butter from Canada to England had increased no less than five-fold. Surely, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts, the hon. Minister of Agriculture can only claim a moderate share of the credit which has attended the operations of the policy which was not initiated by him, and which has only been carried out and elaborated in his department.

In the contract which was made by the late Government respecting our fast Atlantic steamship line, elaborate conditions were inserted for cold storage apartments to carry the produce of this country. And if it had not been for the bungling policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, that line would be in existence to-day, amply supplied with cold storage facilities, and would have been a very substantial benefit to our farmers in the development of their trade with the old land. As a matter of fact, wherever hon. gentlemen opposite have adhered closely to the policy of their predecessors they have done well, but wherever they have branched out in any other line they have done badly. If our trade in agricultural products with the old country has developed with amazing rapidity, it is due to the adherence of hon. gentlemen opposite to the policy of their predecessors, including the advantage and opportunities given that trade by means of the development of the cold storage system.

The Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne makes reference to the prosperity which obtains in this country. I am sure that we all rejoice at the reasonable measure of prosperity which prevails among us to-day, but as has been pointed out time and again upon this side, this prosperity is not due to any act or policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is due to the fact that we were blessed and favoured during the past two years with bountiful crops, while our fellowmen in other parts of the world were not so favoured, with the result that we not only had abundant crops when other countries were short, but our crops realized higher prices in 1896, 1897 and 1898 than for many years previous. And if, as the result of increased prices and abundant crops, our farmers have become more prosperous, surely it is not for hon. gentlemen to thrust themselves in the place that properly belongs to the Giver of all good and take credit for the bounteous harvests which He vouchsafed to this country, and for the consequent prosperity, due to His beneficence, which prevails among our farming community?

These hon. gentlemen, when in Opposition, professed to believe that the affairs of this country were being managed extravagantly, that there was too much money squandered, and that our money was being lavishly and foolishly expended. Yet the record they have made during the past two or three years since they have been in office shows that they have not been able to carry on the affairs of the country as economically as did their predecessors, and that they have been even more lavish in their expenditures. In 1896, the expenditure on account of the consolidated fund was $36,949,142; in 1898 it was $38,832,525, or an increase of $1,883,383 in the year 1898. Their receipts on account of consolidated fund increased from $36,618,590 in 1896 to $40,555,238 in 1898, or an increase of $3,936,648. And yet we are asked to congratulate ourselves that this Government, which came into office with so many professions of economy, has only succeeded in having an actual surplus, at the end of the last fiscal year, of $1,722,712 out of these extraordinary receipts of $40,555,238. Is it not positively absurd for the hon. gentlemen to claim the credit for having a surplus, when during the past two years they have largely increased the debt of the country? In 1896, the debt was $258,497,432. But at the end of 1898 it was $263,956,398, or an increase of $5,458,966. Sir, is there any matter for congratulation on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite in the fact that, ignoring all their pledges of economy and retrenchment, they spent during the past year on account of consolidated fund $1,883,383 more than their predecessors spent in 1886, and that during the same time they also increased our public debt by no less a sum than $5,458,966?

The hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), in an address delivered at Toronto last week or the week before, spoke with confidence of the increased surplus which would be at the disposal of the Government at the end of the present fiscal year. Well, if he should have a larger surplus at the close of the financial year ending 30th of June than he had at the end of the last fiscal year, to what is that fact to be attributed? Simply to the fact that he is taking a larger amount of taxes out of the pockets of the people than he did before. Will he dig any of that surplus out of the ground? Will he extract any of it from the waves of the ocean? Has he the touch of a Midas, which transforms everything it comes in contact with into gold? Not at all. This surplus will be the result of more taxation taken out of the pockets of the workingmen and the great mass of the consumers of the country. Their tobacco and sugar will have to pay more than their fair share of the amount required to make up the surplus.

The professions made by these hon. gentlemen when in Opposition confront them today. The right hon. Prime Minister, in Toronto, said:

The Conservatives say to us, if you were to come to power, you would not be able to decrease the expenditure and practise economy.

Time has justified the truth of this prediction. Then he added:

I do not believe that that would be difficult. It would not be difficult to economize one, two or three million dollars.

Well, when the right hon. gentleman made that deliverance in Toronto in 1893, the figures then available showed that the expenditure on consolidated fund amounted, for 1893, to $36,814,052. In 1896, three years later, when the Conservative Government went out of office, that expenditure amounted to $36,949,142, or an increase of only $135,000 in three years. But in 1898, after the right hon. gentleman had been scarcely two years in office, despite his promises to economize to the extent of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, or $3,000,000, we find that the expenditure on consolidated account had increased from $36,814,052 in 1893 to no less than $38,832,525 in 1898, or an excess of expenditure in 1898 over 1893 of $2,018,473, and of $1,883,383 as compared with 1896, the last year of the Conservative Administration.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) too, was a great economist when he occupied a seat on this side. He was then wont to declaim against the extravagance and recklessness of the financial administration of the Conservative party. What did he say in this Chamber on the 28th of March, 1894? He said:

Canada has no business, and never had, to spend $36,000,000 or $37,000,000 a year. It is a monstrous thing, properly understood, and wholly apart from the amount of real taxation paid by us, that an expenditure of $36,000,000 or $37,000,000 should be saddled on 5,000,000 people in the position of the people of Canada.

Well, that hon. gentleman has been an important member of the Administration which has been in office for the past two years, and what is the record he has to show? Since 1896 they have increased the expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund account by nearly $2,000,000. The total disbursements made by the Government of Canada in the year 1893—the figures which were available to the Minister of Trade and Commerce when he made the statement which I have just quoted—were $40,853,727. And, Mr. Speaker, for the year ending the 30th June last, the total disbursements, according to the official statement, were no less than $45,334,281. And yet there does not appear to be a wave of trouble rolling across the peaceful breast of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, notwithstanding the fact that the expenditure chargeable to consolidated fund account in 1898 showed an increase of $2,018,473, as compared with 1893; while the total disbursements of 1898, as compared with those of 1893, showed an increase of no less than the enormous sum of $4,480,554. Sir, when the practices of these hon. gentlemen are compared with their precepts a wide difference is seen; there is an aching void which they will find it very difficult indeed to fill.

But, Mr. Speaker, we are asked to congratulate the country upon the prosperity which at present attends the manufacturing industries of Canada. I am sure that it must be gratifying to every hon member of this House to learn, and I believe it is a fact, that our manufacturing industries are prosperous. It is particularly gratifying to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that this state of things happily prevails, considering that that prosperity, as has been pointed out again and again during the course of this debate, is due not to anything hon. gentlemen opposite have done for those industries, but rather to the fact that they did not have the courage of their convictions, that they have abandoned their policy respecting those industries and have left them severely alone. If those industries are prosperous, that fact is a tribute to the wisdom and patriotism of the Conservative party, under whose policy they were established and have been developed. There were two industries specially selected by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell, East Prince, who moved the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, whose eloquent address on that occasion was so deservedly eulogized by the hon. leader of the Opposition and also by the leader of the Government. The hon. gentleman said :

Why, what is the story that we hear from all quarters ? It is that the mills and the factories of this country are all in active operation, some of them running night and day, many of them working overtime, in the effort to fill orders that are coming in fast upon them. I read, only the other day, concerning the Nova Scotia Steel Company, which employs some 700 workmen, that an important order came in from the Intercolonial Railway. They were obliged to say : We cannot fill it. Another order came in and they said : We have more work on hand than we can possibly get through in three months. I have read recently that the Massey Manufacturing Company, of Toronto, employing no less than 2,200 workmen, has done such a prosperous business in the last year that they found themselves in a position to give, and did voluntarily of their own motion, give their workmen an increase of 10 per cent in their wages. I may be wrong, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot remember any circumstance of that kind during the eighteen years of the "glorious National Policy."

Sir, the memory of the hon. member for East Prince (Mr. Bell) must be a short one, for, if he will look back over the history of the manufacturing industries of this country from 1879 to 1896, he will find that time and time again, in almost every branch of industry increases of wages had been given as a result of increased prosperity. But, Sir, the hon. member for East Prince was unfortunate, in my humble judgment, in selecting these two industries as showing the result of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. Is it not a fact that the policy which prevailed respecting the Nova Scotia steel outfit remains to-day practically as it was in 1896 ? Have hon. gentlemen destroyed by one iota the protection given to that industry ?

Mr. CLARKE.

Mr. WOOD. Two dollars and a half a ton taken off steel.

Mr. CLARKE. If the Government have taken $2.50 off steel, they have added $1 per ton to the bounty for the manufacture of pig iron, and they have made many other changes in the tariff, the net result of which is to give substantially greater protection to this industry. Under these circumstances, how can hon. gentlemen opposite take any credit to themselves for the prosperity of that great industry in the maritime provinces ? We need only refer to the pages of "Hansard" to find the denunciations, again and again repeated, of hon. gentlemen opposite against that principle of protection in the tariff which gave to such industries as the Steel Company of Nova Scotia a bounty upon its output to enable it to develop that industry and give employment to scores and hundreds of workingmen. The other example of prosperous industry referred to by the hon. gentleman from East Prince is the great Massey manufacturing industry in Toronto. As one of the representatives of the constituency in which that industry is situated, I am pleased to know that that industry is prosperous. I am especially pleased to know that without resort being had to a strike, the owners of that concern voluntarily increased the wages of their workingmen. To their eternal credit be it said that they did so ; and if other employers throughout the Dominion would consult their best interests they would, when opportunity offered, willingly increase the wages of their employees instead of being compelled, sometimes by harsh measures, to do so. But, Sir, if there is one industry more than another that is the child of the National Policy, if there is one industry more than another that has been fostered, developed and extended under the benign influence of that policy, that industry is the Massey-Harris manufacturing concern. The products of that great factory have an enviable reputation not only throughout the Dominion, but beyond the sea, throughout the wide world. I need not remind this House that that industry needed assistance, that it needed support, that it needed nursing in its early days when it was smaller and weaker than it is at present ; and that the necessary support and assistance were given to it in spite of the denunciations of hon. gentlemen opposite, who, in season and out of season, declared that the Massey Manufacturing Company were of the "rascals great" who were bleeding the farmers of this country white. But notwithstanding such denunciations, that and kindred industries throughout the Dominion were developed and promoted, and their interests conserved under the National Policy ; and since hon. gentlemen came into office they have had sense enough not to interfere with the tariff upon agricultural implements. The Massey-Harris Company to-day, in addition to having the same tariff protection that they had before, have additional protection, or what is equivalent to it, in the changes made in the tariff since this Government came into power. And if, as a result of the additional protection, that industry is prosperous, what right have hon. gentlemen opposite to take credit for it? They have abandoned their opposition to the imposition of protective duties to foster such industries as this, and have adopted the policy of their opponents. The prosperity is the result of Conservative policy, and these hon. gentlemen have no right to claim credit for it.

I shall read a list of the leading industries of Toronto, and I challenge my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), or any other gentleman on that side to say, notwithstanding their professions of a desire to introduce a revenue tariff, notwithstanding their pretensions of a desire to bring about free trade as they have it in England, to point out any change in the tariff made by the Government since 1896 that affects these industries injuriously. Each and every one of them receives at least as large a measure of protection as it received in 1896. And yet hon. gentlemen have—what shall I call it?—the temerity to address this House and the country, and say: "We have done this, this prosperity is due to us," when the world and the country know that these industries are prosperous because they have left them alone. Now, let me read this list of industries: Agricultural implements, iron-work, stoves, furnaces, radiators, engines and boilers, castings, musical instruments, bicycles, furniture, boots and shoes, biscuits and confectionery, lithographed and printed matter—these are the leading industries.

Mr. WOOD. Where are they?

Mr. CLARKE. Well, they are not situated in the city of Hamilton; they are situated in the city of Toronto. These are the leading industries in the city of Toronto; they are, I am happy to say, all of them prosperous, due, I repeat again, to the fact that the tariff under which they were nurtured, under which they prospered, the National Policy of this country, has been left severely alone by the hon. gentlemen.

Now, Mr. Speaker, reference is also made to the immigration which has come to this country since the hon. gentlemen opposite assumed office. I hope, Sir, that Canada will always welcome the worthy, the industrious, the law-abiding of all nationalities and of all creeds to its shores. But in view of the increased expenditures which are being made, especially in the mother land across the sea, I speak for a great many hon. members in this House and electors throughout the country, when I say that we would much prefer to see a larger number of people coming this way who speak our language and know something of our institutions and laws. The immigrants which the Minister of the Interior has succeeded in settling in the North-west, will, I hope, do well; but I say that the policy of bringing out colonies of foreigners and settling them together in the North-west, is a policy which is not in the best interests of this country, and that the efforts of the immigration department should be directed, as far as possible, to bringing our own kith and kin across the Atlantic by pointing out to them the advantages which they will obtain by settling in the Dominion, and by securing their co-operation and assistance in developing the resources of this country. We have had pretty nearly enough, for the time being at any rate, of this foreign immigration to Canada; and I hope we will have more of our own people coming to us in the future, and fewer foreigners.

Sir, hon. gentlemen opposite also take credit for what they call the cessation of the exodus.

Mr. PENNY. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman how many of our kith and kin were brought out to this country when the previous Government were paying $1.75 a head for immigrants?

Mr. CLARKE. I have not got the figures in my notes, but I am sure if the hon. gentleman will consult the official records in the library he will be able to obtain the information that he desires. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot ignore, they cannot blot out, the record of their leaders' utterances in days gone by, and if an exodus did take place from this country it was due to the fact that the leaders of hon. gentlemen opposite were booming and praising Kansas and Texas, and other states. But let me say one word about this exodus. It is claimed by hon. gentlemen opposite that the exodus has ceased. We are all delighted, if that is the case; but not one hon. gentleman opposite has told us what means have been adopted to cause this exodus to cease. If they have succeeded in giving employment in our factories, it is because they have ignored their promises to wipe out protection. What have they done to stop this alleged exodus? Unfortunately, the official figures do not bear out, in their entirety, the statements which hon. gentlemen opposite have made respecting this exodus. From the United States official figures we find that the value of settlers' effects entering the United States from Canada in 1895 was $1,293,000; in 1896, $1,581,000. For the two years there was an average value of settlers' effects entering the United States of $1,437,000. Now, take the average for the last two years since the hon. gentlemen opposite have been in power. In 1897, the value of settlers' effects entering the United States was $1,175,000; and in 1898, $964,000, or an average of $1,070,000 of settlers' effects which have gone from Canada into the United States during 1897-98. Sir, if the exodus has ceased, will hon. gentlemen explain to me why it is that these figures are to be found in the official reports of the United States immigration department, and why it is that, notwithstanding their allegation, immigrants are still going to the United States from the Dominion of Canada?

Mr. Speaker, there are one or two other matters that I would like to refer to before taking my seat, and one of them is the question of preferential trade. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture stated that at the meeting of the Winnipeg Liberal Association, held the other evening, the Government's preferential trade policy was endorsed. I am in favour myself of preferential trade, as I understand the term; but I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite what preference the products of Canada get under their policy in the British markets to-day? Our products get no preference there except the preference that ties of affection and esteem for the Dominion of Canada and the excellence of the products themselves give them. What preference have these products got by anything hon. gentlemen opposite have done? None whatever, Mr. Speaker. Our products during the National Policy period had exactly the same preference that they have in the British markets to-day, and if the exports of Canada have increased largely during the past two years, it has been owing, as I have already said, to the policy which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, when in power, persistently advocated and pursued, believing that the markets of the old land were the best and the greatest markets for our products. Every effort and all the energy of the previous Administration were bent in the direction of impressing our farmers with that fact. While hon. gentlemen opposite take credit for and congratulate themselves upon the increased exports of agricultural products to the old country, they overlook or ignore the fact that that increase is necessarily the result of the policy advocated by their predecessors in office. Sir, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce was, in season and out of season, prepared to denounce the National Policy as being the greatest curse this country had ever experienced. On one occasion he said:

I have always said that the National Policy was a Yankee device, imitated from the Yankees, and in fact a benefit to them chiefly.

That was the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in this House on the 26th of April, 1897, less than two years ago. He was then defending the sham preferential tariff which the Government proposed at that time to put in force, and which has been in force in this country ever since. A sham preferential tariff it is, and nothing more, and I will try and prove it from the lips of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Speaking in this House, as appears on page 1245 of "Hansard," 1897, he said:

I have here the Trade and Navigation Returns, which show the practical working of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. These returns show that in the very last year of their term of office we exported to England, apparently, $66,000,000 worth of our products, we exported to the United States $44,000,000; we bought from England $32,-

Mr. CLARKE.

000,000 worth, and from the United States $58,000,000 worth. There, if you will, is a genuine practical discrimination to an enormous extent against England and in favour of the United States.

And then he adds:

I have always said that the National Policy was a Yankee device, imitated from the Yankees, and in fact a benefit to them chiefly, and here is proof of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will take the last official returns of the trade and commerce of this country and show you why I reach the same conclusion in regard to this preferential policy which that hon. gentleman reached in reference to the National Policy: I have here the Trade and Navigation Returns which show the practical working of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. These returns show that in the very last year of their term of office, 1898—it is not the last year, Mr. Speaker, of their term of office, but it is pretty nearly their last year—we exported to England $104,998,818 worth of our products, and we exported to the United States $45,705,336. We bought from England $32,500,917, while we bought from the United States $78,705,590, showing a genuine and practical discrimination, to an enormous extent, against England and in favour of the United States. Am I not justified in altering the language of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in this House less than two years ago, and applying it in this way: "I say that the preferential policy is a Liberal device imitated from some Grit, and in fact a benefit to the United States rather than in the old country?" Well Sir, let us see how this tariff has worked out so far as it advantages the old country. The House is familiar, it has been repeated again and again, with the volume of imports and exports between this country and the United States and this country and the old country, but I want to show that the adoption of the National Policy was not inimical to the interests of British manufacturers, as hon. gentlemen on the other side have charged. The average annual imports into the Dominion of Canada, of goods entered for consumption from 1880 to 1896, inclusive, the National Policy period, were as follows:—

AVERAGE ANNUAL IMPORTS.

SUMMARY.

Average duties collected on all imports from Great Britain and the United States respectively, on goods entered for consumption in Canada :

For 17 years, 1880 to 1896 (inclusive)—

| Great Britain ..... | 20·46 |
| United States ..... | 12·63 |

These figures show that the average rate of duty collected on all imports from Great Britain entered for consumption during the National Policy period, when no preference was given, was $20.76 per $100 in value; and for the year 1898, when the preferential tariff was partially in force, the rate of duty was $20.46 per $100 in value, showing the munificent reduction of 30 cents per each $100 in value, or three-tenths of one per cent. These figures also show that the average rate of duty collected on all imports entered for consumption from the United States, during the National Policy period—and the National Policy was denounced by hon. gentlemen opposite because, as they alleged, it discriminated against the mother land—was $14.42 per $100 in value, while for the year 1898 it was only $12.63 per each $100 in value, or a reduction in duty of $1.79 per $100 in value, equivalent to one and eight-tenths per cent. The average reduction in duty on all imports from Great Britain in the last year was three-tenths of one per cent, and the average reduction in duty on goods from the United States was one and eight-tenths of one per cent. So much for the success of the efforts of hon. gentlemen in their preferential tariff. But it may be said that I have taken the total volume of imports entered for consumption, free goods as well as dutiable goods. Let us see how the tariff affects dutiable goods coming from the old country and coming from the United States respectively.

DUTIABLE IMPORTS FROM GREAT BRITAIN.

|         | Dutiable Goods. | Free Goods. | Duty Collected. | Per cent. |
|---------|-----------------|-------------|-----------------|-----------|
| 1896... | $24,366,179    | $8,613,563 | $7,358,514     | 30·20     |
| 1897... | 20,217,422      | 9,194,766   | 6,205,366       | 30·69     |
| 1898... | 22,556,479      | 9,944,438   | 6,649,428       | 29·47     |

DUTIABLE IMPORTS FROM UNITED STATES.

|         | Dutiable Goods. | Free Goods.  | Duty Collected. | Per cent. |
|---------|-----------------|--------------|-----------------|-----------|
| 1896... | $29,101,646    | $29,472,378 | $7,767,992     | 26·68     |
| 1897... | 30,482,509      | 31,166,532   | 8,147,075       | 26·72     |
| 1898... | 38,063,960      | 40,641,630   | 9,941,624       | 26·01     |

During the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1898, the full preferential tariff did not come into force. The preference given to goods from Great Britain in that year was only 12½ per cent, and the average duty paid was 29·47 per cent.

If the full preference contemplated under the tariff of 1897 has been in force, the average rate of duty on dutiable goods from Great Britain would have been 25·26 per cent, as against an average of 26·01 per cent on imports from the United States, or a preference of ⅓ of 1 per cent, or 75 cents on every hundred dollars of dutiable goods. What an advantage the British manufacturer has, to be sure!

Now, Mr. Speaker, these figures are, to the best of my belief, correct. I challenge an examination of them by hon. gentlemen opposite, and if it can be shown that I have made any error in my calculations, I shall deem it my privilege, as well as my duty, to make the correction. I have taken the greatest care in the preparation of these figures, and I believe them to be absolutely accurate. The net result of this whole preferential business is, that the British manufacturer, when the full preferential duty of 25 per cent is in force, will have an advantage over his American rival of 75 cents lower duty on every hundred dollars' worth of goods. I wish to give a few short quotations to the House to show what is thought, by those who are more competent to judge of this tariff than I am, of the result of the preference to the manufacturers of the old land. I shall first quote no less an authority than the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), and there is no man in this House who will question the ability of that hon. gentleman. He is reported in the "Globe" of December 13th, 1898, to have said, in a lecture on Abraham Lincoln, delivered in Washington, as follows:—

Then their commercial attitude towards the United States was characterized by a liberality which had not been extended to them in return. They gave American imports entry at an average duty of 12½ per cent. The rate of duty upon dutiable imports from the United States was less than from Great Britain or any other country. This liberal trade policy had resulted in the importation for consumption of $78,000,000 worth of American goods last year ; while under the restrictive policy of the United States they had been permitted to export to that country of the products of Canada less than $40,000,000. They had consumed last year of American manufactures over $35,000,000, a sum nearly $7,000,000 in excess of their consumption of British manufactures. They had bought more of the products of the farm from the United States than they had sold to that country by three-fold.

Speaking before the Merchants' Club at Chicago, on February 11th, 1899, and explaining the higher ratio of increase of business between Canada and the United States, as compared with the increase of trade between Canada and the mother country, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) further said :

The explanation for the higher ratio of increased imports from the United States is found in the fact that classes of goods imported from the two countries are to a large extent distinct in character, so that the reduction of duties upon the classes imported from England does not appreciably affect the demand for the classes imported from the United States.

Notwithstanding the differential duties of 12½ per cent in favour of England during the past year, the rate of duty upon dutiable imports for consumption from England was 29·06, while the rate of duty upon dutiable imports for consumption from the United States was 25·04.

The "Monetary Times," one of the greatest commercial authorities in Canada, and an authority often quoted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and his colleagues as one that ought to be respected in this House, had this to say, on March 24th, 1899, with regard to the preferential tariff :

There are within its folds two preferences, one direct, avowed, the creation of design ; the other unavowed, unintended, but not the less direct, and far more effective. The second preference is in the free list. The avowed and intended preference is a difference of 25 per cent in the duties, in favour of Great Britain ; the unavowed, unintended, incidental preference is freedom from taxes. This freedom is not in terms exceptional ; nominally it applies to all, but in operation it favours the country which happens to supply the largest number of free articles. That country is the United States. It so happens, not by intention, but as a fact. This free list quite overbalances the other and only designed preference, with the result that a tariff which was intended to favour England really favours the United States.

How do hon. gentlemen opposite expect to secure reciprocity with the United States, after having given them for nothing so much of real advantage and preference during the past two years and in advance of negotiations ?

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, when you left the Chair at six o'clock, I was endeavouring to point out from figures which I quoted that this preferential trade policy, for which hon. gentlemen opposite take such credit, and to which they attribute so much of the prosperity which has visited the country during the past two years, is not really a preference to any appreciable degree to the manufacturers of the old land. The hon. gentlemen opposite attributed the increase in the exports of Canadian produce to England of $38,308,530 during the past two years to the operation of that preferential tariff, and to the good feeling towards Canada which that tariff had caused. But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of the House to this fact : that no preferential tariff exists between the United States and Great Britain ; that British goods coming into the United States are taxed just as the goods coming from any other foreign country ; that no preference is given and no preference is asked ; that, notwithstanding that fact, the exports of the products of the United States to Great Britain during the past two years have increased by the enormous sum of $135,118,813. I would like to ask hon. gentlemen opposite to what they attribute that enormous increase in the exports of the United States to Great Britain—exports which were mainly agricultural products—unless it be to the fact, which I endeavoured to make plain this afternoon, that the United States, as well as this country, had been blessed during the last two years with abundant crops, while other parts of the world were less favoured. The increase in the exports from the United States to Great Britain in 1898 as compared with 1896 amounted to 29 per cent more than the total exports from Canada to Great Britain during the year 1898. And, Mr. Speaker, before passing from this subject, I might also draw the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to this further fact, that while the imports from Great Britain into the United States in 1896 amounted to $169,963,434, the imports in 1898 fell off, and only amounted to $109,138,365. There was a decrease in the imports into the United States from Great Britain of $60,825,069 in 1898 as compared with 1896. These figures show that in that time the exports from the United States to Great Britain increased 33½ per cent, while the imports from Great Britain to the United States decreased 35½ per cent. In view of these figures I think it can hardly be claimed that the United States exporters of produce suffered in any degree because of the existence of this so-called preferential tariff on this side of the line.

Now, this afternoon the hon. Minister of Agriculture referred to the gratifying expansion which has taken place in our bacon and ham export trade during the past ten or twelve years. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in the speech he delivered a few evenings ago on the Address, also referred to the increased exports in these food products. I am sure hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will congratulate the country on this prosperous state of affairs. But, Sir, it would baffle the wit of man to conceive the reason why hon. gentlemen opposite take any credit to themselves for this condition of things. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking on this subject the other night, said :

Up to the present, I am bound to say, that without in the least intending it, the United States have been, on the whole, unconscious benefactors to the people of Canada. The policy they have adopted, in my judgment—and I know whereof I affirm—has done more, fairly considered, to raise the standard of farming throughout our provinces to the highest plane, than it has in the United States or than a hundred agricultural colleges should have done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this statement is so completely at variance with statements made by the same hon. gentleman in this House from time to time on previous occasions, that one is almost astonished at it. The fact that the export trade in bacon and hams has increased from $200,000 ten or twelve years ago to $8,500,000 in 1898, is a proof that that branch of agricultural industry at least is prosperous. But, Sir, our farmers were taught by hon. gentlemen opposite during the long period they were in Opposition, that there could be no great degree of prosperity in this country if our products were kept out of the United States markets. The Minister of Trade and Commerce and his friends declared that no great prosperity could be obtained for the people of Canada until we established friendly relations with the people of the United States, and obtained access to their markets. Now, our farmers have been kept out of the American markets during the past eight or ten years. Since the passage of the McKinley Bill they have been prohibited from sending large quantities of barley, pease, and other coarse grains to that country, for which they had found a market there previously ; and when hon. gentlemen on this side of the House endeavoured to compensate the farmers of Canada for the loss they had sustained by being deprived of that market, by placing a substantially heavier duty on meat products—on pork and beef—they met with the most bitter opposition from hon. gentlemen opposite. The policy of the Conservative party at that time was to provide a compensation for our farmers for the loss they had sustained by being deprived of the American market. At that time American pork was very largely used in Canada ; but by the judicious policy adopted by the Conservative party in placing a duty on pork, American pork was kept out of the Canadian market, and it became profitable for the Canadian farmer to raise Canadian pork. When these increased duties were proposed by the late Minister of Finance, what did the hon. gentleman opposite say ? Speaking in this House in 1890, as reported in "Hansard" of that year, at page 3418, the hon. gentleman who occupies the position of Minister of Trade and Commerce said :

What earthly good will it do to our farmers to increase the revenue in this manner ? He knows, and they know, that no greater sham and delusion was ever put on the statute-book than this duty on pork, in so far as it is declared to be a duty which will benefit our farmers. I tell the hon. gentleman again that so far from this duty helping the farmers, he and his friends are doing all they can to strengthen the hands of those parties in the United States who are clamouring for an increase of duty.

Mr. Speaker, there was the whole policy of the hon. gentlemen in a nutshell. When the hostile legislation enacted by the McKinley Bill was passed to deprive our farmers of the market which they had enjoyed in the United States up to that time, instead of cooperating with and aiding the Government of that day in developing a policy that would have been of substantial benefit to our farmers, instead of teaching our farmers to be more self-reliant and to look to the old country for a market rather than to the United States, they whined and scratched at the closed doors of the American market. But, Mr. Speaker, if the pork duty was a sham and of no earthly advantage to the farmers of this country, may I ask hon. gentlemen opposite why they have permitted that pork duty to remain since they have been in office ? The fact is, they appointed commissioners to inquire of the farmers of this country as to the advantage or disadvantage of the duty on pork. The farmers gave the hon. gentlemen information that, apparently, they did not possess before ; and it is because the farmers demanded the retention of the duty that it has been permitted to remain until the present time. After quoting what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other night as to the advantage which the American protectionists had unconsciously given to the Canadian farmer by the passage of the McKinley Bill, may I be permitted to quote what that hon. gentleman said only a few years ago as to the effect the passage of the McKinley Bill would have upon us ? He said :

It was scarcely possible for any man to exaggerate the mischief and injury which would be done to the agriculturists of Canada if the American market should, unhappily, continue to be barred to their products.

The American market is now happily, according to the hon. gentleman, barred to our Canadian products ; and by the National Policy American products have been largely kept out of Canada, so that the Canadian farmers have supplied the whole Dominion, and the gratifying and enormous expansion of our trade with the old country has been secured in addition. These are the legitimate results of a policy which hon. gentlemen on this side advocated and crystallized into law when they had the opportunity to do so. And they established that policy and demonstrated its wisdom in spite of the most virulent and strenuous opposition that hon. gentlemen opposite could give. Surely, under these circumstances, it is unfair, it is unjust, it is unreasonable for the Minister of Agriculture, or the Minister of Trade and Commerce, or any other hon. gentleman on that side of the House to take credit for the gratifying expansion of our exports of bacon and ham, the credit undoubtedly being due to the policy of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House.

If time permitted, I could quote the opinions presented to the tariff commission, composed of three or four members of the Ministry, in Toronto, Hamilton and Guelph. But instead, let me give two or three figures to prove, if I can, the soundness of my contention. In 1889, the year before the additional duty was put on meat products, the imports of pork were 15,205,972 pounds, and of lard, 8,283,026 pounds. In 1896, the last year of Conservative administration, these imports had decreased, so that the imports of pork amounted to only 3,726,874 pounds, and of lard, 392,602 pounds. And let me say a word also with regard to the gratifying increase in the export of Canadian bacon and ham which occurred immediately after the adoption of the policy presented to this House by the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster), who was then Finance Minister. In 1891 the exports of Canadian ham and bacon to the old country amounted to 7,150,756 pounds, while in 1895 they amounted to no less than 37,526,058 pounds. I do not think that any other figures are needed to prove that it was under the policy of hon. gentlemen on this side that our Canadian farmers were given the opportunity—and they only needed the opportunity—to develop the pork, ham and bacon trade to the magnificent proportions it has assumed to-day.

There was a matter that took up a great deal of the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture this afternoon, and that was the question of the plebiscite. It is a very important question, and I am sure that he and his colleagues realize the importance of it so far as they are concerned. The Minister of Agriculture was good enough to say that the Opposition was trying to put the Government in a hole in this matter. There is no occasion for the Opposition to try to do anything of the kind. Hon. gentlemen opposite have put themselves in the hole in this matter; and, with the greatest possible respect for the hon. Minister of Agriculture, I doubt whether his speech of this afternoon will aid them in getting out of the hole. I would not have referred to this matter, were it not for the fact that at an earlier stage of this debate an hon. gentleman, a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, rose in his place and attacked the Liquor Traffic Commission appointed by the late Government. I happened to be a member of that Liquor Traffic Commission, and I should deem myself unworthy of a seat in this House, if I allowed the character of my colleagues on that commission to be aspersed without a word from me. But, Sir, the assault made by this hon. gentleman will do them most harm where they are least known. They are well enough known to the people of the Dominion, I should hope, not to need much defence at my hands. The chairman of that commission, the late Sir Joseph Hickson, who has long since passed to his reward, was a gentleman who certainly did not deserve the treatment which he received, as a member of the commission, at the hands of the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure). He had devoted his life to the public service, being for a long time the head of one of the greatest railways in the world. He was managing director of the Grand Trunk Railway, and, when he retired full of years and honours, he was knighted by his sovereign in recognition of the great services he had rendered to the Dominion. Speaking personally, I never met a more honourable, upright type of man than the late Sir Joseph Hickson; and it is my privilege to say that he was the best, or one of the best, specimens of the perfect English gentleman I ever had the opportunity of meeting. And I say, further, that I am satisfied that the worry, the anxiety and the responsibility of the position which he occupied, as chairman of that commission, did not tend to prolong his days. I even venture to say that the work he accomplished for the country, through that commission, had something to do with shortening his life. And, for rendering that service to Canada to the best of his ability and under great and perplexing difficulties, he has been assailed—and hon. gentlemen opposite applauded his assailant—and charged with being biassed and prejudiced in the report he made. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to find in their ranks or outside of them a man more highly respected than was the late Sir Joseph Hickson, the chairman of that commission. What shall I say for his colleagues—my colleagues? One was Judge Macdonald, an upright, honourable man; one of the most honourable men on the bench in the province of Ontario; a man who has been noted all his lifetime for his efforts to promote every good work; a man who has been a total abstainer all his life. And he is charged with being biassed and prejudiced. I need not, in the presence of my French Canadian friends, refer to the services that Mr. Gigault has rendered to his country as a member of this House, and is rendering now to his native province. That gentleman is, I believe, a total abstainer. He occupied a seat in this House for many years, and, during that time, made a record which will stand with that of any of his traducers on the other side. He occupies one of the most important public positions in his native province, and is doing, probably, more than any other one man to develop the resources of that province and improve its agriculture. These are the men that hon. gentlemen have attempted to assail on the floor of this House, because, in their wisdom, they brought in a report recommending that prohibition be not accepted and established as the law of the land. I may also refer to the gentleman who was secretary of that commission and known as a life-long temperance advocate and reformer, and as a life-long total abstainer and prohibitionist. I refer to my friend, Mr. Patrick Monaghan, of Halifax. These are the men who compose the majority of that commission which reported against prohibition. The other member of the commission was the Rev. Dr. McLeod, of Fredericton, a divine well and favourably known throughout the maritime provinces. The character of that commission and its desire to arrive at a just conclusion may be found in the fact that Rev. Dr. McLeod, with the same evidence before him that we had before us, deemed it his duty to make a minority report in favour of prohibition, while the other commissioners felt bound to make a report against it. Sir, I think the character of that commission will bear the closest scrutiny, and I regret that any hon. gentleman should have deemed it his duty to assail, as did the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure), the members of that commission, whose respect for principles, whose high character, and whose labours were never impugned until the hon. member made his attack. But evidently the hon. gentleman felt very uneasy owing to the position he finds himself in to-day, through the Janus-faced action of his own leader in dealing with the plebiscite. He thought he could, by assailing the character of the gentlemen appointed by the late Government as commissioners, do his party some service, and possibly drag a herring across the scent. He undertook to read an extract from the report of the Liquor Traffic Commission and to comment upon that extract. With the greatest possible respect for the hon. gentleman, I would suggest to him that when he quotes an extract from a report, he should do so in full. No doubt, it was an oversight on his part, but the fact still remains that while there are two paragraphs, the one immediately following the other, dealing with the question of saloon licenses, he read only the one. I recommend him to read both, and then come back and amend his statement to this House.

I, however, shall not weary the House in making very much further reference to the report of the commission on the liquor traffic. It is dangerous to prophecy what hon. gentlemen opposite may or may not do. They have had such a number of policies, they have placed themselves in so many peculiar positions in a short time, that it is unsafe to prophecy what they may do on the subject of prohibition or anything else: but I will venture to affirm that after having deceived the temperance people of this country with respect to their action on the plebiscite, they will later attempt to justify themselves for their refusal to give prohibition by throwing the responsibility for their action upon the report of the majority of this commission on the liquor traffic. Sir, the difficulties which surrounded that commission were many. We had one of the most prominent temperance men in the Dominion before us, the late Sir Leonard Tilley, who made the following statement in Fredericton:—

The prohibition sentiment requires to be cultivated in the province of Quebec, and we want the generation now growing up educated as to the evils of alcohol on the human system. With these and other influences, the time will come—it may not be during my time—when the public sentiment will be such that prohibition may not only be enacted but enforced, and from my experience in the past I would say: "Don't be in a hurry—that is, have ammunition, your guns and everything ready for the engagement when it comes, and don't run the risk of a defeat by premature action; but when you have enacted the law, make it a success by its enforcement." That is the advice I give our people. I do not think the whole Dominion is quite ripe for prohibition legislation.

Despite that statement, made by a man whose memory is respected from one end of the Dominion to the other, we are charged with being biassed and prejudiced because we could not see our way clear to report in favour of prohibition. Sir Leonard Tilley stated that the prohibition sentiment should be cultivated in the province of Quebec. If he were alive to-day, I am sure he would be amazed to see the means taken by hon. gentlemen opposite to "cultivate" that prohibition sentiment. He would have been amazed to see a Government pledged to respect the will of the people, a Government which made the giving of the plebiscite a plank in its platform, sending every one of its members from the province of Quebec, bar one, into that province on the stump to induce the people there to vote against prohibition.

Another gentleman of note, whose name is always mentioned with respect, is Mr. Geo. Hague, general manager of the Merchants Bank of Canada, and this gentleman gave the following evidence in Montreal on the 22nd September, 1892, before the commission:

With regard to prohibition, it is, of course, understood that all license laws are to a certain extent prohibitive, and such prohibition can be enforced. But the experience of all communities in which total prohibition has been carried by the resolution of a small body of popular representatives shows that such a law will not be obeyed, except by those who abstain on principle, and would abstain no matter what the law was, and further, that the general enforcement of the law by fines, penalties, &c., is practically impossible. Experience seems to lead up to a conclusion something like this: That no prohibitory law will be obeyed or can be enforced in any given community, unless a very large majority of that community (almost the whole, in fact) have agreed on other grounds to give up the use of intoxicating drinks. But then it is evident that in such a community no prohibitory law would be needed at all.

In dealing with the prohibition question, an exception is supposed to be made, both in importation and manufacture, in favour of intoxicants for mechanical, sacramental and medicinal purposes. I do not see how any law could be worked which would make such a distinction, unless, indeed, the whole affair were taken in hand by the Government and worked entirely through one of its departments, i.e., not only supervised, as it is now, but actually worked. Even then, I do not believe the distinction could be kept up.

Drunkenness is essentially a moral evil, and only moral and spiritual forces are competent finally to eradicate it. That these are so competent, there has been abundant evidence in numerous individual cases on which they have been brought to bear.

I quote these as the statements of two gentlemen well known and respected from one end of the Dominion to the other, as men engaged in the promotion of good, in advancing the interests of the community, themselves total abstainers, but who realizing the difficulties of the enforcement of a prohibitory law in a country like this, did not hesitate to give their testimony against such a law. There were many other gentlemen equally responsible, trustworthy, representative and prominent, who gave their testimony in favour of prohibition, but the fact that the evidence was of such a conflicting nature, only added to the difficulty which that liquor traffic commission had to solve; and when the majority made their report, they believed they had made a report in the best interests of the people and of morality, sobriety and temperance.

Sir, the recommendations of the majority of that commission, though against prohibition, were of course in favour of greater restriction in the giving of licenses than prevails now in most of the provinces. The duty of restricting this traffic rests with the provincial authorities. Those authorities are and have been all of them Liberal authorities, and I would ask the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McClure) why, if he is so zealous, as I am sure he is, in the promotion of the temperance cause, he has not used his influence and secured that of his friends in the provinces and brought it to bear upon the legislatures of those provinces to legislate in favour of further restricting the liquor traffic? He charges the Conservative party with being derelict in its duty because, as he says, it accepted the report of the commission. I do not know whether it did or not; but if it did, and the commission reported against prohibition, how can he, in all fairness, hold the Conservative party responsible, if, under those circumstances, it has since introduced no legislation into this House in favour of prohibition? I need only mention this fact to show the unfairness of the hon. gentleman in his criticisms regarding the report of the commission on the liquor traffic. I would invite hon. gentlemen opposite, who have been trifling and playing with this question for many years, to read the evidence taken by the commission in the State of Maine. They had that evidence all before them, Mr. Speaker, before they submitted the plebiscite vote last September. If they had placed any value upon that evidence, if they had given it the consideration which I believe it deserved, they would have saved this country the expenditure of a quarter of a million dollars which has been worse than squandered in taking the vote. If they had read that evidence they would have seen what, after 40 odd years, the condition of things is which exists in the state of Maine, and they would have found in the volumes of the evidence the testimony of the best and foremost citizens in that state against prohibition as not accomplishing what it was intended to do, and not being as advantageous, possibly, in the promotion of true temperance as would a license law rigidly enforced.

I would like to refer for a moment to the position which is now being taken by hon. gentlemen opposite after the plebiscite vote has been given. The Minister of Agriculture was present at the Liberal convention when the plebiscite plank was made a part of the Liberal platform. It certainly was brought into politics then for it was a resolution passed at the Liberal convention held in this city in 1893. The present Minister of Agriculture then said:

I propose to read the resolution which will bring about this result, and which pledges the Liberal party, if returned to power, to give the people of Canada an opportunity to express their views upon this question, and the Government in power must necessarily carry out the expressed will of the people. There is no doubt that this is what the Liberal party would do, for we know their pledges can be trusted.

I now quote from a pamphlet, "The Voice of the People," signed by Mr. J. J. MacLaren, chairman, and Mr. F. S. Spence, secretary. These gentlemen are very prominent members of the Dominion Prohibitory Alliance. They say:

During the discussion of the plebiscite Bill in the House of Commons, the Premier also stated at different times that when the will of the people was ascertained, the Government would have to take such steps as would give effect to that will. On other occasions similar statements were made by different members of the Government. The "expressed will" of the people could only refer to the will of the people which was expressed.

The statements made could not be fairly construed to mean anything short of a promise of prohibitory legislation in case of a favourable majority in a reasonable vote.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be in the recollection of the House that the Minister of Agriculture stated this afternoon that the Dominion Temperance Alliance did not ask this Government to pass a prohibitory law; and yet we find these gentlemen representing and I believe they do represent, the Dominion Temperance Alliance, quoting the words of the Premier and declaring that the expressed will of the people could only refer to the will of the people which was expressed. I am sure that the statement taken from this pamphlet sent out by the Alliance is very wide of the statement made this afternoon by the Minister of Agriculture when he said that the Temperance Alliance did not desire the Government to enact a prohibitory measure. Sir, it is refreshing to all fair-minded and honourable men to contrast the attitude which the leaders of the Conservative party took in reference to this prohibition question, with the attitude which the leader of the Liberal party has assumed. Speaking at Winnipeg, the right hon. Premier stated :

He would pledge his honour that as soon as the Liberals came into power in Ottawa they would take a plebiscite of the whole Dominion, by which the party would stand, and the will of the people would be carried out, even were it to cost power to the Liberal party.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what did that mean? Did it mean that there should be 50 per cent of all the votes on the list cast for prohibition before the will of the people would be carried out? No, Sir. Every person engaged in the promotion of temperance, every person who took an active part in securing votes in favour of prohibition in September last—except, possibly, the hon. gentlemen who were present at the Liberal convention in 1893, and who made that arrangement amongst themselves—every one of them thought that if the majority of all the votes cast in September last was found to be in favour of prohibition, the Liberal party would implement its pledges by legislation in this House. The Minister of Agriculture attempted this afternoon to throw responsibility on members on this side of the House, because, when he introduced his Bill—and he was the gentleman who fathered the Plebiscite Bill in this House—we did not take exception to it. I venture to affirm that if the Minister of Agriculture had told us when that Bill was introduced what he told us this afternoon, he would have found a great many voices raised on both sides of the House against it. If he had told the members of this House that it would require a majority or 50 per cent of all the votes on the list to be polled in favour of prohibition before prohibition would be enacted, that Bill would never have passed the House of Commons. But, Mr. Speaker, if he knew that that was the policy of the Government, he took precious good care not to let the House of Commons know it, and evidently he did not allow his temperance friends to know it either. The Premier said the other day, speaking on this matter :

There was an implied agreement between the members of the party who believed in prohibition and those who did not believe in prohibition.
* * * There was an engagement on the part of those who believed in prohibition, that if the voice of the people on the subject should not be of sufficient strength to warrant the adoption by the party of the policy of prohibition, they also would square their views to those of their brothers, and we would hear no more of that question in the ranks of the party.

Well, evidently from the speech of the Minister of Agriculture, they are going to try and remove that question as far as possible out of the policy of their party for all time to come. The Premier said also :

There was not a man living who expected, at the time the plebiscite was taken, that the duty would be imposed on the Government of introducing a prohibitory measure unless at least one-half of the electorate recorded their votes in favour of that policy.

Sir, that is the statement made after the plebiscite was taken. That statement was not made before the plebiscite was taken. If it had been, I venture to affirm that the hundreds of thousands of dollars which those in favour of prohibition expended in that contest would have been kept in their pockets. Fifty per cent of the entire vote on the roll was an impossible vote for them to get, and it was to say the least of it disingenuous on the part of the Premier to keep back the knowledge from the prohibitionists that they must poll an impossible vote before their just demands would be acceded to. Is it any wonder that ministers, such as the Rev. A. D. Morton, of Shelburne, N.S., should write to the "Christian Guardian" in the following terms :

I am now satisfied that the authorities have played a game of "bluff," and that the advocates of prohibition have allowed themselves to be duped. To me it would have been a thousand times more satisfactory if Sir Wilfrid, following the example of his predecessor, had manfully said : "I do not believe in prohibition, and will give no assurance in the matter."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's predecessors had told the temperance people that time after time, and because they had done so, they were assailed by hon. gentlemen opposite who believed in temperance and who had advocated it in their constituencies. But to-day every one of those hon. gentlemen's voices are silent; not one word of condemnation is expressed by any one of them against the Janus-faced course which has been pursued by their leaders in this matter. Sir, I hold in my hand a resolution adopted by the Standing Committee of the Methodist Church of the province of Ontario on the subject of temperance reform. Is there one word to be found in this resolution that justifies the remark made by the Minister of Agriculture, that the prohibitionists do not desire the passage of a prohibitory law? Not one word. I have here also a letter from the district secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance, addressed to me, from Toronto. Does it say anything about not desiring the Government to implement their promises? Not at all. I will read it :

Dear Sir,—The Toronto District Council, Royal Templars of Temperance, has had under consideration the letter of the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, addressed to Mr. F. S. Spence, secretary of the Dominion Alliance, in which, speaking for the Dominion Government of the recent plebiscite, he states "that in our judgment the expression of public opinion recorded at the polls in favour of prohibition did not represent such a proportion of the electorate as would justify the introduction by the Government of a prohibitory measure."

The District Council records its deep sense of disappointment at this decision, and its entire dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the Government as to the moral weight of said vote, in the conviction that the strength of the opposition was fairly reflected in the "nay" vote cast, which, notwithstanding the heavy French Canadian vote, fell about 14,000 short of the aggregate "yea" vote.

The District Council is strongly of opinion that this county would heartily respond to a prohibitory law, if enacted by any Government and Parliament; that the apparent opposition of one province ought not to be permitted to stand in the way of legislation demanded by all other parts of the Dominion in such emphatic terms as the sweeping majorities indicate; and calls upon the Government and Parliament to devise and enact such prohibitory legislation as will give effect to the expressed will of the people in the provinces and territories referred to.

Yours faithfully,

(Sgd.) ANNIE M. PEARSON,
District Secretary, R. T. of T.

The prohibitionists and the temperance people of this country had a right to expect, from the record which hon. gentlemen opposite made for themselves during the past twenty years, that a simple majority of all the votes cast, if in favour of prohibition, would be sufficient to give them a measure. We have on record, happily, the opinion of the late Minister of Justice in the present Government, Sir Oliver Mowat, who is now the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario. You will recollect that a plebiscite was taken in the province of Ontario on the question of the total prohibition of the liquor traffic. That vote was taken on the day set apart for the holding of the municipal elections, a day when a very large vote is polled because of the excitement which prevails over the balloting for municipal officers in this province. The following figures are taken from the "Vanguard," a prominent temperance paper, published, I think, by my friend Mr. F. S. Spence: The total number of male votes on the list at that election in 1893 was 515,369, and of female votes 43,833, total vote on the list 559,202. The total number of votes polled was 303,209, or about 54 per cent. If we take off the female votes we find that the total number of male votes on the list was 515,369. Of these 180,061, or say 35 per cent voted yea, while 108,520, or 21½ per cent voted nay. Of the total male voters on the list only 56½ per cent recorded their votes, so that in a time of excitement in every municipality, when the opportunity was given to every person in favour of prohibition and to every person who opposed prohibition, of going to the polls to vote—because they were going to the polls to vote for candidates for the various municipal offices—only 56½ per cent of the total vote on the list was recorded. Did Sir Oliver Mowat say to the deputation which waited upon him immediately after that vote had been taken that he could not think of enacting a prohibitory law unless 50 per cent of the registered vote had been polled in favour of it? Not at all. He took this vote as being conclusive of the opinion of the province of Ontario in favour of prohibition, and he pledged his word, and when he pledged his word he pledged the word of his colleagues, that, if the Privy Council determined that the province of Ontario had the power to enact a prohibitory law, he and his Government, in view of the vote that had been taken in January, 1893, would pass a prohibitory law if they had power to do it. The question of having a majority of the total votes on the list never entered into the mind of Sir Oliver Mowat, the late Minister of Justice in the Government of my right hon. friend. He never thought it was necessary that such an impossible percentage of the votes should be polled before he would pass a prohibitory law. It seems to me, too, that we are justified in concluding from the evidence that is before us that there were the strongest doubts that hon. gentlemen, even if a substantial majority had been cast in every province of the Dominion in favour of prohibition, would have taken any action. I have a copy of a letter from the Minister of Justice dated Ottawa, 7th April, 1898, a few months before the plebiscite vote was taken. He says:

Ottawa, 7th April, 1898.

Dear Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th March, and in reply beg to say that the regulations to which you refer are all within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature to legislate in the direction which you indicate, as far as they think it in the public interest to go, to the extent of total prohibition. There is nothing to prevent any province prohibiting the sale of intoxicants for consumption as a beverage within the limits of the province so disposed.

Yours truly,

DAVID MILLS.

Would we have had the other alternative, Mr. Speaker? If prohibition had been carried by a substantial majority, would the Minister of Justice have reiterated his opinion that it was quite within the jurisdiction of a province to enact as complete a measure of prohibition, within its boundaries, as could be enacted by this Parliament for the whole Dominion, and would he have referred the prohibitionists to the provincial legislatures? The hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) referred to the Scott Act, and it seems to me that the reference was rather unfortunate for him as well as for his party. He said, and he said truly, that it required 25 per cent of the total vote on the list to be signed to the petition in favour of the submission of the Act, before that measure could be voted upon by the people in a municipality. He should have gone further and said that, if, after it had received the necessary number of signatures the petition was acted upon and a vote taken, and only 10 per cent of the vote polled in favour of the Act and 9½ per cent against the Act, the Act would, as a matter of fact, become law. But there is something further to be said respecting the present contention of hon. gentlemen opposite as to the necessity of having a majority of the votes of a constituency cast before a measure of prohibition can be enacted in that constituency. Some of the hon. gentlemen present will recollect that, a few years after the adoption of the Scott Act by Parliament, some necessary amendments were made for the working of the Act. These amendments were introduced in the Senate, and, after being passed there, were sent down to this House, and the hon. gentleman who is now the leader of the Opposition in the Senate (Sir Mackenzie Bowell) had charge of the Bill in this House. When the Bill reached its critical stage there was an amendment proposed by the then representative of East York, Mr. Boulton, which provided that a majority of the voters whose names were entered on the voters' lists used at each subdivision should be recorded in favour of the Act before it came into force. Mr. Boulton, speaking of the amendment, said :

The amendment I have proposed does not mean that there should be a majority at every polling place. It simply proposes that there shall be a majority in the whole district where the law is sought to be put in force. * * * The resolution simply provides that the majority of votes of the district shall be necessary to give effect to the law.

The hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill objected to the introduction of this new principle of legislation into Canada, and he is reported, in "Hansard," to have said :

I am decidedly opposed to the adoption of any such amendment. If the principle involved in the amendment were adopted and acted upon in every election held, I am of opinion there would be very few of us occupying seats on the floor of the House to-day.

The Hon. G. W. Ross, one of the most respected and one of the foremost Liberals in Ontario, was a member of this House at that time, and he would not allow that principle of legislation to be passed upon without expressing his opposition. This is what he said :

He proposes to introduce into our electoral institutions an entirely new principle. Hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, as the hon. Minister of Customs has remarked, sit here by a majority of the votes polled in their respective countries. I do not know that there is a single member of this House—unless he was elected by acclamation—who is able to say that he sits here by a clear majority of the registered votes of his constituency.

Mr. Ross further in the course of his speech, asked :

Can my hon. friend (Mr. Boulton) say that in any election authorized by any Dominion or provincial statute—with one exception, in a small Bill passed by the Ontario legislature last year—there is any such principle introduced? I venture to say he cannot. * * * Let the House distinctly understand that, instead of dealing fairly with the public opinion of the country, this amendment proposes to take an unfair advantage of it, and to render it almost impossible for public opinion to be fairly recorded.

Then, we had a noted temperance man in this House, who has since passed over to the great majority; I refer to the late Mr. Longley, who represented Annapolis, N.S., and he said :

We are willing, when great issues come up from time to time which divide the people, to accept the mere majority of votes polled; and such a principle as is sought to be introduced into this law is not to be found in our land, except in regard to certain local matters involving heavy taxation, where it is thought better, for the security of all, to have a two-thirds or three-fourths vote. It is an instance of the unfairness or want of thought, or reason, of the advocates of this amendment that they seek to introduce a new feature into our law. * * * I trust the amendment will be voted down, as it should be, and that a measure designed to promote sobriety and public virtue may not be marred by the insidious proposal which I have sought, in conjunction with others, to oppose.

The hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) was a member of this House at that time, as, we are glad to know, he is a member yet, and he expressed his opinion upon this matter in the following words :—

I cannot think that the hon. gentleman has looked at the Bill seriously and I am sure that he has not thoroughly considered the legal and inevitable effect of his amendment, which is utterly unfair, malicious and unjust in its nature.

The amendment was submitted to the House of Commons, and I find amongst the gentlemen who voted against it the names of the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), the right hon. the Premier of Canada (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), the hon. the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson), the hon. the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden), the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) and the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver). These gentlemen all set their faces against such an "insidious proposition," as Mr. Longley called it, as to require that in this measure of local prohibition it should be necessary to secure a majority of the total vote on the lists before the Act came into operation. Even after the Bill had been amended these gentlemen were so strong in their opposition to the incorporation of this principle in our legislation, that the three months' hoist was moved. The Hon. Edward Blake, who was then the leader of the Liberal Opposition, declared that the amendment of the hon. member for East York, Mr. Boulton, was destructive of the Bill, and he therefore voted against it, and every one of the gentlemen whose names I have mentioned, voted the same way. So, Sir, in view of the record which these hon. gentlemen have made for themselves respecting prohibitory legislation in this House and in the country; in view of the pledges which the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) gave from time to time to the electors all over this Dominion, I say that the Government have been recreant and false to their duty in this matter, and the temperance people, and all who love fair-play and fair dealing in Canada, will hold them strictly to account for their treachery. I have here a copy of the "Morning Post," of London, England, July 25th, 1898—that was some time after the passage of the Plebiscite Bill—and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), who was then in London, gave an interview to the representative of that paper, in which he said:

Our grapes, though you have not yet taken to their peculiar flavour, we expect you to eat largely. We can sell them on the other side at one penny a pound wholesale. With the aid of our cold storage system we can now deliver the most delicate fruits in perfect condition. Our making of wine is as yet only in the experimental stage, but we hope to make something of it.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Speaker, there is another matter I desire to refer to; that is, the Government's administration, or mal-administration, of affairs in the Yukon. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, if there is any one of them who is a business man and had to manage an estate of the value which that Yukon territory is computed to be worth, or if he was acting as a trustee for the owners of an estate as valuable as that, and he desired to dispose of the property to the best advantage for his clients, would he have adopted the policy which the Government have adopted from the time they expended the very first dollar in connection with the Yukon? Would a business man not have tried to have given every publicity possible to the information that he had at hand respecting the enormous wealth that is in that country? Sir, the very first act of the Minister of the Interior was an act that was looked upon with a great deal of dissatisfaction by the people of Canada. The first official report that was worth anything was made by Mr. Ogilvie, a surveyor sent up there by the late Government, and his report was looked for by mining experts and by adventurous people all over the world with a great deal of interest. When that report came into the possession of the Government, instead of having it printed and distributed broadcast throughout the civilized world, they passed it over to a political friend, or a political supporter, with all the plates and all the photographs, and he was given the right to copyright that report and to sell it at two or three times the price it could be published and sold for by any representative publisher in this Dominion. The sale of that pamphlet was not nearly as large as the hon. gentleman and his friends thought it would be; but how much damage was done to the country? It was an imposition on the public to charge half a dollar for such a pamphlet. If the Government had been actuated by business motives, they would have had that report printed by hundreds of thousands of copies, and appended to it valuable information regarding other parts of the Dominion, and circulated it throughout the United States, and Great Britain, and the continent of Europe. But, Sir, instead of doing that, they adopted a most unbusiness-like and most unheard-of method, by which they stopped the spread of information respecting this territory, in which so much interest was taken all over the world. That was the first act of mal-administration that the public became aware of. The next was with reference to the making of a contract for the construction of a railway, or tramway, into that country. One would have thought that if hon. gentlemen opposite had been desirous of fulfilling the pledges they made to the people of Canada, they would certainly have endeavoured to have had that railway built at the lowest possible price; but, instead of asking for public tenders, instead of inviting public competition for the construction of that road, instead of endeavouring to ascertain just exactly what that road was worth, they made a bargain without consulting Parliament, and without taking the public into their confidence. They made a bargain with two gentlemen to construct that road and to take their pay out in enormous grants of gold-bearing lands, and gave them the right to charge practically their own freight rates for many years to come. That was an unbusiness-like arrangement, and it was received with disapprobation by the great majority of the people of this country. So, Sir, I might enumerate very many such unbusiness-like acts in connection with the administration of the Yukon territory by the Government. Take the purchase of supplies; take the transportation of supplies; take the right of officials to stake claims; take the frontage leases in Dawson, the monopoly of cutting timber, and the procuring of timber for fuel.

All these unbusinesslike transactions had prepared the public mind for the reception of the charges which have since been made broadcast throughout Canada, not only in Conservative papers, but in Liberal papers as well. Nor have these charges been confined to the press of Canada. They have unfortunately found their way across the Atlantic into such leading organs of British public opinion as the "Times," the "Graphic," and other papers. Reference has also been made to them from time to time in the French papers, the United States papers, and the Australian papers. The name and fame of Canada have been smirched. Canada has been injured in the estimation of those who have read these charges, in the United States, in Australia, and in the old land; and, in the face of the universally expressed opinion that there was something rotten in the state of Denmark, hon. gentlemen opposite have practically done nothing yet, beyond asking Mr. Ogilvie, their commissioner, to make a report; and he is a departmental officer. They invite hon. gentlemen on this side of the House to make specific charges, saying that if we will do so, they will investigate them. Why should we do so? Why should any hon. member be asked to make specific charges? Is it not enough to point hon. gentlemen to the record in the press of this country during the last six months, which has been teeming with accusations made by men who have signed their names to those accusations? Surely those charges themselves ought to have been sufficient, if the Government desired to investigate the condition of affairs to the bottom, to have secured before now the appointment of an independent judicial commission for that purpose. I am sure I speak for every member on this side of the House when I say that we sincerely hope there is not a shred of truth to be found in any of these charges. The best way to satisfy us and the people of Canada is not to remain content with a departmental examination, but to appoint a commission of judges to investigate them; and if, as I hope will be the case, these charges shall be found to be untrue and unfounded, the money that will be expended on the work of that commission will be the best money expended by this Parliament for many a day. Let me give hon. gentlemen some opinions which have been expressed, not by political opponents, but by political friends, as to why such an investigation should be held. The Hon. Joseph Martin, who was a member of this House, and one of the ablest lieutenants of the right hon. Premier during the time he sat here, and who is now the Attorney General of British Columbia, is reported to have said:

Though the returning miners may not be telling the truth, yet if this is the case, there has been a strange unanimity in the lies they have been telling. Not only Americans, but Canadians and Englishmen, have entered most vigorous protests against the prevailing condition of affairs, and there does not appear to be much doubt that something is seriously wrong. The fact that the most bitter protests come from British subjects is significant, and it is very difficult to believe that bribery and corruption of officials has not been rampant.

Mr. R. C. Miller, editor of the Pembroke "Observer," writes from Dawson:

I have been here now for two weeks, and have been noting and inquiring on every hand, and though I cannot give you facts and figures, I have seen enough to convince myself that it is worse even than the mind of an honest man can conceive. That the mining laws are being set aside on a colossal scale is beyond all question, and that barefaced bribery is the rule of the day is equally certain.

An hon. gentleman asks me where Mr. R. C. Miller is now. I cannot tell him. Probably that information could be given by some hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House. Mr. R. D. Gardiner writes in the Kingston "Whig," one of the leading Liberal papers in the province of Ontario, as follows:—

It is nothing but a system of boodling from beginning to end that prevails in the Klondike. The Government, as the district was so far away, gave the officials too much power, and they have used it despotically. There is no service of the Government there which is not corrupt.

Dr. Steele, of Grahamville, in Peel County, a gentleman who is a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, writes home as follows:—

If it were not for the presence of the mounted police I firmly believe that every official here except the customs collector would be publicly hanged, and the Minister of the Interior at Ottawa along with them, if he could be got at. So scandalous has been the treatment of the miners for the last year that such a fate would be richly deserved.

Mr. W. Baird, of Dawson, writes to his friends:

I have always been a Grit heretofore, but must admit that this is the rottenest outfit up here that it has ever been my business to come in contact with.

The Vancouver "World," another representative paper, published on the coast, says:

From letters received from reputable gentlemen at Dawson we have the declaration that more than one of the Dominion officials feathered their private nests pretty well while paid to look after the interests of the public.

The Winnipeg "Tribune," whose editor is an honoured member of this House and a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, has this to say:

It is very plausible to cry that no specific charges have been laid. This is not true; but, even if it had been, it does not help the case. Wrongs have been committed, and everybody whose intelligence surpasses that of the partisan pigmy recognizes the fact and desires to see the remedy applied as speedily as possible.

Let me also quote the opinion of the "Weekly Sun," an independent journal for the farm and home, a journal in which hon. gentlemen opposite took the deepest interest up to the 23rd of June, 1896, a journal that circulates very largely among the farming community of the Dominion, a journal of influence, as follows:—

Mr. Ogilvie, the present administrator, was some time ago requested by Mr. Sifton to report upon certain charges. But Mr. Ogilvie is an official himself, and has intimate relations with some of those against whom charges are now levelled. He himself is under the direction of the Minister upon whom, if the charges are proved, some of the odium may lie. An investigation made by him must not only of necessity be limited in its scope, but his findings would not command public confidence. A thorough and searching inquiry, conducted by a commission composed of men commanding public confidence and free from the control of the department, would seem to be the best method of arriving at the facts.

I could also quote from the St. John "Telegraph," published by the hon. member for that city (Mr. Ellis); from the Edmonton "Bulletin," and other papers; but I will not weary the House by doing so. We sympathize with the difficulties incidental to the administration of a territory so remote as the Yukon, especially in the early stages of its development; and we are willing to give hon. gentlemen opposite every reasonable assistance in developing that country and having it properly and honestly administered. But we would be derelict in our duty as members of this House and unfaithful to the trust committed to us by the people who have sent us here if, in view of the magnitude and number of the charges that have been made, as well as their source, we did not take the opportunity presented to us of obtaining an expression of opinion from the House as to whether the Government is justified in confining the investigation to that of a departmental officer.

Mr. Speaker, before taking my seat, I have an amendment which I desire now to offer. I am sure it will meet with the approval of the independent members of this House. I am sure it is so reasonable, so fair and so just that if, unfortunately, it does not commend itself to the judgment of the majority of the members of this House, it will eventually, at all events, commend itself to the judgment of the majority of the people of Canada. I therefore beg leave to move, seconded by Mr. Hale, that the following words be added to the Address to His Excellency the Governor General:—

10. That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon, it is the duty of the Government to appoint, without delay, an independent judicial commission to make a thorough investigation into that subject, and report the result.

Mr. GEO. H. BERTRAM (Centre Toronto). It always gives me pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), because when that hon. gentleman addresses himself to any subject he generally treats it in an eloquent fashion as he has done to-day. I always like to hear him speak, because he appears to be fair-minded and anxious to arrive at a fair and reasonable conclusion on any question he may be discussing. But while in that frame of mind, I listened to the hon. gentleman, I must, I am sorry to say, confess that I was doomed to meet with some disappointment. While he started out with every appearance to be fair, I found that he was not quite so fair as his colleague the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), because that hon. gentleman, when he addresses this House, generally gives this side credit for something now and again. He told us, for instance, in the speech he delivered the other day, that the Government were right in imposing a ten per cent royalty in the Yukon, and he also gave us credit in some other respect. But my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), I regret to say, will never commit himself to any such admission. He seems to be a strong partisan after all, and can see no good whatever on this side of the House. I do like, when listening to speeches from hon. gentlemen opposite, to find them admit that there is something good in their opponents, and when they do make a point against us, I like to give them credit for it just as I like them to give us credit when they see a point in our favour. Had the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat addressed the House in that spirit, I am sure that his words would have more weight, at all events on this side of the House and in the country at large, but he carefully avoided making even the slightest admission on our favour. For instance, I leave it to the members of this House who are well aware of the fact, that while hon. gentlemen opposite say we adopted their policy, there was a policy enunciated by the hon. leader of the Opposition not long ago, which we did not adopt, and which I am confident the hon. gentleman who has just spoken would congratulate us on not adopting, were he frank enough to do so, and that is their policy on the Manitoba school question. Yet, despite this fact, my hon. friend cannot see that we are entitled to any credit for anything we have done.

I was also somewhat surprised to find that the hon. gentleman seems to have gone back on that little red book which has played such a great part in the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, and did not read us copious extracts from that publication, such as we have been treated to in the last two or three weeks by hon. gentlemen opposite. But I must express my satisfaction at one feature of his speech. When speaking of the different flags, emblazoned with different mottoes, which he charges were displayed at different times by this side of the House, he did not seem to recognize among them the old flag which gentlemen opposite we have stolen. On this point, however, I understand I am precluded from speaking, owing to the fact that the hon. gentleman has introduced an amendment to the Address to which we must now confine ourselves. Being desirous of keeping within the rules of debate, I shall wait another opportunity for dealing with some of the questions which the hon. gentleman brought before us, but which his amendment does not bear upon. The hon. gentleman dealt with the same question that previous speakers have been harping upon during the last three weeks and advancing the same threadbare arguments, though I had hoped that with his great ability and the amount of diligence he has displayed since the opening of the session in collecting all the material he has given us to-night, he would have brought forward something new and given us somewhat stronger reasons than those we have been listening to since the debate began. In that respect, however, I must confess again to disappointment. I regret exceedingly having to speak at all in this debate, because I am sure hon. members are wearied in listening to a repetition of the same old story over and over again, to which we have been treated during the last three or four weeks. I must say that I sympathise very much indeed with the prayer that was uttered, I believe, in a Kingston pulpit, not later than last Sunday, by a good Presbyterian minister, who beseeched the Lord to grant wisdom and judgment to our legislators so that they might make good laws for this Dominion, and to also put it into the hearts of the members of this House—I suppose he meant particularly hon. gentlemen opposite—to talk less and do more work. I am perfectly aware that there is nothing hon. gentlemen opposite love to indulge in more than political retrospects. They do love to give us ancient history. The world seems to have travelled a little too fast for them, and they have fallen considerably behind, and are giving all their attention to things that the rest of the world have left behind a considerable way. The motto of hon. members on this side of the House is not looking backward but forward; and I am sure that the people of this country have been paying very little attention to the long speeches and diatribes of hon. gentlemen opposite during the last three weeks, and that the amendment which has been introduced by my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is one that will not attract much attention or be much cared about even in the very city he comes from. I am satisfied that there are other questions before this Dominion that are more important, questions that are pressing for a solution and that should have been worked out during the past two or three weeks, instead of spending our time in this interminable debate. I am satisfied that the transportation question, for instance, is occupying the minds of the people of this whole Dominion to-day and particularly of the province of Ontario and the city of Toronto far more than the unsupported charges and statements of hon. gentlemen opposite. It is not my intention to go over all the questions that have been brought before this House by hon. gentlemen and particularly by my hon. friend the member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), because in this particular discussion I understand we must confine our remarks particularly to the amendment now before the House.

An hon. MEMBER. No, take up the whole question.

Mr. BERTRAM. I shall have the opportunity of doing that at some future time. My hon. friend read a few more extracts from a few more newspapers. It seems to me that all these hon. gentlemen can do is to read extracts continually from certain papers and say there must be something in it. I believe myself that members of Parliament who make unsupported and damning charges against this Government from their place in Parliament, without a scintilla of evidence, are injuring the fair name of the country and doing an enormous amount of damage to its best interests. They laid great stress, for instance, upon the fact that the London "Times" had circulated charges, and that fact they bring forward as a reason why there should be an investigation. Even the London "Times," so far as I know, is not infallible; and while Miss Shaw may be a very nice woman—I have not the pleasure of knowing her—even she is not infallible. I believe that Miss Shaw has been imposed upon by the American proprietors of the "Nugget" newspaper. At all events, we know that the London "Times" has been imposed upon in former years. It brought serious charges supported by evidence apparently of the strongest character against the late Chas. Stewart Parnell, and it had to take those charges back. As to charges made in newspapers, I believe it to be the duty of every member of Parliament, when he reads in a newspaper a charge against the Government of the day or against the officials of the country, to make inquiries and ascertain whether they are true or not, or, at least, get some tangible evidence, before he undertakes to make use of them on the floor of this House. We had an example of the contrary the other day. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) stood in his place and made most serious and damning charges against a gentleman who was for many years an official of this country, a gentleman who is respected by the people and who has rendered great service to the North-west in the organization of mounted police. The hon. member for Pictou brings a charge of drunkenness and immorality against this man who has no opportunity to reply, and this he does without evidence. It appears from what the newspapers are saying now that Mr. Walsh, instead of being a drunken man, is one of the most sober men in the Dominion. I maintain that an hon. gentleman who would stand in his place in Parliament and make such a charge as that upon so little evidence deserves, I might almost say the censure of the people of this country. The other day, when I returned to Toronto, I was talking with the manager of one of the large banking institutions who happened to know Mr. Walsh, having been manager of a bank in Winnipeg while Mr. Walsh was there and having travelled with him in the North-west and spent many days with him on the plains. This gentleman is a strong Conservative. He said to me: It cannot be that these charges against Major Walsh are true, because I know the man well, and a cleaner and better-living man does not live in the whole Dominion to-day. The charges made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) are all on a par with those made against Major Walsh. For my part, as a member of this House, if I had any charge I could not support with evidence, I would feel that I should apologize for the rest of my life to the man against whom the charges were made. What the Minister of Agriculture said to-day was perfectly true. And in that connection I must say that I never listened to an address with so much satisfaction as I did to the address of the hon. Minister this afternoon. As the hon. Minister said, when an eloquent man—like the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster)—for he is an eloquent man—goes to Brockville, and, notwithstanding the damning charges with regard to the Yukon, has not a word to say on this subject, because the fact that Major Walsh is best known there and therefore most highly respected, it shows how little worth these charges are. I believe that nearly all the charges that have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite are on a par with these made by the hon. member for Pictou against the character and good name of a man who deserves well of his country for the great services he has rendered in days gone by. I think it is the duty of every lover of his country to see to it that he does not give currency to such charges derogatory to the honour of the country, unless he has good reason for believing that the charges are well founded.

A great deal has been said that I do not intend to deal with. We had a seven-hour speech from the hon. member for Pictou besides a five-hour speech from the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and it seems to me that this is giving us too much of one thing from the same family. The hon. member for Pictou is an able man, there is no question about that, and if he takes hold of a case, being one of the strongest partisans on the other side of the House, he will make a charge against the Government, if there is any possibility of doing it. But he was ably replied to by the Minister of the Interior. I believe there are members, even on the other side of the House who will agree with me when I say that the speech made by the hon. member for Pictou and the charges levelled against the Government displayed a bitterness against his opponents that was very notable. His bitterness against the Minister of the Interior seemed actually to warp his judgment. In fact, when the hon. Minister corrected him in some statement he made, his reply was in effect that he only had the word of the Minister for it and the Minister's word was not of great consequence. In his speech, part of which I heard and all of which I have read, the Minister of the Interior does himself great credit in many ways, but particularly for the self-control he shows in refusing to exhibit any ill-feeling against the hon. member for Pictou, notwithstanding the strong statements made by that hon. gentleman with regard to his administration. He went into every letter, one by one, and I consider he made a most effective reply to the charges made, and a more gentlemanly reply, perhaps, than the hon. member for Pictou was entitled to. Let me say I was one of those who thought that when the hon. member for Pictou had thought of delivering such a speech and found that he could not continue to occupy his place until a reply was given, he should not have made the speech. To make such a speech and run away does not seem to me to be very dignified, to say the least.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I would ask the hon. gentleman whether he was in the House when it was admitted by the Prime Minister that the hon. member for Pictou proposed to stop at six o'clock and not make that part of his speech covering these charges until his return, and he was forced by the Prime Minister and those around him who knew that he had to leave the city, to break the engagement with me that the debate should terminate at six? I ask, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertram) was in the House at that time; I ask him if he thinks he is warranted in making a statement that is in plain contradiction of the facts as established before the House?

Mr. BERTRAM. I was not here at the time, but as near as I can judge the hon. member was pretty well into these charges before six o'clock.

Mr. BERGERON. Not one.

Mr. BERTRAM. However, knowing that he intended to leave the city of Ottawa, he should have reserved the charges until he returned. I am a little inclined to think he feared that the report of the investigation being carried on at the Yukon might be here before he returned and there would be no further use for his charges. So he thought he would launch them against the Liberal party—for he thought it was the Liberal party he was driving at—hoping to injure them to the benefit of his own party.

Now, a great deal has been said regarding the inability and the incapacity of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). Well, we are accustomed to observations of that kind, because even the leader of the Opposition seldom makes a speech in this House without charging different members of the Government with incapacity. The same thing was done by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), when dealing with the Minister of the Interior. Now, Sir, it seems to me that the Minister of the Interior has developed an organizing power, an organizing ability that—if I may so speak—is second to that of no other member in this House. I think his course in making the appointments was wise and prudent. What would the head of any large manufacturing establishment have done under similar circumstances? What does the head of any large banking institution, any loan company, do, when he wants men to organize a bank or to take charge of a large industrial or financial concern? He will try to find men for the position that he believes will be able to do the work, and able to fulfil in every respect the duties pertaining to it. First of all, he will consult with men in whom he has confidence, as to the nominations that ought to be made. The Minister of the Interior did that. I do not hesitate to say that, in the selection of Major Walsh for commissioner at that time, he selected the man who had the endorsement of all parties in this country. No later than to-day I was reading in a Conservative evening newspaper of the city of Toronto a statement, that nothing could be said against the appointments that were made at the time, because they were made after full inquiry into the character and ability of those officials. Major Walsh was recommended by Mr. Ogilvie, and recommended by others; in fact, there was no difference of opinion whatever as to the fitness of Major Walsh for that position. He was endorsed by both Liberal and Conservative newspapers. Therefore, I say that the Minister of the Interior deserves the thanks and the confidence of the people of this country for making the appointment of Major Walsh, which proved at the time so satisfactory to all parties in this country. In the selection of the Gold Commissioner he did the same thing. Mr. Fawcett was well recommended for that position; and I am glad to be able to say that, notwithstanding all that has been said against the Gold Commissioner—he, perhaps, may not have the capacity, he may not have the ability of hon. gentlemen opposite; I have no doubt that some of them think they could have filled the position a great deal better—but not one single authentic statement has been made, questioning the honesty and the uprightness of the Gold Commissioner, Mr. Fawcett. He may have made mistakes; I do not know but that he did. It would seem to be impossible for any man occupying that position to say that he never made any mistakes. But who are the men that have been making charges against Mr. Fawcett? Why, Sir, it is the American publishers of the "Nugget" newspaper. I would rather take the opinion of the American consul in the city of Dawson than that of men who are trying to create a strong feeling against the Government. And what did the American consul say regarding Mr. Fawcett, the other day, when the citizens gave him a dinner on the occasion of his leaving the city of Dawson? Why, Sir, he expressed the greatest satisfaction with Mr. Fawcett, and said that he would be entitled to an entrance by the golden gate, if he had never made any mistakes at all. Mr. Fawcett was practically endorsed by the American consul. So I say that, in the appointment of Mr. Fawcett by the Minister of the Interior, he made a selection against whom nothing could be said. The same thing may be said regarding Mr. Wade. Nobody disputes his ability, although, I admit, the leader of the Opposition does not seem to care about the testimony of his son on behalf of Mr. Wade. But it seems to me that the evidence and the statements that were made by the Minister of the Interior showed distinctly that Mr. Wade was a man well qualified to fill that position. The same thing can be said regarding Major Harper, in charge of the post office. So, I claim for the Minister of the Interior, and for the Government of which he is an influential, a strong and energetic member, that he took all due precautions in making the appointments he did, as to the honesty and the ability of the men he selected to organize the affairs of the Yukon. The member for Pictou thinks that those officials are in the power of the Minister of the Interior; he calls Mr. Ogilvie, for instance, one of his satraps. But I maintain that, when these appointments were made, no exception was taken to them; therefore, we must conclude that the Minister took all the precautions possible to find the best men for the positions. Let me say here that, when a Government takes all the precautions that it is possible for men of foresight to take in making an appointment to any public position, no matter whether in the city of Ottawa or in the Yukon district, if that official proves unfaithful to his trust, if he does not do his duty, I do not consider the Government could be held responsible for it. They cannot be held responsible for the acts of their officials. When those acts are brought to their knowledge, when charges are brought to their notice—then they should be held responsible. I am not here this evening to defend any official of this Government. If there is any man occupying a position in the North-west Territories, or anywhere else, who proves unfaithful to his trust, I am satisfied that the Liberal members of this House, as well as hon. gentlemen opposite, will demand that this Government dismiss such officer and deal with him as he deserves. But I say that the officials against whom these charges are made are entitled to some consideration. When a charge is made against any official, it should be at least put in such a shape that it can be taken hold of. The accused is entitled to know what those charges are. Therefore the officials in the Yukon against whom these charges are made, are entitled to some consideration. Our friends on the opposite side say: We do not believe in specific charges. Why, Sir, you cannot deal with any other kind of charges. They would want a commission appointed to spend a whole year on a fishing expedition. I do not believe this Parliament would be justified in appointing a fishing commission. It is somewhat extraordinary that, notwithstanding that thousands of men have come out of the Yukon after having been there for some time, and who are now in eastern Canada—I say it is surprising that not one single responsible man can be found among these thousands who will come forward and make specific charges. The hon. member for Pictou says that they are afraid to do so, afraid that their property would be taken away from them. Surely, all the men that have come out of the Yukon have not come out with property. I suppose that about 10,000 men have come out of the Yukon this year; surely, if there is anything wrong, some one of them could be found who will come forward and make a specific charge that we can get hold of and investigate. I do not believe one man can be found that will come forward and make any such charges, except perhaps in regard to some small matters which we may almost consider as a matter of course. Sir, it is one of the most difficult things in the world to deal with anything that you cannot get hold of. I have found that to be so in my own experience. Over and over again, in my own business, indefinite complaints have been made to me against this man and that man. I cannot go on a fishing expedition without something definite to work upon. I require to know what are the grounds of those complaints; I require to know who makes them, and when statements are made that I can get hold of, then I make an inquiry into them. For my part I do not believe that any hon. member ought to read an anonymous letter in this House. Any man who cannot put his name to a letter he sends and will not allow his name to be used should have no weight in this Parliament, and no member of Parliament should read anonymous letters scattering baseless accusations throughout the country for which no authority is given. I was surprised when I read the different statements made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). Before his speech was delivered I thought it was quite likely that something might be wrong in the Yukon; it was quite likely that some officials might, perhaps, do something that they ought not to have done, because, after all, there are many good men who do not know what they will do until they have been tried. No man can say what he will do when tempted. Men went into that country with good characters, but surrounded as they were by the spirit of speculation, and by many temptations, it would not have been surprising to have learned that some of the officials representing this Government had fallen victims to this temptation that was spread out before them. But I am glad for the honour of Canadian administration that we were able to send men away up to the Yukon, away beyond the bounds of civilization, and I am only surprised that so little can be brought home to them, and that so little can be said against them. During the recent speech of the hon. member for Pictou, we could not find one single thing against any of these officials except unauthenticated statements and anonymous letters. And, after all, what were these letters? You have only to read these statements to see that they are not letters at all. They look more like political diatribes drawn up by members of the Conservative party than letters written by honest men, and the use which was made of these statements show that the hon. member for Pictou had no foundation for the charges he was making. Then the hon. member for Pictou showed also that he was mistaken. The Minister of the Interior showed that the hon. member for Pictou made a statement in this House that he had not taken the trouble to investigate. Fancy the leader of the Conservative party coming into this House and telling us that the Canadian officials in the Yukon were underpaid, that they ought to be paid more money! This is something that we have not heard for a long time, and you have to read the hon. gentleman's speech to see that he did not know that in addition to their salaries, these officials had their lodging at the same time, and their living expenses. The hon. gentleman did not know that, because he said that they were not able to live on the salaries that they received. I say that instead of their being underpaid they were well paid. That one single statement, made by the hon. member for Pictou, shows conclusively that he did not understand the question, and that he had not investigated it before making his speech. It showed clearly that all he intended to do, was not to do something for the good name of his country, but that what would satisfy him, would be to fasten some charges against the Government and against the hon. Minister of the Interior. I may say that the hon. Minister of the Interior of to-day stands in the highest estimation of the people of this broad Dominion than ever before after the reply he made to the hon. member for Pictou. I know that in Toronto, in the Conservative city of Toronto, because there are always Conservative members for Toronto, everywhere I go in Toronto, the people say: That was a splendid speech delivered by Mr. Sifton, and they seem to be well satisfied with it and agree that the hon. Minister of the Interior has shown his fitness for the position he occupies and for what he is doing. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) was quoting from the "Farmers' Sun," I think, in support of the position he was taking against the Government, in the Yukon. An article has just been placed in my hands, which is dated no later than April 12th, just a few days ago. Although I have not read it I will take the liberty of reading it now in reply to the statement made by the hon. member for West Toronto.

Mr. CLARKE. I did not quote from the "Farmers' Sun."

Mr. BERTRAM. The "Weekly Sun." It is the same thing. Hon. gentlemen opposite always like to try and slip out by some little technicalities. The hon. gentleman from West Toronto ought to be only too glad to hear the truth. An editorial here reads as follows :

Mr. Sifton's reply to the speech of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper is largely devoted to pointing out the difficulties with which the Government has been confronted in administering the Yukon district. Suddenly called upon to administer law, to preserve order and provide for the recording of claims in a large territory under entirely new and original conditions, the Government was confronted with great difficulties. To overcome these difficulties all its energies would have been fully taxed if the territory had been directly under its eye. The remoteness of the territory made the task of the Government much greater, and it should not be held too strictly to account. We do not suppose there is a man living who, under the conditions with which Mr. Sifton had to deal could have given the Yukon territory an ideal administration.

Mr. Sifton appears to deal very frankly and candidly with the charges made against him. He does not claim perfection ; he may, he says, have made mistakes ; in the light of experience his actions in some respects might be changed or modified ; but he has done all that any reasonable man could expect to ensure proper administration of the territory, and he has never been influenced by improper motives. He asks Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper to formulate his charges, and pledges himself, if charges are made, to have them investigated by a committee of the House or by a commission. Mr. Sifton's defence is a strong one, and his speech has evidently made an impression on the country.

I commend that editorial to the consideration of the hon. member for West Toronto, and would ask him to find some other authority than the "Weekly Sun" when he is trying to make a charge against the hon. Minister of the Interior. A great deal was said, too, in regard to permits to take liquor into the Yukon. I think that the reply of the hon. Minister of the Interior to the charge in regard to that matter was most effective. He showed that liquor permits had been issued for a small amount. Then the hon. member for Pictou, without giving the name of the person to whom he referred, tried to fasten upon the Minister of the Interior the charge that a member of the legal profession in Victoria had received $500 for obtaining a permit from the Minister to sell liquor in the Yukon. The hon. Minister of the Interior denied that charge. He said that a permit never was granted. As to whether any lawyer got $500 or not, he, of course, had nothing to do. He is not responsible for what any legal gentleman may do in Victoria ; he is only responsible for what he may do himself. He did not grant that permit. The hon. member for Pictou simply played upon words, first saying one thing, then another, notwithstanding that he was held down strongly to the statement made by the Minister of the Interior that that permit was never granted.

It turns out after all that this very telegram which he is trying to fasten upon the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is the outcome of a telegram which was received from the hon. member for Pictou's own partner. It seems to me the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has been playing fast and loose with a good many communications in dealing with this matter, but as to this particular telegram he will have to settle with his partner the best way he can. As an example of how the hon. member for Pictou did not understand the charges he was making, I point to his statement that the water front in Dawson had been leased for about $30,000 and that the lessees were making a profit of about $90,000 a year. He went further, and he charged that Government officials and judges of the land were interested in that lease. That statement has been denied by Judge Maguire and all the other officials since, and there does not appear to be a word of truth in it. There was one feature, however, in connection with that lease which the hon. member (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did not seem to understand—and it was these important features he seemed to leave out all through his speech—and that was that this lease was given from month to month, so that if there was anything wrong in connection with it, it could very easily be cancelled. Surely, if the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had thought of that, he would not have gone the length he did. I maintain that when the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) makes the charge that certain gentlemen were advantageously interested in the outcome of this lease, the hon. gentleman should have been able to place some authentic statement before the House, or he should have refrained altogether from making the charge. It must be painful to the country, and painful to hon. members of this House, to find a gentleman make such a charge without any authentic information, and which charge has been denied by Judge Maguire and every other official who sent replies to the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). Indeed, Sir, the hon. member for Pictou did not seem to understand what he was talking about. Gentlemen opposite have read us a great many extracts from newspapers and from letters written by men who will not give their names. In my business experience I get a great many letters from time to time, and if I receive a long letter, the first thing I do is to look at the signature. If the writer is a man I do not think very much of, I do not waste much time in considering his letter, and I think, Sir, the business men of this House will be inclined to follow my example, and to pay very little attention to any letter read here without name or without authority. Now, Sir, I will read to the House something that was written a very short time ago in regard to the Yukon by a gentleman whose name I am not afraid to give. It will show that there can be extracts read which place a very different light on the transaction in Dawson from that which is derived from anonymous letters read by gentlemen on the other side. This extract which I shall read is dated the 26th February, 1899, only a short time ago, and it is written by H. T. Willis, manager of the Bank of Commerce at Dawson City. I believe Mr. Willis is a very strong Conservative—I do not think any the worse of him for that, because even some of the strongest Conservatives have sometimes very redeeming qualities, and therefore I like to quote a Conservative authority, especially when he has those redeeming qualities. Mr. Willis says:

We have had several stampedes here this winter. In some cases the stampede was caused by alleged discoveries on new creeks, and in some cases by alleged irregularities in staking some of the creeks now being worked. In the first case the mob usually returned cursing somebody for "selling" them, and in the second case the returning mob rushes to the Gold Commissioners and try to jump all sort of innocent persons' claims, and when they find they can't, amuse themselves cursing the Canadian Government and its officials. There has been a great deal of howl here about corruption, &c., of Canadian officials, and an investigation is now going on but it is almost certain to end in nothing. They may find that some clerks have accepted money for working after hours, or that some door-keeper has accepted a bribe to let some one past him out of turn. In most of these cases the officials are not here, having been removed long since. But they can make no successful attack on the honesty of the Gold Commissioner; he may have erred in judgment sometimes, but that is all that can be said.

Now, it seems to me that this bears evidence of giving the true state of affairs in the Yukon. Mr. Willis does not pretend to say that nothing wrong has happened; he does not pretend to say that some man may not have fallen and taken perhaps a little bribe that he should not have taken; but he declares positively that no successful charge can be brought home against the officials in the Yukon. A letter of that kind, written by a man occupying that responsible position, and a Conservative to boot, is worth more than a bushel of those anonymous letters that have been read to the House by hon. gentlemen opposite.

I desire also to mention a matter of very great importance in connection with this Yukon question. An investigation has been going on there for some considerable time under Mr. Ogilvie. Gentlemen opposite seem to say now that Mr. Ogilvie is not a fit man to carry on that investigation. But they must have got some new light lately on that score. Sir, if there is one official in this whole Dominion whom the people of this country ought to be proud of, it is this man who spent years and years in that far-off Yukon, and who was able to come out with a character and a record above reproach. So far as the evidence goes, and so far as I know Mr.

Mr. BERTRAM.

Ogilvie, he appears to be in every sense of the word a thoroughly incorruptible man. I have had the pleasure of hearing Mr. Ogilvie lecture, and you have only to see him to recognize his noble character. His fine unassuming manner, his large head, and his capacious brow, causes you to realize at once that Mr. Ogilvie is well qualified to fill the position he now holds. Not one word can be said against the character of William Ogilvie not one word can be said against his ability, and I for one believe that he is capable of carrying on the investigation confided to his charge. Over and above all that, there would be no sense in sending a man to the Yukon to investigate charges who has not the confidence of all classes there, and Mr. Ogilvie has the confidence of miners and all alike. Some say that a lawyer should have been appointed. For my part, I do not wish to say anything against the lawyers, but lawyers, to my mind, are too roundabout in trying to find out the truth about any matter. What you want there is a man of good hard common sense, a man with a practical knowledge of the country, and Mr. Ogilvie is that man. His appointment is better than the appointment of any lawyer. A lawyer's time is too often taken up trying to make the worst appear the better cause; trying to do the best for his client even though he knows he is guilty. I say that a man like Mr. Ogilvie is capable of conducting an investigation of that kind better than any lawyer, for Mr. Ogilvie is a man whom he can trust to find out the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth. The appointment of Mr. Ogilvie by this Government was a judicious one and it commanded the confidence of all parties. Now, Sir, the point I wish to make is this: That while Mr. Ogilvie was collecting the evidence under his commission while he was acting in the interests of the country and while he was investigating the charges, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) might well have stayed his hand until the report was sent in, and then if that report was unsatisfactory, he could have come forward with his charges. But, in the very middle of that investigation, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) throws into the arena a large number of anonymous letters. That very action of his is calculated to cast discredit on that commission, and calculated to impede it in its task of ascertaining the truth. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), in my opinion, would have shown more discretion had he waited for Mr. Ogilvie to report—and then made his complaint to the House if he thought the investigation was not satisfactory. While Mr. Ogilvie was collecting evidence and endeavouring to ascertain whether there was any truth in these charges or not. I maintain that it was imprudent on his part to come forward with that long list of anonymous charges, and deal with them in the way he did. He was asked by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to supply Mr. Ogilvie with any evidence he had in his possession, so that it might be investigated; but he did not want to do that; he knew a thing worth two of that. He seemed more anxious to bring a charge of corruption against the Government than to remove a stain from the fair fame of Canada. Therefore, I consider that the hon. member for Pictou was premature, to say the least, in bringing his charges forward.

Now, it is not my intention to take up the time of this House to any considerable extent, because I am convinced that the reply that was made by the Minister of the Interior was a satisfactory one to the people at large. That reply is now on record; it has been printed in the public press and is in "Hansard," and those who wish to look into it can do so; and if I were to go into the subject in detail, I would be simply to a large extent repeating the statements already made by the hon. Minister of the Interior. There is one point, however, which I wish to make clear. That is, that I will not stand in my place in Parliament and support any Government that desires to shield corrupt acts on the part of any officials of this country. So far as I am concerned, so far as the Liberal party are concerned, we are prepared to punish wrong-doing on the part of any official. Therefore, when the report of the investigation now going on is made, if it appears that that investigation has not been a complete or satisfactory one, or that the charges have not been fully investigated, I for one would have no hesitation in supporting any effort made by any member of Parliament to secure a further investigation, if necessary. But until we hear from Mr. Ogilvie, I consider that we should not take any further action in relation to the appointment of any tribunal for the purpose of investigating these charges. Let the commission which has already been called into existence by the Government, and which is now at work, complete its work and report before we take any further action. As I said before, the Government are not responsible for any improper conduct on the part of any official, so long as they do not retain the official in office after their attention has been called to the fact. Therefore, I have no hesitation in asking this House and the country to say that the Government of the day have acted promptly in connection with this matter. The Miners' Association made their charges, I think, under the date of the 25th of August, and when their petition came to the city of Ottawa and was placed in the hands of the Government, no delay took place in attending to it. Immediate action was taken. The charges, I believe, were not received until October, and some two or three days afterwards, on the 5th of October, action was taken by the Government, and the commission was issued. Could any Government do more than that? That commission was not received by Mr. Ogilvie, I believe, until the month of January; but the moment he received it, he issued a proclamation, announcing the power which had been placed in his hands, and calling upon any one who had complaints to make to come forward and make them. A very short time has elapsed since that commission commenced its work. Whether it has completed it or not, I do not know; but I think the proper policy for this House is to wait until we get all the facts before we institute any other investigation. In taking that course, I believe we shall be doing what is satisfactory to the people of this country. And let it be understood that so far as the Liberal Government and the Liberal party are concerned, they will not shield any corrupt official, either in Ottawa, in the Yukon, or in any other part of Canada. For these reasons I have great pleasure in moving in amendment to the amendment, seconded by Mr. Bourassa:

That all the words after "His Excellency the Governor General" in the amendment be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof:—

"That we have observed with pleasure that on receipt of complaints against some of the officials in the Yukon district, His Excellency's Government took prompt action to inquire into the matter of such complaints by appointing Mr. William Ogilvie as a commissioner for that purpose. Having entire confidence in the integrity and ability of Mr. Ogilvie, we are satisfied that his inquiry will be impartial and thorough, and that it will place His Excellency's advisers in possession of all the information necessary to enable them to do justice to all parties concerned."

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). Mr. Speaker, I presume I may sympathize to a certain extent with the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), who has preceded me, in view of the fact that both he and I suffer in the limitation of the subjects on which we may address this House. At the same time, of course, just as he has done, I must submit to the regulations of the House, and confine myself to the matter of the Yukon charges which have been made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I was rather surprised that my hon. friend from Centre Toronto, after laying down what seemed to me to be a very excellent proposition, regarded in the abstract, that no person should make any charge in this House which he was unable to sustain, and that no person in this House should speak against any one who was absent, did not abide very closely by that excellent precept. He devoted himself with a great deal of diligence to a very elaborate and vigorous attack on my hon. colleague, who was not present to hear that attack or reply to it. Now, I will devote my attention for a few moments to a few aspects of this matter, as far as my hon. colleague is concerned.

The fact is, I believe, as stated in the course of the interruption by my hon. leader (Sir Charles Tupper), that my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had not intended at all to make, in any extended form, charges against the Government, or any member of it, or against the Yukon officials, when he addressed this House. He was approaching the closing passages of his speech just about six o'clock, when, in a conversation across the floor, he asked: Are we to go on? And the right hon. leader of the Government said, yes. That, I understand, involved a complete change of the arrangement made between the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition, under which the House was to be adjourned at six o'clock. It was very near six o'clock, and quite evident that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) could not before recess do more than make a merely passing reference to the Yukon matter and then close his speech; but being, in a measure, compelled to go on by this change of the arrangement, he had to pass to a consideration of these matters that have since been spoken of as the Yukon charges. Here is the language of my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) a few minutes before six o'clock:

There are other matters to which I would refer. I had intended to perform what I considered a solemn duty. If we are to continue, I will go further into a subject that I consider is necessary to be dealt—

That was the language of my hon. friend up to the point when he took up the consideration of the Yukon question, and, therefore, the attack made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) on the hon. member for Pictou on this point falls completely to the ground. I regret that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertram) did not abide by what seems to me a very excellent precept, and abstain from attacking the hon. member for Pictou vigorously and repeatedly, as he did, because he recurred to this subject time and again. It is evident by the course followed by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Bertram, and that followed by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), that a very important and material point in the defence of the Minister of the Interior to be made by the Liberal party is to try and create the impression in the minds of the people that the hon. member for Pictou exceeded the privileges of Parliament, and violated a rule of Parliament, by making charges in this House which he could not substantiate. In view of the fact that my hon. colleague considered he had a solemn duty to perform in bringing to the notice of the people the condition of affairs in the Yukon, which he believed to be discreditable to Canada, and that he was compelled by the clamour of hon. gentlemen opposite to specify charges, that is an extraordinary proposition to come from them. My hon. friend did not, in the course of his speech, at all introduce any of the evidence he held in his hand; but, at the beginning of his remarks upon the Yukon question, hon. members opposite, and some members of the Government among them, continued to insist on his making specific charges; and, while the hon. member for Pictou did not endeavour to conceal the fact that in the charges he might lay before the House, he would be handicapped to this extent that he was unable to give the names, and while he made that statement early in the course of his speech, still he was compelled, in carrying out the duty he had undertaken, to go on and read the specific charges that had come to his knowledge. I suppose that we may regard the attitude of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) as representing that of the Liberal party throughout Canada on this question. It is evident from his speech that he is not only perfectly prepared to disbelieve everything that has been said here in the nature of a charge against the Yukon administration of the Government, but is prepared to hold the Government absolutely guiltless, and all its officials. And it is very evident that if the Liberal party of Canada approach the consideration of the subject in the frame of mind in which the hon. member for Toronto dealt with it to-night, it will be very difficult for anybody in this country—Mr. Ogilvie, or anybody else who is charged to investigate—to satisfy the Liberal party or its supporters, if he does not find a verdict of acquittal for the Government and its officials. The hon. member for Toronto told us to-night that he would not be in favour of a judicial commission, unless and until a decision is rendered by the commissioner now holding an inquiry. That is precisely the point upon which the Conservative party in this House, and, I think, a large number of people outside, differ with the hon. gentleman. It is held by them that a sufficient case has been made out to show the importance of having the good name of the administration of the Government in the Yukon cleared from the charges made against it, not in this House alone, but all over Canada and the civilized world. I do not think that the hon. member for Pictou started out at all with the assumption that everything was wrong, or that any member of the Government was guilty, but that, from the tremendous amount of publicity which has been given, not only in Canada, but throughout the world, to charges which reflected severely against the good name of Canada, it was absolutely necessary that a judicial investigation should be held. We know that one of the things upon which Great Britain, our mother country, upon which the people of our race, pride themselves, is their impartial administration of justice and the absolute fairness of their officials, no matter under what circumstances. But the facts of the case with which we are dealing now, show that, whether rightly or wrongly, the impression prevails in Canada, and a considerable part of the world outside, that these officials who represent the Canadian Government in the Yukon, have been guilty of gross acts of mal-administration. I am sure that for a number of months past no one could take up a paper in any part of Canada without coming upon charges of mal-administration, and sometimes something much worse, against the officials who represent Canada in the Yukon. It is not usual to have such charges so widely made, and so thoroughly made. So great an excitement has been created everywhere in the minds of the adventurous by the wonderful reports of the riches of the Yukon, that I am safe in saying, there is not a county of Canada which is not represented in the Yukon.

Now, these men are continually corresponding with their friends at home, and though the efforts of the Postmaster General have failed so far to secure regular transmission of the mails and letters do not reach the outside world from the Yukon as readily as is desirable, still, there is scarcely a part of Canada that is not in more or less direct communication with the Yukon, and in which statements similar to those made here by the hon. member for Pictou have not only appeared in the press but have reached the people direct from men in the Yukon with whom those who remained at home are individually acquainted. More than that, these men who have been to the Yukon are beginning to return, and almost everywhere in Canada you will find men who have been to the Yukon, and are heroes in the neighbourhood, receiving much attention and much sought after, who tell their experience with great zest and gusto. I have had in my own neighbourhood, during the winter, a returned Klondike miner who had been successful and was spending the winter at home. He was continually moving about the county, and must have talked with thousands of people in the course of the winter. Whether or not the hon. member for Centre Toronto is right in believing that there is no wrongdoing among Government officials in the Yukon, certain it is the man to whom I refer—and he could not be actuated by dislike of the Government because he is a supporter of theirs—mentioned, as a matter of course not at all out of the way, that the delivery of the mail was not regularly made, that men had to stand for hours outside of the post office waiting for letters, and that there was equal delay in having claims recorded or in securing information as to where claims were that were not recorded. He said that those who did not know any better stood about and waited, while those who had more experience simply passed a sum of money—five dollars, I think, was the sum he mentioned—into the hands of some go-between, usually of the fair sex, I believe, and that open sesame unlocked the private door of the post office or the recording office, and thus the wise man, the man who knew the ropes, instead of being delayed by waiting for official routine, solved the difficulty by a solatium or placebo, which must have found its way into the hands of some official, because it brought about the desired result. These facts, it seems to me are indisputable, because I feel sure that every hon. member of this House must have some constituents at home who could tell the same story. And, in view of these facts, it will be apparent, that it was the duty of the hon. member for Pictou or some other hon. member to bring this matter before the attention of the House. Therefore, it seems to me, that the attack which is thought to be made against the hon. member for Pictou and the suggestion that he did something beyond his rights or something improper falls to the ground. He did his duty and did it, as he usually does, in a very able manner. I was sorry the hon. member for Centre Toronto after, as I said, laying down an excellent precept for his own guidance, should accuse my hon. friend and colleague (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) of cowardice in making his charges at the time he did when he was about to leave the House and with the hope that he would escape a reply. It is evident that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) does not know the hon. member for Pictou very well, or he would not make that statement. That hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) may have a great many defects, as we know he has a great many good qualities; but I think, as a rule, his make up physically and mentally is that of the strong man, not that of the weak man or coward. Nothing would induce me to believe that the hon. member would be moved by consideration of safety to himself or security from attack to be guilty of a cowardly evasion of reply in making his statements at the time he did. I have shown that he was compelled, in a measure, to select that particular time. I am sure that while he did make his attack in an open and bold manner and at such great length as to give it the importance that was due to it, he did nothing but what he felt it was his duty to do.

I think I might as well first deal with the speech of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), and, perhaps, the best way is to go through it backwards and take up the latest statements first. The hon. gentleman is perfectly satisfied, and I suppose in this he reflects the opinion of the Government and his party, with Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner, as the investigator of these charges. He is satisfied that Mr. Ogilvie enjoys the confidence of every man in the Yukon. I would like to know how the hon. member who is so difficult to persuade in some matters is so easy to persuade in others. How did he arrive at this conclusion as to Mr. Ogilvie's qualifications and as to the respect in which he is supposed to be held by the people of the Yukon. The hon. gentleman got it from the press, or in conversation with people who are supposed to know, or he must have some innate ideas with respect to Mr. Ogilvie. I think we may assume that he has no preconceived or intuitive knowledge of Mr. Ogilvie, and so, he must rely for his information simply on rumour, conversation with others or the press reports. If he is prepared to believe everything good of Mr. Ogilvie because he finds it in the press, he might as well believe statements that come from the Yukon. They are in the press, too, and they are backed by precisely the same testimony, and if it is possible for him to arrive at that knowledge on the basis of information given by the press, and I think that as a logical and reasonable man, he will admit at once that we on this side of the House have exactly the same evidence, but in a much stronger measure, to believe that grave irregularities have existed in the Yukon, so grave as to be detrimental to the good name of Canada, and that an investigation of the whole question should be made. Now, the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) is satisfied with Mr. Ogilvie, apparently, because he concludes that Mr. Ogilvie is a man of common sense. I am not at all prepared to, nor do I desire to dispute the statement. From the statement of the hon. member for Centre Toronto and the excellent opinion of Mr. Ogilvie that seems to prevail, I am prepared to admit that he is a man of common sense. But does that fit him for the position of head of a judicial inquiry? If the hon. member had a legal difficulty to deal with or wished to have a case decided in which he had large interests involved, would he be willing to pass by a man of legal training for a man whom he believed to be a man of common sense? I am sure he would not entrust to a man the drafting of the lines of a vessel or the constructing of a vessel on the ground that he was a man of common sense. He would, I imagine, and I am sure from the success that attends him in his business, follow a very different rule. He secures a man who has a special training, a special knowledge and fitness to do the work. Now that being the case, it seems to me that the commissioner the Government has sent to the Yukon to investigate these charges cannot be held to be the best man simply because we believe him to have common sense. It seems to me the other view of the matter should be taken, the view that some man of judicial training, and more than that, some man of judicial standing, some man holding some position in the judiciary of the country which entitles him to the respect, to the esteem and to the confidence of the country, is the man who should be selected for that purpose. Therefore, instead of agreeing with the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), I am rather inclined to agree with the other view, I am inclined to agree with those who suggest that the commissioner appointed is not the best man, that his decision is not certain to be a right decision, and I question if it will command that assent of the people of Canada which his decision should command when it is secured.

But there is another matter. If there is one point more than another upon which the Minister of the Interior laid great stress in the course of his speech, it was that the administration of the Yukon was rather a difficult undertaking, that there was a tremendous lot of difficult work to do, and that it required a great deal of ability and a great deal of energy to carry that on. Now, after the Minister of the Interior had decided to send Mr. Ogilvie back to the Yukon as commissioner, and had entrusted him with the administration of that district, I would almost suppose from the speech of the Minister of the Interior that he had imposed upon Mr. Ogilvie as much as that gentleman, even with reasonably good faculties and strong common sense, would be able to attend to. Therefore, it strikes me that in imposing in addition to those duties upon Mr. Ogilvie the task of carrying on a judicial investigation involving, I would imagine, a considerable length of time, close application, and certainly sufficient attention to elicit evidence, and cross-examine witnesses, and to get at material facts, he is imposing upon Mr. Ogilvie a task which should hardly be imposed upon him, in addition to the administration of the great Yukon district. But the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) did not touch upon one point which has been insisted upon from this side of the House, and that is that in this case the Minister of the Interior chose to represent himself as being put upon trial, and chose to look upon the charges made by the member for Pictou as a personal attack upon himself, and he laid great stress upon that. The investigation with which he has charged Mr. Ogilvie is to be made by one who is his subordinate, who is an employee of his department, and who, furthermore, I am told, is a relative of his, a connection at least. It is not, of course, for us on this side of the House to question the uprightness or the honesty of Mr. Ogilvie. I do not think we should do that. But I do not think that it is according to the practice in business matters or in legal matters, so far as can be avoided, to allow any person who is under a charge to come into a court which is presided over by any one over whom he has influence or upon whom he has any claim through relationship. Therefore, it seems to me that the selection of Mr. Ogilvie in this matter is not as good as it might be. But these matters are of detail. The great question for this House to consider, if they are going to devote themselves carefully to a consideration of the question that has been submitted to them by the amendment moved by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), is as to whether there were really good grounds for the charge that has been made by the hon. member for Pictou reflecting upon the Government management of the Yukon, or, perhaps, to be more specific, upon the conduct of some officials in the Yukon. I cannot help thinking that to a certain extent the manner in which the Minister of the Interior very ingeniously laid great stress upon the fact that an attack was being made upon the Government, that an attack was being made upon himself by my colleague, the member for Pictou, was a ruse that was intended to a certain extent to divert attention, that he desired to put the matter in a position in which he might better repel that attack; it was in effect a very artful and skilful selection of the ground upon which he would fight in his defence. Well, it will not do to tell the House that the speech in reply of the Minister of the Interior was perfectly satisfactory to the House, satisfactory to the country, and was a conclusive answer to the speech of my hon. colleague. I cannot altogether agree in that contention. As I have said already, I think, to a large extent, any measure of success which that speech did secure was owing to the skilful manner in which the Minister of the Interior managed his defence, the skilful manner in which he took the position from which he would undertake to repel attack. Because, if we look back upon that speech, it will be found that the manner in which the Minister of the Interior proceeded to reply to the speech of my hon. colleague was one that is not so conclusive when you come to look at it closely, and look at all its arguments seriatim, as it might be. It was a very long speech, a very elaborate speech; but after all, to my mind, it was not a conclusive speech. What was the course followed by the Minister of the Interior? He began his defence by maintaining a great many points which, to my mind, were not in issue. He started out by defending the appointment of every one of his officials. He defended the appointment of the first Gold Commissioner on the ground that he was a surveyor, selected on the advice of the Surveyor General of his department. Then he fortified himself by saying that not only he, but Major Walsh, Mr. Ogilvie, and almost every other one of his appointments, had had in some way or other, at some time or another, received the approval of some person or of some newspaper; and if the Minister of the Interior was fortunate enough to find that some Conservatives, or some Conservative organ, had said one word in favour of any of these appointments, he proceeded to read that evidence, and to leave that point as if he had conclusively demonstrated the fact that that appointment was the most perfect that could be made. If he could secure any relative or connection of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to say one word in favour of any of the appointments which he had made, he seemed to feel that in that case his defence was perfect indeed. For instance, my hon. colleague has a brother in Winnipeg, a barrister there. The appointment of Mr. Wade was one of those to which the hon. member for Pictou particularly adverted as being an improper appointment. Did the Minister of the Interior establish the fact at all that it was a proper appointment, that it was a good selection? A great deal has been said against the appointment of Mr. Wade, a great deal has been said against his conduct since his appointment; in fact, a great many statements made by the member for Pictou reflected upon Mr. Wade. Now, what is the reply of the Minister of the Interior to all these charges? Did he produce any evidence to show that Mr. Wade was not guilty? Did he set up any probability in any way that he was not guilty? He did not. His whole defence in that case, if you examine it, although it occupied considerable time in its delivery, lay in the fact that the hon. member for Pictou had a brother in Winnipeg who, upon one occasion, wrote a letter in which he favoured a young barrister in Winnipeg named Wade, whom the Minister of the Interior assured us was the same person. Now, it is a pleasing thing for us on this side of the House to see our leader held in high esteem. It is satisfactory to learn that his authority is great on the Government side of the House, that they respect his opinion and value it; and it is still more complimentary to find that the reflected light of our honoured leader is sufficient to bring joy and gladness, in a sense, to gentlemen on the Government side of the House; and when we find that they not only highly respect his opinion, but look upon a casual utterance of his son as a sufficient vindication of the appointment of a man whose conduct was in question, whose conduct in the Yukon had been held up as improper and wrong, we must feel very much pleased indeed. And we must think for a moment that it involved a very contradictory estimate of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman in the opening passages of his speech, did not speak in a complimentary manner of the leader of the Opposition. He had rather spoken in an uncomplimentary way, but in the high esteem in which the hon. leader of the Opposition is held by this House, in the authority, the weight and the virtue of the name of the hon. leader of the Opposition, the hon. Minister of the Interior found an absolute and complete vindication for an appointment to the Yukon that had been called in question, in the fact, that the son of the hon. leader of the Opposition had, upon one occasion, come to the rescue of a gentleman when he was attacked in the press of Winnipeg and had said some complimentary things about him. While a great deal of the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior was exceedingly ingenuous and well arranged, hon. gentlemen will find that he takes up each one of these cases, and instead of disproving, or setting up any presumption that the charges have not been made out, the defence rests upon the fact that he is enabled in some way or other, to get a Conservative paper, or an individual, who has said some good word in favour of the appointments he has made. That surely is not a sufficient defence, and it strikes me that he carried it almost to an extreme. I do not think that ordinarily the hon. Minister of the Interior is held up as a man of extreme modesty; I think he is usually regarded as a man with a fair opinion of himself, but his self-abnegation on this occasion was extraordinary. Sometimes he seemed to obliterate himself; he did not seem to have taken any active measures in these appointments to the Yukon. He claimed to have been guided by the authority of the Surveyor General or of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who recommended one person, or the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who recommended another person. In every case in which he made appointments he did not seem to have made them upon his own knowledge of the individuals, but upon a favourable opinion expressed by some other person. The fact of the matter is that the hon. Minister of the Interior, so far as that portion of his speech can be regarded as an argument, proves that he had very little, if anything, to do with the appointment of men to the staff of the Yukon. When you reflect upon the conduct of the Minister of the Interior, you will see why he did not make good appointments. He says that he came into office about the end of the year. He did not take hold of the work of his office until some time early in the following year. He had come here, from Manitoba, where he had been practising his profession and taking part in the politics of that province. He came into what is admittedly one of the most important and difficult departments in Ottawa, without much knowledge of its requirements, and his first act was to dismiss an experienced deputy, a man admittedly of very great ability, and he filled his place with an inexperienced gentleman from the neighbourhood from which he had come. The hon. Minister came into the department without experience, and dismissed a man who had experience, who might have helped him to make these appointments well. The hon. Minister of the Interior did something more than that; he did a very extraordinary thing when he went away from his office out to the Pacific coast, and went to the Yukon, as far as he could, separating himself, entirely, from his officials in Ottawa, where he was not in a position to direct the operations of his department; where he might have acquired some experience and knowledge in the matter of packing supplies across the pass at the head of the Lynn Canal, but where he could not keep in touch with his department or direct its affairs. That was not the course to have been pursued by the person responsible for the administration of that department, or by the person responsible for governing this provisional district. I should rather think that it would have been more prudent had he remained in his office where he could have kept in touch with his department. The hon. Minister very frankly proceeded to say to the House that instead of learning anything of any value upon that occasion, the only fact which he seemed to have learned was one in which he made a very grave mistake, and that some of the disgrace of the Yukon administration arose from the fact that he did not only learn nothing, but that he had learned something that was incorrect. A considerable part of the hon. gentleman's speech was taken up with explaining why adequate arrangements had not been made at Dawson to provide for the business and the population which proceeded to Dawson in 1898. He explained that from what he learned in the course of the time that he spent on the Yukon River and between that and Dyea, he made up his mind that the miners he met on the Pass and on the river were not going to Dawson. It seems that the hon. gentleman was entirely wrong. He not only learned nothing that was of any value, but he formed an erroneous impression. Instead of remaining in charge of his department he committed the grave blunder as the head official of that department, and that blunder led to another one. He formed an opinion that was entirely erroneous, that these miners were not going to Dawson, but were going to spread themselves over the country. According to the statement made by him, they made no provision for receiving these miners in Dawson. He instructed Major Walsh, instead of going to Dawson, which was to be the seat of government in that district, to remain at a point on the Yukon River where his whole duties were to assist such passengers as required assistance. So far as the defence of the hon. Minister of the Interior goes, it goes to show that instead of assuming responsibility for the appointments made, these appointments were made in the most extraordinary fashion on some favourable opinion, expressed at some time or other and preferably by his opponents; that he went away from his office when he should have remained there, that his observation was so bad that he formed an erroneous impression, the result of which impression was a very grave blunder. Having justified all these official appointments in this fashion, he proceeded to endeavour to repudiate some of the charges made by my hon. colleague the hon. member for Pictou.

In these rebuttals he showed the same amount of mistaken and unjustifiable ingenuity as he did in that part of his speech where he defended these appointments. Take the charge made by Sir Charles Herbert Tupper, which has not been disproved, and which the Minister of the Interior, at the end, himself contributed to prove. That was a charge "that $500 had been paid to a barrister in Vancouver, or Victoria, for securing by letter and telegram from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) a permit for the taking of liquor into the Yukon district." Did the Minister (Mr. Sifton), in dealing with that subject, refer to that particular telegram which he must have, and did have, in his knowledge all the time he was making his speech? At first, no. He spent a great deal of the time of this House, and in the most dramatic fashion led up to the revelation of a fact that did not bear on the matter at all, and he said that the telegram was sent to him by the partner of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). He knew that could not have been the telegram that was referred to, because, after entering into a great deal of detail, he said that no permit was sent in reply to that telegram. He managed with a great deal of ingenuity, by wading through the files of his department and other departments, to discover another telegram which had been sent, but that telegram also could not have been the particular telegram referred to, because in reply to it no permit had been sent. The Minister (Mr. Sifton) spent all that time in trying to create the impression that those who were the most active in applying for liquor permits were Conservative barristers, and more particularly Conservative barristers in some way associated with the hon. member for Pictou. Having ingeniously created an impression of that kind in some quarters, he eventually discovered the particular telegram in question. He then had no difficulty in remembering the case of Mr. Archer Martin, who had telegraphed and written to him, and in reply to whose telegram and letter he (Mr. Sifton) had sent a permit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). He did not. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) emphatically denied that statement, and gave a statement the exact opposite of what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) has said.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all. The statement is in the Minister's (Mr. Sifton) speech.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I challenge him to produce that statement.

Mr. BELL. I shall have much pleasure in doing so.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I challenge him to produce a statement of the Minister of the Interior, that he sent a permit to Mr. Archer Martin.

Mr. BELL. He sent a telegram to Mr. Martin, which had the effect of a permit, and which was a permit in fact. I am pleased indeed that the Minister (Sir Louis Davies) has given me an opportunity to show this. I was not prepared to think that the Minister of Marine would make this particular defence.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not making a defence at all.

I say, that the statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell), and which he puts in the mouth of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), is not correct.

Mr. BELL. The Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) was, as usual, much more cautious, and much more judicial, and much more ingenious, in his treatment of the subject, than is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The Minister of the Interior relied for his defence upon the quibble that he did not send a permit, but that he had sent a telegram.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And you stated that the Minister of the Interior said he sent a permit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The telegram was a permit for the liquor to go in.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BELL. Yes; it was a permit in every sense of the word. The quibble of the Minister of the Interior was, that he had not sent a permit from here; the permit was sent from the North-west Territories.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) is trying to evade—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Having made a deliberate statement, which I contradicted, the hon. gentleman is trying to evade—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to a question of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) has challenged the statement made by my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell). My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) is going to read from "Hansard" to prove what the Minister of the Interior said, but the Minister of Marine now wants to interrupt him and make a speech.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is trying to help his friend out, seeing that he has got himself into a difficulty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are in the difficulty.

Mr. BELL. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) has stated that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) denied having sent a permit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) stated that the Minister of the Interior had sent a permit, and I challenged him to prove that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So it will be proven. My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) will prove it from the speech of the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. BELL. Here is what the Minister of the Interior said, and we will see how it compares with the contradiction of the Minister of Marine.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). On what page of "Hansard" is that?

Mr. BELL. On page 675. Here is what the Minister of the Interior said :

On the subject of telegrams, to revert to that interesting subject, if the hon. member for Pictou was not referring to the Prime Minister of British Columbia or to his partner, perhaps he was referring to Mr. Archer Martin, now Mr. Justice Martin. Mr. Archer Martin, then a Liberal lawyer in Victoria, telegraphed to me on the 8th of July :

"Pither & Leiser, leading firm liquor merchants here, were granted permit from Regina, May 21st, to import 2,000 gallons into Yukon, and forwarded goods charge responsible employee. Messenger just arrived from north that goods stopped by Major Steele at Lake Bennett under your instructions of May 10th and June 3rd, presumably because of conflict between Governments."

It was not in consequence of any conflict between Governments, because the first letter was written when we had not any information. The letter was written giving the information, and adding to the list as soon as we got the information.

"Public here understood this matter had been amicably arranged, and that Regina permits now recognized by you. Parties interested very responsible merchants and good standing. Stoppage working great hardship and heavy loss. Would respectfully urge you wire immediate instructions Steele my care allowing permit recognition, so that messenger return by steamer sailing probably to-morrow, and party proceed without further delay and loss.

ARCHER MARTIN."

I wired this reply :

"Archer Martin, Victoria, B.C.

This telegram will be authority to Major Steele to recognize permit to Pither & Leiser issued by North-west Government to take into Yukon 2,000 gallons of liquor."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. A telegram recognizing a permit granted by the North-west Territories.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Exactly.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What had the Minister of the Interior to do with that? He never sent a permit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course, he did.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) never gave a permit, or never authorized a permit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He did, in so many words. Read the telegram again.

Mr. BELL. The Minister of the Interior said :

Mr. BELL (Pictou).

I wired this reply :

"Archer Martin, Victoria, B.C.

This telegram will be authority to Major Steele to recognize permit to Pither & Leiser issued by North-west Government to take into Yukon 2,000 gallons of liquor."

Mr. TAYLOR. What has the Minister of Marine to say to that?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Read what the Minister of the Interior said after that. Immediately afterwards the Minister of the Interior stated :

These were not issued by me, but issued against my wishes—issued by the North-west Government in connection with the Yukon—2,000 gallons of liquor. That, therefore, is the complete story of the liquor question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That does not touch the question at issue at all.

Mr. BELL. I will read the telegram again. It is :

This telegram will be authority to Major Steele to recognize permit to Pither & Leiser issued by North-west Government to take into Yukon 2,000 gallons of liquor."

Mr. BERGERON. What has the Minister of Marine to say to that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The law recognized that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I beg your pardon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister of the Interior stopped it at first, and then gave the permit to let it go through.

Mr. BELL. The Minister of the Interior quibbled on the point, that he did not issue the permit, but that the Regina Government did; but the Minister of Marine quibbles on the point, that the permit was not a written instrument, but was a telegram. Why, the telegram made the permit effectual.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bell) will permit me to say, that the permit was issued by the North-west Territories, in pursuance of their local powers under the statutes. It was issued against the wishes of the Minister of the Interior. The Minister of the Interior had no legal power to contravene that permit, or allow it to be used to take liquor in or to stop it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But he had stopped it. He says himself that he had stopped it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. His officers having attempted to stop it, he wired them that he had no power to stop it.

Mr. SPROULE. The Minister of Justice said he had authority.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). We had better leave the hon. Minister of Marine, because he is evidently getting deeper and deeper in the mire.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You should withdraw the statement you made.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I should be very sorry to make any statement that was inaccurate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, my goodness!

Mr. BELL (Pictou). It was absolutely correct, I think. There is another point I would like to refer to. The hon. gentleman said the Minister of the Interior had not authority to prevent the issue of the permit. What did the Minister of Justice say? In the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior occurs the statement that the Minister of Justice had advised him that he could cancel these permits.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Up to what date?

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The Minister of Marine and Fisheries wants to know at what date. At the date the Minister of the Interior learned for the first time that the Government at Regina was issuing permits—as soon as he knew they were issued. I do not know that it was correct, but that certainly was stated in the House by the Minister of the Interior. He then proceeded to make these permits good by telegraphing a list of them to the officers in charge of the different posts on the Yukon and in the passes. Subsequently some additional permits were issued, and one of these unquestionably is the one referred to in this telegram. The Minister of the Interior authorized the permits issued by the Government of Regina, and these were being recognized by the officers. Then application comes for another for 2,000 gallons, not included in the list issued to the officers of the different posts; and, in response to an application from Mr. Archer Martin, he makes that good, whereas before it was worth no more than a piece of waste paper. I did not lay much stress on this point, because I did not imagine for a moment that any person would deny the statement. What I was pointing out was the ingenious manner in which the Minister of the Interior avoided dealing with this permit, and went on to deal with other permits—a permit asked for by Mr. Turner, the ex-Premier of British Columbia, and a permit asked for by Mr. Peters. He dealt with all of these, not one of which could have been a case in point; but at last, I suppose knowing that subsequently, when this matter should be brought up in the House, he would be convicted of conduct which could at least be described as disingenuous, he discovers what he knew all the time, and must have known from the moment he began his speech—the telegram in question, and thereby admits the truth of the statement made by the hon. member for Pictou that the permit was obtained from him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And yet he declared that neither directly nor indirectly had he given any permit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And that it was granted against the wishes of the entire Government.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). His language in first denying it was comprehensive, but his language in admitting it afterwards was equally comprehensive. So much for that speech, which has been lauded as a complete and triumphant vindication. In my opinion the Minister of the Interior proves nothing. He shows a great deal of ingenuity in evading points. He raises numerous points for himself, puts them in the mouths of his opponents, and then proceeds to demolish them. He sets up men of straw, and then proceeds to knock them down; and he spends six hours in this pastime to prove that he is a perfect Jack-the-Giant-Killer. He reads a report made by a correspondent of the "Mining Review," which practically admits the whole charge made by the hon. member for Pictou, which admits that wrong-doing prevailed in the Yukon, that there was irregularity in the delivery of the mails, and that bribes were used to secure the assistance of officials of the Government in getting those facilities which the ordinary administration of the law did not give them. So that this triumphant speech of the Minister of the Interior, instead of vindicating himself and clearing the officials of the Government of all blame, is absolutely worthless as a defence, though it was certainly ingenious. The Minister of the Interior set himself various tasks which did not bear on the question at issue; and having settled things in a very satisfactory manner, he assumes, and his friends assume, that he has completely replied to all the charges. But, fortunately for the contention made on this side of the House, he proceeds to select a report which he accepts as authentic, as made by a perfectly fair-minded man, as presenting a fair view of the situation in the Yukon; and among other points that were accepted by him as being made by that report, are certain obvious defects in the mining laws, want of roads, want of adequate mail service, want of recording officials, and difficulty of recording claims, and of getting to know what claims have been recorded. Now, the point at issue here is not so much whether these irregularities existed or not, because evidence of a peculiar character, perhaps hon. gentlemen would say, but still evidence that bears on that subject, is almost conclusive to any reasonable person. Statements are made all over Canada by persons who have intimate acquaintance with what is going on in the Yukon. The fact that these statements are repeated in a journal of the authority of the London "Times," by a special commissioner who was sent to inquire into the facts of the case, and that these statements are made by two United States officials, as recited by the hon. member for Pictou, go to make a very strong presumption that wrong-doing exists in the Yukon. In opposition to that, what have we? We have simply the artful, ingenious defence of the hon. Minister of the Interior, in which he seeks to saddle the responsibility for the appointment of every official who went into the country on some other person—on some member of the staff or some Conservative well-wisher; and then he assumes that everything has been done that ought to be done. Because at last a mass meeting has been held in the Yukon, attended, it is said, by some 10,000 persons, and a list of grievances have been sent to the Government, signed by leading citizens of the district, he orders an investigation before Mr. Ogilvie, the commissioner in charge of the district, who, as he has already proved, has more on his hands than any one man can properly deal with. The question for the House and the country is whether this is an adequate investigation or not—whether it is sufficient for the Minister of the Interior to devolve on an official of his department an inquiry into these matters, and whether that is going to be satisfactory to the country or not. It seems to us, on this side of the House, that it is not doing justice to the Government and the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), if he chooses to consider himself personally attacked, to act in this manner. We consider that he should put the case into the hands of a judicial officer, whose decisions will command respect from every one. I do not think it is necessary to go on repeating the arguments or reading newspaper extracts. It is very evident, from what has already been stated in this House, that such extracts could be read, coming from authentic sources and from people of repute and standing, to an almost unlimited extent, but I shall only refer for a moment to one point, regarding which the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has been particularly charged, namely, of having exceeded his rights as a member of this House in going too far. In order to defend themselves, the Government have started a very active propaganda to show if possible that the statements made about Major Walsh by my hon. friend were entirely unwarranted. That remains to be proven. I am sure that no one would regret more than my hon. friend from Pictou saying anything injurious to any one, unless impelled to do it by duty. It is not a pleasant task to make charges, but it must not be forgotten that, to a large extent, that task was imposed on the hon. member for Pictou by the Government and hon. gentleman on that side, who, instead of accepting the evidence brought out first—the letters and interviews of persons in the

Mr. BELL (Pictou).

Yukon, the testimony published in the London "Times," the reports made to the United States Government by two of their officials—insisted continually upon specific charges; and when my hon. friend proceeded to read those specific charges, his great offence and the great justification of the Government was that in that respect he had committed such wrong that it justified everything the Government did or failed to do. I am sure that my hon. colleague (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) had no desire to hurt the feelings of Major Walsh or his family, but I do not think Major Walsh would have escaped censure if my hon. friend had never mentioned his name, because he had been charged in the newspapers and by correspondents and in interviews with having failed as commissioner. It may be true that nothing wrong was done, it may be true that Major Walsh had been a good administrator, but at the same time the hon. member for Pictou is not the only one who has charged him with offences. I have had put into my hands to-night a letter written by one who cannot be charged with partisan prejudices, because he came out in a contest as a Liberal candidate. I refer to Dr. Bonnar. When asked to give his opinion of the administration of affairs in that country by Major Walsh, Dr. Bonnar replied:

A mistake was made in appointing Major Walsh to the important position of commissioner of that country; he had no capacity whatever for the position he occupied. He is a man of very limited ability, but of unlimited conceit. Taken as a whole, he was in every way unfitted for the position he occupied, and it was a fortunate thing for the country, as well as the Government that he resigned from the office he should never have been appointed to fill.

Dr. Bonnar was then asked in what particular Major Walsh failed in the performance of his duties, and he replied:

In the first place, when Major Walsh received the appointment, he was either needed or not needed in Dawson City. That is self-evident. If he was not needed, why should he have been appointed? If needed, he was needed there as soon as he could possibly reach there. But what are the facts? Instead of proceeding with all possible speed to Dawson City, he went as far as Little Salmon and wintered there.

And in this connection we are told by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that Major Walsh wintered at Little Salmon because he was instructed by him to remain there, so that the fault does not lie entirely with Major Walsh but with the head of the department, who gave him this instruction.

He was spending his time, drawing his salary and putting the country to a great deal of expense wintering at Little Salmon, when the duties of his office demanded that he should be at Dawson. The excuse that he could not get his party through from Little Salmon to Dawson at that season of the year is a flimsy one, because at that very time women and little children, some under ten years of age, passed out over the trail, and surely what women and children had accomplished the gallant major should not have feared to attempt. By staying at Little Salmon he showed he was negligent to the duties of the office to which the Government had appointed him. Even after his arrival in Dawson City, he devoted his time in attempting to make himself popular with the common rabble of the new mining city, but even in this he made a failure. He was possessed of no executive ability, and his administration of affairs in the Yukon from start to finish was a dismal failure.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him? Is he reading a letter from Dr. Bonnar?

Mr. BELL. It is published as an interview.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In what paper?

Mr. BELL. The "Morning Telegram," of Winnipeg, Friday, October 22nd.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Even Major Walsh's bitterest enemy, as Dr. Bonnar is, did not accuse him of anything such as was charged against him by the hon. member for Pictou, and what the hon. member is reading is only an interview at that.

Mr. BELL. That is quite true, but there is one passage in the interview in which Dr. Bonnar speaks of Major Walsh as trying to ingratiate himself with the common rabble of the town, and that seems in the line of what my hon. friend was referring to. But I say that the hon. member for Pictou was not altogether to blame when, enforced by the Government and the hon. members opposite to produce his evidence, he did read the statements put into his hands. I am sure that no one more than he would regret saying anything to injure the feeling of any one, but at the same time it is impossible to allow one man, because he occupies a higher or better position, to escape, when attacks are made on his subordinate officials, if it be a matter of common notoriety or repute that he was not acting as he should. While I do not for a moment assume any man to be guilty before he is proved guilty, while I do not for a moment admit that those charges made against Major Walsh or his subordinates are true, and while I maintain that we cannot accept them as true until they are proven, I hold that charges of this character should be investigated in such a manner that it will be competent to every one in Canada to say that they are either true or false. There is one point to which I wish to refer, and that is the point made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) that the hon. member for Pictou spoke in ignorance when he said that the officials of the Government in the Yukon were poorly paid. The hon. Minister of the Interior gave us a list of the salaries, and some of them were certainly very satisfactory, but I notice that while it is not charged directly that either Major Walsh or any of the others at the head of the department accepted bribes for the delivery of mail matter or the recording of claims, or the giving out of information, it is charged that their subordinates did. What does the statement of the hon. Minister as to the salaries show?

You will find a great deal of information, if you read it carefully. It shows that there are clerks in the employ of the Government there who are not paid as much as the cook. Men in responsible positions, who are not paid as much as the servants. Of course, he may be a very good cook, he may be a Paris chef; or these may be very poor clerks. But, so far as the point which the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) endeavoured to make, that my hon. colleague did not have sufficient knowledge is concerned, it falls to the ground, because the Minister of the Interior's figures show that there are clerks in the employ of the Government who do not get as much as the servants. On the whole, it seems to me that the Government, if they are going to act reasonably on this matter, are bound to consider all the charges made, to give those charges due weight, and to hold such an investigation as is demanded by the Opposition in this House, and such as will be sufficient to decide either for or against the guilt or innocence of the officials against whom charges have been made. It is hardly necessary to go into evidence at this time. As I have already suggested, I have evidence, in the form of letters, statements made by persons in the Yukon, either by letters to their friends or in conversation, all of which goes to show that the general charge made is well founded. That, however, I think, the Government does not intend to dispute. I do not think that the Minister of the Interior, in the course of his speech, at any time undertook to say that these charges were not true. He relied for his defence upon the contention that he had appointed the best officials he could get, and that when the charges were made in a form that he could regard as specific and official, by the miners' meeting, he made an investigation. He is not in as good a position as he might be as to the time when that commission commenced their work. These charges were made early last year. They were matters of notoriety from the early portion of last year, and yet we learn from the Minister of the Interior's own statement that it was not until February that the commissioner he had designed to appoint was in a position to commence the investigation. That shows great delay. The Minister accounts for it by saying that he did not rush to Council to secure an appointment. There is no question about that. He did not, apparently, use all the diligence and energy he used in getting up his speech in reply to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). In four days, after that speech was made, he was prepared with evidence from every part of Canada; he had telegrams from Sandon and Prince Albert; he had ransacked his own department for evidence, and his clerks had gone over the files of letters. The hon. Minister showed no lack of energy in that.

But in investigating these scandals, he did not show as much energy as he might have done. In fact, the Minister seemed to take a long time to learn what was going on. One of the earliest statements made in his speech was that he was not prepared to deal with the great influx of people into that country, because very little was known about it. He said that when he came into office almost nothing was known about it; and there was no one in Ottawa from whom he could get information. I think that the hon. gentleman is mistaken, and that at the time there was in Ottawa a gentleman who had come directly from the Yukon. I refer to Inspector Strickland, who must have been in Ottawa about the 20th July, 1897. The first official who reached the Yukon did not get there until February, 1898, according to the statement of the hon. Minister himself. It took the Minister seven months to get the first official in the Yukon after this news reached Ottawa. The whole Pacific coast was ringing with the news, and in every town in the United States and Canada parties were being organized to go into that country. The Minister of the Interior did not show a great deal of energy or ability in preparing to meet that influx of people. He did not show much energy even when he went out there and became lost to the outside world at Dyea, and I think he displayed a similar lack of energy then, as he himself tells us he was so impressed with the importance of the charges made against the Government on the Yukon that he telegraphed to Mr. Ogilvie, then on his way to the Yukon, to use a free hand. That could only have one meaning, I imagine, and that was that Mr. Ogilvie had power to dismiss officials who were not acting according to what he thought was right. But we find that not until February of this year is Mr. Ogilvie given power as commissioner to hear charges or clear up this scandal which exists, and which to a certain extent, involves the Government. That being the case, the Minister's show of energy in some directions and conspicuous lack of it in others is more significant than the copious flood of denials with which he meets every charge against himself and his officials. I think a significant feature of the speech of the hon. Minister was his failure to meet the charge so clearly brought against him by the hon. member for Pictou when he contrasted his conduct when in Manitoba he employed Pinkerton detectives and used the funds of the Government of Canada to fish for evidence against alleged violators of the election law of that province, and then, when the good name of Canada was at stake, when charges were being made everywhere openly against the officials of this country, he made no effort whatever to get evidence, and, in fact, treated all these stories practically as the invention of the Opposition, and wrote to members of the Opposition in various parts of Canada asking them to formulate charges.

Mr. BELL (Pictou).

The Minister of the Interior showed great ingenuity in the course of his speech as to what he said and what he did not say and no part of it was more judicious than that in which he did not attempt to deal with this charge, that while he was so energetic in hunting down political opponents on the most flimsy charges and using the money of the Dominion to get evidence against them, he made no effort to secure evidence as to whether or not the officials in the Yukon were guilty of the charges made against them.

There is a marked contrast, a very great contrast. The hon. gentleman went far beyond his right, went far beyond what was legal or proper in his conduct in Manitoba. But he certainly fell equally far short of his duty when he, the head of the department whose officials are accused everywhere over the world of wrong-doing, of dishonesty, of accepting bribes, of everything that is un-British, and that, I should hope, is un-Canadian as well, makes no effort to appoint a commission with sufficient authority to hold a satisfactory investigation. Because, as was pointed out, the authority first given to Mr. Ogilvie was not of a judicial character, it did not authorize him to hold a court, it did not authorize him to subpoena witnesses and administer oaths, it did not put in his hands or under his control any of that machinery which is everywhere recognized as being absolutely essential to hold a satisfactory inquiry and to come to a satisfactory conclusion. Therefore, it seems to me that in every respect, whether we consider the defence set up, the very inadequate defence set up by the Minister of the Interior, the nature of the charges, the great publicity of the charges, the character of the investigation which the Minister of the Interior has at last seen fit to order, the manner in which he has ordered it, in every respect the inquiry that he has set on foot is inadequate to satisfy the public, unless it be some person like the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) who is prepared in the beginning to be quite satisfied that nothing can be wrong under this Government. But it is not adapted to satisfy the minds of any impartial person, evidently not adapted to satisfy the mind of any one who is prejudiced against the Government. Now, why should not the Government hold the most searching investigation that can be held? Is it because it would cost them something? Is it because it would be expensive to the country? I can scarcely believe that, in view of the fact that they have not with respect to other matters shown themselves so economical. During the years that have passed since this Government came into power they have never hesitated to issue commissions with a free hand, and to pay handsomely the commissioners whom they appointed to hunt out any unfortunate Conservative official who could be suspected or proved in any way to have taken any part in political action against them. The Government of Canada has already, in the course of their career, expended enough money to hold a satisfactory judicial commission in the Yukon matter, in the work of setting bloodhounds on the trail of unfortunate Conservatives whose places are wanted by their friends. In the course of last summer this Government has shown that it is prepared to expend a sum of $250,000 in order to put off the temperance people of Canada for a few months, to play with them for a few months, and to come to a situation where they are at last compelled to admit—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Order; there is an amendment before the House.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I am illustrating my point. I say this Government are prepared to spend $250,000 that was evidently intended, according to the statement made in this House to-day, to have no result. Therefore, I maintain that it is not on economical grounds that this Government does not grant this judicial inquiry. Now, what purpose is served by the Government in refusing the inquiry? No good purpose that I can conceive of. But if they choose to rely upon what you might almost call a partisan commissioner whom they have appointed, if the Minister of the Interior, instead of going before a court—I am not suggesting that he is held on trial, but I am taking the position he himself assumes, that the charge is made against him, that he is being tried, that he is the person whom my hon. colleague, the member for Pictou, wishes to bring into judgment—I say that if that be the case, and if the Minister of the Interior is justified in considering himself as being on trial, why does he elect to go before one of his own officials instead of going before an adequate judicial tribunal which would give a decision in this matter that would be satisfactory to the people of Canada, and would be certainly most satisfactory to the Minister of the Interior if it should result in a verdict in his favour? I think I am correct in maintaining that, while it has been sought by the Minister of the Interior and his supporters in this House to make it appear that in the matter of bringing these charges my hon. colleague from Pictou exceeded the bounds of moderation and acted in a manner to show that he had a personal animus, I am satisfied that is not the position or the frame of mind in which members on this side of the House are approaching this question. I believe that the Opposition in this House deplore the fact that these charges have been made against officials of Canada, and I believe they would learn with the greatest satisfaction that they are unfounded, and that nothing occurred in the Yukon which reflected upon the good name of Canada or upon the conduct of any of its officials. I am satisfied that the Government is not acting wisely for itself in the course it has chosen to adopt in this matter; because we are left with no longer any room to doubt as to whether the Government would accept the amendment. The fact that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) has proposed an amendment to the amendment, shunting aside the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), shows that they are disposed in this matter to evade the issue, to burk the inquiry, and not to allow it to proceed, I feel satisfied that they not only injure themselves, but, what is much more serious, they are going to injure our country. Considering the publicity given to the charges, the fact that the "Times" newspaper, the greatest organ of public opinion in England, endorsed these charges, after the fact cited by my colleague in this House that the correspondent of the "Times," when challenged as to the accuracy of her statements, refused to retract one of them and stood by them all, considering that those charges are made now in such a fashion and with such publicity, in so vast a theatre, practically in the eyes and ears of the whole world, I think the Government of Canada could not go to too much expense or trouble to vindicate its character and the character of its officials in this matter. Now, the Government was not always so indifferent to the opinion of the "Times." I remember with what great gusto, in 1897, members supporting the Government read an extract from the "Times," speaking favourably of the preferential clause of the tariff of the hon. gentlemen. The "Times" on that occasion was a great authority, a most important organ of opinion. It was sufficient to outweigh any expression of opinion adverse to the reciprocal tariff on this side of the House. But now that the "Times" is talking against the hon. gentlemen instead of in their favour, it no longer commands respect from them. It seems to me that the "Times" is just what it was before. It is a great organ of public opinion, and it has one characteristic, I think, that it is absolutely incorruptible. No matter what might be said of any other paper published in the world, it is certain as anything can be that no inducement of money or influence will lead the "Times" to publish or retract any statement except as it believes. Therefore, the statements being made, practically, against Canada by that great organ of public opinion, are of the very highest importance. Now, my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) endeavoured to meet that point by asserting that the "Times" had been wrong. Well, that is not an answer. The "Times" certainly has been wrong, and will be wrong again. Every man has been wrong, and every organ of public opinion has been wrong. The hon. member for Centre Toronto will remember that in that matter to which he refers, I presume the matter of the charges against Parnell, the "Times" was honest, and secured an inquiry, and fought it out, and when it was proven to be wrong, it admitted the fact. But there was a judicial inquiry, a satisfactory and complete one ; and if the hon. member for Centre Toronto is going to cite the authority of the "Times" as an example in this matter, it is against him and not for him.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend, at this hour of the night, to touch upon any other points which might be raised. One might make a speech which would rival in length those for which the fashion has been set in this House, when speaking for three, or four, or five, or six hours. In fact, we can scarcely claim that we are making a speech at all in this Parliament, unless we at least exceed four hours. However, I am not disposed to do that, as I might be able to do practically from the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior. I might point out the matters in which he conspicuously fails to make his case, in which he practically admits the case made out against him by the hon. member for Pictou. I think I am strictly within the course I ought to take, when I urge upon the Government the gravity and the publicity of the charges that have been made, the great seriousness of having these brought to the ears and eyes of the whole world, as reflecting upon the character of Canadian citizens, because, although we might admit that we cannot accept the charges made against the Gold Commissioner or against the administrator as being well founded, there is a practical admission from the hon. Minister of the Interior that the subordinates have done wrong. He proceeds to defend himself by saying that these things have occurred ; but, if the officers in charge of these men who were employed in the post office and in various other capacities, could not punish them, how could I do it ? He, to a certain extent, sets up the case, that it would absolve him, living in Ottawa, from the task of having to maintain personal supervision over officials thousands of miles away, but he does not deny the fact that they are guilty. What right has he to assume the guilt of these men, and he practically does that in his speech ? The hon. gentleman does not only not deny the charge, but practically makes it. He practically states that certain officials in the post office and in the mining recorder's office have accepted bribes. He practically admits the serious charge of the influence of money being administered to these officials through go-betweens. Having, as I think I have fairly done, from the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior himself, from the common notoriety which the subject has received from the great weight of testimony of the London "Times," from the tremendous number of statements made by individuals, some of whom, we have it on the authority of hon. members of this House, are prepared to come before a properly constituted court and testify—as the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior)—having shown the necessity for an inquiry, I urge upon the Government to take the action that the situation demands. There can be no question that many gentlemen would be prepared to testify in a court of inquiry who would not be induced voluntarily to give information or to submit their names or to place themselves in a position to suffer from any antagonism they may create in the minds of officials. I have shown that a case exists requiring careful inquiry, that the reply made out by the hon. Minister of the Interior is not adequate, and I think it is the duty of the Government not to be turned aside by reason of any technicalities of Parliament into burking this inquiry, but that they would better serve the purposes for which they are in existence, the securing of good government, by granting this Parliament and this country a court of inquiry whose standing and authority and competency would be beyond question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 14th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Central Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Edwards.)

Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Russell, Dundas and Grenville Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Edwards.)

Bill (No. 60) to authorize the amalgamation of the Erie and Huron Railway Company and the Lake Erie and Detroit River Railway Company.—(Mr. Charlton.)

THE INSPECTION OF WHEAT.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that several deputations are on their way—one from Winnipeg, Fort William, Toronto and Montreal—to put before the Government their views regarding the inspection of wheat. We have had a great many complaints, both on this side and in England, concerning the manner in which our western wheat sent during the past season was inspected. I think it well to inform hon. members that the Department of Inland Revenue has appointed a meeting for Tuesday next in the forenoon, to be held in one of the committee rooms of this House, at which all the deputations will be present, and to which I invite all hon. members interested in this question to attend.

Mr. HAGGART. At what hour?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. At ten o'clock in the morning in the tower room on Tuesday next. Instead of meeting the deputations separately, I thought it better to meet them together, and give them and hon. members an opportunity of exchanging views.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bell (East Prince), for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his Speech at the opening of the session; the motion of Mr. Clarke in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. Bertram in amendment to the same.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). I think, Mr. Speaker, it must be admitted that the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House made a very clever and able speech, apologetic in a great measure of that made by his colleague the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). But I feel that one or two of the statements made in the speech of that hon. gentleman are almost too serious to allow them to pass, even with the apology or explanation given by his hon. colleague. I wish to refer to one statement made by the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), which, I think, would be very misleading to the members of this House and to citizens of the country if any of them are not better informed on the subject than he happened to be himself. He stated that the commissioner appointed to examine into the so-called charges against the officials in the Yukon district had not power to subpoena witnesses and examine witnesses under oath. He certainly could not have taken the trouble to look at the Act under which the commissioner acted, or to examine the commission by which he was appointed. I think it would be a very serious thing, if it were true, that Mr. Ogilvie had not power enough to conduct this inquiry in accordance with the well-known practice and rule governing investigations of this kind. I, therefore, take this opportunity to inform the House and the country exactly how the matter stands and to let them know what powers Mr. Ogilvie had as commissioner.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) would allow me.

As I understand him, he is referring to a statement made by me. I desire to explain that when I spoke of Mr. Ogilvie not having power to examine witnesses, I referred not to the commission issued to him, but to the first instructions in the shape of a telegram from the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in which that hon. gentleman said he gave Mr. Ogilvie a free hand. Under that, I pointed out, Mr. Ogilvie had no power. I am aware that subsequently the commission was issued.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sutherland) proceeds, perhaps he would allow me to ask the First Minister if he will lay on the Table the commission given to Mr. Ogilvie.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it has already been laid on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not understand that to be the case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It was read by the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. SPEAKER. It was read by the Minister; but, of course, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) is perfectly within his right in asking that it be laid on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. My object was not to insist upon a right, but simply to see the commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I remember that the Minister of the Interior read this document in the course of his speech, and it appears in "Hansard," and, I understand that he was requested to lay the commission on the Table, and said he would do so. I am pleased to hear the correction made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell). At the same time he knows that the statement has been given wide publicity through the newspapers by those who desire to belittle the position held by Mr. Ogilvie and his power to make this inquiry; and I think it is in the best interests of the public that it should be known exactly how the matter stands. I will read the Act—a very short one—under which powers were given to the commissioner, so that there may be no further misunderstanding. As to the telegram sent to Mr. Ogilvie, I think it is an evidence of the activity of the Minister of the Interior, and his anxiety that the inquiry should proceed early that he notified the commissioner, so that he would be ready to go on with his duties when he received the proper authority. Mr. Ogilvie was appointed to make this inquiry under chapter 114 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, entitled "An Act respecting inquiries concerning public matters."

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :—

1. Whenever the Governor in Council deems it expedient to cause inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter connected with the good government of Canada, or the conduct of any part of the public business thereof, and such inquiry is not regulated by any special law, the Governor in Council may, by the commission in the case, confer upon the commissioners or persons by whom such inquiry is to be conducted, the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence on oath, orally or in writing, or on solemn affirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and to produce such documents and things as such commissioners deem requisite to the full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine.

2. Such commissioner or commissioners shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of such witnesses, and to compel them to give evidence, as is vested in any court of record in civil cases ; but no such witness shall be compelled to answer any question, by his answer to which he might render himself liable to a criminal prosecution.

As I understand it, that is as great power as is given to any judge of the land in making investigations into offences of this or any other description. Further than that, I find on reference to the commission appointing Mr. Ogilvie that a copy of what I have read is set forth in it, clearly establishing his powers in this matter. Great effort has been made, apparently, to belittle the ability and capacity of Mr. Ogilvie as a commissioner, and it has been said that some legal gentleman should have been appointed to occupy that position. So far as I am personally concerned, I cannot for a moment agree with that proposition. On the contrary, I feel that Mr. Ogilvie, with his experience and ability, and holding the position he does as commissioner of the Yukon, is far more likely to have a fair, honest and full inquiry into the charges that were made than any judicial appointee that could have been chosen. If a judge had been appointed to inquire into these matters, it is quite probable he would be governed by the rules of evidence ; and though he might be fairly well satisfied that a great many wrong things had been done by some of the officials that would require a certain amount of punishment, it might be difficult to get the evidence, according to his legal interpretation, to establish the guilt of the accused. On the other hand, Mr. Ogilvie, with the power given him under the commission to make the inquiry, and with the authority of his position as commissioner of the Yukon, as well as the authority given him by letter and telegram by the Minister stating that he had a free hand in dealing with the officials of that country—which showed the anxiety of the Minister to have wrong-doing on the part of the officials ferreted out and punished—has a power much greater than any judge would have. Mr. Ogilvie would do substantial justice even though the evidence, in strictly legal form might not be available. If a public officer were guilty of wrong-doing, Mr Ogilvie had the power to dismiss, which would be possibly the hardest punishment he could give him. In that way the inquiry held was far more likely to be effective in punishing the officials, if they had been guilty of wrong-doing, than would an investigation before a judicial authority as proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. After the very able and exhaustive statement made by the Minister of the Interior in answer to the speeches on the other side, I do not feel called upon to go into this matter at length or to refer to it again in detail. I feel that in that statement of the Minister he has shown clearly that he has been most active in the administration of his department, and most anxious to have the administration of the affairs of the Yukon carried on in the interest of the public; and when we heard, even by intimation, that any of the officials were guilty of any improper conduct, he showed his earnest desire to have the matters investigated and the guilty persons punished and to have an efficient and pure administration of affairs in the Yukon.

I do not believe that any unprejudiced person in the Dominion of Canada can but say, after reading the statements made against the officials and the explanations given by the Minister, that he has made a fair statement of the condition of affairs at the present time. I think it is very unfortunate for the good of Canada and for the dignity of the House of Commons, that we should have such reckless general statements made on the floor of Parliament. I want to refer especially to a speech made by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Robertson), and to ask him, and to ask this House and the country, whether they think it is fair that a member of this House, without any evidence upon which to justify him, should make any such a general charge against the officials of this Dominion, because since they are citizens of this country, reckless charges made against them are made against the whole Canadian people. I do not believe that the moment a man, whether he be a Conservative or a Liberal in politics, is appointed to a position of trust in the public service, he becomes at once a thief and a rascal. I say that in this case, as in all others, men who hold positions in the public service are entitled to justice and fair-play, the same as any other citizens. What does the hon. member for East Toronto say in regard to this matter ? Referring to the charges generally, and basing his future statements on them, he says :

I cannot for one moment believe there could be so much smoke without some fire.

If my hon. friend had wished to be fair to the officials, to the Administration, and to the people of this country, he would have told us where this smoke came from. The hon. gentleman knows, and the people of Canada know, that there were a number of foreigners in the Yukon district who, because under the administration of Major Walsh and the Mounted Police they were compelled to obey Canadian law, were ready to make the most malicious charges against those officials. He also knows, and nobody knows better than he does, that certain newspapers, some of them started in Dawson City, others in the different provinces of the Dominion, have endeavoured, for political party purposes, to raise a great deal of smoke, and to make a great deal of trouble, without the slightest reason therefor, and to libel the character of those officials, when their only purpose was to injure the Government and the Liberal party. Then he goes on to say :

I may say that the Minister of the Interior was particularly careful : he seems to have treated the whole Yukon as a wrecked ship to which he fastened all the barnacles to be found in Manitoba.

I would like to know what justification an hon. gentleman holding the position he does in this House, had for making such a statement as that. I think I may be pardoned for saying that the hon. gentleman has shown a personal feeling against the Minister of the Interior from the first day of his entering public life up to the present time. Nothing too bitter can be suggested against that hon. Minister, no misrepresentation can be thought of that the hon. gentleman will not print in his paper against him. I do not think it is necessary for me to say any more of the hon. gentleman's speech. I can only appeal to the House, Mr. Speaker, and to the people of this country, whether an hon. member is justified, either in this House or in any reputable newspaper, in making charges of that nature without any foundation.

With regard to the charges themselves so much has been said, and the Minister has made so clear a statement of what has taken place and of what is going on there with regard to the investigation, that I do not need to dwell particularly on them. The hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), very bravely stated in the House that we were to have a specific charge. I expected to hear something serious. Well, what was the charge that the hon. gentleman made ? He took the responsibility of telling the Government and the country that if a judicial committee was appointed—I do not know any reason why he could not have brought this charge before Mr. Ogilvie—he was prepared to say that this man he mentioned would give evidence in support of the charge. We were all on the qui vive ; we expected something serious ; but what does it amount to ? He tells us of a certain man whose character he describes in the House himself—because, taking the hon. gentleman's own references to that man, he was of a weak and corrupt character, for, when he was asked to give his name, he said : No, he would not do that, because he was afraid the Minister would fix him. By that we all understood him to mean that the Minister would coax him over in some way, or buy him to give a statement contrary to that he had given to the hon. member. So, I think it is only fair to say that the hon. member knew his man, knew him to be a weak man, who could be fixed, and that when he told this cock-and-bull story containing all these terrible charges against officials in the Yukon, we may conclude that the hon. gentleman himself had bought the man to make this statement, and he was afraid to make his personality known for fear that somebody else would fix him before the time came. The hon. gentleman pledged his honour that this man would appear to prove his charge. What was the charge ? That he went to the office of Messrs. Wade, Clark & Wilson, that he met the typewriter, or stenographer, and asked if he could not get a claim without getting it through Mr. Fawcett, the Gold Commissioner. The typewriter thought he could get him a good claim, if he would come back next day. When he went back, the typewriter told him that he could not get him one on Dominion Creek, but he could get him another claim, and if he would go out and fix the stakes and get the claim through all right, then the typewriter expected him to give him an interest in this claim. Now, I do not think any citizen of this country, any member of this House, will consider that that is any specific charge against the Administration, or against the officials in that country. There is only an insinuation that this man is willing to swear—and we have only heard one side of the story—that a certain conversation took place between himself and the typewriter in a law office of which one of the Dominion officials happened to be a partner. Let me point this out, Mr. Speaker, that even if there had been anything corrupt, and even if there had been any corrupt arrangement in this matter, the partner who was a Dominion official had no power at all to register this claim ; no one else could have registered a claim but Mr. Fawcett.

Sir, I feel that our hon. friends opposite were either hypocritical in their praise of Mr. Ogilvie and the other gentlemen appointed to positions in that district at the time of their appointment, or they are very unfair to these men at the present time. When Mr. Ogilvie was appointed, he was lauded as a man of integrity, of honour, and of great ability. Since then it seems that they cannot say anything too bad about him, that he is unfit even to administer that country or to see that the subordinate officials in his department and the various other departments over which he has jurisdiction do their duty faithfully and honestly, and that he is entirely unfitted to investigate any charges that may be made before him.

Now, the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), talked about the Minister of the Interior loading up the Yukon district with barnacles from Manitoba. This is a general and a most misleading statement. Who were these officials? If the hon. Minister had not even appointed citizens—good citizens—it might be that there might have been some suspicion attached to it. But let us see who the men are that were appointed, and who are being attacked at the present time. First, we have Major Walsh. Major Walsh, it is true, had at one time filled a very honourable position in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. He, with credit to himself, and with credit to the country, took a prominent part in the administration of the affairs of that country. At the time he was appointed to the Yukon he was not a citizen of Manitoba. He was a citizen of the province of Ontario, a man of good character, and his appointment was almost unanimously endorsed by the people who believed that he was just the man to fill the duties which the position called for, and which the position required him to fulfil. Then we have Judge Maguire. Judge Maguire, it is true, was a resident of the North-west Territories, a judge of the territories. Everybody who knows the history of Judge Maguire, knows that when he lived in the province of Ontario he was a very active and able advocate of the Conservative party. He was appointed judge by the Conservatives as a man worthy to occupy the position of judge in the North-west Territories. When the hon. Minister of the Interior selected Judge Maguire, a gentleman in that district, willing to go, I do not think that it could be suspected that he had any personal or unworthy motives in asking Judge Maguire to go from Prince Albert, where he was stationed, to Dawson City to administer the law. Then we have Mr. Fawcett. We have had the explanation from the hon. Minister of the Interior of how he came to be appointed, and I do not think there is any citizen of this country but who would give the hon. Minister credit for endeavouring to get the best man he could in the service of this Dominion to occupy that position. He made a most careful inquiry from the highest officers in his department, and they all recommended Mr. Fawcett as a man of experience, of ability, and a man of the strictest integrity. He was appointed to the most important position of Gold Commissioner. Then we have Mr. Wade. It is true that Mr. Wade was a barrister practising in Winnipeg, but no one will pretend to say that previous to the present time, at any rate, Mr. Wade was not a man of good character, of very superior ability, both as a writer and as a lawyer, and I think it is to the discredit of the people of this country that any hon. gentleman should refer to a gentleman of his standing as a barnacle from Manitoba. Then charges were made in regard to the Mounted Police.

Mr. SUTHERLAND.

From both sides of this House and from the people of this country the highest praise has been given to the Mounted Police, who have been regarded as a noble and splendid class of men, doing their duty faithfully and well to the country, and now we have them charged, by the very men who appointed them to office, as being thieves, rascals, scoundrels and vagabonds. There is nothing too bad for them to charge these men with at the present time. But the contrary of what hon. gentlemen say, I am sure, is the case. I believe that the officers in charge of the police in that distant country, with all the difficulties with which they have to contend, have done credit to themselves and to the British flag. They have maintained law and order in that country, and they have done their duty faithfully. Generally speaking, they deserve the praise and credit of the people of this country rather than the charges that have been laid against them. We have also had charges hurled against the Customs Department. Who was at the head of the Customs Department? It was Mr. D. W. Davis, for many years a member of this House, appointed by the late Administration. I am free to say that, whatever Mr. Davis' weakness or peculiarities may have been, I do not believe that his worst enemy would say that he was dishonest or an unmanly man. I have known him for many years, and I formed the highest opinion of Mr. Davis as a citizen and a member of this House, as a business man and a man of quite a different character from that of some of the hon. gentlemen who have been attacking him at the present time. I have never known him to be guilty of an unworthy or an unmanly act. He is a man who from his experience in the North-west Territories, in the early days, was very well fitted for the position to which he was assigned in that new district, and I believe that when the late Government made that appointment no objection was raised or criticism offered from this side of the House. Now, Mr. Speaker, if any of these gentlemen have so far forgotten themselves as to be guilty of an act of malfeasance in office, or if any of them have been inefficient or incapable, I would not defend or shield them to the slightest extent. I do not believe that this Government desire to shield any official found guilty of wrongdoing. Such being the case, surely it would be more in the interest of the country and in the interest of the prosperity of the citizens of the country, as well as in the prosperity of the Yukon district that these reckless and infamous charges should not be made. Mr. Speaker, I would be very much inclined to accept the apology of the junior member for Pictou on behalf of his colleague if it were not for the very serious charges insinuated in the speech of that hon. member. I must say that from my acquaintance with the senior member for Pictou, no person could, perhaps, feel more pained at his speech than I was. I was not present when he delivered it. I was pained to think that he had so far forgotten the duties of a member of Parliament as to take advantage of the privileges which he enjoys, by reading anonymous letters making such serious charges against the good name and private character of a citizen of this country. I have always felt that the hon. member for Pictou was a courteous man, and I have spoken so of him, but I am sorry to say that he does not appear so, and that is shown by the fact of his reading these miserable, malicious allegations against people without any ground whatever. He has not proven himself to be that courteous gentleman we would expect him to be. He undertook to say that he had been driven to this. I do not think so. I think that when a man makes so many serious charges against a fellow-citizen, he should have taken pains to find out whether there was any foundation for making charges of such an outrageous character without a particle of evidence to support them. I have taken every opportunity of meeting various Canadians from this district who went to the Yukon, and I have also taken every opportunity I could of meeting respectable Englishmen and foreigners who have been in that country. I want to make this clear: There are differences of opinion in respect to royalty and as to the capacity of some of these men charged with the administration of that country, but not one of these reputable citizens ever uttered one word that could be regarded for a moment as sustaining these charges of dishonesty or corruption against any of the officials of that country.

It is not difficult for us to imagine what class of people must have been the associates and informants of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in this matter. In his desire to injure the Liberal party, the hon. gentleman has overreached himself and has done a great injury to the country. Sir, the fact is, that respectable Englishmen, as well as those from other countries, who went to the Yukon to investigate for themselves, have expressed themselves as more than satisfied with the administration of affairs there, and some of these gentlemen are here at the present time, announcing their intention to invest large amounts of money in that country. These gentlemen have a personal knowledge of the country and are perfectly satisfied that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has done his whole duty. No doubt there are complaints of a certain kind from a certain class of people who went there, and who probably wished to do what they should not do and what the officials would not allow them to do; but the reputable people who went to the Yukon are investing their money, and are anxious to try their fortunes in developing that country, and have no complaint to make as to the honesty and integrity of the officials. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) said that Major Walsh was reported to have mixed himself with the rabble when he arrived at Dawson City. Well, Sir, in one sense that is in accordance with the statement that has been made to me, for there were in the Yukon certain men of wealth and high standing who thought they could influence the commissioner, and who approached him to get things done which should not be done. Major Walsh, instead of agreeing to further the aims of those people, got right down among the hard-working miners, and was open to receive every man who had a grievance no matter how poor, humble or ignorant that man might be. Major Walsh, to his credit be it said, defended the working miners against those who were endeavouring to deprive them of their rights by reason of their lack of knowledge of the law and of the regulations governing that country. No doubt Major Walsh did create some enemies by his action in trying to defend the humbler classes against what he considered improper demands on the part of some people high in position. My hon. friend read a newspaper interview from one of these gentlemen. We all know that that gentleman was not responsible for the interview—perhaps he never gave the interview as it appears in that paper—but I know that for certain reasons that gentleman had a very, very bitter feeling against Major Walsh. But, Sir, notwithstanding the quarrel between them, and notwithstanding the bitter feeling, that gentleman gave a positive denial to the slanderous allegations that have been made against the character of Major Walsh. That gentleman was very close to Major Walsh in the Yukon, associating with him and living with him, and meeting him every day, and perhaps every hour for aught I know, and he bears testimony to Major Walsh's high moral character. The insinuations against Major Walsh's reputation are too improper for me to repeat in this House, but even his enemies will defend him from these charges. I have known Major Walsh for a great many years, and I believe, and all who know him believe, that he is incapable of committing the offences alleged against him by the hon. member for Pictou. He was born close to this district; as a young man he lived in this district, and he is well known by a large number of respectable associates from Vancouver in the west to Montreal in the east. Major Walsh is a man of reputable character, a man who has ever been almost a teetotaler under all circumstances, and that tribute to him will be endorsed by thousands of Canadians who have known him since his boyhood. Sir, the good name of Major Walsh is too sacred to be recklessly talked of in this House, and to have statements made against it which have no foundation whatever and without any evidence in their support. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) when he intended to make such a serious charge against any citizen of this country, and especially against a gentleman occupying the high and important position of Major Walsh, should have taken the precaution beforehand to find out if there was any truth in these statements. To the people who know Major Walsh, well, of course, it would not make any material difference, but people who do not know him might believe there has been something wrong. It is a most unfortunate thing that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) should make such reckless statements on the information of some irresponsible and anonymous correspondent. He should have considered the feelings of the immediate family of Major Walsh, and should have refrained from such a very reprehensible course unless he had good reason to know that his charges were true.

Sir, I believe that in the public interest the Government has taken the very best mode of investigating these charges. Some of the lawyers of the Opposition want to try and make capital against the Government, and they contend that there should be a judicial inquiry, but I believe that under the circumstances, Mr. Ogilvie is the best qualified to hold an investigation into these charges and to report to the Government. The insinuations against these officials could easily be inquired into by a committee of this House or by any of the judges of the land, without going to the great expense of appointing a judicial committee. To my mind, it would not be in accordance with good government or justice, if every time some irresponsible and anonymous person makes an underhand attack upon any official, the Government should appoint a committee to investigate. Of course, if a serious statement by a responsible person is made, it would be a different thing altogether. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have accused the Minister of the Interior with shielding his officials. Sir, we know, and the country knows, that the Minister (Mr. Sifton) was more than willing to have every proper charge investigated, and to punish to the limit of the law any wrongdoing. I do say, that as head of a department of Government, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) is justified in defending the officials under him from any slanderous or malicious attacks that may be made by anonymous correspondents, and the Minister was justified, too, in demanding that any one who wished to complain should come forward and make a direct charge. I believe, Sir, that the Opposition, judging by the course they have adopted, are not actuated by a desire for the best interests of the people in this matter. The officials are a representative part of the people of Canada, and to publicly announce in the House that they are unworthy of trust, that they allow stealing in their offices, and that they are corrupt, is a slander on Canadians generally, and is a great injury to our country. I wish to read a short extract with regard to the speech of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) as given in a Conservative paper, controlled by a gentleman who during the last two elections ran as a supporter of the Conservative party. This is how the matter appears to that gentleman and to that newspaper, and I must say it appears very much in the same light to me, and I believe to a great majority of the people of this country irrespective of politics.

Mr. BERGERON. What is the paper ?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Woodstock "Express." As I have stated, it is owned and controlled by a gentleman who was the Conservative candidate in the last two elections.

Mr. BERGERON. You must have brought him back.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The hon. member for Beauharnois says I must have bought him up.

Mr. BERGERON. No, brought him back.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know how I could have brought him back.

Mr. BERGERON. Sunny ways.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. He is one of the largest and best known business men in the country, and a man of high character. It may be possible, though it has nothing to do with this, that he is satisfied with the policy of the Government.

Mr. BERGERON. That is what I mean.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite likely, because I think the majority of the business men and sensible people of the country are satisfied with the policy of the Government. However, this is what this paper says :

When Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper made his ferocious attack upon the Government's administration of the Yukon district, and upon the personal character of the officials, he took upon his shoulders a graver responsibility than has been assumed by a Canadian member of Parliament for many a long day. If he has not the most conclusive evidence to bear him out, if he is only speaking from hearsay, and not from information gleaned from responsible men who know these things of their own personal knowledge and experience, he is guilty of an infamous outrage, the committal of which would drive him from public life. Such charges are not to be made for the mere purpose of manufacturing a little party capital. The private characters of men and women are too sacred for that. Sir Hibbert must either proceed with the discharge of a paramount duty or sink under the odium of having committed an unpardonable wrong.

Now, Sir, it does appear to me—and I think it appears to the majority of the people of this country—that the Opposition, in failing to criticise the acts or the administration of the Government, have taken up this policy of vilification and slander—not stopping at the misrepresentation of administrative acts, but even attacking the personal character of the hon. Minister, as my hon. friend did the other night. I think it is very much to be deplored ; and while I do not want to say anything that would be strong or unparliamentary, I must hope that for the future the dignity of the House will be more maintained in the debates, and that we shall have a fair criticism of the Government, rather than a policy of slander and vilification.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I am very sorry at this late period of the discussion to be obliged to again address the House, as they very kindly listened to me at very considerable length on a former occasion. But the matter now under the consideration of the House is of so grave a character, and has assumed an importance of such a serious description, as to make it absolutely the duty of gentlemen to give the present position we occupy very careful and attentive consideration. It will not do for hon. gentlemen opposite to pooh-pooh this question. I tell them they cannot afford to do that. I tell them that they are standing in the presence of the great intelligent electorate of Canada, and the graver the charge, the more bound they are to give it that consideration to which it is entitled. The charges are of a grave character—a most serious and grave character.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Against the Opposition.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat takes the ground in this House that, no matter what may be the misconduct of an individual in an official capacity, he must go unscathed, because you cannot deal with his conduct without reflecting on his private character.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Quite the contrary. I said I thought he ought to be punished.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Private character I hold to be sacred, as much as any man in this House. I say that the man who uses his position as a member of this House to assail unnecessarily the private character of an individual, whether he is in or out of this House, commits, in my judgment, an unpardonable offence. I do not hesitate to say that. On the other hand, I say that the man who will shrink—I do not care how high the position; the higher the position, the greater the necessity—the man who will shrink from discharging his duty to this House and to this country, in exposing wrong-doing in high places, is unworthy of a seat in this House. The hon. member who has just taken his seat spoke of the address of the hon. junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), though he did not undertake to answer a line or a word of that address, as an apology for the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). No man will dare to say, I hope, in the presence of this intelligent assembly, that it was an apology. It was a vindication—a masterly vindication—of the right of every member of this Parliament to deal unflinchingly and in the most unqualified manner with the conduct of public officials, provided that conduct is of such a character as to bring disgrace and obloquy upon the country. I say, any hon. member of this House would fail in his duty, if under these circumstances he did not deal with it. So far as Major Walsh is concerned, I have no hesitation at all in saying that I listened with the greatest regret to the necessity that existed—and that necessity did exist—and was used by the senior member for Pictou for bringing that gentleman's private conduct before this House. What are the facts, Sir? Is there any man of intelligence, in this House or outside of it—any man who honours public character and public consistency, and the proper and efficient discharge of public duty—who will say that, if a man holding a high position, the executive of the Government of the country in a great district, forgets himself and disgraces that position, it is not the duty of every man who wants to see public officials conduct themselves in a manner to entitle themselves to the respect of the country, to bring his conduct under the notice of this House? I listened to the great encomium which the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) made in this House last night. And, Sir, I could not help feeling that, if that eulogium was deserved—and I would be glad to find that it was deserved—he is the bitterest enemy of Major Walsh, if he denies the opportunity which the resolution moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) behind me, yesterday, would afford that man of having his character completely vindicated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, there is a very much better way. If he will make the statement outside, he will soon have an opportunity of proving it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had better be careful of such challenges as that. I can tell the hon. gentleman that I do not want to use my position in this House in the manner in which I could use it, if I were to respond to that challenge. I say, the hon. gentleman had better be careful. I would be glad to see Major Walsh vindicated; but, when a member of the House of Commons of Canada received a visit from a gentleman holding a high position in the capital of our Empire, in London, when a member of the House of Commons has received a visit from a gentleman who represented one of the largest banking and financial institutions in the city of London, and was told by that gentleman that he went to see the executive head of the Yukon, appointed by the Canadian Government, and that Major Walsh was so intoxicated that he did not know what he was doing—

Mr. DOMVILLE. That is not true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Silence. The hon. gentleman had better take care of himself.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I can take care of myself, and you too.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think the hon. gentleman knows how to do it after a certain hour of the day.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I might try anyhow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does that hon. gentleman consider it a base slander to vilify a man's character by saying he is drunk?

Mr. DOMVILLE. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would he think that was a base slander if uttered in respect of himself?

Mr. DOMVILLE. I certainly would, but not coming from the hon. member who is now speaking.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see that that retort obtains an emphatic response from the hon. gentleman's associates, who, I am afraid, are many of them, responsible for the irresponsible condition in which that hon. gentleman exhibits himself to the House very often.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman will withdraw expressions of that kind reflecting on another hon. member.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the interruption of the hon. gentleman tempted me to forget what perhaps is due to the House.

Mr. CASEY. I rise to a point of order.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, you do not know it.

Mr. CASEY. I think I know a little more about it than the hon. gentleman who interrupts me. My point of order is this: The hon. gentleman who has the floor made a most gratuitous, uncalled for, and insulting remark about an hon. gentleman who had the audacity to interrupt him. The point of order I raise is that the hon. gentleman cannot go on without making an apology and withdrawing the statement.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I ask for that.

Mr. SPEAKER. I understand that the hon. leader of the Opposition was making his withdrawal.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sure that he will conclude with a frank withdrawal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no hesitation, Sir, in saying that I shall always bow to the Chair and conform to that rule of the House which requires any hon. member to withdraw any expression that may be regarded as unduly offensive to another. But I hope I shall not be induced by any unseemly interruption to forget that rule. I think that hon. gentlemen would best consult, in the present condition of things, the interests of the House and the interests of the Government and of the party supporting the Government in this House, if they would allow, on a grave question of this kind, a member of this House to frankly and fully state the opinions he holds with regard to a very momentous question.

I was about to say that when a member of this House receives a visit, as the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did, from a gentleman holding so high position as the representative of one of the largest banking institutions in London, as to induce Lord Strathcona to give him a letter of introduction to Major Walsh—I say that when the senior member for Pictou received a communication from so high a source, I hold that if Major Walsh be innocent, if there was any mistake or misunderstanding—and I am not going to say for a moment that any man is to be held guilty of anything until his guilt is proved—the member who received such communication is bound to bring it before the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I think that in making that statement, the hon. leader of the Opposition ought to give the name of the party.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will not be much trouble in hon. gentlemen opposite finding out the name. Their own officer and High Commissioner gave that gentleman his introduction to Major Walsh, and that gentleman showed the letter of introduction to the senior member for Pictou, and said: "When I took that to Major Walsh from the High Commissioner, Lord Strathcona, I was turned out of his office, the man was so drunk he did not know what he was doing."

There may be some mistake, but no man in this House could have better authority, and it became his duty to challenge the public conduct of any high official in this country against whom such a charge is made from such a source.

I regret most deeply that it is necessary to assail in any way the reputation of Major Walsh; but in view of the statement placed in the hands of the senior member for Pictou by a gentleman occupying a prominent position in England—in London, New York, and Canada—and of the charges involving the use by that officer of public officials in a most improper manner, I say that those who deny to Major Walsh the opportunity of vindicating himself—as I assume and hope he will, if such opportunity be given, be able to vindicate himself completely—are his worst enemies. His worst enemy is the man who takes the position in this House that it will not do to have Major Walsh's conduct examined except by a subordinate official of this Government, who depends upon it for his existence. That is the position I take.

I want to draw the attention of the House to the motion now before it, and I am very sorry to see that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not in his place. I am not very much surprised to see the chair of that hon. Minister vacant, but I say that a Minister of the Crown, whose conduct is challenged as his is, for he is the root of the whole offending in this matter, he is the man responsible to this House and this country for all these disgraceful scandals that are blackening the fair fame of Canada throughout three continents—North America, Europe and the great island continent of Australasia—I say that the Minister who is responsible for the appointment of the men who have brought Canada into that position, should be in his place here. I wanted to address the House yesterday on this subject, but postponed doing so because I understood the hon. Minister was engaged in more important service for the Government in another place, but I am now compelled to make in his absence the remarks I intended to make, because he appears to have vacated his position in this House while his own conduct is receiving that scrutiny it is absolutely necessary it should receive. His own interests and the interests of the Government of which he is a member ought to lead him to be here to meet these statements and charges as they are made. The following resolution has been moved:—

That is a resolution which the Government ought to have accepted at once in the interests of Canada, in their own interests, in the interests of good government and of the honest and faithful discharge of public duty. What we ask is fair and reasonable. No man in this House or out of it can deny, who knows anything of the subject, that throughout North America, Canada and the United States, throughout the British Empire, throughout every place on the continent of Europe, where that great organ of public opinion, the London "Times" is circulated, these facts are established beyond controversy, that we have placed before this House from a score of sources—not Conservative, not in opposition to the Government, but thoroughly independent, and many of them strong supporters of this Government. All this demonstrates the absolute necessity for an investigation into these charges. No person can deny that these wrongs existed. Let hon. gentlemen turn to the newspapers conducted by hon. gentlemen sitting behind them—to the Winnipeg "Tribune," conducted by the hon. member for Lisgar

(Mr. Richardson), to the Edmonton "Bulletin," conducted by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), both strong supporters of this Administration. I could give them half a dozen other members of their press that have declared in the most outspoken manner that the honour and character of the Liberal party requires such an investigation as this. Why should they not make such investigation? Surely there is no reason why, if parties, through being remote from the seat of Government, have been led to abuse their positions, that these parties should not be punished for what they have done. It is not as though there was no evidence, for the evidence already is overwhelming. Take the former Attorney General of Manitoba, a gentleman who fought the battles of hon. gentlemen opposite in this House with a vigour and determination never surpassed by any hon. gentleman on either side, and what is his testimony? He declares that there is a common consensus of opinion, not among Americans only, not among foreigners only, but among British subjects and all classes of people who come from the Yukon territory, that public business there was conducted in a most scandalous and disreputable manner. Clergymen also declared the same thing. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who moved this resolution, gave a mass of testimony, not from Conservatives but from Liberals, and from Liberal journals, from gentlemen of the highest standing in the clerical profession, declaring that everything in that territory was of the most rotten and scandalous description and demanded investigation at the hands of this Government. Do hon. gentlemen opposite suppose that the Minister of the Interior will be vindicated in the eyes of the people of Canada for these appointments for which he himself is directly responsible by the fact that he virtually admits his guilt? For he does admit it, when he says that he will not permit this investigation, that he will not submit his acts to an independent judicial tribunal, that he will not permit an investigation unless we allow him to select the judge and pack the jury. Hon. gentlemen opposite cannot afford to take that position. This thing has gone too far to be dealt with in such a manner. Suppose they adopt this resolution of the hon. member for West Toronto, what would be the result? Of course, no one can suppose that it could be shown that the administration of public affairs in the Yukon had been what it ought to be. But suppose they made a report as an independent judicial tribunal would be bound to do, that there had been wrongdoing, it might be said that the Government themselves and the Minister of the Interior were not guilty of directly participating in that wrongdoing. Will that not be a great thing for the Government? If they are in a position to defend their conduct, is there any better means of establishing the case than to go before an independent judicial tribunal and have its finding put on record?

It will enable them to deal with the guilty. If necessary, it will enable them to drive out their colleague, the Minister of the Interior, as I believe they would be compelled to do; but the result would be to vindicate the rest of the Government. In any case, the fair name of Canada would be restored. There is no country in the world in which, take it at large, under one Government or under another, the administration of public affairs can more fairly challenge honest investigation than Canada. But the only means by which Canada can be restored to that position is by the course proposed in this resolution and by the appointment of an independent judicial tribunal to deal with the subject on its merits. Its finding would be accepted throughout the civilized world as settling the matter and setting it at rest. I do not hesitate to say that it is far beyond any party interest that the matter should be dealt with in this way. I believe there is no intelligent man in Canada who will not be glad to have such a finding arrived at as would relieve the Government of Canada from the serious imputation under which they rest at this moment. No doubt hon. gentlemen have heard how, on one occasion, when that great man, Mr. Gladstone, was violently attacked by an opponent in the House, and the Speaker himself prepared a way for his vindication, he leaned back in his seat and said to one of his friends behind him: "The Lord hath delivered mine enemy into my hands." When I heard the speech of the hon. member for Centre Toronto, though I did not say it, I felt that, so far as this Government and the party behind them in this House are concerned, the Lord had delivered mine enemy into my hands. I wonder if the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite has been drawn to the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Centre Toronto. I wonder if they see the precipice upon which they are placed and the yawning gulf into which they must fall at no distant day if they support this resolution. Here is what is said:

That all the words after "His Excellency the Governor General" in the amendment be left out, and the following words inserted instead thereof:—

"That we have observed with pleasure that on receipt of complaints against some of the officials in the Yukon district, His Excellency's Government took prompt action to inquire into the matter of such complaints by appointing Mr. William Ogilvie as a commissioner for that purpose. Having entire confidence in the integrity and ability of Mr. Ogilvie, we are satisfied that his inquiry will be impartial and thorough, and that it will place His Excellency's advisers in possession of all the information necessary to enable them to do justice to all parties concerned."

Who is Mr. Wm. Ogilvie? Mr. Wm. Ogilvie is a gentleman with whom I have a slight personal acquaintance. All that I have ever seen of him, I do not hesitate to say, has led me to form a high opinion of him, and all that I have learned of him has confirmed me in that opinion. But, Sir, I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that however well qualified he may be to discharge the duties—as he did discharge them with signal ability—of a surveyor in that remote country, I have yet to learn that he has qualifications that would enable him to carry out such a judicial investigation and make such a report as would command either the respect of this House or the confidence of this country. He had had a valuable training as a surveyor in the field, and he was a good surveyor. Mr. Fawcett was a good surveyor, but he lamentably failed as Gold Commissioner, as I will show the House before I sit down—and I may say that I have not a word of challenge to offer as to the character of Mr. Fawcett; I believe on the contrary, Mr. Fawcett, as far as I am able to judge, has erred through want of ability to fill a position for which he was never intended and which he was unable to fill. And now, to return to Mr. Ogilvie. Suppose you get a report, what value is it? If it is to be of any value, if it is to be received throughout those countries where the fair name of Canada has been smirched by these charges with which the press of those countries have teemed for over a year, I say if it is to be of any value, it must be made by a proper tribunal. The first question is, who is Mr. Ogilvie? Why, to say that the Minister of the Interior occupies such a position in this House and this country that the Government of which he is a member cannot afford to have his conduct investigated by anybody but a relative or connection of his own, and that man dependent upon the Government for his daily subsistence, is, I say, a proposition that only requires to be stated to reveal its utter absurdity. If the bitterest enemy of the Minister of the Interior, if the bitterest enemy of this Government had asked them to do that which would destroy them in the estimation of the intelligent people of this country, it would be just what they have done, appoint a man occupying such a dependent position that, however fair, however honest, however disposed to discharge his duty, he would be more or less than man, I do not hesitate to say so, he would require to be more or less than man to discharge that duty faithfully if the result was to drive his principal, to drive his Minister out of his seat into private life—for I believe a judicial investigation into this matter would have that result, and I shall give the House some reasons for arriving at that conclusion.

Now, Sir, the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) has talked about unsupported charges damaging the country. It is not the unsupported charges that damage the country. The press of Canada, of the United States, of Great Britain, of France, and of many other countries, as well as of the great islands of Australasia, have been full of these charges, and I say that to meet them you must have that which this amendment demands, or you are wasting your time, you are taking a course that will receive no justification at the hands of the intelligent people of Canada. The hon. member for Centre Toronto spoke of Miss Shaw. My right hon. friend, I presume, knows that lady; and I am sure that if he does, he will say that the London "Times," that great organ of public opinion in the United Kingdom, would not be likely to select a person to send here, to send to Africa, to send to Australia, at great cost, and at great personal inconvenience to that lady, unless they were satisfied, not only of her high character for integrity, but of her keen intelligence, and her ability to put before the readers of that great journal sound, substantial and reliable information. It is utterly impossible to discredit her statements. If you want a report that will challenge the accuracy of the statements to which she has committed herself, and which the London "Times" has endorsed, you must have an independent judicial tribunal able to sift evidence as only legal men can sift evidence; and when all the particulars are put before the country, the people will be satisfied and not before.

The hon. member for Centre Toronto took great objection to the fact that the word of the Minister of the Interior was not accepted. Well, Sir, it is not usual to accept the simple word, the simple declaration of any man, however high his position, and we cannot accept the simple word of the hon. gentleman, who is charged with incapacity, and misconduct, and corruption, in regard to the administration of the territory of the Yukon. That was the charge. I say it would be asking too much of human nature to ask that the word of any man should be accepted under those circumstances, and before I sit down I shall give him some reasons why this House is not prepared to accept the unsupported word of the Minister of the Interior. Then the hon. member for Centre Toronto asks: How would you organize a bank? Let me ask him a question. If he were going to organize a bank to-morrow, dealing with the enormous gold resources of that great territory, the greatest gold country to be found on the face of the globe, would he put in a surveyor as general manager? Would he select a horse dealer as an accountant? Would he go and hunt up the captain of an old whaler, as the Minister of Militia did, for the purpose of discharging the duties of which he had no more knowledge than this horse dealer in Manitoba, or this captain of a whaler, who, no doubt, had some experience of an arctic climate? Would he put the administration of the business of his bank in such hands? If he did, I am sure the shareholders and the directors would very soon call upon him to answer for it, as the Minister of the Interior is called upon to answer for the manner in which he has played with, trifled with, and abused the interests that were placed in his charge, and the responsibilities that were cast upon him. Then the hon. gentleman says that these officials are entitled to know what the charges are. Have the Government taken the best means of knowing what the charges are? They propose that a man placed at the head of the administration of affairs in the Yukon should call for witnesses to come forward, should send out into the woods to men that are engaged under the hardest possible conditions in earning their livelihood, and ask them to abandon their employment, to come in and to make bitter enemies of every man in whose hands they are, and who is able to destroy and ruin them. I say that is the position, and it is contrary to everything reasonable to suppose that men in that position, however deeply they may have felt their wrongs, should come forward without counsel, without direction, and place themselves in antagonism to the parties who are placed over them. Sir, I do not think that is the way to find out what the charges are. But I was very much amused with the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), who, I think, can hardly have been in this House for the past few days. He can hardly have heard the speech of the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), when he says that he objects altogether to fishing expeditions. Sir, did that hon. gentleman object, did the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), object to fishing expeditions when it was proved up to the hilt, proved under oath in the Committee of Public Accounts last year, and stated on the floor of this House, and that statement goes unchallenged, that a man who was not a member of the House of Commons at all, much less a member of the Government, had been enabled to put his unholy hand into the treasury of Canada and take out public money to pay his own private accounts? That is the position that hon. gentlemen find themselves in. That hon. gentleman who slept for many years with the Auditor General's Report under his pillow, who was hunting from morning till night for garbage to throw at the Conservatives of this country—that hon. gentleman, when that fact was brought before this House, hurled an insulting and slanderous insinuation across the House, because he knew that he had no answer to make, no vindication, that he could do nothing to defend his friend. That is the position, Sir.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman is giving a statement to this House that the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee will not support. I challenge him to produce evidence to warrant this statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say, Mr. Speaker, that I am repeating a statement made in the presence of the hon. Minister of the Interior by the senior member for Pictou, who gave evidence, gave the exact statements, gave the sworn testimony of the lawyer employed by the hon. Minister of the Interior, which is that the hon. Minister of the Interior made that fishing expedition. It was also proved before the Committee on Public Accounts, that Mr. Sifton's private debt of $500, due to Mr. Howell for that service, was paid by the Government and that the Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat, taxed the bill down to $300. And, Sir, when I asked the question: Where is that money, I had a right to ask it just as any other hon. member in this House has a right to ask it, when it is proved under oath and proved by the sworn testimony before the committee. Although the hon. Minister of the Interior had four days of incubation over the charges which were made, he allowed that question to go by default. It is too late for the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) to tell the House that it was not proved; if it was not proved it was due to the fact that the hon. gentleman who committed this wrong against the public treasury—

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Order; order. The hon. gentleman is going beyond the question now before the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, Mr. Speaker. I am now touching a cardinal point. I am now dealing with a statement with which the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) closed his speech. He said, that the Liberal party and the Liberal members of this House would not permit wrong-doing, and he challenged fishing expeditions, and it is therefore perfectly right for me to say, that $19,000 of the public money of Canada have been expended by the Government in a fishing expedition in which they caught nothing except a ruffian who belonged to themselves.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman said to this House that it was proved in the Public Accounts Committee that a gentleman, who was not a Minister of the Crown and was not responsible to the country, was able to put his hands upon $500 of the people's money and appropriate it towards paying the law expenses in connection with that investigation. When I challenged that statement as being incorrect the hon. gentleman shunted off to another subject, not daring to reiterate the statement, because the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee did not justify any such statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not surprised at the hon. gentleman's uneasiness, but he will find that he has to meet my statement when this charge was made as a contrast to the refusal of the hon. Minister of the Interior to do anything to investigate these charges with which the whole country was filled and by which the fair name of Canada has been sullied—I say that, putting that in contradistinction to the position that the hon. Minister of the Interior, lawyer as he is, when pleading his own case and endeavouring to vindicate himself, he dare not grapple with the charge, and he stands on "Hansard" to-day as having allowed the case to go by default. I want to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the present Minister of Justice has just appended his name to a declaration which puts on file, for ever, the legal opinion that the whole of that expenditure was in violation of the law of the country. He has put his name to a declaration dealing with criminal justice, and this was a question of criminal justice, for the hon. Minister of the Interior was endeavouring to ferret out information that would put these persons in the position of criminals—the Minister of Justice has put his name to a declaration that not a dollar of public money can be taken out of the federal treasury for criminal administration in any one of the provinces. Now, I am not going to take up any more time with that. The hon. member for Centre Toronto committed himself also to the opinion that Mr. Ogilvie was the best investigator, because he did not believe in lawyers. He thought that a clear-headed man was much more likely to deal with this question successfully than a man whose life is spent and whose profession involves the necessity of devoting his life to making the worse appear the better reason. Therefore, he objects to having a lawyer for the purpose. I wonder if he had learned that while listening to the Minister of the Interior attempting to defend himself with all the reasoning and all those pleas that gentlemen of the legal profession are accustomed to employ when pleading an important case, especially if they have themselves for their clients.

I think it will not be necessary for me to take up more time in dealing with the speech delivered by the hon. member for Centre Toronto. In moving his resolution he has, in my judgment, allowed the case against the Government he is supporting, to go by default. He has taken the position that there should be no independent judicial investigation into this matter.

Mr. BERTRAM. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain? I have not taken the position that there should be no independent investigation regarding the charges in the Yukon. But I have said, and what I say now is, that before we appoint another examining committee, we had better get a report from the one that is now in existence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has taken the position that there should be no judicial investigation in the strongest and clearest terms when he made an amendment to vote down the resolution asking the Government to appoint an independent judicial investigation. The right hon. Prime Minister and the hon. gentlemen behind him will have to answer to the people of this country for standing between the Government and a judicial investigation. I will give the House some further reasons for taking the strong position I do on this question. I may say, Sir, that it is well known to members of this House, it is well known to the Government, and it is well known to the intelligent people of Canada, that one of the greatest securities that the people of Canada have against the mismanagement by gentlemen who have been new to public life in the Parliament of Canada, becoming members of the Administration, is to be found in the character of our civil service. It is well known, Sir, to the Government that there is no guarantee, that there is nothing that the public can have, that will inspire them with the same confidence as is reposed in the permanent civil service of England which until recently we had in Canada. The difference is attributed to the fact that gentlemen were brought from outside, perhaps, for sufficient reasons to most of these hon. gentlemen—however, reasons that would induce this Government to do such violence to the standing and the character and the position of the members who for long, long years had fought their battles in this House and fought them with great ability. These men had valiantly fought the battles of the Liberal party in the cold shades of Opposition, and when they saw themselves passed over when their party was triumphant, had they not a right to complain of the absence of that recognition of public service which is usual under such circumstances. They found these gentlemen opposite raking the outlying provinces for men who had never been inside the House of Commons of Canada, to make them Cabinet Ministers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Does the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) propose to go into a dissertation on the whole policy of the Government, or will he confine himself to the amendment? I desire to ask you, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) in order?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have a word to say as to that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I take the point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You cannot ask for the Speaker's ruling without my speaking to the point of order. I am dealing with the Minister of the Interior now; I have already shown what he did before he had any standing in public life, and I am going to show that from his very inception in public life, he has adopted a course calculated to destroy the confidence of this House in a fair and just administration by him of that great department under which the Yukon district comes.

Mr. SPEAKER. Following the precedents of the latest date, it must be distinctly held that until this amendment is disposed of, the debate must be limited to the substance of the amendment. Let us understand that to begin with. Then, with reference to the remarks of the leader of the Opposition to which objection has been taken, it occurs to me, that the position of the Minister of the Interior himself is intimately connected with the administration of the Yukon, and may be discussed. I had thought, however, before the point of order was raised, that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper), in discussing other Ministers and other matters of Government policy, was going outside of the debate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to say a word that will, in my judgment, conflict with the ruling you have made, Sir, because I quite recognize that on the present occasion we are confined to the amendment, and the amendment to the amendment which has been moved. Now, Sir, I will again read the amendment moved by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke):

That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon, it is the duty of the Government to appoint, without delay, an independent judicial commission to make a thorough investigation into that subject and report the result.

The amendment of the hon. gentleman from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) declares that we shall not have an independent judicial commission, but that we shall go on with the inquiry by an official holding his office under the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). I propose to show the House the grounds on which I challenge the justice of that, and my reason for saying that, in my judgment, the Government might as well say at once: We are in such a position that we cannot permit this matter to be investigated by anybody except a man dependent on us for his official position from hour to hour, and who is absolutely under our control. I was going on to say that the confidence which this House and this country enjoys, in regard to new Ministers coming into the Cabinet, is based on the practice of our civil service, that they are surrounded by Deputy Heads of the departments, who have no political opinions whatever, who have held responsible positions under various Administrations, who should never be changed when the Ministry changes, and who have all the knowledge and information which long years of experience in the service can give them. The Deputy Ministers are in a position, by their wise counsel and their knowledge of the affairs of their departments, to give the country the guarantee that it is not likely that anything will be done for party purposes or personal purposes that would conflict with the proper administration of public affairs.

Now, Sir, what did the Minister of the Interior do? His first act was to violate all the traditions of the civil service law, to violate all the traditions that give security to the House and the country for an honest administration of public affairs, by degrading his Deputy Minister and driving him into an untimely grave. What next did he (Mr. Sifton) do? There was the Superintendent of Indian Affairs, a man full of knowledge, a man in the very prime of life, a man in the very plenitude of his powers to discharge his official duties, and how was he treated? He was put on the superannuation list, and a creature of the Minister of the Interior put in his place. I do not use the term "creature" in an offensive or invidious sense, but I say that the official who is created by another man is his creature, and I say that the present Deputy Minister of the Interior, as well as the gentleman who superseded Hayter Reid, when he was driven out of the service, are the creatures of the Minister of the Interior, who, in discharge of a debt that he had incurred in relation to these men, brought them fresh from his own county to assume the most responsible offices in the public service. Who was Alexander Burgess? As everybody knows, he had been one of the most valued men in the ranks of the Liberal party. He was taken up by the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, when he was doing yeoman service as a journalist in the cause of his party, and advanced by him from step to step in the civil service. When Sir John Macdonald succeeded to that office, although he did not retain the private secretary of his predecessor, feeling there was an incongruity in that, yet he placed him in a well-paid office. But Sir John Macdonald not only retained Mr. Burgess in his position, but when he found his sterling worth, and his ability and knowledge of the business of his office, he promoted him to the position of Deputy Minister. Sir, I say there is not a blacker spot on the escutcheon of hon. gentlemen opposite than that of driving from the position of Deputy Minister one of their own party, who they themselves brought into a position which he filled with signal ability, and the putting in his place of a creature of the Minister of the Interior from the Minister's own constituency.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They all belonged to our party.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite true; the country, I suppose, has nothing to do with it. That is just the trouble with hon. gentlemen opposite: they think their party is the country; but they will awaken from that wild delusion with a very sudden shock at no distant date. Nothing was more remarkable in the long and laboured defence of the Minister of the Interior, than the fact that he spent hours of his time and pages of "Hansard" in killing the dead. He found it more convenient to eulogize the character and position of officials whose character had never been challenged, than to deal with the strong challenge which had been thrown out to him with regard to other officials. Nothing, Sir, is more striking. Why, Sir, we were treated to a long discussion about Mr. Gordon Hunter, a highly respected bar-

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

rist in the city of Victoria. What had that to do with the matter? Mr. Gordon Hunter, it appears, when these men fled under the charges hanging over them, had been invited to take a very important place. He declined it, it is true; but what had that to do with the debate? He had not been attacked; no person had said anything about him; and why should the Minister waste valuable time, which was required to defend his own character and conduct, on matters of that kind? He also spoke of Mr. Senkler. Nobody disputes Mr. Senkler's character or qualifications, or denies that he is a man of high standing. How did he come to be where he is? Because the country rose in revolt against the mismanagement and the corrupt actions of the men who had been there before him. The charge made by the senior member for Pictou was clear and distinct. It was against the first outfit, the men who had been sent into that country in the beginning; and if ever there was a time in the history of the country which demanded that any Minister charged with the responsibility of discharging his duty to the country, should select the ablest and best men he could command for those high and important positions, it was when they were to be sent into that remote country out of the immediate reach of the head of the department. Is there an hon. member of this House who does not recognize that? The charge was that Mr. Wade's conduct in office was unworthy of his position—that he entirely failed to discharge the high duties with which he was entrusted; and that charge the hon. gentleman slurred over by the statement that Mr. W. J. Tupper had given Mr. Wade a certificate of character. But the hon. gentleman did not read Mr. W. J. Tupper's letter. Why did he not read it? Why did he quote garbled sentences out of it? I will tell you why. He did it because when Mr. Wade was appointed, he was attacked, and violently attacked, by a gentleman sitting on that side of the House now before me—the editor of the Winnipeg "Tribune"; and Mr. W. J. Tupper's defence of Mr. Wade was in opposition. So it appears that Mr. Tupper is a much higher authority with the Minister of the Interior than one of the hon. gentleman's most important supporters in this House. But this fact remains, that Mr. Wade, who seems to have some strong hold on the Minister of the Interior, was again appointed counsel for Mr. Ogilvie when Mr. Ogilvie was appointed. He was loaded down with half a dozen offices, all of which he abused. The evidence is to the fore, and can be massed to any extent. Evidence can be adduced to show that he failed entirely in discharging his duties. In the steamer coming out, I found a gentleman who was an entire stranger to me, sitting opposite to me at the captain's table, an English gentleman, who had gone out from Moosomin to the Yukon. He had been there two years, and had been home, and was coming back; and he gave me Mr. Wade's history; and I will have no hesitation in offering to any hon. gentleman opposite my informant's name. He said: "A greater scandal could not be imagined. Mr. Wade was sent there as a Crown counsel, and he was actually in the habit of taking retainers from both sides, both the plaintiff and the defendant, and whichever side paid him the most got his services, and he threw up the retainer of the other party, and gave his advice to the Gold Commissioner, or whoever it was." And the gentleman said it was known—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman give the name?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman put it on "Hansard"?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no objection to giving the name. I have rather an objection to putting it on "Hansard," as this gentleman is at present engaged in mining in the Yukon, and of course occupies a delicate position; but I will give the name to the hon. gentleman, and he can communicate to him the statement I make to this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The only reason I have for making the suggestion is that Mr. Wade's conduct is at present under investigation before a Royal commissioner; and pending the receipt of the report of that commission, the hon. gentleman does not scruple to state on the floor of this House the most serious charge that could be made against a barrister.

Mr. FOSTER. Did the hon. gentleman not hear it before?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If that charge is true, it can be investigated now, and Mr. Wade ought to know who his accuser is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Wade will have five hundred such accusers. It is a matter of notoriety. In that long and elaborate defence of the Minister of the Interior, which he made on the floor of this House, nothing struck my ear as more curious than the fact that Mr. Wade made a secret lease. It appears that there was no actual lease, but the business was done in a very loose way, with a mere scrap of paper—a secret lease without public advertisement or any knowledge to the community at large as to what was contemplated; and when that lease, as the Minister called it, was granted by Mr. Wade to those parties, he received a retainer of $2,500 from the men to whom he leased the property. That charge was made, and the Minister of the Interior did not question it, so far as I remember, or say a word in reference to it. Is not that quite as bad?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will answer my hon. friend.

There was an imputation thrown out by the other side of the House, on hearsay evidence, that Mr. Wade had been guilty of some misconduct, and, when challenged, the hon. member for Pictou declined to give the name of his informant.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister of the Interior dealt with the subject of water leases, and yet passed over the grave charge that Mr. Wade had accepted a retainer of $2,500 from the men who got the property.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman must see that the Minister of the Interior directed himself to the charge against the Administration, and answered it; but the personal charge against the probity and honesty of one of the officials is one which the official has to answer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh. oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I only say that I want to know whether the hon. gentleman is prepared to give the authorities the names of the people making this charge, or is he only repeating what the hon. member for Pictou said?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am inclined to believe that the party was misinformed, and that the fee was nearer $15,000 than $2,500, because the transaction was too big for a fee of only $2,500. Mr. Wade's whole course in that Yukon country was a most scandalous course of misconduct and corruption, and I undertake to say that if an independent judicial tribunal is given, that will be proved up to the hilt. What more? Mr. Wade was sent back as counsel for Mr. Ogilvie. He had left there and was down here; but, Sir, when the senior member for Pictou told Mr. Wade that he was going to bring before the House of Commons his official misconduct in the Yukon, Mr. Wade made tracks out of the reach of the House of Commons, away up to the Yukon territory, and he is there to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) never did.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He says so in his speech.

The PRIME MINISTER. But he never did make a charge against Mr. Wade.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman will find a good many charges made, and it is now admitted that Mr. Wade is responsible. One of the gravest charges that can be brought against an official is that he abuses his official position to get a personal advantage for himself. Can there be any stronger charge than that? What is the charge against Mr. Wade? It is that, as recording officer, he got knowledge of where a mine was discovered, and when the party who discovered it came to have his claim recorded, Mr. Wade postponed recording it and then sent his own emissaries out to stake the property, and he divided the claim with the parties he sent out. That is the charge, and it has never been, and so far as I am aware, cannot be refuted. But that charge does not stand alone. Mr. Wade is charged with having consulted, throughout the whole administration of the duties of his office, his own interests and those interests alone, and abundant evidence was given by the senior member for Pictou in the indictment which he made concerning the course Mr. Wade has pursued. Is it not somewhat strange that, under these circumstances, we should have an hour spent over Senkler and Hunter and other people who had never been named and whose probity and character and honour nobody questioned, and yet that we should not have a word of vindication of Mr. Wade. But there is this—and it is a thing for which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) has to answer to the people of this country as well as to this House—that he himself confessed in his speech that he placed these officials in a position of the greatest temptation possible to conceive. He told us he gave these officials abundant salaries. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) said that they got very handsome salaries, considering that they not only got the salaries assigned to them, but in addition their board and lodging—which I confess I was not aware of until recently, for I think it had never been publicly stated, and I assumed that they had to provide for themselves. I must confess that that makes a great difference. I admit that in so far as what are called starvation salaries are concerned, that makes a very important difference, but I may say we have had the Minister of the Interior confessing that he told Mr. Wade he was at liberty to stake out claims for himself. I ask this House whether there is a gentleman sitting on the Treasury benches who will get up and defend for a moment the position that a man sent out to that country, charged with such important official duties, in the midst of a great mass of people who went out there with their lives in their hands to struggle for a livelihood in the face of all kinds of privations and dangers, should be given the right to take advantage of the knowledge that his position gives him and use it for his own purposes. That, however, has been changed. Why has it been changed? I ask the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) if he finds that these gentlemen received sufficient salaries and provision for the duties they performed, whether that was not sufficient without the Minister of the Interior placing them in a position of the greatest temptation it is possible to conceive. Can any temptation be greater than to place a man in a comparatively humble position in life and then enable him, by abusing his trust, to make a fortune in an hour? And can it be wondered at if he should fall under the temptation? Why was that change made, as it was the other day, for it was only the other day the House was informed that that practice had been forbidden for the future. Why was it forbidden? Because the Government had learned that the country was filled with this scandal, and that it was a matter of the deepest reproach to the department and all the officials connected with it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Now, Sir, what did the senior member for Pictou say when challenged. He said this:

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Wait for a moment. Candidly, I answered that I did intend to reflect on the character of Mr. Wade, and that if I were in his position, I would be on the spot.

But Mr. Wade immediately started for the Yukon, and is now in Dawson. He preferred to be under the friendly shelter of an employee of the Minister of the Interior rather than face the challenge he was informed by the senior member for Pictou would be made against him on the floor of this House. I may say that at the very inception of his administration, the way in which he departed from all the recognized safeguards in the public interest startled us a good deal; but we were soon startled with another matter, and that was the contract for the building of the Yukon Railway. I have been taunted with having approved of that. I never did. What I did approve of—and I was wrong, I admit, and therefore can acquit the Minister of the Interior of being wilfully wrong and the Canadian Pacific Railway of being wrong and a great many others who got the best information—I was wrong in supposing that an all-Canadian route could be established and was to be established by the Stikine River, and therefore I do not challenge, in the slightest degree, the judgment of the Minister of the Interior in deciding on that policy. But I never supported the contract. Why, when that monstrosity came down here, what did we find? We found that in that contract—and this bears on my charge of incapacity in the administration of the Yukon—which was to give to Canada, at an enormous cost to the country, an all-Canadian route, contained no clause preventing its sale the day after it was signed or the work completed, in New York to foreigners.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to have to call my hon. friend again to order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I am now dealing with the incapacity of the Department of the Interior in connection with the administration of the Yukon, and this is a most pertinent subject in that connection. We find that in the contract, as it was laid on the Table of this House, not only 3,750,000 acres of land, with all the mines and minerals contained therein—

The PRIME MINISTER. My point of order is this. We are now discussing the amendment moved to look into the conduct of the officers of the Government in the Yukon.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I must say—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker, but you are bound, before you decide, to hear my argument. Otherwise I shall have to fall back on the rules of the House. I may say at once that this point was raised when the Speaker himself was in the Chair; and although I recognize your authority, Sir, as being quite as great while you occupy his place, I think you will agree with me that some deference is to be paid to the Speaker. This point of order was raised when the Speaker was in the Chair, but when I showed him that this resolution challenged an examination into the incapacity and misconduct and corruption connected with the administration of affairs in the Yukon, the Speaker decided that I was at liberty to deal with the question of the contract.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand that the Speaker ruled a moment ago that in the present discussion we must confine ourselves to the charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. If I understand well what has just been said by the hon. member, I do not think it has any connection with those charges of incapacity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I must ask that the Speaker return to the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS. He is there now.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I may quote to this House a decision rendered in England in 1886 on an exactly similar question. And there it was decided by the Speaker in England, Mr. Speaker Peel, that the discussion should be confined purely and simply to the question raised by the amendment. The Speaker went so far as to say this:

That the subject of land matter will be, in some degree pertinent to the amendment, it would be more strictly in order if the debate were henceforth more strictly confined to the specific terms of the amendment of the hon. member.

I think that that shows that the ruling I have given is absolutely in conformity with the decision already rendered in England.

Mr. WALLACE. Has the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) departed from that ruling?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That is what I understand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must ask an appeal to the Speaker.

The PRIME MINISTER. The Speaker is in the Chair.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I will ask an appeal to the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is quite in order, if he wishes to do so, in appealing from the ruling of the Chair. I do not object to the discussion, and have no fault to find with the manner in which the hon. gentleman has conducted it this afternoon. But we are here to pass judgment upon a motion made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) asking an investigation into charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs in the Yukon. Now, however, my hon. friend is discussing a contract entered into by this Government, which was not ratified by Parliament, and therefore never came into operation, and so can not be investigated by this commission.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to see that my hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) takes so reasonable a view of the subject. But will he allow me, as a matter of some importance, to state that the greatest act of incapacity of the Department of the Interior in connection with the administration of the Yukon is exhibited, in my judgment, in the very matter with which I am dealing. And I cannot believe that this House will deny me the opportunity of stating the ground on which I charge incapacity, corruption and mismanagement in regard to the administration of public affairs in the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Does the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) intend, if the amendment should prevail and the judicial investigation be ordered, that the Yukon contract of last year is to be one of the matters to be investigated by the commission? Otherwise his observations would not be pertinent to the issue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That would be entirely in the judgment of the commission.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; if the commission is appointed, it will be appointed to investigate what this resolution covers—charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in connection with the administration of public affairs in the Yukon. And I do not hesitate to tell hon. gentlemen opposite that if they deprive me of the opportunity of stating here and now on my responsibility the grounds for my charge of incapacity in that matter, they will make a very grave mistake.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no right to speak, but perhaps I may be permitted to call attention for a moment to this resolution. It says:

That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon—this commission should be appointed. Now, certainly, anything connected with the administration of public affairs in the Yukon, the hon. gentleman has a right to speak about. But he wants to introduce into this debate a contract which is not part of the administration of the Yukon.

Mr. WALLACE. There was no contract, Mr. Speaker. There was a provisional contract made by the Government, but it could not become a contract until it was sanctioned by the Parliament of Canada. That sanction it did not receive. Here is an act of the Minister of the Interior in negotiating this contract with Messrs. Mackenzie & Mann. That is an act of administration by the Minister of the Interior, and I think the leader of the Opposition is quite right in commenting upon such an act of administration.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker—

An hon. MEMBER. Now we get it.

Mr. FOSTER. I thought my hon. friend had enough for one afternoon. It seems that we are discussing a question after the Speaker's decision—

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER—but discussing it in an informal way; and I suppose we all have equal rights in that respect. I am sure that hon. members on either side do not wish to cut off anything really germane to this matter, so important as it is; and I think the leader of the Government would be wisely guided if he would allow very full range at this particular time. Now, what is the amendment? It reads:

That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs—

Not "in the Yukon," but —connected with the Yukon, it is the duty of the Government to appoint, without delay, an independent judicial commission—

And so on. Acts in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon may be done in the city of Ottawa. If in relation to these there is a charge of incapacity, misconduct or corruption, certainly that would justify an investigation. This does not refer simply to acts, but to officials high and low, charged with being guilty of these acts. The Minister of the Interior is not exempt. He is an official and the head official. Mr. Ogilvie is an official, Mr. Wade is an official, and all these may be included in this resolution. Now, what my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) was attempting to prove was that the highest official of all has laid himself open to these charges against himself and his officers. Logically, it is clear that the

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Minister of the Interior, in all his acts, "in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon" is under review, and subject to criticism, and that his acts are germane to the discussion of this amendment. I think my hon. friend now would be well advised if he would not press this point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will be as brief as possible on this branch of the subject. But it will be impossible to deal thoroughly with the questions of incapacity in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon without referring to this, one of the most important matters. As every person knows the question of wood supply in the Yukon is a burning question with the mining population—a burning question in a double sense. In the proposed contract submitted by the Minister of the Interior, it was proposed to give these contractors such terms as would enable them to control not only all the gold but all the wood in the Yukon territory. Now, if there is any greater evidence of incapacity than that, I should like some person to mention it. I will not deal further with the subject than to say in passing that that was one of the first evidences of incapacity in the management of the department that met with overwhelming condemnation from one end of the country to the other. And I do not believe there is a man who is not blinded by his own party interests who would have favoured such a proposition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When did the scales fall from the hon. gentleman's (Sir Charles Tupper's) own eyes?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will tell the hon. gentleman. The scales fell from my eyes when I found the character of the proposition put before the House; when I found there was not provision for making this a Canadian route; when I found that the price proposed to be paid was so enormous as to make every person stand aghast at the idea of it. But I found that under those terms not only 3,750,000 acres but the entire gold-bearing portion of the Yukon would be all absorbed. My hon. friend must not shake his head, he has asked me a question. The evidence of it was given by the Government the next day, when I showed the enormity of the transaction to this House, down came the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) with the statement that the contractors had agreed to change all that because, it seems, they could not get the hon. gentlemen behind them, ready as they are to endorse almost anything the Government proposes, to support that proposition. So I think that the scales fell from the eyes of a good many people when that occurred. Now, Sir, where was the defence for appointing this captain of a whaler, Mr. Norwood, and for appointing Mr. McGregor? Is there any defence that will satisfy an intelligent audience in this country as a ground for selecting these men for that far-off district? Why, Sir, in the province of Nova Scotia, in Ontario, in Manitoba, in British Columbia, the Government had many friends, hundreds of men capable of discharging the duty of mining inspector. Did they take any of them? Now what has become of these officials? The moment the question of this investigation was set on foot these gentlemen found their way out of the country. I believe they were quite able to get away, but up to this hour we have never been told why a horse dealer and the captain of a whaler were selected except that they were friends of the Minister of the Interior. One of them, I believe, was recommended by the Minister of Militia and Defence, I think the Minister of the Interior stated that he owed the whaler to my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence. Now what was the consequence of this sweeping away of the officials of the department? It is admitted that long-trying officials were displaced from that department. What was the consequence? We find it stated in the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior. He says that he took office in December, 1896, and Mr. Deville called his attention, on the 5th of March, to the report that the Yukon had been neglected. Sir, if Mr. Alexander Burgess had not been degraded, if Mr. Hayter Reid had been there, if the Minister had been surrounded with the tried and capable officials that he found when he went into the department, if he had retained them, he would have had no occasion to go to the Surveyor General for information; his Deputy Minister would have called his attention to it long before. He has got a very smart man, I believe, as Deputy Minister. But his smartness did not take the particular form of investigating reports, as he should have done, and as his Minister should have required. Well, Sir, Mr. Fawcett was appointed. Mark, this is the 5th of March, and Mr. Fawcett was not appointed until the 12th of April. Why this delay? If the Yukon had been neglected, if it was necessary to send parties there, then why this delay, and why was Mr. Fawcett sent there? Mr. Deville reported that he was a good surveyor, and I believe he was. I have stated, and I repeat, that I believe him to be an honest man, so far as I am able to judge. But there are men in the city of Ottawa who will swear before a judicial commission that Mr. Fawcett was a mere child, utterly incapable of discharging the duties of his office, and was played with as a child by these corrupt officials by whom he was surrounded. They will prove that Mr. Fawcett gave an interview to their paper—I am now speaking of the proprietors of the "Nugget."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Why, Sir, has it come to this, that no man who is an American citizen can be mentioned in this House without cries of derision from hon. gentlemen opposite? Is that the result of the six months negotiations between the commissioners of Her Majesty representing Canada and those of the United States of America? Why, Sir, it amuses me to find these hon. gentlemen blowing hot and cold; one day ready to do anything, to submit to anything at the hands of the United States, and the next day the great men of their party denounce these men the moment they come into the country. Why, they say these men are only Yankees, they are like Livernash. Well, Livernash was here; I did not have the pleasure of seeing him, but I believe the Senate listened with attention and respect to his statements, and they found the statements of the Minister of the Interior were all astray, and that Livernash's statements were thoroughly to be relied upon. But these gentlemen to whom I refer, although they have the misfortune to be Americans, say they are prepared to go before a judicial commission and swear that Mr. Fawcett gave an interview to them—and afterwards admitted that the report of the interview was substantially accurate—in which he disclaimed all responsibility for the officials that were under him, because, he said, they were sent from Ottawa, they were appointed without his knowledge, and he had no control over them whatever. These men state that although Mr. Fawcett was disposed, as I believe he is, to do what was right and just, he was utterly incapable. Again, they are prepared to prove that these officials, before whom the Minister of the Interior had placed opportunities of corruption by enabling them to take up claims and to undermine the rights of those who depended upon them for official information—that these parties surrounded Mr. Fawcett and persuaded him to issue an order that no claims could be taken up for a certain period. He was asked to allow claims to be taken up in a certain district, called a section, I think, and he made an order, and then these parties got in behind the persons who had taken up claims and got them all secured, and they persuaded him that they were all wrong, that they had led him astray, that he must cancel the order, and he cancelled it, and then they came in and took up the claims. Now that is the kind of Gold Commissioner that was sent out there, a man without any qualification whatever for discharging the duties of that important position. He was trifled with in this way by officials who, it has been proved over and over again, were notoriously corrupt in every possible shape and form. Then, Sir, there is another gentleman whose name I am not able to mention, but I will say this, that when his name is mentioned, as it will be whenever there is a judicial commission before which he is called to appear, he will swear that a friend came to him in great distress saying that he had got a claim staked out, that he had got it all right, but he was obliged to leave before he could get it recorded. This gentleman was a man of standing and character, and engaged in an important work in the Yukon at the time. My informant said: You will have to do as everybody else does. What is that? Why, he said, you will have to let it stand. The gentleman said: I must go away; I have taken my passage in a steamer, and I must leave, and I am going to be ruined because I cannot get it recorded. Go and get it recorded for me, if you can. And this man, instead of paying $17.50 as the fee, paid $40 to an official in Mr. Fawcett's department and got the claim recorded, and the man put the balance between the $17.50 and the $40 in his pocket as a bribe, and the owner of the claim went away with the record of his claim in his pocket. Now that was the position of things in Mr. Fawcett's office, and that is a position of things that demands, I think, the most thorough investigation.

Now, Sir, I want to draw the attention of the House for a few moments to Major Walsh's report, and I think I will show the House out of that, that there is very good grounds for serious criticism of the Government. The hon. member for Centre Toronto wanted to know why we would not take the word of the hon. Minister of the Interior. I will give him my reason at once. The hon. Minister of the Interior, on the discussion of the Yukon Bill last session, said, as will be found in "Hansard" of 1898, page 584:

Somebody the other night—I think it was the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace)—in a sarcastic tone, wanted to know why Major Walsh was camped far from Dawson City? In the name of common sense, what would he be doing at Dawson City? We have forty mounted police and a sufficient staff of officers there to do the work. Major Walsh is at the place where he was told to stay, attending to the business he was sent to attend to; and when in his good judgment every provision has been made there for the purpose of meeting the emergency of that case, then, and not till then, he will go on to Dawson City to do the work which is intended to be done there.

So that, according to the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior, Major Walsh, who was appointed with extraordinary powers, I do not say that they were too great, but they were enormous powers, as administrator of the Yukon, was to stay at the camp where there were half a dozen white people at the outside, and, perhaps, twenty Indians. He was to be stranded away there in the desert, and the administration of the Yukon was to take care of itself according to this statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior. Major Walsh does not tell us that story, however, and, I may say, that Major Walsh's story, which is undoubtedly true, is confirmed now by the statement of the Minister of the Interior the other day, who gave an emphatic and direct contradiction to his statement made last year. Major Walsh says:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

When the Canadian Yukon administration party first camped at the Big and Little Salmon Rivers, it was with the expectation of proceeding by dog teams, as soon as they arrived, to Selkirk and Dawson City. On the arrival of the dog teams, which, owing to the condition of the rivers and lakes, has been considerably delayed—

There is the statement of Major Walsh that instead of being ordered to go to this place, he was ordered to go to Dawson City, and was only prevented from doing so by circumstances that he could not control. The hon. Minister of the Interior now confirms that statement, and Major Walsh gives an emphatic contradiction to the statement with which the hon. Minister misled this House at the last session. What does he say?

I have been asked why Major Walsh did not get through by water to Dawson City. I have just given the reason. If the assistant commissioner of Mounted Police had got his supplies across in a time five times as long as it took Major Walsh and myself to put them across when we were there, Major Walsh and his party would have gone on to Dawson City before the ice froze.

So that the hon. gentleman who ridiculed my hon. friend for West York (Mr. Wallace) for suggesting that Major Walsh should have gone to Dawson City, says that Major Walsh was ordered to go to Dawson City, and was only prevented by the condition of the ice. And we have the declaration now made by the Minister of the Interior contradicting what he said to the House so long ago as last year, when he now tells us that Major Walsh's orders were to go on at once, but that he was prevented by the condition of the ice. There are two or three points in this report to which I want to briefly draw the attention of the House. Major Walsh says:

On arrival at Dawson I found a great many questions awaiting solution which could only be disposed of by the authority of the commissioner.

So it appears that there was no such monstrous absurdity for Major Walsh to be at Dawson City. The Mounted Police were all that were required to discharge the duties of the commissioner! But Major Walsh thought differently. Major Walsh says further upon the question of royalty:

For instance, the question of royalty, over which there has been considerable discussion, appeared to be somewhat mixed. I immediately announced that royalty would be collected on all claims the leases of which were renewed subsequent to the date when the law came into force. Nearly all the leaseholders of the larger prospected claims showed a disposition to respect the collection of royalty. Others, however, were not tractable, their principal objection being that their leases were granted for one year, and that once being granted subsequent restrictions could not be placed upon them.

So that the incapacity of the Minister of the Minister of the Interior again came into play by having made different arrangements with different persons in regard to the question of royalty, and having failed to bring them into operation from the time they were appointed and not from the time the parties applied.

While acknowledging the force of these reasons they submitted, that a more thorough examination of the real cost of outputting the gold would convince the Government that the royalty is a severe tax, and expressed a hope that next year would see it removed,—

Royalty, mark this, Mr. Speaker, Major Walsh declares :

—royalty was not collected from any claims which had not got into good working order or which could not show a profit after paying royalty, and this would represent a large sum.

So that a lot of regulations issued by the Department of the Interior, and administered under this horse dealer and captain of the whaler, were allowed to be trampled upon and did not come into operation at all.

Again, more than half the leases were exempted from royalty on account of having been renewed previous to the date of the law requiring the payment of royalty coming into force. * * * The claims on this (Dominion) creek had been staked after the new regulations were in force, and should have been 250 feet in length, whereas they were staked 500 feet. After careful examination we decided to confirm the rightful staker in his claim of 500 feet.

So that we have the evidence of Major Walsh of the incapacity of the person who is in charge, who, I presume, was Mr. Fawcett, to discharge that duty.

The settling up of the claims in this way gave great satisfaction. All the remaining creek claims on Dominion and all fractions of claims were reserved to the Government.

In my judgment, one of the most striking evidences of incapacity—perhaps it would not come under the head of incapacity—but, in my judgment, it would warrant that term, is the monstrous royalty that has been charged, the oppressive conditions to which the miners have been subjected. I shall draw the attention of the House to the evidence of the truth of what I stated here last session, because every person acquainted with this subject knows that the greatest possible hindrance to the development of the Yukon has been found in these oppressive regulations. He says—and I shall have occasion to refer to this in another connection later on—he says :

In two or three cases liquor was allowed to pass into the district of Dawson City by the North-west Mounted Police at Taku under permit issued by the territorial government, subsequent to my appointment as aforesaid, but why these permits were recognized I have been unable to ascertain, they being directly contrary to instructions in this regard.

Major Walsh tells us here that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) gave him instructions not to allow any liquor to go in, under authority of the North-west Territories Government. The Minister of Justice has told him (Mr. Sifton) that the North-west Territories Government was authorized and could legally grant those permits, although the Minister of Justice stated subsequently—and that is a point to which attention may be drawn—that the Government still had the power to cancel these permits. Will any one tell me that it was not the business of the Minister of the Interior in regard to such an important question as the admission of liquor into that country ; will any person tell me that it was not his business to have made that the subject of discussion with the Government, and to have it fully settled by them. A very sharp controversy occurred on this subject—and I was anxious that the Minister of the Interior should be here this afternoon so that he might hear something on this question—a very sharp controversy occurred between the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) in regard to these liquor permits. Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper said :

As a person was able to do in the city of Victoria, also a member of the Bar, that is, to charge and collect a fee of $500 because he was able, by telegram and by a letter, to obtain from the Minister of the Interior a permit for his client to send liquor into the Yukon.

That was the statement by the senior member for Pictou, and in reply to that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) said :

I may be allowed to state for the information of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that the statement he has made is absolutely untrue.

Now, Sir, I come to another reason why I am not able to accept the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior. That hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) again said :

The law partner of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is the only man that the public or private records of this Government can show has ever telegraphed to a member of this Government from the city of Victoria about a liquor permit.

“About a liquor permit,” these are the words of the Minister of the Interior. Strange to say, after all his legal astuteness, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), having absolutely denied the statement that a gentleman of the legal profession in the city of Victoria had received a fee of $500 for getting a permit to allow liquor to pass into the North-west Territories ; having declared that the law partner of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was the only person who had telegraphed to him about a permit, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), before he sat down—as will be seen at page 875 of the “Hansard”—admitted that he had a telegram from Archer Martin, now a judge on the Bench, and then a barrister in Victoria, asking for a permit to allow liquor to go forward for which a permit had been received from the North-west Territories and which Major Walsh had stopped under his instructions. The hon. gentleman

(Mr. Sifton) himself admitted that a member of the legal profession, to wit, Mr. Archer Martin, sent him a telegram "about a permit" for liquor to the Yukon, and the telegram is given on the pages of the "Hansard," and the answer of the Minister of the Interior is also given. Notwithstanding that the hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) had declared that he never had a telegram from a barrister in Victoria about a liquor permit, and that the only person with whom there had been a question of permits was the partner of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, he then turned around at the end of his speech and said :

I wired this reply :

"Archer Martin, Victoria, B.C.

Was not that telegram "about a liquor permit." I ask the right hon. the Premier, whether one can conceive of a more unworthy subterfuge than for a Minister to use a quibble of that kind when replying to the positive declaration of a member of this House. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) went on to state that under the law the North-west Territories had issued a permit, and the Minister of Justice advised him that they were entitled to do so. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) was showing his utter incapacity for the position he occupied by issuing permits which he had no authority to issue, and by acting in contravention of the law that gave to the Governor of the North-west Territories the power to deal with that subject. What happened? These parties had a permit from the North-west Government, but the authorities under Mr. Sifton would not permit that liquor to go forward, and under these circumstances the Minister (Mr. Sifton) telegraphed to the authorities under his own control to permit to go forward that liquor which had been stopped by his orders at the boundary. And yet, the hon. the Minister (Mr. Sifton) tells this House that any person who stated that he had ever had a telegram about liquor going into the Yukon from any barrister in Victoria, was stating an untruth.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Would the hon. gentleman permit me a word of explanation in the matter. The expression "a permit issued by the Minister of the Interior," could only have reference to a permit issued by his own department. This telegram deals with a different matter altogether. The statement of the Minister of the Interior was, that the only barrister who had telegraphed in regard to a permit was the partner of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, and it is quite sure that the Minister of the Interior did not do that in any terms of reproach to the gentleman referred to. That gentleman is a personal friend of mine, and I am sure the Minister of the Interior did not intend any reproach to him. What I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) to, is that the latter telegram had reference to a permit issued by the Government of the North-west Territories, and the first statement of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior clearly had reference, as the text shows, to permits issued by himself. They are two distinct transactions, and the statement made by the Minister of the Interior in the first place was amply justified.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry that any gentleman other than the Minister of the Interior undertakes to offer such a senseless quibble for the consideration of this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry my hon. friend thinks it so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is this statement true? Was the telegram "about a permit"?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If I would use my hon. friend's phrase I would say he is indulging in a quibble, but that, I think, would not be parliamentary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have the whole thing out of the mouth of the Minister of the Interior himself. He says that the law partner of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is the only man that the public or private records of the Government show ever telegraphed to a member of this Government from Victoria "about a liquor permit."

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). About a permit to be issued by the Minister himself.

Mr. BERGERON. Not at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have already allowed the Minister of Finance to make a speech.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not made any speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I put it to my hon. friend in this House. Is a telegram asking a permit to allow in liquor which was stopped at the boundary; is a telegram on that subject "about a permit" or not? And yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) for the senseless purpose of dragging in the name of a gentleman of the highest character and standing, one of his own party one of the brilliant lights of the Liberal party in this country—the Minister of the Interior makes that senseless statement for the purpose of dragging in this gentleman's name simply because he had the misfortune to be the law partner of the hon. gentleman who arraigned the Minister for this misconduct.

Mr. MCGREGOR. It was his partner (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) who drew him in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Drew whom in?

Mr. MCGREGOR. Drew Peters in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How did he draw him in? The hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) before he makes these senseless interruptions should know what he is talking about.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I know what I am talking about, but I do not think you do.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is unworthy the position that hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor) occupies in this House, that he should interject such a ridiculous remark as that. Why, Sir, it is impossible to imagine a more complete case of persons attempting to quibble upon terms that will not admit of any quibble.

Both cases were cases of permits. The liquor was taken in under a permit sent by telegraph from the Minister of the Interior. They had a permit from the North-west authorities, but the liquor was stopped at the boundary, and they could not move it a particle until an authoritative permit was sent by the Minister of the Interior to allow the liquor to go forward. And yet my hon. friend is not above supporting a quibble of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will have to leave the House to judge which is the quibbler.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps I might as well read what has been placed in my hands. I think it is simply contemptible to drag these private and irrelevant matters before the House. This is a telegram from Victoria sent to the "Star":

In the House of Commons, Hon. Clifford Sifton charged that Hon. Fred. Peters, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's law partner, had applied to Ottawa for a liquor permit for the Yukon. Regarding this matter, Mr. Peters stated that he has never made an application to Ottawa for a liquor permit since he was the partner of Sir Hibbert Tupper.

So that he was not the partner of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper at the time.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 51) to incorporate the Canadian Inland Transportation Company.—(Mr. Bertram.)

Bill (No. 53) to authorize the Bank of Nova Scotia to issue sterling notes for circulation in the Island of Jamaica.—(Mr. Borden, Halifax.)

Bill (No. 54) respecting the Eastern Trust Company.—(Mr. Borden, Halifax.)

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have but very little to add to what I have troubled this House with; but I was running my eye, when the House took recess, over the report made by Major Walsh. He says:

No one here but admits that never before have we been personally present where so astonishing a state of order and safety to life and property has been maintained. It is something to be remembered and spoken of, the longest day we live.

A prominent American, resident in Dawson, writing to the press said, upon the same subject: "I wish to say, with regard to the Mounted Police, who govern the North-west Territory under management of Major Walsh, that a more orderly and quiet mining camp did not exist on the face of the globe. They have complete control, and the people are high in their praise. Your property and person are safe all the time. You need have no fear, day or night.

I draw attention to that with great pleasure, because it is a wonderful evidence of the result of what we may call British institutions. It shows how different a mining camp in a remote section of the country that is under the control of British power, presents to that which has been shown in other countries; but I draw special attention to it, because the hon. Minister of the Interior based his monstrous project for the building of a Yukon railway, which he submitted to this House, on the absolute necessity of providing for the preservation of law and order in that country. He held out to this House the impression that, unless that enormous obligation was incurred by the people of Canada, there would be no security that this district would not be absolutely wrested out of our hands by a foreign population. All these fears, Sir, have proved entirely illusory—just as illusory as his predictions with reference to the famine and distress that would be occasioned there, if his very extraordinary proposal were not adopted by both Houses. On page 14 of Major Walsh's report will be found the following statement:—

The Battalion.—On my arrival at Selkirk, on my trip up the river, I found Colonel Evans camped there with 60 men. The balance of his command had not yet arrived. Good progress had been made in getting out logs for the various buildings to be constructed. I informed Colonel Evans that it was more than likely that at least 100 of his command would have to winter at Dawson. Subsequently, Colonel Steele advised me that the police force at Dawson was to be increased to 70 men, and I wrote to Colonel Evans, stating that perhaps this number would be sufficient to perform the work there this winter.

I bring that forward as an evidence of the utter incapacity of the Minister of the Interior to discharge the duties devolving upon him in connection with the administration of the Yukon. The fact that we have the evidence of Major Walsh himself, who is thoroughly competent to speak on that question, that there never was any part of the world in which there was greater order and quiet than in the Yukon territory, where there was but a small number of our Mounted Police force there, whose efficiency in the discharge of their duties as Mounted Police nobody, in my judgment, can speak too highly—in the face of that what do we find? We find this Government actually incurring the enormous expense of sending over 200 soldiers into that country, at a most frightful cost. Why, the amount which the Government paid to the Hudson Bay Company for transportation to Teslin Lake, I think, was at the rate of 40 cents per pound on all supplies and materials; and now I ask why was this enormous charge imposed upon the people of Canada? I have only to read the report of the Major General Commanding the Militia, to find that this force is to be recalled, that it was, in his judgment, very inconvenient to have the military forces of Canada taken away from their duties; and yet we find, such was the utter incapacity of the Department of the Interior, that an enormous expenditure, which must run into a great many hundreds of thousand dollars, was incurred for the purpose of sending soldiers of the permanent military forces of Canada into the Yukon. I want to know what justification the Government have for that. We have here the report of Major Walsh, whose testimony is borne out by every one who has visited that country—ladies, gentle and simple, and everybody else—that there never was a place in the world in which there was more perfect law and order, as there has been from the first to the last, in the Yukon. Yet this Government, not content with the sufficient force of Mounted Police which they had there, incurred enormous expense and disturbed the whole defensive arrangements of Canada for the purpose of sending soldiers out there. What was the object of sending a military force into that country? The mounted policemen, under the instructions which governed them, were able to discharge whatever duties were necessary. Soldiers can do nothing; you must have something in the nature of a rebellion, you must read the Riot Act before a soldier can raise a finger. Yet, in the face of the evidence of Major Walsh and every other authority who has any knowledge of the country, the hon. Minister committed the monstrous folly of sending a large military force in there, at the cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars. It looks as if the whole of the Yukon territory was to be exploited by an individual in this country for purposes which it is very hard for any person to understand. From the miners in the Yukon territory a revenue has been drawn, according to the statement made on a recent public occasion by the Minister of the Interior, of $1,530,000, and the expenditure involved amounted to $647,000, leaving a balance of $883,000 placed in the treasury of Canada out of the pockets of the people carrying on mining in that far district. When one contemplates that, with the evidence before him that we now have—evidence from every source—one is at a loss to understand why the Minister of the Interior should have acted as he did.

The hon. Postmaster General contradicted very strongly the statement that the post office regulations in that country were in a most deplorable condition. Have the men who contributed over $1,500,000 to the treasury of Canada, not a right to have their mail system kept up with the outer world? I have no hesitation in saying that you cannot show me in the history of any country such mismanagement and incapacity as has been exhibited in that district by the postal administration of Canada. If the hon. Minister of the Interior, anxious to exploit this country for his own purpose, wished to prevent any communication with the outer world, we could understand the state of things that exist there. We could understand why tons of mail matter were lying for months on the road, and nothing done to carry it forward, and, when finally it did arrive, the state of affairs out there simply beggars description. I can produce the sworn testimony to any extent to show that, when the mails did arrive, nobody could get a letter out of the post office; I can show that, after weary months of waiting, these men, who had put this balance of $900,000 to their credit in the treasury, were unable to obtain the slightest communication with their friends. I say that condition of things was scandalous and disgraceful, and shows incapacity and recklessness of a most startling character.

We have been nauseated with the story of the Postmaster General's wonderful improvement in the post office. I do not hesitate to say that the postal communication in Canada has never been in a more imperfect, disrupted and disgraceful condition than under the administration of the present Postmaster General. When this great mining population, putting over a million and a half of dollars into the treasury of Canada, were not afforded means of receiving communications—communications, many of them, of the most vital importance, communications sometimes upon which fortunes depended, it is a disgrace to those who are responsible. And even when the mail was received in that country, what was the result? The fact is notorious and can be proven by the evidence of scores of the most respectable men, that when a mail arrived, the men who wished to apply at the post office for letters were lined up by the Mounted Police, and, after spending perhaps a whole night in line were unable to reach the post office, were obliged to resort to the disgraceful means of bribing women of immoral character to go to a side door of the post office, take their letters and carry them to a restaurant opposite the post office, where, on payment of one or two or five or even as high as ten dollars for a single letter, these communications were handed over to the unhappy—or happy, for they were often glad to get their letters upon any terms—recipients. That is the state of things that hon. gentlemen opposite may think to dispose of by getting a dependent relative of the Minister of the Interior to report upon; but it will not satisfy the public of Canada. If they want a report that will dispel the disgrace which now overshadows the fair name of Canada in the eyes of the civilized world, they must adopt different means. These are matters that are known to every person that has gone into that country, and yet with the enormous amount of nearly three-quarters of a million of money lying to the credit of these unfortunate miners, they can neither get justice in the administration of their mining claims, nor can they have means of communication with the outside world. These are things that the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) may think to dispose of by handing them over to Mr. Ogilvie to investigate. But such a course will utterly fail to satisfy the intelligent people of Canada that justice has been done in the matter.

Now, I turn to another point. Major Walsh, in his report, says:

This winter the channel of the Thirty-Mile River could be greatly improved by the removal of the dangerous rocks in its course. It would require very little expense to put this river in safe condition for navigation. I would recommend that attention be given this matter at once. Last winter, when I was going up the river over the trail, I noticed that the dangerous rocks were all exposed. A charge of dynamite could very easily remove them. Some dredging at the foot of Lake Lebarge at Cariboo Crossing would also improve navigation by this route. In a former report I stated that the Lewes River was not navigable, and I intimated that it could not be made navigable. I have since found that the waters of this river are very much deeper at the points referred to in my report than I was then aware, and by removing a few rocks at different places a good channel for navigation can be secured.

There is a service of the most vital and pressing character. Mr. Coste, the engineer of the Public Works Department, who was sent out as soon as the House rose last session to examine the Stikine River and Teslin Lake route, and came out by the White Pass and Lake Bennett route, has pronounced altogether against the Stikine River route. Here is a work that would cost, perhaps, $20,000 and would save the destruction of hundreds of thousands worth of property; and yet the Government, with three-quarters of a million of these miners' money in their treasury, will not spend a paltry $20,000 or $30,000 in removing obstructions to navigation on the route that they have been obliged to use for the purpose of keeping up their communication with that country. The Minister of the Interior declared in this House that the salvation of life and property and of the country itself depended upon the construction of the Yukon Railway. And yet, when that Bill was defeated in the Senate, what did the Government do? Why, they put their embargo upon that country and would not allow any person to provide means of access to it. A company offered to deposit $250,000 in the treasury of Canada as a guarantee that they would, without a dollar of subsidy, without an acre of land from this Government, build railway communication to Dawson City within eighteen months. Yet the Government put down their foot and would not allow these men to build that railway with their own money. Under the circumstances, the least they could do was to spend this $20,000 or $30,000 to do this work, which Major Walsh declares is an absolute necessity. Up to this hour not a blow has been struck, not a tittle of the work has been done, this work which the man who was placed in the position to deal with the matter reported as being of vital importance.

What does Major Walsh say about the timber leases? If the object of the Minister of the Interior from the day he was called to take charge of that department down to the present hour had been to exploit the Yukon country for himself and his friends, or for political party purposes, he could not have taken more effective means than he did. The country has been scandalized by these timber leases and these river leases that have been given to whom the Government were indebted for political services. What does Major Walsh say upon that question?

Regarding the timber of the district, a policy of extreme caution should be adopted. Without timber there can be absolutely no development in this district, and the regulations should be such as will best ensure its preservation while affording the population all that its members require for legitimate use. Timber leases should be issued from the district, and not from Ottawa.

Yet, down to the present hour, I believe, these timber leases, these river leases, these advantages and privileges have been used by the Department of the Interior and the Government for the purpose of paying their political debts without regard to the recommendations which the gentlemen placed in charge of that country and with the responsibility upon him as to the proper course, a course which every man with a head upon his shoulders could perfectly see was the only means by which this could be properly done, and that is by granting these leases in the country itself.

I draw the attention of the House again to the condemnation that Major Walsh in this report makes of Mr. Fawcett, who is vaunted so highly by hon. gentlemen opposite. He says:

I would recommend that an assistant judge for the Dawson district be appointed, and that one of his duties be the deciding of mining disputes. I do not think any one but a lawyer is fit to try these cases.

After two years' experience of making a gold commissioner of a surveyor, and of having all these important interests depending upon his decision, Major Walsh, with the whole question under his eyes, reports to the Government that if they want this thing properly done they have got to get rid of Mr. Fawcett and get a lawyer in his place who understands something of the principles and knowledge of law. I repeat that I would not say one word in disparagement of Mr. Fawcett's high moral character, and his desire to do what is fair and right; but you have here the testimony of the commissioner himself that it is absolutely necessary, if these duties are to be properly discharged, that you should get some person else, and I am glad to see they have got some person else. Major Walsh also touches upon another very important question:

When the difficulties of operation, the scarcity of supplies, and the lack of proper facilities for mining and the small territory worked are considered and understood, an output of $10,000,000 is a remarkable showing, and justifies great expectations for the future. Practically Eldorado and Bonanza are the only two creeks upon which any considerable work has been done.

Why does Major Walsh report that there are only two places in which any work has been done? It is because, practically, Eldorado and Bonanza were two immensely rich claims about which there was no doubt of the parties succeeding in obtaining a large amount of gold. Everybody that knows anything of mining in any country in the world is well aware, and it has been dinned steadily into the ear of the Minister of the Interior ever since these regulations were made, that a more fatal policy could not be adopted than the imposition of this enormous royalty of 10 per cent upon the output. If it was imposed upon the profits of an undertaking, one could understand it, but to impose it upon the output is a monstrous proposition unheard of in any other country of the world, so far as I am aware. In the United States there is no royalty, where they have effected such enormous results in mining development. In British Columbia, I think, the royalty is one per cent; in Nova Scotia, if I remember right, it is something like 2½ per cent. The imposition of a 10 per cent royalty has practically stopped the whole development of the Canadian Yukon. Why is it stopped? It is because the expenditure on ordinary mining claims is such as to make it impossible for the miners to get any beneficial results if they are compelled to pay 10 per cent upon the outlay. The result is the greatest disaster to Canada that can possibly be conceived. Canada is interested in having credit for all the gold and all the development of that country that can be produced. If you adopt a policy of 10 per cent royalty in the first place, you make it impossible to work anything but the richest and most valuable claims; in the second place, you offer such a premium for smuggling and deception as to make it one of the most difficult things in the world to collect the revenue from the output of gold. The country does not get credit for one-half of the gold output of the country, simply because the miners adopt means to conceal the gold that they have taken out. It can be put in small bulk and easily smuggled; and the result is that, whereas, formerly everybody proclaimed what a wonderful country it was, and how successful they were, now every person conceals his output for the purpose of avoiding payment of this immense tax. The policy is one that has practically closed the great mining mart of the Yukon to mining operations, owing to the discouragement that this exaction has produced. The miner has to pay a mining license, a heavy charge; he has to pay an annual lease, a heavy charge; then you come down upon him, and in many cases, as parties have assured me, where they have taken $20,000 or $30,000 worth of gold in the course of the year, the cost of the purchase of the mine to begin with, and the expenditure involved in securing that revenue, are such as to leave them practically after the Government take that 10 per cent, without any profit in the operation. If the Government do not get it, it is because the inducement to smuggling is so great that the miners conceal the amount they have received and thus defeat the object of the Government. Major Walsh also refers to the matter in another place:

The cold and inhospitable climate, combined with the expensive and hard labour attendant upon mining in that country, will always make it an unpopular and unfavourable "mining camp," and for this reason the mining laws and regulations must be liberal, so as to attract and encourage the population and capital of the world. Good facilities for communication and transportation must be provided in the district.

The price of labour will be so reduced that wages can be made in ground that will pay the miner from $5 to $10 per day, and when this is done the Yukon district ought to give to the eastern provinces a trade that in a few years would exceed that of any foreign nation.

I draw the attention of the Government to this, as I regard it of vital importance. I regret to see that the Minister of the Interior has determined to maintain this royalty of 10 per cent. A gentleman called upon me, a very intelligent man who has, however, the misfortune to be an American, and, therefore, the very mention of his name will be scouted by hon. gentlemen opposite to whom that nationality have recently become so exceedingly distasteful; but he is well qualified to express an opinion, he is engaged in mining there now. He called upon me and told me that he discussed the matter with Mr. Ogilvie, and Mr. Ogilvie stated in his judgment the Government would get more money with a royalty of 2½ per cent per annum than with a royalty of 10 per cent. There is another point upon which I will quote from Major Walsh, but here, I fear, nobody will agree with him. He says:

With regard to the question which has arisen as to the propriety of an official taking up a claim in the district, I fail to see any reason for not permitting him to do so, nor any reason in which the public or the public service can be thereby injured.

I am not surprised to hear that statement from Major Walsh, but I am surprised that a gentleman having the responsibility of the Minister of the Interior upon his shoulders, should have given countenance to an act so utterly fatal to anything like good government in that country. Sir, there is a gentleman within the sound of my voice at this moment. He is unfortunately an American; he comes from the state of New York. I do not intend to name him, because I do not want to embarrass him in his communications with the Government. He has not been in the Yukon, but he has a large amount of capital there, and has representatives in the Yukon territory, and he says that the only means of accomplishing anything there is the bribery of officials. The hon. Minister of the Interior will be able to learn this from the gentleman himself if he will grant him an interview. So far, he has unfortunately received the cold shoulder, and he finds it difficult to get any communication with this hon. gentleman who seems to regard the Yukon as his private and personal property. I draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to this as another evidence of what has been going on in that country, and, if a judicial commission is granted, evidence will be put before it of the fact, of which I am speaking, that the only means of accomplishing anything is by bribery and corruption, and that it is only by those means that any record of claims can be got, or any kind of justice obtained in that territory at the present time. I give another evidence from Major Walsh's report as to the unwisdom of this enormous charge of 10 per cent in royalty. He says:

The cost of prospecting a claim may be any way from $500 to $2,000, and even five times as much as the latter amount has been expended in prospecting claims which are now abandoned. Perhaps with cheaper labour they may be worked at some future time.

I give that as another evidence of the absolute necessity of looking into this matter. I do not require to detain the House any longer with this interesting report of Major Walsh, but I commend it to the careful consideration of hon. gentlemen as being worthy of their attention.

When the House rose at six o'clock, I was dealing with a very important question in which I gave a reason to hon. gentlemen why I could not accept the unsupported word of the hon. Minister of the Interior in relation to the question of a permit. I will now give a further reason why I thought I would be justified in refusing to accept that hon. gentleman's statement. We have a very interesting account from the hon. Minister of the Interior of his own partner, not Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper's partner, but his own partner, and it is worth the attention of the House. He says:

A gentleman there named A. E. Philp, was a junior partner in my office.

That is at Brandon.

This gentleman, like a great many others, caught the gold fever, the Klondike fever, last year, and went out to the Yukon.

When did he go to the Yukon? He went to the Yukon when his partner became the Minister of the Interior.

Mr. DOMVILLE. That is not correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. However, the fact of his being the former partner of the Minister of the Interior put him in a position to do what no other man could do. The hon. gentleman says:

I defy any man living to bring the slightest evidence of the truth of any such statement. I dissolved partnership with Mr. Philp when I became a member of the Government, and have had no business connection with him, directly or indirectly, in any way, shape or form, since that time.

That is very strong language and very clear, but the fact that he could proclaim himself as having recently been the junior partner of the hon. Minister of the Interior would be no mean advantage to him in the way in which matters have been carried on in the Yukon territory. But I am now going to show the House what I think will be strong evidence that this former partnership is still a bond of affection existing between the junior partner, Mr. Philp, and the hon. Minister of the Interior, notwithstanding the statement that he defies anybody to prove that he is in partnership. It is not very easy to prove a connection of that kind, but if anything would prove it it is what I am going to put before the House, and it goes to show that, while ostensibly the partnership may be dissolved, that their position is what it has been before, that is to say, that they are immediately interested in undertakings connected with exploiting of the Yukon territory. He says:

The story was circulated at the coast that I had given Mr. Philp a liquor permit, and that he had taken liquor into the Klondike, and with that charity which covers a multitude of sins, the story was industriously circulated that I was his partner in connection with the taking of liquor into that country. Well, Mr. Speaker, he never had a liquor permit from me or my department, directly, indirectly, or in any way, shape or form, by or under the authority of any member of this Government.

That is a pretty strong statement. But did he give Mr. Philp what it is charged that he gave him? On page 877 of "Hansard," the hon. Minister of the Interior says he wrote this letter:

This will introduce Mr. Philp, who will be permitted to enter the Yukon district with such provisions he may choose to take with him, without regard to the regulations.

Now, Sir, if his colleagues, for I cannot believe that they were conscious of such a transaction as this, know that he is not connected with Mr. Philp, I want him to produce such a telegram as that to any other man living. I want him to show any single case in which he authorized anybody to take provisions without regard to limit or to quantity or kind or to regulations into that country. He says: I command you as my officials to allow that gentleman to take into the Yukon territory whatever he may wish to take in there in the shape of provisions without any regard to existing regulations. I ask the right hon. First Minister whether he thinks that any member of this Government, or any man in any department of government, ought to be permitted to give a certificate of that kind to any man living. I do not believe that he would sanction such an action. How was that sanction used? I have the evidence—I do not intend to give the name—but I am going to read a letter, sent by a gentleman whose name is withheld, to the "Mail and Empire," and I may say that that gentleman, although I have withheld his name is willing to go before a judicial commission and swear to the truth of what I am stating. He is known to every member of this House to be as respectable as any man within the walls of this House. I say that on my own responsibility. What is his statement? It is this:

—, October 4th, 1898.

W. H. Bunting, Esq.,
"Mail and Empire," Toronto.

Dear Sir,—When in Victoria, B.C., in June last, a gentleman introduced himself to me, and in substance said he had a permit to take a large quantity of liquor into the Yukon district, and wanted to know if I knew a certain distiller. I replied in the affirmative, and wished to see before taking hold of the deal in any way, the bona fide nature of the transaction. A telegram was sent at my suggestion to Victoria, where the original order or permit was held; an answer came back, which I saw, stating that the original, signed by Clifford Sifton, could be forwarded by next steamer if necessary. The party in whose favour the permit was, was Mr. Philp, partner of Clifford Sifton, of Brandon. I asked who was interested in the matter beside the party who offered it to me; he said that Philp was to receive $5,000 in cash when order or permit was handed over, and one-third of the profits at the end of the deal. I then would have nothing to do with it; did not think seriously of having anything to do with it at any time.

Here is a copy of the order, as offered to me, and that copy of the order, signed Clifford Sifton, is exactly what we have under the Minister of the Interior's own hand, as the permit he gave to Mr. Philp to take this liquor in:

Ottawa, 13th May, 1898.

To the Officers and Officials in the Yukon Territory:

This introduces Mr. Philp, who has a permit to enter the Yukon district with such provisions as he may see fit to take with him, without regard to the usual regulations.

(Sgd.) CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

This was presumably signed by Clifford Sifton, the original I did not see.

Well, we have the original here, and that is exactly correct.

I have in my possession a letter from the party who originally offered the deal to me, dated the 28th June, 1898, wherein he says, amongst other things, to me:

"You may have this in its entirety for $10,000."

Only $10,000, Mr. Speaker, on this little job.

You may have this in its entirety for $10,000 cash; if you want to work on it wire me at once. I have secured the thing out and out, owing to my inability to dispose of it and he retaining the interest.

Sir, I give that to the House as another reason why I do not accept the statement of the Minister of the Interior, that he has no connection with the party to whom he would give such a monstrous permit as that, to take in anything, without regard to regulations, and violating the laws under which the department acts, for the purpose of giving that to Mr. Philp which no other man has ever received before or since. That is a transaction that I place before the House as testimony, as conclusive as it is possible to present, of the incapacity—I won't even say, incapacity—but of the corruption of this whole transaction. I do not intend to detain the House at any further length, except to draw attention for a moment to the commission to Mr. Ogilvie issued by the Government. Sir, is this a commission calculated to meet the widespread charges of corruption and mismanagement in connection with the Yukon, as detailed in this amendment by my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke)? It is not. A number of miners sent a letter to the Prime Minister, making certain charges, and Mr. Ogilvie is appointed to investigate these charges, nothing more, nothing less. But Mr. Ogilvie, under his instructions, is not in a position to deal with anything outside of the specific charges contained in the miners' petition. The instructions to Mr. Ogilvie have been given to us by the Minister of the Interior, and here they are. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) said:

Here is the letter I wrote to Mr. Ogilvie accompanying the commission and containing his instructions:

Ottawa, 10th October, 1898.

Dear Sir,—You will receive herewith a commission to investigate charges which have been made by a miners' committee against the administration of Government affairs in the Yukon district. This commission has been issued in consequence of the receipt of a formal complaint, a copy of which is attached to the commission. You will proceed at once upon the receipt of the commission with the investigation, and you are authorized to notify the persons who have signed the petition, wherever possible, of the time and place and when the commission will be opened.

Mr. Ogilvie is simply authorized to notify a dozen miners who signed this petition, and who may be away in the woods or in far-off districts, prosecuting their employment.

It is the desire of the Government that the investigation should be thorough and complete, and that each and every charge that has been made in the miners' petition should be thoroughly investigated, and that you should make a definite report.

Nothing more than this. It is a farce. It is no answer to the charges which are ringing over three continents of incapacity and mismanagement and corruption in regard to the Yukon administration. This commission limits the whole thing down to what a few miners have put in their statement, and these miners, when the commission opens, are, at their own expense, to maintain themselves, and to abandon their work and to incur the undying hostility of the Government. Is this House, composed of intelligent business men, to be deceived, and deluded, and fooled, by such a proposition into believing that such a commission will dispel the dark cloud of disgrace that has settled down upon the fair land of Canada in connection with these Yukon charges? I am astounded, when I look across the floor of this House and see my right hon. friend the First Minister; I am astounded that he did not, the moment this resolution was tabled, at once rise in his place and say: I know that the conduct of my Government is clear; I know that our course will challenge investigation; I am not afraid of the administration of the Minister of the Interior being examined with the most scrupulous care, and I at once accept the proposal. And, Sir, what was that proposal? It was not that we should name the commission, but that the Government themselves should select a judicial commission on their own responsibility, a commission beyond the control of the Government of the day. They had the whole judiciary of Canada to select from; they could choose their own friends there, if they liked, and, so far as I am concerned, such is my respect, such is my confidence in the high character and integrity of the bench of Canada, without respect to what political party a judge may have belonged to before he went on the bench, I say, that the verdict of such a judicial commission would, in my judgment, meet with hearty approval by the people of Canada. Was not that a fair proposition for us to make? Why did not hon. gentlemen opposite accept it? Why is it that they cannot find men behind them in this House who will force them to accept that proposition? Sir, in view of the disgrace that rests upon Canada on account of these world-wide charges, the Government, out of respect to what they owe to Canada and to themselves, should of their own motion take the best means of dispelling that cloud and of proving whether these charges are true or false. The Government should have said: We are determined to probe to the bottom this matter, which strikes at the integrity of Canada, and let the wrong-doers take the consequence. They might lose the Minister of the Interior—I believe they would by the report of any judicial commission, choose it as they might—but, Sir, the Government would save themselves. Sir, in what position are they now, and in what position do they place their followers behind them? Had they granted such a commission, whether the charges were found too true or not, it would have disposed completely of any suspicion of complicity on the part of the Government. I say to these gentlemen on the Treasury benches: You have no choice. You have to accept that resolution, and appoint that judicial commission, and you have to show that you are not in the deplorable condition that you are forced to appoint, as a commissioner to investigate charges against the Minister of the Interior and the Government of Canada for maladministration in that country, a man who was a dependent relative of the Minister of the Interior who is accused. Was ever in a civilized country such a thing heard of, that when a man was charged with high crimes and misdemeanours, charged with failing in his duty to his country, charged with a course which involved the Government of which he was a member in disgrace? I ask, was ever such a thing known in the civilized world before as to allow the man so charged to say: "I cannot permit that charge to be investigated by an independent judicial tribunal; I must have my relative, my dependent, for my judge, or I will leave your Government." Sir, I tell them that they have got to take that resolution; they have got to adopt that resolution. They have got, in defence of that country, of themselves, and of their own honour, to adopt it, or they will be placed in this position, that as they can only obtain a subservient report from a man who is dependent upon themselves—and his own position makes it impossible, unless, as I said before, he were more or less than human, for him to discharge his duty independently—they will find that they have rung the death-knell of this Administration, and the intelligent people of this country will rise in their might and strike down the men who are unwilling to have their acts submitted to an independent judicial tribunal, because they know that it would involve them in disapproval and discomfiture.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Mr. Speaker, the last few moments of my hon. friend's address were really refreshing. He had been plowing along for an hour or so with an audience of about fifteen members, on his own side, and about the same number on this side; and a more dreary and uninteresting address I never heard the hon. gentleman deliver.

Mr. BERGERON. That is not what the people will say.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman, as a rule, is able to import a good deal of vigour into his speeches; but the consciousness was evidently borne in upon him in the early afternoon, and remained with him until the last five minutes, that he was flogging a dead horse—that the interest in this debate has entirely ceased; that the interest which was maintained for a long time on the part of the public in the debate was so maintained, because they believed that there was some evidence to be produced against either the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) or some of the officials in the Yukon, which would throw discredit upon the Government. As a matter of fact, I think I can safely venture the assertion that there has not been a scintilla of evidence attempted to be brought before this House which was not contained in the miners' petition, or in the evidence with which they say the country rang before the miners' petition was presented—not a single new thing. But we have had novelty in parliamentary debate. We have had something which, in nineteen sessions at least, my parliamentary experience, I have never witnessed before, and which, I venture to hope, I never shall witness again. We have had attempts made by men of whom I thought better things, who were willing to wound and yet afraid to strike, who had not the courage to give the names of their witnesses, who in an indirect and unhandsome manner—a cowardly manner, I would say, if the parliamentary usages of the House would permit me—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I say, Mr. Speaker, that they have attempted, by reading extracts from alleged letters and alleged memoranda from witnesses, and withholding the names of those witnesses in almost every case, to leave this House and this country under the impression that there was some grievous charge against the hon. Minister of the Interior, and some grievous wrong committed by some of the officials appointed by this Government which they were anxious to have investigated. Well, Sir, they have failed from beginning to end to place upon the records of this House one single charge, authenticated by one honourable man, who would vouch for it, to which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior or any officer of his department should be called upon to answer. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has divided his speech ingeniously, knowing that he could not maintain the line of attack on which the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) started out, of personal charges against the Minister and against the officials. He has divided his attack into personal and political charges, and for the last hour or so he has been talking about the political mismanagement of the Yukon. Well, Sir, on that branch of the subject we are always prepared to meet him. The hon. gentleman tells us, with a great deal of surprise, and I think I almost fancied with some regret, that we have had an extraordinary spectacle presented to the world in that Yukon country. We have had 30,000 or 40,000 miners, men not accustomed to the restraints of law and order and civilization, congregated there for over two years; and yet law and order have been maintained as amply as in the city of Ottawa or the city of Montreal. To whom is that to be attributed?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. POPE. To the miners.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. To the government of the Yukon territory and the precautions which the wisdom and the prescience of the hon. Minister of the Interior took to prevent disorder and uprising—to the fact that we had in that territory a large number of Mounted Police and a certain number of the regular militia of Canada, affording guarantees to the law-abiding citizens that they would be protected; and to the fact that, notwithstanding that nine-tenths of the population of that district were of alien origin, the law was administered with the same celerity, the same firmness, the same certainty, as in any other part of Canada. The hon. gentleman is surprised and astonished at that. I can tell him that I have received personally numbers of letters from gentlemen who went there from the United States of America congratulating me upon the marked difference, so far as law and order were concerned, between the mining districts of the Yukon and the mining districts of the western states of America. They stated that in the Yukon district they were just as safe and just as certain of the protection of their life and property as if they had been in one of the large cities of their own country; and they congratulated the Government of Canada upon that fact.

Mr. BERGERON. Give us the name.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Their names are legion, Sir; and if the hon. gentleman would insinuate that my statement is not correct—

Mr. BERGERON. Oh, no; but we would like to see the name.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Let the hon. gentleman maintain his soul in patience a little. The hon. gentleman complains of two or three things. He complains that we sent soldiers into that country. Why does he complain of that? The hon. gentleman lately became very much enamoured of his American friends. He lives with them, almost sleeps with them; he cannot make a speech of a few hours' length without quoting from some of his American friends who have not made the fortunes they expected, who complain of having to pay taxes or royalties in the Yukon—American friends of his who, if the truth were known, complain that the Yukon is Canadian at all. That is where the shoe pinches. If the hon. gentleman takes up the records of his American friends who published a newspaper in the Yukon, and whose opinions—in the form of a memorandum or statement—the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), formulated—he will find that the burden of their complaint was that the Yukon was Canadian territory at all. They had complained in their paper of everything; they complained that British law was paramount there, that British taxes had to be paid there, that the British flag flew there, and that the line was where it had been placed by treaty nearly a century ago. They wanted the line run further east so that this territory should become American and cease to be Canadian. My hon. friend has deep concern for these people and is comforting himself with their representations as to how we should conduct ourselves in our own country, and one of their representations is that we must not let a Canadian militia man go there at all. It is perfectly proper, mind you, that on the other side of the Alaska boundary, there should be a number of detachments of American troops. My hon. friend is perfectly satisfied that American troops should go there to maintain law and order and see that the regulations of that country are observed, but he says we must not have one of the Canadian militia in that Yukon territory. Why not? Why will you have them in the settled parts of Canada? Why do you want them here? Or does the hon. gentleman want to abolish them altogether?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What do you want them in Victoria for? In Montreal, in Toronto and Kingston? Are you prepared to abolish them altogether? Is that what you want?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to keep them here for the purpose for which they were organized and for which the Major General says they must come back.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The purpose for which they were organized is the purpose of defence and the maintaining of law and order, when necessary.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And if there had been a riot or rebellion attempted by the 30,000 or 40,000 foreign miners who are in that country, this reserve power would have been at hand to repress it. The moral effect of having these troops and the North-west Mounted Police there was sufficient, together with the magistracy, to maintain law and order in that country. And it is a proud reflection, which the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) and the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) can congratulate themselves upon, that they took time by the forelock and sent these representatives of law and order into that district, with the result that there never has been any attempt to resist law in Dawson City, or any part of the Yukon.

Oh, but says the hon. gentleman, the Government is guilty of another crime. While, he says, it is true that the population of that country is nine-tenths foreigners and one-tenth Canadian, you have gone and levied taxes upon these people, you have taken from them revenue to the extent of $1,500,000, and you have only expended $640,000, and although this expenditure has been incurred for the purpose of maintaining peace and order and good government, he throws out, as the responsible leader of the Opposition, this suggestion to the Yankee miners, the 30,000 or 40,000 who had crossed the line, that that money is theirs. He says that this $640,000 does not belong to the Government of Canada, but should be placed to the credit of the miners in that country. Therefore, the foreign miners, I suppose, are to go and take this money the best way they can, and the taxpayers of Canada are to learn that the money collected in that part of the Dominion is not to go into the general consolidated revenue fund, as do all the other taxes collected in other parts of Canada, but is to be put to a special account and credited to the Yankee miners. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman intended that as a suggestion to them to try and take possession of the money, when they got the troops removed, but whether he did or not, it was an ill-called for and unfortunate statement. I think that both he and his friends on that side would be well advised if they would adopt the principle which was adopted by gentlemen on this side the very first time that that Yukon territory was brought under Canadian Government, namely, that the Yukon should pay for the Yukon. That is the principle we adopted, and which so far we have attempted to apply.

The hon. gentleman complained very much about this royalty. He thinks it is excessive. The royalty, no doubt, is very objectionable to those who have to pay it; but I will venture to say that it is not objectionable to the taxpayers of Canada, who know that an enormous sum has yet to be paid out of the treasury of this country for the proper development of the Yukon. It is quite true that the hon. gentleman's party succeeded in defeating the Bill we introduced last year for the construction of a railway to that country, and it is quite possible they will attempt to defeat a measure to carry in a telegraph line there also, but I think they will be well advised if they do not go very much further in defeating propositions this Government may make from time to time for the development of that country, by improving its postal or telegraph or railway facilities. And I can assure the hon. gentleman, that while we are collecting this royalty from those miners, we are determined that the money shall be generously expended in building public works and extending transportation facilities and otherwise in developing the country. My hon. friend omitted, however, to mention a very important fact, and that is that although a 10 per cent royalty is charged, not a single per cent, not a single dollar is or has been charged upon any claim which realized less annually than $2,500. After a year's experience we doubled the free output to $5,000, so that that amount can be mined now and not a single cent of royalty or tax is charged upon it. I leave it to the judgment of the people whether when a claim is paying more than $5,000, it is not reasonable and fair that the surplus should bear a small tax. Let me call the attention of the House to this fact, which, I think, in this hour of recrimination, abuse and slander poured upon the unfortunate heads of those poor civil servants who are administering the law in that country, should not be lost sight of, and that is that although $1,500,000 has been collected in the shape of royalty and other duties and taxes and $640,000 of that expended, there has never been to this day a man bold or reckless enough—and boldness and recklessness have been the characteristics of many of the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite—to say that one dollar of that was improperly taken or misappropriated by an official of this Government. We have therefore absolute honesty in the collection and expenditure of money, so far as we know.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And that is something which ought to be put to the credit of these officials.

Now, while the hon. gentleman has made charges against the officials in that country, for whose conduct the Government may or may not be responsible—that depends altogether on the result of the investigation—he has not dared to make, but has ventured to insinuate, charges against the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). Sir, I have nothing to say with regard to any political charge he may make against the hon. gentleman. He had his answer when the Minister of the Interior made his speech the other night.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And I will venture to say that notwithstanding the interruptions—rather rude in my opinion, and quite unnecessary also—by the junior member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDougall), I venture to say that the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior will be read from one end of Canada to another with satisfaction and delight. I will venture to say that not only his political friends but the political friends of the hon.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

leader of the Opposition himself will acknowledge that under most trying circumstances he has comported himself with an energy and ability beyond all praise. They will acknowledge that, if there has been law and order in the Yukon, if the public laws of Canada have been properly administered, if the royalties have been collected, and the moneys expended, without dishonesty, and if to-day that Yukon district stands in such a position that a single charge cannot be made against its existing administration, whatever may be said as to the past, the credit is due to the Minister of the Interior more than to any other member of the Cabinet. I will say this for my hon. friend (Mr. Sifton), whom hon. gentlemen opposite try to single out as the one man in the Cabinet who had done something wrong in connection with that country. Sir, his colleagues are proud to share with him the entire responsibility for the government of that country. He enjoys the unbounded confidence of every colleague who sits with him at the council board; we believe thoroughly in his honesty and his integrity, ability and power; and it is because he has power, ability and energy that they have learned to fear him.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. But, Sir, my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) did not scruple to insinuate what he dare not charge openly. There is not a man on that side of the House who knows better than he does the constitutional method of making a charge against a member of the Administration. There is no man on that side who should be keener or quicker than he to condemn an attempt to blast the character of a public man by mean and contemptible insinuations. There is no man on that side who, if positions were reversed, would denounce more fiercely any attempt to cast a doubt upon the honesty of a servant of the Crown by contemptible insinuation from men who dare not make a proper charge in a constitutional way. I remember when, years ago, many charges were made across the floor of this House against Ministers of the Crown for malversation in office, and those who made them were compelled by the Speaker of the day, and by the Parliament of the day to formulate their charges in a constitutional way, the only constitutional way known to the law. I will not go into ancient history, I will confine myself to the time when hon. gentlemen opposite were sitting on the Treasury benches. I remember when many of their colleagues were being charged with malversation in office. And what was done? Did members of the Opposition rise in their places and insinuate that these men were guilty of wrong-doing. Did they say they were crossing the ocean in a steamer and conversed with a nameless man who said one of Her Majesty's Government had been guilty of crime, but would not give the name of their informant? Did they say that while walking down the street some American friend had linked arms with them and said some sworn adviser of the Queen had been guilty of fraud and wrong-doing, and yet would not give the names of their informant and would not formulate a charge, that it might be dealt with, and if found to be without foundation the man who made it punished? Sir, what took place when the late Postmaster General (Sir Adolphe Caron) was charged with wrong-doing? An hon. gentleman (Sir James Edgar), now Speaker of this House, rose in his place, and having formulated his charge with the same particularity as that with which an indictment in court is framed, read it on his responsibility as a member of this House, knowing well that if he made reckless and unfounded charges he ran the risk of being expelled from this House. And having taken the responsibility of making these several charges in legal form so that they could be met, he took his place and asked for a committee of investigation. There, Sir, was the manly, honest British way of making a charge—not skulking behind nameless men whom he found in steamers, hotel corridors and in the streets, not skulking behind Yankee papers printed in the Yukon, or Yankee editors who leave the Yukon and come here to give information to hon. gentlemen opposite, but are afraid or ashamed or unable to give that information before the Royal Commissioner who has been appointed. I say that it is one of the most humiliating spectacles this Parliament ever witnessed to see a man standing in the front ranks of the Opposition rising and insinuating crime and malversation in office against a member of Her Majesty's Government, but not having the pluck or courage or even the decency or common honesty to put that charge in formal shape so that it can be dealt with. Decency or honesty, I repeat, Sir,—that is the proper language when want of these qualities is so clearly exhibited. When the charge is formulated, it can be dealt with by the person incriminated before the commission appointed.

Mr. SPROULE. I ask your ruling, Mr. Speaker, whether such expressions as we have heard are in order—want of common decency and honesty; skulking behind American editors and so on. It seems to me that that is not language that should be allowed in debate in this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The point of order having been raised, I have the right to speak to it. I say I have the right, when a charge is insinuated against one of my colleagues of fraud and malversation in office, to demand that that charge should be made in a constitutional and legal and proper way. And if an insinuation is made and the person making it does not dare to formulate it, it augurs want of political decency.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. So far as the word "decency" is concerned, I think it can hardly be held to be out of order; but to speak of dishonesty is going too far.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. When charges of an extremely grave character were preferred against the late Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tarte) who now occupies the position of Minister of Public Works, how was it done? Did he (Mr. Tarte) rise in his place and state that in the city of Quebec he had heard some carman or some Yankee whisper that Sir Hector Langevin had stolen public money or had connived at it? Did he say he had heard on the street this or that tittle-tattle or rumour? He would have been put down with contemptuous laughter if he had tried to do anything of the kind. He formulated his charge in writing, and standing in his place as a member of the House he announced: On my responsibility as a member I desire to make the following charges,—(reading them)—and I ask for a committee of investigation, knowing well that such is the sense of honour prevailing in the Parliament of Canada that if he made these charges recklessly and without any grounds against a Minister of the Crown the House would not scruple to expel him from the ranks of its members.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to a point of order. I claim that it is an abuse of the privilege of a member of this House to speak of a former member of the Government, or a former member of this House, as having been charged with stealing money, or proved to have stolen money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I never said anything of the kind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, those were his words, and no person reading the "Hansard" could entertain a doubt that the charge has been deliberately made that Sir Hector Langevin had stolen public money.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. leader of the Opposition has raised a point of order. But the statement he complains of is denied by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My point is this, that no such charge stands on the records of this House as that Sir Hector Langevin ever stole a dollar of public money in his life, and I say that any person reading the speech of the hon. gentleman would understand that he has made such a charge.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All this simulated indignation of the hon. gentleman is beside the question. The question was: In what manner was the charge made? I am not assuming to say whether it was proved or not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise to a point of order. I insist upon your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I understand the hon. member is speaking to the point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought he was going on with his speech.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am going on with my speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The language the hon. gentleman used is not legitimate on either one side of the House or the other.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think we are bound to accept the disclaimer made by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who denies that he made the statement of which the hon. leader of the Opposition complains.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I say that the late Sir Hector Langevin was charged with conniving at the stealing of public money; but I say that he was not charged with it in any mean, contemptible or roundabout way. The man who made the charge took the responsibility of making it from his place in the House on his own responsibility, and he took the responsibility of proving it before a committee that he asked for.

Mr. BERGERON. He did not prove it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not saying whether he proved it, that is entirely foreign to what we are talking about. We are discussing how charges should be made, whether in a reckless way, as they have been made in this House, without regard for the responsibility of members, without regard to constitutional usage, without regard to the fact whether they destroy or take away a man's character, or whether they should be made in a way that those who make them can be held responsible for them. I have no hesitation in saying that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who sits behind him—no, I will not couple his name with his in that regard, for I do not think he would even make an insinuation; but I say the leader of the Opposition, who is defending the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) to-day, will never dare to put down in writing the charge he insinuated against the Minister of the Interior. I challenge him to do it to-night, I challenge him on his responsibility as a member, to put in writing the charge that he has dared to insinuate. If he is a man and not afraid, and not too cowardly, let him put it down.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BERGERON. Take back the word "cowardly."

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Why, Sir, how long ago is it since very serious charges were made against the late Postmaster General? Every one in this House remembers that the present Mr. Justice Lister, who was then a member of this House, preferred serious charges against the then Postmaster General in connection with the Shields and Manning contract. How did he do it? Did he stand up in the course of a long speech and insinuate that when he was up in Lambton he had heard some corner loafer say something against the Postmaster General in connection with the Manning and Shields contract on section B.? No, Sir, he wrote out his charges seriatim, and, in his place in the House he put them in the form of an indictment, an indictment so specific that they could be denied or proved one way or another, giving the man incriminated a chance to clear his character, and having made his charges, he moved for his committee. What was done in the case of an hon. member who still sits in this House against whom charges were made that he was guilty of a breach of the Independence of Parliament Act? Did somebody go and insinuate that he had sold offices? Not at all. The Opposition came forward and made their charge, formulated it in a proper legal way which could be proved, and after having made these charges in the proper legal way, they asked for a committee. And so they proceeded, not through one, but through ten or twenty different charges that were made against members of the Government and against members supporting the then Government. The charges which were made against members of the Government were legal charges, formulated on the responsibility of the member making them, and were referred to a committee; they were so definite and clear that the committee knew what they had to try, and could bring in a verdict of guilty or not guilty. But these gentlemen have flooded this House and flooded this country with all manner of insinuations based upon hearsay evidence, upon rumours picked up in hotel corridors and elsewhere, endeavouring to do what? Endeavouring to blacken the character of a man more honest than they are themselves. Sir, I think he may congratulate himself upon this, at any rate, that although he has been dealing with millions of money, and dealing with affairs of state of equal importance to any that have ever fell to the hand of a Minister in Canada before, although the air has been thick with insinuations, with tittle-tattle and whispers of wrong-doing, there has not been a man amongst all the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite to me who is prepared to put his name to paper and stand up in the House and take the responsibility of making in the constitutional way, a single charge of wrong-doing. And if they do not do it, they stand convicted before the country to-day of being willing to destroy a man's character if they can do it by insinuations, without having the courage to make the charge direct.

Now, Sir, in relation to these charges made some years ago, I took the precaution this afternoon to look up the statements that were made by these gentlemen when they sat in the Government, and when charges were preferred against their integrity as Ministers of the Crown, charges that were preferred specifically and in writing on the responsibility of members; and I find that they complained in nearly every case that the charges were not sufficiently specific; they said: You must be as specific, and as clear, as an indictment in court; if you are not as specific, and as clear, and as definite as an indictment in court, we will not entertain your charge or give you a committee. In the charges preferred by the present Speaker of the House when he was a member of the Opposition, against a gentleman who was then, I think, Postmaster General, I found the then leader of the House (Sir John Thompson) stating:

It will not do at all to say that some charge is implied, that some charge is put forward which may be capable of one construction, and equally capable of another construction. The House has to see specially, when charges are deliberately framed as these have been, that they bear that plain construction upon their face, and that the member who makes them should not afterwards be in a position to say that he did not intend to make such a charge, but that he intended to charge some personal and private impropriety, or some breach of the election laws upon the member whom he accuses.

And so, you see, the then leader of the House, the then leader of the Conservative party insisted upon the same definiteness in the charge that is required by an indictment in the court. We had another distinguished gentleman, the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) rising in his place and giving his opinion as to the manner in which charges should be preferred against a Minister of the Crown and members of this House. He said:

The Minister of Justice is standing up for the privileges of members on both sides of this House, and all that he claimed this House should insist upon is that when charges are levelled against any member, those undertaking to prefer them and to ask for an investigation, shall show, first of all, that they are charges which render impossible the presence of an hon. gentleman in this House, and that those charges are as clearly and fully particularized as they would be brought before any other tribunal in the country.

No mere hearsay evidence, no rumours that Mr. So-and-so, whose name I will not mention, told me, no tittle-tattle of the steamboats, crossing the Atlantic, or the hotel corridors, but charges specifically and definitely made. He says that the charges should be such as would render the presence in the House of the person charged impossible, and that they should be as clearly and as fully particularised as they would be brought before any other tribunal in the country." He further says:

The position the Government takes is, that the charges should be specific, and be so specific as to afford exact information as to what the object of the mover is, also as to what the exact charges he desires to prefer are; and more than that, it must disclose what this resolution does not disclose, that it is an offence against the laws of the land, or it is an offence that renders unfit the presence of the member attacked in the Parliament of this country.

Let the hon. gentleman take the responsibility of making that charge direct. If he desires to make a charge of public robbery and thieving, let him make the charge, and name the man, and there will be an investigation granted.

I tell the leader of the Opposition here and now, that if he, or any of his friends dare to make any charge against the hon. Minister of the Interior, or any of his colleagues, of robbery or theft or malversation in office, they will have their committee within five minutes. Sir, there will be no amendment here, if the charge is specific and clear. There will be no attempt to avoid investigation or to wrigggle out of it. We will court inquiry. We promised this country clean government and we are prepared to give it. And we are giving it. Mr. Speaker, and these hon. gentlemen opposite, if there is a man amongst them that knows any charge of wrong-doing on the part of a member of this Cabinet, here and now, he is challenged to bring it forward; here and now, he is challenged to put his charge in form and to ask to have an investigation made before a committee of this House. I appeal to the more honourable members of this House; I appeal to hon. gentlemen who have long been in public life, if it is manly, or courageous or honest to recklessly make charges which cannot be formulated, which have no foundation, the evidence in support of which cannot be given, and whether it is right that a man and his family should be subjected to public contumely because an hon. member of this House will insist upon insinuating, that which he dare not charge, and try to make a man out a wrong-doer when he is afraid to put the statement in black and white? Sir, I plead for the honour of our public men, here on this side of the House, as well as of those who may succeed us hereafter, and I ask the House and the country at large if the constitutional usage which has been established in the motherland and invariably followed, until this session, in this country, should be deviated from, and whether public men should be at the mercy of every member of Parliament who, knowing he is not responsible to the courts for his slander spoken inside the walls of this House, makes insinuations which he will not formulate into a charge, and throws, or attempts to throw dishonour upon the man he is attacking. There is honour among public men, or there ought to be, and my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, with his long experience, should never have given the colour of his name to the extraordinary and unwarrantable course he has taken on this occasion against the hon. Minister of the Interior. So far as political charges are concerned, Sir, we court them; we are ready to meet him on any branch of the inquiry he likes to discuss, in regard to the Yukon administration, from beginning to end, but when he insinuates that the hon. Minister of the Interior had an interest in a contract or a concession given to a former partner of his, when he insinuates that for a paltry few thousands of dollars a member of Her Majesty's Government was willing to sell his good name and his reputation for integrity and brand himself as a public thief, when he insinuates that, and does not dare charge it in a constitutional way or put himself in the position of being punished, if he fails to prove it, he is taking a course which no honourable man in this House would take.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another argument which the hon. gentleman advances, and it is a more reasonable argument, one which deserves to be met—that is that the inquiry should have been intrusted to a judge and not a layman. The hon. gentleman comes forward and moves a resolution praying for a judicial inquiry into charges of maladministration or wrong-doing on the part of officers in the Yukon.

Mr. BERGERON. That is practical; now you are getting to the point.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman says, that is practical, but hon. gentlemen are not practical when they insinuate what they have not the courage to charge.

Mr. BERGERON. Will the hon. gentleman allow me one word. We do accuse the Minister of the Interior. It is an accusation, but it is an accusation of bad administration in the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Now, Sir, we are having a repetition of the Drummond County Railway investigation. We had this country ringing for months with charges of wrong-doing against my hon. friend behind me, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and other gentlemen connected with the Administration, but when the Drummond Railway Committee was moved in another branch of the legislature that committee did not sit.

Mr. BERGERON. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. For the reason you were not prepared to go on.

Mr. BERGERON. The session was over.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Parliament was prorogued, Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

but during the recess the country was flooded with this charge; every Conservative newspaper in the Dominion either stated publicly or insinuated, that there had been wrong-doing. The "Drummond steal," it was called; the young people of Canada were taught to believe that my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) had been engaged in some nefarious transaction whereby the public moneys were misappropriated, and that the Government as a whole had conspired to rob the treasury of certain moneys to put in the pocket of Mr. Greenshields. The thousands of times that statement was reiterated, might induce some one to believe that it was true, but, Sir, what was the result? The very first day this House met last session an investigation was demanded.

Mr. BERGERON. By whom?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. By my right hon. friend the Prime Minister.

Mr. BERGERON. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The very first day the House met, my right hon. friend said: We will not allow these charges to go ringing throughout the country without investigation; and a committee of this House was appointed composed of some of the most distinguished men on both sides. They took a large mass of evidence, and it was found that these gentlemen opposite had discovered a mare's nest that the whole transaction was perfectly straightforward and honest, and that there was not a peg on which to hang a charge of wrong-doing. These hon. gentlemen then rose in their places, and said: We never intended to charge you with wrong-doing; we only intended to say it was not a good business transaction. That was the result of five or six months of vituperation and abuse which my hon. friend (Mr. Blair) had to lie under until this House met again and he could get a committee to disprove the charge. And so, I suppose the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is to be charged with wrong-doing on every hustings behind his back, and in every place where they have immunity from punishment, such as in this House. Even in this House, where these gentlemen could be punished under certain circumstances they refuse to prefer a charge in such a manner that punishment could reach them.

The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) complained that we have not granted a proper inquiry, and his friends roll under their tongues that sweet morsel "a judicial inquiry." They think when they have mentioned the word "judicial inquiry," that the whole thing is settled in their favour. Well, Sir, there is a great deal to be said, under given circumstances, in favour of a judicial inquiry in preference to an administrative inquiry; but I submit to hon. gentlemen opposite who still have open minds upon th question, that there are several precedent conditions to the effective working of a judicial inquiry, one of which is, that it should be based upon specific charges and present specific issues. I will go further, and I will say, that if the issue is mixed up with political charges, no judge who values his reputation would accept the position of investigator. Sir, it is not desirable that judges should do so. Many judges with reluctance have undertaken election trials, believing that even to that extent they should not enter into political matters. I would like to ask my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), and my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), or any other lawyer opposite, do they give their adherence to the proposition, that a judicial inquiry with a judge presiding over it is a better tribunal than the one we have constituted, in a case where no specific charge is made and no specific issue is raised. If a judge went there what would he do? Is it reasonable, or right, or meet, that a judge of the high court of this country should be called upon to assume the position of a political detective? Is he to go out to the Yukon and open his court, and say: I am sent here as a judge to try charges of corruption; they are not specific; I do not know what they are, but I am going out on the beat to see if I can gather up in the saloons throughout Dawson City what these charges are, and when I come back I will see if I can formulate them and raise an issue. Is there a judge in Canada who would assume that position? Sir, the thing needs only to be stated to show its absurdity. If you have a specific charge to try, a specific issue joined, and counsel upon both sides, then a judge would be in his element listening to evidence bearing upon the specific issue, ruling out evidence which was irrelevant and deciding afterwards upon the evidence whether the issue was proved or not proved. There you would have an element for judicial inquiry—not evidence which the judge hunted up himself, but evidence that was brought before him. In this case there is no issue joined; it is a general charge that minor officials in the Government employ have been guilty of malversation in office. Now, I do not admit and I do not deny the charge; I do not know whether it is true or whether it is not true. There may have been, and I suppose there was wrongdoing on the part of a number of these minor officials, but I propose not to give judgment upon them until I read the report and the evidence in the investigation which is being held. I hope I will not go so far as some of my hon. friends opposite have done, and condemn men whose characters heretofore have been just as good as theirs, condemn them in advance upon the merest hearsay and tittle-tattle evidence, upon statements alleged to have made by third parties whose names have been withheld. Great heavens! has it come to this that men who have lived to man's estate and conducted themselves, we will say as Mr. Fawcett has, men bearing a good name and reputation, has it come to such a pass that these men are to be suddenly stricken down, not by evidence tendered in open court, not by evidence which they could refute, but by the hearsay statements of some un-named witness. Has it come to that? Will my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) give his adhesion to that?

Let me ask, Sir, what kind of a court have we constituted to conduct this investigation. We have constituted, not an administrative inquiry, as hon. gentlemen opposite have said, but we have appointed under a royal commission—issued under a statute passed many years ago—a man whose experience in the Yukon exceeds I suppose that of any other living man; a man who by common consent has been lauded and praised as one of the most honest officials that ever went into that country; a man about whose honesty and integrity and uprightness there is a consensus of opinion of a most wonderful kind upon both sides of the House. Why, Sir, we heard my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) stated:

I never attacked Mr. Ogilvie in this House, nor has any gentleman on this side of the House attacked him, so far as his honesty and integrity are concerned.

And the hon. gentleman from Victoria (Mr. Prior) has stated with regard to Mr. Ogilvie:

I have yet to hear from any man of any nationality a single word against his honesty, probity and integrity.

Sir, that is the man we have selected; a man who is lauded by all as a model man, upright, honest, full of integrity; we have appointed him, and not a man from the outside and who does not know the conditions of that country or the circumstances of the miners. We have appointed a man who for many years has been accustomed to deal with these miners, a man who lived in the territory for years, and a man who if honesty and probity and integrity and experience are to count for anything, should be the proper man to carry on the investigation. Oh, but you say he lacks legal training. The criticism is fair; and if that lack had not been supplied by the Government, I would have said that the criticism was trenchant. But when we find that a man possessing that experience, that probity, that integrity, and that honesty, has associated with him as his adviser one of the most able legal men who has gone out from Canada to the Yukon, we have, I respectfully submit to this House and to this country, an ideal court of investigation. You have all the honesty, integrity, ability and experience that hon. gentlemen say are essential to the proper conduct of the inquiry, and you have associated with that a gentleman of legal ability and experience to take care that nothing is done except what is legal and proper.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Clement.

Mr. BENNETT. Oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Who says "oh"?

Mr. BENNETT. I say it. Mr. Clement is not one of the leading barristers of Ontario, and never was.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Well, all I know is that I have heard hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House during this debate compliment Mr. Clement very highly. I know he is the author of a text-book on the constitution of Canada which is highly esteemed and is often quoted in the courts of the country, and I have heard him spoken of by Ontario lawyers as holding a very respectable position in the courts of that province.

Mr. CLANCY. Did you ever hear of him holding a brief?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know whether the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) is a lawyer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, if he is not a lawyer, I challenge his qualification to judge of Mr. Clement's legal ability. I think, therefore, he would have better left that to the gentlemen of the long robe. But, Sir, whether Mr. Clement's position is at the top of the bar or not, there is this to be said, that by unanimous consent he occupies a most respectable position as a lawyer. I have not heard a man challenge it on either side of the House; and I repeat what I said before, and what I desire to emphasize with all the weight I can give to it, that with Mr. Ogilvie's qualifications on the one hand, supplemented by the legal experience of Mr. Clement on the other, you have an ideal court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman will permit me, as far as Mr. Clement's book is concerned, it is a very good book indeed; but the hon. gentleman knows as well as any other lawyer in the House, that men who have written very good text-books sometimes have very little experience in courts. I think the hon. gentleman will agree that some men who have written very good text-books have never been in court at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is very cautious, just as I would expect. I have not heard him say or insinuate one word against Mr. Clement's legal ability. I know, as he says, that men who have written able books have never appeared in court at all. I have known very good lawyers who have never been in court, and I have known men who have been in court all their lives.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

and were very great fools after that. Now, this Government has been charged with limiting the power of that court to the 25th day of August. Let us inquire for a moment as to the circumstances under which that court of inquiry was constituted. So far as I know, there never was a whisper of wrong-doing in the Yukon until the miners' complaint reached the Government in the month of October. There may have been, and there doubtless were, many charges made in the political newspapers that things were not as they ought to be; but every hon. gentleman on either side of the House knows what weight politicians attach to the political statements in the newspapers. But I am not aware of any charges of wrong-doing having been made against any official in the Yukon to any member of the Government until that miners' meeting was held on the 25th day of August.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I remind the hon. gentleman that the Minister of the Interior, in his speech stated that before Mr. Ogilvie left, he heard charges against Mr. Wade and Mr. Fawcett, and telegraphed to him giving him a free hand, and expressed a desire that he should get away as quickly as he could. That was in August.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Perfectly right. I do not remember the date, but it was in August, as the hon. gentleman has said. The miners' meeting was held in August; Mr. Ogilvie left about that time; charges were made in some of the newspapers of wrong-doing on the part of some of the officials; and, with that promptness which is always a characteristic of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior, as soon as he saw the charges, he telegraphed to Mr. Ogilvie: "Remember that in dealing with matters in the Yukon, you have a free hand." What was the meaning of that? That when he went up there, if he found that any wrong-doing had been going on, if any of the officials had been usurping powers, or abusing powers, or maltreating those with whom they had to deal, or had been guilty of malversation in office, he had the power to suspend or remove or dismiss them. Does any one challenge the propriety of that telegram? Does my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition say that it was not just the telegram an energetic, active administrator would send? I say it was, and he deserves every credit for it. I was surprised to hear from the opposite side of the House the complaint come time and again that while the Minister of the Interior gave Mr. Ogilvie power to inquire, he did not give him power to issue subpoenas. What nonsense! At that time the Minister of the Interior could not give Mr. Ogilvie the power to issue subpoenas. Mr. Ogilvie went as a political administrator, with power to compel the resignation of or to dismiss any official who had been proved guilty of wrong-doing; but he did not go there with power to inquire into wrong-doing in the sense in which he afterwards received power by the royal commission. But when the charges were formulated and the inquiry began, what took place? The charge brought against the Minister of the Interior, not once but repeated several times by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) was that he lay on his oars for seven months before taking action. I say he did not. The miners' meeting was held on the 25th of August. I will not read the charges; every hon. member has them in his possession, and I deprecate the constant reiteration of some of the statements made by every member almost who addresses the House. The miners' petition was received in Ottawa by the Minister of the Interior on the 3rd day of October; I believe it was received the day before by the Premier in Quebec. How long a time elapsed before the Minister of the Interior took action? Three days. On the 7th of October he caused to be issued the royal commission. Dare any gentleman charge him with negligence or delay in that? Who could or would have acted more promptly? But three days went by after the miners' petition reached Ottawa before the Minister of the Interior called a meeting of the Council and got authority to issue the royal commission, giving plenary powers to Mr. Ogilvie to investigate every charge which up to that time had been preferred in that miners' petition, or of which he had any knowledge. And now, forsooth, it is alleged as a crime against the Government, not only that they gave plenary power to Mr. Ogilvie to inquire into all those charges, but that we did not give him also the power to inquire into all charges in the future. What nonsense! The statute did not provide for that. It did not authorize the issuing of a commission to inquire into the future. If I read it aright, it authorized an inquiry into charges which had been made, and, therefore, Mr. Ogilvie received at the hands of the Queen's representative, under his sign manual, authority to inquire into every charge, without reservation or qualification, which the miners, in their mass meeting had prepared, and which appeared in their petition. Will any hon. gentleman tell me what more could have been done? Greater powers could not have been given. My hon. colleague did not wait for the mail, but sent out the commission by a special messenger, and he was not responsible if that commission did not reach the Yukon until several months later. Not a day was lost, and when it got there, what took place? Who were the officials charged, and who were the officials that were there? Why, we have a most curious state of affairs in this House. At the end of this prolonged debate—prolonged beyond any precedent that I have any recollection of—we find hon. gentlemen rising one after the other and exculpating nearly every leading official in that district. Sir, there is one notable exception, and that is the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) who has reiterated—and I think he is the only man on that side who did it—the charge preferred by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that Major Walsh has been guilty of drunkenness and immorality. The leader of the Opposition repeated the charge made by his son in the early part of this debate, but so far as my memory serves me, there has not been any other man on that side who dares repeat it. He, in fact, is more guilty than his son, because at the time he reiterated that gross and vile charge, he had the statement in black and white from Major Walsh that it was a lie of the first water. On a rumour, which he says, he heard from some man whose name he will not give, he charges Major Walsh with drunkenness and immorality, and tries to fasten the stigma of shame and disgrace upon that man's name and character and upon his wife and children. Is that an honourable thing to do? Is it a creditable thing? Is it a thing of which his followers can feel proud? Although Major Walsh has denied that charge, the hon. gentleman repeats it, and the only authority he can produce is the hearsay evidence of an unknown man whom he met one day on board a steamboat.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must correct my hon. friend. The person I met on board the steamboat made no allusion to the matter at all.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where was the unknown man? Where did the hon. gentleman meet him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said clearly and distinctly that a gentleman, who had brought a letter of introduction from Lord Strathcona, to Major Walsh, and who was the representative of one of the largest banking houses in London, Eng., stated to the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that when he presented his letter to Major Walsh, that gentleman was in a state of great intoxication and virtually turned him out of his office.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This is only hearsay evidence. Was the hon. gentleman present when this statement was made to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper)?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What does the hon. gentleman mean? I said that the hon. member for Pictou, having received a statement of such a character, deemed it his duty to lay it before the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I ask whether the hon. gentleman himself was present when the statement was made, and if not he is only repeating a hearsay statement. He is only telling us that somebody else told him what some other person had told his informant. What is the reputation and character which Major Walsh enjoys? I never saw him, I know of him only as a public man, I know that he served ten years in the Mounted Police, and I know that he won a high character in that service for courage and honesty, resourcefulness and integrity, and gained the encomiums of both political parties in Canada. I know that he retired from that force with the good-will of both political parties, and I know that when he was called upon by the Minister of the Interior and asked as a favour—because he was not an office seeker himself and did not want to be made administrator of the Yukon—to assume that position, he did so with great reluctance, and when he did accept it, his appointment was greeted by the unanimous approval of the people of Canada. It is not necessary for me to read the extracts from the newspapers again, but the press of both parties and the independent press congratulated the Minister of the Interior and the Government upon having secured such an able administrator.

Then we had Mr. Fawcett, the Gold Commissioner, who, to-night, after all the abuse that has been heaped upon him, has been given a certificate of character by the leader of the Opposition as an honest man beyond a doubt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yet, Mr. Fawcett has been dragged through the mud for the past three or four weeks, and his name mentioned with sneers and insinuations, as a man who, although dishonesty might not be proved against him, is responsible for the dishonesty in his department. Now, however, we are told he is an honest man. It looks almost as if hon. gentlemen opposite fear an investigation. It looks as if they feared that the result of the investigation now being held is not far off and are trying to hark back on their tracks and charges.

Then we had Mr. Ogilvie, of whom I have already spoken, and Captain Steele, men admitted by hon. gentlemen opposite to possess the very highest attainments and character, appointed to administer the affairs of the Government in that country; so that the subordinate officials are now the only men charged to have been guilty of taking bribes and other wrong-doing. If that be true, if those who administer the affairs of the Government out there are, one and all, honest and upright, if they are a credit to the men who appointed them, and if it is only the understrappers who have done wrong, the appointment of such an experienced man as Mr. Ogilvie, with a lawyer alongside him to advise him on law points, to investigate into any charge made, is one of the best appointments that could possibly have been made, for it would be a farce to appoint a judge to constitute himself a detective and try and get evidence out there as Mr. Ogilvie is doing. What did Mr. Ogilvie do? He opened his court, and said: I shall not apply the strict rules of evidence, which obtain in the ordinary courts of law, but I invite any man to come forward, who has any evidence whatever to give against any one of these officials, and to give that evidence without fear. He published circulars throughout the whole of the Yukon, he issued subpoenas to compel the attendance of every man whose name was given him as a possible witness, and he added that, under the power conferred upon him by the statute and his royal commission, everybody could give evidence without fear that that evidence would ever be used against him. He quoted the section of the statute providing that no man could be prejudiced because the evidence he gave could never be used against him in court afterwards, and the newspapers which were clamouring for investigation out there published editorial after editorial, imploring the men who said they had evidence to give to come forward and give it to this tribunal. Now is the time, they said. The Government has granted your request; Mr. Ogilvie has come out to investigate; you have the protection of the law and can give your evidence without the fear of its ever afterwards being brought up against you, your evidence will go before the Parliament of Canada and you cannot be prejudiced in any way. Come forward, therefore, and give it. I will not say what the result has been, because I have only gathered that result from the public press, but we have not heard from any hon. gentleman in this House that any very damning evidence has been given. But let me say this: When that report comes down before this House, if there is any body of men in this House who believe that the investigation should be prosecuted further, who think it should be continued so as to embrace charges after the 25th August, who believe that any special charge has been left without thorough investigation, the Government will see that the fullest investigation is given. We are determined that not a stone shall be left unturned to get to the bottom of every charge which has been made against any Government official in that territory.

And if this commission, by reason of any limitation in its power or in the construction put upon it by the lawyers, cannot attain that end, this Government will enlarge the commission and will see that justice is done. There will be no skulking behind any law points, there will be no attempt to evade the investigation on the ground that the commission has not authority. If that commission does not give authority another commission can; and, if there is any witness who will forward to the Government a statement that he can prove a charge of wrong-doing against the officials there which is beyond Mr. Ogilvie's power to investigate, he may rely upon it that an investigation will be held. Sir, what reason under heaven can this Government have to shrink from the amplest and fullest investigation. We do not believe that the young gentlemen who have been sent up there should be condemned as culprits on mere hearsay. We have a sufficient sense of justice to declare that the civil servants deserve at least decent treatment, that they should not be held to be criminals until some evidence is given against them, and that because a man is a civil servant, he is not necessarily a vagrant or a scoundrel. Surely, Sir, the common rule of justice and honour that prevails between man and man in the courts of justice extends to the officials in the Yukon. But we say to these men: Your official position shall not screen you if you have been guilty of wrong-doing; and, so far as the Government is concerned, if we can prove wrong-doing against you, you shall be punished with the utmost rigour of the law.

Now, Sir, it is said that the miners had not counsel. That is not correct. The miners' association, a wealthy, well-to-do association, retained counsel. The counsel went to court. The counsel on behalf of the incriminated officials took numerous objections; Mr. Ogilvie over-ruled the objections. He said: I will not stand on technical evidence. And the evidence went in for what it was worth. A great deal of it, if I may judge from the newspapers, is of such a character that no lawyer would have admitted it; but, perhaps, it is well that we should have all the facts. But the counsel for the miners withdrew. Why? Because Mr. Ogilvie would not investigate under his commission, charges arising out of matters after the 25th of August. Mr. Ogilvie said: I regret deeply that I have not the power to investigate these points, but I will be glad to hear every statement you have to make. If you substantiate it by statutory declarations I will take it, but I cannot administer the oath under the law. But the American press up there, which teemed with reckless charges against these officials for weeks before the investigation, charges which they found themselves unable to prove, were glad to escape from the court under the paltry and miserable excuse that one of their charges, which they had not preferred in their petition, a charge relating to a matter that took place after the 25th of August, could not be investigated under the commission. As they were denied the opportunity to give evidence on this point, they would not go on with their charges.

Sir, as far as I can make out, Mr. Ogilvie has attempted to the best of his ability to probe these charges to the very bottom. He has acted according to the letter and spirit of his instructions. He has brushed aside all technical objections, seeking to get at the truth in order that the truth may be laid before the people of Canada. And

I trust there is enough honour and enough honesty in this House and among the people of this country to cause them to withhold their judgment until the verdict of the commissioner is given.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (YORK, N.B.) I suppose that at this hour of the night, we might very well, after the arduous duties of the week, move the adjournment and leave this Chamber for a day or two with a view of resuming our labours on Monday. But my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) has said so little that I think I may trespass on the patience of the House for half an hour or so, if not to reply to what the hon. gentleman has said at least to point out some things which the hon. gentleman has not said. I expected when my hon. friend arose—he being a leading lawyer, a man of considerable years, one who has had large experience in the courts of law, an able pleader and a member of the Government conversant with all that has been going on since the Yukon administration has been brought in question—I expected that he would really give us some adequate defence on the part of the Government against the many charges and arguments that had been adduced from this side of the House. We have not had an over-plus of speaking from the front benches on the Government side since this debate commenced, and when the House had the pleasure of seeing a gentleman on the front benches rise, it certainly had the right to expect from him something like an adequate presentation of the case. I submit to the House and the country that my hon. friend has made no adequate answer to the statements of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), to say nothing of the statements which have been made by other hon. gentlemen during the week that is almost ended. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) resorted to a very cheap trick. It was easily seen through: it was seen through even by his own supporters. He commenced by trying to depreciate the speech which the hon. leader of the Opposition had just made. Hon. gentlemen who were present knew exactly what was in that speech, and they knew its force. No man present could have looked at that side of the House while the leader of the Opposition was speaking without coming to the conclusion that the few Ministers who did us the honour to remain in the House were deeply impressed by what the hon. gentleman said.

Mr. McMULLEN. Nothing in it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. McMullen) says there was nothing in it. It may be that these hon. gentlemen are impressed by a speech with nothing in it, but I would be more generous in my judgment of them and would say that if they are impressed, it is by something with force and cogency, and certainly the statements of the leader of the Opposition had both force and cogency. So the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries really made nothing by the many minutes he spent in trying to depreciate the speech of the leader of the Opposition. He then adopted another lawyer's device, as I suppose it to be, and one likely to be especially favoured by a lawyer who has a poor case. He undertook to laud the Minister of the Interior for a great many things that had not been in question at all since this debate commenced. First, he gave us a dissertation upon the law and order which have been maintained in the Yukon district since it was opened, and he declared that this law and order were due entirely to the extremely great genius for government and administration of the hon. the Minister of the Interior. Why, Sir, we have had mining districts in this country before the Minister of the Interior was born, we have had mining districts in this country before the Minister of the Interior was a Minister of the Interior. We have had the same wild, untameable men, the men who came from the country of the Stars and Stripes, who all at once have grown so utterly distasteful to the gentlemen upon the front benches; we have had them in this country in hundreds, in thousands, in tens of thousands, and we have never yet drafted an army to look after them; we have never yet had to send immense detachments of Mounted Police to keep them in order. In British Columbia, from the southern border up to the end of the Cariboo country, and extending through to the confines of East Kootenay, this same class of wild, unmanageable Yankee miner, so to be reprobated now by my hon. friend from the tight little island of Prince Edward, so to be looked upon as the synonym of all that is malicious, of all that is inimical to the Canadian flag and to Canadian institutions—we have had these same miners in thousands, and in tens of thousands, scattered over the country during periods when there was just as little facility for easy ingress, just as great opportunity for riots and for disorder; and, Sir, you cannot point in this period of forty or fifty years of the mining history of British Columbia to a time when there has not been good government and law and order amongst the mining community in British Columbia, and in this country through and through. Let any hon. gentleman say where disorder, and riot, and shootings have taken place in all our mining history? Well, what does that mean? It means two things, Sir; it means that my hon. friend did not land to-night, but what one of his colleagues did very much laud, namely, the inherent power in British law and British justice which prevails under the British flag, and which transforms the man who is lawless largely because his neighbour is lawless, and he distrusts the power of the Government to protect him from his neighbour's lawlessness—

it changes a man of that description who comes into the country where he knows that law prevails, and where he will be protected by that law, into a law-abiding citizen. Sir, the history of British Columbia has been thoroughly conclusive on that point, that the lawless American miner, once he comes into this country, becomes a law-abiding citizen. Well, Sir, it proves these two things: First, that British law and justice are respected, and that miners will respect law in a community and in a country where they are fairly treated, and where their rights are fairly observed. That has been the history in Canada, and that is well known to be the result of these two circumstances in Canada.

Well, Sir, in the Yukon district we had no worse men than in other parts of British Columbia. We had miners from the United States, we had miners from every country in the world of exactly the same class as were to be found in every other mining district in British Columbia during the last 40 or 50 years. There was no more danger, well founded in any sense of the word, that in the Yukon country these men would be less observant of law and order and good government than in the other parts of British Columbia, provided they were fairly treated and protected in their rights. So that good order and good government and law amongst the mining community in the Yukon are happily characteristics which have not been absent in this country in all its mining history, and I do not think that my hon. friend can claim that it is the creation of this great genius, the present Minister of the Interior. Now, Sir, as to this clap-trap, if I may be allowed to use that word with reference to my hon. friend.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Order.

Mr. FOSTER. I withdraw that word. It is not a nice word, it is a no more nice word than "tittle-tattle" and all that sort of thing. Neither of them are nice, and I will take that back, for I want to be particularly nice to-night. I say my hon. friend gained nothing. What did he expect to gain? Why, he was laughing himself from his lips inward when he was endeavouring to make that—argument, shall I call it? Not at all, everything the reverse of an argument, attempting to persuade the House and the country that my hon. friend here and hon. gentlemen on this side were inimical to the Canadian flag, and to the Canadian militia of this country being employed, if necessary, to maintain law and order in that country. He stated that my hon. friend was opposed to having the Canadian flag in the Yukon, and the Canadian soldiery under it, because they were distasteful to the Yankees. Well, Sir, there is just one word with reference to that. Everybody knows now, everybody who was not in a panic, knew two years ago, that there was no more necessity of spending a million dollars to send up 300 or 400 militiamen into that country and keep them there, than there was for sending that many men over to the town of Rossland to keep the miners in that district in order. With the large force of Mounted Police that you have in that country, you have a force which is amply sufficient, provided you are minded to treat the miners decently and rightly, to maintain law and order. The very best proof of that is in the actualities as they best occurred, and as found to-day in the order, which I believe has been issued by the Minister of Militia and Defence, that these troops shall be withdrawn from the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No such order has been issued.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend intend to keep them there another year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. That is another question.

Mr. FOSTER. These hon. gentlemen make a great show of frankness, they are wonderfully frank and manly. Now my hon. friend knows that he has come to a conclusion with reference to these troops, and yet he will not answer my question when I ask him if he proposes to withdraw any of that force from the Yukon country, he would not like to give an opponent even the advantage of a frank answer to a question of that kind. Yet, my hon. friend fairly went beside himself in standing up for manliness, for British manliness, and candour, and frankness. Well, Sir, everybody knows to-day, we cannot find an intelligent man in Canada who does not know, that not only is that militia force unnecessary, and that it has been proved to be unnecessary, that it is not necessary to-day, and every sensible man in Canada knows that the vast expenditure of money in that far distant region for keeping those men, is an expenditure drawn out of the taxes of this country which is utterly uncalled for, and which never would have been incurred except by men who became panicky, and thought that they must rush the militia into that country in order to preserve the Canadian flag.

Well, Sir, my hon. friend says that the leader of the Opposition and hon. gentlemen upon this side of the House would like to divert the revenue from the Yukon to the Yankee miners that are there. What ground had that hon. gentleman for a criticism of that kind? He had no ground whatever. My hon. friend has a vivid imagination; he drew very largely upon that vivid imagination, when he had to furnish himself with arguments of that kind. Can we not have opinions differing as to what will probably be the best means of getting revenue from that country? Will my hon. friend undertake to say that the Government is in that country only to get all the revenue they can out of it? He will not, nor will any sensible man on that side of the House. What are you in that country for? You are in that country for one great reason, and that is to develop the latent resources of that country. If you can get revenue out of it legitimately, you have a perfect right to it, and all Canada has a perfect right to ask that you get it; but your primary duty is to develop the latent resources of that country, and the men who will skin all the revenue out of it, and leave all the difficulties in the way of development, and no improvements at all, are not the true friends of the Canadian taxpayers in the east, and are not the true friends of the development of this country. But cannot opinions differ as to how much revenue you shall get from it, and as to how you will probably get the most revenue? My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition raised the question—and it is a proper question for him to ask—whether the gentlemen here have been doing in the Yukon that which might better have been left undone, whether the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite has not been retarding the legitimate development of that country, and whether the collection of a 10 per cent royalty on the gross output has that effect. You cannot take up a newspaper, you cannot read an interview, you cannot talk to a man or a capitalist from that country, but he will tell you that the largest proportion of the properties in that country are undeveloped, and will probably remain undeveloped, until there is a better chance given for the development of low grade mines. Is it for the benefit of Canada or not that there should be a large development of what might be called the less or more low grade properties, or, is it of more benefit to that country and to Canada that there should be an abnormal development of a few of the richest properties, while the others are allowed to lie idle? This should be a fair subject for legitimate discussion, and hon. gentlemen have a right to put that question strongly before the Administration, and ask as to what is the best course to be carried on. I am free to say that, in my humble judgment in this matter, the best course has not been adopted. I am free to say that, when you put a 10 per cent royalty on the gross output of the mine, and take no heed of the tremendous expense of developing that mine, you are levying taxation on the development money. That is what you are doing, and I am going to say that under a régime of that kind, you are keeping out capital which otherwise might come in, and you are retarding the development of the country. Why should we look for great development? It matters very little to the eastern taxpayer, whether A, B and C go into that country and get a million dollars out of it, and put that money into their pocket; but as to whether the workers in that country increase from a consuming population of 10,000 to a consuming population of 100,000 is a question of importance to them. So that it is in the interest of every man in this country that you should have the largest development and the largest profit possible in this country, because when 10,000 miners go into that country, it is a draft upon the labour and production in the east and in the great North-west Territories. That is the point, and it is whether you are getting the most revenue on that line, or whether you are not. I do not believe you are. I believe that 10 per cent is too high, but that a smaller royalty, put, not upon the gross output, but put upon something like the net return from the mines, will cause a larger development and will bring in more abundant revenues. Then, I say that the way things have been carried on in that country is the grossest injustice to the country itself. What is the tale brought out by every man who comes from there? What was the tale brought by the correspondent of the London "Times"? What was the story told by every one? That, so far as the Government is concerned, there has been, comparatively speaking, absolutely no improvements in that country for the benefit of the miners—no sanitary improvements. If there is one indictment that can be brought against the hon. Minister of the Interior and the Government, that is stronger than another, it is this indictment, that is brought by nearly every one of the 20,000 people who have gone into Dawson City. The hon. gentleman knew that Dawson City was the metropolis. They knew the sanitary—no, not the sanitary, but the absolutely unsanitary—conditions of Dawson City and its surroundings they knew to be very bad. But even now they have not moved a hand, or a finger, in order to make sanitary arrangements there in any way adequate to the burning needs of that district. Epidemic is constant; epidemic will be fearful, when this next hot season comes, and the country has waked up and knows that these hon. gentlemen have not made ample provision in that respect. What have they done in the way of building trails for the miners? There is one distinguishing characteristic of every British Columbia Government. It is, that, being the government of a mining country, it looks to the benefit of the individual miner and the collective miners, and, so far as it is possible, large expenditures are being spread all over the country, to make trails and wagon roads for the miners. What has been done by hon. gentlemen opposite in the way of making trails in the Yukon? Nothing. Yet they have skinned the country for useless expenditures for the military, and useless expenditures in a great many other ways, without doing anything to promote the real development of the country. So much in reference to the criticism as to royalties. Is that fair criticism or not? Do hon. gentlemen think that it is a sufficient answer to simply hoot at a man who rises up and criticises the policy on those lines? If they do, I do not think that there are people sitting in any other deliberative assembly who would think so.

What does my hon. friend say? A million and a half of dollars have been collected, and no man has stood up here to lay a charge against any man for stealing any of these dues. Of course, there is not. Is it an answer to the charges that have been made? Surely not. No one charged here that the customs officers had stolen the customs dues. No one charged here that the inland revenue officers had stolen the inland revenue dues. That was not the question in point at all. He might also have gotten up and said a great many other irrelative things. Surely, it is no answer to use a sentence, or a collection of sentences, that have no bearing on the case at all. Then, the hon. gentleman made a great eulogium of the hon. Minister of the Interior. He made a speech; the speech is being read from Vancouver to Cape Breton; it is being read with ecstasy, with peculiar ecstasy, by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson); the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has read it also with a great swelling of heart.

Well, of course it is being read. Naturally the people are anxious to know what the Minister has to say, but the Minister (Mr. Sifton) will have to take another six hours and a half, and he will have to leave out the irrelevant matter, too, before he makes any answer to the charges which have been ringing through this country for the last year and a half with reference to the administration of the Yukon. Ah, but it is all insinuation, says my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies); we did not do things in that way when we were in Opposition; we stood up like little men and we made our charges and we put our names to them. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) has a vivid imagination, but he has something which is not quite as laudable as a vivid imagination. In some particular lines of mental endeavour a vivid imagination is really a very valuable adjunct to a man's intellectual machinery; but my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies), who has this vivid imagination, has a failing which is not to be classed amongst the valuable perquisites of a public man, especially when he faces a deliberative assembly. If that hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) said anything to-night, he said this: That Sir Hector Langevin had been proven to have stolen money or to have connived at the stealing of money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I rise to order, Mr. Speaker. I never made any such statement. I was referring entirely to the charge that had been made against him of stealing or conniving at the stealing of public money. I never said nor intended to say that any such charge had been proven.

Mr. FOSTER. Will my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) say that any one stood up in this House like a little man and charged that Sir Hector had stolen money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will say that men stood up in this House and charged him with the conniving at the stealing of public money.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) has now withdrawn half of what he himself stated not two minutes ago. I will not pursue this any further, for I have got to take the hon. gentleman's word. But I am willing to take the unrevised edition of "Hansard," if he will not visit the "Hansard" room to-night, to settle that question between us two.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You should take my word that I did not intend to say it.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) did not intend to say it, that is better.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I intended to say that the charge was specific, and on the responsibility of a member of the House made in writing, so that it could be met and examined into.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to tell my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) that no one stood up here and on his responsibility as a member charged Sir Hector Langevin with stealing money, or conniving at the stealing of money, which is just as bad.

Mr. McMULLEN. What did you put him out of the Cabinet for?

Mr. FOSTER. After the fullest investigation in which the Government of the day co-operated in giving every facility and imposing no obstacle, the committee could not find from the evidence that Sir Hector Langevin had ever stolen money or connived at the stealing of money. Now, Sir, I make that statement on my responsibility as a member of this House. Let us have done with this tittle-tattle; let us have done with these miserable insinuations, says my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies). But cannot the hon. gentleman apply a little of that advice to himself. He sits there convicted this blessed moment of having stated on his feet, with reference to so important a matter as the stealing of money or the conniving at the stealing of money, he sits there convicted of having stated over and over, as a fact, a thing which never occurred in this House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It did occur.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Let my hon. friend prove it.

Mr. FOSTER. I did prove it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is in the "Hansard"; made by Mr. Tarte.

Mr. FOSTER. I tell the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) that Sir Hector Langevin's name was never mentioned in such a connection.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The McGreevy case.

Mr. FOSTER. Sir Hector Langevin's name was not mentioned. But if my hon. friend wants to know what the ultimate result was—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not want to know about the result; we were talking about the charges that were made.

Mr. FOSTER. If he does not want to know what the result was then I need not further speak of these insinuations, and this inadequate information, and this mere political tittle-tattle which my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) has indulged in to-night—of course, with the true Grit characteristic of having roundly denounced it before he undertook to practice it himself. But my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is not skulking behind the Yankees. The Yankees! Why, according to the hon. gentleman now, you should not use them even for a refuge against the winds, or for a barricade against the storms. These wicked Yankees are not to be trusted in any way now. Oh, how the tune is changed. "Not by my statement, but by a decree of the Almighty," said the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), "I will tell the people of Canada that the United States market is absolutely necessary to the prosperity of this country." And the right hon. the Premier stood up in this House, and he played the friend of these terrible Yankees of today to such an extent that the "Globe" newspaper called him down. That was on the question of the Atlantic fisheries and the enforcement of the fishery laws. But now, none so poor amongst the front benches of the Government as to do the poor Yankee any reverence at all.

Will my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) open his ear for a moment to something which is a little bit reasonable. Was there anything else carried out in the investigations of a few years ago, except the charges with reference to the post office and the charges with reference to the Public Works Department, as affecting the two Ministers. Everybody knows there was. Everybody knows that the civil service, and the departments on this hill were gone through with from one end to the other. Who stood up and made charges and penned their names to them in the formal constitutional way. Not a man of them; nor were they asked to. The very moment that these gentlemen in Opposition breathed it, that civil servants were taking double pay—even so venial a thing as that—that civil servants were not performing their duties, that civil servants were taking small bribes; the very moment they breathed that, the Conservative Government gave them carte blanche to ransack the departments from one end to the other, and they did it. And when they found out that some poor civil servants had, through lax management or a wrong opinion of the deputy head or something like that, worked overtime and got paid for that in addition to their salary, they claimed that the wonderful Augean stables had been made fresh and pure. That was right here and could easily be done. What to-day is the question in the great Yukon district, three or four thousand miles away from here, where we cannot be cognizant of everything, where we cannot touch everybody by the hand and know just exactly where he is and what is being done. If the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is implicated as the head of the department, civil servants are implicated also in these charges. Why should the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) wish that formal charges should be made out and that we should risk our parliamentary positions as he says we ought to, in endeavouring to help the Government to maintain the good name of the civil servants in the Yukon district, which has been aspersed, according to their statement of the case; which has been impugned according to the most virulent statement of the case you can get. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) must not ask that a different rule should be applied in this case from what was applied before. But my hon. friend ridicules the idea of making a judge or a set of judges the investigators in what is merely political. If you have a thing which has legal aspects to it, and constitutional aspects to it, and criminal aspects to it—I could not tell exactly what he was driving at to make out the difference—then you could appoint judges and have a judicial inquiry. My hon. friend knows that judges are appointed for political inquiries. In the history of this Parliament there is an instance of it. At one time Judge Clark, one of the keenest and ablest judges of his time, was appointed as a commissioner to investigate thoroughly certain charges made in the newspapers with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was building at that time. In Great Britain, to which country our hon. friends on the other side have turned with that zeal which marks a late penitent, and one who has so many sins to answer for—even in that country one of the most celebrated trials of later times was a trial on political lines entirely—the celebrated Parnell commission. Who were on that—laymen? No, but the highest judges of the land. Sir James Hannen was the chairman of it; Mr. Justice Smith and Mr. Justice Day were members of it; and the most celebrated counsel of Great Britain were there on one side or the other. And yet my hon. friend would try to lead us to believe that it was a lache against all constitutional methods that a judicial inquiry should be asked for. But he says, we will court the fullest inquiry. It is an odd way of courting the fullest inquiry, the way these hon. gentlemen have been trying to burk an independent inquiry. Not only that, but they have been condemning themselves—first, by saying we are read out of all decent politics, because we assume that there may be wrong-doing where we know not. These hon. gentlemen, with these words warm from their lips, rise in their places and become the absolute defenders of men 3,000 miles away, whose circumstances, conditions and actions they cannot possibly know. Inconsistency?—why, another word for inconsistency is a member of the Administration opposite—a concrete form of inconsistency. All you have to do is to mention the Administration or any single member of it, and you have the grossest concretion of inconsistency in political or public life that has ever been known in this country, and possibly in any other. Ah, but on tittle-tattle, on hearsay, we never would expect decent public men to investigate anything. Have they forgotten themselves? The hon. gentleman, with that short memory which is his special infliction—I will not call it by any harsher name—went on immediately to give an instance where the right hon. leader of the Government, on mere tittle-tattle of the newspapers, came down and proposed a committee to investigate the tittle-tattle on the Drummond County deal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. I said a committee of the Senate had been constituted by that honourable body on evidence they deemed sufficient for an investigation of the matter, but, for reasons of their own, they had delayed the investigation, leading the country to believe that there was something in it, but declining to investigate. But the moment this House met, the leader of the Government insisted that it should be investigated.

Mr. FOSTER. And my hon. friend gave the reason why the leader of the Government insisted. I took it down, and the unrevised "Hansard" will show it to-morrow. Why did the leader of the Government move for this committee? Because the hon. gentleman said he would not allow those reports to go ringing around the country. Tittle-tattle—ringing around the country! And my hon. friend was so sensitive about it that in the very first days of the session he rushed in and appointed a committee of this House to investigate what no member of this House had ever charged, but what was simply ringing around the country. Wonderfully spry, then, when the present Minister of the Interior, before he was a member of this Government at all, wanted to go on a fishing expedition in Manitoba, and had not the funds, or if he had them himself would not use them, and poached—yes, that is the word poached upon the consolidated fund of the Dominion of Canada for money to carry on and pay his fishers in their fishing expedition. Wonderfully spry, then, in behalf of these cases. Why, so spry? Because they wished a party advantage for themselves. The good of the country was the last thing which I believe entered into these hon. gentlemen's minds, in either of these cases; but the Minister of the Interior, that celebrated genius who has created law and order and good government in Canada, just as the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government made Canada a nation—this hon. gentleman, who has been the head of the administration of the Yukon, is not now so spry, when the amount of newspaper criticism and tittle-tattle which has for the last year and a half or two years been going about through this country and through every continent of the world, has been ten thousand times more than was going around in the case of the fishing expedition in Manitoba or the Drummond County deal in this part of the Dominion. Then, my hon. friend says, we are determined—to do what? To get at the bottom of this thing; and if the commission is not good enough, we will make it better, and if the time is not sufficiently extended, in our own good time we will extend it. We are bound to get at the bottom of it. And how are they trying to get at the bottom of it? By trying to burk an inquiry which alone can settle the matter in this country and in other countries. Why, my hon. friends have given their whole case away. Something happened in this country. What was it? Certain tales came from the northern land of gold. They filtered down with returning miners, and through letters which came from that country. They got into the public press. They were talked about by the citizens of Canada; and before a single man on this side of the House mentioned them, they had percolated so far, they had spread so widely that on that kind of tittle-tattle and hearsay my hon. friends opposite had appointed a commission to try the cases and to investigate the tittle-tattle. Why have you any commission up there at all? You have no business to have it, taking the ground that you have taken in your argument. Do you not see, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentlemen have cut all the ground from under their feet? They have had nothing but hearsay and tittle-tattle, general rumour and report, and, behold, they appointed a commission of inquiry, what they call a Royal commission. Why do we ask for a judicial commission of inquiry? What is the difference between the two? The hon. gentlemen have acknowledged that something ought to be done. They have acknowledged it by taking partial action. Am I right or wrong? They go out on the public platform and say to the people: These men are talking nonsense; we are investigating that, and we are bound to get at the bottom of it; we have a royal commission up there to get at the bottom of it now. On what? Tittle-tattle, general hearsay? And yet you come down here and declare that no man on this side has given you a statement which you can take cognizance of, and, therefore, you cannot appoint a judicial inquiry. Both of us know in our hearts and believe—and if we do not, the country believes and feels in its heart—that enough has come to light of possible wrong-doing in that country to make some kind of investigation necessary. The only difference between us is simply as to what the investigation should be, and whether the present one is adequate. I contend it is not. Why, more than the Minister of the Interior is involved. To say the least, the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is involved to this extent, that he is the responsible head of the department whose administration is questioned. My hon. friend will not dissent from that. You cannot disjoin him from his administration. He is responsible for his administration of public affairs. Therefore, to say the least, he is responsible that far. His administrative capacity is involved. My hon. friend has been good enough to say that the rest of the Cabinet stand by the Minister. Well, I suppose we are not heretics on that point. That must be so in the present aspect of the case. They must stand by him, and so the Government is involved as well. The public is interested in the matter, because every Canadian wishes that his country shall have a name for honesty and honour, and it is the pride of every good Canadian that his Government should be honest and the officials as well. That is a pardonable pride that we all have, or that we ought to have at least. The Parliament of Canada, as regards good government, is interested, but the good name of Canada is concerned from one end of the world to the other, round and round it. You cannot recall what has gone forth. You cannot minimise the gravity of the position in which the administration of the Yukon stands co-relative to the governmental administration of this country and our good name. You cannot separate those, and you cannot ignore the impressions that have been made the wide world over. Now, the simplest statement by my hon. friend here brings the whole matter to its legitimate conclusion. Will it satisfy the conditions? Ought it to satisfy the Minister of the Interior, that a subordinate of his own, dependent upon him for his monthly salary, should be the sole investigator of his Minister's own administration, and does the Minister think that that will clear him? Does he think it will clear his Government and his administration and the name of Canada the wide world over? Why, he knows that, at the best, all that he can get to believe in that would be the members of his own party. He cannot get even them. The hon. gentleman can get his followers behind him, like the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), who in his speech last night justified everything, although he must have known very little about many things, as we all do, that have occurred in that far-off part of our jurisdiction—he may get such men to be satisfied, he may get the partisans of his party in this country to be satisfied. You may by your arguments convince these that you have done everything that is necessary, but every man sitting on that side knows that there is a sound and strong sense of justice in this country which is not confined to either party. Every one of these men will meet men of their own stripe of political thinking who will say: It is not conclusive, when Mr. Sifton's hired man gives his report on his master? But, Sir, will the people outside of Canada be satisfied? When you go to the great public opinion of Great Britain, which is more or less saturated in certain strata with the idea that things have not been right in the Yukon, and saturated on the very best authority—that of the London "Times," and of that special and most able correspondent of the "Times," who perhaps, as much as the correspondent of any newspaper in London, has the ear and the confidence of the people of the broad world, around and around, over which she has travelled and where she is known—do you suppose that that discerning public, looking as to whether the good name of Canada is going to be cleared or not, will think it is cleared when Mr. Sifton's hired man makes a report on his master to whom he owes his monthly salary. Do you suppose it will be? I say it will not. We on this side contend it will not. What are the hon. gentlemen afraid of? My hon. friend who has just spoken (Sir Louis Davies) has said that Mr. Ogilvie is a particularly honest man. Will he rise and say that they could not appoint a judge who would be equally as honest as Mr. Ogilvie? What gain do you get then? If Mr. Ogilvie were the only honest man, and if there were no judge who is an honest man, my hon. friend would have an argument, but he dared not say and cannot say that it is not possible for the Government to get just as honest a man as Mr. Ogilvie. Then if you admit that, do you not think that honesty plus the legal training and that sense which comes from long association with the administration of legal work, do you not think that the addition of that legal training to honesty equal to that of Mr. Ogilvie, would give you a better investigating authority? My hon. friend shakes his head. That is he would rather have one of two necessary, and absolutely good characteristics, than have the two of them. Does he distrust the legal ability, the legal side of life? Surely not. The hon. gentleman himself is a lawyer, but whether he shakes his head or not, I venture to say you could not put that proposition to any level-headed man in this country who would not say this: If you really want to probe into that matter, get honesty plus the accumulated skill and experience which makes a man know when he has proper witnesses before him and gives him the strength to hold his own against opposing counsel when trying a case. What are hon. gentlemen afraid of in this matter? Why are they afraid to have a judicial inquiry? Does not my hon. friend know that he could not administer a greater knock-down blow to the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), that he could not administer, from a party point of view, a more effective blow to the party which sits on this side, than by simply getting that highest kind of judicial inquiry and proving that there is not a word of truth in the charges. What then, from a party point of view, does my hon. friend fear if his cause is just. But I will tell you what aspect this will have to the country. It will have the aspect of men who are afraid to make a thorough investigation. It will present the aspect to the country of men who wish to shield themselves. Now, the truth is greater than any man, and it is more important that a true solution of the matter should be reached—and you can only have it by the highest kind of judicial inquiry—than that the Minister of the Interior should retain a seat he ought not to retain, provided he is proved to be incapable or anything worse. It is of much greater importance that the good name of Canada and the good government of this country should be established, than that any one man should hold office at a few thousand a year, for no one man is necessary to the continuance of Government in this country. What, then, I ask again, is my hon. friend afraid of? I am not going to pursue this any farther; it has been put before these hon. gentlemen squarely, and up to this moment they have not given any reasons why they should take a hired man, rather than a judge of the country, for this service. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) suggested, as if it were a great point, that Mr. Ogilvie sits up there and sends out posters and invites everybody to come in with charges. Now, let us set aside all partyism for the moment—

Mr. FLINT. Oh, oh.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) laughs an incredulous laugh. I do not wonder. I quite understand his failing in that respect.

THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You have no failings.

Mr. FOSTER. Lots of them. I have my moments of weakness, and my perpetual weakness. I will appeal to my hon. friend who spoke last night. Let us ask this one question: Is not the inquiry into a matter which has transpired in the Yukon, 3,000 miles away, in a country that is visited by men from every climate in the world, the report of which goes out to every part of the world, very different from an inquiry into the laches of civil servants here at the seat of Government, and in the face of the full public opinion of the country? My hon. friend knows it is. What does that imply? It implies that special means should be taken to investigate any charges of wrong-doing in the Yukon administration and district, simply because of the difficulties and distance, and other special circumstances of the case. Why, then, do hon. gentlemen opposite, by their resolution, declare against a judicial inquiry into these matters? That is a question that they will need to answer before the public. And I am here to say this—notwithstanding all the fervid appeals made to catch a few persons here or in the country, by my hon. friend, we must face this question of an executive head vested with power such as Major Walsh was vested with, representing the dignity and honour of this country in that district. Now, when it comes to a question whether that gentleman's tender feelings, or those of his relatives or family, shall be considered, or whether the truth shall be looked into, the personal consideration must utterly sink, and the duty of the Government and of Parliament is to see that the conduct of the man who represented the dignity, and honour, and majesty of the country, is investigated thoroughly, and that the truth is brought out. These fervid appeals to catch the sympathy of the unthinking, ought never, and, in my opinion, never will in this country prevent an investigation into official mis-doing. When these charges, when these statements, accumulating now for years, multiplied over and over again in such mass that conviction forces itself upon a large number of minds in this country, that the administration was bad, and when such an opinion multiplies, it becomes the bounden duty of this Government to make known the truth; and the Government, or any members of it, are not the friends of the officers and certainly not the friends of good government in the country, if they refuse the fullest and freest inquiry.

Your hands are not tied. We do not ask what judge should be appointed. We do not lay down any conditions. We simply ask for a tribunal above reproach, and non-partisan, not depending for its daily food upon the whim of an imperious Minister to say the least—and that he is imperious I call the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) to witness, that he is imperious, relentless; I call—shall I say, the unpurchased?—the undriven members of the Liberal Club in the city of Winnipeg, not those who were drafted in in such large numbers the other night; that he is imperious, insistent and relentless. I think you can gather that if you travel about in our western country. I say that it is better that this matter should be looked into and thoroughly examined even though it may not suit the will or the interest of even this genius—according to my hon. friend's statement—or this, as I should call him, moderately able and certainly very persistent Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT—THE UNITED STATES AND CANADIAN LUMBER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I desire to ask the leader of the House if he is able to give us any information as to the truth of a statement contained in the Toronto "Globe" to the effect that the Government of the United States have published a decree forbidding the importation of Canadian lumber into the United States?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). No efforts of mine have been able to verify that statement. So far it has not been confirmed, and I must say I cannot believe it.

ADJOURNMENT—LIQUOR IN THE YUKON.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the House adjourns, if I am in order, I would like to ask the Government what truth there is in a despatch printed in the Montreal "Witness," which reads as follows:—

Ottawa, April 14.—It was learned at the Interior Department to-day that all importations of liquor into Yukon had been stopped. No more intoxicants will be allowed to enter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The information I have to give to the House is that we have disallowed certain ordinances of the Yukon Council with regard to the liquor traffic.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that apply as well to the permits issued by the North-west Council?

The PRIME MINISTER. The North-west Council has no authority there now since the last Act, passed last session.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 17th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PETITION OUT OF ORDER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The petition of the Municipal Council of the county of Lanark, praying that additional pay to the amount of 25 cents per day be granted to non-commissioned officers and men during the time of the annual drill, involves the expenditure of public money, and cannot be received.

IMPERIAL TAX ON COLONIAL SECURITIES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I ask leave to draw the attention of my right hon. friend leading the Government to a matter that strikes me as of some importance. I see in the report of the Budget speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer a statement that he proposes to have new stamp duties of five shillings per hundred pounds sterling on foreign and colonial bonds, stocks and shares not now liable to duty. The tax will be payable on the first occasion the securities are negotiated in Great Britain. This matter came up on a former occasion, while Mr. Goschen was Chancellor of the Exchequer. When I took up the London "Times" one morning I found a proposal to increase the tax on colonial bonds from two shillings and six pence per cent to ten shillings per cent. I waited upon Mr. Goschen, with my colleagues from the other colonies, and we made so strong a remonstrance that he brought in an amendment which exempted the colonies from the imposition of the duty. At that time the colonial securities were taxed under a law which levied a tax on foreign securities, and "foreign" was held to include colonial. Mr. Goschen brought in an amendment declaring that the term "foreign" should not include colonial, and so we were exempt. If my right hon. friend will refer to the papers in possession of the Government he will see a communication on the subject stating all the facts. I think it would be well to lay these papers on the Table and also to draw Lord Strathcona's attention to the importance of dealing with this matter as it was dealt with before. Mr. Colmer, the Secretary of the department, is familiar with the whole subject.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My attention has been drawn to the speech of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and, in connection with that, I have had brought before me the very papers to which my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) refers, setting forth the action taken by himself, when High Commissioner, and other commissioners of the different British colonies on that occasion. I shall be happy to lay these papers on the Table and shall give orders to that effect. I have been expecting, from day to day, to hear from Lord Strathcona on this subject. I have no doubt, and I am sure my hon. friend has no doubt, that Lord Strathcona will look after it very diligently.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But it would be better to draw his attention by cable to this point.

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps so.

DEADMAN'S ISLAND.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I ask permission to draw the attention of the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) to a question I asked a few days ago, when he was not in his place, as to a paragraph in the newspapers which stated that the lease for Deadman's Island had been handed back to him by Mr. Judgate, who stated that he did not want to take the lease, as it was against the wishes of the people of Vancouver.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I understood the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) to refer to the newspaper report to the effect that the lease had been returned to me. That is not true. The lease was never returned.

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bell (East Prince), for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his Speech at the opening of the session; the motion of Mr. Clarke in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. Bertram in amendment to the same.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). In rising to resume the debate on the question before the House, I shall hardly make the mistake, Mr. Speaker, of expecting to be able to contribute much that is new to the discussion.

When we remember that Parliament has now been in session for over a month, that at every sitting our time has been taken up in the discussion on the Address, and that the question of the administration of Yukon affairs, which at this moment is the particular matter before us, has been throughout the whole discussion the foremost subject of consideration, it is easy to understand that the whole question has been thoroughly threshed out, and it is almost an impossibility for anybody at this late stage to contribute anything new to the discussion. Nevertheless, as hon. gentlemen opposite, in the exercise of their undoubted rights, have desired to have a protracted debate on the subject, inasmuch as they seem to think that some good purpose will be served by having the facts of the case, and many things which are not the facts of the case, cited over and over and over again, I suppose it is quite proper that occasionally some member from this side of the House should intervene and point out how completely every charge that has been made against the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), has been fully met, and how completely the administration of his department has been vindicated by the debate that has taken place. I remember, Sir, when an alderman in one of our towns many years ago, in the midst of a protracted and purposeless debate, rose and made a motion that the council should now quit nonsense and proceed to business. My aldermanic friend obtained much more than local fame by that motion. If he were still in the flesh and permitted to be a member of the Parliament of Canada, I am sure that many a day during the past fortnight he would have been disposed to rise and make his motion. I think the country is pretty well tired of the discussion of Yukon affairs. I think the House is pretty well tired of it. One evidence of this is that during some days past, even when distinguished gentlemen on the opposite side of the House were addressing the Chair, the attendance of members was exceedingly small, and we cannot expect that from this time forward the debate will attract very much attention. Still, as I said before, we may be obliged occasionally, from this side, to present our view of it, if it is only to remind the public how completely the attack of the Opposition has failed.

If we would fairly consider this Yukon matter, we must look at it, not exactly in the light of to-day, but in the light of events as they presented themselves up to less than two years ago. It is easy at the present day for hon. gentlemen to tell us, in the light of the experience of the past year or two, what ought to have been done in the year 1897; but if we would judge the administration of the Yukon district fairly, we shall have to look back to the condition of affairs in 1897, and see how far, if at all, the hon. the Minister of the Interior failed in his duty. Down to the summer of 1897, but little was known of the gold fields of the Yukon district. That there was gold there was, of course, known as a scientific fact, the reports of our departments contained evidence of that. A few miners had been carrying on operations in the district, a small body of Mounted Police was occupying the district; but practically speaking, in the eyes of the world, the Yukon district was unknown. It was only when steamers came down the river in the summer of 1897 and brought out reports of large discoveries of gold, that the world began to take a wide interest in Yukon affairs, and during the remainder of the summer and fall, and in the winter that followed, there was throughout the world an awakening of interest, and a manifestation of an intention on the part of a large number of people to go into the Yukon district. Now, under these conditions, what could any Minister charged with the administration of that district do? What could he do but call upon capable men, men of good character, of good abilities, of good repute, to assist him in the administration, and to send them into that district? That is all that hon. gentlemen opposite could have done if they had occupied the seats on this side of the House; that is all that my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior could be expected to do, and that was precisely what he did do. He organized a party to go into that district, he accompanied them a part of the way himself, and went as far as he could go with safety, without being absent from his duties too long. Now, if it can be shown that he did employ capable, reputable men, men fitted for that work, I want to submit to the House that, no matter what happened after that, the Minister of the Interior is not responsible and is not to be blamed. True, Sir, if any man appointed by him proved faithless to his trust, that is a subject for deep regret, it is a subject on which any Minister should feel keenly; but if at the time of the appointments he selected men of good repute, gave them the necessary authority, gave them the necessary instructions, gave them the necessary resources to carry on the administration of that district, then I say that is all that could have been expected of him, and that is all that the public have any right to hold him accountable for.

There was another difficulty in the matter. There was a circumstance which added very much to the difficulties of the administration of that district, and that was in relation to the question of the ownership of the country. It is said that there was no danger of any disorder in that country, that there was always a certainty of law and order. It is easy to say that to-day, Mr. Speaker, but if you go back to the American newspapers of 1897, you will find the idea was advanced in many of them that the Klondike region belonged to the United States, that the American miners who were going in there were going in to occupy American territory, and that if any one attempted to interfere with them, their rights as American settlers would be asserted. That was the common cry in American newspapers, and hence there was great reason to fear that difficulties might arise in consequence of misunderstandings as to the flag that should properly float over that country. A due regard to all these things will satisfy any fair-minded observer that the Minister of the Interior, when he was charged with the administration of that country, did all that could reasonably be expected of him.

Now, until very recently, we have had charges flung very carelessly about the House regarding the character and the qualifications of these men. I submit to the House that if all that was said by the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) regarding these officials was true, he still would have no justification for the shocking speech which he delivered in this House, inasmuch as he went beyond the bounds of fair discussion, inasmuch as it was not confined to the official acts of men, but dragged in their personal and private affairs to a degree which, I venture to say, never before occurred in the history of the Parliament of Canada. So I say that no matter how much truth there might be, even if there were a thousand times more truth than I believe there is in those charges, I would still claim that the hon. member for Pictou was not justified in taking the course he did. I want to call attention to the fact that the gravest charge that was made against these men was the charge against Major Walsh; and I also want to call attention to the fact that there are only two members in this House who have endeavoured to uphold that charge: those two members are father and son, the leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Pictou. Now, Sir, I wish to point out something in a speech of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), who followed the hon. member for Pictou, and who seems to have been the assignee of all this stock of, shall I call them, bits of newspaper clippings and irresponsible assertions generally, of which the hon. member for Pictou seemed to have such a large quantity, which he unloaded upon my hon. friend the member for Halifax. I am glad to observe that, while the hon. member for Halifax was quite willing to attempt to put the wares on the market, he was not prepared to guarantee their strength or purity, and so his speech will be found to be exceedingly moderate, in comparison with that of the hon. member for Pictou. The hon. member for Halifax gave a summary in one part of his speech of the charges against officials; but if hon. members will turn to that summary, they will find that, not under any one of the heads which he lays down, can be found this charge against Major Walsh. Though the hon. member for Pictou made that wild and reckless charge against Major Walsh, his colleagues who sit around him became ashamed of it, and were afraid to prosecute it further. So it remained unnoticed almost, so far as hon. gentlemen sitting around him who continued the discussion were concerned. The charge was virtually abandoned on the other side of the House. They did not dare to take it down to Brockville, the place of all others where they might have been expected to make use of it. When we remember how it was represented before the House and the country, we would have thought that the hon. gentleman would have taken that charge into Brockville, the home of Major Walsh, and repeated it in the presence of his fellow citizens, but we found the hon. gentleman who was expected to explain all these things in Brockville, going away without saying anything about them. Honourable gentlemen in the House, in continuing this debate, have practically abandoned the charges against Major Walsh. They have become ashamed of them and desire to be rid of them. The hon. leader of the Opposition, in his speech on Friday night, seemed to think that it was necessary for him to come to the defence of the hon. member for Pictou, and revive the story about Major Walsh. I find, on page 1,595 of the "Hansard," the leader of the Opposition made a declaration, as follows:—

So far as Major Walsh is concerned, I have no hesitation at all in saying that I listened with the greatest regret to the necessity that existed—and that necessity did exist—and was used by the senior member for Pictou, for bringing that gentleman's private conduct before this House. What are the facts, Sir? Is there any man of intelligence, in this House or outside of it—any man who honours public character and public consistency, and the proper and efficient discharge of public duty—who will say, that if a man holding a high position, the executive of the Government of the country in a great district, forgets himself and disgraces that position, it is not the duty of every man who wants to see public officials conduct themselves in a manner to entitle themselves to the respect of the country, to bring his conduct under the notice of this House?

I question whether the rule laid down by the hon. leader of the Opposition in that way, can be maintained, except under the most extraordinary circumstances, such as have not arisen in this case. If hon. gentlemen opposite would like to see how that rule would work out, let them think for a moment what might happen, if any hon. gentleman on this side of the House should adopt the same rule, should turn the searchlight upon the private characters of officials, great and small, appointed by the members of the Conservative party. Let us suppose that you invade the private life of the larger officials—the judges, the governors, aye, and that the searchlight were turned into the Conservative party's Privy Council Chamber, as we would be justified, under the rule laid down, in dragging out the private life of any member. It has been the practice in public life, and wisely so, to draw a distinction between the public and private character, though far be it from me to say that a man's private character is of no concern in reference to his public life; but it is always dangerous to drag into public discussion the private affairs of any man, and I venture to say, that hon. gentlemen have only to reflect upon the matter to see that the rule laid down by the hon. leader of the Opposition might lead to dangerous conclusions. I say, that if we had been disposed, on our side of the House, to invade the private life of hon. gentlemen opposite, or of the officials they have appointed, I have no doubt we might have been able to make a sensational paragraph for the newspapers. I have not doubt that from ocean to ocean you could have telegrams circulated about this remarkable story told in the House of Commons, but homes would be disgraced, hearts broken, and wives, and mothers, and daughters would hold their heads in shame. Thank Heaven, the Liberal party does not descend to warfare of that character. We are content to leave that kind of warfare to the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Pictou. The hon. gentleman's excuse for attacking Major Walsh, and for the attack made upon him by his son, was, that Major Walsh was the executive of the Government in the Yukon territory. A moment's thought will show how unjustifiable is the position taken by the hon. gentleman. Major Walsh is not the executive of the Canadian Government in that country; Major Walsh is not in the service of Canada at all; Major Walsh has not been in the service of Canada for many months. He went to that district under a temporary engagement with the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton); he agreed to remain about a year, and he came back. If his administration was not, in all respects, a success, he is no longer in office; he is no longer in the service of the Government, and the excuse which might possibly be offered, though I doubt it, for an attack upon the floor of this House upon a man who is a public servant, holding a responsible position in the name of the Government of this country, cannot be offered for making a violent attack upon the private life and private character of a gentleman many months after this gentleman has ceased to be an officer of the Government of Canada. Now, Sir, who was Major Walsh? I will not follow the example of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and quote at length. He gave us many extracts as to the character and position of Major Walsh. I shall be very brief; but I shall have to repeat one or two, which perhaps are necessary as reminders of who this gentleman was. I find, in the "Mail and Empire" of the 10th August, 1897, the following:—

If Major Walsh of Brockville should be appointed administrator, as it is rumoured he will be, we may be assured that that capable and experienced officer will show himself the right man for the position.

Again, the Ottawa "Citizen" on the 1st September, 1897, said:

American papers are full of the praises of Mr. Ogilvie, the Dominion surveyor in the Yukon district, and of Major Walsh, who is to administer the country. These men are signal examples of a devotion to duty such as Nelson would have admired, and the English people have always been proud of, but they are not exceptional. We have many such men in Canada.

Major Walsh had a reputation that was continental, almost world-wide. He had rendered gallant service to the country; he had been appointed to the Mounted Police by the late Conservative Government. His name was a household word in the western country, and the Conservative organs did him simple justice, when they told us that the appointment of such a man to the administration of the Yukon gave assurance of a vigorous and successful administration. Well, if that was the character of Major Walsh at the time of his appointment, what ground could there be for accusing the hon. Minister of the Interior, even if Major Walsh had afterwards gone astray and turned out to be a different man? I do not say that with the view of admitting any of these things against Major Walsh; I never had the pleasure of meeting him, but what I have heard from those who know him well leads me to believe that the charges are unfounded, and should not have been made by a member of this House. From what I have been told by those who know Major Walsh well, much better than I do, because I have never had the pleasure of knowing him at all, I am in a position to say, that the attack which the hon. member for Pictou made upon him has not received the approval of the hon. members who sit around him, and to say, further, that it has not received the approval of Conservatives throughout the country.

But there are other names mentioned. Let us take Judge Maguire. He was a Conservative, appointed to the North-west by the Conservative party, and the hon. Minister of the Interior transferred him to the Yukon district. Does anybody question that Judge Maguire was a capable judge and a straightforward public officer? We have had suggestions made to the contrary in this discussion, but nobody has ventured to make any specific accusations against Judge Maguire, and I do not think anybody will do so now. Then, we have Mr. Fawcett, the Gold Commissioner, who had the misfortune to come under the displeasure of a couple of American gentlemen who are publishing a newspaper in Dawson City, two gentlemen who seem to have pursued Mr. Fawcett with a great deal of bitterness. I was exceedingly sorry to find the leader of the Opposition attacking Mr. Fawcett in this House as he did. At one time the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) admitted that Mr. Fawcett was an honest man; but a little later, in his zeal to attack everybody, he said, in reference to Mr. Senkler:

Why is Mr. Senkler there now? Because of the corruption of the man who preceded him.

And the man who preceded him as Gold Commissioner was Mr. Thomas Fawcett. I venture to say that there is not an hon. member on the Conservative side who is prepared in the light of all that has occurred to stand up now and to say that he conscientiously believes that Mr. Thomas Fawcett is guilty of corruption. The universal testimony to Mr. Fawcett is that while he may have made some mistakes, he was a faithful, and generally speaking, an efficient public officer. Now, Sir, frequent reference has been made by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition to two gentlemen whom he describes, one as a horse-dealer, and the other as a whaler—Mr. McGregor, the horse-dealer, and Capt. Norwood, the whaler. I do not suppose, Sir, that it is a crime to be a horse-dealer; I think it is generally admitted that to be a successful horse-dealer a man requires a pretty large degree of intelligence and capacity. There are one or two very estimable members on the other side of the House who are well known to be horse-dealers, and if any of these hon. gentlemen should have been chosen to go to the Yukon district, I do not believe it would have been a very grave charge if some Liberal member were to rise and say, that Mr. So-and-so was not to be trusted because he happened to be a horse-dealer. Then we have the question of the whaler. It appears that the whaler came from my own province. I am sorry I have not the pleasure of knowing him, but if he is a fair type of the kind of man they raise in the Maritime provinces; if he is the type of man they raised for generations to command the shipping of the country, then the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) should be congratulated that he obtained a good Nova Scotian captain to go to that region. I venture to say, and I say it seriously, that there is no more intelligent class of men, no men more worthy of being trusted, than the men who during the past thirty years have been bred in the Maritime provinces to pursue their calling as captains of vessels on the high seas. And, Sir, when a man who has received that training is so far advanced in his profession as to be deemed worthy to be placed in command of a steam whaling vessel, in the Arctic regions, instead of regarding that as evidence of his incapacity, I would humbly submit that in all probability you have a man of strong qualities who is admirably fitted for all duty required in that rugged country under the Arctic Circle. I have gone through the principal officials who have been challenged, namely, Major Walsh; Mr. Fawcett, Gold Commissioner; Judge Maguire, and the whaler and the horse-dealer; but there is one other gentleman whose name has figured conspicuously in this discussion, and that is the name of Mr. F. C. Wade. The hon. leader of the Opposition ventured to make a charge the other night against that gentleman; a charge which was only less grave than the accusation that was made against Major Walsh. Let any member of the legal profession—I have not that misfortune myself—let any member of the legal profession stop for a moment and think of what is meant by the accusation, that a respected member of the Bar takes retainers from both sides. I was surprised and shocked that a gentleman of the experience of the hon. member (Sir Charles Tupper) should make an accusation of that kind without being in a position to maintain it. Well, Sir, we have evidence to the contrary, and we have the evidence from the hon. gentleman's family; evidence which was very properly read to the House by the Minister of the Interior. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) read a letter from Mr. W. J. Tupper, of Winnipeg, to testify that the political opponents of Mr. Wade could bear witness that Mr. Wade would scorn to do a mean action even in the heat of a battle. That is the testimony of a brother professional man as to Mr. Wade's character, and I believe the House and the country will say that the testimony of the younger gentleman (Mr. W. J. Tupper), who lived with Mr. Wade in Winnipeg, and knew him, is more likely to be correct than the testimony of the leader of the Opposition, who in this House makes the tremendous accusation against Mr. Wade that he is a man who takes retainers from both sides. I would suggest to the leader of the Opposition, or his lieutenant, the ex-Minister of Finance, who echoed his statement, that if they feel that Mr. Wade is a man of that type and that he is taking retainers on both sides, the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), who I understand is to speak in Brockville to-night, will, I hope, make that statement on the public platform, where he is not sheltered from punishment by parliamentary privilege, and I venture to say he will hear from Mr. Wade at no distant date. I have not the honour of knowing Mr. Wade intimately; I have barely met him, but I know from general repute he is a barrister of good standing in the city of Winnipeg, and although I have no special cause to defend him, yet we have the evidence of Mr. W. J. Tupper in his favour, and until we get evidence to the contrary, we are bound to consider Mr. Wade entitled to our confidence and respect.

My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) made a strong point of the fact, that the Government should have prevented their officials, at the very beginning, from taking up claims in the Yukon district. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) urged that point very strongly, and he called attention to the Act of the province of Nova Scotia which forbids certain classes of officials from taking mining claims. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) told us that he had himself been instrumental in the passage of that Act, but my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) is, I think, mistaken, and a little reflection will show him that he had nothing to do with the passing of the Act at all. He was one of a number of legal gentlemen engaged in a very important mining suit, and in the course of the trial it appeared that an official in one of the Government offices had acquired an interest in one of the mining claims taken out in the mining department. So strongly were the Government of the day impressed—the Government of which I was Premier—with the importance of having the officials in and about the Government building beyond suspicion, that without suggestion from my hon. friend (Mr. Borden)—as I am sure on reflection he will admit—we introduced and carried through Parliament an Act which provided that all the officials—not only in the Mines Department, where they were already debarred, but all the officials whose offices were in and about the same building—should be debarred from the privileges to taking up claims.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) pardon me for saying that he is not quite accurate. What took place was, that the official in question did acquire an interest which could be attacked upon technical grounds. After a suit was brought on these grounds, an Act was passed through the legislature behind the backs of those persons who were claiming the right to get back their own property on these technical grounds; and when the legislation to remedy that had passed the lower House and had gone to the legislative council; the legislative council added the clause to which I have referred. It is only in that way I was instrumental in bringing it about. But it did come about, through the Act which I caused to be introduced in the assembly for the purpose mentioned. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) will upon reflection admit that my statement regarding that is perfectly accurate.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The point at issue here between my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) and myself is not serious enough to make it a matter of dispute between us. The point I wish to make is this: That the clause inserted in the Act was the work of the Government of the day, and if I may be pardoned for saying it, I drafted the clause myself and my hon. friend and colleague in the Government, the Hon. Geo. Murray, introduced it in the legislative council. However, the main thing to which I wish to call the attention of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) is this: That that Act which he regards as a very valuable one, and which I, too, think is a wise Act, that Act was not passed at the beginning of the history of mining in Nova Scotia, it was not passed until after we had a century and a half of settled government in Nova Scotia. There are some things that we learn by experience, but my hon. friends opposite seem to think that the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), in the very beginning of the conduct of Yukon affairs, should have had all the experience that came to other provinces in a century and a half of their history.

I would like to point out to my hon. friend that for a number of years the affairs of the province of Nova Scotia were managed by the hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition. Not for a very long time; my hon. friend does not generally govern very long where he is best known; but for a few years my hon. friend was controller of the affairs of Nova Scotia, and during all those years there was no such Act on the statute-book as he refers to. It was only in the course of years and under a Liberal administration that that useful Act was placed on the statute-book. And lest there should be any misunderstanding, let me say that the official whose conduct was called in question at the time and gave rise to the passing of the Act, was an official appointed many years ago by the hon. leader of the Opposition himself. I do not say, however, that I have any intention of reflecting on the gentleman referred to. There was no legal and perhaps no moral reason why he should not avail himself of the privilege of taking up the mine. At all events, he was not interfered with further than this, that from that time forward an Act was placed on the statute-book for the future regulation of the matter. The point I desire, however, to make—and my hon. friend will, I think, see the force of this—is that that was something which only came about after long experience; and it was hardly reasonable to expect my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior to learn as much in two years in the Yukon district as other men required generations to learn in the province of Nova Scotia. But I would like to point out that even that Act does not forbid public officials generally from taking up mines. It only forbids those whose offices are in and about the building which contains the Mines Office; and there is nothing to-day to prevent the officers of that Government employed in outside capacities going in and taking up claims. So that the regulation which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior recently has made, forbidding all Government officials in the Yukon district taking up claims, goes much further than the statute of the province of Nova Scotia to which my hon. friend has referred.

My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) very well reminds me that the original regulations for the Yukon district were made by the Conservative Government; the Minister of the Interior found them in operation, and the members of the Conservative Government. It appears, were not expected to have all that knowledge and information which was expected of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior. The regulations which were in force when he came into office, continued in force with some changes; and, therefore, it is only reasonable to suppose that when in the light of experience my hon. friend made such changes as were necessary, he did all that could be expected of any Minister faithfully discharging his duties.

Now, I think the only question, and all that we are concerned in here, is whether or not, when some difficulties occurred, when charges were made, when misunderstandings arose, in the Yukon district, and when sometimes newspaper writers and sometimes others were complaining of affairs there, the Minister of the Interior took the proper steps to have an investigation. That, I think, is the only question on which the House has a right to challenge the conduct of the Minister. Well, a reference to the public records will show most conclusively that in that respect my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior is not open to any charge. My hon. friend from Halifax—and no one knows better than I do what an excellent speech he can make when he has the material—made use of a great deal of his idle gossip which was turned over to him by the hon. member for Pictou, and I am sure that when he used that in the House, he felt what an exceedingly poor case he had, and how much better he could have done if he had not been obliged to make bricks without straw. But, after labouring with this material for some time, my hon. friend came across one point which seemed to be of some importance. He thought he had struck something, and very naturally he made very much of it when he found it. My hon. friend thought he had discovered that after these accusations were made against the administration of the Yukon district, the Minister of the Interior had allowed many months to pass before taking any action. This point has already been referred to by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) and also by my hon. colleague the Minister of Marine and Fisheries; but I wish to refer to it again in order that I may give some precise dates, and emphasize the point which has already been so well made by the two hon. gentlemen to whom I have referred. The hon. member for Halifax—and I am going to quote him at considerable length—said:

The next point made by the hon. member for Pictou was that the investigation which should have been made into the charges which were heralded all over this country and over two continents months ago should have been made promptly and at once. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) claims in his speech that his department acted with great forethought, diligence, promptness and circumspection. Charges were made, as the hon. gentleman himself admitted, before the 15th day of July, 1898, because he said that he fixed on that date as the date on which Mr. Ogilvie should leave for the Yukon; and he says that before that date it came to his knowledge that charges or complaints had been made against Mr. Wade and Mr. McGregor. And, Sir, up to the 1st day of February, 1899, no person had been authorized to investigate these charges. That is the position of the hon. gentleman with regard to the delay. How does he answer that? He tells us that after Mr. Ogilvie had been despatched to the Yukon, while that gentleman was on his way there, he sent him a telegram, the words of which he gave, and which were substantially these: "You have a free hand." Now, I ask any lawyer in this House: What would be Mr. Ogilvie's power of investigation under a telegram announcing to him that he would have a free hand? Does the hon. gentleman say that on such a telegram Mr. Ogilvie would have power to subpoena a single witness or that he would have the power to administer an oath to a single witness?

Does he say that he had power, under that telegram, to hold any investigation whatever, any investigation that would be worthy of the name? The only thing Mr. Ogilvie could do under that telegram would be what any private person could do, ascertain what information he could by inquiry in the Yukon district, and report to the hon. gentleman. Why, Sir, the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches were not so slow as that, when it was a question of issuing a commission to deprive a Tory office-holder of his office. The hon. gentleman says that you cannot run and get a Council meeting at once? Did he have to delay from July until February to get a Council meeting? Council meetings were called pretty promptly for other purposes, but the hon. gentleman, it seems, could not get a Council meeting to deal with this matter between the 15th of July, 1898, and February, 1899. Sir, I say, that under the circumstances, when these charges were ringing throughout Canada, when Liberal journals, as well as Tory journals, were speaking of them, there was most criminal and scandalous delay on the part of the hon. gentleman. I say, it was most unfair to the officers themselves, because we have not pretended that all these officers were guilty of any wrongful act; we have not pretended it for a moment; but when these charges were allowed to go during all these months without any investigation, when innocent men had attached to them the odium which should properly have fallen, perhaps, on some of the men who were guilty, if they were really guilty; therefore, in justice to the country, in justice to the officials, in justice to the hon. gentleman's Government, and in justice to himself, I say, that the delay during those months was scandalous and shameful.

I have read that passage at length in order that we may place beside the most serious accusation my hon. friend was able to make the dates which prove that for all that there was not a shadow of foundation, but that my hon. friend was entirely mistaken. I call the attention of the House again to the fact that before any specific charges were made, in the early stages of this matter, even when there were nothing more than newspaper reports, which the Minister might if he chose have treated with indifference, the Minister of the Interior sent a telegram to Mr. Ogilvie, when on his way out, in which he used the words quoted by my hon. friend, but in a little stronger form. The words of the telegram which the Minister of the Interior sent to Mr. Ogilvie even at that early day, were as follows:—

You have an absolutely free hand in regard to the officials; do what is necessary to put the service on an effective footing.

"Oh," my hon. friend says, "but what good could Mr. Ogilvie do under that telegram except what any private citizen could do?" The hon. gentleman tells us that Mr. Ogilvie could simply ascertain what information he could and report to the Minister of the Interior at Ottawa. I have only to call my hon. friend's attention to the facts to show him how utterly unfair and unjust that statement is. Mr. Ogilvie was not in the position of a private citizen. He was at that time the commissioned officer of the Government under the Act respecting the Yukon district; and, under that telegram, which gave him a free hand with regard to the officials even before he received any inquiry commission or specific charge, he was commissioned to inquire into everything he wanted to inquire into in the Yukon district, and he was free to suspend any official in the district the moment he could find anything against him. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) said that Mr. Ogilvie had no more power at that time than any private citizen. I say the House has been shown how, before the specific charges came in and a commission was issued to Mr. Ogilvie to make a formal investigation, he had a free hand to deal with the officials as he pleased; and those who know Mr. Ogilvie know well that he would exercise that power for the interest of the public.

Then we come to the formal charges, charges which, the hon. gentleman said, were allowed to go seven months without attention. Let us have the dates. My hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) have both referred to this matter. They said that the action taken by the Minister of the Interior was prompt, and so it was. I wish to fortify that statement by giving exact dates. The miners' petition, which contained the first specific charges made against any officials, was dated at Dawson, the 25th of August. It was addressed to the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Prime Minister, and reached him at the city of Quebec, where he was at the time attending to his public duties, on the 4th October. It was sent immediately to the Minister of the Interior, and was received by him at Ottawa on the 6th October. On the 7th October, the very next day, the Minister of the Interior made his report to the Council recommending an investigation. On the same day the Council met, having been informed by my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior that this matter was up. Council was summoned instantly, and, on the very day on which the Minister of the Interior gave his report—which was twenty-four hours from the time the document came into his hands—Council had passed an order commissioning Mr. Ogilvie to make an investigation. This was on the 7th of the month, and on the 10th of October the commission was issued and a special messenger was despatched to Dawson City to deliver it to Mr. Ogilvie and let him proceed with his investigation. So, my hon. friend will see that that whole house of cards he built upon this idea that there had been no inquiry for seven months falls to pieces. The whole thing was a mere dream. I was about to say a beautiful dream; but it was rather a very unlovely dream, which, I am sure, he will be glad to know had no reality in it whatever. With the commission that was issued went a letter, which has already been placed upon the records, but which, as it is very brief, I wish to repeat, in order that the country and the House—although I suspect there are not many in the House who will pay very much attention to the debate from this time forward—and all who are concerned may see how thorough was the action of the Minister of the Interior in securing proper investigation. I have said that the Order in Council was passed on the 7th October. On the 10th of the same month the commission was despatched to Mr. Ogilvie, this letter being sent on the same date:

Dear Sir,—You will receive herewith a commission to investigate charges which have been made by a miners' committee against the administration of Governmental affairs in the Yukon district. This commission has been issued in consequence of the receipt of a formal complaint, a copy of which is attached to the commission. You will at once proceed upon receipt of the commission with the investigation, and you are authorized to notify the persons who have signed the petition, wherever possible, of the time and place and when the inquiry will be opened.

Your legal adviser, Mr. Clement, will give you any professional assistance that may be required in the investigation. You will understand that any person who is charged with malfeasance of office or offence of any kind against the proper administration of the law in any department is entitled, before the hearing of the charges, to due notice of the particulars of the charge, so that he can prepare himself to meet the charge if he so desires.

As to employment of counsel, I will leave you to exercise your own judgment, merely remarking that if the persons preferring the charges desire to appear by counsel I see no objection to such course being followed. In such cases, of course, any accused persons who desire to appear by counsel will have a similar privilege.

It is the desire of the Government that the investigation should be thorough and complete, and that each and every charge that has been made in the miners' petition should be thoroughly investigated, and that you should make a definite report, giving your finding upon the evidence submitted in support of each charge, returning your report along with a copy of the evidence.

It is absolutely necessary that your report should be in my hands before the meeting of Parliament, and I shall, therefore, expect you to send it out by special messenger, if necessary, as soon as the ice is in condition to permit of travel southward from Dawson City.

Yours faithfully,

CLIFFORD SIFTON.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wonder how it is possible, in the face of the public record which the Minister of the Interior has been able to place before this House, for anybody to say that there had been any failure on his part to take proper action for the investigation of these charges. Mr. Ogilvie, on receipt of that commission, issued a public notice, in which he recited the terms of the commission and fixed the time and place for the hearing of all the parties. He is now holding that investigation; and what we on this side have said, in the amendment which we propose to support, is that, having confidence in Mr. Ogilvie, believing in his integrity, ability and knowledge of that country, we are going to suspend judgment on these matters until we have received Mr. Ogilvie's report. If, then, as a result of the report so issued, anything is disclosed which should demand a further inquiry, this Parliament and this Government will see that that inquiry is made in due course.

Hon. gentlemen cannot question successfully the position of Mr. Ogilvie. I remember a conversation I had with my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior when Mr. Ogilvie went up as commissioner. Everybody was bearing testimony at that time to the ability and character of Mr. Ogilvie, but my friend the Minister of the Interior said to me: "Just you wait, Fielding, until Ogilvie gets out there, and they will begin to blackguard him as they blackguard every person who goes out." That anticipation was realized. Some persons have endeavoured to create the impression that Mr. Ogilvie was unworthy the confidence of the people and the Government in this matter. Let us see what the testimony is as to Mr. Ogilvie. I may find it necessary to repeat briefly some things that have already been brought before the House in this connection. Let me first give the good words of my friend the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague). When the question was before this House of the payment of a small sum—a very small sum—in recognition of Mr. Ogilvie's great services, the hon. member for Haldimand said:

I do not object to this vote of $5,000 to Mr. Ogilvie. I do not fancy there is a man in this House who will object to it. He has been, it seems, an incorruptible and valuable public servant, and I am sure we will all agree with that vote.

If Mr. Ogilvie was an incorruptible and valuable public servant at that day, he is not less an incorruptible and valuable servant to-day, abundantly worthy the confidence of the Government and the Parliament of Canada. I find the Montreal "Star," a journal which hon. gentlemen opposite now ought to regard as an authority, whatever they may have thought of it a few months ago, in its issue of July 2nd, 1898, said:

His opportunities to enrich himself were immense, but he availed himself of none of them; but took his small salary and did his duty, and came back no richer than if he had been keeping guard over an ice field.

The same paper said:

The country was pleased with the record of Mr. Ogilvie in that district, no matter what his technical duties may have been.

And again, when he was appointed commissioner, the same paper said:

Mr. FIELDING.

The appointment of Mr. Ogilvie to a position of trust in the Yukon district is a step for which the Government will be gladly given credit. It is difficult to see how they could have made a better choice.

The Montreal "Gazette" said:

When the First Minister sent Mr. Ogilvie out, the miners, although he had no authority over them, respected his decisions as to claims and boundaries and other disputed questions because he was a just man, and would not make use of his position as agent of the Government to better himself by a dollar.

The same paper again said:

It will be a good appointment, and be a proper recognition of the services of a man whose work did more to make the Yukon known than that of any other man. It will also put in a responsible position a man whose character is respectable, and who is more acceptable than the multitude of speculators appointed to Government positions in the gold district.

The "Gazette" could not miss the chance of having a dig at the Government, but it bore testimony to the high character, integrity and ability of Mr. Ogilvie. Again, on the 11th of July, the Ottawa "Journal," a Conservative paper, said:

The present Government scored a big point by its nomination of Mr. Ogilvie to the important position of commissioner of the Yukon territory.

I was glad to find that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), and my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), in their speeches, both recognized the fitness of Mr. Ogilvie for his position and did not call in question his integrity. What else did hon. gentlemen opposite say? Oh! they said, Mr. Ogilvie may be a very good man, but he is not a lawyer. I am not sure that the presence of a lawyer in that investigation was absolutely necessary, but that criticism falls to the ground entirely when we note the fact that my hon. colleague the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) appointed to assist Mr. Ogilvie a very eminent lawyer from the city of Toronto. I have not the pleasure of knowing Mr. Clement. I observe that since his nomination was mentioned, one or two hon. gentlemen opposite seem to raise a doubt as to his professional standing. I have since been informed, on what I believe good authority, that Mr. Clement is a gentleman of very high standing at the Toronto Bar. There are many legal gentlemen in the party opposite, but I am informed by one who has a good knowledge of the legal profession that Mr. Clement's standing in that profession is equal to that of any of the hon. gentlemen opposite to-day who are practising at the Bar. So that Mr. Ogilvie is not only a capable man himself but has at his right hand an able lawyer who will be able to render him all the assistance required. Then we have a curious argument raised by my hon. friend who leads the Opposition, and one which is emphasized very strongly by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), who closed the discussion on Friday night. Let me quote what the hon. gentleman said with regard to Mr. Ogilvie :

Do you suppose that that discerning public, looking as to whether the good name of Canada is going to be cleared or not, will think it is cleared when Mr. Sifton's hired man makes his master a report under his monthly salary ?

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, it is an offence for any man to be a "hired man" of any department of the Government of Canada. This expression "hired man" flung across the House in an offensive spirit is an insult to every member of the civil service of Canada, who, in that respect, is a "hired man." If we would realize how very absurd is this contention, that no one but a judicial commission can inquire into matters of this sort, let us just apply the doctrine laid down to some other cases. Suppose I should receive information to-day that an officer of my department engaged in departmental work in an extreme portion of Canada—in Halifax in the east, or Vancouver in the west—was charged with serious dereliction of duty, what would I be expected to do ? Apply for a judicial commission to go out there and enquire into the matter ? Would any one dream of such an absurd thing ? No, I would take one of my "hired men," as hon. gentlemen opposite call them, I would take a gentleman in my department of high intelligence and large experience, and send him out to that distant part of the Dominion with instructions to inquire into the charges. That has been the course hitherto invariably followed. And if there were anything in the circumstances which pointed to the necessity of taking an examination under oath, then application would be made to his Excellency for a commission conferring that power. Suppose the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) had a charge made against one of his officials in a distant part of the Dominion, what would he do ? Would he apply to His Excellency for a judicial commission to make the inquiry ? No, Sir, but he would take his "hired man," one of the men so described in this House by hon. gentlemen opposite—he would take his inspector or chief officer and send him out to hold an investigation. If my hon. colleagues of the Customs or Railways, or any other department, found charges made against any of their employees in distant parts of the Dominion, what would they do ? They would send out one of their "hired men" to investigate. Is not that the usual course followed ? If that is the course usually followed in relation to the Departments of Inland Revenue, Railways and Marine, or any other department, why is it not right for the Minister of the Interior, when an official of his department in a distant portion of the Dominion, is brought under accusation, to follow the same course ? Why should there be a different rule ? Why is a hired man good enough to investigate into such matters in the Customs Department, and a judicial commission required to inquire into the conduct of an official in the Department of the Interior ? The thing is utterly preposterous, and those hon. gentlemen know, when they use that argument, there is no reason in the world why a judicial commission should be appointed in any such case. When you have to inquire into the conduct of a subordinate, a hired man is the proper officer to investigate ; and so long as the accusation is made against officials only, there can be no reason whatever for any other kind of investigation than that which is employed in all the departments of the Government in relation to such matters. Sir, there is one kind of investigation which a "hired man" is not competent to hold, and that is an investigation touching the honour and integrity of a Minister of the Crown ; and if these hon. gentlemen would dare to make an accusation of that character, they would then discover there will be no question of employing a "hired man" in the matter, but either by a royal commission of judges, or, what is better, a committee of the peers of the Ministers themselves, the members of this House, they would get all the investigation they wanted. Then, my hon. friend attacked the Administration for sending out troops. Why, the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster) on Friday night said : You are spending a million dollars in sending out 300 or 400 men to that country when every man in the country knows they were not required. Let me quote his words. He said :

Well, Sir, there is just one word with reference to that. Everybody knows now, everybody who was not in a panic knew two years ago, that there was no more necessity of spending a million dollars to send up 300 or 400 militiamen into that country and keep them there, than there was for sending that many men over to the town of Rossland to keep the miners in that district in order. With the large force of mounted police that you have in that country, you have a force that is amply sufficient, provided you went in for treating the miners decently and rightly, to maintain law and order.

My hon. friend said that everybody who was not in a panic knew that we did not need to spend a million dollars for the purpose of sending 300 or 400 men into that country. Let me reply, first, that we did not send up 300 or 400 men but actually 216 men, officers, non-commissioned officers and rank and file, and, secondly, that the expenditure is nothing like a million dollars. I have not the figures at hand, but up to the 30th June—which was of course but a short period—we only spent $117,000. Then, thirdly, let me say in reply to his remark that everybody knew that was a waste of money, why did not the hon. gentleman, as the financial critic of the Administration, stand up in the House and say so when we asked the vote ?

My memory is good in the matter, but preferring not to trust it, I searched the public records, and I find that when it was proposed in this House by my hon. friend the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) to take a large appropriation to send these troops out there to maintain law and order, there was not a man on the opposite side who raised his voice against it. The ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) rose in his place and asked my hon. friend the Prime Minister if it was true, as stated, that they were going to send a force out there; and my hon. friend the leader of the Government said: Yes, it is true; we are going to send the militia out there to maintain law and order. The hon. member accepted the statement without protest, and neither by vote nor by voice did he ever make a single objection to it. So it is too late for my hon. friend to say that we did not need troops out there when, at the moment they were sent, he seemed to believe that they were needed. Well, I thought until lately, perhaps, we would not need them, perhaps they might as well be brought home after law and order have been established there; but, Sir, if hon. gentlemen opposite are going to make speeches such as have come from influential men in this House, if hon. gentlemen occupying the first rank in one of the great political parties of this country are going to lay down as a doctrine that the money we have collected from the royalties in that country does not belong to the people of Canada but belongs to the foreign miners out there, if we are going to have these hon. gentlemen preaching the doctrine that the country out there is oppressed and misgoverned, then I say we will have such a condition of affairs in Dawson City and the Yukon district that we may require troops to be kept there to protect Canada against the harm that will come from the speeches made on the Opposition side of this House.

Now my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Finance spoke for some time, too, on the question of royalty, and I must do him the justice to say that on that question he talked moderately and reasonably, and though I am not able to agree with him in all that he said as to the excessive royalty, that is a fair matter of discussion. There is no absolute finality in any rate of royalty that we have fixed in this matter. My own judgment is that the royalty grievance is not a very genuine grievance, that the men in that country who are most concerned in remaining there and developing the country, do not regard the royalty as a very great objection. Still, that is a fair matter for future consideration, though for the present we do not propose to change the rate. I was particularly pleased, though, to find the hon. gentlemen opposite learning the very wholesome doctrine that you may sometimes get more revenue from a low rate of taxation. I suspect that the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) has been studying the trade returns during the last couple of years under a Liberal Administration, and that the effect has been to teach him some sound political economy. It is true, Sir, that sometimes you can get more revenue by a reduction of the rate of taxation, and the time may come when we shall be willing to apply that doctrine to the Yukon royalties; for the present, we think we have gone far enough when we have increased the exemption from $2,500 to $5,000. I think the real difficulty in the Yukon country is not so much the royalty as lack of communication and lack of transportation. We have no reason to complain of the degree of development that has already occurred in that country. Hon. gentlemen say that that country is not going to make any progress under this 10 per cent royalty. Well, Mr. Speaker, it has made fair progress under the 10 per cent royalty; there is a large amount of gold brought out of the country. There is one thing to be said about gold dust, it is not a perishable commodity, and if it is not brought out this year it remains there for another year and will be brought out in due time. We have no great interest in having the gold deposits of the Yukon all cleared up in the first six months of the year. There has been a fair degree of development, which has not been unsatisfactory to the Government, and which has not been unsatisfactory to the country. But I believe that what we need chiefly out there is, as I said a moment ago, communication and transportation facilities, and we would have had them long ago if the Senate had not interfered with our plans. If the friends in the Senate of the hon. gentlemen opposite had permitted the policy of this Government to be carried out, if another Chamber had not interfered with that policy, we would have had long ere this a railway to the Yukon, and with a railway, the trade of the country would have been kept in Canadian channels instead of being diverted to the United States; and with cheaper transportation, food would have come down in price, labour could have been employed, the development of that country would have been more rapid, and its development will take place more rapidly when satisfactory communication is established. When that is done the question of a 10 per cent royalty will be a very small item with regard to the development of the country. Whether the royalty is too high or too low, is a fair matter of debate, but I do not think it requires a judicial inquiry to tell us whether the royalty is too large or too small. I have claimed that we should wait for the report of Mr. Ogilvie. We do not say it is to be final. All we say is that, having commenced an investigation, having put it in the hands of a capable and responsible man, a man who is above suspicion, a man who is loved, and honoured, and revered by the miners in that district as the representative of the Government and the Parliament of Canada, we think it is best to wait until he sends in his report, and then we shall see what next.

Sir, the hon. member for Pictou had very much to say about this matter which I am sure he will have reason to regret. Indeed, it is painfully evident that the chief desire of that hon. gentleman was not to secure reforms in the Yukon district, but simply to make some political capital for his party in that matter. He has been engaged, by common report, in collecting hearsay evidence for many months. If the hon. gentleman had a sincere desire for an investigation into Yukon affairs he would have availed himself of the opportunity which was placed in his power when he and several other gentlemen residing in British Columbia received several months ago the following letter, sent by the Deputy Minister of the Interior, Mr. Smart, by order of the hon. the Minister of the Interior, dated on the 2nd of December last, and addressed to members of this Parliament residing in the province of British Columbia:—

Sir,—You are no doubt aware that statements have been made very freely in the press for some months past impugning the conduct of officials charged with the administration of the affairs of the Government in the Yukon district. Some time since a statement signed by certain persons claiming to represent a miners' institute or committee was placed in the hands of the Minister of the Interior, and thereupon a commission was issued to Mr. William Ogilvie, the commissioner of the district, authorizing him to make an investigation into the truth of the statements made in the complaint, and also to inquire into other complaints that may be made respecting maladministration of officers of the Government. It is apprehended that great difficulty will be encountered in making an investigation by reason of the vagueness of the charges which have been made, and the difficulty of getting information as to any specific acts of wrongdoing, should have taken place. As a public man resident in British Columbia, it is possible that you have been made the recipient of information which would be of value to the department and to Mr. Ogilvie in conducting the said investigation, and I am therefore directed to request that if you are in possession of any information whatever showing or relating to any specific acts of malfeasance of office on the part of any officer of the Government in the Yukon district during the past two years, such information may be forwarded to the department in order that it may be sent to the commissioner for examination and report.

I have the honour to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
JAMES A. SMART,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

The hon. member for Pictou who, though representing the county of Pictou, is now a resident of British Columbia, received a copy of that letter from the Department of the Interior, and I submit to every fair-minded man who hears the letter read, that if the hon. member for Pictou had simply desired to see justice done, if he had desired to see whatever wrongdoing, if any, had occurred in the Yukon, inquired into and a remedy applied, my hon. friend, instead of treasuring up all these fables for the last few months, would have sent his information direct to the Minister of the Interior, or have communicated with Mr. Ogilvie, in order that it might be made the subject of investigation. But instead of doing that the hon. gentleman ignores the commission, gathers up all the hearsay stories he can find, and presents them to this House with a view of trying to make a complaint I have said that Mr. Ogilvie has been commissioned to examine into everything in regard to the officials of the Government, and that he is a competent and proper officer, assisted as he is by a legal adviser, to inquire into every act of the officers of the Government in that district. I have made the point, and I repeat now, that I draw a distinction, and the House will draw a distinction, between complaints against public officials and complaints affecting the honour and integrity of a Minister of the Crown. I repeat what was said before, that while we justify the appointment of Mr. Ogilvie as a proper tribunal for inquiring into the conduct of officials, we do not for a moment say that Mr. Ogilvie should be employed to inquire into any charge, if there were any charge, against the hon. Minister of the Interior, or any other Minister. Although the hon. member for Pictou in his speech made very wild and reckless charges wherein he talked of rascalities and crimes, although he spoke of putting the hon. Minister of the Interior into the criminal box, and made such wild statements as that, it was noticed that, as this debate went on, hon. gentlemen were unwilling to make any accusation against the hon. Minister of the Interior, until at last we had from the leader of the Opposition an attempt made on Friday last, which I do not hesitate to say was unworthy of the position of that hon. gentleman in this House. The hon. gentleman in his second speech did attempt, as his son, the hon. member for Pictou, had done before him, to injure the character of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and he did it by referring again to the transaction connected with the name of a gentleman named Philp, who, some time ago, was the law partner of the hon. Minister of the Interior. He quoted this document, which he said had been given by the hon. Minister of the Interior to Mr. Philp:

This introduces Mr. Philp, who has a permit to enter the Yukon district with such provisions as he may see fit to take with him, without regard to the usual regulations.

Now, the hon. gentleman quoted that for the purpose of showing that it was a permission granted to take in large quantities of something into the Yukon district, regardless of the regulations. The Minister of the Interior had explained that matter fully. It was not a permit to take in a large quantity; it was a permit to go in with a small quantity. Major Walsh, in pursuance of what he supposed to be his authority, made a rule that nobody should be allowed to enter the Yukon territory unless he carried 600 pounds of food with him. Now, I do not think that Major

Walsh had a right to do that as a matter of law, but sometimes in these distant countries an administrator charged with great responsibility might be justified in taking a course that he considered to be in the public interest, and when you consider that there was danger of famine in Dawson City, and owing to the difficulties of transportation, how impossible it was to get food into that country, it is possible that Major Walsh acted wisely in issuing that order that no one should enter that country unless he had 600 pounds of food. It was under these circumstances that Mr. Philp came to Mr. Sifton and said that he was only going into Dawson and out again, that he had no intention of remaining, that there was no reason why he should carry in a winter's supply of food, and he asked the Minister of the Interior that he should be allowed to go in with a small quantity, and not with a large quantity. That was the purpose of the order, but the hon. gentleman opposite (Sir Charles Tupper) quoted it to show the very opposite. But worse than that: hon. gentlemen will notice that the permit was to take in such provisions as he chose. When the hon. leader of the Opposition undertook to comment upon that he translated the word provisions into liquor, and he said that that Mr. Philp obtained a permit to take liquor into the Yukon regardless of the regulations. There is not a word in it about liquor, and provisions do not generally mean liquor to people on this side of the House at any rate, whatever they mean on the other side of the House. The hon. gentleman had no excuse for his accusation, because the hon. Minister of the Interior had explained the transaction.

Mr. POPE. You were not in the Yukon.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend has not been there, and he does not know any more about it than I do.

Mr. POPE. I know more about that part of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The provisions or the liquor?

Mr. POPE. The liquor end of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows more about that than I do. I find that the hon. Minister of the Interior, at page 87 of the "Hansard," said:

When Mr. Philp got to the coast, like the partner of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and a great many other distinguished gentlemen, he desired to become interested in the bringing of liquor into the Yukon. He telegraphed me, asking me to write him that the letter I had given him should include liquor, and his request was properly refused.

In the light of that fact, and in the light of that statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior, that no permit was given to take liquor into the Yukon, that it was never understood to mean liquor, that when Mr. Philp applied for a permit to take liquor into the Yukon, he was refused, and when Mr. Philp, according to the evidence furnished to the Minister of the Interior, never took any liquor in, what are we to think of the leader of the Opposition in making that ungenerous attempt to injure the hon. Minister of the Interior by declaring that he gave that permit to take liquor into the Yukon to a partner? Then, the leader of the Opposition said that the hon. Minister of the Interior was identified with him in his interests in exploiting the Yukon district. I am surprised that the leader of the Opposition would dare to make that statement against a brother member of the Privy Council. With all his experience in public life, he ought to have known better, and I venture to draw his attention to it now in the hope that he will take the earliest opportunity of tendering the apology which is due to the hon. Minister of the Interior for the most ungenerous attack which can only be characterized by language stronger than this Parliament will permit me to use. But I am glad to be able to say that we have driven these hon. gentlemen to bay upon this matter of attacks upon Ministers. The hon. member for Pictou began with an attack upon the hon. Minister of the Interior, but when we pressed this matter home on Friday night, when the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) was pointing out, as I have endeavoured to do to-day, that if these hon. gentlemen have any accusations to make against the Minister of the Interior, or any other Minister of the Crown, there is a proper way to bring them before the House if they will take the responsibility and obtain an investigation, when my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was pressing that point home, what happened? The hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) stood up in this House and said: We do not accuse the Minister of the Interior, but we only complain of the officials in the Yukon district. We have driven them, just as in the Drummond County deal, as they called it, we drove them to acknowledge that they never expected to prove any wrong-doing. I am glad that the hon. member for Beauharnois made the admission, because it is a credit to him, and tends to make this debate a little less bitter than it otherwise might have been.

No member of this Government has any interest in defending any official in the Yukon who has been guilty of misconduct. What concern have we in defending these men if they have done wrong? But I think we should have some better evidence of their wrong-doing than has been given, some better evidence than, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries happily described it, mere tittle-tattle, before we drag the reputation of these men into the mire. I believe that every member of this Government and of this Parliament should feel that he is the custodian of the good name of the civil service of Canada, until they have been fairly accused, fairly tried and justly condemned. Only two of the officials in the Yukon are well known to me. The hon. Minister of the Interior came to me and said that he wanted to obtain the services of a man who had a practical knowledge of mining operations. He communicated with my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) about the same time on the subject, and we both united in recommending to him a gentleman who had served my government in Nova Scotia faithfully for a long period of years in the office of assistant inspector of mines. I knew the man was able, competent and worthy, and I recommended him, and I am glad to be able to say that his name has never been mentioned adversely in all this debate. But, Sir, this gentleman comes in under the general terms of "minions," and "satraps," and "under-strappers," applied to all these officials by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). There is one other official whom I know well, and who is out in that district. He was attached to my own department, and was transferred by me from the savings bank at Halifax to Dawson City, where he was attached to the Department of the Interior. He was not a Liberal; he was of a Conservative family; he was appointed by my predecessors, but he was a capable and worthy man, and I am sure that, since he went to that country, he has acted the part of a good citizen and a faithful public servant. I am here to defend him against any accusation that can be made, directly or indirectly, until some charges are made against him and he has had a fair trial. That much I would do for the two men, whom I happen to know, and whom I happen to have recommended, and that much I am anxious to do as well for all the other officials who are recommended by other gentlemen who know them well, and who, I have no doubt, will be able to give a fair account of what they have done, when the time comes.

These gentlemen opposite have had a great deal to say regarding the utterances of the press, and, by the way, a very large part of this attack upon the Government appears to have emanated from two gentlemen, American citizens, who are conducting a newspaper in Dawson City.

Mr. PRIOR. Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) know they are both Americans?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) says they are not, I will accept his statement.

Mr. PRIOR. One is not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You say one is not.

Mr. PRIOR. Yes, I say so; he is a Scotchman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, I am sorry for Scotland, as I shall have occasion to show in a very few minutes.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I do not believe it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I say that the hon. members on the Opposition side seem to have obtained a very large part of their information from these two gentlemen.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Which of them is the Scotchman?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The interjection of my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) is quite pertinent to the issue. Would the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) tell us which is the Scotchman?

Mr. BENNETT. Read the Winnipeg "Tribune"; that is Scotch.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) would read the Winnipeg "Tribune" more frequently, he would have a little more sense than he generally exhibits in this House.

Mr. BENNETT. You are abusive, if nothing else.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry I did not catch the words of my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT. I say that you are abusive, if nothing else.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Order.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do hope that I shall never have the reputation in this House of having a thousandth part of the abusive character my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) is known for.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Semple is the Scotchman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When I was interrupted, I was about calling attention to the fact, that a large part of this attack made upon the Government seems to be inspired by these two gentlemen whom I described as Americans, but one of whom, we are now told, is a Scotchman. These gentlemen publish a paper in Dawson City. They have been attacking the Government, they have been attacking Mr. Fawcett. Hon. gentlemen opposite, in a number of instances, have been good enough to say, and it is only fair they should say it, that Mr. Fawcett was guilty of no wrong-doing, though they doubted his fitness for the position. I want to remind these hon. gentlemen that every word they say in vindication of the honesty of Thomas Fawcett tends to discredit their two newspaper witnesses, for these two men have bitterly assailed Mr. Fawcett in Dawson City. I have here an interesting statement, which I shall read. I have not the pleasure of knowing these two gentlemen, and I should think it would be exceedingly out of place that I should say anything derogatory to them, but I am going to give them the privilege of describing themselves; I am going to let you know what kind of men they are from their own description. This is an article from the paper published by the two gentlemen who have been closeted with leading members of the Opposition from day to day during the past few weeks. The article is headed:

Now is the time.

And it reads:

And now we people of the Klondike have reached the parting of the ways, when quick and positive decision must be made without no time to waste.—

They were in a hurry for the purposes of this article, as you will see:

—Our written prayers to Ottawa have found their way to the waste-basket, and the reforms in the regulations, without which we languish, are apparently as far away as ever. Throughout the English-speaking half-world, the name of Klondike has become synonymous with misgovernment, mismanagement and unjust and oppressive laws. The English Colonial Office is boiling over with it. The Department of the Interior is full of it.—

Mr. IVES. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Let my hon. friends opposite keep their "Hear, hears"; they will want them in a few minutes:

—The press of Canada, England, and her other colonies is using columns on it. The great parties of Canada are making it their issue. Statesmen are fighting over it, and if there was a time to make a strike for reform it is now.

We will see in a moment what kind of a strike they were after.

A personal representative of the Klondike miners who should find himself in the lobby of the House at its opening in March, would have half the politicians of Canada at his back and half the press.

That personal representative has arrived here. He has not had half the politicians of Canada at his back, but he has had quite a number of the hon. gentlemen opposite closeted with him from day to day.

For political reasons the Conservative members of the House would espouse his cause.

These two gentlemen from Dawson had a pretty clear conception of some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

For political reasons the Conservative members of the House would espouse his cause, while the anti-Sifton element of the Liberals, a faction growing daily stronger and more numerous—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A faction which exists only in the imagination of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (reading):

—would welcome gladly an emissary from this section laden with facts and primed with figures, showing the colossal evils under which we stagger.

The kind of figures they were to be primed with will be apparent in a moment:

There never again will be a time so opportune for a personal presentation of our case. Seeing this all so clearly, this paper purposes to extend its crusade against our wrongs from Dawson to Ottawa. We have made our fight here, and we leave it to our readers whether or not we have accomplished any of the tasks we set out to accomplish. We propose now to put a competent representative, perhaps two, into the thick of the fray by sending him as fast as dog teams can forward him or them to the coast, and steam to the Canadian capital. There is now a problem presented for the consideration of our readers. First, it will take money to lobby,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. You see, the two gentlemen from Dawson had some idea of the difficulties they had ahead, when they met some hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. POPE. They knew which party was in power.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (reading):

First, it will take money to lobby, and the more money in hand the more effective the lobby.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (reading):

Practical Canadian politics has created a third House, which is entirely apart from either the Upper or the Lower House.

Mr. IVES. Since 1896.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend (Mr. Ives) finds that 1896 is a date deeply impressed in his memory, and is likely to remain there for a long time to come.

Sometimes its sessions are in one club and sometimes in another, but it goes by name everywhere as the lobby. It is in this third House that most of our legislation is arranged; speakers booked, and votes first counted.

We have not yet had a chance to count the votes, but we have had the programme arranged and the speakers booked, apparently since the arrival of these two gentlemen.

Every important undertaking in the land has its representative there, and now is the time for a Klondike representative to be welcome. Secondly, our representative is going directly there for the purpose of personally presenting to our legislators the case of the people vs. the Government—the miner vs. the strangling form of misrule.

Thirdly, he will go on this mission "whether you will or whether you won't," but it lies in your power to render his work doubly effective by reasonable financial support. It lies with you whether he shall be doubly fortified by ample munitions of war. We shall do all we can, single-handed, as we have heretofore done, through the medium of our paper; but this time we propose to fight at shorter range.

The fight has been going on at shorter range, Mr. Speaker, ever since these gentlemen have come to Ottawa.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe it will go on as long as the ammunition holds out.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (reading):

Undoubtedly much good will be accomplished, and each and every one of our readers will be given an opportunity of lending a helping hand. If each of our claim-owners or successful laymen contributes even a moiety, the fund so created will return to him and the district a thousand-fold. Things are ripe at Ottawa, and we are going to do what we can to pluck the fruit of the present agitation for the country with which we have cast our lot. You can aid us in this undertaking just as you will.

Here, Sir, we have the confession of these gentlemen that they were coming to Ottawa with a bribery fund to do that which could not be accomplished except with the agency of a lobby and the munitions of war. I do not know just where they expected to place that fund where it would do the most good. It certainly was not necessary to bribe the hon. leader of the Opposition to make a violent attack on the Government in connection with this matter, and I do not know that it was necessary to buy any one of those hon. gentlemen opposite; but it is not a compliment to their intelligence and their reputation that when these gentlemen came from Dawson City, they never troubled the gentlemen on this side of the House, but confined their attentions to hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. BERGERON. They have not arrived yet.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend knows that they have been closeted with him day in and day out.

Mr. BERGERON. My hon. friend, I am sure, is not speaking seriously.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I withdraw it. I can only say that my hon. friend from Halifax stated that he had a pleasant interview with them, accompanied—

Mr. BERGERON. I never had, anyway.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Accompanied by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior); and I was paying my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) the compliment of supposing that he might have been invited into the inner circle.

Mr. BERGERON. No, I have not been.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I have shown you from this quotation, not from any statement of my own the character of these two gentlemen as pictured by themselves. They are American lobbyists, accustomed to the methods of the American lobby, and they have come here apparently for the purpose of carrying on the same game. I do not for a moment imply anything to the discredit of hon. gentlemen opposite in that, further than to say that they have been unfortunate in having these gentlemen immediately to cast in their lot with them when they arrived in Ottawa.

Now, much has been said with regard to the position of the English press on this question. Reference has been made to the letters of that able and distinguished lady, Miss Flora Shaw, in the London "Times." I have the pleasure of knowing the lady, and I am quite satisfied that whatever she wrote was written in good faith, although I think she was misled by some persons out there. But what I want to point out is that true information has since reached the English press, and there is not that alarm there which hon. gentlemen opposite would have us suppose. I happen to have in my hand a prominent English paper, the "Pall Mall Gazette," of the 7th of the present month, which contains a letter from its Canadian correspondent which occupies a position on the editorial page; and I ask the attention of the House while I read a portion of that letter:

Has Canada betrayed her trust, and let the gold fields of the Yukon become the opportunity of the place-hunter and a scene for the scuffings of corrupt officials? With angry unhappiness the people of the Dominion heard the first rumours of mismanagement, and worse, borne to them across the prairies from the papers of the Pacific coast. But it is not in the nature of this people to sit down and whimper or to acquiesce in evil of any sort. The thing had to be ferreted out and faced, and for the sake of cleanness of public life in Canada, men of all parties stood united in one resolve to get at the truth and cry it from the housetops, in scorn of consequences. It is difficult to give people at home any right idea of the feelings with which Canadians heard stories of the corruption of their own officials, and saw them repeated in English newspapers. It is enough to say that the whole nation was minded to see this thing through, and to get down to the facts, whatever they might be, and whatever unpleasantry the process cost. As far as the Dominion is concerned, this task is done. Canadian opinion is satisfied, and our only anxiety is to know whether the fuller knowledge which has silenced criticism here, has crossed the Atlantic and had a similar effect in England. The vague and reckless charges which a few months ago loomed so large in the public imagination have now been so sifted and examined that none is found to repeat them.

The hon. member for Pictou had not then discharged his budget of anonymous letters, and so forth, and this correspondent did not suppose that anybody would dream of doing so at this late date.

Mr. CLANCY. Perhaps the hon. gentleman's friends inspired some of that correspondence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Has the hon. gentleman any knowledge of that? I can tell him that I know nothing about it, except that I see it in a leading English paper which I do not suspect is likely to appoint any one as its correspondent who is not perfectly trustworthy. The letter goes on :

For the first time we have come to recognize the bottom facts of the situation, to understand as we never did the way in which the gold industry of the Yukon is conditioned, and so to see that the royalty question has been at the root of nine-tenths of the discontent.

At the same time, familiarity with the problem as a whole by no means disposes Canadians to join in the cheap cry that the miners' earnings are over-taxed. Remember that the overwhelming proportion of the men who are exploiting the mineral wealth of the Klondike district are not Canadians. Crowds of aliens, in a hurry to be rich, and without the slightest care for the permanence of interests of the country, are digging for Canadian gold, and in the pauses of their work cry out against the royalty payable to the Government which protects them. Ten per cent of the gold gained does not seem an excessive royalty, when it is remembered that these foreigners are just strangers in the land, who have practically paid nothing whatever for the "claims" out of which they hope to get rich. This is not a case of paying royalty upon gold extracted from land which had been previously purchased, or otherwise subjected to private ownership. All the wealth of the Yukon belongs to the people of Canada, and its Government would be wanting in its duty if it allowed that wealth to be simply carted out of the country by aliens without some sort of compensation. And it must be remembered that these northern gold-fields are exceptional in another and very important way. In the case of many an Australian field it may be truly said that the miners brought more gold to the place than they took away. The mining camp became a village, and then a town, and the town stays long after the mine, which was its origin, has been worked out. The strong attraction of gold brought immigration, and these settlers proved a truer and more permanent form of wealth than the precious metals which were taken away. There can be no such compensations in the case of a place like Dawson City. The gold-bearing gravel may last a shorter or a longer period, but when it is exhausted the district will again become an unconsidered solitude. In other words, the industry is not helping to build up the Dominion, or in any appreciable degree to add to its lasting strength. Under these circumstances, it is to be borne in mind that the people of far-off Ontario and Quebec should be taxed to provide police and mail service, and the whole paraphernalia of Government, only to enable a few Canadian and British adventurers and a crowd of aliens to get rich.

No better proof of the conviction of the Canadian people that the officials of the Yukon have been traduced could be offered than the result of the miniature general election which has just taken place. The constituencies which heard the accusations all through the summer have now given an unmistakable vote of confidence in the Government. They know that Mr. Sifton, the Minister directly responsible for the management of the Yukon, has hunted down the tale-bearers and done his best to bring them to repeat their stories in the open. But what seemed a cloud of adverse witnesses simply moved on, until there was none to pin down to any definite charge of corruption against a single Dominion official. What Mr. Sifton has done in Ottawa, the Gold

Mr. FIELDING.

Commissioner, Mr. Fawcett, and the administrator, Mr. Ogilvie, have done in Dawson City, and with like results. In a country in which, for every man who obtains a good location there are ten who want to steal it, there is certain to be plenty of grumbling and discontent, and suggestion of corruption, but now that the Government has invited complaint and courted investigation, the whole monstrous story has collapsed like a pricked bladder.

This correspondent also quotes a letter regarding Mr. Ogilvie, and I will ask the House to bear with me while I read it.

Mr. IVES. Is it dated Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is headed "From a Canadian correspondent," but is not dated.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him ? It has been stated and restated, during this debate, that there are only 100,000 Canadian miners in that country, and that the great majority are Americans. Will the hon. gentleman be able to give us the relative proportions of foreign and Canadian miners in the Yukon district ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not in a position to do so, and I do not know that any statistics can be given, but the testimony of the writers on the press generally is, that the proportion of Canadians to the total population of Dawson City is exceedingly small. This correspondent quotes a letter from a resident of Dawson City respecting Mr. Ogilvie :

Ottawa may have made him a governor, but the people have made him a patriarch, ruler and father in one. Mr. Ogilvie's technical knowledge, his previous years of experience, and his honest, hearty and simple personality combine to make him the ideal miner's friend. The commissioner's coterie office is daily crowded with men—splendid looking, rugged fellows—who come in from the creeks, long miles over the trail, to have their word with him. And he sees them all ; permits them to tell their story in their own fashion ; advises, warns, explains, sympathizes, and they go away reassured that the real attitude of the Government towards them is one of kindness, fair-dealing and justice—an attitude fairly expressed in the person of the new administrator.

My hon. friend at my right hands me another tribute, one published in the "Outlook," in its issue of April 8th—a well-known English paper, which takes a great interest in Canadian affairs :

Considering the enormous difficulties of governing a sub-Arctic wilderness, remote from all touch of civilization, Mr. Sifton and his Canadian officials have done singularly well in the Klondike. We say this in the face of the six hours' arraignment of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper in the Dominion House of Commons last week.

I have some more testimony here. Hon. gentlemen opposite have been so anxious to show that the country is ringing with these charges that I think, when I quote the testimony of the correspondent of the "Pall Mall Gazette," and when I quote the editorial article from the "Outlook," I have given a clear answer to their charges in that respect. And now I propose to give them another testimony. You will observe that all these I have quoted are of recent date—the present month of April. I have now a quotation from the "Anglo-American" magazine, published in its April number, which contains an article on the Yukon territory, written by Mr. Thomas Crahan. The writer of this article says that he left Dawson City on the 28th January, 1899, so that his information is of very recent date; and, after a very interesting description of the affairs of the Yukon, he winds up as follows—and let me add that the "Anglo-American" magazine is a magazine published simultaneously in London and New York, and the writer of this particular article happens to be an American:—

What impresses an American most of all, especially if he has been accustomed to rough life in mining communities in the United States is the general enforcement of law and consequent protection to life and property. Men like William Ogilvie, commissioner of the Yukon territory, Gold Commissioner Senkler, and Colonel Steele, commanding the Mounted Police, are perhaps impossible official products under the American system of appointment to office. These gentlemen so faithfully, impartially and strictly enforce the details of Government entrusted to them that there is no place in the United States where a man's life, property and rights are more thoroughly protected than they are in the Yukon territory. Law-breaking, which has often characterized new mining camps in the United States, is impossible in that district.

Such is the testimony, on the 29th January last, of an American gentleman who writes that article in the "Anglo-American" magazine. I am not going to detain the House much longer, but I want to say now that I can well understand what may have happened in the Conservative caucus, or one of those inner circles of the party to which I thought my hon. friend from Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) had been admitted, but which he is disposed to repudiate. We can imagine a leading member on that side of the House saying to his faithful assembled: "Well, it is no use; we cannot make anything on our present ground of attack. Everything we predicted regarding the reign of this Government has been shown to be false. We predicted that the business of the country was going to be ruined, but you know it is more profitable now than ever. You had better turn to the Klondike, and see if we cannot make some capital out of that. We predicted that trade and commerce would fail, but their statistics are greater than ever before. We predicted that factories would close and the operatives be turned out of employment, but our factories are busy night and day, and the wages of the workmen in the great establishments of the country are increased. We predicted that everything wrong would happen under the Liberal Administration, but none of those things have happened. We predicted that the credit of the country would suffer, but it is higher than ever it was. We predicted an era of deficits, but our revenue is more flourishing than it has been for many years. We predicted a great exposure of corruption in the Drummond deal, but we had an investigation and discovered there was no corruption, and we had to acknowledge there was none. These things are all too near home; better let us look to the Yukon. We have been engaged in making all these charges and anticipations respecting the policy of the Government, but it has all been in vain. The trouble is, all these things we are talking about are too near the minds and eyes of the people, and they can see the hollowness of the whole thing. Let us turn our attention to a country four thousand or five thousand miles away, near the Arctic circle, from which it will take a long time to get the facts of the case, and in the meantime there will be some people ungenerous enough to believe us." That is the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. I am confident that the people will understand it to-day, as they did in the past in all the by-elections carried from time to time.

The hon. leader of the Opposition has told us that Canada has been disgraced in this matter. Sir, Canada was never disgraced in the eyes of the world, under a Liberal Administration. It was not a Liberal Administration which held power in 1872, when these events occurred which drove the then Conservative Government from power under circumstances which led the London "Standard,"—the organ of the great Conservative party in England—to say that these public men should never be allowed again to enter public life. It was not Liberals who were in power in 1891, when we had an investigation that brought to light scandals in a public works department which brought the blush of shame to every Canadian travelling in a foreign land. The Liberal Government under the Administration and leadership of Alexander Mackenzie, gave Canada five years of pure and upright administration—

Mr. IVES. But he said he had to stand guard over the public chest.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But when the chest was left in the keeping of others, there was nobody to stand guard over it; it was robbed and exploited right and left. Under the leadership of Alexander Mackenzie, the Liberal Government of Canada gave Canada five years of pure and upright government, such as no Liberal need blush to have mentioned; and when the time comes, as come it may, when there is another change of Government—when, in the dim and distant future, the Liberal party shall be required to hand over the seals of office to another party—I will venture to say that it will retire with that same record of honest, vigorous, pure administration under the leadership of the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It has been somewhat amusing to listen to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding), who has just taken his seat; and it was equally amusing to listen to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who spoke last Friday. For two hours the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) has beaten the air, and has proclaimed in the most vehement language his views on this important question. He has gone into the matter with vigour, he has spoken very loudly and spoken at great length. While he was speaking I was reminded of an account that I read once of a Scotch minister, who gave out his text, "For the devil goeth about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour." He said: My dear Christian friends, we will endeavour to follow the old, orthodox plan, dividing our subject into four heads. First, we shall inquire who the devil was; secondly, we will proceed with the investigation, and seek to ascertain where the devil he was going; thirdly, we will try to learn who the devil he was seeking; fourthly, I will endeavour to explain that portion of the text which is seldom explained, and show what the devil he was roaring about. It occurred to me that if we analysed the hon. gentleman's logic, or attempt to estimate the force of his argument or the cogency of his reasoning, or the relevancy of the examples he gave in defence of his case, we should find a great deal to be said in support of the analogy I have suggested. I confess that nearly everything that the hon. gentleman said we had heard already several times. Still, I can appeal to the members of this House and to the people of the country, whether they can avoid, the conclusion that, notwithstanding all the hon. gentleman has said, notwithstanding the able defence he has given of the employees of the Government in the Yukon, notwithstanding the papers he has read in this House, there was a great deal of rascality of Government officials in that country, and that the management of affairs was not anything like what it should have been.

Now, I have said that the hon. gentleman had spoken with great vehemence and for a great length of time. I was looking over the papers to-day, and thought it interesting, while the hon. gentleman was speaking, to note what some of his own friends said with regard to the course these hon. gentlemen were taking. I have here the Winnipeg "Tribune," which indulges in some editorial criticism of what is going on in this House. It goes on to note that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is "moving in the direction of stopping some of the wind-jamming at Ottawa." It says:

Mr. FIELDING.

John Ross Robertson, of Toronto, one of Manitoba's staunchest friends in the time of her school troubles, and the able champion of anti-monopoly, spoke for just seven minutes in the debate, and expressed more ideas in that space of time than would be found in the speeches of quarter-day desk-pounders in a year. An ex-member for Norfolk, Mr. S. J. Thompson, once said of a member in the local house, that the man was in the habit of setting his mouth going, and then going away and leaving it.

Seeing this reference, I thought it would be interesting to find out what the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) had said:

I am much mistaken if the demand of the country for the truth of all these proceedings in the Yukon can be suppressed by the tactics of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). An investigation conducted by the friends of that gentleman (Mr. Sifton) under the control of the Minister may suit his followers—I admit that they are not as scarce as I would like to see them—but there is a public opinion which demands more than an inquiry by Wm. Ogilvie, with limited powers. Such an investigation may be very good as far as it goes, but there is great need of an inquiry to show the whole truth about the proceedings in the Yukon. This inquiry when it comes, should not stop short of showing how so many members of the Black Horse Cavalry from Manitoba got so very rich in a very short time on very small salaries. I have no more to say, Mr. Speaker, further than to express the hope that this investigation will be proceeded with, and that the Yukon business will not be allowed to rest until the whole truth is fully brought up.

Now, there is another point to which I think it worth while to refer. I have noticed that when a speech on the other side is finished and a gentleman on this side rises to reply, some hon. gentleman on the other side goes around whispering to his fellow members on that side and causes them to leave the Chamber. Moreover, the Minister of the Interior, who stands charged before this House and the country with mismanagement of the affairs of his department, is rarely in the House either to answer our questions, to defend himself against the charges brought against him or to listen to what is said. Very few of his colleagues of the Ministry remain. I would like to call the attention of the people of the country to this point, and to ask the people if they regard this as proper conduct on the part of the members of the Administration. And I wish to tell these hon. gentlemen that though they can show their petty spite by going around and asking their friends to leave the Chamber so as to show a very thin House while members on this side are speaking, the people of the country, who read what takes place, cannot be answered in this way.

Let me touch briefly on some points in the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding). The last quotations he made were intended to justify what is going on in the Yukon now. He read an extract from the "Outlook," an English paper. I have a copy of that paper, some gentleman having been kind enough to send it over. The Minister of Finance read a portion of it that seemed to justify the contention he was making at the time, but he stopped exactly at the point where he should not have stopped. He read :

Considering the enormous difficulties of governing a sub-Arctic wilderness, remote from all touch of civilization, Mr. Sifton and his Canadian officials have done singularly well in the Klondike. We say this in the face of the six hours' arraignment of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper in the Dominion House of Commons last week.

What does it go on to say ?

We all see now that it was a prime mistake to allow the officials to stake out claims for themselves ;—

And that is known all over the world and we admit it.

—the true policy, and the one most in line with British traditions would have been to pay these officials salaries commensurate with the great difficulties and temptations of their position.

If the hon. gentleman can extract any comfort from that, I am quite willing that he should have it.

Next he quoted from the "Pall Mall Gazette," which he said is a reputable English paper, and, therefore, its statements must be worthy of consideration. I am told that the "Pall Mall Gazette" is owned by an American named Astor, that it is one of the radical papers of that country, is an unreliable paper, and is not by any means regarded as a reputable paper amongst the English reading public. I am so told by a newspaper man of intelligence and long experience in the journalistic world, and I give his statement for what it is worth. Then the hon. gentleman read from the Klondike "Nugget," and he went on to tell what these gentlemen were doing for the purpose of accomplishing their object. Their object is the redress of the evils which they found existing up there. He went on to say that one of these gentlemen had written in his paper that they required funds to carry on a lobby down here, because they could not expect success without a lobby. Now, early in his article the proprietor of that paper says : Of course, we know the Opposition are with us. Well, it is natural to suppose that being politically opposed to the Government, this gentleman would expect the Opposition to sympathize with their complaints. But we must remember that the Government party are in a majority in this House and no measure can be carried without a majority. Now if these gentlemen required money for lobbying or for corrupt purposes with whom are they going to use the money ? Certainly, not with the Opposition, but with the supporters of the Government. These gentlemen knew the material they had to deal with, and it is surely a strange defence for their position to say that money collected for lobbying purposes was likely to be used on members of the Opposition. I say these gentlemen knew the material they had to deal with, and knew on whom they would have to use the money. On the other hand, there is another feature worthy of consideration. It could not be expected that these gentlemen would come away 6,000 miles at their own expense for the purpose of looking after the interests of the miners in that country. Therefore, it was necessary to have some funds to pay their expenses, and it is the most natural thing in the world that they should ask assistance from the miners in that country in whose interests they were coming down here and endeavouring to get redress for their grievances. It was the most natural thing in the world that the miners should contribute a sum to help bear their expenses.

The hon. gentleman went on to read a letter from the department through the Deputy Minister, inviting persons to send into the commissioner any charges that they might have, covering the last two years, so that they might be inquired into. But would it follow that if men having a grievance sent in charges, they would not be interfered with ? We know there was one charge sent in, a charge that Mr. Muller, of Pembroke, published in his paper. He tells us of the troubles a miner had to contend with out there in the mismanagement of the department, and as soon as the officials came to know who this man was, although he was a friend of theirs, and that he had made these charges, what did they do ? Why, in the language of that country, they "fixed" him, they put him into a lucrative position, and in that manner silenced him. Therefore, I say we are entitled to come to the same conclusion with regard to that letter, that letter may have been sent for the purpose of getting hold of these people in order to "fix" them, so that when they came before the commission their evidence would not be likely to hurt the Minister of the Interior or this Government. Now, the Minister of Finance said that when you have to inquire into the conduct of subordinate officials, hired men are the best for the purpose. I would ask that hon. gentleman if he and his friends followed that course when they inquired into the conduct of the customs-house officers and the postmasters throughout the Dominion, after the last election ? Who did they appoint ? One of the officials ? Not by any means. They appointed a police magistrate in some cases, a judge in other cases ; and the defence which they gave for these appointments was that if we desired a fair tribunal, one that was not under Government influence, a tribunal that would do justice to all parties concerned, they must appoint outside officials. Now, if that principle applied to the commissioners they appointed then, it applies with equal force to the commissioner they have appointed to inquire into the charges in the Yukon. Therefore, I say his contention that hired men are the best to send up there is not justified by the facts. He went on to say that on the 10th of October, 1898, a letter was sent to Mr. Ogilvie accompanying his commission. He says that they acted with all despatch, because they wanted a report of that inquiry before Parliament met. Well, Parliament has been in session for over a month, over six months have elapsed since they sent the commission, and we have no report from Mr. Ogilvie yet. That commission was despatched on the 10th of October, and although we are told by the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) that since last fall the mails have been regular, and the service has been regular outward and inward, with a steady and periodical service, yet strange to say, although a messenger was despatched with that commission on the 10th of October, we hear nothing of its reaching Dawson until some time about the 10th of February. Is that an evidence of an uninterrupted and periodical postal service? Not by any means. But they did not even trust that commission to the postal service of the country, nor to the Postmaster General's servants, as we would expect to be the case if the mails were regular and periodical, but they sent a special messenger with the commission, showing how little confidence they had in the postal service. That does not seem to indicate to me any great hurry or anxiety to expedite matters, but the very reverse.

The hon. gentleman gave us the date of the miners' petition, and he gave us the date of other things. He started out by saying that it was pleasing to know how completely the conduct of the Minister of the Interior had been vindicated. Sir, I do not think his conduct has been at all vindicated in the minds of the supporters of the Government in this House, or in the minds of the poor miners up there who are still complaining. Has it been vindicated in the minds of the people of the country who are still hearing complaints from their friends in the Yukon, day after day and week after week? Has the great public mind been satisfied about it? Not by any means. Their own friends in this House may be satisfied, but I can assure the hon. gentleman that the conduct of the Minister of the Interior has not been vindicated in the minds of the people of this country. The hon. gentleman congratulates himself upon how completely the attacks of the Opposition have been refuted. Refuted by whom? I have not heard them refuted. The charges are on the records of the House, they are strong, numerous and specific, and yet up to the present, not one of those charges has been refuted. The hon. gentleman goes on to say that the Crown prosecutor was alleged to have taken retainers from both sides. But, says the hon. gentleman, there was nothing in it, it was not true that he had taken retainers from both sides. Now.

let us see what is set out in the miners' petition. The allegation is this :

With respect to decisions in claim contests, much dissatisfaction has arisen, particularly owing to the fact that the Crown Prosecutor being the only person to whom the Gold Commissioner could look for legal advice, permitted himself to be retained as an advocate by one of the contestants.

While he was retained by one of the contestants who was seeking redress, he was retained to give advice to the Gold Commissioner on behalf of the Crown. If this is not evidence I do not know what is, yet the hon. Minister of Finance has said that every charge has been refuted. That charge has not been refuted beyond a simple denial coming from the party charged, it has not been refuted and stands to-day as it was made, by the miners of that country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like for a short time to draw attention to what I think ought to receive our attention in connection with this amendment and the amendment to the amendment. The amendment says that we want an impartial tribunal to inquire into the charges so as to satisfy all parties that justice will be done. The hon. Minister of the Interior admits that charges were made before the Government sent out that commission. He admits it, at page 860 of the "Hansard," where he says that some time before the 15th of July, 1898, attacks had been made in the press on Wade and McGregor. He states that in his own speech, and yet the hon. Minister of Finance says: As soon as the first rumours appeared in the papers that complaints were made, he immediately took action. The hon. Minister of the Interior does not say so, because he tells us that attacks had been made in the press upon Mr. Wade and Mr. McGregor, and that he took no action at that time. That was on the 15th of July, while the commission went on the 10th of October. Thus it will be seen an unreasonable length of time passed before he did anything. The investigation began on the 6th of February, 1899. He heard the complaints on the 15th of July, 1898, and the investigation was to be commenced on the 6th of February, 1899, over eight months from the time that he first heard these complaints. That does not seem to indicate that he was in any very great hurry. He made this statement himself on page 892 of the "Hansard." The commission to Mr. Ogilvie to investigate charges was sent forward on the 10th of October. That is absolutely correct. It was not received by Mr. Ogilvie until the 25th January, 1899, although it was sent on the 10th of October, 1898. I give that as evidence that there were very great interruptions in the communication between that country and the outside. There is a continuous line of posts, says the hon. Minister of the Interior, so that you can travel just as comfortably, almost, as in this part of the country. If that was the case why did it take so long to get in with that commission? I would like to know that, and I think the members of this House ought to know. The Postmaster General says that the mails have gone forward regularly. How is it that the mails did not reach there? Here is a copy of a telegram sent from Vancouver on the 17th of April, 1899, and it comes from the Bank of Commerce, an institution which would not be likely to mislead us in regard to what took place. "The Bank of Commerce acknowledges the receipt of our letter," says Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, "of the 12th of September, on the 12th of March."

It took that letter to get to the Bank of Commerce six months, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. Postmaster General says that the service is regular, periodical and complete. Could any better evidence be afforded of the condition existing there than that letter. It comes from a reputable source. I do not think it is likely to be incorrect, and I am quite sure the party who wrote it could have no object in trying to mislead the country. The hon. Minister of the Interior says that the investigation at Dawson before Mr. Ogilvie would be futile. He says on page 903 of the "Hansard"—I have it here so that hon. gentlemen might not think that I have misquoted him :

To attempt to hold an investigation when nobody would make a charge is an extremely unsatisfactory and futile thing ; and the investigation at Dawson City promises to be futile, though charges have been made.

It promises to be futile, yet the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), gets up and asks this House to say that it is satisfied that the investigation will be a thorough one, that every inquiry will be made by the commission already appointed, and that justice will be done to every party, while the hon. Minister of the Interior admits that the investigation, under the authority of that commission, will be futile. Whom are we to believe—the Minister of the Interior who ought to know most about it, or the member for Centre Toronto, who wishes to whitewash the friends of his party who have gone up there? I leave it to themselves to decide. The hon. Minister of the Interior admitted the necessity of investigation by sending forward a commission, and I want to say in regard to all that has been said on the other side of the House this : The hon. Minister of Finance tells us that every charge has been refuted, that the conduct of the Minister of the Interior has been amply justified, that no injustice has been done to any one. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated on Friday night—we want specific and authentic charges ; we have not had them. We want definite charges ; we have not had them. We want charges that can be taken hold of ; we have not had them, and, therefore, there is nothing to justify the appointment of a commission such as has been moved for by the amendment. If the hon. Minister of Finance be justified in saying that every charge has been refuted, that no injustice has been done to any one, why was that commission appointed? Why was the country put to the expense of a commission? Why did the Government appoint a commission, if, as the hon. gentlemen say, the commission was unnecessary? Though hon. gentlemen say that the commission was not necessary, the hon. Minister of the Interior goes on and appoints that commission. It seems to me that this is an answer to the whole of the arguments that have been advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite for the last week or ten days back, that there has been no wrong-doing, that there is nothing in the charges, that the charges of wrong-doing are idle rumour. It shows that the charges are not foundationless, because they appointed a commission and sent it up with all convenient speed. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said another thing that attracted our attention. He said that the Order in Council appointing that commission restricted the commission. Why would you appoint another commission? He said that this one has full authority, but it was pointed out that parties wanted to bring before that commission charges relating to matters that had transpired after the 25th of August, the date of the miners' petition, and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries said : Why should they want to go into that ; he had not authority to do it. We have no power because the authority under which the commission was issued did not permit it. Why did he restrict the power of the commission to inquire into complaints to the period before the 25th of August? Here is the clause of the Act which gives the Government the power to issue the commission :

Her Majesty, by and with the consent of the House of Commons and Senate of Canada, enacts as follows :—

"Whenever the Privy Council deems it expedient to cause an inquiry to be made into and concerning any matter in connection with the Government of Canada, or the conduct of any of the public business thereof, and such inquiry is not regulated by any special law, the Governor in Council may, by a commission in the case, confer upon a commissioner or person by whom such inquiry is to be conducted, the power of summoning before them any witnesses, and of requiring them to give evidence under oath, orally or in writing or a solemn affirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters ; and to produce such documents and things as such commissioners deem requisite for a full investigation of the matters into which they are appointed to examine. Such commission or commissioners shall have the same power to enforce the attendance of such witnesses and compel them to give evidence as is vested in any court of record in civil cases, but no such witness shall be compelled to answer any question by the answer of which he might render himself liable to prosecution.

As I read that Act, it does not at all limit the power to appoint a commissioner to inquire into acts which have been committed between any dates, or for that matter at any time. The law gives the Government power to appoint a commissioner clothed with all authority to inquire into charges which might be made after that miner's petition was received, and, notwithstanding that, the Government have specified a particular time, and conferred authority only to inquire into the charges set out in the petition. If it be denied—I do not think it can be successfully denied—by any gentleman, be he lawyer or layman, that the Government have not power to create a commission to inquire into wrong-doing at any time, this House would like to know the reasons for such a denial. In my judgment it was simply speaking beside the question for any hon. gentleman opposite to say, that this Act limited the Government to any specified time. The hon. gentleman from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) objects to a fishing expedition. No doubt he does in this case, but when it suits his party they are willing to go on fishing expeditions at any time. What does he think of that fishing expedition which was referred to by the leader of the Opposition and which was instituted by Mr. Sifton, before he became a member of this House, in connection with the alleged election frauds in Manitoba. They had no specific charges then, and although they had only suspicion to go on, yet, on the 26th of June, three days after the election, they telegraphed to Pinkerton to send on his detectives. Not only that, but before these gentlemen had control of the Dominion treasury, they promised to pay the expenses, and although Mr. Sifton was not even then a member of the House they arranged with him to pay the expenses of these detectives on that fishing expedition. The bill was rendered to Mr. Sifton before he became a member of this House; a draft was made on him for $541, which was afterwards reduced by taxation to $313.16, and the Minister of Justice (Sir Oliver Mowat) approved of it and paid the bill. Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bertram) if that was not a fishing inquiry? He (Mr. Bertram) objects to the expenditure of public money without definite charges, but what has he to say to that expenditure without any charges at all. What has he to say to that deliberate violation of the law, perpetrated by his friends who now object to what they call a fishing inquiry?

Sir, this commission is unnecessarily restricted to charges made before the 25th of August, 1898. In the Klondike there is a moving population of miners who may be scattered all over the world, and whose evidence cannot be obtained, within a short time, and yet the commission is quite satisfactory to the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram). Then, Sir, the scope of the commission is only partial. There were charges made against Major Walsh, but that commission does not authorize Mr. Ogilvie to inquire into the conduct of Major Walsh in any way. The usefulness of that inquiry was destroyed by the limited commission authorized, and there is yet urgent necessity, therefore, for the appointment of some other competent tribunal or commission in which the country will have confidence, and which will render justice to all concerned. The hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) says, that a judicial commission is not desirable and that in fact the judges would not undertake it. Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) if it was not a judicial commission that inquired into the charges against Mr. Parnell? Let me ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) also, has he not a precedent for a judicial commission in the appointment of Judge Clark to inquire into rumours with regard to irregularities in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway? Hon. gentlemen opposite at that date claimed that the greatest necessity existed for the appointment of an impartial tribunal, one that would have the confidence of the country, but they are playing a different tune to-day. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) stated that the Act did not give authority to issue a commission to inquire into charges that might be made in the future, but I have read the statute, and it is clear from it that it is wide and comprehensive enough to appoint a commissioner to inquire into charges that may have been made after the commission was issued, as well as before. But, complained the Minister of Marine; We have no authentic charges, and he proceeded to lecture the House on that assumption. He contended that the charges were not specific or definite, that they are only idle rumours, that they are not reliable, and he wound up with the statement that there is not a scintilla of evidence to justify such charges, that no wrong-doing nor misconduct on the part of the officials had been established, and, therefore, there was no necessity for a judicial commission. Sir, have we not the petition from the miners who delegated thirteen of their members to prefer these charges, and have we not in that petition specified charges of corruption, bribery and maladministration? That petition was received by the Minister of the Interior, and was believed by him to such an extent that he appointed a commission. And, Sir, who were the parties implicated? They were none other than the crown prosecutor and the officials in the Gold Commissioner's office, and yet the Minister, as reported on pages 792 and 793 of the "Hansard," states that these charges are not definite. Then we have the letters of Miss Shaw to her paper, the London "Times," a very reputable paper, admitted to be so by the Minister of Finance; and the correspondent of that paper would not be likely to say or do what was unfair. What were the charges she made? Corruption and maladministration. Of whom? The officials of the Department of the Interior and of the post office; and the editorial comments of the "Times" are exactly on the same line. We have next Captain Caddell. What was his charge? Corruption and bribery. Of whom? The officials in the Post Office and Interior Department. Yet it is said the charges are not specific, though they are set forth in "Hansard." Then, we have Dr. Leblanc. What is his charge? Bribery and corruption. Of whom? The officials of the Interior Department. Then we have Mrs. Dubois, and her evidence is confirmed by that of J. F. Murdock. What is her charge? Defrauding miners of their claims. She had been defrauded out of her claim, and the collateral evidence of Mr. Murdock confirmed her charge. What was it? That Hurdman, a clerk in the Gold Commissioner's office, got a portion of the claim to which she was entitled. Then we have C. M. Woodworth. What is his charge? Maladministration of the officials up there generally. Then we have Messrs. Allen and Semple. Their charge is maladministration, blackmail, bribery and general corruption. Of whom? Officials in the Gold Commissioner's office. Yet the charges are not specific, says the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Then we have Col. McGregor, of Glengarry. What is his charge? Corruption and fraud. Of whom? Officials of the Interior Department. This is set out on page 940 of "Hansard." Then we have Mr. J. S. Campbell, a good Reformer, a friend of their own, who charges them with what? With bribery and corruption. Of whom? Officials of the Interior Department. And his charges are set out on pages 1457 and 1458 of "Hansard." And yet we are told that there are no specific charges. Then, we have the press, in which I think we shall find something worthy of consideration. I take the Reform press. I take, first, what is said by the Hon. Joseph Martin:

If the miners have not been telling the truth, there is a strange unanimity in what they are telling. Not only Americans, but Canadians and Englishmen, have entered most vigorous protests against the prevailing condition of affairs, and there does not appear to be much doubt that something is seriously wrong. The fact that the most bitter protests come from British subjects is significant, and it is very difficult to believe that bribery and corruption has not been rampant.

Then I take what is said by one of the members of this House, Mr. Ellis, in his paper:

Every official is looking out for his own interests only, and if a miner without interests wants to find out anything he has to grease somebody's dirty paw. One cannot even see the mining records to find out what claims are or are not recorded without bribery and corruption.

That ought, I think, to be a reliable authority. Then I take Mr. R. C. Muller, editor of the Pembroke "Observer," Liberal, and he sends this from Dawson to his paper:

For myself, I did not believe the Government knew anything of the dirt here, even if it really existed, as charged though many good friends have indignantly declared to me that it is their business to know. Since I have reached Dawson I have almost been forced to a like conclusion, and have no hesitation in declaring that if they do not take strong and speedy steps to end the orgie that is in progress here, they will not only have become partners in the dirt themselves, but shall have permitted the continuance of a system which must result in a very great financial and moral injury to the Dominion. I have been here now for two weeks, and have been noting and inquiring on every hand, and though I cannot give you facts and figures, I have seen enough to convince myself that it is worse even than the mind of an honest man can conceive. That the mining laws are being set aside on a colossal scale is beyond all question, and that bare-faced bribery is the rule of the day is equally certain.

This is written by one of their own friends, and they say it is not reliable. Yet, strange to say, this is one of the men who came out, and I am told he has got a lucrative office, and is not likely to give any more damaging evidence against them. Then I take the Kingston "Whig," another Liberal paper, and what does it say?

It is nothing but a system of boodling from beginning to end that prevails in the Klondike. The Government, as the district was so far away, gave the officials too much power, and they have used it despotically. There is no service of the Government there which is not corrupt.

Then I take Dr. Steele, a Liberal, of Grahamsville, in the county of Peel, and what does he say?

If it were not for the presence of the mounted police, I firmly believe that every official here except the customs collector, would be publicly hanged, and the Minister of the Interior at Ottawa along with them, if he could be got at. So scandalous has been the treatment of the miners for the last year that such a fate would be richly deserved.

Then I take Mr. W. Baird, a Liberal, of Dawson, who writes this to one of his friends:

I have always been a Grit heretofore, but must admit that this is the rottenest outfit up here that it has ever been my business to come in contact with.

Then I take the Vancouver "World," a Liberal paper, published by a very respectable Liberal, I am told, and it says:

From letters received from reputable gentlemen at Dawson, we have the declaration that more than one of the Dominion officials feathered their private nests pretty well while paid to look after the interests of the public.

The Winnipeg "Tribune," a Liberal paper says:

It is very plausible to cry that no specific charges have been laid. This is not true; but even if it had been it does not help the case. Wrongs have been committed, and everybody whose intelligence surpasses that of the partisan pigmy recognizes the fact and desires to see the remedy applied as speedily as possible.

Then I take the Edmonton "Bulletin," a paper published by another friend of theirs, and what does it say :

The "Globe" and its western annex the "Free Press" (of Winnipeg), have two ready answers to all criticisms of Yukon mining laws, Yukon officials or Yukon railway policies. First, they say that the critics are Yankees, and, second, that they are Conservatives. One reason why these crushing answers are not self-sufficient may be because they lack what at one time was supposed to be the essential element of truth. As a matter of fact, Canadians and Liberals are as little pleased with the administration of the Yukon as Yankees or Conservatives. The effort of these two papers, the purport of their existence, is to get the Liberal Government—placed in power by the people to give clean administration—to prostitute that power for the benefit of the owners of these papers and the interests allied with them. So far, they have succeeded marvellously, on one hand, in advantaging themselves, and on the other, in making Liberal professions and principles upon which Canadian elections were fought for twenty years, and finally won, a by-word and laughing-stock.

With all this Liberal testimony, will it still be said that there are no specific charges? I could cite other extracts, but I need not do so. The charges, I contend, are specific, and the names of the parties are given. I have given the information contained in these papers—not papers which support the Conservative party, but which are friendly to this Government, and I think I am justified in saying that the charges are sufficiently definite, specific and conclusive to justify the appointment of an independent commission.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. SPROULE. When you left the Chair, Sir, at six o'clock, I was giving the charges which were submitted to this House, and which, in our judgment, justify the appointment of an independent commission. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), during his long, laboured and energetic speech, contended that there had been no wrong-doing, and that the allegations of wrong-doing have all been disproved. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) contended that the charges were not definite or specific, that a commission had already been appointed, and he lectured especially this side of the House on the proper, the legal, the parliamentary way of making such charges. He said they must be definite and specific allegations of fact, to the personal knowledge of the members who made them, before they were presented to this House. If his view be correct, how could a member of Parliament bring to the notice of the House allegations of wrongdoing in any part of the country in connection with its public administration. Would the hon. gentleman's view not very materially circumscribe or limit the usefulness of members of Parliament? Would we be able to do as we have been doing, session after session, bring to the attention of the House any acts of wrong-doing, whether by officials of the Government or others connected with the Government, which have been brought to light through the press of the country or by means of reliable rumours or specific acts? A member of Parliament would, in that case, be of little use, because he could not then bring to the notice of Parliament acts of wrong-doing that take place from time to time, and we would be prohibited from referring to acts which would reflect upon any Minister of the Crown or his subordinate officer. If the doctrine he laid down be the proper one, how is it that we heard so much during the session of 1881 and 1892, with regard to the conduct of the civil service and their dereliction in connection with the Esquimalt Graving Dock and the works that were going on at Kingston and on the Welland Canal? Why, these charges were repeated over and over again in the House, and no unreasonable exception taken to them. What would, also, have become of the charges that were made, or at least rumoured, throughout the country with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and, in contrast to what has been done to-day, I need only state the fact, that the Minister of Railways of that day availed himself of the very earliest opportunity, even before the charges were made in this House, and when it was only a matter of current rumour in the press that there was wrong-doing in connection with the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, by moving a resolution in this House for the appointment of an impartial and independent tribunal, composed of one of the ablest judges of the land, for the purpose of holding an inquiry and making a report into these charges. That being the case, it seems to me that these precedents amply justify the course of the Opposition on the present occasion. But we have hon. gentlemen opposite, especially the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) contending that these charges made to-day, before they can be taken notice of at all, must be specific in their nature, and arguing that they are not specific, but only mere rumour, and therefore not reliable; that there is not a scintilla of evidence to justify them, and that therefore there can be no question of appointing a commission. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) contended to-night that no wrong-doing or misconduct on the part of the officials has been established, but that all the allegations of wrong-doing have been disproved over and over again by hon. gentlemen on that side. I would like to ask how they have been disproved. We have had no evidence from the parties against whom these wrongs were committed; we have no collateral evidence from those who were in a position to give evidence upon the points in question. We have only the denial of the parties accused, and of their friends in this House. Is that reliable? The criminal invariably denies his guilt—it is the most natural thing for him to do. But that denial is not proof of innocence. You have in this case only the denial of the parties accused, a denial that might be expected as a matter of course.

Mr. SPROULE.

In face of these allegations that there is no wrong-doing, and that charges of wrong-doing have been disproved, in the face of the allegation that there is no ground for appointing a commission, the Government yet appointed a commission. Is not this a plain contradiction of their pretensions? Is it not an acknowledgment to the world that they believed there was wrong-doing? Surely, if they believe that, that there was nothing in these charges but mere rumour, they would not appoint a commission to investigate. Their very action is an admission that there was something to be investigated. Therefore, we all agree up to that stage—that it was necessary that a commission should be appointed. We disagree with hon. gentlemen, and upon what grounds? We do not approve, as they do, the personnel of the commission. We contend that the commission to be of value, must be an impartial tribunal, one that will do its work properly, ably and efficiently, a tribunal that is under no obligations to the Government or to the subordinates under them.

It would be important to inquire here what are the objects aimed at by the appointment of a commission; for, to ascertain that will better enable us to judge what kind of commission should be appointed. The first object of a commission is to ascertain whether anything is being done that is wrong, and, if so, to punish the wrong-doer. The second object is, if no wrong-doing exists, to vindicate the character and integrity and probity of the official whose character has been aspersed. Now, that is, to my mind, a very important part. Now, will the commission that has been appointed do these things? It is true the commission may fairly inquire into alleged wrong-doing to ascertain if the charges are well founded. But, is it likely to be an impartial tribunal? Now, I think that it is quite unlikely to be an impartial tribunal. Why? Because the commissioner is an employee of the Government and would suffer if these charges were proven to be correct, for in all probability he would lose his situation. Therefore, I respectfully submit that it will not satisfy the country to say that the Minister of the Interior has commissioned one of his own employees, a man who holds office by virtue of his fiat, to inquire into these charges; because, if he is obliged to report that there has been wrong-doing, that will reflect upon the Minister of the Interior particularly and upon the whole Government. Then, again, will this commission vindicate the character and integrity and probity of those whose character has been aspersed? Now, if it were an impartial tribunal it would do so. The tendency of the commission would be to screen these people as far as possible, out of consideration for the Government, that appointed both them and the commission.

The next, and perhaps the most important object of the commission, is to satisfy the public, to establish confidence in the public mind that fair-play and even-handed justice is being meted out to every one who goes to that country or is interested in it. That is, to my mind, one of the most important aims of the commission. Will the commission appointed by the Government establish that confidence in the country? I respectfully submit that it will not; for, when the public know that this man who is appointed is the creature of the Government, an employee of the Government, and yet upon his report the head of the department will stand or will fall before the country, the confidence of the public in the impartiality of the commission will be destroyed. To reconcile the public to the situation and to establish the confidence which it is very important should be established, I respectfully submit that an impartial tribunal should be appointed and that tribunal either a judge or several judges, they having no connection with the Government. I think that every fair-minded man in the country will say that that is the most likely tribunal to establish confidence in the country. It will not be said of such a commission that it is endeavouring to shield the Government; or when it makes a finding that that finding is unjust or wrong. Those who have interests in the Yukon and believe that their interest will be dependent on the probity and ability of the Government officials will feel greater confidence if they know that a commission such as I speak of is investigating the charges. But with such a commission as has been appointed, the very reverse of this will be the case. Confidence will not be established. The public will not be satisfied that everything has been done as it should have been done. But, in addition to all this, we are told that the present commission has no authority, or rather that its authority is circumscribed. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries on Friday night admitted that. While we contend that the Act gave the Government the right to appoint a commission with full authority, they circumscribed the authority of the commissioner. The Minister of the Interior said himself that the action of the commission would be futile. Well, if it is futile, then why not remedy that at the earliest possible opportunity, and appoint a commission whose action will not be futile, and whose authority will not be circumscribed, so that he may inquire into all allegations of wrong-doing, whether before the 25th of September last, or afterwards and up to the present time? Then, it is said by the Minister of the Interior that the man who is sent up there to do his duty has already most arduous and responsible duties to perform. He recited to us many of the lines of work that he had to do, and said that he had a herculean task to attend to, in fact it was almost incredible to suppose that one man could perform all those various duties. Yet, in the face of that, he tacks on to his duties another important work which should require a large share of a man's time to attend to properly. Therefore, I think it is utterly impossible for the present commissioner, in view of the amount of work that is already thrown upon him, to give a sufficient amount of time to the investigation which he ought to make to bring out all the facts that ought to be brought out. Now, what is going to take place, when this commissioner starts his investigation? A witness comes up, and the commissioner asks him if his chief is a rogue. Does a man like to say that his chief is a rogue, or is incompetent, or is dishonest? Not by any means. The very reverse is likely to be the case. Then, again, does not the course of the Government suggest that they have something to fear? If, as they contend, there is no wrong-doing, if the charge has been disproved, would it not be natural to suppose that they would be the first to vindicate that contention, and that they would be glad to send up a tribunal that would make a most searching inquiry and bring out all the facts? It seems to me that their conduct is an acknowledgment of weakness, an acknowledgment of fear, an acknowledgment that they are afraid that something wrong has been done that would bring discredit upon the Government, and for that reason they will not allow a tribunal to be established that would bring everything to light. Now, for these reasons, I say that, in my judgment, the Government are not doing what they should do. The hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), in his amendment to the amendment, declares that the Government have, at the earliest possible moment after there were rumours of wrong-doing, appointed an impartial tribunal to inquire into these charges. Then he went on to say that we did not want a searching inquiry. I say, with all respect to that hon. gentleman, that we do want a searching inquiry. Nothing else will satisfy the people of this country, nothing else will restore confidence to the people but a searching inquiry that will bring all the facts to light, so that we may get at the whole truth. I contend that the only commission that will satisfy the people is an impartial one, consisting of a judge of the land. Nothing but a man of that stamp will be able to do this duty thoroughly, a man clothed with authority to inquire into all allegations of wrong-doing, whether before the 25th of August last, or after that date. If the Government do not grant this request, but call upon their supporters to vote it down, they will cause a great deal of dissatisfaction throughout the country. The electors are watching their course very carefully at the present time, and I believe I am justified in saying that, if they do not take this course of appointing an independent commission, the people will conclude that the Government are afraid to allow the condition of things up there to become known, that there is something they wish to hide from the world and from the electors, otherwise they would be the first to jump at the suggestion to send up an impartial commission to bring out all the facts. In view of all these things, I shall support the amendment, which asks this House to appoint an impartial tribunal, one clothed with sufficient authority, one not limited as is this commission, one that is under no obligations to the Government of the day. We ask that that be done, because we believe that, if it is done, fair-play will be meted out to all; then, if men's characters have been wrongly aspersed, they will be vindicated, and those wrongly charged will stand free before the world. Then, if the Government have done nothing but what is right, they will be strengthened in their position before the electorate of Canada. But if, on the other hand, they refuse to allow this commission to be appointed, and insist upon passing the amendment of the hon. member for Centre Toronto, it will be an acknowledgment of the weakness of their case, an acknowledgment that they dare not make full discourses, an acknowledgment that they are afraid to lay bare before the people of this country the iniquities of their own officials sent up to do the work of the Government in that part of the country; it will be an acknowledgment of the incompetence and incapacity of the Minister of the Interior and the Postmaster General with regard to the conduct of public affairs in that distant part of Canada.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth). I am glad to congratulate my hon. friend who has just taken his seat upon the fair and reasonable temper with which, in the main, he has discussed the proposition before the House. I was amused at the suggestion he threw out to the effect that there was some kind of conspiracy on this side of the House in consequence of which, when members of the Opposition rose to speak, the members of the Government side would slip out and leave but a small audience for our friends opposite to address. But I could not fail to notice that this conspiracy seems also to extend to the gallery, because, after the Minister of Finance had concluded his speech and my hon. friend rose to reply, the same affection seemed to obtrude itself into the galleries, and there was, one might almost say, a perfect bolt for the door in order to avoid the remarks which my hon. friend was about to make. I do not propose to follow at length the arguments which my hon. friend has just addressed to the House, because, in the main, he has followed the lines of many of his predecessors on that side. Such observations as I may make will apply to them, although I may more directly refer to the arguments of other hon. gentlemen who have preceded him. I notice that, although the hon. member rather charged the Minister of Finance with stopping short in a quotation he read, the hon. member himself is not altogether innocent of the same fault, probably because the portion of the quotation which he did not read does not serve his purpose as well. Referring to some remarks made by the Minister of the Interior in regard to the charges made by the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), my hon. friend stated that the Minister had said that the charges, no matter how they might be investigated, would be futile, and in order to prove that, he quoted from the Minister's speech in the "Hansard," as follows:—

To attempt to hold an investigation when nobody would make a charge is an extremely unsatisfactory and futile thing; and the investigation at Dawson City promises to be futile.

There my hon. friend stopped, and argued that even the hon. Minister of the Interior himself, in what he conceded to be a very exhaustive speech, had admitted that this investigation would be futile. But my hon. friend has not finished the quotation presenting the reason given by the hon. Minister of the Interior for this allegation. The hon. Minister of the Interior said further:

—and the investigation at Dawson City promises to be futile, though charges have been made, because the people who have made them have apparently withdrawn them, and will not go before the commissioner and attempt to prove them.

That completes the quotation, and gives the reason why the hon. Minister of the Interior used the language he did. And was he not well supported by the facts? We know that, as a matter of fact, when the commissioner in the Yukon, acting under the large powers given him by the commission from the Government, and within the authority of the letter from the hon. Minister of the Interior that he was to have a free hand—when these gentlemen who made the charges were brought before the commissioner in Dawson City, were invited to go on, they asked permission to withdraw the charges. The commissioner very properly declined to allow the charges to be withdrawn, and insisted that they should be gone on with. The result of that investigation will reach Parliament later on, and we will then know to what extent they complied with the demands of the commissioner and to what extent they were able to produce proof in support of their charges. The hon. gentleman concluded a very interesting argument by the assertion that, after all, we only differ, on the two sides of this House, as to the personnel of the commission and as to the method of making the inquiry. To a certain extent, that is true and to a certain extent this limits the area of the discussion which should be indulged in upon this question. But I have a much graver charge to bring against hon. members of the Opposition, and particularly against the framer of the resolution which is before the House, and it is this, that no impartial reader would fail to believe, after reading this amendment, that not only was it not the intention on the part of the Opposition to have these charges properly investigated, but that there was a positive intention manifested in this amendment that these charges should not be properly investigated, and that the House and the country should not be expected to enter upon an investigation along the lines suggested by this amendment. This, Sir, I think must be admitted to be a serious charge, but I think a reading of the resolution will show that no gentleman at all acquainted with parliamentary practice, custom or procedure, would, for one moment, believe that any legislative assembly, composed of reasonable men, would appoint a judicial committee along the lines suggested by this amendment. I believe the amendment was put forward as a blind to the innocent and honest people of the country or that it was intended that it should be voted down on account of its inherent defects. I challenge any hon. gentleman, on the other side of the House, to ransack the history of this Parliament or that of any other Parliament, and find a legislature asked to appoint a judicial committee with the scope and powers suggested by this amendment. I do not believe it will be found in the history of any British dominion, or any legislature, in any part of the world enjoying responsible government. Let me read the amendment:

That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon, it is the duty of the Government to appoint, without delay, an independent judicial commission to make a thorough investigation into that subject and report the result.

In other words, if this resolution should be adopted, we are led to this conclusion, that three or more judges of the land are to be charged with duties no assembly in this country could hand over without derogating from the powers of the constitution, the duties and responsibilities of Parliament. This judicial committee is not asked to investigate charges of misconduct and corruption, which might be a reasonable proposition and might be reasonably argued for, under many circumstances, but they are asked to investigate, without delay, widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon and report the result. In other words, the judicial commission, under this amendment, would be asked and expected, as the hon. leader of the Opposition insisted in his speech the other night, to investigate all the charges of incapacity connected with the Yukon, that have been in the press and in Parliament since the administration of the territory was assumed by this Government; in fact, in connection with every subject that has to do with the Yukon, they are supposed to investigate, take evidence and report their findings and conclusions, not only upon whether bribery took place at Dawson City up to August 25th or later, not only whether affairs were well and capably managed by the officers there, but whether the administration of affairs showed capacity in reference, we will say, to the construction of the Yukon Railway, in reference to the contract made last year with Mackenzie & Mann. They are to open up the whole of these matters; they are to take evidence and report the result of their judicial views upon this question, a question which has already been passed upon in this House, after one of the most thorough and able and exhaustive discussions that ever took place within the walls of Parliament. Not only is this to be the scope of that commission, but they would have the right under the resolution to enter into an examination after taking evidence and report their findings upon every question connected with transportation in that country, with the letting of contracts, the sending in of the Mounted Police, in fact, with every circumstance that can possibly be conceived as having arisen since the Yukon began to be administered. I contend that the very fact of such an absurd proposition being brought before the House by gentlemen of talent and of some experience, is conclusive proof that they never expected that such a resolution would be received with composure or acceptance. The manner in which this matter was brought before the House was, to say the least, very peculiar. We are now debating the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, and for nearly a month hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have ranged over the whole field and history of Dominion politics since confederation to the present time. They have covered every conceivable subject of discussion and dispute which has arisen between the two great historical parties in the country. They touched upon prohibition, upon penny postage; they discussed the fast line, the rate of expenditure, the increase of the debt, the race and religious cry, reciprocity and tariff and reciprocal arrangements under the tariff; they wandered into the affairs of the recent International Commission, and, in fact, day after day, and week after week they have ranged over the whole field of Dominion politics.

And from what motive it is impossible to conceive—probably because of the force of the arguments from this side of the House, or that the evident weariness of the country at the wide nature of their rangings through politics, had shown them they were making no impression on the people, possibly in the hope of shutting off debate from this side of the House upon the numerous important questions they had raised—they concluded by means of this amendment to confine the further progress of the discussion to one subject alone. Consequently hon. gentlemen upon this side of the House who have not already spoken, are prevented from replying to the arguments, the objections, and the taunts of these gentlemen opposite in connection with the many subjects they have discussed. The course of this debate has shown—and I think hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for it—a great weakness in one phase of our much-boasted parliamentary institutions. We have never been tired of praising the force, the strength, and the flexibility of the English constitution, and the power of Parliament to reach wise conclusions upon public questions. Hitherto debate upon the Address from the Throne has always been of a general character, and has lasted but for a short time. A comparatively few subjects occupied the attention of the House before it proceeded to the despatch of business, where these subjects could be taken up in detail and treated of with force, and to a certain degree of conclusiveness. But in this discussion, no matter how able or interesting may have been individual addresses from hon. gentlemen, no matter with how much talent they may have discussed the various phases of public affairs as they presented themselves to them, yet, no one can deny that a large amount of valuable time has been wasted because no voting conclusion, no result upon which Parliament can pronounce at the conclusion of this debate, can possibly be reached. The intelligent foreigner, our neighbour across the line, can taunt us with the fact that our system, flexible as it is, powerful as it is on occasions, has a great weakness in this regard. In the United States, we are aware that when the executive summons Congress it lays before it in voluminous detail a statement of all the public affairs of the country. Each subject is dealt with at great length, and exhaustive reports are presented to the people, upon these recommendations and these suggestions, with which Congress proceeds to deal. These are referred to the proper committees, and one after another they come before the legislative body for a final expression of opinion. But with the exception of the vote which may take place upon this occasion as to the propriety of an investigation into the affairs of the Yukon, it is not pretended that any vote in this House can deal with the numerous questions that have been so far discussed. The hon. gentlemen of the Opposition were fortunate in some respects, in the gentleman who took the lead in bringing forward these Yukon charges, but the speech of the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) did not take the House by surprise. Long before Parliament met, it was heralded in the press by telegrams and correspondence from the Pacific Coast, that that hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) would bring forward charges against the Administration in regard to Yukon matters. It was announced with a great flourish of trumpets, and with a great deal of volubility, that when he did bring forward these charges, they would be of such a character, that not only Parliament, but the whole country would be startled by his revelations. I certainly expected from the character of that hon. gentleman; from his vigorous youth—and notwithstanding his youth, his long experience in public affairs—from the fact that he had been in Parliament a long time, had been a Minister of Justice, and was a lawyer of considerable attainments and standing; I certainly did expect, and the House did expect, that when he brought forward these charges they would be presented with much force and vigour, and would be so arranged in their presentation that those who objected to his course in regard to the matter would have a great deal of difficulty in meeting them. But the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), gifted with all these qualities which, I think, every hon. gentleman in this House must envy, occupied a very long time, the whole of one debating session, with his lengthy address. Up to the dinner hour, he had not touched the charges in regard to the Yukon, and from the assembling of the House after dinner, until after midnight, the hon. gentleman dealt with a great copiousness upon this subject. I was amused, and I think hon. gentlemen upon both sides of the House must have been amused, by the taunt levelled at the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) that he had to have four days in which to reply to the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). Now, it would not be at all surprising, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) might reasonably have asked one day or more, in order to meet charges which he had never heard before, and which required perhaps the examination of the records and the search of correspondence, to answer. But the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) took good care that no reply should be forthcoming during that session of the House. He took good care to fill up the time—as many thought somewhat needlessly—until the adjournment of the House was forced by the circumstances of the case, and no matter how ready the Minister of the Interior might have been to have replied to him on the spot, there was no opportunity offered him until the House reassembled after the Easter recess. Well, Sir, we have those charges, and we have had them brought forward with all the force and with all the strength and all the parliamentary experience, that an able member of this House could lend to them. Now, what was the line of argument pursued by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), and in fact, by almost all the members opposite who followed the hon. member for Pictou in reference to these complaints and charges. I think all will agree with me, that his one line of argument was this: That the press had been filled with rumours and charges reflecting on the integrity of the officials in the Yukon; that there had been the gravest and most serious complaints made against these officials, against their administration, against their personal character, and that the necessity for an investigation arose, partly because there might be unworthy members of the civil service who obtained office, but largely on the ground that the character of the country, the reputation of the country at large, and the reputation of the administration of the Yukon, was seriously and adversely affected in the mother country and in other parts of the world. True to his character and his disposition, the hon. the leader of the Opposition, followed by the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), enlarged upon that phase of the subject. No language was too strong for him, in which to represent public opinion abroad. I agree that we are bound as a Parliament to protect the reputation of the credit of Canada abroad in matters of this kind, and we are also bound to protect the character and reputation of the civil service of Canada as a whole. If one were to believe these gentlemen—I do not think they believe it themselves—the whole civilized world was shaken to its very centre, in contemplation of the fearful state of things at Dawson City and its neighbourhood, that in England, in France, in Germany, in the isles of the seas, among the barbarians of the most distant lands, the sad state of affairs in the Yukon was agitating the public mind, and that therefore this Parliament must, if for no other reason, rush to the rescue, investigate these affairs and set the minds of our honest friends in all parts of the world at rest.

Now, what are the facts of the case in that regard? I notice that the hon. senior member for Pictou, in his lengthy speech, very carefully avoided any quotation from any authority of the mother country or the United States or any other country, showing that there was great public alarm or agitation or indignation over the affairs of the Yukon in any of those countries. With the exception of an allusion to Miss Shaw's letter in the London "Times," and to an editorial in the London "Times"—alluding to it, not a quotation from it—the hon. member avoided any illustration of the state of public opinion abroad, and quoted no evidence from any mining journal or review or publicist of any standing whatever, no evidence from any of the great journals of London or the continent, no evidence from any mining authority, no evidence whatever that these charges affected public opinion at all outside the narrow circle of Seattle, Vancouver and the Opposition press of this country. Is it not strange that a case which seems to have impressed itself on the mind of the hon. senior member for Pictou to such an extent that he could characterize the proceedings of the Government officials of the Yukon as villainy, that he could refer to them as unscrupulous, as scoundrels, as robbers, as tyrants, as dishonest, as corrupt creatures of the Government, as understrappers, as satraps, as men guilty of nefarious conduct, as men who ought to be put in the criminal dock, as blackmailers, as thieves—could not create a ruffle of feeling in England or on the continent; or, if it did, the hon. gentleman could produce not a tittle of evidence from any mining journal or newspaper or any public man of any other country to show that these statements had at all affected the public mind abroad. The hon. gentleman evidently thought that the public would take for granted that all his assertions would be backed up somewhere if they only took the trouble to search for the evidence; and I sat in this House to as great a degree as ever I did upon any question affecting the Government in a judicial frame of mind. Many members on this side of the House, as well as on the other side, were waiting with impartial feeling to see what evidence was to be brought forward; and I am sure there would be found on this side of the House an abundance of public spirit to insist that if the Government did not deal with this matter in the dignified and prompt manner demanded, this House would make themselves heard and insist that it should be so dealt with. But as hour after hour of these denunciations passed away, we found that they were all smoke—that there was no fire to speak of behind it. As we found the evidence filtering out to nothingness, we found that the Administration had shown itself reasonably anxious to protect the interests of the country, and to have an investigation entered into.

I thought it might not be uninteresting to see what was said by the London "Times" which has been referred to. Nine-tenths of the declarations which we heard have been founded on the supposition that these charges affected public opinion in the old country, and the London "Times" was quoted as a force of public opinion of such power that its slightest remark touching the integrity of the Canadian officials should be received with fear and trembling by this Parliament. I need not refer to the history of the London "Times." It is well known that it fills almost as large a portion of British thought and history as the British Parliament itself. It has had a very checked career. It has on other occasions brought charges against public men, and it has sometimes found itself mulcted in heavy damages for bringing charges of which it could produce no proof. Perhaps the best known case is the case of the charges against Mr. Parnell, which should serve as a warning to hon. gentlemen opposite. What were the facts of that case, and how did Parliament deal with it? The London "Times" made serious charges against a large number of members of Parliament, scattered through many articles, and it published the fac-simile of a letter alleged to have been signed by Mr. Parnell condoning the Phoenix Park outrages. Public indignation was aroused to such an extent that Parliament felt it its duty to have the charge investigated, because charges of such an atrocious character against fifteen or twenty members of the House of Commons, if not thoroughly investigated, were calculated greatly to diminish the authority and prestige of Parliament itself. Consequently, Parliament passed an Act appointing the royal commission upon the Parnell charges. Leading counsel of the greatest eminence were engaged on both sides, and the commission met. One would imagine, from the observations made by several hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that this course of proceeding was quite common—that it was quite an ordinary thing for the British Parliament, which we attempt to follow in most cases to appoint commissions of this kind. The judges appointed on this commission themselves stated that its appointment was a legislative act unprecedented in the whole history of Great Britain. It stands alone and by itself in the whole constitutional history of Great Britain as the appointment of a special judicial commission by Parliament to sit and give their conclusions on matters which consisted of complaints and charges made in the press. What was the result of that commission? What was the first act done by that royal commission of judges? The very first step taken by that commission was—and I quote the language of the judges:

We thought it right to order that the accusers should formulate the charges and allegations which they intended to make and proposed to establish by evidence. We also thought right to direct them to furnish the names of the parties accused, and the acts of which they were accused.

The first act of this commission, unprecedented as it was, was to compel those who made the charges in the public press to name the parties whom they accused and to formulate the allegations which they brought against those parties. And this is all that is demanded from hon. gentlemen opposite as regards that phase of the question. This side of the House asks, as an act of simple justice, as a reasonable method of proceeding, that charges of this kind, scattered as they are through numerous columns of the press, hon. gentlemen opposite should name the men accused, mention the acts of which they are accused, and formulate the charges against them in such a shape that they can be met. But what have these hon. gentlemen done? They have in their amendment condensed into one phrase all the history of the Yukon since 1896, the administration of the country, their opinion of its administration here and at Vancouver and at Dawson City and throughout the Yukon—everything connected with the transportation, with contracts, and in fact every matter with which any of the departments here has had anything to do, is bundled into an undistinguished mass, and Parliament is asked to appoint a judicial committee to inquire into them. Not only is this commission asked to examine all these matters, but also to report the result. In other words, the commission is to take from Parliament the right of deciding what the evidence shows and is to report its opinion on the evidence. A commission of three judges is to decide, for instance, whether the Yukon railway was a wise and prudent undertaking, whether the amount of mineral lands granted and the manner in which they were granted should be radically changed, and whether all these things showed capacity or incapacity or wisdom or unwisdom on the part of this Administration. This commission is to investigate all the mining regulations, the royalty, the exemptions, the land Acts, the whole system of administration in connection with woods and forests, the lease of the foreshores of the river opposite Dawson, and besides whether in any or all of these particulars the Government showed capacity or incapacity and to what extent. I venture to say that never in the history of any British Parliament was such a ridiculous proposition laid before any reasonable men for their adoption. What was the result of the Parnell inquiry? That great organ of public opinion, the "Times," backed up by unlimited capital and conducted with the greatest intelligence and experience, found itself out of court in regard to the most important and direct of its charges. The commission found:

All the charges and allegations into which we were directed to inquire were scattered over several articles in the "Times." We entirely acquit personally Mr. Parnell and the other respondents of the charge of insincerity in their denunciation of the Phoenix Park murders and find that the fac-simile letter on which this charge was chiefly based as against Mr. Parnell is a forgery.

That was the result of the exhaustive investigation into these charges made by so great an authority as the London "Times." The impression that would be given to any person listening to these hon. gentlemen or reading their speeches is that during a portion of the year 1898 the London "Times" was aflame with indignation against the administration of the Yukon, and had evidence which convinced its proprietors that something very rotten was at the root of the whole matter. To show the extent to which the London "Times" was agitated by these dreadful revelations that were detailed to us the other day by the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I took occasion to go carefully through the whole issue of the "Times" for 1898, in order to find out what it said during that year concerning affairs out in the Klondike. On 20th January, 1898, the only reference I could find in that paper to the Klondike was a telegram from Ottawa, stating that the spring rush onwards to the Klondike had begun in earnest, that the new mining regulations had given general satisfaction, and that Conservative newspapers were saying that these regulations were a vast improvement on those of last August. The next reference was on the 24th January, in the shape of a letter from a correspondent in Dakota, in the western states. This is what he says:

The people on the Pacific coast are Klondike crazy. Indeed the whole country has the fever. I do not think it extravagant to estimate that 200,000 to 250,000 people will try their luck in North-western Alaska during the coming spring.

This shows the extravagant estimate formed by the correspondent of the "Times" as to what was to take place in the Yukon. We pass on to April 7th, because from January 24th to April 7th there is no reference in the "Times" at all to the Klondike, but on April 7th we have a letter from that distinguished Klondike prospector and capitalist, Mr. Alex. McDonald, known as the king of the Klondike. From his letter I quote the following:—

On January 24th, when I left Dyea, 15,000 were waiting to go over the Chilkoot Pass. Since then fully 10,000 more have joined them. Many of these men and women are utterly unfitted for the task they have undertaken. There is very little lawlessness with Klondike region. When William Ogilvie, the famous Canadian explorer, went to the gold region in 1896, he laid the foundation for good government, and his action was backed up, and his recommendations followed by the Canadian Government to such an extent that at the present time there is a splendid system of police patrol throughout the entire district. There is now stationed at Dawson City Major Walsh, recently appointed governor of the district.

Then he contrasts the peace, order and good government of the Yukon, under Canadian administration, with the disorder and trouble on the other side of the line. That appeared in the "Times" on April 7th, and there was then not a line of allusion to the difficulties connected with the situation, although he described with great force the difficulties of administering a mining district. Then we pass on to the 28th of May, when we have a telegram from Reuters, at Lake Bennett, dated May 9th:

The police here estimate that 25,000 persons have crossed Pass since January. The majority have gone forth to Dawson. Perfect order prevails, though the crowd is very mixed, all nationalties and all classes being represented. Americans, however, largely predominate. The difficulties presented by both passes are being rapidly removed.

On the 8th June the London "Times" published a letter from Mr. F. Richards, the leader of an expedition into the Klondike, and a man of experience. Writing on May 17th, he says :

There were now nearly 5,000 men in Dawson City, many of whom would come out if they had enough money to come out with.

The whole letter is discouraging in tone, but there is not one word of complaint in it with regard to the administration or the authorities of the Yukon. It is remarkable that, up to May 17th, the leader of an expedition, writing a discouraging letter regarding the Yukon affairs has not one word of complaint to utter with regard to these matters. The "Times" of June 11th, 1898, contains the next reference, a glowing account of the route and of the police arrangements. There is a very interesting account of the country, but not a word of complaint of the civil administration of the laws affecting mining or any of those matters brought forward so volubly by hon. gentlemen opposite. There are also telegrams through Reuter, June 30, and the only complaint made is with reference to postal communication : not a word of complaint on any other subject. Reuter's correspondent for the "Times," writing on June 1st, published on June 30th, refers again to the difficulties of postal communication, and says :

Where so much has been done to maintain law and order, and to carry on every other branch of civil government, it might naturally have been expected that facilities would have been provided for the transport of mails.

Here is as good a piece of negative testimony as could reasonably be demanded. This shows what must have been the impression upon the English mind as to the situation in the country as late as the 30th June, 1898.

We pass on until we come to Miss Shaw's letter. Shortly after the date last mentioned, Miss Shaw's letters began to appear in the London "Times." It is not necessary to refer to three of these letters, which do not at all touch on the affairs in Dawson City. There is a letter of August 27th, dated at Lake Bennett, giving a magnificent description of the trip through Canada as far as Dawson City—a letter worthy of perusal by any person interested in this country. On September 10th appeared a letter, dated July 27th, from Dawson City. This letter covers four or five columns, and contains a splendid, well-written description of the great mining centre, with not one word of complaint on any of the matters referred to. It deals with administration, the difficulties of gold-mining, of climate, of procuring labour, and so on. On September 19th appeared another letter of four or five columns, with—out a syllable of complaint with regard to any of the matters connected with civil administration. She says :

It must be recognized that the conditions under which a sub-Arctic gold-field is developed present hardships and difficulties of no common kind. When such a field is removed 600 miles from its nearest base of civilization the difficulties may easily be conceived of as insuperable.

On September 27th appeared the letter which has been referred to by the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and other hon. gentlemen on that side in the course of this debate. That letter is a very able, interesting and valuable discussion of climate, of the questions presented by this great mining camp, such as labour, transportation, methods of working, administration of the country and attitude of the Government towards the mining community. In the third column, occupying about what the printers call a "square," of her letter, is Miss Shaw's reference to these so-called scandals ; and, that we may have every fairness in presenting to the House what Miss Shaw actually did say, I will read her statement ; and I will ask any reasonable man to say whether that statement, made entirely on hearsay, justified the strong language indulged in by the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and others who have alluded to the subject :

It is deplorable to have to admit, but it is idle to ignore the fact, that the administration of the Klondike district and the relations which exist between the Government and the public leave almost anything to be desired. There is a prevalent conviction that the laws are bad, and that the officers through whom they are administered are corrupt. It is hard on innocent and upright individuals whose administrative duties may be performed with scrupulous integrity to be associated in the sweeping charges which are made against the whole official body. But there is no disguising the universal dissatisfaction—and innocent and guilty stand at present condemned together. It is painful for Englishmen to be compelled to listen to the plain-spoken comments of Americans and foreigners,—

According to Miss Shaw's own testimony, these comments were made by Americans and foreigners, who constituted at that time nine-tenths of the population of the Yukon. She says :

—Apart from graver charges there is much dissatisfaction with imperfections of organization and the unsanitary condition of Dawson.

The concluding part of her letter is taken up altogether with a repetition of complaints which she has had from these people as to the difficulty of surveying mining districts the difficulty of recording mining claims and the difficulty of obtaining information from the recorder's office. She says that these——are facts which have come to be regarded by the public as so many purposely designed channels for individual bribery.

She is giving the tittle, and tattle, and scandal of a mining camp which she afterwards described as composed of five thousand workers and twenty thousand loafers.

Scarcely a day passes in which some fresh story does not become current of the number of dollars, which it has cost to obtain letters from a nominally unsorted mail, or to make good an entrance on business into one of the public offices.

That is all. That is every particle of the charge made in that very able letter against the officials of the Yukon. Not one syllable of it does the writer give on her own authority, or as the result of her own observation. Not one name does she give as authority, nor the name of any person accused. She simply mentions these complaints of Americans and foreigners, whom she met in Dawson City. She says :

To some extent the officials of the district are, no doubt, bearing the brunt of the unpopular laws which it has been their duty to administer.

And then she proceeds to discuss the 10 per cent royalty and the reservation of alternate claims. No doubt, these things are at the root of whatever dissatisfaction exists. But these are not questions to be investigated by a judicial tribunal. These are not questions that this Parliament will ever submit to have handed over to a judge or ten judges to decide. They are questions for Parliament to decide, and any member of this House who would vote to hand them over to a judicial tribunal would be recreant to his duty to this Parliament, to his constituents and to the country. She says, writing in August :

Already a change is at hand which renders it unnecessary to labour the subject of the need for political reform.

In the very letter in which she retailed all the gossip and scandal of the Yukon, though without mentioning names, in that very letter which has formed the basis of the vile attacks made by hon. gentlemen opposite, this able publicist has stated that there is already a change at hand which renders it unnecessary to labour the subject of reform any further. She refers to the new commissioner as—

Mr. Ogilvie, whose record is well known, and whose name is a synonym of disinterested integrity,—

No stronger language could be used in reference to any man than that.

A small body of 4,000 or 5,000 men are working. There are 20,000 others, and a large number of idlers waiting an opportunity to whom no inducement short of the sphere of actual want would be sufficient to make work acceptable—hence, while Dawson swarms with idle men labour remains at $10 per day. These conditions may be held to account in some degree for the abnormal conditions.

Certainly they would account for the abnormal conditions, they would account for the disappointment and anger, for the gossip, for the scandals which were breathed into the ear of this lady. She says :

The natural difficulties in the way of prospecting the country are all of a nature to be overcome by organization and the development of the means of transport ; the artificial difficulties created by the conditions of administration will be removed, and concurrently with these developments may be expected, that an improvement in the means of communication with the outer world, will offer facilities for more readily drawing off the useless portions of the community. Those are the changes which may be expected from the introduction of capital into the country. They must all depend on the wealth and permanency of the mineral fields for their realization.

This is the whole basis of this mountain of insinuation developed by these ingenious and energetic gentlemen on the other side of the House. One would have supposed that in the presence of these charges assumed to be so startling to the British nation and all other nations, including the barbarians beyond, the London "Times" and its editorials, would have reflected in some degree the impressions which hon. gentlemen said prevailed in Great Britain upon this subject. The article in the London "Times" of September 19th, the one of two articles referring to the Klondike during the year 1898, gave a magnificent account of the difficulties of the miner in that region, the natural difficulties to be overcome. The article of the 23rd of September, which occupied a column of the London "Times," contains this one allusion to the charges made by Miss Shaw :

Unfortunately, it appears to be only too plain from the very grave allegations put forward by our correspondent, that the absence of control has permitted administrative irregularities to become rampant in the Klondike. There are charges of actual corruption, and of the perversion of administrative institutions for corrupt objects. * * * It is necessary that these should be looked into without delay, and that where abuses exist a remedy should be applied. * * * There is happily a general conviction fully shared by the people of this country that the Canadian Government have neither sympathy with such practices nor the slightest disposition to shield the guilty persons.

That expression of opinion, I believe, this House will also endorse when the vote comes to be taken.

Mr. William Ogilvie, whose character stands deservedly high, and who has just undertaken the arduous and responsible duties of commissioner, will find that he has behind him not only the local feeling but the support of the Dominion Government and the public at home.

Here I regret to say that Jupiter has nodded. The London "Times" is not acquainted with the character of the Opposition in this country. It supposes that because William Ogilvie is a man whose name is a synonym of disinterested integrity, a man of experience and high character, he will have behind him the local feeling and also the support of the Dominion Government and of the public at home. But the "Times" does not count upon the lack of patriotism, and upon the desire for injuring their opponents, even at the risk of injuring the credit of the country, of the Opposition in this House. It will be astonished to find so eminent a politician as the ex-Minister of Finance sneeringly referring to that eminent man as Mr. Sifton's hired man, and to the Government officials in that country as satraps and understrappers of the Government. It will be pained if it supposed that assertions and statements of this kind would find any support from the majority of the members of this House. But we pass on to see what else has been said in the London "Times" as the reasons why all parliamentary precedents should be set aside, why every reasonable precaution for fair-play and honest dealing should be abandoned, as is proposed by this amendment. We proceed to see what else has been said by Miss Shaw in regard to the Yukon, and what public opinion has been formed in England as the result of her attempts to enlighten it. Miss Shaw, on the last of January of this year, delivered a lecture before the Royal Colonial Institute in London, whose proceedings are reported in the journal of the Colonial Institute. After a very thorough and a very exhaustive criticism upon the Yukon and its affairs, she concludes as follows :—

I was no pioneer. I counted, I believe, as the 27,000th person who went over the passes last year. The trail was already beaten for me, means of transport were organized. There were stopping places where food could be obtained; and last, but not least, I went as a woman, to whom everything was made easy.

Then she describes the journey, the courtesy she had received, the honesty and order apparent :

My tent in Dawson City formed my headquarters for only twenty days. I did not visit all the mines of the district. Saw a great deal, and I am convinced that the newly opened gold fields contain a great deal of gold. At present, with labour of the most primitive kind, with no appliances, with the almost overwhelming difficulties of local transport, with unfortunate mining regulations,—

This refers to the royalty and other conditions :

—the fact that about 4,000 at work have produced but two or three millions of pounds sterling is remarkable enough. Those who ask if the Klondike is not a fizzle after all, in view of the results achieved, have evidently no conception of the immense difficulties which have been overcome. I went a sceptic, I returned convinced that though much that is temporary there is bad, the permanent conditions are very good.

That is the result of all the observations of this talented lady. At the conclusion of her address, we have the testimony of a gentleman whose word will be accepted by this House as certainly of considerable value. Mr. Louis Coste, C.E., until recently in the Public Works Department of this country, but now entirely disassociated from this Administration, a gentleman who, during all his life has been a consistent Conservative, a gentleman of great experience in engineering matters, who personally visited the Yukon, and is not being sent up there as manager of a company in that region—Mr. Coste spoke as follows :—

I was under the impression that Miss Shaw had not been favourably impressed by the country. In one of her articles in the "Times" Miss Shaw seemed to take to task the civil servants employed in Dawson City, and, as a matter of fact, to imply that a certain amount of corruption existed among them. Now, I take absolute exception to such a charge.

Here is the evidence of a man, I think, whose word can be accepted, when you consider his character, his qualifications and his history.

I am willing to admit that in occasional instances there might have been little irregularities, but, on behalf of the interested parties, I affirm that, on the whole, the service was well conducted and that the employees, who had a tremendous amount of work to do—for very small pay—were honest. This I am the more at liberty to say, because I do not happen to belong to the particular branch of the service in question.

The conditions were such that it was very difficult to satisfy everybody, it was very difficult for a dozen officials or so to have to satisfy some thirty of forty thousand hungry miners—all waiting to be first in the field, all anxious to have their claims recorded, all wanting to register their titles, some of them, no doubt, in order to hurry to the London market and sell property which they had never so much as seen. * * *

The real miner, the man who remained in the country, and who has worked and is still working his claim, has no complaint to make against the administration. * * * It was impossible, as any solicitor will tell you, to give titles to properties which had not even been surveyed, which were situated in a new and altogether unexplored country. No government could meet the demands made upon them under such circumstances.

Other speakers follow—Mr. K. N. McFee, Mr. Rathbone and Lord Strathcona, not one of whom referred to the scandals. Later on Miss Shaw spoke in regard to what had appeared in the London "Times." Miss Shaw, in responding to a vote of thanks at that meeting, said :

As for the civil service as a whole, we can have but one feeling—that of high respect.

With regard to matters in the Klondike, they were matters of detail, belonging, I hope, to the same past as the beans, the pork and the bad fish; and so I hope we may leave it.

In other words, Miss Shaw looked upon these details and minor irregularities as things essential to and characteristic of these extraordinary circumstances with forty or fifty thousand men in the opening rush, with probably an inadequate number of officials, and the difficulties they had to encounter, we can see that the whole scope of the allegations and charges made by Miss Shaw and of the comments made by the London "Times" were possibly exaggerated. The whole line of attack by hon. gentlemen opposite has been that of wild exaggeration. No one upon this side of the House has doubted that under these peculiar circumstances there were difficulties. None pretends to deny that there might have been irregularities connected with some of the subordinate officials, but with the exception of Messrs. Wade and Major Walsh, I believe, no charge has been brought by name against any leading official in the Yukon, and, even, in regard to the minor officials who are charged by unknown accusers with improper actions, no one has ventured to mention their names. If the state of public opinion suggested were exhibited, very particularly, in the motherland, certainly hon. gentlemen should have found in some of the journals of the country some reference to it; some indication of it. The senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) dwelt at some length and repeatedly upon the reasons why the men, who breathed these suspicions into his ear, would not allow their names to be given. He referred to bankers, men with letters of introduction from Lord Strathcona, men representing large interests in the old country and in the Klondike, as being in a state of abject terror, in fact, that they would not give him permission to use their names, such a state of abject terror that they did not even dare to breathe their complaints into the ears of the mining journals in the mother country. This is not characteristic of the Englishmen abroad. We know the characteristic of the Englishman abroad, especially when his financial and personal rights are touched. His character is known to be that of a chronic grumbler, and he would rush to the London "Times" or to his special journal with his complaints and particularly is this the case with the class of Englishmen referred to by the hon. member for Pictou. Is it not a strange thing that men representing large capital, representing bankers, men with letters of introduction from Lord Strathcona, should rush to pour into the ear of a member of the Opposition, nameless scandals in regard to the administration of the Yukon, while not one of them is upon record as having written a line to a member of the Administration, as having put his pen to his name in any public journal of the country, the United States or Great Britain, complaining of these matters? Is it not strange that men of this stamp should not, in passing through, have called upon the Prime Minister to explain to him the difficulties under which they laboured, and to ask him to cause an investigation to be made? There is not a particle of evidence that anything of this kind has been done, but, on the contrary, these distinguished men are found rushing into the offices of Opposition leaders upon the other side of the continent and breathing into their ear, under the promise of the strictest secrecy, allegations and charges against unknown parties. The whole thing is contradictory of common sense, and of what we know to be the English character. We are, consequently, led to the conclusion that to a large degree the habit of exaggeration which hon. gentlemen display in other matters has entered into the discussion of this subject. I have thought that if anything could be found which would show something wrong in the Klondike, under some authorized name, where our hand could be laid upon some complaint, we would find it in the "British Mining Journal." So, at considerable trouble to the gentlemen in the library, I examined every number of the "Mining Journal and Commercial Gazette," of London, during the period referred to in this discussion. I had fully expected to find, either in the editorial column or in the letters from correspondents, or in the letters from parties making complaints, extensive allusions to these scandals, extensive complaints and demands upon the Canadian Government that something should be done to rectify the bad condition of affairs, but after going through all the journals I find no allusion whatever to the subject in the editorial columns of the paper, and with the exception on vague general lines, of a letter from a correspondent at Vancouver, there was no reference whatever in the "Mining Journal" to the matter from the 1st of July to the end of the year. The special correspondent of the "Mining Journal" personally, paid a visit to Dawson City, and wrote a letter, dated August 5th, a most valuable letter, superior in many respects to those which appeared in the London "Times." On August 5th the correspondent of the "Mining Journal" was in Dawson City and he gives a very graphic description of the scenery, of the geological nature of the country and of the general situation there. He tells about the butterflies and cariboo, and so on, and continues as follows:—

A good way to see the Klondike is to walk about thirty miles from Dawson south-east to the Dome, the highest hill of the district. From it one sees the lie of all the creeks which have produced gold. They head from near it. A stay in the Klondike soon shows why it has been so grossly misrepresented; the difficulties of the trails prevent all but the most active and eager from observing the facts around them. Most men sent to write about the country find one tramp of one creek more than enough, and finish their stay and their gleaning of facts in Dawson itself. Thus it happens that there has been so little observation of the district; most of our accounts have come from men who, owing to press of labour or lack of education were not qualified to inspire journalists accounts of the Klondike. Nowhere have I found greater ignorance, combined with greater willingness to misinform. "There be liars, damn liars and Yukoners" is an adage well worth carrying in one's head up here.

This is the language in which this correspondent describes a large number of people around Dawson City:

The Yukoner of this adage never says he does not know, but invents a fact in order to give a civil answer. He would think himself unkind not to inform a questioner; this is a charitable view of the case; for, indeed, the civility and general kindness in this far-off land are remarkable and infectious.

Then he goes on to describe the loafers around the district, and referring to the Government buildings proceeds to say:

When we come to the several blocks of Government buildings we find another long line of men at the Gold Commissioner's office; there, too, there is more business to do than the staff can at all cope with, and many a miner has had to wait many hours with the thermometer many degrees below zero. It takes hours to get a license or title to a claim, and men pay a dollar per hour to a man to stand in line for them. All these Government offices are hopelessly undermanned, and I fear, underpaid, with resulting dangers to business. I think, too, that the Gold Commissioner has had far too many things thrust upon him.

In another column he says:

Private enterprise in road making has not been wanting, but has not been backed up by Government support, the contrast between the neat sidewalks of Dawson, growing more numerous every day, and the horrible Bonanza and Quigley trails is painful, and suggests that the authorities are not great travellers.

The point I wish to make is, that in these two able and exhaustive letters on August 5th, written by a man sent to report upon the Klondike, in neither is there a scintilla of a charge of dishonesty, or impropriety, or maladministration in the Yukon. Certainly, if any observer would have had an opportunity of knowing these things, or of hearing them from such a source as would give sufficient authenticity for publishing them in the mother country, it would be this correspondent. But he has not referred to them, and this as negative evidence is of immense value as showing the character of the insinuations and the reckless charges made by the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. Treating of this correspondence, the editor of the "Mining Journal," gives expression to the same idea, that it is a land of many difficulties, and there are so many persons who are dissatisfied that it has a tendency to breed rumours and falsehoods.

Now, Sir, I have touched in a general way upon this phase of the subject, and I have shown, I think conclusively, that there is no ground whatever for the assertion of these scandals, be what they may, or that these charges, be they well or ill substantiated, have produced in any degree whatever any effect of a damaging character upon the public mind of the mother country. Therefore, one of the reasons urged by hon. gentlemen opposite for our taking such an extraordinary course as is suggested by this amendment, is entirely done away with. The hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) brought forward an enormous number of charges for none of which did he present the slightest authority. If he could have quoted journalists of standing, if he could have quoted miners or prospectors of character in support of these charges, considerable weight might be attached to them. He spoke about bad regulations, but surely that is not a matter for a judicial commission. It is a matter for this House to decide upon hearing the explanation of the Minister. Parliament would never so stultify itself as to hand over to any judicial commission a decision as to regulations with regard to mines or royalty. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) alleged favouritism in the issue of liquor permits; that charge has been completely exploded and abandoned and there is not a scintilla of evidence to support it. He stated that fees had been obtained by solicitors for obtaining these liquor permits, but there has not been a syllable of evidence to support that charge. And so with the fifteen or sixteen charges which he mustered up, every one of them have been shown to be absolutely unfounded. The contention upon this side of the House is, I think, a reasonable one; it is a contention which has always been insisted upon in Parliament, one based upon common sense and upon fair play and decency, and it is that when public officials are charged with malfeasance in office, some person must be prepared upon his responsibility to make these charges by name, and to back them up by a reasonable amount of prima facie evidence. In no court of the land will the poorest individual be placed upon his trial even for a minor offence until some one has made affidavit, and not until a prima facie case has been laid before a magistrate, or the petty jury, or the grand jury, can an accused be put upon trial. But here, Parliament is asked by this amendment to place not only minor officials, not only the so-called understrappers, door keepers and policemen, but the highest officials of the Government, the Minister of the Interior himself, and public officials from the highest to the lowest, to place them on trial without a single charge being made under oath or specified in a form that could be met by the accused. Hon. gentlemen opposite have insisted that the commissioner who has been appointed is an improper person to carry on an investigation of this kind, and to such a degree has this argument been carried, that men of some eminence in the Opposition have felt themselves called upon to refer to Mr. William Ogilvie as the "hired man" of the Minister of the Interior. Language of this kind is not only unbecoming and unfair towards a gentleman of great distinction in his profession, and one who has been honoured at home and abroad as a sample of disinterested integrity, but it is a severe reflection upon the character of every man in the civil service of Canada. From the highest to the lowest they are branded as men incompetent to pursue an honest investigation into any malfeasance on the part of Dominion civil servants, simply because they happen to be in receipt of a salary. Every investigation in this country in regard to civil servants has been carried on by commissioners appointed by the Government. In the Finance Department, such investigation is carried on by a leading official of that department, who visits the office with regard to which the complaint has been made. Should there be charges of wrongdoing in the Post Office Department, does the Postmaster General, under the powers given him, or would Parliament, recognize the propriety of appointing a judge of the land to investigate such charges?

No; in the case of the post office inspector, a member of the civil service in that branch of the public service, is sent to investigate charges, and a report is made to the Postmaster General. If the charges appear to be sustained, if a prima facie case is made out against any official in any part of the country, he is brought before the courts of the land and given an opportunity to hear the charges and to defend himself as best he can. Why should a different rule be resolved on by this House in regard to the maladministration of minor officials in the Yukon? There are judges and courts in the Yukon to deal with all who violate the law—to try under the proper forms of law established by the wisdom of Parliament or by our constitution every one who has been accused; so that he has the opportunity not only of being heard, but of having counsel in his defence. The commissioner of the Yukon has abundant power over every civil servant in the Yukon under the commission given him and the letters which followed it, as well as under the general law of the land, to suspend any civil servant in the territory charged with malfeasance in office; and there has been no occasion for setting up this novel and extraordinary tribunal to investigate charges of this kind.

I am convinced the resolution was either drawn with a deliberate intention that Parliament should necessarily reject it on account of its inherent absurdity or drawn without any care whether it should be accepted or not. For my part, and I believe on the part of a majority of the sensible people of this country, who know the character of the commissioner to the Yukon, as described by all the correspondents of the public press who visited that country and who know the reputation the country has for law, order and system, I think Parliament has every reason to have the utmost confidence in any investigation which that officer may choose to make. The only charge which was fairly brought before the House, and which the Government had a right to deal with, was that brought forward by the miners at a special meeting called for the purpose—a meeting which took place on the 25th of August. Whatever was wrong or complained of or unsatisfactory up to that time no doubt made itself known at that meeting; and the committee of representative men which was appointed would no doubt be expected to bring forward every charge which they had against the administration of affairs in the country. Yet they have only suggested that there was bribery in the office of the commissioner; that officials of the Government had the opportunity, which they exercised, to acquire a special knowledge and to compete with the miners in taking up claims; that the Dominion land agent had been enacting on behalf of one of the contestants; that injustice had been done in consequence of the incapacity or incompetence of one of the officials; that the mining inspector had a lack of experience; that the Crown timber agent had granted improper concessions in regard to timber or cordwood. They demanded that the officials should either be exonerated or removed; and they asked, not that a judicial commission should be appointed, but that a commission of inquiry should be held and given power to subpoena witnesses in order to investigate these charges. In the charges of these miners, which may be supposed to have summed up all the complaints which could reasonably be brought forward, there was no allusion to terrorism on the part of the officials, and no pretense that their rights would be interfered with in case they expressed themselves as ready to bring forward their charges before a commission of inquiry. They did not even complain of the royalties, because they recognized, and reasonably so, that the question of royalty was a question of policy, which would be brought up properly in another way by hon. members of this House who are interested in the administration of the Yukon. There was no reference to any difficulties in the postal service, in regard to the leasing of the water fronts, in regard to sanitation, or in regard to salaries, and no claim that local improvements had not been properly looked after. Nine-tenths of the scandals which have been built up and repeated almost ad nauseum by hon. gentlemen opposite are absolutely ignored by the miners' committee. Consequently this House would be stultifying itself by giving powers to a judicial commission to make inquiries into matters which the miners themselves have not thought of sufficient importance to have brought forward for consideration.

That upon this complaint of the miners steps were promptly taken to investigate it, no one can doubt. From the statement made here by the hon. Minister of Finance we find that this complaint was drawn up on the 25th of August, that it reached the Government on the 4th or 5th of October, and that on the 7th of October the commission to Mr. Ogilvie to examine into all these charges was on its way to the Klondike.

It may be too early to ask the reasons why the charges were withdrawn—why, when the commissioner was prepared, with his legal adviser, to enter into an investigation of them, and had issued his proclamation inviting any person in the Yukon who had charges to bring them forward, these charges were withdrawn. This is a question which will be answered later. The answer may be that some of the witnesses had gone. As an hon. gentleman who preceded me stated, a mining population is a shifting population, and some of the evidence which was available on the 25th of August may not be available at this late date. But the same argument applies to the judicial commission. If the evidence is not available in November or January before the commissioner of the Yukon, certainly none of it would be available before a judicial commissioner later in the season.

But it is impossible that Parliament can adopt a resolution or amendment of the absurd character of the one now before the House. Previously when charges or complaints have been made of maladministration, we have had hon. members of this House bringing the charge forward solemnly, under their responsibility as members, stating the nature of the charge, giving the name of the accused, and demanding an investigation at the hands of this House. No such statement has been made in this case, and no one has shown any reasonable ground for demanding such an extraordinary tribunal. It is extremely unfortunate that this matter should have been taken hold of in the way it was. One would suppose that hon. gentlemen, knowing their rights, knowing the gravity of the offence with which they were charging civil officials, would, in the time they had at their disposal since the journals of Seattle, and the United States, and the Opposition journals of the Pacific coast started this agitation, have gathered up all the scandal connected with the Yukon and have taken the opportunity to bring forward in something like concrete shape the allegations upon which they demand a judicial inquiry; but we have had nothing but vague and shadowy charges and the nebulous assertions that men of high standing, representing large interests, are so afraid of the officials in the Yukon that they dare not make any complaints, lest their interests would be affected, even when they know that the officials against whom they wish to complain are no longer in the Yukon. Major Walsh, who was the object of the bitterest attacks on the part of these very susceptible individuals, has long since left that country. Mr. Fawcett has returned to Ottawa, and the other officials are no longer there; and all agree that the present administration of the Yukon is honest and satisfactory. Certainly now, therefore, is the time for these timid individuals to send in their names to Parliament and lend the influence of their authority to gentlemen supporting this amendment. But no; we have no such challenge thrown out. Instead of that, not for the purpose of purifying the administration, not for the purpose of punishing certain individuals who may have been guilty of misconduct, not for the purpose of improving matters out in the Yukon, not for the purpose of allaying any distrust in public sentiment abroad or any feeling against the credit and integrity of Canada, but solely for the purpose of stirring up party feeling in the Yukon, of making party capital against the Administration, have these vague charges been brought forward. In fact, the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made no bones about stating that the person he was aiming at is the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and that it is the intention of the Opposition to drive that hon. gentleman from public life. But these hon. gentlemen opposite could not succeed in doing that; they would fail in injuring his reputation in the slightest degree, even though they could prove that any of the under officials of the Yukon had been guilty of misconduct or taking bribes. To hold that a Minister of the Crown is personally affected by charges thrust home against subordinate officials exercising their powers 3,000 to 4,000 miles away, is utterly absurd. But we know these hon. gentlemen have a grudge against the hon. Minister of the Interior, because he it was who, perhaps more than any other man, checkmated some of their schemes previous to the election of 1896. He it is whom these hon. gentlemen desire to injure in the estimation of his Liberal friends and the country generally. They are actuated by no desire to purify the administration of the Yukon or to improve public sentiment in the mother country, but solely by a desire to create party capital against the Administration. I would recommend these hon. gentlemen to have patience. I recommend them to await the result of the investigation now under way—an investigation in efficient hands, an investigation on the spot, where all parties will be heard, and where every one accused will have an opportunity of presenting his defence—and when the report of that investigation comes in, the whole country will have an opportunity of seeing to what extent the assertions so frequently made are extravagant or based upon the true interests and welfare of the country. For my part—and I believe I speak generally for the supporters of the Administration—we have every confidence in Mr. Ogilvie as a man of intelligence, capacity and integrity, and believe there is no occasion for supplanting him by the appointment of a judicial tribunal, and no legislature that would respect itself would accept an amendment of this kind, and thus stultify itself in the eyes of the world.

Mr. J. B. MILLS (Annapolis). When the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) closed his speech, Mr. Speaker, I think I had your eye, and consequently the right to the floor, but I saw that my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was loaded, and, not wishing to inconvenience him, I withdrew from my right and gave him precedence. I shall now, however, endeavour to address you and the House on the questions before us. This debate started on a very broad basis, but has become very narrow, relatively speaking, but sufficiently broad to still merit the attention of every well-wisher of his country. It began upon the Address to His Excellency, which allows the opportunity to all members of Parliament to air broadcast before the House their grievances upon every question within the four corners of the Address, and sometimes within the four corners outside of it. But as soon as an amendment to the Address is moved, we are, by the rule of the House, confined to the four corners of that amendment. That amendment is as follows:—

It was moved by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) : That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that, in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon, it is the duty of the Government to appoint without delay an independent judicial commission to make a thorough investigation into that subject and report the result.

That amendment was spoken to, and afterwards another member for Toronto, the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), moved an amendment, as follows:—

That all the words after "His Excellency," in the amendment be left out, and the following inserted in lieu thereof:—That we have observed with pleasure that, on receipt of complaints against some of the officials in the Yukon district, His Excellency took action to inquire into the matter of such complaints by appointing Mr. William Ogilvie as a commissioner for that purpose. Having entire confidence in the integrity and ability of Mr. Ogilvie, we are satisfied that his inquiry will be impartial and thorough, and that it will place His Excellency's Advisers in possession of all the information necessary to enable them to do justice to all parties concerned.

These amendments bring the discussion, relatively speaking, within narrow limits. They confine it to one subject, but that subject is broad, and important, and well worthy the attention of all well-wishers of their country. It was directly brought before this House and country by the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), in his speech, which I had not the pleasure of hearing, as I was absent from the House, not having arrived here, but which I have had the pleasure of reading, and I know that, whatever hon. gentlemen opposite may say with reference to my hon. friend, there is one thing of which they cannot accuse him, as he has been accused in this House, and that is cowardice. There are a great many things that people have said about the Tupper; but let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, there is one thing they cannot say of them—that they ever turned their back upon a foe. And let me tell you, and let me tell this House, that although the senior member for Pictou left this House after delivering his long address, still, I am authoritatively informed this was only a preliminary canter, and that he will again be heard on this subject. I have it on very good authority that the hon. gentleman did not turn his back upon the arraignment of the government of the Yukon that he made before he left, but that he will return and renew that arraignment, to the discomfiture of the administration of the Interior.

Now, what is the issue before Parliament to-day? Boiled down, it is simply this: It is agreed on all sides that there has been sufficient malfeasance in office in the Yukon to warrant a commission to investigate it; where we differ is as to the personnel of the commission. The Opposition say that the charges and the suspicions of charges—and I speak by the book when I make use of that term—are sufficiently grave to have a non-partisan commission. What authority do I have for the phrase "a suspicion of charges?" No less an authority than Prime Minister Pitt, who, in 1788, on a motion for inquiry into the conduct of the Admiralty in England, said:

That the House—

Not the department—

That the House of Parliament had a constitutional power of inquiry into the conduct of any department of the Government, with a view either of censure or punishment was unquestioned; and whenever a case was made out strong enough to warrant suspicion of abuse that deserved either censure or punishment, he should ever hold it to be the indispensable duty of the House to proceed to inquiry.

Fox, speaking on the same subject and in the same debate, said:

It was the constitutional province and undoubted duty of the House to watch over the executive departments, and, where they had cause to suspect abuse,—

To suspect abuse—note that——to institute an inquiry with a view to censure or punishment.

Now, will hon. members of this House tell me or tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they did not suspect abuse when they commissioned Mr. Ogilvie to go out to the Yukon and institute an investigation? But the commission that Mr. Ogilvie had was too narrow in its scope. It only had reference to the petition of the miners. The miners held a meeting and sent a petition to the Prime Minister. That petition was sent to the Minister of the Interior, and a commission was issued to Mr. Ogilvie to investigate the matter—with reference to the miners petition entirely. I will quote that commission and the letter accompanying it. The following is the letter, which I quote, as it was given by the Minister of the Interior in his speech:—

Ottawa, 10th October, 1898.

Dear Sir,—You will receive herewith a commission to investigate charges which have been made by a miners' committee against the administration of Government affairs in the Yukon district. This commission has been issued in consequence of the receipt of a formal complaint, a copy of which is attached to the commission. You will at once proceed upon receipt of the commission with the investigation, and you are authorized to notify the persons who have signed the petition, wherever possible, of the time and place and when the inquiry will be opened.

You will observe there was no reference whatever to any other charge or set of charges than these contained within the four corners of the petition from the miners :

Your legal adviser, Mr. Clement, will give you any professional assistance that may be required in the investigation. You will understand that any person who is charged with malfeasance of office or offence of any kind against the proper administration of the law in any department is entitled, before the hearing of the charges, to due notice of the particulars of the charge, so that he can prepare himself to meet the charge if he so desires.

As to employment of counsel, I will leave you to exercise your own judgment, merely remarking that if the persons preferring the charges desire to appear by counsel I see no objection to such a course being followed. In such cases, of course, any accused persons who desire to appear by counsel will have a similar privilege.

It is the desire of the Government that the investigation should be thorough and complete, and that each and every charge that has been made in the miners' petition should be thoroughly investigated, and that you should make a definite report, giving your findings upon the evidence submitted in support of each charge, returning your report along with a copy of the evidence.

It is absolutely necessary that your report should be in my hands before the meeting of Parliament,—

That was in October. Parliament has been in session now for about a month, and still we have not that report.

—and I shall therefore expect you to send it out by special messenger, if necessary, as soon as the ice is in condition to permit of travel southward from Dawson City.

Therefore, it will be seen that the contention of members on this side of the House is that the commission given to Mr. Ogilvie has not sufficient scope to go in to all the charges and all these suspicions of charges, all the suspicions of malfeasance in office, that have been reported throughout the length and breadth of this country, not only in the newspapers, but on the floor of this House. We have had the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), we have had the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior), we have had the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), giving these charges, and we have had the hon. leader of the Opposition giving these charges, which surely amount to a suspicion of a charge, at the least; and I think that before I am finished, I will show you that they amount to more than that, sufficient to warrant a thorough investigation, not only into the conduct of the officials of the Yukon, but of the entire administration of the Yukon. Now, I listened with a great deal of pleasure, as I always do, to the speech of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), but before I got through listening to his speech I came to the conclusion that all the truth had not been told with reference to the administration of the Yukon district. Why? Simply because I have made considerable of a study of that hon. gentleman since I have had the honour of a seat in this Parliament. I have heard the hon. member since 1887 upon the floors of this House, many and many a time, and I have always noticed that when he pounds the desk with fury, causing one to wish that the desk, in order that Government property might be well protected, should be boiler-plated, iron-kneed and copper-fastened in order to withstand the vehement physical attacks of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and when he turns with such a decided and contorted gesture, first north, then directly south, to the imminent destruction, perhaps, of his vertebræ, I have found it always to be the case that that gentleman is endeavouring to make himself believe that black is white or that white is black, or that there is some kicking back-bencher who has to be brought into line. I do not think that I was far astray in my estimate of the hon. Minister's harangue the other evening, when he thus spoke to this House upon the Yukon administration. He was very vehement, he pictured the hon. Minister of the Interior as almost an angel. He told this House and the country: "We promised you a good and pure administration, and we are bound to give it to you." That raised my suspicions at once; and I believe, Mr. Speaker, that one-half the truth is not yet known with reference to the maladministration of this Yukon district, and it can only be known when we get a thoroughly impartial commissioner, when we get a man who will not be bound by any partisan consideration whatever. It has been hurled across this House that we speak of Mr. Ogilvie as a hired man. We do speak of Mr. Ogilvie as a hired man, but in no offensive sense whatever. Can we not speak of any person being a hired man without being offensive to that man? I have the utmost regard for Mr. Ogilvie, I have the utmost regard for his honour and integrity, and always have had. I have read his report of the Yukon district, and have always been favourably impressed with that gentleman. But for all that, he is a partisan, he is a hired man of the Minister of the Interior, he is a hireling, if you please. I say that in no offensive sense, with no offensive meaning whatever to that gentleman, simply stating the fact that he is a hireling, and being a hireling, is directly under the thumb of the Minister whose administration is at the present time brought to book. He is no more fit to investigate the charges of maladministration in the Yukon than the biggest political partisan that ever stepped. What we want, what this country wants, and what every well-wisher of this country wants, is that these charges should be thoroughly investigated. Let there be a man appointed who is thoroughly impartial, let there be men—if you wish for more than one—be appointed who are removed by virtue of their position from any political influence. We have such men, the judiciary are such men, even if they have been in former life politicians. Still they are men who can well weigh these matters, they are responsible men, responsible in intellect and in every way. These men can be found, and it is such men who should be appointed to make an investigation into the Yukon affairs.

Now, the hon. Minister of Finance also aroused my suspicions by reason of his address, suspicious, knowing the hon. gentleman as I do, amounting to a conviction, because I have followed the course of that hon. gentleman for a long number of years. It is a well known axiom in Nova Scotia, as testified by the leading Liberal journal in that province, that to know what the Liberal party will do at any time is to note what they have done in the provinces in which they have power. Now, the hon. the Prime Minister of Canada has seen fit to gather around him in his Cabinet some gentlemen who were Prime Ministers of the different provinces of this Dominion. The hon. the Minister of Finance is one of these former Prime Ministers. He led the Government in Nova Scotia for a long number of years, and whenever I hear the hon. gentleman making the kind of a speech that he did this afternoon, I am always sure that he is endeavouring to cover up something. I am always sure that he is endeavouring to make black white, or white black, whichever the case may be. So far as investigations into charges are concerned, the hon. gentleman is a past-master. We have had considerable experience with reference to charges of maladministration in office, and of corrupt dealing with officials in the local legislature of Nova Scotia. I will refer to one of them in order to show you how it is that the Minister of Finance worked, in reference to these investigations in the province of Nova Scotia, and to draw a parallel in reference to the present one. I shall do it very shortly, for I do not, as a rule, make long speeches, and I do not intend to weary the House. There was in Nova Scotia a large expenditure of road money, and the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Cahan, made a charge against the expenditure of these road moneys in the counties of Cape Breton. He formulated a charge, which I shall read, and it is contained in the following resolution:—

Resolved, that the following statements be referred to a select committee, to be composed of seven members of this House, to inquire fully into the allegations therein made, and especially, but without limiting the scope of such inquiry, to investigate all circumstances connected with the construction and repair of roads under the provisions of chapter 2 of the Acts of 1889 and chapter 4 of the Acts of 1890, the appointment of supervisors, inspectors, paymasters, roadmakers, foremen or other officials and employees of the Department of Public Works, under the provisions of said Acts; the expenditure of public moneys apportioned to the several counties or municipalities under the provisions of said Acts, in payments made to contractors, foremen, workmen, or other officials of the Department of Public Works engaged or employed under the provisions of said Acts, with power to send for persons, papers and records, to examine witnesses upon oath or affirmation;

And that the committee do report in full the evidence taken before them, and all their proceedings on the reference, and the result of their inquiries;

Charles H. Cahan, one of the members representing the electoral district of Shelburne, in this House, having declared from his seat in this House, that he is credibly informed and that he believes that he is able to establish by satisfactory evidence:

1. That, under the Road Acts of 1889 and 1890, the sum of six hundred thousand dollars ($600,000) was appropriated and apportioned to the several counties and municipalities for the construction and repair of roads;

2. That it was provided by the Road Act of 1889 (chapter 2 of the Acts of 1889), that no part of the three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) thereby appropriated for the construction and repair of roads, should be expended on any section unless such section shall have been brought under the operation of this Act by Order of the Governor in Council;

3. That by the Amending Act of 1890 (chapter 4 of the Acts of 1890) the aforesaid provision was repealed, and the authority to expend these moneys and the responsibility for their proper expenditure were vested directly in the government, acting through the Department of Public Works;

4. That the work of constructing and repairing roads, under the Road Acts of 1889 and 1890 (chapter 2, 1889, and chapter 4, 1890), has not been carried on by contract or otherwise under the direction of the provincial engineer, or of such roadmakers as were appointed for the purpose by the Commissioner of Public Works and Mines;

5. That although six hundred thousand dollars ($600,000) was appropriated to and apportioned to the several counties and municipalities, to be expended under the provisions of said Road Acts, the said expenditure was, with the knowledge of the Commissioner of Public Works and Mines, and of the officials of said department, not made, in respect of work or repairs, carried on by contract or otherwise, under the direction of the provincial engineer or of such roadmakers as were appointed for the purpose by the Commissioner of Public Works and Mines;

6. That members of the government, the Department of Public Works and members of this House supporting the government, conspired together to violate the provisions of said Acts governing the appointments of supervisors, paymasters, foremen and other employees of the Department of Public Works; that illegal appointments were made by these members personally; that illegal and unauthorized expenditures were incurred by appointees who had received no commissions from the Department of Public Works, and that expenditures were made without proper supervision on behalf of the Department of Public Works or its regularly constituted officials and employees;

7. That members of the government, the Department of Public Works and its officials, and members of this House supporting the government, conspired to violate the regulations of said department governing the payment of foremen, workmen and others engaged or employed under the provisions of the Road Acts of 1889 and 1890; and that, in violation of said regulations, members of this House, supporting the government, undertook to make, and did themselves personally make, payments on the said Acts;

8. That payments were made in violation of the instructions issued by the Department of Public Works and in a manner detrimental to the public interest, and to the pecuniary profit of members of this House supporting the government;

9. That false and fraudulent returns of expenditures, purporting to have been incurred on the said Acts, were returned to the Department of Public Works;

10. That there were fraudulently placed on the pay-sheets for certain road sections the names of workmen employed by, and who did not work under the supervision and direction of the foremen to whom commissions were issued by the Department of Public Works, constituting them foremen for and authorizing expenditures in these road sections;

11. That pay-sheets were fraudulently prepared, purporting to show larger expenditures than were actually incurred under the supervision and direction of the foremen commissioned by the Department of Public Works to make expenditures in these several road sections;

12. That vouchers of payments made, or alleged to have been made, were not returned with the pay-sheets to the Department of Public Works by its regularly commissioned paymasters;

13. That the Department of Public Works received and approved pay-sheets to which were appended false and fraudulent declarations as to the accuracy of accounts, and as to the actual expenditure of the sums set forth therein;

14. That members of this House supporting the government conspired with the officials and employees of the Department of Public Works to connive at the making, or to aid, abet and procure the making, of false and fraudulent declarations as to the accuracy of accounts, and as to the actual expenditure of the sums set forth in pay-sheets returned to said department;

15. That members of this House supporting the government appropriating to their own use public moneys which were authorized to be drawn and expended by officials of the Department of Public Works under the provisions of the Road Acts, 1889 and 1890;

16. That owing to the circumstances above set forth, the purpose of this legislature, in making appropriations under the Road Acts of 1889 and 1890, to effect the construction of new roads and the improvement of existing roads, in a substantial and durable manner, was in a great measure frustrated; that these circumstances derogated from the dignity and impaired the independence of this House; that they have reflected discredit upon the government of this province, and that they have brought the administration of the Department of Public Works into scandalous disrepute;

And further resolved, that Mr. Laurence, Mr. Webster, Mr. McGregor, Mr. William Cameron, Mr. Law, Mr. Oxley, and Mr. Welton constitute the said special committee;

That the said special committee be instructed to allow parties to this inquiry to be heard before the committee in person, and, if desired, by counsel;

That leave of the House be given to the committee to employ short-hand writers and typewriters for the purpose of taking down the evidence received before the said committee;

Mr. MILLS.

That leave of the House be given to the committee to have all the proceedings of, and evidence taken before, the committee printed or type-written from day to day for the use of members of said committee, or of the parties to this inquiry, or of counsel heard before them;

That leave of the House be given to the said committee to adjourn from place to place, as may be found expedient, and to report to this House from time to time, as may be found necessary.

Mr. Fielding, the present Finance Minister in this Government, then called the attention of the mover of the resolution to the fact that he undertook to name the members of the committee, which was contrary to the custom and rules of the House. This resolution was discussed by the members of that day. It was seconded by Dr. Bethune, who has a seat in this House.

Mr. BENNETT Where?

Mr. MILLS. On the opposite side of the House.

Mr. BENNETT How did he get there?

Mr. MILLS. On the Government side of this House. He seconded the resolution moved by the leader of the Opposition in the local House of that day, and it was thoroughly discussed. The discussions, any one can read them, are very much similar to the discussions we have heard upon the charges here that have been circulated in reference to maladministration in the Yukon. The hon. senior member for Pictou was accused of cowardice for not naming the parties. The Prime Minister of that day, the present Finance Minister in this House, did not go so far as to accuse Mr. Cahan and the supporters of that resolution with cowardice for not naming the parties, but he got his colleague, the Attorney General, Mr. James Wilberforce Longley, to utter these charges of cowardice, and it would look as if the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) had been reading the speeches of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, for they are upon the same lines and would apply equally as well as those of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Mr. Longley calls them "flippant charges," "serious charges," he also said, made against the Government, must be met and dealt with. He continued:

No person in Nova Scotia outside of a lunatic asylum imagined there was any wrongdoing on the part of the Government in connection with the expenditure of this money.

Thus, Mr. Longley spoke along the same lines as the Minister of Marine, when he (Sir Louis Davies), lifting his hand to high Heaven, and turning with a benevolent and kindly look upon the Minister of the Interior, called every person to witness what an immaculate individual he (Mr. Sifton) was with reference to the administration of the Yukon. Said Mr. Longley:

The course of the member for Shelburne (Mr. Cahan) was unprecedented in cowardice.

Almost the exact language has been hurled from the Government benches towards the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) with reference to the Yukon charges. Mr. Longley continued :

The charge made by him was opposed to every principle of parliamentary procedure, and only indicated that, in his case, cowardice was added to ignorance.

I read that as a statement of the debate that took place at that time, showing that no investigation would be allowed upon charges that were well formulated, and afterwards the names of the parties given—and I rather think that the same thing will be enacted in this House, for rather than to have parties who should be punished go unwhipt of justice, the names of parties will be given, and a direct charge will eventually be made, as was made in Nova Scotia. I could go on and show you that amendment after amendment was moved, but I do not desire to weary the House with it. I will simply read one amendment, which shows to what narrow limits the charge was brought eventually, and upon what the committee was appointed to investigate. There were a great many amendments put in between the original resolution and this last amendment, but I will forbear to read them, and will simply quote this :

Mr. Cahan moved the following resolution :—

That all the words in the motion of the Hon. Mr. Fielding after "That" be struck out, and the following added thereto :—

"On Tuesday, the 8th day of March, Mr. C. H. Cahan, one of the members of this House for the county of Shelburne, moved for a select committee of inquiry to investigate all the circumstances connected with the construction and repair of roads under the provisions of chapter 2 of the Acts of 1889, and chapter 4 Acts of 1890, and the expenditure of public moneys appropriated under said Acts. That in setting forth the grounds on which the appointment of a select committee of inquiry was urged, the said member declared that he was creditably informed and that he believed that he was able to establish by satisfactory evidence, among other facts, that the Government and the Department of Public Works had not expended these moneys in accordance with the provisions of said Acts, and that illegal expenditures had been made with the knowledge of the Commissioner of Public Works and Mines, and that various frauds had been perpetrated with the knowledge and connivance of the Department of Public Works and its officials in connection with these transactions, and that members of this House supporting the Government would be shown to be implicated in this transaction.

That the said member stated in the course of debate on the said motion "that he was assured that the statutory declarations and documentary evidence in his possession was of such a character as to justify a member of this House in making the statements which he then made."

"That this House by a majority vote passed a resolution under which no inquiry is permitted, into all the circumstances connected with the construction and repair of roads and the expenditure of public moneys appropriated under said Acts, nor into the allegations that the Government and the Department of Public Works had not expended these moneys in accordance with the provisions of the said Acts, nor into the allegation that illegal expenditures had been made, with the knowledge of the Commissioner of Public Works and Mines ; nor into the allegation that various frauds had been perpetrated with the knowledge and connivance of the Department of Public Works and its officials.

That shows what was cut from the original resolution ; that shows to what narrow scope the investigation finally was confined.

"That instead of exercising its power to strike out from the statements on which Mr. Cahan based his resolution for the appointment of a select committee of inquiry, any which might implicate members of the House, and which were regarded as too vague and indefinite for the purposes of the proposed inquiry before this House by resolution precluded a general inquiry and declared that before it would entertain charges against members of this House it would require the name of each member accused and the particulars of the charges in each case.

"That this House having declined to appoint a select committee of inquiry on the grounds set forth by Mr. Cahan to investigate all the circumstances connected with the construction and repair of roads, and the expenditures of public moneys appropriated under said Acts, has no power or authority to order the said member to make specific charges with more detailed particulars against individual members of this House, nor to order the said member to place on the Table of the House the statutory declarations and documentary evidence in his possession, which justified him in moving for such select committee of inquiry.

It was rightly argued by Mr. Cahan and the members supporting him at that time, that, if he gave all his knowledge to the Government of the day, then, the parties who were accused could very easily—as afterwards turned out to be the case—take to the woods or get out of the country. When that matter did come to an investigation, and when subpoenas were issued—subpoenas that were not allowed to be issued until the names of the parties were given—the parties subpoenaed could not be served, for they had taken to the woods and cleared out of the country. Dr. Bethune, the sitting member for Victoria in this House, seconded that resolution of Mr. Cahan. There was another amendment to this resolution, and that amendment was moved by Mr. Webster and seconded by Hon. Mr. Fielding, the present Minister of Finance in this Government. It was as follows :—

That the following words be added to the amendment :—

"And that this House affirms that its constitutional power of inquiring into any department of the Government with a view either to censure or punishment is unquestionable, and whenever a case is made out sufficiently strong to warrant the suspicion of abuse it is the indispensable duty of the House to institute such an inquiry."

That was seconded by the Hon. Mr. Fielding, then Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, now Finance Minister of Canada, and it follows almost to the exact words the precedent as laid down by the Prime Minister Pitt, and seconded by Mr. Fox, in 1788. The matter went to an investigation, mainly upon what I have read. The committee was appointed, but delay after delay was experienced, and the investigation was only held in the very last days of the sittings of the House. But even though the investigation was so narrowed in its scope, there was sufficient brought out to convince any well-disposed mind that a great fraud had been perpetrated and a great injustice had been done by not having a thorough investigation of all these matters with reference to the administration of that day. I will give to the House a resumé of what was proven at that investigation. It was proved that members of the House, supporting the Government, had connived at the making of false and fraudulent statutory declarations; that fraudulent pay-sheets had been made out, and false declarations attached thereto; and the Commissioner of Works and Mines, the then colleague of the Finance Minister in this Federal Government, had wrongfully ante-dated road commissions for the expenditure of provincial money, and placed them in the hands of members supporting the Government. The investigation also proved that the law had been grossly violated, every safeguard broken down, and thousands of dollars had been unjustly paid out by the Government. To particularize one or two items as a sample, out of hundreds that were brought out by that investigation, out of seventy pay sheets taken up in Victoria County, in Cape Breton, it had been proved that not a single foreman had spent all the money purported to have been expended. Benjamin Roper, of Cape North, spent only $93, while he was fraudulently reported to have spent $529. R. G. Burke, a merchant of Victoria, was down for an expenditure of $142, but he had not spent a dollar, and no commission had been ever issued to him. That money was never expended on the roads, and no steps have been taken to punish the forgery of Burke's name on the fraudulent proceedings which were connected with this disgraceful affair. That, in short is the result of that investigation. As I have said, this investigation took place in the last days of the sitting of the House, when everything was hurried. You all know how time can be killed in Parliament.

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, we know now.

Mr. MILLS. Not so much now, perhaps, as on former occasions. No one can rightfully accuse me of killing time in this or any other Parliament. I have no desire to hear myself talk. The hon. member for Russell (Mr. Edwards) may have that desire. A member of this House once asked me to give him an opportunity to speak in this House, and he offered me $50 to come into this House and abuse him so as to give him an opportunity to kill time. That member is not a thousand miles from me at the present time. But notwithstanding this imperfect investigation, which was very much narrowed in its scope, what I have read was proved by that investigation, and so impressed was the Government of that day in Nova Scotia with what had been made public by it, that they thought it best to send a commission down into Cape Breton during the recess to investigate the irregularities there; and whom do you suppose they appointed on that commission? No less a man than the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, the colleague of the Prime Minister, Mr. Fielding, the present Minister of Finance of this Government. That gentleman was sent down into Cape Breton as a commissioner to investigate these charges; and how did he do it? He did it a la Longley; he sent a telegram announcing his approach. He sent a telegram to the municipal council of Baddeck telling them that he would be there to investigate all charges or irregularities with reference to the expenditure of public money. The municipal council very properly told him that it did not come within their jurisdiction, that they had nothing to do with the expenditure of road moneys; and therefore Mr. Longley went down into Baddeck without notifying anybody who had anything to do with the expenditure of these road moneys, except the Liberal member for the county and the Victoria road inspector, Mr. Mackenzie. They went down through the county and held an ex parte investigation. There were no cross-examinations on the other side; no member of the Opposition was asked to be there. It was purely an ex parte investigation, and Mr. Longley brought it to a close, and made his report to the legislature at its next session.

Now, this investigation in Nova Scotia was very similar to the investigation proposed here. The investigation proposed here by the Government is a semi-ex parte investigation. It is an investigation that is entirely restricted to the charges in the petition of the miners, whereas there are other charges that have been given to this House and the country. One of those charges in particular I will refer to, that is, the matter of Mr. Philp. I read the speech of the hon. Minister of the Interior in reply to the hon. senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and I must confess that I was struck, not that it was a complete answer to the arraignment which the hon. senior member for Pictou had made, but rather a speech of confession and avoidance. It was a speech of special pleading and specious argument, and a general whine of what an enormous job he had on hand. If the hon. Minister of the Interior thought it was child's play to take charge of a department of this Government,

I presume that by this time he has found out that he was very much mistaken. I can readily conceive that it is no child's play, and it should be no child's play. But the members of this House are not here to sympathize with any Minister when he comes whining before the public, and assuring them of the tremendous difficulties he has on his hands, and what an enormous job he had to do this and to do that.

We expect him to have difficulties, we expect every Minister to have difficulties, every man who takes a position of responsibility must expect to have difficulties, and if ever there was a coward it would be one who would endeavour to extract from the House and the country sympathy because he had a heavy job on hand. I have no sympathy at all with any one who will attempt to extract sympathy from the House and country on any such pretext. The hon. Minister of the Interior had his duty to perform, he had to create an organization in a new country. That task was beset with difficulties, but to a man of the calibre of the Minister of the Interior, as he is so often described to us by his friends, that should have been but mere child's play. He found, however, that it was not mere child's play, but a pretty heavy job, and he had considerable difficulty in performing it. I shall not attempt to go into all the matters that the hon. Minister brought up in his speech, but I was particularly struck with his reference to this Philp matter. I contend that if any unprejudiced mind will take the facts, not as they have been charged, but as they have been confessed by the hon. Minister himself, such a mind will find sufficient to warrant a commission of inquiry, in accordance with the precedent laid down by the Prime Minister Pitt and seconded by Mr. Fox, in 1878, and endorsed by Mr. Fielding in the legislature of Nova Scotia in 1892. What was that precedent? It was this:

That whenever a case was made out strong enough to warrant suspicion of abuse that deserved either censure or punishment, he held it to be the indispensable duty of the House to proceed to an inquiry.

Now, what have we with reference to this Philp matter. I have not the slightest desire to distort or mistake the facts, and I hope that I have not and shall not in any way. What did the Minister of the Interior say? We find on page 877 of "Hansard," that he is reported as having said:

The story was circulated at the coast that he had given Mr. Philp a liquor permit, and that he had taken liquor into the Klondike, and with that charity which covers a multitude of sins, the story was industriously circulated that I was his partner in connection with the taking of liquor into that country. Well, Mr. Speaker, he never had a liquor permit from me or my department, directly or indirectly, or in any way, shape or form, by or under the authority of any member of this Government. I hold Mr. Philp's written statement, which he is prepared to fortify by a statutory declaration that will render him amenable to an indictment for perjury if not true, that he never took liquor into the Klondike in any way, shape or form.

That may be all true.

Mr. Philp came to me one day in my office,—
Now, this is the confession and the avoidance.

—and said that Major Walsh, having made this order about requiring 600 pounds of provisions for each person going over the Pass, he intended going up to the Yukon on a short visit—that he was just going in and out—and wanted me to give him an order to go in without the 600 pounds of provisions. I said to him: We do not need any order, the police will not stop you; you are not going as a prospector, and besides the police have not the authority to stop you.

I believe that if the Minister of the Interior had stopped there, the matter would have been all right.

The order is, to all intents and purposes, an advisory order.

Here is the avoidance:

If any one goes in without that amount of provisions the police will not stop him; they have not the authority to do it. He, however, said he did not want to have any trouble with the police, and asked me to give him a letter, which I did. I wrote this letter:

There is a slight discrepancy between the letter as given by the Minister of the Interior and the letter as read by the leader of the Opposition, which I shall point out. This is the hon. Minister's version:

This will introduce to you Mr. Philp, who will be permitted to enter the Yukon district with such provisions as he may choose to take with him, without regard to the regulations.

Then, and it is a very suspicious circumstance, the hon. Minister of the Interior endeavoured to drag in the partner of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. He said:

When Mr. Philp stopped at the coast, like the partner of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and a great many other distinguished gentlemen, he desired to become interested in the bringing of liquor into the Yukon.

Now, the hon. leader of the Opposition the other night, as a sequel to this confession of the Minister of the Interior, read the following:

—, October 4th, 1898.

W. H. Bunting, Esq.,
"Mail and Empire," Toronto.

Dear Sir,—When in Victoria, B.C., in June last, a gentleman introduced himself to me, and in substance said he had a permit to take a large quantity of liquor into the Yukon district, and wanted to know if I knew a certain distiller. I replied in the affirmative, and wished to see before taking hold of the deal in any way, the bona fide nature of the transaction. A telegram was sent at my suggestion to Victoria, where the original order or permit was held; an answer came back, which I saw, stating that the original, signed by Clifford Sifton, could be forwarded by next steamer if necessary. The party in whose favour the permit was, was Mr. Philp, partner of Clifford Sifton, of Brandon. I asked who was interested in the matter beside the party who offered it to me; he said that Philp was to receive $5,000 in cash when order or permit was handed over, and one-third of the profits at the end of the deal. I then would have nothing to do with it; did not think seriously of having anything to do with it at any time.

And this is a copy of the original order, and although it differs slightly from that read by the hon. Minister of the Interior, it is in substance the same:

Ottawa, 13th May, 1898.

To the Officers and Officials in the Yukon Territory:

This introduces Mr. Philp, who has a permit to enter the Yukon district with such provisions as he may see fit to take with him, without regard to the usual regulations.

Now then, we have those facts given by the hon. Minister of the Interior himself and supplemented by the gentleman who writes this letter and who has given an exact copy of the order as shown to him by Mr. Philp in Victoria and which, although it differs slightly from that read by the hon. Minister, is in substance the same. It is in evidence that Mr. Philp was a former partner of the Minister of the Interior. We have the statement of the hon. Minister that when he assumed a position in the Government, he ceased to be associated as partner with Mr. Philp. We are bound to take that statement, and I do not dispute it in any way. I believe it to be true that they did dissolve partnership at that time. Mr. Philp went up to the Yukon. There was a grand job ahead, of getting as much liquor as he could possibly carry into the Yukon. He wanted to get a good round permit from the Minister of the Interior, which, coupled with the fact that he had been a partner of the Minister of the Interior would enable him to sell that order or permit for a good round sum. That is not only plausible, but it is more; it is very reasonable that Mr. Philp when he got that order or permit from the Minister of the Interior did have the intention of using it in order to get as much liquor into the Yukon as he possibly could. He could go to these officials and say: Here is the Hon. Clifford Sifton's signature, as you cannot dispute, and what does he say? "This introduces Mr. Philp," and you all know that I was a partner of the Minister, and he has given me this permit to "enter the Yukon, with such provisions as he (Mr. Philp) sees fit." Provisions! We all know that when we take provisions on a fishing excursion "provisions" means a little jug of the O-be-joyful. Everybody knows that, and none knew it better than the officials of the Yukon, and Mr. Philp. It is fair and reasonable that this was the interpretation that Mr. Philp put upon that order, and he valued it at no less a sum than ten thousand dollars. Now, there is no permit required to take provisions into the Yukon; but Mr. Philp wanted a permit to take in his provisions. So far as the direct terms are concerned, the Minister did not give him a permit to take liquor into the Yukon. He might not have meant it; but if we are to believe thoroughly the Minister of the Interior and to believe the evidence that is put before us, we have to come to this conclusion—that Mr. Philp pulled the leg, as it were, of the Minister of the Interior, pulled the leg of him, the innocent man, and got an order from that innocent man for carrying liquor into the Yukon, which order Mr. Philp valued at ten thousand dollars. Now, I say there are facts enough in that transaction to cause a suspicion of malpractice against the Administration. There is enough in that transaction to arouse such a suspicion of abuse of the power of the Minister of the Interior as to call for an investigation under the precedent established by Prime Minister Pitt in 1778, which I have already read and which was endorsed by the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, who is now the Minister of Finance, in 1892.

Now, I listened attentively to what the Minister of Finance said, and endeavoured to understand the points he dealt with. I must confess that he endeavoured to cover up more points than he made. He sought to create the impression that the Opposition were endeavouring to aid aliens, and that he, of all the men in this country was crying out for protection to the British flag. He urged that we put no search-light upon the private life of any individual. I say that it is unworthy the dignity of the Finance Minister of this country to make a stump speech in this Parliament, and his use of such arguments is just what the back bencher would do in making a stump speech here to circulate amongst his constituents. Who wants to have a search-light put upon the private life of any individual in this country? I do not believe that that was the intention of the senior member for Pictou, and I know perfectly well that I have no such intention and it would be news to me to hear that any member on this side of the House had any desire to throw a search-light upon the private life of any individual and expose it before the country. But when a man's private life comes in contact with his public work, it is proper and right that to the extent that his private life does come in contact with his public work, that private life becomes subject to public scrutiny, the motto being: "Hew to the line, let the chips fall where they may." If, in the investigation, it be shown that Major Walsh did do things that he had no right to do, that he abused his power as administrator of the Yukon, then, no member of Parliament, in order to refrain from holding that man's private life up to gaze should refrain from giving his opinion upon facts upon which the public have an interest. If Major Walsh was all right, why need he fear an investigation? If the Minister of the Interior is all right, why need he fear an investigation? Why do they not do, as has often been done before—declare that they will throw down the barriers, will take no advantage of legal technicalities, but believing themselves to be pure and to have done what was right, submit their case for examination. If they are ready to say with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries: We promised you pure Government, and thank God we are giving it to you, why do they not throw down all barriers and invite investigation into this matter? If you were to do such a thing as that, it would be one of the greatest knock down blows that the leader of the Opposition ever received in his life. The very fact that you do not do it, creates suspicion of abuse, and the country will hold you responsible for that. The Minister of Finance seemed to think that the only thing he needed to mention in order to prove that an officer was good and holy, was that he had been appointed by a Liberal-Conservative Administration; and in order to show that a regulation was good and pure, it was only necessary for him to show that it was the regulation under the Liberal-Conservative regime. I was led to believe from what I had heard the members of the Government say when they were in Opposition, that the Conservatives never did anything that was right, that they never appointed a correct man to a position, that nothing they ever did was right. Now, a great deal was said by the Minister of Finance with reference to the horse dealer and the whaler. The whaler happened to be a man from Nova Scotia, and the Minister of Finance wanted to be sure that Nova Scotians were not maligned, that this whaler was not maligned, for if this whaler was maligned, I am sure some of those fishermen in Sheburne would vote against him in the next election, therefore, he must pronounce a eulogium upon the whalers and the fishermen in Nova Scotia. I consider that clap trap very much beneath the dignity of the Finance Minister of this Dominion, and it is by reason of so much of that being in his speech that the country will conclude that there is a great deal more of malfeasance in office in connection with these Yukon affairs than has yet been developed. He has also talked about blackguarding Ogilvie. Now, nobody has ever blackguarded Ogilvie. Every member of the Opposition, I am sure, has a high respect for Mr. Ogilvie. I have never yet heard one whisper about blackguarding Mr. Ogilvie; all we say is that Mr. Ogilvie is not the proper man to investigate these charges. And why is he not a proper man to investigate these charges? He is a hired man, if you please—I say that in no offensive sense—he is a hireling, if you like, a hireling of the present Administration, and being a hireling, he is not a fit person to investigate these matters. The Minister of Finance asked why should a judicial man be appointed. Why is the Administration so afraid of the judges? When we had the Franchise Act before us last session, they were terribly afraid of judges, afraid of an appeal to judges. And by the way, I have heard nothing in Nova Scotia of any influence being brought to bear by the Prime Minister of this Dominion upon the Government of Nova Scotia to amend their Franchise Act so as to allow an appeal from the revisers' court to the judges and not to the sheriffs.

The PRIME MINISTER. Do you want to see the correspondence?

Mr. MILLS. I should like to see it very much.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well, if you will move for it I will bring it down.

Mr. MILLS. I should like to see it very much. Will the hon. gentleman take this as a motion for that correspondence.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think you had better move for it.

Mr. MILLS. At all events the Prime Minister has influence with the Government of Nova Scotia. It was not very long ago that I stood in the presence of a Cabinet Minister of this Dominion and of the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, when the Attorney General turned around in a very dramatic manner and shook his finger in the face of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, and said: I will tell this country and I will tell this people that you may turn me out of my county, you may turn me out of the legislature, if you like, but I will tell you here in the presence of the Canadian Minister of the Crown that I will no longer be a party hack. I heard him say that. Perhaps it was done for a show of independence, and this correspondence will reveal the grounds on which to base such an assertion as that. But it was very funny, it was very amusing to learn that the very next week some one had such an influence with the Attorney General that he moved in his place in the legislature of Nova Scotia a resolution affecting the reform of the Senate, thereby returning to the traces as a veritable party hack. It seems to me that whenever proper influences are brought to bear, some one, whether it is the Prime Minister of this Government or whether it is a hireling of Mackenzie & Mann, some one has some influence yet with the Attorney General in Nova Scotia and his Government. Now, the Minister of Finance says: Having commenced an investigation we should wait for the report of Mr. Ogilvie. A great many things might happen while we are waiting for the report of Mr. Ogilvie. Besides that, Mr. Ogilvie's power of investigation is very much restricted. He has no power to investigate the maladministration of the department in the Yukon, he has no power to investigate suspicions of charges, as was contemplated by the Prime Minister Pitt, and Mr. Fox, in 1788, We have had suspicions of charges sufficient to ask any administration to grant a thorough investigation into these matters. I say it ill-becomes any Government who has the welfare of the country at heart, to refuse an investigation of that nature. I can remember when in this House the leader of the Government of that day, Sir John Thompson, when charges were being brought with reference to the civil servants in the different departments, threw down all barriers and gave access to all papers and all documents for that purpose. If the Minister of the Interior has done nothing that was improper, if he is immaculate as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries says he is, if we are to have a pure Government, as we have been promised, then why do you not satisfy this House and the country by throwing down all barriers and opening up a free investigation into these matters? As I said before, if that were done, it would be one of the greatest blows ever delivered to the hon. leader of the Opposition. The Government misses a great opportunity in not doing this.

Now, I do not desire to say very much more in reference to this matter with the exception of this: The hon. Minister of Finance says that we, the members of the Opposition, are forced to the Yukon for grounds of attack as we are devoid of all other grounds. He says that we have no grounds upon which to attack the Government of the day but upon this matter of the Yukon, and that we are endeavouring to drive this matter to the bitter end, because it is the last straw that we have to grasp at, that the prophecies of the Liberal-Conservative party have not been fulfilled under this Administration. He says that we had prophesied that there would be deficits, but instead of deficits we have a surplus, that the country would go to ruin and manufacturers would fail, whereas now the manufacturers are flourishing and the country is in a prosperous condition. As one of the Opposition who has been in this House since 1887, I say that I rejoice with the Government of the day that the country is in the prosperous condition that she is in, that the prophecies of the Liberal-Conservative party have been fulfilled to the very letter, that the prophecies of the Liberal-Conservative party have always been that if the policy of the Liberal-Conservative party were adhered to, the country would go on and prosper. The Liberal-Conservative party prophesied that if the policy that was inaugurated by the right hon. Prime Minister and assented to and promulgated over the length and breadth of Canada by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), had been carried out in its entirety, this country to-day would be in ruins, that instead of having manufacturers flourishing we would have manufacturers in insolvency, that instead of having the country prosperous, the country would be in ruins.

I was going on to say something with reference to the exodus. There is as much exodus to-day as ever there was, but the only difference is that the Liberal-Conservative papers are not talking about it the way the Grit papers used to talk about it when the Liberal-Conservatives were in power. There are just as many people going to the United States as ever, but I do not call that an exodus. I never have done so and do not now. There is just as much exodus, however, as ever there was. You can look in the papers that do not desire to boom an exodus, that do not desire to puff an exodus, and they will give you authentic accounts of people going to and from, between the maritime provinces and the United States, precisely the same, and more, than ever was done before. And why? Because business has been extending for the last ten or twelve years; steamship companies have been instituted between the maritime provinces and the United States, and travel has increased. All the prophecies of the Liberal-Conservative party have been fulfilled to the very letter in every regard. I rejoice with the Government that the country is in a prosperous condition, but it is entirely due to the policy inaugurated by the Liberal-Conservative party, and the policy retained by the present administration. Had that policy been brought forward by the Minister of Finance to-day that he preached in Annapolis County and all over Nova Scotia, and his speeches I have here under my hand, in which he said that they were going to make a reduction of the duties on coal, flour, on cotton, and in which he stigmatized protection as legalized robbery—if that had been brought before this country by the hon. Minister of Finance, the prophecies of the Liberal-Conservative party would have been fulfilled to the letter, but, thank God, it was not done, and the Liberal-Conservatives to-day rejoice in that fact. If I should read the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance that he delivered in Annapolis, at Bridgetown and Deep Brook, in my county, it would show this House exactly what is in his mind in reference to the policy that the Liberals when they came into power would bring upon this country, but he has not done it. He has shown himself to be a blatant hypocrite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MILLS. He has shown himself to be a hypocrite, as he has shown himself in other things; for instance, on the question of repeal, to be nothing more or less than a blatant hypocrite.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman is going a little too far, and besides, I think he should confine himself in his speech to the question under discussion.

Mr. MILLS. I do not wish to go beyond the discussion in the least, but when the hon. Finance Minister in his speech referred to the prophecies of the Liberal-Conservative party, and spoke in reference to their prophecies not being fulfilled, I think I am fully within my rights—of course, I bow to your decision—if I should adduce argument to confute such an idea as that. However, I do not wish to pursue that; there will be several opportunities to show up the matter, as it will be shown up in a very thorough manner. I am thoroughly determined upon that.

Now, the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries promised us a great many things in his speech. On page 1662 of "Hansard" he said:

And if this commission, by reason of any limitation in its power or in the construction put upon it by the lawyers, cannot attain that end, this Government will enlarge the commission and will see that justice is done. There will be no skulking behind any law points, there will be no attempt to evade the investigation on the ground that the commission has no authority.

But the commission is up there and the commissioner has to make his report. How can the hon. gentleman fulfil any such promise as that? The commission is there for the purpose of investigating some particular charges; other matters have come up which need fuller and greater investigation than even those before Commissioner Ogilvie. I think the Administration would show wisdom, and that it would be for their own credit, for the welfare of their party, and the welfare and good name of the country should they accept the amendment as proposed by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke).

Mr. MORRISON moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 18th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRESENTATION OF PETITIONS— PROCEDURE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to call the attention of the members of the House to the 85th rule respecting the presentation of petitions, which requires that each member shall endorse his name thereupon before presenting it. There is the difficulty that if this is not done, it is impossible for the Clerk to tell who presented that petition, and unless that rule is complied with I do not see how his name can appear on the Journals. I would also suggest that the name of the endorser of a Bill, public or private, which is not the name given in the original Bill but that of another member, as well as the second order of the Bill, should both be endorsed on the Bill before it is sent up to the Chair.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar) moved that the second report of the committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of this House be adopted.

Mr. BRUNEAU. Explain.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman asks me to explain. Would it not be in order for the Clerk to read the report for his benefit, and for the benefit of the other members of the House?

The Clerk reads the report.

Mr. BRUNEAU. Explain.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The hon. gentleman persists in asking me to explain. I have nothing to explain, the report is before the House. It recommends the appointment of Mr. Albert Horton as Chief of the "Hansard" staff, and it also recommends the dismissal of Mr. J. O. Pelland who has been employed in the capacity of translator. If there is any criticism to be offered with regard to the report, hon. gentlemen may make their criticism, and the other members of the committee will no doubt be heard from with regard to the action that was taken by the committee.

Mr. C. BEAUSOLEIL (Berthier). I have no objection to the adoption of the first part of this report appointing Mr. Horton as the chief reporter on the staff of the Debates. I believe Mr. Horton was the choice of the reporters themselves, and they have recommended his appointment as chief reporter.

The objection I have is to the second part of the report, which recommends that the services of Mr. Pelland be dispensed with, and the principal reason of my objection to this part of the report is that Mr. Pelland has been tried in his absence, without his knowledge and without any notice being given to him that charges were going to be brought against him. He has had no chance to know what the charges were; he has had no chance to give any explanation; he has had no chance to be heard before the committee. He was not informed that these charges were being preferred by the chief translator; he had not been informed, in any way whatsoever, of the intended action of the committee, and I say that in a British colony, a British subject has never been tried and punished or dismissed from office without at least having a chance to say whether he has an answer to make to the charges made against him or not. This is the first time, within my knowledge and within my reading, that a British Parliament, or a British tribunal, has dealt with a man in respect to a charge without giving him a chance to be heard. In this case, unexpectedly, without any notification, without any information whatever, Mr. Pelland has been tried and dismissed without being given a chance to be heard. I say that, in my opinion, this should not have taken place, and having confidence in the sense of justice and fair-play of the House of Commons, I will ask it to instruct the committee to hear Mr. Pelland, if he has anything to say in his defence. I suppose the committee is composed of reasonable men who will give him a fair trial. If his reasons are bad, the committee will be able to deal with him, and the House will be able to deal with him, with a full knowledge of the facts. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I would like to move in amendment, seconded by the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Bruneau), that the said report be referred back to the Debates Committee for further consideration. I do not want to discuss this matter, although I will be prepared to discuss the whole question on its merits when the proper time comes, but I do not think there is anything before the House to justify such a discussion at present. There is a bald report recommending the dismissal of Mr. Pelland, but not a single word of evidence to show why the man has been dismissed or that the committee has had Mr. Pelland before it, that he has been summoned to appear before the committee to give his reasons, if he has any. If he refuses to appear before the committee, it would then be justified in dealing with him in the way it is proposed to do, but in the absence of any chance being given to Mr. Pelland to be heard, I believe it is the duty of the House to send back the report to the committee in order that Mr. Pelland may be heard and that a full report may be submitted to this House. I move that the report be sent back for further consideration.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). The statement which the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) has made, in making his amendment renders it necessary that some explanation of the proceedings of the committee should be made to the members of this House. I may say that complaints have reached the members of the Debates Committee almost since the time of coming here this session, and in past sessions that the French translation has not been kept up, that there has been great delay and that members have not been enabled to get their French translation. The committee made up its mind that it would deal with the matter in an effective way, and, in order to do so, the committee sent for the Queen's Printer and Mr. Beaulieu, who is chief of the translating staff. Rumours had reached the members of the committee that translators had not been doing their duty, and when we proceeded to examine the chief we found that it was with considerable hesitation that he would say anything to us at all. He acted in such a way as to give us the impression that he was afraid to be frank with us, that he was scared to tell us how his staff were working. My hon. friend the member for North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville) spoke to him very frankly, informing him that if he did not do his duty, that if he did not tell us exactly the position of affairs, if he did not tell us who were competent and who were not competent, there was nothing left for us to do but to dismiss him. After being threatened in that way he became very frank. We went over the translators one by one, and when we came to the name of Mr. J. O. Pelland, he frankly informed us that this man did not do his work at all. That while he had been appointed as a translator and drew salary as a translator, he actually did not perform his work, but he said that he farmed his work out to other people, that although he drew $1,000 for being a translator, he was able to get the work performed for some $200 or $300 by a person in Montreal. The statement was a very startling one to the members of the committee, and we made up our minds that there was only one way in which we could deal with that man. The logical conclusion of such a statement was that Mr. Pelland, who drew this salary and did not do any work, had no business to be a translator. We had the evidence of the chief translator in the matter and that was perfectly satisfactory to us. Had we not accepted that statement, whose evidence should we have accepted? So far as I was concerned, the one logical conclusion was that this man should be dismissed, and that he should be dismissed promptly. The chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Berthier, refused to put the motion; in fact, he said: "You may carry it with your majority, but I will leave the chair." Well, I just felt, and the other members of the committee felt that that action, on his part, made it all the more necessary that we should act and act summarily, because if we did not act and did not dismiss this translator the whole business was bound to get into chaos, and we could never get the chief translator to again trust us. So I moved that the hon. member for North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville) take the chair. The hon. gentleman declined, and a motion that somebody else should take the chair was made. He also declined. I felt particularly the urgency of action, and I said that "if nobody else will take the chair I will take it, if somebody will make a motion." I was promptly moved to the chair, a motion was made that Pelland be dismissed. I put it to the committee; they fully discussed it, and the motion was carried with two dissenting voices. We felt, and we feel now, that unless this House sustains the action of this committee, so far as this action is concerned its usefulness is gone, because we cannot hope to exercise that influence over the staff that we should have. Members of the committee, who are present, have expressed themselves to me very strongly that unless that committee is sustained in its action it will be quite useless to attempt to carry out the reforms which your committee is trying to work in connection with the translation of the debates.

Mr. E. G. PENNY (St. Lawrence, Montreal). I would ask the hon. gentleman for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) if the accusation against Mr. Pelland was for this year or for last year. I would also ask him if it is a fact, that Mr. Pelland has not been attending to his duties this year at all?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I cannot say absolutely as to what period the accusations cover, but I may say—and I think it is a very effective point—that after taking the action which the committee did, there was a meeting of the sub-committee which is trying to work reform in this matter, and a gentleman now sitting in the press gallery came before that committee and stated to us, that he had done the work of this Mr. Pelland, and that Mr. Pelland had not paid him the amount he promised. We cannot ask for more evidence than that, and, therefore, why refer a report of this kind back to the committee? The statements with regard to Mr. Pelland are absolutely true. We have had the evidence before us, and I make a statement to this House which can be proven by the person who actually did the translation for Mr. Pelland and who is now sitting within reach of my voice. Any hon. member of the House could no doubt get the evidence for himself.

Mr. PENNY. The reason why I ask this question of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) is simply, that I have been informed that up to this year all the translators were in the habit of taking their work home to wherever they lived, and that they had also been in the habit of farming out the work. My information, whether it be correct or not, is that this custom has been going on for some years, but has been stopped this year. I was told by an hon. member of this House, that Mr. Pelland was unable to translate from English into French, but I happen to know Mr. Pelland and I know he understands the English language very well, and I am under the impression that he is quite capable of translating from English into French. Of course, if Mr. Pelland has been guilty of any infringement of the rules of the House I do not want to defend him, but at the same time, under the circumstances and after hearing both sides of the case, I think it is only reasonable to support the amendment of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), and for my part I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. J. SOMERVILLE (North Wentworth and Brant). There may be a little more said with regard to the case of Mr. Pelland and as to the reasons why the committee acted so promptly. I have had the honour of being a member of the "Hansard" Committee ever since I have been in the House, and we have had great difficulty, session after session, in dealing with the translators. There have been continual complaints made by the French speaking members of this House, that the translation of their speeches has been kept back and delayed sometimes for weeks after it should have been ready. We have been trying to deal with that matter year after year. We have endeavoured to get a room in this House where the translators could do their work, but we have always failed, although this building ought to be sufficiently large to provide accommodation for all the officers of the House. The committee secured a room on Sussex street some years ago, and it was determined that the translators should do their work there. The committee have been under the impression for years that the translators were there continuously doing their work. A good deal of the trouble arose from this cause. The chief translator for a number of years refused to speak to the committee in English, and he said he could not make himself understood in that language, and after some years of this being carried on, some of us discovered that he could speak English as well as we could, and we compelled him to make his explanations in English. The whole trouble is that the chief of the staff is in mortal terror of the members of the staff. He has been afraid in times past to tell us with regard to their faults and failings, and we have now discovered that we must get at the bottom of this matter in order to perfect the work of the "Hansard." We had the chief translator brought before us in this case, and we discovered, not as has been stated here to-day, that Mr. Pelland has not done his work, but we have the word of the chief translator that Mr. Pelland is not capable of doing his work, that he is not a translator, that he cannot translate, that he never translated a line since he was appointed a translator. What surprises me is that a man like the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) should recommend the appointment of a man not capable of translating the debates, because this Mr. Pelland was the nominee of the hon. member for Berthier, and why he should impose on the committee in that way I cannot understand. The English-speaking members of the committee have all along allowed the French-speaking members of the committee to recommend the appointment of their own translators, we taking it for granted that they would only recommend men who are capable of doing the work. In this case we have been utterly deceived; we have been led into the appointment of a man who, the chief translator says, never could translate and cannot translate to-day. That opinion has been sustained by reporters who are sitting in the gallery now, and my opinion is that the chief translator was right in that regard. Now, what could we do as members of that committee? Could we retain that man in his position and pay him $1,000 a year when he was getting the work done for $300 or $400 a year? I say it is an outrage on that committee, it is an outrage on this House. I do not care who the man is who is guilty of that outrage, this House should sustain the committee in the action it took. We were simply doing our duty, and if we are not to be sustained by the House in the discharge of our duty, then the usefulness of the committee is gone. We can no longer carry on the business of that committee if this House is going to upset such a straightforward and business-like report as this. We did perfectly right in dismissing this man. While on this point I wish to express the hope that you, Mr. Speaker, and other members of this House who have influence, will enable us to obtain a room in this building where we can place these translators so as to have some supervision over them and see that they do their work. It is true that the translations have been sent to Montreal, but we were not aware of that. A number of the reports have been transmitted there for years, the men have not been here to do their work, and it is no wonder that delays have taken place which have caused so much trouble and so much fuss in this House with regard to the French translation. The committee have now determined that this work shall be done here, and if the House does not desire to have the work done in an efficient way, we will know it if it votes in favour of the amendment of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil). We have done our duty, it has not been an agreeable duty; it is a very disagreeable duty, but people sometimes have to do disagreeable things in order that right may triumph. I have every faith that this House will sustain the committee in the discharge of their duty, and if they do not they will have to get some other committee to do the work.

Mr. G. TAYLOR (South Leeds). As a member of the Debates Committee, I wish to put two of my colleagues on that committee right before this House. Immediately after the action of the committee, on April 10th, the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) wrote a letter to the Montreal "Gazette," in which he said:

The resolution dismissing Mr. Pelland was moved by Mr. Earle, and seconded by Mr. Davin, two Conservatives, and carried on the following division.

I wish to state to the hon. member for Berthier that that paragraph in his letter is not correct. The motion was moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and seconded by the hon. member for

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

South Brant (Mr. Somerville). When the hon. member for Berthier left the chair, the hon. member for Lisgar was moved to the chair, and he put the motion and it was carried on division.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John, N.B.). I would like to make one observation with reference to what my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Penny) has said. There were no accusations made by the chief translator against this translator. All the facts were dragged from the chief translator under so difficult and rigid a cross-examination that he was unable to escape telling what he knew, and putting the information in possession of the committee. I quite agree with the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), that if the committee is to be continued to do its work efficiently, it must be sustained in this case, because it was moved by no other desire than a desire to have the work done properly.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, it has been the invariable practice of this House, when questions of this kind have arisen, to sustain the action of the committee, whatever that action was. We must recognize that it is impossible for us, sitting here, to form any conclusion as to the merits of this dismissal. It may be right or it may be wrong. I am assured that it is right, because the members of the committee have come to this conclusion. I would not go so far as my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) and say that Mr. Pelland is not qualified to be a translator.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That is the chief's word.

The PRIME MINISTER. My acquaintance with Mr. Pelland is not sufficient to enable me to give an opinion on that point; but I believe that he is. At all events, the committee has come to a conclusion on this matter. No doubt, it must have been a painful one to the committee, because it is always painful to recommend a man's dismissal. But what are we to do in such matters? It is impossible for us to revise the whole thing. We have committees of the House appointed for the very purpose of attending to matters which it is impossible for the members of this House to attend to for themselves; and, having full confidence in the judgment of the members of the committee, for my part, though I regret it exceedingly, I see no other course for us to take than to sustain the action of the committee.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright). Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry indeed to rise, after the remarks of the right hon. the Prime Minister, and to be put in the very unfortunate position of differing with him on the question now before you. But before this question is put, I wish to offer a few words of explanation of the vote I have given in the Debates Committee concerning the dismissal of this translator, Mr. Pelland. Before dealing with the merits of the case, I wish to vindicate the French translators, and to refute some charges which have been brought against them by the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Somerville) and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson). It has been stated by these gentlemen, that for years complaints have been made against the French translators because of the delay in the translation of "Hansard." In view of these charges, Mr. Dawson, the Queen's Printer, and Mr. Beaulieu, the chief translator, were summoned to appear before the committee. Mr. Dawson appeared, and his first words were a solemn declaration that no reproach was to be made against the translators—that if the French translation was delayed, it was not their fault, but was due to other causes. These causes were mentioned by Mr. Dawson, and the majority of the committee know what they were. The delay was due to the fact that some hon. members of this House kept the proofs of their speeches too long, so that Mr. Dawson could not transmit the revised English edition to the translators in due time; and in that connection the names of some very prominent members of this House were mentioned by Mr. Dawson.

Now, in regard to Mr. Pelland's case, these are the facts, as they were established before the committee. Mr. Pelland had been a French translator for three years. He had begun his third session as a French translator. No complaint had been made against him before. Mr. Beaulieu was summoned before the committee at its last meeting to give some explanations in connection with the work of the French translators. He was questioned as to the competency of the different translators whom he had under his control; and, after the inquiry was over, we saw that Mr. Pelland was one of those who were to be accused. In fact, the questions which were put to Mr. Beaulieu were inducements to him to say that Mr. Pelland was not qualified. The very fact that Mr. Beaulieu was so reluctant in answering the questions, and that, as the hon. member for Lisgar has said, he showed so much hesitation in saying that Mr. Pelland was not qualified, until he was himself threatened with dismissal as chief translator, shows that he was compelled to say that Mr. Pelland was not competent. This was the only evidence that came before the committee to justify the dismissing of Mr. Pelland. It was shown before the committee that Mr. Pelland had been appointed on the recommendation of the then chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil). I did not myself know what were the qualifications of Mr. Pelland. I did not know whether he was competent or not; but, as he had been appointed on the recommendation of the hon. member for Berthier, an hon. gentleman who had been for twenty-five or thirty years an eminent journalist, I thought he must have been competent; and, as between the hon. member for Berthier and the chief translator, I thought I ought to give Mr. Pelland the benefit of the doubt. Therefore, I said I would not vote for his dismissal. These are the reasons I gave to the committee. I say it was not fair for the committee to dismiss a man in such a summary way, without giving him a chance to be heard, even if he had been incompetent or guilty of misconduct. I think that British fair-play ought to have been shown, and it was not shown in this case. I do not say that Mr. Pelland is competent. I do not know; but, I say it again, as between the testimony of the chief translator and the hon. member for Berthier, I thought it was only fair to give him the benefit of the doubt, and give him an opportunity to be heard. Now, Mr. Pelland, as the hon. member for Berthier has stated, has not been notified of the charge that has been brought against him. I think, the least that could have been done would have been to have given him the opportunity to resign, if he was not qualified. It has been stated that he had given his work to be done by some outsider. Well, it has not only been shown before the committee, but I think that every member of this House will admit, that other French translators had their work done by outsiders. This is a custom that has been tolerated for years, and I do not think it was a serious ground for Mr. Pelland's dismissal. Under these circumstances, I think the amendment moved by the hon. member for Berthier to refer the report back to the committee for further consideration, ought to be adopted. It is only fair-play, it is only justice to Mr. Pelland to grant him a hearing. He does not ask this simply for the pleasure of appearing before the committee. If he is incompetent, his incompetency will then be shown, and that will be so much the worse for him; but I think he ought to be given an opportunity to defend himself before being condemned, and, therefore, under these circumstances, I shall support the amendment.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). The question is not whether Mr. Pelland is competent or not, but it is the question of fact as to whether he has done the work or not. Mr. Pelland was beginning his third session as translator, and it turns out that up to this date he has not translated a single line of the debates of this House, although he was paid for doing that work. I was absent from the city when the committee held its last meeting, and, therefore, took no part in the vote, but having been chairman of that committee for four years during the last Parliament, I know something about its internal affairs, and I know, as has been said by hon. members on this side, that the business of that committee is conducted without any regard to politics or any other consideration, except fitness and efficient service on the part of those subject to its control. The hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) tried to make it appear in the Montreal "Gazette" the other day that the Conservative members of the committee had determined to dismiss Mr. Pelland because he happened to be a Liberal. Let me say that that was a false statement on his part.

Mr. SPEAKER. Those words must be qualified.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I am speaking on a question of fact.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that he cannot contradict the statement of another hon. member.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Then I will say that the statement of the hon. member for Berthier, in the Montreal "Gazette," which has been quoted, is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is perfectly parliamentary.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Yes, but it is also perfectly correct. In order to arrive at that conclusion, the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) was obliged to leave out the name of my hon. friend opposite me (Mr. Ellis), who happened to be at that meeting, and by leaving out the name of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) it so happened that perhaps there was a majority of Conservatives sitting on that board who voted on that motion. But apart from this, let me say, with reference to what has been hinted by my hon. friend from Wright (Mr. Champagne), that if there are any other members of that staff who are guilty of the same fault as Mr. Pelland, the committee, I am sure, is ready to deal with them in like manner. We are bound to see that the work is properly done—done in such a way as to satisfy the members of this House. My hon. friend from Wright has told us that Mr. Dawson said it was not the fault of the translators if the reports were behind, but Mr. Dawson on that occasion only spoke about the translation of this session, and my hon. friend from Wright, who had not a seat on that committee, even in this House in the past, does not know that in the past we have had the same trouble. He is not aware of all the trouble we have always had with the board of translators and with the Printing Bureau and the printing of the French, and even the English copy of the debates; and if we want to have expedition in the publication of both the English and French debates, the committee must be given full authority and power to exercise such authority on the Printing Bureau and translators so as to have the work done in an effective manner.

Mr. LaRIVIERE.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). I do not want to delay the House on this question at all. I quite agree with the right hon. Prime Minister when he says that questions of fact must be left to the committees, and that the committees should alone judge such questions. I quite understand that if we were to discuss all the facts brought before the committees, the business of this House would be very much delayed; but at the same time I humbly submit that the question now before the House is not whether the facts have been or have not been proved before the committee. We do not question the competency of the committee, but we do think that the committee should have given Mr. Pelland the opportunity that is given to every man before every tribunal, namely, the opportunity of being heard and of refuting, if possible, the charges brought against him. It has been said by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) that it was proved that Mr. Pelland never did the work himself, but I understand that that charge was made by the head of the translating staff after he was threatened himself with dismissal if he would not make it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. BOURASSA. Well, something like it, because I understand from the hon. members for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and Brant (Mr. Somerville), that he was very reluctant about making the charge. I do not mean that he was induced to say something which is not true, but what I do say is that he was forced to give his evidence, and I do not see, by any of the utterances of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), or the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville), or by the report of the committee, or by anything we have heard, that Mr. Pelland was given an opportunity to defend himself. The least that the committee should have done was to grant Mr. Pelland a hearing. I think that the committee should have had both Mr. Beaulieu and Mr. Pelland present, and then have heard Mr. Pelland after Mr. Beaulieu, the chief, had given his evidence.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me? The only reason why the committee could not get Mr. Pelland to appear before it and defend himself was because he was never here on duty at all, but was in Montreal all the time, and the committee was not going to have a sitting in Montreal to look for him.

Mr. BOURASSA. I do not wish to contradict the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), but I understand that on the day the committee took action, Mr. Pelland was here and ready to appear before them. I do not wish to defend his conduct, nor do I say that he should be kept on the staff or that any other member of that staff, who has acted in the same way, should not be similarly treated, but what I do say is that the committee should have dealt with the matter as would any other tribunal, inside or outside of Parliament, and have given Mr. Pelland a hearing. Therefore, in voting for the amendment of the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), I do not see that we are blaming the committee because the next time the committee report, their report may be to the same effect, and then I would be the first to vote for it. But I only say that the same chance should be given Mr. Pelland before condemning him as is given to any other man accused by any tribunal that tries his case. I submit, therefore, that the report should be sent back for further consideration in order that Mr. Pelland should have the opportunity of appearing before us, and also in order that the hon. members for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), North Brant (Mr. Somerville), and Provencher (Mr. La-Rivière), may prove to the House that they have acted fairly. I am not a member of the committee or a personal friend of Mr. Pelland. I only learned that he was translator the same day that I learned of his dismissal, but I say that if any committee wants to be sustained by this House, it must give clear evidence that it has acted fairly. I do not care what Mr. Pelland's politics may be. If he is a Liberal and has acted wrongly, let him be dismissed, and if any of the Tory members of the translating staff are not acting properly, let them be dismissed also. I want the proper rule to be laid down. But, while I am on my feet, I wish to say a few words as to this French translation. I know something about it. I know that very often, when delay has occurred in the French translation of the "Hansard," that delay arises from the fact, as has been stated before the committee, that members keep the first proof of their speeches back too long before making corrections. It must not be forgotten, Mr. Speaker, that delay in sending back the corrections for one speech is enough to stop the work. The staff must keep the speeches in order. Suppose one hon. member makes a speech this afternoon and ten speeches are made subsequently to-day and to-morrow, and the first speaker does not send in his revision—the whole work of translation is delayed; neither the French translators nor the printers can go on. It is not only the French "Hansard," but other public documents in French that are delayed. The other day I went to Mr. Botterell to get a copy of the French translation of the Postmaster General's report, but I could not get it. I had evidence, however, that the copy of the French translation had been sent to the printer, but had been delayed at the Bureau for a long time. So we should not put all the blame upon the French translators. Of course, that is not the question before the House—the point which it seems to me to be the strongest in the case is that delay should be allowed in such cases as this, so that those who are threatened with dismissal may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. F. D. MONK; (Jacques Cartier). The committee has my entire confidence; and I think we are all disposed to uphold the committee in its arduous labours. But there is here a question of principle, and it is upon that question of principle that I am inclined to support the amendment of my hon. friend from Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil). It is not a question whether this man is incompetent or whether this habit of farming out the work had existed in the past or not. These facts, so far as I can see, we are not fully informed upon. I am inclined to think, from what we have been told, that the practice has existed in the past; and, if this is the case, then, before dismissing a man for following that practice, he should be warned. But, Sir, there is a deeper principle and one to which I am more firmly attached, since I have been in this House than I ever was before, and it is a principle which I think we ought to emphasize and safeguard in every possible way—that no man in the public service should be dismissed from that service without having had an opportunity of being heard in his own defence on any charge brought against him. Sir, I do not wish to bring up old sores, but since 1896, in the province of Quebec, in my own county, I have seen so many men dismissed from the public service without knowing in any way with what offence they were charged, without being given the slightest opportunity of presenting their defence, that I have resolved on every occasion—and I am glad that this discussion involving that principle, has arisen—to stand by that principle and do what I can to secure for the public officer an opportunity to be heard in his own defence. As to Mr. Pelland, I am not very well acquainted with that gentleman's attainments as a translator; but I am inclined to believe that, like the most of the French Canadian members of the bar in Montreal, he is quite competent for the work. At any rate, it must be obvious, I think, to every man of justice in this House that if that practice of farming out the work has existed in the past, Mr. Pelland should not be dismissed on that ground without being at least warned that the practice should be stopped. I think there is a question of principle involved. I have, as I say, every confidence in the committee; and if that committee came before us with a finding after the procedure I suggest I should accept that finding. But I think we should declare that no man shall be dismissed without a hearing.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I rise to make an explanation. The committee was not aware, until the chief of the translating staff told us the other day, that any work has been farmed out.

Mr. MONK. But has it existed?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Not that we were aware of.

Mr. MONK. But the hon. gentleman is not able to say that it did not exist.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This is the first of it, so far as we knew. With regard to what the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne) has said, I may explain that the chief of the staff was not forced into making a statement that this man was not qualified. He volunteered the statement, after we gave him to understand that we had not been having his confidence in the past, and that we must have his confidence now. If he was to be chief, we had to have confidence that he would inform us of anything with regard to the capacity or incapacity of the members of the staff that it was desirable for us to know. It was upon that ground that he made the statement; and the reason why Mr. Pelland was dismissed was because the chief stated that he had never translated, that he had farmed out his work, and was incapable of translating.

Mr. F. A. MARCOTTE (Champlain). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think the principle laid down by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) is the right principle which should obtain in so far as the civil service is concerned. Nobody should be dismissed from the service of the country without a hearing. Now, Mr. Pelland is being dismissed without being given a chance of being heard in his own defence, and without an investigation into the facts of the case having been held.

I intend to vote in favour of the amendment of my hon. friend from Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), because I think it unfair to dismiss Mr. Pelland without giving him an opportunity of being heard in his own defence. We, Conservatives, have had in the past too many grounds of complaint in connection with those dismissals from the civil service; we have too loudly denounced the Government for dismissing public servants from their positions without instituting such inquiry as was warranted under the circumstances, for us now to commit a similar error. I am of opinion that the charges laid against Mr. Pelland should be investigated, and that fair-play should be given him.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I would like to say—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member has already spoken.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. This is a question of explanation; I will not discuss the matter before the House. The hon. member for North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville) has stated that Mr. Pelland was appointed on my recommendation, but that he was unable to do his work and that I deceived the committee. I deny that imputation from beginning to end. Mr. Pelland, it is true, was recommended by me as an able man, a man capable of doing his work; and I know and I affirm again that he is perfectly able to do the work. He has offered the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) to come before the committee and translate reports of debates, and, if his translation is not equal to that of any of the others, he is quite willing to resign. Why was that offer not accepted?

Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member (Mr. Beausoleil) cannot go on and make another speech.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I want to answer the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who has read a line from a letter I wrote to the "Gazette" the other day. The hon. member for Leeds says that the motion upon which Mr. Pelland was dismissed, was moved by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) and seconded by the hon. member for North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville). Such was the first motion, but, after I had resigned the chairmanship, the hon. member for Lisgar was appointed chairman, and the motion was moved by the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Earle), and seconded by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I wish to say that that is not in accordance with the records of the committee.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am sorry to say that the House has no access to the records of the committee.

House divided on amendment (Mr. Beausoleil):

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 61) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Canada Life Insurance Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (No. 63) to amend the Act respecting the Civil Service of Canada.—(Mr. McMullen.)

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the Government whether it is their intention to bring down a return for which I moved an Address just one year ago to-day, on the 18th of April, 1898, asking for all Orders in Council, memorials, correspondence and every other document in connection with the granting of 150,000 acres of public land in favour of the University of Manitoba, and the transfer of the patents of the same to the university. Up to this date I have had no notice that this return has been laid before the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Would the hon. gentleman send a copy of the Address over to me?

ADDRESS IN ANSWER TO HIS EXCELLENCY'S SPEECH.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Bell (East Prince) for an Address to His Excellency the Governor General in reply to his Speech at the opening of the session; the motion of Mr. Clarke in amendment thereto, and the motion of Mr. Bertram in amendment to the amendment.

Mr. A. MORRISON (New Westminster). Mr. Speaker, I feel it necessary to apologize to the House for taking up any time at this late stage of the debate. I would not attempt to apologize were it not for the fact that several hon. gentlemen opposite, in the course of their remarks during this debate, have referred to the fact that, during the recess, I had taken a trip into the Yukon territory. Several hon. gentlemen, in making that reference, went so far as to assume that, in consequence of my visiting that territory, I would be obliged to acquiesce in and support the charges, or the statements in the form of charges, which they have made against the administration of the Yukon district. Perhaps, I would be fulfilling all that any reasonable person could expect of me in this regard, if I were to say no more than to give that assumption a categorical denial. I can assure the hon. gentlemen that they can expect very little comfort from my experience in that territory; and they are very much mistaken, if they suppose that my experience would justify me in sympathizing with the line of action adopted by them in regard to the administration of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), or to the action of the Government generally in reference to the Yukon.

In giving my views, which I will do very briefly, I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to endeavour, if possible, to put themselves in my place in the present instance. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who precipitated this discussion, or, at least, this phase of the debate, formulated, or endeavoured to formulate, two charges against the hon. Minister of the Interior in respect to his treatment of these Yukon matters. The first was, that officials had proved incompetent, that they had violated the trust placed in their own hands, and in the second place, that the hon. Minister and the Government are responsible for the action of the subordinate officials in that territory; indeed, for whatever may have occurred there on the part of the officials. In dealing with the second consideration, namely, the responsibility that is sought to be placed upon the shoulders of the Government in regard to the action of the officials there, I might, for a moment, for the sake of argument, admit that my observations in the Yukon territory led me to believe that the alleged charges, or the statements, made by hon. gentlemen opposite, are substantially true. Is that sufficient ground for me to condemn the action of the Government in regard to the administration of that territory? Would hon. gentlemen contend that maladministration on the part of subordinate officials, would be sufficient justification for me in condemning the Government? I would like hon. gentlemen to give me the credit of endeavouring to disassociate myself from any party exigencies in this case, and that they would put themselves in my position in this instance. Let us glance very briefly at the facts in connection with the growth of this administration in the Yukon, taking them chronologically. I am within the hearing of the members of this House when I say that in the early part of the session of 1897, there was not a corporal's guard of the members of this House who knew anything about that region. Hon. gentlemen, on both sides of the House, who were members of the Railway Committee of this House, will recall a certain application for a charter made in the early part of that session. The company, formed by virtue of that charter, is now known as the White Pass and Yukon Railway Company. When the application was made before the Railway Committee of the House, hon. gentlemen will remember the paucity of information there was in respect to the territory intended to be traversed by that road. There was even much less evidence of knowledge and information respecting that territory before the Railway Committee of the Senate when the Bill was sent there. It was not until a later period of the session of 1897, that the great excitement about that region began to generate, and that people all over the country began to consider and read and think about the possibilities and riches of what is now called the Yukon territory. There was, of course, no question raised during the session of 1897 as to maladministration in the Yukon. We know that either in June or July of 1897 the Government considered the advisability of sending an administrator into that country, and they cast about for a suitable person to take charge of the affairs there. We all remember that when Major Walsh was selected, there was a unanimous feeling of satisfaction from one end of the country to the other amongst those people who took any interest in the welfare of the country, at the selection of Major Walsh to administer the affairs of the Klondike. There was not a word of adverse criticism. Hon. gentlemen opposite and the papers representing them, joined heartily in congratulating themselves, the Government and the country upon the selection of Major Walsh, and were as heartily in accord as any person on this side of the House could possibly be. Major Walsh went in there; I remember very well his arrival in Vancouver, the hearty reception he received, and the congratulatory expressions that were crowded upon him from all sources—not one jarring note in the whole demonstration. He departed and went into the Yukon country. No reports were received from him of a substantial nature for months. We all know, that when Major Walsh went in there, he consented to go in for only a year. The session of 1898 came and passed without any evidence, particularly in this House, of complaints as to the administration of the Yukon country under the regime of Major Walsh. I remember distinctly, and I am within the hearing of this House when I say, that up to the time of prorogation, there was not a whisper—there certainly was not any complaint made known to this House in regard to the administration of the Yukon under Major Walsh. Major Walsh, in pursuance of the arrangements made with the hon. Minister of the Interior, came out from that country in the middle of the summer of 1898. As against his coming out, of course, the Government had to consider the question of selecting a successor, and I am safe in saying that there was equal unanimity of opinion that the successor of Major Walsh in administering the affairs of the Yukon should be the present incumbent, Mr. Ogilvie. I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to consider for a moment what attitude they would have taken had the Government selected any other person than Mr. Ogilvie as administrator of that country. I venture to say that hon. gentlemen opposite, and the press representing them would, and perhaps with justice, have attacked the Government for overlooking Mr. Ogilvie, a man who was considered to be eminently qualified to act as commissioner of the Yukon. Mr. Ogilvie was selected, and proceeded to Dawson. Just about that time, on the Pacific coast, I admit that murmurings began to arise as to the way matters had been managed under Major Walsh. Several newspaper correspondents who had been in the Yukon territory came out; they were interviewed and they contributed articles to the newspapers. The American papers were particularly active in attacking the administration of Major Walsh, and some of our Canadian correspondents took a hand in it; and, of course, those less charitable wanted to a certain extent, to blame the Government for what had been taking place, as they alleged, up to this time. To consider whether the Government should be held blameworthy for not checking the condition of affairs that existed there, as alleged by these people, we must consider what means of information were opened to the Government up to that juncture. I am free to admit, that if the Government had the facilities for knowing, and if Major Walsh, or anybody else amongst the officials of the Government, had conducted themselves in that Yukon territory in an improper way, and if it did not take prompt steps to remedy the evil that might exist, in respect to the administration, I would be the very first to join in blaming the Government for not performing what we would concede to be its bounden duty. Gentlemen opposite, I fear, have taken that position with too much precipitation, ignoring the fact that the Government had up to that time—and indeed until very recently—only two sources of information as to what was going on in Dawson City. The first and main one was, the information which might come to them through their recognized officials; officials in whom up to the time it would be shown they should cease to have confidence, they were bound to have absolute trust. It is quite clear that none of these officials from Major Walsh down, whose duties it would be to make reports to the Government, would report adversely on their own administration. It would be a little too much official virtue to expect that if they did anything wrong, they would promptly report that to their superiors. The other source of information upon which the Government had to rely was of a haphazard, nondescript kind, such as newspaper correspondence, anonymous and otherwise. There is no reasonable gentleman on either side of the House who for one moment would ask the Government to supersede the information received from their accredited agents, by the information received through newspapers like the Seattle "Post-Intelligencer," or the San Francisco "Examiner," the two chief papers that were made the receptacles for this matter which was gushed all over the country. Or, coming nearer home, I would go so far as to say, that the Government certainly would not be justified in taking the statements of the correspondent of the London "Times," or of any other paper in Christendom, as against the official reports of their accredited representatives in that territory. It would be a most novel precedent for the Government to establish, that before their own agents were discredited, they should go outside and seek information, without relying on the information which they got through the proper channels. No hon. gentleman can seriously contend, that up to a certain stage the Government should have given credence to these reports and statements in preference to the reports of their own officers.

That was the state of affairs up to the 20th September when I left New Westminster, and thought I would take a holiday and go to Dawson. I made inquiries as to the time it would take to come and go there, and I was assured by all the transportation companies to whom I referred, that I could get in and out in six weeks, giving me considerable time in Dawson and vicinity. Up to this time I had been hearing—I hope I will be pardoned for making a personal reference—that the gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) who did us the honour to come and reside in our midst, and who lived in the adjoining town of Vancouver, had been in communication with certain people in Dawson; that he was fortifying himself with all kinds of affidavits, and declarations, and sworn statements, and letters, and verbal communications, as to the turpitude, moral and otherwise, of the officials in Dawson, and that in consequence of the disclosures that he was prepared to make, the Government would be forced to resign. I considered it a public duty, if I could afford the time and expense, to take it upon myself to go in there and to endeavour, at first hand and without relying upon hearsay, to find out what the facts really were, and to ascertain if these rumours and whisperings of wrong-doing really had foundation in fact. I conceived it to be my duty as one of the representatives of this great Dominion, to devote the time and expense in order to satisfy myself on this matter, because I felt, that if a man like the hon. gentleman from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) would undertake to stand on the floor of this House and on his responsibility as a member make charges that would lead to the discomfiture of the Government, I wanted to be in absolute possession—without depending on the Prime Minister or the Minister of the Interior or any one else—of the facts, so that I might be able to cast a vote consistent with the trust which I felt was imposed on me, be that vote for or against the Administration. I arrived at Skagway, the American port and one of the entrepôts into the Yukon country; proceeded on foot, and arrived in due course at Lake Bennett. I may say parenthetically, although my remarks were intended to be specially directed—

Mr. HUGHES. May I interrupt the hon. member, Mr. Speaker. Did I understand him to say that Skagway is an American port?

Mr. MORRISON. Skagway, as we all know, is at present an American port, whatever that may mean. When you land there as we had to do, we were obliged to conform to certain regulations of the American authorities. We had our baggage examined and we were ourselves detained at the instance of the American collector of customs, because the captain of our ship refused to go to a certain wharf, whereupon this American collector refused to let us land and refused to clear or enter the vessel. Afterwards, we found out that the reason he was so insistent upon our going to this particular wharf was, that he himself was part owner of it, and that he was forcing all the ships that came to Skagway to put up at that wharf. That was our first experience there, and to me it is sufficient proof that at the present time at all events, Skagway is an American port. Whether or not it will ultimately be determined to be an American port, is not pertinent to this discussion. I was proceeding to say, parenthetically, that it might be well for me to mention a few instances of my trip to Dawson, to show how little ground there is of complaint against the Government so far as the administration of the route between Dawson and the American line is concerned. At Skagway, this so-called American territory, there is a military post, and immediately across the agreed-upon international boundary on the summit of White Pass, is a Canadian Mounted Police post called Log Cabin, at which there is also a custom-house. The police post is under the command of Captain Cartwright, and here I may say, that if ever I had reason to be proud of Canada and her institutions, it was on my arrival at the police post of Log Cabin under command of Captain Cartwright. The comparison forced upon one between the efficient soldierly bearing of the Mounted Police who are under the Department of the Interior, and the representatives of the great republic to the south of us, was so very striking that one would be inclined to overlook a great many discrepancies on the part of the Government, and to give them great credit for having such an efficient corps as the Northwest Mounted Police are in regard to the administration of affairs in the Yukon country. From Log Cabin to Bennett, and from Bennett to Tagish, and from Tagish down the various posts to Dawson, the best order is maintained, law is observed, life and property are absolutely safe; as safe as they could possibly be under any mode of government. There is not one of these Mounted Police whom I met—and I think I met every one of them—who would not be a credit to this or to any nation. Whether that is owing to the individuals who have been selected for this duty, or to the administration of the Department of the Interior, I know not; but at any rate, if the Department of the Interior and the Government have no other circumstance in their favour than the maintenance of that corps of Mounted Police, I say, that to be charitable, we should overlook a great deal of inadvertent administration which may have occurred in that district. At these posts I found, and particularly at Lake Tagish—for there it impressed itself upon me more than at any other points through the journey—the tremendous difficulty the Government and the officials in there had to cope with in handling either the mails or discharging customs duties or in connection with any other department of Government. I shall give the House some idea of the number of people who must have passed into the Yukon last year. I may state three of us went in a canoe. When I arrived at Tagish Post, past to which every person going by way of Skagway must go, our canoes were marked 15,780, and we had to register our names in a book kept by the police there. I asked Inspector Strickland why he numbered the boat, and what it signified. He said that was the number of craft which had passed through there on their way to Dawson since some day in the later part of June. That did not include the number who went down by the regular steamers plying between Bennett and Dawson. We had three in our canoe, and I assume that, in any craft going down, there were not less than two, though the most frequent method of transportation between Bennett and Dawson was in large scows, which were built by an enterprising British Columbia firm at Bennett. Each of these scows would carry from twenty to thirty persons and a commensurate amount of freight. It can fairly be estimated, therefore, that there would be an average of five people in every craft that passed down to Lake Tagish between June and September. There you have a minimum estimate of 75,000 people who went to Dawson by that route; and the number who went that way did not begin to compare with the hordes who went by way of St. Michaels. It would surprise you, no doubt, as it did me, to find that the number of boats plying between St. Michaels and Dawson, in the short season of 1898, was something like 100. I was amazed, in going to Dawson, to meet four different steamers which were larger than the steamers plying on the Fraser River—magnificent boats, substantially built, each of which would accommodate 800 passengers, with commensurate room for freight—double-stacked, double-decked, with every modern facility—making their way from Dawson to Fort Selkirk. Before landing, we found numbers of boats lying up for the winter above Dawson. All this shows what a tremendous number of people must have gone into Dawson during the latter part of the period in which Major Walsh was trying to administer the country. Picture to yourself the condition of Dawson at that time. The people already there might be estimated at 10,000. People were going in by the Dalton trail, by the Edmonton route, by the Mackenzie route, and from every point of the compass. You can figure for yourself in a conservative way how many people must have been in Dawson and its vicinity at one time or other during the summer of 1898—all adults, every one of earning capacity, every one liable, as no doubt they went with that intention, to have some business with the Gold Commissioner and with the customs officers, and, of course, expecting to get letters. I venture to say, that in the city of Montreal to-day there are not 30,000 adults of earning capacity. When you exclude women and old men, I venture to say, that there are not in the city of Montreal to-day 20,000 people who would have occasion to go to the post office, to the customs-house or to the registry office; and if it were necessary for that many to go, things are so transacted that they would not all be there at one time. The condition of things in Dawson was such that 40,000, or 50,000 people were around those offices, which were the centre of attraction.

Mr. PRIOR. Will the hon. gentleman allow me? Did I understand him to say that there were something like 100,000 hovering around the post office at Dawson?

Mr. MORRISON. I say that, at a conservative estimate, there were 75,000 people who went in by way of Lake Bennett, and there were a great many more who went by way of St. Michaels. I am speaking of the number who were there during the summer season, before the last boats came out in September. I am not stating it categorically. I want hon. gentlemen to draw their own conclusion. But, putting the number down to 20,000, who were all adults, every one of them having something to do with the Gold Commissioner's office and the post office. I ask you, even if they had ten times the number of officials and clerks they had, would they have been able to cope with the business? I say they could not. I ask you to be fair, and consider the situation. What means had the Government at their disposal in that state of affairs, until Major Walsh and other officials arrived in the fall of 1898? They had only the most casual sources of information. Any information they might receive through their accredited agents, I am quite sure they acted upon. In my opinion, they would have been quite right to ignore the overtures from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), or the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), against the statements of their own officials. What better right would I have, even though a supporter of the Government, who had been there and felt that I had grievances to ventilate and observations to make, or in what better position would I be, to foist my opinions or suggestions on the Minister, as against those of Major Walsh, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Wade, Mr. McGregor, Mr. McFarlane, or any other of the officials who came out? Why should my statement be taken against theirs? I am not so narrow as to think, if I have formed a certain opinion, or made a certain observation, that these are absolutely correct, and that I have a right to foist them on the Government or the Minister. Considering the condition of business at that time, is it any wonder that letters may have gone astray, that complaints may have been formulated, and that numbers of people imagined they were injured and cheated, and humbugged by the officials? When people are isolated, away from their old associations, down on their luck, with everything apparently going against them, what is more natural, even under more favourable circumstances, than for them to turn round and blame something or somebody? When I got in, I found that I could not get out, as the rivers had frozen up. I was advised not to come out before March; so I made up my mind to content myself there. I did not, however, stay in Dawson, with all its alluring enticements, but I went over some of the creeks. I must have travelled some 200 miles while I was there, endeavouring to find out what the conditions were. I did not depend on hearsay. I met very few people whom I knew. In the greater number of cases, I went alone, and I had every opportunity to hear impartially the state of matters, and I availed myself of it. With all due respect to the Klondike

"Nugget," or, in fact, almost anybody else in Dawson. I venture to say, that I must have traversed and seen more of the different creeks than any of those people. The people of the Klondike "Nugget" are very enterprising journalists; I have nothing to say against them. Their course is part of their game: they are advertising their paper splendidly. From a journalistic standpoint, they have taken a very clever move. They were interested in attacking the Government, and they did it in a very strong manner indeed. They left no stone unturned to get grist for their mill. They were often hard up for copy, as newspapers out there necessarily must be, and they did not stop at getting matters founded on absolute facts at all times. Not one of these gentlemen, I venture to say, ever went outside Bonanza or Eldorado Creek. The people I met and who were endeavouring to make complaints had not gone beyond one or two creeks. They had neither the time nor the facilities to do so, because men going in to prospect have necessarily to confine themselves to the one creek on which they have a claim and are unable to travel around sight-seeing as I had the time to do. After having visited every creek in the vicinity of Dawson and throughout the territory, I came back to Dawson somewhat disappointed at not having something more substantial in the way of grievance against the conduct of affairs in that country, on which I could base a suggestion to the hon. Minister of the Interior, because having gone to all this trouble and travelled all that distance in consequence of charges of wrongdoing and maladministration, I expected some substantial wrongdoing. I hoped to be of some service in finding out the actual state of affairs and the need of reforms, so that I could be in a position to go to the hon. Minister and suggest certain reforms. But although I heard a great deal of hard talk against some of the officials, I could not find any instance in which any of those who complained would make a specific charge or state specifically that, of their own knowledge, they knew of anything that would deserve the censure of this House. I resorted to every legitimate means without acting the part of a spy, which I studiously avoided doing, to arrive at the facts and find out whether any grievance really existed. I put myself in the way of the people by putting up at their bunk houses, eating at the same table with men who travelled thirty or fifty miles through creeks, and had all the experience that miners could possibly have, and who had no reason to believe that I was not out there on the same object as themselves, and yet without satisfactory result. I know that in one or two instances I gave my own experience, which led me to feel somewhat hardly against some of the officials; but nevertheless I did not find that my experience would justify me in standing up on the floor of this House and making a charge against any of these officials for the treatment accorded to myself. I felt that I had been hardly dealt with in some respects, so that I was in the same position as nine-tenths of the people I had met, who complained of grievances. I endeavoured to get some authentic authority for the grievances about which we have heard so much and which one can hear so much in the streets and cabins. But I could not hear of anything sufficiently definite on which to base a charge, although the people in the town knew that I was a member of this House and although I tried all I could to convince them that I would be only too pleased if any tangible evidence were put in my hands, to convey it to the Minister and do everything I could to have any grievance remedied and further the interests of the miners. I did not succeed in getting one case. I asked several people who were complaining about the conduct of affairs there to let me have the material on which they based their complaints, but without success. I even went to the extent of making an appointment with one miner who had travelled all the way from Hunker Creek to Dawson City with me. From my appearance, which was rather weather-beaten, as I had been two weeks on the road, he assumed that I was a miner in hard luck, and offered to assist me in any way he could. He told me that he had a pull with the officials in Dawson City, and would be only too glad to give me a show. I replied—and in this I do not know whether my conduct was reprehensible or not—that I was hard up, and did not think I could afford to buy information from the officials. He said: That is all right, I will find out what the rates are, and if you can borrow money from some of your friends, let me have it and I will fix things all right for you. But I found out afterwards that this man was known as a grafter of the worst kind, and no doubt thought I was sufficiently a tenderfoot to give him $100 or $150 in return for which he would give me some stuff he said he could get at the Gold Commissioner's office, and if I had been dupe enough to believe him, I could have made that the foundation of a grievance. I am not denying that there are complaints, but you must consider the sources from which they emanate and the motives which actuate those making them. No doubt, some of the miners have been treated rather cavalierly. I myself was treated cavalierly and discourteously by some of the officials there, who, no doubt, had they known I was a member of this House, would have acted differently, but at the same time I do not see why I should blame the Minister of the Interior or the Government for any treatment accorded myself by certain officials thousands of miles away from the supervision of the Minister. There is no hon. gentleman who would be unreasonable enough to think for one moment that any blame could attach to the Administration for conduct of that kind on the part of the officials. Even admitting that there was maladministration—and we have no tangible evidence of any—how could we hold the Government or any Minister of the Crown responsible for the conduct of these remote officials, even assuming that their conduct was such as you would hear it described on the streets of Dawson. Two gentlemen have come to Ottawa from Dawson City purporting to represent the views of the people out there—Mr. Semple and Mr. Allan. Mr. Allan I knew out there, as I used to drop frequently into the newspaper office, where he was employed, but I do not know that he ever saw one of the creeks, and I am strongly inclined to suspect he did not. These gentlemen were hounding the Government for all they were worth. The editor, a very estimable fellow, whom I knew very well, and for whom I did everything I could, without putting myself under the obligation of asking a favour of him, to get information, was in the habit of saying: If I were to show you what is in this bundle of papers or affidavits, you would do so and so, and a certain thing would happen. Well, I did not want to put myself under the obligation of saying to him: Let me see those papers. I did not go to that extent, and felt that in any case it would have been useless. Only on one occasion did Mr. George, the gentleman in question, avail himself of the opportunity of telling me, as a member of this House that he knew of some maladministration on the part of the officials in the Yukon, which would reflect on the Government and the Minister of the Interior by connecting them with the case, but that one instance satisfied me more than anything else, of the groundless nature of these complaints. Mr. George is the gentleman who has formulated the charges against Mr. Fawcett. The ground that Mr. George raised for not appearing before the investigation held by Mr. Ogilvie was that Mr. Ogilvie had limited it to occurrences up to the 25th August. But I did not hear him refer to one matter which had not occurred before that date. There is not one of the so-called grievances I have heard repeated time and again up there which did not occur before the 25th of August. When I was out there Major Walsh was out of office, so was Mr. Wade, and as a matter of fact, Mr. Fawcett had been removed and Mr. Wilson had been superceded. All these officials were therefore out of office, and yet Mr. George and hon. gentlemen opposite who are coached by him and his friends complain that because they are not permitted to go into matters which occurred after the 25th August, they will not go before the commission at all. I venture to say that all the material which was sent into the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), and on which he spoke at such length, related to occurrences that took place before the 25th August, and were sent in to him before that date, and it is into these matters that investigation is now being had. Why, there is absolutely no point in the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that they were shut out from producing any evidence except that relating to occurrences which took place before the 25th of August. Nobody there pretends to say that after the middle of July, there was any cause of complaint. Not long after the 25th of August, about September, the post office was put in as good running order, and is now, I venture to say, as efficiently run as the post office in the city of Ottawa. Mr. Hardman, the appointee of the Postmaster General, took hold of the matter with vigour, got the post office into spacious buildings, effected many reforms and adopted a system of handling letters that is a credit to Dawson and would be a credit to any place in Canada. I was there and I would like hon. gentlemen to take my statement that there is absolutely no complaint of the way the post office was run when I left, on the 26th of November last. Mr. Senkler, the new Gold Commissioner, succeeded Mr. Fawcett against whom all these complaints were being made in Dawson up to the 25th of August. Mr. George, of the Klondike "Nugget," time and again, and even while I was there—and I think he appealed to me and made reference to me in his paper—said: If Mr. Fawcett is removed within a short time, we guarantee and pledge ourselves that, from this day, there will be no mention made of his administration. That was the undertaking that the Klondike "Nugget" gave, showing that the principal agitation was against Mr. Fawcett, not against the Government—they disclaimed that. They had their knife into Mr. Fawcett. They foolishly deluded themselves—in my opinion—in believing that the rank and file of the miners were attacking Mr. Fawcett, and they hounded him every day of the week their paper was published. Mr. Fawcett was removed. But I notice that the Klondike "Nugget" is not satisfied, but still keeps attacking the Gold Commissioner's office, and attacking the Government for the way the Gold Commissioner's office is conducted; and not content with that, they have sent out two emissaries with a missionary desire to effect reforms which they think would not be granted unless the great Klondike "Nugget" sent their advocates to Ottawa. All this goes to show the bona fides of the people who attack the Government and the officials there. I was ashamed of the participation of a great many Canadians in this onslaught on officialdom in Dawson. When you corner them closely and try to get at the merits of the thing, it is all so evasive, so intangible, that I, for one, got thoroughly tired and disgusted with the whole matter. In contrast to some of our own people, who are in the minority, was the treatment of the officials there by the American citizens—who, by the way, so far as I could find, were a most estimable element indeed. They recognized law and order, did what they could to assist the officials in the performance of their duties, overlooked any little difficulties that might arise through the exigencies of the case and conducted themselves in a most circumspect way. I will not insult them by saying that they did so because there is an efficient corps of mounted police and a detachment of militia, not by any means. For my part, I believe—though, I confess, I did not before I had been there—that there would be as good order as there is now, even if the soldiers were not there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend (Mr. Morrison), but, if he would not object, I would like to ask him, for information, what proportion of the people there are British subjects?

Mr. MORRISON. I do not speak from my own observation, but I believe that the British subjects are to the others about as 1 is to 9. It is quite evident that the Canadian element is a small minority. But I say that we are very fortunate in having an American element there that is of such a high standard, made up of men of such intelligence, education, ability and means. I have heard hon. gentlemen on both sides making remarks that might be considered derogatory to that element in Dawson, speaking of Dawson as being an outlandish place where law and order might be set at naught unless the people had a field artillery or something of that kind constantly before them. That is an erroneous impression. I was agreeably surprised with Dawson and the people there. The people were above the average, I should say, of those of any town of equal size in Canada or elsewhere. They seemed, generally willing to help the Government in carrying out any proposal that might be made. Hon. gentlemen must not suppose that because certain statements are made by irresponsible persons carried away by their pens and by the desire to write something facetious or striking, they correctly represent the state of affairs in that country. I will even go so far as to say that we should take with a grain of salt the statements made by Miss Shaw, who went there when no person could have the facilities for estimating accurately the condition of things throughout that district. Anything she might write, I venture to say, was based upon information got at second hand. After all, with all due deference to Miss Shaw, she, as a correspondent, naturally wanted to get readable, though reliable, copy for her paper, and while adhering to the truth as closely as possible, to write something that would attract attention. I do not think it reasonable to hold the Government responsible for not having accepted the word even of such correspondents as Miss Shaw as a basis for official action or to say that they should have assumed that because these correspondents said certain things existed that, therefore, they did, as a matter of fact, exist.

Now, in Dawson, as I have said, the post office is run splendidly. The Gold Commissioner's office also is conducted in a proper manner. Complaint was formerly made against some of the minor officials. Mr. Ogilvie promptly investigated these complaints, and, I believe, has meted out the measure of justice that was required in each case; and, I think, has rectified any complaint or cause of complaint that might have existed. I venture to say that at this moment there is no cause of serious complaint. I have had letters recently from Dawson touching upon this point. I do not wish to read them, because they are not sent to me to be used in the House of Commons, nor have I asked my correspondents if I might make use of them. But, writing of other matters, some of my friends have incidentally dealt with the present administration of the Yukon; and all have given me the impression that that administration was all that could be desired. Here, for instance, is a remark in a letter written by a very intimate friend of mine, written, as I say, without any intention of my using it in a political way at all:

If one is to be thankful for large favours in proportion to small ones, there should be great gratitude and thankfulness for the choice of Mr. Senkler as Gold Commissioner. He is undoubtedly the right man in the right place. He is giving great satisfaction to the miners, and I am sure that every one of his actions will be heartily approved of at Ottawa. He caught on to the work far quicker than any of us thought it possible for him to do, and, further, he is very well liked by every one of his staff, which is wonderful, considering the decided changes he has caused to be made.

That is evidence as to the office of the Gold Commissioner as it is at present. The same might be said, I am sure, with regard to the other departments. Even if we assume that maladministration did exist, that some of these officers prostituted the positions they filled, that does not alter the fact that that state of things does not now exist. A new state of affairs has arisen, and the country is properly administered. Why, then, I would ask, should we spend week after week here discussing what has taken place in the past or what has been assumed to have taken place in the past, when we have to consider matters of much moment to the future administration of that country. There is the question of transportation in the Yukon, of trade facilities and possibilities, of expenditures and revenues—I say why should we waste day after day and week after week discussing these nebulous matters when we have questions of constructive policy to discuss—live and important questions? Why do not hon. gentlemen opposite give the Government an opportunity—and I will be the first to join them in such a move—to state what their future policy in regard to that country is to be.

I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to give us an opportunity—because I am curious to know myself, not being to that extent in the confidence of the Government—I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to give us an opportunity of knowing what the Government intends to do in regard to transportation facilities, what they intend to do in regard to telegraphic communication there, railway communication, and postal facilities. As to the question of expenditure in Dawson, I venture to say there is not a man up there, Liberal or Conservative, who will thank these gentlemen opposite for wasting the time of the Government and preventing them from formulating a policy of administration, and of letting us know what that policy is. What the people up there want is, not to turn this Government out of power and put the gentlemen opposite into power—they are not actuated by any love for either the Government or the Opposition—but what they want is that something should be done for the advancement of the interests of the people in that district. They want that country opened up, and they look to us necessarily as the source from which they must expect assistance in developing the resources of that country, and in giving the people proper facilities for doing so. Why, Sir, in wasting so much time in this discussion, are we not prostituting the trust imposed upon us in regard to that country? What might we not have done during the last month to help the people up there if we had had an opportunity of legislating here, and of assisting the Government to take wise measures in developing that country? I ask hon. gentlemen opposite: What ultimate advantage do they expect to derive from blocking legislation on this question? For my part, I think it is lamentably poor political tactics on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite to pursue the course they have been pursuing. They are certainly alienating the good wishes of the people of Dawson and vicinity in delaying the Government from showing their hand. If the Government intend to ignore the interests of the Yukon in the future, I am as anxious as anybody else to know it; but if we are going to fritter away the time of this Parliament as we have been doing, I say we will do an incalculable injury, not only to the interests of that remote and deserving community, but to public interests nearer home. At the outset I had to apologize for the necessity of taking up any more time of the House in pursuing this debate.

An hon. MEMBER. Go on.

Mr. MORRISON. No, I do not intend to go on, because I think that hon. gentlemen on this side have so thoroughly met any charges that may have been formulated by our friends opposite that I would only be indulging in surplusage and superfluity in dealing any longer with the matters which have been touched upon so ably by the members of the Government. I may, however, say this in conclusion, that while I admit that due allowance must be made for the early difficulties existing in that territory, yet the Government must sooner or later assume the responsibility for the actual condition of affairs there. That responsibility cannot be evaded, and I say advisedly that the time must come soon, if it has not already come, when the Government must be held absolutely responsible for the conduct of affairs in that country. But I may say that up to the present time, under the circumstances of which I have personal knowledge and which I have endeavoured to place before the House. I think the Government ought not to be held responsible for all that may have occurred up there, and for all the charges which have been made on the floor of this House. I will go further and say that the time must come soon, if it has not already come, when the Government must drop the apologetic defence which they are driven to assume to-day. So far the Government has been driven into an attitude of defence of the conduct of its subordinate officials in the Yukon territory, and have not yet had an opportunity of stating a policy for the future. But they must very soon formulate such a policy, and it depends upon the Opposition how soon the Government may do so. The time must come when the Government will have to formulate a constructive and aggressive policy for the administration of affairs in that country, and I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, I appeal to them on behalf of the people in the Klondike to cease this nonsense and absurdity—I say this in no offensive sense—of prolonging this debate, of following up this will-o'-the-wisp set on foot by my hon. and respected friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper). I say that no man who has consumed seven hours of the time of this House in an effort to drive home a charge against the Government and their officials in the Yukon, and defending that charge with only such evidence as he was able to bring before us, can have had any case to begin with; I say he has shown by his want of success that he is absolutely without proof, without a shred or a shadow of ground upon which to proceed. I think if the Government are reprehensible at all, it is in putting in a defence to any such lame and feeble charges, because by doing so they give people an idea that something has been done which needs to be defended. For my part I fail to see, applying any test to these charges, whether in law or in reason, that the hon. gentlemen opposite have made out the slightest case against the Government. However, such is the state of political opinion in this country, such is the credulity extant among the electors, that when such charges have been made, and reiterated with so much persistency, a portion of the people may come to believe them unless the Government and their friends take the trouble to show how baseless and erroneous they are. I trust, therefore, that the Opposition will assist the Government in bringing this matter to a conclusion, and that after this debate is over they will join with the Government hand in hand in working for the interests of that deserving and apparently ill-used region of the Yukon. In regard to the investigation now going on by Mr. Ogilvie, hon. gentlemen opposite must admit that at the time Mr. Ogilvie was appointed commissioner, he was the most available man the Minister of the Interior could select for that purpose. What else could have been done? Supposing a judge of the Supreme Court, or a number of judges, had been selected to hold an investigation, what could they have done? They could never have got in there. I met Mr. Clement, who was charged with taking that commission up to Mr. Ogilvie. I do not know when he started from here. I left Dawson on the 26th of November, and at the Hootalinqua, I met Mr. Clement. One of the parties had nearly perished on the route, and would have done so had they not been strong and muscular young men. However, Mr. Clement deemed that it would not be advisable for him to go on with the other party, and he stayed at Hootalinqua. We left him there, and he remained, because the trail was very bad. In returning, we fell into the river several times, and barely escaped with our lives. We advised him that he would be very indiscreet in going on. Supposing that judges of the Supreme Court, men of mature years, had attempted to make that journey, they would not have lived to tell the tale. Mr. Clement was an athlete, a sturdy young man and he had all he could do to stand the climate and to overcome the tremendous obstacles that presented themselves. I imagine the absurdity of appointing judges, whose names would occur to most of us, to undertake the responsibility of investigating matters in that country. They could not possibly have gone in there. Not one of the judges who would be selected for that purpose, would consent to go into that country until he could have gone in by steamer in July, and then what would have been the state of affairs? He would have found the witnesses from whom any testimony could be got, perhaps, scattered all over the country, and it would have been impossible to have communicated with them. He would have been obliged to get through the work of the commission inside of a few weeks, in order to get out before the winter came on. Even if the witnesses were there, he could not possibly, under the state of affairs, have been expected to carry on that investigation in any sort of an adequate manner. This was what the hon. Minister of the Interior knew, and he therefore selected Mr. Clement, a young, sturdy athlete, and gave him the commission, and said: Hurry in there as soon as you can; give Mr. Ogilvie that commission; supplement it with the letter I have given you, and tell him to go into those matters in the most thorough manner. Is that the reason why hon. gentlemen opposite are accusing the Government for not sending in, possibly, judges of the Superior Courts to investigate these matters in Dawson? If the hon. Minister of the Interior had not sent in this commission to Mr. Ogilvie, one of the strongest grounds that hon. gentlemen opposite would have for accusing this Government, in this debate, would have been for their delinquency in not sending this commission in. I know that there is not a reasonable member on that side of the House who can, conscientiously, criticise the hon. Minister of the Interior, or the Government, for having acted as they did in that respect. I am free to admit that it may possibly be that that investigation may prove inadequate, although we can know nothing until the report of Mr. Ogilvie will have come in. Hon. gentlemen should possess themselves in patience, and allow this report to come in, and let us see what the report says. If the investigation is inadequate, I will be the first amongst the members of this House in calling for a thorough and adequate investigation into the alleged charges, if properly formulated, against the administration or the Government. I think it is a waste of time to ask the Government to look into the conduct of officials who have severed their connection with the Government. What good would it be to do so? Could you put them in jail; could they be imprisoned for anything they may have done in the line of the charge of hon. gentlemen opposite? Could any sane elector cast his ballot against the Government for conduct on the part of officials of which the Government were absolutely ignorant up to a certain period? But, notwithstanding that, I would willingly join hon. gentlemen opposite in demanding a thorough investigation, if the report shows that the investigation has been inadequate; but I think hon. gentlemen opposite would be pursuing a wiser course by awaiting the arrival of the report before insisting upon any further step in regard to this matter, and, for my part, I consider that sufficient justification for me to vote against any attempt, on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, or elsewhere, to force another investigation, until we have heard the result of the one that is at present pending. In the meantime, I do not want to be understood by either side of this House to be standing up as a sponsor for Yukon officials, or to have hon. gentlemen think that it will be the interest of the Government, or the wish of the Government, that I should do so. I do not go so far as to say, that the officers sent into that country are the best that could be got, but at the time they were selected, I and other hon. gentlemen in this House were of the opinion that they were the best. I do not say that Mr. Ogilvie is the best man to hold this investigation; but I do say, that at the time he was selected, he was the only person to select. A mistake may have been made in regard to these officers who have gone in there; but, if so, it is a mistake that might be made by any Government, Grit or Tory. Taking a man with a reputation in one sphere of activity, a mistake might be made in putting him into another sphere, and no discredit could be attached to any Government that did so. Therefore, I have the utmost confidence, that, as far as the Government is concerned, notwithstanding what the alleged turpitude of these officials may have been, that the Government have done everything that could be done to advance the interests of the community in that country. I am glad to say, that I have had occasion to confer with the hon. Minister of the Interior, and to communicate with friends in Dawson City, who stand in favour there, and I have been able to assure them that, so far as I was concerned, and I believe also, so far as Parliament was concerned, that, notwithstanding the opposition that had arisen, everything possible would be done to advance the interests of this community; and I appeal again, in behalf of the people there, that, apart from partisanship, hon. gentlemen opposite will cease their arbitrary conduct and cease from putting obstacles in the way which tend to make a situation, very difficult in itself, more so, and that they will assist the Government to get down to some of the work of the session, if not in regard to other matters, at any rate, in regard to the Yukon. I am sure that, if we do so, we will have, not only the consciousness of having done the right thing, but we will have the thanks of that community in that far-off district of the Yukon.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). Mr. Speaker, I have listened with very great interest to the address of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison). I listened with interest, because I understood he had been out in Dawson, and I wanted to hear something about the way in which the conditions there impressed him. I am rather disappointed with his speech, because he does not seem to have seen very much, after all. I am reminded of a story, which occurs to me at this moment, of a man who was accused of stealing a certain article. Four or five witnesses were called, who swore that they saw him steal it. However, he said that he was not guilty, and that he could bring fifty men to swear that they did not see him steal it. I am reminded very much, by the remarks of the hon. member for New Westminster, of that story, because we find that he says that he saw nothing that was wrong. He made an apology for the Government, and yet I do not think that I would want him to apologize for me in the same way. It was a weak apology. He said that no one supposed the Mounted Police would be such a good force and would do its work so well; therefore, we ought to overlook a great many of the mistakes of the Government. As I followed the hon. gentleman, I couldn't help thinking that the party to which the hon. gentleman belongs, is the party which constantly tried to reduce the Mounted Police, and almost tried to get rid of it. The party on this side of the House is the party that always tried to keep the Mounted Police up to the utmost state of efficiency. If any Government deserves credit for the Mounted Police, it is not the Government which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) supports, but rather it is the Conservative Government who maintained that force in a high state of efficiency. The hon. gentleman claimed that a good many faults of this Government should be overlooked, because the Mounted Police in the Yukon are an efficient body, but the Government of the present day had nothing to do with making them efficient. I do not think I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) to apologize for me in language similar to that in which his apology was offered for the Government. He told us, and I took down his words, that on account of the Mounted Police we ought to overlook the many inadvertences, to put it mildly, which the officials in the Yukon had been guilty of and for which hon. gentlemen on this side of the House hold the Government responsible.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not think I used the words "of which they had been guilty." What I said, or what I intended to say, was: "with which they had been charged."

Mr. CRAIG. I think I quoted the hon. gentleman correctly, but of course I shall accept his correction. I am not disposed, however, to accept his statement that 75,000 people went into Dawson City by the Skagway route, which the hon. gentleman followed, and about five times that number went in by the Yukon River route. If the hon. gentleman will make a calculation on that basis, he will find that he stated that 75,000 went via Skagway and 375,000 via the Yukon River, and as a great many must have gone in by other routes, that would make over 450,000 adult men in the neighbourhood of Dawson. It seems to me that these figures are perfectly absurd, and I say it with all respect, if the other statements made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) are based on as little foundation as that statement, we can see that they are worth absolutely nothing. The great apology made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) for the Government was that they could not possibly know all these facts. Now, I think the Government could have known these facts; it is the business of the Government to know these facts, and we charge them that they did not take proper means to ascertain the facts. We charge them with sending officials in there who—some of them, I do not say all—were not fit for the positions. I think that is admitted by the hon. gentleman. Perhaps in one sense the Government were not to blame for sending in some incompetent men, but they certainly are to blame for not discovering that, and for not instituting an inquiry the moment the slightest rumour reached them. Further, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) makes the remarkable statement that the Government should accept the reports of their own officials in preference to the reports of anybody else. Why, Sir, the answer to that argument is that the officials who made these reports were the very men who were charged with malfeasance in office, and is it not absurd for any intelligent member of this House to contend that the reports of the officials who are charged with wrong-doing should be accepted in preference to the reports of disinterested persons? That is a very lame apology indeed for the Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) also told us that after being in Dawson City all this time, after interviewing the miners and almost everybody there, and after seeing, as he tells us, more than the proprietors of the Klondike "Nugget," he came away rather disappointed because he found so few grievances. He told us that when he went around he thought he would find a good many things going wrong, and that he would get the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to remedy them; but he found there were very few things to complain of. That the hon. gentleman found hardly any grievances and that everything was about as proper as it should be, invalidates the whole statement of the hon. member. It is admitted that there were grievances; the Government does not deny that there were things done that should not have been done, men all over the country who belong to the Liberal party concede that, and yet this hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) tells us that he saw more than any one else in the Klondike, more than people who had been living there, and yet he found nothing wrong. In my view—and I am approaching this subject with a perfectly unprejudiced mind—such a statement as that invalidates his whole evidence and demonstrates. I am afraid, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) was trying to make his apology too strong. The hon. gentleman states that he does not like the tactics of the Opposition, and he complains that we are obstructing useful legislation on behalf of the Yukon territory. I admit that four weeks is rather long to debate these questions, and I am sorry it requires such a period of time, but even if this debate had not continued for four weeks I am pretty sure that no very useful legislation would have been brought down by this Government. I feel I can promise that if any good legislation is introduced in respect to the Yukon the Opposition will join with the Government in perfecting it. I do not promise we will agree to any new Yukon railway schemes, but we are just as anxious on this side of the House—representing as we do half of the people of Canada—that the affairs of the Klondike should be well managed as are members on the other side of the House. I do not know that there is anything more to answer in the speech of the hon. gentleman, but I may remark that for the time he spent in Dawson City and in the Klondike he seems to have seen very little indeed.

An hon. MEMBER. He did not want to see anything.

Mr. CRAIG. I do not know whether or not his eyes were blinded by party prejudices, but it really looks to me, as my hon. friend here remarks, that he went up there with the intention of seeing nothing.

Now, Sir, I had hoped that when this amendment was first suggested the Prime Minister would have seen his way to accept it. I do not pretend to be a politician of much experience but it appears to me that if I had been in the position of the Premier, I would have at once said: We accept that amendment, because in that case, if the charges made could not have been proven those who made the charges would have been placed in a very awkward position. It cannot be denied that vast interests are involved in the question of the Yukon administration. People are flocking to that territory, and it will demand the careful attention of the Government for a long time to come, and I have no doubt it will receive the attention of both sides of the House. Therefore, the question is one which demands and deserves time for discussion. One hon. gentleman on the other side during the course of the debate, stated that the Opposition brought forward this matter simply to help their party and to injure the Government. Sir, I care not what the motives were; that does not alter the facts of the case. In thinking this matter over, I have concluded that some charges which have been made cannot be challenged by the members of the Government or their supporters. I have put these down in order so that I may make my speech short, as I always try to do. First of all, it cannot be challenged that there have been charges against the administration in the Yukon made in newspapers all over the country, and not only in newspapers opposed to the Government, but in Liberal papers friendly to the Government. I intend to read three or four of these newspaper comments, and I shall read only from Liberal newspapers, some which are edited by gentlemen who have the honour of sitting in this House as supporters of the present Government. The first statement I shall read is from the paper edited by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis). It says:

Mr. CRAIG.

Every official is looking out for his own interest only, and if a miner without influence wants to find out anything he has to grease somebody's dirty paw. One cannot even see the mining records to find out what claims are or are not recorded, without bribery and corruption.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) spoke only of the reports published in papers in Seattle and San Francisco, and I myself certainly would not pay so much attention to them as I would to Canadian papers; but when we find that the paper edited by the hon. member for St. John, N.B. (Mr. Ellis), a gentleman who supports the Liberal party in this House at all times, publishes such a statement as that, it cannot be lightly thrown aside with the remark that it is all done for party politics. We must acknowledge on both sides of the House, that after all there must be some reason for such a newspaper making a charge like that. I am sure we would not do the hon. member for St. John the injustice to say that he would allow a statement of that kind to go in his paper—a statement a great deal stronger than I would like to make, even if I knew the facts—unless he thought it was true. So that he, at all events, must have thought that there was something in these charges. Now, I am going to read from the Winnipeg "Tribune," which is edited by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), a Liberal member of this House:

It is very plausible to cry that no specific charges have been laid. This is not true;—

I might stop right there and sit down, and let the Government argue it out with their own supporter. They say, lay specific charges. He says specific charges have been laid. I will just read that again—I did not know before that it was so strong:

It is very plausible to cry—

We know who have been doing the crying—

It is very plausible to cry that no specific charges have been laid. This is not true; but even if it had been, it does not help the case. Wrongs have been committed, and everybody whose intelligence surpasses that of the partisan pigmy recognizes the fact and desires to see the remedy applied as speedily as possible.

That is a stronger language by a great deal than I would use myself. I am afraid it is rather hard on a good many gentlemen on that side of the House, and I think it is especially hard on the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison). I will leave him to settle that with the hon. member for Lisgar. Now, I have a selection to read from the Pembroke "Observer," another Liberal newspaper, which was edited by Mr. Muller, who, I am told, though I do not know it, has been appointed to a Government berth by the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton).

Mr. DAVIN. At $1,500 a year and expenses.

Mr. CRAIG. This is the selection:

I have been here now for two weeks, and have been noting and inquiring on every hand, and though I cannot give you facts and figures, I have seen enough to convince myself that it is worse even than the mind of an honest man can conceive. That the mining laws are being set aside on a colossal scale is beyond all question, and that barefaced bribery is the rule of the day is equally certain.

I am glad that the hon. member for New Westminster was not there at that time, or he would have received a great shock.

Mr. WOOD. Do you suppose that gentleman knew as much about it as the member who was there?

Mr. CRAIG. Well, I think the man who wrote that knew as much about it as the member for Hamilton. The member for Hamilton knows nothing about it, and yet he is prepared to give his views about it without any hesitation.

Mr. TAYLOR. The man who wrote that was there six months.

Mr. CRAIG. I have a selection from another paper, the London "Times." The hon. member for New Westminster said he did not pay much attention to the statements in the London "Times," but the reason I read this is that the London "Times" is read by a great many people who do pay attention to what appears in it; and, even if the reports are exaggerated, still, they may have a great effect on people going to the Yukon and on the fair name of Canada. So I will read this:

The colonial editor of the London "Times," Miss Flora Shaw, was not sparing in her denunciations of the flagrant misuse of power and the scandals she saw in the course of her Yukon travels, which for the first time in her varied experience "caused her to blush for British justice."

The PRIME MINISTER. That is not the London "Times."

Mr. CRAIG. No, I see it is not; I see it is from somewhere else. But part of it is from the London "Times": "caused her to blush for British justice."

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess

Mr. CRAIG. When the House rose at six o'clock, I was reading some selections with reference to the conduct of officials in the Yukon territory. All these selections were taken from Liberal journals, and all were couched in very severe language. I read a selection which I said was from the London "Times," but I notice it is a remark from another paper, but there is a small portion of it which is a selection from the correspondence of Miss Shaw, and that is the portion referring to her experience, which caused her to blush for British justice. Miss Shaw was the colonial correspondent of the "Times."

My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) spoke rather slightly of the London "Times," and the letters it published on the Klondike, but he should remember that although he may not attach much importance to that correspondence, the British public would attach great importance to any letters from the colonial correspondent of that paper. I read these selections before recess in support of my first proposition that a great many charges had been made in the newspapers of this country with reference to the state of affairs in the Yukon, and I think it is important to notice that these papers from which I have read extracts are all Liberal journals. If they were Conservative papers, it might perhaps be said, with some show of justice, that these articles were dictated by prejudice and written for the purpose of injuring the Government, but such an imputation cannot be made against newspapers which, on all occasions, when they can do it, support the Government, and which sometimes stretch things a good way in order to aid their party. I think, therefore, the argument is a fair one, that the reports which came to these papers must have been very bad reports indeed, when these papers would publish such remarks as I have quoted. There is one selection which I think I did not read, and that is from the Edmonton "Bulletin," a paper edited by a supporter of the Government in this House, the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). It is a very short selection, but expresses a good deal. We have heard it remarked very often, in the course of this debate, that the information given to those who have made charges has come from American or, as sometimes has been said, Yankee speculators, and some discredit has been attempted to be thrown on these reports on that account. But this selection I am about to read comes from a member of this House, supporting the Government, and is, therefore, not open to any such imputation. It is as follows:

As a matter of fact, Canadians and Liberals are as little pleased with the administration of the Yukon as Yankees or Conservatives.

I understand that my hon. friend from Alberta intends speaking in this debate. I do not know whether he will emphasize what he said in his paper, when he makes his speech to-night, but I am sure we shall wait with some expectancy to see how he feels on the matter since he has come to the capital. It must have struck hon. members as remarkable that some who have spoken against the Government and its administration of the Yukon before coming to Ottawa, have changed their tone after being here a little while. I suppose there must be some very good reasons for this change. Perhaps the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), or some other members of the Government, have explained matters to these gentlemen to their satisfaction. Of course, we know that politics is a very strong factor, and they may have been shown that it was impolitic on their part to speak as they did, and I am inclined to believe that my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), who spoke this afternoon, might have told us a little more than he did, if it were not for fear of injuring his party. I have another selection to read—one which has been read before—but these selections are most interesting, and I think it will not do any harm to read them again. The selection I propose to read now is from the language used by a gentleman of the name of Mr. Joseph Martin—a gentleman well known to a great many members of this House, a gentleman of great ability, and not afraid to say what he thinks. I know that when he was a member of this House, that was the impression I formed of him, but at the same time he is a very strong Liberal and did yeoman service for his party here. The newspaper I have in my hand reports Mr. Martin as saying :

Though the returning miners may not be telling the truth, yet, if this is the case, there has been a strange unanimity in the lies they have been telling. Not only Americans, but Canadians and Englishmen, have entered most vigorous protests against the prevailing condition of affairs, and there does not appear to be much doubt that something is seriously wrong. The fact that the most bitter protests come from British subjects is significant, and it is very difficult to believe that bribery and corruption of officials has not been rampant.

Now, I am sure if we could have a meeting between the Minister of the Interior and Mr. Joseph Martin and see them discussing this matter between them, that it would be a very interesting sight. I hardly think that the hon. Minister would be pleased with what Mr. Martin says on this subject. Although they both belong to the same party, I am inclined to think that on this question they would hardly find themselves in accord. It might be possible, however, that if Mr. Martin were in Ottawa, he might become subject to some of the same influences which have affected others, although I very much doubt it, from what I know of him.

I now proceed to state my second proposition, which is this : Not only have many charges been made in the newspapers all over the country, including a great many Liberal journals, but serious charges have been made in this House. It has been argued in this debate by hon. gentlemen opposite that these charges do not amount to anything—that the charges made by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) and by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), and repeated by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) and the hon. leader of the Opposition, all amount to nothing. That may satisfy hon. members opposite. It may suit the Government very well to pooh-pooh these charges, but I must say that all through this country the strong impression prevails, even among a great many supporters of the

Mr. CRAIG.

Liberal party, that those charges are not without some foundation. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that they are made from political motives, but the country will hardly be disposed to think that men occupying responsible positions in this House—such men as the leader of the Opposition and the senior member for Pictou, and the hon. members for Halifax and Victoria—would make serious charges such as these against officials and connect the Government with them unless there was some foundation for them. I propose to read a very few of the charges that have been made in this House. It is said that they are not specific. Well, I think that some of them are very specific. I know that if they were made against me, I would think them very specific. If I were a member on the other side, I think I would consider them very specific, and when I read them it will be seen that they are not only serious but specific. I shall read, first of all, some of the charges made by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden). This is what the hon. gentleman said, as reported in "Hansard," page 930 :

What are the charges which have been made by the hon. member for Pictou as to what has taken place in the Yukon district? The charges, briefly summarized, may be said to be these :

1. That a notorious system of bribery amongst Government officials has been rendered necessary by the inability to otherwise procure them to perform their duties.

I should think that was a sufficiently specific charge.

1. That a notorious system of bribery among Government officials has been rendered necessary by the inability to otherwise procure them to perform their duties.

2. That blackmailing by officials of persons applying to record claims has prevailed.

3. That unfair and fraudulent use has been made by officials of knowledge acquired in the discharge of their duties.

4. That the Gold Commissioner's legal adviser accepted retainers from persons contesting claims before the commissioner.

5. That the Dominion Lands agent has accepted retainers to procure grants issued by himself, and used the police to dispossess squatters of these lands.

6. That the Dominion Lands Agent was interested in the grant of the water front as well as other officials.

7. That unsanitary conditions have unnecessarily prevailed in the district.

8. That defective postal accommodation and arrangements have prevailed.

9. That there has been an abuse of liquor permits.

Now, the hon. member for Halifax, a little further on in his speech gives specific charges as follows :—

1. The corrupt leasing of the water front to Morrison & Macdonald by private contract, in disregard of the rights of the squatters, and at a yearly profit of some $80,000 or $90,000 to them.

2. The charge that Mr. F. C. Wade and other Government officials are interested in that grant.

3. The retainer of Mr. Wade by the applicants for that lease and the payment to him of a large retainer.

4. The retainer of Mr. Wade by persons having claims contested before the Gold Commissioner, whose legal adviser he is.

5. The case of the miners William Huslig, Arthur Brown and John Statton.

6. The case of Dr. Leblanc.

I read this to show that charges have been made which we might fairly call specific. Now, the Government have said more than once that if any hon. member will make a specific charge, they are willing to appoint a commission. I suppose they mean that the member must make the charge on his own responsibility. Well, these charges have been made by the hon. member for Pictou and have been repeated as I have read, by the hon. member for Halifax, and yet the Government refuses a commission on the ground that no specific charge has been made.

At page 1027 of the "Hansard"—and this is the only other thing I intend to read on this point—the hon. member for Victoria after making a long charge, which I shall not read, says :

Now, Sir, that is a specific charge, made by the man who went himself, who took in a partner and signed a power of attorney to the claim which was in Wade, Clark & Wilson's office, and can be got at any moment, when there is a commission appointed. Sir, that is not the only one. If that commission is appointed, there is no doubt about it, there will be dozens and dozens of similar cases.

These statements are very strong, and I cannot imagine that members of Parliament of such standing as the hon. member for Victoria, the senior member for Pictou, and the hon. member for Halifax should make such statements, unless there was some foundation for them. These charges have been scattered all over the country. There was another serious charge against an individual made by the senior member for Pictou. I thought it was only too specific, but it does not seem to have been specific enough to satisfy the hon. gentlemen on the other side. It seems to me quite clear that these charges being scattered all over the country through the newspapers cannot but be injurious to Canada and the Yukon, unless a judicial commission is appointed to make an impartial investigation and let us know whether these charges are true or not. This is what the people want to know. These charges are repeated in the United States and in England, and I suppose in Europe as well; and if they are not investigated by an independent commission, they cannot but tell to the injury of Canada and especially of the Yukon territory. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) said that he went to that country but saw nothing wrong. The Government admitted that there was something wrong by appointing Mr. Ogilvie to investigate. It seems a pity that the Minister of the Interior had not seen the hon. member for New Westminster first, for then he might have saved himself the issuing of that commission. The hon.

member (Mr. Morrison) told us that he had remained at Dawson City for several weeks and had travelled up the gold-bearing creeks interviewing the miners, and had tried to get some miners to make a statement that something wrong was going on, but he could not find anything wrong. And yet in such a state of affairs—it was like a second paradise where nothing was wrong—the Government issued a commission to Mr. Ogilvie to investigate wrong-doing. But what sort of an investigation is the Government having? To whom has the work of investigation been intrusted? Now, Sir, no one in this House has said a word against Mr. Ogilvie. I am glad that is the case: I am glad that Mr. Ogilvie is such a man that nothing can be said against him. The Opposition do not want to slander any one. I know that, personally, my desire is that all these charges may be refuted. I should be glad to know that there is nothing serious in any of these charges. But I can never know that nor can the people know it until a proper investigation has been held. Even though we admit that Mr. Ogilvie is a good man and a man of ability, we do not admit that he is the right man to make this investigation. One reason is that he is a Government official. I feel satisfied in my own mind that he will constantly bear in mind that he is an official of this Government whom he is asked to pass censure upon. Of course, the Government say they are not to blame. The hon. member for New Westminster, while declaring that there was nothing wrong very strangely went on to say that if it was proved that there was anything wrong the Government was not responsible. Who, then, is responsible? Some one must be, if the officials have done wrong, and we have the right to look to the Government as primarily responsible in this matter. In this House we can reach nobody but the Government. I cannot imagine that Mr. Ogilvie wishes to do anything to injure this Government. But I can imagine a case of Mr. Ogilvie reporting something which might injure the Government and reflect upon them; but I think we probably should not hear much about it. But I do not think that Mr. Ogilvie would feel, in the first place, that he was called upon to make such a report. Mr. Ogilvie is a good man in his present position, we do not deny that. But he is not the man to carry on this investigation, because his report, even if impartial and thorough—which is hardly likely to be for he cannot have the time for this together with his other duties—it would not command the confidence of the people of this country. I am not alone in this. I must say, I do not say this because I am a member of the Conservative party. It is unfortunate that even when one of us states a thing that is admitted by everybody, people are apt to say: He is talking from a party point of view. I will read a statement which appeared in a newspaper which is edited by a member of the Liberal party and which, I think, will command the respect of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. It bears on this very point about Mr. Ogilvie being the person to make this investigation. The Victoria "Times" says this:

In the opinion of the "Times" the course which the Government should take is quite clear. All charges should be thoroughly investigated, and by a commission having the confidence of the country. The Government, and not the Opposition, must take the lead in prosecuting such an investigation. If officials have done wrong they should be exposed and punished, it matters not what their politics or by whom appointed. Now that direct charges have been formulated on the floor of Parliament by a prominent member of the House, nothing short of an exhaustive inquiry by a non-partisan commission will properly meet the situation. The investigation by Mr. Ogilvie may be good enough in its way—his findings may be absolutely fair and just, and cover the whole ground; but partisan politicians, who think more of making a point against the Government than of reforming abuses, will not accept them as final. An investigation that does not silence criticism has failed in its object.

Now, I think that is a very strong statement, and I agree with everything it says. While it might be possible that Mr. Ogilvie's report might satisfy a great many members of the Liberal party scattered over the country—but, according to what some of them say in their newspapers, it would not satisfy them all—I am satisfied that those who belong to the Conservative party would still feel that something is concealed, that the investigation was not as thorough as it should be. On the other hand, if a judicial commission, consisting, say, of three judges, was appointed by the Government, then, if the charges were not proved, what would happen? If the charges were not proved, they would recoil on the Conservative party, who demand the commission, who admit the truth of a great many of these charges, who stand behind them—I say, if these charges were not proved, then the Conservative party would receive a blow from the appointment of this commission. I cannot imagine, therefore, why the Government should refuse to appoint this commission, under such circumstances, because they say they are perfectly innocent, they say there is not a word of truth in these charges, and so they stand out against the appointment of a commission such as that. But, on the other hand, if the charges were proved, then the appointment of a commission would be amply justified, and it would be a great thing for Canada and for the people generally to feel that, when wrong was done, it would not be covered up by a partisan investigation, that a real investigation would take place, and those who are guilty would be punished.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal party has always claimed to be the party of purity, and has always claimed to be the clean party. Well, Sir, a great many of us have not admitted that claim. We claim that the Conservative party is the clean party, if there is any difference between the parties. But the Liberal party has always made that claim; they have paraded that claim before the country. Now they have an opportunity to show whether their claim is well founded, and I ask them to do it. I ask them to show to this House and to the country that they are the clean party which they have always claimed to be. I suppose we shall find that most of the members, or perhaps all the members belonging to the Liberal party will vote for the amendment to the amendment. Now, what is the amendment to which a great many of them take objection? I wish to look at it for a moment and examine it:

That this House deems it expedient to inform His Excellency that in view of the widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon, it is the duty of the Government to appoint, without delay, an independent judicial commission to make a thorough investigation into that subject, and report the results.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see anything in this amendment to which objection could be taken. I see no reason why there should be the slightest objection to this amendment. The statement made in the first part of this amendment surely cannot be denied, that there have been widespread charges of incapacity, misconduct and corruption in the administration of public affairs connected with the Yukon. I have read those charges in Liberal journals, strong charges, stronger than I would be disposed to make myself on the floor of this House, couched in very strong language, with no qualification at all; so that no one can deny the first part of that amendment. The amendment goes on to say:

It is the duty of the Government to appoint without delay an independent judicial commission.

Well, Sir, there can be no objection to a commission of that kind. The Government would have the appointments themselves. They could pick out three judges, three men in whom they had confidence, and in whom the country would have confidence, men who are independent, who would search the thing thoroughly. And what is the object of that commission? "To make a thorough investigation." Just the very thing we want, just the thing the country wants, the only thing that will satisfy the country. "Then report the result." Report the result to the Government, and through the Government to the country. As I said before, it does seem to me that the Government act very foolishly and stand in their own light by refusing to accept that amendment. I cannot see the least objection to it. There might be some objection to it on the score of expense. But on that score the Opposition could not criticise them, because we urged the acceptance of the commission; and I am sure their supporters would not find fault with them; no one would find fault with an expenditure of that kind. It would amply repay itself by making this thorough investigation, and letting the people see that things had been conducted in a proper way and with impartial justice in that country. It may be said, and no doubt it is said, by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that they cannot accept this, because it is moved by the Opposition. I suppose that is the real reason, after all. If it were not for the fact that this amendment is moved by the Opposition as an amendment to the Address, then they might possibly accept it. But they say to their supporters: We cannot accept this; it looks like a motion of want of confidence. Well, Sir, I do not think that it is anything of the kind. But there is nothing in that amendment at all that conflicts with the Address. It seems to me that the Government might accept that without the least hesitation, and appoint the commission, and make this investigation. Now, Sir, in order to provide a loop-hole of escape for the members of the Liberal party, the Government have presented an amendment to the amendment, moved by the Opposition. Let us look at this amendment to the amendment for a moment, and see what it is:

That we have observed with pleasure that on receipt of complaints against some of the officials in the Yukon district, His Excellency's Government took prompt action to inquire into the matter of such complaints by appointing Mr. Wm. Ogilvie as a commissioner for that purpose. Having entire confidence in the integrity and ability of Mr. Ogilvie, we are satisfied that his inquiry will be impartial and thorough, and that it will place His Excellency's advisers in possession of all the information necessary to enable them to do justice to all parties concerned.

Now, Sir, the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) stated that he was going to vote for the amendment to the amendment, but he qualified it by saying that, if the report of Mr. Ogilvie was not satisfactory to him, then he would be in favour of appointing a judicial commission. I know there are gentlemen on the other side of the House who are taking the same position. They think themselves that there ought to be a thorough investigation, and yet they say: Why not wait until we have Mr. Ogilvie's report? If that report is not thorough, is not satisfactory, then we are willing to vote for an independent judicial commission. But I would just call the attention of these gentlemen who intend to vote for this amendment to the amendment, that it states emphatically and without qualification:

We are satisfied that the inquiry of Mr. Ogilvie will be impartial and thorough.

Now they turn round and say: If it is not thorough, if it is not satisfactory to us, then we will vote for an amendment such as you propose. Why, Sir, they stultify themselves by such reasoning, because, in voting for this amendment to the amendment, they say they are satisfied that they will have an impartial, and thorough investigation which will place His Excellency's advisers in possession of necessary information. I think, if they vote for that, they close their mouths, and they are not able to say anything about it afterwards. I noticed that the member for New Westminster said that at present everything is satisfactory in the Yukon, and he laid great emphasis on the words "at present." He goes on to say that Mr. Senkler, the new Gold Commissioner, has made a decided change since he took charge; yet, almost in the same breath, he says that there was nothing wrong. It is evident that the hon. member had a very hard task given him, when he was asked to stand up and say that, while he went to the Yukon and travelled all over it, yet he saw nothing wrong. I do not dispute the hon. gentleman's words, but I think his eyes were blinded, or his memory has failed him since he came home. I notice that the hon. gentleman has placed some very interesting questions on the Order paper with reference to the Yukon. He goes on to say: Why should we discuss the past? I think there is a very simple answer to that, the past is all we have to discuss in reference to the Yukon. We do not know what is going on just now; we can only speak of what we know, and we discuss the past because it is most important that all these scandals should be set at rest. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to say, let the past go, but I will call to mind the fact that when they were in Opposition they did not practice that rule at all. They were constantly harping upon the past. They were constantly reminding the Government of their sins of omission and keeping them before the country. We propose to do the same, and we propose that if their conduct is wrong, as we claim it has been, in reference to the Yukon, that we shall discuss it. We feel that it is our bounden duty to do so; that is what we are here for. The Opposition has no right to allow wrong to go on without bringing it to the notice of the country. The Montreal "Star" at one time said that an active Opposition was the attorney for the people. I think that is true, and I hold that we have a duty to perform for the people. It is not our duty to let the past go; it is not our duty to overlook all the wrong that has been done in the Yukon and join hands with the Government for the future. We are willing to join hands with the Government for the future; we want the Yukon administration improved; we want the communication improved; we want the telegraph communication improved; we want to see that country become what it ought to be, and we want to see that the officials are good, that they are honest, and that they are qualified for their work. It cannot be expected that the Opposition will remain silent in the face of scandals such as those which have been circulated all over the country, and we feel that we are only doing our duty in urging upon the Government to appoint a commission such as we asked for. I do not suppose my advice will have any weight with the Government or with the right hon. Prime Minister. I have had the honour of giving him advice once or twice which he has accepted, but I am afraid that he will not accept my advice just now.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Hear, hear.

Mr. CRAIG. I repeat, in closing, that I think he is making a great mistake, not only in his own interest, but in the interest of the country, in rejecting the proposition for the appointment of an independent judicial and impartial commission, which could examine into all these charges that have been made, many of them by Liberal journals all over the country, and by members on the floor of this House, charges which are serious, charges which have been made specifically, and charges which involve the hon. Minister of the Interior, according to some members of this House. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hope, but I am afraid that I cannot hope, that the right hon. Prime Minister will accept my advice upon this occasion.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to have spoken in this debate at all, but I find that I am unable to remain silent and vote on this question without a word of explanation. I have listened with the very greatest care and patience to almost all that has been said on this question. In addition to that, I have followed, as a newspaper man, very closely, for the last year, all the reports that came from the Yukon. One of the first charges that was made in reference to misconduct, if that term properly describes the action in regard to the Yukon, was that officers were allowed to stake claims and to stake claims in competition with miners in that country. I felt at the time, Mr. Speaker, that that was a mistake: I felt that it was not wise that officials of the Government should be allowed to compete in any way with the miners: I took occasion to enter a moderate protest at the time, and I have seen no reason to change my view up to the present. I can congratulate the Government on the fact that they have discontinued that practice, and that an Order in Council has been passed prohibiting officials from staking claims in competition with miners. I also wish to congratulate the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) on the position that he took, in a letter, which he gave to an official who was recently appointed to the post office, absolutely prohibiting him from taking up any claim in the Yukon in competition with miners, and from speculating in claims. Now, in regard to the charges themselves, I hope that I may be able to take a moderate view of this question. I think that, perhaps, both sides of this House and the country generally, will admit that there has been at least considerable recklessness indulged in, in making some of the charges that were made; at the same time, I am free to confess that I am utterly unable to share the views of the majority of my fellow Liberal members that nothing serious or specific has been charged with regard to official misconduct in the Yukon. It is my distinct belief, Sir, that a state of affairs, and a disgraceful state of affairs, existed in that country for a very considerable time. In making this admission, I think it only fair to say that there is very considerable excuse in that connection. There was no telegraphic communication between the Yukon and Ottawa, and it was absolutely impossible that the Government should have its finger on the situation there, or that it could regulate it promptly. I think it is only fair to admit that in a new country such as that, with new conditions and conditions such as we had there, it was almost impossible that some corruption or that some mismanagement should not have occurred in that country. However, I took the view at first that when general charges were made an investigation should be undertaken as promptly as possible. I took the view that the investigation should be of a judicial character; I still entertain the same view, Mr. Speaker. The Government, in its wisdom, however, saw fit to appoint as investigator Mr. William Ogilvie, who had been appointed to the position of administrator of the Yukon. I am free to confess that the people generally, and, I think, absolutely regardless of political predilections, endorsed the appointment of Mr. Ogilvie, at least, as administrator of that country. I am not even prepared to dispute that probably the majority of the people thought that when he was appointed a commissioner to investigate these charges the proper thing was done. I, however, differed from that view, and I still see no reason to change my opinion in that regard. However, as I say, I think the general public endorsed the appointment of the Government in that connection. Mr. Ogilvie has been holding an investigation; what the result of that investigation may be it is difficult for us to say. According to some reports received, it looks as if the investigation would not be attended with satisfactory results. However, the Government has taken the view that, inasmuch as Mr. Ogilvie is making that investigation it is only fair to ask that we should hold our hand until his report, which is expected in a few days or a few weeks, at least, is received. I have no hesitation in concurring in that view. The Government and the members of the Liberal party in this House have made it very clear to my mind, and I think made it clear also to the minds of the majority of the members of this House, that they do not propose in any measure whatever to shield guilty officials in that territory. We have the declaration of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), who moved the amendment to the amendment that so far as he, at all events, was concerned, he proposed to do his duty in that regard. Let me read this brief extract from his speech :

There is one point, however, which I wish to make clear. That is that I will not stand in my place in Parliament and support any Government that desires to shield corrupt acts on the part of any officials of this country. So far as I am concerned, so far as the Liberal party are concerned, we are prepared to punish wrong-doing on the part of any official. Therefore, when the report of the investigation now going on is made, if it appears that that investigation has not been a complete or satisfactory one, or that the charges have not been fully investigated, I for one, would have no hesitation in supporting any effort made by any member of Parliament to secure a further investigation, if necessary. But until we hear from Mr. Ogilvie, I consider that we should not take any further action in relation to the appointment of any tribunal for the purpose of investigating these charges. Let the commission which has already been called into existence by the Government, and which is now at work, complete its work and report before we take any further action.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we had also the declaration of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who made a very vigorous speech in this debate, and who declared, at the conclusion of his address :

But let me say this : When that report comes down before this House, if there is any body of men in this House who believe that the investigation should be prosecuted further, who think it should be continued after the 25th August, who believe that any special charge has been left without thorough investigation, the Government will see that the fullest investigation is given. We are determined that not a stone shall be left unturned to get to the bottom of every charge which has been made against any Government official in that territory.

Let me repeat these words :

We are determined that not a stone shall be left unturned to get to the bottom of every charge which has been made against any Government official in that territory.

To my mind this is a very broad statement, and had I not received declarations of that kind from members of the Government, I should have deemed it my duty to vote for the amendment (Mr. Clarke's), and against the amendment to the amendment, because, Sir, I believe it is good, sound Liberal doctrine that you cannot throw too much light on all wrong-doing of public officials no matter where it may occur. I believe that it is in the interests of the Liberal party itself, in the interests of the members of the Government—and I am quite sure that the hon. members of this House and the people of the country do not suppose that the Government itself is corrupt in this matter—I say that it is in the interests of the Government, in the interests of the Liberal party, and in the interests of the people of Canada that all possible light should be thrown on this matter, and inasmuch as we have the clear declaration of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that every charge shall be investigated to the full, then so far as I am concerned, and inasmuch as Mr. Ogilvie is a man of acknowledged probity and honesty, I am prepared to extend to him the courtesy of waiting until his report is received before I consider the question of further action. If the report of Mr. Ogilvie is not satisfactory, I take the same position as my hon. friend the Minister of Marine (Sir Louis Davies), that I for one shall vote for a most thorough inquiry, such an inquiry as may commend itself to both sides of this House. I, Sir, do not propose as a Liberal to stand in this House, or on any platform in Canada, to say one word to shield any official who has been guilty of stealing, or who has been found using his office for his own aggrandisement; nor do I believe that there are any considerable number of Liberals in this country who would be prepared to do that. Why, the Government has everything to gain and nothing to lose by having the fullest investigation. Even suppose you do sacrifice half a dozen officials; it is the feeling of all true Liberals that if these men are rascals they should be turned out and punished. I would not have desired to speak at all on this occasion had the amendment to the amendment been a logical conclusion of the speech of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), who is practically my deskmate in this House, and who despite his heretical views on the tariff is a very agreeable and pleasant companion indeed. I had myself intended to have moved an amendment to the amendment, but my hon. friend (Mr. Bertram), who is always ready, got the start of me, and precluded my moving the amendment which I had prepared. I will read that proposed amendment of mine, so that the House may see I was anxious to make good any words which I am now uttering. It is as follows :—

That this House is of opinion that all charges of misconduct and corruption in connection with the administration of public affairs in the Yukon, should be thoroughly investigated by a tribunal acceptable to both sides of the House; but that inasmuch as Mr. Ogilvie, authorized by the Government, has been holding an investigation, and his report is daily expected in Ottawa; it would be better before taking further action to await its receipt, as it may throw additional light upon the question and enable the House to deal more intelligently with the whole subject.

As to the charges which have been made, they were undoubtedly of a general character; but it does seem that almost all those who have returned from the Yukon told the one story about official corruption there. Even supposing that we discount these statements very considerably, yet you have persons of the very highest standing, persons whose reputation is probably as good as that of any member of this House, who tell the same story. We have the statement of Miss Shaw, and I am quite sure that no man who has met that lady, would for one minute think of imputing to her any dishonest motive. I had the pleasure of having a conversation with Miss Shaw in Winnipeg, and I was perfectly satisfied of her bona fides: I was satisfied that she, recognizing the high standing of Canada as a part of this Empire, had no other object in view than that of clearing out any corruption that might exist in the Yukon, and rehabilitating the fair name of the Dominion. Then we had the testimony of Mr. White, Reuter's agent, a man personally known to me, and a man who I believe would not misrepresent the state of affairs in Dawson City. We had also the testimony of Mr. Millar, the editor of the Pembroke "Observer," and I do not think Mr. Millar would say anything that was untrue. These charges are sometimes met with the statement, that after all they are the inventions of returning Yankees. Well, some returning Yankees may have told these stories, but they were not all Yankees, and for my part I would place more credence in the general statements made by these people from the Yukon than I would in the denials of the officials. These returning Yukoners have interests in that country, and have rights that should be protected, and even if ninety-nine out of a hundred of these statements were reckless, yet if one single miner was defrauded out of his claim, it is the bounden duty of this House to see that that claim was restored to him and justice done in the premises. In that view, I feel very strongly that unless the report which we are soon to have from Mr. Ogilvie is entirely satisfactory, we should have such an investigation as will satisfy all people concerned. Partisans may say that they do not propose to have a policy laid down for them by opponents: but I do not believe that is a proper attitude. To me it is a question of what is right and what is wrong. If wrong has been done in the Yukon, I think it ought to be righted, and righted as soon as possible. I am free to admit that since Mr. Ogilvie has gone in there, a new order of things has been created. I do not believe that at the present time there exists the corruption among the officials which I believe existed in the past. I believe a different order of things has been created; and, feeling so, I cannot resist the conclusion that no harm would be done by delaying this matter until Mr. Ogilvie's report is received. I listened to the various speeches that were made by the members of the Opposition, and I do not believe in the doctrine that simply because a speech may be made by a gentleman at your left, the people on this side should take no stock in it. I think members on that side have practically the same responsibility that we have, and, if they have charges to make,

Mr. RICHARDSON.

I think they should be listened to. I do not think they should be entirely scouted simply because they sit at your left. Among the different speeches that were made, the one that impressed me most was that of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), who, in addition to his own moderate remarks, gave a very careful review of the speech delivered by the hon. member for Pictou. In that review he gave a summary from which I extract certain charges. One is:

That the Gold Commissioner's legal adviser accepted retainers from persons contesting claims before the commissioner.

To my mind, that is a very serious charge. It may be quite true that the hon. gentleman does not rise in his place and on his authority as a member make a charge and ask for an investigation and undertake to prove it. For my part, I do not see how any hon. member could be ready to stand in this House and make a series of charges, and offer to produce the proof; because the Yukon is a long way from here, and it would be a very costly undertaking; but if any hon. member offers substantial charges, and says that men are willing to come forward and substantiate them, to my mind that is going far enough to justify an independent investigation. Now, with regard to specific charges, the hon. member for Halifax gave this one:

The corrupt leasing of the water front to Morrison & Macdonald by private contract, in disregard of the rights of the squatters, and at a yearly profit of some $80,000 or $90,000 to them.

Of course, the hon. Minister of the Interior, in his admirable and able speech, pointed out that tenders had been called for and received, which to some extent minimizes that charge. Another charge is that Mr. F. C. Wade and other Government officials are interested in that grant. It seems to me that that is a specific charge. The man's name is mentioned—the man supposed to be guilty, and the charge was made from several sources.

Mr. WOOD. But not a single name given.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will read one charge in which the name was given. Suppose you take the statement which the hon. member for Pictou read, as coming from Messrs. Allen & Semple, the proprietors of the Dawson City paper, who were here. They offered to go before a tribunal and give evidence in support of their statements. The statements these gentlemen made were as follows:—

There were two side doors to the office, one marked "Private," the other marked "No Admittance." It was possible to obtain admission to the door marked "Private" by payment of a bribe of $5 to $10, and to obtain admission to the door marked "No Admittance" by payment of a bribe of from $15 upwards.

Twenty-five dollars was the average bribe for this door. The men who obtained admission by this system of bribery got their claims recorded ahead of the men who remained in line before the front door. The $25 door was higher-priced because more expeditious. The man who got his claim recorded first had the registered title.

The money was paid to the guard at the door. The deals to get in in this way were usually made the night before.

Another man, whose name is withheld at his request, paid $400 to an employee occupying an official position for inside information from the Gold Commissioner's office.

Opposite 49 below discovery on Bonanza Creek a miner was cheated out of a rich find by the connivance of officials in the Gold Commissioner's office. The name will be given, and evidence, when a proper investigation is ordered.

Mrs. Dubois was deprived of a claim by one Murdock with the connivance of an official, Hurdman, in the Gold Commissioner's office. Hurdman got one-third interest. We understand that Mr. Senkler has restored the claim to Mrs. Dubois.

J. F. Riley, clerk for Inspector of Mines Mad-den, is located at Bonanza Forks, and is an employee of the Government. He staked and recorded on October 10th, 1898, a fraction of 24,164 square feet, the legal statement being 10,000 square feet. He holds a certificate of record for this in direct violation of the regulations. A copy of the abstract of the title is in our possession, and can be produced. We have in our possession passes in use in the Gold Commissioner's office for admission by the side door. They are stamped with the office stamp "Interior Department, Yukon Territory," and are initialed by officials.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the reason why I take some stock in these charges is this: These men say they are willing to go before a properly constituted tribunal and prove them. Even supposing they are not true, these people say they are true, and they offer to prove them if an investigation satisfactory to them is ordered. I am not prepared to say that I would advise the Government to hold an investigation just to satisfy them; but I am quite satisfied, from the declaration of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), the other evening, that if the investigation now being held by Mr. Ogilvie is not satisfactory, such a one will be ordered as will be satisfactory to the members of this House and to the people of this country. Even if ninety-nine hundredths of these statements are untrue, the very fact of the impression being given that they are not to be properly investigated would be a serious injury to the country. But we have the declaration of the members of the Government that a satisfactory investigation will be ordered. In conclusion, I wish to say that if Mr. Ogilvie's report is not down in a reasonable time, and before this House rises, so far as I am concerned, I shall be prepared to vote for the appointment of such a commission as will thoroughly investigate these charges, and as will be satisfactory to both sides of this House.

Mr. JAMES DOMVILLE (King's, N.B.)
Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to have said anything on this occasion, and I do not propose to go very much into the question until I see the hon. leader of the Opposition here, because I have something to say to him, and I will reserve these remarks until he gets in his place. It seems to me that this attack on the Yukon officials is more largely directed to the Minister of the Interior than to the officials, because it has been narrowed down at last to an impeachment of him. Now, I have been in that country, and I have heard my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) tell us something about it to-day. Probably he and I are the only members of this House who have gone into that country. I have said very little about it, and it may not be taken amiss by members on both sides, if I give my candid opinion as to what should be done by either party, and make some reference to what has taken place out there; but, as I see the hon. leader of the Opposition is now in his place, I shall address myself to him for a little while. Sir, after reading his very long speech, I can only regret that I cannot find just what I was looking for in it, but I may say that, when he addressed the House in the first part of the session, and was appealing to hon. members on both sides to accord to him, as an old and valued servant of his country, the respect due to his services, I think he said—although I cannot find it in his speech, and if I am wrong, I shall apologize—I have not very long to live, probably three or four months. I may recall to the hon. gentleman that one month of the four has already gone by, and yet he has not begun to prepare himself to meet his future. There is no man in this country who can afford, when his last day is approaching close at hand, not to consider his past and look to his future; and, if he is not a good Christian, as some of us hope we are, then he should make all the more preparation, and, before making such statements as he did, consider how he is going to damage another and a younger man than himself, and men that will live and be in power, when he has been wiped off the slate and has disappeared. I am surprised and sorry that he should have abused his position in this House to attack a man who is not in this House, and therefore cannot here defend himself. I am free to say that Major Walsh, whom the hon. gentleman so violently attacked, is not a friend of mine, and I have no particular liking for him; but, when I was out in the Yukon, I saw him at work, I saw what was going on, and, although I have no friendship for him, I felt it my duty, when he was attacked here, in his absence, to say something in his defence, as between man and man. I would be recreant to my duty before a tribunal of public men, if I did not defend a man who was attacked where he could not defend himself. The hon. leader of the Opposition traded on his age and his position in this House, when he made the statements he did. And, when he repeated the charges of the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), who, I believe, is a friend of his, I thought he made a great mistake and was getting out of his depth ; and, as I saw a man of his age and experience throwing broadcast those assertions against the character of an absent gentleman, I thought it time to interrupt, and simply said : " That is not true." " Silence," said Sir Charles Tupper, no doubt thinking, for the moment, that he was in power and could flash the whip over his followers, as I told him he did, many years before, when I brought before him a scandalous business regarding the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for which he never forgave me. He then went through my county, and did all he could to bring about my defeat, and succeeded at the time ; but I have lived to see the day when he was turned out of power, and I was again elected to a seat in this House. He said : " The hon. gentleman had better take care of himself." I replied, that I could take care of myself. Then he retorted, that I was not responsible for what I said after a certain hour of the day. I would like to know from my hon. friend what hour of the day that is. Yes, the hon. gentleman laughs. He may well appeal to his friends around him for sympathy, when he undertakes to slander me and injure me with my own constituents, just as he slandered Major Walsh, little heeding the feelings of Major Walsh, his wife and family, and caring nothing for the consequences, when she would ask her husband : Is it true what Sir Charles Tupper says about your conduct in the Yukon ? But he has not the slightest care for the feelings of innocent people, provided he can make some little political capital by his bitter and slanderous attacks, and gratify his spleen—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman should impute improper motives to an hon. member of this House, as he is doing when he says that the hon. leader of the Opposition made a statement merely to gratify his spleen.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I am trying, Mr. Speaker, to be moderate, and if the hon. gentleman had not made use of the language he did, I would have no right to reply to him as I have done ; but, when he did make use of such language, I have the right to clear myself and set myself right in " Hansard." Had I said that, in my opinion, he was not responsible for the language he uttered, I might have been unparliamentary in my speech. Had I said that I thought he was hardly in a position to recognize the force of his own arguments, and that perhaps at another time he might have made different remarks, you, Sir, might have justly called me to order. Had I said that a prominent member of the Opposition, such as the hon. gentleman is, had been drinking hot whisky in a private assembly in order to brace himself up to make a three hours' speech, and had I named the persons who were present with him at that assembly, I would, no doubt, have been guilty of a breach of parliamentary decorum. I could give the names of those who were drinking hot whisky with him at three o'clock in the afternoon, and retort to the hon. gentleman, that I do not need to drink that powerful stimulant at that hour of the day in order to brace myself up to slander people who are absent, and be heralded throughout the country as a marvellous old man, who could make a three hours speech, and keep, at his advanced age, abreast of the times. Were I in the position of the hon. gentleman, I would rather come to the conclusion that I should be placed in a glass box and labelled " Past History." Instead of going back to the debates of ten or twenty years ago, let us occupy ourselves now with the present and the future of Canada and the Yukon, and with the opinions of the people who have been out in the Yukon and know something about it. Let me point out to the House, that, in the speech by the hon. gentleman at Brockville last night, he denied having made any charges against Major Walsh in this House. Here is his denial, as published in his own newspapers. I made no charge, he says, against Major Walsh, who is a friend of mine. Would any friend of Major Walsh get up in this House and make the statements concerning him that were made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and which, if made outside the walls of this House, would be libellous ? But, after attacking this man where he could not defend himself, the hon. gentleman, in his speech at Brockville last night, said that he had never made any charge against Major Walsh in this House, and that he was a friend of Major Walsh. Well, we do not want any such friends around us here. I was a friend of the hon. gentleman in years gone by, but I am proud to-day to be able to say that I am not his friend, and do not require his friendship.

I shall not waste much time with my hon. friend, because I can see that, whatever I may do here I shall bring down his censure upon me—because I drove his ally, who is not here to-night out of the county of Kings, as that hon. gentleman will be driven out of New Brunswick if he tries to get a constituency again. He talks about maintaining the honour of Canada and defending her reputation. He declares : I shall be recreant to my trust if I do not rise in this House and defend the fair name of Canada. Hon. gentlemen talk a great deal about what will be the verdict of the people when the appeal is made to them. We have had a little illustration of that the other day in New Brunswick. The hon. ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), who is not here to-night, went to New Brunswick and threw out a challenge to fight the contest out on certain lines. And what was the result ? He and his friends only elected five men in the whole province. That was an intimation of what will happen in the future. They will be defeated in the country as they were defeated in New Brunswick, horse, foot and artillery. My hon. friend will not be here, because as we read in "Hansard," or as I heard him say the other day, his time is very limited. Had it not been for references made to me, I would not have trespassed on the time of the House. Because a great deal has been said, and very few can give us any information on this subject except experts on this subject. We have had hon. members speaking on this subject whose information on it was very limited. Perhaps hon. members will laugh at me, but it is the fact, we have had one gentleman here laying down the law as to the proper course for Canada to pursue, who attempted to get horses up the Stikine by putting horse-shoes on their fore feet? It was a new idea—new wine out of an old bottle. The Yukon is a very difficult subject to deal with, especially to a Government that has never had anything to do with it in the past. I went there myself the other day. I was two years trying to find the best way to go in. We went down the river as my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) has told you. We learned a great deal from the map, but we found that the map was not always right—and it was a very good map prepared by Mr. Dawson. We met many difficulties which we had not anticipated, and made many mistakes which, if we had to make the trip over again, we would avoid. Of course, in the rush, there were many disappointments and many complaints. Within two days ahead of me and two days behind me, there were probably ten thousand vessels afloat. It is stated eighteen hundred people lost their lives. Why? Through ignorance. Many of these people were tenderfeet, who went in there expecting to find mines everywhere. But they found that sharper wits than themselves had been in before them. And so, in their disappointment, they made these claims against the officials. It is not my business to defend all the officials there, here or elsewhere. I agree very largely with my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson), that if there has been anything wrong, it can be found out and punished. But why make such a sensational talk? And why try to warp in the Minister of the Interior and make what amounts to a criminal charge against him; for, if as a member of the Cabinet and adviser of the Crown he is a party to these things, he has been guilty of a criminal wrong. When we arrived at Dawson, of course there were difficulties owing to the crowd. We found difficulties about the mail. I had a photograph which showed, perhaps, a thousand people waiting for their letters. Why? Who were to deliver the letters? Where was the staff? The people had all come down as the river opened, advancing as the ice broke in Lake Bennett. We all got there at one time. It is no wonder that there had to be a good deal of waiting at the post office. Fancy a thousand or two thousand people waiting until four or five police officers sorted the mail. The Post Office Department had not had time to get people in. The mails were brought in by anybody who would take them. We brought 39 sacks of mail in our spare boat, in order to try and help the people along. The department could not get any regular conveyances, and there were not police enough there to keep the mails going backward and forward. Of course there were delays, how could they be avoided? But to-day I got a letter from Dawson, dated the 21st March—less than a month. That is not bad. They have got things into good shape there. They have found that by having a shack every 30 miles on the river they can get along from point to point, and if the weather is very bad the carriers can lie by. The difficulties of men going five or six hundred miles over a trail that is so well kept open by constant travel are comparatively light. Now, as to Major Walsh. I have already said that I am not a friend of Major Walsh; but I defend him as a matter of justice. He had a very difficult position to fill there. If there were from twenty to forty thousand people present at Dawson, as hon. gentlemen say they were—they are able to make the case all the stronger against the Government by making the number a large one—one can understand the difficulties, considering that there was only a handful of police to keep the people in order. Do you hear of murders or shooting in Dawson? There were only difficulties there. One was on Thirty-Mile River, where the mate and one of the crew on a boat got into an altercation and one of them was killed. In the other case four Indians shot two white men, one of the men dying as a result of his wounds. This latter can hardly be classed as crime, because the Indians believe that where one of their tribe has been killed by a white man it is their duty to avenge him by shooting the first white man they meet. But in Dawson there is the most perfect order. The policemen say: Do so and so, and the people do it. I have never found one person who has been in the country who had a charge to make against the Mounted Police or one of their officers. They are the friends of everybody. They act in the most judicious way. They do not act arbitrarily, but keep an eye on the sa- loons and on everything going on. If they find anything arises that they think should be stopped, they simply go to the people and say: Don't do it.

You had Livernash here last year and another gentleman, and what did they do? Did they come to the Government and ask the Government to look into their case? Did they place a proper case before this House and ask for our assistance? No, they went elsewhere, and they threw themselves into the hands of the enemies of the Government, who expected by a hostile stand like that to get what they wanted here. What they wanted was a reduction in the royalty on gold. I suppose I may disagree with the Government, and I may say that I think the high royalty a mistake. Still, I may not be right. I think that royalty should be very largely reduced. It is not beyond being done, it is only a matter of a moment. Of course, there is the large argument about the Americans. Somebody spoke about the percentage of Americans that were there. I have no hesitation in saying that 95 per cent of the people there are Americans. I do not think that there is any doubt about that, and an excellently behaved class they were. But the high royalty has the effect of locking up those mines, that is to say, people will only work enough to keep their claims good and to make enough to get along, hoping that the day may come when they will be able to bring out a million dollars, and when they will only have to pay $20,000 on it instead of $100,000. That is what they are hoping for. I have no hesitation in saying that at least $10,000,000 in gold have been brought out of that country, yes, I will say $15,000,000. I think if we were to trace up the matter in the banks and warehouses there and among the trading people we would be able to ascertain that from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 have been taken out during last year, and I am informed from excellent authority that at least $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 will come out this year after the wash up. If such is the case, and the Government have no doubt sufficient information to enable them to act upon, I think they have the means of opening up that country. What that country wants is a line of communication, a telegraph line and a cable up the coast from Vancouver, B.C. People in the outside world who have investments there want to know what is going on, and they cannot afford to wait. Why, three weeks hence there will be no communication at all. I do not care what Government were in power, or what chances they had, three weeks hence there will be no communication, because the ice on Lake Bennett and Lake Labarge will be weak, and until the ice breaks up, will be unfit to travel on, except at the canyon at White Horse Pass where the river is open earlier. That leads us to say that if the Government get a large revenue out of that country, and they will collect a large revenue off customs, off mines, off licenses and other things, they will be able to open up these creeks with tramways, and assist them with light trails. As lines of communication are opened in various places, the miner that cannot now afford to spend the time during the short season to make explorations, will then have more time to prospect, and we shall find gold everywhere. I do not believe this House or the world appreciates the gold riches of that country, they can have no idea of it. I have seen it brought down in small cart loads, and mule trains packed with gold. Anybody that has been there will tell you the same story, that they have seen mules loaded with gold. Still, there has been a good deal of dissatisfaction. Men went there who knew nothing about the country, and they were willing to find fault with every one. They start in there without any preparation, they get the fever, or cholera, or dysentery, they find the conditions so different from those that they left at home. Some of them are poor men who go in there for the purpose of making a little money to help their families in the future, they are in fact risking their lives for their families. Therefore, we should not be too hard on them in our taxes.

I do not believe one of these charges made by the Opposition are true. I have no doubt that there are lots of things that are wrong. But if the leader of the Opposition would have candidly given us the names in all these charges, I for one would have voted with that hon. member. Having been there myself, and knowing the circumstances and the conditions of the country, had he been able to pin any of these charges on the Minister of the Interior, I would certainly have voted with him. But, Sir, he has not dared to give the names. I ask him now: Give us some slight idea of who some of his friends are who have given him the information. I heard of a gentleman the other day that was prepared to furnish him with information provided he could get certain—well, we will say friendly acts. Let him now say who his informants are. I have been there and I know most of these men myself. I met some of these men in London, I have met them wherever financial men are congregated. Take any of the leading men, take Mr. Archie Macdonald, take Mr. Marshall Bond or Mr. Erickson, take any of the men who have been there from two to twelve years; they would say that the officials, perhaps, were not giving them that satisfaction that they should give them, but they would make no charges such as we now hear of. Would my hon. friend name the gentleman who gave him that charge? I am interested to know it. He read in the House a letter from some gentleman under the bond of secrecy, he could not give his name. Why not give it? I say tonight that if the hon. gentleman, the leader of the Opposition, can bring in, before this debate is closed, any papers that will incriminate, or tend to incriminate, or throw the slightest suspicion on the Minister of the Interior, I will vote for him against the Government. Is that not fair?

Now, we will pass on to another subject and take the "Nugget" newspaper. What is the "Nugget" newspaper? Will the leader of the Opposition say I was doing him and his party an injustice if I were to state—but I do not state it, because I am like himself. I cannot put the evidence on the Table—that some members of his party put $8,000 into the "Nugget" to clear it of its debt and get it out of its difficulties. Now, why should they go to Dawson to get hold of the "Nugget"? Why should the "Nugget" make all these charges broadcast? Who induced them to do it? These men were there to make money, they had nothing to do with politics. But there were people out there who were interested in politics. I might name a gentleman who came to me and wanted the address of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper. I do not know whether he is a member of Parliament or not, but he lived in Victoria. This gentleman wanted to get his address to send him all these charges. If my hon. friend wants the name I will give it—it is Barney Segrew. Perhaps it will save my hon. friend a little trouble if I give his name now. Surely he need have no delicacy in keeping back his name when he is bringing up his papers. He had another man from Australia, rather a nice fellow, who was a moving spirit in stirring up dissatisfaction. But these men were looking for what they could get. There were two games to play: One was to play in with the officials, and the other was to play against the officials. Well, the officials had the best hand. I do not mean to say that something did not take place that ought not to have been done? But what about Mr. Davis? Mr. Davis, formerly a member of Parliament, the collector of customs, is a man who is beloved out there, a man against whom a charge never was made or a word ever said. And then we have Mr. Norwood, from Nova Scotia. There is not a man out there who ever charged Mr. Norwood with a single corrupt act, although he held a most important position. He was one of the men sent to collect the royalty up the creeks. Why should he try at this vast distance, where it is impossible to know what is going on, to hunt up something against the Department of the Interior? Why is it necessary to find a criminal act in everything? I cannot for my part understand the matter at all. It is a difficult thing and it is going to be a very difficult thing for any man to govern in a country like that, I do not care who he is, at such a distance, and know what is to be done. Supposing my hon. friend here, if he had been a little younger, had been sent out as commissioner of the Yukon. He cannot communicate with Ottawa because there are no telegraph wires. He finds, all of a sudden, that there has been a great discovery of gold up a creek. He may not have an officer; he may find it necessary to appoint a man to go up there, and he has to send the best man that he can get, without, perhaps, any authorisation from the Government. It may be found afterwards that he made a great mistake, still, if he had not done it, if he had not, for instance, sent police up there, to see that all was right, there might have been great loss of life. Who is to defend that man if he has made a mistake? Nobody; he has to be charged with all the crimes if he has made a mistake, but if he has made a great success it is doubtful, even, if my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, would give him credit for what he has done.

Now, it is as the hon. member for New Westminster said, we all wanted to go down this river, the White Horse, the Miles Canyon, the Thirty Mile River, the Five Finger Rapids, where we might have lost our lives. I say, how can the Government, when the distance to be traversed is 800 miles from the coast, when in the spring of the year the ice is breaking up, and when it comes from the more southerly rivers and blocks up the passage, or in the fall, as these rivers freeze earlier at the north than at the south, how are you going to get your mail service in or get people to carry it, the way that you do with a well organized service and a perfect system in this part of the country? I think that both sides of the House should bend their energies, not to throwing these aspersions upon the officers of the Government in that country, but, as my hon. friend has said, to await the result of the investigation now being conducted by Mr. Ogilvie. Mr. Ogilvie, as far as I know, and I know very little of him, bears a record of being an honourable man in this country. That the Opposition members will admit; let him have a chance of saying what he saw up there, and of reporting what he has found. Then it will be time enough for this Parliament to move in the direction that has been proposed. I am satisfied that the country, far and wide, will not lend its ear to what hon. gentlemen opposite are saying until there is something more laid on the Table of Parliament than vague charges, and letters given by gentlemen to gentlemen, whose names are withheld from the public. It looks very pretty, but let me close my remarks by speaking in the same way as the hon. leader of the Opposition spoke the other night. I may not have a very long while to live, perhaps only a month or two longer than himself, but I would hope that the time that I have spent in this House will be devoted, not to turning my hon. friends out of power, not to bringing another party into power, but rather to weighing well what is before Parliament, instead of directing my energy and my force to turning a party out in order to strengthen my own hands and benefit myself. This is what we are looking to; this is what would be dignified. England looks to Canada from an Imperial standpoint; England is not looking to our parish politicians, who are willing to cry one thing in one way and another thing in another way. England is looking to the party that realizes its responsibility to the Empire, which takes an Imperial view of the affairs of this country, and which is proud of the empire. It is in that way that she looks to Australia, New Zealand and Africa. On both sides of this House there should be statesmen willing when one party gets into power to give them fair play, and not, from the hour of their birth to the day of their death, attacking them and bring scandalous charges against them, because, we all know, that if the searchlight were turned upon everybody in this House, I care not who he is, it would be a very terrible thing to do.

Instead of trying to run down our country and trying to run down the men who are building it up, I hope that we may in future endeavour to strengthen their hands. There is a young party coming on; some of these old men must disappear; they have to be wiped off the slate; they cannot help it. I see about me only about ten or twelve gentlemen who were here when I first came into Parliament. They are disappearing, one by one, and we regret to find that it is so. There is a new Canada coming out. I may not be a prophet or the son of a prophet, but let me tell the hon. leader of the Opposition that this young Canada is not behind him, that the young men are not behind him. There is a change now from the days of the old compact when it was criminal to do anything that was antagonistic to their party interests. The little children, as they grow up, are now wearing a red ribbon on their breasts, and they go through the country and say "We are Liberals." That is the tone of Canada to-day; Canada is Liberal and Canada has only commenced. The Opposition have criticised this party that I have allied myself to, but the party I have allied myself to is my own business and my constituents who elect me by the same token, but the party I have allied myself with certainly, whether by good luck or good judgment, have brought things to a very much better state than they were before. The country is not grumbling; the country is satisfied. There is not a Tory Government in power with its aristocracy behind it, but there a democratic Government in the interest of the people and for the people. Once put in the minds of the people that they are being properly treated, let them see that the Government will treat them honestly and fairly, and then let the elections come on to-morrow or next day, and I can tell the leader of the Opposition that in the maritime provinces—I know very little about the other provinces—it will be a clean sweep for the Liberal party from Halifax up to Quebec. We have the evidence that hon. gentlemen opposite recognize this. We see that the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) has gone to British Columbia to look for a seat, because he cannot get a seat in Nova Scotia again, and the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster) is driven out of York county. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Blair) turned the searchlight on him the other day, and he was beaten by 1,500 in his own constituency. These are facts; they are not manufactured charges. I have known the leader of the Opposition for twenty-seven years, sitting in this House, and I regret that an old man like him, a man old enough to be my grandfather—because I undertook to say a good word for Major Walsh, for his family, his children and his home—should make a charge against me in this House which he knew was deliberately false.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Domville) will please withdraw that adjective.

Mr. DOMVILLE.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Withdraw what?

Mr. SPEAKER. Withdraw the statement, that an hon. member of this House made a charge which he knew to be deliberately false. My recollection is, that the charge made by the hon. the leader of the Opposition was withdrawn by him at my suggestion, and I therefore call upon the hon. member (Mr. Domville) to withdraw the language which he used with reference to that charge. A denial of the charge is, of course, in order.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I bow to your decision, Mr. Speaker, as I shall always do; but it may easily be understood by hon. members, that, when the leader of the Opposition records such a statement on "Hansard," the member with reference to whom such a statement is made, may have some difficulty in choosing language to properly stigmatize the leader of the Opposition. If you, Mr. Speaker, think that I should not have said that the charge is deliberately false, then I withdraw it; but I wish to express my regret that, before the leader of the Opposition spoke, he did not take the trouble to ascertain that it was deliberately false.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to trouble the House longer on this question, particularly at this time. But, although I have come to the same conclusion as, possibly, the majority of the members, I wish to say that I have reached that conclusion for different reasons, from most of those who have already spoken, and it is only fair to myself and to others who think as I do, that I should place those reasons before the House and before the country in so many words. It seems to me that the greater part of our discussion has been on a subject that is not before the House, namely, the character of Government officials in the Yukon and their official acts. I do not understand that we are a committee to inquire into the action of these officials, nor that the motion before the House is a motion of censure, or of approval, upon them. The question is of confidence in the Government, not in its officials. Therefore, the making of their actions the main subject of discussion during this debate is, to my mind, aside from the issue. I, for one, do not propose to discuss them, more than to say, that I do not altogether share in the childlike confidence, in the absolute, in the supreme, in the almost angelic confidence which so many members of this House place in them. I cannot bring myself to take that position in regard to the past, the present and the future acts of the officials even of this Government, to say nothing of officials of the late Government. My idea in regard to Government officials is, that they are the servants of the people, and that we are the agents of the people in seeing that they render their service. I would not wish to be considered as a party to any argument, or any line of argument, that places the public servants of this country in the position of masters of the people, or which supposes that they can only be dealt with by impeachment, as though they were judges, or some such high functionaries.

Another view I want to place before the House is this: We have heard a great deal about the character and conduct of these officials, but we have heard very little said favourable to the miners and prospectors of the Yukon. I will take it upon myself to say a word for these men. The miners and prospectors do not exist for the officials, or for the regulations; but the officials and regulations exist for the miners and prospectors. And when the miners and prospectors of the Yukon report that they are not properly treated by the officials of the Government, I am one who will give attention to these reports, and who will consider that these men are possibly justified in making these complaints. I shall not cry them down and talk of them as outlaws or cut-throats, because they see fit, in their capacity as citizens of Canada—as men who are spending their time and their money in developing this country for the benefit of themselves, and incidentally for the benefit of the country at large—to stand up for their rights and to say that things are thus and so, and do not suit them. I say, Sir, that these men have a right to be heard; I say that their interests have a right to be considered, and I say that we have just as much right to take their word as we have to take the word of anybody else. These people have reported that matters in the Yukon were not satisfactory to them, and I believe their complaints to a certain extent. I believe those who make the complaints to be credible persons, and persons who are entitled to consideration. I do not take any stock in the cry against these people, that they are Americans, or Yankees, if you like. I have seen a good many of these Yankees who started for the Yukon, and although I am not prejudiced in favour of Yankees, either individually or collectively, these were very decent people, very worthy people and very desirable people to settle in Canada and become citizens of the country. If the Yankees in the Yukon are in the proportion of nine to one, then it is the Yankees who are digging the gold of the Yukon, and are paying to this Government the royalty. For all practical purposes, therefore, as long as they are in that country, they are citizens of Canada, and are entitled to the same consideration as any other men who are working for the benefit of Canada. The fact that they are there and working as Canadians, makes them sufficiently Canadians for our purposes; that is to say, the purposes of governing them and laying tribute upon them; and that fact entitles them to fair consideration at the hands of this Government and this House.

I have said that the people of the Yukon reported that the officials were not conducting themselves properly, and I have said also that I did not consider that it was necessary to have an impeachment of these officials. When the people report that their servants are not acting properly, I consider that it is the business of their agents, the Government of the country, to see that these officials do act properly. There is no necessity for a trial or an impeachment or a commission. It is a matter of business on the part of the agents of the people, that is to say, the Government, to at once, without ceremony, attend to the matter. It is because it appears to me that the matter has been attended to in a practical way that I am prepared to vote in support of the address.

It has been complained that there was too much liquor going into the Yukon. I believe there was. I understand that there is now an Order in Council absolutely prohibiting liquor going into the Yukon; or certainly providing that any that goes in in the future shall be in limited quantities and under proper regulations. We have had complaints against the late administrator of the Yukon, both personally and on account of the large authority, civil and military, with which he was vested. That gentleman is not now connected with the Yukon; he is not in the service of the Government at all. The authority in the Yukon has been divided into civil and military department. A gentleman who has been lauded in this House until I am sure he would blush at hearing it, if he had heard it, is now the civil administrator of the country, and there is no allegation against his conduct. The military or police part of the authority is in the hands of Major Steele; and, as nobody in the House so far has given Major Steele a puff, I may take the liberty of doing so. From a very considerable knowledge of matters and things in the North-west Territories, I have no hesitation in saying that Major Steele is the best officer in the Mounted Police force, and he was the man above all others who was the proper man to be placed in command of the military and police force in the Yukon. There has been no breath of slander, and no allegation of any kind against the military administration of the Yukon, since Major Steele went there. Therefore, I may take it for granted that that is disposed of. There were very grave complaints against the late Gold Commissioner; but he has been displaced by another man, for whom there is another chorus of praise, joined in by everybody, and I have no doubt justly. The Crown prosecutor or legal adviser of the Government has, I believe, disappeared from the scene, and has been replaced by another gentleman of good repute.

I have not held, nor is it necessary for the purpose of my argument to hold, that there was not cause for grave dissatisfaction on the part of the miners of the Yukon with the conduct of affairs there during the year 1897-98; but I say that the fact that that condition of affairs has been entirely changed, and that there is now absolutely no complaint from the Yukon country along those lines, is a sufficient warrant to me of the good faith of the Government in its administration of that country.

This radical change having been made is sufficient cause for me to vote confidence in the Government on this motion, which I understand to be a motion of want of confidence. While to my mind the question of the charges of misconduct on the part of the officials has very largely been disposed of, so far as the responsibility of the Government is concerned by the action which has been taken, I am not by any means taking the position that there was no cause for the changes which the Government has seen fit to make. I take for granted that the fact that such radical changes were made is proof that there was sufficient cause for them, and that the cause was very largely the complaints which came down from the Yukon.

I do not wish to be considered as altogether agreeing with all parts of the Government's policy in the Yukon. As was said by the Minister of Interior in his speech on this subject, the question of administration should be separated from the question of policy. I am dealing with the question of administration, and not the question of policy in regard to reserved claims or royalty, as to which I have the misfortune to differ. I am afraid, from the majority on either side of the House; I do not believe in the one or the other.

But on the question of the amendment before the House asking for a judicial inquiry, I say that the Government having made the changes which they did make, and having provided for an investigation into the charges which had been alleged against the old officials, however meritorious the proposition of a judicial inquiry may be, the difference between the inquiry suggested by the amendment and the inquiry now being held by the Government, is not sufficient to my mind to warrant me in voting want of confidence in the Government. I will therefore vote for the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. N. F. DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who has just sat down has very carefully argued the position that he is compelled to take in this matter; but if the hon. gentleman will do me the favour of giving me his attention for a few minutes, I am not without hope that I shall convince him that instead of voting for the amendment of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) he will be forced to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), for which he now says he cannot vote. Let me point out to my hon. friend what is the character of the inquiry called for by the hon. member for

Mr. OLIVER.

West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). What he wants is a judicial investigation, and my hon. friend does not see a sufficient difference between a judicial investigation and the investigation approved of by my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram), to make it necessary for him to reject the latter and to choose the former. What are the facts before us as brought into light by the Minister of the Interior, and by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) in supporting the Minister of the Interior and replying to this side? The amendment of my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) says:

We observe with pleasure that on receipt of complaints against some of the officials in the Yukon district, His Excellency's Government took occasion to inquire into the matter of such complaints by appointing Mr. William Ogilvie as a commissioner for that purpose. Having entire confidence in the integrity and ability of Mr. Ogilvie, we are satisfied that his inquiry will be impartial and thorough.

That is what, at this time of the day, we are asked to affirm, although we have it on record that the Minister of the Interior tells us that such inquiry has already proved futile. In speaking of this very inquiry he said:

The attempt to hold an investigation, when nobody was making a charge, is an extremely unsatisfactory and futile thing, and the investigation at Dawson City promises to be futile. No charges have been made, because the people who complained have apparently withdrawn their charges, and will not go before the commissioner and attempt to prove them.

All that is fully quoted by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries denounced the amendment of the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) as a demand that is not supported by precedent or practice, and not justified by the course hitherto taken by any Government. What these hon. gentlemen contend is that there shall be no inquiry, even though the scandals should be as wide as Christendom. No matter how grave the scandals may be, no matter how grave the charges may be, they are to be investigated in no other way than either by having a committee of this House, which, after all, to use a vulgar but expressive phrase, would be going to law with the devil in the court of hell, judging by the way we see things going or else that we shall have a departmental inquiry such as is now being held in the Yukon, and which is declared by the hon. Minister of the Interior to have already proved futile. I have in my hand the commission issued to Mr. Ogilvie and the letter from the Minister of the Interior accompanying it, and from these one can easily see that not only is the inquiry narrow, but what we have is an inquiry of this kind: The commissioner sits there, he has the right to take evidence under oath, he has the right to listen to charges, if any are made, but this House and the country, all Canada and the British Empire, are told that their anxiety to know whether a great wrong has been done to the miners, whether our officials have acted corruptly, whether bargains have been made that touch the Government of this country close on a question of its purity, is not in any way to be relieved further than can be done by such an inquiry as this. And when we say that that is not satisfactory, then we have the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), and other gentlemen on that side saying that we have no precedent for any such inquiry as we demand by our amendment. Now, it so happens that a previous Government of this country set the example, under conditions parallel to the present, and this example the present Government are called on to follow by the amendment of my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). Sir, your memory will go back to the time when all sorts of charges were scattered broadcast throughout the country regarding the Canadian Pacific Railway. Did the Government of that day content itself with appointing a departmental commission? Did it appoint the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals a commissioner to inquire into the conduct of that department? Not at all. Did it appoint a tribunal that would investigate no charges unless charges that were formulated? Not at all. Did it appoint a tribunal such as we now have in the Yukon that was to do nothing unless persons came in to make charges? I have in my hand the commission that was issued nearly twenty years ago at the instance of the Minister of Railways—in 1880:

Whereas, it appears from a report of our Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, bearing date on or about the 20th day of May, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty, among other things, that an expenditure has been incurred from the month of April in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and charged to the account of the Canadian Pacific Railway, amounting to the sum of fourteen million two hundred and eighty-seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-four dollars.

That two changes in the Government of Canada have taken place during that period; that important questions have arisen and become the subject of discussion, both in and out of the Parliament of Canada, touching the propriety of and responsibility for, large expenditures connected with this work.

That allegations have been made as to divers irregularities and extravagances, neglects and other derelictions of duty on the part of the officers and others employed in the said work, and that sundry irregularities and improprieties have taken place in the obtaining of contracts for portions of said work, and in the performance of the same.

And, whereas we deem it expedient, in the interest of and as connected with the good government of Canada, to cause inquiry to be made into and concerning all the facts connected with such work, and the prosecution thereof, from its inception to the present time;

Now know ye, that we, by and with the advice of our Privy Council for Canada, do by these presents nominate, constitute and appoint George M. Clark, Esquire, Junior Judge of the united counties of Northumberland and Durham, Samuel Keefer, Esquire, Civil Engineer, and Edward Miall, Esquire, junior, Assistant Commissioner Inland Revenue Department, Commissioners to make inquiry into and concerning all the facts connected with the conduct and prosecution of the Canadian Pacific Railway from its inception to the present time. And we do hereby authorize and require them to report fully, from time to time, all matters that they may think it right and proper for them to report under their commission, and especially their conclusions to the mode in which said work has been carried on, both from an engineering and financial point of view, and the proper discharge of their duties by all officials and others in relation to the said railway; and also as to the manner in which all contracts have been obtained and executed on the said work, and as to the payments made for and in respect of said work.

That was an inquisitorial commission and two large volumes of evidence was taken. What was done? Did these two commissioners wait until the prosecuting counsel came forward, either lay or professional? Not at all. The inquiry was strictly inquisitorial. The commissioners went to the various parts of the country where an inquiry could best be made; they sought out the names of individuals who could give them information on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway and on every scandal that had been ventilated by the press of the time—and they summoned these people before them, having the power of a court of record—and inquired as to the parts they took in regard to the transactions respecting which accusations had been made in the press. This is an instance entirely refuting the position taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and by other gentlemen, that there is no precedent for the course proposed by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke). On the contrary, in 1880, we had a Government that, seeing that charges of corruption, misconduct and crooked work were made in the press in connection with the various contracts, did not do what is done by this Government, issue a departmental inquiry—though it is admitted by one of our Ministers that the inquiry made by Mr. Ogilvie has been futile—and ask the House to pass a resolution which gives us no guarantee whatever that any such inquiry as was made in 1880 and resulted so satisfactory, shall be made. We have a precedent set by the Government of Canada itself, when the conduct of a great department had been impugned, a precedent that fits in precisely with what is demanded by the resolution of my hon. friend from West Toronto. I think if my hon. friend from Alberta will take up the volume of the Canadian Pacific Railway commission and see what was done, see how Judge Clark and his fellow-commissioners summoned the very persons who were charged to come before them, summoned officials, summoned deputy ministers, summoned Ministers of the Crown, and these Ministers came and were examined, he will see that there was a precedent to justify him, not in taking the course he intends to take, but to justify him in supporting the motion of my hon. friend from West Toronto.

House divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Bertram).

Motion agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT—ENGLISH STAMP DUTIES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I move the adjournment of the House. But before this question is put, I will take advantage of this opportunity to communicate to the House a telegram which has just been received from the High Commissioner in London, in reference to the subject to which my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition called attention the other day. The telegram is as follows :—

London, 18th April, 1899.

Laurier, Ottawa.

Government Bill re Stamp Duties not yet printed. According to resolutions, new duties only affect securities not low subject stamp duty. Consequently Government and other colonial stocks issued and registered here not affected. Will affect stocks of all kinds issued in Canada and interest payable there, if sent here for sale or negotiable purposes. Had meeting my office to-day, colonial agents general, and am watching matter closely. Wrote Courtney fully Saturday's mail.

STRATHCONA.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 19th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 64) to amend the Yukon Territory Act.—(Mr. McInnes.)

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier.) Will the hon. gentleman please explain the Bill ?

Mr. McINNES. The explanation is this : There is no provision in the Yukon Territory

Act, or in the mining regulations, whereby a speedy appeal can be obtained if any one is displeased or dissatisfied with the decision of any mining recorder, gold commissioner or mining inspector, in the Yukon territory. The object of this Bill, briefly stated, is to provide for such an appeal.

CANADA EASTERN RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. McDougall) asked :

Has the application to the Governor in Council for the approval of the sale of the Canada Eastern Railway Company to the Alexander Gibson Railway and Manufacturing Company been granted, and if so, on what date ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Yes, the application for the approval of the sale of the Canada Eastern Railway Company to the Alexander Gibson Railway and Manufacturing Company has been granted. The date of granting is 25th February, 1899.

STEEL RAILS FOR THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. McDougall) asked :

Has a contract or contracts been entered into for the supply of 5,000 tons of steel rails with fastenings for the Intercolonial Railway and for the supply of 1,000 tons of steel rails without fastenings for the Prince Edward Island Railway, as per tenders invited in 1898, and if so, with whom and at what price ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Tenders were called for steel rails as stated in this question, but no contract was let to any of the tenderers. The department accepted the lowest and notified the tenderer, who declined to enter into a contract, alleging as a reason that freight had suddenly and unexpectedly risen, which the department, upon inquiry, ascertained to be the fact, so that he could not supply the rails at the price offered. While the question was under consideration by the department as to whether the next highest offer, which exceeded $20 per ton, should be accepted, the Rail Manufacturers' Trust or Combine withdrew their offers and declined to make any bids until late in November or early in December 'ast, after which no new tenders were advertised.

COST OF PROHIBITION PLEBISCITE.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

What was the cost to the Dominion Treasury of the Prohibition plebiscite taken during last year ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Total expenditure to date (17th April, 1899) : $183,684.58. There are yet a few outstanding accounts.

LEASE OF LAND NEAR VALLEYFIELD.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

Has the Department of Railways and Canals leased, or promised to lease, a certain piece of land above Valleyfield, in the county of Beauharnois, to S. A. Brodeur, an employee of the said department ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Department of Railways and Canals, in 1884 and 1885, leased certain pieces of land above Valleyfield to Mrs. Barbour and S. A. Brodeur. Mrs. Barbour's lease subsequently came into the hands of S. A. Brodeur in 1896. An Order in Council was passed cancelling these leases, since which no new lease has been given to S. A. Brodeur nor has a lease been promised to him.

COST OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

Mr. KLOEPFER asked :

What has been the total cost of the commission relating to affairs between Canada and the United States, including travelling expenses, living expenses of the commissioners, their secretaries, messengers and assistants, also cost of other members of the Government and civil servants, who attended at Quebec and Washington ?

What was the cost of entertainments given by the Canadian Ministers at Quebec and Washington separately ?

What sum was allowed Mr. John Charlton as member of the commission, including living and travelling expenses ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The total cost to Canada of the International Commission, including travelling and living expenses of the commissioners and their staff, as well as office rent, telegraphing, postages, printing and stationery, to date is $33,660.80. There was one dinner given to the commissioners in Quebec at a cost of $308.35; also a banquet at Washington, Canada's share of which amounts to $606.25. There were also certain trips on board the Government steamers, given to the members of the commission while in Quebec, which cost $722.07. Mr. John Charlton received nothing beyond his travelling and living expenses, which amount to $1,766.48.

DEADMAN'S ISLAND, VANCOUVER.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Under what title does the Canadian Government hold the island in the harbour of Vancouver known as Deadman's Island ?

2. Under what statutory authority, if any, does the Department of Militia and Defence administer this property ?

3. Does this island form part of the Naval Reserve, or Dominion Government Military Reserve, in which Hunter Park is situated ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

4. Was this reserve handed over to the corporation of Vancouver City for use as a park in 1887 ?

5. What is the estimated value of this island ?

6. Did the Government obtain any official report as to the fair annual rental of this island, and if so, what was it reported to be and by whom ?

7. What officer, if any, drew the lease of this island dated 14th February, 1889 ?

8. Who compose the Vancouver Lumber Company mentioned in this lease ?

9. Is this company a body corporate, and if so, when and where was it incorporated ?

10. Is the following a correct copy of one of the provisions of the lease above ? "It is hereby agreed that this demise may be determined by either party giving to the other notice thereof in writing _____ months before the expiration of the first or any subsequent" —

11. Under what clause of the lease and upon what ground, if any, is the Government now at liberty to cancel or determine this lease ?

12. Was it represented to the hon. the Minister of Militia that a large amount of money was to be expended by the lessee and that many men were to be employed in a saw-mill to be erected ?

13. Does any provision of the lease secure either the expenditure of a dollar outside of the rental of $500 a year, the employment of a man, or the erection of a building ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Under the British North America Act, and the terms of union. 2. The Department of Militia and Defence administers the naval and military lands under the above Act. 3. Deadman's Island is a naval reserve. Hunter's Park is unknown to the department. 4. Deadman's Island was not handed over to the city. 5. This island being known to be a resort of squatters, and to have been used by the city of Vancouver as a location for a hospital for infectious diseases and a burial ground in connection therewith, was not considered valuable. 6. The officer in charge of militia properties recommended the fixing of the annual rental at $500, and that in addition Canadian Government vessels and British men-of-war should have the free use of wharfs at all times. 7. The keeper of military properties upon the usual departmental form. 8. The lease was asked for in the name of the Vancouver Lumber Company, of the city of Vancouver. The names of Robt. Stewart and Thomas E. Wells, of Chicago, were mentioned, the former being vice-president and the latter a director of the American National Bank of Chicago. 9. Not known. 10 and 11. The clause under which the department may resume possession is : "The said party of the first part may determine this demise at any time by a demand of possession of the said leased premises, or any part thereof, if required for naval or military purposes, and the said lessees to have no claim for compensation for buildings erected or improvements made thereon. 12. It was represented to the Minister that $250,000 would be expended in the erection of buildings, lumbering plant, &c., upon the island, and the employment of 1,000 men, who were to reside in the city of Vancouver; collect the debts of the Government. It is bad policy to set one farmer against another, to introduce strife into our community in that way. And there is a very important feature that the farmers are fully alive to and it is this: When this seed grain was lent, it had not been demonstrated that the North-west was what we now know it to be, one of the best places where farmers can settle who desire speedy success as farmers—I will go even further and say, who desire to make a moderate fortune rapidly. Men who understand farming and aim at making a moderate fortune and making it rapidly cannot do better than come into our North-west Territories. Well, Sir, these men who have shown that that is the position of things, when this grain was lent were, in reality, associated with the Government in making an experiment as to whether or not that portion of Canada was what it now has turned out to be, and to say to these people after they had bet, as it were, on the Territories: We are going to hold you responsible for the indebtedness of men who have left the country—that seems to me to be unjust; it seems to me to be impolitic.

Now, I will ask the attention of the House for a very brief period while I go back a little in the history of this question. I find, on consulting "Hansard," that so far back as 1880, the question was asked in this House of the then Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Carling, as to settlement of seed grain indebtedness in Manitoba incurred in 1876. Again, in 1891, when an item for seed grain was before the House, the question was again discussed. And, in 1895, when the item came up to pay for the purchase and distribution of seed grain to needy settlers resident in the North-west Territories, chiefly in the district of Assinibola, (to cover Governor General's warrant of $50,000), Sir Richard Cartwright asked:

Has the money been paid, and if so, how has the distribution been made?

Then the predecessor of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior made these remarks:

Although the Government were opposed to the granting of seed, the case was put in such a strong light that they came to the conclusion that although they did not desire to follow the precedents created by giving seed grain to the people, that, under the circumstances, they were fully justified.

And then, again:

So far as I am personally concerned, I may say that I am opposed to the Government being called upon to make grants similar to these, because I think the people in the Territories should deal with these matters the same as they do in Manitoba, and if aid is given to them, that it should be given by the local assembly, or by the municipalities.

I rather think that the Minister of that time was wrong in his remarks, because undoubtedly the Dominion Government had lent seed grain to the farmers in Manitoba at an earlier period. He went on:

We had to deal with the facts as they were presented to us; and, in consequence of the conditions I have mentioned, the Government had to give this aid. The aid was principally given to farmers in the neighbourhood of Pense, Moosejaw, Regina and Balgonie, and a little in the eastern portion of Assinibola. Demands were made upon us at first to the extent of $125,000; but we thought they were extravagant, and, after inquiries by officers of the department, they were cut down some 40 per cent.

Well, then the declaration is given that these men had to make, and besides making that declaration he had to give a bond and two sureties. In other words, he could not have had the seed grain on his own bond, he could not get the seed grain on the credit of his own homestead, and he had no choice whatever but to get two sureties and to go surety also for others. Well, Sir, we find that on June 13th, 1895, not only Sir Richard Cartwright but Mr. Mulock was desirous of criticising adversely the action of the Government on that behalf, and reference was made as to the course taken that was taken in order to get that grant; and anybody who reads the debate, will see that I had to put pressure on the Government of that day, first to give us the grant, and next to give us the further grant in order that the district that needed to be covered should be properly covered. Last session I asked the Minister:

How much is owed the Government for seed grain by settlers in the North-west Territories? And the Minister is reported here—page 5135 of "Hansard"—as answering:

On the 1st of April, 1898, there was owed, for seed grain by settlers in the North-west Territories, $145,235.49.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Government that the indebtedness against abandoned quarter or half sections should be written off. If the Minister speaks with farmers in that part of the country where there are abandoned quarter sections or abandoned half sections with this indebtedness, he will find that they consider a great injustice is done to the incoming settler, that the incoming settler should not be asked to pay the indebtedness of somebody who has abandoned the land. I think it is a fair and legitimate thing to ask the Government to deal with this indebtedness just as a business man deals with a certain item in his profit and loss account—write it off to profit and loss. I do not think that there can be two opinions as to the necessity of cancelling the abandoned indebtedness, because that abandoned indebtedness is calculated to fill with a sense of injustice and a sense of resentment, the minds of the settlers against the Government of the day. Suppose the settler has paid the claim of the Government on him for this abandoned homestead, and suppose he then says: I am going to recoup myself and I will sue my brother farmer. Why, Mr. Speaker, you have only to state the matter to have it brought home to the House and home to the

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The travelling and living expenses of the Minister of the Interior from the 1st of July, 1898, to the 28th of February, 1899, inclusive, amounted in all to $920, and his cab-hire to $25, making a total of $945. The travelling and living expenses of his private secretary for the same period amounted in all to $408.30, and his cab-hire to $4.50, making a total of $412.80. The expenses of his messenger amounted to $9.65; making a total of the expenditure referred to in the question of $1,367.45. The expenses of friends accompanying the Minister were not paid by the Government.

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS FROM OTTAWA.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

How many days has each member of the Government been absent from the capital and his office since the House prorogued last session, up to the first day of March, 1899 ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no record kept in any of the departments of the presence in or absence from the capital of any members of the Government. When members of the Government were absent from the capital on official business, the time of their absence from the capital can be ascertained by reference to certain public documents. Thus, it is possible to inform the hon. gentleman that the members of the Government who were members of the Anglo-American Commission were in Quebec from the 23rd of August to the 2nd of September, 1898, and again from the 20th of September to the 10th of October. They were in Washington from the 10th of November to the 19th of December, and again in Washington from the 5th of January to the 20th of February last. The Postmaster General and the Minister of Agriculture were also absent in Europe on official business during the months of July and August last. When members of the Government were absent from the capital on business which was not purely official, it is not easy to state accurately how many days they were away, but by reference to the public press, the fact can be approximately ascertained. Thus, I can inform the hon. member that the Minister of Railways was away from the capital for a week or two in the province of New Brunswick at the time of the provincial elections; that the Minister of Customs and the Minister of Public Works and the Postmaster General were for a few days in the county of West Huron during the last contest therein.

VOTERS' LISTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received, under the provisions of sec. 10, ch. 14, Mr. CARSCALLEN, Act 1898, a certified copy of the list of voters in any province of Canada, which is declared to be the original and legal list of voters ?

2. In what constituencies has there been a revision of the list of voters for the purposes of provincial elections since 13th June, 1898 ?

3. In what cases has there been a compliance with sec. 10, ch. 14, Act 1898, which directed the custodian of the provincial list of voters to transmit to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certified copies of said list ?

4. What lists have been printed under the provisions of sec. 10, ch. 14, 1898, subsection 3 ?

5. Has subsection 4 of sec. 10 above been complied with ? If so, to what number have said copies of the lists been mailed by Queen's Printer as provided by said clause ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Yes. 2. In almost every electoral district of the province of Ontario; in the electoral districts of Bonaventure and Gaspé, and presumably in the five electoral districts of the city of Montreal, the three electoral districts of the city of Quebec, and the city of Three Rivers, in the province of Quebec; in the electoral districts of Albert, Gloucester, St. John City and County, Westmoreland, and presumably in all the other electoral districts of New Brunswick, and in all the electoral districts of British Columbia. 3. In the cases of almost every electoral district of the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia. 4. Those of the electoral districts of West Huron, in the province of Ontario, and those of Bagot, Bonaventure, Montmagny and Lévis, in the province of Quebec. 5. I am not in a position to-day to give an answer to this part of the question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What lists were used in the various by-elections for this House since June, 1898, respectively, that is to say, when were such lists respectively prepared or last in force ?

2. In what cases, if any, had there been a final revision of said lists since June, 1898, previous to any of such by-elections ?

The PRIME MINISTER. 1. In the by-elections held in the electoral districts of the West Riding of Lambton and the North Riding of Simcoe, in the province of Ontario, part of the voters' lists revised in 1897 and part of those revised in 1898 were used at those elections. The reason for this was due to the revised voters' lists of 1898 for some of the municipalities not having come in force for Dominion election purposes at the time those elections took place, owing, presumably, to appeals having been made from their revision. In the by-election held in the West Riding of Huron, the voters' lists used were those revised in 1898. In the by-elections held in the electoral districts of Bagot and Montmagny, in the province of Quebec, the voters' lists used were those revised in 1898. All those lists were prepared and came in force at the time fixed by the laws of the provinces. 2. In the cases of the West Riding of Huron; in the villages of Point Edward and Wyoming, and in the township of Sarnia, in the West Riding of Lambton: and in the towns of Collingwood and Stayner, in the village of Creemore and in the township of Vespra, in the North Riding of Simcoe. The balance of the voters' lists for these two electoral districts were revised and came in force later on. The voters' lists for Bagot and Montmagny were revised and came in force in April, 1898.

THE PROVINCES AND THE SENATE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Is the following statement published in the newspaper "Le Soleil" of the 10th of March instant, under the heading "En Conférence," true:—"Sir Wilfrid Laurier et l'honorable M. Tarte ont eu ce matin une longue conférence avec l'honorable M. Marchand dans le salon particulier de l'honorable Premier-Ministre de la province."

2. Was this conference held with a view of impressing upon the said Premier of the province of Quebec or upon his colleagues, the desirability of obtaining from either or both Houses of the legislature of the province of Quebec an expression of opinion in approbation of the policy in relation to the Senate announced by the Right Honourable the Premier, at the city of Montreal, at a meeting held at the Monument National?

3. At the said conference did the Right Honourable the Premier obtain from the Premier of the province of Quebec any expression of approval of the said policy in relation to the Senate or any assurance that the said question would be submitted to one or to both branches of the Quebec legislature at the session then being held or at any subsequent session?

4. Is it the intention of the Government to obtain a similar expression of opinion from all the provincial legislatures?

5. Does not the Government consider that in expressing their opinion upon the subject of Senate reform, the provincial legislatures are overstepping the bounds assigned to them by the constitution?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1, 2, 3 and 4. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Hon. Mr. Tarte had an interview with the Hon. Mr. Marchand, Prime Minister of Quebec, at about the date mentioned. The subject of the interview was confidential. 5. Far from considering that, in expressing their opinion upon the subject of Senate reform, the provincial legislatures are overstepping the bounds assigned to them by the constitution, the Government are of opinion that the provincial legislatures have a vital interest in the question, and that it is eminently proper for them to express their views on the same. If the hon. gentleman holds a different view, he is at variance on this point with the leader of the Opposition, who, in the debate on the Address, speaking of the conditions which he held essential to justify a reform in the constitution of the Senate, said ("Hansard," page 86): "Why, Sir, the unanimous vote of this House and of the Senate of Canada would not accomplish the object, unless every province in this Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, that is a constituent part of this confederation, on due notice and after an election, ratified it as well."

THE MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has there been any correspondence, since this House was last in session, between His Holiness the Pope or the Sacred College of the Propaganda, or any of the Roman Catholic Archbishops or Bishops of Canada and the Government or any member thereof, in relation to the Manitoba school question?

2. Has the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba accepted what is generally known as the "Laurier-Greenway settlement" of the said question?

3. Is the said Manitoba school question fully and finally settled?

4. If so, what are the final arrangements agreed to and the terms of settlement?

5. When was the final settlement made and agreed to by the Roman Catholic minority in Manitoba?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. As a question of fact, there has been no correspondence between the Government, or any member thereof, and His Holiness the Pope or the Sacred College of the Propaganda in relation to the Manitoba school question. As a question of right, every subject of Her Majesty who belongs to the Roman Catholic Church, has the right to correspond with His Holiness the Pope or the Sacred College of the Propaganda, or any of the archbishops, or bishops, of Canada or of any other part of the world, and for the exercise of that right, which is not abridged by the fact that he may be an adviser of the Crown, he owes no account to the hon. gentleman, or to any other fellow-subject. 2. The Government have reasons to believe that the settlement known as the "Laurier-Greenway settlement," has been accepted by the majority of the minority, though not unanimously. 3, 4 and 5. In so far as federal jurisdiction is concerned, if the hon. gentleman is not satisfied that the settlement should be final, it is open to him, or to any member of Parliament, to attack it. In so far as provincial jurisdiction is concerned, Mr. Greenway, at Montreal, on the 30th of December, 1896, declared :

Having a knowledge of the state of affairs which existed prior to 1890, as we had, we thought it was not in the best interests of that country that it should be done. But, sir, we said then, and we say now, if you can suggest at any time during the discussion of this matter anything that we can do in the way of amending the law to make it more acceptable to all classes, we are prepared to accept it.

I know I am speaking for the people of Manitoba, and I repeat again, and I want you to make a note of it, that we propose to work out this system in a fair and generous spirit, and not to undertake the responsibility of closing up 50 or 60 schools, leaving the children of those schools in a state of ignorance. It is they who are assuming the responsibility. If they can from time to time suggest any way by which we may meet their views to a further extent, we shall always be prepared, Mr. Premier, to consider it.

THE GOLD COMMISSIONER.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. Is Thomas Fawcett still acting as Gold Commissioner at Dawson, Yukon territory ?
2. If not, who has succeeded him ?
3. Is his successor's appointment a permanent one ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say : 1. No. 2. Mr. Edmund C. Senkler. 3. Yes.

YUKON TIMBER INSPECTOR.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

Is J. W. Willison still acting as timber inspector for the Yukon territory ? If not, who is his successor ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. J. W. Willison is acting as one of the timber inspectors for the Yukon territory under the authority of a head timber and land agent.

LEGAL ADVISER AT YUKON.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

Who is acting as legal adviser to the Yukon administrator ? When was he appointed, and is his appointment a permanent one ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I beg to reply as follows :—1. Mr. W. H. P. Clement. 2. 7th October, 1898. 3. Yes.

ALLEGIANCE OF GOLD COMMISSIONER'S CLERKS.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. How many officials and clerks are employed in and about the Gold Commissioner's office, Dawson ?

2. Are they all British subjects ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I beg to reply as follows :—1. 21. 2. Every official of the department, whether in the inside or outside service, is required to take the oaths of allegiance and office. Whether any of the clerks employed temporarily by the Gold Commissioner are other than British subjects is not shown by the information in the possession of the department.

MAJOR WALSH.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

Is Major Walsh connected officially or otherwise with the administration of the Yukon territory ?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR.
No.

GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS IN YUKON.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

Has the Government taken any steps to prevent or regulate the locating and recording of mining claims or interests by Government officials in the Yukon territory ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Government has, by Order in Council, prohibited the staking or recording of claims by Government officials, under their own names or under the names of any other persons or corporations for their benefit ; and has prohibited them from securing by purchase or otherwise any mining claim of any kind whatsoever in the Yukon territory. The same Order in Council prohibits any official from acting as the agent of any person or corporation in or with respect to the staking, recording, purchase or acquisition of any mining claim or property in the said territory.

SALARIES OF YUKON OFFICIALS.

Mr. MORRISON asked :

1. What is the scale of salary of officials in the Yukon territory ?

2. Has the Government information as to the cost of living in Dawson and vicinity ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The salaries of permanent officials in the Yukon range from $900 to $5,000 a year. 2. The Government has information as to the cost of living in Dawson and vicinity, and the information was such as to lead it to provide board and lodging for the officials in addition to their salaries, or an extra allowance when they preferred to board and lodge themselves.

CURRENTS ALONG CANADIAN COAST.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to carry out without delay the survey and investigation of the currents along the Canadian coast, as recommended and asked for by the British Association for the Advancement of Science in 1884 and 1897, by the Royal Society of Canada ever since its formation, and by the shipping interests of Canada ?

2. Will a sufficient sum be placed in the coming Estimates to enable such a survey and investigation to be materially advanced during the coming year ?

3. What sum was expended in this connection during the last financial year ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Department of Marine and Fisheries has found a very great difference of opinion as to the possible benefits which might accrue from the expenditure necessary to make the suggested investigation. It is not correct to say that the shipping interests of Canada have made any such request as suggested in the question. The question is now under consideration. The sum expended last year was $3,081.45, chiefly in maintaining tide gauges and preparing and publishing tide tables, and the sum of $4,000 for the current financial year, which sum will have to be supplemented, having been already spent.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY BINDER TWINE.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. To whom and at what price was the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary between the first day of July, 1896, and the 30th June, 1897, sold ? Were tenders called for ?
2. To whom and at what price was the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary between the first day of July, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898, sold ? Were tenders called for and in what papers were they advertised ?
3. To whom and at what price was the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary since the 1st July, 1898, and to be manufactured up to the 30th June, 1899, sold ? Were tenders called for ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to reply to the hon. gentleman: 1. To Hobbs Hardware Company, of London, at the following prices:—Sisal, $4.40 per cwt.; Beaver, $4.75 per cwt.; Maple Leaf, $5.25 per cwt. Tenders were called for by advertisement in the newspapers. 2. To H. N. Bate & Sons, Ottawa, at the following prices:—Sisal, $4.15 per cwt.; Beaver, $4.45 per cwt.; Maple Leaf, $4.95 per cwt. Tenders were called for by circular addressed to leading dealers throughout the Dominion. 3. To Hobbs Hardware Company, of London. Tenders were called for by advertisement in the newspapers, and the highest tender accepted. The prices cannot yet be made public as the twine has not yet been marketed by the purchasers.

TRAVELLING AND LIVING EXPENSES OF MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

What is the amount of travelling and living expenses for the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, also the travelling and living expenses of his private secretary, messenger or other servants or friends accompanying him, including cab, railway, or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses, paid by the Government, since the first day of July, 1898, till the 28th February, 1899, inclusive ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to give him the following particulars:—

|   |            |
|---|------------|
| Travelling expenses, July 1st, 1898, to February 28th, 1899, including trip to England (Mr. Fisher).....  | $ 621 28  |
| Travelling expenses, July 1st, 1898, to February 28th, 1899, including trip to England (Mr. Doherty)..... | 487 36     |
|   | $1,108 64 |

There were no private cars used by the Minister. There was no messenger, servant or friend ever with the Minister on any of his trips at the country's expense.

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE ON THE PLEBISCITE.

Mr. MOORE asked :

Did the hon. Minister of Agriculture make the following speech at the Ottawa convention in 1895 ? If so, how does he reconcile his utterances on that occasion with his retaining office in the present Government after its refusal to act on the vote cast at the recent plebiscite ?

“Temperance sentiment now asks for something more than local option.

“I am glad, therefore, that the great party to which I belong, with which I have worked, is prepared to take a stand upon the temperance question, and to declare in its platform in favour of a step in the right direction upon this subject. I understand that this is the first time a great political party in this country has ever faced this question in a fair and true spirit. I am not aware that any political party in this country has ever declared itself squarely upon this question. I was aware that the House of Commons itself passed a resolution to the effect that when the country was ripe Parliament should enact a prohibition law. It is some time since that was passed. The Tory party has been long in power, but has not taken any steps to obtain the vote of the country upon this question. It is true, as you know, that Finance Minister Foster—and when I speak his name I have to look back to the first years when he and I were in Parliament, when he was looked upon as a temperance champion. I regret to say that that hon. gentleman on the floor of Parliament has told the country that he—one of the leaders of the Tory party—only advocated temperance ‘in a moment of weakness,’ and that when he came to his sober senses—if we may call them sober senses—he went back on that record. The Tory party has not done justice in favour of temperance; it has only appointed a royal commission to go about the country and find out something, but, as Mr. Laurier said, we have all the information necessary of the kind that a royal commission can collect. They have put off the question; they have shunted it, and have not taken steps to find out the attitude of the country upon this question.

“I am glad to be here to ask this Liberal convention to take a step which will bring about an opportunity for the people to express themselves upon this question. We know that in three of the provinces the Liberal governments of those provinces have brought about local or provincial plebiscites, thus giving the temperance people the opportunity to show what they believe to be the truth, that the temperance sentiment of this country is strong enough to enforce a prohibition law if it is given us. I propose to read the resolution which will bring about this result, and which pledges the Liberal party, if returned to power, to give the people of Canada an opportunity to express their views upon this question, and the Government in power must necessarily carry out the expressed will of the people. There is no doubt that this is what the Liberal party would do, for we know their pledges can be trusted.”

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). In reply to the question, in which there purports to be a quotation from the speech made by myself at the Ottawa convention, I may say that the quotation is apparently a fair report of my utterance on that occasion, that I am not aware and do not perceive that there is any reason or occasion for any difference of opinion between myself and my colleagues in consequence of or based upon that utterance, as the Government of which I am a member has fulfilled to the letter the pledge made and the utterance quoted by the hon. gentleman.

MONTREAL POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. Has Mr. Arthur Dansereau resigned as postmaster of the city of Montreal ?
2. If so, when ?
3. Has any person been appointed in his place ?
4. If not, why not ?
5. When will the appointment be made ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In reply I beg to say : 1. Mr. Arthur Dansereau, postmaster of Montreal, has resigned that office. 2. His resignation took effect on the 1st of March, 1899. 3, 4 and 5. His successor has not been appointed. The Postmaster General has ordered an investigation into the condition of the post office. As soon as the report has been received, an appointment will be made.

THE KLONDIKE OFFICIAL GUIDE.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Whether the publication entitled "The Klondike Official Guide" prepared by Wm. Ogilvie, Dominion lands surveyor and explorer, was prepared by the said Ogilvie ? Whether there are any parts of said publication for which the said Ogilvie is not responsible ? If so, whether the hon. Minister would have these parts pointed out and marked ? Whether Mr. William Ogilvie has stated that he is not responsible for the whole of the publication which is described as "prepared by" him ? Whether a written remonstrance from him has been sent to the Department of the Interior ? If any portions were inserted without Wm. Ogilvie's sanction, who added or authorized them ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). So far as the department is aware, the Klondike Official Guide was prepared by Mr. William Ogilvie. The Minister of the Interior is not aware of any portions of the said guide which were not prepared by Mr. Ogilvie, nor is he aware that Mr. Ogilvie has stated that he is not responsible for the whole of the publication. Mr. Ogilvie has not sent any written remonstrance upon the subject to the Department of the Interior.

BOUNTIES PAID ON IRON.

Mr. WALLACE asked :

What is the number of tons of pig iron on which bounty has been paid, and the amount so paid—(1st) for the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1898 ; (2nd) from 1st July, 1898, up to the present date ? Also the number of tons of malleable iron and steel on which bounty has been paid, and the amount so paid during the same date ? Also, what further amounts, if any, are claimed or for which claims are put in but not yet paid ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). 1. $163,889.16 have been paid for bounty on 75,895 tons and 778 pounds pig iron for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1898, besides $1,765.09 paid for bounty on pig iron manufactured during the previous fiscal year. 2. $130,256.39 have been paid for bounty on 54,577 tons and 1,529 pounds pig iron manufactured from 1st July, 1898, to date, besides $4,651.09 paid for bounty on pig iron manufactured during 1896-97. 3. $7,705.78 have been paid for bounty on 2,568 tons and 1,187 pounds iron puddled bars for the year ending 30th June, 1898. 4. $12,359.70 have been paid for bounty on 4,119 tons and 481 pounds iron puddled bars manufactured from 1st July, 1898, to date. 5. $64,236.07 have been paid for bounty on 23,049 tons and 851 pounds steel ingots for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1898, besides $3,217.96 paid for bounty on steel ingots or billets manufactured during the previous fiscal year. 6. $50,108.34 have been paid for bounty on 16,702 tons and 1,560 pounds steel ingots manufactured from 1st July, 1898, to date, besides $4,617.46 paid for bounty on steel ingots manufactured in 1896-97. No further amounts are claimed which have not been paid. The balances for the productions of the previous fiscal year paid since 1st July, 1897, are accounted for by the amendment made to the Bounty Act in 1898, which extended the provisions for increased bounties to iron and steel products from 23rd April, 1897 (the date of the Tariff Resolutions) instead of from 29th June, 1897 (the date when the Act was passed).

BOSTON AND ALASKAN TRANSPORTATION COMPANY.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Is the Government aware that the Boston and Alaskan Transportation Company, of Seattle, Washington Territory, U.S.A., is in liquidation, and that in a statement of its assets filed in court is the following :—"Canadian Government contract of $154,000, on which $60,000 has been paid, leaving a balance of $94,000" ?
2. To what contract does this relate ?
3. What services were rendered by the company for which any payment was made, if made ?
4. Has the Government paid any amount, and if so, how much, to the said company, and when ?
5. Is any further amount payable by the Government to the company, and if so, how much, and for what services, if any ?
6. Is this the company referred to by the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence, on May 13th, 1898, in the House of Commons, when he said : "The Boston and Alaskan Transportation Company, as I said before, are carrying 250 tons of freight to Fort Selkirk for the Government of Canada" ?
7. If any freight was carried by this company for the Government, what became of it ?

8. Did this company carry any of this freight to Fort Selkirk ?

9. Did this company guarantee delivery of freight at Fort Selkirk on or before a certain date, and if so, what was the date ?

10. To what extent, if any, was the contract performed by the company ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1 and 2. The Government is aware that a receiver has been appointed for the Boston and Alaska Transportation Company but has no knowledge of the alleged statement referred to in the question. 3 and 4. No payment has been made. 5. No amount will be paid until all the goods are delivered in good order. 6. Yes. 7 and 8. More than half the freight has been delivered at Fort Selkirk. The balance is stored in warehouse at Circle City. 9. The goods were to have been delivered on or before August 31st last. 10. This is answered by reply to Nos. 7 and 8.

STOLEN REGISTERED LETTERS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. Is the Government aware that on the night of the 12th January last a mail bag containing about $220 in registered letters was lost or stolen from Campbellville station on the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to make good to the persons who mailed such letters the moneys so lost or stolen ?

3. If not, to whom shall such persons look for redress ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The Government is aware that a bag, in which were six registered letters, containing an aggregate of $220 in money, was lost from the catching post at Campbellville station, on the night of the 12th of January last. 2 and 3. The Government has no authority under the law to make good out of public revenue the amounts contained in the letters in question.

CANADA AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION, 1900.

Mr. LEMIEUX asked :

1. How many commissioners have been appointed by the Government to represent Canada at the "Exposition Universelle," to be held in Paris in 1900 ?

2. What space has been reserved for Canada within the grounds of the exposition ?

3. Is the Government obliged to pay for the space, and if so, to whom and how much ?

4. What is the number of Canadian exhibits to date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. The Canadian Board of Commissioners, the working board, is composed of nine members. 2. The space reserved for Canada is made up of 12,000 feet of floor space among the Imperial exhibits, and 27,100 feet of floor space in a special colonial building. 3. The Canadian Government will pay for the space. The cost of space among the Imperial exhibits will be four shillings sterling per square foot, which will be paid to the Imperial Committee. The colonial building is to be paid for in proportion to the amount of space occupied by the various colonies. The estimate made on the 20th April was that Canada's space in that building would cost from 8 to 10 shillings per square foot. 4. It is not known yet how many exhibits there are. The commissioners are receiving applications for space from all over the country, from Vancouver to Halifax. The inquiries for information are very numerous, showing the great desire amongst manufacturers, farmers, miners and all other people to exhibit.

Mr. PRIOR. The hon. Minister says "from Vancouver to Halifax." Has he had no applications from Victoria ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. One of the commissioners has visited Victoria, and I have no doubt there are many applications from that city.

Mr. PRIOR. Then, I would say "from Victoria to Halifax."

THE REPRESENTATION OF WINNIPEG.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to allow the city of Winnipeg to remain unrepresented during the present session ? Or is it their intention to take immediate steps for the holding of a new election in that constituency ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may inform my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) that if the city of Winnipeg is not represented during the present session it will not be the fault of the Government. The lists of the city were more than 12 months old, in fact, two or three years old. Steps have been taken to have a new list prepared. An officer has been appointed, in accordance with the statute, and he is now taking proceedings to that end.

MR. F. C. WADE.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. What official positions have been held by F. C. Wade, Esq., in the service of the Government since July, 1896 ?

2. How much public money, if any, has been paid to him, and on what account ?

3. Is he now in the employment or service of the Government, and if so, in what capacity ?

4. Has he held any of the following positions in the Yukon territory, viz., (a) Dominion Lands Agent, (b) Crown Prosecutor, (c) Registrar of Lands, (d) Clerk of the Court ; and if so, which, and for what periods ?

5. Was he accustomed to advise Mr. Fawcett, the Gold Commissioner or Mining Recorder, respecting the recording of mining claims or duties of his office ?

6. What travelling expenses, if any, have been allowed or paid to Mr. Wade, and on what occasions and at what periods ?

7. Was Mr. Wade authorized by the Minister of the Interior, when holding any of the positions above, to become interested in mining claims and to practice his profession as a barrister, advocate and solicitor?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Land Registrar of Yukon District, Clerk of the Court and Crown Prosecutor. He was appointed Legal Adviser of the Council, but never acted in that capacity. 2. $2,081.82 on account of salary; $550 on account of expenses; $500 on account of clerical assistance. Total, $3,131.82. 3. Yes, as Crown Prosecutor. 4. In addition to the positions named above, Mr. Wade acted as Dominion Lands Agent at the request of Mr. Fawcett, although he had not been so appointed by the department. Mr. Wade held the said positions, except that of legal adviser, during the time he was in Dawson City from his arrival on or about March 20, 1898, to his departure in the early part of August of the same year. 5. The department has information to the effect that Mr. Wade was accustomed to advise Mr. Fawcett respecting the recording of mining claims or duties of his office. It was no part of Mr. Wade's duty to so advise Mr. Fawcett, nor had he any instructions so to do. I may say further, with regard to that, that my attention was not drawn to that part of the hon. gentleman's question until some time to-day. But Mr. Fawcett is now in Ottawa, and I will consult with him and ascertain what the fact was. The information in the possession of the department is as I have stated. 6. Answered by No. 2. 7. Mr. Wade was told, as the fact was, that there was nothing in the regulations to prevent him from staking a mining claim in his own name. He received no other authority or instructions respecting mining claims. Nothing was said to him by or on behalf of the Minister of the Interior as to the practice of his profession.

MILITIA FORCE IN THE YUKON.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. What is the number of the militia force now in the Yukon?
2. What was the cost of transporting them there?
3. What was the cost of transporting supplies for them?
4. Whether Mr. Justice Dugas has not reported that they are not needed?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 202 officers, non-commissioned officers and men. 2. $19,838.78. 3. $158,686.40. 4. No.

TATE'S DRY DOCK.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. What amount of rent per annum does the Government of Canada receive from the present lessees of the Island dock in Montreal known as "Tate's Dry Dock"?
2. Who are the lessees of said dock?

Mr. PRIOR.

3. How much have the lessees paid to date?
4. Did the Messrs. Tate, the former occupants, ask to lease said dock before the present lease was made, and at what price?
5. Were any tenders invited for said lease, and how were tenders called for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The amount of rent per annum received from the present lessees of the parts of the Tate Dry Dock property leased is $3,000. James Ferrier leases buildings and ground on which they stand for a nail factory. Pierre Letendre leases the dry dock proper. James Ferrier has paid $8,621.92. Pierre Letendre has paid $1,500. No record can be found in the department of the Messrs. Tate having submitted an offer to rent or lease this property. Tendere were not invited for said lease.

PRINTING IN PENITENTIARIES.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to teach printing in any of the penitentiaries under its control?
2. Is it the intention of the Government to have any of its printing done in the said penitentiaries by convict labour?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. A small printing press is being installed at Kingston Penitentiary. One or two convicts will be employed in operating it. 2. The intention is to utilize it in printing forms, &c., required for the various penitentiaries.

NAMES OF THE YUKON COUNCIL.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

What are the names of the Yukon Council and date of appointment of each member? The term of years of appointment? The position each member of the council has been appointed to?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Samuel Benfield Steele, Superintendent of the North-west Mounted Police, appointed a member of the Yukon Council by Order in Council of the 7th July, 1898; Joseph Ena Girouard, registrar of lands, appointed a member of the Yukon Council by the same Order in Council; William H. P. Clement, legal adviser to the Council of the Yukon, appointed a member of that Council by Order in Council of 7th of October, 1898; Mr. Justice Dugas, who is a member of the Council, ex-officio by statute. The term of his appointment is not stated; it is during the pleasure of the Government.

DOMINION OFFICIALS IN THE YUKON.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

What are the names of the Dominion officials in Dawson and the Yukon territory? The position held by each and the date of each appointment? The names of those who have given up such positions and the reasons in each individual case? The names of those remaining in office? The positions held by them and their term of service and salaries?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The information asked for by the hon. gentleman can only be given in the form of a return, which will be brought down, upon being moved for in the usual way.

CHARGES AGAINST T. R. SECORD.

Mr. McCLEARY asked:

1. Were any charges made against T. R. Secord, Esq., prior to his dismissal from the position of divisional superintendent on the Welland Canal?
2. If any charges were made, what were they?
3. If such charges were made, by whom were they made?
4. If no charges were made, who recommended his dismissal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Charges were preferred against T. R. Secord prior to his dismissal. The charges made against T. R. Secord were, that he had for years past made a practice of entering labourers on the time-lists for longer times than they really worked, and of certifying the amounts to be paid them at a larger sum than was actually due, dividing with them the amounts so overpaid. The charges were made by Mr. J. H. Stanley, a merchant of Port Colborne.

NAME OF EMPLOYEE IN YUKON.

Mr. DAVIN asked:

Whether there is a person named Bourassa employed in the Yukon post office or in the Yukon customs office? If so, is he related to the hon. member for Labelle?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). No. There is no person named Bourassa employed in the Yukon customs service.

ACCIDENT TO MAJOR DEMERS.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. Whether the Department of Militia and Defence is aware that, in the month of April, 1898, Major Isaïe Emile Demers, 17th Battalion, Lévis, while taking a course at the Riding School in the city of Quebec, fractured his left leg?
2. Is he entitled to claim indemnity, and what?
3. Has he filed a claim?
4. If so, has the claim been settled?
5. If the claim has not been settled, why not?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. Yes, net pay of his rank, with an allowance of one dollar per diem for the period during which he shall have been actually and necessarily incapacitated from following his ordinary occupation. 3. Yes, three different ones: (1) $948.50; (2) $1,060.50, and (3) $735.10. 4. Not yet. 5. Still under consideration.

EXPENSES OF HON. G. E. FOSTER.

Mr. McMULLEN asked:

What is the amount of the travelling and living expenses of the Hon. G. E. Foster, ex-Minister of Finance, whilst a member of the Crown; also, what is the amount of the travelling and living expenses of his private secretaries, messengers or other servants or friends who may have accompanied him, including cab-hire, railway or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses paid by the Government during the same period?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry I cannot give this information to-day.

HOPE ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Who is the lighthouse keeper of the Hope Island lighthouse, Georgian Bay?
2. If there is an appointee to the position, what salary is paid to him and upon whose recommendation was he appointed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Charles Valée, who was appointed as temporary keeper 7th April, 1898, and remains as such still. 2. Salary, $450 per annum. He was appointed to take charge on the recommendation of the inspector of lights.

MIDLAND HARBOUR.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. What amount of dues were collected by John White, harbour master at Midland, Ont., during the year 1898?
2. What amount was returned by him to the Government, and what amount retained by him for his services?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. $207. 2. Deposited to credit of Receiver General, $7; remuneration retained, $200.

KEEPER OF GIANT'S TOMB LIGHTHOUSE.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

What salary is paid to Alfred H. Griffith, lighthouse keeper at Giant's Tomb lighthouse, Georgian Bay, Ont.?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). $250 per annum.

EXPORTATION OF SAW-LOGS.

Mr. BENNETT asked:

1. Does the Government intend to prevent the exportation during the coming summer of saw-logs cut on Indian reserves on the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron, with a view to causing the manufacture of the same in Canada?
2. What quantity of lumber has been cut on such reserves during the winter of 1898-99?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. No. 2. No returns of timber cut on the reserves mentioned during the season of 1898-99 have as yet been made to the department by the licensees. The licensees, under the provisions of the timber regulations of the department—sections 11 and 12—are not compelled to make their returns before the 1st of July in each year.

PLAINS OF ABRAHAM.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Is the Government aware that the lease or title under which the Crown holds the property in the city of Quebec known as the "Plains of Abraham" will shortly expire?

2. To whom does said property revert?

3. Has the Government received any memorials, correspondence or petitions in relation to the renewal of said lease or acquisition of said property, and if so, from whom?

4. Is it the intention of the Government of renewing said lease or of acquiring said property?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes, 1st May, 1901. 2. To the Ladies, Ursulines, of Quebec. 3. Copy of a resolution of the Nova Scotia Historical Society of Halifax, dated 10th January, 1899. 4. Under consideration. The Government is disposed to consider favourably the proposition to acquire the property, if the price is reasonable.

EXPENSES OF HON. SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. McMILLAN asked :

What is the amount of travelling and living expenses for the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, Bart., also the travelling and living expenses of his private secretary, messenger, or other servants or friends accompanying him, including cab-hire, railway or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses paid by the Government whilst he was a Minister of the Crown and High Commissioner?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not in a position to answer that question to-day.

OFFICIAL CARS.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

How many private cars have been purchased or constructed by the Department or Railways since the 1st of July, 1896, with names of cars, if any, and cost of each?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No private cars have been purchased or constructed, but one official car was purchased by the Department of Railways and Canals, since 1st July, 1896, for the use of the general traffic manager. The name of the official car is "Montreal." The purchase price was $4,500.

Mr. BENNETT.

TIMBER REGULATIONS IN YUKON.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Has any person, or persons, or company, outside of those who have purchased and are holding timber berths in the Yukon territory, the right to cut timber for barter or for sale, and if so, under what conditions and regulations, and are there any regulations for cutting timber under special permits granted in Dawson or the Yukon territory by the Crown timber agent there? Were any permits of this description issued; if issued, to whom, and the name of the Government official who issued them? Are there any regulations providing for the issuing of special permits?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Persons outside of those holding timber berths under license in the Yukon territory may obtain permits to cut cordwood for barter or sale upon payment of $5 for a permit and dues at the rate of 50 cents per cord, but such permit will not authorize the cutting of timber to be manufactured into lumber. The regulations and the names and particulars of each permit granted thereunder will be brought down on motion for a return. I may explain that the information will be somewhat voluminous, and I would prefer that the hon. gentleman would ask for a return.

MINER'S RIGHT TO CUT TIMBER.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Has a free miner, who has purchased a miner's license, the right to cut timber for the building of a dwelling in Dawson City or any location outside of the claim he is operating or has recorded, and is he entitled to cut fuel for this dwelling without paying Crown dues?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). A free miner's certificate entitles the holder thereof to cut timber free of dues for actual necessities, for building houses and boats, and for general mining operations; such timber, however, to be for the exclusive use of the miner himself; but such permission shall not extend to timber which may have been heretofore or which which may hereafter be granted to other persons or corporations. The certificate does not state that the holder thereof cannot use any of the timber he actually requires in a building which he may erect in Dawson, or any other town, but the department has not yet been called upon to rule upon the point.

RIGHT OF STEAMBOAT OWNERS TO CUT FUEL.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Have the owners of steamers plying on the Yukon or its tributaries the right to cut fuel for operating their steamers without first having purchased timber berths, or are permits issued to them for the privilege of cutting wood for this purpose, and on what terms and conditions, and if so, how does this effect timber berth owners who have paid for berths from which steamers have been cutting wood?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). A number of permits have been issued, upon payment of dues only, to steamboat owners. The returns show that steamboat owners received permission to cut fuel at 50 cents per cord. The permittees were not authorized to cut timber on berths which at the date of the issue of the permit the agent of the Crown was aware had been disposed of. If any claims for damages arise they will be dealt with when presented. There is nothing in the returns to show whether there were any special conditions attached to the permits issued.

ANTI-CHINESE LEGISLATION.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister been called to the following report of the proceedings at a public meeting held in Vancouver, B.C., reported in the "Daily News Advertiser" of 15th December, 1898 :

"Mr. G. Bartley then rose and referred to the Hon. D. C. Fraser's recent visit and the anti-Chinese question, and asked Mr. Maxwell what prospects there were of an Anti-Chinese Bill being pushed through the House at its next session.

"Mr. Maxwell stated that after his first speech in the House he had felt its pulse on the question and found that a good deal of lobbying and personal talk with the members was needed, also a good deal of 'drumming' the question into them. Premier Laurier had, when speaking of the subject privately, said: 'If you want it you'll have to get it, but it would be best to leave the matter till another session.'"

2. Is it the intention of the Government to introduce an anti-Chinese Bill during the session ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The attention of the Prime Minister has not been called to the report of the proceedings at the public meeting referred to in the question. 2. It is not the intention of the Government to introduce an anti-Chinese Bill during the session. A Bill to that effect has already been introduced by a private member, and the question can be considered when it comes up before the House.

TENDER FOR BINDER TWINE.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. Has the tender of Martin P. Connolly for the current season's make of binder twine, at Kingston, been accepted by the Government ? If not, to whom has such twine been sold ?

2. What are the prices to be paid to the Government by the purchaser for the different brands of such twine ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The tender of Martin P. Connolly has been accepted and a contract based upon that tender has been executed with the Hobbs Hardware Company of London. 2. The prices cannot be given until the output has been marketed by the purchaser.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND MAILS.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. What are the present arrangements for conveyance of the Prince Edward Island mails between Cape Tormentine and the Intercolonial Railway in New Brunswick ?

2. Are those arrangements the same as in previous years ?

3. If not, why was the change made ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The Prince Edward Island mails are conveyed between Aulac station on the Intercolonial Railway and Cape Tormentine by stage. 2. No. 3. Because it was found that the mails going to Prince Edward Island could, without additional cost, be delivered twenty-four hours in advance of the time under the old arrangement.

THE MEMBER FOR BURRARD.

Mr. SPEAKER. Before calling the next question (No. 81), I would like to draw the attention of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) to a decision, in the English House of Commons, by a very distinguished person, Mr. Speaker Denison, who says :

It is not a becoming expression to allude to an hon. member as "hon. and rev."

An hon. gentleman had done so in the House of Commons, and the question was raised. Mr. Hadfield appealed to the Speaker to say whether such language was parliamentary. The Speaker said it was not a becoming expression, and the hon. member would no doubt withdraw it. So I have no doubt the hon. member for Victoria will withdraw that portion of his question.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that expression if it is not parliamentary, but it is correct. I beg to ask the following question :—

1. Has the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister been called to the following extract from a speech of the hon. member for Burrard, reported in the "Daily News Advertiser" of Vancouver, B.C., of the 15th December, 1898 : "At home he had a book three inches thick of applications. He pointed out, however, that since he had been the member for Burrard $26,000 or $28,000 had gone into the pockets of Vancouver Liberals from the Dominion Government revenues" ?

2. Is the Government able to explain in what manner $26,000 or $28,000 have gone into the pockets of Vancouver Liberals from the Dominion Government revenues, if the statement be correct ; and if so, from what parliamentary appropriations has this money been expended ?

3. If the above mentioned amounts have not gone into the pockets of the Vancouver Liberals from the Dominion Government revenues, can the Government state how much has ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The attention of the Prime Minister has not been called to the extract mentioned in the question from a speech of the hon. member for Burrard. 2 and 3. The Government does not undertake to interpret 'ex cathedra' speeches delivered by members of this House; it allows full liberty to every member to do that for himself, and trusts to their intelligence to do so.

CHARGES AGAINST LIEUT.-COL. DOMVILLE.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Inasmuch as on the 12th May, 1898, (page 5393 "Hansard") the following debate took place on certain charges made against Lt.-Col. Domville:

"Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence if he would, without formal notice, bring down copies of all charges made against Lt.-Col. Domville, commanding officer of the 8th Hussars. I understand that these charges were made and that the general refused any investigation and that the only method now is to have the papers called for. I trust my hon. friend will bring them down without formal motion.

"The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I think that is a very unusual request to make. I may say to my hon. friend that I have not yet seen the charges to which he referred. I have heard that there were some such charges. I wish he would allow the matter to rest where it is, and I will be able to give him a reply."

And again on the 25th May, 1898, page 6031 "Hansard") the following further remarks have been made on the same subject:—

"Mr. FOSTER. I asked the Minister of Militia a few days ago for the papers in connection with some charges made against the colonel of the 8th Hussars, and he said he would be able to give me an answer later. Has he yet made up his mind?

"The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I think, as the matter is not yet disposed of, it would be very undesirable to bring the papers down now. I may tell my hon. friend that the position is this: Charges were made against the colonel commanding the 8th Hussars by the senior major. They went before the general and the general reported that they had better not be proceeded with, and advised the senior major to that effect. The senior major did not see fit to accept that advice and the matter now comes under my notice. I have not had time to look into it, but as soon as the session is through I shall take the matter up.

"Mr. FOSTER. I am very glad to hear my hon. friend say that. I made the inquiry largely in the interests of all parties and of justice, I think. I happened to have seen a copy of the charges, and I think they are charges which no militia officer should be under. I do not know what motivated the course of the general commanding, but I know that the charges have been made for a considerable length of time, and, if I mistake not, arrangements were made at one time for hearing them. There was delay, however, and afterwards the suggestion was made by the general that the matter should be allowed to pass over, but I submit to my hon. friend that a charge of that kind ought not, in the interests of the force or any officer of the force, be allowed to be passed over.

"The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Perhaps I ought to add that a certain limited investigation was made, and certain documents, some bank receipts, were asked for, and the general reported so far as he had gone he thought the charges were not sustained, and advised the senior major to withdraw them. I have only looked at the papers cursorily, but, as I have said, the matter has now come before me officially, and I shall look into it."

In view of the foregoing remarks, I beg leave to inquire :

1st. What is the name of the senior major ?
2nd. Were the charges referred to made to General Gascoigne ?

3rd. Did this senior major make charges to Generals Middleton and Herbert, and with what results ?

4th. Did the Militia Department supply Mr. Foster with the copy of the charges which he says he saw, or does the Militia Department know who supplied a copy of these charges to him ? Did this senior major, by direction of the general commanding, write a letter expressing regret and promising to be loyal to his commanding officer for the future, and is not a copy of it, or the original, in the department ?

5th. Did this senior major, officially, at a later date, some time in the year 1898, again formulate charges against the colonel commanding the 8th Hussars, for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman consequent on certain evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, session 1898 ? If so, what action was taken on it ?

6th. Will the department lay before the Public Accounts Committee of this session all the evidence taken before it last session on this subject, and permit papers, persons and records to be sent for in connection therewith ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The answer to the first question is, Major and Lieut.-Col. Markham; second, yes; third, no. To the first and second part of the fourth question, the answer is, no, so far as the General officer Commanding is aware. To the third part of the fourth question the answer is, yes; to the fourth part of the fourth question, yes. The answer to the fifth question is, no, and to the sixth, yes.

WOLSELEY BARRACKS PROPERTY.

Mr. CALVERT (by Mr. Fraser, Lambton) asked :

1. Whether any land has been acquired by the Department of Militia and Defence as an addition to the Wolseley Barracks property at London, in the years 1896, 1897 and 1898 ?

2. If so, when and how was such land acquired by the Department, and what price was agreed to be paid for the same ?

3. Has such price or any part thereof been paid, and to whom, and is any portion of such price yet to be paid ?

4. When and how was such price fixed ?

5. What evidence, if any, had the department as to the value of such lands ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 25 73-100 acres. 2. Authorized by Order in Council on the 25th March, 1895; deed completed 2nd September, 1898; $25,000 with interest at 4 per cent. 3. $25,000 to the Bank of British North America, 25th November, 1898; interest yet to be paid. 4. On valuations furnished in June, 1896, and on the opinion of the Justice Department that the Crown was legally bound to pay for the property. 5. The valuation was made by A. B. Powell, A. I. McMahon, J. W. Jones, Lieut.-Col. Dawson and Col. Lake.

NEW MINING REGULATIONS—YUKON TERRITORY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

When were the mining regulations of January 18th, 1898, applicable to the Yukon territory, and then in force, promulgated or published in that territory ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The regulations were published for the fourth time in the "Canada Gazette" on the 5th March, 1898, and became law on that date. No advice has been received from Dawson as to the date they were received by the Gold Commissioner.

ISLAND OF ANTICOSTI—CORRESPONDENCE WITH BRITISH GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Has there been any correspondence between the British Government and the Government of Canada, or any members thereof, relative to the Island of Anticosti during the year 1898 ? If so, will it be laid on the Table of the House ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There has been correspondence between the British Government and the Government of Canada, relative to the Island of Anticosti during the years 1898 and 1899—I believe it was all in 1899 for the matter of that. The correspondence will be laid on the Table of the House at an early date.

MR. OGILVIE, ADMINISTRATOR OF THE YUKON.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Is Mr. Ogilvie, the administrator in the Yukon district, a relation of the Minister of the Interior ? If so, what is the relationship ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I beg to say that Mr. Ogilvie, the Administrator of the Yukon, is no relation of the Minister of the Interior.

KLONDIKE MILITIA FORCE—SUPPLIES.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. What is the number of the militia force in the Klondike ?

2. What was the cost of transporting to the Klondike the militia force now there ?

3. What was the cost of supplies for the said force and of transporting the supplies ?

4. What firms got the contracts for the supplies ?

5. What firm or firms, what company or companies got the contract for transporting these supplies ?

6. Whether the sending of the militia to the Klondike has not proved to have been quite unnecessary ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 202 officers, non-commissioned officers and men. 2. $19,838.78. 3. The cost of supplies purchased was $83,672, and the amount of freight which has been paid thereon is $158,686.40 up to date. 4. Geo. Black, Montreal, clothing; Doull & Gibson, Montreal, clothing; W. E. Sanford Mfg. Co., Hamilton, clothing; J. A. Seybold & Co., Ottawa, clothing; J. W. Woods, Ottawa, clothing; Hodgson Bros. & Co., Alexandria, boots; Ottawa Boot Co., Ottawa, boots; Daniel Green, Dolgville, felt boots; A. Congdon, Winnipeg, felt boots; Z. Paquet, Quebec, socks; Hudson Bay Co., Winnipeg, provisions; H. N. Bate & Sons, Ottawa, provisions and groceries; Bovril, Montreal, vegetables, &c.; Kerr Vegetable Evap. Co., Kentville, vegetables, &c.; Simson Bros., Halifax, lime juice; W. C. Caldwell, Lanark, blankets; Butterworth & Co., Ottawa, hardware; W. J. Charleson, Ottawa, hardware; Graves Bros., Ottawa, hardware; Walters & Sons, Hull, hardware; McDougall & Cuzner, Ottawa, hardware; McLeary Mfg. Co., Montreal, hardware; Cole's National Mfg. Co., Ottawa, palliasses, &c.; Skinner & Co., Ottawa, medical supplies; J. A. Musgrove, Ottawa, druggist; Hugh Carson, Ottawa, tumplines; Adam Bros., Toronto, Oliver equipment. 5. Hudson Bay Company and the Boston and Alaska Transportation Company. 6. No.

YUKON MILITIA FORCE—MR. JUSTICE DUGAS.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Whether Mr. Justice Dugas has not written to the Prime Minister informing him that the militia at Dawson and wherever else they may be in the Canadian Yukon are not wholly necessary ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Justice Dugas has not written to the Prime Minister informing him that the militia force at Dawson are not necessary. I have not received any letter from Mr. Justice Dugas since he left Montreal.

YUKON DISTRICT—CERTAIN TAXES.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Whether it is true that Mr. Ogilvie, the Commissioner of the Yukon, imposed a duty or tax on women of professed immoral character in Dawson ? If so, what was the amount of the tax or license ? If so, is it still continued ? If so, how much did the first impost yield ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Government have no information that any such taxes were imposed by Mr. Ogilvie or by the local authorities at Dawson, and the Government have no idea that such a tax was imposed as is mentioned.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is Mrs. McManus up there ?

N. W. MOUNTED POLICE—SPECIAL CONSTABLES.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. What is the number of special constables employed in connection with the North-west Mounted Police ?

2. Whether an order has been made to give all the specials in the North-west Mounted Police force a month's notice ? Whether it is the intention to re-engage all of them who can and will do police duty when called on ?

3. Henceforth will a certain number of regulars have to do the work of specials ?

4. If so, will it not be only just that regulars asked to do special work have extra pay ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. Ninety-two. 2. To the first part of the question, yes. To the second part, it is the intention to re-engage permanently all who are competent to perform regular police duty, and any of the artisans whose services are required. 3. Henceforth permanent members of the force will perform much of the work which hitherto has been done by specials. 4. The regulations of the force provide for extra pay for extra or special duty.

PAYMENTS TO BAIE DES CHALEURS RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. MARCOTTE asked :

How much money has been paid to the Bay of Chaleurs Railway Company, up to this date, by the Government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The amount of money paid to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company up to this date, 27th March, 1899, is $620,000.

YUKON LIQUOR PERMITS.

Mr. DOUGLAS asked :

1. What number of permits, licenses, or privileges to import liquor into the Yukon territory, have been issued or granted by the Department of the Interior, from 1st September, 1897, to this date ?

2. What are the names of the persons to whom such permits, licenses or privileges have been granted, the total number of gallons of liquor and the amount of revenue derived from the same, and the purpose for which the permit was granted ?

3. What number of permits to import liquor into the Yukon district, if any, had been issued by the Government of the North-west Territories prior to the passing of the Act separating the Yukon territory from the North-west territory ? Were permits granted by the North-west Government granted at the request of, or at the suggestion of the Government of Canada or any member or department thereof ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Five. 2. These permits were issued to : J. H. Brown for personal use ; Dr. Rimer for pharmaceutical purposes ; Bank of British North America for personal use of office staff ; Canadian Bank of Commerce for personal use of office staff ; T. Trotter for personal use. The total number of gallons covered by these permits was 120, and the amount of revenue derived from them $240. 3. Twenty-three permits were issued by the Government of the North-west Territories. They were not granted at the request or suggestion of the Government of Canada or any member or officer thereof.

FRENCH CANADIAN REPATRIATION.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What efforts have been made by the Government, since last session, towards repatriating French Canadians who have emigrated to the United States ?

2. How many French Canadian families have been so repatriated ?

3. From what places in the United States have the said families come ?

4. In what places in Canada have they settled ?

5. What special inducements did the Government offer to induce them to return to their country ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Government has placed at the disposal of the Repatriation Society of the province of Quebec a sufficient subsidy to enable that society to meet the salary and travelling expenses of one agent, besides subscribing $25 per month towards the maintenance and free distribution of the society's paper "Le Colonisateur," and providing for the free transmission of the society's advertising matter through the mails. The Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company also has been given financial aid in its colonization work, the main feature of which is repatriation, and four agents have been steadily employed by the department in this special work in the immediate service of the Government. French pamphlets have been published, and distributed in large quantities through these agents, and directly from Ottawa, and direct communication has been had with parties in the United States in the interests of the movement. 2. The returns available are for the calendar year 1898. In that period we have definite record of 339 families of French Canadians having been repatriated through our efforts, but that is not the whole number, as many others have gone into the Maritime provinces, particularly New Brunswick, of whom we have been unable to keep track, and many in the North-west have been classified as "returned Canadians" without reference to their French extraction. 3. The great bulk of the people have come from places in the New England States, in which there is a considerable French Canadian population. 4. They have been settled for the most part in the rural districts of New Brunswick, the province of Quebec, the Nipissing district in Ontario, and in Alberta. 5.

The inducements have been offers of free grant lands, and of low railroad rates, supervision and assistance by officers of the department. The inducements are the same as are given to other settlers and have been considered sufficient.

THE 8th HUSSARS, NEW BRUNSWICK.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Inasmuch as on the Journals of the House of Commons, Vol. XXXIII., 1898, Appendix No. (2) A, 1898, Public Accounts Committee, Mr. Fred. V. Wedderburn was called, sworn and examined :

"By Mr. Foster :

"Q. When did you undertake the care of arms at Hampton?—A. I bring some books I have.

"Q. Certainly.—A. This is the regimental order book, in which I can find the date I was appointed. It may take me a little time.

"Q. Well, take your own time.—A. These have been out of my hands for some time, and I am not as familiar with them as I used to be.

"By Mr. Hughes :

"Q. What was that question again?—A. It was when I was appointed to take charge of the stores. It would be about 1892, I think.

"Q. You were appointed major then?—A. No ; I was appointed to the stores. It is here in this regimental order book I only got this book from Col. Markham yesterday, and haven't had an opportunity to look it over, but I know there is such an order in the book.

"Regimental orders by Lieut.-Col. Domville, commanding 8th Hussars, New Brunswick Regiment of Cavalry :

"Rothesay, 29th of August, 1891.

"1. Captain Wedderburn, adjutant, is hereby appointed regimental storekeeper, vice Major R. W. Otty, storekeeper, deceased ; such is to be temporary, pending the appointment of a permanent officer. He will at once take over in charge the arms, accoutrements and equipment of A, B, C, D, E, F, G Troops (7), and provide a safe place for keeping them. Attention is called to paragraphs 298, 299, 300, 305, 306, R. & O., 1897."

In view of this evidence, I beg leave to inquire :

1. In whose custody the regimental order book referred to is now ?

2. How long has it been so ?

3. If in the custody of the Militia Department, will it be produced before the Public Accounts Committee this session ?

4. If not in its custody, will steps be taken to procure this book or books for the information of the members of the committee ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND FENCE (Mr. Borden). The book is at present in the custody of Major Markham, brevet lieutenant-colonel. 2. I have not been able to ascertain the date. If the hon. gentleman desires to leave the question on the Order paper, I will return it, or I will get it and give it to him privately. 3. This is answered by the answer to No. 1. 4. The book will be produced before the committee which is investigating this matter.

THE QUEBEC COURTS.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has the Government been notified of the passing by the legislature of the province of Quebec, at its last session, of a law increasing by three the number of the judges of the Superior Court of the said province ?

2. Has the Government been called upon to act upon such law, and to provide for the salaries of the said judges ?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to ask the House, at the present session, to vote the salaries of the said three judges or of any of them ?

4. Is the Government aware that there are actually in the said province thirty-one judges of the said Superior Court ?

5. Is it a fact and is the Government aware that during the year 1897, eleven of the said judges rendered less than thirty-five judgments each in contested cases ?

6. Is it a fact and is the Government aware that at least ten of the said judges have less than two months' work during any one year ?

7. Has the Government, since the last session, had any communication or correspondence with the Executive Council of the province of Quebec, or the Attorney General thereof, or any member thereof, in reference to the reorganization of the law courts of the said province ?

8. Is it the intention of the Government to correspond with the Executive Council of the said province, or the Attorney General thereof, or any other member thereof, with a view to coming to an understanding as to the reorganization of said law courts

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. The Government have not been officially notified of the passing by the legislature of the province of Quebec, at its last session, of a law increasing by three the number of the judges of the Superior Court of the said province. 2. The Government has not been called upon to act upon such a law. 3. The Government is not in a position to answer this question. 4. The Government is aware that there are actually in the said province thirty-one judges of the said Superior Court. 5 and 6. The Government has no knowledge of the amount of work performed by any one of the said judges. 7 and 8. The Prime Minister has invited the Attorney General of the province of Quebec to come to Ottawa to confer with him and the Minister of Justice concerning the matters referred to in these two questions.

EMPLOYMENT OF CYRILLE O. LABREQUE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has Cyrille O. Labreque, advocate, of Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi, been employed by the Government, as an advocate or otherwise, since June, 1897 ?

2. Have the Government paid him any money since that date ?

3. If so, what amount and for what reasons ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Cyrille O. Labreque, of Roberval, has been employed by the Indian Department in connection with liquor prosecutions in the Pointe Bleue Agency. 2. Mr. Labreque's accounts for these services have been paid to him after the same were duly taxed by the Department of Justice. 3. The amounts paid to Mr. Labreque since June, 1897, are as follows: 7th July, 1897, $17.50; 29th September, 1897, $45; 28th March, 1898, $175; 11th May, 1898, $30; 6th August, 1898, $70; 8th August, 1898, $70; total, $407.50.

POSTMASTER OF ST. JOSEPH d'ALMA.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. Has Francis Gagné, postmaster of St. Joseph d'Alma, in the county of Chicoutimi, received an increase of salary since June, 1897?

2. If so, what is the amount of such increase?

3. Have the Government paid him any other moneys, and if so, how much and what for?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1 and 2. Yes, twice. On the 1st of July, 1897, from $76 to $80, and on the 1st of July, 1898, from $80 to $90. Forward allowance was also increased on the 1st July, 1898, from $2 to $10. 3. No other payments were made to him so far as this department is aware.

EMPLOYMENT OF DR. JULES CONSTANTIN.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. Has Dr. Jules Constantin, of Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi, been in the employment of the Government since June, 1897?

2. Have the Government paid him any money since that date?

3. If so, what amount and for what?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Dr. Jules Constantin has given professional services when necessary to the Indians of the Pointe Bleue Reserve, Lake St. John, County of Chicoutimi, since January, 1893, and has furnished his accounts quarterly through the Indian agent. 2 and 3. The following amounts have been paid to Dr. Constantin since June, 1897: September quarter, 1897, $335.25; December quarter, 1897, $64.50; March quarter, 1898, $90; June quarter, 1898, $97.50; September quarter, 1898, $191; December quarter, 1898, $167, a total of $945.25. It should be added in explanation of the large amount paid in the month of September that an epidemic of measles necessitated the almost constant attendance of the doctor upon the reserve.

EMPLOYMENT OF W. H. LYNCH.

Mr. POWELL (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

1. Was N. H. Lynch in the employ of the Government in the Yukon district, and is now in the employ of the Government, and if so, what is his employment and the amount of his salary?

2. Did he make a report in connection with the Yukon district or concerning the matters with respect to which he was employed?

Mr. SIFTON.

3. If he made such a report, will it be laid on the Table without an Order of the House?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Mr. W. H. Lynch, not N. H. Lynch, was in the employment of the Government in the Yukon district, but is not now in such employment. His remuneration was $200 per month and his expenses. 2. He made such a report. 3. It will be laid upon the Table when ordered by the House.

COUNTY JUDGE OF ONTARIO COUNTY.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. Who is the senior judge of Ontario County, Ontario?

2. Is it the intention of the Government to appoint an additional judge, senior or junior, in that county?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). 1. There is no senior judge at present, Judge Dartnell having died. 2. Yes.

MEDALS TO CANADIAN MILITIA.

Mr. HUGHES asked:

1. What is the prospect of an early issue of the medals for Fenian raids of 1866 and 1870, and for the Red River Rebellion of 1870?

2. What are the facts in the case of the "Long Service" medal for members of the Canadian Militia?

3. What are the terms relating to the issue of—1. The Fenian Raids and Red River Rebellion medals; and 2. The Long Service medals?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). In reply I beg to say: 1. The medals for Fenian raids, 1866-70, and for Red River expedition, 1870, may be expected from England this coming summer; but we have no positive information as to the date. 2. Prior to 1897 the Imperial authorities were disinclined to entertain the idea of a long service medal for Canada similar to that granted to the volunteers of the United Kingdom, but in December of that year the matter was submitted to an inter-departmental committee, with the result that there is a strong probability that a long service medal will be granted for Canada. 3. The terms for the Fenian raids and the Red River medals have been published in the General Orders for the militia. 4. The terms will be made known when the medal is granted.

PLEBISCITE VOTERS, SOUTH LEEDS.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

How many voters were reported by the returning officers as being qualified to vote on the prohibition plebiscite for the electoral district of South Leeds?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). A voters' list of 6,433 names was paid for and used.

FUNERAL WREATH TO RIGHT HON.
SIR JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand that the matter of dispute to which my question refers is settled.

Question dropped.

POSITIONS IN TORONTO CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE asked :

What are the names of persons appointed to positions in the Toronto custom-house since July 13th, 1896 ? The date of each such appointment ? The salary paid to each such person ? The office to which each such person was appointed, and by whom recommended for appointment ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). I beg to submit the following list :—

| Name.             | Rank.                  | Date of Appointment. | Salary.              |
|-------------------|------------------------|----------------------|----------------------|
|                   |                        |                      | $ ct <sup>s</sup> . |
| E. W. Miller.     | Appraiser.             | Nov. 30, '96         | 1400 00 p.a.         |

| John Head.        | Prev. officer.         | June 4, '97          | 800 00 "             |
| Alexander Calder. | Act'g mess'ger         | Mch. 6, '97          | 500 00 "             |
| E. L. Darby.      | Act'g mess'ger         | July 26, '97         | 240 00 "             |
| W. A. Gunn.       | Acting landing waiter. | July 28, '97         | 600 00 "             |
| J. W. McKay.      | Act'g porter &c        | June 9, '98          | 1 50 p.w.d           |
| W. H. Dickson     | Acting landing waiter. | Sept. 25, '98        | 700 00 p.a.          |
| W. B. Oxley.      | Acting officer.        | Aug. 26, '98         | 1 50 p.d.            |
| P. Smith.         | Act'g porter & packer. | Dec. 12, '98         | 1 50 "               |
| R. Custaloe.      | Act'g porter & packer. | Aug. 27, '98         | 1 50 "               |

Officers Oxley and Custaloe have not been employed continuously.

INTERCOLONIAL WORKING EXPENSES AND EARNINGS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What are the gross working expenses and earnings respectively of the Intercolonial Railway for each month from 1st July, 1898, to date ?

What were the gross working expenses and earnings respectively of the same road for the similar months of the preceding year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I shall have to ask the hon. gentleman to move for a return.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will see that that will take a great deal of time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall not delay bringing it down.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is usual to give such information in reply to a question.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall bring it down in good season for any discussion that may take place.

Mr. FOSTER. Of course, I will have to take what the hon. gentleman chooses to give, but I may say that the class of questions has been invariably answered by the Ministers.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Not for a month.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not convenient to have to read columns of figures to the House, but I will give the hon. gentleman the return without delay if he will move for it directly and expeditiously.

PROSECUTIONS FOR SELLING LIQUOR TO INDIANS.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked .

1. Were the following persons prosecuted and committed, since October, 1897, for selling liquor to the Indians of Pointe Bleue, namely :—Joseph Tremblay, Carter and Thomas, alias Tommy, Ross, both of Roberval, and Mr. Parent, farmer, of St. Prime, county of Chicoutimi ?

2. What was the penalty imposed ?

3. Have the Government granted the remission ?

4. If so, what remission, and on whose recommendation ?

5. Who laid the complaint against the said parties ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply I beg to say :

1. Joseph Tremblay, Thomas Ross and Alfred Parent were prosecuted and convicted of selling liquor to the Indians of the Pointe Bleue reserve during the past year. 2. The penalty imposed in the case of Tremblay was a fine of $50 and costs or three months' imprisonment; in the case of Thomas Ross, a fine of $75 and costs or three months' imprisonment; and in the case of Alfred Parent, a fine of $100 and costs or four months' imprisonment. 3. In all the above cases the culprits refused to pay the fines and were sent to prison. The Government have not granted a remission. 4. Answered by No. 3. 5. The complaints against all the said parties were laid by the Indian agent, Mr. P. L. Marcotte.

CHAMBORD CUSTOMS COLLECTIONS.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What amount has been collected at the customs office at Chambord, from the date of its establishment up to the present time ?

2. What is the amount of the expenses of the said office ?

3. How much has been paid to Auguste Gagné, by way of salary, since the opening of the said office ?

4. Has the said Auguste Gagné asked for and obtained an increase of salary, and if so, what increase?

5. How much has been paid to him during the same period, for office rent, stationery, heating, travelling expenses, &c.?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply I beg to say: 1. $1,304.75. 2. Exclusive of salary, nil. 3. $535. 4. No increase granted nor asked for. 5. Nil.

GERMAN DISCRIMINATING DUTIES.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What discriminating duties does Germany now impose upon the following Canadian imports:— Canned lobsters, canned salmon, butter, apples, barley, beans, peas, buckwheat, oats, rye, wheat, clover seed, agricultural implements, bicycles?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). As far as can be determined from the German tariff the discriminating duties would be as follows in the memorandum I am about to read, but I would also state that there is some difficulty in determining some of the items which are not specially mentioned in the German tariff, inasmuch as it is not easy to say under what classification they might be placed, but the rates given are those probably in force:

| Articles.                 | Discriminating Duty.  |
|---------------------------|---|
| Breadstuffs:—             |   |
| Grain:—                   |   |
| Barley.....               | $\frac{1}{4}$ mark per 100 kilog, or5 $\frac{1}{10}$ cts. per 220·4 lbs.= to about 1 $\frac{3}{10}$ cts.per bushel of 48 lbs.     |
| Beans and Peas.....       | $\frac{1}{2}$ mark per 100 kilog, or11 $\frac{3}{10}$ cts. per 220·4 lbs.= to about 3 $\frac{3}{10}$ cts.per bushel of 60 lbs.    |
| Buckwheat.....            | None.   |
| Oats.....                 | 1 $\frac{2}{10}$ cts. per 100 kilog, or28 $\frac{5}{10}$ cts. per 220·4 lbs.= to about 4 $\frac{1}{10}$ cts.per bushel of 34 lbs. |
| Rye and Wheat....         | 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ marks per 100 kilog,or 35 $\frac{7}{10}$ cts. per 220·4lbs. = to about 9 $\frac{7}{10}$ cts.per bushel of 60 lbs. |
| Fish:—                    |   |
| Canned Lobsters.....      | None.   |
| Canned Salmon.....        | None.   |
| Fruits:—                  |   |
| Apples.....               | None.   |
| Provisions:—              |   |
| Butter.....               | 4 marks per 100 kilog, or95 $\frac{2}{10}$ cts. per 220·4 lbs.= to about 1 $\frac{9}{10}$ ct.per lb.                              |
| Seeds:—                   |   |
| Clover.....               | None.   |
| Manufactures:—            |   |
| Bicycles.....             | None.   |
| Agricultural Implements.. | None.   |

Mr. CASGRAIN.

SERVICE AND AGE LIMITS FOR LIEUTENANT-COLONELS IN THE MILITIA.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

What, according to present regulations, are the service and age limits for Lieutenant-Colonels in the Militia? When did these come into force? What Lieutenant-Colonels have been retired thereunder, and what was in each case his age and term of service? What Lieutenant-Colonels, who have exceeded the regulation terms, have been retained, what is in each case his age and term of service and the reasons for retention?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). I am getting the information ready, but it involves a good deal of delay, and the answer would be a very long one. I hope to have it in a day or two.

EXEMPTION OF SALARIES OF DOMINION OFFICIALS.

Mr. CHAUVIN asked:

Whether it is the intention of the Government to give effect to the undertaking entered into by the hon. the Prime Minister to reintroduce in Parliament, this session, the Bill to render the salaries of Dominion officials liable to seizure?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). It is not the intention of the Government to introduce in Parliament this session a Bill to render the salaries of Dominion officials liable to seizure, as such a Bill has already been introduced by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson).

CROW'S NEST PASS COMMISSION.

Mr. DUGAS asked:

Have the Government caused to be translated into French the report of the commission appointed under the chairmanship of His Honour Judge Dugas, to inquire into the treatment of the workmen employed in the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway? When will the report be distributed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The report of said commission was laid upon the Table of the House at its last session to be dealt with as the House might direct. No action has been since taken by the Government in regard to translation or circulation.

LAKE ST. FRANCIS CHANNEL IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

What dates were set for the completion of the contracts for the St. Regis Bar and Hamilton Island Bar (improvement of channel of Lake St. Francis)? Have these works been finished according to contract? If not, has any action been taken by the department to enforce the conditions of the contracts? Has an extension of time been granted; if so, on what date, and what are the conditions?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The date named in the contract for the completion of the works at St. Regis Bar and Hamilton Island Bar was 30th November, 1898. The works have not been finished, but a channel for 14-foot navigation is made of sufficient width to enable vessels to pass through. The contractors have been urged to prosecute the work vigorously to completion as soon as the state of Lake St. Francis will admit of it. An extension of time has been granted to 1st May, 1899, all other provisions of the contract to remain in full force.

CORNWALL CANAL.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

Has the contract for the improvement of the upper entrance to the Cornwall Canal, tenders for which were advertised for under date of 6th April, 1898, been awarded, and to whom? Was the work completed by the 30th November, 1898, as required by the special conditions stated in the advertisement calling for tenders? If the contract was not awarded, why not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No contract has been awarded for the improvements at the upper entrance of the Cornwall Canal. As the works were not proceeded with they were not completed by 30th November, 1898. The contract was not awarded because it was not considered to be an urgent matter.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—DELAY IN FURNISHING CARS.

Mr. GAUVREAU (by Mr. Légris) asked :

Whether the Minister of Railways has been in receipt of complaints from exporters of sea-moss at Isle Verte as to delay in furnishing them with the number of cars necessary for their traffic? If the department has not received complaints, have the Moncton officials been notified of the said delay, and if so, have orders been issued to put a stop to such grounds of complaint?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Minister of Railways has received complaints from exporters of sea-moss at Isle Verte, as to the delay in furnishing them with the number of cars necessary for their traffic. The Moncton officials have been notified of the said delay, and orders have been given to furnish cars as promptly as possible for this and other traffic.

VETERANS OF 1864-65.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Is the Government aware that there are still living a good many of the volunteers of the Canadian Militia who were performing public duty on the frontier of Canada in 1864-65?

2. Is it the intention of the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence to have medals granted to the men who for several months were on duty after the St. Alban's raid, and the assassination of President Lincoln, and deserve recognition at the hand of the country such as is or will be granted to the members of the force who acted in the Fenian raid, in 1866 and 1870?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. This matter is under consideration of the Government.

P. E. I. RAILWAY—CURVES AT NORTH WILTSHIRE.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Has the work of straightening the curve on the Prince Edward Island Railway, at North Wiltshire, been completed?

2. If so, what is the total cost?

3. If the work is not completed, what is the cost to this date?

4. What is the length of track newly built, and what is the cost rate per mile?

5. Were the old rails and sleepers used on the new track?

6. How much has the railway mileage of the road been shortened by the change?

7. What was the degree of curvature at North Wiltshire, on the Prince Edward Island Railway, before the work of straightening began?

8. What is the degree of curvature at this point to-day, after the change is made?

9. What was the gradient at this point before work began?

10. What is the gradient now?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The work of straightening the curves on the Prince Edward Island Railway at North Wiltshire has not yet been completed. 2. The total cost of the work cannot be given until it is completed. 3. The cost of the work up to the end of February, 1899, is $24,410.97. 4. The length of new built track is 5,100 feet. The cost per mile cannot be given until the work is completed. 5. Some of the old rails were used and others were taken from rails in stock, new sleepers were used. 6. The railroad has been shortened by 3,281 feet by the change. 7. The sharpest curves before the work of straightening commenced were three long ones of 9° 30". 8. The sharpest curves after the work of straightening is made will be one short one of 9°. 9. The maximum grade before the work began was 58 feet to the mile. 10. The maximum grade now is 103 feet to the mile, but when the work is completed it will be 66 feet to the mile.

CLAIMS—ROCHE FENDUE AND CALUMET DAMS.

Mr. POUPORE (by Mr. Hughes) asked :

1. Have any of the cases of those who suffered from the construction of the Roche Fendue and Calumet dams in 1883 been adjusted?

2. If so, what are the names of the persons whose claims were so settled?

3. Has the Government appointed valuers to examine and report upon certain claims that had not previously been dealt with ?

4. If such valuers have been appointed, what are their names, and by whom were they recommended ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to move for a return on this subject.

MR. RICHARD DICKSON.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

1. Was Mr. Richard Dickson, appointed by Mr. McCreary, Government immigration agent at Winnipeg, to superintend the improvements of the Selkirk round house for the reception of the Doukhobors ?

2. If so, was he dismissed, and for what reason and upon whose recommendation ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Richard Dickson was temporarily appointed to do some work at Selkirk round-house, by Mr. McCreary, Commissioner of Immigration at Winnipeg, on the 6th January last, when the preparation of the building for the reception of the Doukhobors was commenced. He was so employed for 18 days. Mr. McCreary dispensed with his services at the end of 18 days, because they were no longer required.

B. C. RAILWAY BELT—LAND SALE NEAR ASHCROFT.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Has the Government authorized the sale of some 4,000 acres of land in the railway belt near Ashcroft, B.C., to the Ashcroft Water and Electric Company ?

2. If so, what is the purchase price per acre ?

3. What conditions, if any, are attached to the sale of the same ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The Government has authorized the sale of upwards of 4,000 acres of land in the Railway Belt near Ashcroft, B.C., to the Ashcroft Water and Electric Company, of which the company has given a description of 1,577 acres. 2. The purchase price is $1 per acre. 3. The sale has been authorized on the condition that the company shall, within five years from the 16th March, 1899, construct and have in operation irrigation works reclaiming and irrigating the lands so sold. The lands are not to be patented to the company until an examination has been made and a report presented to the department by one of its officers that the lands applied for have been irrigated.

SALE OF THE FISHERY CRUISER "DOLPHIN."

Mr. SPROULE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Who was the purchaser of the fishery cruiser "Dolphin" ?

Mr. POUPORE.

2. Was the sale by public auction, public tender or by private sale ?

3. If by public tender or public auction, in what paper or papers did the notices appear inviting such tenders or announcing such proposed sale ?

4. For what figure was she sold, and who was the purchaser ?

5. What was the cost of repairs and fittings of this boat for the years 1895-96, 1896-97, 1897-98 ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. H. B. Harrison, of Owen Sound. 2. Private sale, first having been offered to the Government of Ontario for $600 and declined. In 1893 the department offered her for sale for $700, but could not get a purchaser. 3. Answered by No. 2. 4. $700. H. B. Harrison, of Owen Sound. Repairs and fittings : 1895-96, $414.08 ; 1896-97, $346.64 ; 1897-98, $335.22.

SALE OF GOVERNMENT LAND.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

Was S.W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  22, 14, 8 Government land sold ? If so, to whom, and at what price ? How many offers to purchase the land were received and what were the prices offered ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The south-west quarter of Section 22, Range 8, west meridian, has not been sold. Two offers were received for it. The prices offered were $5 per acre and $3.50 per acre respectively.

I. C. R. REVENUES—CHAUDIÈRE TO MONTREAL.

Mr. POWELL (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What is the total amount of revenue collected by the Government (a) from passenger traffic, (b) from freight traffic at the stations, freight agencies and passenger agencies along the extension of the Intercolonial Railway from Chaudière to Montreal, both included, (1) from the 30th day of June, 1898, exclusive, to the 1st day of March, 1899, exclusive ; (2) from the 1st day of March, 1899, inclusive, to the 1st day of April, 1899, exclusive ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). A return will have to be moved for for this information.

STEAMERS "GOVERNOR PINGREE" AND "J. B. LOWE"—REGISTRY.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Have two American-built steamers named the "Governor Pingree" and "J. B. Lowe," plying in Yukon waters, been granted Canadian registry ?

2. If so, at what valuation ?

3. If registry was granted, were they examined by a Canadian master and engineer as required by law ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No information of these vessels having been registered has yet reached this department. The collector of customs at Dawson City has been requested to furnish a list of all the vessels registered by him. (Dawson City was made a port for the registry of ships by Order in Council). Customs Department has no information re the valuation.

DAM AT NASSAU.

Mr. KENDRY asked :

From whom was the land purchased upon which a dam is being constructed at Nassau, on the line of the Trent Valley Canal? What was the amount paid therefor?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The land upon which the dam at Nassau in connection with the Trent Canal was constructed was purchased from the Canadian Bank of Commerce, they being the mortgagees of the property, and the property ultimately falling into their hands. The amount to be paid therefor is $20,000, with interest at 4 per cent per annum from the date of the Government taking possession, 27th July, 1895; when expropriated the land was the property of Mr. Jas. Irwin, who demanded $70,000 for what we subsequently arranged to pay $20,000.

ARMOURY AT SUSSEX, N.B.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Whether it is the intention of the Government to build an armoury for the 8th Hussars at Sussex, N.B., this year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). It is expected that the Government will be able to construct an armoury this year.

DISMISSAL OF CYRILLE ROBERGE.

Mr. GAUVREAU (by Mr. Legris) asked :

1. On what date was Cyrille Roberge, of River du Loup, dismissed from his position on the Intercolonial Railway?

2. How much was he paid for salary or wages, between the 10th March, 1898, and the date of his dismissal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Cyrille Roberge, of Rivière du Loup, brakeman, was dismissed from his position on the Intercolonial Railway on the 3rd of September, 1898. He was paid $238.60 for salary and wages between the 10th March, 1898, and the date of his dismissal.

DUNN AVENUE CROSSING, TORONTO.

Mr. CLARKE asked :

1. Has the question of protecting the Dunn Avenue railway crossing in Toronto been considered by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council? If so, has any and what decision been reached?

2. If any decision has been reached, has such decision been communicated to the city council of Toronto and the railway companies interested?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The records of the department do not show that any question as to Dunn Avenue, Toronto, has been up before the committee, nor can it be found that any application for a hearing has been received.

INSPECTION OF POTASH.

Mr. PENNY (by Mr. Legris) asked :

Does the Government intend this session to comply with the request of the Montreal Board of Trade and others, asking for legislation regarding the compulsory inspection of potash?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). As this would affect not only Montreal but the whole Dominion, the Government is now seeking for fuller information before acting.

STORES OF 8th HUSSARS.

Mr. DOMVILLE asked :

Is the Government aware that the Intercolonial Railway at Hampton, N.B., has given the following notice:—

“F. V. Wedderburn:—This bill has been standing for five months (freight on stores belonging to the 8th Hussars), and the Intercolonial Railway are threatening to sell these articles to pay the freight.

“H. M. TRAVIS,
“Station Master.”

If so, what steps do the Government propose to take to stop the sale? Who is now in charge of the arms and equipments of the 8th Hussars? When was said storekeeper appointed?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Yes, the Government is aware that the station-master has given notice to T. V. Wedderburn that a bill has been standing for five months for freight on stores belonging to the 8th Hussars, and that the Intercolonial Railway are threatening to sell these articles to pay the freight. I am not aware that any special orders have been given to sell.

COMMISSIONER LEBEL.

Mr. McALISTER asked :

1. What was the total cost of the investigation held by Commissioner LeBel into charges preferred against Dr. Venner, Indian agent of the Restigouche Indians, in September, 1897? How many days did the investigation occupy?

2. What amount was paid Mr. LeBel (a) for travelling expenses, (b) taking the evidence of witnesses, and (c) for making his report?

3. Has the salary of the Indian agent been paid in full up to the time of his dismissal? If not, how much remains unpaid, and why is the same withheld?

4. Was Mr. LeBel authorized, under his commission, to investigate charges against said Indian agent for neglect of duty? Was he paid for taking the evidence of Polycarpe Martin, Indian chief, as to neglect on the part of the agent and the general condition of the Indians?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The total cost of the investigation was $221.10. 12 days were occupied in the investigation. 2. (a) $72.10 were paid for travelling expenses; (b and c) Mr. LeBel was paid $10 per day for 12 days' services, which included summoning witnesses, taking evidence, correspondence and preparing report. The items for each one of these services were not given separately, and have, therefore, to be given under one heading. 3. $66 has been withheld from Agent Venner's salary because of dereliction of duty in connection with the seizure of timber, whereby the dues on the same were lost to the department. 4. Mr. LeBel was not authorized under his commission, but by a letter from the department to investigate charges of neglect of duty against Agent Venner. The above amount of $10 per day included payment for time occupied in taking the evidence of Chief Polycarpe Martin. The balance of the amount of $221.10 was paid for rent of room, witness fees and services of clerks; in all for these amounts, $29.

YUKON LIQUOR PERMITS.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Are liquors intended for the Yukon district, and for which permits are or have been granted by the authorities of the North-west Territories, admitted to the Yukon without any further sanction from the Minister of the Interior?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). A permit lawfully granted by the authorities of the North-west Territories authorizes the holder to import liquor into the Yukon territory without any further sanction from the Minister of the Interior. To prevent possible use of forged or fraudulent permits, lists of permits issued by the North-west Government were forwarded to officers of the North-west Mounted Police, with instructions to recognize only those upon the list. Such lists comprised all the permits of which the department had been advised when they were respectively forwarded.

DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT OUELLETTE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER asked :

Has District Superintendent Ouellette, of the Intercolonial Railway, been suspended at any time during the present year? If so, on what date, for what reason, and has he been reinstated, or what action has been taken in this case?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). District Superintendent Ouellette of the Intercolonial Railway was suspended on the 9th March, 1899, for absenting himself from duty without leave. He has not been reinstated.

ALIEN LABOURERS AT LAKE BENNETT.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Is the Government aware that men from Pittsburg, Pa., U.S.A., have been imported to work on the construction of a steamer at Lake Bennett, B.C.?
Mr. McALISTER.

2. If so, is this not an infringement of the Alien Labour Act, chap. 2, 60-61 Vic.?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to appoint an agent at Victoria, B.C., to enforce the above mentioned law?

4. If not, why not?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The Government is not aware of the alleged facts referred to in the question.

WAGES ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. McLELLAN asked :

1. What is the average length of sections on the Intercolonial Railway?

2. What is the average number of men employed on each section?

3. What wages per diem are paid to foremen and section men respectively on said railway?

4. Are any of the section men placed on half-time during the winter season?

5. What men, if any, are on half-time during the winter season on the said railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The average length of sections on the Intercolonial Railway is 6 miles. 2. The average number of men employed on each section is 3 men. 3. The wages per diem to foremen are $1.60; the wages per diem to trackmen are $1.15. 4. No section men are placed on half-time during the winter season. 5. No men are on half-time during the winter season on the Intercolonial Railway.

REPORT.

Report of the Department of Trade and Commerce for 1897.—(Sir Richard Cartwright).

PASSES OVER THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER moved for :

Statements of all passes, other than to members of the Dominion Parliament and employees of the railway, issued by or on behalf of the Intercolonial Railway, including the Prince Edward Island Railway since August 1st, 1896, with the names of the persons to whom granted and the reasons therefor.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I may say to the hon. gentleman that, in the present form, the order cannot be complied with. I would suggest to him that he change the date, substituting the 31st of December, 1897, for the 1st of August, 1896. The Deputy Minister tells me that it has been usual or customary in the department to destroy the stubs as soon as the year runs out, so that he has not any of them in his possession.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the date?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 31st of December, 1897. That will enable the hon. gentleman to get a list of the passes issued in 1898, and down to the present time in 1899.

Amendment agreed to, and motion, as amended, agreed to.

INTERNAL AND OCEAN FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. DAVIN moved for :

Copies of all letters or reports, official or otherwise, addressed to or in possession of the Department of Agriculture or any departments of the Government on the subject of freight rates from Canadian or other ocean ports on this continent to any part of Europe; also of all letters or reports on the subject of freight rates from Chicago and other points to ocean ports, to Montreal, New York or elsewhere; also of all letters or reports on the subject of freight rates from Chicago or other points to Liverpool.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection at all to granting the motion of my hon. friend, but I would call his attention to the fact that he asks for "letters or reports, official or otherwise." We can only give him what is official; we cannot give him copies of letters that may be confidential. I move, therefore, that the words "or otherwise" be struck out.

Amendment agreed to, and motion, as amended, agreed to.

SOULANGES CANAL CONTRACTS.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Mills) moved for :

Copies of all letters or notices sent to the contractors by the Minister of Railways and Canals, or the Chief Engineer, with relation to the carrying out of the work on the several sections on the Soulanges Canal, and the replies made there-to by the contractors.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). If the hon. gentleman will consent to limit that to the re-letting of the work, it will go as a matter of course. As it is worded now, he will see that it goes back over a very long period of time, and it would take the whole session to prepare the papers. I move that the words "carrying out" be struck out, and the word "re-letting" be inserted instead.

Amendment agreed to, and motion, as amended, agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

OMISSION OF NAME FROM DIVISION LIST.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call your attention and the attention of the House to an error which I desire to have corrected. Last night I voted "yea" on the amendment to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram). I find, however, on referring to the Votes and Proceedings, that my name has been inadvertently omitted from the list. I desire to be recorded as having voted "yea."

Mr. SPEAKER. The correction will be made in the Votes and Proceedings—at least, a note of it will be inserted.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 52) to incorporate the Canadian Yukon Railway Company.—(Mr. Morrison.)

Bill (No. 57) respecting the British Yukon Mining, Trading and Transportation Company, and to change its name to the British Yukon Railway Company.—(Mr. Fraser, Guysborough.)

Bill (No. 58) respecting the Central Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Edwards, by Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (No. 59) to incorporate the Russell, Dundas and Grenville Counties Railway Company.—(Mr. Edwards, by Mr. Gibson.)

CONSTRUCTIONS OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston) moved that Bill (No. 19) to amend the Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters, be read a second time. He said: This is an Act of rather a formal character, but it is of considerable importance. The Revised Statutes of Canada provide for two classes of cases in reference to obstructions over navigable waters. When a pier is to be built, or anything else that interferes with navigable waters, an application has to be made to the Governor in Council through the Minister of Public Works. That provides for two classes of cases: One, where the work was to be constructed, the other where the work had already been constructed. These Revised Statutes were passed, as the House will remember, in 1886. Therefore, the law provides for works to be built at any time, and it also provides for works that have been constructed prior to the passing of that Act. Now, since the passing of that Act certain works have been constructed in several of the lake ports of the Dominion and certain ports on the Pacific Coast. A question has come up on an application for the consent of the Governor in Council to such a work, and it has been held that there is no jurisdiction to grant a consent, that the statute I have just referred to only applies to these two classes of cases I have mentioned. Now, this Act proposes that Section 6 of the Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters, being chapter 92 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, shall be repealed, and the following substituted therefor :—

The Governor in Council may approve of any work constructed prior to the 1st day of March, 1889, and of the site and plans of such work, and any local authority, company or person may proceed in such manner as the Minister of Public Works directs to obtain such approval.

When the case came up on my application to the Minister of Public Works, it was suggested that legislation might be had that would legalize any of these piers that have been constructed, but the answer to that was that that would be in the nature of a private Bill, and so it was thought better to amend the Act and bring it down to date, so that works constructed prior to the 1st of March, 1889, would stand in exactly the same position as works that had been constructed prior to 1886. That is the object of this statute. There seems to be no objection on the part of the Ministers to whom I have spoken about it.

Mr. TISDALE. Would the hon. gentleman say if there is any difference between the wording of this clause and the statute, except in the dates ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, there is.

Mr. TISDALE. Then it might affect the principle.

Mr. BRITTON. No, it does not affect the principle at all, but it affects the mode of obtaining consent. The hon. gentleman will see that section 5 reads thus :

The local authority, company or person proposing to construct any work in navigable waters, for which no sufficient sanction otherwise exists, may deposit the plans thereof and a description of the proposed site with the Minister of Public Works, and a duplicate of each in the office of the registrar of deeds for the district, county or province in which such work is proposed to be constructed, and may apply to the Governor in Council for approval thereof, and shall give one month's notice of said deposit of plans and application, by advertisement in the "Canada Gazette," and in two newspapers published in or near the locality where such work is to be constructed.

Section 6 :

Any local authority, company or person may proceed in like manner to obtain the approval by the Governor in Council of the site and plans of any work heretofore constructed.

In drafting the Bill I drafted it in accordance with the section as it stands in regard to the mode of applying to get the approval of the Governor in Council, but I thought that no harm could be done if the section were passed as it appears in the Bill, so as to provide, that instead of requiring that the advertisement should appear in the "Gazette" and in a local paper, and that plans should be registered, as provided in the preceding section, any person may proceed in such a manner as the Minister of Public Works directs to obtain such approval. That is the only point of difference.

Mr. D. TISDALE (South Norfolk). It seems to me that this is a very serious business. It is a most important matter to interfere with navigable waters. As I understand the distinction, under the present law, you must give a month's notice and proceed by Order in Council. I have only read this section since the hon. gentleman brought it up, but, as I understand the section, it will put the whole matter in the power of the Minister of Public Works. The proposed section reads, as applying to all future applications :

And of the site and plans of such work, and any local authority, company or person may proceed in such manner as the Minister of Public Works directs to obtain such approval.

It seems to me that that supersedes the necessity of the notice if the Minister sees fit, and it will not require the authority of an Order in Council.

Mr. BRITTON. Oh, yes, it certainly requires an Order in Council.

Mr. TISDALE. Is it your intention that an Order in Council shall be required ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, clearly so.

Mr. TISDALE. It seems to me, though I have not read the Bill before, to make a wide departure from the old Act. The section says :

The Governor in Council may approve of any work constructed prior to the 1st day of March, 1889,—

As I understand the hon. gentleman there have been works constructed without any approval.

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. And without some such authority. Then there would be no way of getting approval. It seems to me reasonable that there should be a remedy for that, but the subsequent part of the section says :

—and of the site and plans of such work.—

And then as to the future :

—And any local authority, company or person may proceed in such manner as the Minister of Public Works directs to obtain such approval.

Not to do the work but to obtain such approval.

Mr. BRITTON. That is right.

Mr. TISDALE. Does that mean the approval of the Governor in Council ?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. Well, why do you change section 5, which is very simple and says that notice shall be given. The object of that notice is, in case there may be interests affected thereby, and that would mean, of course, public interests, that the people, or locality, or whoever may be interested, should have some notice. There may be good reasons why contemplated works should not be approved or where there should be special conditions attached to that approval. Speaking for myself, I think it very wise that in the case of any interference with navigable waters everybody should be given an opportunity of being heard. Probably the hon. gentleman in framing the clause might not have fully considered that, because it is a very important distinction. I do not think it should be any hardship, and it is a wise provision in the old law, that notice should be required. Am I right in that, because I know the hon. gentleman has considered it more than I have, that the only variation is that he dispenses with the notice.

Mr. BRITTON. It dispenses with the notice and the registration of the plans in the registry office, that is all. It is a matter of importance for different reasons. I thought that that was hardly necessary because I thought that, in any case, where any interest would be affected, the Minister of Public Works would require notice to be given. There are some cases in which the interference might be very slight, and yet my hon. friend knows, as a lawyer, that the result might possibly be very serious. For instance, the extension of a pier, a very few feet into a channel, while put there with the entire approval of the municipal authorities, after the definite approval of the mayor, and with the knowledge and approval of the Minister of Public Works might, if an obstruction to navigation be caused, render the person putting it there liable, and it was for the purpose of getting approval, as provided for by chap. 92 of the Revised Statutes that I introduced the Bill. In such a case as that where there would be really no opposition, it seems to me, unnecessary to put a party to the large expense in order to obtain the approval. However, if the House is of the opinion that that precaution ought to be taken, the Bill can be amended in committee. I will be willing to have that done.

Mr. TISDALE. I would not object for a moment to the Bill going to committee. I think the hon. gentleman can hardly have considered the full significance of omitting the notice, and of the principle that underlies it. However, in such a case as he mentions it might be of no account, but it is equally true that a very important change might be made if the notice were dispensed with, and it is a very different principle to say that the Minister should have the power of approval, without notice, so that the whole responsibility is left upon him. It seems to me it takes away the safeguards of those who may be interested. As we are only discussing the principle, I have no objection to its going to a second reading.

Mr. DAVIN. Before this Bill goes to its second reading, I would like to ask whether the expense that the hon. gentleman wishes to obviate is the expense entailed by section 5, of the notice in the "Gazette"?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. And the expense of registration?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, and the expense of registration.

Mr. DAVIN. Practically, then, it is proposed to substitute this for the present section to a certain extent. It repeals section 5?

Mr. BRITTON. No.

Mr. DAVIN. To a certain extent it will do so. It amends section 5, actually, by implication, because, if the Bill of my hon. friend became law, any local authority that constructed any works, of any kind, all they would have to do would be to go to the Minister of Public Works, lay their plans before him, and, according to his directions, and under his approval, proceed to get the approval of the Governor in Council.

Mr. BRITTON. It is not to be assumed that a person constructing public works would go deliberately about that construction without applying for the sanction of the Governor in Council. Section 5 only applies to public works to be constructed and a person had to get the approval of the Governor in Council before proceeding with such construction. This Bill is only to provide for a case where, with the knowledge of all parties the works have been constructed, but where the sanction of the Governor in Council has not been obtained.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The object of this Bill seems to be a deserving one, and nobody objects. It is intended to legalise works which have been constructed without the sanction of the law and without complying with all the formalities of the law. I believe this is quite proper, but I rather agree with the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) that when we give to a man who has erected works without the sanction of the law, without taking the precaution of coming to the Governor in Council as he might have done, we may give him the privilege of doing what he could not do unless we permit him. We may give him the privilege to come before the Governor General in Council to do that which he should have done, but if he is allowed to do that because he contravened the law, he should not be placed in any better position than if he conformed to the law. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is right when he says, that the same formality should apply to this tardy application which would apply if it had been made in due time under the law. I think it is proper the Bill should be read a second time, go to the committee, and be amended in committee so as to provide that the same procedure shall apply as in an ordinary case.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

WINDING-UP ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. THOS. FORTIN (Laval) moved second reading of Bill (No. 31) to amend the Winding-Up Act. He said: I may state that the object of this Bill is to empower the court in the case of the liquidation of joint stock companies, to appoint inspectors as well as liquidators. It is well known to the members of the legal profession that the Winding-Up Act is the Insolvency Act of joint stock companies. The business carried on by joint stock companies, whether incorporated by Letters Patent or by Act of Parliament, is nearly always important and extensive. Their business is generally in the line of manufacturing industries, and when they come to liquidation their estates are generally very important. The law as it stands provides for the appointment of one or more liquidators, and of course for the payment of the liquidator, the amount being determined by the court. There is, however, no provision for the appointment of inspectors or advisers to the liquidators, and in the absence of such provision, in the district of Montreal, the judges have adopted as a rule, to appoint inspectors—a very necessary proceeding in some cases but an obviously illegal one as the law does not provide for such appointment. In view of the importance of the liquidation of such estates as may be possessed by joint stock companies, it is useful, if not absolutely necessary, that the liquidators shall be advised by a board of inspectors. This Bill, which I propose, provides for the amendment of two sections of the Winding-Up Act. In the first place, it provides for the appointment of inspectors at the same time the liquidator is appointed. The first section of the Bill which is to amend section 20 of the Winding-Up Act, reads as follows:—

The court may also appoint one or more inspectors, whose duty it shall be to assist and advise the liquidator and supervise generally the liquidation of the company.

Now, section 20 of the Winding-Up Act, reads as follows:—

The court, in making the winding-up order, may appoint a liquidator, or more than one liquidator, of the estate and effects of the company, but no such liquidator shall be appointed unless a previous notice is given to the creditors, contributories, shareholders or members, in the manner and form prescribed by the court.

My amendment to section 20, therefore, gives the court power to appoint inspectors as well as liquidators. Section 2 of this Bill is to amend section 28 of the Winding-Up Act, which provides as follows:—

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The liquidator shall be paid such salary or remuneration, by way of percentage or otherwise, as the court directs upon such notice to the creditors, contributories, shareholders or members, as the court orders; and if there is more than one liquidator, the remuneration shall be distributed amongst them in such proportions as the court directs.

Now, the second section of this Bill provides that the following subsection shall be added to section 28:—

The court may also determine the remuneration, if any is deemed just, of the inspector or inspectors.

It will be seen that the object of the amendment is not to provide for the payment of inspectors in every case. If the estate were a small one, for instance, the circumstances of the case might not warrant the court providing for the payment of inspectors. But on the other hand, it may be a very important estate and the services rendered by the inspector may justify the court in ordering payment. The third section of this Bill has for its object to amend section 31 of the Winding-Up Act.

Mr. TISDALE. You want to amend subsection (f) of section 31?

Mr. FORTIN. Yes. Section 31 of the Winding-Up Act enumerates the powers which might be exercised by the liquidator under the authority of the court, and it will be noticed by the Winding-Up Act that the liquidator may even be authorized to continue the business of the company in liquidation. A case in point of a joint stock company which was put in liquidation a few months ago in the city of Montreal is the Pratte Piano Company. The business is of such a nature that it was impossible to stop it at once. Some pianos were in the process of manufacture, and there was a good deal of material prepared. These instruments had to be completed and the liquidator was authorized to continue the business. In such a case the board of directors no doubt would render assistance, as the liquidator was only one man and evidently would require somebody to advise him. Now subsection (f) of section 31 authorizes the liquidator to—

Draw, accept, make and indorse any bill of exchange or promissory note in the name and on behalf of the company; raise upon the security of the assets of the company, from time to time, any requisite sum or sums of money; and the drawing, accepting, making or indorsing of every such bill of exchange or promissory note, as aforesaid, on behalf of the company, shall have the same effect, with respect to the liability of such company, as if such bill or note had been drawn, accepted, made or indorsed by or on behalf of such company in the course of the carrying on of its business.

The second sentence in this clause:

To raise, upon the security of the assets of the company, from time to time, any requisite sum or sums of money.

authorizes the liquidator to contract obligations upon the security of the assets in liquidation, but it does not say how the contract is to be executed. Now, it is impossible, under the general law, to pledge the assets of a company without the delivery of the goods pledged; at least, in the province of Quebec no contract pledge is valid unless the goods given by way of security are delivered to the creditor or to a third person agreed upon by the parties. The object of the third section of my Bill is to declare that in such a case the lien or pledge shall be good without delivery of the goods. I propose to add to paragraph "f" of section 31 of the Act these words:

And no delivery of the whole or any part of the assets of the company shall be necessary to give a lien to any person making a loan to, or discounting any negotiable instrument of, the liquidator in virtue of the provisions of this section.

This I deem to be a very useful provision, because, as in the case I mentioned a moment ago, the liquidator required a considerable sum of money to carry on the business in the best interests of the creditors. It was necessary for him to borrow money from a bank, and he had considerable difficulty in arriving at the contract by which security could be given to the bank owing to the law requiring the goods pledged to be delivered. The object of this third section is to provide that in such a case no delivery shall be necessary. If delivery is necessary, it is obvious that it would embarrass the liquidation, because there can be no liquidation if the liquidator is not in possession of the assets, and cannot dispose of them for the benefit of the creditors. I do not think there can be any serious objection to this Bill. It is a remedy for what perhaps was not foreseen, and its purpose is to improve the efficacy of the Act, and to render liquidation more profitable for the creditors of the joint stock company.

Mr. D. TISDALE (South Norfolk). Mr. Speaker, I think there is more in this Bill than the hon. gentleman seems to have considered. As to the question of inspectors, that is a very small question. It is largely a question of expenditure; and as to that, so far as I have heard, there has been no serious complaint about the Winding-Up Act in its present shape. One or two liquidators may be appointed, and they can only be appointed by the court, after notice to the creditors. So that if we accept the principle of inspectors, we must provide proper protection for the creditors; that is, the court shall not appoint an inspector without notice to the creditors, so as to give them the same opportunity of appearing at the hearing as the liquidators. But unless the hon. gentleman is prepared to show that trouble has arisen, it seems to me a matter of serious consideration whether we are to add a new class of officials to be paid out of the estate, to advise those who, so far as I have heard, have managed these matters under the instructions of the court, without the necessity of inspectors.

Mr. FORTIN. They have not necessarily to be paid.

Mr. TISDALE. The second clause says that they are to be paid by the court.

Mr. FORTIN. If any remuneration is deemed just by the court, they may be paid.

Mr. TISDALE. We know what "may" means in these cases. If inspectors are necessary, it is quite proper that they should be paid, because we know that competent gentlemen cannot afford to give their time unless they are paid out of the estate. The amount of the liquidators' pay is in the discretion of the court. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman would for one moment ask us to pass the Bill if we said they should not be paid; nor do I think it would be just to them. Under the present law, there can be more than one liquidator if the estate is large enough. The great difficulty I have always found in any of these cases, as well as in cases coming under the bankruptcy law, has been the difficulty of expense. Simplicity is the great object in all these Acts. Therefore, before the House is asked to increase the machinery, we should be sure that it is absolutely necessary to do so; otherwise I do not think it would be wise. When we come to the third section, we find a most extraordinary provision. We are asked to say that the property of an estate shall be bound, and a lien put upon it, by a simple promissory note. This is a provision unparalleled in the legislation of this country.

Mr. FORTIN. Will the hon. member allow me one word?

Mr. TISDALE. I shall be glad if the hon. gentleman will explain in what Acts provision is made for giving a lien by a simple promissory note.

Mr. FORTIN. Perhaps I did not explain it clearly enough. Under the law as it stands, there is a liquidator to raise money on the security of the assets of the company from time to time.

Mr. TISDALE. I quite understand that.

Mr. FORTIN. Allow me one word more. The object is not to authorize the liquidator to raise money. He is already authorized to do so; but the object is merely to provide that he can raise such money on the security of the assets of the company without turning over the assets into the hands of the money-lender, which would make the liquidation impossible.

Mr. TISDALE. The hon. gentleman has totally misconceived my point. The general law of the country is this, that a promissory note binds the property of a man after he gets judgment, until the note is paid. The hon. gentleman's argument that the general law of the land does not give any direction how the liquidator is to pledge the property of the company is what I am speaking about. It allows the liquidator to give such security as the law authorises and makes necessary, because, to all intents and purposes, he is the company. He represents the company, and the statute says that his notes and bills shall be the same as if the person he represents gave them. What does my hon. friend ask? I have yet to learn that there is an Act upon our Statute-book that authorises any person or representative or trustee to give a promissory note and make it a lien upon the general property. What might happen? You might be overriding a lien that did exist. At all events, you are introducing a confusing principle, because you are saying that by a process so far unknown to the law you can put a lien upon the property. You would be introducing a most general and most dangerous principle. We must be careful, above all other things, to follow general principles, and the general principle in the Winding-Up Act, the Bankruptcy Act, and in the Act relating to warehousing and all these matters is that to bind a property you must give a specific security on the particular property, so that those interested may know how they stand. You may say that he may give a note, which shall bind the property, but he may give a hundred notes, and which is to have the priority? We ought to proceed cautiously. Has the hon. gentleman consulted the Trade and Commerce Department or obtained the opinion of the Minister of Justice? Because, before we are asked to pass upon this Bill, we should have the opinion of the Justice Department as to whether it is proper legislation for us to pass. I am strongly of opinion that the right hon. First Minister will largely agree with me, because these are far-reaching and most important principles, and we certainly ought not to make such sweeping legislation without having the opinion of the Justice Department.

Mr. FORTIN. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman—

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not wish to interrupt but hon. members should remember that we are not in Committee of the Whole, and that on a motion for the second reading, one speech only is allowed to each member, otherwise we would be repeating ourselves in committee.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say to my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin) that I am disposed to agree largely in the views expressed by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). The proposition of my hon. friend from Laval that inspectors should be appointed is one as to which I would like to have the views of the trade at large. There is great force in what has been said by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) to the effect that all legislation of that kind should be made as simple as possible. At present the judge is authorized to appoint one or more liquidators and is not limited as to the number, if the estate is of such a character and magnitude as to require more than one liquidator, and I think it is just as well to leave to the judge the discretion of appointing more than one liquidator rather than give him the additional privilege of appointing inspectors. If inspectors are appointed, it will be because it is considered that they are necessary to the liquidation of the estate, and under such circumstances they will have to be paid. Creditors have a strong objection to all these acts because of the expense they entail, and I believe the object of legislation is to make the expenditure as light as possible. But the gravamen of the objection is the last one mentioned by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale.) I think I can understand the view in the mind of my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin.) It is very true that power is given in subsection F of section 31 to the liquidator to raise upon the security of the assets of a company, from time to time, any requisite sum, but under such circumstances he says that the liquidator is to be authorized to raise money for the security of the assets without any delivery of the whole or any part of the assets being necessary. My hon. friend had in view evidently the law of the province of Quebec which provides that no security can be valid by contract alone, but that there must be an actual delivery into the hands of the man who makes the advance. Under such circumstances, if the liquidator were to raise $5,000, and he would, under the law of Quebec, have to give actual possession of his security, and if he were to give an asset, say to the value of $20,000, he could not realize on that security unless it came back to his possession, and the creditors might be deprived of a very valuable asset. The question is not free from difficulty, and I think it is wise that we should have the opinion of the trade and also that of the Minister of Justice before proceeding further. I would move, therefore, that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. FORTIN. Before the motion is put, I wish to add a few words of explanation. It must be remembered, in the first place, that there is a great difference between inspectors and liquidators. It is true that the law provides for the appointment of one or more liquidators, but by the law the liquidators must be paid in every case, whereas the inspectors, under this Bill, need not be paid in every case but only at the discretion of the court.

Now, as a matter of fact, it is well known that the inspectors are always chosen from amongst the largest creditors, those who are most interested to avoid any useless expense in the liquidation of the affairs of the company. So, it seems to me, that the objection of expense does not apply to the Bill as I propose it; because, I repeat, it is left to the discretion of the court to fix or to refuse any remuneration to the inspectors.

Now, as regards the necessity for the appointment of inspectors, I have stated some reasons for that already. The best evidence that they are necessary is to be found in the fact that the courts in nearly every case do appoint inspectors. I think the hon. member for St. Anne's, Montreal (Mr. Quinn) who is present, will bear me out when I say that in many cases the judges of the Superior Court of the district of Montreal agree among themselves and have established as a rule to appoint inspectors to advise the liquidators. The moment a thing is found to be necessary to such an extent as to have the courts practically make the law, it seems to me merely a matter of regularity that the proper authorities—this Parliament—should step in and change the law so as to bring the law into accord with the practice.

Now, with regard to the third paragraph, the hon. member (Mr. Tisdale) seems to be afraid lest the principle involved in this paragraph should, in practice, be disadvantageous. But it ought to be borne in mind that the moment a company is put into liquidation, the moment a contract is entered into by the liquidator for the liquidation, all the assets of the liquidation are pledged as security for the payment of that debt. In other words, when the liquidator enters into a contract, the liquidation is considered as a judicial person. All the debts contracted by the liquidator in the course of liquidation are to be paid by the liquidation, one hundred cents on the dollar. These debts are not to rank as the debts of the company before the insolvency. Therefore, there can be no possible objection, it seems to me, so far as the pledging of the total estates of the company is concerned. The hon. member says that this will be equivalent to giving the assets of the company as security for the payment of a debt created by the signature of a note by the liquidator. It does not extend the scope of the law as it is to-day, it does not confer any new power upon the liquidator. The liquidator to-day, if he signs a note on behalf of the liquidation and for the purpose of the liquidation, binds the liquidation to pay that note in full. As I have said, and as the Prime Minister said, it is obviously impossible for the liquidator to go on with the liquidation of a company if he has to deliver any part or the whole of the assets to a bank or any other person. The hon. member (Mr. Tisdale) says that perhaps the Minister of Justice has not been consulted. It seems to me that for these difficulties that are found in practice, amendments may be made to meet them without in every case, calling upon the Minister of Justice. As regards the trade, I may say that it is in accord with the wishes of all those who have anything to do with liquidations of that kind. The defect of the law has been pointed out repeatedly; and, just a very few months ago, the same thing occurred. As I have said, it would not add anything to the expenditure. It may add to the expense in some cases where the inspectors have any work. However, whenever it might be necessary to pay the inspectors, it would be in the best interest of the creditors. When the inspectors are called upon to take an active part in the liquidation, it is only fair that they should be paid. It is in the interest of all parties concerned that inspectors should be paid for all work done by them.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). In so far as the Bill provides for the appointment of inspectors, I am thoroughly in accord with it. I think that the effect is to some extent, to make it more like the Ontario Winding-Up Act. The defect in the Ontario Act is that it gives the shareholders too much power and the creditors too little power. Perhaps there should be some amendment in that that would give the court power over inspectors, as to appointment and remuneration, more than exists at present. So far as I have been able to consider it, the Bill seems unobjectionable so far as the power of appointing inspectors is concerned, and it follows, as a matter of course, that if they are appointed and do their work, they are entitled to remuneration for it. Therefore, I have nothing to say against the first two sections of the Bill. But, as I may not have another opportunity, I desire to state now that I am entirely opposed to the last clause. It is not in accordance with any legislation with reference to property and creditors as we understand it in Ontario—and it must be remembered that this is a Dominion Act, and applies to every province. I object to this clause for two reasons. In the first place, according to the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Fortin's) own remarks, it is entirely unnecessary. The liquidator has power to carry on business and to do everything in reference to the estate—of course, under the direction of the court—and therefore it follows that any liability by the liquidator as such, must be paid as a first claim out of the estate. It cannot be supposed that first the company may become insolvent and go into the hands of a liquidator, and that the liquidator as liquidator may become insolvent in regard to carrying on the business. Therefore, there will be ample security to pay the liabilities of the liquidator as such, and so the Bill is unnecessary. Further, the Act provides, if it is necessary to give a lien upon the property of the company the liquidator has power to hypothecate and give any instrument that an individual could give under similar circumstances if the property were his own. On this ground also, this Bill seems unnecessary. Then being unnecessary it may be exceedingly dangerous. It, by implication, gives a lien to every creditor who holds the promissory note of the liquidator. If it gives a lien to one creditor, it gives a lien to every one, and there arises the difficulty, suggested as a difficulty at first blush, by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). But besides that it goes directly against the legislation which obtains in this province, that no security shall be given upon any property unless it is in writing and registered, or unless the transfer of it is accompanied by an actual delivery and a continued change of possession. It is going too far to cover the mere giving of a promissory note, because that is what it says by implication :

And no delivery of the whole or any part of the assets of the company shall be necessary to give a lien to any person making a loan to, or discounting any negotiable instrument of, the liquidators in virtue of the provisions of this section.

Now a liquidator has power to borrow money and to give a note for that money, and he gives with it—that is a necessary inference from the wording—he gives with it a lien to the person with whom this note is discounted. Therefore, this result might follow, that although the creditors are fully protected by the fact that the liquidator must pay these debts created by him first, before the ordinary debtors of the company can get their pay, a holder of a note from the liquidator, by virtue of that lien, may take proceedings to enforce his lien as against the liquidator and practically take the property out of the liquidator's hands. That seems to be one result that might come from a section such as that. Therefore, I submit it is too dangerous a section to be allowed to pass.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

SALE OF RAILWAY PASSENGER TICKETS.

Mr. T. BEATTIE (London) moved that Bill (No. 32) to amend the Act respecting the sale of railway passenger tickets, be read the second time. He said: I may say that this amendment is asked for in the interest of the Steam Ferry Boat Company between Windsor and Detroit. They have a very excellent line of ferry boats, five or six in number, worth something like half a million dollars. Under their charter they are obliged to sell 10 tickets for 25 cents, but they go further than that, and sell them for a cent and a half a piece to any person buying one dollar's worth. Speculators buy them in quantities for a dollar, and sell them out to newsboys and make a profit out of them. This Bill is to prevent scalping those tickets. I do not think there should be any objection to it.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am sorry that I cannot agree with the Bill of my hon. friend, as it is framed at present, at all events. I do not find fault with the object that he has in view, which is to prevent scalping of ferry boat tickets as well as of railway tickets. The objection I have is this, and the hon. gentleman will understand it, perhaps it has escaped his notice. There are on the Ottawa River, and other rivers also, ferry boats plying between rural portions of the community, boats of a minor importance. There is one, for instance, between Ottawa and Hull, there is another, I believe, on the Ottawa River above here. They are mere ferry boats; but they are under the laws of Canada, and they would come under this Bill. But they are of such minor importance that they would be subjected to a great deal of inconvenience if they were brought under a law such as this. I would have no objection at all to the Bill of my hon. friend if it were limited to the case he has in his mind. I do not intend at this moment to object to his Bill, but I will ask that the debate be adjourned so that the case may be looked into, and in the meantime he may, perhaps, find some means of obviating the very serious objection I have pointed out to him. He will recognize at once that a small ferry, say, on the Ottawa River, between small villages, doing a very small business, where the merchants of the locality are allowed to sell tickets, one or two, or so—if you were to subject them to the penalty which this Bill provides, they would feel it a serious grievance.

Mr. INGRAM. I would ask the hon. gentleman if these small ferry boats sell tickets? I always understood that you simply pay your fare on the boat.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think they do.

Mr. BEATTIE. I am willing to accept the Premier's proposal.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 20th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

EXPENSES OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE.

Mr. GILLIES (by Mr. Wilson) asked :

What is the amount of travelling and living expenses for the hon. the Minister of Finance, also the travelling and living expenses of his private secretary, messenger or other servants or friends accompanying him, including cab-hire, railway or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses paid by the Government since the 1st day of July, 1898, till the 28th February, 1899, inclusive ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The amount paid to the Minister of Finance for travelling expenses from 1st July, 1898, to 28th February, 1899, inclusive, including expenses while acting Minister of Railways and Canals and trips to the United States in connection with the Washington negotiations, was $700. The expenses of the Minister's private secretary during the same period were $215.85.

EXPENSES OF THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What is the amount of travelling and living expenses for the hon. the Minister of Public Works, also the travelling and living expenses of his private secretary, messenger or other servants or friends accompanying him, including cab-hire, railway or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses paid by the Government since the 1st day of July, 1898, till the 28th February, 1899, inclusive ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I am instructed to say that the travelling and living expenses of the Hon. J. Israel Tarte, as Minister of Public Works for the period named, were $150; the expenses of his private secretary, including cab fares for the same period, were $626.18; the expenses of messengers and servants were nil; the expenses for cab-hire, nil; the expenses for private cars, $32.90.

THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—TOUR OF INSPECTION.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What was the name of the steamer used by the hon. Minister of Public Works last season on his tour of inspection of wharfs, harbours, piers, &c., from Montreal eastward, including his trip to or around the Island of Anticosti? Is or was said steamer owned by the Government?

What was the cost of the trip, including pay of crew, living expenses of the Minister, his secretary or messenger, or other servants or friends who accompanied him on said journey?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answer to that question involves such a large amount of detail that I am requested by the Minister of Public Works to ask that a motion be made for it.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

Mr. BRITTON asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to appoint a commission during the present year and otherwise to provide for the revision of the Statutes of Canada?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform my hon. friend that this question is under consideration.

GANANOQUE PUBLIC BUILDING—COAL CONTRACT.

Mr. TAYLOR asked :

1. To whom was the contract given at Gananoque to supply coal to the custom-house and post office for heating for the fall and winter of 1898-1899?

2. What price per ton was paid?

3. How many tons have been delivered?

4. Were tenders called for; if so, in what papers were they advertised?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. To Mr. C. E. Britton, of Gananoque. 2. $4.75 per ton, which is 45 cents per ton less than last year. 3. Thirty-six tons, the number contracted for. 4. A general advertisement covering all the public buildings in the Dominion was inserted in newspapers throughout the whole of Canada, calling for tenders for the coal required for the said public buildings. The form of the advertisement is annexed.

GODERICH HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. HENDERSON asked :

1. Did the hon. the Minister of Public Works give a contract to one Mr. McGillicuddy for certain improvements in Goderich harbour?

2. Were tenders called for? If so, in what papers were advertisements inserted calling for tenders?

3. What is the amount of the contract price?

4. When is the work to be completed?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Minister of Public Works instructs me to answer: 1. No. The contract was awarded to Smith & McGillicuddy, the lowest tenderers. 2. Yes. The advertisement calling for tenders was published in the following papers:—Goderich "Huron Signal," Clinton "New Era," Hanover "Post," Hastings

"Star," Sault Ste. Marie "Sault Express," Seaforth "Huron Expositor," Wroxeter "Observer," Thessalon "Algoma Advocate," Brantford "Expositor," Blyth "Standard," Brussels "Post," Chatham "Banner," Guelph "Mercury," Hamilton "Times," Hamilton "Herald," Kingston "Whig," Kingston "Freeman," London "Advertiser," Paris "Star-Transcript," St. Catharines "Journal," St. Thomas "Journal," Ottawa "Free Press," "United Canada," "Le Temps," Belleville "Ontario-Sun," Sarnia "Observer," Windsor "Record," "Le Progrès," Toronto "Globe," "Monetary Times," Montreal "Herald," "La Patrie," "Journal of Commerce," "Le Moniteur du Commerce," "Shareholder," St. John's "Le Canada Francais," Valleyfield "Le Progrès," Owen Sound "Advertiser," Collingwood "Bulletin," Napanee "Express," Sherbrooke "Le Progrès de l'Est," Mount Forest "Confederate," Ingersoll "Ingersoll Chronicle." 3. $56,700. 4. The date named in the contract for completion of work, 30th November next.

ST. JOSEPH DE LEVIS GRAVING DOCK.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to ask the House, at this session, to vote a sum of money towards lengthening and otherwise improving the graving dock at St. Joseph de Lévis?

2. If so, what amount will the House be asked to vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Minister of Public Works instructs me to say that the subject matter of that question is now engaging his attention.

VALLEYFIELD WATER POWER.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

Has the Minister of Public Works promised during the local election which took place in the county of Beauharnois, in the month of December, 1898, to deepen the bay at Valleyfield, so as to increase the water power for the manufacturers of that town, and is it the intention of the Government to carry out such works?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Minister of Public Works desires me to say, in answer to the hon. gentleman, that he did not make any promise to the manufacturers of Valleyfield to deepen the bay so as to increase the water power, but that he is giving to that question his best consideration.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS FOR VALLEYFIELD.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

Has the Minister of Public Works promised the electors of Valleyfield, during the local election which took place in the county of Beauharnois, in the month of December, 1898, that the Federal Government would build a post office, an excise office and a custom-house in their town, and is it the intention of the Government to have such buildings erected, and when ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. the Minister of Public Works did not make any promise to erect a post office, excise office or custom-house office in Valleyfield. But representations having been made to him by the citizens of that thriving town that they had been greatly neglected in the past, the hon. the Minister of Public Works promised to look carefully into their complaints.

BEAUHARNOIS WATER POWER.

Mr. BERGERON (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

Has the Minister of Public Works promised the directors of the woollen mills at Beauharnois, during the local election which took place in the county of Beauharnois in the month of December, 1898, that he would have some works made in the River St. Louis so as to increase the water power for their mills, and is it the intention of the Government to have such works made ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In answer to the hon. gentleman the Minister of Public Works begs to state that he never promised the manufacturers of Beauharnois to have works made in the River St. Louis, so as to increase the water power, but that he has been requested to do so, and that he will give his best consideration to the representations that have been made to him.

MESSRS. PETERSEN, TATE & CO.— DEPOSIT.

Mr. WALLACE asked :

Has any application been made to the Government, or any member thereof, by Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Co., of Newcastle-on-Tyne, or any one in their behalf for a refund of the deposit ($50,000) required of them for the proper fulfilment of their contract to establish a fast Atlantic service ? If so, what decision has been reached by the Government regarding such application ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Messrs. Petersen, Tate & Co. are seeking the return of the amount deposited, but no action has been taken by the Government in the matter.

Mr. WALLACE. What amount have they on deposit ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Ten thousand pounds sterling,

Mr. WALLACE. What about the guarantee ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The guarantee is not covered by the question ; that is dealt with otherwise. The question refers to the cash deposit and my answer has relation to that.

RIVIERE DU LOUP WHARF—COM- PLAINT BY JOSEPH GAGNE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether the Government or the Minister of Public Works have received a complaint in the following terms :—

“ Fraserville, P.Q., this 16th Sept., 1898.

“ To the Honourable Minister of Public Works, Ottawa.

“ Sir,—I have the honour to communicate to you the following facts which occurred in the course of the work now being done at the wharf at Rivière du Loup :—

“ 1. In the fall of 1897, and in 1898. F. F. Chamberland, superintendent of the said work, did, it appears, take into his possession and sell for his own profit the old deals taken from the said wharf, for the sum of about $60.

“ 2. The said F. F. Chamberland did, moreover, it is alleged, take, remove and convert to his own use about 37 to 47 new, choice pine deals, received from Arsène Dubé, of St. Louis du Ha Ha and worth from 50 cents to 60 cents each.

“ 3. The said F. F. Chamberland did, it is alleged, use the said deals in work done by him for private parties, in and out of the town of Fraserville, during the course of the spring.

“ 4. The said F. F. Chamberland did, it is alleged, take, remove and appropriate to himself the whole cedar taken from the said wharf, did have it cut up into cord-wood and removed to his private house.

“ 5. The said F. F. Chamberland did employ two workmen in the employ of the Government on said wharf, for private parties, and to haul, saw and cord the said wood in his yard, while he allowed their time to run and paid them for the Government.

“ I beg to ask for an immediate inquiry into all the said facts.

“ Your devoted servant,

his “ JOSEPH X GAGNE.
mark

“ Witness :

“ J. A. LeBEL..”

2. If so, has the Government or the Minister of Public Works given any and what reply to the said complaint ?

3. Is it the intention of the Government to institute an inquiry in order to ascertain the truth in relation to the said complaint ?

4. If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Minister of Public Works desires to answer this question as follows :—1. To the hon. gentleman's first question I beg to answer that I have received the said letter. 2. I have not given any reply. 3. It is not the intention of the Government to institute an inquiry. 4. Because Joseph Gagné, the complainant, is very well known in Fraserville and in the neighbourhood as a man of doubtful character. I may add that if any man of good standing will make any complaint against Mr. Chamberland, I will order an immediate investigation.

COST OF THE LIQUOR COMMISSION.

Mr. SUTHERLAND asked :

What was the cost to the Dominion Treasury of the Royal Commission issued by the late Government appointing the Rev. McLeod and others commissioners to inquire into and report upon the "Liquor Question" ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). $86,984.25.

HON. GEO. E. FOSTER—TRAVELLING EXPENSES.

Mr. McMULLEN asked :

What is the amount of the travelling and living expenses of the Hon. G. E. Foster, ex-Minister of Finance, whilst a Minister of the Crown ; also, what is the amount of the travelling and living expenses of his private secretaries, messengers, or other servants, or friends, who may have accompanied him, including cab-hire, railway or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses paid by the Government during the same period ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Hon. G. E. Foster, $8,297.02 ; private secretary, $748.08 ; total, $9,045.10.

Mr. HUGHES. For 18 years ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). He was not in office 18 years.

SIR CHARLES TUPPER—TRAVELLING EXPENSES.

Mr. McMILLAN asked :

What is the amount of travelling and living expenses for the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, Bart., also the travelling and living expenses of his private secretary, messenger or other servants, or friends accompanying him, including cab-hire, railway or steamboat travel, private cars and all other expenses paid by the Government whilst he was a Minister of the Crown and High Commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As Minister, including private secretary, $11,936.04 ; as High Commissioner, $5,045.25, in addition to whatever he spent in travelling expenses out of the allowance of $2,000 a year voted by Parliament towards the contingent expenses (water, light, fuel, carriage hire and railway fare) of the High Commissioner, of which no details are given.

STIKINE-TESLIN ROUTE—Mr. COSTE'S REPORT.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

Did the late chief engineer of the Public Works Department report in writing to the Minister of the said department the result of his survey on the Stikine-Teslin route ? Is it intended to distribute such report, if one was made ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In answer to the first part of the question the Minister of Public Works says : Yes, such a report was received, and if the hon. member desires it to be distributed, a motion must be made to that effect.

L'ARDOISE BREAKWATER.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. How much of the grant of $3,500, voted last session for the repairs of the L'Ardoise breakwater, has been expended ?

2. Upon what dates were the payments made of the amount so expended ?

3. For what purpose were these payments made ?

4. What portion of the amount voted has been paid out for stone and other material ?

5. What portion, if any, of the said grant of $3,500 has been paid out for labour actually performed in making repairs upon the breakwater ?

6. As a matter of fact, have any repairs whatever been made to the said breakwater since last session ?

7. What amount has been paid for inspection of material and supervision, and to whom paid, since September, 1898 ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Expenditure to date, $1,126.66. 2. Paid 16th February, 1899, $269.40 ; pay-lists and accounts for January and February in hands of paymaster who is now in Cape Breton and will probably make this payment about 28th of March, $857.26 ; total, $1,126.66. 3. Providing material for the work of repairing the breakwater, which is to be commenced in the spring. 4. Stone, $991.41 ; sundry supplies, $3 ; total, $994.41. 5. None as yet. 6. None as yet. 7. Paid to J. G. Monbourquette for superintending and inspecting materials delivered November to February, $120.25 ; paid labourers preparing place for deposit of materials, $12 ; total, $132.25. Grand total, $1,126.66.

PETIT DE GRAT BREAKWATER.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. Has the work upon the Petit de Grat breakwater, Richmond County, Nova Scotia, been completed ? If so, when ?

2. When was this work commenced ?

3. Who was the local superintendent or inspector of this work ?

4. What amount has been paid to him for services as inspector or superintendent ?

5. What has been the total amount expended up to date in the actual construction of this work ?

6. How much does the Government intend expending during the year 1899 upon this work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. No. Work was suspended on 30th November last, to be resumed in the spring. 2. On the 24th October, 1898. 3. Mr. Dominique Boudrot was the foreman. 4. $27. 5. $1,046.41. 6. $453.59. The balance of the appropriation of $1,500.

VICTORIA, B.C., POST OFFICE—TENDERS FOR SAFES.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

1. Were tenders called for, for the supplying and erecting of the elevators and safes or safe doors in the post office at Victoria, B.C. ?
2. If so, what were the names of the tenderers, and what was the amount of the tenders ?
3. To whom were the contracts, if any, given, and at what figures ?
4. If tenders were not invited, to whom were the contracts given, and at what prices ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Yes. 2. The following two tenders were received for the elevators : The Fensom Elevator Works of Toronto, $6,687 ; Lewis Bros. & Co., of Montreal, $9,400. Two tenders were also received for the vault, viz. : Messrs. J. and J. Taylor, of Toronto, $17,650 ; Goldie & McCulloch, of Galt, $20,000. 3. Contract for the elevators was given to the Fensom Elevator Works, Toronto, for the sum of $6,687. Messrs. J. & J. Taylor, of Toronto, were awarded the contract for the vault for the sum of $17,645. 4. Answered above.

MR. L. V. LABELLE.

Mr. DUGAS asked :

1. What official positions have been held by Ls. V. Labelle in the Department of Agriculture, since July, 1896 ?
2. What moneys have been paid to him, and for what ?
3. Is he now in the service of the Government, and in what capacity ?
4. Was he employed to go to the United States in order to examine certain industries, and report thereon to the Government ?
5. If so, what was the amount of his salary, and of his travelling and hotel expenses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. Mr. L. V. Labelle has been employed to give lectures, and information by other means, on the growing and handling of tobacco, at various times from 21st July to April, 1899. 2. $416.66 has been paid to Mr. Labelle for services, and $401.23 for travelling expenses. 3. Mr. Labelle is engaged as tobacco expert for the Department of Agriculture, his engagement being for one year from 18th April, 1899. 4. No. 5. Not being engaged in that capacity, nothing was paid.

DR. J. A. DUCHESNE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Did the Government give instructions to Dr. J. A. Duchesne, veterinary surgeon, of Chicoutimi, in the county of Chicoutimi, to give lectures on tuberculosis during the winter of 1898-99 ?
  2. If so, who recommended the said Duchesne, and on what grounds ?
  3. What is the salary of the said Duchesne, and how long is his term of service to last ?
  4. How much has been paid to him up to date ?
- Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). Mr. Duchesne was paid $3 a day and expenses while at work. He was to attend a certain series of meetings laid out by the Department of Agriculture in company with a lecturer on dairying and cold storage. $335.95 were paid to Mr. Duchesne altogether while in his employment. Mr. Duchesne was employed by the Department of Agriculture to give lectures on tuberculosis during the winter of 1898-99, and was recommended by Mr. Scriver, M.P., on the ground of his fitness for this work.

SCOWS FOR DREDGING AT ROBERVAL.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Is it true that the Government is having constructed at Roberval, county of Chicoutimi, by one W. Donaghoe, scows for carrying the earth raised by the dredge at that place ?
2. Are the said scows being constructed under contract, or by day's labour ? If so, who recommended the said Donaghoe for the said work and what are his prices, in detail, paid to him therefor ?
3. Who are his sureties ?
4. What work is he to perform for the Government in return for the prices agreed upon ?
5. What kind of lumber and timber is to be used, and at what prices ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In reply I beg to say: 1. No. 2. The scows will be constructed by day labour, under the direct supervision of an officer of this department, Mr. Donaghoe not having anything to do with the construction of said scows.

LEONCE P. BILODEAU—CONTRACT FOR STOREHOUSES.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Were the storehouses erected on the wharfs at Mistassini and St. Méthode or Tekouapé, constructed under contract by one Léonce P. Bilodeau, of Roberval ?
2. If so, had the Government asked for tenders, and had the said Bilodeau made the lowest tender ?
3. If the Government had not asked for tenders, who recommended the said Bilodeau for the work, and what reasons were urged to induce the Government to so act ?
4. How much has been paid to the said Bilodeau ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In reply I beg to say: 1. Yes. 2. An agreement was made with Mr. Bilodeau for the erection of the sheds in question for $150 each. 3. Mr. Bilodeau's offer was found by the local engineer to be satisfactory. 4. $150 each for the two sheds in question.

PARAGRAPH IN "LE SOLEIL."

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Whether the Government or the Controller of Customs have had cognizance of the following paragraph published in "Le Soleil" of 22nd March instant :—

"Mr. Wenceslas LeBel, customs officer, has been entrusted by Mr. Carroll with the task of revising the electoral lists, and is now going through the county" (of Kamouraska) ?

2. Should the statement of fact embodied in the foregoing paragraph be correct, are the Government prepared to dismiss the said Wenceslas LeBel, for political partisanship ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply I beg to say : 1. Neither the Government nor the Minister of Customs have had cognizance of the paragraph referred to. 2. The facts relative to the matter would have to be obtained before an expression of opinion could be given.

INFRACTIONS OF CUSTOMS LAW.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. When did the Government first become aware of alleged infractions of the customs law on the part of Frederick Schafheitlin and Michael Fitzgibbon, doing business in Montreal ?

2. What steps were taken to investigate the alleged frauds by the Department of Customs, and did they result in confirming the charges against these parties ?

3. Was information laid against them in the Exchequer Court or any other court for the recovery of duties and enforcement of penalties ; and if so, when and for what amount ?

4. Has any offer been made to the Government for settlement before or since the commencement of the suit for recovery ?

5. Has the case been yet disposed of either by decision of the court or by settlement with the Government, and if so, what has been the amount paid, and what penalties have been exacted ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). In reply I beg to say : 1. Formal charges in respect to infractions of the customs laws on the part of Frederick Schafheitlin and Michael Fitzgibbon, doing business in Montreal, were first transmitted to the Customs Department by the Collector of Customs at Montreal on December 11th, 1897. 2. The usual notice in such cases was sent to the parties on the 14th December, 1897, and the customs entries made by them for a series of years were inspected and tabulated. After consideration of the information furnished by the informant and the evidence collected in support thereof, and also papers filed by the said parties in their defence, it appeared that some infractions of the customs laws (the extent of which was undetermined) had been committed in respect to the goods entered for these importers. The documents and papers relating to the matter were transmitted to the Department of Justice. 3. After further investigation by the Department of Justice, informations were filed October 7th, 1898, against these importers as co-partners, under the name, style and firm of Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Company, and also against them as co-partners formerly doing business under the name, style and firm of Thouret, Fitzgibbon & Company.

The following are the amounts claimed on the information, viz. :—

|   |             |
|---|-------------|
| In the case of Fitzgibbon, Schafheitlin & Co.—                                      |             |
| (a) Balance of customs duties....   | $ 2,584 37 |
| (b) Value of goods forfeited.....   | 59,284 25   |
| (c) Additional value of goods forfeited .....                                       | 59,284 25   |
| (d) Penalties (other).....  | 23,200 00   |
| In the case of Thouret, Fitzgibbon & Co.—   |             |
| (a) Customs duties on importations from 1st January, 1892, to 30th April, 1895..... | 9,649 83    |
| And on importations from 1884 to 1892 .....   | 34,272 00   |
| (b) Interest on foregoing .....   |             |

4. No offer has been made to the Government for settlement before or since the suit for recovery. 5. The case has not been disposed of by decision of the court or by settlement with the Government.

A RAILWAY COMMISSION.

Mr. McMILLAN asked :

As a sum of money was placed in the Estimates last year for the purpose of collecting information and otherwise respecting a railway commission, is it the intention of the Government to take steps during the present session with a view of appointing a railway commission ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to inform my hon. friend that this matter is still engaging the attention of the Government.

CONTRACTS FOR TELEGRAPH LINE ON NORTH SHORE OF ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Before the contract was awarded to L. P. DeCourval for the putting up of the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, did the Government let the same work done by contract or by day's labour ?

2. If contracts were at any time awarded for the said work, before the date of the contract with the said L. P. DeCourval, what was the price per mile for putting up the said telegraph wire ?

3. If the work was done by the day, what was the price per day paid to the working hands, and were they not boarded, in addition to their pay ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). In reply I beg to say : 1. The various sections of the line between Murray Bay and Pointe aux Esquimaux were built partly by contract and partly by day labour. The section between Murray Bay and Mille Vaches (89 miles) was built by contract by the Montreal Telegraph Company in 1881. The section from Mille Vaches to Bersimis (53½ miles) was built by contract with the Great North-western Telegraph Company in 1882. The section from Trinity Bay to Moisie (129 miles) was built by contracts, of 16th March, 1883, and 13th June, 1884, with Messrs. Gagnon & Frères, while the sections on Manicouagan Peninsula (18 miles), from Godbout to Trinity Bay (32 miles), and from Moisie to Pointe aux Esquimaux (142 miles), were built by day labour. 2. The price of the first contract, with the Montreal Telegraph Company, was $135 per mile. That of the second, with the Great North-western Telegraph Company, from Mille Vaches to Bersimis, was $250 per mile. The contract price of the section built by Messrs. A. Gagnon & Frère was $89.75 per mile, not including wood clearance, which was subsequently made by day labour. 3. The price per day to the labourers employed was $1.30, partly in cash and partly in provisions. The total cost of construction per mile having been on an average of $139 per mile. The price paid to Mr. DeCourval was $105 per mile, to which must be added $22 per mile for wire, spikes and insulators, bringing the cost to $127 per mile.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Did the Government call for tenders before awarding the contract for putting up the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, in the county of Chicoutimi, to L. P. DeCourval ?

2. If so, how many tenders were forwarded to the Public Works Department ?

3. What was the amount of each tender, and the name of the party tendering ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I beg to reply : No public tenders were asked, the arrangement with Mr. L. P. DeCourval at $105 per mile being looked upon as very satisfactory, and his tender being favourably reported upon by the superintendent of the telegraph service.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Who were the persons who recommended L. P. DeCourval as contractor for the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, in the district of Chicoutimi ?

2. Is it true that at some date since June, 1896, the Government passed an Order in Council freeing L. P. DeCourval from the obligation of using cedar posts for the said line, and allowing him to use the timber he found on the spot, and even to attach the wire to standing trees along the line ?

3. If so, does that permission still stand ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I beg to reply : 1. Mr. DeCourval, as a land surveyor, had occasion to explore several times the region over which the line of telegraph was to pass. His tender, which was reported upon by the superintendent of the telegraph service as a fair and reasonable one, was accepted by the department. 2 and 3. No such Order in Council was passed.

WHARF AT RIVIERE LA PIPE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. What prices were paid for the stone used in building the wharf at Rivière La Pipe, county of Chicoutimi ?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

2. What prices were paid for the several kinds of timber and lumber used in the said works ?

3. Who recommended the man Pednault as supervisor of the said work ?

4. How much money had been paid to the said Pednault for services of any kind, for travelling expenses, for board, and on other grounds, before, during and after the construction of the said wharf, since 1st July, 1896 ?

5. Why did not the Government select for the said work a resident of Lake St. John district ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I beg to reply : 1. $4 per toise. 2. The prices paid for timber and lumber were the following :—Round, 9 in. to 11 in. diameter, spruce or pine, 5c. per lineal foot ; square, 11 in. x 11 in., spruce or pine, 10c. per lineal foot. All prices certified fair and reasonable by local engineer Blais. 3. Satisfactory to department. 4. The only payments made to A. Pednault, foreman, were the following :—Wages—March, 1898, $48 ; April, 1898, $44 ; total, $92. 5. The reason why Mr. Pednault, a resident of Chicoutimi, was entrusted with the construction of the works at Rivière La Pipe was that in the opinion of the engineer no competent foreman could be found at Rivière La Pipe, and the department is always anxious to employ practical carpenters.

PERMANENT MILITIA IN THE YUKON.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

1. What is the number of the permanent militia now in the Yukon district, men and officers ?

2. How are they distributed ?

3. What duties are they performing ?

4. What is the cost per day of the total force, maintenance and pay ?

5. Have they been called upon to quell any disturbances since their arrival in the Yukon ?

6. What was the total cost of transporting them from Ottawa to their several posts, and by what routes did they go ?

7. What were the dates of their leaving British Columbia and their arrival in the Yukon ?

8. Is it proposed to augment or diminish the force ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 202. 2. Ten officers and 120 non-commissioned officers and men at Fort Selkirk, and 2 officers and 70 non-commissioned officers and men at Dawson City. 3. Ordinary garrison duties. 4. The pay of the force at present, including extra pay and allowance, is about $235 per diem, and maintenance about $454 per diem at present prices of food and rates of freight. 5. Not up to date of latest report. 6. The cost of transporting the force to Selkirk was $19,838. They went via Wrangel, Telegraph Creek and Teslin Lake routes. 7. Left British Columbia 14th May, 1898. The first detachment arrived at Fort Selkirk 25th July following ; second and last, 11th September. 8. This matter is under consideration.

POST OFFICE, BERTHIER (EN HAUT).

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. What was the price paid by the Government for the purchase of the ground on which the post office of Berthier (en haut), in the county of Berthier, stands ?

2. What was the price originally paid by Government for the building wherein the post office is located ?

3. What has been the cost of repairs done to the building since its acquisition by Government ?

4. Who are the contractors who carried out the said repairs ?

5. Does the postmaster of Berthier occupy the said building ? If not, who does, and on what terms ?

6. What is the salary of the postmaster ?

7. What is the salary of any and every other person attached to the office or occupying the said building ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1 and 2. The price paid for the whole property, including the building wherein the post office is located, was $3,200. 3 and 4. The cost of repairing and improving the building was $1,246. The work was done by Grotée & Frères. The cost of box-fronts was $72.85 ; said box-fronts were supplied by Rubenstein, of Montreal. 5. He occupies the post office part of the building during office hours. The caretaker occupies the balance of the building ; he receives no salary, but is provided with fuel and light. 6 and 7. The Post Office Department, to which these questions relate, is preparing answers. The question had better be allowed to stand.

BOON & ARMSTRONG'S CONTRACT, COLLINGWOOD.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Have Boon & Armstrong, contractors for harbour works at Collingwood, assigned the original contract held by them to any person or persons ? If so, when was such assignment made ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No, the contractors have not assigned the contract.

MESSRS. COSTE AND LAFONTAINE IN THE YUKON.

Mr. QUINN asked :

What instructions were given by the Government or by the Minister of the department to Messrs. Coste and Lafontaine on their going to the Yukon ? What amount of money was spent by them in their work ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The subject matter to which this question refers can more properly be made the subject of a motion. I will have to ask my hon. friend (Mr. Quinn), if he desires the information, to move for a return.

OVERFLOW OF RED RIVER, ST. NORBERT.

Mr. LARIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to put a sufficient amount in the Estimates to indemnify the owners of lands in the parish of St. Norbert, in the province of Manitoba, who have suffered from the overflow of the Red River on lot 50 of that parish ; and to do such work as may be required to prevent this overflow in the future ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This subject is engaging the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), and the hon. gentleman (Mr. LaRivière) will see the result when the Estimates are brought down.

CLAIM OF J. P. O. ALLAIRE.

Mr. LARIVIERE asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to include in the Estimates an amount to cover the claim of J. P. O. Allaire, of St. Boniface, as the same appears in a return made by the accountant of the Inland Revenue Department, dated 4th January, 1896, and presented to this House during the session of that year ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). This subject is now under consideration.

PAPERS RESPECTING THE PLEBISCITE.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the First Minister—the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), I see, is not present—to the fact that the returns held by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, from which the Minister of Agriculture quoted in an address he gave here a few days ago, have not been laid on the Table of the House. When I made the request that this be done, the ruling of Mr. Speaker was, that these papers ought to be brought down, and brought down as soon as possible after being quoted from. Now, if my hon. friend will allow me, I may say that the subject matter ranged over a very wide series of counties and polling places. I do not wish to put the Government to the trouble of bringing all these down at present. If they would bring down the papers for the counties of Beauce, Lévis, Montmagny, and Kamouraska, it would be sufficient for the present. I only want the polling-books and copies of the voters' lists, as they were used at the time of the vote.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must say, that I cannot agree with the statement of facts just made by my hon. friend (Mr. Foster). My recollection is, that my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) expressly disclaimed quoting from any document in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose it would be out of the usual order to have a discussion on this matter now; but I would like to point out to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) how very—I do not like to say, how thin that excuse is—how very fragile is the excuse he gives for not bringing down these papers. If you, Mr. Speaker, object to my going on at this time, I have only to say I will put myself right by a motion afterwards. But I should not take more than two or three minutes to explain the matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. It will be necessary to have a motion.

Mr. FOSTER. I will put myself in order.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is hardly necessary to make a motion. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), if he wants to bring the matter up, to wait until the Minister of Agriculture is present.

EMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I would like to ask the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), if his attention has been drawn to a telegraphic despatch in the Canadian newspapers respecting the exodus of our people, especially from the province of Quebec, to the United States. I hold in my hand a copy of a portion of yesterday's Montreal "Star," in which appears the following despatch, copied from a special despatch to the New York "Commercial Advertiser":

Boston, April 19.—The influx of Canadians to New England this spring is the heaviest known for many years and is causing the Canadian Government officials some uneasiness. The backward spring in Canada, higher wages and improved outlook in manufacturing towns on this side of the line are the causes of the movement. It is estimated that almost 20,000 persons, a large proportion of whom are French Canadians, have crossed the line this season. Usually at this time the tide of travel favours Canada, but this year the annual exodus is very limited.

The influx has upset the plans of the Canadian Government, which proposed to take thousands of French to Quebec and settle them on free land. The labour market here is oversupplied and lower wages for farm labourers are predicted. Many of the cotton mills report that they have more applications for employment than they can accept.

I would like to ask if the attention of the right hon. the Prime Minister has been drawn to this despatch, if there is any foundation for it, and if so, what is the intention of the Government respecting the matter?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My attention has not been drawn to this despatch. I have only to say that I do not believe the statement of the "Star," not even when it is backed up by an American paper.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

CONSTRUCTIONS OVER NAVIGABLE WATERS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 19) to amend the Act respecting certain works constructed in or over navigable waters.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BRITTON. In deference to the opinion expressed in the House yesterday, I beg to move that, instead of the words as printed, the following shall be the section:—

Any local authority, company or person may proceed in like manner to obtain the approval by the Governor General in Council of the site and plans of any work constructed prior to the 1st day of March, 1899.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the object of the hon. gentleman's amendment?

Mr. BRITTON. The object of the Bill is to provide for obtaining the sanction of the Governor General in Council to works constructed after the passing of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, and down to date. The Revised Statutes provide for two classes of cases: One class is works to be constructed, and for such works the consent of the Governor in Council might be obtained by giving notice and filing a plan, and then applying to the Governor in Council for that consent. Then section 6 provides that in like manner consent could be obtained to works heretofore constructed. But apparently persons thought that they could obtain the consent of the Governor in Council after they had constructed their works, and so certain works were constructed, docks on the Pacific coast, and docks and wharfs on the St. Lawrence. Application was made, but the interpretation put upon the statute was, and I suppose properly so, that they could not get their consent after the construction had been completed, after the wharf was built. So it results that there are now in several parts of the Dominion wharfs and piers, in many cases small ones, constructed since the passing of the Act in 1886, for which no consent has been obtained. This is to give power to the Governor in Council to consent to these constructions, on an application, in the same manner as if they had applied before the construction.

Mr. FOSTER. But it only applies to such works as have been already constructed, and does not go on to apply to any that from this date on shall be constructed without consent.

Mr. BRITTON. No.

Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that a pre-requisite to all this is that the necessary notice shall be given the same as if the work was commenced de novo?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes.

Mr. TISDALE. That is provided for by section 5.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I agree with the hon. gentleman that it should be so. The only question is whether the object the hon. gentleman has in view can be obtained if you put in that pre-requisite. If I understand it aright this question provides that before you commence to build you shall get the sanction of the Governor General in Council to your plans and to the location. The hon. gentleman's amendment has reference to works which are already built, and which did not obtain the sanction of the Governor in Council, having been built by parties under the assumption that that was not necessary. The hon. gentleman seeks to obtain their subsequent sanction to the work already constructed. I do not understand that therefore the exact forms must be complied with, but it ought to be necessary to give public notice.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman says this will be done before the Governor in Council shall give his consent.

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, that is right. Section 5 requires these notices to be given and the plan to be registered. Now I say in my amendment that, in reference to works already constructed, the person shall in like manner proceed to get consent.

Mr. TISDALE. This repeals section 6. Now what was section 6 for, in 1886, when that law was passed? Under the law as it now stands, you can get consent before you commence, by giving notices. Section 5 regulates the manner of getting consent; section 6, which the hon. gentleman proposes to repeal and substitute this for, provides:

Any local authority, company or person may proceed in like manner—

That is, as provided in section 5.

—to obtain the approval by the Governor General in Council of the site and plans of any work heretofore constructed.

Now since 1886, as the hon. gentleman explains, many works have been constructed without consent. He proposes now, and this section provides that any work built between 1886 practically and now shall be entitled to get that consent as provided in section 5 and after the work is constructed without depositing plans and giving notice. It was all discussed last night, and it was understood that the hon. gentleman would change it in that way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). My criticism was, that if you are to proceed in like manner, then you must file your plans with the Governor in Council before the work is built.

Mr. FOSTER. No; read section 5.

Mr. TISDALE. Section 6 is to obviate section 5, providing that you must get consent before.

Mr. FOSTER. All you have to do is to deposit plans, give a description, and give the necessary notice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Is that before, or after the work is done?

Mr. FOSTER. In the case of a work that is not constructed, it must be before; in the case of one that is constructed, it must be afterwards.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It strikes me that the provision, as the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton) originally introduced it, was much more apt. You are making it necessary to file plans before the work is constructed. The section cannot mean that, because it has reference to work already constructed. As he originally introduced the Bill, he provided that the Governor in Council might sanction or approve of works already constructed, after a certain notice is given.

Mr. TISDALE. No; no notice at all. The objection to the other clause was, that it vested power in the Minister of Public Works to give no notice or chance for anybody who wished to be heard. That was the reason that the hon. gentleman consented to the change. That provision has been for years in the public statutes in regard to navigable waters, precisely the same provision as when the Act was consolidated.

Amendment agreed to, and Bill reported.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDUCTION AND ABDUCTION.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk) moved that Bill (No. 2) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, so as to make more effectual provision for the punishment of seduction and abduction, be read a second time. He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise to move the second reading of Bill (No. 2) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, so as to make more effectual provision for the punishment of seduction and abduction. The provision, as contained in the first section of the Bill, is:

Section 181 of the Criminal Code, 1892, is hereby amended by substituting the word "eighteen" for the word "sixteen" in the fifth line thereof. Section 181 of the Criminal Code is as follows:—

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who seduces and has illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character of or above the age of fourteen years and under the age of sixteen years.

The Bill proposes to change the term of the age of consent from sixteen years to eighteen years. The Bill, no doubt, Mr. Speaker, will be criticised as a piece of moral legislation which, possibly, in the estimation of some hon. members of this House, may be a kind of legislation not properly coming within its jurisdiction. We have, however, I believe, Mr. Speaker, the right, and not only the right, but the duty, rests upon this House to care for the public welfare of this Dominion; and much of our legislation, legislation of the most necessary kind, is legislation of a moral character. Legislation in regard to the rights of life and property is, in a sense, moral legislation, because all of these offences are provided against in the Decalogue. We have the commandments: Thou shalt not kill; Thou shalt not steal; Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour; and all of these commandments are necessarily supplemented by legislation. We have laws for the punishment of murder, for the punishment of assault, for the punishment of theft, for the punishment of perjury. Crimes against the seventh commandment are, perhaps, just as subversive of the best interests of society as crimes against the sixth, or the eighth, or the ninth commandment, and it is advisable for the legislature of a country to make provision with reference to these infractions of the commandments, handed down to man for his observance, and it certainly is in the interest of society that safeguards should be adopted bearing upon the morality of the people. No vice will more speedily sap the foundations of public morality and of national strength than licentiousness, and any legislation adopted by the legislature that is calculated to preserve the chastity of women, that is calculated to restrain the passions of men, that is calculated to give to society a better tone and a greater degree of purity, is a class of legislation most desirable in the public interest. The importance of this Bill I do not need to urge upon the House. The Bill will explain itself; the provision is a very plain one, and opinions will, no doubt, be formed upon this question, either for or against the provision. We have legislation upon the statute-books by which it is provided that the age of consent shall be sixteen years. That provision has been in the law of Canada for a number of years. I was connected with the introduction of that legislation. I have a very distinct remembrance, Mr. Speaker, of, I might almost say, the odium that was visited on my head as the promoter of that legislation. It received scant courtesy at the hands of this House when first introduced. The Bill eventually became law, and the law has been in operation for many years. The character of the law is well understood, and the effect of that provision placing the age of consent at sixteen years has been a salutary one beyond all doubt. I do not believe that the better class of the population of this country would for one moment listen to a proposition to abrogate that law, and remove that safeguard applied for the safety and protection of young females in this country. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if the fixing of the age of consent at sixteen years, has been a satisfactory and beneficial provision, it would be equally satisfactory to extend the age of consent two years later, and make it eighteen years. Laws of this character mark the highest and most advanced civilization. Great Britain has a law of this character; in nearly every state of the American union laws of this character are upon the statute-book; we in Canada have such a law. The three most enlightened commonwealths or nations in existence have deemed it necessary to protect virtue, and to throw the mantle of protection around young females, by the enactment of a law making it a criminal offence to seduce a female under a certain fixed age. With regard to this age of consent, various periods have been selected by various legislatures. I believe that in the American Union, not a great number of States have adopted the limit of eighteen years; but some of the most advanced and populous and enlightened of these States, for instance, the great commonwealth of the State of New York, with a population of six millions, has a statute fixing the age of consent at eighteen years. In some States it is sixteen years, and in some as low as fourteen years. It is unnecessary, Mr. Speaker, to dwell further upon this question. I do not desire to detain the House with reference to this matter further than to state that we are not without evidence that public opinion in this country sets decidedly in the direction of enacting this amendment to the Criminal Code. We had last year a number of petitions presented to this House; we had a number of deputations waiting upon the Premier of this country and other members of the Ministry asking for this change. We have had no voice in the opposite direction; no protest against this demand, but so far as we have the voice of the Christian sentiment of this country, so far as we have the expression of opinion of the various organizations representing morals and Christianity in the Dominion, we have a unanimous endorsement of the change asked for in this Bill, making the age of consent eighteen years instead of sixteen. I claim, Sir, that the result of the law as it at present stands, would justify this change. It is unnecessary for me at this time to enlarge upon the assertion, that in laying the foundations of the institutions of a young nation like Canada, it is of the highest importance to lay them aright, and any provision that will tend to make our population more virtuous, that will tend to restrain vice, that will tend to protect the innocent and defenceless, is a provision that should be adopted in this House without question. I beg to move the second reading of this Bill, seconded by my colleague, Mr. Scriver, of Huntingdon.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

TRANSIT OF GRAIN IN MANITOBA AND THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assinibola) moved second reading of Bill (No. 16) to regulate the trade in grain in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

He said: I beg, Mr. Speaker, to move the second reading of this Bill, seconded by my hon. friend (Mr. Rutherford). I may explain to the House the condition of things in the North-west that has given rise to the necessity for the introduction of this Bill. Some few years ago, an arrangement was entered into by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the gentlemen who control what is known as the elevator system, handling grain in the North-west Territories; and they have come to such an agreement that these gentlemen investing their capital for the purpose of constructing elevators holding not less than 25,000 bushels of grain, should enjoy the protection of the company, and that no one else should be allowed to do business at points where such elevators were constructed. As hon. gentlemen will readily understand, this agreement shut out a large number of men who were engaged in the grain business, and who had buildings of less size than had been decided upon by the railway company and the other parties to the agreement. Consequently, two years ago the owners of flat warehouses and men who had smaller buildings, were notified that they could not do business longer through that medium, and that they must ship their grain through the standard elevator system. That was felt to be a grievance by the owners of these smaller buildings, for not only had they lost their property, but they were driven out of the business that they had followed for years previously. Further, it was a grievance felt very keenly by the producers of grain in Manitoba and the North-west Territories generally. We can very easily show, that the men doing business in these smaller buildings had given great satisfaction to the public generally, and when this matter was before the House last session, hon. gentlemen will remember that we showed upon sworn testimony that the men engaged in this line of business were able to pay prices ranging from 3 cents to 15 cents per bushel more than had been paid by the men interested in the larger elevators. This led last year to the introduction of a Bill to correct that evil. We had the opportunity of discussing the subject at length, with the officials of the railway companies, especially those of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I am glad to inform the House that the officials of that company were honest enough to state that they were not prepared, either publicly or in any other way to defend the arrangement that had been entered into between them and the builders of what are known as standard elevators. They felt that their agreement, however convenient to themselves, was in contradiction to the spirit of the General Railway Act of the Dominion of Canada. This was a concession of no small importance to us in seeking to rectify the evils that exist. In order to meet the wishes of the people generally, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company acceded to our wishes to this extent, that they allowed the producer last season to load directly from his conveyance into cars; and I am glad to state to this House, after conference with the traffic manager of that company, that a large amount of grain has been shipped during the present season by that arrangement. The difficulties that were predicted by the elevator companies seemed to vanish. They supposed that such was the rush in the grain season that the cars would be unduly detained, and that in consequence the rapidity and facility of getting the grain out during the season, before the close of navigation, would be interfered with. But no difficulties of that kind were apparent. Only three or four cases occurred where cars were detained beyond the proper time, and demurrage had been charged by the railway company. In those cases cars had been detained three or four days.

The present Bill seeks to secure for the people, not any new privilege, but the restoration of privileges that have been enjoyed for years past—privileges that are now enjoyed along other lines of railway in Manitoba and the North-west Territories—along the Manitoba and North-western, the Manitoba and Southwestern, and almost every other line in operation apart from the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Bill seeks to provide that those men who have been driven out of business because they have not a standard elevator, shall have the privilege of returning to their business and utilizing the property they now possess. Furthermore, I desire hon. gentlemen to look at the matter in this light, that the restoration of this privilege is the want of the people to-day, and is a subject of continual agitation throughout the whole length and breadth of the land.

Various reasons may be given why we should have the restoration of shipping facilities to the people through flat warehouses. I might enumerate some of these to make the position more plain. In the first place, we believe that no company has a right to dictate as to who should engage in this business, or as to who should buy and ship grain and offer it on the market for sale. Every man has a right, as a loyal Canadian subject, to claim this privilege, and ought to possess it if he feels so disposed. Then there are objections to the use of the elevator system exclusively. One of these is that grain for seeding purposes in the other provinces cannot be shipped through the elevator system. There are not a sufficient number of compartments to keep such grain pure and unmixed; so that it is impossible to-day to tranship such grain through these elevators to Ontario, Quebec and the provinces by the sea. Then there is a further difficulty. The present state of the market requires competition. It is not a wise thing that a trade of this kind, especially the grain trade, which is assuming such vast importance, and growing in extent every year, should be exclusively in the hands of a few companies. It is felt that the fact, for example, that one telegram going out from Winnipeg to all the points where grain is purchased, and fixing the price for that day, is not a safe thing in the public interest; but that it is in the public interest to have men outside of this combination who shall exercise a healthy influence upon the price that is offered for grain each day as the work progresses.

Then there are difficulties which have arisen during the past season. For example, certain towns are apparently boycotted in the matter of price. I may mention the towns of Morden, Moosomin and Wolseley. It is perfectly safe for me to say that the town of Moosomin, which is in the centre of a large grain-growing country, did not this season receive 10 per cent of the amount of grain that was grown in the district. The prices were such that farmers and producers sent their grain further west or further east, and received better weight and better prices for it. To illustrate this, I may give you a case in point. Mr. J. R. Fhinn, who is a member of the grain standard board and is a graduate and gold medalist of the Agricultural College at Guelph—so that it may be taken for granted that he understands his business and knows whereof he speaks—last autumn shipped about 2,000 bushels of grain through the elevator to Fort William, and there stored it. He did not sell at the time, but waited until the 23rd of November, when he sold to a member of the Winnipeg Grain Exchange. On that day the Fort William quotations were 71c. and 72c., and he got 71½c. for his wheat. The certificate stating the quantity and quality, namely, 2,000 bushels of No. 1 hard was all the guarantee the buyer wanted, and of course Mr. Fhinn got his price accordingly. Now, allowing for all charges, storage over twenty days included, he was able to realize at Fort William that day 57½c. net for his wheat. On the same day wheat at Moosomin was worth only 50c. according to the buyers on the market. This case has been perfectly established and verified; and here were 7½c. gained on every bushel; so that the gain to Mr. Fhinn on the 2,000 bushels, as a result of shipping to Fort William, was $150. You can easily understand that if this was true in his case, it was true in the case of every producer who offered grain on the market that day, had realized a corresponding loss, and there are four elevators taking in grain at that point. This instance is an evidence that there is need of some check on the elevator system; and we believe that the only safety for the people is to re-establish the smaller warehouses and to allow other men outside of the combine to engage in this trade.

There is another feature in which the Bill differs from the Bill that was introduced last year and withdrawn at its third reading. It is the introduction of grain chutes. The railway company was pleased this season to grant the privilege to farmers loading directly from their conveyances to the cars. This was a relief, but only a partial relief. It will easily be seen by hon. gentlemen that producers living six or eight miles from the railway on either side could not avail themselves of this privilege, because they were not able to load a car in time to take advantage of this means. Hence the introduction of the grain chute.

The grain chute will extend the same privilege perhaps to a further extent on either side of the line, by allowing people living from twenty to twenty-five miles from either side to ship directly by this method. This grain chute is supposed to hold from 700 to 1,400 bushels, not less and not more, and it is so constructed that by the force of gravity, without machinery, the farmer can run his grain directly into the car and so escape the expense of one and a half cents per bushel for shipment charged by the elevator company.

Another and perhaps the main feature of the Bill is the appointment of a Chief Inspector to oversee the entire grain trade in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I am satisfied that various reasons may be advanced why this inspector should be appointed, and in asking his appointment we are within the provisions of the Inspection Act, for it will be known to hon. gentlemen that section 2 and subsection 3 of that Act provides that such an official may be appointed. The reasons we advance for his appointment arise out of the dissatisfaction experienced, both in Manitoba and the Territories, by the producers on account of the weights and the dockages and demurrages. The weights in these elevators are only examined once in two years, I believe, under the General Inspection Act.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). My hon. friend knows we have amended the law so as to allow us to examine the weights more frequently, and it is our intention to do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The point, however, is this. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction among the people and very little confidence between the buyers generally and the producers on the question of weights. Dockages are made on account of the grain not being considered sufficiently clean, and an estimate is formed as to the amount which should be taken from the producer, which amount is sometimes excessive. At any rate that is a continual ground of complaint. Then again there are the dockages charged for various reasons, but the chief dockage that this Bill has to do with is that made for transshipment, making the producers responsible for any leakage in transshipment from the point where the grain is bought to the port where it leaves the country. Take, for example, the crop of last year, which amounted perhaps to 40,000,000 bushels. This would represent 57,142 car-loads of grain of 700 bushels each. The dockage on this number of cars charged by the grain dealers—and this is no question of dispute—is away in excess of anything charged in the United States or the grain-growing countries across the border. Our producers contend that only three bushels of dockage should be charged on each car-load. This would represent on the crop of this year 171,426 bushels, and if we calculate that at sixty cents per bushel, it represents $102,855. The Bill proposes to cut down this dockage two-thirds, and to allow the grain buyers or dealers only sixty pounds for each car-load as dockage. In doing so, we feel that we are within the mark, because in Wisconsin and in Illinois and Dakota, the great grain-growing states of the Union, the grain is carried out by the railway companies on a margin of 45 pounds to the car-load. We have seen fit to recommend in this Bill that the allowance should be sixty pounds to the car-load. This will leave in the hands of the producer two-thirds of the amount now charged, and I feel satisfied that in the amount provided for by the Bill the buyer has ample room to protect himself.

Then we urge upon the Government the appointment of this grain inspector because of the dissatisfaction that is known to exist. This dissatisfaction is not confined to any one portion of the province or the territories, but there is a general want of confidence between the grain dealers and the producers, and it is felt that if such an inspector were appointed, when difficulties would arise, he would be the one to whom the parties would refer their difficulties and have them adjusted, and adjusted promptly. I am glad to know that not only the producers but the grain buyers themselves are favourable to such an appointment, and in the discussion on the inspection of grain that took place before the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), only this week, it seemed to be the general opinion of the buyers, the grain standard board and the Millers' Association of Ontario, as well as the exporters from Montreal, that an official of this kind is a necessity, so that this may be said to be the most important point and the main feature of the Bill. I have no desire to detain the House further on the question, but beg to move the second reading.

Mr. J. G. RUTHERFORD (Macdonald). As the seconder of the motion of my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas), I propose to say a few words on this subject. Not only the magnitude, but the very rapid growth of the interests which are affected by the proposed legislation demand attention at the hands of this House. The rate at which the lands in Manitoba and the North-west Territories are being settled and the rapidity with which the wheat-growing capacity of that country is being developed and increased warns us that in a very few years the handling of the grain grown in that country will be a question of the greatest importance, not only to its people, but to the people of the whole Dominion.

That there is need for the protection of the grain producers of the west, no one at all familiar with the subject can deny. Any one who has had opportunity of observing the conditions under which the grain trade of the country is carried on, must be aware of the constant friction, the never-ceasing irritation, which characterizes the transactions between the farmers and the grain dealers. There are various reasons for this. There have been causes of friction arising out of the conditions affecting transportations. These are, to some extent, being remedied from year to year, as the people gain strength, and particularly since the advent of this Government has taught the great railway monopoly of the Dominion that it cannot always have its own way at the hands of this House. The transportation facilities are constantly being increased, and the rate of charge for transportation is being decreased; and so the transportation difficulties are being, to some extent, remedied and removed. But in regard to the general handling of the grain, the general conduct of the grain trade, there is still much room for improvement. The elevator monopoly, to which the hon. member for East Assiniboia has alluded, is a source of great hardship to many of the farmers of the west. As matters now stand, or, at least, as they stood until last year—for last year we obtained some amelioration of the conditions affecting the shippers of that country—the conditions, along the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway at any rate, were such as to inflict great hardship upon the producers. Under the contract alluded to by my hon. friend, by which the railway companies—the Canadian Pacific Railway Company being the greatest sinner in this regard—prohibited the shipping or loading of grain on to cars either from wagons or from the small elevators or flat warehouses mentioned by my hon. friend, and insisted on the grain being put through what are known as standard elevators, the farmers suffered a great deal. Because while, in the case of the honest grain dealer or honest elevator operator, it is, no doubt, largely to the advantage of the producer, as well as of the railway company and the grain dealer, that the elevators in use for shipping should be as commodious and as modern in regard to machinery as possible; at the same time, if there was any dishonesty on the part of the elevator operator or any desire to act in a manner prejudicial to the shipper, great opportunity was offered, under the system, for carrying on nefarious practices. When the farmer came to the elevator and put in his wheat, he received a ticket. But that did not guarantee a return either of his own identical grain—which, in the majority of cases, would, of course, be utterly unreasonable and impossible, but it did not guarantee to the farmer the return of grain of a similar quality or grade; and, as a consequence, many men, when they got returns from Fort William, found their grain graded at a much lower standard than it was entitled to. And, under the system then in existence, it was impossible for the farmer to obtain any redress. Besides, suppose he put his grain through an elevator in 1896, and was treated in the way I have described—in 1897, when he came back with another crop of wheat to ship, he had no alternative but to put his wheat through the same elevator, and probably, through the hands of the same operator whom he, of his own knowledge and to his sorrow, knew to have handled his grain in a fraudulent manner the previous year. The action of the Canadian Pacific Railway, hastened by the memorial which was presented to the Government by the western members last year, in according to the farmers the privilege of loading cars from their own wagons, to a large extent obviated this evil, because it offered the farmers a loophole by which they could escape the clutches of the dishonest elevator man. But it was far from being a satisfactory solution of the difficulty. When the traffic became very heavy and there was a great scarcity of cars, it was generally found that, while the elevator men—naturally, being the best customers of the railway—were able to obtain cars—though not at all times, it is only fair to say—the farmer had, as a rule, much more difficulty in procuring cars than had the dealer. So, while in many cases this plan afforded relief, in many other cases it failed to do so. And so, after the year's experience, my hon. friend has deemed it necessary to bring in this legislation, which, if carried out, as I trust it will be, by this honourable House, will place the farmer of Manitoba and the North-west on a very satisfactory footing as regards his grain shipments.

Now, I wish to digress for a few minutes, simply to state that I regret very much that this legislation is necessary. Under the strict letter of the law, I do not think that it is actually necessary, but at the same time it appears, under existing circumstances, to be justifiable, for the hon. member for East Assiniboia and the other members from the west to insist upon this special legislation being passed. I am no lawyer, but if I am able to read correctly and to understand the General Railway Act of the Dominion of Canada, that Act states distinctly, almost in so many words, that the contract now existing between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the elevator people, or, in other words, the elevator monopoly, is entirely illegal. Subsection 2 of section 246 of the General Railway Act provides that any person bringing goods—not grain particularly—for shipment by railway is entitled to have that railway company receive and take those goods and deliver them to the destination to which they are shipped. And if the General Railway Act of the Dominion were enforced, if its provisions were carried out in the way which, I think, is demanded by the interests of the people, there would be no necessity for the legislation now proposed. Last year, we had a resolution in favour of a railway commission. Though I am satisfied that the members of the present Railway Committee of the Privy Council do the best they can to compel the carrying out of the provisions of the Railway Act, it is out of the question for a body of men composed as that body is composed, to give the necessary attention to the thousand and one questions constantly arising between the people of the Dominion of Canada and the great railway corporations which, at the present moment, almost control the destinies of that people. I trust that this session will not be allowed to pass without this grievance being redressed, so that the people of Canada shall no longer be owned by the railways, but will control and manage, through an effective railway commission, the public highways which have been ostensibly constructed and carried on in their interests. In the meantime, however, the measure introduced by my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) will largely counteract the evil to which I have briefly alluded. I trust that there will be no factious opposition to this measure, and I trust that the members of this House will demonstrate that they are above any other considerations than those which affect the welfare of the greatest number of the people in that country. There is no question but that the welfare of the people of Manitoba and the west, the welfare of the great country lying between the Red River and the Rocky Mountains, the country which is the granary of the Dominion of Canada, will be promoted by this measure. That country only requires a fair chance and fair handling by the rest of the Dominion to furnish an enormous market for the products of the other provinces. I say that the interests of that portion of the Dominion must surely be considered paramount in this House. It would be most unfair to place the interests of a few grain dealers, the interests of a few merchants, against the great interests of the mass of the people of that country, who are rapidly developing the hitherto untouched resources of the prairie.

There is another phase of this Bill introduced by my hon. friend to which I will refer, and that is the provision for the appointment of a general inspector of the grain trade. Those of us who are familiar with the grain trade in the west know that there are certain circumstances in connection with it which are, to say the least, very mysterious, that there are constant and unaccountable fluctuations in the price paid to the producers at various points throughout the province of Manitoba and the territories, fluctuations in price which cannot be accounted for in any reasonable way to an ordinary outsider. When the ordinary outsider asks for any information from those in the inner circle of the grain trade as to the reason for these fluctuations in price, and as to the peculiar conditions which prevail in the trade, he is met with the reply that, of course, it is difficult to explain all these things. Perhaps the dealer will enter into a long-winded explanation of the difference in grades, and the difference in the export price, and the difference in the milling price, and the transit rate, and all that sort of thing. But as a matter of fact, no reasonable man, no man that is not blinded by self-interest from being in the grain trade itself, can possibly be satisfied with these explanations. I do not wish to charge the grain trade of the province of Manitoba or of the city of Winnipeg with deliberate fraud, not at all. I think that the very best way in which this question can be handled, the best way in which to allay the fears of the farmer, the best way in which to quiet his suspicions in regard to the manner in which the grain trade is conducted, is simply to have a full, free, thorough and continual supervision and investigation of the methods by which that grain trade is carried on. No honest citizen begins to shiver at the sight of a policeman's helmet; he has nothing to fear from the strong arm of the law, he has nothing to fear from the keenest investigation of his affairs. Consequently, I cannot see why members of the grain exchange, why people engaged in the grain trade and in shipping grain from Manitoba and the west to the east, should have any objection to the appointment of an inspector, who, if they are honest, will simply be the means of demonstrating clearly once for all, and for all time—because this inspector is to be a permanent one—that the grain trade is conducted like any other honest business, in a fair, square and upright way; and that all the suspicions which the people of Manitoba have had in the past, have at present, but which we hope by this action will be banished for the future—that all these suspicions, I say, have been simply imaginary, that there has been no ground for them, and that they—the dealers—have been maligned by men, perhaps, less honest than themselves. I think I have said all I have to say upon this subject. We will probably have more discussion upon this Bill before it gets through. There is one thing I would like to impress upon hon. members who, perhaps, are not familiar with all the conditions in the west, and that is that if they are not themselves satisfied as to the necessity for this legislation, if it does not appeal to them as being right and proper legislation, let them consult with us who come from the west; and in this connection I do not refer to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House more than I do to members from the west on the other side of the House, because I am satisfied that the members on that side of the House who represent farming constituencies in western Canada, are as much interested and as fully alive to the importance of this question as are the members on this side of the House. Therefore, I say, let them consult with their colleagues from the west, let them hear what their colleagues have to say, let them discuss the facts before they assume an attitude of opposition to this measure, which is after all, a measure designed purely and simply in the interests of the agriculturists of the great west.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I have great pleasure in supporting the second reading of this Bill. I am glad to congratulate the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) on bringing in this measure. I have a notice on the paper myself of a Bill dealing with it, and I have held it back waiting until I saw the Bill the hon. gentleman intended to lay before the House, because I recognize that if my hon. friend's Bill was satisfactory, as he has already had the matter in hand, there was no reason why any other member of the House should take it up. But last year, after he had placed his Bill on the Table and got it through the second reading, and through many of the rocks and quicksands that way-lay a little ship of this kind in getting into harbour, we found that an extraordinary change had taken place—and I mention this in reference to the closing remarks of the hon. gentleman who seconded the motion—and it seemed to me that the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill last session had made a complete surrender to the Canadian Pacific Railway. However, whether it was the action taken by ourselves, and by the farmers in the west, or for whatever reason, I find that he has placed before the House now a Bill that I believe, with some trifling amendments that may be moved in committee, will meet the needs and express the opinions of the west. I agree with the proposition, and I stated it when first this question was brought before the House, that there can be no doubt that with the Railway Act, as it stands at the present time, the common law right, to put it that way, remains intact, which gives the farmers of the west everything that this Bill proposes specifically to give.

Mr. DOUGLAS. May I be allowed to ask the hon. gentleman a question? He has stated that the Bill which was introduced last year and that was withdrawn, represented the promoter as having surrendered to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I challenge that statement and call the attention of the hon. gentleman to this fact, that he himself voted for the change that was made in the Bill, and every member of the Railway Committee voted for it, and there were no changes made afterwards.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend is entirely wrong. I have the Bill in my hand. I did not intend to deal with this at length, but now as the hon. gentleman challenges me, I will have to refer to it. I have the Bill in my hand that the hon. member had intended to move, and I have also the amendment that my hon. friend from Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) had intended to move. When that Bill was called he intended to move an amendment which will be found at page 362 of the Votes and Proceedings of last session, and which, I think, would have put once more backbone and marrow into the Bill. I have here an amendment to that amendment of the hon. member for Lisgar, which I was told, by two gentlemen who came to see me here, was prepared by my late friend, Mr. Dalton McCarthy, and I have his interlineations here. These gentlemen asked me, if when the hon. member for Lisgar moved his amendment, I would move the amendment to his amendment, prepared by Mr. McCarthy, which made some verbal alterations that would have carried the protection to the producer a little further. Now, Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the public opinion that had been created throughout the entire territory respecting this question, within the last season, to my knowledge, very great harm has resulted from combinations of elevator people in the parts of the territories that I have visited. For instance, in one part of the territories, not in my own constituency, but in the constituency of my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill, the elevator men made a combination only to pay so much to the producers of grain, something very like what he describes as having taken place at Moosomin, but it was in the more southerly part of the constituency. However, a man, Mr. McConnell, M.L.A., who has public spirit and who thoroughly understands this question, completely broke the combination by buying grain on his own behalf and paying 5c. and 6c. more than the elevator men proposed to pay. When they found that he was thus bucking against them he had to face all kinds of influences; all the banking influences, all the financial influences, were against him in his business, and in the particular business that he was then engaged in. There cannot be the least doubt whatever that legislation of this kind is needed, and for reasons known throughout the length and breadth of the North-west Territories. Therefore, it is unnecessary for me to say more. I do not think there can be a question raised by any one as to the necessity of this legislation from the point of view of the prices paid or from the point of view of the danger of combination or convenience, or the safeguarding of the producers from loss in consequence of very undesirable incidents, in regard to the purchase of their grain. For my part, I have had evidence thrust upon me from every quarter of the country that this legislation is needed. I hope that the Bill will receive the support of both sides of the House and that it will pass into law this session.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). I want to make a few remarks in reference to this Bill. Hon. gentlemen will recall the amount of trouble and worry that we had over the proposed Bill last year, and the fact that it was withdrawn. However, the Canadian Pacific Railway extended to farmers the privilege of loading their grain directly from their vehicles last season, which has been a very great advantage to the farmers. Before coming here this session, I made it a point to visit a number of towns throughout the province of Manitoba with a view of ascertaining what the real grievances were, and I discovered that very great good had been done by the regulations which the Canadian Pacific Railway had made allowing the loading of grain from farmers' vehicles directly. However, I have come to the conclusion that the entire difficulty is not yet regulated, and, I may say, that I wrote to the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) a month or two before the opening of the session, asking if it were his intention to re-introduce the Bill he had before the House last session, and he answered that it was. That being the case, I decided to give the hon. gentleman all the support I could, and I made up my mind that I would not introduce legislation myself. I may say that when the Bill was up last session, I took it as a matter of course that members of this House would naturally support a measure of this kind. I felt that we had such a good case; I felt that the proposition that the people who raised grain in the North-west Territories had an absolute right to ship it in their own way, was a fair and honourable proposition, and that no opposition would be met with from any hon. gentleman in this House. However, I discovered that I had considerable to learn. I discovered that when the Bill was referred to the Railway Committee we met with a great deal of opposition, and it was with a great deal of pain that I discovered, in the committee, a large number of members who did not seem to consider the interests of our people at all. They seemed to stand by the railway companies, and we were opposed by these railway companies and opposed very strongly in the committee. I felt that we should not have had any opposition of that kind. In presenting a Bill like this, it seems to me perfectly fair that when there is a united demand from the North-west Territories—I do not think there is a single member from Manitoba or the North-west Territories who is not heartily in favour of this Bill, and that being the case, I think, as the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) has said, it is only fair that members of the House should accept our representations in this regard. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is a fair proposition that the farmer who has wheat to sell should be allowed to sell that wheat in the way he pleases, and that, if he likes to load it in a car and ship it in that way, he should not be prevented from doing so. I discovered in my investigations that the chief complaint last season was that the Canadian Pacific Railway did not furnish sufficient cars to the farmers, and that as my hon. friend from Macdonald has said, favouritism seemed to be shown to the elevator-owners. I may say that, at a place called Cartwright, in my constituency, there is a gentleman of very considerable means who, I think, owns a farm in connection with his business in the town, who made up his mind that he would enter the field and buy wheat. He did so, storing it in his flat warehouse at that point. He bought a large amount of wheat, but when he applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway for cars they absolutely declined to give him a car at all. They said that this privilege was only extended to farmers. I felt that that was a hardship. Here is a man who invested his own capital to go into business to enable his neighbours to get decent prices for their wheat, and I would suggest, if the Bill does not cover a point like that, that an amendment should be proposed to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to furnish cars, not only to farmers, not only to the men who raise the wheat, but to dealers who may not have standard elevators, but who may have their wheat stored in flat warehouses. There is another point I wish to make before I sit down. I received, a few days ago, a communication from a prominent man in Manitoba who also deals in grain, and I will read it to the House in order that they may see what the difficulty that he complains of is.

Winnipeg, March 23rd, 1899.

R. L. Richardson, Esq., M.P., Ottawa.

My dear Sir,—I thought it would be well to write regarding a very important subject, in which our western country is especially interested just now, viz.: "car supply." The lack of cars is really becoming a serious matter to people living along the lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba, and to grain dealers in this city as well. Grain can neither be got forward from Fort William to North Bay in reasonable time, nor from country points to Fort William. Many farmers have been anxious to ship damp wheat to Fort William while the weather was cold, but cars were unobtainable. A grain buyer at Cypress River informed me that he had to wait thirty days, after ordering a car, before he got it. The Treherne farmers' elevator is loaded to the roof, and the manager is anxious to get some wheat out, so that he can have a chance to turn over some doubtful wheat which is stored there, but no cars can be got, although ordered for a long time by three different dealers who own the wheat in that elevator. Now, this is the condition of affairs during the dullest season of the year, and it is about time the Government looked into this question and put a stop to the nonsensical effort that the Canadian Pacific Railway is making to handle the business of the country with half the equipment necessary. I am credibly informed that the Canadian Pacific Railway are desperately short of locomotive power, as well as empties. It seems to me that we should have some legislation fixing a penalty for the non-furnishing of cars, and providing an easy method for collecting the same from the railway companies. If railway cars are not furnished within five days of the date ordered, then the railways should be responsible for any loss occasioned through the violation of any contract, and in any case should be compelled to pay the shipper $1 per day for each and every car ordered, after the first five days, until the same was furnished.

It seems to me that is a reasonable proposition. If the railway company supplies cars to dealers at the way stations, and these cars are not loaded within a certain time, then demurrage is charged to the farmers. Now, if the farmer or the dealer has wheat to ship from a certain point and he has made a sale of it, but is unable to get cars until after a considerable delay and consequently suffers a loss, it would seem to be only a fair proposition that a charge should be made against the company in that regard. This letter continues:

I ordered wheat shipped from Fort William on 13th February which was not loaded out until the 28th of that month; the purchaser refused the grain on account of delay in shipment, and my loss is considerable. I contend that railway companies should not undertake to do business which they cannot handle reasonably prompt; and the Canadian Pacific Railway are now, and have for many years failed most miserably to give satisfaction to their patrons regarding grain shipments. The loss last fall to the province, caused by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's failure to furnish transportation for grain at the proper time, is certainly a very large sum. I am satisfied that 3,000,000 bushels more grain would have been shipped, if cars could have been assured, and the loss sustained, I think, would easily be $100,000, besides the inconvenience occasioned by having so much money locked up in the country, and there is no telling how much of this damp wheat, which is left over, will prove a total loss to the owners of it. I should think that a railway company whose net earnings amount to $517,000 per month (see Canadian Pacific Railway January statement), could afford to procure a proper equipment of rolling stock, so that business would not be hampered as it is at present in this province. What we want is the right to build flat warehouses, or small elevators, at any railway siding in Canada, with the privilege of loading grain into cars from same, or direct on cars from vehicles, and that forty-eight hours shall be allowed to load a car after same is placed on sidings, and demurrage charge after such time to be not more than $1 per day. These privileges not to be restricted, but to apply to farmers, and shippers as well.

The hon. member from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), suggested that in his opinion the General Railway Act would, if properly enforced, render it unnecessary to have a Bill like this passed; and he also suggested that if a railway commission were appointed it would probably be able to regulate this matter pretty thoroughly. I am disposed to think, Mr. Speaker, that if we cannot secure the control of these railroads by the Government, the institution of a railway commission would be in the right direction. I took the view last year, together with the late hon. member for Winnipeg, Mr. Jameson, that a railway commission would be of very considerable benefit to the country, and with the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) I feel, that if we had such a commission and it did its duty in the premises, it could be of very considerable use in regulating such matters as we have before us. But, without that railway commission, and without any definite control over these railways, I believe that such a Bill as my hon. friend from East Assinibola (Mr. Douglas) has submitted would be of a very material benefit to the grain trade of that country, and especially to the farmers who raise that grain. Holding that view, Mr. Speaker, I most heartily support this Bill.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The arguments in favour of the passage of a Bill to regulate the grain trade in the North-west have been sufficiently stated by the hon. gentlemen who addressed the House, and I need add nothing to what they have said on that subject. The fact that the raising of wheat is the staple industry of the population of Manitoba and the North-west Territories, and that the handling of that staple is necessarily carried on by a system of warehousing under which the value of the farmers' products depend upon the method of this handling, and on the honesty and fair dealing which the farmers receive, is a sufficient reason why, when a complaint of unfairness is made, it should receive reasonable attention from this House. It has been alleged that there has been fraud in the treatment of farmers by the grain dealers; it has been alleged that there has been fraud in the treatment of farmers by the elevator men. I do not say that such is the case, because I do not know that such is the case, and I have no intention whatever of imputing improper conduct to any persons without sufficient evidence being adduced to prove any charge that may be made. But, Sir, the very fact that complaints have been constantly made for years past, is sufficient, I think, to cause this House to assent to the general proposition that there should be some kind of regulation of this trade. The conditions are peculiar in this respect: that the value of the wheat depends upon the charges which are made for its immediate handling, and depends upon the method in which the wheat is handled. And, from the time when the farmer lets go his grain at the door of the elevator, he has no further control over it, but the price which he is paid when he leaves his grain at the door of the elevator is regulated by what happens after he parts with it. If we take upon ourselves to regulate the way in which potatoes and other commodities are sold, and if we take upon ourselves to regulate weights and measures, surely it is not improper that we should take upon ourselves to regulate the manner in which a great staple product shall be treated; a staple upon which the prosperity of a large portion of the community rests. I say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not suggest for a moment that there is any irregularity in connection with the method in which this business is done. That is not a matter we are called upon to assume. It is not assumed by the passage of this Bill. This Bill only assumes. I fancy, that there is a great and important industry in regard to which the parties most interested ask for proper regulations by the authorities. I think therefore we can fairly accept the principle of the Bill, and I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Douglas) in charge of the measure has a right to some gratitude from the western members who are particularly interested, and a right to gratitude from their constituents, on account of the deep interest he has taken in this subject, bringing it forward session after session, elucidating it and giving clear information in regard to it, so that the House can more intelligently deal with it. The Government has no objection to the passing of this Bill, but rather favours its passage on some such lines as are indicated by the draft Bill which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Douglas) has presented to us. I would not care to say that all the provisions of the Bill may be assented to, and while raising no objection to the second reading, I intend to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Douglas) to assent to the appointment of a special committee upon which both sides of the House will be represented, which will give the subject further and careful consideration, and which will have the advantage of the expert assistance of some of the officers of the Inland Revenue Department. I intend to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Douglas) to assent to a reference of this Bill to such a committee when it comes up at the next stage of the proceedings.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask whether the course suggested by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is the usual course taken in regard to Bills of this kind. I am under the impression that this Bill, which has special reference to railway communication, was referred, last year, to the Committee on Railways and Canals. If so, I would like to know what is the reason for departing from the usual course.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The reason I offer is, that the Bill is one which requires very careful consideration; and my object in suggesting that it should be referred to a special committee is to secure for it more attention than it could possibly receive at the hands of the Railway Committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no reason why expert testimony should not be given before the regular committee to which Bills of this kind are sent. The Railway Committee is a very large committee, and a decision of that committee has necessarily very great weight with this House. The fact that expert testimony is required does not at all touch the case, because we are in the habit of having such testimony given in the Railway Committee on a great variety of Bills. It does not appear to me that any sufficient reason has been given for departing from the usual course.

The PRIME MINISTER. The reason, and a very strong one, it seems to me, is that, with the mass of legislation which must necessarily come before the Railway Committee, its time can hardly be taken up with this Bill, on which evidence will have to be taken. I am sure, and the hon. gentleman will, I think, on reflection agree with me, that if this Bill were sent to the Railway Committee, it would be referred by that committee to a sub-committee. So that I think the course suggested by my hon. friend is the proper course.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

DRAINAGE ACROSS RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin) moved second reading of Bill (No. 24) concerning drainage on and across the property of railway companies.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would like my hon. friend to allow this Bill to stand, in the absence of the Minister of Railways.

Mr. CASEY. Let me say, en passant, that this Bill was introduced last year, and I want it to get the same stage as was given to it last year. It has to be investigated by a special committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman state the purport and object of the Bill?

Mr. CASEY. It is the same Bill that was introduced last year, and it is modelled largely on the Railway Drainage Act of Ontario, an Act which is very carefully drawn, and which was passed under the auspices of Sir Oliver Mowat, when he was Premier of that province. It is designed merely to avoid the necessity for reference to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, in every case in which a dispute about drainage arises between railway companies and municipalities or private individuals. The Bill provides a system of arbitration, as in the Ontario Act, by which the necessity of the work may be established, and the proportions of cost to be borne by the different parties may be settled, the private land-owner or the municipality being represented by an engineer, the railway company by another engineer, and the Minister of Railways by a third engineer. These are the principal points of the Bill. But it has been recognized, on both occasions on which I have introduced it into this House, that it required to be matured before a special committee, which would hear both sides, and I propose, after the Bill gets its second reading, to move its reference to a special committee, to be composed of the same gentlemen who composed the committee of last year, and who will go through the Bill, hear both sides of the question, and mature the Bill for presentation to the House before it goes to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). I think this Bill has been before several special committees, as well as the general Railway Committee. I have been twelve years in the House, and I think it has come in every session.

Mr. CASEY. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. It has only come, in its present shape, last year and this year.

Mr. TISDALE. When you speak of a Bill, you speak of the principle, not of the details.

Mr. CASEY. The Bill, in its present principle, has only been introduced this year and last year. The Bill introduced previously was of a different kind altogether.

Mr. TISDALE. The important principle of the Bill is this, that it takes from the Railway Committee of the Privy Council the power of dealing with the railways under its jurisdiction, in regard to drainage, the most important part of the cost and construction of railways; and that principle has been before this House for twelve years. The Bill has not always been introduced by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey), but others have introduced it. It has been before the Railway Committee, as well as before a special committee, and it has not passed. I suggest that this Bill should go to the Railway Committee, because it simply deals with one principle. The consideration of its details would take very little time. Some years ago, as we all know, a royal commission suggested that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should deal with questions of this kind; and that tribunal has been, on the whole, satisfactory and cheap. When the Conservative party had the responsibility of dealing with these questions, I contended that it was, on the whole, the best tribunal we could have, and I am glad to see that it is keeping up its reputation under the control of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House at the present time. Therefore, I object to the time of this House being taken up by the same question, submitted again and again; but, as we must deal with it in some way or other, I think it should be sent to the committee upon which is imposed the responsibility of dealing with all legislation affecting railways.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE. I agree with my hon. friend that the Railway Committee is the proper committee to which to send this Bill, but I disagree with him entirely in his opinion as to the right or wisdom of this House to pass the Bill. If we can pass any Bill that will exempt people from the necessity of coming before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, it is very desirable we should do so. It is said that any man can go before that committee and make a complaint. That is true, but at the outset he is met with the opposition of the great railway companies, represented by the ablest lawyers they can retain, and against whom he has very little chance. I have myself seen an instance in which an application was made, based on most reasonable and strong grounds, and what was the answer given by the lawyer of the Canadian Pacific Railway? What have you to say to this Judge Clark, was the question put by the committee? Simply that it is the most absurd thing I have ever heard of. That was practically his answer. To my mind there were no valid reasons given, yet there the matter ended. Against the representation of a great railway corporation, contesting what is regarded as the right of a municipal corporation, what chance had the reeve of that corporation. He had no lawyer with him, and was practically powerless before the Railway Committee. In my opinion, in such cases, the applicants have no chance at all. What we want is law which will put every one on an equal footing, and not compel complainants to travel perhaps thousands of miles in order to appear before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and there be confronted by the most able lawyers the corporation can bring against them.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is certainly very great force in the statement of my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule), and I think my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) will agree with him on reflection. It is the experience of every one in this House, that although the building of a railway is of great benefit to the country at large, it may cause serious injury to private owners of property. Very often it happens that the plans drawn may be sufficient for the protection of the railway but not for the protection of the individual. For instance, a culvert may turn out to be insufficient, and the land adjacent may be flooded in consequence. The owner of the property has the right to come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, but that is a very expensive right, as has been stated, not only because the claimant meets there the counsel of the railway company, but he may be a poor farmer living in some remote part of the country to whom it is a very serious matter to have to travel to Ottawa once or twice, and in nine cases out of ten he gives up his right rather than prosecute. This is one side of the question, but on the other side I am fully in accord with the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) that the rights of the railway companies ought also to be protected, and it would not do to have the power indifferently or promiscuously given to anybody to order a railway company to build culverts or water-courses. Some mode must be taken, therefore, of remedying the evil. I agree that the present legislation is not at all sufficient, but I am not prepared to say that I would support the mode of procedure suggested by my hon. friend. It would suffice for the present to allow the Bill to go to its second reading, and then allow the question whether it should be referred to the General Committee of Railways or a special committee to remain open until my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), who is at present absent from the city, is in his seat.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). On further consideration, I think the right hon. gentleman will find that there is no wrong done to the individual by the present law. If in its construction, a railway does damage to any individual of any kind, that individual has a perfect right of action against the corporation. There can be no doubt whatever on that point. The object of this legislation is to give into the hands of perhaps a local tribunal or arbitrator the decision whether it is necessary to put a culvert under a railway for the purpose of facilitating the drainage of somebody's land. That is a right which ought to be invested in some person or other, and in my opinion the cheapest possible tribunal is the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Before any other tribunal, the claimant would have to employ a solicitor and pay the costs of the litigation, which would be far in excess of his travelling expenses down here. It is true that here he has to meet experienced lawyers who will contest his claim, but he has also the satisfaction of knowing that he appears before a court composed of perhaps the ablest lawyers of the land, fully cognizant of all these matters, and which always has a leaning, not to the railway corporations but to the facilitating of anything which will be of benefit to the municipality of the country. The legislation proposed is dangerous and would lead to interminable litigation. You will find every railway company opposed to it, not because they are not perfectly willing to contribute to what is right and necessary in the way of building culverts or anything else, but because of the actions that they will be subjected to. Every railway company is willing that a culvert or drain should be built for the purpose of draining a particular section of the country. It is only a question of cost. But if a drain or culvert is asked merely for the benefit of the individual who owns the land, it is he who should pay the costs. He is not even compelled under the Bill introduced by my hon. friend.

Mr. CASEY. Then why object to it ?

Mr. HAGGART. What I object to is leaving the railway companies subject to any number of applications and any amount of litigation. Parties who have control of municipalities are generally influenced by citizens of those municipalities ; and it is in their interest to have as many culverts as possible, if they are made at the expense of the railway company. Why should a railway company be subject to the agitation and annoyance which would certainly result ? What the railway company says is this : If it is a benefit to an individual or a municipality that a culvert should be built, let the expense be apportioned fairly between us and the individual or municipality benefited. If it is no benefit to the railway company, let the individual or municipality bear the whole expense. And let a suitable tribunal decide these matters. The cheapest and most effective tribunal that can be provided is already provided.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). It seems to me that the point has been misapprehended by some of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. It is perfectly clear to those who know anything about the drainage laws of Ontario that something is necessary in the direction of this Bill. The point is a very simple one, it seems to me ; but just what legislation will best accomplish the desired result is quite another question. The difficulty arises in this way. There are two laws in Ontario in reference to the drainage of farm lands. One is the simple and comparatively inexpensive one of the Ditches and Watercourse Act, the other is the larger system of drainage by which certain persons, owners of a piece of land, can, by petition, compel the municipal council to bring in an engineer and have the work or drainage done at the expense of persons whose lands are benefited. Here are the two systems in force. Now, the difficulty is this : The farmers who would want their land drained, if they use the machinery they have in order to accomplish their purpose, can use it only to the extent of farm land. If, in the attempt to make a drain for the water, they strike a Dominion railway, their course is stopped.

Mr. SPROULE. And the railway will not allow you to go on.

Mr. BRITTON. No. And, if the case is to come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, I do not see how that is to be done.

Mr. TISDALE. Nobody would object to that.

Mr. BRITTON. It is only to that extent that I am in favour of the Bill.

Mr. TISDALE. So am I.

Mr. BRITTON. But, I say again, I do not see how these matters can come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. When an engineer is going over the ground to make an estimate for taking the water off a given area of land, he naturally does not stop to say that somebody must come to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and get authority to run the water through a tunnel or culvert under the railway tracks. His business is to take it to a proper outlet, and he naturally conducts the water up or down the line of railway until he comes to an outlet already made. Now, the object of this Bill, as I understand it, is to make the lands of Dominion railways subject to the provincial laws in regard to drainage, the same as farm lands. With such provision, and such protection to the rights of railways, as everybody will see to be necessary in the case, it seems to me this legislation should be passed. I do submit, with all confidence, to the hon. member who introduces this Bill that no committee is so well fitted to deal with it as the Railway Committee.

Mr. CASEY. As nobody seems inclined to speak on the subject, I will say, in closing the debate—

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think the hon. gentleman has the right to speak.

Mr. CASEY. I have the right to close the debate. This was the Order of the day.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When an hon. member moves the Order of the Day, he has no right to reply.

Mr. CASEY. I misunderstood. I shall have a subsequent opportunity.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. When shall the House resolve itself in committee on the said Bill ?

Mr. CASEY. I propose to move that it be referred to the same special committee as considered it last year.

Mr. TISDALE. I understood the Prime Minister to say the matter should stand ?

Mr. CASEY. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) please keep his seat and preserve order.

Mr. TISDALE. I can raise a point of order.

Mr. CASEY. That is not a point of order. I shall move this resolution for the purpose of saying what I have to say on the subject, but to withdraw it at the Premier's request. I beg to move that a special committee, to be composed of members whom I need not name at the moment, be appointed to consider this Bill.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) cannot speak on a motion of that kind.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not think the hon. gentleman has a right to speak at all until the question has been put.

Mr. CASEY. I am going to speak to this motion. The question is when shall this Bill be referred to committee. In moving the motion that I now do, I follow the same course as last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is a point of order.

Mr. CASEY. I am speaking to the point of order. I propose to move the same motion as I did last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey) does not say that the point of order was taken last year. On the other hand, it is taken this year.

Mr. CASEY. I think the precedent settles the point of order. I beg to quote from the Journals of last year the precedent to which I refer, when the motion passed without objection :

The Order of the Day being read, for the second reading of the Bill respecting drainage on and across the property of railway companies, The Bill was accordingly read a second time.

Mr. Casey moved, seconded by Mr. Scriver, "That the Bill be referred to a select committee composed of Messieurs Bain, Campbell, Henderson, McGregor, Monk, Tolmie and the mover, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report from time to time."

Mr. Chauvin moved, in amendment, seconded by Mr. Montague, "That the names of Messieurs Casgrain and Fortin be added to the said proposed committee."

And the question being put on the amendment, it was resolved in the affirmative.

Then the main question, so amended, being put, it was resolved in the affirmative.

I submit that the precedent establishes my right to speak on this motion.

Mr. HAGGART. In that case unanimous consent was given.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. That course could be taken with unanimous consent, and I suppose it was given last year ; but, I understand it is not the same now. I am sorry to rule that the hon. gentleman has no right to speak. When shall the House resolve itself in committee on this Bill ? At the next sitting of the House ?

ATTACHMENT OF SALARIES OF CIVIL SERVANTS.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 38) respecting the attachment of salaries of public officers and of employees of the Government.

Mr. CASEY.

He said : I beg to move the second reading of this Bill, and in doing so will briefly explain, for the benefit of the House, that since last session I have given considerable attention to the matter and have communicated with a number of gentlemen of the legal profession in order to get the benefit of their advice.

The Bill which I have presented to-day, while the same in principle as the Bill I presented last session contains more details. It provides, of course, that the salaries of civil servants may be attached the same as the salaries of any other citizens in the country. I think that is a fair proposition, and should not require any argument from myself in its defence. I do not think that any hon. gentleman in this House will dispute the view that a servant of the Government should be subject to have his salary garnisheed for debt the same as any other person in the Dominion. In fact, it is my opinion that a civil servant is even in a better position than the average citizen of this country drawing a salary, because his pay is always sure, he receives it at least once every month, and knowing that he has an assured income, it seems to me a most reasonable proposition indeed that his salary should be attachable the same as that of any other citizen. Machinery is provided for the recovery of the money due. If hon. gentlemen will read the Bill they will see that no expense will be incurred by the Government in the operation of the Act under the suit of the creditor for the debt due him. I am persuaded that this Act ought to pass. It is seconded by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Fortin), who is one of the ablest lawyers in the House, and who, no doubt, will be able to explain the Bill in detail better than myself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think this is a very important measure, and I would like very much to know, if the Government have given it any consideration, what view they are disposed to take in regard to it. It is a very grave departure from the established practice of the country, and I think it is open to a good deal of question.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This subject has been referred to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Mills) for consideration. I have not yet received his report, he has not given it his full attention. I have to ask, therefore, that the debate be adjourned in order that we may see his report later on. I may point out to my hon. friend that, although I have sympathy with the object of his Bill, I am not prepared to accept it as it now stands. I will point out to him some objections which I would ask him to consider before he proceeds with his Bill. The civil servants, like all other classes of the community, should pay their debts, and there should be some kind of process of law to compel them to discharge their duty in this respect, the same as all other classes of citizens. But I can see very well that if this Bill were to pass it might work severe injury to the civil servant. If this Bill were to pass as it stands at present, the head of a department might receive one, two, three, four or five garnishments in a month against a civil servant; there might be against the same official at the same time four or five judgments, which would absorb more than his entire salary every month, and would make it impossible for him to live. That is one of the objections I see to this Bill at the present time. If it were adopted it should be with some restriction, so that at all events, it would not render the civil servant penniless. In the province of Quebec there is a measure of this kind now on the statute-book. The salary of a civil servant is now attachable under the law of that province, but only to a limited extent, only a certain percentage of his salary may be deducted monthly for the satisfaction of his creditors. But I would imagine that such a measure of restriction would be absolutely imperative, if this Bill were to carry. But there is another objection, to which I do not think my hon. friend has given attention. In the province of Ontario, I believe, it is the law—my hon. friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) can inform me if that is the case—I believe in that province there is a law which compels the debtor, in default of a judgment to be brought before the judge, and he is compelled to answer such questions as the judge may put to him in order to ascertain his means and his liabilities, and upon a comparison of his means with his liabilities, the judge makes an order obliging him to pay so much per month in liquidation of the debt that he may be owing. I am aware that in this city at this moment there are civil servants who have been compelled by judgments of the court here to pay so much of their salaries each month; the judge, after having inquired into their circumstances, has come to the conclusion that they ought to pay so much per month, while they may retain the balance for their living expenses. Suppose that a civil servant here in Ottawa were compelled by an order of the court to pay 10, 15 or 20 per cent of his salary monthly, leaving him only enough to keep himself and his family; if this law were adopted, such a judgment might come to the head office against a civil servant from the province of Quebec and another similar judgment against him from the province of Ontario, so that the poor man would be absolutely unable to live and support his family. Therefore, my hon. friend will see that his proposition is surrounded with many difficulties at the present time. I think the debate had better be adjourned until the Minister of Justice has looked into the question, and I hope at some future sitting we will be able to have the benefit of his views upon this measure. I therefore move that the debate be now adjourned.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. THOMAS FORTIN (Laval). Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up much time in discussing the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Lisgar, because, as I understand, the adjournment of the debate will offer a new opportunity to discuss the details of the measure. There is one other reason, however, why we should not take up much time, and that is, because last year, on a similar occasion, when a Bill of this nature was introduced by the same hon. member we discussed the matter fully, and as far as I was concerned I expressed my opinion as strongly as I could. I have not changed my mind since that occasion, Mr. Speaker; on the contrary, I am more convinced to-day, perhaps, if possible, than I have ever been of the necessity of a law of this kind. I have been unable to find any one good reason why the employees of the Dominion Government should constitute a special privileged class. I am against all kinds of privileges, and, if there is one privilege which should not exist, it seems to me, it is the very one which exists in favour of the officers of the Dominion Government. One of the arguments advanced last year was that a law of this kind would embarrass the Government. Now, I think that contention, in itself, is an admission that the state of affairs, in regard to the payment of legitimate debts by public officers, is not what it should be. If there is a sufficient number of public officers who do not meet their legitimate debts to embarrass the Government, if a law of this kind were passed it seems to me to be one of the best of reasons why the law should be passed. I think it was said that it would be necessary to organize a new department if this law were passed. That seems to me to be another reason in favour of the adoption of such a law. If, as I said a moment ago, the number of public officers who do not meet their legitimate debts, is so great that a new department will have to be organized to answer the seizures or the garnishments, that is the best of reasons why the law should be passed, because the state of affairs existing to-day is such as to constitute almost a scandal on that particular subject. Other reasons were mentioned before the House rose at six o'clock. The right hon. Prime Minister, although he declared himself to be in sympathy with the hon. member in regard to this Bill, yet mentioned two objections which he believes will be applicable to the Bill. The first, if I caught his words rightly, is this: Suppose several judgments should be served against a public officer—in that case, said the right hon. Prime Minister, it would probably not leave enough of the salary of that public officer to enable him to live. Now, that is no argument against the Bill, and for this season, that the law which will determine what portion of the salary is to be seized, will only enable a creditor to seize such portion. Suppose, for instance, that a judgment is obtained in the province of Quebec. In the province of Quebec salaries are seizable in the following proportions:—One-fifth of the salary if the salary does not exceed $1,000 per annum; one-fourth is seizable if the salary does not exceed $2,000 per annum, and one-third if the salary exceeds $3,000 per annum. Now whatever number of seizures might be taken, it could only affect that one-fifth, one-fourth or one-third. Suppose a judgment is served against a public officer whose salary is $1,000 per annum, only one-fifth of that would be seizable. The first attachment will seize that one-fifth and that one-fifth will be paid to the creditor, so long as that judgment is not satisfied, and any other seizure that may be taken will not affect the balance of the salary, because there is only one portion of it which is seizable. So that, in my opinion at least, this is no objection at all. The second objection, which was pointed out by the right hon. Prime Minister, is this: He says that in the province of Ontario, for instance, a public officer may be compelled by the order of the judge to pay a certain portion of the judgment out of his salary at so much per month. The Prime Minister says, suppose such an order is rendered in Ontario, and a judgment is served, coming from the province of Quebec in the hands of the Deputy Minister of a department, against some officer, this will leave the public officer without anything to live upon. I submit that this objection is groundless, at least it is so in my opinion. In the first place it must be remembered that public officers live in one province, and by their profession they are not likely to have dealings or to contract obligations elsewhere than where they reside.

Take a public officer residing in Ottawa, for instance: it is not likely he will incur any liabilities outside the province of Ontario. Such a case is not likely, therefore, to happen, but even if it did happen, it is well known that although such an order may be given in Ontario, to pay a certain amount per month, such order may always be revoked or modified. In the very case which has been mentioned by the Prime Minister there is nothing to prevent a public officer from applying to a court to be relieved from such an order, so that the seized portion, and that portion only, would remain under attachment. As to the Bill itself, I see that the hon. member (Mr. Richardson) has followed to a great extent the law in force in the province of Quebec, and I think he has done well in that.

Mr. FORTIN.

The Bill, as submitted this year, is certainly a great improvement on the Bill of last year. Objection was taken last year that the Bill did not provide for the necessary procedure, but in the present Bill everything seems to have been studied out, and every provision is made to carry out its object. I see also that in the second section of the Bill the legislative authority of the province upon the determination of the quantum to be seized is also recognized. It is clear enough that this Parliament would have no authority to determine what portion of a salary should be seized or should not be seized. All we can do here—and that is the object of the Bill—is to provide for the execution of the judgment, which can be taken in the different provinces, and as regards the quantum to be seized the laws of the different provinces would have to be followed. On the whole, it is my opinion that the Bill is a good one, and it appears to me that its object should be acceptable to almost everybody. There are a great many public officers who pay their just and legitimate debts as the ordinary citizens do, and those have no objection whatever to a law of this kind. The law, as it stands to-day, is sometimes prejudicial to this class, and I have heard some of them say that it is injurious to them. Many say that they do not want any privilege or special law in their favour. Moreover, it prejudicially affects their credit. I remember distinctly the case of a public officer saying that he went to rent a house in the city of Ottawa, and when he gave his name and occupation the landlord would have nothing to do with him unless he gave security for the rent. That such a case should occur is the best evidence that a law of this kind is necessary. I do not know upon what ground or upon what reason can be based a law which constitutes a special privilege in favour of public officers. The public officers of the Dominion are the best paid officials in Canada. They are paid more generously than the officers of the provincial legislatures, and they are better paid also than the ordinary clerks employed in stores or by the large railway companies, banks, &c. The salaries of all these latter officials are attachable to a certain extent, and I do not see why it should not be the same in the case of officers of the Dominion Government.

Mr. L. A. CHAUVIN (Terrebonne). Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of this Bill. The first dignity of a man is to keep his word and to pay his debts. It is becoming to the dignity of the state that its employees should pay their debts. According to our law in the province of Quebec, the workmen and even the civil employee can have a portion of their salaries or wages seized, and I do not see why the same portion of the salaries of the federal employees should not be seizable. It is not derogatory to the dignity of a civil employee in the local governments to have his salary seized in order to oblige him to pay his debts, why would it be derogatory to a federal employee to have his salary seized for the same purpose? The member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) said he was against all privileges. I do not admit it is a privilege for a man not to pay his debts. If it is one, I do not envy it. Against those who do envy it, the best treatment is to abolish that privilege. To quote the words of a French writer, I might say that here, like in France, and even more than in France, because we are more democratic: "We like privileges, but we like them extended to everybody." This is the reason why I want the federal servants to be put on the same footing as the civil employees of the province of Quebec. Last year the right hon. Prime Minister promised his support to this Bill if the proposer would wait till this session of Parliament and amend it so as to make it workable. If the Bill is not passed this year it will not be the fault of the member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) nor of the member for Laval (Mr. Fortin). The Prime Minister will have to take the responsibility before this House and the country for opposing this reform.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I supported a similar Bill last session, and I am prepared to support this Bill to-day. I never could understand why a civil servant should not be under the same obligations with regard to paying his honest debts as any other man in this country. The strongest argument against this Bill is that it would give the Government a little trouble, but if we stopped every reform because it would give trouble a great many people would have advantages they should not enjoy. I think such a measure as this would elevate the manhood of the civil servants, would make them much more self-reliant, and very likely make them much more economical in the affairs of life. For my part, I think this Bill should be adopted by the House.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). There seems to be a general consensus of opinion in favour of the principle of this Bill. As I said last session, I am in favour of the principle of this Bill. But as the matter is not to be disposed of now, it is as well that I should re-state the objection which seems to me to be in the Bill as it is drawn, so that attention may be drawn to it, and there may be a readiness to deal with that, if we can, when the matter comes up again. The Bill as drawn seems to involve a constitutional question. It is not a question of principle, but a question of procedure, which is dealt with in the Bill itself, instead of being left to the provincial legislatures. The hon. member for Laval (Mr. Fortin) spoke of section 2 as if it did not interfere in any way with provincial legislation; but on reading section 2, it will be seen that it perhaps does interfere with it. It may determine the proportion in which a civil servant's salary may be seized. It does not say that the seizure shall be according to the laws in force in the different provinces; but it assumes to provide for the issue of an attachment in any of the provinces which will run into the other provinces. That might be very useful legislation. I for one would be very glad to see something of the kind, so that a man might recover without new suit, a judgment in any part of the Dominion, after suing in any other part. But instead of leaving the matter to be dealt with by the courts in the different provinces, this provision seems to assume the right of this Parliament to determine the procedure for the recovery of a debt in the different provinces, which I think the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill will bring us face to face with a very important question.

Now, there has been recent legislation in the province of Ontario on this subject. In the session of 1898 the legislature made provision for the garnishment of the salaries of civil servants, and provided, so far as that province is concerned, a very simple and easy way of dealing with the question; but certainly an entirely different way from the way proposed in the Bill now before us. If I am right in that, there is a conflict, so far as the province of Ontario is concerned, as to the way of dealing with debts due by Dominion officials and the way of dealing with debts due by provincial officials. These ought to be harmonized in some way or another. Then, I want to make a remark on what the hon. member for Laval said in reference to the objection raised by the hon. the Premier this afternoon. The hon. the Premier said that this state of things might exist—that in the province of Ontario a debtor might be brought up on a judgment summons and ordered by a judge to pay a certain sum every month, and if this Act were in force, an attachment might issue in favour of another creditor, which would prevent the debtor complying with the order of the judge. In answer to that the hon. member says, yes, but he might apply to the judge and have that order revoked. So he might, but would that be fair to the creditor who, in his vigilance, had secured such an order? Certainly, that would be the result of a revocation of the order. So that the difficulty is not met by what the hon. member for Laval has said.

However, I do not want to prolong the discussion of the Bill at this stage. I am heartily in accord with its principle, and am only calling attention to the difficulties there may be in working it out without clashing with provincial legislation. I am opposed as strongly as any one in this House can be to class legislation. Everybody, if able, ought to pay his debts, and there ought to be machinery in every province to compel him to do so. Then, another thing has been provided for in the provinces which I think ought to be provided for in this Bill. In the province of Ontario, in order to invoke the Act in force there, the debt of the civil servant must exceed $25 ; so that the law would not be applied so as to attach his salary for small debts under that amount. Then, there is to be a provision, I take it, that this Act, if it comes into force, shall not apply to pre-existing debts, but only to debts contracted after the passage of the Act. Having called the attention of the House to these features of the Bill, I again say that I am in no way opposed to it.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). This is not the first time a Bill of this kind has been brought before this House. The question of making the salaries of civil servants seizable for their debts has been under consideration before. I have always been prepared to support a Bill in this direction, and I am anxious to support the Bill now before the House. I do not see why civil servants should ask—and, indeed, I do not see that they do ask—to be placed in a position to escape paying their honest debts. I agree with my hon. friend that the civil servants of this country are as well paid as any other class in the country. In fact, bank clerks, school teachers, ministers of the gospel, and similar classes, are not as well paid as the civil servants, and I would like to know why the salaries of civil servants should be exempt from seizure for the payment of their honest debts any more than other employees. As one hon. gentleman has said, even ordinary labourers, men who are struggling to make a living, do not enjoy any such exemption. I do think it is the duty of this House to take into consideration the compelling of all people to pay their honest debts if they have got the means ; and, if they have not, they had better husband their resources so that they will be able to pay. I have known civil servants to contract debts year after year, and neglect to pay them, simply because there was no law under which they could be forced to pay them.

I do think that we should place our civil servants on the same footing as all other classes by requiring them to pay their honest debts. No doubt there may be some difficulty experienced in drafting the clauses of this Bill so as to create as little friction as possible in the departments ; but even if this is going to impose a little additional work in each department and possibly require the appointment of some additional clerks to carry out the law, it is only just to the people in general that this expenditure be incurred in order to apply the principle that every man shall be compelled to pay his honest debts. A measure of this kind will also be useful as a warning to civil servants not to go into debt. It may be very true that in this city business men know that the salaries of civil servants cannot be seized, but they also know that it is sometimes necessary to give these people credit more or less and sometimes even to keep a standing account open with them. A civil servant may for some time have acted honestly in meeting his bills, and then he may take advantage of the credit which he thereby enjoys to run up an account and then refuse to pay the merchant who has treated him generously, courteously and kindly. Such a state of things is exceedingly unfair to business men. It may be said that credit should not be given to civil servants, but we all know that business men are anxious to sell their goods and will give credit where they have reason to believe that their customers are honest, and occasionally their confidence is abused. But the principle we seek to put in force is that no class in the community should be exempt by law from meeting their honest debts. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Britton), these relate to details that can be regulated by the committee, and I am sure that the House in its wisdom will be able to satisfactorily meet the difficulties he suggests. I certainly hope that this measure will pass.

Mr. M. K. COWAN (South Essex). I do not propose to discuss the principle of the Bill, but merely wish to point out that this measure is intended to prevent civil servants entering into contracts and then subsequently refusing to pay because the law prevents their salaries being attached. I agree with my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Britton) that this Bill should not apply to pre-existing debts or actions of damages, but these matters have already been dealt with by the Ontario Statutes of 1898. There are two other matters to which I think it ought not to apply. I think it ought not to apply to any debt contracted by a civil servant as a surety. No person should give credit to an individual on the suretyship of a civil servant. Nor do I think it should apply to debts contracted prior to his entry in the service. If any man, before his appointment to the service, was in debt, his salary should not be liable to garnishment for such debts. With those amendments, which are matters for the committee to discuss, I am prepared to support the Bill.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). (Translation.) If I deemed it my duty to vote against a similar Bill last session, it was not from any want of sympathy with the principle of the Bill, but because the promoter of the Bill had not taken into consideration the various enactments of our provincial legislatures. But I find, this year, that the Bill now under consideration has been made to undergo radical changes. The changes introduced by the promoter of the Bill are of great importance. For instance, I think that the striking off of that feature of the Bill providing that the salaries of civil servants shall be liable to general attachment, while the provincial law enacts that a portion only of the salaries of civil servants shall be liable to seizure, is an improvement on the Bill of last year.

I see that in framing his Bill, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) has taken into consideration the provincial enactments in this connection, and that the salaries of civil servants are to be seizable, under this Bill, only in such proportion as is provided by the several provinces. The objectionable feature in the Bill of last year having been removed from section 2 of this Bill, such is the reason which induced me to change my views.

I believe in the principle that civil servants should carry out their contracts as well as any other citizen of the Dominion, and I think it is only fair for this House to oblige them to pay their just debts, as ordinary citizens, such as railway employees, clerks, etc., are bound to do. I even believe this measure to be in the best interests of the servants of the Government.

I coincide, to some extent, in the views expressed by the hon. member from South Essex (Mr. Cowan). I think, however, it would be going too far to so amend this Bill as to narrow it down to the cases pointed out by the hon. gentleman. Still I am of opinion that the wording of section 2 should be so amended so as to make it read that this Act shall not apply to pre-existing debts but only to debts contracted after the passage of this Act. For my part, I think this Bill is an improvement on that of last session and I am prepared to support it.

Mr. F. A. MARCOTTE (Champlain). (Translation.) This Bill, which was also introduced last year, is of importance from more than one standpoint. As just remarked by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) important changes have been introduced, this year, by the promoter of the Bill. I am also of opinion that this Bill should not apply to pre-existing debts, but only to debts contracted after its passage.

For my part, I believe that public servants should not be allowed, in the future, to shirk their honourable responsibilities towards their creditors, but should be obliged to carry out their contracts, according to their means, as well as any other citizen of the Dominion.

If I understand this Bill aright, its object is to enact that civil servants shall not escape payment of their honest debts and shall live within their income. Their salaries are large enough to allow them to keep up their position. The result of this Bill will be to make civil servants more cautious, as a good many of them believe that they can get into debt and defy their creditors.

Another consequence of this Bill will be to place civil servants on a footing of equality with the rest of the community. For my part, on these several grounds, I am ready to support this measure. The great mass of civil servants who pay their honest debts cannot complain of it; it is only those who do not want to discharge their legal obligations, as every other class of the community, who will find fault with it. The merchants are entitled to be paid the debts due them.

Merchants and others would no longer find themselves financially embarrassed, were civil servants obliged to pay their debts. Suppose a merchant takes the risk of making advances to a civil servant, what should he do? He ought first to make sure whether that employee has got into debt, and whether he is able to pay his bills, whether also he is in the habit of doing so. That merchant therefore finds himself under the necessity of investigating into the private life of those public servants who ask for his goods on credit. That causes considerable annoyance to the civil servants and considerable inconvenience to the merchants.

I am therefore strongly in favour of the principle of this Bill and I am prepared to support it.

Mr. P. V. SAVARD (Chicoutimi and Saguenay). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to have taken part in this debate, but, after hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Marcotte), I think it my duty to say a few words. The right hon. Prime Minister moved the adjournment of the debate this afternoon, and it was apparently understood that there would be no debate this evening. I think the House ought to acquiesce in the reasons urged by the Prime Minister this afternoon, when he moved the adjournment of the debate, and more particularly when he said that he was in favour of the principle of this Bill. There seems to be a perfect consensus of opinion on this point. We all approve of the principle of this Bill, that a man should pay his legitimate debts. I am sure there is not one hon. gentleman in this House who does not concur in that view. I do not see why this debate should be any further prolonged, and, as I said, if I rose in my seat, to address the House, it was only after hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Champlain. The Bill, as it stands, now, is certainly an improvement on that introduced here last session. I voted against the Bill which was introduced last session, and there were many members who did the same; so, the Bill was short-lived. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) who voted against the Bill last session, has not changed his views this year; but it is the Bill which has been modified.

I am in favour of the principle of the Bill now before us, but as the subject has been referred to the Minister of Justice for consideration, I think it preferable that the opinion of the Minister should first be known, before going any further. When the report of the Minister is before us, we will then be in a better position to appreciate the advantages and disadvantages of the proposed legislation.

Therefore, I think the House would be well advised in not protracting this debate and in adopting the motion of adjournment proposed by the right hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, despite the in-vation which the hon. member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay (Mr. Savard) has just extended to the House, I do not think it out of place to somewhat protract the debate on this question, as the motion of adjournment was moved, I think, perhaps rather prematurely.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Louder.

Mr. LARIVIERE. It would not make any difference to my hon. friend if I spoke louder, when I am speaking in French. (Translation.) There are undoubtedly in our statutes provisions which prevent the salaries of the civil servants being seized. Now, in order to put those employees on a footing of equality with the other classes of the community, I think all that would be required would be to repeal that enactment of the Act which prevents them from having their salary garnisheed the same as any other citizen.

It is enacted in the Bill now under consideration that, henceforth, the salary of civil servants will be liable to attachment at the suit of any judgment creditor; but I fail to see any reference to the Act which exempts them from such attachment. So, I think all that is required would be merely to repeal that exemption, and then the members of the civil service would be placed upon the same footing as the rest of the community, subject to the laws of their respective provinces, so far as the payment of their debts is concerned. Thus matters would be considerably simplified, and it would obviate the necessity of having, on the one hand, a general exemption from seizure, and on the other hand, a special Act, by which, retracing our steps, we would be enabled to seize the salary of those employees.

It is true that in the Bill now under discussion, there is to be found an enactment providing that a certain portion only of the salary of the civil servants shall be liable to attachment; but I think the civil servants do not ask for any favour in this connection. Should they, however, feel aggrieved by the exemption now in force, from the moment that they will be placed upon the same footing as the rest of the community, they will no longer have any ground for complaining of the law. Moreover, I believe that the proportion of the civil servants who do not pay their debts is not considerable. I also understand that, in several departments of our public administration, there are very stringent rules, under which public employees, after due notice, are liable to be dismissed from the service, in case they do not pay their debts, and I know that after such warning, those employees hasten to discharge their honourable responsibilities. I am not referring here to the present administration any more than to the former administrations; but I may say that if there are now public servants who do not pay their just debts, I believe it is owing to the protection they have received at the hands of the Government. Such is the rule which is now prevailing, and which has always prevailed. I may say further that I am not aware of any large number of civil servants being complained of in that respect, on the contrary, I am under the impression that there are very few cases of that kind.

Mr. JAMES SOMERVILLE (North Brant). I rise simply to repeat the opinion I expressed last session as to the principle of this Bill. I think the principle is sound. Not being a lawyer, I cannot discuss the details; but I think everybody will agree that such a Bill is a proper one to introduce in this House. There is no reason whatever why a civil servant should be exempt from the ordinary laws of the country that apply to other people, and, for my part, I do not believe that the civil servants wish to be so exempt. There may be some exceptions, but I believe the civil servants, as a class, desire to be placed on the same footing as other members of the community. I do not see why this House, containing so many lawyers as it does, cannot devise some means by which this Bill can be put in workable shape. Last session it was objected to on the ground that it would cost the Government a good deal to have officers to attend to these garnishee orders when issued. I do not think that that would be any reason why the law should not be passed, if it is desirable in itself. Besides, I understand from the mover of the Bill that it is provided in the Bill as now presented, that the expense shall be put upon the civil servant who is indebted and who is put under the garnishee order. I consider that, in justice to the civil servants, in order to uphold the standing of the civil service, as well as in justice to the people who sometimes give them credit, this Bill should pass. The civil servants, in most cases, enjoy better salaries than are paid to bankers, school teachers and clerks in various lines of business; and there is no reason why they should be exempted from the payment of their just debts. I am, therefore, strongly in favour of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. T. SPROULE (East Grey) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 40) to amend the Criminal Code, 1892, with respect to combinations in restraint of trade.

He said: This is a very simple Bill, and one that aims at changing a few words in clause 520 of the Criminal Code. That clause reads as follows:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding four thousand dollars and not less than two hundred dollars, or to two years' imprisonment, and if a corporation, is liable to a penalty not exceeding ten thousand dollars and not less than one thousand dollars, who conspires, combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, steamboat or transportation company, unlawfully—

(a) To unduly—

I want to take out the word "unduly."

—limit the facilities for transporting, producing, manufacturing, supplying, storing or dealing in any article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce; or

(b) To restrain or injure trade or commerce in relation to any such article or commodity; or

(c) To unduly prevent—

I want to take out the word "unduly."

—limit, or lessen the manufacture or production of any such article or commodity, or to unreasonably enhance the price thereof; or

(d) To unduly—

—drop "unduly" in this clause also.

—prevent or lessen competition in the production, manufacture, purchase, barter, sale, transportation or supply of any such article or commodity, or in the price of insurance upon person or property.

These are the changes I propose in the law, and I am seeking these changes for the simple reason we are told that it would be impossible, under the existing law as it stands, to secure a conviction of any persons guilty of combining in restraint of trade. It would put upon the prosecutor the onus of proving a great many things which it would be very difficult to prove. How could one prove what had "unduly" enhanced the value of an article, or increased the price or restrained trade. The Bill to prevent combines, in its original form, did not contain these limitations, and we think it much better that the original forms should be restored. This law has been on the Statute-book many years, and efforts have been made from time to time, to get the Attorney General of the province to prosecute under the Act, and several times applications have been made to private individuals to do so; and they all raised the same objection—that it would be almost impossible to secure a conviction under the law as it reads. A Bill similar to the one now proposed was passed in this House, but it was changed in the Senate. When it came back to this House the session was so far advanced, that, rather than have the Bill thrown out, the changes were accepted. The Bill to remove these limitations was, at a subsequent session, introduced in the Senate, and, after a lengthy debate and the lapse of a considerable time, the law was amended in the direction I now propose. The Bill was sent down to this House and I introduced it; but, unfortunately, it was so late in the session it could not be reached. So, as the amendment now proposed has been passed in this House without serious objection, and as it has also been passed in the Senate, I do not see that there can be any reasonable objection to making the amendment now. It may be said by some that there are no combines in this country that this Act would reach. I can only say that I was invited to introduce such a Bill two years ago on account of a combine in the leather trade. I have here a petition which, I think, was sent to the Minister of Finance. I have no doubt he has some remembrances of it. I have a letter in connection with it which I wish to read, because it will explain to the House more concisely than I can the situation with regard to the combines and show the necessity of some such Bill as I now propose to prevent these combinations in restraint of trade. The petition is as follows:—

COPY OF PETITION.

To the Honourable W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance of the Dominion of Canada.

The petition of the undersigned tanners in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec humbly sheweth:

That your petitioners, some of whom are engaged in the business of tanning slaughter sole leather in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, in which most of us have invested all our capital, and others of your petitioners are users and consumers of such leather in our factories.

That certain of the larger tanners in the Dominion have entered into an unlawful and injurious combine, which acts very much to our prejudice in our said business, inasmuch as by reason of the said combine we find our opportunities to do business curtailed and hampered, and in some instances practically destroyed.

The said combine is specially directed to what is known as the production of Spanish sole leather, but it affects, injuriously the whole leather production and trade of the Dominion, as will be apparent from the following statements of facts:—

The following are, your petitioners believe, members of the said combine, viz., Beardmore & Co., Breithaupt Leather Co., Marlatt & Armstrong, Bowman & Zinkan, Shaw & Cassils, Warren & Tobey, Logan Tanning Co., C. S. Hyman and Dawker, McIntosh & Co., and these are the largest, or among the largest producers of sole leather in the Dominion.

In another petition others are named, making the list much larger.

They have arranged with the consumers of sole leather in Canada to allow a rebate of 5 per cent on all purchases, which rebate is kept back for a period of six months, when, upon making oath or solemn declaration in the nature of an oath, that the purchaser has not purchased sole leather from any tanner or dealer not a member of the combine, the 5 per cent is refunded.

Some of the said members of the combine also produce light leathers, and by reason of the said combine are enabled to obtain and keep from your petitioners even the trade in such last mentioned kinds of leathers.

By reason of the said combine, and as its prime object, the prices of sole leather are kept up above their real value, and all competition is prevented by reason of the bait of the said 5 per cent rebate, which attracts the customer, and thus retains the trade in the hands of the said members of the said combine.

Spanish sole leather is not of general production, its production is practically in the hands of the said combine. The customer must have it for his business, and in order to get it he must buy from the combine, and so buying Spanish sole he is compelled to buy his other sole leather, such as your petitioners produce, from them in order to get the 5 per cent rebate.

Your petitioners believe that the true situation is fairly and truthfully set forth in the printed document hereto annexed, which is a true copy of a letter published in the Toronto "Globe" some time ago, shortly after the said combine was formed.

Your petitioners have every reason to believe, and have had many assurances to this effect, that the said combine is very much disliked even by the consumers who receive the said rebate, but who would much rather buy in the ordinary way, in an open and free market.

Your petitioners believe and most respectfully urge upon you, and the Government of which you are a member, that the said combine is an unlawful combination, and that the proper remedy, unless it disbands, is to abrogate the duty on Spanish sole leather entering Canada.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

I may say they made this application after submitting the present law to an eminent legal authority, and being advised that it would be difficult, if not impossible, either to break up the combine or to secure conviction under the law. Then follow the names of the petitioners :

COPY OF AFFIDAVIT.

Dominion of Canada, Province of County of

To Wit.

In the matter of the rebate allowed by members of the Tanner's Association to purchasers of sole leather from them.

I, _____, of the _____ of _____ in the county of _____, do solemnly declare :

1. That I am a member of the firm of _____ carrying on business of _____ in the _____ of _____ and as such have a full and intimate knowledge of all transactions of my said firm or business and know that the statements herein contained are absolutely true ;

2. That since the _____ day of _____ up to the time of the making of this declaration I have neither purchased nor used in any way whatsoever, nor contracted to buy directly or indirectly, nor contracted for the production or manufacture of any sole leather of any kind or description whatsoever (except oak sole leather), save from the following firms :—Shaw, Cassils & Co. ; Beardmore & Co. ; Breithaupt Leather Co., Limited ; Logan Tanning Company, Limited ; C. S. Hyman & Co. ; Bowman & Zinkan ; Dowker, McIntosh & Co. ; Marlatt & Armstrong ; Muskoka Leather Company, Limited ; Acton Tanning Co., Limited ; Magnetawan Tanning and Electric Company, Limited ; Wingham Tanning Co. ; S. Arscott & Co., Benton, N.B. ; Warren, Tobey & Co.

3. That my firm has not, neither has any partner of mine, nor has any one acting as my agent, nor has any one acting as the agent of my firm, nor has any one acting as the agent of any partner of mine, nor has any one acting as the agent of the business described above, nor has any one employed by me or by any partner of mine or employed in connection with the business described above, nor has any one connected with me or with any partner of mine in any way whatsoever in the business referred to above, nor has any one connected with my firm or with the business described above, either purchased or used in any way whatsoever, or contracted to buy directly or indirectly, or received for sale or sold on commission, or dealt in any way with, or contracted for the production or manufacture of any sole leather of any kind or description whatsoever (except oak sole leather), save from the above mentioned firms ;

4. That I and all who are in any way connected with the business described above, have done no act that would disentitle the said business to the said rebate offered upon certain conditions by the firms mentioned above, in two circulars dated December 31st, 1895, and January 31st, 1896, but on the contrary we have faithfully fulfilled, both in letter and spirit, all conditions contained in said two circulars ;

5. That the statement marked Exhibit "A" to this declaration is a true and complete account of the sole leather purchased or contracted for by any one connected with the business described above from the above mentioned firms.

And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing it to be true, and knowing that it is of the said force and effect as if made under oath and by virtue of "The Canada Evidence Act, 1893.

Declared before me at in the county of this day of 1897.

A Commissioner, &c.

Now, that is the declaration of oath which they must make before they get a rebate on that leather. The information I have from a large number of tanners is to this effect: We are engaged in manufacturing other kinds of leather, but we cannot sell it to those firms because they are in the combine and therefore precluded from dealing with us. These firms are not allowed to buy from us, nor can they buy that kind of leather, nor any other kind, and practically we are shut out of the market in our own country by virtue of this combination, which is very detrimental to trade. They have given me the names of a large number of men who are so circumstanced; I need not read them. But I have here another letter, or another explanation of it, which appeared in the "Globe," and although it is a little lengthy, I think the importance of this Bill justifies me in reading it, because it goes into the subject very fully. It is signed by a tanner outside of the combination, and is dated December 15th:

To the Editor of the "Globe."

Sir,—I read with great interest the report published in your paper of the 20th of November of the interview between the tariff commissioners and the sole leather combine. If you will kindly allow me space I will endeavour to correct the misleading statement made by the Messrs. Beardmore and others composing this combine, when confronted by Sir Richard Cartwright with the printed declaration to be signed by the buyers of sole leather. The reply was that the document was called into existence on account of the action of certain American firms in interfering with their exportations of sole leather, and the securing of the home market by offering a rebate to all those interested, who have not imported any sole leather, except oak sole leather. Now, this sounds all very plausible and fair, but let me tell you, sir, that this is not the only object these gentlemen have in view. Their object is twofold. First, by trying to get the tariff on sole leather increased so as to prevent competition with foreign countries, and, second, to prevent competition at home by combining together and issuing circulars to the buyers of sole leather allowing rebates to such buyers, upon their consenting to certain conditions contained therein. I have before me the affidavit, which has to be signed and sworn to by the buyers of sole leather before they are allowed the rebate. If you will kindly allow me, I will give to the public some extracts from this precious document, which goes on to say:

It is practically a repetition of the oath I have already read; therefore I need not repeat that part of it. Then it goes on to say:

Now, that is the declaration or oath which different firms (the circulars give thirteen, but four of these are branch businesses owned and operated by the nine firms whose names are given in the circulars), and the buyers of sole leather must buy from them exclusively or forfeit the rebate, how is it going to affect the dozens of other sole leather tanners throughout the country? Oh, but the question is asked: Can't the other tanners allow a rebate on the same terms as the combine, and so be on an even footing with them?

The answer is, that this combine is composed of the only firms in Canada who manufacture Spanish sole leather, and they practically control that branch of the trade. They also manufacture slaughter sole leather as well, and in this line they come in competition with the small manufacturer outside of the combine, and now here comes the point aimed at by the combine. They say to the buyers and dealers in sole leather, who have to have both kinds, viz., slaughter and Spanish sole leather, as both are necessary in their business, You must buy from us exclusively or we will not give you the rebate. Now, I think I have made this point pretty clear, and you can see at once the position the small manufacturer of sole leather is placed in. The question might also be asked, Why do not the small manufacturers of sole leather go into the manufacture of Spanish sole? To this I would say, that the hides necessary for the manufacture of this line have to be imported, and the small tanner lacks the capital necessary to do this. He has to confine himself to the purchase of what hides he can buy in his own locality, and is unable to manufacture Spanish sole leather on that account. I have as many as a dozen letters from different firms stating that they are unable to buy from me on account of this combine; that they would prefer buying in an open market, but from the existing state of things it is against their interests to do so, and I have no doubt but that other tanners outside of the combine are in the same position as myself.

Now, if this is not a combine, and if they do not exert an undue influence to prevent competition, what is it? It must either be a combine or a conspiracy, and such a one as no Government that has the interest of the people at heart should allow to exist for a moment.

This association also asks the Government for an increase of protection, or it will be impossible for them to carry on their business on account of foreign competition. Why, sir, they are sending their surplus to Europe, and competing with them there. What is to hinder them from competing with us at home? The fact of the matter is, they do not want competition of any kind. Give them increased protection to shut out foreign competition, and they have things in such a shape that they can soon crush out competition at home. Now, Mr. Editor, if the Government cannot frame a law strict enough to do away with this combine (or any combine), the only way that I can see is to put Spanish sole leather on the free list.

I may explain that they were asking this because they could not attack them with this law which was regarded as a suitable one for this purpose they understood from the amendment of the Minister of Finance to the Customs Act, that in the event of a combine in any article of commerce which injuriously affected trade or increased the price he would by an Order in Council put such article on the free list, hence the question which they asked was that the Government put sole leather on the free list, allow them to come in competition with others and let them take their chances. I have a number of letters, one, from Messrs. W. F. & A. Smith, of Goderich; others from a man in Walkerton, but I have not them at hand just now. I think I have one also from Teeswater, Kincardine, Owen Sound, and a number of other places, all complaining of the same thing, that they are unable to sell sole leather to purchasers who were good customers heretofore, by virtue of this combine, because parties, who have hitherto got certain lines of leather from them, are compelled to make a declaration that they have purchased no other leather from any other firm except the combine, in order to get 5 per cent rebate. These small tanneries are very important to the country and to the different localities in which they exist. This disability means a great deal to the small tanners who are buying up the hides that are offered for sale in the different localities. They are not rich enough to become importers on their own account because they have not sufficient capital to enable them to introduce any large importation of hides, therefore, they are obliged to confine their operations to what they can buy at home. They employ labour and spend their money in the different localities and they can make a fair living if they are left to do that in open competition. They firmly believe that if this amendment were made to the law, which I have read, they can attack this combine successfully, and when they found that the Bill was introduced too late to get through the House last year they renewed the request this year that I should introduce the Bill again. I do so at their request believing that this amendment should have been made to the law, and I introduce this with the object of doing whatever I can to try and put down combines. For this reason I ask the House to give this Bill its second reading, and after that, if the House sees fit, we may go into committee and pass it in the shape that I propose.

Mr. ROBT. HOLMES (West Huron). Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add a word or two to what the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said concerning this Bill. I understand that the signatures on this petition, presented by the hon. member for East Grey, includes all the tanners of sole leather outside of the combine, and also all the leading shoe manufacturers in Ontario and Quebec. It affects my own riding very materially, and I am given to understand, that the combine are operating to the detriment of the small tanners to such an extent that these tanners find it almost impossible to carry on their business. Unless the legislation is granted that is asked for in this petition, I suppose a lot of tanners will be compelled to go out of business. I simply wanted to add these few remarks to the statement of the hon. member for East Grey, and I have nothing more to say than that the matter is one that should receive the careful consideration of the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). I perfectly well remember the circumstances detailed by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) under which, not this House, but a former House, was asked to pass a Bill in the shape to which he now desires to restore it. Of course the question is one of very considerable moment and it is not very easy to ascertain how far this measure goes in the shape in which he has proposed it, but I have no objection to offer to the Bill being read the second time, on the understanding that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, which is the committee properly entitled to deal with this question. If the hon. gentleman will agree that it be referred to that committee I will have no objection.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). Before this motion is adopted, I wish to say that I do not see any good or sufficient reason for referring it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce. That committee is one, that in the past, I do not know what it will be now, has proved itself somewhat hostile to that kind of legislation, and it is not necessary, I think, for a public Bill of this character to go before that committee. Private Bills properly go before that committee, but I am not aware, I am speaking subject to correction, that it is usual to refer public Bills to it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Oh, yes; of this kind.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a public Bill, not a private Bill, and, therefore, I think it is not usual to refer such Bills to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Mr. SPROULE. It was not referred to the committee before. The House went into Committee of the Whole, and it was considered here.

Mr. WALLACE. I may say, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce very well knows, that the principle of this Bill has been unanimously affirmed by the House in the past. I believe the opinion of the present House of Commons will be in the same direction. As is stated by the mover of the Bill, the Senate which before added these words to which the House of Commons raised such a strong objection, have reconsidered the matter, and have agreed to the Bill as proposed by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). This is a public Bill, and I think it is quite unnecessary to refer it to the Committee on Banking and Commerce.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have no hostility to this Bill, but on the contrary am disposed to look upon it with favour. The contention that Bills of this character are not referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, is not, generally speaking, correct. I have one or two Bills of some importance which, though Government measures, I intend to ask to have referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, because an opportunity is afforded there of threshing them out in a manner that it is not possible to do in this House. I hope to be able to find myself in a position to support the hon. gentleman's Bill.

Mr. D. TISDALE (South Norfolk). I agree with the Minister of Finance that it is proper to send a Bill of this kind to the Banking and Commerce Committee. No matter whether the Bill be a public or private one, the procedure followed always has been, that when it affects such a large body of people as the traders of Canada, it is sent to a committee so that the people interested may be heard. It is also wise to carefully consider the wording of such a measure in committee, so that its principle may not be carried further than is intended. We all know that there was a very wide discussion in the past with regard to the wording of this Bill. I remember the first time it was before us, it was almost passed through the House when it was found that it went so far as to injuriously affect the very people it was intended to benefit.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the recollection of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) is a little at fault.

Mr. TISDALE. Not at all. That was the opinion of the late lamented Sir John Thompson. He raised the point, and it was on his opinion largely that action was taken with reference to the word "unduly," upon the meaning of which the whole thing turns. I am willing to do any reasonable thing to grant relief to those who may be suffering under present conditions, but I want to see the Bill so worded that it will not do more harm than good. This is a Bill which requires most careful consideration, and the fact that in the past there has been a difference of opinion in regard to it between the Senate and the House of Commons, is all the more reason why it should be most carefully considered by us. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) does not accept the suggestion to refer the Bill to the Banking and Commerce Committee.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Tisdale) is quite out of order, because I did accept it.

Mr. TISDALE. Then, if you accepted it, what is the use of continuing the discussion.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Probably the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) is under a little error as to the Banking and Commerce Committee. It used to be, in my time, rather a small committee, but it is now a very large committee, numbering 128 members, more than half the entire House, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) is a member of it himself, so that he can rely on every one being heard.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston). One advantage of sending this Bill to the committee is that it will give the people an opportunity of being heard, and not so much in reference to the amendment of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) as on the question of trade combinations, which is the subject of the section we are asked to amend. In my opinion the hon. member for East Grey is right, and the Senate—if I may be so bold as to say so—were quite wrong in making the amendment they did make to this section. What is the section? The section is aimed at unlawful combinations. It is aimed against persons who conspire together to make an agreement for an unlawful combination against trade. Therefore, as it stands, the first part of the section protects people in any innocent action they may take to limit trade. And why does it protect them? Because first, there must be a conspiracy or an agreement of some kind which must be an unlawful agreement before it is an offence. The moment you have a conspiracy or unlawful agreement the offence is complete, and when the words "unduly" and "unreasonably" are inserted they simply destroy the whole section. If the Bill goes before the committee we will have the whole question discussed, and surely, any one who considers it must agree that the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) is logically correct in asking to have these objectionable words struck out.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I rise to say something on this question, because I have a little knowledge about the combine in leather, though not very much.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. CRAIG. I have not much knowledge of it I say, but I remember hearing something about it. I wish to say a few words about this combine in leather with which I have nothing to do, although the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) seems to think I have. I repeat that I have nothing to do with it, and I am not here to defend it. A good deal has been read about it to-night, but I may state that I remember hearing that one of the reasons for this combine in leather, as it is called, was this: In the United States a huge combination of all the sole leather tanners was formed with a capital of, I think, $50,000,000, and this combine of the Canadian sole leather tanners was formed in order to hold their own trade against that huge combine which threatened to wipe them out of existence. I have never heard that they charged exorbitant prices on account of that combine, but what they do is this: To customers who deal with them steadily for six months they give a rebate of 5 per cent at the end of that time, and that is done to hold their trade principally against this combine in the United States. I mention that to show that there is something to be said on the other side of the question. I am not in favour of combines, but I think it is only right that this Bill should go before the committee where persons interested on both sides can state their case.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. SPROULE moved that the said Bill be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

TRADE MARK AND DESIGN ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. GEO. H. BERTRAM (Centre Toronto) moved second reading of Bill (No. 41) in further amendment of the Trade Mark and Design Act.

He said: In moving the second reading of this Bill, perhaps it would be as well for me to explain to the House that it is exactly the same in every particular as the Bill which I introduced last session, and which passed this House without opposition. The Bill is a very simple one. It simply enables an association or union of workmen who have a mark in connection with their union, to register that mark, and to be the proprietors of it, as in the case of a label or trade mark used by any trader, manufacturer or merchant. Exception was taken to the Bill in the Senate, and it was thrown out, principally, I think, on the ground that a Bill of this nature gave workmen the power to mark the goods of any manufacturer or tradesman who employed them. It does not give them that power, and it is not the intention to give them that power. The Minister of Justice stated in the Senate that if the Bill were allowed to go into committee, he was quite willing that these words should be added: "Provided always, that no marks shall be put upon the goods without the consent of the proprietor." Instead of raising objection to a union of workmen using a label or mark, I think it should be encouraged, for the simple reason that the fact of the goods they manufacture bearing such a label or mark is an incentive to them to produce a higher and better class of goods: otherwise the label would be of no value whatever. I am quite satisfied that the evils supposed to result from this practice, as indicated by the speeches of some of the hon. members of the Senate, are entirely imaginary. I am satisfied that no merchant, manufacturer or trader has any objection whatever to a workmen's union having a label which they can register and be proprietors of, so that it cannot be used by any one else. That is all the Bill asks for, and I am quite satisfied that it will pass this House again this session, as it did last session; and when it goes up to the Senate, I am sure that after another year's experience and fuller knowledge, the honourable the Senate will see that this is not hasty legislation, and will allow the Bill to become law.

Mr. CRAIG.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 9.45 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 21st April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LINDSAY, HALIBURTON AND MATTAWA RAILWAY.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton) moved:

That the petition of the Lindsay, Haliburton and Mattawa Railway Company, presented this day, praying to be permitted to lay before the House a petition for an Act to extend the time for the commencement and completion of the Lindsay, Haliburton and Mattawa Railway, notwithstanding the expiration of the time for presenting petitions for private Bills, be now read and referred to the Select Standing Committee on Standing Orders.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not want to oppose that motion, but I notice that a somewhat similar motion was made yesterday. I understood that last year it was decided that the rule should be a cast-iron rule for the future; but it seems to me that we are drifting into the same habits that we fell into in former years, of extending the time. It seems to me that it would be desirable to stick to the rule, and shut out a number of those who want to come in after the time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is a good deal of force in what my hon. friend says; but the best of rules require to be used with discretion.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 65) to incorporate the Restigouche Boom Company.—(Mr. McAlister.)

Bill (No. 68) respecting the London Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—(Mr. Fraser, East Lambton.)

Bill (No. 69) to incorporate the Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company.—(Mr. Calvert, by Mr. Fraser, Lambton.)

Bill (No. 70) respecting the Bronson and Weston Lumber Company, and to change its name to the Bronson Lumber Company.—(Mr. McIsaac.)

Bill (No. 71) to incorporate the Algoma Central Railway Company.—(Mr. Dymont, by Mr. Tolmie.)

DRUMMOND COUNTY RAILWAY PURCHASE.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I beg to move that the House do, on Tuesday next, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the following resolution, which has been submitted to the Governor General, and received his recommendation :

1st. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to purchase from the Drummond County Railway Company, and to authorize the said company to sell and convey to Her Majesty the whole of the railway and undertaking of the said company, including its main and branch lines of railway, and all buildings, fixtures and appurtenances appertaining thereto, and upon such purchase being effected the said railway and its branch lines shall become and form part of the Intercolonial Railway, and may be operated as such.

2nd. That the purchase is to include all running powers and other rights, privileges and concessions acquired by the said company from any other railway company or companies, and all its franchises and property of whatsoever kind, excepting only the rolling stock and station furniture of the company and the tools of the section men.

3rd. That the said railway and undertaking is to be conveyed to Her Majesty free and clear from all charges, liens or encumbrances affecting the same under or by virtue of in respect of any mortgage, bonds, debentures or preference stocks or other securities, or otherwise howsoever, and the said company shall release Her Majesty of, and from all claims and demands under a certain lease and agreement bearing date the twenty-fifth day of February, 1898, and made between the said company of the first part and Her Majesty of the second part.

4th. That there may be paid for the said railway and undertaking and other property, as aforesaid, out of any unappropriated moneys forming part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, the sum of one million six hundred thousand dollars, less any sum paid the company as authorized by the Act, chapter 4, Statutes of 1897, to be granted to the said company as a subsidy for forty-one and a half miles from Moose Park to the Chaudière River.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I shall have to be away on Tuesday, as the hon. gentleman knows, and would ask that he fix Thursday instead of Tuesday, for this resolution.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall move the resolution formally for Tuesday, but will then make it the first Government order on Thursday.

Motion agreed to.

CABLE COMMUNICATION BETWEEN CANADA AND AUSTRALIA.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I beg to move that the House do resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, on Tuesday next, to consider the following resolution with which His Excellency has been made acquainted and which he recommends :

That for the purpose of establishing direct submarine telegraphic communication between Canada and Australasia it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to enter into an agreement with such of the Governments of the United Kingdom and Her Majesty's Australasian possessions as desire to share in the undertaking for the purpose on their behalf of securing the construction, acquisition, laying, maintenance and operation of a cable between Canada and Australasia on the following conditions :

(a.) That a Board of Commissioners be created by or under the legislative authority of the Parliament of the United Kingdom with all powers requisite for the purpose aforesaid.

(b.) That the proposed cable and all its branches, additions or extensions, and all property, real or personal, at any time acquired for the purpose of the undertaking, shall vest and continue vested in such Board in trust to carry out such undertaking for the benefit of the respective Governments sharing in the undertaking and in proportion to their respective interests therein.

(c.) That for the purpose of obtaining money wherewith to carry out the undertaking, the Board may issue debentures for such sums, payable at such dates not being less than years, nor more than years from the respective dates of issue, and bearing such rate of interest, and payable at such place as the Board may determine, but the total amount of the principal money of such debentures at any time outstanding shall not exceed £ sterling.

(d.) That subject to the cost of operation, maintenance, management, and the setting apart of such proper sinking fund as the Board may deem advisable wherewith to provide for renewals, the said principal moneys and interest shall be a first charge on all the said property, real and personal, and earnings of the undertaking.

(e.) That the cable shall be laid between Canada and Australasia via the Pacific Ocean, and may be in sections, but all points of its landing shall be on British territory.

(f.) That the Commissioners shall have full power to administer the affairs of the Board and the carrying on of the undertaking in trust for the benefit of said Governments.

(g.) That the total number of commissioners and the nature of their tenure of office shall from time to time be determined by said Governments, and each Government, having regard to such total number, shall be entitled to appoint such Board as near as may be, as many members thereof as represent the relative liability of such appointing Government as guarantor, as hereinafter mentioned, and to fill vacancies, as same occur from time to time.

(h.) That the respective Governments joining in such agreement shall be interested in the profits and losses of the undertaking in proportion to the amount of their liability as aforesaid.

(i.) That the Governor in Council is hereby authorized on behalf of the Dominion of Canada, to guarantee payment of five-eighteenth parts of the said total principal money of said debentures, limited as aforesaid and interest as aforesaid on said five-eighteenth parts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend fix a later day for that also?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I move it merely formally for Tuesday, and we can then treat it the same as the other resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad indeed to see this resolution, but would like to call the attention of the Government—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. On such a motion it is not permissible to have any discussion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am simply going to make a remark which I think the hon. gentleman will be glad to hear. It is very desirable we should have before the question comes up, the fullest information. I notice a statement in the paper that the Secretary of State for the Colonies has intimated that Her Majesty's Government have not agreed to this agreement as yet, and I notice that with regret. I would ask my right hon. friend to lay on the Table, before that resolution comes up, the correspondence between myself, when I was Commissioner, and the Government here, with regard to this question of cable communication, because I think it is calculated to strengthen the hands of the Government in regard to this proposal.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would like my hon. friend to look at the Order of the House which was moved and carried last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does not contain what I am asking for.

The PRIME MINISTER. Then I shall see that everything we have will be brought down.

Mr. CASEY. There was a motion carried two or three days ago which I think covers everything.

The PRIME MINISTER. That will be attended to.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MULOCK.

BUDGET SPEECH AND ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER. Can the hon. Finance Minister give any information as to the probable time when the Estimates will be brought down and the speech on the Budget delivered?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I cannot fix a definite date at present, but at the very earliest date an announcement will be made on behalf of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. And the remainder of that precious volume of the Auditor General?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I shall make inquiry concerning that.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 3.30 o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, April 24th, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

COMPENSATION BY RAILWAYS.

Mr. DAVIN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 72) respecting railways. He said: The object is to make further provisions for fire guards in the North-west Territories and also to perfect legislation that at my instance was introduced in 1890, so as to make more secure the obtaining of compensation by the farmers and ranchers of the North-west who may lose cattle in consequence of the negligence of railway employees or otherwise, and also to provide for the safety of railway employees and for compensation to them or their families in the case of injury or death.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. DAVIN.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assinibola). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to draw attention to a statement in the Manitoba "Free Press" of the 20th instant:

The Opposition counted on detaching from the Government side at least one member of the House who sits on that side, but they did not know their man, who has no political courage, and bids fair to rival Mr. Davin's celebrated record of talking one way and voting the other.

I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, to have the statement coming from a quarter that enables me, within parliamentary rules, to denounce it as an absolute falsehood, without a shadow or tittle of foundation.

That was how Mr. Davin for some years tried to hoodwink the farmers of the west into believing him independent of his party when he was one of the very few dependents in the House.

I have to say, with regard to that also, that the implication is absolutely false. The record of achievements for the North-west that has marked my connection with it, both before and since I have been in Parliament—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is going altogether too far. He is making a speech on matters not before the House.

Mr. DAVIN. It will not be necessary for me to move the adjournment of the House, as I think I have said all that is necessary. I do not know whether the "Free Press" refers to the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) or to the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Richardson) in the comparison it makes.

EXPENDITURE ON PIERS—P. E. I.

Mr. A. MARTIN (East Queen's, P.E.I.) I beg to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to a return which I asked for last year for the expenditure on piers—not works of public importance—but on private piers by the Government, and which has not yet come down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I will look into the record and see that the return is brought down.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—MR. BERGERON.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I take the first opportunity I have had since being away to bring to the attention of the House something which I find in a newspaper published in Montreal, and which, as I do not like to use the harsh word used by my hon. friend (Mr. Davin), I will content myself with saying is untrue. "La Patrie," of the 18th April, in the report of this House, has an item which I translate as follows:—

The contradictory assertions of Messrs. Borden, of Halifax, and Bergeron are before the electors of Canada, who will judge between the two and say which of the two has lied to the House and to the country. Either Mr. Bergeron has had an interview with Messrs. Semple and Allan, as affirmed by Mr. Borden, in which case Mr. Bergeron has deceived the House in denying it, or Mr. Bergeron has not been truthful, and it is Mr. Borden who has not spoken the truth in saying that Mr. Bergeron has met Messrs. Semple and Allan in company with the member for Victoria.

I can only say that this statement is entirely untrue, and I shall prove it by reading a few lines of the unrevised "Hansard."

Mr. SPEAKER. That is referring to a former debate.

Mr. BERGERON. I am proving that this is untrue, I think I can do it in no better way.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is irregular to refer to a former debate, much more irregular, I think, when it is for the purpose of answering a mere newspaper statement. The hon. gentleman denies the statement in the newspapers, and I am sure that is quite enough. At any rate, it is irregular to refer to a past debate.

Mr. BERGERON. I know that the rule forbids reference to a former debate in discussion; but this is more important, I believe, Mr. Speaker, than you seem to think. This is a newspaper published in the province of Quebec, and it says, purely and simply, that one of two members of this House, either the member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) or the member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) has lied. I wish to prove by quoting a few lines of "Hansard" that neither has lied.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) can do that in a certain way; but cannot do it on calling the Orders of the Day.

Mr. BERGERON. But to do it otherwise would take a longer time. I know I can do it in another way, but this is only five lines I wish to read.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is better to take the right way, even though it may be longer. We must not get into the habit of loose discussion on the calling of the Orders of the Day. The hon. gentleman was making a speech.

Mr. BERGERON. Then I will finish my remarks with a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Very well.

Mr. BERGERON. I have read to the House what I find in this paper, and now that I have larger scope, I may say that this is an illustration of the way the official press in Quebec generally acts. I want to prove how unfair it is.

Mr. SPEAKER. But proceeding in another way does not justify the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) in referring to a past debate. That is utterly irregular.

Mr. BERGERON. Surely, Mr. Speaker, you will not prevent me reading what I said myself.

Mr. SPEAKER. But what the hon. gentleman has said himself goes without saying. It is not contradicted.

Mr. BERGERON. I merely wish to read what I said in debate. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) spoke about gentlemen coming here from the States—I refer to page 1712 of "Hansard"—I remarked

"they have not arrived yet." Then the Minister of Finance said: "My hon. friend knows that they have been closeted with him day in and day out." To this I replied: "My hon. friend, I am sure, is not speaking seriously." Then the Minister of Finance said this: "I withdraw it. I can only say that my hon. friend from Halifax stated that he had a pleasant interview with them, accompanied—" And then I said: "I never had, anyway." That is the whole thing.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not want the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) to misunderstand my ruling. A motion to adjourn does not authorize a reference to a past debate. I see, however, that he has brought this in in such a way as to be in the form of a personal explanation, and I suppose that a past debate may be referred to, to a very limited extent, for that purpose.

Mr. BERGERON. I wished to avoid making a motion to adjourn the House, and now that His Honour the Speaker understands what I want to come at, I wish instead of making a motion to adjourn the House, to say that the statement made by "La Patrie" is entirely untrue, and that I have proved it.

PAPERS RELATING TO THE PLEBISCITE.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to say that I intended to bring up to-day the matter of laying on the Table of the House papers which were referred to by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher). The First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) asked me the other day to defer it until the Minister of Agriculture was present. I will bring it up to-morrow, if the Minister of Agriculture is in his place.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 61) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Canada Life Assurance Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

MR. JOHN R. DARGAVEL, ELGIN, ONT.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. Has Mr. John R. Dargavel been dismissed from the office of postmaster at Elgin, Ont. ?
2. Were any complaints made against him for not having discharged the duties of his office efficiently ?
3. Was Mr. Dargavel notified that any complaints had been made against him ?
4. Was there any investigation held ?
5. Did the post office inspector make any report recommending his dismissal ?
6. Was Mr. W. H. Fredenburgh, the Reform candidate at the last election, consulted, and did he recommend or approve of his dismissal ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. Complaints were made against him. 3. Yes. 4. No. 5. The matter was not referred to the inspector. 6. The Postmaster General assumes full responsibility for the dismissal. The postmaster admits that at a public meeting held by the Liberal candidate in connection with the general election of 1896 he (the postmaster) took part in addressing the meeting.

Mr. BERGERON.

MR. W. R. SINGLETON, DELTA, ONT.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. Has Mr. W. R. Singleton been dismissed from the office of postmaster at Delta, Ont. ?
2. Were there any complaints made against him for not attending to the duties of his office faithfully ?
3. Was Mr. Singleton notified of any complaints having been made against him ?
4. Was there any investigation held ? Did the post office inspector make any report recommending his dismissal ?
5. Did Mr. W. H. Fredenburgh, the Reform candidate at the last election, recommend his dismissal ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). It was charged that Mr. Singleton permitted the use of the post office at Delta as headquarters to the Conservative party, prior to the 23rd June, 1896; that the Reformers attending the office for the mails were insulted, and that the postmaster was a party to such action; and the department would doubtless have notified the postmaster of the charges and have referred the same for investigation, but before the same was done Mr. Singleton wrote to the department intimating that he had learned of the complaints of the local executive of the Reform association against him, and submitted "to being dismissed without rendering necessary the holding of an investigation," and, accordingly, a change of postmaster was made.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Mr. McMULLEN (by Mr. Sutherland) asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to recast the Civil Service Act, with the view to economize as well as secure a more equitable payment for services rendered and a more efficient service ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). It is the intention of the Government to introduce an amendment to the Civil Service Act. I am not in a position, at the moment, to state whether it will cover the ground referred to by the hon. gentleman.

BALL CARTRIDGE.

Mr. CALVERT (by Mr. Fraser, Lambton) asked :

1. Number of rounds of Snider Enfield ball cartridge issued to the 7th Battalion, London, in the years 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898.
2. Number of rounds of Snider Enfield ball cartridge expended by the 7th Battalion, London, according to returns of ball practice in the years 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898.

3. Amount of Snider ball cartridge (if any) in the stores of the 7th Battalion at time of its disbandment.

4. Number of rounds of Lee Enfield ball cartridge issued to the 7th Battalion, London, in 1897 and 1898.

5. Number of rounds of Lee Enfield ball cartridge expended by the 7th Battalion, London, according to returns of ball practice in the years 1897 and 1898.

6. Amount of Lee Enfield ball cartridge (if any) in the stores of the 7th Battalion at the time of its disbandment.

7. Whether any, and if any, what amount of Snider Enfield or Lee Enfield ball cartridge issued to the 7th Battalion, London, in the years 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898 returned by the colonel of that battalion to the military storekeeper at London, at any time or times.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. 1895, 5,040 rounds; 1896, 5,040 rounds; 1897, 15,120 rounds; 1898, nil. 2. There are no returns to show the amount expended. 3. None. 4. 1897, nil; 1898, 17,040 rounds. 5. 3,380. 6. 965. 7. None.

JOHN FRAWLEY, CARETAKER.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. Who is the caretaker of the public building at Orillia ?
2. When was he appointed ?
3. Upon whose recommendation ?
4. What salary is paid to him ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. John Frawley. 2. 4th November, 1898. 3. Frawley was the man employed by the former postmaster, who was at the same time caretaker, to do the cleaning of the building. It was found that he performed his work very satisfactorily, and that is the reason why he was appointed caretaker. 4. $15 per month.

POSTMASTER AT MOONSTONE, ONT.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Davin) asked :

Who is postmaster at Moonstone, Ont. ? Is he personally in charge of, and does he conduct the duties of the office ? Who recommended him to the position ? Why was the late postmaster, John Craig, dismissed ? Was there an investigation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Mr. Thomas Goodfellow is postmaster at Moonstone, and so far as this department is aware, is in charge of or exercises such supervision as is customarily required of postmasters similarly situate. The Postmaster General takes full responsibility for the appointment of his successor, and does not, therefore, consider it necessary to state on whose recommendation he was acting in making the appointment. The change of postmaster was made because the late postmaster lived a considerable distance from the office, and neither performed the duties nor exercised such supervision as is required by the department. The matter was inquired into and reported upon by the inspector.

MR. EMERY LAFONTAINE.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

1. Whether Mr. Emery Lafontaine within the last fifteen months visited the Yukon in an official capacity ?
2. If so, in what capacity ?
3. Is he in the employ of the Public Works Department ?
4. If he is the Lafontaine who visited the Yukon, how long was he there ?
5. What were his instructions ?
6. Had he leave to meddle in staking claims ?
7. If he did so meddle, had he the sanction of his Minister ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes. 2. As assistant to the chief engineer. 3. Yes. 4. Mr. Lafontaine was in the Yukon district for about a month. 5. His instructions were to assist the chief engineer in his work. 6. No. 7. No.

DAWSON CITY POST OFFICE.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Whether there is a person named Bourassa employed in the Yukon post office ? If so, is he related to the hon. member for Labelle ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). There is no post office known as Yukon. If the office referred to is that of Dawson City in the Yukon district, the answer is that the postmaster at Dawson City was authorized to select and employ a suitable staff of assistants, and he has doubtless done so, under the supervision of Mr. Ogilvie, who has been asked to exercise the general authority of a post office inspector in the district. This department has not been consulted as to the persons selected, and has no information as to the personnel of the staff of the Dawson City post office, other than that of postmaster.

TRANSPORTATION COMPANIES TO THE YUKON.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. What are the names and address of the transportation companies or individuals employed for or on behalf of the Government, to convey supplies to the Yukon district ?
2. What quantities or weights were carried by, and how much was paid to each such company or individual ?
3. Where were the supplies purchased ; and where delivered by each such company or individual and at what dates ?
4. Were any of the supplies conveyed for the Government by said companies or individuals sold by the Government ; and if so, to whom and at what prices ?
5. Were tenders asked for the purchase and transport of the supplies ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman, I beg to say that the information asked for, so far as the Police and Interior Departments are concerned, is as follows. The Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) has already given substantially the same information in regard to the Militia Department.

1. To the Yukon via St. Michael's: The Alaska Commercial Company and the Boston Alaska Company; to the Yukon via the White Pass: The regular lines of steamboats from Victoria and Vancouver to Skagway and thence by packers over the summit. 2. By the Alaska Commercial Company: Approximately 300 tons, paid for at $250 per ton; by the Boston-Alaska Company: 50 tons at $250 per ton, but not paid as the receipts for delivery have not been presented; by the White Pass, by various packers: Approximately 300 tons at rates varying from 9 to 50 cents per pound. 3. The supplies were purchased in Montreal, Ottawa, Victoria, Vancouver and other places. The Alaska Commercial Company delivered the goods transported by their boats at Dawson about the 16th of August; the Boston-Alaska Company were to have delivered at Selkirk before the close of navigation, but the delivery receipts have not yet reached Ottawa; the supplies sent via the White Pass were distributed among a number of packers, and delivery was going on throughout the season. 4. No, except small quantities to officials for their personal use. 5. Tenders were asked for the supplying of the larger portion of the goods. For the transportation via St. Michael's and the Yukon River the two old established companies, viz.: The Alaska Commercial Company, and the North American Transportation and Trading Company were asked to tender.

GREATER BRITAIN EXHIBITION.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked:

1. What (if any) representations have been made or will be made for a mineral exhibit from Canada in the mining section of the Greater Britain Exhibition to be held from May to October, this year, at Earl's Court, London, England?

2. What (if any) representations have been made to the Government, or any member thereof, relative to the effect which clauses 16, 30, 31 and 39 of the regulations governing placer mining in the provisional district of Yukon, North-west Territories, approved by Order in Council of 18th January, 1898, have to discourage investors in Canadian enterprises resident in the United Kingdom and elsewhere and to hinder the purpose of persons who are seeking to promote the development of the resources of Canada?

3. What (if any) reply has been made to such representations respectively?

4. What amendment (if any) will be made by the Government to the above referred to clauses or any of them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. No arrangements have been made to participate in the exhibition referred to. 2 and 3. The representations and reply are in the form of correspondence which will be brought down when moved for. 4. The exemption has been raised to $5,000.

Mr. SIFTON.

No further amendment is contemplated at present.

LETTER CARRIERS, VICTORIA, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR asked:

1. How many letter carriers were employed in the post office in Victoria, B.C., in the year 1895-96, 1896-97 and 1897-98 respectively, and how many are employed at the present time?

2. What salary was paid to each letter carrier employed in 1895-96, and what salaries are paid in the present year?

3. What provisional allowance was granted to each letter carrier in 1895-96, and what in 1897-98?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I would ask the hon. gentleman to make a motion. The question involves a good deal of detail, and it would be more convenient to have it in the form of an order.

MAIL SERVICE, MURRAY BAY AND QUEBEC.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

1. Are the Government aware that complaints are made as to the manner in which the mail service is performed between Murray Bay and the city of Quebec?

2. Are the Government aware that the mail-carrier has been, on some occasions, twelve hours late in leaving Murray Bay for Quebec?

3. Is it true that, prior to 1896, when the mail-carrier was prevented by bad weather or other causes from leaving Murray Bay for Quebec, at the time appointed, he was bound to secure, and did secure another carrier to set out in his place and at his expense?

4. When for any reason the carrier who has contracted for the mail between Murray Bay and Quebec, or for any part of the route, is unable to leave Murray Bay at the hour appointed, does he provide at his own cost another carrier in his place?

5. If not, why does he not do so?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1 and 2. No complaints had reached the department at the date the question was asked, as to the performance of the service, but on inquiry it was learned that the post office inspector at Quebec had been advised on the 24th March last that the trips were not being made with due regularity about that time. The postmaster at Murray Bay, who was written to by the inspector on the subject, stated that the mail which was due to leave Murray Bay at 3 p.m. on the 21st March did not leave until the afternoon of the 22nd of March, as there was no courier on hand to take charge of it. The inspector adds that on receipt of this information he wrote on the 28th March to the contractor for the mail service between Murray Bay and St. Paul's Bay stating that he must arrange to have some one ready to take charge of the mails at the starting points, when he is unable to be on hand himself. 3. It is true that prior to March, 1896, the courier was required to provide at his own expense a courier to leave Murray Bay at the time fixed by the contract when for any reason he was unable to take the mails himself. Some trouble having arisen in March, 1896, regarding the payment for one of such special trips, the department deemed it inadvisable to continue the practice of requiring the contractor to make provision in case of his inability to be at Murray Bay at the time fixed, and the inspector was notified to that effect on the 9th March, 1896. No complaints having reached the department as to the manner of performing the service since 1896, the principle laid down on the 9th of March of that year has not been under discussion in the department since.

FRANK HARPER, POSTMASTER, DAWSON CITY.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

1. Was Frank Harper postmaster of Dawson City in August last ?
2. Is he still postmaster of Dawson City ?
3. Did the said Frank Harper ask and obtain the permission of the Postmaster General before publishing the following notice :—

“ The North-west Mounted Police,
Dawson, August 23rd, 1898.

“ To whom it may concern: The Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company is going to endeavour to establish a service for the delivery of mail in the town of Dawson. They have interviewed me regarding this service, and I have agreed to help them in any way I can in giving them letters for those who may wish to avail themselves of this accommodation for a small charge. This is entirely voluntary on any one's part who may wish to obtain their mail through this source, and is done entirely for the public benefit. As a good deal of expense will be incurred in connection with this delivery, I have given the within mentioned the sole right of delivery for the time being.

“ FRANK HARPER,
Postmaster, Dawson.”

4. If the said postmaster had not asked and obtained the Postmaster General's consent and directions before issuing the above notice or proclamation, then upon what authority did the postmaster undertake to give the exclusive right of delivery of letters in Dawson City to the Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company ?

5. What amount, if any, was paid and to whom, by the Yukon Mail and Express Delivery Company for their sole privilege covered by the postmaster's notice ?

6. If the postmaster acted without directions from the department in publishing this notice and in creating this monopoly, what steps have been taken by the department to have him punished therefor ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes, F. Harper was postmaster at Dawson City in August last. 2. He is not now postmaster at Dawson City. 3. He did not ask or obtain permission to publish notices in question. 4. The department has no knowledge as to whether such notice was issued, or, if issued, upon what authority the same may have been issued. 5. The department is not aware whether such service was established or what, if any sum was paid said company. 6. Before considering what action should be taken it is deemed proper to ask for explanations from Mr. Harper in regard to the matter.

POSTMASTER AT CHAMBORD.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has Mr. Job Bilodeau, postmaster of Chambord, in the county of Chicoutimi, been dismissed since 1896 ?
2. If so, on what date ?
3. For what reasons and on whose recommendation ?
4. Who recommended his successor ?
5. How many years had Mr. Job Bilodeau been postmaster of Chambord ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. On the 28th September, 1896. 3. Because of his having been an active political partisan. 4. His successor was recommended by the member for the riding. 5. Twenty-four years.

POSTMASTER AT LAKE BOUCHETTE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Was Mr. William Larouche, postmaster of Lake Bouchette, in the county of Chicoutimi, dismissed since 1896 ?
2. If so, on what grounds, and who recommended his dismissal ?
3. Who recommended his successor ?
4. Who now holds the contract for carrying the mail between Lake Bouchette and the railway station ?
5. How much is he paid for the service ?
6. Was he awarded the contract after tenders had been called for, and was his tender the lowest ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. Because of being an active political partisan. 3. The member for Chicoutimi. 4. Joseph Potvin. 5. $62.60 a year. 6. The contract was awarded to Mr. Potvin after tenders were called for. His tender was the lowest.

POSTMASTER AT ST. ESPRIT.

Mr. DUGAS asked :

1. Has C. Dalpe dit Pariseau been dismissed from the position of postmaster of St. Esprit, in the county of Montcalm ?
2. Was he charged with inefficiency in the discharge of his duties ?
3. Was Mr. Pariseau notified as to such charges ?
4. Was an inquiry held ?
5. Did the inspector make a report recommending his dismissal ? Was Mr. Bissonnette, the local member, consulted, and did he recommend or approve of the dismissal ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. The management of the office was not considered satisfactory and the situation of the office was considered inconvenient. 3. Yes. 4. Yes. 5. The report showed that the postmaster's conduct was unsatisfactory and that the office was inconveniently situated. The Postmaster General assumes full responsibility.

POSTMASTER AT MORTON.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has Mr. J. R. Leake, postmaster at Morton, been dismissed ?
2. If so, who has been appointed in his place ?
3. Was there any inquiry ?
4. If so, who held the investigation ?
5. Was it a public investigation ?
6. Was Mr. Leake notified that an inquiry was being held ?
7. Was there an affidavit filed, made by one Robert Wood ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes. 2. A. E. Sliter. 3. Yes. 4. Post office inspector of the Ottawa division. 5. Yes. 6. Yes. 7. Yes.

TELEGRAPH LINE, NORTH SHORE OF ST. LAWRENCE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has L. P. DeCourval carried on since March, 1898, the putting-up of the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence ?
2. How many miles of the line have been erected, and to what point ?
3. How much have the Government paid out on this work, since 9th March, 1898, and to whom, and for what ?
4. Are there any unsettled claims at this date for the said work ? If so, by whom made, for what, and for what amount ?
5. Have the Government sent an engineer or other official to take over the said work ? If so, whom, and what has been the cost of the inspection ?
6. Have the Government authorized the said DeCourval to resume the work during the coming season ? If so, are the prices to be the same ? Is the contract signed ?
7. Is the Government aware that Mr. DeCourval is getting out dry cedar posts, split, 20 feet in length and 5 inches in diameter, for the work of the coming season ?
8. Is such material accepted by the Government as suitable for the work, and has some of it already been used in the construction of the line now finished ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes, he has built a further extension of the line. 2. Eighty-six and one-eighth miles, from a point 6 miles below Aguanus to Big Romaine R. 3. The total amount paid out by the Government on this work since 9th March, 1898, is $10,887.94. Said amount was paid as follows :—

SNOW SHOVELLING ON THE I. C. R.

Mr. POWELL (by Mr. Haggart) asked :

Were any extra men employed by the Intercolonial Railway, shovelling snow in the county of Westmoreland during any portion of the week immediately previously to the local election in the province of New Brunswick, held in February last ? If so, how many, and what amount did their wages come to ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There was an unprecedented fall of snow just prior to the 18th February, the day of the local elections in the province of New Brunswick. No other means have been devised for removing the snow from the railway yards and platforms, and at the different points in Westmoreland County, than by shovelling, and a number of men not in the regular employ have always been engaged for such purposes. There were employed about 400 men in the shovelling of snow during the period mentioned in the question, and their wages amounted to $1,400.

ALPHONSE T. LeBLANC.

Mr. POWELL (by Mr. Haggart) asked :

Is Alphonse T. LeBlanc in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway as a travelling passenger agent ? If so, how long has he been engaged as such, and what salary does he receive ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Alphonse T. Leblanc is in the employ of the Intercolonial Railway as travelling passenger agent. He has been engaged five months and nineteen days. He receives a salary at the rate of $500 a year.

POSTMASTER AT ST. PRIME.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Was Pierre Martel, of St. Prime, county of Chicoutimi, appointed postmaster in 1896 ?
2. For what length of time did he perform the duties of the office ?
3. Was he dismissed, and if so, on what grounds ?
4. Who succeeded him, and by what persons was such recommended ?
5. Had complaints been made against the said Martel, and by whom ?
6. Who had recommended the appointment of the said Martel ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. No. 2. He may have acted as assistant to the late postmaster, but for what length of time this department is not aware. 3. No. 4. The late postmaster, Louis Guy, was succeeded by the present postmaster, Mons. Fredet. The Postmaster General assumes responsibility for his appointment. 5. No. 6. No person.

WORKS AT LAKE MANITOBA.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

Has anything been done since July, 1898, in reference to draining Lake Manitoba to prevent inundation of surrounding low-lying lands, and if so, what ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). A contract was entered into on the 22nd December, 1898, after a public call for tenders for the works required to increase and regulate the overflow of the waters of Lake Manitoba through Fairford River.

The works consist of a cut 1,300 feet in length and 200 feet wide at the bottom through a point in the line of a ½ foot depth at normal low-water in Lake Manitoba, to a point on the east side of Fairford River about 1,000 feet below or north-east of its exit from the lake on the east side of Portage Bay.

Public tenders were called in the month of September, 1898, and the work was awarded to the second lowest tenderer, the lowest tenderers having refused to sign their contract and their security having therefore been forfeited.

DOMINION POLICE IN THE YUKON.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What is the number of Dominion police officers and men in the Yukon district ? How are they distributed ? What is the total cost per day for maintenance and pay ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to say that the number of officers and men in the Yukon is as follows :—

|   |            |
|---|------------|
| Officers .....                          | 12         |
| N. C. officers and constables.....      | 211        |
| Special constables and dog-drivers..... | 41         |
| Total .....                      | 264 |

Distributed as follows :—

| Stikine and Glenora .....  | 5          |
| Total .....         | 264 |

It is impossible at present to give the actual cost per day for maintenance and pay in the past, owing to the varied and excessive charges for the transportation of supplies.

It is estimated that in future the average cost for pay and maintenance will be $3.75 per man per day.

MAILS FOR DAWSON FROM JULY 1st, 1898.

Mr. FOSTER asked :

What are the dates upon which mails for Dawson were despatched from Vancouver or Victoria since July 1st, 1898, to the present and the dates of the arrival of them at Dawson respectively ? By what routes were they despatched ? Upon what dates were mails despatched from Dawson since July 1st, 1898, and when did these reach Vancouver or Victoria and by what routes ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) to make a motion for that, as it involves rather a mass of detail.

MONTREAL AND LABELLE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CHAUVIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Whether it is the intention of the Postmaster General to appoint a mail conductor on the train between Montreal and Labelle ?

2. Have any, and if so, what, petitions or recommendations been sent in in relation to this matter ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. The question of appointing a mail conductor on the train between Montreal and Labelle is under consideration. 2. Petitions have been received from the villages of St. Jovite, Ste. Adèle, St. Sauveur, St. Faustin, Shawbridge and the town of St. Jerome, all in the county of Terrebonne, Quebec, with a recommendation from Mr. R. Prefontaine, M.P., in relation to this matter.

POSTMASTER AT BATISCAN.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Whether the hon. First Minister did, on 23th January, 1897, indite a letter to Madame J. E. de la Bis onnière, of the parish of Batiscan, county of Champlain, promising to pay close attention to the case of her husband, the postmaster of Batiscan, in relation to whom a departmental inquiry was then being held? Did he promise that "nothing will be done against the said postmaster, if the charges laid against him are not proved"?

2. Did Hon. W. Mulock write, on 26th July, 1897, to Hon. M. Dechene, Minister of Agriculture, Quebec, inclosing the report of M. Lavergne, the commissioner appointed to inquire into the case of the postmaster of Batiscan and containing, in particular, the following words:—"I send you herewith a copy of the report of M. Lavergne, commissioner, to whom was referred the charge laid against the postmaster (the present postmaster of Batiscan), and you will, I think, admit with me that the report furnishes no grounds to justify the dismissal of the postmaster. It is neither asserted nor proved that he canvassed or worked at public meetings. The postmaster says that he did not even vote at the last election and took no part in the political struggle. Under these circumstances, I see no reason for dismissing the present postmaster"?

3. Did Hon. Mr. Mulock, through his secretary, Mr. W. D. LeSueur, on 15th August, 1898, address to M. de la Bissonnière, postmaster of Batiscan, a letter saying: "In reply to your's of 9th instant, I am instructed to tell you that the Postmaster General, having been informed that you did not observe proper neutrality during the election time, deems it advisable to appoint a successor in your position"?

4. Is there not an absolute contradiction between the two assertions, and is the First Minister prepared to keep the promise he made to Mde. de la Bissonnière, and to reinstate her husband in the position taken from him under the circumstances above set forth?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In answer to the first question, I find no record in my office that I wrote such a letter, but I have no doubt the letter is genuine.

COUNTY OF BAGOT—PLEBISCITE EXPENSES.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked:

Whether the Government have or have not paid to the following employees, during the taking of the plebiscite in the county of Bagot:—

|   |        |
|---|--------|
| To Ovide Ledoux, travelling expenses.....   | $2 50 |
| R. Morel, S. O. R., do .....                | 0 50   |
| Chas Martin, clerk, do .....                | 0 50   |
| For copies of voters' lists by H. Pilon.... | 8 82   |

Have the said sums been paid, and if not, why not?

Is it the intention of the Government to pay them?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). The two small items of 50 cents each, referred to in the question, have been paid. The other items have not been paid in consequence of objections taken by the Auditor General, and the matter is still under consideration.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked:

1. Has the Government taken any action, and if so, what, on the report of the commissioner Mr. MARCOTTE.

appointed to investigate the cases of hardship in connection with persons employed upon the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway?

2. Has any decision been reached with reference to the death of the two young men from New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, from diphtheria, and whose cases were brought before Parliament last session?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The action taken by the Government was to appoint Mr. Clute as commissioner to investigate the different complaints. As stated in this question, his report is ready, and will be laid on the Table of the House at an early day.

POSTMASTER AT BRANTFORD.

Mr. CLANCY (by Mr. Davin) asked:

Has a postmaster been appointed to the vacancy in the city of Brantford? If so, who has been appointed? If not, why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). There has not been a formal appointment, although the person to be appointed has been decided upon.

HARBOUR OF FRASERVILLE, P.Q.

Mr. GAUVREAU (by Mr. Tolmie) asked:

Whether the hon. Minister of Public Works has received from the Board of Trade of Fraserville the following resolutions:—

"At a regular meeting of the Board of Trade of Fraserville held on 14th March instant, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:—

"Whereas steps have been taken by the Board of Trade of Fraserville with a view to the improvement of the harbour of Fraserville;

"Whereas a petition has been presented in that behalf to the Governor General in Council;

"Whereas in 1897, a joint deputation from the board of trade and from the town of Fraserville, went to Ottawa in that behalf;

"Whereas the hon. Minister of Public Works then promised to consider the application of the board of trade;

"Whereas at Fraserville, on 29th July, 1897, the hon. Minister of Public Works promised to cause a survey to be made, and bound himself to cause works of improvement to be done in the port of Fraserville, if it was shown by the report of his engineer that navigation could be prolonged for two months beyond what it is at Quebec;

"Whereas Engineer Auclair, who was entrusted with the survey in question, states in his report that the navigation can here be extended to nine months, when it is but seven months at Quebec;

"Whereas there is in this section of the country a large trade in lumber, which article would be exported via Fraserville, if the improvement of the harbour were carried out;

"Whereas the said work would insure the progress and prosperity of the district, and meet the wishes and needs of the exporters of lumber of this part of the country;

"This board of trade, renewing its requests contained in the correspondence had with the hon. Minister of Public Works in the matter, earnestly begs the hon. Minister to carry out his promises and to undertake the accomplishment of a measure affecting vitally the interests of this section, and become, as he has led them to hope he would, the champion of this national undertaking, by introducing in the House a Bill for the establishing of a harbour at Fraserville.

"Fraserville, 20th March, 1899.

," J. E. FRENETTE, L. H. LEVASSEUR
" Secretary. " President."

If so, is the hon. Minister prepared to state what he intends to do in relation to the port of Fraserville?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). Yes, the resolutions in question have been received, and the hon. the Minister has replied that although the engineer's report was not altogether satisfactory, still he would give to the matter all due consideration.

MAIL SERVICE, MOUNT ALBION, P.E.I.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

Has the Government received any petitions or letters from the inhabitants of Mount Albion, in the province of Prince Edward Island, asking for a daily mail service? If so, has the Government decided to grant the prayer of the petitioners? If a daily service is not to be granted, why not? Is the Government aware that this is a very important section, which is badly in need of such accommodation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). A petition was received at the department asking for a daily mail to Mount Albion. The department, on the receipt of the petition, set on foot an inquiry into the matter, which is not yet complete.

POSTMASTER AT BROOKSIDE, P.E.I.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

1. Is the Government aware that the postmaster of Brookside, in the province of Prince Edward Island, has resigned?
2. If so, has a successor been appointed?
3. If not, why not?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes. 2. No person has been appointed to succeed him. 3. A post office at this point was not considered necessary, and the office has therefore been closed (1st February, 1899).

AMERICAN STANDARD RAILWAY RULES.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. Have the American standard rules used by railway employees in operating railway trains in the United States been put in force on any of the railways in Canada?
2. If so, on what railways and at what dates?
3. If the rules above mentioned have not been put in operation on any of the railways in Canada, is it the intention of the Government to permit the rules to be put in operation, and if so, on what railways and at what dates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Department of Railways is not aware that the American standard rules used by railway employees in operating railway trains in the United States have been put in force on any of the railways in Canada; but, as the House was informed last session, the Grand Trunk Railway Company submitted rules and regulations, which were examined by the proper officers of the department and reported upon favourably. Since then the Canada Atlantic Railway and the Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound Railway have also submitted rules and regulations which have likewise been examined by the proper officers and similarly reported upon. Those of the Grand Trunk Railway were approved, as the House was informed a year ago, by Order in Council, dated 28th February, 1898; those of the Canada Atlantic and Ottawa, Arnprior and Parry Sound on 17th March, 1899.

ONTARIO COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

Mr. BENNETT asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to introduce legislation, during the coming session, to provide for the compulsory retirement of county court judges in the province of Ontario who have attained the age of seventy-five years?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This matter is under the consideration of the Government.

BATISCAN POST OFFICE.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. How much does Mlle. Fugère, postmistress of Batiscan, receive per year? How much for day mails, and how much for night mails?
2. How much was received by Mr. Labissonnière, who replaced Mlle. Fugère from 4th May, 1896, to 9th August, 1898? How much per year for day mails, and how much per year for night mails?
3. Did he receive the same amount for night mails as Mlle. Fugère, and if not, why not?
4. If he was not paid for night mails, is it the intention of the Government to pay him?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Miss Fugère, postmistress of Batiscan, was, at the time of her death, March, 1895, paid salary at the rate of $208 a year, with allowance of $50 and $120 for night and forward duty respectively. 2. Mr. Labissonnière, who succeeds Miss Fugère as postmaster of Batiscan, was paid salary at the rate of $180 a year from 4th May, 1896, to 30th June, 1897, and at the rate of $190 a year from the 1st July, 1897, to 9th August, 1898, and forward allowance at the rate of $120 a year from the 4th May, 1896, to 31st March, 1897, and at the rate of $80 a year from 1st April, 1897, to 9th August, 1898. Also an allowance of $12 for night duty, performed during the season of navigation of 1897, and at the same rate for the season of 1898. 3 and 4. He did not receive the same amount for night duty as Miss Fugère. The attention of the department having been called to the fact that night duty was only performed at Battsan during the season of navigation, and that the amount of work done would not warrant the continuance of the former allowance. the amount was fixed at $12 for the season of navigation.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY SUPERINTENDENT—MR. A. R. McDONALD.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Is Mr. A. R. McDonald still the superintendent of the Quebec and St. Flavie district of the Intercolonial Railway, or does he still hold any position in connection with the said railway ?
2. If not, has his connection with the said railway been severed by dismissal, resignation or otherwise ?
3. When was his said connection severed, and what were the reasons or causes therefor ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No, Mr. A. R. McDonald is not superintendent of the Quebec and St. Flavie district of the Intercolonial Railway. His services were dispensed with on the 31st December, 1897, as his services were no longer required.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—PRIVILEGE OF SELLING NEWS-PAPERS, ETC.

Mr. BELL (Picton) asked :

1. Who are the present lessees of the privilege of selling newspapers, &c., on the Intercolonial system of railways ?
2. What yearly rent do they pay the Government for said privilege ?
3. When did they tender for said privilege, and for what term, and when does their lease expire ?
4. Who are the present lessees of the news stands at the Intercolonial Railway stations in Halifax and St. John, N.B. ?
5. What yearly rent do these lessees pay for the news stands in the Halifax station and for the news stand in the St. John station ?
6. Were tenders asked for, by advertisement through the public press, for the leasing of the news stands in the stations of the Intercolonial at Halifax and St. John, N.B., and on what dates and in what newspapers ?
7. For what terms were the news stands in the stations of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax and St. John, N.B., leased and when do the leases terminate ?
8. Who are entitled to the privilege of selling newspapers on the Intercolonial trains running over the Drummond County Railway ? Did they acquire the right after advertisement for tenders, or after what public or other notice that the right would be disposed of ? When did they acquire the right, and what are the terms of their agreement with the Government, and when will it terminate ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Canada Railway News Company is the present lessee of the privilege of selling newspapers, &c., on the Intercolonial Railway. 2. They pay $12,600 in three years, monthly in advance, $11,100 in cash, $1,500 in advertising in "International Railway Guide," at $50 per page per annum, as follows:—1st year, $2,600 cash, $500 advertising; 2nd year, $3,700 cash, $500 advertising; 3rd year, $3,800 cash, $500 advertising. 3. They tendered for the said privilege on 19th March, 1897, for a term of three years, and their lease expires on 1st May, 1900. 4. The present lessee of the news stands at the Intercolonial Railway stations at Halifax and St. John is the Canada Railway News Company. 5. They pay $200 a year for the news stand in the Halifax station and $500 a year for the news stand in the St. John station. 6. Tenders were asked by newspaper advertisement on the 9th December, 1897, to be received up to 18th December, 1897. For the news stand in the Halifax station tenders were asked for in the Halifax "Chronicle," "Echo," and "Recorder." For the news stand in the St. John station, tenders were asked for in the St. John "Telegraph," "Globe" and "Gazette." 7. The lease of the news stand in the stations at Halifax and St. John was for one year from the 1st January, 1898. 8. The Canada Railway News Company has the privilege of selling newspapers on the trains of the Intercolonial Railway between Montreal and Lévis. Tenders were asked by advertisement, and privilege of selling newspapers granted to Eugene Michaud, who subsequently transferred the same to the Canada Railway News Company. The privilege was for one year from May 1st, 1898, and the terms a payment of $599.84 a year. It will terminate on May 1st, 1899.

tional Railway Guide," at $50 per page per annum, as follows:—1st year, $2,600 cash, $500 advertising; 2nd year, $3,700 cash, $500 advertising; 3rd year, $3,800 cash, $500 advertising. 3. They tendered for the said privilege on 19th March, 1897, for a term of three years, and their lease expires on 1st May, 1900. 4. The present lessee of the news stands at the Intercolonial Railway stations at Halifax and St. John is the Canada Railway News Company. 5. They pay $200 a year for the news stand in the Halifax station and $500 a year for the news stand in the St. John station. 6. Tenders were asked by newspaper advertisement on the 9th December, 1897, to be received up to 18th December, 1897. For the news stand in the St. John station, tenders were asked for in the St. John "Telegraph," "Globe" and "Gazette." 7. The lease of the news stand in the stations at Halifax and St. John was for one year from the 1st January, 1898. 8. The Canada Railway News Company has the privilege of selling newspapers on the trains of the Intercolonial Railway between Montreal and Lévis. Tenders were asked by advertisement, and privilege of selling newspapers granted to Eugene Michaud, who subsequently transferred the same to the Canada Railway News Company. The privilege was for one year from May 1st, 1898, and the terms a payment of $599.84 a year. It will terminate on May 1st, 1899.

DREDGE "NEW DOMINION"—MR. CHAS. H. PARKER.

Mr. DOMVILLE (by Mr. Russell) asked :

Why was Charles H. Parker dismissed from the dredge "New Dominion" ? Were any complaints made against him ? If so, what were they, and by whom were they made ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). The services of Mr. Parker were dispensed with in the interest of the service.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—STATION AT FRASERVILLE.

Mr. GAUVREAU (by Mr. Tolmie) asked :

Whether the Minister of Railways has received from the Board of Trade of Fraserville the following resolutions:—

"To the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals,
"Ottawa.

"The petition of the Board of Trade of Fraserville respectfully sheweth :

"That the Rivière du Loup station in the town of Fraserville, on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, is one of the most important on the section extending between Lévis and Campbellton, in the province of Quebec, in view of the amount of traffic, the number of passengers it accommodates and the large revenue collected thereat by the Intercolonial Railway ;

"That the trains of the Témiscouata Railway there connect with the trains of the Intercolonial ;

"That in summer a large number of tourists resort to the watering places at The Point, Cacouna, St. Patrice and Portage, by way of the Intercolonial, using the station at Rivière du Loup ;

"That the present station-house of the Intercolonial is in a condition such as to throw discredit on the town of Fraserville, and does not meet the needs and requirements of the public and of the staff of the railway ;

"That the building is some forty years old, and is extremely cold ;

"That it is too small, insufficient and inconvenient, and does not afford the necessary facilities for the traffic, and to the public the amount of comfort to which they are entitled ;

"That there is no suitable waiting room for ladies ;

"That the place supposed to be the men's waiting room is not comfortable and is generally encumbered with freight goods of a perishable kind for want of a suitable freight room ;

"That the station-master's office is too small, and is also used both for the sale of tickets and as the 'Canadian Express' office ;

"That the district superintendent has his office in the attic of the station, and that the train despatcher's office being located on the level of the first story, these officers are continually disturbed and interrupted in their work by inquiries from the public, and that the other officials in charge of this part of the road have not suitable quarters ;

"That the apartment for passengers' luggage is entirely too small, is badly located and affords no suitable shelter to protect the travelling public, tourists and their baggage against rain, the smoke of the engines and the inclemency of the weather, and that very often passengers' effects and express goods are in consequence subject to injury ;

"That the repairs required at this station would cost a considerable sum of money ;

"That the travelling public and commercial men are great sufferers from the present state of things ; that many complaints have been made, representations laid before the Government, notably in 1897, with a view to securing the rebuilding and enlargement of the station, but without any practical result ;

"That the Board of Trade of Fraserville, in view of the complaints uttered on all hands, which they feel to be but too well grounded, consider that they voice the unanimous sentiments of the town of Fraserville and of the whole district in earnestly urging the Government to take the necessary steps for the immediate rebuilding of Rivière du Loup station, in such a manner as to meet the needs above enumerated and the requirements of the staff of the railway and of the public in general, by constructing a station-house in keeping with the reputation and importance of the town of Fraserville and of the traffic there carried on ;

"And thus promote the best interests of the public.

"L. H. LEVASSEUR,

"President.

"J. E. FRENETTE,
"Secretary."

If so, what does the hon. Minister propose doing in the premises, and how does he intend to deal with the matter of the building of a new station at Fraserville ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Minister of Railways has received copies of two resolutions adopted by the council of the town of Fraserville, relating to the desired construction of a new Intercolonial Railway station at that point, together with other papers in that connection. The Minister has the matter under consideration. No decision has yet been reached.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES AT RIVIERE DU LOUP.

Mr. GAUVREAU (by Mr. Tolmie) asked :

Whether the Minister of Railways is aware that several of the employees in the shops at Rivière du Loup have for some time been working day and night ?

That the mechanical foreman, Alexander Ouellet, has asked for an increase in the number of hands, and that the officials at Moncton, if they have not refused to comply, have at all events not answered the application in that behalf ?

If so, is it the intention of the hon. Minister to order that the force of employees at the Rivière du Loup shops be increased in proportion to the work done therein ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The Department of Railways is aware that a certain amount of overtime is being worked in the shops at Rivière du Loup. On the 11th April, 1899, Foreman Ouellet asked for four more machinists and four more labourers, but these have not yet been furnished. The mechanical superintendent states that, in his opinion, there are sufficient men employed at Rivière du Loup to do the work, but that in any railway shops it is impossible to avoid overtime occasionally.

EMPLOYMENT OF R. C. MILLER.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. Davin) asked :

Is Mr. R. C. Miller, formerly of Pembroke, but now of Dawson City, in the employ of the Federal Government ? If so, what are his duties and what is the salary paid him ? If not now in the employ of said Government, has he been employed at any time by the Federal Government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. R. C. Miller was appointed Mining Recorder and Crown Timber Inspector at Tagish, Yukon Territory, on the 1st March, 1899, at a salary of $1,500 per annum.

MONTREAL POST OFFICE REPAIRS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. Who is the contractor in charge of repairs to the roof of the Montreal post office ?
2. Were tenders publicly called for said repairs ?
3. Is the work on said roof being done by contract ?
4. What is the price of said work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Mr. Joseph Lamarche, plumber, &c., Montreal. 2. Yes. 3. Yes.

4. $9,400.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—THE LATE GENERAL TRAFFIC MANAGER.

Mr. POPE asked :

For what reason, upon what ground, and under what arrangement or agreement were the services of Mr. Harris as general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway dispensed with ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Harris's services were dispensed with because it was found, after some months' experience, that though an active, capable and energetic officer, he showed a lack of judgment in his method of dealing with the public in connection with the business of his office, which led to unnecessary friction and dissatisfaction. Upon his leaving the service he was paid six months' salary as a retiring allowance, having rendered valuable service in connection with the agreements made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company for the use of terminals in Montreal and of their line from Montreal to Ste. Rosalie.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS AND "SWEATING."

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked :

What is the number of contracts entered into by the Government since the 30th June, 1897, in which there is a clause prohibiting "sweating" ? What is the total amount involved in such contracts ? In what departments have the contracts been awarded, and to what companies, firms or individuals ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I would suggest that a motion for this information be made, as the answer to the question involves the preparation of a number of details which must be obtained from the different departments. I have the answer for one department, but that does not cover the whole question.

BONUSES FOR IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Davin) asked :

1. What bonus, if any, was paid during the past twelve months by the Government of Canada to agents, owners or representatives of British steamship companies, for adults and children respectively, brought out to Canada as immigrants ?

2. What bonus, if any, was paid during the same period by the Government of Canada to agents, owners or representatives of foreign steamship companies for adults and children respectively, brought out to Canada as immigrants from the continent of Europe ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. During the year ending 31st December, 1898, the Government of Canada paid as bonus to agents of British steamboat companies $2,200.27 for adults, and Mr. TARTE.

$165.11 for children brought out to Canada as immigrants. 2. During the same period the Government of Canada paid as bonus to agents of foreign steamship companies $23,130.33 for adults, but nothing for children, brought out to Canada as immigrants from the continent of Europe.

INDIAN AGENT AT RAMA.

Mr. HUGHES asked :

1. Who is now Indian agent to the Indians at Rama, in Ontario County ?
2. What was the result of the inquiry into the agent's conduct in 1896 or 1897 ?
3. What was the cost of that inquiry ?
4. To whom were the sums paid ?
5. For what services were such sums paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Duncan J. McPhee. 2. Certain of the charges made against the agent of dereliction of duty were held to be proven, but it was not considered that there was sufficient evidence of wrong-doing to justify his removal from office. 3. $501.95. 4. Hugh O'Leary, Q.C., $204.90 ; R. H. Noble, $297.05. 5. To the former for services as commissioner and for disbursements. To the latter as counsel for complainants and for payment of witness fees, rent of hall, and for constable's fees.

PAYMENTS TO R. J. McLAUGHLIN.

Mr. HUGHES asked :

1. What sums have been paid to one R. J. McLaughlin, and to the firm McLaughlin & McDairmaid, of Lindsay, since July, 1896 ?
2. What sums are yet due the said person or persons ?
3. For what services were such sums paid ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Will my hon. friend give us some information as to what department these payments would be made by ?

Mr. HUGHES. I presume he has been picking out of all of them. It would be for law expenses.

The PRIME MINISTER. We will find out, then.

Question allowed to stand.

CROW'S NEST PASS RAILWAY—DEATH OF MR. THORNBURY.

Mr. HUGHES asked :

1. Has the Government any means of ascertaining the particulars in connection with the death of a young man from Victoria County, Ontario, named Thornbury, during the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway ?
2. Will the Government undertake to ascertain:

(a) The cause of his death ; (b) Where and when he died ; (c) Where his remains were interred, and (d) What became of his effects ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The Government has no power to get the information asked for by my hon.

friend; but if he will give us the particulars, we will communicate with the Mounted Police. That is all we can do.

THE TRENT CANAL—PAYMENT OF WORKMEN.

Mr. HUGHES asked :

1. Have the workmen on the Balsam Lake section of the Trent Canal been regularly paid their wages ?

2. How often are they paid ?

3. Does the Government intend to withhold sufficient sums from the contractors to secure the wages to the workmen ?

4. Is the Government aware of the hardship of the workmen, their families and merchants by the non-payment of wages earned by labourers on the Trent Canal, on the Balsam Lake section ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The workmen on the Balsam Lake section of the Trent Canal appear to have been paid their wages regularly monthly, up to October last, since which date, it is learned there has been default in making payment. The Government is considering the proposal to withhold any sum from the contractor which may be available for the special purpose of securing the wages to the workmen, but the department is assured the contractor is arranging to pay them in a week or so. The matter of the failure to pay the wages promptly has been brought before the Government, the Government are, therefore, aware that the workmen and merchants must have suffered some inconvenience.

THE TRENT CANAL—WM. JORDAN'S CLAIM.

Mr. HUGHES asked :

1. Has the Government settled any claim or claims for flooded or drowned land in North Victoria preferred by William Jordan, Esq., of Fenelon Falls ?

2. Has the Government received a report from James Dickson, D.L.S., late president of the Liberal Association for North Victoria, recommending payment of proper damages ?

3. What damages were asked for by Mr. Jordan ?

4. What were offered him ?

5. Why was not Mr. Jordan's claim settled ?

6. What price per acre was paid by the Government for the land for the Trent Canal at Nassau, in Peterboro' County, known as the "Irwin property" ? 7. If Mr. Jordan's claim has not been settled, why has it not been attended to ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The Government has not settled any claim preferred by Mr. William Jordan, of Fenelon Falls. 2. Mr. Dickson made no report at the request of the Department of Railways and Canals; but he addressed a letter to the Minister of Railways and Canals on the 4th July, 1895, with reference to this claim. 3. Mr. Jordan asked damages to the amount of $500. 4.

The Government valuator reported that, in his opinion, Mr. Jordan was entitled to $100 which would cover all damages. This sum was offered him. 5. Mr. Jordan's claim was not settled because he would not accept the amount the department considered he was entitled to. 6. The land known as the "Irwin property" was purchased by the Government for the Trent Canal at Nassau at a figure equal to $925.49 per acre, including all damages which embraced damages to the mill property. No further action necessary on the part of the Government as Mr. Jordan refused to accept the amount tendered him.

FENELON FALLS TIMBER SLIDE.

Mr. HUGHES asked :

1. Is the Government aware that the timber slide at Fenelon Falls, Ontario, is broken up ?

2. Does the Government propose calling for tenders for the construction of a new slide immediately ?

3. If not, why not ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes. 2. Instructions have been given to Mr. Rogers, our superintendent of the Trent works, to take immediate steps for the reconstruction of the slide in question.

COLD STORAGE FOR FISH.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

Has the Government under consideration, or decided on any scheme for the transport of fresh fish in cold storage from the maritime provinces to the inland consuming centres in Quebec, Ontario and the North-west ? What arrangement is proposed, and is it intended to include the export of fish from Prince Edward Island ? Is it proposed to have the arrangement carried out for next season's fishing ? If not, when ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The subject of the hon. gentleman's question has lately been discussed with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries by a number of members from the maritime provinces, and also by Dr. Kendall, who seems to have given the matter a great deal of consideration. The Minister considers the subject one of importance, and has it under consideration.

FRESH BAIT FOR FISHERMEN.

Mr. MARTIN asked :

Has any scheme been proposed by or to the Government by which fishermen could be assured with more certainty of a supply of fresh bait for fishing ? With what end in view has the Government decided to extend a helping hand to fishermen by providing in different stations along the coast, cold storage for the proper preservation of bait ? If not, what does the Government propose to do in order to give better facilities to fishermen ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The answer given to the hon. gentleman's preceding question will apply to this.

NOVA SCOTIA ELECTORAL LISTS.

Mr. MILLS asked :

Is the Government aware that the electoral lists in each of the counties of the province of Nova Scotia shall be made up and signed by the sheriff and deposited with the clerk of the municipality on or before the tenth day of April in each year, and shall thenceforth be the register of electors for the county ?

Has the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received a copy of the electoral list from any of the counties in the province of Nova Scotia ?

If so, what counties, and when will said lists be printed ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Yes, this Government is aware that under the provisions of section 35 of 52 Vic., Chap. 1 of the Statutes of Nova Scotia, the list of voters of each electoral district of that province has to be made up, signed by the sheriff, and deposited with the clerk of the municipality on or before the 10th day of April in each year. The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has received a copy of said voters' lists for the electoral districts of Antigonish, Inverness and King's; and also, for part of those of Digby, Lunenburg and Yarmouth. None of them have been printed so far.

IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. How many immigrants have been sent into the Dominion of Canada from the United States by the agents mentioned below from 30th June, 1897, to 30th June, 1898 : Wm. Bram, St. Paul, Minn.; Benjamin Davis, St. Paul, Minn.; C. J. Broughton, Chicago, Ill.; D. L. Caven, Bad Axe, Michigan; J. S. Crawford, Salma, Kansas; M. V. McInnes, Chief United States, Detroit; T. O. Currie, Stevens Point, Wisconsin; James Grieve, Michigan; W. H. Rogers, Watertown, South Dakota; C. O. Swanson, New England States.

2. From which agent's districts have they come? How many have been sent or should be credited to each agent? And where have they been located?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). It is not possible to give an answer to these questions as no attempt has been made to keep a record of the number of immigrants sent by individual agents. We know from careful and constant supervision that all our agents in the United States are working hard and faithfully, and we can only look at the result of their work as a whole, which is extremely satisfactory.

HOSPITAL AT BENNETT.

Mr. DAVIN asked :

Is the hospital at Bennett an hospital supported by the Dominion Government? Who is the matron? Is she the matron who was in charge during 1898? Who is the medical officer

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

there? Was Dr. Decaux medical officer of that hospital? Has he left? If so, why did he leave? When did he leave? Was he under pay for any time after he left? Is he under pay now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I beg to reply : 1. The hospital at Bennett was a private institution. It was not supported by the Dominion Government. 2. Several members of the Mounted Police, who were suffering from typhoid fever, were nursed in this hospital; there being no accommodation for them elsewhere. 4. The Government is not in possession of the name of the matron. 4. Dr. De Cow organized and managed the hospital, and was also in charge of the medical branch of the Mounted Police at Bennett and Tagish. 5. He left the Yukon at the end of October, suffering from pneumonia, and is still under medical treatment, believed to be dangerously ill. 6. He was paid up to the end of January. 7. He is not under pay now.

IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. WILSON asked :

1. How many immigrants have been sent into the Dominion of Canada by the following agents from the districts in which they have been working for the year ending 30th June, 1898, and of what nationalities they are :

- C. R. Devlin, agent, Dublin.
- John Grant, agent, Dumfries.
- Peter Fleming, agent, Dundee.
- H. M. Murry, agent, Glasgow.
- W. G. Stewart, agent, Inverness.
- A. F. Jury, agent, Liverpool.

2. Where have said immigrants been located? How many agents did each agent send to Canada in the year ending 30th June, 1898?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). It is not possible to give an answer to these questions, no record being kept of the number of immigrants sent by individual agents.

MR. A. H. HARRIS.

Mr. POPE asked :

1. On what date did the appointment of Mr. A. H. Harris as general traffic manager of the Intercolonial Railway take effect?

2. What were his powers, duties and authority as such general traffic manager?

3. On what date were his services as such general traffic manager dispensed with?

4. On what date did he retire from the service of the Intercolonial Railway?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Mr. A. H. Harris's appointment dated from the 24th November, 1897. Mr. Harris's powers were to exercise as much authority and have the same control of rates, fares and arrangements respecting traffic matters, and over the selection, and government of his staff as is usual and customary in large railway corporations. Mr. Harris's duties were to look after traffic matters generally, to quote freight and passenger rates, to make a tariff of rates, to see that the traffic was properly and economically handled. Mr. Harris acted under the general manager by direction and authority of the Minister of Railways and Canals, either one or both could put a check on him. Mr. Harris was given verbal notice in the latter part of May, 1898, that his services would be dispensed with on a certain specific date. Mr. Harris retired from the service of the Intercolonial Railway on the 1st of August, 1898.

SPEECH OF MR. LOMER GOUIN.

Mr. CHAUVIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

Whether the hon. the Prime Minister has read this part of the speech delivered at Montreal on the 19th of April instant, by Mr. Lomer Gouin, a member of the Quebec legislature : "Liberals and Conservatives must to-day unite in calling for a remanipulation of the subsidies at Ottawa. The annual subsidy must be calculated each decade by the Government, in order to enable the provincial governments to meet the additional expenditure resulting from the increase of the population and the development of the country. The Dominion Government, which is now made up of men of enlightenment, the greater part of whom took part in the inter-provincial conference in 1887, will hear our representations and accede to our requests."

What are the representations and requests in this matter, now in the hands of the Government on the part of the provincial governments ?

Is it the intention of the hon. Prime Minister to comply with the claims formulated by the inter-provincial conference of 1887, in relation to "better terms," for the province of Quebec ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In reply I beg to say : The Prime Minister has read the speech delivered in Montreal by Mr. Gouin. The representations and requests in this matter, now in the hands of the Government on the part of the provincial governments, are the resolutions adopted by the provincial conference of 1887, which sat in the city of Quebec. The attention of the Government has not been called to that subject.

TORONTO POST OFFICE.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Foster) asked :

What are the names of the persons appointed to positions in the Toronto post office since July 13th, 1896 ? The date of each such appointment ? The salary paid to each such person ? The office to which each such person was appointed, and by whom recommended for appointment ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I would suggest that the hon. gentleman make a motion.

COPYRIGHT BILL.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to introduce the Copyright Bill this session ?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I cannot give a definite answer to my hon. friend, but the matter is under consideration.

POSTAL NOTES.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York. N.B.) moved for copy of contract for the production of postal notes, and the cost of such per 1,000 of each denomination, exclusive of paper, and for all correspondence between the contractor, the Government and the Queen's Printer. Also, for a statement of the number of reams of paper made for each denomination, by whom ordered to be made, where made, and the name of manufacturer, and who has now possession of the Dandy rolls from which the paper was made. And also, the following statements : Who furnished the electrotypes, and where they were made, the date of first delivery of postal notes, and amount of security given by the contractor, and whether the contractor has supplied the necessary accommodation for Government clerks for superintendence and storage for an ample supply of paper.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I observe that this motion asks for information as to the cost per thousand, exclusive of paper. My recollection is that the contract was for notes inclusive of paper. Of course, if that is the contract, the return cannot come down exactly in the form moved for.

Mr. FOSTER. All right ; we do not ask you to do impossibilities.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Does the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) move to amend the motion ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No : with the explanation I have given, let the motion go.

Motion agreed to.

DUTY ON COAL OIL.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan) moved :

That in the opinion of this House, coal oil should be put on the free list.

He said : Mr. Speaker, in the first place, let me say that in discussing this subject I will make my remarks as brief as possible. They say that this is a growing time, and that, Sir, applies to speeches as well as trade. I have moved this motion because I think it is nearly time that coal oil was placed on the free list. When the tariff of 1897 was brought down by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), I, and a great many other hon. members, more particularly those from the west, believing that the duty was too high, gave a large amount of attention to the question of coal oil. The Government at that time reduced the duty 1 cent per gallon, and they also arranged the regulations in such a way as to enable the people in my part of the country to get oil in tank cars. That reduction in duty and rearrangement of the regulations reduced the cost of coal oil to a considerable extent in the west.

Another thing, in connection with the contract entered into by the Government with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the construction of the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, a 20 per cent reduction in freight on coal oil was arranged, and in that way the cost of the carriage of coal oil from Petrolea and other points, in eastern Canada, was reduced to the amount of 3 cents per gallon. This gave us a great reduction in the price, and I would not have moved this motion, at the present time, had it not been for what has transpired lately in the formation of a combine which, at present, we all know exists and which has placed the people of this country at its mercy. Mr. Speaker, I know that a certain number of parties, who have coal oil wells in this country, claim that they should have a certain amount of protection on account of not being able to produce the raw material as cheaply as it is produced in the United States. They claim that their wells are not so good, that they do not produce so much, and that they cannot compete with the flowing wells in Ohio and other parts of the United States; on that account they claim they should receive a certain amount of protection. They go further, and they say that the Standard Oil Company, if this amount of protection is done away with, is liable to reduce the price of the raw material supplied by them to the company. I may say that this is a matter these people should have taken into consideration when they made their arrangement with the Standard Oil Company, and when they sold the Canadian refineries to that company. It is a well known fact that some of the parties who own these wells at Petrolea and other parts were interested in the refineries, and we know, that during the discussion of this important question in 1897, these same parties told us that one of the reasons why they wanted such a large amount of protection was that their machinery was such that they could not compete with the Standard Oil Company. Yet they took the first opportunity, after the tariff was arranged and the Government granted them this amount of protection, to sell out their interests to the Standard Oil Company, and, I may go further and say, that I believe they not only sold out their interests, but that they sold to the combine the protection granted by this Government. I may say still further, that I believe, at the present time, that they will try and prevent coal oil being placed on the free list, so as to enable them to fulfil their contract and to deliver the goods. Now, as I said before, Mr. Speaker, at the time the tariff was brought down, these people held up before the people this oil trust as a bogey that was going to kill out the Canadian refineries, but, as soon as the tariff was arranged, they forgot all about what they had said and did not take the consumer into consideration, but handed themselves, body and soul, to this same trust. Some people may say that the owners of these wells are Canadians and that we must take them into consideration. True, but the bulk of the population too are Canadians; the consumer has also to be taken into consideration just as well as the producer, and, therefore, I think, taking everything into consideration, that this commodity should be placed on the free list. Now, I have some figures which I want to give to the House. The total output of domestic oil last year was 10,250,000 gallons. I have taken these figures from the Inland Revenue returns. Taking the number of barrels inspected and allowing 40 gallons to each barrel, I get 10,250,000 gallons. The increase in the price to the consumer under the duty is 5 cts. per gallon, and the Standard Oil Company have, on this, an increased profit of $512,500. If this were going into the pockets of Canadians it would not be so bad, but it is not. We imported 8,010,000 gallons from the United States, upon which the duty collected amounted to $400,517, or nearly half a million dollars; so that, taking the increased price of 5 cents a gallon on the amount we produce at home and on the amount we import, we find that the people are paying, directly and indirectly, $913,017, or nearly $1,000,000. But this is not all; we find also that we have to pay a cent a gallon more for inspection on all oil that comes in.

Now, we take the 5 cents per gallon duty and the 1 cent per gallon we pay for inspection, and that makes 6 cents. Of course when a merchant imports oil, he adds to the original price, the cost of freight, the amount of the duty, and the charge for this inspection, and he figures his profit on what the oil cost him laid down in his place of business. Therefore, if the oil costs 6 cents per gallon in the States, 5 cents per gallon duty, 1 cent per gallon inspection, it would make 12 cents per gallon, to which would be added the freight of 6 cents per gallon more and that would figure up to 18 cents per gallon. The merchant would calculate, say, 40 per cent of a profit on that gross amount, so that you will find, that would entail an extra 2 cents per gallon that the consumer is actually paying. If you take the duty, the cost of inspection, and that 2 cents, you will find that the consumer is actually paying about 8 cents a gallon that he ought not to. Some people may think that the consumers would get no relief by placing coal oil on the free list, but such is not the case, and for this reason: There are a great number of oil refining companies in the United States, and in Oil City, Penn., alone there are four companies independent of the Standard Oil Company. I have here the price for which they sell the best American oil at the wells in Oil City, and I find that the independent companies—and there are four of them—sell the refined oil there for:

| Barrels (figured down to Imp. measure)— | Cts. per gall.  |
|---|-----------------|
| Said oil testing, gravity 7.86.....     | 7 $\frac{1}{2}$ |
| Best oil, testing gravity 7.80.....     | 7 $\frac{3}{4}$ |
| Best oil, in tank cars.....             | 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ |

Now, suppose we make a calculation. The cost of oil is 5½ cents per gallon ; the duty 5 cents a gallon, the freight to Winnipeg, as I have figured from the freight rates, 6½ cents per gallon, and allowing 2 cents for barreling, that would make 19½ cents. I find by invoices which I have here, that the Standard Oil Company at the present time are selling their oil in the west to the wholesale merchants for 21½ cents per gallon, so that they are actually getting a profit over and above what they should get, even including duty and other charges.

If the duty were taken off coal oil we would be able to lay it down in the North-west Territories at the present time, for about 12½ cents a gallon, so that hon. gentlemen will see that would make a great difference to the people of that country. The Standard Oil Company were, of course, anticipating that this matter would be brought up in the House of Commons, and in that anticipation they have been preparing for it all last winter. They have imported into the North-west Territories a lot of inferior grade oil from Pennsylvania, and they have marked it "Best American." They have handed this oil over to several dealers in the city of Winnipeg, and these parties are selling it to pedlars and others for 25 cents a gallon. That is done for the purpose of making the public believe that the people in the west are not paying more than they should pay for this oil, but I may state that this oil is of very inferior quality and is not any better than the commonest Canadian oil that is produced in Petrolea. I claim that it is not right that the people of this country should be taxed half a million dollars a year for the benefit of an American trust, and I think it is time that the duty should be taken off and coal oil allowed to come in free. There are a certain number of people in Petrolea engaged in the oil industry, and I sympathize with them, but my sympathies do not go so far as to keep up this duty for the benefit of a few, and to the detriment of the great mass of our population. I believe that there are about 10,000 people directly and indirectly living on this industry in Petrolea, but I do not think it is fair that the balance of the five million Canadians should be taxed at the rate of 5 cents per gallon (to which the cost of inspection has to be added) for the benefit of a few thousand people in that city. They may say: We cannot make this industry pay unless we have this duty. Well, Mr. Speaker, these gentlemen should have thought of that before they went into it. Suppose, for instance, a dozen, or two dozen, or for that matter a thousand farmers in my country, took it into their heads that they would like to go into the raising of oranges, and it would cost $1 per dozen, to raise these oranges. Would it be fair to ask the people of Canada from one end to the other, to pay $1 per dozen for oranges, simply because a thousand people or so went into a non-productive industry? I submit, Sir, that such a proposition would not be entertained for a moment. Those who invested in the Canadian oil industry should have thought of all this before they commenced business, and if it does not pay them, let them take their money out of the industry and put it into something else. I shall not detain the House any further, Mr. Speaker, than to move, seconded by Mr. Ellis, the motion which stands in my name on the Order paper.

Mr. JOHN FRASER (East Lambton). Mr. Speaker, before this motion is put to the House I desire to say a few words, and I shall endeavour to be as brief as my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) who moved the resolution. My hon. friend will surmise. I presume, that I am opposed to the placing of this commodity upon the free list. I can assure him that I have no fault to find with his endeavour on behalf of his constituents in the far west, to secure coal oil or any other commodity for that matter, at as low a price as possible. But, Mr. Speaker, I submit that by adopting such a drastic measure as the hon. gentleman proposes this afternoon, the object which he so ardently desires would not be attained. It is true, as the hon. gentleman has stated, that the manufacturing end of the oil business is at the present time entirely in the hands of one institution. There will be no attempt made on my part, or on the part of any gentleman engaged in the oil industry or representing those who are in the business, to gainsay that fact. Let it be remembered, however, that the great native oil industry, the producing end of the business which represents at least 90 per cent of the capital invested in the industry, is as a whole entirely in the hands of the original Canadian operators--the men who employed labour, and invested their capital in putting down the wells, at great risk and expense to themselves. That industry, representing as I have said, at least 90 per cent of the capital invested, is, I repeat, still in the hands of our Canadian oil producers, and it is on behalf of those persons, numbering at least 700, that I desire to engage the attention of the House for a few moments. The argument of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davis) was based upon the assumption, that all the producers were also interested in the manufacturing end of the business. That is very far from being the truth--neither in numbers nor in the quantity of oil produced is it true. I may state, that not more than perhaps ten or fifteen, at the very most, of the individuals interested in the producing industry, sold out, or were interested in the manufacturing end of the business. So, Mr. Speaker, I believe I am well within the mark in saying, that at least 680 persons, who are interested in the oil industry, had no interest whatever in the sale that was made to the Standard Oil Company. As to the quantity of crude petroleum produced, I may say that the quantity produced by the gentlemen who sold their refineries is very small indeed as compared with the quantity produced by the gentlemen who are still owners of wells. The statement has been made time and again in my presence, since the opening of the session, that the oil well owners have all sold out to the Standard Oil Company. I have no doubt that that statement was made in good faith; but the fact is far from that. That portion of the native oil industry of Canada in which all the risk is taken, which is purely and simply a mining industry, is in the hands of Canadians; and, as I said before, I desire on behalf of those people, to say a few words in answer to the resolution submitted by my hon. friend.

My hon. friend has sought to show that the cost of petroleum to the consumers of the North-west is very high indeed. I admit that it is very high, as the cost of all commodities to the consumers in remote portions of the country must of necessity be very high. The cost of transportation is abnormally high. I have in my possession a receipt from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for $335, which was paid for transporting a tank of refined oil from the town of Petrolea, in which I reside, to the city of Winnipeg. That, of course, is a very high charge, amounting to about 6½ cents a gallon. My hon. friend adds the cost of inspection. I know not for what reason, for that must be a part of the cost of any oil, whether imported or native. I presume my hon. friend would not for one moment seriously advise the Government to permit petroleum to go into general use without a rigid inspection. It is of the first importance that petroleum, of all commodities we use, should be subjected to a very rigid and careful inspection; and, if so, there must of necessity be an inspection fee charged. So that I think my hon. friend was hardly arguing fairly in adding the cost of inspection to the other charges; for that is a charge which no fair-minded person could take exception to. My hon. friend has a right, of course, to discuss the import duty, but neither he nor any other hon. member can swell that duty beyond 5 cents a gallon. That is the cold, naked fact, and it is of no use attempting to argue, as my hon. friend has done, that it is 8 cents. Now, it is well known to gentlemen engaged in the trade, at least those who handle Canadian oil that not in a single instance can the dealer or the jobber on this side of the line secure for himself, even if he were so desirous of doing so, the full benefit of the import duty. There are conditions which I shall not elaborate upon, which preclude the possibility of the dealer in Canadian petroleum putting into his pocket the 5 cents duty which is charged on imported oil. I do not say that there is not an occasional man in the business who would be disposed to do that if the conditions were favourable; but the fact is that the conditions are not favourable. I can show conclusively that since 1890 the difference between the price of oil in Canada and the price in the United States has never exceeded 2½ cents a gallon, and the difference at the present time I can show to be less than 2 cents. Though not quite positive, I think I can show that the prices on the other side quoted by my hon. friend are for oils that could not stand our inspection at all, but are for oils of a rather inferior grade. It must never be forgotten, too, that the price in the United States is for wine measure.

Mr. DAVIS. I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that I figured the price upon Imperial measure, and that the oil was of a higher test than any oil produced in the Canadian wells.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). A higher flash test, I presume.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). My hon. friend also understands that there is a specific gravity test to which he has made no reference whatever; and the two tests must enter into the argument. I accept my hon. friend's explanation that he is calculating, not on the wine measure, but on the Imperial measure. But many persons who have taken up this question have not been quite so fair in this regard as my hon. friend has been. Perhaps I should not say that they are unfair, because in the vast majority of cases I find that people are not aware that there is a difference in the measures used on the two sides of the line. The difference is this, that a gallon on the Canadian side is one-fifth greater than a gallon on the American side. I think my hon. friend said something about the quality. This is a phase of the question which is frequently referred to in this House and outside of this House. The oil industry of Canada is something like thirty-five years old, and to the present day dealers and others in the country will be found who assert boldly that oil produced in Canada is of a very inferior quality to oil produced on the American side of the line. You will never hear them admit that there are poor oils produced in the United States at all. Some people seem to take a positive delight, if I may say so, in decrying everything produced in Canada and lauding everything of the same nature produced in the United States. I submit that that is hardly the wisest or best course to pursue by those who desire to develop the native industries of Canada. Especially do I think it is a pernicious doctrine to preach with regard to the mining industries which have come to the front to an extent one can hardly realize within the past two or three years, and which have done more to advertise Canada throughout the globe as a more profitable field for investment than all the other industries combined, with the exception of the agricultural industry, which is the greatest, and, I believe, always will be the greatest, in Canada. At the present time, at least, of our mining industries, petroleum is the greatest in the province of Ontario. I shall ask you to bear with me while I read the figures, in order to show how the oil industry stands as compared with the other mining industries in that province. During the past year, Ontario petroleum products were as follows:—

|                                 |             |
|---------------------------------|-------------|
| Illuminating oil .....          | $1,131,083 |
| Lubricating oil .....           | 199,755     |
| Benzine and naphtha.....        | 777,340     |
| Gas and fuel oils and tar ..... | 281,035     |
| Paraffin wax and candles.....   | 88,378      |

Total..... $1,777,591

These are figures published in a recent issue of the 'Toronto "Globe," and I find, on comparing them with the public records, that they are in almost every instance below the mark. Let me give you the production of other mining industries. Natural gas, which is the first on the list, shows a total value of $308,443. Natural gas, I may add, belongs to the same family of products as petroleum, and I think it would not be stretching the matter too much to take it in with petroleum:

|                              |            |
|------------------------------|------------|
| Natural gas .....            | $ 308,443 |
| Calcium carbide .....        | 34,440     |
| Salt .....                   | 249,880    |
| Gypsum and products of ..... | 8,500      |
| Pig iron.....                | 288,127    |
| Nickel .....                 | 359,651    |
| Copper .....                 | 200,537    |
| Gold .....                   | 190,244    |

Total..... $1,639,357

This shows a difference of over $100,000 in favour of petroleum as against all other mining industries in Ontario. That is a statement which, I think, will be a surprise to you, Sir, and perhaps to most of the hon. gentlemen who do me the honour of listening to me. The oil industry is, therefore, the most important, at present at all events, of our mining industries in the province of Ontario, and I submit that instead of its being subjected to attacks, as it is so very frequently—too frequently. I am sorry to say—it should be encouraged; and I trust that in future the attacks will be less frequent and based on a greater degree of information and fairness. The petroleum industry seems to be constantly singled out from the other mining industries of Ontario as a fit subject for attack. Now, my hon. friend has given us some figures with the view of convincing us that American oil is much cheaper than Canadian oil. Let me say that for the past fifteen years at least, the prices of Canadian oil, the prices of all oils in fact, used in Canada, have been below their intrinsic value. There has been a very keen competition indeed—almost a commercial war—waged between the native industry and the foreign exporters, who have been sending American oil into this country. That, I think my hon. friend knows as well as I do. The result of that war—for it is not too much to say that in many instances it was a war to the death, so far as the Canadian industry was concerned—has been that the wholesale price—I am speaking now of the price that the oil man receives for his oil—has all along been from 10 per cent to 30 per cent less than its intrinsic value. The consumer, I am sorry to say, has not on all occasions been so happily situated that he could get the benefit of this competition, because the retail dealer, and in some instances the jobber as well—but in almost every instance the retail dealer, and I would be very sorry to make an attack on that class—gets a very much larger profit on petroleum than upon almost any other commodity in his establishment. I could show conclusively to any unprejudiced person that the retail dealer, especially in some of the remote parts of Canada, has in many instances received by way of profit—basing the profit, as my hon. friend has very properly done, upon all the charges until it reaches his store—more than double the original price paid to the manufacturer. I can show that beyond all question. I do not wish to make any attack on the retail merchants, or any other institution. The oil industry has been up to the present, and I suppose will be to the end of the chapter, on the defensive. We have had all along enemies enough and have no desire to make any more. We have had some very unfair enemies and been subjected to some very unfair attacks, but I may say that many of these attacks have been made in ignorance of the facts. Let me say to you that the Canadian oil industry has nothing whatever to hide. If any person will take the trouble, as some have done, to go to the town of Petrolea, or Sarnia, or to the county of Lambton, or Essex, Kent, Elgin or Middlesex, in each of which oil is being produced, I venture to assert that he will not come back here and use such arguments against us as are constantly being used on the floor of this House.

Now, my hon. friend has shown you very large prices indeed for petroleum in the North-west, in remote portions in the country. But I am in a position to say that the hon. gentleman's order will be filled in Petrolea, the town in which I reside, for anything from one to fifty car-loads for 8½ cents, in bulk. The hon. gentleman can figure out the rest of it as he chooses. If the consumer pays 50 cents for petroleum in remote portions of this country, those who charge him that price ought, in common honesty, I submit, to tell him that all that the oil man gets at the present time is 8½ cents. Now, at the outset I may tell you that the manufacturing end of the business is in the hands of one institution. It is called the Imperial Oil Company of Canada. It has been asserted, and I think truthfully, that that institution is controlled by the Standard Oil Company of the United States. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not here in the capacity of apologist for that organization. At the same time, I think that you and every other fair-minded person will agree with me when I say that it is not in the interest of the Canadian oil industry to quarrel with any person. The Canadian oil industry of to-day has no quarrel with the Standard Oil Company of the United States. Let me say, however, that the field is open to any person to enter into the refining business. There is no reason, so far as I know, why any persons who desire to do so cannot go to the town of Petrolea or to the town of Sarnia, or to any other good shipping point, and enter into the manufacturing business. Many of those who are engaged in the native oil industry have of late been seriously considering the advisability of going into that branch of the business; but so far the project has not assumed anything like definite shape, and, therefore, I am not able to say what the outcome may be. But, as I have said, there is a fair field, an open field, for any person to go into the manufacturing business who desires to do so and who has sufficient capital.

Mr. DAVIN. That is, to compete with the trust.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) says: "To compete with the trust." Of course, the matter of competition is one which must be confronted no matter what business you enter into.

I frequently hear reference made to the question of quality, and I would like to say a few words upon that point, as it is a very important point indeed. I hold in my hand copies of a large number of letters received from parties in the maritime provinces, where we sell a very large quantity of Canadian petroleum, and where as well as elsewhere, Canadian petroleum is constantly being used by the consumers under the impression that they are using American oil. Many dealers, Sir, are constantly in the habit of selling the finest Water White Canadian oil as American—just as there are perhaps twenty times as much Mocha coffee sold in the world as is grown in the place whence that coffee is supposed to come. The letters to which I refer are nearly all dated in 1896. They are not, therefore, as modern, perhaps, as they should be for the purposes of the argument; but, at all events, I can assure you that the quality of Canadian oil has not deteriorated in the meantime. And let me say here that there is as good a quality of oil being made in Canada to-day as there is in the world. I can produce in the city of Ottawa, from the large stock in store, as fine a quality of petroleum as can be found in any establishment on the face of the globe. That is a statement that I think I can verify to the satisfaction of any fair-minded person. Of these letters that I have here, many have come to us unsolicited. The first one I shall trouble you to listen to is from the city of St. John, N.B., the city in which my hon. friend (Mr. Ellis), who seconds this resolution, resides, and he will know the gentleman who wrote the letter:

Mr. FRASER (Lambton).

St. John, N.B., 4th April, 1896.

Imperial Oil Company.

Dear Sirs,—In answer to your communication concerning "Arc-light Oil," I have much pleasure in saying I like the oil very much, and think it is equal to any American oil, and my customers seem to be perfectly satisfied with it, both as regards odour and burning quality.

Yours truly,

J. R. CAMERON,

Wholesale and Retail Lamps and Oils.

Now, I read one from Windsor, N.S.:

Windsor, N.S., 4th April, 1898.

Imperial Oil Company.

Gentlemen,—Yours of the 2nd instant to hand, and in reply I can say that the "Arc-light Oil" we got from you has given satisfaction, despite the brand. My opinion is, that the "Arc-light Oil" is, if anything, better than the American oil. I never handled a better oil.

Yours truly,

J. D. SHAW.

The next letter I have to read is from Charlottetown, P.E.I.:

Charlottetown, P.E.I., 11th November, 1895.

Imperial Oil Company.

Dear Sirs,—We are having great trouble on the Island this fall with American oil, and believe it to be a good opportunity for you to push more vigorously than ever your "Arc-light Oil."

All the best brands of American oil appear to be equally inferior. The trouble, in a large degree, seems to be the lack of strength. After the lamp is filled, it will burn fairly well for a time; but gradually the flame gets weaker, the oil not drawing up. As the wick is turned higher to enlarge the flame, a crust soon forms, smoking the chimney.

Yours truly,

J. D. McLEOD & CO.

I have, perhaps, fifty letters, all similar in tenor to the three I have read. I do not think it would serve any good purpose to burden "Hansard" with all the letters I have of this character,—those I have read from dealers of good repute and of unquestioned veracity will substantiate to the satisfaction of any hon. gentleman present the position I take,—that the best Canadian oil is at least as good as the best American. It is argued by some, of course, that the American oil burns more freely. That is largely a question of the particular lamp or burner that is used. The capillary action of American oil—it being of lighter specific gravity than the Canadian—is, of course, somewhat stronger than that of the Canadian. But let me point out this fact especially—and I desire to emphasize it as being a point in favour of Canadian oil. In addition to the gallon being one-fifth larger than the American, the oil, in lasting quality, in light-producing strength, is, by actual test, at least one-fifth better than the American oil which is so much lauded by persons who seem to take delight in attacking our native industry.

Before I sit down I would like to deal with a phase of the petroleum industry in Canada which I have never heard mentioned in this House. I have already said that the Canadian oil industry has in many respects done a great deal to advertise Canada. The Canadian oil field has for the past twenty years been sending men all over the world; I refer to the Canadian drillers, trained and skilled drillers, men who are inured to all kinds of hardship, men who go out in all sorts of weather and at all hours of the day and night to handle the drill. Those hon. gentlemen who have seen the process of drilling will bear me out in saying that it is one of the most arduous tasks that any man can be called upon to perform. We have sent hundreds of those young men—because the most of them are young men, old men could not stand it—we have sent hundreds of those young men all over the globe. In the town in which I reside there is an organization that has twelve plants for drilling artesian wells operating in Australia to secure water for the great herds of sheep to be found there, and in this way they have rendered inestimable service to the raisers of sheep in that country. The result has been that millions of acres in the arid portions of Australia have been brought into use for the purpose of pasturing sheep. Those men have also gone into various portions of Africa, all over India, and recently a large refinery was erected in Borneo under the supervision of a gentleman from the town of Petrolea. They have discovered a pretty good oil deposit in that island. We have also men operating in Sumatra, Java, Austria, Germany, Italy, South America and California, and recently we have sent men to Newfoundland. I am happy to state for the information of the House, that a deposit of oil of a very superior quality indeed has recently been discovered in Newfoundland, a fact that will be of special interest at a time when that island is asking for admission into our confederation. Let me say that no commodity, in my opinion, that is indigenous to Canada is so generally distributed throughout the country. My hon. friend spoke of raising oranges in the Northwest. Well, Sir, I think it could hardly be seriously contended that oranges are indigenous to Alberta, but I can truthfully say that petroleum is indigenous to Canada, and it is owing to ignorance of this fact that so many attacks have been made upon the petroleum industry. Some thirty years ago it was supposed that all the petroleum in Canada was confined to the one township in the county where I reside, namely, the township of Enniskillen. There are ten townships in that county, and at this time oil is being produced in paying quantities in seven townships out of the ten, and we have good reasons for believing that there is oil in the other three. Oil is also being produced in paying quantities in Essex, in Kent, in Elgin and in Middlesex. We know furthermore, that there is oil in various other parts of Ontario. I have also geological testimony of the very highest order in my possession to show that there is a vast deposit of oil in Athabasca, in that far-off western country, and I would not be at all surprised if a vast deposit of oil should be discovered where my hon. friend who preceded me resides. I venture to express the opinion that when that country is studded with three-pole derricks, as I trust it will be at an early day, my hon. friend will come down here singing a very different song from the one with which he has regaled us this afternoon. Now, Sir, I think I will not trouble you with any further remarks. I have attempted to show you that the quality of Canadian oil is good. But I had almost forgotten to say that I have a large number of letters that we got some two or three years ago from various lodges of Patrons of Industry throughout Ontario, from men who are purchasing Canadian petroleum direct from the refinery in my town, and in every instance these letters speak in the highest terms of commendation of Canadian petroleum. It would not be proper for me to drop this phase of the question without reading some of the contents of these letters. I will not read the letters in their entirety, but only give you a few extracts. Mr. Geo. H. Ashe, of Cobourg, says :

Your last barrel of oil was good, and gave good satisfaction.

Mr. Bole, secretary of the Patrons of Industry, lodge 485, Thornbury, writes :

Your oil gave the best of satisfaction.

Mr. Martin G. Brown, of Eldon, Ont., says :

It was the best oil we ever had. One fault only—it was short 5 gallons.

Mr. DAVIS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). My hon. friend says "Hear, hear." At last he thinks he has discovered something that is of some value to him. Let me say that it is not an unusual thing for a barrel of petroleum to arrive at a distant point in a leaky condition; but in every instance where the quantity is short—and no one knows this better than my hon. friend—all the buyer has to do is to telegraph or write to the manufacturer from whom he bought it, and the quantity is immediately made good in every instance.

Another gentleman on behalf of the Patrons of Industry Lodge No. 608, Olinda, Milton G. Brown says: "The last barrel was the best received yet." Another gentleman from Stayner, Mr. Neil Coleman, says: "The oil was first-class." Another gentleman, Mr. A. J. Cowan, of Willetsholme, says: "Good value." A gentleman from Nottawa, Mr. G. W. Glover, writing on behalf of the Patrons of Industry Lodge No. 1901, says: "It is the best oil we have ever used." This is the tenor of all these letters. I can produce overwhelming proof and can, I am sure, convince any unprejudiced person in this Chamber, or anywhere else, that the best Canadian oil is as good as any oil made on the face of the globe; I do not except Pennsylvania or Ohio; I do not except any of the great petroleum fields throughout the world. We have satisfied ourselves, and we can satisfy any other person, that the best water-white Canadian petroleum is, as good an oil as can be procured to-day. I trust that no hon. gentleman will seriously deem it to be his duty to say anything against the Canadian oil industry; I trust that no hon. member will deem it to be his duty to vote for the resolution which my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) has submitted this afternoon. While he says in his resolution: Put coal oil upon the free list, he forgets that the oil industry pays very large duties upon the great many commodities that enter into the production and manufacture of petroleum. He forgets that we import every year thousands and thousands of tons of iron; he forgets that we import large quantities of chemicals for deodorizing purposes, for the purposes of manufacturing petroleum; he forgets that one institution in the county in which I reside burns 100 tons of coal a day, upon which there is a heavy duty. It can be shown that the duty upon oil is reduced by at least 2 cents, by the duties that the oil industry has to pay upon the various articles that I have enumerated. We pay heavy duties, and we find that there has been recently a great advance in the price of iron which adds largely to the cost of the production and manufacture of oil. My hon. friend (Mr. Davis) claims to have accurate information, but he is far below the mark when he says there are only 10,000 persons interested in the petroleum industry in Canada; I think he would have been nearer the mark if he had said that there are 20,000 directly and indirectly interested in this industry. In Quebec, there is a village or a town named Capelton, and that town is almost entirely maintained by the manufacture of sulphuric and other acids that are used in the manufacture of Canadian petroleum, and a blow at the Canadian petroleum industry would be a direct blow at the thriving village or town of Capelton. I can name other towns and villages similarly situated. The question is a complex one, and you cannot deal summarily with any isolated article in this fashion; if you are going to put petroleum on the free list you will have to place a great many other articles on the free list before you can truthfully say that petroleum is on the free list. Petroleum cannot be placed on the free list without placing all the other commodities that enter into the manufacture of that article, also, on the free list. Then, only, can you in fairness say, that petroleum is on the free list. But suppose—and it is difficult for me to suppose that the House will do so—suppose that the House should deem it to be wise to place coal oil on the free list, how would you levy the revenue that you now derive from imported petroleum? Where would you place it? The burden would have to be shifted to some other commodity. The country derives a revenue of over half a million dollars from imported petroleum. I submit that the hon. gentleman should not advance the arguments that he has advanced in favour of his resolution if he desires to deal fairly by the House, and I am sure that my hon. friend has no desire to be anything but fair. I submit that the loss of revenue would be a serious one. I feel, Sir, that I need not trouble you at any greater length upon this occasion. I desire to thank you, Sir, and the hon. members of this House who have listened so courteously and patiently to me this afternoon, and I trust that any hon. gentleman who may, with the information which he has now, think it proper to place coal oil on the free list, will stay his hand until the question has been more fully considered.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). Mr. Speaker, we must all be gratified at the charming manner in which the hon. member (Mr. Fraser) has stated his case, and of the equally charming manner in which he has led us on excursions to the pleasant island of Borneo and other places, that have nothing to do with the question, and which were introduced with the apparent design of taking our attention away from the question. The hon. gentleman has not answered the statement of the hon. member at my right (Mr. Davis), who said that the effect of this duty on coal oil was to increase the cost to the consumer by 8 cents per gallon, nor did he meet the statement, either, that the result of the duty is not in the interest of any large number of persons in Canada, but is in the interest of a corporation outside of Canada. The hon. gentleman seems to have entirely failed to deal with the arguments of the hon. member for Saskatchewan. While he gave us a great deal of interesting information about the oil industry and its products, which are important, he did not give any consolation to the consumers. My hon. friend on my right presented his case very well from the North-west point of view. I would like to present it as well from the point of view of the maritime provinces. All I can do is to state the case in as plain words as I can from our point of view. We imported last year into Canada 8,011,240 gallons of coal oil, according to our returns. The American figures I have not by me at the moment, but, as I remember, they give the Canadian importations at over 9,000,000 gallons; a portion of the excess would, no doubt, be oil which is smuggled across the frontier into the maritime provinces; a portion would be accounted for by the difference of quantity in the gallons, and perhaps some of it went to Newfoundland. The value of that oil was $602,265, and the duty paid upon it $400,558.

Coal oil entered for consumption, 1898—

| Galls.    | Value.    | Duty.     |
|-----------|-----------|-----------|
| 8,011,240 | $602,265 | $400,558 |

Hon. gentlemen will see that this amounts to a tax of 66 per cent, or, in other words, every man who buys $1 worth of oil pays in addition 66 cents for the duty. This tax bears very heavily on the maritime provinces. In the province of New Brunswick, from which I come, there was entered for consumption last year oil to the value of $114,632, upon which we paid a tax of $70,952, which amounts to about 62 per cent, as nearly as I have worked it out, although I have not calculated it out with absolute accuracy. In 1897, in the province of New Brunswick, we paid a duty amounting to about 70 per cent upon the value of the oil imported. The reduction in the coal oil duty in 1898 consequently reduced the tax about 8 per cent, as compared with the tax in the year 1897.

Now, Sir, this tax is paid, not by persons who can afford to use the electric light or gas, or who are able to indulge in these luxuries of modern civilization; but it is paid largely, by fishermen, by farmers, and by persons who have to toil exceedingly hard to make a livelihood in a part of the Dominion which does not so easily yield an adequate return to the worker as that district whence my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) comes. There is a great deal of indignation on the part of the people of the maritime provinces against this tax. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is no doubt very much concerned with the question as to how a deficit, if there should be one, can be made up, and I would suggest to him that whisky could stand a good deal more taxation, or tobacco, or some of the many such articles which the hon. gentleman could select. At all events, this tax on coal oil is altogether too onerous upon the particular class of the people upon which it is levied. If it were a tax evenly distributed upon the people of the whole country, falling alike upon rich and poor, it would not be so burdensome as it now is, affecting as it does people who are not able to use the better class of light. I understood my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) to say, that a great deal of the oil which is used in the maritime provinces is Canadian oil and is sold to the people under the impression that they are buying American oil. That I think was an unfortunate argument for my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) to use. It seems to me that it gives away his case entirely with regard to the effect of the duty, and I call my hon. friend's attention to the statement so that if he made an error he may set it right in the revised "Hansard."

Mr. FRASER (East Lambton). That is not what I intended to say. I did not intend to say that this practice was confined entirely to the maritime provinces, but that it is a common practice all over the country. As to what proportion of Canadian oil is sold as American oil in the maritime provinces I am unable to say, but I know it is being sold all over the province of Ontario in that way.

Mr. ELLIS. I have nothing further to say, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I might point out to the hon. members representing the maritime provinces, that Nova Scotia imported oil to the value of $54,462 last year, that the people of that province paid a tax upon that amounting to $32,051; that New Brunswick last year imported oil to the value of $114,632, and paid $70,952 as a tax, and that Prince Edward Island imported oil to the value of $11,755 and paid a tax upon it of $6,999. In all, there was imported from the United States into the maritime provinces $180,849 worth of oil on which a tax was paid of $110,002:

| Importation of oil into maritime provinces, 1898— |           |           |           |
|---|-----------|-----------|-----------|
|   | Galls.    | Value.    | Duty.     |
| Nova Scotia . . . . .                             | 641,012   | $ 54,462 | $ 32,051 |
| New Brunswick . . . . .                           | 1,419,042 | 114,632   | 70,952    |
| P. E. Island . . . . .                            | 133,992   | 11,755    | 6,999     |
| Total . . . . .                                   | 2,194,056 | $180,849 | $110,002 |

I leave it to the Ontario and Quebec members to present their own side of the question, but I believe this tax must be equally severe upon the people from those provinces—it must be very severe indeed upon the province of Quebec. I really do think, notwithstanding the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser), that the Government ought to look at this matter in a different light from what it does. I do not put the free trade argument to my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), who comes from the province of Nova Scotia, but the hon. gentleman must himself know very well that this is too severe a tax upon this particular article of consumption. The hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Fraser) said, "as I understood him, that the oil is sold at the place of its production at less than its intrinsic value. If that be so, then why should the people of the country be taxed as heavily as they are, to secure the protection of an article which is disposed of at the wells, at less than its intrinsic value. I think that the ordinary judgment of men, the ordinary knowledge which they must have of business, must show them that there is a fallacy in this oil tax. If it were levied for the purposes of revenue, one would have nothing more to say about it, but if it is levied as a protection, as it seems to be, then the duty ought to be reduced. Not seeing any better alternative, I shall vote for the motion of my hon. friend (Mr. Davis) which proposes to wipe off this tax altogether.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I have no desire to shut off the debate, and if any hon. gentleman has further observations to offer upon the question, I shall defer the motion which otherwise I would now make. I think we will all agree that while the subject is a very interesting one, and one which when it came before the House in times past always created an interesting discussion, yet it is a subject with which, so far as the Government are concerned, they cannot undertake to deal as a separate and distinct matter. The oil question must be considered as part of the general tariff policy of the Government, and, therefore, I do not think it would be wise on the part of the Government to anticipate the budget by making any statement at this moment on that, or upon any other item of it. I therefore beg to move that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, before you put that motion to the House, I should like to say that I have listened with great pleasure to the speech of my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Fraser). I think it was a most instructive address, although I probably would be compelled to agree with my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) that while instructive, it was also a most discursive speech. Yet, one listened to it with pleasure and also with profit. I was very glad to hear the clear demonstration, that our Canadian oil is as good as American oil, and I have nothing to say in regard to that, but to express my great pleasure, that a man who can speak with so much authority as my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser), assures us that the Canadian product is as good as that produced below the line. I was also glad to hear the strong testimony from such authoritative quarters as the Patrons of Industry, that the oil they received from my hon. friend (Mr. Fraser) was of the best possible quality. I was also very much interested to hear of the success in sinking artesian wells in Africa, under the Southern Cross, in India and elsewhere; and I hope that at no distant date some of the friends of my hon. friend from Petrolea (Mr. Fraser) will go west. If they do so, even with all our resources, we can get an accession of prosperity if they sink some of their wells in that country. But, Sir, all that, it seems to me, has really nothing to do with the question before us. The question before us is this: Should the House press upon the judgment of the Minister of Finance, and of the Government, the propriety of taking the duty off coal oil, we can look at that question from three points of view. We can look upon it from the point of view of my hon. friend from Lambton (Mr. Fraser) as to its bearing upon the industry of Petrolea; and we can also look upon it from the point of view of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis), as to its bearing upon the price of oil: its bearing, in other words, upon the prosperity of the consumers. We can further look upon the question politically, and that is, as to the duty that is in this instance cast upon the Government, by reason of the fact that the Government are pledged to the people of the country to give them free coal oil. Now, Mr. Speaker, as has already been pressed upon the attention of the House, this is a matter that has created the greatest possible interest in the North-west Territories: because the people who make up the great bulk of the population of the North-west Territories, the farmers, use no other light than coal oil, and many of them would be very glad indeed to use some form of petroleum as fuel; and the day is not far distant, I believe, when all over the country we shall be using petroleum in some form as fuel. We have now, however, to look at this matter from the point of view of lighting our dwellings, our town halls, our churches, our schoolhouses, not only all over the North-west Territories, but all over Canada. Now, my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Fraser) argued that the miners of coal oil were all Canadians—that the wells were still in the hands of Canadians; but he said the refined article had entirely passed into the hands of the company which is controlled by that great trust of which we have heard so much. So the hon. gentleman resents a motion to give competition in the refined article to Canadians. If we take off the duty, we can have the competition which exists in the United States; without taking off that duty, we are without that competition. It seems to me that the very way in which my hon. friend stated the case left it without a leg to stand on. We have had it held out to us in the strongest possible terms—for instance, by the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), when he sat on the Opposition side of the House—that coal oil was a necessary of life. It is indeed a necessary of life, especially for those in middle class circumstances and for the poor; and yet my hon. friend, who supports the Government of which the Postmaster General is a distinguished member, tells us that we should not accede to a motion that would give us competition in this necessary of life such as now exists in the United States, and in the same breath he tells us that the refined industry has passed entirely into the hands of what the Liberal press in Winnipeg, in London, all over Canada, describes as that vast octopus, the oil trust. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman who has moved this motion, not to consent to the appeal of the hon. Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), because it is only by dividing the House on the motion that the opinion of the House can be ascertained on the subject. If the hon. gentleman for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) does not insist on a division, how is the Government to know what is the feeling of the House?

Mr. FIELDING.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. DAVIN. When the House took recess, I was referring to the argument of my hon. friend from East Lambton (Mr. Fraser), that the business of mining for oil was in the hands of Canadians, coupled with his statement that the whole business of refined oil is now controlled by an enormous trust known as the Standard Oil Company. He made these two statements, but drew no inference. He rather seemed to suggest—and I must confess that I cannot see the cogency of it at all—that if we should withdraw this protection of five cents a gallon from this monopoly, we would injure in some way Canadians who control the production of the crude oil. I cannot see the inference at all, because this enormous corporation, which now controls the refining in Canada, will still have to use crude oil and take that crude oil from our wells. If we were to yield to the urging of my hon. friend, we should be in a still worse position, because while it is admitted that the whole refining oil business in Canada is in the hands of this great corporation, it is at the same time admitted that there is competition below the line where, despite the fact that this enormous octopus has its tentacles all over the United States, nevertheless some four wealthy corporations stand out against it. Therefore, if we take away the five cents a gallon protection, we shall have the competition of the four companies I refer to, and we will gain in the money saved to our customers of coal oil. By looking at the returns, it is easy to see that, roughly speaking, some $500,000 go into the pockets of these refiners that would not go into their pockets if it were not for that five cent protection; and according to the theory of protectionists, as well as free traders, this enormous corporation, this oil trust, has deprived itself of all right and of any colourable ground of justice to ask for protection because it has made itself a monopoly.

I think I also before recess adverted to the argument from the point of view of politics. Nothing was nearer the hearts of these hon. gentlemen who are now on the Treasury benches than the enormity of the oppression entailed by the duty on coal oil, and I do not think there was any item in the tariff, not even excepting binder twine, that appealed stronger to the benevolence of my hon. friend the present Postmaster General than did the duty on coal oil. I have in my hand the campaign sheet for 1896, on which the fight was waged, and which was issued over the signature of Alex. Smith, that well known organizer of the great Liberal party. In his address to the leader he says—I do not know what the meaning of that is—"This pamphlet is not for general distribution." I suppose that made it all the more sacred. There were some esoteric truths in it, no doubt, that were not to be distributed abroad, cast among the vulgar. Coal oil evidently oppressed the political imagination of the writer of this pamphlet, because if you turn to page 20, you will find under the head of "Specific Duty":

The following list shows some of the unjust discriminations effected by specific duties in the new Canadian tariff. It does not contain all the discriminations, and the widest variations have not been presented.

Then a list is given, and in that list, as will be found on page 21, we get coal oil, six cents per gallon. They calculated that that amounted to an ad valorem duty of about 100 per cent. If it does, why five cents per gallon must run very near 80 per cent or 90 per cent, but suppose you take it as 66 per cent—and I think that would probably be a fair calculation—why, 66 per cent is enough to make any true Liberal aghast with horror, and I am afraid it is enough to make the hon. Postmaster General rise in his wrath and insist that that portion of the House which he controls shall not vote with the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis). In the same pamphlet there is a paragraph on page 18, headed "Manufacturers' Profits," and "Farmers' Profits," and the small profit that is made by the farmer or to put it in the way I want to put it now, the small profit that is made by the consumer of coal oil compared with the manufacturer, is set before the order, and I have no doubt had considerable effect upon the voters when they came to vote on that memorable day in June. I turn, however, to a book that has been much referred to in a recent debate, and I have that book in a different form from that in which any of my hon. friends have it, because I have it interleaved. I think I may say that probably I have never outstripped any hon. gentleman on this side in the diligent study that I have given to the admirable speeches which were made in 1893; and I cannot help contrasting this protection of some 66 per cent with the introductory speech of my right hon. friend the First Minister, in which he laid down principles of the broadest possible free trade:

I submit to you, that the ideal fiscal system is the British system of free trade. Sir, my loyalty, as I have said, does not ooze from the pores of my body, but I do want to go for example to the mother country, and not to the United States, much as I love and respect the people on the other side of the line. Our policy should be a policy of free trade such as they have in England.

Later on, he says:

It is always easy to increase the tariff, because, by so doing, you increase the private fortunes of certain individuals, but whenever you decrease the tariff, it has always to be done after careful consideration; and I am sure that when the Liberals are in power, they will not be indifferent to this primary principle.

He was already, apparently, hedging there. But again he launches out into the strongest statements of how they would sweep away that dire thing that, he said, was then so obnoxious to everybody—protection. And then he went on to move the resolution that declared:

That the existing tariff, founded upon an unsound principle, and used, as it has been, by the Government, as a corrupting agency wherewith to keep themselves in office, has developed monopolies, trusts and combinations; it has decreased the value of farm and other landed property it has oppressed the masses to the enrichment of a few; it has checked immigration; it has caused great loss of population;—

And so on. And that the tariff "should be so adjusted as to make free or to bear as lightly as possible upon the necessaries of life." And we have the authority of the present Postmaster General (Mr. Mullock), that coal oil is a necessary of life. I have heard him say that when he used to sit on this side and used to thunder against the iniquities of protection with that vigour which is native to his energetic temperament. When the Prime Minister was moving this resolution, here is what he said :

It is a thorough arraignment of the policy the Government has followed. It sets forth all the evils which have flowed from the system of protection, and it draws the line clear and distinct between truth on the one side and error on the other between the policy of liberty and freedom and the policy of slavery ; because I leave it to the judgment of every free man, to the farmers, and, above all, I leave it to the workingman in the cities, if protection is anything else but slavery.

Now, Sir, a very eloquent man, speaking on the same subject, seemed to have had a prophetic eye to the time when we should have this vast coal oil trust in Canada and a Government in Canada afraid to deal with it. When we should have a monopoly of the most appalling character and a Government in some way or other linked to that monopoly and not knowing what to do And this is what was said :

There was a gentleman who had a Jersey bull—

An hon. MEMBER. Who said that ?

Mr. DAVIN. That was at the great Liberal convention, and the speech I am reading was made by Mr. H. R. Emmerson, Chief Commissioner of Public Works, New Brunswick :

There was a gentleman who had a Jersey bull, and it was a rather refractory animal. He wanted to tame the bull. He tied a rope around its neck, the other end being attached to his waist, the better to control the animal. He didn't know much about Jersey bulls. Then he led it out in the field. For a moment the bull looked round and sniffed. Then he took it into his head to have a little gambol, and started off through the fields. The man was at the other end of the rope, mind you. Sometimes he was on the ground, and sometimes he was in the air. A friend came along that way, and observing the speed of the man's movements, he asked : "Hello, Jones, where are you going ?" The answer was : "I don't know ; ask the bull !"

Now, the position of the present Government is this—they are linked to this great bull of monopoly, as this propnetic gentleman, Mr. Emmerson, foresaw when you address the right hon. the Premier, and say : "Where are you going ?" he says, "I don't know ; ask the bull." Well, now, Sir, with an apothegen like that from the great Liberal conference, we may go a little further and quote some of the utterances of the great statesmen who now are pillars of the state. In 1893, in this House, Sir Wilfrid Laurier—Mr. Laurier, as he was then—said :

Mr. DAVIN.

I will not indulge in any boasting, but I can see all around me the evidence that the dawn is approaching of the day which shall see the highest development of British civilization on a basis of ever-broadening freedom of trade.

And only next to the Prime Minister himself comes the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He was not then, as he is now, enrolled in that noble band of knighthood, Mr. Speaker, which constitutes our transcendental aristocracy ; he was not then Sir Louis Davies ; he is put down here as "Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)," and he is speaking on an item in the Estimates, "Oils, coal and kerosene, distilled, purified or refined—" and so on. And this is what he says, making an argument on the subject :

Anybody can see at once the gross unfairness and injustice of this tax.

What tax ? The tax on coal oil. And then he goes on to speak in a way to account for a portion of the speech of my hon. friend from East Lambton. That hon. gentleman was girding at somebody who used to abuse Canadian coal oil. I am sure that never came from Conservatives ; but I find the statement by the Mr. Davies of that time, now the knighted head of the Marine and Fisheries Department.

An hon. MEMBER. Benighted.

Mr. DAVIN. He was then benighted, and I think he is no less benighted now. He said :

I am instructed that at that time the same quality of American oil which is now imported was selling at 20 cents per gallon, and the duty being 6 cents per wine gallon, is equal to 30 per cent ad valorem duty. Since then refining has so changed the selling price of this oil that to-day that same quality of oil which was then sold at 20 cents per wine gallon is now sold at 3½ cents per wine gallon, while the duty remains the same.

And he goes on to point out that the Canadian oil is very much inferior and urges in the strongest possible manner the Finance Minister of that day to take the duty off coal oil. And then, Sir, on the 25th April, 1894, there were a number of tariff inquiries from this side of the House, the one by the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey). Then we have Mr. Lavergne, who is now a judge and who is very much in the confidence of leading men in the Liberal ranks. And this is what he asks :

Whether the Government are aware that the great majority of the ratepayers of the province of Quebec are in favour of a total repeal of the duties on coal oil, or of a reduction of 50 per cent at least ?

Now, I think I have shown that if the promises held out to the people—the general promises as regards the tariff, the specific promises as regards coal oil—are carried out by the Government, instead of pressing the motion of the Finance Minister to divide the House, they should say they would not press that, but would allow the House to give its free opinion on this question, and that opinion certainly ought to be against the duty on coal oil. Now, Sir, my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis) pointed to the large amount that was paid in New Brunswick. Well, Sir, look at the amount paid in Manitoba. In Manitoba and the North-west Territories there were $27,421 paid in duty during the year ending 30th June, 1897, and to that you have to add the increase of duty that goes into the pockets of the manufacturer, that is to say, this gigantic oil trust, these great American millionaires who have come over here. The truth is that not less than half a million dollars of the people's money goes into the pockets of this oil trust. Now, I have here a statement from the Winnipeg "Tribune" in regard to this very matter, and I see the editor (Mr. Richardson) of the "Tribune" is present. I find the quotation in the Toronto "Mail."

By the Winnipeg "Tribune" complaint is made that the oil monopoly has just raised the price to the retailer by a cent and a half per gallon. That paper wants to know what can be done to check the constant rise in prices now going on. Those who remember the details of the last election campaign, will recall the fact, that one of the great reforms to be effected was in the matter of coal oil. The coal-oil users, farmers particularly, were paying too high for their light and the Liberal Government was to bring the prices down with a rush. To-day there is no reductions; on the contrary, we have frequent complaints of increases.

I remember reading about that time a very long leading article in the paper of my hon. friend dwelling on this very question, and dwelling on it, if I remember rightly, from the same standpoint from which I am speaking now. I hope, therefore, that when we come to a vote, this House will say that we are determined to have coal oil on the free list.

Mr. T. BEATTIE (London). As this question will no doubt come up again in the debate on the Budget, I shall occupy but a few moments of the time of the House on this occasion. It is strange that year after year and session after session, members on both sides of this House have felt it their duty to bring up the question of coal oil. Now, we have but very few natural products in this country, and coal oil is one of them; and if any further reduction is made in the duty on coal oil, the mining of coal oil will cease in Canada. The late Government made a great mistake, in my opinion, in reducing the duty, and the present Government have made a still greater mistake in granting further concession. Before the last reduction in duty was made, crude oil was selling at $1.70 a barrel; to-day it is only $1.40, and there it is likely to remain for the future. But the singular thing about it is that while the producer is getting 20 per cent less for his crude oil, refined oil is still increasing in price, for it stands higher to-day than it has stood for many years. Of course I am speaking entirely in the interest of the miner. As I said before, the producer is getting 20 per cent less for his crude oil to-day, and the consumer is paying 20 per cent more for his refined oil, making a difference of 40 per cent, which is going into the pocket of the refiner. This condition of things has been brought about by the action of both the late Government and the present Government. My advice is that we should let the coal oil miner alone, and if we do, I think he will manage to live yet; but if the present duty is removed, God help the poor miner. I do not think that there is any one in this country who can complain about the price of coal oil. We are told that the farmer suffers. I do not think the average farmer in this country uses more than $1 worth of coal oil per year. As I said before, this is one of the natural industries of Canada, and I protest against the efforts made to destroy it in this way.

Mr. T. G. JOHNSTON (West Lambton). I consider our present tariff is a good one, it is a tariff that appeals to the best judgment of the country. I believe it has been framed in the interests of all Canada, and that it is calculated to do equal justice to all. Consequently I think that in no respect, unless dire necessity requires it, should this tariff be interfered with to the slightest extent. As has been ably pointed out by my hon. friend from London (Mr. Beattie), coal oil seems to be specially singled out for attack. That is perhaps all right from the local standpoint of those who make the attack; they overlook one set of circumstances while confining their view to another set. Our friends from the west should remember that it was the people living particularly in the central portion of the Dominion who went to the expense of acquiring and developing that western country and putting it in the position that it is in to-day; and our friends from the east should remember that we still maintain a duty on coal for their benefit. Why then should these hon. gentlemen come forward and ask us in the centre of the Dominion to consent to a removal of the duty on one of our articles which is a natural product? I consider the attack on the coal oil industry is most unfair. I think a great many of the remarks that have been made on this subject have been made under a misconception of the operation of producing coal oil. It is only necessary thoroughly to understand the manner of obtaining and treating the crude oil, to remove the objections any hon. gentleman may have to this duty. The industry is one that should more properly come under the head of mining. Being myself personally acquainted with the production of the crude oil and the process by which it is refined, I can say that in my judgment the industry should more properly come under the head of mining. For every dollar that is invested profitably in that industry, thousands of dollars have been sunk. It is a business in which speculation enters to a great extent. It is like a game of cards, the man who starts into a game never knows what the result is going to be. For one productive well that is found, there are four or five dry holes, as they are called, and each one of these dry holes represents an expenditure of several hundred dollars. This is a view of the question which is not taken sufficiently into account by those hon. gentlemen who attack the duty on coal oil. These hon. gentlemen make the mistake of confounding, to a certain extent, the consumer and the manufacturer. So far as the manufacturer is concerned it does not make an atom of difference whether the duty is removed from coal oil or not, but it does make a great deal of difference to the producer. Now the producers of this particular article are citizens of our own country, in a great majority of instances they are farmers, who, by hard work, have been able to save a few dollars which they have invested in the business of producing oil. As I say, these producers are citizens of Canada, and it is unfair to ask them to forego whatever profit they may make in this industry. If the present degree of protection is taken away from them, the result will be the total cessation of the work of producing oil in Canada. We all know that there is an immense surplus of crude oil held in the United States ready to be poured into this country the moment the duty on crude oil in Canada is removed. That being the case, as I say, Mr. Speaker, I think that it is most unfair to ask that the duty be removed. On the other hand, we must remember that for years and years these same producers have contributed their share of the taxation of the country; they have contributed taxation on their pipe and on everything else that they use in the manufacture of oil, and it is utterly unfair to tax them in one respect, and render the result of their industry free from taxation. The removal of the duty would not, in the slightest, affect the manufacturers. They would go on manufacturing just the same as they are doing at the present time, and the only result would be the injury of our workmen. Apart from all that, from the public standpoint, personally, I heartily endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fraser), who is much better posted in the details of the matter than I am. He is much more conversant with it and knows better, perhaps, than any hon. gentleman here what the effect of the removal of the duty would be. I will not detain the House one moment longer, except to reiterate what I said at the first, that this tariff is a good tariff, that it has given entire and perfect satisfaction to the people of the Dominion, that it is working in the best interests of the people, and that to commence to interfere with it in the slightest manner, would be to do something very greatly to the detriment of the best interests of the country.

Mr. JOHNSTON.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, while giving a general support to the tariff policy of the Government, I am sorry that I cannot share the unbounded enthusiasm of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down in regard to the tariff as being a perfect and finished work. Good as the tariff may be, I think it is still capable of improvement, and that possibly no item is more worthy of criticism than this particular item of coal oil. I would like to say, in the beginning, that I am not a theoretical free trader; I am a theoretical protectionist, but I believe that when the protection of the producer goes so far as to injure the consumer, it is not truly protection, but injury. I believe in the protection of the consumer as well as in the protection of the producer. Inasmuch as the consumers of any product outnumber very largely the producers of that product, it seems to me that the true theory of protection is to protect the consumer rather than the producer. That is, I claim, the first interest of this Parliament.

Looking at this coal oil question from the point of view of the tariff, I understand that the tariff under which we are working now to be a tariff for revenue. A tariff for revenue means a tariff so adjusted as to raise a revenue as equally as possible upon the general wealth of the country. Therefore, articles which only to a small extent enter into general consumption and are used only by the people of wealth, should be taxed more heavily, per cent, than articles that enter into more general consumption, and are used, in a large degree, by the people of less wealth. A certain equal percentage of taxation upon all articles would not be equal taxation. It is necessary and desirable that articles of luxury should be taxed high, and that articles of necessity should be taxed low. That would be an equalized tariff for revenue. Of the articles of taxation used in this country, coal oil is one of the articles that enters very largely into the consumption of the general people of the country; therefore, it is one of the articles which should be taxed below the average of a fair revenue tariff. If we say that a fair basis of our tariff for revenue would be 20 per cent or 25 per cent, instead of coal oil being protected by a duty of 66 per cent, its protection should be something less than 20 or 25 per cent. I understand that the value of coal oil is about 8 cents a gallon; the duty is 5 cents a gallon, and the percentage is 66 per cent.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is a good revenue tariff.

Mr. OLIVER. I claim that a duty of 2 cents per gallon would be the full measure of protection which the coal oil industry is entitled to on a revenue tariff basis. As I said at the outset, I am not a theoretical free trader; I am a protectionist. I believe in giving the industries of the country that measure of protection which they are entitled to on the basis of a fair revenue tariff. The coal oil industry is entitled to that measure of protection. But it appears to me, and I think it is the opinion of a very great number of people besides myself, that the coal oil duty is higher than is justifiable according to the terms or reasons or considerations of a revenue tariff. We accept the tariff as a whole; we are satisfied with it as a measure of relief from the burdens of the protective tariff, but because we are satisfied with it, as a whole as a measure of relief, it does not follow that we are not at liberty, from time to time, to point out to the Government the points in which it can, in our humble estimation, be improved. I think that one of the points in which it can fairly be improved, in the interest of the consumer and in the interest of the country, is in the reduction of the duty on coal oil.

Mr. R. L. RICHARDSON (Lisgar). Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow this motion to go without saying a word in regard to it. It was not my intention to discuss the tariff at any length until the Budget is brought down, when I had intended to give expression to the views which I believe the people hold in the country from which I come. My distinct belief, Sir, is that the people of Manitoba and the North-west are not satisfied with the tariff. They accepted it as a measure in the right direction; they accepted the assurance of members of the Government that the tariff is not finally revised and that such reductions will be made, from time to time, as circumstances warrant, and it is, Sir, because of that that the people of the country have not raised their voice to any extent in dissent from the tariff. I may say, Sir, that I cannot share the view expressed by at least one hon. member of this House: that what we require in this country is moderate protection. My belief is, that we ought to have no protection whatever. I am prepared to accept a revenue tariff, and, Sir, I believe that the people living in that part of the Dominion which I represent, expect that the tariff will be scaled down until it reaches a mere revenue basis. In that part of the Dominion whence I come, the question of the price of coal oil is a very important one indeed. With the exception of a few towns which have gas or electric light, the people are obliged to use coal oil entirely, and it is particularly desirable, in their interest, that at least that commodity should be on the free list. I am free to say that the expectations of the people there were, that if the Liberal party was returned to power, coal oil was one of the articles that would be made free of duty.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am glad to hear hon. gentlemen opposite saying "hear, hear."

I am not prepared to say that members of the present Government guaranteed, or stated in so many words that coal oil would be placed on the free list. What I say is, that the expectations of the people were that coal oil should be placed on the free list. I believe too that the popular expectation was, that agricultural implements would also be placed upon the free list. They have not yet been so placed, but I hope and shall continue to hope, that we will at least have a scaling down of the duties of these articles, and that the time will ultimately come when we shall have them placed on the free list—for my own part it cannot come too soon. As I have said, this is a very important question to our people. There is a great deal of coal oil consumed in that country, and the people are not in a financial position to pay high prices for this oil. The high price of oil, however, is not entirely due to the profits which the manufacturers make upon that article; but it is very largely due to the high freight rates that are charged at the present time, and which have prevailed for a considerable period. If, in addition to the reduction in the duty on coal oil or its abrogation entirely, we could secure a very low freight rate on that commodity, it would give great satisfaction to the people of our country.

It seems to me, Sir, that inasmuch as bounties are paid for the manufacture of iron and steel in this country, then, if the coal oil industry is as important as has been represented, it might not be a bad idea for the Government to consider the advisability of reducing the duty and giving a bounty on the oil. My own view in regard to these matters has been expressed very clearly by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), when he said, that those who should be considered in such a matter were not the manufacturers but the people at large. It is of much more importance, in my opinion, that the masses of the people should have this consideration from the Government, and not the small number of manufacturers, however estimable they may be. In such matters as coal oil and farm implements, and one or two other things, it would be my view that the Government might very well consider the advisability of placing them on the free list. That being my opinion, I shall have no hesitation in supporting the motion of the hon. member (Mr. Davis).

Mr. F. D. MONK (Jacques Cartier). I rise to add a few words as to the position of this question in the province of Quebec, or at least in that county which returned me to this House in 1896. The position of the coal oil question in the constituency of Jacques Cartier was, to a certain extent, peculiar. It was there stated by my adversary—a man well versed in public questions during a campaign which lasted several months—that one of the greatest iniquities perpetrated by the Government then in power was the maintenance of this 100 per cent duty upon coal oil. In many places in the county, my opponent made this a great point of attack, and having examined the question fully, and gone into it with a number of men better posted than I myself was. I came to the conclusion that the contention of my adversary as to the duty upon this article was well founded, and I took the position, that in this House, at the very first opportunity, I would support most heartily a great reduction in the duty on coal oil; indeed, its being placed on the free list. To add strength to the position taken by the Liberal candidate on that question, we were treated time and again to the platform set forth in the Liberal pamphlet published during that campaign, and from which my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has given us copious extracts. Towards the end of the campaign, in spite of my assurances on the question of coal oil duty, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister came down to the constituency three days before the voting, and at a large meeting in the town of Lachine, he not only entirely endorsed the programme of my adversary on this point, but pledged that this was the policy of the Liberal party, and that they would carry it out if they were returned to power. Under these circumstances, I think it is fair for me to say, that there was a distinct pledge given by the Liberal party before their advent to power, that at least upon this question there would be no faltering whatever, and that coal oil would be placed upon the free list. We so understood it in my county, and it seems only fair now that I should ask our friends opposite to redeem that pledge. It is for this reason, and in view of the peculiar position that the contest assumed in my constituency that I most heartily approve of the motion of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis), and will vote in its favour.

Mr. VALENTINE RATZ (North Middlesex). Mr. Speaker, while I do not claim myself to be an ardent protectionist, I must confess that I am in favour of the principle that our own people should as far as possible produce whatever may be required in Canada; so long as they do so at a fair living profit. It is a well known fact to any one who is at all acquainted with the oil business, that if oil is placed on the free list, it will cripple the Canadian oil producing industry. As has been stated, crude oil is now reduced to $1.40 per barrel, and it is well known that in the oil districts there are a large number of wells which produce as low as half a barrel per day, and some even less than that. Now, as crude oil is worth only $1.40 per barrel, such a well would have to be worked for 70 cents per day, and if it were not for the large number of wells in operation, which are worked at the one pumping establishment, they could not be worked at all. It is a very well known fact that at the present time, there is no money in producing oil. If my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) could show that he can in any way get at the refiners without crippling the producers,

Mr. MONK.

I would very heartily support him. But the party he is after is not the party he would catch by such a resolution as the one now before the House. Suppose, for instance, the industry was closed off altogether, and that the production of crude oil was stopped in Canada, that would not hurt the refiner in the least. If the refinery at Sarnia were closed to-morrow, we know the Standard Oil Company have got the United States by the throat, and have control of the oil industry there. If, as I say, the Sarnia refinery was closed to-morrow, there is no other refinery in Canada could start up to compete with them. The Standard Oil people would simply send in their oil here from the other side, and place it on the Canadian market at their own price, so that nothing whatever would be gained by the passage of such a resolution as this.

We would simply be burning American instead of Canadian oil, and there is no guarantee that we would get American oil at a reduced price. At the present time we have thousands of workmen employed in the Canadian oil industry; and that industry would be closed if oil were placed on the free list. Even if the price of coal oil is a cent or so a gallon higher in the North-west Territories or in the maritime provinces in consequence of the duty, we cannot frame a tariff that will suit every corner of the Dominion; we must frame it to be in the general interest of the Dominion as a whole. Mining for oil is different altogether from mining for anything else. There are no surface indications for oil. You simply drill your wells, and if you are fortunate enough to make a strike, well and good; but if you are not so fortunate, you will simply have a dry hole which is not worth a five-cent piece. I know a company which spent several thousand dollars in prospecting in my riding for oil. It sank several wells, but not one of them proved to be of any value whatever. There may often be indications of oil where it is not found in paying quantities. Even in the oil region of Lambton and Essex a large amount of money has been spent in sinking wells which have proved to be dry. Tinkering with the tariff on oil would simply cripple the whole oil industry. If it were certain that the tariff would not be interfered with, prospecting for oil would go on to a greater extent than it does at the present time, but the uncertainty of the tariff keeps people back from prospecting for oil. As has been stated by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fraser), coal oil can be bought wholesale at the present time at 8½ cents per gallon, which I think is a very reasonable price. Of course, if, as the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis) says, freight rates are so enormous, the reduction of the duty would not in any way affect them. I do not think we should do anything to cripple the oil industry when we are not sure that it would not result in giving us cheaper oil. I think it would be a great mistake to place coal oil on the free list.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). Mr. Speaker, in all the speeches which we have heard from hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House in defence of the retention of the duty on coal oil, I have not heard any argument to prove that it should be retained. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fraser) made a long and interesting speech. He talked all around the question, but he did not touch the real question at all. The question is not whether Canadian oil is good or bad, but whether the people of this country are prepared to pay 5 cents a gallon of duty on coal oil for the purpose of protecting an American industry. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) said he was a theoretical protectionist. I am not; I am a free trader as far as possible, but any incidental protection that accrued to the manufacturer form a revenue tariff, I am quite satisfied with. The hon. member for East Lambton spoke of the quality of American oil, and while it does not affect the question at all, I would like to correct him. He tried to show the House that the American oil to which I referred was oil of an inferior quality. I have not the figures at my hand, but I think I said that the best quality of American oil at Oil City, Penn., was worth 7 or 7½ cents a gallon, and this oil is superior to the best Canadian oil. I figured that upon Imperial gallons; that is the price in barrels, and we must remember that there is a duty on the barrels. If bought in tanks, the oil would be about 2½ cents a gallon less. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Johnston), argued that the oil wells of Lambton should be considered as a sort of mining industry. Well, Sir, I am not aware of any other mining industry in the Dominion that requires a protection of 65 per cent. He also told us that the manufacturers—I suppose he means the refiners, the Standard Oil Company—do not care whether the duty is reduced or not. I suppose what he means is that if this commodity were placed on the free list, the Standard Oil Company would at once reduce the price of crude oil.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Will the hon. member allow me to explain? I did not mean that at all. I did not say the Standard Oil Company; I said the manufacturer—the refiner. He may be the Standard Oil Company or any other refiner. What I said was that if the duty was taken off crude oil, the result would be the total cessation of the production of oil in Canada, because there was such a surplus of oil particularly of heavy Ohio oil, which is exactly the same as ours, ready to be exported whenever the opportunity occurred, that there would be no chance whatever for the Canadian producer. Since this little scare has started in the House, I know as a positive fact that in the western part of the district the prospector has stopped altogether. There has not been a well put down since the question came up in the House.

Mr. DAVIS. I am sorry to hear that prospecting has stopped in the hon. gentleman's riding.

Mr. JOHNSTON. It is not in my riding particularly. It is in the Dominion of Canada, though it happens to be in my riding.

Mr. DAVIS. Perhaps the prospecting may start up again in the near future. However, as I said, there has been no argument adduced by the hon. members who have opposed this motion to warrant the duty on this commodity being kept at 5 cents a gallon. Now, this is the poor man's burden, because the duty is levied on a commodity used almost exclusively by the poorer classes all over the country. It is not the wealthier citizens who use the electric light or acetylene gas who pay this taxation, but the agriculturists, who are the backbone of the country. I am not looking at this question from a sectional point at all. My hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Ellis), who represents a riding in the extreme east of this country, down by the sea, and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who represents a riding in the province of Quebec, are with me on this question. Throughout the country the feeling is general that something should be done to get rid of this heavy impost. The hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) has moved the adjournment of this debate on the ground that this question should not be dealt with until the policy of the Government is laid before the House, as it will be in the Budget speech. I shall not oppose this motion to adjourn, as I think we ought to see the policy of the Government before pressing the matter to a vote, and I consider the request of the Finance Minister a reasonable one.

The House divided on motion of the Finance Minister (Mr. Fielding), that this debate be now adjourned.

SEED GRAIN INDEBTEDNESS—NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia) moved :

That in the opinion of this House, the seed grain indebtedness of the North-west Territories should be dealt with by the Government in the following manner :—

1. That the indebtedness against abandoned quarters or half-sections should be written off.
2. That the bonded indebtedness should be cancelled.

That the debt due directly by farmers for seed grain should be handed over to the local government, who should be directed to give the farmers the option of paying it in cash or in statute labour.

He said : I am very sorry that the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not in his place, because this is a very important question which I have several times brought to his attention, both by deputation and by letter. Very early in the history of Manitoba the necessity of supplying the farmers of Manitoba with seed grain made itself felt, and from time to time the question as to what is the best way of dealing with their indebtedness on this account has arisen. Very early in the North-west Territories, owing to a succession of bad years, chiefly due to the fact that our farmers did not at first understand the best way to farm in the Territories, there came a time when we had to ask the Government to supply seed grain. I think the first time was in 1886, which was a year of great drought, and as you may be aware from the debates at that time, the person who is now moving this motion took a great deal of interest in this question, and had some difficulty at first in getting the Government of the day to do what he was urging and what ultimately was done. At that time, I was not a member of this House, but subsequently, after I became a member, seed grain was again needed, and again we had to exert a great deal of pressure on the Government to furnish us with a supply. However, we got an ample supply, and the result was that many of our farmers, who would otherwise have been without the means of cultivating their land, now enjoy smiling homesteads, broad acres well cultivated, and large balances to their credit in the chartered banks. On the other hand, there is a number who were not so successful, and then there is a very interesting class who deserved our consideration. When the seed grain was lent to the farmers, the last time, the mode adopted to secure repayment was this : The security of a man's own homestead was taken, and he had to get two sureties. In fact, the farmers were bound together, each farmer going security for a couple of other farmers, and two others going security for him. The consequence is we have a large number of men in the Territories who are bound as bondsmen for the debts of other farmers. And it is not merely that. Mr. Speaker, but they are bound as bondsmen for the debts of farms that are abandoned. Now, the proposal I make is one that I have submitted to the farmers of Assiniboia, and they agree with it. I submitted that proposal to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton), who is at the head of the department of the Interior, by letter, and also when I introduced a deputation to him in Regina. I also brought it to his attention last session ; and I was in hopes then, and I am in hope now, that the hon. gentleman shares my view and the view of the great mass of the farmers of the North-west Territories in regard to this very important matter. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is a matter of great annoyance a matter of great injustice, for a farmer who has paid for his own seed grain to find himself billed by the Government for the seed grain owed for by another farmer who is perfectly well able to pay for it. The Government have said : We have placed you in such a position that you can stand in our shoes as regards that debt. And what does that mean ? It means : You can pay us and sue your brother farmer. I need hardly say that it is a wrong thing to ask any citizen to collect the debts of the Government. It is bad policy to set one farmer against another, to introduce strife into our community in that way. And there is a very important feature that the farmers are fully alive to and it is this: When this seed grain was lent, it had not been demonstrated that the North-west was what we now know it to be, one of the best places where farmers can settle who desire speedy success as farmers—I will go even further and say, who desire to make a moderate fortune rapidly. Men who understand farming and aim at making a moderate fortune and making it rapidly cannot do better than come into our North-west Territories. Well, Sir, these men who have shown that that is the position of things, when this grain was lent were, in reality, associated with the Government in making an experiment as to whether or not that portion of Canada was what it now has turned out to be, and to say to these people after they had bet, as it were, on the Territories: We are going to hold you responsible for the indebtedness of men who have left the country—that seems to me to be unjust; it seems to me to be impolitic.

Now, I will ask the attention of the House for a very brief period while I go back a little in the history of this question. I find, on consulting "Hansard," that so far back as 1889, the question was asked in this House of the then Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Carling, as to settlement of seed grain indebtedness in Manitoba incurred in 1876. Again, in 1891, when an item for seed grain was before the House, the question was again discussed. And, in 1895, when the item came up to pay for the purchase and distribution of seed grain to needy settlers resident in the North-west Territories, chiefly in the district of Assinibola, (to cover Governor General's warrant of $50,000), Sir Richard Cartwright asked:

Has the money been paid, and if so, how has the distribution been made?

Then the predecessor of my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior made these remarks:

Although the Government were opposed to the granting of seed, the case was put in such a strong light that they came to the conclusion that although they did not desire to follow the precedents created by giving seed grain to the people, that, under the circumstances, they were fully justified.

And then, again:

So far as I am personally concerned, I may say that I am opposed to the Government being called upon to make grants similar to these, because I think the people in the Territories should deal with these matters the same as they do in Manitoba, and if aid is given to them, that it should be given by the local assembly, or by the municipalities.

I rather think that the Minister of that time was wrong in his remarks, because undoubtedly the Dominion Government had lent seed grain to the farmers in Manitoba at an earlier period. He went on:

We had to deal with the facts as they were presented to us; and, in consequence of the conditions I have mentioned, the Government had to give this aid. The aid was principally given to farmers in the neighbourhood of Pense, Moosejaw, Regina and Balgonie, and a little in the eastern portion of Assinibola. Demands were made upon us at first to the extent of $125,000; but we thought they were extravagant, and, after inquiries by officers of the department, they were cut down some 40 per cent.

Well, then the declaration is given that these men had to make, and besides making that declaration he had to give a bond and two sureties. In other words, he could not have had the seed grain on his own bond, he could not get the seed grain on the credit of his own homestead, and he had no choice whatever but to get two sureties and to go surety also for others. Well, Sir, we find that on June 13th, 1895, not only Sir Richard Cartwright but Mr. Mulock was desirous of criticising adversely the action of the Government on that behalf, and reference was made as to the course taken that was taken in order to get that grant; and anybody who reads the debate, will see that I had to put pressure on the Government of that day, first to give us the grant, and next to give us the further grant in order that the district that needed to be covered should be properly covered. Last session I asked the Minister:

How much is owed the Government for seed grain by settlers in the North-west Territories? And the Minister is reported here—page 5135 of "Hansard"—as answering:

On the 1st of April, 1898, there was owed, for seed grain by settlers in the North-west Territories, $145,235.49.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the Government that the indebtedness against abandoned quarter or half sections should be written off. If the Minister speaks with farmers in that part of the country where there are abandoned quarter sections or abandoned half sections with this indebtedness, he will find that they consider a great injustice is done to the incoming settler, that the incoming settler should not be asked to pay the indebtedness of somebody who has abandoned the land. I think it is a fair and legitimate thing to ask the Government to deal with this indebtedness just as a business man deals with a certain item in his profit and loss account—write it off to profit and loss. I do not think that there can be two opinions as to the necessity of cancelling the abandoned indebtedness, because that abandoned indebtedness is calculated to fill with a sense of injustice and a sense of resentment, the minds of the settlers against the Government of the day. Suppose the settler has paid the claim of the Government on him for this abandoned homestead, and suppose he then says: I am going to recoup myself and I will sue my brother farmer. Why, Mr. Speaker, you have only to state the matter to have it brought home to the House and home to the country what an odious position it is to place a farmer in with regard to his neighbour. Then the third proposal is :

That the debt due directly by farmers for seed grain should be handed over to the local government, who should be directed to give the farmers the option of paying it in cash or in statute labour.

Now it is not necessary for me to point out to the Minister that any one of these suggestions can be adopted without adopting all. If he should differ with me in regard to the last, there is nothing to prevent him adopting the two first, namely, that the indebtedness against abandoned quarter or half sections should be written off, and that the abandoned indebtedness should be cancelled. But if he should differ with me in regard to the first and in regard to the third, there is nothing to prevent him at once taking action in regard to the second suggestion, namely, that the abandoned indebtedness should be cancelled. Why did I put this as a motion? It struck me that I could not as a private member deal with this in a Bill. Therefore, I put it on the paper in this manner. But any Bill, whether in the hands of a private member or in the hands of the Government, that will go the whole distance with me in this suggestion, or will go only part of the way, or will take any step towards solving this question that calls urgently for solution, will have my entire support.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). As the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) has brought this question before the House, allow me to say that I think it would have been better in the interests, not only of the farmers of the North-west, but in the interests of every person concerned, that he should have discussed it with the Minister; in fact I do not think it should be discussed in this House at all. In the first place I do not think it is a very prudent thing for us to discuss this question now, in view of the fact that we are bringing immigrants into that country where the land is situated bearing this indebtedness. However, I think that something should be done in the line of wiping out this indebtedness, it would really be a step in the right direction, and I agree with my hon. friend so far. To keep this claim against an abandoned homestead or quarter section is, I think, useless. Where the people have moved away, and there is nobody on the homestead, the idea of carrying this on from year to year and piling it up against the homestead, is certainly detrimental to the settlers of the country at large. One case that came under my own observation was that of a gentleman who was in Manitoba at the time of the grasshopper plague some 22 years ago. He got a certain amount of flour, and some other provisions, I think, and some seed grain from the Dominion Government, and they took a lien on his farm. That man sold his farm and moved up into the North-west Territories.

Mr. DAVIN.

and is now living in my district. When he came to try to get a patent for his land that he has taken up in the North-west Territories and on which he had been settled for a good many years, he found out there was a large seed grain lien which had been carried from the province of Manitoba and placed on his land in the North-west Territories. I submit that that is a hardship, it is a matter that should be dealt with, and I think the proper way to deal with it would be to hand it over to the North-west Government. I am sure the farmers do not want to be relieved of this indebtedness, they wish to pay it. I never heard of a farmer who said that he wanted the Dominion Government to make him a present of this money that he was owing. They would be willing to work it out in the way of statute labour or in some other way, and I think that some arrangement could be made with the North-west Government whereby they would take this thing over as a part of the subsidy. The North-west Government could arrange to get this work done in place of requiring the farmers to pay the money as they are doing now. I hope that something will be done to get rid of this seed grain lien, because at the present time it is a source of annoyance in the Territories.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. (Mr. Sifton). The subject which the hon. member for West Assinibola (Mr. Davin) has brought before the House is one which is not free from difficulties. The same difficulty has almost always arisen when a Government has directly given any aid to the people and taken security for it. When an attempt is made to realize upon the security and collect the amount of money which has been given as aid, difficulties always arise, because the people do not as a rule look upon the Government in the same light as they look upon other creditors. Both the Government of Canada and the Government of Great Britain have had experience in these matters before. The Federal Government, years ago, gave a considerable amount of assistance to farmers in Manitoba and the North-west Territories in the shape of seed grain. But so far as I am aware, no arrangement was ever seriously suggested whereby the Government should be asked to release any portion of the security that it held for that seed grain. These mortgages we held, and those that are left are being collected from time to time; I do not think it has ever been suggested that the Government should waive its security. The province of Manitoba did the same thing; it loaned large sums of money for the purpose of distributing seed grain, and the Government of that province has never been asked to release any portion of its security. I have some doubt that the farmers of the Territories are desirous, in reality, that the Federal Government should forego any portion of the debt which has been incurred. I would like further evidence before I could be satisfied that those men who have signed obligations to the Government are really desirous that the Government should release them from these obligations without the payment of the debt. I am aware of the fact that there are some hardships in connection with the transaction, but the hon. gentlemen will not find fault with this Government on account of these hardships. It may have been an unbusiness-like and unfair thing for the late Government to have insisted upon the farmer getting his neighbours and friends to go as his bondsmen, but the hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that this Government is not responsible for the idea and policy of that transaction. What we are responsible for is simply this: We are simply responsible for administering the statute as we find it on the statute-book, and for collecting the securities taken by the late Government, our predecessors, for the protection of the public revenue. That we have been endeavouring to do in a reasonable and fair way. I did provide a method whereby instead of the farmers being kept on by their patents and unable to deal with their land as they had been under our predecessors in office, the patent should be issued and seed grain liens held against the farmer, so that the farmer is now in a position to deal with his land. This has been a source of great relief in many cases, but it does not release the debt. There is some dissatisfaction still, I have no doubt, particularly amongst those who have become bondsmen for their neighbours. Now, I admit that there is perhaps a good deal in the idea that it was an unfair thing for the Government to force the bondsmen to pay the debt of their neighbours. It is always a difficult thing to collect money on the part of the Government from bondsmen, and so far the Government have not taken any steps to force the payment of these securities from any of the bondsmen, I may say that no intimation has been given that the Government intended in the immediate future to take any such steps. There is also a practical difficulty which has arisen, and which is mentioned in the first clause of the hon. gentleman's resolution, in which he states that the indebtedness against abandoned quarters or half sections should be written off. In this case, where the original borrowers have abandoned lands which they intended to give as security and did give as security, and did not earn the patent for the land which would otherwise have been the security, their bondsmen, of course, are left liable, and they are left liable without any recourse against any person, because, in these cases, the parties have abandoned the land and many of them have left the country as well. The hon. gentleman suggests, in the first clause, that the indebtedness against abandoned quarters and half-sections should be written off, and, in the second clause, that the bonded indebtedness should be cancelled. To all intents and purposes, these two clauses are designed to accomplish the same purpose, and, if the bonded indebtedness in the terms of the second clause, were cancelled, the hon. gentleman would have no reason for asking for the provision of the first clause. As to the third clause, I see no particularly good reason why in the case of these lands, where persons who have procured seed grain or their assignees, are upon the land, where they have succeeded in carrying out their settlement duties, where they have had the benefit of the grain, and are still in the country and prosperous settlers—I do not see any good reason why the Government should make any arrangement that would result in a loss to the public revenue, and I do not think that, at the present time, I would be prepared to accept the suggestion which the hon. gentleman makes. It will be seen, from the remarks I have made, that I do not altogether disagree with some of the things that the hon. gentleman has said. I simply point out that the case is one which requires serious consideration and one which can hardly be forced at the hands of hon. gentlemen or at the hands of private members of the House, it being a case in which the Government is responsible to Parliament for the protection of the revenue and is responsible for the advising of some means which would properly and fully meet the case. The hon. gentleman will not be surprised if I say that, while I am and have been considering the case very carefully and am prepared to consider it further with the view of mitigating the hardships and relieving, to some extent, the difficulties of the persons who have got into difficulty in connection with this matter, I am not prepared, at the present moment, to agree to the passage of the resolution. I can say to the hon. gentleman that the subject will, during the present session, receive the careful attention of the Government, and that possibly we may be able to suggest something or bring something forward that will meet the case before the session is over.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that there is a strong feeling amongst settlers who are indebted for seed grain in the part of the country with which I am acquainted, that this bonded indebtedness should be cancelled. They are not asking, as I understand it, that the indebtedness itself should be cancelled. Each man is willing to pay what he owes, but the difficulty is in the Government having required the security of three-quarter sections on account of seed grain for one-quarter section. At the time the arrangement was made it was considered by the people to be an exorbitant security, and then caused a good deal of ill feeling. It was considered by them that if a quarter section was not sufficient security for enough grain to seed the improved land on it, the land was not worth the settler remaining on it. That if the land was not worth the grain that was required to seed it the settler had no business there, and the sooner he got out the better. That if it required security on three-quarter sections to be given for grain sufficient to seed one-quarter section the country was not worth staying with. The people felt that they were being taken advantage of under their difficult circumstances, and while they submitted, they felt at the time that it was an injustice, and they do not feel differently yet. The problem has worked out in a way quite different from what was expected, and entailed a great hardship that it was not intended should follow its adoption. For instance, A, B and C, are all settlers and they all need seed grain; they all apply and become bondsmen for each other. A and B are perhaps perfectly well able to pay their own indebtedness and are perfectly willing; but C is either unwilling or unable, and consequently there is no object in A and B paying unless C pays, because they would still be held for C's debt although they would have paid their own. The result is, that there is a great deal of money now due the Government which would be paid if each man was responsible only for what he owes. A settler who is able and willing to pay, naturally says: What is the use of paying my share when that does not release me of responsibility for my neighbour's indebtedness; if I am going to be stuck for his indebtedness I might as well save my own money and be stuck for that too. As the system has worked out, it has actually reacted against the payment of indebtedness. The over-security required has failed in actual result. In the issues previous to this, the security was taken on the land for which the grain was given, and if other security was required it was merely personal. It was only in the advances of 1895-96 that this triple security upon the land was demanded. It was held at the time that it was an injustice on the part of the late Government to demand it, and the settlers have asked this Government, for its own credit and for their benefit, to remove that injustice.

Mr. DAVIN. Sir, I have no desire to complain of the spirit in which this question has been met by the hon. the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). It is quite clear from his observations, that he sympathises with the presentation of the case that has been made. I should like to point out to him, that I think he is not quite correct in saying, that the two first divisions of the subject are cross-divisions, because the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) will see that in the case of the abandoned quarter-section, you have not merely to consider the bondsmen who are responsible for the indebtedness of the man who has abandoned that, but you have to consider the settler who comes in and who has to shoulder the indebtedness against that quarter-section. I quite see that if you get rid of the bonded indebtedness, you get rid of the great grievance, and you get rid, I think, of the grievance, which has in it the most salient element of injustice. The point made by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) is one that covers a large amount of ground. You will meet everywhere a man who applies for his patent, and he gets a letter from the department telling him that there is so much seed grain, on his own behalf, against that quarter-section, and he is told probably at the same time—it is worse if he is told afterwards—that he owes for the seed grain on a quarter-section near him, and also on a quarter-section not far off. He is told he cannot get his patent—

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). He could get his patent.

Mr. DAVIN. I may tell the hon. Minister that within three months there has been a correspondence between a constituent of mine and the department. He wrote to know could he get his patent, and he got a letter from Mr. Smart saying that he could get his patent, but there was so much seed grain indebtedness against him. He sent down that much money—I see the hon. Minister nods to me; he probably knows the case.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, I do not know the case.

Mr. DAVIN. This man then gets a letter telling him that he owes a debt on the bond for a certain party on account of another quarter-section near. I do not know that he did not send down the money for that, and then he got another letter telling him he still owed more money than would have been covered by the three payments he had made—the payment for the patent, the payment for his own indebtedness, and the payment for the indebtedness of the quarter-section in his district. It seemed a great hardship. I can assure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) that if he will ask Mr. Smart, he will find that one of the settlers from Balgonie had a correspondence with the department to that effect. I know the arrangement the hon. Minister has made, but that arrangement is merely to enable a man who gets a patent to traffic with it; it does not relieve him in any way from this bonded indebtedness. I am very glad to see that it is quite clear that the Minister of the Interior is fully possessed of the real situation in the Northwest Territories in regard to this matter, and I assume from the way in which he closed his remarks, that we may expect that he will do something in the premises.

Mr. J. M. DOUGLAS (East Assiniboia). I wish to say a word or two in confirmation of what has been said in regard to this question. My constituents in East Assiniboia, are very largely interested in it; so much so that I had the honour of submitting a Bill to do away with the seed grain indebtedness, but since the Bill has been presented to the House I discovered that a technicality stands in the way of my pressing it. I feel strongly impressed with the idea that it was a great mistake for the late Government to insist upon the joint security for the seed grain. I know that it has imposed a very grievous burden upon many of our people who are willing to pay their own indebtedness, and who have paid their own seed grain liens, but who feel that the unwillingness of others stands in the way of their securing their patent for their own property. The Bill that I had drafted in relation to this subject does not in any way, I believe, lessen the security of the Government. I feel satisfied that did the Government take the question up, they should feel bound to acknowledge that the quarter-section against which the seed grain indebtedness was recorded, is ample security for the money the Government has advanced. So far as I have been able to ascertain, this advance does not probably in any case exceed more than $50 or $60 at the outside, and certainly the 160 acres ought to be sufficient security to the Government against any possibility of loss in this respect. I had a case before me since the House met, where a farmer in East Assiniboia brought to my attention the fact, that he was in danger of losing some $800, simply because his neighbour did not pay his honest indebtedness. He himself, having paid, and was anxious to secure his patent. I earnestly urge on the Government that something ought to be done to relieve the bondsmen, and that at an early date. I support what has already been said on this subject.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would suggest to my hon. friend that he had better withdraw his motion.

Mr. DAVIN. At the suggestion of the Premier, and having regard to the sympathetic manner in which the Minister of the Interior spoke in regard to this matter, I think I shall probably be regarding the best interests of those we represent if I do not press the motion just now.

Motion withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I promised the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Foster), that I would make an announcement at an early stage on one or two points affecting the business of the House. With reference to the time at which the balance of the Auditor General's Report will be presented, the Auditor informs me that he is afraid it cannot be brought down before the 27th of the month. The hon. member for York also asked at what time the Estimates would be brought down and the Budget Speech delivered. In view of the fact that the other business set down for tomorrow has been postponed at the request of the leader of the Opposition, and in order to advance Government business, I propose to submit the Estimates to the House before the close of the present sitting, and to move tomorrow that the House go into Committee of Supply; and, if our expectations are realized, I intend that on Tuesday of next week the Budget Speech shall be delivered.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY— THE ESTIMATES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General. Mr. Speaker read the Message as follows:

MINTO.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion for the year ending on the 30th of June, 1900, and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Government House,

Ottawa, 24th April, 1899.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved:

That the Message of His Excellency and the Estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 25th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 73) respecting the James Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. McCormick.)

Bill (No. 74) respecting the Huron, Ontario Loan and Savings Company.—(Mr. Beat- tie, by Mr. Moore.)

Bill (No. 75) to incorporate the Canada Permanent and Western Canada Mortgage Corporation.—(Mr. Osler, by Mr. Clarke.)

Bill (No. 76) respecting the Dominion of Canada Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company.—(Mr. Clarke.)

Bill (No. 77) respecting the Canadian Power Company, and to change its name to the Dominion Power Company of Niagara Falls.—(Mr. Bertram.)

Bill (No. 78) respecting the Hamilton Powder Company.—(Mr. Madore.)

PENSIONS TO NORTH-WEST MOUNTED POLICE.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia) moved that Bill (No. 79) respecting pensions to members of the North-west Mounted Police, be read a first time. He said: I would ask the attention of the right hon. gentleman to an explanation of the Bill. The hon. gentleman will remember that last session a Bill was passed at the instance of an hon. member on his side of the House, and subsequently I introduced a Bill and moved its second reading that would have made that Bill already passed operative. As a matter of fact, the law as amended is a stultification. On the face of the amendment of last session, a concession is made to the North-west Mounted Police, but as the operative clause of the Pension Act has not been repealed or amended, the consequence is, that while the Act now on the statute-book appears to give an advantage to the members of the North-west Mounted Police, none whatever is given. When I brought the matter before the House last session, the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) raised the point of order that it dealt with money, and therefore a private member could not bring it forward. However, I appealed to the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), as I was under the impression he had given some help to the hon. gentleman who had charge of the other Bill—I appealed to him to make the Bill really useful, and the Prime Minister on that occasion said:

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has brought forward this Bill upon considerations which have not been at all anticipated, and, therefore, I must say to him candidly that I am not prepared at this moment to deal with it. The point of order which has been taken may or may not be well taken. At first blush it seems to me to be well taken; and I must say, to my regret, that my conclusion is that if the point is well taken with regard to this Bill, it would have been just as well taken with regard to the Bill of my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Davis); but the point had escaped my attention at the moment. But as the Speaker has suggested that the matter be deferred for investigation, I will move the adjournment of the debate, with a view of having the point of order investigated, and with the view, moreover, of having the views advanced by my hon. friend (Mr. Davin) referred to the officers of my department for a report, for I am not prepared to deal with them at this moment.

Now, I will briefly call the attention of the House to what has been done in the Act of last session. That Act amended sections 3, 7 and 8, by substituting where the word twenty-five occurred, the word twenty, so that section 3 reads in this manner:

Subject to the provisions of this Act, every constable who became a member of the force on or after the 23rd of May * * * if he has completed not less than twenty years' service, shall be entitled to retire and receive a pension for life.

Again, in section 7:

When any constable who became a member of the force on or after the 23rd day * * * has completed a service of twenty-five years, the commissioner may—

Then, before a pension was granted to a constable, after having served for less than twenty years, he could be required to retire, and so on.

Now, the object clearly was to give constables in the police the privilege of retiring after twenty years' service with a pension for life, but a pension of some worth. For instance, clause 4, which provides for the scale of pensions, says:

The pension to a constable on retirement shall be according to the following scale, that is to say:—

(a) If he has completed fifteen but less than twenty-one years' service, an annual sum equal to one-fiftieth of his annual pay for every completed year of service;

(b) If he has completed twenty-one but less than twenty-five years' service, an annual sum equal to twenty-fiftieths of his annual pay with an addition of two-fiftieths of his annual pay for every completed year of service above twenty years.

(c) If he has completed twenty-five years of service, an annual sum equal to thirty-fiftieths of his annual pay with an addition of one-fiftieth of his annual pay.

Now, it is perfectly clear that the object of the legislation—otherwise the Bill was perfectly useless—was to give to a man, after having served twenty years, the advantage that is now accorded to a man having served twenty-five years. For instance, a man who has served twenty-five years is entitled to thirty-fiftieths of his annual pay plus one-fiftieth of his annual pay for every completed year of service above twenty-five years; that is, a man who has served twenty-five years and over. A man who has completed twenty-one years or less than twenty-five years has an annual sum equal to twenty-fiftieths of his annual pay, with an addition of two-fiftieths; and if he has completed fifteen, but less than twenty-one years of service, he has an annual sum equal to one-fiftieth of his annual pay for every completed year of service. Now, the right hon. gentleman will see that under the clause as amended last session, a man who has completed his twenty years can only get one-fiftieth of his annual pay for every completed year of service. It is palpable, therefore, that nothing has been done to ameliorate the condition of the constables and non-commissioned officers. One of two things ought to be done; the Act of last session, which is at present a stultification, should be repealed, or else the Act should be made operative by an amendment. Now, I will propose an amendment, and so that I may put myself in order when I move the second reading, I will tell the law clerk to leave blanks to be filled in by the Government where the amount of pension will be entered, that is to say, if they should adopt my amendment.

What I propose is this: That section 4 of the Act shall be repealed and the following section substituted for it:—

Section four of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—

"4. The pension to a constable on retirement shall be according to the following scale, that is to say:—

(a) If he has completed ten but less than sixteen years' service, an annual sum—

What I suggest is an annual sum——equal to one-fiftieth of his annual pay for every completed year of service;

(b) If he has completed sixteen but less than twenty years' service, an annual sum equal to twenty-fiftieths of his annual pay, with an addition of two-fiftieths of his annual pay for every completed year of service above sixteen years;

(c) If he has completed twenty years' service, an annual sum equal to thirty-fiftieths of his annual pay, with an addition of one-fiftieth of his annual pay for every completed year of service above twenty years, so, however, that the pension shall not exceed two-thirds of his annual pay at his retirement.

It will be seen that all that would be done would be to make a real thing of the concession made last year, in regard to the change from twenty-five to twenty years, to graduate the amount of pay accordingly, but the right hon. Prime Minister will see that in regard to the higher sum that it will work out pretty much as it works at the present time, and that it is not asking very much to be done. All that this will do will be to make operative the Act of last year, which at present, as I say, is a mere stultification.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BILL TO AMEND THE CRIMINAL CODE.

Mr. J. A. C. ETHIER (Two Mountains) (Translation) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 80) to amend the Criminal Code. He said: The object of this Bill is to amend section 941, title 8, of the Criminal Code, governing proceedings after conviction in cases where death sentence is to be carried out.

Section 941 provides as to "who may be present at such executions. It reads as follows:

941. Any justice of the peace for the district, county or place to which the prison belongs, and such relatives of the prisoner or other persons as it seems to the sheriff proper to admit within the prison for the purpose, and any minister of religion who desires to attend, may also be present at the execution.

The object of the proposed amendment is to remove the discretionary power given the sheriff to allow any other persons within the jail walls to witness executions under the wording of the clause "or other persons as it seems to the sheriff proper to admit within the prison for the purpose?"

By this Bill I ask the House to strike off the two lines I have just read, as embodied in clause 941, and to substitute the words "and the journalists." The law, as embodied in the Criminal Code of 1892, intended this, and was framed for the express purpose of compelling the strictest privacy at public executions, as was customary prior to the promulgation of this code. Now the discretionary power given the sheriff under clause 941 resulted practically in nullifying the intention of the framers of that provision of the code. In order to show that such was the intention of Parliament, when this code was passed into law, let me draw the attention of the House to the wording of clause 940, wherein the framers of the law specifically mention the persons who shall be present at such executions:

940. The sheriff charged with the execution, and the jailer and medical officer or surgeon of the prison, and such other officers of the prison and such persons as the sheriff requires, shall be present at the execution.

This is an enacting clause and not a permissive one. The inference is that public executions are to be carried into effect in private, so as to prevent the occurrence of such disgraceful events as would bring into discredit the execution of criminals, and to create a certain commotion. Unhappily, we have had the experience of those scenes in the province of Quebec within the two or three past years. Events that took place at the execution of Nulty, and quite recently, at the execution of Sam Parslow and Cordelia Viau, have shown that the intention of the law was not strictly complied with under those painful circumstances. Still, I do not pretend to say that if the intention of the law was not respected upon those memorable occasions, it was purposely violated by the sheriff; as this official, by reason of the very wording of the law, found himself in a very embarrassing and delicate position.

That is a crying abuse which has justly aroused public opinion and which even elicited from a portion of the press unwarranted denunciations.

Let me remark here, in this connection, that I do not think any blame should be attached to the provincial authorities, on account of the sheriff having admitted so many people within the precincts of the jail yard. I would not go to the length of saying that journalists or representatives of the press in general ought to be excluded from those executions; I only ask that the words "or other persons, etc." be struck out, so that this provision be not made to apply to the general public. Journalists and reporters, therefore, do not come under this amendment. At the public execution which took place on the 10th of March last in the district of Terrebonne, over 375 people were admitted within the jail walls to witness the execution, owing to the discretionary power given the sheriff under the provision embodied in the two lines of clause 941, I have just quoted.

Those words "or other persons as it seems to the sheriff proper to admit" give the sheriff discretionary powers which are not square with other provisions of the Criminal Code. I may remark here, in passing, that I do not think the press was warranted in the charges brought against the sheriff, for having issued permits in favour of too large a number of persons, because one thousand persons could easily have found admittance within the precincts of the jail-yard, while tickets were issued only in favour of 375 people.

Under the law, as it is, the sheriff stands in a very delicate position, and one which is likely to create friction among the public, and that is just what occurred in the judicial district of Terrebonne, and more especially in the county of Two Mountains, which I have the honour of representing here. As a matter of fact, mere strangers, and at people much less gratified than those living in the district, physicians, lawyers, so-called journalists or friends of the sheriff availed themselves of the opportunity to witness that gruesome spectacle, while those living in the judicial district, and who were much more qualified to form an opinion as to how things would be managed, were refused admission.

Therefore, in order to prevent the recurrence of such friction in public opinion, and also to prevent certain party heelers availing themselves of the position in which we stood under the law, and canvassing from door to door throughout the constituency, as was done after the execution of Sam Parslow and Cordelia Viau, using their influence with the electors, not only to throw discredit upon the sheriff, the jailer and the judge, but even upon the member of the county, claiming that the Government was responsible for the fact that so many persons had been admitted within the jail walls to witness the execution, thus ignoring the provisions of clause 941, on all these grounds, I say it is desirable that the House should pass the Bill I have just introduced. Those facts are a matter of notoriety in the county of Two Mountains, and even politicians who have played a somewhat prominent part in our public affairs were seen lawking about those false charges, which are contrary to the letter of the law. They even went to the length of charging the Government with having directed that the execution should take place over the walls of the prison.

I said, a little while ago, that, this amendment was in harmony with the general purport of the Criminal Code. Clause 939 enacts:

939. Judgment of death to be executed on any prisoner shall be carried into effect within the walls of the prison in which the offender is confined at the time of execution.

The inference is clearly that the intention of the legislator was that such executions were to be carried into effect in private; and therefore, my Bill will only make this provision the more formal and the more positive.

To sum up, I think that in order to obviate all the inconveniences I have just pointed out, it is desirable that Parliament should embody into the law the principle that the executions of the death sentence shall be in future carried into effect in private, and not in presence of the public, as was the case upon several occasions, contrary to the intention of the law which enacts that the judgment of death to be executed on any prisoner shall be carried into effect in private. This will give satisfaction to everybody, and will prevent the recurrence of the past scandals which have brought this question up. Supposing that the intention of the framers of the law was to have the executions of the death sentence carried into effect in private, why, I ask, give the sheriff such discretionary powers, which only bring him trouble and expose him to more or less serious charges being brought against him.

Such is the object of the Bill I have just introduced.

There seems to be a consensus of opinion among the religious authorities, those of the Roman Catholic Church as well as those of the Protestant churches, throughout the Dominion of Canada, in declaring that such an unhealthy and gruesome spectacle should be removed nowadays from the public gaze. The trouble is newspapers publish too many revolting ghastly details, which can serve no useful purpose, upon such occasions, and the least that could be done, when a death sentence is to be carried out would be to let those wretches die in peace, and we would thus be spared a recurrence of the past scandals.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MACDONALD VOTING MACHINES.

Mr. B. M. BRITTON (Kingston) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 81) to amend the Dominion Elections Act by providing for the use of Macdonald voting machines. He said: Mr. Speaker, the object of this Bill is to amend the Dominion Elections Act so as to provide for a machine that will not only receive the ballot, or ball instead of paper ballot, but it will at the same time register the vote. The machine is simplicity itself. It stands in the compartment with the deputy returning officer. In the voting compartment there are places where the names of the candidates appear, and in the aperture below the name of each candidate is deposited a pellet which has been handed to the voter by the deputy returning officer. He deposits the pellet into the place under the candidate's name, and it goes through a registering machine, something like a turnstile I suppose; at all events, as it goes through, it registers the vote and it comes out again to the deputy returning officer, so that he knows that the voter has voted by the fact that this pellet or ball comes back to him. That being so, the voter has done all that can be done. At night the machine is unlocked. There are discs corresponding with the names of the candidates and these discs register the number of votes that each candidate has received. The simplicity of this obviates, in the first place, any possibility of spoiling the ballot, and in the second place, it does away with the necessity of counting the ballots at night, and prevents, it seems to me, frauds of any kind that are said to be perpetrated at elections. No matter how many candidates there may be, there is an aperture for each. The pellet goes through a tube under the candidate's name, passes through the register, and the vote is then recorded on a dial, which is under lock and key and not to be seen until the poll closes at night. It then takes its course until it passes through the tube leading it down to the hand of the deputy returning officer, so that he will take it out. This, in short, is the machine which has been patented, and which this Bill seeks to introduce.

Mr. SPROULE. What would the cost be?

Mr. BRITTON. The cost would be in the neighbourhood of $25 or $30. Of course, it would involve a little additional expense as compared with the cost of using the ballot-boxes, but not very much. So far as I can understand the matter, there is only one possibility of the voting going wrong, and that is in case the machine became clogged or in any way would not register the vote. There is provision made in the Bill for the deputy returning officer unlocking the machine and seeing that it is all right in the presence of the agents of the candidates. With that one exception, it seems to me to be perfect in its operation, and would prevent any of the mistakes of the kind that ordinarily occur during elections.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman have a machine with him when we come to read the Bill a second time?

Mr. BRITTON. Yes, I have a model which will show how it works.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

LENGTH OF WORKING DAY.

Mr. THOMAS BEATTIE (London) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 82) to determine the length of the working day for workmen and labourers.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. BEATTIE. This is a very short Bill, having for its object the determination of the length of the working day for workmen and labourers. The first clause of the Bill provides that the length of the working day shall be eight hours. The second clause provides for a penalty.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. D. C. FRASER (Guysborough). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to ask the attention of the House to a personal matter. I find in the Montreal "Gazette" of to-day, that I am put down in place of my namesake from Lambton (Mr. Fraser) as having made a speech yesterday. The "Gazette" says that Mr. D. C. Fraser, of Guysborough, made a speech, and proceeds to give a short report of it. I thought I was known to the correspondent of the "Gazette." I wish to say, that I do not want to take away from the honour of my clansman and namesake by any means. Mr. John Fraser was the gentleman who should be referred to. At the same time I am bound to say that the "Gazette" made a little amends in a short article, in which they say, mentioning my name :

Conservatives can take their election licking with considerable philosophy. Their opponents are maintaining their principles, and in some matters principles are more important than place.

I thank the "Gazette" for that.

PAPERS RESPECTING THE PLEBISCITE.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to bring up a matter with reference to what occurred a few days ago in connection with the voters' lists for the province of Quebec. The leader of the Government asked it to be laid over for a day until the Minister of Agriculture was here, and then it has been laid over still another day.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) conclude with a motion ?

Mr. FOSTER. I shall. I suppose it does not make any difference whether I go on with the matter now. The facts of the case are very short and I shall not weary the House by reading any more than is actually necessary. A discussion arose in the House with reference to the plebiscite vote in the province of Quebec. It appears that the Dominion Alliance and the Good Government Association of the province of Quebec had come to the conclusion that there was prima facie evidence that frauds, of a greater or less nature, had taken place in the conducting of the plebiscite vote in some of the polls in that province. They had employed an agent to make a thorough examination in three or four counties. This gentleman made an examination and swore to the information which he collated and gave to this society in his report. The evidence as it appeared was certainly very damaging, at least in the opinion of the Dominion Alliance and of the Good Government Association it had that cast. Being troubled about it they appealed to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher)—I do not quite know why—and the Minister of Agriculture undertook to look into the matter, and, as he said in the House "investigate it." He did investigate it, and in the course of his speech in the House he referred to that matter very fully, and after referring to it, he proceeded to say in effect : That the evidence collated by Mr. Parent was entirely misleading and in almost every case not true to fact. The Minister (Mr. Fisher) was able to say that, because he had had access, as he states in "Hansard," to the election returns for the province of Quebec, held by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) was enabled to enter into a lengthy argument to entirely dispute the evidence which had been furnished by this man Parent, and to demolish his opponents generally on this side of the House, by coming to a conclusion, backed by that evidence which he received from the official returns ; that they were barking up the wrong tree and that there was no such thing as fraud or wrong committed in the conduct of that voting. The Minister states here, that :

The names and the figures collected by Mr. Parent were submitted to me, and I was asked to conduct an investigation into the matter.

He goes on :

I examined the lists which were in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, in which the actual and true names of all the returning officers of the province of Quebec were recorded.

And it was from this examination where the Minister had the documents before him—documents which are not in the possession of the House or in possession of any member of this House—from the complete investigation of which, by the Minister, he came to the conclusion, that there had been no frauds, that the information was incorrect and that, therefore, the contentions of some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House were altogether wrong. I do not think there is any doubt of the constitutional rule which states, that documents not in the possession of the House, but which by any means come into the possession of a Minister of the Crown and are used in buttressing an argument in the House, are to be laid on the Table. The Minister afterwards stated, that he did not quote from the documents but that he had this information, and as he stated, he got this information from an actual examination of all the lists in the possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Now, I do not imagine that my right hon. friend will attempt to deny to the House and the members of this House, the privileges to which they are entitled under that rule, by such reasoning as this : That the Minister of Agriculture did not quote from the document, but simply memorized, or tabulated, or extracted from these documents, what suited his purpose and he gave the substance of that to the House. If such could be allowed as an excuse, there would be no force in that constitutional rule by any manner of means ; for all that a man need do in consulting documents, is to get the information from them upon which to base his argument, and he need not quote the document. The essential thing is, that by having access to the document, he furnished himself with information which puts him in a certain vantage ground before the House, and then denies to the House and its members, the same position which he himself occupies. I do not imagine, therefore, that my right hon. friend will insist that there is any difference between literally quoting from the documents, and the investigation into the documents, the memorizing or extracting of information from the documents, and then using that before the House. The quotations from the constitutional authorities are all very plain on that point, and I shall not quote them. The practice has been plain, and I have never heard a question in regard to it in this House before. So plain was it to the mind of the Speaker, that when I asked the hon. gentleman, at the time he was addressing the House and using the information, to lay the documents on the Table of the House, the Speaker said I was perfectly right in that—that the documents should be laid on the Table at as early a period thereafter as possible; in fact, they ought to be laid on the Table at the very moment when the information was used. Otherwise, there is a disadvantage to which the other members of the House are put. A man may be thoroughly honest in giving his interpretation of a document, but we, in this House, believe that it is proper for us to examine into the foundation of his conclusions. With a perfectly honest desire to come to a correct conclusion, he may draw an incorrect conclusion. His opponents in the House, and his friends in the House, have a perfect right to look at the document and to follow up the argument from the information and the deductions which he may gather from it. I am not going to pursue the question further. I wish to bring it up because it is important, and I move the adjournment of the House in order to put myself in order.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The question which has been brought up by my hon. friend is simply one of parliamentary procedure, as to which I am quite willing, along with my hon. friend, to take your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and abide by it. Before we come to this, however, it may be well to review the circumstances which have caused this question to arise. In the course of his remarks the other day, my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) did not quote from the documents referred to, but simply stated that he had examined and summarized those documents, and that the result convinced him that the information supplied to the Dominion Alliance by Mr. Parent was altogether erroneous, in this way, that Mr. Parent had reported to the Dominion Alliance that at certain places, in different counties—I know he reported upon the county of Arthabaska—there had been wrong-doing on the part of the returning officers, whereas, on an examination of the books, it was found that the returning officers at the particular places mentioned by Mr. Parent were not the gentlemen named by him, but other persons. At that moment my hon. friend stated that the Minister of Agriculture should lay the documents from which he was quoting, on the Table of the House. The Minister of Agriculture stated that he had no documents before him—that he had simply summarized them, and was not bound to lay anything on the Table. Whether he was right or wrong in this, Mr. Speaker will decide. I agree with my hon. friend entirely that, when a member of Parliament, especially a member of the Government, quotes from a public document of which the Government has the custody, he should give every member the privilege of verifying his statement by laying the document on the Table of the House. But I would call the attention of my hon. friend to the fact that the documents from which the Minister of Agriculture was quoting are documents, not in the custody of the Government, but in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is an officer, not of the Government, but of the House of Commons.

Mr. FOSTER. An officer of both.

The PRIME MINISTER. I take the ground that he is primarily an officer of the House of Commons—so much so that it is just as open to my hon. friend as it is to the Minister of Agriculture to go and examine those documents. I claim that it is the privilege of every member of this House to have access to the documents in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery; and this point also the Speaker will decide. This preliminary point is altogether in the judgment of Mr. Speaker, as to the proper understanding of a rule for the guidance of the members of this House; and the rule, as laid down by the Speaker, will henceforth be followed. I may say, however, that, since this matter has arisen, it has lost a good deal of its opportuneness, because yesterday I laid on the Table of the House the report of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and it is open to my hon. friend to see whether or not he will find in that report the information he wants.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It seems to me that the essence of the matter is this, that if the Minister of Agriculture can quote from certain official documents, not in the possession of the House, he is possessed of information of which the House is not. It seems reasonable that every member ought to be accorded the same privilege as has been accorded to him, and, when he refers to these documents and gives certain information from them, even though he summarizes that information, the documents ought to be laid on the Table, so as to be available to every member to look into them and verify them.

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). I think the rule laid down by the Premier is a very objectionable one. I think that neither a member of the Government nor a member of the House has any right to go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and examine any of these documents in his possession. He should only have a right to do that by an order from this House. Suppose that, under that law, the returning officer makes a return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery of the voting in the different constituencies of Canada. If any member of this House has the right to go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and examine that return, he can do away with the secrecy of the ballot altogether, because he can find out from the numbers how every man in every constituency voted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). How?

Mr. HAGGART. In Ontario he could, and our voting is the same.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all.

Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps not. But suppose we had the Ontario system of voting, would a member have a right to go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and find out how every man voted? I say, that it is objectionable for any member of the Government to go to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and examine the rolls there, and it is just as objectionable for any member of the House to do so. No one should have the right to examine them, unless upon the order of this House or the order of some court.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the hon. gentleman is doing an injustice to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture merely examined the public return of the returning officer, showing the totals, which is open, without objection, to every member of the House. If he had attempted to examine the ballot papers, I think the hon. gentleman's rule should properly apply: they should not be open to anybody except upon an order of the House. But the Minister of Agriculture was not examining the ballot papers.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not discussing what was done on the occasion. I was discussing the rule laid down by the Premier, that a member of the Government and any member of the House had a right to examine these papers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Examining what?

Mr. HAGGART. The documents in possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in reference to an election.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman will not dispute that he has a right to examine the documents to see who was the returning officer and what was the total.

Mr. HAGGART. If he is limited to that—

Mr. SPEAKER. The point that has been raised, so far as I can give a decision upon it, is, I think, clear enough, according to the authorities. Lord Palmerston used these words:

When a Minister of the Crown quotes a public document in the House, and founds upon it an argument or an assertion, that document, if called for, ought to be produced.

I think that is the well-understood rule which has been acted on always in this House, at any rate since I have been in the Chair. As to the question, whether the document is under the control of the Minister so that he can produce it or not, I am not going to decide. I suppose, however, that if papers in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, which are accessible, I think, to any member of this House, as well as to any Minister, are referred to and cannot be produced here by departmental order, there would be some way found—by an order of the House, for instance—of obtaining their production, if necessary. However, that is not a matter for me to decide, only I think it is quite clear that as early a production as possible should be made of public documents.

Mr. FOSTER. As early as possible. How far would that carry? If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, the main point is this, that, when you are discussing a thing which is bright and warm and a matter of moment, and the attention of the House and, perhaps, the country is fixed on it, and when a Minister, from his point of vantage, has access to documents or returns, such as this, bearing on that question, which other members have not, you will see at once that at that moment he has a complete advantage over the other members. It may be very well to say that, in three days, or six days, or so many weeks, you may get possession of those documents, but you lose in the debate all the advantage, and what you require is, to be on an equal plane with your adversary at the time. I think the greatest care ought to be used by Ministers, when they quote from public documents or returns, to have them at hand, so that they can be laid on the Table when asked for by any member of the House. But "as early as possible" is very elastic.

Mr. SPEAKER. The debate may take place at night, when the offices of the public departments are closed, and it is impossible to produce the required documents at once; but I do not think there ought to be any dispute among the leaders of the House as regards their production as early as possible, or the interpretation to be given to that phrase. When speaking of this rule, I may make a qualification. It is always in the power of a Minister, in quoting from a public document, to say that he cannot lay it on the Table because it would be against the public interest to do so; but that is an exception to the rule which does not apply to this case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not understand that, if it is found, on examination, that the returns in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery are equally open to every member of this House, there is any onus on any Minister to produce them. The rule is perfectly plain, and, I think, clearly understood. If the Minister quotes from a public document, of which he has the exclusive control and possession, he must produce it and lay it on the Table; but if he quotes from a public record which is equally accessible to any other members, there is no onus on him to have a copy made and brought down, or to produce the original. He cannot produce the original. In such case the Minister does not occupy any greater vantage ground than any other hon. member. Any hon. member opposite has the same right to go and see what is the name of the returning officer at a certain poll and the sum total of his return; and, if he does so, he is not bound to bring the return down, but any of his colleagues has the same right to go and examine the paper and see if he has quoted correctly. The rule requiring a Minister to lay on the Table any document from which he quotes, must, 'ex necessitate,' have reference to those documents which are in the exclusive control of himself and his colleagues, or to which the other members of the House have not access.

Mr. DAVIN. Would such a thing be permitted in a court of justice? The cases are precisely analogous. If a barrister, pleading a case in court, were to quote from documents and then refuse to place those documents before the court, I think the judge presiding would sit on him most effectively. I do not think there can be the least doubt that the contention of the right hon. gentleman and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries cannot be maintained with any regard to efficient debate in this House.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). It would be most fortunate, if the rules applicable to the admissibility of evidence in courts of justice were to some extent recognized by hon. gentlemen opposite. I am not aware that they have paid much attention to those rules as yet. Any kind of secondary evidence serves here.

Mr. BERGERON. That does not throw any light on the subject.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The rules of court do not apply here.

Mr. DAVIN. It throws light on the ursine grace of the hon. Postmaster General.

Mr. J. CLANCY (Bothwell). It seems to me that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has taken very strange ground, when he argues that no responsibility attaches to an hon. member who quotes from a document. It seems to me that the essence of the rule is, that the moment an hon. member quotes from a document, the responsibility rests upon him of producing the document, if called upon to do so. It is no answer to say that other members may have access to it by regular or irregular means, because there is great doubt how far any member would have a right to examine any document in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. If any hon. member quotes a document, it is not for him to say that it is inconvenient to produce it or that it is accessible to other hon. members, because he might thus avoid the rule at all times.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). I think the understanding has always been in this House, to put it on the plainest basis of common sense, that no member, whether a Minister or not, is responsible for, and bound to produce documents over which he has not absolute control. In this instance, I think you will admit that the Minister of Agriculture has no more right than anybody else to order the production of documents in the possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Either that official is an officer of the Cabinet, as a whole, that is, the Governor General in Council, or of this House. In either case, I conceive, it requires an Order in Council, or an order of this House, or of a court, to insure the production of those documents. We all know, he is subject to the orders of a court in the case of election proceedings. He is certainly subject to the order of this House, if we require any documents to be produced. I think your ruling, Sir, was perfectly clear and could not be misunderstood by anybody, that, unless the documents are in the exclusive control of any member, he is not responsible for their production. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I think, clearly carried out the deduction from that ruling, that in this case the Minister is not only not bound to produce those documents, but is not able. On the other hand, he has the privilege, as every other member has, to go and look at those documents for himself and see if his statements based on them are correct. These documents are a public record and not departmental papers under any Minister's control, and if anybody wants to see the contents, no doubt an order could be obtained for their production.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are laid on the Table now.

Mr. FOSTER. No, they are not.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I understand that the hon. Minister of Agriculture did not quote from a document which was in the custody of his department but from a document already in the possession of the House or in the possession of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, who is an officer of this House. You might just as well ask the Minister of Agriculture, if he happens to quote from the proceedings of this House, to lay the document on the Table. These documents are already in possession of the House, and it is absurd, in my opinion, to insist that they should be laid on the Table. These documents are as much in the possession of any member of this House as they are of the Minister of Agriculture, and what more can the hon. gentleman want? If the Minister quoted from a document in his own department or under his own control, it would be quite reasonable to ask him to produce it; but when the document is in possession of a servant of the House, it seems to me that it would be absurd to ask that it be produced.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it is right to call upon the Speaker to decide a legal question as to who controls or does not control the production of documents in such a case as this. The law covers that point, and the House can arrange it to suit themselves. I would not like to go further than to say that, in my opinion, if a document quoted by a Minister is under the departmental control of the Minister or of his colleagues, then it should be laid upon the Table of the House. But as to whether this is a matter of that nature or not, I do not think I am called upon to decide; in fact, I will not decide, as I think it is beyond my jurisdiction. All those who are in favour of the motion—

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion is put, may I ask where we are at by this ruling? Your ruling, Mr. Speaker, decides one point, but it does not decide the question that has actually been in discussion as to whether these papers should be brought down or not.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I would like to be permitted to say that the whole point is that the Minister of Agriculture stated that he had examined the documents in the custody of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and he found that the information given by Mr. Parent with regard to the names of returning officers, and also of the number of votes polled was altogether erroneous. I have here the report of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. The figures, so far as the polling is concerned are given there in detail, and my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) can satisfy himself. The names of the returning officers are not here, so far as I can see.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just a portion, but not all.

The PRIME MINISTER. The names of the returning officers have been made public in the "Canada Gazette."

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). If I understood you correctly, Mr Speaker, the ruling you laid down a moment ago was that if a Minister refers to or quotes from a document it is his duty to lay it on the Table of the House, provided he has control of it. Now, that ruling being correct, I would call on the Prime Minister to lay on the Table some documents he referred to some days ago. I asked this question:

To whom and at what price was the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary between the 1st day of July, 1896, and the 30th June, 1897, sold? Were tenders called for?

And the Prime Minister, in reply, said:

To Hobbs Hardware Company, of London, at the following prices:—Sisal, $4.40 per cwt.; Beaver, $4.75 per cwt.; Maple Leaf, $5.25 per cwt.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not see how the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) can, on a motion to adjourn, raise a question other than that brought up by the hon. gentleman who has moved the motion. On such a motion every hon. gentleman cannot get up and air his separate and his special grievance. The discussion is confined to the subject originally brought up.

Mr. BERGERON. This is on your ruling.

Mr. SPEAKER. But the hon. gentleman is raising another question.

Mr. BERGERON. He is coming to it.

Mr. TAYLOR. I was referring to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and, in accordance to that ruling, I was calling for the production of certain documents.

Mr. SPEAKER. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has raised another question. It is a very interesting question, no doubt; but it does not come up on this motion.

Mr. BERGERON. He is coming to it.

The PRIME MINISTER. Not at all; that is not in order.

Motion (Mr. Foster) to adjourn the House, negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make a statement, and, if necessary, I shall close with a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) cannot move the adjournment of the House, as that motion has just been negatived.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will take another opportunity.

FISHERMEN'S TRAP LICENSES FEES.

Mr. C. E. KAULBACH (Lunenburg). Before the Orders of the Day are called, seeing that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is in his place, I would like to draw the attention of that hon. gentleman to a matter concerning the fishermen of the maritime provinces, and more particularly the fishermen residing in the county I have the honour to represent and frequenting the Canadian Labrador in vessels to prosecute the fisheries. I am instructed by them to ask him, in view of the fact that last year there was a very scanty return—although they had paid the trap license fee and endeavoured to get as large a catch as possible, still, in consequence of the fish not being on the shore, the fishermen were compelled to return without voyages, in fact many did not wet their twine.

Mr. SPEAKER. I hope the hon. gentleman will not—

Mr. KAULBACH. I am not going to make a speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. On the Orders of the Day the hon. gentleman may ask a question—

Mr. KAULBACH. I would, therefore, ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) if his sympathies are with the fishermen; and, if so, whether he can show it in a tangible manner by allowing them, this year, to apply for trap licenses for fishing and allow licenses to be issued to them without the payment of the usual fee? Whilst I am on my feet—

Mr. SPEAKER. But the hon. gentleman cannot—

Mr. KAULBACH. It is in connection with this same matter—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would ask the hon. gentleman to confine himself to one question that he thinks of importance, and not to bring up others at this stage.

Mr. KAULBACH. Surely, Mr. Speaker, you will allow me this privilege. The fishermen are about proceeding on their voyages, and it is most important—

Mr. SPEAKER. I really must ask the hon. gentleman to keep order.

Mr. KAULBACH. May I ask an answer to my question?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I desire to treat the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kaulbach) with the utmost courtesy, as he does the same with me; but I was unable to grasp his question. If he will put it in the usual form I shall be very happy to give him an answer.

SUPPLY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House do resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The Governor General's Secretary's office ..... $10,950

Mr. FOSTER. Have there been any changes in the clerks in this office?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are no new clerks. Two statutory increases have been given. The retirement of a messenger caused a decrease, but the new messenger or orderly becomes a charge on the contingencies, in accordance with the requirements of the Civil Service Act.

Mr. KAULBACH.

Mr. FOSTER. How many were eligible in this department to the statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think only two, and they have been granted.

The office of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, including $650 to J. E. Lemaire, $700 to B. Chilton, and $390 to H. Potter, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act ..... $29,840

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.). We must have some explanation of this. I think it would be well, at the beginning of the discussion on the Estimates, for the Minister of Finance to state what is the policy of the Government with reference to statutory increases in the civil service. We have had a great deal of discussion in this House with reference to the principle of statutory increases, and the law under which they may be granted. It has been strongly contended that the clerks have a legal, certainly a moral, right to the statutory increase, as being a condition of law under which they began their service, under which, in fact, they made their contract, so to speak, with the Government. The party sitting behind the Government has had a great deal to say in the past five or six years with reference to the iniquitous civil service, and very particularly with reference to these statutory increases; and the Government took to itself great credit with reference to them in the first year of their administration. When the first Estimates were brought down, through my hon. friend, I think, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) as a mouthpiece, they declared that the unfair and iniquitous system of statutory increases had been swept away entirely by the Government, that they had abolished the principle, and that henceforth there could be no abuse of the civil service so far as this matter was concerned. Before that session was through some of the members of the Government, recalcitrant and kicking against the authority of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, determined that they would give some statutory increases, and they did it. One hon. gentleman, I think it was the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) came down with statutory increases for a large branch in his department, and it was only at the point of the bayonet, held, I think, by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to his very throat, that he was obliged to give way and fall in with, the practice of their doctrine. Well, the second session of Parliament there were two or three more of these Ministers who got their backs up, and determined to give some statutory increases. I think the Minister of Justice was one of these, and the perfunctory representative of that department in this House—who I see answers no questions on behalf of the Department of Justice—determined that some statutory increases should be given, I think seven, in his department. Now, we are coming to this session, and the very first thing we meet is a department in which all that are eligible to statutory increases, get them. Now, where is the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen)? It was a thing unheard of, when the Estimates were gone into and the Minister of Finance got his book ready, that the member for North Wellington was not in his place with the whole of the volumes of the Auditor General piled up alongside of him, ready to take doughty exception to all those alleged infractions of the law. He was against statutory increases. You had a Civil Service Act, and you were making exceptions in the different items of the Estimates and breaking that law. If a man was entitled to his salary by the Act, let him have it, but to come down and make a special enactment in almost every item of the Estimates, was a thing which was monstrous and outrageous, and the Liberal-Conservative Government ought to be put out of power a dozen times for doing that sort of thing. Now, look at this section 3. Here are J. E. Lemaire, B. Chilton and H. Potter, no less than three men, and by special Act of Parliament, without being under the civil service rules entitled to the salary that is placed to their name, but the Minister, by these items, is enabled to drive a coach and four through the Civil Service Act. And more are coming. You can hardly look at one of these items on that page without seeing "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary." Now, if the Government have any policy, we would like to have a statement by the Minister of Finance. If I am not mistaken, the Minister of Trade and Commerce will never dare to open his mouth with reference to the policy of that Government again in regard to statutory increases. It would more fitly fall to the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government to explain their policy, for he has been known to make thousands of promises, and he is equally well known throughout the country for persistently breaking them.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before my hon. friend the Minister of Finance proceeds to answer on the question of principle, I may be allowed to answer the hon. gentleman so far as my own department is concerned. I may say, first of all, that so far as my memory goes, I do not think I ever uttered a word upon the question of statutory increases.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask, then, if this is the position the right hon. gentleman takes: That he allows the Minister of Trade and Commerce to get up and formulate the policy of the Government, and then he gets up in the next session, or in the same session, and repudiates his obligations to that announcement? Have we any solidarity in the Government at all?

The PRIME MINISTER. I was merely answering the statement of the hon. gentleman that I had made at least one thousand promises which I had not fulfilled. Well, perhaps I may be a little more humble than my hon. friend. I am a miserable sinner in many ways, but I never sinned in that way, because, so far as my memory goes, I do not think I ever uttered a word on the question of statutory increases; therefore, the hon. gentleman was astray when he selected that point upon which to have a dig at me. With regard to my own department, I may say that I must ask the hon. gentleman to look over the items on page 11 and page 13. On page 11 there are, I am sorry to say, two or three misprints. He says there are three persons for whom we are asking statutory increases notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act. I may say at once to the hon. gentleman that so far as Benjamin Chilton is concerned, there is no necessity for putting him outside of the civil service, because he is an old messenger. Mr. Lemaire is also within the rule of the civil service. Mr. Potter is not, but I must ask that Potter, who is a messenger, should be allowed to have his increase notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary. Potter has been in the service for six or seven years; he was there when we took office, and I did not remove him. He had been placed there by my predecessor, though he never passed a civil service examination. But he is a faithful servant, and I thought he was entitled to some small increase of salary. Chilton is an old man who has taken the place as door-keeper of Michael McNaughton, whom my hon. friend perhaps will remember, and who is dead now. Mr. Lemaire is a young man employed in my department, a very faithful young man, doing well some extra work that he has had to do in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and I have given him this advance. Now, I may say that I have recommended two statutory increases in my department. If my hon. friend will look at the second-class clerks he will find that there are increases of $100 each for two clerks who, I think, are deserving of the increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are they?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Loux and Mr. Denis Burke, if I remember rightly. There are three statutory increases, those of Mr. Burke, Mr. Loux and Mr. Lemaire, who are entitled to them under the rule of the Civil Service Act. They are within the rule of the Civil Service Act, having passed their examinations. There is an increase given also to H. Potter, who is not under the rule of the Civil Service Act, and could not get it, therefore, it is necessary to place it in the Estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. What salary did Mr. Le-maire get last year?

The PRIME MINISTER. He had an increase of $100.

Mr. FOSTER. He got $550 last year?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, then, the qualification "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act" should apply to him as well as to Mr. Potter, as the statutory increase is only $50. What salary was Mr. Chilton getting before?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Chilton has been promoted to the place of doorkeeper, and his salary is $700. His salary was formerly $600.

Mr. FOSTER. So that is getting more than the statutory increase?

The PRIME MINISTER. No; he is promoted to the place of a doorkeeper, and the salary of a doorkeeper is $700, and has been for ten years past.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, then, if he is promoted, why should not "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act" be here?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is wrong, because the salary is $700 for a doorkeeper, and he is entitled to the sum voted for that position.

Mr. FOSTER. If the annual salary for a doorkeeper is $700 my right hon. friend has no need to put the salary of $700 opposite his name. If he is going to be promoted he could be promoted without any special sanction of Parliament; it is a mere matter of an Order in Council.

The PRIME MINISTER. But my hon. friend will find that it is necessary to put the $700 in the Estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). My hon. friend (Mr. Foster) asked that the policy of the Government in relation to this matter of statutory increases should be stated, and I think it is a very proper request. I am afraid that I can go no further than to state the policy as it was announced last year. The differences of opinion between hon. gentlemen opposite and ourselves as to the meaning of the Act respecting statutory increases remains. Hon. gentlemen opposite claim that members of the civil service were entitled to statutory increases as a matter of law; we held otherwise, on the advice of the Minister of Justice of the day. Hon. gentlemen have maintained the opinion that, if not as a matter of law, civil servants were entitled to the increases as a matter of right. We say that the matter is entirely within the discretion and judgment of the Ministers in charge of the several departments, when their recommendation is confirmed by an Order in Council. We think it is a matter within the discretion of the Minister in charge of a department who may be prepared to state to his colleagues or the House the particular merit of the individual to whom the increase is to be given. This is substantially the view we held last year, and we have not seen any reason to depart from that view.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

Mr. FOSTER. But will the hon. gentleman give us another piece of information? There is no such officer known as a doorkeeper.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think a doorkeeper is a messenger.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and the maximum is $600 a year, and, consequently, you have to make a special provision to give him $700 a year.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman knows well that we have been voting that salary for doorkeepers for the last twenty years.

Mr. CLANCY. I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Finance to a statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister. In discussing the question of these increases the right hon. gentleman said that these officers were entitled to the increases under the Civil Service Act. If that be true, I would like the hon. gentleman to reconcile his statement with the statement of the right hon. First Minister.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. They come within the rule of the increases. There are men who cannot be appointed or their salaries increased under the Civil Service Act, and, therefore, if there are such appointments, the fact must be stated and an appropriation taken. There are members of the civil service who are entitled to increases, not as a right, but within the discretion of the Minister.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like the hon. Minister of Finance to state on what principle the Government act in dispensing with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. It is something I have never been able to understand. The Act has been in force in this country for thirteen or fourteen years. Ever since I have been in this House, item after item has been appearing in the Estimates with the addition of the words "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." I, for one, do not see why that should be so. If the Civil Service Act is the law of the land, it should be observed. If it is not to be the law of the land, it should be amended. I suppose the Government deal with this matter on some principle; I would like to understand on what principle it is that item after item comes down to this House "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." It seems to me that there is another objection to it. Under the constitution an Act has been passed by both branches of the legislature, but we, in effect, repeal that Act, from time to time, by a Bill which goes up to the Senate, and which the Senate constitutionally has probably no right to amend. That seems to me to be a very grave objection to dispensing with the provisions of the Civil Service Act. That Act has had the sanction of both branches of the legislature; you repeal it from time to time by an Act which the Senate under ordinary circumstances has no constitutional right to amend. If it is to be dispensed with, I think the Government ought, in all fairness, to state to the House the principle upon which they act in so dispensing with it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think, Mr. Chairman, that there is not the grave constitutional difficulty in this matter which the hon. gentleman seems to be afraid of. He will find, by reference to the Estimates of past years, that these items have appeared. I suspect that, notwithstanding the opinions which have been referred to by hon. gentlemen opposite, special circumstances may arise which will require and make proper the use of these words. The principle may be stated as this: There may be some increases which, in the judgment and discretion of the Government, should be given, but under the terms of the Civil Service Act we can give only small increases. If there are officers in the employ of the Government who, on account of special merit, or in consequence of special cases arising, should receive more than the small increase provided for by the Civil Service Act, the Minister must come to Parliament and obtain an appropriation by placing the amount in the Estimates. Such cases will arise from time to time, and this seems to be the most convenient, and it is the customary way, of making such appropriations.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not regard it as an answer to say that this has been done in the past. It may be entirely satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite, but it is not satisfactory to me. That it has been done in the past is no reason why the principle of the law of the land should be violated, as, I think, it is being violated. It is of course open to the Government to propose a Bill to the House and obtain the sanction of Parliament to it, but I think the fair way would be for the Government to deal with these matters upon some general principle which is capable of being stated, or to amend the Civil Service Act so that the Government would have some discretion in these matters and not continually ask the House to annul in particular instances the provisions of a statute which has been in force in this country for so long.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I differ entirely from the hon. gentleman, because cases of this kind are such as cannot be dealt with on any general principle. They are special and exceptional cases that have to be dealt with individually by the Minister of the department. I do not think any general system could be laid down which could prevent the Government from coming to the House from time to time, and saying, that for special service, in special cases, it is proposed to give an additional increase of salary. Such cases have arisen, and I have no doubt they will arise in the future, but I hope not so often as in the past. I do not think my hon. friend can lay down any principle which would make the matter more convenient than in the present form.

Mr. FOSTER. How many clerks in the Privy Council office are eligible for statutory increases under the law? My hon. friend will recollect I asked that last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am informed that fourteen are eligible and that three got it.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it right that two of these gentlemen should not only get the statutory increase of $50, but $100?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Lemaire got the $100 increase, but the other gentleman only got $50.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chilton got $100.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend is right in saying that no messenger is entitled to more than $500, but my hon. friend knows that Michael McNaughton got $700 fifteen years ago, and that is simply continued to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. But Mr. Chilton gets $100 more than before.

The PRIME MINISTER. Two hundred dollars more.

Mr. FOSTER. That makes it worse.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Because he got a new position to which a salary of $700 has been attached.

Mr. FOSTER. But there is no such office.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not know that there is such an office by statute, but the office is there for a number of years and we continued it. I am afraid we are still too Conservative.

Mr. FOSTER. You have violated the law in this respect, and the House will agree with the Minister of Finance, that there is no principle laid down.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I said we cannot lay down any general principle to deal with the matter more conveniently than does the present custom. I did not say, no principle was laid down.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) was very mild in putting in as one of his reasons, that he thought it ought to be in the will of the Minister, and the Government should have the discretion, that a clerk for great merit or very extraordinary work, should have the increase, and then he (Mr. Fielding) added, "or any other reason that might commend itself to the Minister." A man is given $100 increase when the law only entitles him to $50, because of merit or of a great deal more work above the ordinary work, but I think that would exhaust all the proper reasons which you can possibly give for the increase. But the other reason of the Minister covers a multitude of lesser reasons—party considerations; the insistence of one of the heelers from behind constantly worrying the Minister, telling him it is necessary this should be done because a vote in his own constituency depends on it, and all the like of that.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Are those reasons ever given?

Mr. FOSTER. These sinister reasons come in under the heading "or any other reason" announced by the Minister of Finance. Here are fourteen men in the Privy Council office, who presumably do their work well, keeping their families—some of them finding it hard to do so probably because their salaries are not very large; having earned it by good work and merit they have a right to the $50 increase, but the Government selects three out of the fourteen and arbitrarily says: We will give you the increase, and not satisfied with that in some cases they say: We will double the increase although the law does not allow it. Indeed, not satisfied with that, in one case they make it four times the increase allowed by statute, but for the rest of the fourteen, the other eleven, who have done their work well or they would not be kept there, men who have to pay their rent, keep their families on the labour and sweat of their brow, they do not fulfil these peculiar reasons which is necessary in order to have their claims successful. They can go back to their work next year, toil meritoriously, but they shall get no increase. That is unfair.

Mr. A. McNEILL (North Bruce). It is a very great pity, Sir, to see the position into which the civil service of Canada has been driven by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not intend to reopen the subject which was threshed out last year ad nauseam, but I do think it is most unfortunate that, what the members of the civil service believe to be the law has been violated. And, Sir, that view of the civil servants as to the law, is supported by some of the best lawyers of this House to-day, and was supported by the ablest lawyers on the Liberal side of the House when the Bill was introduced. Not only is that law violated by the Government, but we find here, as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) pointed out, that time after time we are distinctly told that the Government has taken power to itself to violate the law. I do think there is a great deal of force in what my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) says, and that if we are to have these admitted departures from the law so frequently, it would be very much better to have some legal system introduced, and not to let it go forth to the country that the Government are giving the example of constantly and continually settling the laws at defiance. I do not think one could have a worse moral lesson read to the people of the country, than the lesson which we find before us in the pages of the Estimates. I do not see why it should not be quite possible to introduce some legal provision which would enable the Government, with the consent of the House, to make the desired change.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Within certain limits.

Mr. McNEILL. Of course within certain limits; with the consent of the House. I must say that the remarks made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) seem to me to be absolutely unanswerable. I do think it is a most pitiable condition of things that we find existing in Canada to-day, by which men who entered the service in good faith, believing they were entitled to this statutory increase, should be deprived of it at the whim of any Minister who chooses to deprive them of it; and, on the other hand, that favourites are to be selected, who not only get the statutory increase, but a great deal more. This is no less than a crying scandal.

Mr. J. CLANCY (Bothwell). The House is anxious to know precisely what the principle is that the Minister of Finance has laid down. As I understand it, that principle is, that the Government of the day have undertaken to ignore a salutary law which entirely deprived any Government from making war on any civil servant. If you ignore the rule of the statutory increase, it means that the Government have, for purposes of their own, made war upon certain persons engaged in the service, while others, who are the favourites of the Government, will have special prizes held out to them. If the policy of the Government is, that whenever it suits their purpose, wherever the pressure is greatest, the law is to be set aside, then it seems to me we are coming to a sad state of things. There are no two sides to the question. Either the men who have not received their increases are underpaid, or those who have received increases far beyond the statutory amount are overpaid, and I would like the hon. gentleman to tell us by what rule he says that one man is entitled to an increase of $200 while another is not entitled to the statutory increase of $50 when both are performing their work with equal faithfulness, and no complaint is made against one any more than against the other? It is important that the House should have a clear declaration on that point. I hope the hon. gentleman will do me the honour of explaining it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not intend any discourtesy to my hon. friend, but I am afraid that I cannot give him any further information upon the matter. He has asked for impossible information. I have stated the practice governing this matter, and if I repeated my statement, I am afraid that I should not be any more successful in convincing my hon. friend than I have been. The Minister claims that this is largely a matter of discretion. It is certainly much easier for a Minister to form a judgment as to who is entitled and who is not entitled to an increase than it is for my hon. friend, who has not very much information on the subject; and it ought to be possible for a Minister to single out in his department—call it a favour, or use any expression you like—those officials who are more worthy of an increase than others. I feel certain that no error would be committed by the Minister, and that the preference would be exercised, not from a political point of view, as suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, but from a different point of view altogether. If it were exercised from a political point of view, the gentlemen appointed by the political party opposed to us would have no increases at all; but it will be found that nine-tenths of the increases have been given to gentlemen appointed by our opponents, showing that we can have no object in the world other than to give them according to merit.

Mr. CLANCY. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman has laid down the rule that only persons brought in by themselves are to have the increases.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have just stated the very reverse—that nine-tenths of those who have received the increases have been appointed by our opponents, showing that we can have no other interest than to see that good service and merit are recognized.

Mr. CLANCY. What is the meaning of the rule the hon. gentleman lays down? If the Minister thinks it proper to favour—this is the word he used—a man, he gives him the increase. I deny the hon. gentleman's right as a Minister to favour any civil servant. If he favours one, it means that he has extended something to him which he has denied to another. That is the most extraordinary rule which this House has ever heard enunciated. But it is well that we have it from the mouth of the Minister himself that he has a right to favour any person whom he chooses to advance his salary. I confess that I am now pretty clear on this point.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am willing to accept the expression attributed to me by the hon. gentleman; at the same time I would remind him that the word "favour" was used by me as a quotation from hon. gentlemen opposite. But I am willing to accept the expression that it is the right of a Minister to favour a public servant by giving him an increase of salary for efficient public service in the interest of the Dominion.

Mr. CLANCY. It is no favour at all. If a man receives the increase, it is because he is entitled to it, and not as a favour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think the Minister is quite correct in stating that it is difficult to lay down any principle. The only thing he has laid down so far is an entire lack of principle. I understand that the point made by hon. gentlemen opposite last session was that the civil servants were not entitled as a matter of law to these statutory increases, but that they should be given only to those who the Minister thought had earned them. But I do not understand on what principle the Government venture to double the statutory increase to one man while depriving others of it. If the hon. gentleman has any explanation of that, I think he ought to give it to the House. The law of this land has said that the statutory increase shall be limited to a certain amount. The hon. gentleman comes down with his Estimates, and says here is a civil servant who shall be entitled to double that amount, although the law says directly the contrary, and he does not vouchsafe to the House any reason for it; but, with a somewhat lofty air of indifference, he tells us that there cannot be any statement of principle in these matters. When the hon. gentleman ventures, in defiance of the law to double the amount of increase allowed to a civil servant, he ought to be prepared to give some explanation of his action.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could accept such a statement with better grace from a gentleman who does not belong to the legal profession; but when the hon. gentleman says that the Government is doing certain things in defiance of the law, I may say as a simple layman that he has not stated what is correct. He might as well say that when we bring in a Bill to amend an Act we are defying the law. When we are taking votes for these amounts, we are not defying the law, but making the law; we are simply amending the Act. I am, therefore, astonished that the hon. gentleman should make such a statement. As I have stated, it has been the practice in the past—though I admit that it is not a sufficient reason for it—where it was found that an officer was worthy of more than the statutory increase, to provide, in putting the vote in the Estimates, that he should receive the sum specified notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, which is not a defiance of the law, but a strict compliance with both law and custom, and also a strict compliance with common sense, which is better than all.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman is making a statement which I do not think he will find correct. He states that it has been the habit of different Ministers to bring down to this House votes for increases in excess of the statutory allowance. That was not the plan on which it was done at all. The first principle to lay down is, what is the amount required for the efficient performance of the service. That is passed in Council, and if it is found necessary that an increased amount should be given, it is permissible for the Minister to come down and ask that the person named should be appointed to that particular service. But it has never been the practice of the Government of the country to introduce a measure to give to civil servants an amount in excess of what they were entitled to under the Civil Service Act. When the names were mentioned, it was because the parties were unable to pass the civil service examination, and it was thought that on account of their services there should be some laxity of the rule in their cases. But it has never been the practice of any Government to ask the House to vote an amount in excess of what was provided by the Civil Service Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have not the books in hand, but I have no doubt numerous cases can be cited in confirmation of my statement. No doubt, every volume of the Estimates brought down for years will contain cases to justify the statement I make.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. Finance Minister seems to have overlooked the fact which I brought to his attention five or ten minutes ago, namely, that when the Bill based on these Estimates is passed by this House and goes to the Senate, the Senate constitutionally have no right to amend it. Does not the hon. gentleman understand that? Then, does he not see that he is in effect violating the law, when he asks this House to dispense with the provisions of the Civil Service Act by an Act to which the Senate can offer no amendment whatever? He is asking this House to repeal, in fact, an Act passed thirteen or fourteen years ago by both branches of this legislature, and is asking to have that done by a measure which the Senate in the ordinary course can in no wise touch or amend. That is not the proper course to take. Either this system should be abolished, or, as has been suggested by my hon. friend beside me, some limit should be embodied in the Act within which these increases of salaries should be made regularly and systematically, on some definite principle. The hon. gentleman, however, has denied to some members of the civil service their statutory increase, while he is asking this House to vote to others sums at least double what they would be entitled to under the law which has been in force so many years. I venture again to say, that the hon. gentleman has given no reason which in any way justifies that course.

Mr. HAGGART.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I venture to say, that this is the first time such a proposition was ever submitted to any hon. member, that because a Bill has been passed fixing the rates of salaries payable to certain classes of civil servants, that ties the hands of all future Parliaments, and prevents our increasing these amounts in the future, if we see fit.

Mr. FOSTER. Nobody says anything of the kind.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This House may accept or refuse the recommendation of the Governor General. The effect of that, my hon. friend says, is to limit the power of the Senate; but the power of the Senate is already limited with regard to the Estimates. They have to accept or reject the Supply Bill, as a whole, and cannot amend any particular item. This proposition of my hon. colleague is not at all novel, and my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) never suggested last year the objection he raises to-day.

Mr. BORDEN. Yes, I did.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not remember that he did, but the same thing has been going on ever since I came here.

Mr. BERGERON. Hear, hear. What did you say then?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Every year, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and the ex-Minister of Finance wanted to increase the salaries of any efficient civil servant more than $50, he introduced precisely the same vote.

Mr. BERGERON. What did you say?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I said that, in cases where it was justifiable, I would support it.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And I do not think my hon. friend will find that I ever divided the House on any one proposition at any time, and, therefore, I supported it. On more than one occasion, no doubt, I called attention to the fact that the increases were larger than they ought to be.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the hon. gentleman support any measure he does not divide the House on?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not necessarily, but I took occasion more than once to express some doubts whether increases were any larger than they ought to be, and I venture to say, no hon. gentlemen on this side will shrink from any discussion of any proposed increase. But the inherent power of this House to give an increase larger than that provided by statute is indisputable.

Mr. J. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I would not reproach the hon. Minister of Finance very much on this point, because he was not here when the late Government held office; but my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has been here since 1882, and we have heard him for years clamouring just against this very thing he is now supporting. I simply wish to call attention to the inconsistency of my hon. friends opposite, because the Government are doing in this matter, as in everything else, what they reproached the Conservative Government with doing.

Mr. FOSTER. How much does Mr. Potter get in advance of last year.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think, $30.

Mr. McNEILL. In view of the announcement made by the Minister of Finance, that the Government consider it quite proper to show favours to those members of the civil service whom they select themselves, and that they do not intend to give the statutory increases, I think it is much more important than under the late Government, that the suggestion of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) should be carried out. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has said that this course was followed in the past; but, if my memory is not at fault—and I do not think it is—my hon. friend often dissented very strongly against the very course adopted now, and which now is ten times more dangerous, because of the principle laid down by the hon. Minister of Finance. It is not merely an incident. But he laid down a principle. He says: We do this upon principle; we select our own men from the civil service, and give them statutory increases, or more than the statutory increases, just as we please. Under those circumstances, it is very much more important than ever before that some curb should be put upon this sort of legislation. I do not see any reason why there should not be some provision introduced in the Act by which power may be given, under certain circumstances, to the Government to do something of this kind in exceptional cases; but I do think it is most unfortunate that, on every occasion when the Government are inclined to do this sort of thing, they should put it on the face of the record that they are breaking the law, because that is really what it amounts to. My hon. friend says it has been done before, but that does not make it any the more proper. He has not replied to the argument of my hon. friend from Halifax at all, whose argument was, that we were practically repealing the statute which had been passed by both branches of the legislature, and were doing that in such a way that the other branch of the legislature could not interfere. But my hon. friend replies to that argument by saying that the other branch of the legislature cannot interfere with the Money Bill. That is just what my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) argued.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) will agree with me that "summa lex" is sometimes "summa injuria." If you carry the law to its fullest extent, you may work an injury. There are cases in point in this very matter, where, if you were to follow the doctrine of the hon. member for Halifax, you would be led to a conclusion from which I am sure he would at once recoil. He contends that in every instance we should make increases strictly within the letter of the statute. Now, I call the attention of my hon. friend to the case of this man Porter, whose salary is increased. His salary is increased, I admit, against the letter of the Civil Service Act. But then he was appointed contrary to the Civil Service Act. This man never passed the civil service examination and consequently, under the letter of the Act, was not entitled to be appointed to the civil service. He was appointed a messenger, but with the proviso "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." I found him there when I took office. I did not feel called upon to turn him out—I am sure my hon. friend from Halifax would not desire that. Therefore, every year, I have asked the same that I now ask, that his salary be paid "notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act." Here is a case where, if you carried the law out to the letter, you would work a great injury, and I am sure my hon. friend from Halifax would not require us to do that. This shows that there are cases in which you must depart from the letter of the law. I do not wish to be understood as blaming the Minister who appointed him, for he is a good messenger, and I would not part with him. It may be that when my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) introduces the Bill which he is to introduce to amend the Civil Service Act, it may be advantageous to make such a provision and keep, as far as we can, within the letter of the law. But at the present time, I am afraid we are only following the precedent set us. We are not following the law too closely I must say—we have not yet been such reformers as we ought to have been. But we are doing the best we can, and I hope that we will depart more frequently from the precedent set us by our predecessors.

Mr. FOSTER. Why did you double up Lemaire?

The PRIME MINISTER. Mr. Lemaire is a man of about 30 years of age, married, and with a young family. My hon. friend referred to that. He is an especially able man. I often have him to give assistance as my secretary. He is a shorthand writer and typewriter, and writes both French and English. Altogether I think him one of the best officers of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. And he is a messenger.

The PRIME MINISTER. But he was not appointed by me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not speaking with regard to this particular instance alone, but with regard to the principle which applies to so many instances. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) as a lawyer, will understand my point, which I do not seem to have made clear to the Minister of Finance. It is that you are repealing a general statute in individual cases by a provision which one branch of the legislature has no power to deal with. I think that is a valid objection. I think it would be far better if the Act could be so amended that, within certain limits the Government could deal with this matter—possibly with the consent of the House as my hon. friend (Mr. McNeill), who sits beside me, suggests.

Civil Government—

Department of Justice ..... $25,310

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to have a statement of the number who are eligible for the statutory increase, and the number to whom it has been granted, with the reasons.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Six were entitled to the increase, and it was granted to four.

Mr. FOSTER. What amounts were granted?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Fifty dollars—the regular increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Solicitor General please give the reasons why he singled out these four and left the other two grinding at the mill without increase?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The reason why the two were left grinding at the mill is—in one case, that of Mr. Mullen, he is my private secretary, and he received, in addition to his salary a fairly large amount which, I thought, justified us in keeping back the usual statutory increase.

Mr. FOSTER. He is a member of the civil service?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. A second-class clerk?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Receiving what amount?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He has his regular salary of $1,150, and as private secretary is in receipt of an additional $400. The other officer to whom the statutory increase has not been given is Mr. Burpee, former private secretary to Sir Oliver Mowat. He receives $1,100, and as he has only come into the service this year, we thought it fair to let him go a full year without an increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Burpee was the secretary to the former Minister of Justice. Was

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

he not for a certain time private secretary to the present Minister of Justice?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think he was, for a short time—a very short time. But he had been appointed permanently quite recently—I mean within a few months.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us what pressure was brought to bear upon the present Minister, who, I believe, was well minded to keep Mr. Burpee as his private secretary, to make a change?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not know of any pressure brought to bear upon the Minister. I know that the late Minister of Justice was pleased to have Mr. Burpee as his private secretary. I am not aware of any pressure brought to bear on the Minister, but I think it is an improvement in Mr. Burpee's condition, for now he is a permanent employee with a salary greater, I think, than he had as private secretary.

Mr. FOSTER. Was he not a member of the civil service before?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman had better look into that before saying definitely.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think I am right.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to say that his secretary gets an allowance, as secretary, of $400?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the regular allowance of the private secretary of the Solicitor General?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Six hundred dollars. I divided this and gave a portion of it to a young French Canadian who is in the department.

Mr. SPROULE. Then there are two private secretaries?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are two employees who, in addition to the services they render as officials of the department, perform the work of a private secretary. I may explain that I require, very often, the services of some one who can speak and write French. That is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SPROULE. That might be done without having two individuals.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have had a little experience in the province of Quebec, and that experience leads me to believe that you can count on the fingers of one hand the men who can perform the services of private secretary in both English and French.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the French secretary a member of the service?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). I am surprised to learn that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has so much work that he needs two secretaries. I see that the hon. gentleman was pleading a case in court the other day, defending the man accused of murder, like an ordinary lawyer. I believe, also, that he pleads very often before the Supreme Court as a private lawyer. When hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the House, they used to say that it was most important to have a Solicitor General so as to make it unnecessary for the Government to spend money outside the department. But I see that according to the report of the Auditor General, we spent $100,281.09 outside the Department of Justice for law costs. According to what these hon. gentlemen used to tell us the Solicitor General, with the ability that I know he has, and with his two secretaries, ought to be able to do this work. Of the amount I have stated $19,193.93 is charged against the Department of Justice alone. I suppose it would be useless to call the attention of the Government to this, but I want to show their inconsistency; I want to show how differently they act now to what they preached when they were on the left of the Speaker. There is one hon. gentleman opposite who, I am sure, will agree with me, and that is the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I call upon that hon. gentleman now to use his influence with his friends who are in power, and try and induce them to depart from that bad habit of the former Government, which they promised never to adopt. As the case stands to-day, we have spent over $100,000, the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has two secretaries, and he pleads cases outside as a private lawyer.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick), I apprehend my hon. friend takes the ground that the Solicitor General should not be a lawyer, otherwise I see no point in his remarks. Probably it is highly improper that a man should be Solicitor General in this country and have any practice at all at the bar. If that is the view of my hon. friend, he is entitled to hold it, and I have no objection to his doing so. In answer to the hon. gentleman's criticisms that the Solicitor General ought to attend to the business of the department, I admit that probably I have not done all that I ought to do in that respect, but I have acted to the best of my ability with the means I had at my disposal. The result has been that instead of spending each year $18,000 on an average for fees to lawyers here in Ottawa, we have spent on an average $6,000 a year since the change took place, making a yearly saving of $12,000. Now, I want to say that I do not pretend for a moment to claim for myself all the credit of the saving that has been effected in this respect. There is a very efficient Deputy Minister in the department who has done a great deal to bring about this desirable change. I may say with reference to the other point to which my hon. friend directed attention, as to our spending $100,000 or thereabouts last year, that in that amount is included the sum of $35,000 spent in connection with the Behring Sea matter, a sum over which the Department of Justice had absolutely no control. The amount for which we are responsible in the Department of Justice is $65,000. That is a decrease from $89,000, which is the smallest amount spent during any one of the last ten years that hon. gentlemen opposite were in office.

Mr. FOSTER. Does my hon. friend mean to say that if this Government had been in when the Behring Sea matter was being adjudicated, he would not have employed eminent counsel and paid them to the extent of $35,000?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I was only showing the source of $35,000 of this amount. Undoubtedly this Government, had they been in power, would have employed eminent counsel. But then, instead of spending $100,000 or thereabouts, the previous Government spent annually $89,000 or $90,000, with that $35,000 in addition, in one year. I may say that for litigated matters over which the Department of Justice have control, we have spent less in proportion than those who have gone before us.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). It is not amiss to draw the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to some of their own statements. I have a distinct recollection of a statement made by the present Prime Minister, notwithstanding that the party then in power had a Minister of Justice drawing $7,000 and a Solicitor General drawing a large salary, and a Deputy Minister drawing $4,000, with a number of clerks—that, in addition to all that, they spent large sums for outside legal expenses in the management of their department, and he promised that if the Reform party came into power they would reduce that very materially. The Solicitor General says that $35,000 of this $100,000 was spent in connection with the Behring Sea matter, and that it only applies for one year. But if my memory is not at fault the year before last there was over $100,000 spent in that department. As to the statement made by the Premier in justification of these statutory increases, I think it was somewhat disingenuous, in view of his promise that if the Reform party came into power they would pursue a different policy.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may mention that several of the lawyers who had been employed by the previous Government were obliged to hand in their accounts in the year before last, and as a result a very much larger sum was paid out during that year than under ordinary circumstances. Take, for instance, the investigation into the Curran bridge contract, and the St.

Louis prosecution. A large amount was paid out in those cases that we were not responsible for.

Mr. BERGERON. I do not blame my hon. friend the Solicitor General personally, because he never bothered us a great deal before 1896 about the expenses of the Solicitor General's office and the outside expenses, but I am only referring to his case in order to show that his colleagues are now doing the very reverse of what they promised to do if they ever got into office. The hon. gentleman wants to show us that he is a good lawyer, and to do so he defends a criminal at Quebec, and then he pleads at the Supreme Court. He says that a Solicitor General must be a good lawyer. We know that, otherwise he would not have been taken into the Government. But the Minister of Justice, I think, has never done much pleading before the Supreme Court or before the other courts of the country. I may say, however, that I have always been of the opinion that we spend too much money in employing outside lawyers. The hon. member for North Wellington has made the same criticism on a previous Government, and now his own friends are in power they are doing precisely what he blamed our friends for doing.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). As the hon. gentleman has chosen to mention my name in connection with the criticisms that have been made in past years on the item of legal expenses, I may be permitted to say that I endorse the remark he has just made that too much money has been spent in the Department of Justice in hiring outside lawyers. At the same time, I think that once litigation is commenced, it is usually a very expensive thing to change lawyers during the course of a suit. Many of those suits have been trailing along for years, and I have no doubt that the present Government decided that it would be better to allow those matters to come to a conclusion in the hands in which they were started, than to put them into new hands, and perhaps to commence new suits. I believe that the Government in that case have acted wisely, but I hope that the amount of expenses on account of litigation will grow less and beautifully less every year, until it disappears altogether from the public accounts, and that the Department of Justice will handle all these matters. I have found fault in past years; I did it honestly, and I do it now, but I believe that the Government are in this position: There were a great many suits that had been commenced before they came into power, which they were compelled to carry to a conclusion, but as soon as these suits are closed up, I feel confident, that the Department of Justice will see that the House will not be asked to pass $100,000 for litigation. We have had to get out of the unfortunate condition of affairs that existed when the Government came into power, but once we reach the conclusion of these suits that have been in litigation for so many years, we will not have so much before the House in the form of special legal services. The Government are responsible for any other suits that they have started, and they can properly be called to account for them, but until these old suits are closed up, I do not think that the Government should be attacked for any increases.

Mr. BERGERON. That is a very clever way of getting out of it; but we have here a few names, and I have not gone through the list yet, which will show how much there is in the contention of the hon. gentleman, that the Government were obliged to pay lawyers, because they were in cases already started. Mr. F. L. Belque, Montreal, $8,093; S. A. Brodeur, Vaudreuil, $250—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do I understand that you object to Mr. Belque's account?

Mr. BERGERON—Mr. Choquette, $23.60; Mr. F. O. Dugas, Joliette, $160.70; Mr. R. E. Fontaine, St. Hyacinthe, $81.32; Greenshields, Laflamme & Co., Montreal, $54.95. That was not enough; so they gave Greenshields & Greenshields $500. Fred. Peters, Charlottetown—my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows the name—$9.448; A. Camille Pouliot, Fraserville, $113.55; Pouliot & Pouliot, Quebec, $246. I had not time to go through the whole list, but there will be another occasion for me to do so. But this is enough to show that hon. gentlemen have been doing the very thing that the hon. member for North Wellington condemns.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman knows that the principal payments which he has mentioned refer to the Behring Sea arbitration. In the case of Mr. Peters and of Mr. Belque, these payments were made on that account. He had to find some item to back up the statement he has made, and he got an item of $23. So that the hon. gentleman has not made very much of the attempt with which he started out.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand the hon. Solicitor General's client was convicted the other day of manslaughter, and I would like to ask, if, in the event of his appealing for a remission of his sentence, will the Solicitor General be posing as the Minister of Justice or solicitor for the accused?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The question as to whether I shall practice in the criminal courts or not, is an open question. However, I am willing to take the opinions of my friends in this House upon it. I may explain that, in the Department of Justice, when a claim for executive clemency is received, the evidence is read in the first instance by Mr. Power, who has been connected with the department almost from time immemorial, and from whom the case is passed to the Minister of Justice, who accepts, or amends, or rejects the recommendation made by Mr. Power. From the Minister of Justice the case goes to Council, and then it is dealt with in Council. So that, from the time the petition is received in the department until it reaches Council, the papers never reach me, and I never have anything to do with them.

Mr. BENNETT. It certainly will give the Solicitor General an immense amount of leverage over his brethren at the bar in the province of Quebec, when it is stated, and becomes well known, that the Solicitor General may be retained and will act in any criminal case, more especially in cases of a grievous character, such as murder. In a celebrated case that took place a year or two ago—the Valleyfield murder case—had the Solicitor General been retained on behalf of the accused person, it is possible he would have had a great deal of power behind the throne with the Minister of Justice, and it is to be imagined further, that the services of the Solicitor General will be sought—I am speaking apart from his well-known standing at the bar—by reason of the vantage ground he will hold through his position. It will be unfair to other members of the bar, and there will always be a strong suspicion that the administration of criminal justice in the country is not dealt with on the merits exclusively, but by reason of the political vantage that may be obtained and held by the Solicitor General.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think, if the hon. gentleman will consult some of the gentlemen at the bar, in the province of Quebec, they will tell him that, before I became Solicitor General, I had some practice, and, if he will consult the records since I became Solicitor General, he will see that this is the only criminal case I took up. But, as I said before, I am willing to take the opinion of my colleagues in the House, and, if they are of opinion that I should not continue my practice, it will be a matter for me to consider what I shall do.

Mr. SPROULE. If the Solicitor General says that he has nothing to do with these appeals for executive clemency, I should like to know what he does with his two private secretaries, if he is not connected with the administration of justice.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend will find that I have something to do with the Department of Justice. I have appeared, both in the Supreme Court and in the Privy Council. In the Canada sugar case, the result of our action in the Department of Justice was, that $40,000 came into the treasury. In the case of Ogilvie, which we lost previously, $60,000 came into the treasury. I do not claim for myself personally the merit at all. Although I am appearing in the criminal court, I may safely say it is the practice in England, notwithstanding that in England the prosecution of criminal cases is in the hands of the Attorney General or the Solicitor General, while in our country the prosecution of criminal cases is in the hands of the local attorneys general. Notwithstanding the fact that in England the prosecution is conducted, as a rule, by the Solicitor General or the Attorney General, there is a libel case in which the Solicitor General appeared for the accused. While an application for executive clemency is dealt with by the Home Secretary, he acts largely upon the advice of the Solicitor General or Attorney General, whereas in Canada the Minister of Justice is entirely independent of the Solicitor General. He can pardon or not, without reference to the Solicitor General.

Department of Militia and Defence..... $43,790

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The explanation with regard to the increase to Mr. Jarvis is, that he is a particularly good officer, a man who works extra hours, and in my judgment one of the most useful men in the civil service. I think that even with this increase he is not overpaid, or not paid enough for the valuable service which he renders.

Mr. FOSTER. How much is his increase?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. One hundred dollars.

Mr. SPROULE. But there is an increase of $430 in the total vote.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, there are several other increases, all statutory.

Mr. SPROULE. How many were eligible for increases?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Eighteen were eligible, and nine have received the increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Did none of the other ten gentlemen work well, and have merit on their side, or did they work overtime?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think they are all very good clerks, but so far as I know none of them worked overtime, and I made what I thought was a fair selection of the men who were specially entitled to the increase.

Mr. FOSTER. Who were the men who got the increase?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The secretary of the department, Capt. Benoit, the chief engineer of the department, Mr. Weatherbee, Mr. Jarvis, Lt.-Col. Guy, F. Beard, Charles Panet, L. G. Roy, G. W. Young, and the messenger, A. E. Watterson, whose salary was increased from $360 to $390.

Mr. CLANCY. The Minister has only given a special reason for one increase ; what induced him to select the others ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have stated that I selected the men whom I thought were entitled to increases.

Mr. CLANCY. What induced you to do so ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. On the ground that they deserved it.

Mr. CLANCY. But I asked what the grounds were ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If the hon. gentleman cannot understand the meaning of my words I cannot make him understand. I have told the hon. gentleman that I considered that these men were worthy of their statutory increases, and that means that they had done their work faithfully and well, and that perhaps their salaries were inadequate to their requirements—but specially on the ground that they had done their work faithfully and well.

Mr. CLANCY. I confess that I do have some difficulty in understanding the Minister. The hon. gentleman says that these officials who have received their increase, performed their duties faithfully, but he has only given a special reason as to why one got his increase, and he has given no reason with reference to the other seven. It should be made clear to the House that those who got the statutory increases were underpaid in the past, or that the others who did not get increases were substantially paid before. That would be a fairly good reason, but that reason was not given by the Minister, I confess that I cannot see that the Minister has given any reason.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I have gone into the matter with my deputy, and have done what I considered to be fair in the premises.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement of the Minister is equivalent to the admission that those who did not get an increase did not do their duty well.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. If these servants were told they had not done their duty well, I am sure they would like to know the reason why. If they did their duty well, then by the same parity of reasoning we must assume that they were entitled to the increase. The statement given by the Minister, that one clerk had worked diligently and over-hours was a good reason, but he did not make that statement with regard to the other seven who got the increase.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). I do not know that I would be altogether disposed to find fault with the Government for not giving the statutory increase in every case, for there may be cases in which it would not be advisable to give it, and in which it should be left to the discretion of the Minister. I believe, however, that when the Minister gives increases in certain cases and not in others, then in any single case in which an increase is given he should show what the reason for such action was. I think the cases should not be taken in a lump, but that with reference to each man who gets an increase it should be shown to the House that he deserved it. It might be understood of course that the others did not deserve the increase. The House has the right to know why the Minister undertakes to give an increase in one case and not in another, and to know also, that the increase was given for some special reason which did not exist in the case of those who did not get it.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I think it would be a most absurd thing to expect a Minister to come and detail before the House the peculiarities of any civil servant whom he thought entitled to an increase. When would we ever get through with the Estimates if every Minister adopted that course ? I am very glad the Minister has adopted the course he has. For my own part, I would like to see the Civil Service Act amended so that civil servants who have performed their work in a manner to deserve increases would get them. What we used to object to was that hon. gentlemen opposite granted increases whether they were deserved or not. The hon. Minister of Militia has stated that certain civil servants in his department, for whom he has recommended the increases, are men who have faithfully and efficiently performed their duties and are now paid low salaries, while the reason he has not granted an increase to others is that in his opinion their present salaries are sufficient. I think that is a good reason, and that is all the reason he should be asked to give. If he had to give in minute detail all the grounds for his decision in particular cases, telling what hours each had worked and what specific duties he had performed, we would never get through.

Mr. CRAIG. I am rather surprised to hear the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) say that it is absurd to ask for these particulars. It would not take five minutes to give them. We know how much time was spent by the hon. member for North Wellington in going into particulars not half as important as these, in regard to the number of napkins used at Government House, the amount of laundry bills, and so on, which I hold is absurd. But in order to remove from the minds of the members of this House and the country the idea that these increases are given on personal or political grounds—I do not say that they are—when the Ministers exercise their discretion in giving them to certain members of the civil service and denying them to others, we say that in each case it would be well for him to state the amount of salary received and the amount recommended, and also to give some specific reason for the increase. I do not think that is an unreasonable request, but on the contrary, a very fair one.

Mr. HAGGART. The Civil Service Act requires that there should be a certificate of the Deputy Minister on which each statutory increase is given. I would ask whether these increases are confined to those for whom the certificate has been given.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The Deputy Minister has recommended those to whom the increase has been given. I am not prepared to say whether any of the others were recommended, but I think not. I think it would be undesirable to put before the House confidential communications between the deputy and the Minister.

Mr. HAGGART. It is not a confidential communication at all. It is the one required by the law to be given. The Deputy Minister is required to recommend those entitled to the increase, and the House is entitled to know whether he has performed his duty, and to what extent. If the Deputy Minister has recommended only the increases specified, the Minister is perfectly justified in asking the House to vote them. If the Deputy Minister has recommended others, we have a right to have an explanation from the Minister.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The hon. gentleman would hardly ask that the Minister is bound to give the increase to every man whom the Deputy Minister recommends.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not say anything of the kind.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Then the statement which the hon. gentleman makes has no point whatever. I say that every one of the increases given were recommended by the Deputy Minister of my department.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SPROULE. When the committee rose at six o'clock, I was speaking on item 6, the Department of Militia and Defence, and I was about to say that I could not agree with the contention of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that no clerk should receive an increase of salary except those recommended by the Minister. As I understand the civil service law, it provided that every civil servant who had not attained the maximum of his class might fairly look for an increase of $50 per year, provided he had been attentive to his duty and done his work fairly well. That is the custom that was followed during many years. But since the incumbency of the present Government, they have seen fit to change that system. We had a good deal of controversy over the question last year and the year before, as to what principle we should adopt in giving an increase in salary, and I believe it was generally contended by the Ministers themselves that the only correct principle was that the Minister, through his deputy head, should be allowed to select as worthy of an increase those who were specially attentive to their duties. But I understand they have gone back to the old principle again, and now give the civil servant to understand that as long as he does his duty fairly well he may look for an advance of $50 a year as a statutory increase. The Minister has seen fit to select a few from his staff and give them an increase, and he gives as a reason for making the selection that he found them efficient and attentive to duty. Now, I hold that it is in a measure a reflection upon the conduct of the others who do not get that increase, because if it was said in justification of the increase that they were faithful and attentive to their duties, it implies that those who did not get the increase were not efficient and attentive to their duties. Then I think it was brought out afterwards that the deputy head had recommended several, but the Minister refused to say how many in his department had not been recommended. In the absence of that information we are unable to determine whether those parties who did not get it were fairly entitled to it, and the Minister is left in the position of being able to make a selection according to his own judgment, and upon grounds that are not disclosed to this House. Now, I think the old principle was the better one, that every civil servant who had attained the maximum of his class, so long as his conduct was good and he was efficient in the discharge of his duties, might fairly be given the statutory increase. That would be a stimulus to him, and would promote efficiency. I do not think that the rule laid down by the Minister is a good one. I want to ask the Minister a question here. I see in the Militia Department of the Estimates an item of $1,500 to E. W. Jarvis, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary. But I see in the Auditor General's Report, page L 2, that it is E. F. Jarvis. Is that the same man?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). There is only one man by the name of Jarvis; E. F. Jarvis is the name.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the Minister of Militia and Defence how many were recommended. He said there were fifteen eligible for statutory increases, and eight of these received the increase. I would like to know if those who received an increase this year received an increase last year.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No, they did not.

Mr. CLANCY. I see in the Auditor General's Report that Mr. Beard, clerk, was receiving a salary of $1,100 up to the 1st of August, 1897. But his salary is higher now. Was he promoted last year?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was transferred from the Department of Railways to the Militia Department. I do not think he received any increase last year.

Mr. CLANCY. Was Jarvis transferred as well?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. CLANCY. Jarvis seems last year to have received for the month of July at the rate of $1,250, and for the balance of the year at the rate of $1,400.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. He was promoted from a second-class clerk to a first-class clerk.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the hon. gentleman state how many were recommended by the Deputy Minister out of the fifteen eligible?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am unable to tell the hon. gentleman, but I may say that I went over the matter very carefully with my deputy, and he agreed with me on the recommendations. I am not prepared to say whether he made any more recommendations or not, but my impression is that he recommended only the ones I have mentioned.

Mr. CLANCY. Did any receive increases other than those who were eligible?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Will it not be necessary to change the initials in that name of Jarvis from E. W. to E. F.?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for calling my attention to that.

Mr. SPROULE. Did not Mr. Jarvis do considerable extra work in connection with the military commission to inquire into various matters concerning the department?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Mr. Jarvis, I may add, although no one seems to object to his increase, was the private secretary of the former Minister of Militia, and became thoroughly conversant with all the business of the department. He is one of the most useful men in the department, and I venture to say one of the most useful and faithful public servants in the public service.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. CLANCY. While no objection has so far been taken to this increase, objection has been taken that some are advanced while others are not, and no sufficient reasons seem to have been given for the distinction. In the case of Mr. Waterson, who seems to have received pay under another heading, having received $360 last year as extra messenger, will the hon. gentleman say how much he has received out of this amount of $16,418 given in "L. 5, salaries at Ottawa"?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I think that when the Estimates were being made up a year ago it was thought that we could do without this messenger in the military branch of my department, and bring in from one of the schools one of the soldiers, but it was afterwards found that that would not work, and as no vote had been taken, this man had to be paid out of the contingent fund. We had kept him at the same salary, and now we are putting in the vote in the regular way, and giving him an increase of $30.

The Department of the Secretary of State, including $2,400 to P. Pelletier, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $36,450

Mr. SPROULE. What is the explanation of his increase to Mr. Pelletier?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Pelletier is chief clerk of the department, and his salary was $2,250, which is now increased to $2,400. He is a barrister of good standing and has served eleven years in the department, and during the absence of the under secretary for several months during the past and present year he acceptably discharged the duties of this office.

Mr. SPROULE. That would hardly be regarded as sufficient reason for giving such a large advance in one year. He is practically getting three years' increases pressed into one, and the only excuse is that he did his work well, as no doubt hundreds of others have done. A good many in this department are deprived of their statutory increases, but a few seem to be particularly favoured, and this increase of $150 a year to one who has only been ten years in the service seems a large increase, in view of the fact that he was getting what would be considered a very liberal salary outside the service and that others are deprived of their increases.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are eligible for increases in that department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Fifteen are eligible and six have been granted an increase.

Mr. SPROULE. That is a little over one-third, and it is hardly fair to give one man three times his statutory increase when so many others are deprived of it, and is besides quite out of keeping with the doctrine of economy preached by the hon. gentlemen when on this side. When the hon. gentlemen were on this side and any deserving civil servant got a dollar over the statutory increase, they denounced it as unwise and extravagant. The course they are now following will tend materially to demoralize the service.

Mr. FOSTER. It cannot be urged in favour of this increase that it has been made to a man who is getting but a small salary. Of the nine who are eligible and did not get the increase, there is not one whose salary is not lower than that paid to Mr. Pelletier. It does seem going a little too strong to give a man who is getting $2,250 salary an increase of $150 in one jump.

The Department of Public Printing and Stationery, including $2,350 to W. Glendon and $2,050 to W. McMahon, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $26,280

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are six statutory increases in that department at $50 each, and one at $30, and there is a decrease arising from the difference between the salary of the late superintendent of stationery and that of his successor.

Mr. FOSTER. How much did the late superintendent get ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The difference in expense is as between $1,450 and $1,600, which were the two salaries.

Mr. FOSTER. How many were eligible for the statutory increase ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. All who were eligible in that department received it.

Department of the Interior, including $1,100 to James Dunnet, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act ..... $103,074

Mr. FOSTER. This proviso does not appear in our Estimates. Is this an addition made afterwards ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) will look at page 14, where the details are given, he will find that there is an error in the number of second-class clerks. As he will see by following out the lines, the number of second-class clerks should be 21, and the amount $27,300. In the third-class the number should be 37, and the total $33,144. It was a mistake in entering the amounts from the Finance Department.

Mr. FOSTER. The question is, are you changing the Estimates from what has been laid before us ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was a slight change in the form, but I understand the Minister of the Interior is not pressing that.

Mr. SPROULE. If you want these words inserted, it must be because there is an increase, and that should appear in the Estimates before us. Are there two new men appointed as second-class clerks, or have two men been promoted ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. One has been promoted, and one is a new appointment.

Mr. SPROULE. It is an unusual thing to begin a man so high at once, when there are so many men in lower grades who have been working for years to increase their efficiency.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. When a second-class clerk is wanted, the Minister must select one whom he believes to be fitted for the work. This man was selected on that basis.

Mr. SPROULE. But is it not usual to promote one from a lower class ? In a department the size of this, there must be many efficient men, any one of whom might fairly be promoted. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) think it would be a better principle to follow rather than to bring in new men ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would go this far—I do not think it would be a good plan to appoint exclusively new men. But I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) would ask a Minister to bind himself not to bring in new men.

Mr. SPROULE. It would not matter so much if this were an exceptional case. But it seems to be occurring very frequently. It may become a question whether this is the rule or the exception.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that the hon. gentleman can show that it is the rule.

Mr. SPROULE. I can cite other cases. I find that there are 36 third-class clerks instead of 41 last year. How does the change occur ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There were 37—36 is printed in error. There was one promotion, Mr. Robertson ; one, Mr. Grant, retired ; and two were estimated for last year whom we do not require this year.

Mr. FOSTER. How many were eligible for the statutory increase ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Twenty-eight got the increase altogether, 2 among the chief clerks, 1 among the first-class clerks, 3 among the second-class clerks, and 22 among the third-class clerks.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There were about 43 eligible.

Mr. FOSTER. All the third-class clerks got the statutory increase ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. How many second-class clerks did not get their increases ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Three.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to know a little more in reference to the third-class clerks. We find that the Minister has come down to this, that he is giving all these third-class clerks statutory increases. That principle seems to differ, if there is any principle in this, from the principle followed by the Department of the Secretary of State, which gives three times the statutory increase to an officer who has $2,250 of a salary, and leaves the low class clerks to struggle along as best they can without the statutory increases. I would like to know who is the new clerk among the second-class clerks, and what the duties are that he purposes to make it necessary that we should pay a new man $1,100.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman wishes me to state the reason it is because this gentleman has special qualifications.

Mr. FOSTER. I see you have 36 or 37 third-class clerks. When there is an opening above why do you not give it to a deserving man who has entered the service at low pay, and has worked his way up? That general, and, I think, good rule, has been set aside in this case. The Minister says that we must have a new man put in at a salary of $1,100. He ought to give us a reason as to why he should not make a promotion from the third-class clerks, and give merit some chance to be recognized, rather than to put in a new man at $1,100. Were the duties of such a kind that no man among these 36 or 37 third-class clerks, who have been in the Interior Department, can do it or what is the reason?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that I appointed this man because I thought he was specially qualified for the class of work which I wanted him to do. In that particular branch in which his work lay, I was particularly anxious to place a man who would be competent, at a later day, in my judgment, to exercise the superintendence of the branch, the Ordnance Lands Branch, in which there was only one clerk who had manifested a special capacity for the work, Mr. Keyes, who has been in charge of the branch for a long time, and I did not think it desirable that the department should be dependent upon one individual. The man that I appointed was specially qualified and better qualified than any of the third-class clerks.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like some further information from the hon. gentleman. Who is the person that he has selected?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Ferguson.

Mr. FOSTER. And what peculiar training has Mr. Ferguson had to enable him to take up this work in the Interior Department and perform it in a way superior to any of the 36 or 37 clerks who have been in the department any way from fifteen to five or six years?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Ferguson has had no special training which has specially suited him for the work, because he will get his special training in connection with the work in the branch. I decided to put him there on account of his literary training and capacity which I conceive to be specially good.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the hon. gentleman, coming down to the facts of the case, states that the gentleman, whom he is to put there, has no training in the work at all, but he has put him in there so that he may pass his apprentice days and may turn out by and by to be capable. Does the hon. gentleman hold, in the face of these 36 or 37 third-class clerks, that there is not one of these men who had earned promotion, who could conduct the business of that branch, and in the course of a year or two become qualified for the work. What is the peculiar work, and what are the peculiar qualifications of Mr. Ferguson?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have just explained to the hon. gentleman the reasons why I appointed him. I could not explain it more fully if I talked all evening. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that it is not always a desirable thing for the service that the service should proceed by promotion from the bottom to the top, and that there are occasions once in a while when it is desirable that the Minister should appoint a man from the outside whom he thinks to be specially qualified, on account of his intellectual qualifications and general equipment. I think that I followed a sound principle; but I think it is a principle which should only be applied in exceptional cases, cases that arise once in a while.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has utterly failed to make the application of a general rule to this particular case. I will admit that sometimes it may be better to take a man from the outside, but that it does not apply to this case in point. The hon. gentleman has failed utterly to enlighten the House. I notice that the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) listened carefully to find out what were the special reasons for this appointment. I am sure he is not satisfied, as I am not satisfied. I will have to ask the hon. Minister to give the special reasons why men who are trained in the department are passed over in favour of Mr. Ferguson, and to state what the great qualifications of Mr. Ferguson are.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot explain to the hon. gentleman any more fully than I have.

Mr. FOSTER. I submit that the hon. gentleman has given no explanation at all; simply none. He is simply playing with the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so.

Mr. FOSTER. Although my hon. friend has a good capacity for explaining things, when it suits him, he does not seem to be willing to explain that. I have a right to ask who Mr. Ferguson is, what are his capabilities, what is the special work that he has to do that you should put him over all these others.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the hon. gentleman is altogether astray when he says that I am playing with the House, because I am not. The hon. gentleman is perfectly aware that a Minister having charge of a department can simply come to a conclusion as to what is best to do for the efficiency of the service. I discussed this question with my deputy and with one or other officers in the department as to the necessity of securing a good man to undertake this work, and I appointed Mr. Ferguson because I believed him to be the best man. I thought that he was much more capable for the work than any of the third-class clerks. I simply came to the conclusion in the exercise of my judgment that the efficiency of the service would be promoted by placing this man in that position. This is the only explanation I can give to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who carefully watched every word that his colleague uttered, as to whether the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior is any explanation for placing that man in that position. It is not sufficient for the House. We are not going to take the judgment of the Minister of the Interior on trust when he is asking us for a vote of money. When he comes and asks Parliament for a grant he ought to give a full explanation as to why this extraordinary course is undertaken. Here is a case in which an extraordinary course has been taken, and I submit that the Minister has not given us any explanation at all as to why this was necessary. In what branch is this gentleman to go?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Ordnance Lands.

Mr. FOSTER. How many clerks are in the Ordnance Lands Branch?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think two.

Mr. FOSTER. Does not the Minister know?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have not got a list showing the special work at which the clerks in each small branch are engaged.

Mr. FOSTER. If the Minister is not ready to put through his Estimates, we had better pass on to something else.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes. I do not want to know what the hon. gentleman thinks, but I want to know what actually is the case. He is not talking about general Yukon charges now; he comes to this House wanting money, and he must give the House the explanation before he gets his money.

Mr. SPROULE. This man is not a draughtsman, and we should know in what business he is, whether he is a bookkeeper, a writer or what?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The work of the Ordnance Lands Branch consists generally in looking after all the lands in charge of that branch of the department. These lands are leased and sometimes sold by auction, and they are cared for by this branch of the Department of the Interior. At the head of the branch is Mr. Keyes, who has been there for several years. Mr. Ferguson was put in as an assistant so that he may become thoroughly acquainted with the work, and so that the department may not be dependent on one man for a knowledge of the affairs of the branch.

Mr. SPROULE. This man appears to be doing no technical work, and it seems to me it would be the easiest matter in the world to fill this place by the promotion of one of the clerks already in the department. The hon. gentleman tells us he does this for the efficiency of the service. He gave us a similar explanation last year and the year before with regard to a number of changes, and he said that the men were so thick in the department that they were tumbling over one another, and if the department were properly organized it would not require half the number of men to do the work. He dismissed and superannuated some for, he told us, the efficiency of the service, and he brought in his own deputy head and a few others. There are 84 officials in the department according to these figures, and there were 86 before, being a reduction of only two. Is the service as efficient now as it was before, and has the hon. gentleman succeeded in making any great saving by the dismissal or superannuation of certain clerks and the importation of others. It appears on the Estimates here that the department costs the country about the same now as it did before, notwithstanding the promise of the hon. Minister. Did this young man enter the service at the minimum of his class, and did he pass a civil service examination?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly. He entered at the minimum and he passed his examination, or otherwise he could not be appointed.

Mr. CLANCY. Who did the work previously, that this young man is now doing?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot remember at this moment, but it was some clerk who is moved to some other part of the department.

Mr. CLANCY. Then the gentleman previously there was not inefficient?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As I have explained, my reason for putting Mr. Ferguson there was that I wanted a man who I thought would be competent to take charge of the branch in case Mr. Keyes should be removed elsewhere, or promoted, or leave the service of the department. I may say that Mr. Keyes has intimated to me that there was a possibility he would leave the service of the department, and I desired to have a man there who would be competent to take charge in case his services were no longer available. I do not say that the gentleman who was there before is incompetent, but I say that at the time I made the change I did not think he was a man who would fulfil my expectations in regard to the future.

Mr. FOSTER. Is Mr. Ferguson at work in the department now?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. What status has he in the department at the present time. How is he paid?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information, but it may be out of the vote for contingencies.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the Minister had better let the matter stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very well.

The office of the Controller of the North-west Mounted Police..... $10,050

Mr. FOSTER. It appears that all who are eligible here for statutory increases got them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. The messenger is dropped and that accounts for the $300 decrease.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like the Minister of Finance to inquire as to how they propose to get along without a messenger.

The Department of Indian Affairs..... $46,500

Mr. SPROULE. There is an increase here of $1,430. Will the Minister explain that?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There are statutory increases of one first-class clerk, one second-class clerk, fourteen third-class clerks and a messenger.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are eligible for increases in this branch?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Twenty-nine.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. FOSTER. How many have received them?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Sixteen.

Mr. SPROULE. You appear to have a new man in this branch also. There were 41 last year, and there are 42 now. Where is the new man placed?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Bray, a second-class clerk, is to be appointed a first-class clerk at the same salary. Then, there is a new second-class clerk to be appointed—Mr. Antliffe, a surveyor and civil engineer, who was in the department and was paid out of the votes for contingencies, when I took charge. He was allowed to leave the service for a short time; but it was found that his services were required, and, in as much as it was quite clear that they were going to be permanently required, I thought it better to take a vote for him as a second-class clerk. He was paid $1,200 a year out of contingencies under the arrangement by my predecessor. His pay, as second-class clerk, will be $1,100.

Mr. FOSTER. What is his particular work?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He is with Mr. Bray, who is the chief man in charge of surveys. He is particularly skilful as a draughtsman, and takes charge of that kind of work in the department, particularly in connection with the returns for surveys in the Indian reserves. A second-class clerk is promoted to be a first-class clerk without an increase of salary, and a second-class clerkship is filled by a third-class clerk being promoted. There is a saving of $300 there. Another second-class clerkship was created by the promotion of Mr. Bray. By the promotion of Mr. Shore to fill the vacancy made by Mr. Bray's promotion, another saving of $300 was effected. Mr. Shore's clerkship was dropped, and a saving of $1,000 was effected there. The increases, therefore, in the total, amount to $3,330, and the decreases to $1,900, making a net increase of $1,430.

Mr. SPROULE. Did this new man commence at the minimum of his class.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, of course.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of the third-class clerks who were eligible got their statutory increases?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All who were eligible got them.

Mr. SPROULE. This branch appears to partake of the general practice apparent through these Estimates, that is, instead of the economy which we had reason to expect, and a reduction of the cost to the country, we have an increase in the cost and an increase in the number of civil servants.

The country will watch with a good deal of interest the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite, who promised so much economy before they got into office, and then superannuated or dismissed 137 men in one year, and gave the country to understand that they did that without in any way impairing the efficiency of the service, while intending in most cases not to put others in the places of those whose services were dispensed with. Now it appears that they are filling the offices as full as they were before, and going beyond that. The Civil Service Act contemplates that men going into the service shall enter at the minimum of the lowest class; but the hon. gentleman seems to reverse that rule, and appoints a man at once to the second class.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This is a growing time.

Mr. SPROULE. It appears to be growing very fast, too.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to make a suggestion to the Minister of the Interior, with reference to his estimates, particularly in the Indian Department. I want to suggest to him that he could employ an hour of his time very profitably, if he would read over a very notable address made in this House, four or five years ago, by the then Hon. David Mills, who is now the Minister of Justice and one of my hon. friend's colleagues. That address had for its subject the Indian Department, which the hon. gentleman riddled from top to bottom, coming to the conclusion that it was over-manned in every respect, both in the departmental offices and outside, and that by good organization and a fair attempt at economy, the work of the department could be very much diminished and a great saving effected. I remember the discussion very well; it was a very warm one, and Mr. Mills was very thorough and very decided. Whether we agreed with him or not, he seemed to have thoroughly studied the question, and to have come to the conclusion that the Indian Department needed a thorough reorganization in the line of cutting down offices and expenses. My hon. friend is a colleague of that same gentleman, who, I dare say, still holds the same views, whether he puts them into practical operation or not; and I think something might be gained, if my hon. friend would consult with his colleague on that subject. Forty-one clerks seemed heretofore to have been sufficient for all purposes, but now we have 42. The number is being added to, rather than diminished.

Mr. SPROULE. How many first-class clerks in this branch have got their statutory increases this year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Just one, Mr. Dalton.

Mr. SPROULE. Did any of the others get their increase last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not remember.

Mr. SPROULE. Did this gentleman get any increase last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so.

Mr. SPROULE. What were the special reasons which induced the hon. gentleman to select one from the whole staff for the statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I can only say with regard to Mr. Dalton that I acted under the very strong representations of my deputy.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the deputy recommend any of the others for the increase?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Not any other first-class clerk.

The office of the Auditor General..... $27,500

Mr. SPROULE. How is the increase of the $750 here accounted for?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. By fifteen statutory increases of $50 each. All the clerks eligible, except the three chiefs, received their statutory increases.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the increases to these clerks in that branch, because I believe they are all very efficient and hard-working. But it seems poor encouragement to the large numbers of young men in the other branches who are not getting any increase, that in the one branch every one eligible should get it. It is poor encouragement for them to go on doing their best when there seems no prospect of advancement in the future.

Mr. FOSTER. It is particularly noticeable that in every one of the departments or sub-departments in which there is a semi-independence—for instance, the printing and stationery and the Auditor General and the Mounted Police, where the heads are left very largely to their own discretion—the principle of giving the statutory increases is carried out in its entirety. They have no fish to fry, they have no favours to whom they wish to give to particular persons, they have no particular political favours to give out, they are not political heads, and in every one of these sub-departments every deserving clerk gets his statutory increase. It is only when we come to the departments directly managed by the Ministers that we find this variation, and where the third reason which the Minister of Finance so gently puts to-night, comes in. Nothing can show more clearly the salutary nature of the general rule than the action taken by these three sub-departments I have spoken of.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think if the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) will cast his eye over the manner in which the clerks in the other departments were treated by himself and compare these departments with the Auditor General's, he will find that the duties of the audit department were performed with a smaller increase of expenditure during the whole term of his office than any other department in the service. The audit department was not treated by him as generously as the others. While the expenses of all the others have increased more rapidly, I must admit—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. The expenses of the audit department have not increased proportionately with the others. If there is any department that deserves some little consideration, it is that one. It has done good service to the country; and in many cases when the ex-Minister of Finance was in power, he declined to give increases when they should have been granted.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no quarrel between the hon. gentleman and myself on that point. I was not objecting to these gentlemen getting their increases, but rather pointing it out as an argument why deserving clerks in every department, especially those with smaller salaries, should get their increases. The hon. gentleman is not right in saying that the other departments increased largely. That is not true. Take the Finance Department. I do not think there is a department in the Government that has increased less and done better work with its staff, and that is due to the very good organization and the efficient sub-officers it has had. I want to call the attention of my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to the list, commencing A 77 and running down to A 95, inclusive, of gentlemen who are receiving pay from more than one source. I would feel that this session had been wasted unless I heard the voice of my hon. friend with his old time vigour—not quite at such great length as formerly, but yet with much of the old-time vigour—denouncing these eighteen or nineteen pages of men who are feeding at the public crib from two or three troughs. He must really, to keep himself right, say a word or two about that.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am very glad indeed my hon. friend has drawn the attention of the House to that fact. I wish to inform him that I have a Bill before the House, which has had its first reading, for the purpose of correcting that evil, and I earnestly hope I will have the desired assistance of the hon. gentleman to enable me to carry it through. I say that system should be abolished. No civil servant should be paid a double salary for the duties he performs in any department in which he is employed. That system was inaugurated when hon. gentlemen opposite occupied the Treasury benches, and it grew from year to year until every one of the service was straining every nerve to find some hook on which he could hang a claim for extra allowance. I intend, with the assistance of the House, to wipe out that system, and I hope I will have the assistance of the ex-Minister of Finance.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the hon. gentleman will have more backbone with this measure than he had with the Bill introduced by him last session, when, at the beck and nod of the Postmaster General, to whom he seemed to cotton then very assiduously, he withdrew the Bill. It was a very meritorious Bill, but my hon. friend had not the backbone to press it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may explain to my hon. friend that I did not withdraw the Bill that I introduced before. The Bill of the same kind that I introduced last year never reached its second reading, simply because there were too many Bills ahead of it. I earnestly hope that this will not be the case with the present Bill; and I want to say to my hon. friends on that side, as well as to the hon. gentlemen on this side, that I will not withdraw the Bill at the beck or bidding or wish of any person.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) still lives largely on hope and trust. Let us hope that his Bill will get further than its first reading this session. But it is about as far as the hon. gentleman's Bills generally get. They die of inanition; there seems to be a process of starvation at that stage, and we do not hear much of them afterwards. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how it comes that we have not the whole of the Auditor General's Report before us yet, notwithstanding that the statute provides that it shall be laid before the House not later than seven days after the opening of the session. We have been in session 46 days, and still we have not the whole report of the Auditor General.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are some questions between the Auditor General and the Queen's Printer as to the proper portion of responsibility. In the meantime, the Auditor General informs me, he is not able to bring the report down until the 27th instant. He asserts that he has done everything he could, and the Queen's Printer asserts that he has pushed the work through as fast as possible. I am afraid that this is not a very satisfactory explanation; but, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) were in my place he could not give any other.

Mr. SPROULE. That is, practically, no information at all. Here is a state of things existing in direct violation of statutory law. And the Minister tells us: Though this state of things exists in my department, I cannot explain it and have made no provision to remedy it. I think this House is entitled to more information than has been given before being asked to vote the large amount of money that we are called upon to vote for this branch. We ought to provide so that the law shall be carried out. If there are not enough hands in the branch to get the work out as quickly as it ought to be got out, that is a reason why there should be more men appointed or something else done. But this matter is under the Minister's charge, and as head of the department, he must be held responsible, no matter where the delinquency may be. He will not be as successful as the Minister of the Interior, who threw his responsibility on his subordinates in the Yukon because they were so far away he could not get at them.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman must remember that the Auditor General is not directly an officer of my department. He is, as has been described, a semi-independent officer. Though he reports through my department, I fancy he would rather resent the idea that he is responsible to the Minister of Finance and bound to regard him as his chief. I know the Auditor General is doing the best he can; and I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is not going to suggest extravagance in the way of increasing the staff.

Mr. HUGHES. This question was discussed in the Printing Committee, and the blame was thrown on the departments. The Ministers, not having their reports in the hands of the Auditor General in time, that officer, not having the figures, could not furnish copy for the Queen's Printer. Of course, the Ministers were down on a junketting trip to Washington, and came back with nothing done. No doubt the fact that they were absent for the greater part of the year is the excuse for the delay.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no person who has been given the whole responsibility for the department except the Minister. The Auditor General, while he cannot be removed except by the consent of this House, is still sufficiently connected with the Department of Finance to make the head of that department responsible for the legal carrying out of the business of the branch. There is an open violation of a statutory law. It becomes the duty of the Minister to see that the law is observed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What would my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) do about it now? I am willing to take a suggestion.

Mr. SPROULE. If the hon. gentleman asks my advice, I would advise him to resign and allow some one to take his place who will do the work.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Would my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) take the place?

Mr. SPROULE. I was not selecting a successor for the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding). But if the members of the Government would allow me to do that for them all round

I think I could do it in a way that would greatly benefit the country.

Department of Finance and Treasury Board, including $2,000 to J. Fraser, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..$49,907 50

Mr. FOSTER. Let us hear all about this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Owing to a rearrangement in the affairs of the office, we are able to pay several statutory increases, and also a special increase to one officer, and still show a reduction in expenses. There are five clerks and one messenger eligible for the increase. We propose to give the increase to three clerks and the messenger, leaving two gentlemen who do not receive the increase. With regard to the special vote to Mr. Fraser, I may say that he is an officer holding a very responsible position. He has been promoted recently, on account of the retirement of another officer, to the rank of chief clerk in the savings bank branch. Mr. Fraser is an officer of exceptional ability who travels all over the Dominion, rendering special service in connection with the savings banks. I may say also that he is an officer of 24 years standing. Having regard to the important duties he discharges he is well entitled to this increase, an increase of $200, making his salary $2,000, instead of $1,800. His predecessor retired with the maximum of $2,400. Mr. Fraser performs the same duties at $2,000.

Mr. FOSTER. Who was his predecessor?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Anderson.

Mr. FOSTER. Who are those who get the increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Messrs. Treadwell, Boville and Saunders, and the messenger, Mr. Ostrom, jr.

Mr. FOSTER. What are the reasons?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Treadwell is a chief clerk; Mr. Boville is now a first-class clerk, recently promoted; Mr. Saunders is a second-class clerk. The messenger gets an increase of $30.

Mr. FOSTER. Who do not get the increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Garland and Mr. Jenkins. Last year, while there was some difference in other departments in that respect, all the officials of my department received the increase. This year, only a portion receive the increase, and the two gentlemen I have named have not been recommended for it. But it is only fair to my deputy to say that he would, no doubt, have recommended all, but that it was understood that all could not receive it. All these gentlemen are excellent officers. I would not have it understood that failure to get that increase is at all a reflection upon them, as hon. gentlemen opposite have assumed. Nor would I have it thought that these gentlemen were discriminated against. They are all good officers.

Mr. SPROULE. But they are discriminated against.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I cannot help it.

Mr. FOSTER. While the hon. gentleman has made the immense saving of $100, he has done an injustice to two of his clerks, and two as good clerks as those who have received the increase.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wish to do any injustice to any of the clerks. My hon. friend is wrong about the saving; the saving is much more than that.

Mr. CLANCY. Were the statutory increases withheld in these cases for the purpose of showing a decrease in the expenditure of the department this year?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, for if they had received the increase there would still be a decrease in the expenditure of the department. So that was not the main consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. Do I understand the Minister of Finance to say that the deputy did not recommend these other gentlemen for the increase?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt the deputy, if the matter had been in his hands, would have recommended them all. But it was understood that two would not get an increase this year, and these two were left out. But I am quite satisfied he would have been pleased to have them all receive it.

Mr. FOSTER. Could not $100 have been spared, with the revenues as they are? I am sure there must have been another reason.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, I can assure my hon. friend there was not. I want him to accept my statement.

Mr. FOSTER. How long has Garland been an officer of that department?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. He entered the service in 1870. He is now receiving $1,700.

The Department of Customs, including $1,300 for R. W. Breadner, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $36,700

Mr. SPROULE. How many promotions did the hon. gentleman make here?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). There are 11 statutory increases.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are eligible?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Twenty-five.

Mr. FOSTER. How many received it?

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Ten received the $50 that they are at liberty to get under the statute. Another receives $100.

Mr. CLANCY. How many were recommended for the increase?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. All the 11 were recommended.

Mr. SPROULE. Were any more than 11 recommended?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The 11 were recommended, that answers the question.

Mr. SPROULE. No, I respectfully submit it does not answer the question; it answers a part of the question. My question is: Were there others recommended outside these 11? That is what we would like to know. If they were eligible, so far as efficiency went—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman is speaking of eligibility, there were 25 who would be eligible. These 11 were recommended.

Mr. SPROULE. But the Minister either understands me and does not want to answer the question, or else he does not want to understand what I mean. There were 25 eligible to receive this statutory increase. I was asking how many of those who did not get the statutory increase were recommended for it by the deputy?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The 11 that got it were recommended by the deputy head.

Mr. SPROULE. That is only trifling; it is no answer at all, and no man knows it better than the hon. gentleman. Three times he has been asked how many were recommended outside those who got it. He says these 11 were recommended. He has told us that two or three times over. We want to know how many of those who did not get it were recommended.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Those that were recommended got it, those that did not get it were not recommended.

Mr. SPROULE. None of them?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Does the hon. gentleman understand it?

Mr. SPROULE. If I correctly understand the hon. gentleman, there were none of those recommended who did not get it. Is that correct?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. That is what I said.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman has said there were 25 eligible, and 11 received a statutory increase. I want to ask the hon. gentleman how many out of the 25 who were eligible were recommended for statutory increases?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have stated that when these were prepared for the Estimates and decided upon, 11 were recommended, and 11 got it.

Mr. CLANCY. And no more?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No more when these Estimates were decided upon.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows that he is not answering the question. There ought to be no secrecy in the matter. My hon. friend must not think that he has a department there which belongs exclusively to him. It is a department that the country puts there, and the country pays for it. Now my hon. friend was asked a simple question, and he has a right to answer it. The question was whether the deputy of this department recommended any others for the statutory increase except the 11 who got it. The hon. gentleman quibbled for 15 minutes, and then pretending to give a very honest answer, what did he say? He said when these were decided upon only the 11 were recommended. They were decided upon in Council, where the deputy head was not. But still that does not answer the question as to whether the deputy recommended to the Minister that more than 11 should receive the statutory increase.

Mr. SPROULE. How many of those who got the statutory increase were in the first batch?

Mr. CRAIG. I cannot understand why the Minister of Customs does not answer a simple question. I think we have a right to an answer, besides I do not suppose the Estimates will pass until the question is answered. I do not think we have got an answer yet. Of course an answer was given in a sort of way, but it is not satisfactory to this side of the House. The question is, how many were recommended by the deputy for the increase in addition to those 11 who are getting it. Were any others recommended by the deputy head at any time, not when these Estimates were finally decided upon, but before they were decided upon?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not know what more I can say to the hon. gentleman than I have said. What do hon. gentlemen wish to know? I have said that those 11 that are here recommended were recommended by the deputy under the statute. As I have said, there were 25 that might get it under the law. I suppose if the deputy was to send in a recommendation that under the law there were so many, 25, that might get it, you would not call that a recommendation that could be acted upon.

Mr. CRAIG. Tell us what was done, and we will form our own judgment.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I asked the deputy to make a selection of those that he thought most deserving among the officials, and the selection was made, and the increase was given to the 11 I have mentioned.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the Minister of Customs, if the Deputy Minister recommended only these eleven.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not think we should call it a recommendation. I said to the Deputy Minister: You can send over the names of those that you think are eligible for the increase under the Act. And I subsequently said: There will have to be a selection made. And he made this selection.

Mr. HUGHES. When the Deputy Minister made the selection, did he select only these eleven.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Yes; he selected the eleven, as I said before.

Mr. FOSTER. The question is not as to the selection, but as to the recommendation that came from the Deputy Minister. I submit, that the Minister of Customs is not doing himself justice, and is not doing the Government justice. When he quibbles upon a little question like this, what will he do with the public business? Is that the way he acts with the importers, with Schaitlin, Fitzgibbon & Co., and others against whom charges of infraction of the law are made. The hon. gentleman is putting himself in a most invidious position before the House and the country. He was asked a simple English question; why does he not give a simple English answer?

Mr. HUGHES. Was the instruction given to the Deputy Minister to select eleven, or did the Deputy Minister fix it at eleven? Was the number of eleven fixed by the Minister or by the Deputy Minister?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The eleven were selected by the Deputy Minister, with the approval of the Minister as well.

Mr. HUGHES. Who fixed the number? Do not quibble—

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The number was fixed by the selection. Add them up, and they total eleven.

Mr. HUGHES. Did the Minister select the eleven or the Deputy Minister?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think, at the time when it was decided, it was by the Deputy. Of course, as I said, I was present myself as well.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman, no doubt, listened to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) a moment ago, and that was, that all could not receive statutory increases, and, therefore, some must be left out. Did the hon. gentleman give such an intimation to his deputy before making the selection of eleven, or did he leave it open to the deputy to recommend all who might be eligible to be recommended for the statutory increase? If the hon. gentleman put some check upon the number, I can quite understand that, probably, the deputy would not follow out the line that he would on other grounds, namely, recommend every person who might be entitled to it, but that he would select the most deserving, as he thought, from among the number that had the right to receive the statutory increase.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman's question is a little involved, but I think I can answer it. I said to the deputy, that all that are eligible for the increase cannot be granted an increase this year, but there may be some who are specially deserving for good reason, and that a selection of that number should be made. I asked him that he would make such a selection, which he did, and the selection is now before the House for approval. I do not think that I can answer more clearly or fairly than that.

Mr. CLANCY. Did the hon. gentleman make his limit eleven?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not make the limit eleven.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the Minister of Customs tell us at what page in the Auditor General's Report we will find the names? I have made a hurried inspection, but I cannot find any Customs Department in it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I have not the Auditor General's Report here. What names does the hon. gentleman want to find?

Mr. SPROULE. The names of those who are in that department.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The hon. gentleman will find them in the Civil Service List, which I have here.

Mr. SPROULE. They should be somewhere in the Auditor General's Report. I cannot find them here at all, and I do not think they are in it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I am not responsible for the Auditor General's Report.

Mr. SPROULE. If we have not that portion of the Auditor General's Report before us which gives this information, it seems to me that we should not go on passing estimates.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not brought down.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Is this the only department that is not down?

Mr. FOSTER. This is the only department, so far as I know of.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The information can be got from the Civil Service List.

Mr. CLANCY.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not give the information in the form that we should have it.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It gives the number of first-class clerks and third-class clerks right here.

Mr. SPROULE. We do not want to have any more quoting of documents that are not before the House.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman has not the documents, it is not my fault.

Mr. SPROULE. I submit, that, until the Auditor General's Report is here, we should not continue passing these estimates. When we are considering a department and dealing with the service, we should have the information before us. That is the Civil Service List, and not the Auditor General's Report at all.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Here is the information, with all the details, names of the officers, their salaries, how long they have been in office, when appointed, and so on, every bit of information that you would expect to get in the Auditor General's Report; and, if the hon. gentleman sends up to Mr. Botterell, he will get the Civil Service List.

Mr. SPROULE. That is on a par with the information we have been able to drag out of the hon. gentleman; but it seems to me to be trifling with the House to ask the House to vote estimates, when we have not the information we should have. I would advise the hon. gentleman to ask the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), if he would allow a single item to pass in this House before he had the Auditor General's Report in his hands, days and weeks before, so that he could go over it on Sunday, Monday, and every other day, that he might be prepared and have it right here to turn up every item. We are asked to vote these items without the information that the House should be in possession of.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we ought to have the Auditor General's Report before passing these items.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I know the ex-Minister of Finance does not think anything of the kind for a moment. He knows very well that the Civil Service List is what should be gone by in the discussion of these matters. We have here information in detail about every employee: his age is given, his first entry into the service, the date of his present appointment, such information as you will not get in the Auditor General's Report. My hon. friend may look as grave as he likes, but he knows that it is a fact that these public documents can be got from Mr. Botterell, just the same as the Auditor General's Report. Speaking of the hon. member for North Wellington, I would venture to say, that when discussing such matters as these, he always had the Civil Service List before him. When a question was asked of the Minister, Why do you give such a one one hundred dollars, he would turn to the Civil Service List to see how long that officer had been in the service, in order to see if he was entitled to it. If the hon. gentleman wants the item to stand, I have not the slightest objection, but I cannot see where their objection lies, and I think he will admit that, if there is to be intelligent criticism, it can be made much better with the Civil Service List. You can get it from Mr. Botterell, or I can send it over to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES. Are the names of the temporary clerks in that book?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. No, not of the temporary clerks.

Mr. HUGHES. Have not the temporary clerks received an increase of salary?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If my hon. friend will understand---

Mr. HUGHES. I understand.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Well, perhaps he does not understand. These temporary clerks are provided for in contingencies which are not under discussion now, and which may not be reached for two or three days yet.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice that a great change has taken place this session as compared with last session in my hon. friend (Mr. Paterson), and I have an idea as to what brought it about. My hon. friend (Mr. Paterson) has so often seen himself advertised in public as one of the Bytown coons that he cannot forbear to play that role in the House. I think he is placed at the end of the half circle, and he is striving to keep up that reputation; but I submit that this is not the place for that spectacular drama known as the Bytown coons; we are here for serious business. My hon. friend is now in a very jocund state, but he may have a longer face than mine before he gets all his Estimates through. Did the Deputy Minister of Customs recommend any other than these eleven for a statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I told the deputy to send a list of all who were eligible in the department. That list was made, and I subsequently told him that all could not receive the statutory increases, and that a selection would have to be made. The selection was made, and I have repeated that half a dozen times. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) makes this allusion to Bytown coons, and he can be personal if he pleases; of course, I could be personal too, but I do not believe any good could come of it. I answered as clearly as I could the questions put me, but my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Hughes) does not seem to understand. I repeat that I told the Deputy Minister to send me a list of all that were eligible, and I subsequently told him that all could not be granted, and a selection would have to be made.

Mr. TAYLOR. Of how many?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I did not tell him how many, and I have repeated that time and again. The selection was made, and these eleven were the ones selected. I stated that from the first I have said nothing different, and that is all I can tell in reference to the matter.

Mr. HUGHES. Did any of these eleven get an increase last year?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I speak subject to correction, but I think Mr. Breadner got an increase last year, and Mr. Farrow also. I think Mr. Bennett did not, but I think some of the others did get an increase last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the Minister will give us the names of the eleven.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Mr. Bennett is getting an increase. He has been in the service since 1871, and he is being promoted from first-class clerk to chief clerk of statistics, and I am giving him the $50. I think he is about the oldest officer in the department. I am giving the increase to Mr. Farrow, who is the accountant of the department. He had an increase last year of, I think $150. Mr. Morin, who is what might be called the chief clerk of the seizure branch, is getting $50 increase this year, and I think he got it last year also. Mr. Farrow, the accountant, is getting $1,700 now. As hon. gentlemen will understand, the accountant's work in my department is very heavy, and heavier perhaps than it has been in years past. A great many hundreds of refunds of claims necessarily come in through our preferential tariff. Invoices coming from England and not having certificates upon them as required by the department, have to pay the general rate of duty, and when the parties get their goods they send back to England and get a properly certified invoice, and then a refund is given to them. This entails a vast amount of work. Mr. Farrow estimates that $100,000 in refunds have been regulated in that way, and those who are conversant with the department will understand that that entails a very great deal of extra labour. There are six third-class clerks who get the increase. Selection of these was made by the deputy and approved of by me, and his recommendation was that not only were they good and faithful officers, but that their being on low salaries I would be justified in asking the House to grant them an increase of $50 each. So, all the third-class clerks are getting that increase. The highest that is paid to any one of them is $800; two get $700, one $600, and another $500. Two second-class clerks who get the increase are Mr. Breadner, the chief clerk, who gets $100. Mr. Breadner has to do a very great deal of work, has very long hours, and without in the slightest degree undervaluing the work of any of the officers in the department, I think his increase is justified on the ground that his work is more arduous and his hours are longer. I repeat that in the case of the third-class clerks, the judgment formed by the deputy, and in which I agreed, that their salary being so low I might fairly ask that they get the $50 extra.

Mr. CLANCY. The hon. gentleman states that the other clerks have done their work well, and I would like to know why they did not get the increase on the same principle.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. All the third-class clerks got the increase. They have very low salaries, ranging from $500 to $800, which is not a large salary in Ottawa, especially if a man has a family depending upon him. In the case of Mr. Breadner one can understand that a man having the responsibility of the department on him, will work longer hours and harder than the other clerks in it, although they have done their work well also. It is the same way in the case of Mr. Morin. Mr. Bain, who is my private secretary, and has a great deal of work to do, also gets the increase. The other is Mr. Bennett, a first-class clerk, who is advanced to the position of chief clerk of statistics, and gets $50 more than any one else in his branch.

Mr. SPROULE. It is refreshing to see that the hon. gentleman has come out of cold storage and is thawing out considerably, so that we are getting a good deal more information now than we did before. He says the civil service list, which he has but which none of us have, gives all the information, but it does not contain a list of the temporary clerks. The Auditor General's Report does, and I submit that is a reason why this item should stand until we get the balance of the Auditor's report which is promised for the day after to-morrow.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Under this item we are discussing only those who are in the permanent civil service. The extra clerks do not come under review now. They are included in item 37.

Mr. SPROULE. In going over these items we want to ascertain the total number in any branch, so as to get at the cost of the branch.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. If the hon. gentleman wishes them, I can give now the names of the extra clerks, though they come properly under item 37. Those for 1899-1900 will be as follows, if the House votes the amount:—Fred. Norris, $750; W.

Mr. PATERSON.

G. Bishop, $750; M. Jolivet, $600; Miss Daws, $540; Miss Young, $490; Miss Gaultier, $430; George Rathbone, $400; and a messenger, $300. These amounts will give them the statutory increase of $30 each, and the two first named, Fred. Norris and W. G. Bishop, are provided for notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary. The way that came about was this. Last year when the Estimates were under discussion, one of the first-class clerks who was off on leave of absence, taking a trip out west, died west of Winnipeg, and on concurrence on the Main Estimates I asked that the $1,750 which he was in receipt of be struck out, and it was struck out. In the Supplementary Estimates I took a vote for this $1,750, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary, and of that amount I used $1,400 to engage two men who are now in the employ, and to these two men it is proposed to give this year $50 each over what they had last year.

Mr. HUGHES. Are Norris and Bishop newly appointed officers?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Norris, I think, was an extra clerk before he received this much, being paid before out of contingencies the sum of $400. I think Mr. Bishop was attached to the Montreal office and was brought from the Montreal office up to the office here.

The Department of Inland Revenue, including $2,200 to F. R. E. Campeau and $1,550 to J. F. Shaw, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act..... $37,660

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the increase here?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Mr. Campeau is marked in this item as receiving a salary of $2,400, but that is a mistake, and by referring to page 16 of the Estimates the hon. gentleman will see that he is only put down for $2,200. Formerly he had $2,000, and I recommended an addition of $200 more. He entered the service in 1871, and a few years ago he was given the work of another officer along with his own, and has been doing the work of the two ever since. I wanted to raise his salary for the past two years, and I wished to ask for $2,400, but ultimately I felt compelled, in order not to increase too much our estimates, to reduce the amount to $2,200. Mr. Shaw is put down as getting $1,550, but by referring to page 16 it will be seen that he is there put down to $1,500, which is a mistake. He ought to have been put down at $1,550. I suppose I may as well anticipate the questions of my hon. friends, and at once inform them that there were ten officers in the department entitled to the statutory increase. Of those I have recommended seven, and the other three I did not recommend because they were appointed only a short time ago, in 1897 or 1898, and I did not see that they had the same right to the statutory increase as those who have been so much longer in the service. For instance, of the first-class clerks, one whom I recommended was appointed in 1872 and the other in 1880. Then of the second-class clerks, one was appointed in 1883, one in 1874, and one in 1888. Those men were so long in the service and worked so satisfactorily that I thought they deserved the increase, which, by the way, was in no case given last year. None of the inside officers got the statutory increase last year, and of the three that I did not recommend two were appointed in 1897 and one in 1898. In the third-class clerks, I recommended one who had only $630, an increase of $100. He had been appointed in 1887, and did his work in a satisfactory manner. The other one had been appointed only in 1885, and his salary was but $550 a year, so I recommended an increase of $50, which puts it at $600. Then there are two messengers, one receiving $460, to whom I have recommended an increase of $30, and the other received $360, to whom I have also recommended an increase of $30.

Mr. ROSAMOND. There was not much of a growing time there.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Well, I do not think I have acted hardly with these officers, but have done my best, and my hon. friends will notice that the only three I did not recommend were those appointed since we came into power. The others were all appointed by my hon. friends opposite. That is not exactly the reason I recommended them, but because I think they deserve the increase.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice in this case there is the same objection that I raised in the other, that we have not the Auditor General's Report before us, but the hon. Minister has been good enough to give us so much information in detail that it is not so necessary. How many temporary clerks are there in this branch?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I cannot say, because I did not think that question would be asked at this stage, but only when we came to contingencies, out of which the temporary clerks are paid.

Mr. SPROULE. That is one reason why it is desirable the whole of the Auditor General's Report should be before us so that we could turn up the information for ourselves.

Mr. CRAIG. I notice that one of the third-class clerks is given an increase of $100, and I do not think that can be done without violation of the Civil Service Act.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act.

Mr. CRAIG. That is not so stated.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I explained a moment ago that this increase of $100 was on account of length of service.

Mr. CRAIG. I thought that could not be paid unless with the proviso "notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act."

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think we have it there.

Mr. CRAIG. No.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the suggestion. I move that after the word "Shaw" be added "and $730 to A. McCullough."

Motion agreed to.

Department of Marine and Fisheries, including $2,000 to A. W. Owen, and $1,500 to F. H. Cunningham, as first-class clerk, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil Service Act. $55,085

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) will explain.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The accountant of the department has been in receipt of $1,800 a year. The deputy submitted a statement of his work, and recommended him for an increase of salary. I made an examination with the deputy and satisfied myself that, having regard to the salary paid to the accountants in other departments, this gentleman was receiving a much smaller sum.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the accountant?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Owen. He was appointed before I took charge of the department. I propose an increase of $200 for him. As to the other increases, Mr. Venning gets $50—

Mr. FOSTER. Was he chief clerk?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is the other chief clerk?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Magee. His salary is $2,000. Mr. Venning will get $1,900 if this increase is agreed to. The assistant hydrographer is Mr. Anderson, and the chief, Mr. Stewart, recommended that he be given an increase of $100. He is a technical officer, and, after looking into it, I recommended it to the Council and it is before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What about the increase to Mr. Cunningham?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; he was appointed inspector of fisheries, and for that he gets $100 extra. The hon. gentleman will remember that after the decision of the Privy Council in the fisheries case, I dismissed the fisheries officers in Ontario, and I thought that, rather than appoint an officer at $1,400 or $1,500 to inspect eastern Ontario, Mr. Cunningham could do the work for an extra sum of $100, and that is what he got the increase for. The only other increases were those of the third-class clerks, Mr. Guion, Mr. C. W. White, Mr. Skelly and Mr. Beau-lieu get $50 each.

Mr. FOSTER. How many were eligible for the increase?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Twenty-three besides six technical officers. Those who received the increase are those I have mentioned, and Mr. Kelly, the messenger, who gets $30.

Mr. SPROULE. I must raise the same objection in this case as I did before. It seems to me that an advance of $200 at one step is too much for a man who is already getting a respectable salary. I have always thought it fair that a salary should advance by $50 a year, because that is a gradual advance. Such an advance was evidently contemplated by the Civil Service Act, but I do not think there is any justification for making large advances in salaries. There is no economy in it and it is not just to the other members of the civil service. I think there should be most exceptional reasons for such a step.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think that the reasoning of the hon. gentleman, on the general principle, is unexceptionable. If I had not made a personal examination and seen the extraordinary amount of work this gentleman did, and the enormous increase that has taken place in it within the last four or five years, I should not have thought for a moment of recommending such an increase. But, among other things, he has to sign twenty thousand or thirty thousand cheques for bounty work and must stay up late at night for weeks and weeks. I consulted with the deputy and satisfied myself that this increase should be granted, being justified on very exceptional grounds.

Mr. CRAIG. I notice that there is no mention here of Mr. Anderson's increase being notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act. It is in the detailed estimate, but not here.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was looking at the detailed estimate, and am much obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Craig) for his suggestion. I will move that the resolution be amended by putting in after the word "clerk" the words "and $900 to F. Anderson."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. Will the Minister say if he had any inspectors for eastern Ontario?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I had assigned to Cunningham the duties of inspecting eastern Ontario, with $100 increase of salary. He was employed in the department, and I thought he could very well do that work.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. HUGHES. What inspection does he perform?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He goes all over eastern Ontario, and reports to the department how the regulations are being carried out by the local fishery officers.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask who inspects the western district?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same gentleman who was there before.

The Department of the Geological Survey. $53,150

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The increases are $200 each to Messrs. Faribault, McInnes, Ami and Barlow. There is an increase of $100 to Mr. Chalmers, and statutory increases to 12 officers, that is, all the technical officers except those who have special increases that I have just mentioned. Then Messrs. Dowling and Senecal are transferred from the second-class to the technical class. Their salaries amount to $2,600. So that the whole increases amount to $4,100. The retirement of Mr. Tyrrell takes off a salary of $1,850. The salary of his successor will be $1,050, making a saving of $800, leaving the increase at $3,300. Then Mr. White, the officer who has done the geographical work for the Geological Survey, is being transferred to the Interior Department, which will effect a saving of $1,600. One of the other officers is taking up his work, a second-class clerk whose salary will be $1,200. So that the net increase is $500.

Mr. FOSTER. How many are eligible for increases altogether?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All the technical officers get the statutory increase, except those who get the special increase, and whom I have mentioned.

Mr. FOSTER. How many of your officers in that department are eligible for statutory increase?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think 19. Twelve get the regular $50, four get $200 each.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the ground for giving these four men the $200 each?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The special ground was a special report from the director of the survey in favour of the gentlemen named and in favour of the amounts which I have mentioned.

Mr. SPROULE. If I understand the hon. gentleman correctly he accepted the recommendation of his subordinate, and has acted upon it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Certainly, I accepted it, after discussing it with him and agreeing with the views that he expressed. I may say that my view in regard to persons connected with the Geological Survey, is, that they are not overpaid. I think, perhaps, they have more cause of complaint on the ground of inadequacy of salary than any other person in the service. In view of the special and strong recommendations of the director, I felt that it was a reasonable and proper thing to accept his recommendation.

Mr. HUGHES. May I ask the hon. Minister how many officers have left the Geological Survey this year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Just one, Mr. Tyrrell.

Mr. FOSTER. Has any person been appointed in his place yet?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The position has been offered tentatively. Two gentlemen have been corresponded with by Mr. Dawson, but the gentlemen corresponded with were not at liberty to accept and we have not yet found a man properly qualified who is willing to accept.

Mr. FOSTER. You seem to have two more technical officers there than last year?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, because we have selected two of the men who were second-class clerks for promotion, under this vote, Dowling and Senecal, who have been in the service for some years. We are promoting them from second-class clerkships to technical positions.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. Minister of the Interior has not given us the special reasons which induced him to make such large increases in the salaries of these four men, because the other Ministers, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries particularly, very frankly admitted that a Minister has no right to give such large increases without giving strong special reasons for it. The Minister of the Interior has given no reason at all for saying that the men in this department are not very well paid. That may be his opinion, but, perhaps, the people in the country will think that they are very well paid. I cannot say whether they are well paid or underpaid, but I think that the Minister should give an explanation of the reasons before asking the House to vote that large amount.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Chairman, I presume the hon. gentleman refers to the special increases of $200.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are granted upon the report of the director of the survey, which reads as follows:—

Mr. E. B. Faribault is science graduate of Laval University. During the summers of 1881, of 1882, he assisted Mr. Fletcher in Nova Scotia. In July, 1883, he was appointed to the permanent staff of the survey at $700 per annum, and continued as Mr. Fletcher's assistant until 1890, when he began independent surveys and explorations in Nova Scotia, on which he is still engaged. Mr. Faribault's later work has been chiefly in connection with the gold-fields of Nova Scotia, and has resulted in the production of numerous maps and detailed plans which have already proved to be of great value to the miners. He has become thoroughly conversant with the mode of occurrence of gold in the province, and his investigations are contributing largely to the expansion of the mining industry under new and improved conditions. It is recommended that his present salary be increased from $1,450 to $1,650.

I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman wants me to read all the reports in regard to the gentleman mentioned. They are on the same lines, and make the recommendations which I have accepted. I may say, further, in regard to the officers of the Geological Survey, who have been long in the service and are well qualified, that we are in danger constantly of losing the services of these men. The development of mining in Canada has rendered the services of these men very valuable, so that men who, in former years, perhaps, could not easily have secured lucrative employment, now have a demand for their services. Mr. Tyrrell has left. Mr. McConnell remained with us for a salary that is about half of what he has been offered. Mr. Ferrier, an officer of the survey, and an experienced man, left us before. I very much fear that, unless we are prepared to deal with reasonable liberality, these valuable men will be lost to the service.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that there is, perhaps, a good deal of force in that, and it may be that these men are not overpaid, being men of professional and technical ability; but still, there is another feature of it that I think should not be lost sight of. When these officers are here, they are permanently employed, and, although it may be at a lower salary than they could temporarily get, there are reasons which should be a strong inducement to them to remain in the service permanently for, at the expiration of their term they will have a very respectable superannuation allowance given to them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite recognize what the hon. gentleman has said, and it is because of what he says that we are able to keep these men. If it were not for the advantages of the Government service, these expert men would leave us, because nearly all of them could get larger remuneration elsewhere.

Mr. BERGERON. Would the hon. gentleman give us the names of those whose salaries are to be increased by $200?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Mr. Fairbault, Mr. McInnes, Dr. Ami and Mr. Barlow.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior, what steps have been taken to have a new building erected for the Geological Survey.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All I can say upon that subject is this : The matter has received a very considerable amount of attention from the Government, and the Minister of Public Works is having plans of the building prepared for submission to the Government.

Department of Trade and Commerce.... $9,240

Mr. SPROULE. We want some explanation from the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. FOSTER. Who is to be made the chief clerk ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Mr. Nutting.

Mr. FOSTER. What did he get before ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend desires that that item should stand until the Minister of Trade and Commerce returns, I have no objection. Although the changes are slight, I am not prepared to give an explanation of them.

Mr. FOSTER. What did Mr. Nutting get before ?

Mr. TAYLOR. This department is no needed. Why is the Minister not here to explain it.

Mr. BERGERON. The Minister should be here, there is no doubt about that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Where is your leader ?

Mr. BERGERON. My leader has no work here to-night.

Mr. FOSTER. Better let the item stand.

Mr. BERGERON. We must have the Auditor General's Report before we pass this.

Resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.50 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 26th April, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 83) respecting the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company.—(Mr. Rutherford.)

Mr. HUGHES.

Bill (No. 84) respecting the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway Company, and to change its name to the Quebec Railway, Light and Power Company.—(Mr. Somerville.)

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 85) further to amend the Railway Act.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the explanation of that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amendments are minor and merely formal ; not very important.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

AMENDMENT TO THE INSURANCE ACT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 86) to further amend the Insurance Act. He said : The chief provision of this Bill relates to the rate of interest which it is assumed will be earned by insurance companies on their reserve funds. Under the present law the assumption is that insurance companies can invest their moneys to realize 4½ per cent, and the computation for safety of policy-holders is based upon that rate of interest. It is hardly necessary for me to remind the House that the tendency for a number of years has been towards a lower rate of interest. Insurance companies find now that they cannot obtain investments which will realize that rate. If they fail to realize that rate of interest they fail to come up to the standard, and no longer can guarantee the security that the Insurance Act contemplates. Practically we know that companies cannot realize that rate of interest. It is proposed to change the rate of interest from 4½ per cent to 3½ per cent, that is to say, that the calculation shall be so made that if they realize 3½ per cent interest, the accumulation will be sufficient for the protection of the policy-holder. It is intended that this rate of 3½ per cent shall apply to all new business after the first day of January next. As respects existing business, a reasonable period is allowed to elapse before the Act shall become operative. It will not affect existing business until after seven years have elapsed. With these brief remarks, I beg to move the first reading of the Bill. At the second reading, I will ask that it be referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee, where all parties interested may be heard. There is one other important feature, and it is in relation to the power of investment of the various companies. That matter has been dealt with by separate Bills, and the powers of investment varies with different companies. Some companies have the right to invest in certain classes of securities, while others have not the same right. The intention of this Bill is to take the latest judgment of Parliament on the question and make that a standard under which all companies shall have the same right of investment. It is not proposed, however, to take away any right of investment from any company which it may have obtained in years past.

Mr. SPROULE. That would widen the range of investment.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It will widen the range for some companies and will not take away any power which a company has under its own charter.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.
