Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Did you say leading paper? Leading what?

Mr. HANSELL: When I said "leading," I had in mind one of our largest and most widely circulated papers. On the front page in very large headlines spread across two columns—I do not know what point type it is, but you could read it about a mile away—

Mr. DUPUIS: What is the date?

Mr. HANSELL: Thursday, June 5, and this article is captioned in big letters, "Alberta Grain For Nazis?" There is a question mark after the headline. It is really a question that is asked, but people read the headline without seeing the question mark. The intent behind a heading of that kind is very obvious to some of us, that the paper is attempting to brand the Alberta government as pro-nazi.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What paper is that?

Mr. HANSELL: The Calgary Daily Herald. I do not know whether it was Alberta grain or not. What difference does it make where the grain was grown?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Who is responsible for the shipment?

Mr. HANSELL: That is the point. The article goes on to tell the story, but we all know that people do not read all the details in an article. This government is responsible for shipments that go out of Canada, and when we see things like that happening while the authorities may be fiddling around—perhaps I should not use that term—while the authorities may be picking up a bit of a suspect here because he was heard to say something over there, I say that sort of thing is not good for Canada. That is what I mean when I say we are in danger of making great psychological blunders in connection with this whole matter.

[Mr. Hansell.]

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): What will the Minister of Justice do about it?

Mr. HANSELL: I do not know what he can do about it.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I know what he should do.

Mr. HANSELL: I am arguing that that sort of thing is not something that happens just once a year. It is the sort of thing that goes on all the time in certain parts of this country, and it is the sort of thing that causes disunity. It is the sort of thing that retards proper patriotism. It is the sort of thing that causes people to question their loyalty to Canada, people who want to be loyal. It is the sort of thing that plants seeds of doubt in their minds.

As the hon. member for Acadia remarks, it raises in the minds of the people a question as to the sincerity of the government in its war effort. That must be recognized, although I personally do not question its sincerity. In view of the state the country was in when the war broke out, and of what has had to be done on short order, I am not going to suggest that any other government could have done better. If any blame is to be attributed to our lack of preparation it will have to be focused upon the statesmanship of this country during the past fifteen or twenty years. It is there that the trouble lies, not necessarily in the present set-up. I shall have more to say upon that topic, which is not relevant to the defence of Canada regulations, upon some other occasion.

I was dealing with the psychological effect of these regulations as regards our war effort. I do not suppose that at present we are shipping scrap metal to Japan; I could not prove either that we are or that we are not. But certainly we were doing so not very long ago. Now we are going out in pursuance of our salvage campaign and asking people to contribute their scrap metal. Certain farmers who have a good deal of scrap metal have commented to me along this line: "It is all very well to ask for scrap metal now, but it is a known fact that hundreds of thousands of tons were shipped to the axis powers or to Japan prior to the war, and perhaps since the war." Such things have a tremendous effect on public opinion. If we are to achieve a total war effort in this country, it will pay the government and other hon. members to be very careful, even in the minutest detail, of the way in which we carry it on, and of the effect of the defence of Canada regulations upon the mind of the people and their relation to our entire war effort.

Personally I am in favour of the adoption of this report. The recommendations contained therein are an improvement upon what we had before. I believe that the Minister of Justice has been unduly blamed for a number of things which, even though he may be responsible for them, must be viewed in the light of the fact that he is in a position which has been imposed upon him, and it is not altogether a happy one. In my opinion he has done his work exceptionally well. I can take no other attitude, not because of any compulsion upon me, but because it is my conviction that he desires to act fairly in the administration of the regulations for which he is responsible.

May I specifically call attention to the recommendation for the continuance of the work of this committee or of a similar body during the next session, and for a further and more detailed investigation with regard to naturalization, and regulations relating to the deportation of those who have come under the odium of the defence of Canada regulations.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BROOKE CLAXTON (St. Lawrence-St. George): Previous speakers in this debate have all emphasized the importance of this matter, and, in my submission, quite properly so, because it concerns two subjects of the utmost importance to all of us at this time, namely, the safety of the state, and the liberty of the subject. Wrapped up in those two subjects is the whole reason why we are fighting this war, and in their relation lies the difference between ourselves and the system for which we are fighting, and the system of nazi Germany.

The subject is important for another reason. It is not only necessary that laws should be just; it is equally necessary that they should be recognized as just. Owing partly to the fact that this subject has not been discussed very much in parliament there has grown up a considerable amount of misunderstanding and misapprehension about the defence of Canada regulations and the way in which they operate. The best way to clear up that misapprehension and convey understanding and confidence is by debate in this house. It is interesting to note that in the British house, despite their natural preoccupation with the war, this subject is probably more fully discussed than any other single subject outside the conduct of the war itself, and that in Britain parliamentary concurrence is required in every change made in the regulations.

The defence of Canada regulations are designed to promote the safety of Canada. We are in a war for survival, and it is impossible to overestimate or exaggerate the great seriousness of the situation in which we and our allies find ourselves. We know that the enemy has used every means in every country to accomplish his fell designs. We have seen the long roll of countries that have been pulled down to slavery by ruthless aggression and propaganda and fifth-column activities—Austria, Memel, Danzig, Poland, Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, France, Roumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Greece. We have seen what happened there, and we do not intend that it shall happen here.

The defence of Canada regulations are as much designed to defend us in what we are doing in this country as are the munitions of war with which we arm our troops. They are a fighting weapon, and for that purpose they are being used. Unless Canada is kept free, the freedom of Canadians is not worth anything.

I intend to deal principally with regulations 21 and 22. Regulation 21 provides that the Minister of Justice, if satisfied that with a view to preventing any particular person from acting in any manner prejudicial to the public safety or the safety of the state it is necessary so to do, may issue an order for his detention. The words "acting in any manner prejudicial to the public safety or the safety of the state" are abstract, but if we substitute for them "the safety of Canada," the place in which we live, the place we love, then the people of Canada would recognize more the purpose and need of the regulations.

Detention is not ordered by reason of the commission of any offence. It is not a criminal proceeding; it is purely precautionary and preventive. The purpose of the regulation is to render harmless any person who might reasonably be suspected of plotting to cause harm to the state. Some critics of the regulations suggest that we should "be tough," that we should lock them all up. But who is to tell who "they" are that we should lock up? That is the purpose of the regulations and of the procedure.

Other critics of the regulations say that the procedure should be judicial, that the whole thing should be assimilated to a trial before a court. But the great mass of the people, and surely all hon. members, recognize that the prime purpose of the regulation is to protect the safety of the state, the safety of Canada, the defence of Canada; and it is of paramount importance that that purpose should come first in all our considerations.

Second, it is the responsibility of the government of Canada to take all means that may be necessary to secure the safety of the state. That responsibility rests squarely on the shoulders of the government, and the government cannot divest itself of this responsibility by turning it over to any court. No Minister of Justice would feel obliged to follow the recommendations of anyone else. The responsibility falls upon the government; the government must have power to discharge the responsibility, and that of necessity involves that the final discretion as to who should be detained must rest with the Minister of Justice. I suppose everyone here recognizes that no one would b more pleased than the Minister of Justice himself to be relieved of that responsibility—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Hear, hear.

Mr. CLAXTON: —but I do not think he will willingly acquiesce in being relieved, and I do not think this house or this country would wish to see him relieved of it.

In the third place, in the very nature of things this procedure cannot be judicial. It is not concerned with a judicial operation. It is concerned with taking such steps as may be necessary, and taking them just as fast as may be necessary, to see that no harm is done to the state, to Canada, through a person being allowed to remain at liberty.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If the hon. member will allow a question, does he not think that the matter of a review by the minister is the exercise of a judicial function and not a ministerial function?

Mr. CLAXTON: Of necessity it must be administrative, but he will naturally exercise that function with discretion and in as judicial a manner as he possibly can.

I submit that the procedure cannot be completely judicial. Also that by reason of the very character of the whole operation and the purpose of the regulations there are some matters that cannot be disclosed to any court or to any body. The identity of informers, the sources of information must be kept back by the minister and his officers when they feel that it would not be in the public interest to disclose such sources of information, because once the source is disclosed it is no longer available for the purposes for which it might be used.

I submit, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that there are three principles to which we should subscribe. First comes the paramount consideration of the safety and defence of Canada. Then comes the responsibility of the government, and third, the fact that of necessity the matter cannot be dealt with in a completely judicial manner.

These things having been said, we come to a matter of the utmost importance; that is, that we should do everything in our power to secure to every individual his liberty and to see to it that no man is detained longer than is absolutely necessary to achieve the primary purpose I have mentioned. That is so for a very important reason. This is not only a war for the survival of nations; it is a war for the survival of ideas and ideals. How we are to fight the war depends on morale as much as anything else, and morale to a great extent is wrapped up with this question of individual liberty, with our fighting as free men and not as slaves. Dorothy Thompson put this magnificently in commenting on the president's speech last month, when she said:

> And then he sat down with us and said, it seemed, "I know you want to know how things are—well, they are like this."
> And listening, we knew they are like this. Just exactly like this. When he stopped speaking, we were quiet, and then suddenly we felt happy—happy and free.
> That is the function of free speech. To make people more free. To take shackles off their minds and off their wills; to bring light into their intelligences, understanding into their hearts, and to put marrow into their bones.

In those words she put the case for freedom, and it works. Freedom is the most important thing in the world, the breath of life, the source of all security, the means of all progress. To assert that liberty is dead is the same thing as saying that life itself is dead. So much is this so that every person speaking of our war and what we are fighting for says we are fighting for freedom. The words have been repeated over and over again, until somehow they are beginning to lose their force with some of us and are coming to be just words. It is important that we should put the words into acts, that we should act them as we go along and show that we believe freedom is important by pursuing freedom as a way of life to-day, as well as a goal of war and the fruit of victory. We must convince our workers that our interest in democracy begins at home.

Then, too, we must differentiate just as much as possible between ourselves and the enemy we are fighting. We can beat them with more democracy, not less; with more freedom and not more naziness. When we say "he should be shut up"; when we raise a race cry of any kind; when we speak about leadership as though it is some divine principle, then we are playing Hitler's game, we are showing that we also are a little hitlerized.

We have to make our democracy fight for us, and we have to fight with it as we go along. This is important in Canada by reason of our alien population, with some 800,000 people of German descent and 140,000 of Italian descent. It is of the utmost importance that we should show these people, the vast majority of whom are completely loyal, that they were right in leaving the old land and coming to this country; that they were right in staking their future here; that this is the place where they can be free to work out their lives in cooperation with us and have the protection of our laws.

Then we must observe free ways because of the effect on neutral countries. Sometimes in the United States we see some of the enemies of our cause, as well as others who sincerely believe in isolation, stoutly maintaining that if the United States goes to war she loses her freedom. We in Canada have shown that this is not so, and we should continue to show it.

There is the effect of our freedom on the enemy himself. Every time we bring about any curtailment of individual liberty Hitler uses that fact in his propaganda machine. Ultimately the break-down of the enemy will be brought about by the recognition by his people that in ours they can find a very much better way of life than in any nazi system.

A further point is that repression and suppression create fear and lack of confidence. We should not repress our friends; we should suppress Hitler. There is also the question of the possible misuse of arbitrary power. I think everyone is agreed, as all the representations made to our committee agreed, that we have no reason to fear this under the present Minister of Justice. They seemed to suggest that under some other minister, who might be one of the hon. gentlemen sitting opposite, there might be some such cause for fear, but there is always the possibility of abuse in any restrictions on liberty; and the best safeguard against such abuse is liberty itself and the freedom to criticize and speak one's own mind.

Throughout the war we have done everything in our power to keep our money worth exactly what it was when we went into the war. By avoiding inflation we have done our utmost to preserve material values. We should also do our utmost to preserve spiritual values, because they are what we are fighting for.

I think that in considering the regulations and the representations that were made our committee was moved by consideration such as I have described to the house. That is, the committee had in mind the paramount necessity of safeguarding the security of Canada and then of doing everything not inconsistent with that end to safeguard the liberty of the individual. And it is fair to say that in our deliberations, as well as in the submissions made to us, there was shown a very wide feeling that, generally speaking, the regulations were being fairly administered, without very great hardship. It was shown that they were necessary, but that naturally everything possible should be done to safeguard the rights of the individual, once the security of the state had been obtained.

The representations regarding regulation 22 really came under five heads. First, it was suggested that if possible we should have some formal proceeding before the alien was interned. I confess I should have liked to see that done, had it been possible to work out something acceptable to the committee. I spent a great deal of time trying to draft something, and I am sure other hon. members did likewise, and we found that we could not do it. It is an exceedingly difficult problem. There is also this to be said, that if this proceeding were mandatory on the minister it might prevent his taking the action we would want him to take without delay. And if it is not mandatory, but rather discretionary, then it would add nothing to the present situation. In that connection I personally express the hope that the minister may find it possible to seek the advice of three persons appointed by himself in all cases when detention is recommended instead of just in respect of persons of enemy origin.

The second complaint was that the detained persons did not have sufficient particulars put before them to enable them to make their defence. We found that the particulars were often very brief, and it will be seen that in the suggested regulation 22, the adoption of which is recommended, there is provision for the fullest possible particulars not inconsistent with the public interest.

Third, complaints were made on grounds of delay. We found that there had been delays, but that they had arisen almost of necessity from the fact that last June and July large numbers of people of Italian origin were apprehended in a hurry. That had to be done, and some time was required in which to dispose of their cases. Provisions will be found in the suggested regulations which have for their purpose the cutting down of delays.

Fourth, it has been suggested by the hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Bence) that all evidence available to the minister should be put before the committee. I believe it is the view of the majority of members that that is not possible in every case, and that it is not in the public interest to disclose all the evidence or all the sources of information the minister may have.

Finally, it is suggested—and it was repeated a few minutes ago in the question of the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson)—that the minister should have to follow the advice of the advisory committee.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not what I said. I was asking the hon. member if he did not think that with respect to the review of decisions the minister's function was judicial and not purely ministerial. That was the point I was trying to make.

Mr. CLAXTON: I shall attempt to answer the leader of the opposition on that point. I would submit to him this case: The advisory committee brings in a report recommending release. The minister has available to him information from a secret source which he did not feel at liberty to put before the committee. He may then exercise his discretion, and, notwithstanding the recommendations, refuse to accept the advice of the advisory committee.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then why have an advisory committee at all?

Mr. CLAXTON: Because the advisory committee is of the utmost assistance in dealing with the vast majority of cases. The number of cases in which the minister has refused to follow the advice of the advisory committee is exceedingly small. I believe I am correct when I say that it is considerably under twenty since the outbreak of the war. And even in those cases I understand the minister keeps the facts continually under review. They come up again and again. The minister in these cases has exercised his discretion and has not ordered the immediate release of the aliens.

In the report submitted to the house a new regulation 22 has been suggested for adoption by the governor in council. It describes in much greater detail than before the suggested lines of procedure, a procedure which is much more liberal than that now followed in Great Britain. The procedure we had before was somewhat similar to that followed in Great Britain. That which we hope the government will introduce in consequence of this report is fairer, and provides ampler safeguards and a better chance to the detained person than the procedure we had before, or that followed in Great Britain.

I would draw to the attention of the house the fact that while criticizing the report in part, hon. members who have spoken previously have all agreed that it represents a substantial improvement on the situation which existed before. I believe that is the view of every fair-minded person who reads the report. And it does not in any single particular reduce the safety of Canada. From that point of view it leaves the position exactly as it was. But it does add safeguards to the procedure which already exists.

In addition to the defence of Canada regulations we have the provisions of the criminal code and the Treachery Act. There is ample power in Canada to deal with subversive elements and subversive activities That is shown by the fact that since the beginning of the war, so far as I know, there has been no single act of sabotage in Canada traceable to enemy origin. That does not mean that we may not have such acts; it does not mean that we should become over-confident or complacent, but it does mean that we have taken the measures necessary to safeguard Canada during this time of war, and that they have been effective.

In addition to such measures, however, may I point out to the house that far more effective than any repressive means is the loyalty of the Canadian people, the morale of the Canadian people. All the persons who have been prosecuted for so-called beer-parlour offences under regulation 39 may have done less harm to recruiting in Canada than a single newspaper editorial. We cannot deal with newspaper editorials by regulation. No one would wish us to. But we can secure the cooperation of the editor and the Canadian people, through every possible means. We can strengthen our pride in Canada and its achievements. We can strengthen our sense of individual responsibility, and our confidence in our institutions. We can strengthen our belief in victory and should be able to hope that after victory we shall have a better world. What kind of world are we fighting for? We are not fighting for a world in which, after the war, we shall have another depression. This is found in "Canada Fights." We are fighting for—> —a world in which a nation would not be called upon to go to war every fifteen or twenty years; a world in which wheat and other agricultural commodities, together with the product of forest and mine, could be sold at a price that would enable the producer to live in reasonable comfort and to educate his children; a world in which every adult able and willing to work would have employment, and in which our present liberties of thought, speech and religion would be maintained.

I suggest that those are war aims to which every party in this house, every hon. member in this house can subscribe. These, or similar aims, should be proclaimed throughout the land as the reason why we are fighting. We are not fighting just to keep the status quo, to retain our membership in good clubs, to keep our money; we are fighting a far more desperate struggle than that, and we are going to be able to put our utmost into it only if we have some such aim, only if we can show that we can plan a better world than Hitler, only if we can create a common goal of living and give life a new meaning. These are practical considerations to-day, the kind of thing that the Canadian people can be told again and again. The text for the telling might well be taken from I Corinthians, chapter 14, the eighth verse:

For if the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?

Every agency in Canada can strengthen our pride, our confidence, our belief, our faith and our fortitude to endure united until victory and peace are won. With this kind of feeling in the land there will not be much need for defence of Canada regulations.

To-day in Montreal we hear two different kinds of rumours about recruiting. These are being spread about to create racial feeling among the English and the French. People who hear these rumours should stop them because there is not a particle of truth in them. Every hon. member has heard rumours which are spread irresponsibly. We are having a black-out in Montreal to-night, and I suggest that we should have a black-out of rumours and a black-out of unfounded criticism for the next three or four weeks. We would then see what effect it would have upon the war loan, upon recruiting and upon the feelings of the whole country. I remember during the last war in France toward the middle of July, 1918, an order was issued calling upon the troops of the Canadian corps to stop repeating rumours which had been spreading like wildfire. That order was effective and the spirit of the troops changed within a week or two. We then moved down to Amiens and started the battle which ended the war. I suggest that the same kind of thing should be done to-day by the Canadian people.

We should remember that we are the democrats who are going to show that democracy is the best system, not Shakespeare, not Milton, not Burke, not Washington and not Lincoln. We are the ones who have to show that we can fight through to victory. This building is a monument which reminds us of other hard days through which we fought to victory:

Read how free men throughout this land kept faith in the hour of trial and in the day of battle, remembering the traditions they had been taught, counting life nothing without liberty.

Mr. H. B. McKINNON (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended taking part in this debate, but as I was one of the original members of the committee which was set up last year, and also of the subcommittee, I feel called upon to make a few observations. As the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Claxton) has said both last year and this year the members of the committee were highly pleased with the work of the committee. I thought that last year we had a perfect committee, but this year's committee was at least as good. Every member was seized of the importance and seriousness of the job he had to do. In this respect I must pay tribute to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). He is doing a job which he does not like any more than any of us liked the work we had to do on this committee. But no other course can be followed. We must have laws and the final say as to the administration of the laws and regulations and the security of our country must be with the Minister of Justice. I cannot think of any way in which the government can be relieved of its responsibility in connection with the security of the country.

Mention has been made of the fact that there has not been one act of sabotage in Canada which could be traced to enemy agents. I attribute that to the defence of Canada regulations and a very efficient Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The mounted police have done a job which would be a credit to any police force. This year the regulations have been liberalized to quite a considerable extent and with few exceptions the recommendations made by the committee have been unanimous. The differences which did exist were not very great.

I wish to pay a tribute to the previous speakers who I think have stated the case clearly and in a worthwhile manner. As I see it, the difficulty has been in deciding how far the rights of the individual should be restricted in order to protect the security of the state. By amending the regulations we have demonstrated to the Canadian people that we appreciated their point of view in the exceptions they took to certain of the regulations. In the main we have modified the provisions which they felt were obnoxious.

Comment has been made throughout the country about the interning of labour leaders. I for one am quite willing to take the word of the Minister of Justice that these men were interned not because they were labour leaders but because they were communists. I am positive that no labour leader need have the slightest fear about carrying on his legitimate duties; he need have no fear about any action which the Minister of Justice might take under the defence of Canada regulations.

The previous speakers have covered the ground thoroughly and I wish to pay tribute to them. If we should find from experience that these regulations should be further liberalized or tightened up, time and events will show and we shall have another opportunity next year to iron out any difficulties that we may have with them between now and then.

Mr. D. KING HAZEN (St. John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I was one of the members of the special committee that was appointed to consider and review the defence of Canada regulations. I voted in favour of the recommendations that were made by that committee. Its report speaks for itself, and as practically all, but not quite all, the members who have taken part in this debate have expressed themselves in favour of these recommendations, there is very little I wish to say at the present time.

While some changes have been recommended in the report, they do not materially alter the regulations now in force. Having listened to the evidence that was taken by the committee, and compared the regulations with the recommendations that have been made, I am of the opinion that all the recommendations are of a minor nature and that there has been no deviation from the principles which have been followed in the past. The recommendations, if adopted, may improve, but perhaps only to a very slight extent, the regulations as they stand at present. There will not be, and perhaps there is no need for, any substantial improvement. The recommendations will neither alter the underlying principles on which the regulations are based, nor weaken their effectiveness.

The most important recommendation has to do with regulation 22. The recommendation provides that when an internee objects to being interned his objection will be heard by a committee of three. This committee is to be appointed by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and is to consist of a judge and two other persons. The committee at the present time consists of one person, a judge of a high court. The advisory committee—and you will note that in the regulations it is called an advisory committee—has very limited powers. It has the right to take evidence and to hear the objections made by the person who is interned, and after taking this evidence it advises or makes a recommendation to the minister. It has no greater power than that. The minister does not have to accept its recommendation. The minister may if he sees fit act on its recommendation, but if he does not see fit, the person may remain interned.

The important principle underlying this regulation is the principle, if I may express it crudely or roughly, of government responsibility. The government is responsible for the conduct of this war, and these regulations are a part, and not an unimportant part, of our war effort. Responsibility for the enforcement of these regulations must in my opinion rest with the government, just as much as carrying on the rest of our war effort is the government's responsibility. Under these regulations great power is placed in the hands of the Minister of Justice as a member of the government, and the final responsibility rests with the government.

It has been suggested that this power be taken out of the hands of the Minister of Justice and that a judicial tribunal be set up in place of the advisory committee. The judicial tribunal would consider objections raised by the internee, would hold a form of trial and take evidence, and its decision would be final—or rather some people have suggested that it should be final only if the decision of the judicial committee was unanimous, otherwise the final decision should rest with the Minister of Justice. But the responsibility for the administration of the regulations would be in this judicial committee, not in the government, and there would be no appeal from its decision.

In my opinion the responsibility for the enforcement and administration of these regulations must rest with the government. It is on that principle that this recommendation has been made to the house, a recommendation with which I concur.

Mr. DANIEL McIVOR (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, just a brief word. I happen to be one of those who vigorously opposed retaining in the criminal code section 98, and I would oppose it to-day, because it certainly denies the right of the individual to a fair trial. The defence of Canada regulations, amendments to which we are now considering, did not suit me any too well either, but I must say that I welcome the improvements which have been recommended by the special committee. I am well pleased with its work and its report, and, like the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. McKinnon), I say that if the amended regulations are found not to work out well in practice, the committee can go to work again next year and amend them again. The members of the committee are to be commended for the time they have given to their work and the intelligent service they have rendered. I heartily welcome the report, because with the adoption of these recommendations it seems to me that the individual will have more of a right to an honest trial before he can be whisked away.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it would I think be presumptuous if I were to make any extended remarks on this report at this late stage of the session. If one were disposed to think that we are endeavouring to close the session he would not get very much evidence of it from the extended debate which has taken place on this resolution, and perhaps I should not rise at all. On both occasions in the last session when this matter was under review I expressed the opinion that the paramount principle underlying this system of handling subversive elements in the community is the safety of the state. The second is that the government has the responsibility. The only question that has ever been in my mind has been the method employed and we may have had and I suppose still will have very divergent views with regard to what is the best method. I do not think there is much difference of opinion on the two questions of principle to which I have alluded.

I do not intend to go seriatim through the various recommendations of the committee. Some of them are of importance and some of them are not. There are just one or two observations which I would like to make, however, anterior to a short review of the recommendations; they arise out of the remarks made this morning by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), in which he chastised all those who had anything to do with the conditions in pre-war Europe, even mentioning the name of Mr. Neville Chamberlain.

It is all very well, after the event, to condemn Mr. Chamberlain or to condemn Munich, but I venture to say that there are millions of people on this continent and in England who welcomed Munich and the declaration of Munich, based as it was on the fundamental principle that nations are expected to respect their word of honour. Mr. Chamberlain was not the first man—and I suggest that, as long as Hitler lives and carries on, he will not be the last one—to be deceived by the word of that dictator. I am astonished that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar should have found fault with the régime existent in England prior to the declaration of war, because I recall that it is not so many years ago that his leader visited soviet Russia and was received with open arms by the soviet government. Let that not be forgotten in Canada.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. I do not think the leader of the opposition is in order in discussing this part of the speech of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. The statements which that hon. member made with regard to causes prior to the last war and those which preceded the present war were hardly relevant to the matters now under discussion. I do hope that the leader of the opposition—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I bow immediately, Mr. Speaker, to your ruling. I may say that I had concluded all the observations I desired to make in that connection, and I shall now proceed with the speech I had intended to make.

The main feature of the report is the clearer definition of the procedure to be followed by a detained person in presenting objections to his detention. I think that that is a constructive part of the report. In that respect it will not, I assume, meet with the approval of all those who have taken objection to what has been termed the rather peremptory procedure at present existing, but in my view, having analysed the recommendations as best I may, and, I may remark, cursorily, the report constitutes a considerable advance in that regard.

To my mind there are two main features of the report, in which the following principles are adopted.

In the first place, immediately a person is detained he is not whirled away into an internment camp. There are cases, of course, in which that might be justified. There are cases in which, I believe, it has been demonstrated that it is amply justified. I recall to mind what occurred in the dying days of the sitting of this house in August last, and I have yet to hear anybody condemn what took place here and what took place out of this house. To-day it is proposed that any detained person shall be kept in a local gaol under similar conditions to a person awaiting trial, until his objection has been disposed of or until he indicates that he proposes to make no objection. That, I think, is an advance; it is fair and just, and I approve it.

The second principle incorporated in the recommendations is that as soon as possible a person detained is to be informed of the general grounds on which he is detained, and notice of his detention is to be given to his family, where possible and not contrary to the public interest. It is difficult to conceive of a condition where it would not be in the public interest to inform a man's family of the fact of his detention. I do not go any farther than that, but the fact that a man has been detained should, as a matter of course, be communicated to his family.

Otherwise a person so detained would be held incommunicado; and I suggest that there would be ground for serious objection thereto. As to the reasons for his detention, that is another matter.

The report goes on to indicate that an objection to detention may be filed within thirty days. That is to say, a person detained has a right to demand a hearing, and the matter is then referred to an advisory committee.

Fourth, the Minister of Justice is empowered to appoint one or more advisory committees, to consist of three persons, the chairman of which must hold or have held judicial office. The only departure there is that, instead of being referred to one person who holds or has held high judicial position, it is to be referred to a committee of three, one of whom is occupying or has occupied a judicial position. I am wondering why the word "high" has been eliminated from the recommendation. This is an important matter. The liberty of the subject is involved, and under the laws of Canada, only high court judges deal with questions arising out of th application for writ of habeas corpus. We have in the jurisdiction of New Brunswick, with which I am familiar, another procedure, not based on the issue of the writ itself, but on what is termed an order of the nature of a habeas corpus the jurisdiction under which may be exercised by a county court judge. But under this recommendation it would be possible for a police or stipendiary magistrate to be appointed the chairman of the advisory committee. I suggest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) that that is not good enough. Where the liberty of the subject is involved, the chairman of the committee should be a person holding or who has held a high judicial position. There is no reason why that should not be. It has been the practice in the past, and I recommend to the right hon. gentleman that he follow that practice in the future.

The fifth recommendation is, as I understand it, that the chairman shall be required to inform the objector within a reasonable time before hearing of the grounds on which he is held and to furnish him with particulars of the reason for his detention as, in the opinion of the chairman, circumstances permit. That is to say, the chairman is required to inform the accused—if I may use that term—of the nature of the charge against him. This is common British justice, and should be done, and as fully as possible, so that there may be sufficient opportunity of defence. It is I think impossible to have what we understand in criminal law as full right of defence in cases of this kind, but there should be as much right of defence and of answer as the circumstances permit.

Then it is provided that at the hearing "such particulars shall be further supplemented by giving the objector, all such further particulars as the committee shall deem necessary and advisable." Of course that leaves the discretion in the committee. Why it is restricted to what the committee deem advisable has not so far developed, unless it be from the remarks delivered in the course of his address this afternoon by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Claxton) that there may be occasions when it is not in the public interest that this should be done. Conceivably that is true. No one has suggested a concrete illustration, but I am willing in the interests of the paramount principle to have it restricted that far. But I point out that this is not full right of defence.

Then the next move forward, if I may so term it, is that the objector may be represented by counsel. I do not recall what has been the practice in the past. I had thought there was the right to be represented by counsel. It seems to me, however, that if heretofore that right has not been given, this is an extension of a principle which all of us can support.

A new provision is made whereby a person objecting to a censorship order of the Secretary of State may lodge his protest with a committee appointed by the Minister of Justice, such committee to consist of a person who holds or has held high judicial office. Hon. gentlemen will observe that the principle of granting a hearing before a committee and the retention of the status of a high judicial officer is maintained here, whereas it is not maintained in the case of detained persons. I am at a loss to know why there is the distinction in this case, which is of much less importance than in the former case to which I alluded a little earlier. Here you are dealing with a censorship order made by the Secretary of State; there you are dealing with the liberty of the individual himself. It seems to me that if in one case you have a high judicial officer carrying out this function, there is that much more reason why you should have a high judicial officer presiding in the other case. I recommend that to the Minister of Justice. Why two separate types of committee should be contemplated I am not aware, but I do suggest that in the second case, where there is objection to a censorship order from the Secretary of State, one person is quite sufficient, because in that case where he is sitting alone the person must be one who holds or has held high judicial office.

A committee of one person who holds or has held high judicial office reviews the censorship order. I have pointed out what appears to be an anomaly, and I conceive that my duty in that regard has been accomplished.

Then it is to be noted that under regulation 21 (3) the Minister of Justice is required at the beginning of each session of parliament and each four weeks thereafter during the session to make a report to parliament showing, among other things, the number of cases in which he has refused to follow the advice of an advisory committee. I suggest that in so doing the minister is exercising a judicial function, notwithstanding the statement to the contrary by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, and that this is not a mere ministerial duty that the minister is performing. If it is exercised on this basis there can of course be no objection to the minister reviewing the proceedings, and in so doing he must exercise a judicial function. If it is merely an administrative matter, of course he does not look beyond the evidence that has been submitted to the advisory committee. Presumably he may have other evidence, but in considering that other evidence he is exercising a judicial function. Of course this may be a mere academic discussion and not worth while at the moment, but I submit there is a clear distinction and the distinction should be recognized.

If the Minister of Justice under regulation 21 (3) is required to make a report to parliament, why should not the Secretary of State in the case of a censorship order be required to make a similar report with respect to the number of instances in which he has refused to follow the advice of the proposed new committee which is to hear objections against censorship orders? I suggest that to my hon. friend the Secretary of State. And also that there should be incorporated in the new regulations setting up this new committee on censorship the provision that there should be a report to parliament in those cases just as in the cases of detained persons by the Minister of Justice. It seems to me that if parliament is to know the number in the one case it should know the number in the other. And in the case of the censorship order parliament should know what the causes are and why orders have been made. There is no reason in the world similar to that which I really believe applies to the other case of which the minister spoke on one former occasion, that is the high interest of the state. I commend that suggestion to the Secretary of State.

Then there is a third recommendation, which has not been alluded to to-day and which may not be of paramount importance, namely that consideration be given to segregating in separate places of detention the different classes of persons detained under regulation 21. Presumably enemy aliens, communists, national unity party members and so forth are referred to. What are the implications of this recommendation? I really do not understand the effect of it. There should be some elucidation.

Another matter the committee recommends is that the Minister of Justice give consideration to the advisability of making a regulation under which the sale of ammunition for pistols and revolvers shall be prohibited until the purchaser has produced his registration certificate for the pistol or revolver. This is an excellent recommendation. It would assist the police in checking up on the registration of fireams. Doubtless there are many firearms in this country of which the police know nothing.

Then the committee recommends that for the duration of the war a special committee of the house should be appointed at each session to consider and review the defence of Canada regulations. I hope the government will adopt this suggestion.

The committee has performed from the beginning a useful function. The work of the committee has been carried on, I believe, with thoroughness. An exchange of views by intelligent men around a committee table free from publicity, where men can speak their thoughts, will I believe in the end evolve the very best possible system.

It is a matter of regret to me that the committee found that it could not deal at this session with the question of the laws relating to naturalization and deportation. There are many aspects of the law relating to naturalization and deportation which require careful study and scrutiny, and I hope that next session such an opportunity will be provided. If it is considered that the work of the committee on the regulations themselves is too great and too heavy, then it would be worth while giving consideration to the setting up of a separate special committee. One of the things this committee could do, one of the matters to which the minister referred in moving concurrence in this report, and something which, in my judgment, could be done with great advantage, would be to study whether the provisions of the Immigration Act as it now exists are adequate to deal with what probably will be a very large number of applications for entry into Canada when the war concludes. It is all very well to visualize this country as an asylum for the oppressed. We are willing to aid and succour those who are oppressed, but we have made mistakes in our immigration policy in the past; the government and everyone else knows that. I think we must continue to have regulated entry into this country after the war; otherwise we might find ourselves in a plight which to-day we would not appreciate.

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, like the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson), I do not wish to delay the adoption of this report, but I think I owe it to the house and more particularly to the members who served on this committee to say at least a few words in appreciation of their work. I desire to express not only my congratulations but also my thanks, and the thanks of the house, to the members of this special committee for the work they have done and for the study and attention they have given to that work. I do not think I should speak on the various recommendations which have been made, and which have been discussed during the course of this debate, except to say that I will see to it that these recommendations are immediately incorporated in the defence of Canada regulations and that those matters which are recommended to the consideration of the government are given that consideration.

What I wish to say is rather on the general aspect of the question, which is a very difficult one. As I have stated already in connection with this matter, there are two schools of thought as to what should be done, which schools differ materially. At the beginning of hostilities those who wanted to intern the largest possible number of persons who might be suspected were rather in the majority; the demand was for the internment of many people, and the blame or criticism was that too many were left at liberty. A little later there was a reversal in the trend of public opinion, and the criticism was that there were too many people interned, that civil liberty was endangered. To-day the two schools are still working, and I am continually receiving complaints of the most contradictory nature. For instance, members of the civil liberty league write me that we are much too strict in keeping people interned who might be released. At the same time I am in receipt of resolutions adopted by various branches of the Canadian Legion stating that too many interned people have been released, that sufficient care is not being exercised, and that this is a dangerous condition. I have also received letters and resolutions with regard to labour leaders who have been interned. Of course there are no labour leaders interned as such, but only those who secured admission to labour unions while more particularly concerned about the propagation of communist doctrines. At the same time I am in receipt of requests that some of the labour organizers, particularly those coming from the country to our south, should be treated as disturbing influences in our country, and that strict action should be taken with regard to them.

To show hon. members how different the views are, last week I received a letter from a gentleman protesting violently against certain speeches and writings of another gentleman, and blaming me and the government for not interning him as an enemy to the security of the state at this time. At the very moment I was reading this letter a report was submitted to me by the police suggesting that it might be advisable to intern the gentleman who had written me the letter, for being an agitator and an enemy of the state.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It would be interesting to know who were these gentlemen.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Of course I cannot give the names, but perhaps the gentleman who wrote me the letter will be able to identify himself.

I desire to repeat what I have stated already in this house, particularly in answer to the criticism that some of the internees are not given a fair trial, as in criminal cases. These men are not interned as a punitive measure, as though they had committed some crime. If that were the situation, before they could be convicted and sentenced there would have to be complete evidence; there would have to be a fair trial, and they would have to be given the benefit of the doubt. This, however, is not a punitive action; it is a preventive action, for the safety of the state. It is the action of a nation at war, that has to protect itself against any possibility of people doing something which might harm or injure the war effort of the nation. That is why keeping the final discretion in the Minister of Justice is, I believe, the only thing that could be done, and that is where I differ from my good friend the hon. member for Saskatoon City (Mr. Bence) who made a fine speech to-day on this matter. I do not think it would be advisable to place upon a judge the responsibility of deciding whether or not a man who might be dangerous to the safety of the state during a war should be interned. It is more a matter of public safety and public policy. After all, as the hon. member for St. John-Albert (Mr. Hazen) has said, it is the government which is responsible for the safety of the state. This is a serious and disagreeable responsibility, but it cannot be avoided.

On certain occasions I have worried a good deal about what should be done. If the judge, after having heard witnesses, consisting of the family of the interned man, and some others, comes to the conclusion that the man is not a serious danger and should be released, and if the men responsible for order, the officers of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, and especially those whom I trust and in whose judgment I have confidence, tell me on their responsibility that they do not wish to be held responsible for what that man could do if he were left at liberty; then, if I order the release of such a man, and a month or two after such release a serious act of sabotage is committed, resulting in loss of life, and if such activities can be traced to the man in question, who would be responsible? I would be. The government would be. The judge, for whose judgment I would have the greatest respect, would not be the one who would be blamed. No; the Minister of Justice would be blamed. The government would be blamed. And it is not only a question of blame, but the feeling that in some degree my country might suffer because that man is free.

That is why in some instances I could not bring my mind to an acceptance of recommendations for release. However disagreeable it may be, I believe I am more completely fulfilling my duty to Canada when I keep such a man inside.

I believe the recommendation for a committee of three instead of a committee of one is a good one. The leader of the opposition has said that he cannot see why the word "high" has been eliminated, when referring to persons having high judicial functions. I have a case in mind. This has to do with a gentleman who has been a county court judge in a great province. I believe, in fact, that he has headed the judges in his district, and he has now retired. That judge was an authority on criminal matters. He is in good health, and could do good work. In my opinion he should not be eliminated simply because a county court or district court judge is not considered as one holding a high judicial position. As a matter of fact, the man I have in mind is a good deal more qualified than most of the judges of the higher courts.

There again, however, the responsibility will be ours not to appoint anybody who would not be qualified to occupy the position. It has been stated quite frequently that public opinion in Canada is strongly opposed to the defence of Canada regulations. We have had a demonstration quite recently which indicates that that is not so. A by-election was held in Edmonton East. A gentleman journeyed from Toronto to Edmonton to offer himself as a candidate opposed to the defence of Canada regulations. In his campaign he was helped by the hon. member for North Battleford (Mrs. Nielsen), who travelled to Edmonton to attack the regulations. The hon. member said even that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) was worse than Hitler. She said that he was a worse dictator than Hitler, because he could do anything. Well, it appears that the electors of Edmonton East believed that I could be safely trusted to do better than Hitler, so far as the matter of dictatorship is concerned, and neither Mr. MacLeod nor the hon. member for North Battleford had great success in their attack upon the defence of Canada regulations.

I should not like to close without expressing an appreciation of those whose work I am in the best position to judge. I pay tribute to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, the devotion of all its members and the satisfactory results of their work. At no time have I had to make complaint either as to their ability or as to the conscientious manner in which they have acted in the execution of their duties. When this war is over—and I hope it will be before too many years, and we shall have achieved victory—I believe the people of Canada will have reason to be grateful to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for the way in which they have done their work in keeping order in Canada.

Mr. CLARENCE GILLIS (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a few minutes in what I have to say. When the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), who represented this group on the committee, spoke this morning, he made a clear statement of our position in the matter.

I should like to put the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) right about a remark he made which is not in accordance with the facts. He referred to the leader of this group, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), as having made a trip to Russia. The hon. member made that trip on his own; he was not a guest of the soviet government, and to the best of my knowledge he was not received with open arms. Therefore the insinuation or implication contained in the remark of the leader of the opposition is not relevant at this time.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Claxton). I think he stated the case very well. We realize that the defence of Canada regulations are necessary at this time. Our complaint is in connection with the administration. We consider that the changes suggested by the committee which scrutinized these regulations will be beneficial. I have a good deal of confidence in the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe). If he had complete jurisdiction, I am sure that he would see that justice was done. What I am concerned about, however, is the fact that a certain amount of jurisdiction is delegated to the provinces. I am not so confident as to how that power will be used.

I represent a coal mining constituency, and I should like to refer briefly to an order in council which was passed on June 6, 1941. I think there is an ulterior motive in the passing of this order in council at this time. The Montreal Gazette of June 6 states:

> Civil authorities administering the defence of Canada regulations were given far-reaching powers to prevent slowing up or unauthorized stoppage of coal mine production by an order in council adopted to-day and announced by J. McG. Stewart, coal administrator.

Further on it states:

> They said the order is aimed at agitators, small groups who might create a partial stoppage of production based on trivial causes, and all illegal interference with production.

Personally I do not like the phrasing of that statement which apparently was issued by authority of the coal administrator. I find it hard to understand why an order in council like that should be passed on a day when this house was discussing matters pertaining to labour, a bill to change the conciliation machinery and make it more workable.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): At least it should have been announced here.

Mr. GILLIS: I agree that coal should be produced, but I am wondering whether this order in council will be enforced equitably. It is stated that the object of the order in council is to prevent the slowing down of operations or illegal strikes. I think that order in council was inspired from Nova Scotia. During the past month there have been some troubles in that section of the country. My only knowledge is the press, and consequently I cannot state specifically what the causes were, but I do know that 99 per cent of the trouble in that section of the country is due to the fact that the local management has practically no authority to settle grievances. The industry in Nova Scotia suffers from absentee management. Grievances pile up, and agreements or customs which have been established over a period of years are abrogated overnight. This causes discontent, and there is built up in the minds of the men a feeling that the legitimate agencies they have established are not workable. They get the run-around in all directions. The result is a stoppage of work or a slowing down of production. The morale of the men is broken; they have no incentive to produce 100 per cent.

I should like to know if an investigation will be held to see who is responsible for any illegal stoppage or sit-down strike before this order in council is applied. I know the industry in Nova Scotia and I know the management. There is no more unjust organization existing in Canada to-day; there is no organization that is manipulated in more slime or in as insidious a way as this corporation. I am afraid that many men will be placed in a position where they cannot defend themselves. I wish to make this statement so that the Minister of Justice will hear it. I am not content to leave any situation that might arise in the province in the hands of the provincial attorney general. The provincial political organization and the coal companies have mutual interests; they work together, and I do not say that for political reasons. Before any action is taken to place anyone in an internment camp, the reasons why such action is taken should be given. As the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George has said, democracy is not an abstract principle; it is a living thing that is reflected in the lives of the people. If we are not practising it, there is not much use in our talking about it.

I should like to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) and the Minister of Justice if this order in council will be applied to the mining companies of British Columbia. In that province men are working only two or three days a week. Will it be applied to Alberta where mines are closed down and miners must seek relief? That is sabotage of the industry. If there is to be a shortage of coal; if there is to be a famine sufficiently serious to warrant the government in taking action under this order in council, then I think it should be applied to those industries which are not functioning. A mine closed down in River Hebert, Nova Scotia, throwing 150 men out of work. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Cardin) stated that there would be sufficient orders from the Canadian National Railways, the principal customer of this mine, to warrant the continuation of operations. Other mines are idle. A similar situation exists in Inverness county. If this order in council is to mean anything, it should work both ways. If it is not to be applied to those sections where mines are idle because it is not sufficiently profitable to carry on operations, it should not be applied to those sections where it is profitable to operate. Before it is applied, there should be an examination of the reasons why a stoppage has occurred, and the cause should be determined. I am prepared to state here that in 99 per cent of the cases, if an impartial examination were made, the cause would be found to be not the men but the fact that they are placed in their present position through unjust manipulation by people who are not concerned about the war or production other than what it means to them in dollars and cents.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC INFORMATION—"O CANADA" PAMPHLET

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Who wrote, and on whose orders, a pamphlet printed in French, entitled "O Canada", published by the director of public information, in which it is described as Canada's national anthem?

2. Was a similar pamphlet printed in English?

3. Who is the director of this bureau responsible for all pamphlets issued?

4. Are all publications of this bureau published in both official languages? If not, by whose orders?

5. How many publications of this bureau are published in, (a) English; (b) French; (c) in only one language?

Mr. GARDINER:

1. Pamphlet was written by "Ringuet" (Dr. Philippe Panneton); Louis Francoeur; Jean Chauvin; Mgr. Olivier Maurault; Gustave Lanctot; Robert La Roque De Roquebrune; Victor Dore; L'Hon. Hector Perrier.

Written on request of director of public information.

2. No.

3. George Herbert Lash.

4. (a) No; (b) director of public information.

5. (a) 60; (b) 35; (c) 41.

RICHIBUCTO, N.B., CUSTOMS OFFICE

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Has the office of customs and excise in Richibucto, Kent county, New Brunswick, been closed?

2. If so, for what reason?

3. Is it the intention to reopen this office, and when?

4. If this office is still in operation, what are the names of the officers and their respective salaries?

5. By whom were such officers recommended?

Mr. GIBSON:

1. Yes. December 1, 1940.

2. In the interests of economy, as revenue collected was very small and as the customs and excise business, with the exception of entering and clearing foreign-going vessels, could be transacted without undue inconvenience at other centres.

3. No.

4. and 5. When the office was closed the usual practice was followed and Mr. J. T. Vautour, the postmaster, was employed to enter and clear foreign-going vessels, with remuneration at the rate of fifty cents for each entry or clearance.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—JAMES MOON

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

1. Was James Moon employed as a constable in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

2. If so, how long was he employed?

3. Was he a single or a married man?

4. Was he dismissed from the force?

5. If so, for what reason?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East):

1. Yes.

2. From October 30, 1933, to January 22, 1941.

3. He was alleged to be single but it was discovered he had married without permission on July 24, 1936.

4. He was discharged on January 22, 1941, as being unsuitable having married without the consent of the commissioner.

5. Answered by No. 4.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CIVIL SERVANTS IN CANADIAN FORCES

Mr. GREEN:

1. What are the working hours set for civil servants and temporary civilian clerks employed in the naval stations, army headquarters or air force stations in Canada?

2. What statutory holidays are observed by these clerical staffs?

3. What annual leave is given to temporary civilian clerks so employed?

4. On any of such staffs are there some temporary clerks paid at an hourly rate of fifty (50) cents per hour or thereabouts, and others at a rate of sixty dollars ($60) per month, or thereabouts, although both are doing the same work?

5. If so, why is there this difference in rating?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STRIKE OF CANADIAN GENERAL ELECTRIC EMPLOYEES IN TORONTO PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I want to read two short sentences from the Toronto Telegram of Saturday last, June 7, and then ask the Minister of Labour a question. I have advised the minister that I was going to ask this question and I am sure that he will be able to give me an answer which will be satisfactory.

The article in the Toronto Telegram is headed: "G.E. Strikers Hear Warning Acts Illegal. Delegates report McLarty declined assurance conciliation board action would be speeded up." The article goes on:

Canadian General Electric Company employees from Ward street and Lansdowne avenue plants, now on the fourth day of their "holiday", are going to remain on strike despite Ottawa's warning they return to work or be liable to arrest.

About 650 strikers unanimously reaffirmed their decision by a standing vote at a mass meeting held in the Polish National Hall, Queen street and Dovercourt road to-day. There are about 850 on strike.

Before asking my question I may say that over the week-end I met by chance a number of the strikers on the street, and in conversation with them it occurred to me that there should be some way of settling the strike promptly. They really want to get back to work. I did not enter into the causes of the dispute, because I am sure the labour department has that matter in hand. I would like to ask the minister what is the procedure of the department on being informed that a strike is in the offing—because the department must know beforehand that a strike is perhaps likely to take place. What action in such circumstances does the department usually take to prevent a strike?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in every case in which the department is advised that a labour dispute has arisen or is likely to arise, a conciliation officer of the department is sent to carry on negotiations. The men are advised, if a strike is apprehended, that a strike would be illegal, and that if there are grievances which should be righted they should make application under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. In this particular instance, however, a strike was called very suddenly without any knowledge of the Department of Labour that there was any difficulty whatever. The men and women simply walked out. Immediately this happened a conciliation officer was sent to the plant. He endeavoured to conciliate and suggested that the men and women should return to work. This they refused to do, and have refused ever since, and so far as my information goes they are still out.

On Friday evening I met a delegation of the workers of the Canadian General Electric plants in Toronto, who are now engaged in an illegal strike. I advised them that they should return to work and that when they had put themselves within the law they would have the same rights as any other employees in war industries in Canada to apply for a board of conciliation under the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. They advised that they were holding a meeting on Saturday morning, and on Saturday afternoon I was advised that they had decided at the meeting not to return to work. I immediately wired them stating that unless they returned to work by Monday at noon, I would turn the matter over to the Department of Justice.

I have been advised that they have not returned to work and have consequently arranged to advise the law officers of the crown as to the circumstances in connection with the matter and asked them to take such action as they deem most appropriate under such circumstances for the enforcement of the law.

Mr. MacINNIS: Are these employees organized?

Mr. McLARTY: I cannot answer that question definitely, because some of them claim they are and some claim they are not.

STRIKE OF HOSIERY WORKERS IN SCHOFIELD PLANT AT OSHAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. KARL K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): May I ask the Minister of Labour if he has yet received any report from the two boards investigating the Oshawa textile strike?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): No, not as yet.

WHEAT

REPRESENTATIONS OF SASKATCHEWAN FLOUR MILLERS' ASSOCIATION AS TO GRISTED WHEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a telegram which I have already shown to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and to base a question thereon further to the question I directed to him on Friday last. The telegram in part reads as follows:

Prince Albert, Saskatchewan.
June 6.

John G. Diefenbaker, K.C.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Objection is against ruling of quota delivery point. For instance, a farmer declares his quota delivery point, say White Star or Davis or Crutwell dependent where farm located.

These places are all within a radius of fifteen miles of Prince Albert:

Once delivery point declared farmer can deliver to no other. Thus he is automatically barred from delivering wheat to grist at any mill unless fortunate to have a mill in his delivery point. This is the joker in the new regulation and Minister of Trade and Commerce well knows this. The big mills have made sure of that. Flour is being rapidly advanced in price by big mills. On basis of wheat board wheat price August 1, 1941, crop four and a half bushels of wheat for gristing one bag flour is equal to $2.34. Big mills flour is now retailing $2.90 to $3.20 per sack. ——Suggest you demand that any farmers quota delivery permit book be acceptable at any and all mills for purpose of gristing. Farmer could have 5,000 bushels wheat on farm and no money and prohibited from securing flour for wheat and even if he has a little money must pay from sixty cents to one dollar more for flour than he should to say nothing of using cash much needed for other urgent necessities. No question the regulations are aimed to destroy local mills and create big mill monopoly.

In view of what is stated in the telegram based on the regulations which were announced on Friday, will the minister advise whether the regulations of the wheat board will be altered in order to allow the farmers to grist their wheat into flour at any flour mill even though located elsewhere than at the delivery point named in the permit, in order that the farmer whose delivery point has no local flour mill may be assured of the right to secure flour at a lower price than fifty to sixty cents per hundred, which otherwise would be the case?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to show me the telegram upon which he based his question. I do not think it sufficiently important to refer to that part of the telegram which rather suggests that the regulations are out to hurt the small miller and help the big miller. Those observations are just so much nonsense.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is what the secretary of the flour millers' association says.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am glad, however, to advise the hon. member that the wheat board are dealing with this question and are hopeful of introducing regulations which will permit the handling of wheat for gristing in the method suggested.

NICKEL AND COPPER

QUESTION AS TO SHIPMENTS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Over the week-end in Toronto many people in my riding were greatly exercised over the alleged wheat shipment to Japan. In the course of conversation they asked also whether nickel and copper are being shipped to Japan. Would the Minister of Trade and Commerce please advise?

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am very sure that I am correct in saying that no shipments, outside of the wheat referred to in this house in the discussion in the last day or two, are being made to Japan.

LABOUR DEPARTMENT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF AN ASSOCIATE DEPUTY MINISTER

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour) moved the second reading of Bill No. 100, to amend the Labour Department Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Fournier (Hull) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Canada Grain Act.

349. Administration, $104,648.50.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal at this time with a number of points raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley) in his speech on this item on Friday last.

In the first place, the hon. member has complained that he cannot get a detailed account of the board's operations from the annual report issued by the Canadian wheat board on January 11, 1941. I am astonished at this, because the report contains a complete and detailed statement of the board's operations up to July 31, 1940.

For example, the hon. member has asked what the liability is in connection with the 42 million bushels of wheat carried in country elevators or in transit on July 31, 1940, for the account of the board. He has already answered his own question by quoting from the annual report, exhibit A, that the liability amounted to $28,927,925. I might add that this amount has been reduced to a very small figure, as most of the 1939 wheat has been forwarded to terminal positions.

With regard to the hon. member's request for evidence that the British authorities requested that the grain exchange should remain open, I placed on Hansard in 1940, at page 2360, this evidence with regard to the previous sale, or to the sale of 100 million bushels of wheat last year. I should like to quote now from a cable received on May 9, 1941, from the cereals import branch of the United Kingdom ministry of food, with regard to the 120 million bushels sale.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To whom? To the minister?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): To the wheat board. A copy of the telegram was sent to me through the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. PERLEY: Who is the representative of the cereals import branch on the Winnipeg market?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There is no representative. I have repeatedly answered a similar question by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The cereals import committee have no representative in Canada. I quote from the telegram.

Cereals of course must be assured that the market remains open.

"Cereals" means the cereals import branch of the United Kingdom ministry of food.

Mr. COLDWELL: If they are not purchasing on the Winnipeg exchange why should they require the exchange to remain open? Is it because they think that that sets the price?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The cereals import committee purchase their cash wheat on the exchange through well-known Winnipeg firms of brokers.

Mr. PERLEY: Does the minister mean to say that they have not someone there operating for them?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I can only repeat the answer I have given before. They have not.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): On the theory that all the wheat goes to the wheat board, as contemplated by the act, why does the cereals import committee not buy direct from the wheat board, because that is the underlying principle of the Wheat Board Act, that they shall handle all the cash wheat? I know the act provides that the machinery shall be kept open. That was a consideration given to opposition members in the house of that day for concurring in that principle of the bill. But that was not in war time; that was in peace time, and to-day the same condition does not exist. So far as I am concerned, I wish to know what the true legal position is. The minister stated what the operating position is.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I suggest that the hon. member allow me to continue. He is anticipating something that I intend to place on the record. I shall be glad to answer any questions when I have finished this.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. PERLEY: The minister is replying to a statement which I made, and I think one question would be proper here. He has stated that the British cereals import committee buy through, or give an order to buy cash grain to a member of the exchange. How does the board know, when it is on the open market, that whoever got that order is placing it for the British cereals import committee?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that they do not know.

Mr. PERLEY: Then the board when selling the wheat do not know where it is going?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): We are getting into rather technical matters concerning the handling of wheat sales. I am informed that the cereals import committee purchases futures from the wheat board—

Mr. PERLEY: That is the opposite to what the minister said a minute ago.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): —and buy the cash grain from the exporters.

Mr. PERLEY: Then the board exchanges the option, and they have not sold any wheat. That is the effect of it.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that that is not so.

Mr. PERLEY: That is the way it operates.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The wheat goes out of the country on the basis of the sale.

Mr. PERLEY: Then the board takes an option, gets the cash wheat, takes an option and sells the wheat. They have not sold any wheat.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The hon. member also referred to the price paid by the British Ministry of Food to the Canadian wheat board for the recent purchase of 120,000,000 bushels of wheat futures. He claimed that Liverpool is advertising the price and that it is also disclosed in certain publications of the dominion bureau of statistics. His claim is incorrect. The so-called "Liverpool wheat offers" published daily by Broomhall and reprinted in the "Monthly Review of the Wheat Situation" are all based upon seaboard offers of exporters, which are in turn based upon the open market futures price at Winnipeg plus freight, handling and other charges from the lake head to the seaboard position. Since these prices are based upon the open market price and not upon the price at which the futures were sold by the Canadian wheat board to the British Ministry of Food, they cannot and do not indicate the price of the wheat board sale.

Regarding the customs export quantities and values of wheat, which are published monthly by the dominion bureau of statistics and which the hon. member for Qu'Appelle also claims to be indicative of the wheat board's sale price to the United Kingdom, I would state that these figures are simply the declared values shown on the export entries required for wheat shipments from the exporter or shipper, and the declared values are f.o.b. port of exit from Canada. These ports include Fort William-Port Arthur for shipments in transit to overseas destinations via the United States and Montreal and other St. Lawrence ports, as well as the Canadian maritime ports. Consequently the combined average valuation of wheat shipments from all these ports of exit from Canada cannot be related back to the open market prices, upon which the wheat export sales were based in the first instance. Neither can they be related to the wheat board's sale price to the British Ministry of Food, which in turn varies from the open market level. Therefore the hon. member's claim that the sale price is indicated in published sources is quite incorrect.

Mr. PERLEY: I was quoting from the minister's own bulletin. It gave the number of bushels and the price in Canadian dollars, and it figures to 85 cents; the minister's own department stated that.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): But the hon. member did not understand what it meant; that is all.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Qu'Appelle also referred to the budget resolutions under the heading "indirect liabilities", and asked certain questions with regard to the relations between the board and the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange Clearing Association Limited. I table herewith the guarantee given to the clearing association by the Canadian wheat board, as follows:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the recommendation of the Prime Minister and in the exercise of the powers conferred by the Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, is pleased to authorize and doth hereby authorize the Minister of Finance on behalf of the government of the Dominion of Canada to guarantee due payment of all such sum or sums as may be or become payable to the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange Clearing Association, Limited, by the said Canadian wheat board in respect of its obligations as a member of such association.

His Excellency in Council on the same recommendation is further pleased to order and doth hereby order and direct that the said guarantee shall be in the following form, or one to like effect;

"In consideration of the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange Clearing Association, Limited (hereinafter called 'the association'), permitting transactions and trades in grain made by the Canadian wheat board (hereinafter called 'the member') to be cleared through the association pursuant to the association's by-laws, rules and regulations, and in consideration of the association carrying an account with the member in connection with such transactions and trades, I, the undersigned, do hereby guarantee to the association the due payment of all sums of money which are now or shall at any time hereafter be owing to the association by the said member, whether the same shall be owing upon any open line of trades carried by the association for the said member, or for any liability contracted by the association on account of the said member, or upon any cheques, bills or notes given by the said member to the association.

Dated at Ottawa, this 30th day of December, 1935."

The usual practice of the clearing association in dealing with the grain companies is to stipulate that they may carry a certain maximum quantity of futures, based upon their financial standing, without requiring the deposit of any original margins. If this quantity is exceeded, original margin must be deposited for the entire quantity of futures held by the company concerned. In the case of the Canadian wheat board, operating under the guarantee of the government, the clearing association waived all requirements with regard to original margins. The wheat board has no margins with the clearing association, so that when the hon. member inquires whether the guaranteed liability of the wheat board in the clearing association has an influence on the government's decision to keep the grain exchange open, he is completely misunderstanding the situation, since there are no margin deposits.

Mr. PERLEY: Then may I ask why—

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): May I just finish this portion. Such a guarantee could have no influence on the matter or on the government's decision with regard to the Winnipeg grain exchange.

The daily "margin deposits" referred to in the budget resolutions merely bring the valuation of the wheat board's holdings into line with the day-to-day changes in the market prices and accordingly vary from day to day. Sometimes the clearing association issues a cheque to the board, and at other times a payment to the clearing association by the board is necessary. Therefore my answer to the hon. member is that since the board did not put up margins with the clearing association, and also since the clearing association is independent of the Winnipeg grain exchange, the margin requirements cannot influence the government's decision as to whether the Winnipeg grain exchange should operate or not. There is no basis whatever for the hon. member's claim that the government could be influenced by this to keep the market open.

Mr. PERLEY: If the board guarantees an account for the brokers who are operating for the board in the clearing house and are not putting up any margin by the board itself, why is it necessary for the government to keep the exchange open because they could not trade in that way?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that the government guarantees the board's account. But the board does not guarantee any brokers' accounts.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the minister allow me to have a copy of the statement he is giving, and then he can make his statement without interruption. But without seeing the statement we cannot follow this.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes; I shall gladly send over a copy.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle also inquires with regard to the financing of the Canadian wheat board. The government guarantees advances to the Canadian wheat board by a stated amount adjustable to the board's requirements for each season. The board then borrows from the banks against warehouse receipts. The interest rate of three per cent is arranged for between the board and the banks, after consultation with the Department of Finance.

The stocks of wheat held by the elevator companies for the account of the board in country elevators or in transit to terminal elevators are financed by the elevator companies. The board allows them an interest rate of 4½ per cent, which is the same rate that the elevator companies are required to pay the banks from whom they borrow the money. The interest rate is higher on country elevator stocks because of the cost involved in wide distribution of small sums in the country, and because of the greater risk involved where no warehouse receipts are available as collateral.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has asked for information as to what he describes as "guaranteed accounts of the brokers." There are no such accounts. The hon. member has been misinformed on this point also. The hon. gentleman is further misinformed when he says that the regulations bring coarse grains under the operation of the board. The provision to which he refers merely gives the board power to regulate the deliveries of coarse grains if such regulation should be necessary in 1941-42 in making the most effective use of available storage. The wheat board is not empowered to buy or handle coarse grains.

I have already mentioned that the Canadian wheat board publishes a complete and detailed annual report. The report for the crop year 1939-40 was issued last January, and the report for the crop year 1940-41 will be issued early in 1942. The board is also under continuous audit, and weekly reports of the auditors are forwarded to the government from Winnipeg as required under the act. In addition to these reports, the wheat sub-committee of the cabinet is in frequent consultation with the members of the Canadian wheat board. Hon. members will appreciate the necessity for such close cooperation in these times when the task of the board is, to say the least, not a light one, and new problems are arising from day to day.

I think, therefore, in view of these facts, that such statements as those of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle do not help the situation. If he could give one specific instance or make one definite charge as to why the operations of the wheat board will not bear the light of day, I would be glad to recommend that he be given a chance to substantiate his statements. From his remarks of last Friday it seems to me that he was just making general statements, without any precise knowledge of the grain business.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle quoted a telegram dated July 18, 1940, signed by a number of the elevator companies, offering to place their elevator systems at the disposal of the government for the duration of the war, provided that the government guarantee a return of 6 per cent on their capital investment. The hon. member asks why this offer was not accepted. The offer did receive consideration by the government last July. The decision then reached was that it would be more economical for the government to continue to have the elevator companies operate their own facilities on the basis of handling contracts entered into with them.

The hon. member has referred to the difficulty which certain shippers and other grain handling interests might have in making delivery of wheat at Fort William-Port Arthur against their futures contracts, and left the impression that there was something new and unusual about such a situation. It should be obvious to the hon. member that the futures trading system is patterned to prevent such a return of out-of-position wheat, rather than to cause it. A shipper should not be penalized simply because he has protected himself in the usual way by hedging his purchases of cash wheat by the sale of an equivalent amount of wheat futures, some of which may be held by the board. The hon. member knows that one purpose of such transactions in the futures market is to enable the shipper to put wheat east of Fort William into export position, and keep his position hedged by the sale of futures. If this practice were not followed, then the intention of the act and the purpose of the board would be defeated in that shippers and exporters would not move wheat into position for overseas sale.

The hon. member seems to find something reprehensible in the fact that the shippers, grain interests and millers cannot make delivery of their wheat at Fort William. If the wheat board should insist that delivery be made it would mean that they would be engineering a vast corner, which would be entirely contrary to the act and would defeat our whole purpose of encouraging shipments and full use of eastern storage facilities. In this connection another consideration arises, which the hon. member mentioned. The shippers and millers would not be able to move wheat into position for overseas shipment or for grinding in Canada unless they receive a fair carrying charge from the futures market to offset their storage and interest costs. In this way the financing of the grain is looked after while it is in transit and in process of manufacture. Nothing should be done to hinder the free movement of wheat in these times of surplus.

I should like to refer briefly to the hon. gentleman's allegation that shipments of wheat to north China were made by the Continental Grain company, the Leval company, and the Bunge company. I wish to state unequivocally that the shipments are being made by the Canada Grain Company, Limited, of Vancouver, of which Mr. Robert McKee is managing director. Mr. McKee is a former president of the Vancouver board of trade, a reputable citizen, an experienced grain exporter, a member of the advisory committee of the wheat board appointed by the Bennett government in the fall of 1935, and has been and, so far as I know, still is a stalwart supporter of the Conservative party. Yesterday I received a telegram from Vancouver which I had planned to read to the house, but I do not wish to labour this matter beyond the extent necessary. As a matter of fact, I believe the leader of the opposition has received a similar telegram from Mr. Ladner of Vancouver, commenting on the sale of wheat that has been under discussion.

Mr. COLDWELL: Who is Mr. Ladner?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Mr. Leon J. Ladner.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): A former member for Vancouver South.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): He was formerly a member of this house, and, I believe, is associated with Mr. McKee in the Canada Grain company.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Could the minister put that telegram on Hansard?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I will read the telegram.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Which telegram is the minister reading; his own?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Is the hon. member suggesting that I sent a telegram?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No; but is the minister reading the telegram to himself or the telegram to me?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It is the telegram to myself. I might add that I think considerable credit is due Mr. Ladner for endeavouring to set us right on the matter of this wheat shipment. The telegram reads:

> Phoned Hanson to-night about Perley's incorrect statement in house as reported here regarding shipment garnet wheat by Canada Grain Export Company to north China, and as requested by Hanson I wired him correct facts asking him to make appropriate statement in house in justice to your government, our company and directors. I gave him full statement and your government's adamant refusal to my request for export licence which at that time I thought very unfair unless welfare Canada or Britain was adversely affected, because sale was in Canada's interest. I think Hanson now understands situation.

In the same connection, just this afternoon I received a telegram signed by the Bunge North-American Grain Corporation, addressed to me as Minister of Trade and Commerce and dated New York, June 9, reading as follows:

> We have received from Winnipeg newspaper clippings of statements made by Mr. Perley, a member of your House of Commons. The statements made by this gentleman as referring to our organization are absolutely false. The last wheat we shipped to the orient went to Shanghai February 11, steamer Illinois, buyer Foh Sing flour mills, and since then have consistently refused further business in either Canadian or United States grain. We ask you to please put these facts before the House of Commons.

Bunge North-American Grain Corporation.

I should like also to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar with respect to certain operators on the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Mr. COLDWELL: That was a question; not a statement.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes. I believe the hon. member refers in this connection to the brokers. The original Canadian Wheat Board Act, 1935, section 8 (i) passed by the Bennett administration, reads as follows:

In selling and disposing of wheat as by this act provided, to utilize and employ without discrimination such marketing agencies, including commission merchants, brokers, elevator men, exporters and other persons engaged in or operating facilities for the selling and handling of wheat, as the board in its discretion may determine.

This has not been amended in the revisions of 1939 or 1940. The wheat board, therefore, consider it is required to use the facilities of the trade including the brokers, and it does so. This practice has always been followed by the wheat board, of paying brokerage, the amount of which varies in accordance with the volume of business transacted by the board. During the stabilization operations of the previous government the same principle was followed of paying brokerage on cash grain sales and on the selling and spreading of wheat futures.

I think, therefore, that the hon. member has cast a rather unfavourable light on the situation in describing this practice as one of "assisting a number of grain operators on the grain exchange on a relief basis."

Mr. COLDWELL: That is the view the farmers have.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I may add I have been informed that in the United Kingdom where the grain markets have been closed for the duration of the war, the government has recognized the principle of compensating grain brokers for the loss of their occupations and business during the war. In this way they hope to maintain the machinery of the trade so that it may become operative again at the end of the war.

Then, dealing with recent shipments of grain to China, and claims of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in this connection, I wish to register my objection to the hon. member's rather offensive references to the Jewish people and the Jewish firms—

[Mr. J. A. MacKinnon.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is that necessary?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): —especially at this very serious time.

I should like to refer to the comment by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle regarding the lack of opportunity to discuss the wheat situation generally earlier in the session. My recollection is that the wheat situation has been thoroughly discussed throughout this session, but it just happens that that discussion has taken place very largely on the estimates of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture. I wish to state frankly that it had been my intention to submit a new Canadian Wheat Board Act to take the place of the present one, because we thought it better to proceed in that way than to have voluminous amendments. We had proceeded to the point where the bill was almost ready for submission to the house when it was realized that the time required in the house to pass the bill would conflict definitely with the seeding operations under the government's wheat legislation for this year. Therefore it was decided for the time at least to proceed with the amendment to the Canadian Wheat Board Act by order in council. This was done.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Would the minister clarify some points with which he apparently forgot to deal, when he was referring to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle? Will he tell the committee the source of the wheat shipped to the orient? Did it come from the wheat board with the permission of the government? Under what circumstances did the Canada Grain Export company purchase this wheat? Then, this further question necessarily arises out of the statement allegedly made by Mr. Ladner to the effect that the sale was in Canada's interest. What is "Canada's interest" in the sale of this wheat? What is the meaning of that phrase? Was that Mr. Ladner's expression, or was it the expression of the minister?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Of course it was purely Mr. Ladner's expression. I did not intend to read the telegram, until I was asked to do so. However I did read it, word for word.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: But that does not answer my question. Where did that wheat come from? Was it wheat transferred to this exporting company from the wheat board? When did the Minister of Trade and Commerce agree to the export of wheat, if at all? When did the Minister of Trade and Commerce first become aware of the fact that the wheat was going to be exported? Finally, in what way would the export of this wheat be to Canada's interest?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I can only repeat: I made no statement that the sale was in Canada's interest. I merely quoted the telegram.

An hon. MEMBER: Was the sale in Canada's interest?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am not answering a question of that kind at the present time. I do not consider it relevant. Certainly I do not propose to enter into a discussion as to whether or not a statement made in Mr. Ladner's telegram is approved by me. I merely gave the committee the telegram submitted by Mr. Ladner. In connection with the wheat, my understanding is that the wheat in question was bought by brokers in the usual way.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What is that?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The hon. member asks what way that would be. It was bought in the usual way by the Canada Grain Export company from the wheat board.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): "The usual way"—when the wheat board sold that wheat, did they know it was going to be exported to Japan?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They did not know its destination?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No; I am infomed that they did not know its destination.

Mr. PERLEY: What brokers did the wheat board use? It was bought in the pit.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The wheat in question was bought at Vancouver by the Canada Grain Export company from the Vancouver office of the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On what date?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I have not the date here.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I still have not received an answer to my questions as to whether the government granted an export licence to the Canadian exporting company, when that licence was granted and whether the circumstances were placed before the minister before it was granted.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The Canada Grain Export company pressed for permission through representatives to make the sale to which reference has been made.

Mr. PERLEY: When?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I cannot give the exact time.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Was it not prior to the time the permit system was brought into force?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes; I was just coming to that. They asked for permission to make this sale, and we refused. This was before the permit system was brought into force. They wanted to make sure that they would be able to get wheat to conclude the sale; therefore they asked us, and we told them that we would do nothing to assist them. Afterwards the permit system was put into force, and since then a permit was issued for the sale of a certain quantity of wheat in order to fill out a firm transaction that had been completed between the Canadian exporting company and their agents.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister said that before they made their commitments for the wheat they inquired of the government if they would be permitted to buy the wheat and export it, and the minister said that that was refused at first. There must have been something done afterwards because they bought the wheat from the wheat board before the permit system was put into effect.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The permit was refused, and then that attitude was relaxed by the government or by the department. That is the fact. I got that from Mr. Ladner over the telephone on Saturday night. Let us get the facts straight.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): If I correctly understand the statement of the leader of the opposition, it does not conflict in any way with the statement that has been made.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think it does.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I do not see it that way.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): When you read it you will see it.

Mr. CASSELMAN: In other words, it looks shady from the beginning.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that the Canada Grain Export company bought the wheat from the board and applied for a permit to enable them to be sure—they first asked the government if it would permit the sale so that there would be no possible chance of their falling down in delivery.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What was the answer to that?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): A refusal.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): A refusal. Then what happened?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The permit system was introduced. I am not sure whether the hon. gentleman knows it or not, but it is not in the public interest to explain at this time just why permits were granted for this firm sale that had been arranged after the export permit system was introduced.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The reason is apparent; the heat was put on by Tokyo. Make no mistake about it; that is where the pressure came from, and the government yielded.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is certainly not my information.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think the minister will find that that is so.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Are we to understand that on a date which has not been given, this company asked for permission to enter into an arrangement whereby it could sell export wheat to Japan, and that the attitude taken then by the government was that it would not consent thereto; that this was prior to the time when an export licence was necessary; that later on the government changed its mind and consented to this company exporting wheat? If that is the position of affairs as outlined by the minister, it is different from the explanation given the other day by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is reported on page 3531 of Hansard as having said:

> I might particularize a little in reference to that statement.

He was referring to a statement given to the Canadian Press.

> Orders had been placed on the part of Japan for the wheat in question before any export permit requirements respecting wheat shipments had come into force in Canada. Shipments were actually stopped at the time because of export permit requirements coming at that moment into force, but on careful consideration of the whole matter it was felt that as the order had been placed before this requirement came into force, those particular shipments should be allowed to proceed. That course, I may add, is in accord with international usage.

Mr. GARDINER: That is exactly what is stated now.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The situation is altogether different according to the explanation given by the minister. His explanation is that the Canadian exporting company endeavoured to ascertain from the government, before export licences were required, whether it would be allowed to enter into an arrangement or contract with certain oriental interests for the sale of wheat. The minister has just pointed out that the reason why this company took this precaution was that it wanted to be assured before it purchased the wheat that the market it had been able to establish would not be lost on account of any action on the part of the government. Then the minister went on to say that after that request was turned down, further representations were made, and thereafter a permit was given.

Mr. HOMUTH: They were pressed for it.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That pressure was brought to bear, apparently not from Japan but from elsewhere, and in consequence of that pressure an export permit was granted. I should like the minister to explain the divergence in the statement made the other day by the Prime Minister and the explanation the minister now gives. I should like to know also the price per bushel paid to the wheat board by the exporting company and the price received by that company under the contract with the orient. That information must be in the possession of the government.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am told it is not.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: What manner of thing is this? The government did not make the sale; the government turned the sale over to a private corporation. From the telegram that passed between the minister and the gentleman named a while ago, I would infer that this company was not engaged in this transaction for philanthropic reasons. Surely before the permit was granted, the government would want to know what price was going to be paid by these Japanese interests for the wheat. Surely in view of the losses which have been suffered by the wheat board the government, if it was going to permit the transaction, would itself make the contract with Japan and make for the people of Canada any profit which was available. I am absolutely opposed to the transaction; but if there is any justification for it, why place it in the hands of a private corporation? What is the justification? What is the explanation?

The minister has said that the permit covered a certain number of bushels. How many bushels of wheat did the permit cover? Does the shipment made at this date complete the deliveries under that permit, or is any further shipment of wheat to be made to Japan or elsewhere in the orient? Finally, why is no explanation given for this wheat being shipped in bags? Was there any justification for the statement made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, that the reason for the bags was to make transshipment possible after the arrival of that wheat in Asia? These are matters the people of Canada want to know in detail. They want to know the full transaction as it is and will not be satisfied with telegrams received from outside the house from interested parties. They want an explanation by the minister on whose authority the permit was granted.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The government would not know at what price cash wheat was being sold between a private company and the purchaser.

Mr. PERLEY: What price did the board receive?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I can get that information. I am ready and willing to give all information that is sought for in an honest attempt to get proper information regarding this transaction.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is the minister imputing motives to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle? If he is he had better take that back immediately.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I would personally much sooner subject myself to criticism from the opposition for failure to answer questions that they ask than give information which I may have on this question and which I believe, and others believe, it is not in the public interest to go into fully at this time.

Mr. MacINNIS: It seems too bad that this discussion should have developed into such a fiasco in this committee because, after all, it is a serious matter. I think, however, that the explanation of the transaction should have been left to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, where I think it belongs. There are certain reasons why this permit was granted, and I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce would have been well within his province to have said that he was leaving the matter to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State for External Affairs should, in my opinion, take the leaders of the other parties in the house into his confidence with respect to this transaction and make an explanation which, whether they agreed with the shipment or not, would, I think, convince them that possibly there was nothing else in the circumstances to do.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I understand—perhaps I am incorrect—that hon. gentlemen opposite are pretty well informed with regard to all the circumstances surrounding this particular wheat shipment.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not correct so far as the leader of the opposition is concerned. I knew nothing about it until on or about the 5th of June when I first heard about this transaction. The Prime Minister in no way communicated with me other than what he said in reply to the inquiry I made on the 5th of June for information. That was the first time I heard of this transaction.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) has the floor.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I am sorry; I thought he had finished.

Mr. MacINNIS: The Minister of Trade and Commerce in answer to a question whether there were other shipments going to Japan besides wheat, whether any metals, such as nickel or copper, were being shipped, stated that this shipment of wheat was the only commodity going to Japan. I would ask the minister whether any lumber is being shipped to Japan at the present time?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The export permits are concentrated in the Department of Trade and Commerce at the present time. I know of no permits having been issued for other commodities than wheat. I shall make inquiries just to confirm that, but I am sure I am correct.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Just on the point as to what the Prime Minister said, if hon. members will look at page 3532 of Hansard they will find that I made inquiry, and the Prime Minister then made his statement. With that statement I was a bit puzzled because I could not understand how any private firm could make a commitment of this kind without obtaining the wheat from the wheat board. I went on to say:

> Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): I may be incorrectly informed, but my understanding of the situation is that no one can ship wheat without the consent of the wheat board or without obtaining the wheat from the board. This is a large transaction, involving half a million bushels. The wheat board must be in the picture somewhere.
> Mr. Mackenzie King: My information is that it is not.

I have no doubt that the Prime Minister made that statement in absolute good faith. I would not suggest anything else. But the information given to me was wrong. The wheat board was in the picture. Canadian wheat is going to Japan, and I say that is wrong, no matter who ships it.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Just following that up, I wish to say that I gave the information to the Prime Minister that the Canadian wheat board had nothing to do with the sale of wheat to Japan.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is a question of interpretation.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Certain hon. members do not seem to understand how a private corporation can get wheat to-day from the wheat board and have it in position to ship.

Mr. PERLEY: To Japan.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That is a different matter altogether. As I understand the operations of the wheat board to-day, they are willing to sell cash wheat to any exporter. He moves that wheat into position on the seaboard where it can be sold by him to an importer of any other country in the world provided that the government of Canada permits that wheat to be shipped to that country. The wheat that Great Britain buys in Canada is handled in identically the same way. It is sold to exporters, and these exporters move it into position in order that the wheat will be in a position to ship when they get bids from the cereals import board. That is why they use the futures market in the handling of grain.

As regards this wheat which was sold, we all know, I think, that there were important circumstances by reason of which a permit for shipment was given. We should know, too, that our sister dominion of Australia has been continuously selling wheat to Japan, and also to northern China, where this wheat is going. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle stated that because it was shipped in bags it would be transported through China to some enemy country. That is not a proper supposition, because in northern China there are many small mills, and in order to distribute this wheat to those mills it was loaded in bags at Vancouver and shipped to China.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): And shipped in Japanese boats.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes, it was shipped in Japanese boats. I am not questioning that part at all. Apparently a permit was given to ship wheat to northern China in Japanese boats, and the government must assume responsibility for that. But so far as the private corporation getting this wheat from the wheat board is concerned, the wheat board are willing at all times, as I understand it, to sell any amount of wheat to any Canadian exporters who will pay for it, and they move it on into position and make their own deal with the importers in other countries. The wheat board, of course, would know at what price the company bought from them, but they have no way of knowing what it was sold for.

Mr. PERLEY: They could have, though.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I do not think so. It was sold, no doubt, in competition with Australian and Argentine wheat.

Mr. PERLEY: Surely the wheat board should know.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Offers are made for wheat in this country by importers in the other countries. How would the wheat board know what the importers were offered?

Mr. PERLEY: It seems to me they should.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That may seem so to the hon. member, but not to me.

Mr. PERLEY: Why, then, did the minister put out this stuff to show that Liverpool is offering wheat at this price at the seaboard, which is fifteen or twenty cents more than the farmer is getting?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Those are offers by wheat exporters.

Mr. PERLEY: Pardon me; those are not offers made to Canadian exporters. It says. "Liverpool offers".

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes. Offers made to Liverpool of wheat.

Mr. PERLEY: By Liverpool, for wheat.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No.

Mr. PERLEY: Yes, that is what it says.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): As a matter of fact, the Liverpool exchange is not operating. They are not offers from the Liverpool exchange. These offers come from Fort William, from Montreal, from Boston, from New York, and from other seaboard points, so far as that goes, and my hon. friend was trying to figure out the price of wheat sold by the Canadian wheat board by saying, "Here are the amounts of these offers." That is one way he was going to figure it out. Another way he was going to figure it out was, that the customs figures show so much wheat sold at a certain price.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister's statement said that.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Yes; it showed so much wheat sold at a certain price and therefore that is the price which the wheat board got from the cereals import branch for wheat. I may tell my hon. friend that he has not the faintest chance of finding out from any of those figures.

Mr. PERLEY: How does the hon. member know?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I do not set myself up as an expert, like my hon. friend.

Mr. PERLEY: I do not set myself up as an expert.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): But I think I know the way wheat is handled.

Mr. PERLEY: The hon. member ought to, from the experience he has had.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): As I understand it, our wheat board sell a certain amount of wheat to the cereals import board on future delivery, not through the exchange; but they agree to sell at a price to the cereals import board, and after that has been done, the cereals import board at times asks for delivery of that wheat.

Mr. PERLEY: Where?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Montreal, Saint John, Halifax, Quebec—any of our ports. In the meantime the wheat board has sold to the ordinary exporters in Canada a certain amount of wheat which they have moved into position so that it can be delivered; and in selling that wheat—I think this is common knowledge—they sell it for cash, and the exporter sells back a future to the wheat board. The wheat is put in position, and then the cereals import board deals with the exporter of wheat, makes its price, and buys the cash wheat from the exporter. That is the seaboard price about which the hon. member is speaking.

Mr. PERLEY: What does the board do with the option in May?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The option is then traded back by the cereals import board.

Mr. PERLEY: By brokers?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It does not matter whom it is by; it is traded back by the cereals import board to take up the short option of the exporter.

Mr. PERLEY: And on the option they bought, this broker may deliver in the next two or three months, or whatever future month it is?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. PERLEY: I say that, on that option the board bought, the clearing house may deliver that cash wheat on it in the future month they bought?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No.

Mr. PERLEY: Well, it has to be traded through the clearing house, has it not?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It is traded by the cereals board back through to shut out that option, and the net result is, no matter what price they paid at the seaboard, nobody knows what price the cereals import board paid the Canadian wheat board for that wheat. That is the reason why you cannot find it out though. You may keep on trying.

Mr. PERLEY: I am just taking the minister's statement for it, when he said it was sold for considerably over the market price.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I made no such statement.

Mr. PERLEY: That is the statement. I believe that Hansard will bear it out.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I think the statement was made with regard to the 100 million bushels sold a year ago; it was not made with regard to this 120 million bushels.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): When the committee took recess I was endeavouring to explain the operations of the sale of wheat to the British cereals import board. I was also endeavouring to answer some of the points raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

The next point he raised was with regard to the interest paid by the board to companies purchasing grain at the country elevators. That is part of the contract which is made in connection with the handling of wheat between the grain company and the board. It is at a higher rate of interest, I would think, than that at which the government could borrow money. But that grain is at the risk of the elevator companies with regard to grade and weight until such time as it is delivered at the terminals. If any loss comes to them it is the grain companies that lose, not the wheat board. The wheat board guarantee the amount of money paid, a fixed price to the elevator companies, but only on delivery of the wheat with weight and grade correct.

My hon. friend also spoke of the board taking over coarse grains. All the board has done with regard to this is to take the direction of shipment for the allotment of elevator space in order that the board may direct what can be stored in the elevators, what can be shipped over the platform, and also, I think, this year in order to have transport for coarse grains to eastern Canada if they are needed for feeding live stock in this part of Canada. The board must of necessity have control of what is shipped in the way of coarse grains as well as in wheat.

The next point my hon. friend brought up was in connection with United States prices on grain. He gave information as to how wheat is being handled on loans to farmers in the United States, and to some extent he compared prices between Canada and the United States. Wheat is not at an ordinary price in the United States to-day any more than it is in Canada. Considerable loans have been made against wheat in the United States, one of the purposes being that they wanted to lift the price for the farmer in the United States by causing the domestic consumer there to pay more for the flour or the bread. That is not a very difficult proposition in the United States, whereas it would be very difficult in this country. The United States rarely exports more than 25 per cent of its total crop, whereas this country usually exports about 75 per cent of its total crop. By raising the price of the 75 per cent used domestically you get a fair raise on the whole crop, but to try to raise the price of 25 per cent or less of the crop in order to raise the price on 100 per cent is not a practical proposition.

My hon. friend then came to the offer that was made by the grain trade last year to turn over their whole plant and system to the Canadian wheat board, or to the government, for the duration of the war. He read out the names of nine separate firms which apparently had made this offer. The offer was on the basis that they would operate as agents of the board. They offered their whole system for the duration of the war on the basis of 6 per cent earning on the capital invested. I noticed that none of the pools offered to turn over their plant and equipment. I noticed that the Grain Growers Grain company did not join in the offer, nor did some of the other grain companies.

I have tried to find out just what position some of these companies are in which made the offer. I went to the Financial Post survey of corporate securities to find out exactly their position. I found that many of these companies were privately owned, and therefore a statement was not obtainable; but on those that were publicly owned, I did get a statement. I shall give some of the facts with regard to some of these companies that offered to turn over their plant and system for the duration of the war at 6 per cent on the invested capital.

Let me take, first, the N. Bawlf Grain company. Its preferred stock is 6½ per cent, $2,000,000 issued; common shares with no par value, $60,000. The 6½ per cent preferred dividend was regularly paid until December 1, 1930; no dividend has been paid since. There are arrears of cumulative dividend of something over $60 a share. There is $500,000 of first mortgage bonds.

The next company mentioned was the Alberta Pacific Grain company. This company has a $3,000,000 issue of 7 per cent cumulative preferred shares; the dividend was paid regularly from 1926 to July, 1930, and no dividend since. Cumulative arrears are $66.70 a share; common stock, no dividends paid, and no bond interest paid on $2,678,000 since 1933.

The Western Grain company has a $2,000,000 issue of 6½ per cent preferred stock; the dividend was paid to April 2, 1931, unpaid since. Accumulated arrears amount to $56.87 a share. On the no par value common stock, 200,000 shares, no dividend has been paid. On the bond issue, a 6 per cent first mortgage, series A, $3,000,000, no interest was paid from 1933 to 1936.

The Federal Grain company has an issue of $3,000,000 of 6½ per cent cumulative preferred stock; dividends not paid since February, 1931; arrears, $58.50; bonds, $3,104,000. These are the companies about which I have been able to get the information.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the hon. member give the dividends these companies have paid within the last year, and what they are earning now from the board in connection with the storage of grain?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): According to this survey, they have not paid any dividends on any of their issues in the last year.

Mr. PERLEY: In 1940-41?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): This is the 1940 survey of securities, and according to this there have been no dividends paid at all. My hon. friend has suggested that because this offer was made, the government should have taken over firms that apparently have not been able to earn dividends for ten years or more, and pay them 6 per cent on their invested capital. The hon. gentleman seems to think that these companies have been making a great deal of money under the present arrangement, and now he wishes to give them in addition a guarantee of 6 per cent on their total invested capital for the duration of the war.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not hear for which year the survey was made. Was it 1940, and would that be for 1939 dividends?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Up to 1940. This is the 1940 survey, the latest I could get, and I obtained these figures just to-day.

Mr. COLDWELL: That would be issued in June of last year?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In 1940. In any event the situation is that for ten years or more no dividends were paid. Everyone knows that in 1937 and 1938 these companies of whom my hon. friend speaks had huge deficits; not only did they not pay dividends, but they had deficits. In a year like 1937 that was bound to be the situation; yet the suggestion is made that for the duration of the war we take over these companies and guarantee them 6 per cent. We might have another year, or more than one year, like 1937 before this war is over. In that event this government, if it adopted this suggestion, would be loaded with a tremendous charge over and above the expense it has to bear to-day in handling the grain business of this country.

Mr. PERLEY: If the hon. gentleman will look up the record he will see that I suggested that the government take over the whole elevator system for the handling of grain.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend read the telegram from these companies containing their offer, and said he would like to know why the offer was not accepted.

Mr. PERLEY: Is that a suggestion that the government should accept it? I asked why they did not do so.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): My hon. friend can quibble about it if he wishes, but I think anyone who understands English will understand what he intended to say. Then the hon. gentleman, who has been talking about rackets, suggested a real one. He suggested that because the wheat board had complete jurisdiction over the handling of wheat in this country, so that no one can ship a car or put a bushel in an elevator or move wheat from one elevator to another without permission from the board, and that because in the ordinary course of handling wheat futures have been used, the wheat board should take the position that it had an absolute, strangling monopoly on the grain trade and should use that power to corner the grain and put these people in a false position.

Mr. PERLEY: The hon. member is drawing on his own imagination.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No, I am not; that is exactly the suggestion of my hon. friend as it appears at page 3651 of Hansard. Then the hon. gentleman said that the policy adopted by the board for the coming season had not met with the approval of western producers. The policy of the board is an act passed by this house, which has been in effect for some time. We here are responsible for what the board is doing. We are responsible for the fact that the board is handling futures. We are responsible for the fact that the board is handling wheat through the ordinary channels; we have directed them to do so by an act of this house, and they can do nothing else.

During the discussion the other evening a point was brought out by the hon. member for Acadia, I believe, in connection with the order in council, which he thought contained a new provision giving certain rights to landlords, mortgage companies and others which they did not possess a year ago. I believe that is correct. Last year nothing of the kind was necessary, because there was no restricted delivery; we were taking the whole crop. Some provision must now be made to protect these people during this crop year, but I do not believe the method followed in the order in council is the proper way to handle this problem. I do not think the landlord or the mortgage company should have the right to receive a portion of the first wheat to be delivered, and I believe some change should be made in order that the farmer may have a chance to pay his harvesting expenses before any share of the crop goes to the landlord, mortgage company and so forth.

There is another point, which I do not think the hon. member for Qu'Appelle dealt with, in connection with the amount of wheat the farmers of western Canada can deliver this year. We have said that the farmers of Canada will be allowed to deliver only some 230,000,000 bushels of the 1941 crop, which works out at about 222,000,000 bushels for western Canada. We have said also that a certificate will be given the farmer for his protection in case the wheat is finally sold for a higher price. Having limited the number of bushels the farmer can sell this year; having set up the remainder of the wheat as a reserve to be held during the war and sold as needed, we are placing ourselves as farmers in this position. We are allowing the government to say, "We will take only 230,000,000 bushels of your wheat this year, and if we should sell more wheat than that, it will come from the reserve." Under those circumstances I think it only fair to assume that the interim certificate should be worth something this year; and that whatever is obtained from the sale of this wheat from the first of the crop year until the 230,000,000 bushels is sold, less the actual cost of selling that wheat, should go to the farmer. It belongs to him; it is his wheat that is being sold. When the quantity is limited, then he should be given all we can get out of it. I may want to ask some questions later on. If the hon. member wishes to ask me any further questions, I shall be pleased to answer them.

Mr. PERLEY: I do not think the hon. member for Moose Jaw has made a very great contribution to the discussion. He tried to help the minister out before six o'clock, and in my opinion he got farther into the mire, and much more confused.

I should like to state briefly my position with respect to the matter which was under discussion this afternoon. I believe the minister went out of his way to criticize me. I am ready to substantiate anything I have said. Nothing has been said this afternoon to clear up the situation.

With respect to the deal I would say that on the afternoon of the 6th I had a telephone call from western Canada—much farther west than Winnipeg—in which it was stated that a copy of the Calgary Herald, which I now hold in my hand, was in the air mail addressed to me. They wished that I would see it and bring it to the attention of parliament as soon as possible. It so happened that I was waiting in my room at that time expecting the house to go into committee to consider the minister's estimates. I would state further that while I was in my room I received a long-distance telephone call from Winnipeg, in which it was pointed out that there was a good deal of excitement concerning the statement that had been made the day before, namely the 5th, in answer to the question asked by the leader of the opposition.

I wish to assure the committee that I had no motive other than the very best in mentioning the matter in the speech I made. I had nothing but the best intention. The matter had come to my attention during that afternoon not more than half an hour before I spoke. I would ask the government who it was that first brought this matter to their attention. Will they table the correspondence or the telegrams with respect to this shipment of wheat from Vancouver on Japanese account?

[Mr. J. G. Ross.]

I have in my hand the Calgary Herald of June 5, the headline of which states:

Alberta grain for nazis? Japanese vessel loads at coast; reich supply moves via Siberia.

And the text of which is as follows:

Is Canadian wheat, specifically Alberta-grown wheat held in coast terminals and owned by the Canadian wheat board, reaching Germany through Japan? This represents a figurative but worrying question mark dangling before the grain trade and appearing, by coincidence, almost simultaneously with Associated Press reports from Tokyo (June 3), to the effect that foodstuffs are flowing into Germany via Japan and the trans-Siberian railway at the rate of 1,500 tons daily.

Without offering any comment, grain circles here state they know the wheat is being loaded from Vancouver. Ottawa agrees with this. Over the week-end, between 3,000 and 4,000 tons, ordered ten days ago—

Ten days ago, it says here, by a certain firm.

—by a large firm of Japanese importers, went into a Japanese freighter. Shanghai is given as the destination.

In this regard inquiries at Ottawa brought word from the deputy minister of trade and commerce that "we have satisfactory assurances the wheat will not get to Germany".

Then it goes on:

At the same time, it was stated the cargo is destined for north China, for the purpose of feeding people there. Vladivostok, hundreds of miles north of Shanghai, is the terminus of the trans-Siberian railway.

Apart from the initial order, three other Japanese freighters are at Vancouver ready to load wheat, while the first boat takes on additional mixed cargo at New Westminster.

Available information indicates the wheat was ordered out of the Midland Pacific terminal at Vancouver, but this is denied by John Whittle, company representative there.

Calgary offices of the company explained they had no knowledge of the situation, as any order issued by the Canadian wheat board at Vancouver would not be brought to their attention.

Then in conclusion:

Exactly what grades are loaded and on order has not been stated, but the first has been sacked and presumably others will be similarly handled.

I received the telephone call pointing out that this article was in the mail addressed to me, and I believe I received it in sufficient time to bring it to the attention of the house. However, I did not do so. I wish, however, to refer to the other telephone message, and in that connection I quote from the note I took of the telephone message, and which I have before me now. My note is to the effect that certain Canadian firms, giving their names—and I named the firms—stated that they would have nothing to do with that deal of supplying any firms with grain consigned to Japan. In good faith I brought that matter to the attention of the house.

Some discussion has taken place on the point this afternoon, and I do not know whether or not it has been cleared up. There has been some confusion respecting the board's position. They certainly held wheat out there. We do not know. The transaction started in February, and was not completed until May. I know by the way they act, and from the description of their operations given by the hon. member for Moose Jaw, that they certainly deal in futures, or have their brokers or agents deal for them. This deal must have been put through the pit, and therefore I do not believe that the statement made this afternoon by the minister clears up the matter.

The minister made an attack against me this afternoon, and I should like to answer him at this time. I would ask him, first, what assurance the government had that the Canada Grain Export company in Vancouver was not acting on behalf of some international firm. Is there any definite assurance that they were not? Apart altogether from the question as to who operated for the board, that is a difficult question to answer. Has the government any knowledge, or would it care to make a statement respecting other Canadian firms I have mentioned who have refused to have anything to do with such deals in connection with wheat going out from the Pacific coast, which may go through to Japan? Was the government informed that this grain was to be shipped in bags? We should have an answer from the minister on that point, because it was indicated that it was going somewhere. As I have pointed out, it was going to a Siberian terminal, after being transhipped at Shanghai.

Then, did the government know that Japanese bottoms were on the way to Vancouver early in May to take this wheat? I suggest that the minister through his advisers should inform us as to what brokers acted for the board in connection with this deal. As I say, it began in February and was completed in May.

This afternoon the minister referred to a telegram he had received from Bunge North-American Grain corporation. In that telegram it was pointed out that the only shipment they had made recently was made on February 11. Where did they get their wheat on that date to ship from Canada?

Then, the minister made reference to Jewish firms—that is the way they have been described. With respect to these firms—they are termed the big three; his officers will know what I mean—I should like to inquire just how much Canadian wheat has been delivered to them in the last two years by the wheat board for export. It might be interesting to know if they have shipped anything in the last twenty months. Reference has been made to the telegram from Mr. Ladner, and the statement that he was a supporter of the Conservative party is apart altogether from the question. So far as I am concerned, I do not care who he is or what he is or what party he supports. If I think any firm is doing anything of the kind to which reference has been made, I am prepared to oppose it, or bring the matter before this committee. I do not care whom he is supporting; that has nothing to do with this question.

The minister tried to answer some of the questions to which I referred, but I do not think he did it very satisfactorily. I referred to the liability to the agents, and I wanted to know what it was. A statement was tabled in January, 1940. My reference to it was as plain as the king's English could make it—what is it now, the guarantee to the agents of the board? That is what I wish to know, namely, the liability referred to in this report. Reference was made to the appendix to the resolution with respect to that guarantee. I was justified in bringing that to the attention of the committee. It distinctly says on page 48 of the report that there is an outstanding guarantee. The minister tried to indicate how the board was operating. I wish to know if those guarantees are guarantees of the accounts of brokers, and I wish to know what brokers. He says that the board are not dealing in options, and consequently they must have brokers trading for them in options. They are buying and selling, and the trades have to be completed. We should like to know how much this guarantee is at the present time.

There has been a reference to price, and we have had the statement of the hon. member for Moose Jaw with respect to this price matter. I do not think there should be any great secrecy about it. The minister, when he has reported these sales from time to time, has given the committee the impression—in the case of one sale in particular he said it was considerably over the then market price or the 70 cent fixed price. I got the impression that it was the same with respect to the 120,000,000 bushels. However, I will take the minister's statement that it was not. The hon. member for Moose Jaw tried to clear the matter up this afternoon, but I think he was a little confused. I will read the statement put out in the bulletin of May 17:

> The export of wheat in April amounted to 20,322,400 bushels at a value of $17,393,126 or an average of 85·6 cents per bushel.

That is at the point of shipment, I presume the eastern terminals. That is as plain as the king's English can make it. The interpretation I place upon it is that there were 20,000,000 bushels of wheat sold for $17,000,000, which works out at 85 cents a bushel. This afternoon the minister said he did not know who represents the cereals import committee. The board has brokers dealing with the representatives of the cereals import committee, and therefore the board should know with whom the brokers they employ are dealing. If they do not, how do they know that the wheat their brokers or their agents are selling in the pit is going to Britain? I do not think the statement of the minister cleared that up at all. The hon. member for Moose Jaw in referring to shipments made the statement that in Australia there is no embargo. They are still shipping a very small amount. I have the figures. He did not then refer to the United States, although he did so this evening. The price in the United States is the restriction. Those who want wheat come to Canada because it costs too much in the United States.

With respect to the sale of 120,000,000 bushels that the minister announced a little while ago, he said that that would go over the year for the period ending May, 1942. He should tell us whether or not the futures were sold, because he stated it was futures. Then we need to know what brokers were employed. Certainly one broker would not handle the whole transaction. It would be very apparent on whose account it was. We should have a list of the brokers used, how much brokerage was paid, what fees were paid and when they were paid. I do not think it would be divulging any great secret if we had the price.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Does the hon. member think there were brokers in that?

Mr. PERLEY: The minister can answer the question. He said that they sold futures, and he has stated here that although they have a membership the board did not sell futures; they employed somebody to do it. Therefore I would presume that they would employ brokers to do it. A deal in futures would have to be cleared through the exchange.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): We sold future deliveries of 120,000,000 bushels direct to England.

Mr. PERLEY: Futures.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): Guaranteed to deliver.

Mr. PERLEY: It is futures, he said.

Mr. GARDINER: A period of months.

[Mr. Perley.]

Mr. PERLEY: We want to know in what months. If it was traded through the grain exchange, they would have to deal in certain months.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It was not traded through the Winnipeg grain exchange.

Mr. PERLEY: Answer me this then. The hon. member for Moose Jaw seems to be taking the position of being the mouthpiece for the minister. There is a statement in this report that the board is holding a certain amount of this 570,000,000 bushels in cash wheat and futures. What about that?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That could be true; what of it?

Mr. PERLEY: I am asking the hon. member. He says they have not any futures.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I did not say anything of the kind. I said that the board had sold for future delivery 120,000,000 bushels of wheat to the cereals import committee. I did not say that they sold it as futures on the Winnipeg grain exchange; I said that they contracted for future delivery of 120,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. PERLEY: They did not use brokers?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): No.

Mr. PERLEY: The hon. member for Moose Jaw seems to know more about the matter than the minister. All right; we had better leave it there. When we get that committee the minister is going to give us this fall, we shall call some of the brokers from Winnipeg and find out if they have been operating for this board. I have in my office letters from some of them which I should like to have in the chamber right now, and they complain of the way in which the business has been handled. They say that it was given to a few special ones. I think the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) made reference to the knowledge he had of that.

With respect to the matter of guarantees, I quoted from the budget resolutions. I think I was justified in bringing that to the attention of the committee. The matter has been mentioned with respect to interest. The hon. member for Moose Jaw referred to that this evening. The hon. member agreed with me that the interest paid to the agents of the board, 4½ per cent, is a little too high, especially when the government only pays the banks three per cent. I think if the board were handling the whole transaction themselves, they would save this country at least 1 per cent on the volume of wheat. That is the way it should be done. They should pay for it daily. The duplicates of the cash tickets received by the producers come into Winnipeg from all over the country. Why should the board not pay the elevator companies and cut out the interest altogether? That is one thing I think they should do. I should like to know from the minister when the board settles with the country agents. I should like to know the storage earned by the different elevator companies. These are some of the matters about which we should be informed.

Then I come back to another matter. Has the government ever considered adopting a plan for the marketing of the 1941 crop similar to that adopted in the United States? I think they should give consideration to that, and if they have done so, I should like to know why they did not adopt some similar plan.

Another matter which I think the minister should clear up a little better than he did this afternoon is with respect to arranging some settlement regarding the position of those who have contracts to deliver wheat to the board. It is out of position. The minister knows what I mean by "out of position"; he referred briefly to that matter but did not clear it up to my satisfaction. Is there some deal or arrangement pending with these firms to make a settlement and to take the October for the July wheat?

October is a new crop month. The grain exchange is to remain open, and if all these firms are going to take in wheat they will certainly protect themselves if the board cannot take the wheat off their hands. The 1941 crop should be kept separate. The hon. member for Lake Centre has made that point, and I agree with him. The board is taking only 230,000,000 bushels and that wheat should be kept in a separate account. If it is sold for more than 70 cents a bushel, the farmers should have anything that is left after carrying charges and expenses have been deducted. I am glad that the hon. member for Moose Jaw brought up that point.

The minister should also give us some information as to the elevator annexes being built throughout the west, how much grain has been stored in them, what is the storage paid to date, and how often these accounts are settled with the elevator companies. This is one of the matters that I say is a racket because there is both mixing and skimming. I should like to have time to go into that, but I have not the time to-night. There is bound to be mixing. Take, for instance, the annex at Portage la Prairie. What is going on there when grain is shipped into that annex from all over the west? The grain is certainly being mixed, and I understand that a skimming and mixing racket is going on.

I come back to what the hon. member for Moose Jaw referred to, the offer of those nine firms. I brought that matter to the attention of the house at the time I urged that the whole elevator system, the physical handling and the storage, should be taken over. I did not know what the financial position of these nine firms was. I had a copy of the telegram which the minister had, also a copy of the board's reply, but no information as to the amount that would be involved.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw said that there would be a risk with respect to grades and weights. If the government took over the whole elevator system, the government would have the whole load; and if there is mixing going on, if that is to be permitted, the government would have the benefit. I venture to say that there would be no risk. I know that I received letters and telegrams from all parts of my district that No. 1 wheat was being taken in as No. 2 and No. 3, and was being mixed. The minister might explain with the assistance of his advisers exactly how this grain is handled when it reaches Fort William. How is the government keeping track of No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3 in the different elevators, and how are the elevators keeping track of what they ship out? What happens in Fort William if more No. 1 arrives there than elevators report having taken in, in the country? How does it square up with the amount of No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3 taken in at the country elevators? I have called this mixing and skimming that is going on a racket, and I venture to say that the hon. member for Wood Mountain will agree with what I say as to the mixing and skimming that is going on. The minister has not cleared up to my satisfaction the various points I have mentioned. We have as much information now as we had at the start. He should tell us with the assistance of his advisers exactly what the board is holding in futures if they hold any. The statement has been made that they hold 170,000,000 bushels in futures.

I made a few notes with respect to some other observations the minister made this afternoon, but what he said was not, I think, of sufficient importance for me to take the time to answer.

The minister should make a definite statement to the committee with respect to the 1941 crop and tell us definitely that it will be kept in a separate account and that there will be a separate accounting for it each month.

The committee is entitled to more detailed statements than we get from the reports of the wheat board, and we should get detailed statements oftener. That is due not only to the farmers but to the country. It is not sufficient to give us a detailed statement only once a year.

With respect to coarse grains, the regulations are to all intents and purposes the law, and I think they will be carried out this fall. Coarse grains are being brought under the operation of the board, and I think a definite price, a minimum price at least, should be fixed for barley and oats. If they cannot take delivery, the farmers should know exactly why they cannot, because I know the farmers are willing to do their part. It seems to me that we are going to have an overabundance of coarse grains this year as a result of the policy of the Minister of Agriculture to reduce wheat acreage and bonus land seeded to coarse grains. We should have some definite information with respect to that.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw has made one or two references to the risk. I have answered that. He also referred to the nine firms which offered their facilities for the duration of the war. I think, before this year is out, the government will realize that the amount involved will be $500,000,000, and I venture the prediction that before the end of October they will be in a frame of mind to think that they should have taken over the whole physical handling of the wheat. It would save several million dollars in storage charges.

We should also have a statement from the minister as to the terminal at Port Arthur leased to McCabe Bros. and the one rented to the United Grain Growers at Vancouver. How much have McCabe Bros. earned from their elevator at Port Arthur in the last six months, and how much have the United Grain Growers earned from the government elevator at Vancouver? How much has the board paid to these two firms? The minister should also give us a statement with respect to the government-owned elevators, stating the exact position with regard to them.

Mr. DONNELLY: In reply to the hon. member who has just spoken (Mr. Perley), I should like to answer a few of the questions he has asked. First of all, I will take the last point he brought up, and this is the second time he has referred to the elevator at Port Arthur rented to McCabe Bros. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar also referred to that the other evening. I remember being in Fort William some years ago and speaking to the gentleman who is in charge of our internal storage elevators. At that time he told me he was losing money in this elevator at Port Arthur on account of the fact that the grain act was changed in 1929 and that, instead of being able to mix the different grades, they had, from then on, to keep them separate. Then, he said, "We have an export grade, and we also have a grade that we buy by. The grade that we buy by is what we call the standard grade, and the grade that we sell by is called the 75-25—seventy-five of the average run of No. 1 northern as it comes in, and 25 per cent of the standard grade, which is the lowest sample that one can get out of that grade—with the result that the export grade is much higher than the standard grade." The result is that this elevator, the government having no elevators out in the country, would get only what might be called the mistakes in grading. If a sample of wheat was graded No. 1 northern, although, to look at it, it was only No. 2, the elevator company would decide that "that is no use to us; we will ship that to the government terminal at Port Arthur." That went down all through the grades, and the result was that this elevator was getting only the lowest which could pass that grade, and when they shipped the grain out they were unable to maintain their grades, and lost money. This happened after the grain act was changed in 1929.

The result was that, during the regime of Mr. Bennett, he concluded that if the government were going to lose money by operating the elevator, they might as well rent it. Therefore they called for tenders and rented it to McCabe Bros. From 1931 or 1932 it was rented continually at the same rate. The lease expired, I believe, in 1938, before the war broke out, and the government renewed the lease. That, of course, was a piece of good fortune for McCabe Bros., because since the outbreak of the war, grain storage space has been at a premium. But what is the government to be expected to do? Is it expected to break its contract and cancel the lease just because McCabe Bros. are making money out of it? I do not believe that anyone would seriously ask the government to cancel a contract which was made in good faith before the war began, merely because the lessees are making money out of it.

Mr. ROSS (Calgary East): When does that lease expire?

Mr. DONNELLY: I am told that it goes for six years.

It may be that some changes are necessary to which I shall refer later, and which might offset some of the profits which grain storage firms are making. But I contend that this particular contract was a legitimate one, entered into at a time when no great amount of money was to be made out of the operation of terminal elevators. It is pretty far-fetched to ask the government now to cancel its contract in order to prevent these people from making money.

One other matter which has been mentioned, and to which I wish briefly to refer, is the demand for the closing of the grain exchange. I listened to the debate the other night, and everyone who rose in his place in this chamber said that we must close the grain exchange. I am not a champion of the exchange, but I have been growing grain for the last thirty-six or thirty-seven years, and during the whole of that time I have been hearing the cry, "Close the grain exchange; they are a lot of rascals down there in Winnipeg." It has long been a favourite pastime to call for the closing of the exchange, much as one hears people talking about the "big shots," the financial interests which are supposed to have the country by the throat, and the predatory banking interests. It is always a favourite sport to talk about these things. Yet I have never heard a man give a convincing reason why the grain exchange should be closed.

Mr. PERLEY: Did the Turgeon commission not say that it should be closed?

Mr. DONNELLY: Never mind the Turgeon commission. The hon. member may give me any reason he can think of when his turn comes. I can give him some reasons against closing it. I have one right in my hand. Here I have two tickets for wheat sold in May. One lot of wheat was sold to the board, from whom I got 55½ cents. Here is another ticket for wheat I sold to the grain exchange, and for which I got 57¾ cents.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Were both sold at the same time?

Mr. DONNELLY: It is going to take a lot of talk to make me believe that the exchange has not played a useful part.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Were both lots of wheat sold on the same date?

Mr. DONNELLY: The sales were about a week apart.

Mr. QUELCH: Did the hon. member get a participation receipt from the grain exchange?

Mr. DONNELLY: No, I did not, but I have had a lot of them, and the hon. member can have them if he will give me one-half of the difference between what I received on those two transactions. There is, in fact, 2¼ cents difference; if the hon. member will give me one cent a bushel, I will let him have them all. As I have said, it would take a lot of talking to persuade me that the grain exchange has not played a useful part, and I believe that my opinion is held by every other farmer in western Canada who is dealing in or selling wheat when he obtains that advantage by trading through the grain exchange.

Another consideration which occurs to me is this. If at the present time you close down the grain exchange, what are you going to do with your coarse grains? Where are you going to sell your flax, barley and rye? Presumably you will have to appoint a board to take them over. We shall have to have some facilities to handle these coarse grains if the exchange is closed.

There is no doubt that the grain exchange has played a useful part in the past. It has kept down the spread between cash wheat delivered at Fort William, and street wheat. Without it, the man buying wheat out in the country would have to purchase it on his own gamble. What is it going to be worth when it gets to Fort William if you do not have a grain exchange to sell the wheat for you? You must have some organization of that kind so as to narrow the spread. If you do not have it, what would be the result? Well, you buy wheat to-day, and I might not be able to get it to Fort William for two months. At the end of that time the price of wheat might be down twenty cents, and I would have to take the difference in the spread between cash wheat and spot wheat down in Fort William. Anybody who has looked into the matter knows that in this connection the grain exchange has played a useful part in the past.

Not only that. If a committee such as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle wants is set up, and it calls before it some of the members of the grain exchange, I believe it will be found that the board has been using the exchange to keep down storage costs. Mr. McFarland handled the problem in that way; he dealt in futures; and these people have to deal in futures sometimes in order to reduce the cost of storage in our terminals. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister said that they do not.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, you will find that they do deal in futures in a certain amount.

I wish to refer to another matter, namely storage charges. Last year, when speaking in this chamber, I said, referring to storage charges, that the elevator companies would be making this year, at the then level of storage charges, somewhere in the neighbourhood of $50,000,000, and that the farmers were going to get 50 cents a bushel for 400,000,000 bushels, which would be something like $200,000,000. The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar the other night said he thought my figure was exaggerated. The Minister of Agriculture in speaking here not very long ago, referred to the fact that the government had expected to have 570,000,000 bushels of wheat in storage at the end of July, and said it would cost the government $50,000,000 just to store that wheat, and there are many other charges besides storage when you take in wheat. Besides that, there are 230,000,000 bushels of wheat to go through the elevators this year, because we are going to take 230,000,000 bushels.

The farmers are going to pay a certain amount; they pay it when they sell their wheat on the street, for the weighing, grading, elevating, loading in cars and shipping. Not only that, but there is also the elevating of this wheat at the terminal elevators. There is the cleaning of the wheat, and what is made from drying and work of that kind. Therefore it is easy to see that this year there will be between $60,000,000 and $65,000,000 made by these people; there is no doubt about that. I still maintain that although we reduced the storage charges last year from one-thirtieth of a cent to one-forty-fifth of a cent a day, we did not reduce them enough; we should have reduced them still further This one cent we spoke of last year for selling our wheat is a charge which should not be allowed; it should be cut down considerably; it is entirely too much. That is the reason why one hears throughout the country to-day the cry going up, "Close the grain exchange." From whom? It was started by the elevator companies. Why? Because the elevator companies get that one cent for selling the wheat which formerly went to the grain exchange. All they do for it is to make out your participating ticket when you go in, and send that off. It is true that it might be a good thing for the wheat board to open up a sales department and take over all the selling of wheat. But I cannot see any reason why, at the present time when farmers are living from hand to mouth and making sacrifices, and are down at a low ebb and asked to curtail their production, the grain trade should not be asked to reduce some of their charges.

The chief complaint we heard the other night was as to the price of wheat. All said that the price was too low. Being a farmer myself, of course I should like to see it much higher. I should like to see it just as high as does any other hon. member; you cannot make me mad by raising the price of wheat. There seems, however, to be a misconception as to what we are getting for our wheat. Some said they wanted 85 cents; some, 95 cents; let us see what we are getting and what we are going to get as wheat growers. First, we have 70 cents guaranteed as a minimum payment.

Mr. NICHOLSON: At Fort William.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, and then we get a participating certificate with which I shall deal in a moment. Then the government says, "You must cut your acreage so that you have only 65 per cent of last year's, and on that basis the production will be about 230,000,000 bushels." And they said, "To the people who cut down their acreage by sowing coarse grains or grass or by summer-fallowing, we will give $35,000,000 in the way of assistance." If you divide $35,000,000 into 230,000,000 bushels, that means fifteen cents a bushel. Anyone who lives up to what the government ask them to do will get another fifteen cents a bushel. The scheme has this advantage, that whether you get wheat or not, whether you have a poor crop or not, whether you are frozen out or the grasshoppers eat you out or you are dried out, if you reduce your acreage as you are asked to do, you will get an average of fifteen cents a bushel on the average yield whether you have an average yield or not. That makes 85 cents a bushel.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Does it not cost something to get that?

Mr. DONNELLY: You will have to summer-fallow and sow coarse grains anyway.

An hon. MEMBER: Not that much.

Mr. DONNELLY: Perhaps not. Then the government say also, "There are certain parts of Saskatchewan that have been having no crop for some years, and we are going to help these people to whom nature has been unkind by drought or grasshoppers or hail or some other condition." Accordingly they have what is called prairie farm assistance or the acreage bonus. That has been provided; it cost in one year, I think something like $12,000,000; in another year, $8,000,000 or $9,000,000. If it averages about $10,000,000, that means another five cents a bushel given to wheat growers in western Canada on account of the failure of the wheat crop. That is given, not to the man who has a lot of wheat, but to the man who has no wheat; it is paid on an acreage basis. That brings it to 90 cents a bushel.

We come now to the last, namely, our participating certificates. We are told that this year it will be different from last, that on August 1 we are to have a cut-off; that all the wheat we get up to that date will be considered a government responsibility and put on one side, and that, from that on, all the wheat that comes in will be dealt with as this year's crop. In other words, all the money we get for wheat after August 1 will be on this 230,000,000 bushels, that is to be kept distinct and separate. If the price of 86 cents mentioned by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is anything like accurate—and we know that 50,000,000 bushels anyway is going to be sold at 85 cents because it is going to be sold at 70 cents plus the processing tax—and if we have another 120,000,000 bushels, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, sold for 86 cents, our total should be 75 cents anyway.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But the fifteen cents does not go to the farmer.

Mr. DONNELLY: It goes to the board for the wheat.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But the farmer does not get it.

Mr. DONNELLY: Well, it should go to the farmer.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If it does, let us know about it.

Mr. DONNELLY: With all these things, the participating certificates should bring somewhere in the neighbourhood of five cents a bushel; and if they bring anywhere near what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle said, 86 or 86½ cents. Therefore we get somewhere about 95 cents. What, then, is all the cry about not getting enough for the wheat? These are all plain facts, and our government has said that this year's wheat is to be kept separate. All wheat delivered after August 1 is to be counted as this year's crop; when we have delivered the 230,000,000 bushels, a settlement will be made with regard to whatever we get for it, and the participating certificates will be paid. That is what we are expecting will be done.

Mr. BENCE: Is that what the government said?

Mr. DONNELLY: I understand so.

Mr. BENCE: I hope that is right.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is what I understand is to be done. Hon. members will have to ask the minister for a more definite statement, but that was what was referred to by the hon. member for Moose Jaw. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to it also. I refer to it again as part of the price we are to get for our wheat. Therefore we should get for the 230,000,000 bushels in the neighbourhood of 95 cents a bushel. It should not be given just to the man who happens to have wheat. We must remember that at one time we had a bonus of five cents a bushel on wheat, and many of us went up and down the country saying this was altogether wrong, although it was following the words of the scripture that to him that hath shall be given. We condemned the government of that time for that policy; and I say it is right that this bonus or assistance should be given to those who have poor crops, damaged crops or no crops, instead of on a bushelage basis. I believe the present system is far better than the system which was followed at that time.

There may be other questions that will arise in connection with this wheat problem. For example, there is the question of setting up a selling agency to take over this wheat; perhaps that might be a good thing to do. I am not going to say, but I think it should be investigated because some of these charges for the handling of wheat are altogether too high.

Mr. WEIR: The vote we are considering this evening has to do with the administration of the Canada Grain Act, which is administered by the board of grain commissioners. That act has to do with the grading, weighing, inspection and general handling of grain, and the operation of government elevators. Up to the present I have heard no complaint with respect to the administration of the Canada Grain Act; nor have I heard any complaint with regard to the way in which the wheat board, which is under the same minister, has carried out government policy. I think most of those who have followed the situation closely will agree that during the last two years, and particularly during the last year, the wheat board has done a splendid job under most difficult circumstances. In bringing down this estimate the minister has permitted a discussion of both the Canada Grain Act under the board of grain commissioners and the operation of the Canadian wheat board. Perhaps that is all to the good, since these matters are pretty well correlated, and we can obtain information as to both the administrative and the marketing ends at the same time.

Now that the mystery surrounding the shipment of wheat from Vancouver to north China has been cleared up, perhaps we can go ahead and deal with two or three other matters, but in this connection I think it only fair and reasonable to say that so far as this transaction was concerned, the wheat board as such was quite within its rights in what it did. As a matter of fact, if the wheat board had received an offer from anyone, suggesting a price satisfactory to them, and had not acted on that offer, they could have been criticized from the opposite point of view. I contend that the destination of the wheat was a matter of government policy, and not a matter about which the wheat board should be concerned. The wheat board's job is to sell wheat, and it is for the government to say whether it will prevent such wheat from being shipped to certain countries.

This estimate provides an opportunity to discuss the question of the cost of handling wheat, which is a matter giving concern to a great many farmers; and, since the government has a part in the financing of the wheat, the matter concerns the government as well. I am bound to say that there is a general feeling in the country that in comparison with the value of the product, the handling charges are too high. I am not going to make the statement that they can and must be reduced. In a recent publication issued by the Department of Trade and Commerce I saw a statement of the cost of handling grain through the elevators in the Argentine. I am not going to refer to those costs, because I do not know the services rendered by the grain companies of the Argentine compared with the services rendered by our own companies. The grain companies are under certain definite obligations with regard to guaranteeing weight and grade, and as to financial responsibility; and from the statement concerning the Argentine I do not know that the same conditions apply there.

I think it should be pointed out that it is the job of the wheat board to market wheat, and in consequence the board is obliged to provide facilities for handling that wheat. Up to the present time the board in its wisdom has decided to use existing facilities and to make agreements with the elevator companies for the handling of the grain. This practice has been followed since the wheat board has been in operation. Therefore the matter comes down to a question of the sort of deal the wheat board can make with the elevator companies. I think it is safe to assume that the board has endeavoured at all times to make the best possible deal, because it would be entirely in its own interests, in the interests of the government and in the interests of those marketing the grain, that it should do so.

In connection with the rates for handling grain there is another feature which perhaps a good many people have overlooked. The board of grain commissioners, which administers the Canada Grain Act, each year holds a public session at which the handling charges for grain are reviewed, and at which anyone interested can attend and make representations with respect to any particular costs or charges made in connection with grain. At these meetings, of course, the trade is always represented; the wheat pools are always represented, and I suppose the milling interests and others concerned with the marketing of grain are represented as well. I happen to know that at the meeting held last year every grain company represented pressed strongly for the continuation of the prevailing rate for the storage of grain.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That was one-thirtieth cent?

Mr. WEIR: It was one-thirtieth of a cent a bushel a day. The only protest against that charge was made by members from western Canada supporting this government. We made representations against continuing the same storage charge, and the result of those representations may be noted in the fact that the charge was reduced from one-thirtieth to one-forty-fifth of a cent a day. With all due respect to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, while it is all very well, and quite proper, for him to discuss in this house the question of handling charges and so forth, I would suggest that he also has the right to make representations at the meeting called for that purpose by the board of grain commissioners.

One other feature in connection with the handling of grain is also of importance. A few moments ago I mentioned that the board was required to make agreements for the handling of grain and that no doubt it endeavoured to make the best deal possible. Last year, when our storage problem became so acute; when we were wondering where we were going to get storage to house the grain coming on the market, the grain trade would not commit itself to the construction of any additional storage, either temporary or permanent, unless and until it received from the government some concession with regard to taxation. In view of this circumstance, surely it must be agreed that the wheat board accomplished a great deal in its agreement with the elevator companies.

Just here I might refer to the construction of elevator annexes that has been continued this year. I think it was a mistake to continue that programme. I know that certain elevator companies went out on their own behalf in an attempt to build a quantity of additional, temporary storage space throughout the country. I do not know who was responsible for putting a check on that procedure, but I understand it has been stopped, and I believe that was a proper procedure to follow. So far as additional space is concerned, if it has to be acquired my contention is that the assistance might much more properly be given in connection with the building of granaries on the farms, or something of that kind. I believe it is only fair to say that our farmers are deserving of a good deal more credit than has been given to them for the manner in which they housed last year's huge crop of wheat. The farmers of western Canada, who ordinarily have been accustomed to delivering their grain in the early fall months of the year, must have at some time or another held in storage on their farms upward of 200,000,000 to 225,000,000 bushels of wheat, in addition to coarse grains. No one thought there was that much storage space on the farms of western Canada. It may not have been good space—I know of houses, cellars, and all sorts of structures which were filled with grain—nevertheless it was space which could be used.

Here is another interesting point. Despite our anxiety in connection with the delivery of grain, the wheat board had available storage space in country elevators to the extent of about 50,000,000 bushels, with another 40,000,000 to 50,000,000 bushels of storage space in terminal buildings where grain could have been tucked away. Therefore had it been absolutely necessary to move some grain, that space would have been available.

Another feature which has been overlooked in connection with the handling of last year's crop is the amount of grain that was actually handled. The board, from the August to November period, took delivery of 243,000,000 bushels of wheat, in addition to coarse grains. That figure was exceeded only once in the last ten years, and that was in the year before, when a larger quantity of wheat was delivered in that fall period. I believe the wheat board is deserving of credit for the manner in which it made provision for the handling of last year's wheat crop.

Just at this point, however, I should like to refer to another feature, namely the date on which farm storage payments should be made. As I read the record, payment for farm storage by the wheat board started from November 1, last. The implied understanding of the act was that the farmer should be paid a rate of storage comparable with that paid the elevator companies. If that is so, I believe we are not being quite fair to the farmer if we are not going to begin paying storage until November 1. In my opinion it should be started at least by September 1.

I should like to refer in greater detail to the marketing of last year's crop. May I say to the minister and to the wheat board that the quota system has generally been considered satisfactory. It was the only policy which could have been carried out last fall with any degree of fairness. I have been surprised by the manner in which business men generally have looked upon this system of delivery. By and large they wish to see it continued. They believe it is a much better policy for the farmer and for their own business to have the payments on wheat spread out over the year, rather than have the lot coming in at one time.

It is true that at the beginning of the last harvest marketing period there was a good deal of apprehension as to the condition which would probably exist because of the low delivery of wheat. Let me say that I believe the policy, as it finally worked out last fall, cannot be severely criticized. Once the minister made his statement last November, that the wheat board would accept all of this year's crop during the crop year, the credit situation was entirely relieved. Any man who was credit-worthy—I shall use that expression—had little or no difficulty in securing a loan from the bank, which in turn he paid later, the storage charge being quite sufficient to pay the interest.

That relieved the situation, so far as Manitoba was concerned, and I am bound to say I have not heard any serious complaints from any area in which there was a crop. Of course where there was no crop, or a very light one, the situation was somewhat critical. The same will happen this year with respect to the 230,000,000 bushels. The government has said that it will take the wheat during the crop year. Therefore it is a gilt-edged security, and any man who wishes to borrow on his wheat may do so.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle referred to marketing in the United States. I contend that, apart from the price factor, our policy in Canada is not greatly unlike that of the United States. We have set up an initial price. Because of the government's statement that it will take the wheat during the crop year, credit facilities with recognized lending concerns are available for those who desire or who require to borrow money to carry on their operations.

I should like to say a word respecting the grain exchange, of which mention has been made frequently. By the way, I am reminded by one of my colleagues that the amount of wheat United States farmers are able to deliver is limited, as it is in Canada. So far as the farmer or the government is concerned, I do not think it makes a particle of difference whether the grain exchange is closed or not.

Mr. QUELCH: What is the price the United States farmer gets? Is it not $1.24?

Mr. WEIR: I do not know just what it is to-day.

The CHAIRMAN: May I point out to hon. members that if they wish to ask questions they should first rise in their places. It is against the rules for an hon. member to ask a question while remaining seated.

Mr. WEIR: I was going to refer to the matter of the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange. As I said earlier, I do not think it makes any difference whether it is closed or not. So far as this country is concerned, it might as well be closed. However, as pointed out by the hon. member for Wood Mountain, we would still have the problem of marketing our coarse grains, and some machinery is necessary for that purpose. Why should we concern ourselves about a matter of this kind when practically the only purchaser of wheat we have requests that the exchange remain open? It is not doing us any harm, and therefore let us forget about any talk of closing it.

I should like to refer to another matter discussed this afternoon by hon. members, namely, the policy of the government respecting the marketing of this year's crop. The government has declared that it will take only 230,000,000 bushels. I wish to endorse the suggestion made by hon. members this evening, that all earnings acquired by this wheat be credited to that 230,000,000 bushels. If the supposition of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is correct, and if the wheat has been sold to Great Britain at either a slightly or a substantially higher price than the initial payment of the board, then that money should be earmarked for this 230,000,000 bushels. Likewise the processing tax levied on wheat consumed in this country should receive similar treatment. I hope the minister will not overlook this factor, and will see that representations are made to the government at the proper time and in the proper place.

For a few moments I should like to refer to the regulations recently passed by order in council concerning the operations of the wheat board. I refer particularly to regulation No. 17 which, as I interpret it, sets out that the landlord shall be entitled to his share of the crop delivered. If a man is renting a farm, my interpretation of this regulation is that the board is under some obligation to see that the landlord gets his one-third. I think this is entirely unnecessary, and it will cause a great deal of trouble and misunderstanding. I would say to the board that they might better get rid of that regulation and let each individual look after his own affairs according to the agreement arrived at between landlord and tenant. Regulation No. 22 deals with the description of land, and it reads:

> No person shall apply or deliver any grain on his quotas from any land other than that described in his permit. Such description shall be a correct representation of the lands owned, rented or otherwise held and farmed by the producer taking the declaration, and the producer shall ascertain that no other person entitled to proceeds of the farm has taken out a permit for such lands.

That is putting too heavy a responsibility upon the individual. After all, the wheat board has a job to do, and it should be its responsibility to see that there is no duplication of certificates.

Regulation No. 28 has to do with a man shipping grain over the platform. As I understand this regulation, a man who ships a carload of grain over the platform is obliged to forward his permit with the car to the wheat board. Having sent in that permit, he cannot deliver any more grain until he gets it back. Surely there is a difficulty there that should be recognized. A man may have a large acreage and be threshing upwards of a carload of wheat a day. He could not afford to stop and wait until his permit came back after being sent into Winnipeg. I just wanted to point out these features with respect to the regulations. I think they deserve further consideration, particularly the one with respect to the landlord and tenant shares.

Some days ago an announcement was made with respect to a proposed wheat conference to be called by the United States, to which Canada would be invited. I should like to advance this thought to the government. Having regard to the particular interest of western Canada in the marketing of wheat, I think consideration should be given to having representatives of our provincial governments attend the conference. After all, those provinces are most vitally concerned, and in my judgment it would be to the government's advantage to see that they are made conversant with any undertaking that may be proceeded with in a conference of this kind.

I come now to a matter which I have discussed briefly in this house on other occasions, namely, the finding of new industrial uses for wheat and other agricultural products. A report has recently been published setting out the far-reaching accomplishments in this regard. I think the time is coming when we must face the possibility of utilizing wheat for other purposes. This report is entitled, "Industrial Utilization of Farm Products" and is published by the North-West line elevators' association. I commend a reading of it to hon. members. At this time we are considering whether we shall be able to continue with the unrestricted use of gasoline. If certain of our farm products could be turned into industrial alcohol, this would relieve the other situation to a certain extent. There is a wide field of inquiry which could be carried on, not only in western Canada but throughout all Canada Ways should be found of utilizing to better advantage the product of this great industry whose future is in jeopardy on account of conditions that exist.

I do not know whose job it would be to undertake something of this kind. The minister has under his control the national research council, the board of grain commissioners and the wheat board. Any or all of these bodies should be encouraged or advised to take up this work. I suppose it will be said that the wheat board as such has a job to do in connection with the mechanics of the marketing of wheat. The board of grain commissioners is responsible for the administration of the Canada Grain Act as it affects not only the actions of the wheat board, but the grain trade as a whole. Perhaps we could load an additional responsibility upon the board of grain commissioners; perhaps we could delegate to them the job of attempting to find new markets for wheat. We should be exploring all opportunities of trade so far as it is humanly possible to do so.

In connection with the problem of wheat we have the board of grain commissioners; we have the Canadian wheat board; we have the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act; we have the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, and now we have the reduction programme. I think the country expects, and I feel sure our farmers expect that the services of these various organizations, all designed fundamentally for the same thing, should be utilized in the closest cooperation and collaboration. If there is any way of bringing these groups together so that they may all work toward the same end, it is most desirable that this should be done.

Finally, I come back to what I said earlier. The duty of the wheat board is to market our wheat, and we hope they will make as good an arrangement with the elevator companies and other interests for the handling of the grain as it is possible to make. We hope they will be able to get the costs of that job down to as reasonable a figure as possible.

I repeat that I think farm storage should be paid as from September 1 instead of from November 1. I repeat that the full amount realized from the sale of this year's crop should be credited to the amount of wheat that the wheat board is going to take this year. I contend that the wheat board and the board of grain commissioners should continue unrelenting efforts to find new markets for our wheat as well as to study new industrial uses for wheat and other farm products.

Mr. QUELCH: When I spoke last Friday night it was just a few minutes before eleven o'clock, and therefore my remarks were brief. I shall be brief again to-night because there has already been quite a full discussion regarding the whole question of the marketing of wheat. I should, however, like to make reference again to-night to the question of our exports of wheat and to one or two sections in order in council P.C. 3849. The hon. member for Macdonald, when he spoke just now, said that we should not criticize the wheat board with regard to the shipment of wheat to Japan. I agree. The government must take full responsibility for that action because it is a question of government policy. This morning I, along with some other hon. members, received a couple of extracts from the Calgary Herald of June 6, and in these extracts the question was asked whether or not the wheat being shipped to Japan was going to Germany. Up to the present time we have received no answer from the government that is in any way satisfactory. The bald fact is that at the present time we are shipping a certain amount of wheat to Japan, and according to the Ottawa Citizen, Japan is shipping 150,000 tons of food a day to Germany. Therefore I think we can take it for granted that a certain amount of this wheat shipped from Canada is undoubtedly going to Germany to-day.

In addition, we find that in March of this year the United States shipped 1,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum to Japan, and last year, 11,500,000 barrels. It also shipped to Japan 230,000,000 pounds of copper. But are we in a position to criticize the United States for that action? The United States is not at war. We are. Yet we to-day are shipping wheat, indirectly I would say, to Germany. Just so long as we continue to take action of that kind, I do not consider that we are in a sound position to ask the people to make a supreme effort in this war.

The Calgary Herald suggests that our policy to-day towards Japan is an appeasement policy. Well, we had an appeasement policy towards Germany from 1935 to 1939, and look at the mess it landed us in! In my opinion the position is nothing more or less than a form of blackmail, and the more you give in to blackmail, the more you are blackmailed. I would say that these demands upon us by Japan will increase the more we give in to them, and the more we ship, the more we shall have to ship. Eventually war will come, and Japan will be in just that much better position to fight against us than she is to-day.

I wish to refer to order in council P.C. 3849, section 17. I referred to it on Friday night, but I will just read part of the section again:

> Whenever a quota of the grain produced on any land becomes deliverable, any producer entitled to a definite share of the crop as landlord, vendor or mortgagee, shall be entitled to have delivered in his name a share of such quota proportionate to such person's said interest in the grain, and shall have equal rights of delivery accorded to producers under the act. . . .

I pointed out that under that section of the order in council the farmer can be compelled out of the first quota of five bushels to deliver a certain percentage to the mortgage company or to the landlord, as the case may be. The question was asked, whether I was not aware that the provincial government last year stepped in to safeguard the first five bushels to the farmer. But at that time this order in council had not been passed. Had it been passed, the provincial government would not have been able to take that action. Now, with this order in council in force, the provincial government will not be able to take the same action this year that it took last year, and the result will be that the farmer will be compelled to split up that first quota. Therefore I would suggest that if you want to leave this section in—and the hon. member for Moose Jaw pointed out why it was necessary perhaps to have a section of this kind in the order in council—we should add a subsection at the end of section 17 with words to this effect: "Notwithstanding anything contained in the preceding section the provincial governments shall have the right to determine how much, if any, of the first five bushels delivered by the farmer shall be delivered to parties entitled to a definite share of the crop." I think that would take care of the situation. The section would still be left in there to make sure that the farmer would deliver a certain portion of the whole quota to the mortgage company or to the landlord; and if that section were not in there, the farmer could sell his whole quota and take the whole proceeds, and then tell the mortgage company or the landlord that his wheat was in the granary. That is, I presume, the reason why that section is there.

There is a question I wish to ask the minister. He is not here at the moment, but I will put my question and his advisers sitting before him will perhaps refer it to him on his return to the chamber. I understand that the definition of 1940 wheat acreage is the same for the sale of wheat as it is under the summer-fallow bonus plan; that is, as defined under P.C. 3231. That being the situation, I cannot quite understand the wheat board's ruling to-day. Let me explain. I had a letter from a farmer the other day to the effect that he had 245 acres under cultivation. He had fifty acres of wheat last year, and fifty acres of wheat in 1939, and he asked me how much wheat he could sow in 1941. I stated that if he had fifty acres in 1940, and fifty acres in 1939, the amount of wheat he could sell this year would be based on sixty-five per cent of fifty. At the same time he had written to the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Agriculture had told him to write to the wheat board. He wrote to the wheat board, and the wheat board told him that he could sell wheat from the whole fifty acres; that it would not be sixty-five per cent of the fifty. I cannot find in the order in council anything supporting that view. According to the order in council he could only sell wheat produced off sixty-five per cent of the fifty. Can the minister explain how the wheat board arrived at that decision? I am not quarrelling with it at all because, when a man has only fifty acres of wheat, I think he should be allowed to sell the fifty. I was just wondering how the board had that amount of latitude. If a farmer had seventy acres in wheat could he sell the full seventy instead of sixty-five per cent of the seventy; or if he had eighty acres in wheat, would he be able to sell wheat off the full eighty or only off sixty-five per cent of the eighty? How high can the acreage go before the sixty-five per cent is applied? Can the minister answer that question? I cannot find it answered anywhere in the order in council.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, that I was called out of the chamber for a few minutes in the midst of the remarks of my hon. friend, but I think I have caught the drift of his question. I am quite sure that circular No. 200 issued by the Canadian wheat board—

Mr. QUELCH: What order in council is that?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It is a circular issued to the trade by the Canadian wheat board.

Mr. QUELCH: Does that set aside order in council P.C. 3231 which defines the 1940 wheat acreage? I understand that that is the last order in council defining wheat acreage in 1940, and it certainly does not give any latitude of that kind. I want it understood that I am not objecting to that ruling, but I am wondering under what section in the regulations the board obtains these discretionary powers.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): These instructions are issued under the authority of the Canadian wheat board, the regulations being determined by them under which the quota deliveries will be set. It has nothing to do with order in council P.C. 3231. They are the regulations setting out the procedure in the handling of the wheat crop of this year.

Mr. QUELCH: Am I to understand, then, that the 1940 wheat acreage as defined under the regulations of the Department of Agriculture is different from that as defined under the regulations of the Department of Trade and Commerce? You have two different terms, apparently, for wheat acreage, one by the Department of Agriculture and one by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It has been suggested, Mr. Chairman, that I place on Hansard, circular No. 195 of the Canadian Wheat Board:

The Canadian wheat board to-day made the following announcement:

On April 15 the Canadian wheat board issued a statement to the effect that the dominion government had authorized the board to restrict wheat marketings in 1941-42 to a total of 230 million bushels, which means about 223 million bushels for the western provinces. Wheat producers in the western provinces will be permitted to base their deliveries of wheat in 1941-42 on 65 per cent of their 1940 wheat acreage. This restriction will also apply to certain regions of British Columbia, such as the Peace River district, Creston, Wynndel, Vanderhoof, Armstrong and Kamloops.

In connection with implementing this policy, the Canadian wheat board announces the following decisions of special interest to wheat producers throughout the western provinces.

1. Producers who seeded no wheat in 1940.

There are some farmers in the western provinces who, for one reason or another, did not seed any wheat in 1940 and therefore did not have 1940-41 delivery permits. Such farmers who desire to seed and deliver wheat in 1941 should make application to the board at their earliest convenience. Their cases will be considered, and if warranted, delivery quotas will be arranged for 1941-42. All applications must be made to the board prior to May 31, 1941.

That date has now been extended to the end of June.

In his application the producer should give the legal description of his land and state his total farm acreage, the number of acres in coarse grains, summer-fallow, etc., and the delivery point to be used in 1941-42.

2. Producers who seeded an abnormally small proportion of their land to wheat in 1940.

There are some individual farmers who in 1940 had, for one reason or another, abnormally small wheat acreages. In these cases the Canadian wheat board will, on application of the producers concerned, review their wheat acreage position before establishing their delivery quotas for 1941-42. In making such an application each wheat producer must show that his 1940 acreage was substantially lower than his wheat acreage in 1939, and lower than the acreage which he usually sows to wheat. These applications for a review of 1940 wheat acreages must be in the hands of the board as soon as possible, and no applications will be received after May 31, 1941. Upon receipt of application, forms will be mailed to the producer upon which his case can be stated.

That date also has been extended to June 30.

Mr. QUELCH: I believe that that statement is already on Hansard.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I do not think it is. The other statement, No. 200, is, I believe, on Hansard.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I believe it is in Hansard of May 2.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West):

3. Producers who seeded an abnormally large proportion of their land to wheat in 1940.

An examination of 1940 permits issued by the Canadian wheat board shows that in most districts throughout the west, a few producers had abnormally high wheat acreages in 1940, compared with their total farm acreage. In so far as these wheat acreages are substantially higher than usual for the farms concerned, the Canadian wheat board will, in establishing 1941-42 delivery quotas for these farmers, make such adjustments in their 1940 acreage figures as will bring them into line with their usual practice and into line with their district as a whole. This means that wheat producers who unduly expanded their wheat acreage in 1940 will have their 1941-42 delivery quotas established on the basis of wheat produced on 65 per cent of their usual wheat acreage, and in arriving at the adjustment which will be made in these exceptionally large wheat acreages in 1940, the board will consider the practice of the other farms in the district, as reported to us.

As an example, a relatively few farmers in the western provinces had over 90 per cent of their total farm area in wheat in 1940. It would be obviously unfair to the great majority of wheat producers to extend delivery quotas to these few farmers based upon wheat produced on 65 per cent of 1940 acreages. In these cases delivery quotas in 1941-42 will be based upon 65 per cent of their usual wheat acreage and the average percentage of the farm land sown to wheat in 1940 in the district concerned.

The Canadian wheat board has adopted the foregoing policies in respect to the basis of 1941-42 wheat quotas in the interests of a fair distribution of quotas among wheat producers in 1941-42. The object is to adjust some of the wide variations from usual practice that occurred in 1940 wheat seeding.

Mr. PERLEY: What date is that?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is April 28, 1941.

Mr. QUELCH: These regulations do not change the case to which I referred. They state that where there is a large difference between the 1939 and 1940 acreages, a change can be made. But I cited a case where the acreages in 1940 and 1939 were approximately the same, but in both cases they were only a very small percentage of the total cultivated acreage. Under order in council P.C. 3231, as I understand it, there will be no way of allowing that man to increase his wheat acreage. I believe that was referred to by the Minister of Agriculture, who pointed out that it was not the desire to have wheat acreage increased, and that if in the past the farmer had been sowing only a small amount of wheat, it was not intended to allow him to sow a greater amount. In this case the man wrote to me and he wrote to the Minister of Agriculture. The minister referred him to the wheat board. I interpreted the act to him, and I got a letter back from him telling me that the wheat board had interpreted it much more generously than I had.

Mr. GARDINER: The regulations, you mean.

Mr. QUELCH: The regulations, yes. I interpreted them as they are. The wheat board, apparently, introduced a new idea, an idea which I think should be there. I believe that the wheat board and the Minister of Agriculture should have the power to allow the man to increase his wheat acreage where the amount in crop in 1939 and 1940 was only a small percentage of the total cultivated acreage. There is, however, nothing in the regulations that allows for that to be done, and I am still wondering how the wheat board were able to do it.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): If the hon. gentleman will give me the name of the farmer and the particulars, I shall be glad to have the wheat board go into the matter and deal with it and advise.

Mr. QUELCH: That is not the point. The wheat board did give a good interpretation; they allowed the man to sow the full acreage. But what I want to know is, what is to be the policy in the future? Are farmers who in 1939 and 1940 sowed only a small percentage of their cultivated acreage to wheat to be allowed to sow the same amount, or to sow or market only 65 per cent? I would suggest that it might be a good thing to introduce an amendment so that the same amount could be sowed. Apparently the wheat board are doing it.

Mr. GARDINER: No.

[Mr. J. A. MacKinnon.]

Mr. QUELCH: In this case they are, because I have a letter from the man saying that the wheat board told him he could sow the whole. His name is Othen of Benton Station, Alberta. He wrote to the Minister of Agriculture, and the Minister of Agriculture referred him to the wheat board; then I got a letter back a few days later telling me I was not interpreting the act in as liberal a way as the wheat board. I am interpreting it as it is, not as I should like it to be.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): What are that man's initials?

Mr. QUELCH: I do not know, but he is the only Othen there.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Would the minister say that the regulations would apply always?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There are cases where the wheat board uses its discretion in the particular circumstances.

Mr. QUELCH: That is, they are not bound definitely by the regulations?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No.

Mr. QUELCH: That is what I said the other day. I had three orders in council, thought I was up to date, and then I found that another had been passed. Now we find that even though we have all the orders in council we are not up to date, that the board are changing the regulations, so that members of parliament cannot be in a position to go out and tell the farmers what has actually been done. It is not a pleasant thing to give an answer and then be shown a letter from the wheat board saying that you are wrong, when you know you are right. In this case I am not criticizing the wheat board for their interpretation, but I say that the regulations should be changed to give the wheat board full power to do that without going outside the regulations.

Mr. WRIGHT: The argument which has just taken place bears out the contention we made earlier in the session that these matters should have been placed before a committee of the house and the regulations threshed out and brought back to the house in some kind of permanent form so that they could be explained to the people. These regulations came down before the Easter recess; we had two sets of regulations; we went home for the Easter recess and were asked to explain these regulations to the farmers. We did explain them as they were at that time; we came back, and immediately on reaching here we found that a new set of regulations had been issued which changed in some respects those we had before. It leaves hon. members in an awkward position and does not make a good impression in the country as to our ability here when we go home and tell our people a certain thing and a few days later find these regulations changed. A committee of the house should have been set up, composed of members from agricultural constituencies who understand these matters, and the regulations should have been thoroughly discussed before being given publicity. That would save a great deal of confusion in the country.

One of the greatest difficulties with the farmers in the west is that they do not understand what is taking place; neither the government nor the wheat board has taken the trouble to explain these matters to them.

This afternoon the hon. member for Wood Mountain propounded something which I never heard before, that it is the grain companies who were opposed to the grain exchange. I have been in western Canada for many years; I have attended the meetings of farm organizations for years, and they have been passing resolutions asking for the abolition of the grain exchange. I never heard of the grain companies passing resolutions to that effect. But if the grain exchange is necessary at this time—and the wheat board evidently believe it is or they would not be keeping it in operation—then I think the wheat board should give an explanation to the farmers of the west as to why it is necessary.

When a farmer delivers a thousand bushels of wheat to the elevator company, he is paid for it. The elevator company put it in store; they may deliver it to the wheat board in the course of a few days or, it may be, a few months. In the meantime they pay insurance on it, and when they deliver it to the wheat board they are paid for it by the wheat board plus 4½ per cent interest for the time their money has been in use. Then the wheat belongs to the wheat board. Up to that point it has not touched the grain exchange; the handling companies to-day do not use the grain exchange. I think that is correct?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is correct.

Mr. WRIGHT: From then on, the wheat board should give an explanation to the farmers of western Canada as to what happens to that wheat. The farmer in western Canada understands that that wheat is sold by the wheat board to the import board in the old country. It is sold in the form of futures. Then, in order to have that wheat moved to the seaboard, it is necessary for the export companies to buy that grain from the wheat board through the grain exchange in order finally to deliver it to the importers in Great Britain.

If a full explanation were given of the exact procedure in that matter, it might clear up a great deal of difficulty in the minds of the farmers of western Canada. Until that is done, until they understand the exact procedure, they are going to be suspicious of what is taking place. I believe the government would be well advised to do that.

With regard to the marketing of coarse grains, they are to-day marketed through the grain exchange. The farmers of western Canada received last year in November and December an average of 31 cents for oats and 42 cents for barley. This spring in April and May those grains were selling at 38 cents for oats and about 53 cents for barley. On barley that is a difference of 11 cents, which is more than the carrying charges. Immediately there is suspicion in the mind of the farmer that someone is making money out of his grain, and until the wheat board come out and show the farmer exactly what is taking place, that suspicion will remain. At this time, when it is necessary in Canada to have a 100 per cent war effort and to keep people in the right frame of mind, it would be a good thing if that suspicion in the minds of western farmers could be removed. It is going to be difficult to do; a real explanation will have to be given, because the firm belief in the minds of, I think, 75 to 85 per cent of the farmers of western Canada is that the grain exchange is making money out of them.

The hon. member for Wood Mountain produced a certificate showing that the grain exchange made an extra two or three cents a bushel on certain grades, and on some grades as much as five to seven cents at this time. I can assure him, however, that even if that is so, the suspicion is still in the minds of the western farmers that the grain exchange is there at their expense, and their expense only; and if the board can justify the use of the grain exchange at this time, they should do so, and remove that suspicion.

I take particular exception to one of the regulations issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the marketing of grain; that is section 17, which reads:

> Whenever a quota of the grain produced on any land becomes deliverable, any producer entitled to a definite share of the crop as landlord, vendor or mortgagee, shall be entitled to have delivered in his name a share of such quota proportionate to such person's said interest in the grain, and shall have equal rights of delivery accorded to producers under the act, and for such purpose the permit holder shall make the permit available, but the enforcement of this provision shall be the direct concern and responsibility of the interested parties themselves and no legal obligation shall devolve on the board in respect thereto.

This fall we are going to have a limited area from which we can deliver grain. Last fall we could deliver from whatever area we had in crop at the time, and even last year a great many farmers found it difficult to finance. This year they are going to be forced by this regulation to deliver one-third of the crop, in most instances, to the mortgagee or landlord. This is going to make it difficult for them to pay their expenses. Last year, and I think again this year, the provincial legislature required the farmer to pay his threshing bill, his taxes, his seed grain, and so forth; to keep enough to put in the crop next spring, and enough to provide for his family until next year. He cannot possibly do that under the terms of this order in council; and, since this has been passed under the War Measures Act, I suppose it will supersede provincial legislation. In that event, I do not know just what will be the position this fall of the average farmer in Saskatchewan, and I believe the minister should give serious consideration to withdrawing this requirement before deliveries commence. I agree that the landlord is justified in expecting a share of the crop, but I think he might very well wait at least until after the first delivery has been made, because the farmer will require all the proceeds from that delivery to meet his expenses.

I also believe we should have some regulation with regard to the price of coarse grains this fall. I quoted figures a few minutes ago to show how prices of oats and barley had increased between last fall and this spring. This year, with a larger acreage in coarse grains, the market will be even more depressed than it was last fall; and unless the government steps in and does something with regard to a minimum price for these grains, the farmer will find himself unable to market enough wheat to pay his operating expenses. If he markets these coarse grains, it will be on a glutted market, and he will obtain a price which in many instances will not meet the cost of harvesting and threshing. Therefore I believe the minister should give serious consideration to the establishment of a minimum price on coarse grains this fall. Certainly the price of 70 cents a bushel for wheat this year is not going to give the farmer anything on which to come and go.

The hon. member for Wood Mountain has shown that we can obtain 95 cents for our wheat this fall, I think he said, if we follow the wishes of the Minister of Agriculture. While that may be so in some exceptional cases, I am sure that will not be generally the case in western Canada. Take a man who had 150 acres in wheat last year. This year, according to the regulations, he will be able to market wheat from only 100 acres, and from that 100 acres he will be able to market only an average of twelve bushels to the acre. That will give him 1,200 bushels which, at 50 cents a bushel, will give him a cash return of $600. If he is in a fairly good section of Saskatchewan, he can grow that 1,200 bushels of wheat on perhaps forty acres, at thirty bushels to the acre. That will leave him 110 acres for summer-fallow which, at $4 an acre, will give him a bonus of $440, making a total return of $1,040 for his wheat. That works out at 86 or 87 cents a bushel. Last year he threshed 4,500 bushels of wheat on his 150 acres, which he sold at 50 cents a bushel, giving him an income of $2,250. This year his income will be reduced to $1,040, and in order to obtain that sum of money he will have to summer-fallow an additional 110 acres. Therefore, when we say he is obtaining 85 cents a bushel for his wheat, we are not telling the whole story. The fact is that his expenses are going to eat up a very large part of that 85 cents. For the thirty-two years from 1908 to 1939 inclusive, the price of wheat to the western farmer has averaged 90 cents a bushel at point of delivery. We have now reduced that figure to 50 cents a bushel, which is entirely inadequate to meet his requirements.

This morning, in speaking on the defence of Canada regulations, the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George told us what he said his party believed were some of the post-war aims of the country. Among those aims was the establishment of better prices for agricultural products. If that is the policy of the government, they should set an example now by giving better prices. The people will have much more confidence in what the government will do after the war if they take a step in this direction now. The government of the United States has done something along this line; and while we may not be able to go as far as they have gone, still I think we should at least make some move in that direction, in order to show the people of western Canada and the farmers of this country generally that we believe in, and are willing to act on, what we are talking about.

Mr. CHURCH: This item provides $104,648.50 for the administration of the Canada Grain Act. We have had some sixteen or seventeen inquiries into the production and marketing of grain, and when the grain board was appointed it was said that there would be no more politics in the administration of this great asset. We had an opportunity, both before and after the war started, to do something in this matter. I suggested in the house in 1937 and 1938 that the government should establish food reservoirs and grain reservoirs in England. I suggested that the surplus crop carryover of one or two years should be moved to England and stored there for emergency purposes. However, my suggestion was not acted upon. The result is that war is now upon us, and the wheat remains in our own country, a glut upon the world's market.

Three years ago I urged upon the government that it should confer with the then secretary of agriculture in the United States, Hon. H. A. Wallace, as to the orderly marketing of grain on this continent and adopt a war policy. While there was not an actual war at that time, it was well known that it was coming and that the grain situation in this country and the world over was in a most precarious condition.

I would point out that I supported my leader's bill in 1935 for the nationalization of grain. It is a great pity that that measure was not passed as it was drafted, and in the form in which it received first and second readings. When it returned from committee one could scarcely recognize it. One of the main necessities in the creation of the wheat board was to get rid of the middleman. He flourishes now just as ever, like the green bay tree, both on the prairies and elsewhere.

Everyone in Canada is interested in the grain trade. We are concerned with the future of that great industry, and we are interested in those people who are the dirt farmers and who have had a very hard time of it. However, it is the middleman who has caused all the trouble, and he is still doing business at his old stand. One of the things which should be done immediately is the closing of the Winnipeg grain exchange, and the elimination of dealing in futures. What is the use in dealing with futures on the grain exchange when we know nothing of the future of our country, or the war, or the outcome of it, or to whom Canada may in the end belong. The war is our first concern.

In connection with one of the votes we discussed grain for about three weeks; it is again under discussion in a new form, under this vote, and much the same ground is again being gone over. Although realizing that hon. members to my left are keenly interested in the subject, I would point out that there are other important matters. If Hitler comes, there will be no grain board. He will take the grain, and everything else, and that will be the end of this country. What are we doing about it? The people of Canada are not yet wide awake to the grave dangers we are now facing on the Atlantic, and in other theatres of war, and more time should be given as to where we now stand.

Since November 20 of last year I have been endeavouring to have two small matters attended to, namely soldiers' insurance and railway fares. Yet this house has never given it a minute or a thought while we look for recruits. We do not seem to be able to get a minute of time to discuss those problems. Instead of a Hitler war, one would think it was a grain war in which Canada is now engaged. Certainly the government of the day has a difficult problem on its hands, and its manner of handling it has not been altogether successful. The first thing the grain board must do is to get rid of the middleman. Then they must close up the grain exchange at Winnipeg, stop all trading in futures and take over most of the elevators with huge profits. There should be an endeavour to arrange with Washington the orderly marketing of wheat, and we must find a solution of not only production but marketing.

Efforts along that line have been made in the United States. We had a chance to bring about provisions for orderly marketing with them two years ago, but I am afraid we have been too late, as has occurred so often. I cannot understand why the grain board is not alive to the situation, and how it would not be aware that grain is going to alien enemies. In May, 1940, I received a return in the house showing the amount of pig iron, scrap iron, nickel, copper and other base metals which went to Germany, Japan, Italy, and yet another potential enemy country. The amounts involved were very large, and showed we were aiding the axis powers both directly and indirectly.

Germany managed to acquire an Atlantic fleet, something which she never had before, as a result of this and of the United States Neutrality Act, with the result that the grain trade was starved for lack of shipping space. I protest against permitting grain shipments to go to Japan through China, because we know Japan will get the whole of it and China nothing, just as unoccupied France had its food stolen by Germany. Certainly drastic action is needed to prevent our grain from reaching Japan. I might, in passing, refer to an article which appeared in a great newspaper called France. This article appeared on January 8, 1941, and while I shall not read it I might point out that it describes what happened to food which was intended for unoccupied France. The article describes how 262 trainloads of food intended for unoccupied France, passed right through to Berlin. The same thing happens to grain which is supposed to go to China, but which passes through to Japan. The Chinese will never see it. Why does Canada do these things while our Victory loan campaign is on?

I believe the country should take a stand on this question. Are we to have no control over shipments of grain to axis powers as we had none over our scrap iron and pig iron? The farmers on the prairies will never get any relief so long as the wheat problem is in politics. It has been in politics as long as I have known it. Since confederation, matters connected with wheat have been inquired into seventeen times by boards, and since I have been in this chamber there have been twelve such inquiries. Yet the grain grower has yet to get the best of it, or fair play.

The people of this country will wake up one day when they find out that the real debates among the people's representatives in the House of Commons are being conducted in secret with no reports. They will have something to say not only about publicity handed out by government agencies and publicity boards but about the stand taken by some of the newspapers. I know of one great newspaper which spent about $35,000 to investigate the grain industry in 1923, 1924 and 1925. The result was that they brought about some reforms in the wheat situation and the export of hard wheat, and their efforts led to the Turgeon commission.

The people in the prairie provinces have been fooled for a great many years. They have been told that the wheat growing industry was a north and south free trade industry rather than an east and west industry, one which would serve the markets of the world. The result has been that they have allowed the middleman to take much more than his share. I know the government has a difficult proposition on its hands. I must, however, point out that while the House of Commons is willing to take four weeks to discuss grain problems, an hon. member cannot get four hours to discuss the war. Is this a Hitler war or a grain war? So far as I can see, it is the former.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I cannot permit this item to pass without making a few observations. I realize that hon. members representing agricultural constituencies have occupied a good deal of the time of the committee, but, judging by our accomplishments in debate, I think we might have saved ourselves the effort. A short time ago the Minister of Finance made certain changes which cost the treasury of Canada about $10,000,000. He made those changes without protest from any hon. members. However, although hon. members representing agricultural constituencies have time and again appealed to the ministers concerned to give more favourable consideration to agriculture, our appeals seem to have fallen on deaf ears.

I listened this evening to the hon. member for Wood Mountain. His observations would leave the impression that he was an excellent medical doctor, but would not convince one that he is a mathematician or that he derives his livelihood from the sale of wheat. I rather expected he would proceed to include the indemnity he will receive this year, and then make the computation that in selling a thousand bushels of wheat, and including his $4,000 indemnity, he would be receiving $5 a bushel for his wheat. If all farmers could include other items of income we would no doubt have a different picture. The fact remains, however, that the price to the farmer is 50 cents a bushel for the average grade at the average shipping point. I suggest that it is not fair to include payments the farmer will receive this year for wheat he is not going to grow, or to include in his income payments available under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. That is a fund to which contributions are made by the farmer as a result of having 1 per cent deducted from his grain cheques. The price the average farmer is still receiving is 50 cents a bushel for average grades at average shipping points.

As the hon. member for Melfort pointed out, this price is quite inadequate, having consideration for the cost of living and the amount of money available in other quarters in Canada. Two years ago the question of finding more money for agriculture was one which a great many people might have been worried about; but we are now spending possibly over $4,000,000 a day on our war effort, and there is no reason under the sun why we could not spend an additional amount each day to see that those engaged in the important war effort of producing food should receive their cost of production. It was the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) who said some time ago that it was not conceivable that people should be asked to produce at a loss. If it is not conceivable that men in industry should be asked to produce at a loss, it should follow that those engaged in producing food should not be asked to produce at a loss.

This vote provides $104,000, and the first item under it is the chief commissioner, Canada Grain Act, $12,000. Then there are two commissioners at $10,000 each and four assistant commissioners at $7,500 each. I have no doubt that these men are well qualified in their respective fields, but an industry which is paying to its primary producers only 50 cents a bushel has no business paying to those who are administering some phases of the industry salaries ranging from $7,500 to $12,000. If those who are responsible for formulating agricultural policy had to change places with those who produce our foodstuffs and make a living from selling wheat at 50 cents a bushel with the cost of production as high as we have it at the present time, they would soon make many radical changes in the agricultural policies of Canada. Those who are advising the minister should consider finding ways and means of seeing that the initial price to the farmer for 1941 is increased above that which is proposed.

There has been a good deal of discussion regarding the Winnipeg grain exchange, and the hon. member for Wood Mountain has said that he has heard no good reason why the exchange should be closed. I suggest that he travel through that area of Winnipeg where those who have made fortunes on the grain exchange live and compare their environment with that of those who produce wheat on the farms. He would then see a good reason why the exchange should be closed. I am not at all impressed by the answer given by the minister this year as well as last that it is the desire of our customers across the ocean that this market should be kept open. I cannot see what purpose is being served that warrants this expenditure of time and labour. I am sure that the men engaged in making a living round the Winnipeg grain exchange are well trained, and I feel sure they could make a more valuable contribution to our war effort than they are now making. The time has come when every able-bodied person in Canada should be making his maximum contribution in the field where he is most needed. The operations of the grain exchange at this particular stage do not warrant the tremendous outlay of material and capital necessary to maintain that institution.

Some mention was made by the minister of the complaint of the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar about the generous relief provided for certain brokers. My understanding of what the minister said is that they were simply carrying out the terms of the Canadian Wheat Board Act. Section 8, paragraph (i) reads:

8. It shall be the duty of the board:—

(i) in selling and disposing of wheat as by this act provided, to utilize and employ without discrimination such marketing agencies, including commission merchants, brokers, elevator men, exporters and other persons engaged in or operating facilities for the selling and handling of wheat, as the board in its discretion may determine;

(j) to offer continuously wheat for sale in the markets of the world through the established channels: Provided that the board may, if in its opinion any existing agencies are not operating satisfactorily, take such steps as it deems expedient to establish, utilize and employ its own or other marketing agencies or channels.

The question was raised by the hon. member for Wood Mountain as to the difficulty there might be in connection with the marketing of oats and barley and other coarse grains if the exchange should be closed. Section 14 of the act provides as follows:

The governor in council may approve of the provisions of this act being made applicable to oats, barley, rye or flax produced in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, if the board recommends that such approval be given, whereupon the provisions of this act shall mutatis mutandis apply to such kind of grain as they apply to wheat.

The machinery is already there to look after the marketing of wheat and coarse grains in western Canada. In view of the present critical condition in agriculture the minister should not delay any longer in seeing that the suggestions made by the hon. member for Melfort and others, that the grain exchange should be closed for the duration of the war, should be carried out. I have here the minutes of the fifth annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Some of this material has been drawn to the attention of the minister before, and I urge that he consider carefully the opinions of this national organization. They recommend:

That because of the restricted deliveries and in order to maintain the income of the western farm home, steps should be taken to increase the initial payment for wheat delivered in the crop year of 1941.

I am not going to suggest the price that should be fixed, except that it be a parity price. It has been said in the committee and throughout the country that farmers can get by with fairly low prices, and 40 cents a bushel has been mentioned. On large mechanized farms where the land and equipment are free from debt it has been shown that they can operate without going into further debt, but there is one important consideration that has been lost sight of. In the past many farmers operating large holdings have been able to go into the nearby towns and cities and engage seasonal labour for a few weeks. With that seasonal labour they have been able to operate combines and tractors.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sure the hon. gentleman will see how far afield he has gone from the item before the committee. The question of hiring men and operating tractors and the price of wheat has nothing to do with the item under discussion. During the greater part of the evening I have tolerated such discussion, but there has been a great deal of it which was not relevant. But the hon. member is now much beyond any latitude allowed previous speakers.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am not the first one who has discussed the price of wheat.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I think it was arranged that hon. members should have very wide latitude under this item.

The CHAIRMAN: Was the extent of the latitude defined?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It was very broad.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think the understanding was that the questions which have been discussed this evening should be permissible. I do not see any items in the minister's estimates that would cover them.

The CHAIRMAN: I was not here this afternoon. So long as the minister states that there was an agreement, I am quite satisfied.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Thank you. I appreciate your ruling.

I was pointing out that farmers who have been able to operate large holdings with up-to-date equipment have been able to take advantage of cheap labour over short periods, but those who have been available to them to operate combines and tractors over a few weeks in the summer months have gone back to the cities and towns and lived on relief for the remainder of the year. The price available to the farmer for the production of his commodity should be higher to enable those engaged in farming operations to maintain a decent livelihood during the entire year. The price proposed of 70 cents a bushel, Fort William basis, was quite inadequate in peace time, and now with rising costs of production, and with farmers and others restricted so drastically, I think the minister should give immediate consideration to increasing the price of 70 cents.

I should like to draw to his attention the recommendation of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

> That until such time as the price of wheat reaches and is maintained at a level commensurate with the price of those things that enter into the cost of producing wheat, a processing tax of not less than fifty cents a bushel be placed on all wheat milled for domestic consumption. The revenue from such tax to be added to the aggregate price received for the wheat marketed and to be available for the purpose of increasing the initial payment to the farmer.

I know some members of the house are concerned about increasing the cost of bread. Bread is a necessity of life and should be kept down to a low figure, but the price which the farmer gets for the wheat that enters into bread is much too low when one considers the price the baker receives. The price of bread is altogether out of line with the prices of a great many other commodities that one buys in a store. I think a 50-cent processing tax for wheat used in domestic consumption is one which the minister should consider carefully.

> It is anticipated that at the end of the current crop year all existing grain storage facilities will be filled. We believe that these surpluses of bread grains may become an important factor in our war effort and that in the meantime they should be regarded as a reserve which will ensure a constant supply of wheat to Great Britain in the event of possible crop failure in the course of the war, and also be available to meet the needs of the people of Europe when the war has been won.

This objective should not be realized entirely by the farmers themselves, because it concerns the entire people of Canada that these supplies should be carried and be available when needed by Great Britain.

The next suggestion of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture which I should like to commend to the minister is this:

> We recommend that the dominion government be asked to provide financial assistance to farmers for the construction of adequate farm storage facilities to enable the farmer to adjust his deliveries in accordance with the system outlined above.

In the United States in peace time they have given very generous assistance in providing farm storage, and what has been done in the United States in peace time should certainly be done in Canada in war time. The large payments made to elevator companies for storing the grain will amount to large sums of money during the war period, and it is only fair that the farmers should be given some of the financial assistance given to these large corporations so that the farmers can store grain on their farms. The next recommendation is:

> We recommend that the dominion government authorize the Canadian wheat board to make cash advances against that portion of the 1941 wheat crop which the farmer may deliver under the arrangement outlined above during the crop year 1941-42.

Again, in this connection, might I mention that in the United States they have made advances to the farmers on some twelve commodities which are stored on the farm. With the elevator storage facilities we are going to have available in Canada this year, the government should lose no time in announcing that a cash advance will be made to the farmers for the grain stored on the farm. I know there are certain difficulties in administering a scheme of this sort, but I believe it will be found that the grain handling companies in the west this fall will be very glad to cooperate with the department in arranging the details of such a scheme. It will be found that deliveries to the elevator companies will be restricted and that elevator agents will have a great deal of spare time on their hands, and I would suggest to the minister that he enlist the cooperation of all the well-known grain handling concerns with a view to having them inspect the grain on the farm, determine whether the granary facilities are suitable enough, determine the grade, and then make arrangements for an advance of at least a portion of the initial price so that the farmers will be able to get some cash to meet their taxes, store bills, and other pressing obligations which they will have to meet this fall.

The hon. member for Macdonald mentioned that farmers with good credit had little difficulty in getting advances from the banks last fall. But the situation is more serious this year, and in a great many parts of western Canada the banks have pulled up stakes because branches were losing money and have gone where there is better fishing. The result is that many farmers find themselves miles and miles away from a bank, and they are quite unknown to bankers at a distance and are unable to get any line of credit. It would be very easy for the minister and his department to make arrangements with the elevator companies to inspect the granaries, which, of course, would have to be up to standard, and have them determine the grades, and the elevator companies would assume the responsibility of seeing that the terms of the agreement were carried out because they would have an interest in the delivery of the grain. Insurance would have to be provided to make sure that the government would not lose as a result of theft or destruction of the stocks of grain by fire. At any rate I would urge that the minister give careful consideration to this last recommendation which was endorsed by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

In conclusion, I would again urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in cooperation with the Minister of Agriculture, to see that money is made available in some way or another so that those who are performing a very useful service in producing the food necessary in Canada and for Great Britain are able to get the cost of production necessary to give them a decent standard of living.

Mr. PERLEY: I have one or two questions I want answered by the minister. I asked a few this afternoon, and his answers did not satisfy me. We have, however, learned something to-night. We have learned that we have a critical situation, what might be termed an emergency. We have learned that the board cannot do without the grain exchange. I am just wondering what the board will do if the grain exchange decides to close of its own accord. Just what would the board do in that event? I should like to have that question answered because it is a possibility. While the hon. member for Wood Mountain was speaking, a letter delivered by air mail was put into my hands. I have it in my pocket now, and it states that the members of the exchange are definitely anxious that it should close and they would like to have a little more information with respect to the request from Britain that they should remain open. This letter states that they are under the impression that the board had asked Britain to make that request.

Mr. GARDINER: Who writes the letter?

Mr. PERLEY: That is all right. I do not have to mention that.

Mr. GARDINER: It does not mean much unless we know who writes it.

Mr. PERLEY: Much has been said this evening with respect to the regulations. I am not going to take time to go into that now, but the minister might tell us if the last one, dated May 30, is the final one. Can we tell the farmers when we go back home that that is the one under which the board is going to operate with respect to the 1941 crop?

I wish to make this statement. There is no justification for the board to pay eight cents a year, representing the present rate per bushel, on grain stored in annexes in western Canada. We know the cost of these annexes, how they are operated, and that some of them are earning over 75 per cent on their cost and will earn it again next year; and neither this board nor this government are justified at this time, when we have a war on our hands, in paying out about $25,000,000 more for storage on the grain than they should pay. By order in council they should cut the rate, if they are going to allow these operations to continue, to not more than 2½ cents a bushel a year on grain stored in the annexes. That will save this country $21,000,000 and will not do an injustice to anybody.

I asked the minister certain questions. He has ignored them, and I want them answered.

I want to know, did he have any knowledge that certain Canadian exporters refused to have anything to do with that deal or with any deal which would probably mean that grain would be going elsewhere than to Britain—especially, to Japan?

I want to know what brokers were used in this deal.

I want to know how much of the 575,000,000 bushels is now carried in options and how much is in cash grain?

If the minister wants to answer these questions one by one as I go along, it may facilitate getting the item through. I am going to have an answer to each one of these questions. I have asked those four to start with.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. PERLEY: No, it will not. I am going to have answers to those questions.

The CHAIRMAN: No hon. member can say, "I want an answer." An hon. member can put a question, and if the minister does not reply to the satisfaction of the hon. member the remedy remains in his hands; he may vote the item down if he can. But no hon. member can challenge the house or the committee by saying, "I want an answer." Also, I have already drawn the attention of the committee to the rule which prohibits tedious repetitions of the same question.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I think the hon. member has been repeating his questions pretty much.

Mr. PERLEY: Not at all. They have not been answered.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I have tried to give the answers to the best of my ability. The hon. member is now asking if I had any information regarding Canadian exporters refusing to have anything to do with a shipment of wheat which was being treated in a similar way to the wheat we have had under discussion here—for possible shipment to Japan. I have not any such information.

The hon. member asks what brokers were used. I have stated before, and repeat again, that no brokers were used in connection with that sale.

The hon. member asks how much of the supposed or the probable carryover at the end of this crop year is cash wheat and how much is under option. I am sorry I have not the information and am unable to give it at this time.

If there was another question, Mr. Chairman, I missed it.

Mr. PERLEY: I asked this afternoon a question with respect to the deal which is pending with regard to changing the July into the October future; wheat was sold for delivery on the July option and could not be delivered, owing to the facilities at Fort William being such that they could not take it. Is there a deal pending in this respect?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that it is considered inadvisable to give any further information on that point at this time.

Mr. PERLEY: The minister will admit that there is a deal?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No, no, not at all, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall the item carry?

Mr. QUELCH: Will the minister say whether he is giving any consideration to changing section 17 so as to guarantee that the first quota for the farmer shall be protected?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The matter is a very difficult one, from whatever viewpoint it is regarded. I can say definitely, Mr. Chairman, that it is receiving the very serious consideration of the wheat board and the government.

Mr. QUELCH: I suggested an additional subsection to take care of that matter, as the minister will find reported in Hansard to-morrow.

Mr PERLEY: Does the minister intend to keep the 1941 crop absolutely separate, and not mix it with the crops of 1940 and 1939?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is a matter of government policy, to which consideration is being given.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the minister tell us how much storage has been paid on grain stored in annexes, also to companies which have terminal elevators rented or leased from the government, let us say, during the last six months?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It is obvious that, without any notice of such questions, I could not have that information available at this time.

Mr. PERLEY: Then, is the minister prepared to state that there will be no further regulations by order in council?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I would not undertake to state that there would be no further regulations at all. If it is found advisable, in the interests of the wheat grower of western Canada and for the sake of equity, that there should be, the government will give the matter consideration, and, it may be, bring in further regulations.

Mr. PERLEY: One other question. Will the minister consider cutting the storage rates on grain in annexes?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Does the hon. member mean, at the head of the lakes?

Mr. PERLEY: No; in the country annexes.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It would be very easy to say that the government will give consideration to it, but I do not propose to put it off in that way. I do not think I would care to make any comment at this time on a leading question like that.

Mr. EDWARDS: May I ask one question directed to order in council P.C. 3849, section 27:

No permit shall be issued for a shipping point without a licensed country elevator.

One of the situations I was confronted with in this regard was that a number of farmers told me that there was no way in which they could make $25 or $30 more easily than to load a carload of their own wheat, thereby saving the elevator company's charges. Do I understand by this regulation that that is precluded, that a farmer cannot get a permit to load over a platform unless there is an elevator at that point? In other words, if there should happen to be a siding on my farm, I cannot have a car spotted there and load my wheat if I so desire? Is that the purport and intent of that regulation?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that loading over a platform is not precluded. I want to get this question answered, hoping that the item may go through. The reason why the man is signed up to an elevator point is so that the Canadian wheat board will have a record of the yield in the district.

Mr. BENCE: There is one question I want to ask regarding advances on wheat stored on the farms. It has reference to the long negotiations that took place last year between the minister and the wheat board and the elevator companies. I ask the question because the point may come up this year.

Last year the minister gave a statement to the press that the elevator companies had refused to agree to a plan for advancing loans on the security of farm-stored grain with a limited federal guarantee. What was the suggested limited federal guarantee?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am sorry I do not place the hon. gentleman's reference.

Mr. BENCE: The minister will recall the prolonged negotiations which took place. He stayed in Ottawa a considerable time after the house adjourned in August, and negotiations went on between the elevator companies, the wheat board and the banks. Some kind of proposition was worked out; one, I think, was suggested by the provincial governments. Then he made the statement that the plan could not be worked out because the elevator companies refused to agree to the limited federal guarantee that was offered. I wish to find out how far the government and the wheat board had gone in the way of guaranteeing to the banks advances on wheat stored on the farms.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It was found on investigation that it was not necessary to give a guarantee, even limited.

Progress reported.

It being five minutes after eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, June 10, 1941.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION

On the order: Presenting reports by standing and select committees.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Before this order is called I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley). In the Votes and Proceedings, No. 89, which has just come to hand, under the heading Notices of Motion, there is notice by the minister that he will introduce a bill to amend the Special War Revenue Act. Unquestionably this must be an emergency measure, and I am going to ask the minister if he will be good enough to introduce this bill to-day, at once, so that we may know what it is and it may be advanced.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): While I am on my feet may I suggest that if there is to be any further legislation we should have notice of it immediately? I had hoped that the house might close within a day or two.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think the amendment which is to be introduced by the Minister of Finance concerns a minor non-contentious matter arising out of an amendment to the act when it was before the house earlier this session. As to further legislation, I know of nothing that is to be added to what is already before the house.

Mr. ILSLEY: If I have the consent of the house I will introduce the amendment and explain it when the order for the introduction of bills is reached. Perhaps with the consent of the house I might introduce the bill now.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. We have not yet reached the order for the introduction of bills.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The order for introduction of bills follows the order for motions, on which we may spend most of the day. The Minister of Finance wishes to introduce the bill now, before the order for motions is called.

PRIVATE BILLS

Fifth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Donnelly.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

EXEMPTION OF CARBONIC ACID GAS USED IN MANUFACTURE OF SOFT DRINKS NOT TO EXTEND TO SUGAR

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 101, to amend the Special War Revenue Act.

He said: No doubt the house would like an explanation of this bill. The explanatory note states that when the budget resolutions were introduced it was the intention to exempt carbonic acid gas when used in the manufacture of soft drinks, but the exempting section was so drafted that it also exempted sugar, et cetera, which was not intended. The purpose of this amendment is to make the necessary correction. It was a mistake in the drafting of the bill.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Donnelly in the chair.

On section 1—Exemption not to extend to sugar, etc.

Mr. POULIOT: We have not copies of this bill.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As I understand it, this is merely a correction. Perhaps the minister would just state what are the goods mentioned, to which reference is made in the section. Is there anything in addition to sugar?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know of anything. I assume that the original bill was drafted to accomplish the end that it was desired to accomplish, which was not to exempt sugar from the excise tax. To do so would be a most important, far-reaching and unintentional exemption. Section 8 of the act to amend the Special War Revenue Act, passed at this session, adds the following subsection to section 80 of the act:

> Notwithstanding anything in this section contained, the said tax shall not be payable when such goods are exported under regulations prescribed by the minister, nor in the case of goods purchased or imported by a manufacturer licensed under this part, which are to be incorporated into and form a constituent or component part of an article or product which is subject to an excise tax under this part, under regulations prescribed by the minister.

There are some parts which are subject to these excise taxes we have been imposing, through the War Exchange Conservation Act. Where those parts pay the 25 per cent tax, and the completed goods pay the 25 per cent tax, the first tax should not be payable.

Specifically, this section was drafted to deal with the carbonic acid gas situation. It will be recalled that in the budget we imposed a tax of 25 cents a pound on carbonic acid gas. That tax had been raised from five cents. We intended to provide by this section that when the carbonic acid gas had been purchased by a bottler or by a manufacturer of soft drinks he should be able to buy it tax free, just as he would be able to buy it free of sales tax. This tax of 25 per cent is imposed upon the bottler or manufacturer. It is not in addition to the carbonic acid gas tax, but takes the place of it.

The section was so widely drawn that it included sugar which was purchased for use in soft drinks, and that was never intended. I believe I have explained the purpose of the section.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): I was told over the week-end that some of these retail distributors of soft drinks sell their product at six cents, and some at seven cents. Is that a legitimate procedure? Are they allowed to do that?

Mr. ILSLEY: One important manufacturer has not raised the price of soft drinks to the wholesale or retail trade. This is creating a difficulty, and an undesirable condition in the soft drinks industry. Consideration is being given to that point, and I hope that perhaps the situation may be remedied so that there will not continue to be the complaints there are to-day.

Section agreed to.

Section 2 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is expedition; that is cooperation.

Mr. ILSLEY: Thank you.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CLASSIFICATION OF CERTAIN POSITIONS FOR PERMANENT APPOINTMENTS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the report of the civil service commission classifying certain positions to which employees on the temporary staff of the House of Commons are to be appointed on a permanent basis, laid on the table of the house on March 5, 1941, be now approved, provided that the six constables transferred to the messengers and cleaning branches, in the reorganization of the house services be made permanent by the civil service commission at the same salaries as they are now receiving, but such authorization is not to be regarded as a precedent.

Motion agreed to.

WAR EXPENDITURES

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. T. THORSON (Selkirk) moved that the third report of the special committee on war expenditures, presented to the house on June 4, be now concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when the special committee on war expenditures began its study of the reference to it, it was somewhat awed at the vastness of the territory upon which it had entered. The territory was uncharted, and a great deal of preliminary exploratory work had to be done. Then, later, specific subjects of inquiry were suggested to the committee by members of the house, and from various sources; and as the inquiry proceeded the fields of exploration of possible economies began to become more clear.

May I give an illustration of the manner in which the inquiry clarified itself as it proceeded. When we were studying the subject of financial controls over army, navy and air force expenditures it became clear to us, through the study of that subject, that there were certain fields of possible economy that should be further explored. It is indicated in our report to the house that parliament looks at the war expenditures for the first time when the war appropriation bill is before the house. The war appropriation bill is based on estimates that are presented through the departments to the treasury board and to council, and then to parliament. It was disclosed to us that these estimates are largely based upon war establishments, and the operations of war establishments, and matters that are incidental to war establishments. It was further disclosed to us that war establishments consist mainly of persons, plant and equipment. It therefore became clear that there were fields of exploration of possible economies back of the estimates themselves.

Three large possible fields of economy were opened up: one relating to all questions of personnel and the most efficient and economic use of personnel; a second relating to construction projects and all that is involved in the preliminary study of construction projects and construction programmes, and a third relating to equipment, munitions and supply. The desirability of making a study of these three main factors that enter into a war establishment before the war establishment itself is finally approved and becomes the basis of an estimate became therefore very clear. It was for that reason that the committee recommended the setting up of an establishments committee in such of the defence departments as have not a committee of that kind. It is not always easy to review an establishment once it has been created; therefore it is essential that there should be the most careful review of all establishment proposals before they leave the department itself; for the establishment proposal becomes the basis of the estimate, and the estimate in turn becomes the basis of the appropriation that is made in this house. The committee therefore emphasized particularly the need of an establishments committee. I give this by way of illustration of the manner in which the fields of possible economies opened themselves up to the committee as it proceeded with its inquiries.

As the committee continued its inquiries it came gradually to an agreement on certain fundamental principles. There was some confusion with regard to some of these at the outset, but I think that these principles are now completely clarified in the minds of all the members of the committee. The committee was appointed for the purpose of examining all war expenditures with a view to reporting what economies were possible consistent with the execution of the policy decided upon by the government. The committee has therefore agreed, and is settled in its view, that it is not a public accounts committee. The house has already a standing committee on public accounts, and if there is any hon. member who thinks that a matter should be referred to the public accounts committee he has the right to ask that it be so referred, but if he does so, he must do so on his own responsibility.

The committee is not precluded from examining past transactions; indeed in that respect the reference to the Canadian committee is very much larger than the reference to the corresponding committee set up in the United Kingdom. But while the committee is not precluded from examining past expenditures, its only purpose in doing so is to explore the possibilities of future economy, and it has acted in that light.

Furthermore the committee is not a fact finding committee. It does not conceive it to be a part of its functions to approve or disapprove any particular transaction, or merely to find the facts with regard to a particular transaction. Its purpose is very much larger than that. Its function is to promote, as far as it can, economies in our war expenditures, to eliminate waste where waste exists, and inefficiency where inefficiency exists. In its search for economy and in its desire to eliminate waste and inefficiency it must not in any manner whatsoever, directly or indirectly, hamper or restrict the war effort of Canada.

The report presented to the house emphasizes the need for adequate and proper control of war expenditures at every stage, but it also stresses the importance of not restricting in any manner whatsoever the war effort of this country. May I quote what the committee says in that regard:

> The application of financial controls over war expenditures must not be of such a nature as to hamper or restrict our war effort but rather in aid and furtherance of it. Indeed it is in that light that the subcommittee sees the importance of proper controls. Proper controls do not lessen the effective power of our armed forces. On the contrary, they increase it, for the economic use of our financial resources makes possible greater increase in manpower and the instruments of war and greater striking and defensive force.

The committee found it necessary to operate by means of subcommittees. There were many subjects of inquiry; indeed the special committee on war expenditures differs in a number of respects from any of the other committees that have been set up by the house. There are literally scores of subjects that require study and investigation; indeed in this one reference to the committee there are many subjects involved, any one of which might well deserve a special inquiry. In fact, it was when the committee began to function through its subcommittees that it did its most effective work.

When the decision was made to continue the studies of the committee by subcommittees the committee also faced the necessity of making a decision as to whether the sittings of the subcommittees should be open or in camera. It was urged that all sessions of the subcommittees should be open sessions, but this contention did not commend itself to the committee. The committee did not accept that view. It decided that, in the main, meetings of the subcommittees should be held in camera except as a subcommittee might otherwise itself determine. In taking that decision the committee was not seeking to hide any facts; it was not a desire for secrecy that prompted that decision. Secrecy is important for one purpose, namely that aid shall not be given to the enemy. Indeed that is the main purpose of secrecy in deliberations of this sort. But the decision that the meetings of the subcommittees should be in camera was not based exclusively upon the need for secrecy. It was based upon the grounds of efficiency in the prosecution of the task entrusted to the committee. Everyone in this house knows that the committee system of inquiry is not the most ideal system of inquiry. It has its shortcomings, but on the other hand it has also its advantages. The committee decided that the sessions of its subcommittees should be held in camera largely on two grounds. It was felt that in camera sittings would make for a more direct and a more concentrated approach to the subjects that were under investigation. There is a natural tendency of members when the press is present to make speeches. That is not confined to the members of any particular group. The making of speeches does not further an inquiry, and when sessions are held in camera the number of speeches becomes very considerably limited and members apply themselves more directly and with greater concentration to the subject that is at hand.

There was another reason and a more important one for the decision of the committee that its sessions should be in camera. This committee is not a fact-finding committee. It is a committee for the purpose of promoting economies. In order to promote economies it must know where the economies are possible, and in order that it shall obtain that knowledge it must have the full and complete assistance of officials who are in the services themselves and know the details of all the operations of the administration of such departments. There must be the fullest scope for a frank discussion of what has happened and what can be done. There must be the freest possible exchange of opinion, because it is from that free exchange of opinion that the possible avenues of economies open up.

Then, too, it is well known that officials of departments when they know that the press is present and that every word that they utter will be published tend to freeze up and will not give as full an expression of opinion as they otherwise would. That is natural and human, and we all know that it is a fact.

Our committee was impressed with the rapidity of the expansion of our fighting services. Perhaps I might give some interesting figures to show that. I shall give, first of all, the figures for the last year before the war, the year 1938-39 and corresponding figures for the present fiscal year.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We have them all here this morning.

Mr. THORSON: They are all on record but, by way of illustration, the appropriations for the army services increased from $16,727,000 to $666,574,000. Naval service appropriations increased from $6,639,000 to $169,640,000. Air service appropriations increased from $11,688,000 to $386,003,000. This showed an immense rapid expansion of our fighting services. It would be amazing, Mr. Speaker, if in the course of that rapid expansion there was no waste, because the objective at the time was not economy. The objective was speed in expansion, and there was not, of course, the same cost consciousness as exists in peace time. Canada owes a very great debt of gratitude to the defence departments for the energy and the drive which made this rapid expansion possible. But now, Mr. Speaker, we can more easily and perhaps more intelligently promote economies than we could a year ago, when speed of expansion was the first essential. It is now our duty as members of this committee to promote these economies in so far as that is possible without in any way lessening the effectiveness of our war effort.

The committee has recommended a number of reforms of importance in our fighting services, believing that their adoption will result in very large economies throughout the services. The committee has sought to avoid invidious comparisons between the services. It has not sought to set one service against the other, or to make invidious comparisons between them. Nor has the committee sought to be spectacular in its findings, or to seek credit for any of its members. The committee could have made and announced very large estimates of possible economies; for the committee knows that large economies are possible, but the extent of these possible economies does not lie exclusively in the hands of the committee. I conceive it to be the duty of the committee to point out possible reforms, and to point them out in such a manner that they will be most effective and prolific in their results. It is therefore our duty to aid in the adoption of those reforms and supervise their progress and development; but the extent of the possible reforms depends upon the services themselves and the cooperation which they will give, and upon the manner in which the loyal public servants in the departments, both civilian and service personnel, will carry them out. The promotion of reforms resulting in economies therefore requires the utmost cooperation between the members of this committee and the persons in the defence departments themselves, and the committee must act in such a manner as best to accomplish its fundamental objective, namely, the achievement of the necessary economies. The members have therefore taken this view, that for the time being it is their duty to submerge themselves in the objective which they are seeking to achieve; the allocation of credit for accomplishing economies is not in any sense the function of this committee.

The committee has really only commenced its inquiries. There are a great many subjects which require the most careful study. Many of them require immediate study so that if reforms are possible they may be set in motion as soon as possible. There are many subjects which still require further attention. Some of them have as yet not been studied at all.

May I be permitted to enumerate some of the outstanding subjects which ought to be further studied?

1. Financial controls over army, navy and air force expenditures.

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. THORSON: Only an interim report on this subject has been made, and a great deal of further work must be done.

2. Review of headquarters establishments, with a view to eliminating duplication of functions where such duplications exist, and promoting coordination and the most effective use of personnel both service and civilian. That is a subject which requires a good deal of further study and thought.

3. Army, navy and air force buildings construction; specifications and designs for such projects, and the inspection thereof during construction. Our committee has not as yet been able to commence its study of that very important and large subject, and it is important, particularly in view of the fact that there are large construction programmes still before us.

4. Medical, dental and hospitalization services in the army, navy and the air force.

5. Food and other supplies for the forces, the inspection and the distribution thereof.

6. The salvage of all waste materials throughout the services. We have been able to make only the most preliminary approach to this vast and very important subject.

7. War contracts: the bases upon which they are let; centralized purchasing and local purchasing authority; capital assistance; and all the other subjects which are related to the subject of war contracts. We have made only a general study of this vast subject, and further study of it should be made.

8. Labour relations generally. That is a matter of vital importance at this time.

I have enumerated only some of the subjects which require study. There are many others; indeed, as the inquiry developed and opened up, its ramifications became almost overwhelming.

It is desirable in the opinion of the committee that these important matters should be investigated as soon as possible. They are heavy subjects, difficult subjects. They require concentrated study and undivided attention. They are well worth exploring during the adjournment, when members of the committee will be free from their other political parliamentary duties and can give their undivided and concentrated attention to them. That is necessary; for, if economy reforms are possible, the sooner they are carefully studied and put into effect the sooner the results will follow.

The committee does not imagine for a moment that its task can be completed during the adjournment. Indeed, the task of this committee cannot be completed while the war is in progress.

The committee has been informed, and believes, that already it has been a stimulating factor in the promotion of economy reforms. Indeed the very existence of the committee is important in that regard. It is valuable to the services themselves and to the war departments generally that they should know that the committee is in existence and is studying the matters which come under those departments for administration. The knowledge that the committee is continuing its functions will be of considerable value in that regard.

Then, too, I think it will also be believed that the assistance which this committee can give will be greatly appreciated by those public servants in the war departments themselves—and there are many of them—who have been working loyally and faithfully for the achievement of economy reforms.

It is therefore the opinion of the committee that it should continue to sit notwithstanding the impending adjournment of the house. In that regard I should like to refer to the statement made by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) when he suggested to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) the formation of this committee. It was his thought at that time that the committee should sit continuously. I quote from Hansard, December 3, 1940, page 616. The leader of the opposition, in the course of his presentation of this suggestion to the government, said this:

> We know that war is wasteful; we know there is great waste in this war, though I do not say intentional waste. I do believe, however, that a committee of private members of this house, sitting day in and day out during sessions and between sessions, could perform a very useful function in assisting the government at this time, and I commend this suggestion to hon. members.

This is particularly the case now that the fields of inquiry have been so clearly opened up and the need of economy reforms has been so definitely indicated.

It might further be suggested, Mr. Speaker, that a failure on the part of the committee to continue to sit will be a set-back to the reforms which have been already proposed, and that the members of the committee would in a sense, be "letting down" the persons in the defence departments who are struggling for these reforms.

If I might interject a personal note, I should like to express my very great appreciation of the splendid manner in which the members of the committee have cooperated with one another in the very difficult task that has been assigned to them. There are differences of opinion in a committee such as this. Differences of opinion are inevitable. But the very fact that there have been differences of opinion has, in my opinion, made the committee more valuable than it would otherwise be, for these differences have been honestly, and, may I say, very vigorously expressed; they are appreciated as necessary and helpful.

It will not be a pleasant task for the members of this committee to be sitting here during July and August, in the heat of Ottawa, giving concentrated and undivided attention to the very difficult problems they must face. That task will involve sacrifices, greater to some of the members than to others; but I conceive it to be a matter of national duty and I sincerely hope that members of the committee on all sides of the house will support this motion.

There are grim days ahead of this country. Our people do not fully realize the grimness of the situation that faces all who are engaged in this struggle. We must use our resources as efficiently as we possibly can; in the promotion of the efficient use of these resources I am convinced that our committee can perform a useful task. It cannot perform a perfect task, far from it; but it can perform a very useful one. I sincerely hope therefore that all members of the committee and all members of the house will join hands in furthering the accomplishment which this committee has set before it, in reaching the objective which the committee has set for itself, that objective being that the people of Canada shall know that there is a body of men here in Ottawa who are seeking to ensure that Canada will get a dollar's worth of war effort for every dollar contributed by the Canadian people.

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): In the words with which the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson) concluded, every member of this house concurs. He has told us of the vast field that has had to be covered, the still greater field that is open, and the opportunity of service which has been and will in future, in ever-increasing measure, be rendered available for those who are privileged to sit on this committee.

The committee itself will remember the circumstances under which it was set up. It was set up in consequence of a speech delivered in this house by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) on December 3, 1940, a few days prior to the adjournment. The house commenced to sit again in February and continued until March 4, 1941, before anything was done to set up this committee. As a matter of fact, vast as is the field of opportunities, great as is the challenge to this committee, neither the committee nor any subcommittee has so far sat for more than thirty or forty hours. We had an opportunity to start sitting from March 4 and it is well to remember that we did not start until well on in the month of May. I point that out at the beginning so that the picture may be before the house. Let me repeat, too, at this stage that the purpose for which the committee was set up was to enable private members to contribute something at this time to the war effort. I can do no better than to read from what the leader of the opposition said when the matter was first brought before the house. At page 615 of Hansard of December 3, 1940, the leader of the opposition is reported as follows:

> I hold in my hand a series of reports of a select standing committee of the British parliament which was set up under the authority of an order of reference made on December 12, 1939, while Mr. Chamberlain was still Prime Minister and while there was an official opposition. The order of reference contains this:
> > That a select committee be appointed to examine the current expenditure defrayed out of moneys provided by parliament for the defence services, for civil defence and for other services directly connected with the war, and to report what, if any, economies consistent with the execution of the policy decided by the government may be effected therein.

Let me interject that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson) says the powers of the committee set up by this parliament are greater than those of the committee set up by the British parliament. The only difference is this, that the word "current" was omitted. Further than that no change was made. The hon. member was frank to admit to-day that as far as he was concerned as chairman of the committee—and I agree with him to some extent—his attitude was that this committee was not to go into past expenditures. It was to view past expenditures not as a fact-finding body but merely for the purpose of coming to certain conclusions upon the basis of the experience with contracts that had been let prior to the setting up of the committee, and on that experience to recommend economies for the future. With that I will deal later.

> Then it goes on and appoints a committee of twenty-eight members—and not one of them is a member of the government; they are all private members, and so far as I read the list of names, none of them are of international prominence. The committee has the usual power to send for persons, papers and records, and to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the house, and to adjourn from place to place. It was to be in effect a continuous working committee to examine current expenditures for war purposes having regard to the announced policy of the government. It had the power to appoint subcommittees and to refer to such subcommittees any of the matters within the jurisdiction of the committee. Such subcommittees so appointed were empowered to send for persons, papers and records, to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the house, and to adjourn from place to place.

As was pointed out by the member for Selkirk, the leader of the opposition later used these words:

> I do believe, however, that a committee of private members of this house, sitting day in and day out during sessions and between sessions, could perform a very useful function in assisting the government at this time, and I commend this suggestion to hon. members. It will provide an outlet for the energies of the private members who are anxious about the war, who want to make a contribution, who were sent here by their constituents to make that contribution but who find themselves frustrated—yes, that is the word—because they have no outlet for their abilities and their capabilities.

There is the background. The committee was set up, I repeat, to give private members an opportunity to serve to unify the people of Canada by reassuring them that such economies as can be effected will be brought about within the limits of government policy, by destroying rumours falsely circulated regarding phases of the war effort that would, unless checked, undermine public confidence. This committee should fearlessly reveal failure on the part of any department to practise necessary economies where efficiency would not be thereby curtailed. In short, the purpose of the committee, and the attitude with which we approached its work, was a desire to canalize the spirit of Canada by giving it the assurance that the sacrifices of the people would result in efficient action within the limits of government policy.

That was the attitude the members of the committee adopted; that is the attitude we hold to-day, for in these days of difficulty all of us, regardless of party, wish to serve. From time to time we may be assailed by fears that all is not well in this war effort on the part of the dominion. To those who are of that mind I believe the reading of what took place during the days of Napoleon will bring reassurance. The other day I came upon a statement made in the British House of Commons by Richard Brinsley Sheridan in 1808, which I think epitomizes the situation in the empire to-day and the attitude of hon. members of this house. These are his words:

> Hitherto Bonaparte has had to contend against princes without dignity and ministers without wisdom. He has fought against countries in which the people have been indifferent to his success.

How applicable those words are to-day!

> He has yet to learn what it is to fight against a country in which the people are animated with one spirit to resist him.

That was the attitude taken by the leader of the opposition in the suggestion he made with regard to the setting up of this committee to strengthen and uphold the hands of the government at this time. Too often we think that this is the government's war effort. We on this side of the house believe that it is our war effort as well. In asking for the setting up of this committee, the desire of the opposition was to ensure that there would be no engaging in political wrangles; and we did not desire, nor should we desire at this time, to obtain political advantage out of wrongdoing, wasteful expenditures, and the like. All those things can come after the war.

Let me add, too, that I entirely agree with the statement of the hon. member for Selkirk that this is not a public accounts committee. Our purpose is not to find wrongdoing. Our purpose is to recommend economies for the future, but I do think the people of Canada are expecting more from us through the setting up of this committee than is within the contemplation of any of us. Under the resolution establishing this committee, the committee has no power to report wrongdoing to this house or to the country. The wording of the resolution bears out the construction placed upon it by the hon. member for Selkirk when he said this was not a fact-finding body. We can only report upon economies, if any, consistent with the execution of the policy decided upon by the government.

We do say, however, that while we wish to secure no political advantage, we feel that when a committee is set up in this way, with eighteen members from the government side and only six representing all the opposition groups; when that committee sits behind closed doors, however outspoken and vigorous may be the ideas advanced by its members—and the hon. member for Selkirk referred to the fact that there had been, on occasion, vigorous expressions on the part of some of the members—the fact remains that people all over Canada ask, "Why are the meetings of this committee being held in secret? What is the reason?" No member of this opposition has ever taken the stand that there were not matters which should be kept secret, matters which might be of assistance to the enemy or which, if made public, might be detrimental to our war effort. But I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what possible advantage there is to the enemy if in time of war, as between 1914 and 1918, examples of wrongdoing should be made public, thereby assuring that participation in wrongdoing would be a pastime dangerous to those taking part therein? Going back to 1914-18, how often were charges made against persons high in public life and industry? More than once, and when those charges were made they were investigated publicly, and that did not do Canada's war effort any harm. It assured the people of the dominion, under the leadership of Sir Robert Borden, that wrongdoing merited the strongest condemnation, whether it was on the part of political friends or not.

As I say, our attitude was that the meetings should be open, that the evidence should be heard in open session, except such matters as might be of advantage to the enemy. I would even go so far as to add what was mentioned to-day by the hon. member for Selkirk, the evidence of officials in the public service who might be fearful of expressing themselves if everything they said was going to be bruited abroad throughout the dominion. But I ask you again, Mr. Speaker: why should the evidence in regard to waste, overexpenditure and unjustifiable expenditure be hidden away in reports of the committee which are in the possession of the chairman only and not in the possession of the members of the committee? True enough, the chairman of the committee will at any time permit one to read the evidence. Surely, if the desire to hold these meetings in secret is to be effective, it should not go so far as to prevent members of the committee from having before them the evidence taken in the committee on which they sat as members.

I should like to direct a question to the government. May I in this house mention the evidence which came out before the special committee on which I served, namely that dealing with matters of the air force, air observer schools and elementary training schools? If I do, what are the consequences? I asked the hon. member for Selkirk, the chairman of the committee, what his attitude was on that question. Will he allow us to reveal matters which came out in evidence before these committees, evidence which cannot be of advantage to the enemy? The fear of publication of it would strike terror or fear, in any event, into the hearts of those who might feel like-minded. Or, Mr. Speaker, are the voices of the members of the committee stilled in respect of the evidence which came before those committees? These are matters which are in the minds of the people of Canada.

Mr. THORSON: What was the attitude of the chairman? I suggest the hon. member should indicate what the chairman's attitude to the hon. member's question was.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am glad to have the opportunity to reply. The chairman's attitude was this, that he could not decide it, that it was a matter for this house, if I remember what he said. Is that correct?

Mr. THORSON: Reasonably correct.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I now ask again, what is the attitude, and what stand does the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) take in this regard? Shall we as members of the committee be privileged or allowed to place before the country the evidence which came out in committees, or shall we be required as members of that committee to forget what we heard, to disabuse our minds of what we heard, and, what is more important, fail to bring to the attention of the public of Canada the evidence that was available? In other words—

Mr. THORSON: Has the hon. member any charges to make?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Now, now,—

Mr. HOWE: What about these insinuations?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What insinuations? I have not heard any.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I am asking for information. Does the hon. member for Selkirk ask me whether there was any evidence or whether I know of any evidence of over-expenditure which came out in the committee? If he does, and the house agrees I will refer to it.

Mr. HOWE: Make your charges.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You sit down.

Mr. HOWE: I am not going to sit down. It is a debate anyone can take part in.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You are not in charge to-day. You sit down and let the hon. member make his speech.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I have referred to evidence brought out before the committee, and I am asking the question as to whether our lips shall be sealed. I am not making charges. I should like to place before the country the evidence that did come out, and evidence that may come out, subject to the limitations of the safety of the state. I think the country has a right to have that evidence. Because if another view is adopted here, what will happen? Just as was referred to in the editorial I mentioned a while ago, but did not then read:

> The chairman of the committee says there is no desire to "hide things". But when the committee sits behind closed doors the public is liable to suspect there is something to hide. It is unthinkable that the party in power has been collecting campaign funds from war contractors. Then why the secrecy? In the Commons, Premier King intimated that the only reason for secrecy in the taking of evidence was the prevention of useful technical information reaching the enemy. What would a committee of laymen be doing with technical information, especially a committee considering war expenditures?
> Ten months after the last war started, the purchase of war supplies was under investigation by the public accounts committee, but it seemed expedient to Sir Robert Borden, the then prime minister, to continue and enlarge the investigation.

Then it goes on to say:

> The government ought to throw the investigation wide open, except with regard to war secrets, if it wants to satisfy the public.

I think that, generally speaking, represents the point of view to-day of the people of Canada as a whole.

We believe no harm would be done to our war effort—and we would certainly not want to do such harm—by pointing out where waste has taken place. We agree with the hon. member for Selkirk that there has been a great expansion of Canada's war effort during the last six, seven or eight months.

There has been a vast spreading out, and, as he says, it would not be for us even to suggest that in the desire for acceleration of the war effort there would not be instances of waste. But that is a different thing, Mr. Speaker, from waste or over-expenditure consequent upon a government declaration of policy, or upon agreements entered into by the government, and still in effect to-day.

Our attitude to-day, and throughout, has been to give every assistance in the committee to assure that there shall be efficiency and, to assure a dollar's worth of war effort for every dollar of expenditure, within the limits of the necessities and requirements of an accelerated war effort. But while we do not believe in scandal-hunting at this time, we do believe that in the interests of morale, and to assure the people that all that can be done is being done, and to prevent over-expenditure, the evidence that has been taken should be placed not only before members of the committee but before the country.

As I have already pointed out, we as members of the committee are not permitted to have copies of the evidence that is being taken from day to day. Somebody says, "Do you make charges?" No, Mr. Speaker, we as an opposition are just as anxious that there shall be no wrongdoing, that no wrongdoing shall come out, that no cases of over-expenditures should be revealed, as any member of the government. So far as I am concerned I have forgotten political consequences, what the next election may bring forth, and I think that is the attitude of all hon. members of the house. Our paramount consideration as members of the opposition must be to refrain from obstructive criticism and fearlessly to offer constructive criticism. Not to have as an objective the winning of the next election; because it cannot be too often emphasized that unless this empire triumphs it will be a matter of small concern what political party we belong to. That, I say, is the attitude that we over here are trying to take, not the attitude of the classic aphorism of Tierney when he said that an opposition's duty is "to propose nothing, to oppose everything, and to turn out the government." We want hon. members on the government side to realize this, that we have a duty to the people of Canada in the creation of public opinion, that our sincere desire is to cooperate, and it is in that spirit that I advance in debate what I have suggested to-day.

Mr. GLADSTONE: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he realize that irreparable injury may be done to a person by the evidence of one day publicized, which evidence may be refuted on a subsequent day?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is true of proceedings in any court of law.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The hon. gentleman is a member of the committee. He concurs, I am sure, in everything I have said in regard to our aims and purposes, and I should be the last to suggest that what he says in that regard is not true. But that is only a justification for not making the evidence public as it arises; it does not answer the point I have raised that we as members have a right to that evidence and to make it public before the country after we have come to a conclusion based upon both sides of the question as it has been placed before us.

I have dealt at some length with the question of secrecy; now let me refer to another aspect of the matter, namely, the setting up of the committee. I have already said that as to the general terms of reference and the purposes to be served by the committee it was modelled on the committee set up in Great Britain. But one slight change would have made the people of Canada feel that the committee was entirely free from the criticism that there was on the one hand an overwhelming government majority, and on the other, if I may use the expression, an overwhelmingly small minority. The committee was not set up the way the British committee was. There they set up a committee on which there was equality as between government and opposition, the government having a majority of one. Here a committee is set up with eighteen members representing the government side, four the official opposition, and, one each the two other opposition groups. Why should a committee not be set up that would indicate to the people of Canada the desire to give leadership at this time regardless of political consequences? Let the government say to us: We will give numerical equality with the opposition, retaining to ourselves the majority by having a chairman and vice-chairman of the committee. Would there be anything wrong with that?

The hon. member for Selkirk says that this is not an ordinary committee, that it is an extraordinary committee and I agree. Justification there might be by tradition for inequalities in ordinary committees, but there can be no such justification for a committee set up with the high purpose and the firm resolution that politics shall be divorced therefrom. We are all human, and if you pile up against the opposition a majority of four to one, however fair the meetings, there is left in the country as a whole the idea that the committee is overwhelmingly against bringing out recommendations that ought to be brought out. I plead with the government now, if we are going to continue the work of this committee—and work of great importance has been done and very considerable economies have been effected, although as yet it has only covered the fringe—to forget political considerations, forget the rules of the house, if you will, based upon tradition, and equalize the representation of the government and the opposition, giving to the government the right to control the committee through the chairman and vice-chairman. Because as the hon. gentleman has said, the work of this committee is very trying. It requires hours of labour, it requires concentration. Yet what is our position? The government members may leave from time to time; they can spell one another off; we continue to sit if we wish to be represented. Therefore I suggest, first, remove the veil of secrecy, subject to imposing it when the public interest demands; second, equalize the representation of government and opposition members.

I come now to another matter. It has been said, according to the press, that members of the committee are to receive $15 a day for an allowance for expenses in respect to sittings held between sessions of the house. I think I express the view of all hon. members on this side of the house when I say that to make such an allowance would be a dangerous thing for the morale of this nation. It would encourage the spreading of all kinds of rumours if we in this house, while advocating the necessity for sacrifice, when it came to a practical application of the doctrine, should forget all about our professions in that regard. My suggestion is that we as members of this committee—most of us were anxious to be on it for the opportunity it offered to serve, give a lead to the people at this time—regardless of our financial position, should not be placed in the position of saying to the people of Canada that we think we ought to have an allowance additional to our indemnities for serving on the war expenditures committee. For, after all, as members of parliament our duty as members extends throughout the year and is not confined to the period during which we sit in the house.

I have criticized in the past large expenditures for per diem allowances made to others. Can any hon. member who has taken a similar stand justify before the people of Canada what we have criticized in others. As I see it, our primary duty as members of this house is to assist in making the laws—although our legislative and deliberative functions have been considerably curtailed and are rapidly diminishing by reason of war—but our great duty is to implant in the people of Canada a wider measure of appreciation and faith in democracy and its worthwhileness. That faith must be imparted to our people. That faith rests on the definiteness of the decisions made by this parliament, on the leadership it gives and the course it maps out.

Twenty-four members on a committee—$360 a day. Do that, and all over this dominion there will be the feeling that we in this house have let the people down. What do I suggest? I know the difficulties. The solution as I see it is this. We cannot, we dare not, at this time place ourselves in a position of accepting a per diem allowance. But the government might see fit to increase the membership of the committee along the lines I have indicated, and then we could set up subcommittees on a territorial basis instead of on a basis of subject matter. The proper division should be based on air, army and navy, and supply—at least that was the original intention—but to-day it is on the basis of subject matter. Set up subcommittees on a territorial basis. Every province has a certain number of representatives, and we can afford to meet in a provincial committee and investigate any matter which the chairman may consider necessary or which we as members of the subcommittee consider necessary.

We have no authority as I understand it—and I raise this as my second point—to accept any allowance. An interesting debate took place in the British House of Commons on February 27, 1941, in regard to the old principle that a member of parliament shall not accept a "place or office of profit" under the crown. This, in my opinion, having regard to the definition, is a place or office of profit. The principle, hon. members know, goes back to 1705, to the Act of Succession. So rigidly has this principle been applied that for years it was impossible for a member of the British House of Commons to hold a commission in the armed forces of Great Britain. In 1914, the parliament of Great Britain passed a statute in order to enable members who had accepted commissions in the armed forces to continue their membership in the House of Commons. That statute is chapter 3 of 1914, and its operation terminated with the end of the great war. The pertinent section is as follows:

> The acceptance of a commission as an officer in his majesty's forces shall not vacate and shall be deemed not to have vacated the seat of any member returned to serve in parliament, and shall not render and shall be deemed not to have rendered a person accepting such a commission incapable of being elected to, or sitting or voting in, the Commons House of Parliament.

The necessary amendment to permit of members of parliament being commissioned was passed at the outbreak of this war. Our governing statute, of course, is the act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons. And what does it say? It permits naval and military men to accept commissions and retain their seats in parliament. Strangely enough, it does not refer to the air force. Whether or not an amendment would have to be made to "the Senate and House of Commons Act" to permit members of the air force to retain their seats in parliament would be a matter for the Department of Justice. The act refers to the naval and military forces, not to the armed forces in general. I fortify my argument, therefore, by saying that, as I apprehend the law, members of the committee who desire to take this allowance will be placing the tenure of their seats in this house in jeopardy.

With these suggestions, and not having any ruling as to whether the evidence which was adduced before the committee should or should not be referred to, I conclude what I have to say. I again press on the government the necessity of accepting some of these recommendations. Their acceptance will pay dividends, Mr. Speaker, in the reassurance it will give to the people of Canada that the government is not relying on the traditional basis of representation on committees of parliament and that the overwhelming power of its numerical strength in parliament is being relinquished in the case of this committee. We are animated by one desire, namely, to serve, and if we agree to serve, as I think we ought to, on the basis of no payment or allowance, any difficulties in the way of some members coming to Ottawa could be overcome by establishing territorial limits for the jurisdiction of the subcommittees. From time to time these subcommittees could send representation to the central committee at Ottawa in order to place before it the point of view of the different committees throughout Canada.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the war expenditures committee I wish to say a few words. I am not going to go over old ground, particularly that traversed by the previous speaker (Mr. Diefenbaker). Whatever merit there may be in much of what he has said, it is futile discussion at this time because we accepted the composition of the committee and its terms of reference when it was appointed earlier in the session. So long as we are willing to serve, unless we ask for the discharge of the committee, I do not think there is very much use in taking up the time of the house in putting forward suggestions which, however good they may be in themselves, are not likely to be accepted by the government.

The committee was formed on a basis having relation to the representation of each party in the house. Maybe that was unfortunate, because of the abnormal conditions under which parliament is operating at the present time. However, it was done, and we agreed despite that to work on the committee. We are therefore not on very strong ground in raising the point at this time, although it is one which the government might well take into consideration.

The committee, however, has worked very harmoniously. There have been differences of opinion, but no acrimonious discussion, and we have got along very well. Little partisan feeling seems to have crept into the work. If it did, possibly I was not sharp enough to notice it.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. member would have noticed it. He is sharp enough.

Mr. MacINNIS: I cannot accept, however, some of the statements made by the chairman, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson), as to the nature of the work of the committee. He has said that it is not a public accounts committee. With that I agree, but I believe it has to do work which a public accounts committee would have to do, and to that extent, no matter what you call it, it is a public accounts committee.

He has also said that it is not a fact-finding body, but a committee to promote economies. Well, you cannot promote economies unless you know the facts, and to discover the facts you must delve into the organization and the financial transactions and everything pertaining to the war economy. That, really, is what we have been doing.

Having said that I do not agree in these respects with the chairman of the committee, I should add that I got along very well with him. As a matter of fact it was a very great pleasure to work with, or under, him—whichever is the proper term to use. We had no difficulties, and I am sure that so long as he is chairman that condition will continue.

The question whether the committee should hold secret sessions was raised, also as to members of the committee not having access to the evidence taken at these secret meetings. It was something new to me to hear that any members had been refused access to evidence. Personally if I were denied recourse to any testimony taken at a committee hearing I should refuse to act until I got it. I cannot make a report except upon the evidence, and I cannot make a report on the evidence unless I am allowed to examine that evidence. I am sure there must be some reason for the allegation made by the member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) that he was not allowed to see reports, and that it cannot be correct in its full implications. To me such a state of affairs is unthinkable.

There is a great deal to be said, however, for holding meetings of a committee such as ours without the presence of the press, and possibly without the evidence being printed. It seems to me that there are two ways in which we can give comfort to the enemy. One is by making public facts which he would like to know, giving him information which would be useful to him. But another proceeding would be just as valuable to the enemy, namely, the making public of facts or reports which would tend to weaken morale in this country. I think everyone will agree that the greatest care would be necessary in considering evidence of the former kind. As to what information would or would not, if made public, weaken morale in the country, there might be considerable difference of opinion.

I do not believe that any harm was done, but on the contrary a great deal of good, by having evidence taken in camera. There were witnesses before us who were anxious to give expressions of opinion, but would not have cared to do so were they to be put on record. They desired that the committee should have their point of view for what it is worth. They took the position that certain investigations they were making had not been carried to the point where they could be definite in their conclusions, but so far as they had gone they had come to certain conclusions which they wanted to communicate to the committee as being their point of view. I believe the committee should be in a position to accept evidence of that kind. We are not bound to act on anything we hear, but we are bound to examine it. For these reasons I think the committee was justified in hearing evidence in camera.

It will be noted that the report of subcommittee No. 1, which is part of the report, has been amended, and that the report of that subcommittee and the report of the full committee were carried in the committee on division. I was one of the members who would not agree to the report of subcommittee No. 1, either in the form in which it came first before the committee, or as amended; for that reason I had to vote against it. I also had to vote against the report of the full committee. But this represented only a part of the committee's report, and with the remainder of the report I am thoroughly in accord.

I believe it is in order for me to state why I could not agree with the report of subcommittee No. 1. That subcommittee had to examine, among other things, contracts with civilians, flying clubs, associations and companies. Contracts were made by the government with certain flying clubs when these clubs had satisfied the government that they had sufficient capital to carry out their contracts. The amount of capital was not really large. The government provided all the capital and equipment and furnished the money for carrying on the work of these schools, apart from management and perhaps other small items.

What I objected to in the report of the committee was that a bonus of common stock was given to the shareholders of the stock in these flying schools, and dividends were paid on this common stock—stock for which the shareholders paid nothing. I considered that, and I still consider it, something that this house should not allow. It is a condition as to which the committee should make a definite report to the house, recommending that it cease at once, and the government should see that the committee's report is implemented. This short explanation makes clear my position with regard to the report. I wish to put myself quite definitely on record in the matter; I think it is wrong. The people of the country will think it is wrong, and if it becomes public and the government does not take action it will be harmful to our war effort. I do not believe this is the time for any company, let alone a company that is financed largely by the government, to be building up reserves to carry on work after the war. If there is work of this kind to be done after the war, the government can finance it, just as it is financing the work at the present time.

There is one other matter to which I wish to refer, namely, the sitting of the committee during the adjournment. I believe the committee has done good work already. The mere fact that the committee was appointed has had a beneficial effect on the service, and there is a great deal of work still to be done. Despite the fact that I would much rather enjoy the balmy climate of Vancouver during July and August than swelter in Ottawa, I believe the committee should sit. I think it, however, a mistake for the committee to recommend that the whole committee should sit. A much smaller committee would be better. I agree with the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) that this smaller committee might more closely approximate equality in the composition of its members than the larger committee did.

I am not going to say anything about the per diem allowance. I made my position clear in that regard in the committee. I think we should try as far as possible to keep politics out of this discussion—I say "politics" for want of a better word—and because I so believe, I am not going to discuss the question further.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): The appointment of this committee came before the house on March 4, in a resolution proposed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). He sought to pattern the committee on a similar body which was set up by the British parliament to deal with various problems in connection with the war expenditure, but this committee is of a different sort. It did not follow the text of the British resolution.

The committee has held a great many meetings. I happen to be one of those who on March 5 strongly opposed its formation from the start, because the committee system as we have it in this legislature never digs up anything. Moreover, the government of the day has a large majority on the committee and they write the report. Everything that I said in the debate on Wednesday, March 5, in opposing the appointment of the committee, has proved true. This committee when it was appointed was expected to deal with war expenditures, past and present, and to suggest economies. Now I do not know of anything wrong that has been done, nor do I wish to refer to things that have been wrongly done, but the people are paying $4,000,000 a day in war expenditures, a large part of which is not for the war and will not amount to a snap of the fingers in beating Hitler over in Britain and other primary theatres of war, where the war will be decided finally and conclusively.

The committee has not adhered at all to the text of its reference. The chairman wrote to members of the House of Commons a day or two after the committee was appointed asking hon. members to come and give suggestions. One morning I went to the committee myself and saw the chairman—not to take up any of the time of the committee but simply to submit on a page of paper suggestions regarding what I thought ought to be done. One of the main questions which the British government has been discussing is that of transport, and I have never heard one word in that regard from this committee. One subcommittee over there deals with it. Look at our transport situation to-day on the Atlantic ocean; consider the shipping that is being lost, and the lives of numbers of our sailors in the merchant marine, off the Irish coast and elsewhere in the Atlantic. One of the main reports of the British war expenditures committee had to do with the investigation of that whole problem, but this committee has ignored it. I asked the committee if they would investigate soldiers' insurance, free soldiers' railway transportation, and other matters, but nothing was done. They said it was not for them.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. CHURCH: I had been dealing with this matter for a few moments before we adjourned at one o'clock, and I am going to detain the house for only a few minutes more. I am not criticizing the hon. members who have served on this committee; far from it. I only object to the system adopted. At the time the appointment of this committee was being discussed I said:

> On the government side of the house there are a number of private members—I have known them for a great many years—also many in the opposition and in the two parties to the left, who have splendid ability. Quite a few are returned men. They have executive capacity, technical knowledge, and skill, and their services would be of great value if they were used as they properly should be at this time to promote war work for the good of Canada.

I was opposed to the appointment of this committee from the very beginning although I believe the members on it, if separately given war work, could help greatly, and speaking about the committee system on the same occasion, I said:

> I entered this house as long ago as 1921, and all the time I have been here I have had very little reason for confidence in the appointment of select committees or their findings. I recall the principles on which, under the rules of the house, these select committees are appointed. The proposed committee is supposed to go into the war effort, to look into the past, to investigate current activities and, indeed, as I understand, although it is limited by some proviso, to review anything which has happened since the war began. I am not reflecting on the committee system, but I desire to point out that under our British constitution committees are usually appointed with a text of reference. In the past we have had committees appointed to consider the estimates of the Canadian National railways, without discussion and without notice, empowered to go into the question of ways and means on railways and shipping, to examine estimates and expenditures, with the result that the house divested itself of all power to deal with such questions until the committee brought in its report, usually in the dying days of the session. In consequence, under the committee practice, not a question was asked or answered in the house when the report of the committee was being concurred in. Moreover, three-fourths of the members of a committee are supporters of the government, and the government members, as the practice has shown, will write the report and decide on the findings, the question of secrecy, and can rule out any discussion on government policy as outside the scope of the reference.

I am only dealing with the principle in this case, not with the individuals. The individuals are all right, but the principles and text of the resolution underlying the appointment of this committee are all wrong. Our system is different from that of the old country. They have no party government over there at all; only war effort counts. They are right in the war zone, with bombs dropping near the building where parliament and the committees meet; very often the committee has to adjourn and meet again in a new place. Then also in England their sessions continue throughout the year; members of these permanent committees reside near the place of meeting, and they can come together regularly. Here we meet only periodically. There is also a vast difference in procedure. Over there everyone is war-minded, whereas in this country the slogan is everything as usual. For many years past in Canada all parties were afflicted with the Geneva type of mind. We threw away our defences, allies and friends, with the result that when war broke out we were almost completely disarmed. We were dependent on the mother country for the defence of Canada on land, sea, and in the air, just as we were in 1812.

This select committee met on March 12, and decided that it would not review the past; but, as I said when the committee was appointed, all it could do would be to conduct a postmortem. All the war expenditures had been made; all the commitments and contracts had been entered into. Yesterday at Colgate university the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) said that this year we would spend about $1,450,000,000 on the war, which works out at about $4,000,000 a day. The committee system has been under considerable criticism, and that system has been carried to its logical conclusion in connection with the budget, which is written by the permanent officials while members of parliament have nothing to say about it and cannot change a line of it. This committee was designed to attain by its text the unattainable. I opposed its appointment because I believed the work should be done by a permanent board of audit; and in any case under our constitutional practice the ministers are directly responsible. The committee was political from the start. A civil war was fought in Britain for over one hundred years before the House of Commons obtained control over budget and expenditures in peace and war alike, but here we have the appointment of some fifty-six outside boards by the government, plus this committee. Now we have the executive ruling, and they ignore parliament and rule by the War Measures Act and order in council. Under the statute of Westminster the powers of the executive were increased, and now we have surrendered to these independent boards and committees all our powers and privileges as a House of Commons. One branch of our parliament is on holidays all the time. That branch could do a great deal of this war work as they do in England and the United States; it could carry on some of those investigations, but it is not working, has no work and is given no war work or investigation work.

With regard to the question of press publicity, I believe that is a safeguard against the abuse of power and manifold unfairness, especially in war time. The publicity given through the various government agencies is all propaganda on behalf of the government, and has a very strong tinge of partisanship. Publicity in the press is different and in this connection may be embarrassing with its criticism, but the lack of it is disastrous in war time. We hear conflicting reports from the government's press agencies as to man-power, the victory loan, enlistments and many other matters, including the camps, many of which have been established in the wrong location, entailing vast expenditures of money in connection with the provision of sewage and water. That has hurt recruiting right across Canada. Criticism is a tonic which stirs governments to action if founded on fact and not inspired by any political bias. It has stirred the present government, since this war began, to do things they never intended to do. And when I say that I do not intend to disparage any of the members of the cabinet. I know their work must become, by overwork, at times almost intolerable; it is a tiresome, wearisome, thankless job, at its best, but it is their work and no one else's under responsible government. I know something of the work of the government in time of two great wars; nevertheless that work has to be done by someone. If criticism is founded on fact and not actuated by partisanship it helps the government; it protects them from some of their own supporters, and urges them to do things which otherwise would not be done. I realize that this is a government of Canadians in Canada, but I have been very much disappointed in our war effort, and I think that disappointment will be found right across the country. I like as far as possible to give the government general support in its war effort; I believe all the members of the opposition have done so very well, but we do object to the political way some of the committees carry on. I read the committee reports, and I find that a great deal of the work is done by a line-up on the party basis, and a vote, and they will not accept or adopt constructive criticism either from within or without.

We hear some talk about the holding of secret meetings of the committee, and I am opposed to them. Well, that would not be a very wide departure, even if it were done, because the House of Commons has been meeting in secret since the beginning of this war because it is not even reported and the people do not know what goes on here. We might as well be meeting in secret. As I see it, the acid test for a newspaper is the way it reports the House of Commons, because, in war as in peace, the house is the only place where the man on the street can have his grievance remedied. It is the only place where those who are paying for the war at the rate of $4,000,000 a day can find out what the policy of the government is and also the policy of those in the official opposition, and of the two parties which occupy the left corner of the chamber, and what they all have to say on all public questions.

When the public wakes up and finds that the real debates of their elected representatives are taking place in secret, they will not only be surprised, but they will have something to say about it. Especially will that be true if the war comes closer to Canada—and it is sure to come much closer before we reassemble in the fall. War is undoubtedly going to come much closer to our shores. All the help we have is in the mother country. It will take us, as I said in March, 1939, two years to get any trained men or munitions. Where are we now?

This committee on war expenditures seems to be top heavy. All troublesome questions have been shunted out into the secrecy of subcommittees. If we do not bestir ourselves to see that everything is all right in Canada, Hitler and his "subcommittee" may arrive and everything will not be any more as usual in Canada. I was one of those on this side of the house who for five years before the war continuously preached rearming and cooperation and coordination with Great Britain. I urged that there be rearmament all along the line, on land, on sea and in the air, and opposed separatism and neutrality.

As I say, the elected representatives of the people are meeting here in secret, while real publicity is given to personal matters like lawsuits, murder trials, divorce proceedings, professional sports and the ballyhoo of a number of press agents from the various departments of government which are charged with the conduct of the war. The government uses all these paid liaison officers in the press, the radio, pamphlets, booklets and picture books to put out its political propaganda.

The auditor general was given vast powers. We should reestablish responsible government in Canada. The ministry should be responsible for all these expenditures, and the auditor general's branch should look into them. I do not agree with the proposal of the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) for provincial committees. Provincial committees to do what? Provincial committees all dressed up and no place to go, because they have no control over expenditures, and they are not responsible. The minister is responsible, as I see it. The conduct of the war should be non-political. Under parliamentary government the responsible minister is in charge. That is the trouble with our war effort. We do not know whether our generals on land, on sea and in the air, in England or elsewhere, are having a free hand, or whether they are being interfered with by members of the cabinet at Ottawa. We know—in fact we were told only a few days ago by the responsible minister for the navy in the house—that there are two admirals at Halifax. One is a British admiral, and the other is Canadian, and inside the three-mile limit under the statute of Westminster the British admiral has no power, even if the enemy approached. We are thus a separate sovereign state in name only. The same is true in Newfoundland in connection with the men who enlisted in the services for home defence. They would not be allowed to fight there.

I wish to protest against these things because I know, as has been said before, that the first duty of yes-men in Germany is to find out what the fuehrer wants, and then to make the planets dance to his desire. Yes-men are not all astrologers; it is a pity they are not. They would be better for it. They exist in all classes of society, and in all communities, and their mark everywhere is the dread of freedom. These authoritarian governments, Germany, Italy and Russia, exist only because of yes-men and nodders. When a leader emerges he is acclaimed by them, and he drives the country to ruin to their resounding cheers. No opposition is possible in the dictator-ridden countries. That is true, but the evolution of tyranny in Germany and Italy is possibly only because of those who were ready to surrender to usurpation, and once fuehrer, duce, cordillo, or what-not dictator is saddled, he cannot be unseated without a general upset, and by force and revolution.

In Canada so far we can speak our minds. As I said before, no one desires information to get to the enemy. But it annoys a great many people to find that the enemy know most of our secrets, and that much confidential information appears to be known also by a certain committee at Washington and a joint defence board; yet this House of Commons is not given facts which are known elsewhere. The committee might just as well not meet at all, if it is to meet in secret. Canada is part and parcel of the British empire, and that empire, in which Canada is a link, has the right to know what is our general war policy, what is the nature of our war effort, and how it is to be coordinated with and support the efforts of the rest of the empire. That information will be lacking unless the committee has a free hand to find out the facts and meet in public. Our people are entitled to know what has been our war effort from the start, what has been its effect, and what it is going to be, so that he who runs may read; and the press should be enabled to publish the facts so that the people may know we are secure. After all is said and done, security is better than opulance.

We as members of parliament are not fulfilling our trust if we consent to hand over all these war and defence questions to a select committee over our heads, and surrender our power to others. We are not doing our duty if we avoid discussion in this chamber and delegate our responsibilities to a select committee, with the limited functions entrusted to it. I do not intend to let this occasion pass without a protest, because I believe that the appointment of the committee has had the effect of prohibiting discussion in the house of the estimates of the departments concerned, and preventing anything further being done until the very end of the session.

I may say that a great deal of this publicity in connection with the war expenditures has not been given to the house, at all. I believe that can be said even with respect to the victory and all other loan campaigns. Lord Beaverbrook told us last Sunday what we need. We hear talk about torches in connection with the victory loan campaign. Well, Hitler has applied the torch to almost every city and town in England. They do not think they need any more such torches. These publicity stunts are all right, in their way, but they do not amount to a snap of the finger when it comes to getting anything done to beat Hitler in a primary theatre of war. They cost a lot of money no doubt, but are a relic of the last war for the most part.

We were told by Lord Beaverbrook what was needed—arms, cash, men, munitions, ships and food. Those are the things we ought to keep in mind. Primary things are wanted at once, not secondary things. Everybody appreciates most heartily the splendid work these war committees are doing and the victory loan gentlemen so well, but some of the publicity is wasted, and extravagant at times by our own departments. In my opinion the committee should have studied the lease-lend act. It should have considered how much of our war effort in Canada could have been taken care of in that way, and how Canada could have benefited from it. The lease-lend act is not referred to at all in the report. Our war bill would thus be very much less. Our loan campaigns spend too much with the result that there is not enough enthusiasm in respect of the main question, namely, the securing of man power, without which we will lose the war. That enthusiasm is not what it ought to be. The proposal has been made that the committee should go on tour, across Canada. I think that is all wrong. I have a great deal of respect for all the members of the select committee, but I do not see what we could accomplish if they are not given powers which are not possible for a committee to have in the war under a form of responsible government. They are attempting the impossible, and we have politics in our war effort a lot of times.

The fact is that we are becoming a nation of boards, subcommittees, brigadiers-general and press agents. The result is that the committee has not fulfilled the function for which it was appointed. It seems that it wants to go on a tour of Canada. Well, so far as I am concerned, they may go on tour, if they wish, but I do not think it is necessary to send a committee or a minstrel show either across Canada to find out what our war effort is. The situation is too serious for that. In my opinion if the committee is to meet, then it should meet right here in Ottawa, or not at all.

With respect to expenditures on war camps, I would say that in my opinion many of those camps should not have been built where they were. What about the use of public property? We know that at the time of the last war the universities of Canada gave freely of their property. For example, the university of Toronto made all its buildings available. In this war, however, they have given only a small room in Hart house, accommodation at 182 College street, and the basement in the engineering building. A return to an order of the house describes the university property given by all of them in Canada, and it is not nearly enough. In the last war every Toronto university building was used, Victoria university, the school of science, the medical building and Hart house. Now the government is renting properties when it should be using exempted property right across Canada, municipal and school buildings. Toronto gave the exhibition free. The province of Ontario has done nobly. I think it has given as much property as, or even more than, any other province. It has given the use of its buildings at Guelph, and at many other places. Yet this government has leased a property at Victoriaville at a rental of $170,000 for five years from the Quebec government while Toronto and Ontario gave it free, according to the returns to the house

I do not believe the committee and the subcommittees did the work which the reference called for. The committee was appointed on March 5 and met for organization on March 12. Nineteen sessions of the main committee and thirty-four sessions of the subcommittees were held. The main committee examined eight witnesses and twenty-seven were examined before the subcommittees. The first committee dealt with airports and contracts, but there is much work to be done yet, and the same can be said for the other subcommitteees. Some recommendations are made and some of the information collected is worth while as far as it goes, but much of this information has been given out before in ministers' speeches in the house, and outside. Some has been contained in what has been put out by the information bureau, and it has been put out in other ways by the departments themselves, and liaison officers. Much of it has been contained in members' returns and ministers' and members' speeches which have been made here and in the United States. As I say, some of this information is contained in the publicity books which have been issued. These books contain some good information, especially this one dealing with Canada's war record. A responsible minister said at Colgate yesterday that 70,000 men were in Britain; this pamphlet says 80,000. This states the number on active service is 250,000; the figure given by the minister at Colgate is 170,000. Then it goes on to refer to those in the home reserve army, and the number is given as 175,000. Some of those are thirty-day trainees who believe that under their contract the war is over so far as they are concerned. A return asked for by me was brought down giving the enlistments in the air force as 49,918, made up as follows:

Quebec	5,516
Manitoba	5,800
Saskatchewan	5,108
Alberta	4,090
British Columbia	4,331
Nova Scotia	1,671
Prince Edward Island	429

The return showed that enlistments in the navy total 16,861, and in the active service, 219,167. In the last war we had 619,636. Man-power is the important thing. We should have a system of records such as they have in connection with the victory loan. To-day Ottawa announced the detailed subscriptions by cities which had been received all over Canada from Vancouver to Halifax on Monday only yesterday. Why cannot that be done in connection with records in recruiting in the army, navy and air force, each month by municipalities? If this committee is simply to conduct a postmortem on what has been done in war expenditures in the past, it had better not be appointed. It should have power to review the work of outside boards and all contracts since the war began, as well. Many men in Canada have been lulled into a false sense of security. They might have known that unless those countries desiring peace were stronger than those desiring war, there would be no peace. I define collective security as a doctrine that leaves to others the task of defending freedom and civilization on land, sea and in the air, while they look on as spectators. I believe something should be done now to establish the freedom of the press and to protect it for the period of the war. This committee may meet until doomsday, but unless it is given proper powers and functions, I do not believe any good will flow from it, and the people will continue to be just as much in the dark with regard to Canada's war effort.

The committee should have been free to deal with government policies as policy is the main thing in the conduct of the war. If the recruits are not available, as I have said before two or three times, some other method will have to be adopted. The committee has not dealt with that at all. Manpower is the most important thing if Britain is to take the offensive against a German army of 240 divisions. You will never get the men if everything is going to be as usual. Look at the pages in our newspapers devoted to many forms of various professional sport and other things with everything as usual as a result. Just a short time ago two pages in the Ottawa paper were devoted to the presentation of a cup to a young man, but not one word about the poor Canadian boys flying over Germany in the Royal Canadian Air Force to protect these shores. Everything is as usual in Canada. The committee did not have the proper text of reference to get any adequate results or dig up anything.

Another information book was published yesterday giving the details of the war in pictures of the campaigns in Libya, Egypt, Crete, Greece and Africa. Across the top is a list of many countries, but the name of Canada was missing and not there to help the mother country. I believe the committee has collected a lot of information and it should be given credit for that. However, such a body of men could have been better employed in another non-partisan way. One or two could have been attached to each department in order to give some help and aid the war, but they never have been asked. No wonder the recruits are not coming forward! What can we expect when more wheat is being sent over to China through Japan, that will never get to China, and before the war and for nearly a year after, base metals, scrap iron, pig iron, nickel and oil? Two or three months, after the war broke out large shipments of these supplies were still going to the dictator countries. Germany had no fleet on the Atlantic, but she was able to get one together because of the generosity of the allied countries before the war, and the neutrality act of the United States, after the war started. We see now the damage she has been able to do to our shipping on the Atlantic.

I hope the committee will adjourn over the holidays until we resume. I believe that under our system of responsible government the responsibility of the conduct of the whole war is upon the government of the day and no one else, so long as they are the government of the day. They cannot delegate it to committees or others. They are responsible. Hon. gentlemen opposite have 178 seats in this house, and the responsibility is upon them to inform the people of Canada what is happening and not send out this partisan propaganda in the form of speeches, booklets and pamphlets, and also by spokesmen over the radio and by other agencies, or to delegate it to committees of the house. These means are taken to prevent the people of Canada from learning the truth, from seeing the real picture, from realizing how dangerous this war is to civilization and not letting them know the facts. We do not seem to realize that. The people of Canada have not yet awakened to the situation. The war is coming closer. Germany is ready to make any sacrifice if she can despoil the British empire. That is her goal. Hitlerism is simply a modern version of the imperialism of William II and the nationalism of Bismarck. Germany for three generations has sought to destroy Britain. It is her goal of world hegemony. It is her greatest prize. She seeks the ruin and destruction of the mother country and our empire and all it stands for. And Britain goes it all alone so far; help may come from the United States too late, or from Canada.

The present German savagery is the greatest manifestation of banditry since Frederick the Great. Hitlerism is gangsterism in excelsis. The German nation is desirous of conquering Canada and destroying our empire and Britain. She envies our natural resources. She is desirous of carrying the war to Canada, and what Hitler does is backed up by 99 per cent of the German people. Are we to stand still while all this is going on? I say no. The government has done a great deal of good work and some admirable work, and I am prepared to give it any credit for what it has done. But it has not gone far enough. We should go still further in view of the grave danger that is daily coming nearer to our shores. Everybody wants to help the government. The only desire of the people of Canada is to win the war. The war is Canada's first and only business, and we want a full, not a partial effort.

Mr. JEAN FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of nearly all committees is to keep members out of mischief. Of course the idea is to give them plenty of work to do so that they are good fellows during the session. But I wonder what committee has been really useful since first I became a member of parliament? Nevertheless members have worked hard on committees, have toiled long days and have spent sometimes restless evenings, and far into the night, trying to get some deep knowledge of the matters submitted for their consideration.

I join with other members who have spoken in complimenting the chairman of the committee (Mr. Thorson), the chairman of the subcommittees and the members of the committee for their painstaking efforts.

I am very glad to follow in this debate my good friend the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church), who is one of the most popular members of the house. He has always been known as the soldier's friend, and I am sure that he could serve in any capacity with very good results for the state if his services should be required by the government. All his life he has been interested in soldiers' problems. He has done a great deal for the soldiers. He has the added distinction of having been mayor of one of the largest cities of Canada for the longest period during the war.

The committee whose report we are considering was appointed to examine into war expenditures. Before the chairman had finished his address this morning I sent him a note asking him what his definition of war expenditures was. It could be very broad, of course, if we were to take in all expenditures made for the war and the financial business that is done by this government or the Bank of Canada, or the foreign exchange control board for the government of Great Britain, and if other similar bodies were to be taken into account. But I shall not go as far as that to-day. I will be good and take the report itself only.

The chairman of the committee said that this was not an ordinary committee but an extraordinary committee. Its scope was defined in the formation of three subcommittees. At page 447 of the Votes and Proceedings of June 4, which contains the report of the committee, the Department of Munitions and Supply is mentioned as a central purchasing agency for the three departments of national defence, army, navy and air, and we are told that the committee had reviewed "the various checks and controls in the matter of cost accounting that are exercised". The checks must be departmental. Control is the function of parliament, the House of Commons and the Senate, which is totally ignored in this report.

The report goes on to state that the committee has studied "the manner in which the purchasing organization within the department is set up and functions and a general exploration of (1) the existing checks, (2) controls, (3) care and (4) supervision in the matter of procuring necessary munitions and supplies."

The report goes on to say:

> Your committee next made a general review of the subjects of inspection of and payment for munitions and supplies.

Inspection, of course, is by the department concerned, and payment is by the Department of Finance. Then follows a sentence which is commonplace:

> The object of inspection of munitions and supplies is to ensure that the goods supplied are fit for his majesty's service.

That is evident, and therefore, I shall not insist upon it. It goes on:

> It is essential therefore that this function should be performed by persons independent of either of the contracting parties.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Meaning that the check should be made by somebody who has not sold something to the department or by one who is not in the department itself. That is very good; I agree with that. That is the case with parliament. Parliament is independent of all these people who buy and sell. If parliament had taken heed of what was said at the time of the creation of the national defence purchasing board we would not be in a mess like this to-day. Why was the Department of National Defence mutilated when Mr. Dunning as Minister of Finance put the national purchasing board under his control. I was the only one who stood up against that proposal. Saturday Night, which has no colour now, said, "Pouliot is a Liberal." I saw what was coming, and I thought it absurd to put the national defence purchasing board, which comprised all purchasing agencies of the Department of National Defence, under the control of the Minister of Finance. It was a crime. So much so, that afterwards the department of munitions was created. The national defence purchasing board travelled from the Department of National Defence to the office of the Minister of Finance, and from the office of the Minister of Finance to the office of the Minister of Transport. Then a new department was created, that of Munitions and Supply, which is neither man nor woman—it is an Auvergnat. Here we are, in a complete mess.

Moreover, the committee has not seen that in the view of the house what was necessary was to check, not the Department of National Defence, not the Department of National Defence for Air, not the Department of National Defence for Naval Services, but this very Department of Munitions and Supply. But that was not done. Here we have a minister who buys everything for every branch of the army upon requisition, and delivers it, and what we are interested to know is what happens from the time the requisition is received by the Department of Munitions and Supply and the time the goods are delivered to any branch of the defence department. That is the interesting part, but nobody thought of that in the committee. The thing was so organized that the attention of the members was distracted by something else. Why did the members of the committee not look in the first place at the set-up of the Department of Munitions and Supply, which is on record in Hansard? They could see that it is chaos—chaos from beginning to end. When I asked for information I could not get it. What I find most strange is that the chairman, in his second report—I quote from page 458 of the Votes and Proceedings—said:

> It should also be noted that reliable statistical records are essential as a background for adequate financial control and the future policy and programme of the department.

Of course. I agree with him in that.

> It is therefore the opinion of the subcommittee that such essential statistical records should also be under the jurisdiction of the deputy minister.

All right. I am for that. But there is something which is more important: it is that every cent of expenditure should be submitted to every member of the house; in the first place, in the report of the auditor general, which is the public accounts; and when any hon. member asks for information he should get it at once. The government would have much less information to give privately to hon. members if that were done. No provincial body, no municipal council, no school board, no public organization of any kind could stand if that information were not available to all without being asked for, as it has been for centuries past in England, and as it was for a century in Canada since responsible government was established.

I have taken the trouble to check this report from page to page. As has been stated, there are three subcommittees, one for air, one for medical, dental and hospitalization services, food supplies, and buildings construction, and one for headquarters establishments and financial controls. I will consider these in turn.

The committee itself started to work on March 12. From that date until April 8 it spent its time on organization; several meetings were devoted to this subject only. In a second period extending from April 30 to May 5 the committee prepared an agenda. From May 5 to June 4—the third period—some witnesses were heard in camera and this report was prepared. Now look at this, on page 448 of the Votes and Proceedings, which are before every hon. member.

No. 1 subcommittee was appointed to inquire into the following matters: (a) Contracts. Not contracts with other countries—no; "contracts with civilian flying clubs, associations or companies; (b) Airports, aerodromes and air force building construction, specifications and designs for such projects and inspection thereof during construction." That is all.

What was done with the British commonwealth air training plan? It was never submitted to the House of Commons. Hon. members were not trusted to take cognizance of that plan. Many times the government was asked to submit it to parliament for further consideration, but the request was refused. But how can this committee on expenditures study the question of air services without seeing that plan, which is the basis of our air effort? Perhaps members of the committee have had the opportunity to see it, but it was definitely refused to members of the House of Commons, and it was because the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) made a slight reference to it that the air minister (Mr. Power) said that "Hitler was his last recruit." It was a secret. But how can members of the committee be familiar with the whole air effort of Canada without seeing that plan? And if the members of the subcommittee have every opportunity to read that contract and study it and get information on it, how is it that hon. members who do not belong to the subcommittee or the committee have not had a similar opportunity? With all the respect I have for the hon. members who compose the subcommittee on air, I say that the study made by it is worthless.

I come to the second subcommittee, for war: (a) medical, dental and hospitalization services in the army, navy and air force. That is an essential study. (b) Food supplies for the forces, inspection thereof, catering and salvaging of waste. There is no mention of clothing in the powers which are given to the subcommittee. Although the subcommittee reached a decision on clothing it was not empowered to do so at the time it was created, but it decided upon it just the same. And here, sir, you will be plainly astonished. I remember the day of the funeral of the late Hon. Norman Rogers—a year ago—and I was scandalized to see battalions there who had no rifles, although according to the king's regulations no soldier shall attend a funeral in uniform without carrying his own rifle. There were perhaps a few soldiers who had rifles; most of them had none. It is important that we have some information about munitions and about equipment, not merely about food. It is essential that soldiers shall be well fed and well looked after, but it is essential also that they shall be well equipped and well armed. I have asked consistently about this matter in the house without getting a decent answer from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston).

So, there is no question of clothing, and moreover, no question of ammunition, because ammunition is under the direct control of the Department of Munitions and Supply, and it was left aside. I wonder whether the chairman of the committee did not have instructions from the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) not to touch that department.

Mr. THORSON: I may inform the hon. member that the chairman had no instructions from the Minister of Munitions and Supply or from anybody else.

Mr. POULIOT: I will ask the hon. member to sit down. I do not want him to speak at all at this time. He will reply in due course. I do not want to be interrupted by anybody. My time is short and I have a lot to say.

How is it that this committee has not touched the subject of munitions? How is it that the committee has not touched the matter of equipment, except to speak of old boots and old clothes which belonged to the soldiers? Of course people have a right to know these things when they subscribe to the victory loan, as I have advocated that they do on many occasions, when I spoke in favour of it at Rivière du Loup a week ago and also last Sunday at Isle-Verte, which was formerly the chief town of my county. I am here in parliament on duty and not for my own pleasure. It would be much more pleasurable to me to be at home to-day. I want to speak freely, and I claim the same freedom that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), had during the war, when he was the editor of the "Liberal Monthly," and as any other Liberal members had during the war, and I am speaking on behalf of my people. Nobody will prevent me from saying what I want to say for the protection of the soldiers and in the interests of my own people.

The third subject of inquiry of the second subcommittee is army and navy buildings construction. Nothing about construction for the Department of Munitions and Supply; only for the army and navy. Why does not the Department of Munitions and Supply get into the picture so that we can scrutinize as through a magnifying glass all the expenditures which are made there? No answer. Nothing is said. Note also that there is nothing about construction for the air service; no questions about the building of aerodromes, except for civilian flying clubs, etc. No, not at all; just the army and navy. Of course, the soldiers are under canvas most of the time. They are in camps, they have just tents, which are not very expensive; that is the lodging of many soldiers during the summer. It seems to me it would have been vital to get some information with regard to construction for the department of air, but the answer would have been that aerodromes do not come under the department of air but under the department of transport and therefore we cannot scrutinize that. A subcommittee was set up with regard to financial control over army, navy and air force expenditures—headquarters establishments and pay and allowances. This report is bilingual, even in the English text, because there are some Latin words in that text such as "syllabus" and "honorarium". My knowledge of the English language is limited, and I did not know what the word "establishment" meant. I had to look it up in the dictionary. I find that establishment means: Church system, established by law; organized body of men maintained for a purpose, as army, navy, civil service. This is the first time I knew that. Other members who knew it before were more fortunate than I am; those who did not know it have now the same advantage that I enjoy after reading that excellent, non-controversial book—the dictionary.

Let me ask this question: Why were the sittings of the committee in camera? The answer is given at page 448 of Votes and Proceedings. I quote:

> It was the opinion of your committee that its members would obtain a freer expression of opinion from persons appearing before the subcommittee if the sittings were held in camera than if they were open sittings.

Expressions of opinion! Expressions of opinion where you can have people swearing at each other and contradicting themselves all the time. But the course with the ordinary witness is to have that witness take an oath and tell the truth, stating the facts. That would be the ordinary course, and then it would be up to the members of the committee to decide what conclusions should be reached after reviewing all the facts. It is not simply the knowledge of a lawyer, it is the knowledge of every man who has attended one sitting of a court, that witnesses are not there to deliver lectures. And the witnesses that appear before the committee should be there to inform the members of the committee as to the facts which those members have a right to ask for and decide upon later on.

This was done during the last war. My hon. friend the member for Lake Centre said something really appropriate. During the great war the committee that sat was not a committee like this one but the public accounts committee and everything was open. Miss McAdam's shovel came out of it; old horses, butter and all the rest of it; but after it was all over it had a very good effect: it prevented others from doing likewise and people were more careful. So long as people are protected by silence you can expect anything. I do not see why this committee has been sitting in camera. What can we know? We know only what is disclosed to us. We do not know anything about the evidence given before the committee; nothing is quoted. The only thing they say is that the quartermaster-general appeared before the committee to tell a little story; that is all. There is nothing with regard to the essential thing, which is the commonwealth air training plan. That is not revealed to us. The committee has not studied that contract, it has not studied contracts with any other dominion with regard to air, but only what I would call subcontracts with civilian flying clubs, associations or companies; if it did, we are not informed about it.

> The subcommittee has been informed that these companies are organized on a non-profit sharing basis as to all common stock and that their preferred stock, which is limited to $35,000, is restricted to a 5 per cent dividend annually. The practice has been for public spirited citizens, service clubs and municipal bodies—

I think that should read municipal bodies, service clubs and public-spirited citizens, in the third place.

> —to raise the $35,000 required, and in some instances the money has been made available for this purpose without interest. The intention of the plan is that after payment of 5 per cent on $35,000 of preferred stock all profits which accrue from the operation of the elementary flying training schools will be the property of the flying clubs to enable them to sponsor civilian flying and generally to give leadership to civilian aviation after the war.

This is not a war project but an after-war project, and you will see how it works.

> Under the form of agreement between the operating companies and the crown the latter provides buildings, aerodromes and all necessary equipment including aeroplanes and recompenses the company for their services under four heads, namely, management, operation and maintenance, flying hour costs and messing costs. Of these, management and messing costs are fixed, while operation and maintenance and flying hour costs are adjustable each twenty-four weeks, based upon experience.

And so forth. I have not the time to read it all, but I would call attention to pages 449 and 450. There are two payments, fifty cents per flying hour and 25 per cent of any residue that may exist in operation and maintenance and in allowance for flying hours, gas and oil, at the expiry of the contract. The crash reserve residue reverts to the crown. The report states:

> The operating companies have voluntarily surrendered 50 per cent of the flying hour profits as from the time the intake of pupils was increased from 48 to 70.

That is for public-spirited citizens.

> Increased intake of pupils naturally tends towards increased flying hours and an appreciable decrease in overhead costs per flying hour. The monthly profits of the said companies range from $318.32 to $942.54.

There is no average monthly profit quoted in the report. Here we see the difference between estimated cost in operating elementary flying training schools, on the basis of target price, $982 per pupil, and the actual cost to the crown as of March 31, 1941, which was $864. The difference between what is paid the elementary schools and what it costs the crown to train a young airman is $117.96. If there are forty-eight pupils this difference represents an amount of $5,664; if there are seventy pupils the difference is $8,260, which represents the profit made by the school. If the investment is $35,000 and it is not possible to make more than five per cent profit on the paid up capital, that interest would amount to only $1,750 but the return to the company runs from $5,664 to $8,260. There are other sources of profit, as hon. members will observe, but the minimum yearly profit is $3,816, while the maximum is $11,088, the monthly figures being multiplied by twelve. The report does not deal with air observer schools or airports, aerodromes, air force buildings, and so on; that will come later, because the committee has not had time to deal with those matters.

The second subcommittee was to study medical, dental and hospitalization services in the three branches of the service; the construction of army and navy buildings; food supplies for the forces, the inspection thereof, catering and salvaging of waste. The report states:

> The plan of inquiry was to secure from the proper departmental officials the system of operation and control in regard to these matters—

This is information which is denied ordinary members of parliament.

> —and to inquire as to how these departmental rules and regulations were being applied and carried out in military establishments in and adjacent to Ottawa.

According to the report these matters were not studied at any point other than Ottawa. Then listen to this paragraph, at the bottom on page 451:

> The present ration list is largely the result of recommendations made by a committee of expert advisers on nutrition, dietetics, hygiene, household science, agriculture, etc., under the National Research Council.

Pork and beans made scientifically! The report proceeds:

> Specifications of each item have been carefully prepared in the quartermaster-general branch and these are furnished to each firm or individual invited to tender.

And then:

> The officers in charge of supplies at these depots make their demands on contractors in accordance with their immediate requirements.

What contractors? Who are they? No one knows; the committee did not inquire into that point. How do we reach the man who is the contractor? How do we reach the man who is the go-between for a department? Then the report goes on to say that inspectors go into the meat supply houses and stamp the carcasses with the letters "D.N.D." meaning Department of National Defence, but it is not the Department of National Defence; it is the Department of Agriculture that does it. There is no economy in that. It is an economic fiction. Then this committee went to Petawawa; they had a Cook's tour there and found everything O.K. in the whole country because they had seen Petawawa.

Then there is a reference to the orderly system. I do not wish to abuse your patience, Mr. Speaker, but just listen to this:

> One decided improvement was noted by the subcommittee at Petawawa. The "orderly" system of messing is used there and in the opinion of the committee is a marked improvement over the "cafeteria" method. It permits of a much more inviting service of food and should assist in minimizing food waste from the tables.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh, oh.

Mr. POULIOT: You laugh; I laugh, too, because I find it very amusing. Then there are other considerations. The subcommittee confined its inquiry to the salvage of food waste and containers and did not deal with other matters under the heading of salvage of waste. But this is the recommendation:

> It recommends that the general committee enlarge the subject matter of inquiry under this head to include all items of salvage including foodstuffs, oil, boots and leather goods, clothing, lumber, containers and other worn-out or cast off material.

The committee did not give the subcommittee authority to deal with the matter of clothing, but here they deal with clothes as "garbage." It is not garbage; it can be used. There are poor people who do not receive any unemployment relief who could use this clothing. I obtained a certain quantity of worn-out military clothing which was distributed to the unemployed of my town and the settlers of my district on New Year's eve. It made these people very happy, and they gave thanks to the Minister of National Defence, the personnel of the department, the Prime Minister and all the members of the government for the charity they received from that department. Their little children could not go outside in the winter time because they had no clothes; they were unable to attend school, and these worn-out articles meant a great deal to them. But since this committee has been sitting it has been impossible to get anything from the department, because these Solomons have not yet reached a decision. They have had no time to study these matters.

According to this report the committee has studied the question of the distinction between civilian and service responsibility. Of course the responsibility is undivided. It makes no difference whether the books of the Department of National Defence are kept by men in civilian clothes or men in uniform; all these people are responsible to parliament, and it is up to parliament to decide what should be done. They are responsible under the authority of the minister, so that any distinction between service and civilian personnel is ridiculous. Of course the taxpayer usually is a civilian. I made the statement in the house that it was ridiculous to see men in several departments, especially in the Department of National Defence for Air, rendering civilian services but wearing uniforms and therefore receiving extra pay and allowances. The report mentions that matter and agrees with what I said. That is the good side of the report; I have not time to quote it verbatim, but every hon. member has read it.

We should get back to the policy under which the minister was responsible for all purchases made by his department. That is necessary. Ask the Minister of National Defence; he will not deny it. He is not responsible now; all purchases are made by the Department of Munitions and Supply. The minister cannot buy a cap or a badge for his department with public money. He has to go through all the red tape of the Department of Munitions and Supply, which he finds very embarrassing. Formerly the minister had full responsibility; that has been all changed, but I believe we should go back to the sound policy under which the minister was responsible to parliament for what was done by his department. That is all I have been asking from him. I do not wish to cause the minister any trouble, but I want him to be true to the parliamentary practice of many years ago,—the parliamentary practice that he supported until he came to act in this government for the last time. Every one knows it. It is the policy of Joe Howe, it is the policy of Blake—it is the policy of all Liberals, and not only of Liberals, but it was the policy of Sir John A. Macdonald. It was the policy of those who consider government something other than a corporate body. That is all.

I urge each one of my esteemed colleagues in the house to take the trouble to look at the report between pages 454 and 459 in the Votes and Proceedings, and he will realize what was in the head of the chairman when he dictated or wrote those lines. I have great esteem for the chairman of the committee, although I do not always agree with him, and I do not wish him to interrupt me. But the chairman could not find his way through, he could not find his way clear; he could not understand that system of departments suffering from elephantiasis, or big feet,—big feet that fall in corruption. When any hon. member reads the report he will see there is something wrong, and that an operation is necessary and urgent.

Of course, it is said with the precaution one takes when he does not want to hurt anybody. But if people have chosen to have military uniforms put on their backs, for profit, and for being better paid, then I do not see why the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) does not transfer them at once to the army, so that they may fill the ranks for the filling of which he is calling 32,000 men. They should be the first to go. They have been wearing the uniform for some time, and they have been getting more money than they would have been entitled to, had they not been wearing the uniform; therefore those people, if they are not cowards, should enlist at once in the real service of Canada. I do not think there is a single hon. member who will oppose me on that. These people have been parading the streets of Ottawa in military uniforms. I say they should parade in tanks, in the same uniforms. Then the state could pay them for military service, and not for military service under false pretences. I am referring of course to purely civilian services rendered by those in uniform.

This must be the reason why the chairman's report is obscure. He did not go farther and say all to the minister. He wanted to be mellow and to use white gloves. But I say brutally what he said in a certain form of language which I do not possess.

In conclusion, what is the use of discussing this matter when we have no detailed estimates from the Ottawa offices of the three war departments? They are only bulk estimates. We have no information—all these matters are of great importance. We have not the scales with which to weigh them. The only scale is the exact expenditure, and we do not have a record of it. We have no information, either, about the Department of Munitions and Supply. I said that when the minister was not in the chamber, and I repeat it now that he is here. How is it that the committee did not get any information as to armaments? Even if it was secret, we should have had the satisfaction of knowing that the committee had information about it. Why did it not get information about clothing? Why did it not get information about construction for the air service?

All this reminds me of one thing. Once I visited Holyrood castle, and while there I visited the room, which, I was told, was Mary Stuart's. The attendant said, "This was her bed." After a while he told me, "No, this was not her bed; it is another bed, but it stands in the same place as her bed stood originally." That is the story of the report. This is not a report of expenditures. The expenditures are made by the Department of Munitions and Supply, and from the smile on the minister's face, it would seem he knows that is true. Neither the Minister of National Defence, proper, nor the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services (Mr. Macdonald), nor the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power), could spend a cent without having the requisition first passed through the Department of Munitions and Supply. Purchases are made by the Department of Munitions and Supply, but payments are made by the Department of Finance. Therefore I say the Minister of National Defence, proper, and his two colleagues, and the other war ministers, are out of the picture completely. One of them may write a small requisition,—"I want a hundred uniforms." That is handed to the Department of Munitions and Supply. That department calls for tenders, or the order is given to a contractor or to a tailor. The goods are then sent to the Department of National Defence, or to the Department of National Defence for Air or the Department of National Defence for Naval Services. When they reach there, I presume another form is sent to the Department of Munitions and Supply, and that department in turn gets in touch with the Department of Finance. Then the Department of Finance makes the payment. Has any hon. member ever seen anything like that?

I should like the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) to be in a position to feed the soldiers, et cetera. I should like him to be responsible for the payments connected with all purchases of food, clothing and munitions. I should like his colleagues in the departments of National Defence for Naval Services and National Defence for Air to be able to do the same. Although the minister who until recently headed the Department of National War Services is no longer head of that department, I should like his successor to do likewise, so that we in the House of Commons would know with whom we would have to deal. In passing I would say that the Department of Munitions and Supply should be abolished, and the minister of that department should be made Minister of National War Services, if such is found necessary.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the hon. member from this group who served on the war expenditures committee felt it necessary to leave, because of illness at his home. Therefore it becomes my duty to pinch-hit for him. Not having attended the meetings of the committee, I am not in a position to pronounce in any way upon the efficiency, thoroughness, spirit and all those fine things which up to the present time have been commended. I assume statements which have been made in this connection are all accurate.

I shall devote my attention to the general idea of having such a committee, and to making such observations as would seem to be fitting in connection with the establishment and maintenance of such a committee of the house at this time. I believe the idea of having the committee is good. Judging from what I have heard from our member on that committee I do not think I am immoderate when I say that the committee has done good work and will justify its existence.

In the first place, Canada wants no profiteers. I think one of the most malodorous relics of the previous war was the number of millionaires and profiteers which was created at the expense of the people of Canada. It is my settled opinion that Canada has never recovered from the maladjustments in her social, economic and financial structures induced by the abuses of the last war. We want no repetition of those abuses. I am not disposed to be ultra-critical of the government which conducted the last war, I just leave what I have said as I have said it.

In this war the number of orders is bewilderingly large. If the problems connected with getting material fabricated and delivered during the last war constituted a headache, then I think the problems connected with the task in this war must create a super-headache. To the ordinary citizen and the ordinary member of parliament the whole thing is simply beyond comprehension.

Again, the nature of the orders is forbiddingly complex. When listening to reports from our representative I have wondered how such a committee, constituted as it was and even sitting once a day, could possibly adequately examine a sufficient number of accounts to enable it to do the kind of work which we all wish it to do. I am not able to answer that question; I am going to leave it unanswered. But I think it constitutes a third reason why we need a committee of this sort.

To most Canadians war manufacturing is very remote. For example, the people in the prairie provinces hear about it as something going on in a far-away country. In order to indicate how large and complex and remote this whole problem has become, and for the benefit of people in the country who read Hansard, I should like to place upon the record a document which came to my office only this morning. I believe it will be an interesting relic in the years to come, showing as it does the colossal task with which the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), and the other ministers involved must grapple. This document is as follows:

Burritts Rapids Woollen Mills Ltd., Burritts Rapids, Ont	15,525
Brampton Knitting Mills, Brampton, Ont	34,500
Brill Hosiery Mills, Georgetown, Ont	7,935

May I interrupt here in an attempt to provide a little interest as I go through this list? In my judgment it is an extremely important matter that members of this house should note, as this list is being read, the small number and meagre size of the orders that go to any one of the four western provinces and to any one of the three maritime provinces. Far be it from me to say anything that would in any way offend our friends of the two central provinces, but I believe it should be pointed out over and over again that there is something wrong here in Canada. If this process continues for a number of years, the result will be serious in the extreme. I continue with the list:

Personal equipment—
J. Rodger Binks, Ottawa, Ontario	$ 9,936

Notice how rarely the name of any province appears except the two central provinces. I should like to turn this over to Hansard to have the rest of the list put on record, but I believe it will be good for the ears of the members from the two central provinces and the other provinces to hear the list read.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is music to their ears.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I continue:

I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for having taken up so much time and having more or less bored the house by reading this long list, but I believe it has a significance which the Minister of Finance and the other members of the cabinet can ill afford to ignore. You can see why this whole manufacturing and ordering business is more or less strange to people in most of the provinces. As a matter of fact, two provinces are gathering all the plums and seven others are not, and I submit that as a fourth reason why we need this committee.

Another reason is that for a great many Canadians there is no hope of profit or even financial or economic gain from these contracts, but only the privilege of "paying the shot". I noticed that in that list there were very few orders for seven of the provinces; members will recall that the provinces that were luckless in getting orders are primarily agricultural provinces. The ruinous policy with respect to agriculture which is being pursued by the dominion government of to-day is adding a good deal more than insult to injury to these seven provinces while they are suffering from these other disadvantages. Just the same, those provinces are obliged to pay all these impositions which we have been discussing under the budget. They all have to pay all the impositions as a result of the tariff structure of this country. They are all suffering from inequitable freight rates. They are all called upon to give their quota of loans. They are all expected to give their quota of enlisted men. That, I submit, is a matter worthy of attention.

Another reason why this committee ought to be proceeded with is that people, in order to fight successfully, have to build up an emotional attitude which makes them think primarily of the safety of the state, and think in terms of patriotism. When one is in a mood like that he is not likely to be quite so critical of what is going on in a business way. It is all the more necessary that there should be a committee here looking after the interests of the people who are being encouraged to develop that emotional attitude of patriotism. Always there are certain ones who think only in terms of dollars and cents.

The great body of the Canadian people may be likened to the farm hands who have to do the chores, the rough, hard, exacting work out in the wind and weather. They need someone in the kitchen, watchful to see that they get their share of the cream and pie; someone alert at the wicket to see that they get their share of the deeds and the dollars. This committee should serve as that someone watching in the kitchen, watching at the wicket.

Up to the present time the committee has not, perhaps, considered it one of its duties to exert some influence on the minister with respect to the placing of war orders. But, I submit, if the economic life of this dominion is to be preserved in anything like a sound condition, careful attention must be paid to this tendency to raise great loans and heavy taxes from seven of the provinces, to be spent in two of the provinces.

Of what the committee has already done I have no criticism to offer. But it does occur to me that the committee should be enlarged and it should be modified with respect to numbers. They tell me that there are on this committee, 18 Liberals, two Conservatives—

Mr. MacINNIS: Four Conservatives.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Four Conservatives—I am glad to be corrected—one Social Crediter and one representative of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I submit that the numbers of members of the various parties on that committee open the committee to serious suspicion to start with. I am not saying that the committee has taken advantage of the preponderance of one party, but I believe that the ordinary man in the street, looking at these numbers, would be very suspicious; he would find it difficult to see why at least the number of members from the three opposing groups should not equal the number representing the government. I understand the committee is to be conducted on a non-partisan basis, that its whole object is to find the truth, the whole truth and nothing else but the truth. I submit to you that a member of the Conservative party is quite as capable of finding the truth, and recognizing it when he has found it, as a member of the Liberal party, whosoever he may be. I would even venture to suggest that members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and Social Credit parties can do fairly good work in detecting truth and recognizing it when they find it. I suggest that there be a definite modification of the relative representations on this committee. May I point out that, with only one Social Crediter and one member of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, it would be a complete impossibility to have each of these groups represented on each of two subcommittees.

Mr. MacINNIS: It was.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I think the committee has done the best it could to give them fair representation, and I understand the device which has been used is that of allowing a member of the Social Credit group to sit on one of the subcommittees and a member of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation to sit on another subcommittee. I have no doubt at all that the work was well done, but I believe that it would do no harm to have a representative of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation on each of the subcommittees, and I will do my very best to see that any member of the Social Credit group who is on one of these subcommittees does good work too. I suggest that there be a change then, in the numbers of members of the different parties who sit on the committee.

In the next place, I think the committee should sit while the house is not in session. I am in entire agreement with the proposal that the committee remain here and work from day to day during the months while the house is away.

Again, while the house is not in session the members of the committee should, in my opinion, be paid a moderate per diem allowance. I am not prepared to pronounce upon the size of that allowance, but I do believe they should have an allowance. It should be moderate. If it is too large, the cost to the country, in this time of war, will be too great; if it is too small, a large number of members will be eliminated. I wondered whether the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker), in giving his fine speech this morning, had carefully canvassed the possibility that quite a few hon. members might be eliminated if an allowance were not paid, and paid in sufficient amount, though not too great an amount. Those hon. members who belong to the high income brackets can hardly afford to give up their ordinary work in order to come here. While some may say that they should be sufficiently patriotic, and all that sort of thing, it must be borne in mind that members of this house have not only responsibilities as members but—most of them —very definite responsibilities in connection with their businesses, and some of them carry a good deal of responsibility in connection with manufacturing and other war work which is now being carried on. These men, I submit, should not be required to leave their work, and delegate others to take their places without having some allowance to help cover the cost. Then again, if the allowance is too small, a good many people who are not well off will probably feel that they cannot afford to act on the committee. I believe that the allowance should be such that any member will feel able to devote his time and his talents freely to the work in hand without having to worry about anything going on at home.

I think the sessions of the committees should be public wherever possible. There has been some discussion on this matter. There will be times when the committee will need to meet in camera, when there is danger of hesitancy to investigate some matters, or indisposition on the part of witnesses to be candid and thorough, precise, confidential and cooperative. If, in order to gain these various things which we all want, it is necessary to sit in camera, I would say, "Better sit in camera than to go without the results which we want." At the same time our experience leads us to believe that the proceedings should be recorded verbatim: they should be printed and distributed to members, except in the case of such parts of proceedings on any given day as might be deemed to be of value to the enemy.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, everything should be done by the committee, by the members of this house and by the government to make the committee's work systematic, thorough, unflinching, impartial. If that be done and the committee be instructed to help the government to place war orders throughout the country in such a way as to give the seven provinces of the east and the west something like their fair share, then there is no reason why the committee should not be one of the most valuable appendages to this house and should not be completely worth every cent it might cost the country and every bit of effort it might cost every individual member on the committee.

Mr. H. C. GREEN (Vancouver South): The motion before the house is a motion for concurrence in the third report of the select committee on war expenditures. Hon. members will have noticed that about a week ago the chairman of the committee submitted two reports, the second and the third. The second report contained the recommendations of the committee with regard to the work it had been doing, and to-day we are really concerned only with the third report. I would ask members to look at the wording of that report, because we are being asked to approve its terms. It will be found at page 460 of Votes and Proceedings, and in effect it asks that certain powers be granted to the committee by the house.

First of all, it asks that the committee, which of course means the full committee of twenty-four members, be authorized to continue its inquiry notwithstanding the impending adjournment of the house. Then it asks that the committee have power to adjourn from place to place—for example from Ottawa to Halifax, say, or to Vancouver or anywhere else in Canada. It asks for power to sit in camera or otherwise as it may from time to time determine, and for power to determine the manner and extent to which the evidence and proceedings shall be printed or typed, and furthermore to employ such secretarial, clerical and other assistance as it may deem necessary. There are two other requests. One is that six members of the committee constitute a quorum during the adjournment, and the other, that any subcommittee appointed by the committee have power to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the house and likewise to adjourn from place to place.

These are wide and unusual powers, and I suggest that it is the duty of the house to consider carefully whether or not such a request should be granted. My opinion is that it would be unwise in the extreme unless drastic changes are made in this committee, in the set-up of the committee and in the way in which it carries on its business. In order to outline my reasons for coming to that conclusion, I would sketch briefly the background, the manner in which the committee came to be appointed.

This committee was modeled of course on the committee in Great Britain. In the last war of 1914-18 there was a special committee in Great Britain, and shortly after the outbreak of the present war the British parliament appointed a similar committee, on December 12, 1939, so that their committee has been functioning almost from the start of the war. It has had the benefit of the experience of the earlier committee which served in Great Britain during the last war.

We decided in Canada this spring that we would do likewise and appoint a similar committee, and on March 5 an order was made appointing the committee and giving it practically the same power as was given to the British committee, with one exception. The word "current" as applied to expenditures was deleted so far as the committee here is concerned. I quote from page 446 of Votes and Proceedings:

> Your committee was appointed by order of the house on March 5, 1941, to examine the expenditure defrayed out of moneys provided by parliament for the defence services, and other services directly connected with the war, and to report what, if any, economies consistent with the execution of the policy decided by the government may be effected therein.

In addition, we had in mind that there would be an opportunity to suggest ways in which the general war effort of Canada could be improved; that the work of the committee would disclose such ways. I do not believe that in following the British example we realized clearly—I do not think we stressed sufficiently—certain facts: in the first place, that the British committee was set up at the start of the war, and that in Great Britain they had had the previous experience in the great war, whereas in Canada the setting up of such a committee was an entirely new departure. Then we did not realize that in Great Britain the committee can get around the country much more readily. It can get to the defence centres, and subcommittees can travel and find out for themselves what is going on, whereas in Canada that is extremely difficult. But above all we did not emphasize the fact that in Great Britain there is a national government, a parliament which is not working on party lines, whereas in Canada we have the opposite. That fact should have been kept more clearly in mind.

In any event, on March 5 the Canadian committee was set up. Every member of the house will admit that there has never been a committee of this house of a similar type. It was something new. This committee was intended to be different; it was not intended to be just another committee. We thought that we were setting up a committee which would be entirely different and that it would have a great place in helping Canada to play her part in the war. We thought that we could set up a committee which would be quite detached in its outlook, although parliament itself was functioning on strictly party lines. I have reached the conclusion that we expected too much of human nature.

I do not mean any offence to any member on the government side, nor do I wish to question the sincerity of members on the government side who were on the committee; and I do not pretend that the members of my party or of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation or of the Social Credit group have any larger endowment of sincerity than members on the government side. I do say, however, that this war expenditures committee has proved to be part of the Canadian parliament, which is functioning on party lines, and that the committee has reflected in its actions the attitude of this parliament, which is dominated by party politics.

That situation was made much worse by the fact that the government loaded the committee with government supporters. We understood that there would be a committee of fifteen, of whom nine would be government supporters and six members of the opposition. Instead, we got a committee of twenty-four, with eighteen government supporters, twice the original number, and only six supporters of the opposition parties. In other words, there was a loading of the committee to the extent of three government supporters to one opposition supporter. That alone made it impossible for this committee to carry on as members of this house had hoped it would;

and, further, it meant that the subcommittees which were eventually set up were also overwhelmingly composed of supporters of the government. No more than two opposition members were on any subcommittee.

After the committee was set up, there was a delay before the work was started. It took a week before we had our first meeting and two weeks before we called any witnesses. Before the Easter recess there were several general meetings of the whole committee, and on April 3, when the situation was discussed, our chairman announced that he thought, when we returned after the Easter recess, it would be wise to divide the committee into five subcommittees. Hon. members will find that suggestion at page 222 of the proceedings of the committee. The chairman suggested that there should be subcommittees on army; navy; air force; munitions and supply, and miscellaneous. That was following the example of the British committee, which has subcommittees on army services; navy services; air services; supply services; home defence services, and trade, agriculture and economic warfare, and I believe one or two further subcommittees have been added. I think this proposal of April 3 was the proper procedure to follow, and consequently there would be subcommittees dealing with the various departments; where any question concerned more than one department, the subcommittees could meet together, as is done in Great Britain right along.

Accordingly we went away for the Easter recess. When we came back, towards the end of April, the whole plan had been changed. It had been decided that we would not divide into subcommittees allotted to the different departments, but that subcommittees should be set up to deal with specific subjects. I have never been able to understand why that change was made. I do not think it was a sound decision, and I believe it has greatly handicapped the work of the committee. That, however, was done, and at the same time it was decided that meetings of these subcommittees should be held in secret, unless the subcommittee decided to the contrary. That motion will be found at page 237 of the proceedings of the committee. The wording is:

> That the sittings of subcommittees be in camera except as the subcommittee may otherwise from time to time determine. . . .

The members of the Conservative party suggested that the question of secrecy should be left entirely to the subcommittees, which should decide at each meeting whether or not that meeting should be held in camera. Instead, however, the majority of the committee decided that all meetings of the subcommittees must be in secret unless the subcommittee decided otherwise, which made it very difficult for a subcommittee to meet other than in secret. When we opposed that suggestion we were promptly voted down; the old steam-roller was brought out and put in gear, and we were run over by the government majority on the committee. At the time it seemed to me a strange way to do business in a committee which was supposed to be entirely non-partisan, working as a group of individual members. As a matter of fact, I believe the evidence brought out before the subcommittees has indicated that most of these meetings need not have been held in secret at all; that no harm would have been done if the press had been present, and that, in fact, much good might have resulted if this had been done. That is particularly so because the subcommittees are dealing with specified subjects. If they had been going into particular departments in detail, there might have been more justification for secret meetings, but that was not the situation. For example, take the question of contracts with civilian flying clubs, associations or companies, which was dealt with by No. 1 subcommittee; or take other matters, such as food supplies for the forces, the inspection thereof, catering and salvaging of waste, and the construction of army and navy buildings, which were referred to subcommittee No. 2. In my opinion there was no reason why the meetings dealing with those subjects should not have been quite open.

In any event, it took the subcommittees some time to get started, and they hurried through their work. Perhaps No. 3 subcommittee had many more meetings than the other two; but if hon. members will refer to the reports of these committees they will see through them all a tendency to pull punches. The subcommittees are not hitting out at things that should be hit out at; all the way through they have pulled their punches. For example, look at the report of No. 3 subcommittee, which was dealing with headquarters organizations. At page 459 we find these words:

> The subcommittee is strongly of the opinion that a further careful study of adequate controls of army, navy and air force expenditures should be made immediately in the belief that such controls will result in very large economies throughout the services, greater no doubt in some than in others.

The fact was, Mr. Speaker, that these greater economies could be effected in the air service; but rather than come out and call a spade a spade, the subcommittee said that all departments should be looked into, but that greater savings might be made in some than in others. Then, if we turn to page 452, we find the report of subcommittee No. 2 dealing with the inspection and marking of beef. It was reported to us that a certain system of marking had been inaugurated in Ontario and Quebec, and some members of the general committee said, "Well, why not recommend that this system be adopted in the rest of Canada?" The answer was, "Oh, no. We must not go that far. We might antagonize the quartermaster-general or somebody else. Instead of that we will put in these words," and they will be found in the report of the committee:

> The quartermaster-general informed the subcommittee that consideration is being given to the extension of this practice throughout Canada.

There was a failure to face the facts and make a definite recommendation, which this committee should have done. We are the people who should have made the recommendation; we do not have to stand back, to pussy-foot around and be afraid of criticizing higher officials, or of making suggestions that may not please those officials. If the committee is to be of any use, then it must make forthright suggestions on these questions.

In the report of subcommittee No. 1—and it is to that report I object most—we find that the subcommittee have dealt with contracts with civilian flying clubs, associations or companies. In their report they deal first of all with elementary flying training schools, and they discuss the question of these schools fairly fully. There were certain facts they did not have, such as the question of common shares, to which the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) referred this afternoon.

But, then, when they come to a discussion of air observer schools, we find this statement in the report, as it appears at page 451 of Votes and Proceedings:

> The subcommittee has not completed its inquiry as to operation costs and profits with respect to air observer schools. A conference has been called of executive officers of all of these schools to discuss operating costs and profits and the subcommittee is not prepared to make any report in regard to these schools until its inquiry in this regard is completed.

The inquiry with regard to elementary training schools had not been completed, either, but a report was made upon them. In committee of the whole we were told that with respect to air observer schools, profits running from 40 per cent to over 50 per cent were made in cases by these private companies. Some of us took the stand that that information should be included in the report to parliament; that parliament and the Canadian people were entitled to know that fact. Instead, this subcommittee decided that they would call into conference the officials of these air observer schools, and that they would try to beat them down in their profit, try to make a better bargain for the government—and, of course, try to make the picture look better. That was not the function of that subcommitee, nor was it the function of the whole committee. It is not the object of this committee to go out and make deals with contractors or with private firms. That is a job for the government. Yet, when we asked that the report of subcommittee No. 1 be referred back to them in order that they might obtain further information, we were again voted down on a strictly party basis.

Mr. GOLDING: And only two voted for that.

Mr. GREEN: No; there were four. We were voted down on a strictly party basis. In other words—

Mr. GOLDING: There were two.

Mr. GREEN: The hon. member can make his speech later. In other words, the old steam-roller was brought out against us again. That amounts to soothing parliament and to soothing the Canadian people, and I say that this soothing combined with the secrecy of the subcommittee meetings, is dangerous to the nation at this time. If changes are not made, this war expenditures committee may do more harm than good. It may be a case of hindering, rather than aiding Canada's war effort.

It is now suggested that the committee should carry on during this summer. The suggestion is that it carry on again as a committee of twenty-four members, presumably to continue sitting in secret. That would continue all summer, perhaps during four months, and there would be no house to which to report. What is the sense of anything like that? Where is all this to lead us? The Canadian people will think, "Oh, we are reasonably safe; there is a committee in Ottawa checking all these items of expenditure." Yet there is no way of getting the information from that committee to the public, and I point out that on the committee members in opposition groups are not in a position to have their proper share in the decisions made by the committee.

If the suggestion is adopted, the committee will continue to be one-sided. It will consist of eighteen government supporters, and six supporters of opposition groups. Just to illustrate the attitude and the frame of mind: When we were holding our last meeting, and discussing the report which would be brought in, the suggestion was made that the number of members on the committee be cut down for the work during the summer. I believe it was suggested that the committee should consist of fourteen members. There arose a discussion which lasted an hour or an hour and a half as to the impossibility of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec having different representation—from the government side, if you please!—on that committee.

Mr. CLEAVER: On a question of privilege, the hon. member for Vancouver South has made a statement with regard to a discussion which he stated lasted an hour or an hour and a half, and which was a contest between Ontario and Quebec members—

Mr. GREEN: I had not gone that far.

Mr. CLEAVER: —as to the proposed reduction in the numbers on the committee. I state definitely that that statement is false. and should be withdrawn. I state that on my responsibility as a member.

Mr. GREEN: I do not withdraw it, because it is not false; it is true. There was argument that this province must have so many Liberals on the committee, and that province must have so many Liberals, and that they must have Liberals from every part of Canada —one from British Columbia, and so forth, and so forth. In the end they decided to increase the committee to seventeen, in order that there might be proper Liberal representation from the different provinces. That is not the way to fight a war. That is not the way for this committee to carry on. If it is to carry on in that way, then its efforts will be useless, and the whole proceeding will be a farce.

I do not wish to condemn without suggesting a remedy. For that reason I suggest that if this committee is to sit during the summer, the number should be cut in half. That is, it should be cut from twenty-four to twelve members, and there should be equal division; that is, five members from the government side and five from the opposition parties, with the chairman and vice-chairman from the government group. That would give a total of seven government members to five in the opposition groups. I suggest that this business of sitting in secret should be at least greatly reduced. Meetings should be held in public, except in those instances where public meetings would give aid to the enemy. In such event they should be kept secret.

Even then, the committee could not be expected to do as good work as the British committee has done because, as I have said, the Canadian parliament is carrying on along strictly party lines, and because we started so much later. The committee, however, would have far more chance of succeeding than it has had to date, and I believe it might be able to do a great deal of good for this nation in these very trying times.

Mr. HUGHES CLEAVER (Halton): Mr. Speaker, before attempting to tell the story as to the ground covered by the subcommittee on which I acted as chairman, I think it only right that I should answer one or two of the observations of the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green). In the first place he stated that both the general committee and the subcommittees were dominated by party politics, and that they were overwhelmingly Liberal. He stated, and repeated the statement several times, that the old steam-roller had been brought out and put into gear. I should like positively to assert that not only was the hon. member wrong and incorrect in making that statement, but he himself did not attend the meetings of the committees enough to know whether or not there was any partisanship in their work. He would rush in and get his attendance and then rush off to another committee.

Mr. GREEN: That is not correct. I missed quite a number of meetings because I had to attend the meetings of the pensions committee, but when my hon. friend says that I would rush in and then rush out, he is not telling the truth. The times when I said that the steam-roller was used, I was there and was rolled out.

Mr. CLEAVER: I am not saying that my hon. friend had not perfectly good reasons for not attending the committee; he was spending most of his time in another important committee, the pensions committee. He had a perfect right to choose which committee he would attend; but having failed to attend with reasonable continuity the meetings of the war expenditures committee, I think it ill behooves him to make the statements which he has made with regard to that committee. The members of the war expenditures committee who attended the meetings devotedly and continuously caught the spirit of the committee and they functioned, not on partisanship or political lines, but just as this house expected them to. With regard to the charge that the committee divided on political lines, I may say that the very afternoon about which my hon. friend complains and on which he attended the committee, the committee divided nine to ten. Was that a division on political lines? More of the steam-roller, I suppose!

Mr. HOMUTH: On what question did the committee divide ten to nine?

Mr. CLEAVER: I think the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth), being entirely unhampered by knowledge of this committee, had better not waste the time of the house.

Mr. HOMUTH: I certainly shall not get any knowledge from the hon. member.

Mr. CLEAVER: I come now to the second point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver South, that we were pulling our punches. He gave as an illustration that he was told the committee had been informed that there was some evidence that air observer school companies were earning profits of from 40 to 50 per cent. Once again he did not tell the whole story. In failing to tell the whole story, once again I say that deliberate misrepresentation has been made of the facts.

Mr. GREEN: I ask that the hon. member withdraw the words "deliberate misrepresentation".

Mr. SPEAKER: I would point out to hon. members that I cannot be the judge as to what one member says happened in committee and another hon. member denies. Hon. members must take the responsibility in stating what are alleged to be the facts. However, the expression "deliberate misrepresentation" should be withdrawn.

Mr. CLEAVER: I gladly withdraw that without reservation. I shall be pleased to present to the house the facts of what took place and leave it to the house to judge whether the matter was misrepresented. These are the facts. Subcommittee No. 1 was delegated three tasks: to inquire into the commercial operation of air observer schools, of elementary flying training schools and construction contracts. The committee was appointed on May 4 or May 5, and we headed into these questions as quickly as we could. But we have not been able to complete our work on any of them although we got along further with the elementary flying training schools than with any other subject. We made a reasonably complete interim report on that subject, but we told the main committee that we had not completed our investigation into air observer schools. Perhaps I was guilty of indiscretion in being too frank, but I told the committee that we had the evidence of one witness who gave figures that established profits ranging from 40 to 62 per cent. We also told the committee, however, that we had the evidence of only one witness; that we had no right to prejudge the case; that we should have an opportunity of hearing both sides of the question before turning in a definite report. I think it will be readily seen how wise the committee was in coming to that conclusion and how unfortunate it would have been if we had reached a premature decision without hearing both sides of the case. What did we find? A conference was called of all the air observer schools across Canada to discuss the whole problem of operating costs and profits. The subcommittee found at that conference that the gentleman who had given evidence establishing profits of from 40 to 62 per cent was entirely in error, that the profits were not half of that amount. Where would we have been if we had not "pulled our punches"?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I rise to a point of order. I do not want to challenge the memory of the hon. gentleman, but this evidence was taken in camera. I think the hon. gentleman has considerably understated what the original evidence was, as well as what the subsequent evidence was.

Mr. CLEAVER: Fortunately I have extracts of the evidence before me. The evidence given in connection with example No. 1—I shall refrain from giving the name of the school because this was given in camera—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I do not think the hon. member should refer to evidence taken in camera.

Mr. SPEAKER: Each member of a committee which has held meetings in camera must himself decide whether he can use that evidence.

Mr. CLEAVER: Under normal conditions I would not refer directly to any evidence given in camera, but the hon. member who preceded me has made the statement that profits in air observer schools ranged from 40 to 50 per cent and that the subcommittee had deliberately "pulled its punches". As a member of that subcommittee I cannot let that grossly incorrect statement go out to the people of this country without refuting it. I appreciate my responsibility as a member, but I should like to give sufficient evidence to refute entirely the statement which has been made. I am doing this in the interests of the morale of this country.

Mr. THORSON: I rise to a point of order. The committee decided that the sessions of the subcommittees should be held in camera. I think that means that the evidence given before such committee must be regarded as privileged. If the rule is relaxed in respect of one statement, then the whole value of "in camera" sessions is gone. If it is permissible to refer to a statement of fact given in "in camera" sittings, then it would follow that statements of expressions of opinion given in camera might also be stated in this house. I suggest to Your Honour that the distinction should be this: If any evidence or any facts are available from a source other than statements made in camera, then such evidence or facts may be given in this house. But statements that are made in camera and expressions of opinion given in camera ought to be regarded as privileged. Otherwise the purpose of "in camera" sessions is completely defeated.

Mr. STIRLING: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I make this observation. The incident which has just happened illustrates the point that some of us who were not able to support the idea of holding this committee were not incorrect, in that evidence which is given in camera should not be used outside in any shape or form whatsoever. Here we have had a piece of evidence given in camera referred to in this house. It is evident that if it is referred to in this house it will be referred to outside this house by individuals who think they may properly do so in matters of conversation with the general public. It renders the holding of committee work absolutely useless if sittings be held in camera because no reference should certainly be made to such proceedings.

Mr. CLEAVER: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest, in view of the discussion which has taken place, that if the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), will withdraw the statement that he made with regard to 40 and 50 per cent profits, I am quite content to leave that part where it stands.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Speaker, on that point I was not quoting secret evidence. I was quoting statements made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver), as chairman of the subcommittee when we sat as committee of the whole.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): That was in camera also.

Mr. HOMUTH: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: The position of the Chair is this. Subcommittees were appointed, and they, in their discretion, decided to hold meetings in camera. Evidence was given at those meetings in camera, and any reference that might be made to that evidence by any member of the subcommittee must necessarily be on his own responsibility as a member of parliament. I cannot decide that question for him, nor do I think the Chair is entitled to decide as to what shall be said by a member of this house with regard to the proceedings in a committee of which he is a member. So far as the point of order is concerned, I again repeat that hon. members speaking on this question who refer to proceedings of the subcommittees must do so entirely on their own responsibility as members of parliament.

Mr. CLEAVER: I think upon mature consideration, Mr. Speaker, that the point of order is well taken. I will content myself with simply making this statement, that subcommittee No. 1, having to do with the subject of air observer schools, will make a report in due course, and I can assure the hon. member for Vancouver South that his fears as to profits and his statements as to profits are not well founded. I should, however, like to say this, that it is pretty scant evidence on which to accuse a subcommittee on war expenditures of "pulling its punches" to suggest that any committee on war expenditures should make any findings or report until it has heard both sides of the story.

The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) made, if I may be permitted to say so, a telling speech this morning, and while I confess that I agree with practically all of the aims which he outlined in that speech as the aims to which the committee should aspire, I find myself in rather sharp disagreement with him as to the best means of obtaining the results that he seeks to achieve. In his opening remarks he stated that none of the subcommittees had sat for more than thirty to forty hours. These committees were appointed only on the 5th of last May, and while it is true that they have not had sittings running in point of time to more than thirty to forty hours, that hardly gives the house the whole picture because, as hon. members know, the work of a subcommittee of this kind consists not only of the work you do while you are sitting in committee but of the work you do in studying the exhibits and reviewing and studying the evidence given before the committee. On that very point I may say that we on subcommittee No. 1 have found it embarrassing to get on with our work as we should like to have done, on account of other committee work intervening. Just by way of illustration, on one day last week I had five notices to attend five different committee sittings on that day; on that day we had three sittings of our subcommittee, and the house was also in session at three different times on the same day. I should like to make this suggestion, that as the work of our subcommittee goes on and we become engrossed in it, I would hope the members of the subcommittee would drop all other committee work, resign from other committees and confine themselves entirely to the work of the war expenditures committee.

The next point covered by the hon. member for Lake Centre was that the committee had no power to report as to wrongdoing. Possibly that is right, but whether we had the right to do it or not I wish to inform the house that their subcommittee No. 1 headed into every complaint of wrongdoing of which we as a committee had notice. I think we did some useful work in that regard. Let me give the house just one illustration.

We were told that one elementary flying training school was being financed by a group of wheat speculators from Winnipeg, the suggestion being that these men were motivated by profits, not patriotism. When the matter was called to my attention I said at once: "We will head into that." On going into it, we found that the school was organized as a non-profit school. We headed into many other mare's-nests, and when all the facts were brought out, the complaints ceased to exist.

As to the question of meeting in camera, I cannot but admit that some of the arguments we have heard in favour of the meetings being held in public have merit, but on the other hand we have had it impressed upon us many times that this committee should follow the British practice. The hon. member who just resumed his seat argued that the reason why we did not accomplish all we should have was that we had not followed the British practice. But the British practice is to hold meetings in camera. They have had the background of their experience in the last war as well as in the present war so far, and the British committee have found that much more satisfactory work can be done in camera, and therefore they are doing their work in camera. So far as I am concerned, I think we can quite safely follow that practice.

On the question of evidence being made available to members of the committee, I do not know of any better practice that could be followed than the one now in vogue. Four copies of the evidence now are made and one copy of the evidence is at all times available to every member of the committee. As chairman of subcommittee No. 1, I have never at any time refused a request by a member for the evidence, nor have I had to keep him waiting; it has always been available for him. I think it is only right to say that during the past few days the hon. member who raised the question has had the evidence in his possession quite as much as anyone else has had it; indeed, that is an understatement. If there is any better way of distributing the evidence I should like to hear it, but I do not like to have it broadcast to the country that all these proceedings are veiled in secrecy and that the members of the committee have not adequate opportunity of studying and reviewing the evidence.

I come now to the next question which was raised, whether hon. members should discuss in the house and in the country the actual evidence which has been taken. I believe the correct conclusion in that respect has been reached this afternoon. I am sorry that I was the first potential offender. I believe, however, that the ruling is right, and that it is a much safer proceeding to have the evidence weighed by the committee and only the findings made public. It is highly dangerous to take one little part of one man's evidence and broadcast it over the country, without the reading public having an opportunity of perusing the rest of the evidence of that one witness as well as the testimony of other witnesses.

Your subcommittee followed that practice in making its first report, with regard to elementary flying training schools. It will be found that in paragraph 6 we reported as to profits:

> Increased intake of pupils naturally tends towards increased flying hours and an appreciable decrease in overhead costs per flying hour. The monthly profits of the said companies range from $318.32 to $942.54.

Again, in paragraph 11 we made a definite finding on the evidence:

> The subcommittee finds that the estimated cost of operating the elementary flying training schools based on a target price was $982.31 per pupil, while the actual cost to the crown as of 31st March, 1941, was $864.35 per pupil.

To come to the work of the committee, as will be recalled, shortly after the outbreak of war a conference was held in Canada of representatives from the British commonwealth of nations to formulate a commonwealth air training plan. A plan was agreed upon under which thousands of aircrew, (pilots, air gunners and air observers) were to be trained annually in this country, some of them to receive their elementary training in Australia and other nations of the British commonwealth and to come to Canada for their final and senior training. Obviously, under a scheme of that size it was necessary that Canada should call to its service everyone in the country who had had previous flying experience and who was equipped to contribute anything toward the working out of the scheme.

We had in Canada at that time two groups of individuals who had had considerable flying experience. The one group was our civilian aviation companies which will be dealt with in our next report, and the other group was the flying clubs. These clubs were organized in the years 1926 and 1927, at the same time that Germany set up civilian flying clubs because she was prevented from establishing military flying training centres. In order to circumvent the treaty of Versailles she set up these civilian clubs. Our clubs functioned, supported by our Department of National Defence, by municipal grants, and by subscriptions from private individuals who were interested in the work. Most of them were operated by Canadian flyers of the great war. These clubs carried on a very important work, and from the period of their organization down to the outbreak of the war had trained something over 3,000 pilots. Obviously that was one group which could be of material assistance in Canada's war effort, and they were asked to take over the elementary flying training of all our pilots. All of these flying clubs were organized on a non-profit-sharing basis, and all of them had been financed as I have already outlined.

It was decided that the clubs should be asked to sponsor the formation of an elementary flying training company. The capital was set at $35,000; the shareholders were restricted to a 5 per cent return on their money; the common shares were pledged in trust for the benefit of the flying clubs, the idea being that when the war was over a small fund will have been built up, out of the profits of these companies, to rehabilitate and rejuvenate these clubs, and to start them off "on the right foot."

Mr. MacINNIS: May I ask the speaker a question? Who gave the authority for the issuing of common stock, and was any mention of it made in the agreements between the government and the flying clubs? How did the common stock come into existence, and how much was paid for it?

Mr. CLEAVER: I am sorry that I cannot answer that question as fully as I would like to, because, as mentioned in the report, in the time at our disposal we have not had an opportunity to check the records of each of these elementary flying training school companies. We are told, however, that the preferred stock, the 5 per cent stock, was sold at par. We are told that, as to some of the companies, only ten $1 or no par value shares of common stock were issued. At any rate, as to all of them we are informed that the common stock is held in trust for the flying clubs and that no individual can make a dollar profit. I am sure that when the subcommittee has had an opportunity of fully investigating the whole set-up of these individual companies, it will make a full and complete report to the house. At the present time that is as far as I can go.

Your subcommittee have also recommended that a complete study should be made regarding the profits which these elementary flying training schools earn for the benefit of the flying clubs. I do not think it is talking out of school to say that a majority of the committee feels that a ceiling should be placed upon the gross profit which should be made in that regard. But there is one other word which I should add as regards profits earned by the elementary flying training schools. At the time the schools were organized it was anticipated that each school would be able to train forty-eight pupils at a time. Through increased efficiency of the schools it has been possible to increase pupil intake to eighty, with the result that the flying clubs through their training companies have come along voluntarily and have asked that their per flying hour profits should be reduced from 50 to 25 cents.

Mr. MacINNIS: When was that voluntary offer made?

Mr. CLEAVER: It was made a little while after the committee began to function. I could not tell offhand the exact date.

Mr. HOMUTH: May I ask the hon. member if the profits are subject to taxation?

Mr. CLEAVER: I do not know. All I can say in reply to that question is, that the contracts provide that all these profits, other than the payment of the 5 per cent on the preferred shares, are to be kept in a reserve fund, invested in the main in non-interest bearing Dominion of Canada bonds, and none of them can be paid out during the duration of the contract, which is the duration of the war.

The essence of the contract, when one studies the whole picture, is simply this. No private individual can make any profit at all. The profit accruing to the clubs is held in the form of dominion bonds without interest; in other words, the essence of the transaction is that there is a future promise to pay from the dominion to these clubs when the war is over.

As to the work of the clubs, the evidence given shows without exception that they have carried on in an extremely efficient manner, both as to the training of pupils and with regard to the cost of operation. The house will be interested to know that their casualties have been extremely low. With a total of over 17·360 million miles flown, the elementary flying training schools have had less than one casualty per million miles—and perhaps that part of the training is the most hazardous to the pilot because it is during that part of his training that the raw recruit is doing his first solo flying.

In conclusion, I might make a few remarks with regard to taxation. Taxation in this country has reached the highest level we have ever before experienced, and consequently the public are becoming extremely critical of expenditures. That is as it should be. I am pleased that this government has adopted, in so far as it is humanly possible, the policy of paying for the war as we go. High taxation not only benefits the country, in the sense that we are able to pay as we go, but has a restraining influence on any type of extravagance, and I am sure that as members of this house we all welcome the critical attitude of the public towards war expenditures, because it will lead to greater care being taken and it will have a restraining effect on anyone who might be tempted to try to profit by war work.

Then there is the final result that overshadows all these points, which is the fact that heavy taxation curtails present consumer demand for goods. When one reflects that the maximum capacity of any country to contribute to war effort (outside man-power) is the difference between total goods produced and the goods consumed, he can see how important it is that we should restrain present consumption. In that regard there is the final chapter, the position of Canada when the war is over. In every way in which we deny ourselves now, in every way in which we economize now, we are building up a vast reservoir of future consumer demand which will help to start the wheels of industry turning when the war is over.

I could not resume my seat without paying tribute to the other members of subcommittee No. 1 who sat with us in the work. That committee's work was done by two Conservatives and three Liberals. There was no partisanship visible or active in any way in connection with the work of that committee, and while we had a difficult problem to study, we reached a unanimous report. I wish to express my personal appreciation of the co-operation which was given by every member of the committee.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health): There are two private bills to be considered, which will take only a few minutes. With the consent of the house, therefore, I would move that we pass to the order: private bills.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 93, for the relief of Dorrien Edson Weaver.—Mr. Hill.

Bill No. 94, for the relief of David MacDonald.—Mr. MacInnis.

WAR EXPENDITURES

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. J. T. Thorson (Selkirk) that the third report of the special committee on war expenditures presented to the house on June 4 be now concurred in.

Mr. KARL K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon when I asked the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) a question, he suggested that I should not take up the time of the house because I was not a member of the committee and therefore could not know very much about its work. The lack of knowledge of what the committee did or tried to do is the principal reason for my rising to-night to protest against concurrence in the report presented by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson). When this committee was suggested I considered, as did other hon. members of this house, that such a committee could do a great deal of good work; that it might go a long way toward bringing about economy in our war effort; that as a result we might put an end to many of the extravagances which we knew were being committed; and that their findings, as the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) said, would cause others to be careful in their work in connection with our war effort. Then we were told what would be the set-up of the committee; and instead of a committee which would do what we had visualized, I saw that it was to be a committee with an overwhelming number of government members. Why the change was made from fifteen to twenty-four members, I do not know, but it seemed quite plain that this larger committee would not bring about any better geographical representation, and therefore it could only be that the government wanted so many more of its supporters on the committee.

In my opinion, from the very start the committee was handcuffed and hobbled, and, in addition, its members were to be pledged to secrecy. Certainly it could not accomplish what it should be able to do if it were pledged to secrecy, because most of its findings would also be kept secret. Further, it was suggested that if any wrongdoing should be found, that wrongdoing should not be reported to the house or given to the public but should be told the government or the minister in charge privately, and the minister would see to it that appropriate action was taken. What that action might be, we would not know. Then all this committee was to do was make representations, which recommendations might be brought before this house, if it were in session, or before the responsible ministers.

I have closely followed the work of this committee and have read all available reports. In the beginning there was a long delay; it took weeks before the committee got under way and began to work on any plan. What have they done? In my opinion nothing has been done by this committee that should not have been done by the ministers and deputy ministers of the various departments. All the recommendations that have been made have to do with the internal economy of the various departments. The committee has found that there are men in the Department of National Defence and other war departments, some of them high-ranking officers, who are receiving pay and allowances for doing work that a clerk could do, and that as a result there is a tremendous unnecessary overhead. Surely we did not need a committee of twenty-four members of the House of Commons to set up an efficient system within the offices of the Department of National Defence. I realize that the ministers are busy, and cannot give to these matters of internal economy within their departments the attention a man in a private business might be able to give. But the ministers have deputies for all these departments. They have administrators, and if those men are not able to set up proper and efficient systems within those departments, then they are not fit to hold their jobs as deputy ministers.

There is no business in Canada which could operate on the basis on which some of these government departments operate, and it is about time we began to realize that fact. We have increased by many thousands our civil service staffs. We have increased their pay by hundreds of thousands of dollars. The Canadian people know that. Every now and again an article appears in some newspaper with respect to the money paid to people who are working for the government. I have applications every day from people who want to work for it and, to my mind, too many who wanted to work for the government got their chance to work for it, with the resultant inefficiency and heavy overhead in some departments. Why should it take a committee of twenty-four members to find a lack of efficiency in a department of government?

The committee also investigated other branches of the service, and they have made certain recommendations in that regard. I have in mind particularly the air training plan. This afternoon an insinuation was made —one which practically amounted to a charge— respecting the tremendous profits accruing to private air training schools. Even if the profit is half of what was suggested this afternoon, that is not a matter that should have to be the subject of investigation by a committee of twenty-four members of the house. Surely that, too, is a matter of internal economy within the Department of National Defence for Air. The men who negotiate and draw up the contracts for these air training schools should be in a position so to regulate and draw up the contracts that they could see to it that unfair profits were not made. We must make up our minds to the fact that whether in war time or in peace time there is always an element in the country who are desirous of making huge profits out of someone else's misery. Surely cases of this kind are purely matters with which departmental officials themselves should deal. It should not be necessary to set up a committee to decide such questions as these.

If the committees were permitted to sit during the recess, and continued to investigate only such matters as these, then certainly the people of Canada would be up in arms at the suggestion that it is going to cost $360 a day for the members alone, at the rate of $15 for each member, besides the costs of the staff, to investigate matters which ought to be the business of the minister and his deputy. Why do we need a committee to decide whether or not soldiers are getting cow beef or good steer beef? Surely those are matters for men within the department. The question of salvage in the various camps should be the business only of the men who are at the head of the camps. That is why they are put there. They are there because they are supposed to have the ability to run those camps; they are supposed to know how to handle these various matters.

Therefore I say that the people of Canada are not prepared to pay $15 a day to members of the House of Commons to delve into matters which should be the business only of the ministers and deputy ministers. The ministers should hold the deputy ministers responsible for the proper and efficient administration of these matters. I thought when this committee was set up it would investigate some of the things which had been done prior to the setting up of the committee. I thought it would look into some of the contracts which we knew were rather fantastic and extravagant —not to bring them to the light of day, but at least to see to it that any further contracts which were made would be made on a proper business basis, and see to it that we received a dollar's worth of value for every dollar expended.

I thought one of the matters which would have been referred to the committee would have been the Tilley report. That report is far more important than the people generally realize, or than the press would let them realize, because, when the Tilley report was presented, the press of this country came out with the statement that there was nothing much in it, and that there was nothing particularly wrong with the contract. We know there was; there was a great deal wrong with the contract. Do hon. members think the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) would have gone to Toronto to get Mr. Tilley, one of the most outstanding, if not the most outstanding, lawyer in this country, to investigate that contract, had there not been some reason for doing so? There must have been a reason for it. The reason was that it seemed as though the contract was running into huge sums of money, and the firm was making huge profits. That was generally rumoured round the country. The result was that Mr. Tilley was asked to investigate. He sent in his report, and if hon. members would read between the lines of that report they would get some idea of the extravagance of the contract made with the Acadia Construction Company. One realizes how perilously the whole matter was handled from the very start; one realizes the pressure the Acadia people put on. Then, when it seemed to the government that speed was so necessary, they signed the contract. After the contract was signed, the government found it had given one of the juiciest melons any construction company in this country ever got. If hon. members will read the report they will find that the company was in a position to charge rentals—

An hon. MEMBER: Order.

Mr. HOMUTH: —for the machinery. I am in order. I am discussing a contract which this committee should have investigated and which, if it sits, it should still investigate.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): The hon. member was discussing the general report.

Mr. HOMUTH: When it was brought to the attention of the late Hon. Norman Rogers, the then Minister of National Defence, by Mr. Vaughan, the minister wrote Mr. Vaughan and told him he was sorry that Mr. Vaughan did not like the terms of the contract, but that since it was signed, nothing could be done about it, unless all the contractual parties were agreeable. That is the type of thing which ought to be investigated by this committee. More contracts will likely be let. It is true that some of the extravagances which were apparent under this contract have now been cured, or at least I hope are in the process of being cured; but the contract has not yet been completed, settlement has not been made, and there are still points at issue.

If a committee is going to function on war expenditures, the government ought to see that this type of thing is investigated. Other contracts were given on a similar basis. Why is a man enabled to charge three days' rental in twenty-four hours and keep his machinery going continuously? Such a thing could never be done in private business, but that is what is happening in government business. It is contracts such as these that the people of this country expect this committee to investigate. This is the sort of thing we want investigated. We do not want scandal brought out. I have said on more than one occasion in this house that the worst thing that could happen to our war effort would be scandal. I am not suggesting it, nor do I wish to hear of it. But these are matters that ought to be investigated so that nothing of the like will occur again. Are there other contracts of a similar nature being performed by construction companies in this country for the government?

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Maybank) referred to the construction of a plant north of Winnipeg, and the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) said that it would be referred to this committee for investigation. Has it been referred to the committee? Has the committee dealt with it at all? Is it not more important to deal with that than with the question of whether cow beef is being fed to the soldiers? These are matters that we have to watch. These are the things that we thought the committee would delve into with the idea of seeing that no further contracts such as this would be made.

The committee asks the privilege of sitting during the recess. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) has asked members of this house to go out through their constituencies and do everything they possibly can to recruit men for the army or for the war services, to get men to go into the fighting forces of this country for $1.30 a day, or slightly more in the form of allowances if they are married. We are supposed to go out and ask young men to enlist, and yet we are sitting here to-day when a suggestion is made that we should endorse a motion to appoint a committee, the members of which will receive $15 a day each. I realize how difficult it must be for some hon. members to sit on such a committee; I appreciate the sacrifice that they would have to make!

There are many hon. members in this house who are specialists in certain lines of endeavour, and right from the outbreak of the war many of them have offered their services to the government, not for a dollar a year but for nothing. They were not asking for a living allowance. It is true that they received acknowledgments of their letters, but they never got a chance to do anything. Members of this house feel frustrated; they feel they are not able to do the things they would like to do. I realize how difficult it would be for some hon. members to sit on this committee without receiving some allowance, and I think it would be quite proper to pay them actual out-of-pocket expenses. When we are asking men to enlist in the army; when we are asking the people to dig deep in their pockets for the war loan; when we are asking working men and women who are not getting extravagant wages to contribute to war services and to buy war savings stamps, it is not right for us to pass a motion which will provide $15 a day to hon. members for sitting on a committee between sessions.

A member of the House of Commons receives an indemnity of $4,000 a year. If the house sat for the whole twelve months, that is all he would get; that is all he would be entitled to. He would have to make that sacrifice. When a member accepts a nomination to run for a seat in the House of Commons he knows what he is going to get and he knows what his responsibilities will be. If there are men in this house who should sit on this committee because of their particular abilities, who feel that they can do a real job, they should not expect to get $15 a day over and above their indemnities. I am opposed to this committee sitting unless it can do more work than it has done already, unless it can do some real work, and I am definitely opposed to the members receiving $15 a day each.

Mr. ALPHONSE FOURNIER (Hull): Mr. Speaker, the discussion on this motion has been going on since eleven o'clock this morning. I do not know that I can add very much to the debate, but I have listened to so many speeches in this house during the last eleven years, that hon. members should not begrudge me a few minutes to-night to express a few ideas which I have on this motion. I am a member of this committee; I have attended nearly every meeting; I have followed everything that has been going on, and I think I am in a better position to speak on war expenditures than certain hon. members who have spoken before me. In order to understand the setting up of this committee, hon. members would do well to read what was said by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) on November 12 and December 3, 1940, and on March 4 of this year. I think the followers of the leader of the opposition have lost sight of what has taken place since the beginning of the session with reference to this committee. On November 12, 1940, as reported at page 34 of Hansard, the leader of the opposition said:

> I am impelled to propose to the government that it cause to be set up immediately two select special committees which will be charged with the responsibility and the duty of investigating and reporting to this house factually, objectively and truthfully, without bias and without partisanship—and I have no doubt that is possible—what is our exact position (a) with respect to our fighting forces, military, naval and air; and (b) with respect to the production and delivery of all the important materials, equipment and supplies necessary in our war effort.

That is the suggestion which was made to the government on November 12 last. If I understand the record correctly, that was followed by conferences between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), the leader of the opposition and other hon. members. It was found quite difficult to set up these two committees, and later on the leader of the opposition, having studied what had been done in Great Britain, read to the house on December 3 the order of reference to the British committee on national expenditures. Here was what he said on December 3, 1940, as reported at page 615 of Hansard:

> That a select committee be appointed to examine the current expenditure defrayed out of moneys provided by parliament for the defence services, for civil defence and for other services directly connected with the war, and to report what, if any, economies consistent with the execution of the policy decided by the government may be effected therein.

That is the order of reference of the British committee, and the leader of the opposition suggested this order of reference as a model for the government in appointing a committee of this house. His suggestion was followed by further conferences between members of both sides of the house, and on March 4 of this year, the Prime Minister moved the appointment of a committee on war expenditures. They had agreed on the order of reference. Some of the words were struck out, and the wording was a little different from the order of reference of the British committee.

After discussion on March 4, the motion was agreed to, following speeches by members on both sides of the house, but no vote was taken, and the committee was appointed unanimously by the house. The names of the members were in the motion, and they all agreed to serve on that committee. They still recall the words of the leader of the opposition who had said in his speech of December 3:

> I do believe, however, that a committee of private members of this house, sitting day in and day out during sessions and between sessions, could perform a very useful function in assisting the government at this time, and I commend this suggestion to hon. members.

I hope his suggestion was commended to members of the opposition as well as to members on the government side.

I will now read some praiseworthy words which the hon. leader of the opposition used on the same day:

> There is not only a real job to be done, but a job that will tax your capabilities to the utmost. You will have to make substantial sacrifices in serving the state in this way, but it is a patriotic duty which I think some of you ought to perform. I believe a real contribution can be made in this way by private members.

After this lengthy discussion before the appointment of the committee, the house passed the resolution and the committee came into existence. On that committee were represented the Liberal party, the Conservative party, and the two groups to the left. They met first on the 12th of March and held nineteen open sittings. At the sittings a large majority of the members attended. I recall seeing there the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Harris), the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Black). They all agreed to the procedure from the 12th of March down to the day the subcommittees were appointed by the committee of the whole. They participated in cross-examination of the witnesses. They seemed satisfied with the procedure up to that stage. The only difficulty is that some members wished to proceed faster with the inquiry. I noticed the same state of mind in the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth). The hon. gentleman perhaps has had a large experience outside the house, but he does not seem to know exactly how committees of the house should proceed.

Mr. HOMUTH: I sat on them for about twenty-one years.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member has spoken many times in the house, and I did not interrupt him. Will he kindly listen to me to-night?

Mr. HOMUTH: I did not refer to the hon. member.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): In committees the first thing to understand and to keep clearly in mind is the order of reference. The inquiry by the committee must conform to the order of reference. The order of reference to the war expenditures committee was agreed to by both parties, and the chairman of the committee started the investigation according to the order of reference. He called in deputy ministers and high officials of every department concerned. For the first month, if members recall well, the committee held its inquiry in open sessions and proceeded—

> . . . with a general review of the manner in which the Department of Munitions and Supply functions as a central purchasing agency for the three departments of National Defence, army, navy and air, from the time it receives a requisition or contract demand from one of such departments until such requisition is filled, of the various types of contracts which are entered into by the department and the bases upon which such contracts are let, of the various checks and controls in the matter of cost accounting that are exercised, of the manner in which the purchasing organization within the department is set up and functions and a general exploration of the existing checks, controls, care and supervision in the matter of procurring necessary munitions and supplies.

This was the basis of our further inquiries and for the appointment of subcommittees. If this was not the correct procedure to follow, I wonder why the members of the opposition who were sitting in that committee did not object at the time. They all agreed that the procedure was the necessary one so that members would receive correct information. I recall at the first meetings we discussed the munitions and supply act. Many of the members did not know exactly the contents of the act, and before proceeding further it was certainly logical to make themselves acquainted with the different sections and provisions of the act. This lasted for about a month until the Easter recess, and then three subcommittees were appointed and went to work, sitting in camera. This was also decided by the committee of the whole, that the subcommittees would sit in camera unless they themselves decided to sit in the open. Two subcommittees sat in camera and one in the open. At the end of their sittings it was recommended—and this is mentioned in the third report of the committee:

> That the minutes of proceedings and evidence of such meetings of subcommittee No. 2, referred to in your committee's second report as were not held in camera, be printed, 500 copies in English and 200 copies in French and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

These committees two weeks ago presented reports to the whole committee. These three reports were adopted by the committee, and they form part of the report of the whole committee.

When the war expenditures committee was appointed, certain reasons were given for its appointment. These reasons were given also by the hon. leader of the opposition. If hon. members will read carefully his speech and the other speeches by members who spoke on the appointment of the committee, they will find that the arguments in favour of the appointment of such a committee were: first, to assist the government in effecting economies and avoiding waste; second, a similar British committee had had good results in Britain; third, to enable private members to perform a patriotic duty; fourth, that the representatives of the taxpayers could get information as to how the taxpayers' money was being spent; and lastly, to satisfy the people that we are doing all we can to get value for the money we spend.

During all the sittings of the committee and of the subcommittees I believe every member had in mind these purposes when examining the witnesses who came before the committee or subcommittees. I may state as a member of the committee that all went well until the last meetings of the whole committee, but at these last meetings the members of the opposition started to find fault with the procedure that had been followed. I do not blame them. They started saying that this committee could not function because there were too many Grits on it and not enough Tories. The hon. member who represented the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation stated that he was satisfied. The hon. member associated with the Social Credit group was not there at the time. Hon. members who criticize in this fashion seem to forget that we have had special committees of this house in years gone by. In 1932, when there was a special committee on civil service matters, although the Liberal opposition numbered eight-one or eighty-two members, we had only two representatives on that committee, the present Mr. Justice Chevrier and Mr. Vallance. I recall that Liberal members were far from satisfied in having so small a representation, but I suppose that it was according to the system and that we received the treatment which seemed fair to the government of the day. Later on, the price spreads committee was appointed, on which we had only four members. Again we were not satisfied; but, after all, the arrangement flows from the existing system of government.

After having listened to-day to the speeches of some hon. members, I am inclined to be discouraged at the manner in which democracy is treated in our own parliament. Hon. members criticize our way of proceeding with public matters; on the other hand, they are all willing to fight for our present way of life. To my mind it seems contradictory that we should criticize everything the House of Commons does, and yet say to the people, "My goodness, this is all wrong, but just the same we are going to fight to uphold our institutions and our parliamentary procedures." I wonder whether hon. members who speak in this fashion reflect that they are doing, perhaps, more harm outside the house by speeches in this vein than the good they can accomplish by their work on the committee.

The hon member for Waterloo South was quite critical of the proposed $15 a day living allowance for members of this committee. I do not recall the amount of the allowance received by members of Mr. Stevens's price spreads committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Twenty dollars a day.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Twenty dollars a day under a Conservative government.

An hon. MEMBER: It was worth it.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): Nobody criticized the amount at that time. The best argument for maintaining an allowance for hon. members who sit on committees is that there are many who cannot afford to attend unless they receive it. I believe that their constituents and the people of Canada generally expect hon. members to attend the sittings of the committee; they believe that their representatives can do a useful job for the country, and are willing that they receive a living allowance. Some suggestion has been made that hon. members should sit without receiving any allowance. That may be all very well for the millionaires, if any there be, who are members of the committee, but the state does not require that sacrifice from the ordinary man who has to come to Ottawa and maintain himself as well as, perhaps, his family here. All the state asks is that a member shall do the best he can for his country; it does not want him to starve while he is doing his duty. Some hon. members have assured me that they could not afford to remain on the committee unless they received some allowance. I am not interested in the amount, but I believe hon. members should receive something. It is not a question of hon. members being paid to do their duty. They will have made enough sacrifice in spending the summer months here, without being required to pay their expenses.

I do not share the idea of the hon. member who thinks we should reject an allowance. I shall have no hesitation in accepting my living expenses, and I believe my constituents will approve my doing so.

They believe that what I can do here will be worth more than my living expenses. There will be no criticism across the river if I accept an allowance, just as there was no criticism when the Bennett government paid $20 a day to the members of the price spreads committee. Why should we be holier than the holy? It seems to me sometimes that some hon. members speak just for the press and to impress the public and show how good they are. If it were their obligation to come here and spend six months of their time without receiving any living allowance, how many would accept the job? I do not hear a very loud response.

If we are convinced that we can do useful work as members of the committee, that we can save the country money by reforming certain procedures or elements of the system, it will be worth while for the country to defray our living expenses. This committee was set up to try to find ways of saving the people's money if there is waste in war expenditures. I do not suppose that up to the present time any hon. member could make an exact estimate of possible economies, but I am sure nobody will say that the committee cannot find ways and means to save money. I have not yet heard one member of the committee assert that it is of no use. All its members, whether on the government or the opposition benches, believe that there was good reason for its appointment and that it can accomplish something useful. But some hon. members are determined to criticize. Having convinced the government that the committee should exist, they are now trying to find reasons to make it disappear. It is a funny world we live in. In one breath they advocate the committee; in the next breath they assert that everything the committee is doing is wrong. I believe, however, there is one thing upon which we all agree. The moment this motion is passed, it will be found that all our members, like good little boys, will come back here on July 2 and sit on the committee and do their best. They are all good citizens, sincere and ready to work, and most of what we have heard this afternoon was intended merely for the galleries or to put on a show, because the members who have criticized are as interested as we are in the welfare of our country, and they are doing useful work. I wish to state that the hon. member for Danforth, one of the prominent members of the committee, has been very helpful; he has offered a number of useful suggestions. I can say the same with regard to the hon. member for Lake Centre, a hardworking member, and also with regard to the hon. member for Vancouver South, whose only grudge against us is that he would like to have as many Conservatives on the committee as there are Liberals.

Mr. GREEN: It would improve it a great deal.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): But the hon. member knows that that is impossible, and I am sure he is willing to carry on with the committee the way it is.

Mr. GREEN: You people do not know there is a war on.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member is doing a useful work, and he will be here with the other members during the summer; of that I am sure. Every hon. member agrees with what I have said, so that all this discussion has been a waste of time. I think myself I have wasted a lot of the time of the house, and so I will sit down.

Mr. J. K. BLAIR (Wellington North): I am almost alarmed to find myself in accord with the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth).

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member must be right once in a while.

Mr. BLAIR: But I am no less alarmed when I see this committee, mostly an organized crowd of lawyers, wanting to spend the summer here. I have every confidence in the government and in the way things are being handled, and I believe that a lot of the criticism can be cut out; I do not think it is necessary. What is the use of asking a band of lawyers to look after questions of medical services? If you ask me if they have any value, I say they are not worth a postage stamp.

An hon. MEMBER: They may not be worth the mucilage.

Mr. BLAIR: Here the house has appointed a committee, and there is not a doctor or a dentist or a druggist on it. Yet there are many doctors in the house, and they should be represented on a committee dealing with medical matters; I would not care what parties they were taken from. The idea of having a medical committee without a doctor, or even a druggist or a dentist! A band of lawyers are going to deal with medical questions! On that subject I would not give five cents for the opinions of all the lawyers in the house. They do not know an osteopath from a chiropractor. One can talk to them about anything, and what do they know? They are simply quacks when they step out of their profession and express opinions in medicine. I have sat in committees and heard the most absurd statements made, and I have said to myself, "If this sort of thing should happen in a medical committee, heaven help Canada." I hope that these men will be sent home to employ themselves in other ways so as to allow the government to go ahead. They have only a nuisance value.

Mr. J. H. HARRIS (Danforth): Before making any general observations on the motion before the Chair, may I say first of all that after listening to the speeches that have been given to-day, I am wondering whether we realize the serious state in which our civilization finds itself at this moment. I wonder whether a good deal of the comment that has been made, both in the committees and in this chamber, might not profitably be relegated at least to a secondary position so that we might all fully realize, as was said over the air the other night, that the hun is at the gate, and that there is a war on. Let us get down to business and see if we cannot in some way assist Canada, even if it must be through the instrumentality of a partisan government. If that is the only way we can do it, then let us go ahead and do it that way. I say that, much as it annoys me to see evidences of partisanship displayed at this critical time.

In approaching the consideration of this third report and the motion for concurrence therein, I wish to place on record the reasons why as a member of the committee I find it necessary to vote against the report. I would refer to what the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Fournier) said just now. Not until within the last two or three weeks was there any dissension—I believe that was the word he used—or any conflict of opinion. Look at the record. At the very first meeting that was held, the result of the proceedings of the committee was adopted on division, and the reason for the division I will recite in a moment or two. Before doing so, however, and in order to make the record complete, I will read from the report to show what is asked for. I quote:

1. That the committee continue its inquiry notwithstanding such adjournment.

2. That the committee be empowered to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the house and to adjourn from place to place; to sit in camera or otherwise as it may from time to time determine; to determine the manner and extent to which the evidence and proceedings should be printed or typed and to employ such secretarial, clerical and other assistance as it may deem necessary.

3. That six members of the committee constitute a quorum during the said adjournment and that standing order 65 (3) be suspended in relation thereto.

4. That any subcommittee appointed by the committee have power to sit notwithstanding any adjournment of the house and to adjourn from place to place.

5. That the minutes of proceedings and evidence of such meetings of subcommittee No. 2, referred to in your committee's second report as were not held in camera, be printed, 500 copies in English and 200 copies in French and that standing order 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Subcommittee No. 2, I may say in passing, was the one on which I had the honour to serve.

As I said a moment ago, at the very first meeting of the committee there was not unanimity of opinion as to the manner in which the committee should conduct itself; and after we had resolved among ourselves in this chamber that, as the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) has said, everything political should be left outside the committee room, we saw evidence at once that our friends who occupy the treasury benches were using the steam-roller, as an hon. member has said, to have their will imposed upon the committee.

I recall asking that the first report be one of the kind which is common in this house, namely, that the evidence be printed. The hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) insisted on a definition of policy, as to whether or not we should sit in open session. He was the first one to raise that question. I had the honour to move a motion in that committee—as a member of the committee and not as a member of any political party—that there be open sessions, but the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson), did not put my motion. He endeavoured to discharge the committee that day without the question of open sessions being considered. He rose from his chair and adjourned the committee until the next day, or tried to adjourn the committee until the next day, without giving consideration to the item which has the first place on every report that I have ever seen presented to this house, namely, that the evidence be printed, 500 copies in English and 200 in French. Then, when it was called to his attention, the secretary of the committee put a note on the record. They retired from the committee at one o'clock that day and returned the next day; and even though my motion was not put, the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Cleaver) rose in his place, heading off the member for Danforth, and put the motion himself, when he saw the spot they were in, that the evidence must be printed. The motion was put and carried, and the report came down to the house, but that section of the report took its place fifth on the list instead of first, where it ordinarily belongs.

That responsibility is entirely that of the chairman of the committee in introducing that partisan feeling at the very start. But we were all, or most of us at any rate, imbued with the idea that we might be able to do something on behalf of the war effort, and we tried our level best throughout the sittings to ignore all such indications of partisanship.

My second reason for voting against this general report is that we have not had the aggressive leadership within the committee which the people expect from it; that we have not applied ourselves with diligence to the work which was entrusted to us; that we have not carried out the mandate of the Prime Minister, namely, that the private member was to have an opportunity to do something effective. In the United Kingdom a similar committee was set up in December, 1939. The idea was advanced in this house in December, 1940, one year later, and we did not get down to any particular work until March 12. That much time was lost. We had altogether nineteen sessions, and the three committees had thirty-four, an average of a little over eleven each. And we thought we had work to do.

On April 8 we adjourned for the Easter recess. Nothing was done from April 8 to April 30, and very little until May 5. Everything seemed to be operating in such a way as to discourage us from going ahead with the work; yet my hon. friend the chairman of the general committee in his opening speech, when the bid was made for the chairmanship of the committee, suggested that we should be realists on the committee. "Let us all be realists on this committee," he said. But I have seen no evidence of any desire on his part to be realistic in the committee. To-day he said that our principles were confused but that now they were being clarified. I would say that it is confusion worse confounded after the speeches which have been made to-day. Why do I say that? Because the chairman has surrounded us with all sorts of inhibitions with regard to the purposes we had in mind.

The Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), when asked a question earlier in the session, replied that this committee would be sitting shortly and could consider the point raised. To-day the minister rose in his place during the heat of argument and said to the hon. member for Lake Centre, "Make your charge." The chairman of the committee emphasized time and again that this was not a public accounts committee; yet to-day the Minister of Munitions and Supply says, "Make your charges." Then the hon. member for Selkirk went on to say that this was not a fact-finding committee. Someone asked, "What is it?", and I begin to wonder what kind of committee it is. We seem to be making the rules as we go along; we do not seem to have any plan or policy with regard to the conduct of the affairs of the committee.

When the committee does sit, what do we find? I do not mind helping in some way on a general committee of this kind; but the hon. member who has just resumed his seat said that we were privileged to have a great deal of legal talent on the committee. I would not say that this was political legal talent, put there for the purpose of seeing that nothing happened to the administration; but after we convened, how often did the chairman of the committee ask the members of the opposition, "What do you want to do now?" or "What do you say to that?" or "Will this meet the situation?" There was not a constructive suggestion from any of the Liberal members of the committee; the discussion centred round what those of the opposition wished to say. What did they want to investigate? We were not applying ourselves as a body of eighteen men who had left their politics on the doormat; we were placed in the position of asking questions at the behest of the chairman. Then, when the question was asked, we had to sit and listen to a lecture by the chairman. The hon. gentleman said that one of the advantages of having closed sessions would be that hon. members would not make speeches, but I say to him that in all my experience with many committees and boards of one kind and another I have never seen a chairman who had so much to say, who gave so many lectures to the members of the committee, as he did during the course of the proceedings of this committee.

Mr. FOURNIER (Hull): The hon. member had a lot to say, too.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Had I not had a great deal to say, Mr. Speaker, there would not have been very much work accomplished, because the other members of the committee who were supposed to be working in the interests of Canada sat there dumb and had nothing to offer unless it was to talk down some constructive idea that had been advanced by one of the opposition members of the committee.

I have referred to the question of sitting in camera. In connection with this committee I am probably in a class by myself, since I am the only member of that committee who has not sat in camera at any time. I have been sitting in open session throughout, and if I am privileged to continue to serve on this committee I intend to continue to sit in open session. Why? The people of this country are kept informed by a censored press, which is very careful not to hurt Canada's war effort. I believe the work of a committee sitting openly will have a far better effect on Canada's war effort, from many points of view, than will the work of a committee sitting in camera, as to which the people of Canada can have no knowledge

We must keep the morale of our people at a high level, and the only way that can be done is by keeping them informed and taking them 100 per cent into our confidence. There is no hon. member who would make a single utterance that would give any comfort to the enemy. If there should be such a member, he does not belong here; he should be ostracized and compelled to find some other sanctuary.

Let Canada know the facts. Let the private serving in the ranks know that we are helping. Let the contractor who wants to obtain a government contract know that we are not only helping him but also watching him, in order to see that the contract is fair and right. Let the officers in our camps, who are looking after the men, know that we are anxious to help them, but that any extravagance on their part is going to be checked. Let them know how that is going to be done; let them be given a little guidance. Let the man working in a munitions plant know that we are helping in every way possible and that his boss is not making extravagant profits. Then the man will go to work in the morning with a little better feeling than will be the situation if he hears over the radio or sees in the press that a committee is sitting in secret to examine these matters. If the working man learns that we headed into many mare's-nests, to use the words of the hon. member for Halton, and stopped there without learning what else was in the nests or what was going to come out of them, does that inspire confidence in the government? Yet the hon. member sits in secret session at the behest of the chairman of the general committee.

This afternoon the hon. member for Halton let the cat a little way out of the bag in one or two respects, rather to our surprise. Then the minister who was leading the house at the time, the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Mackenzie) rose and slapped the hon. member gently on the wrist, telling him, "You must not do that; it is not quite right." The minister also appealed to the Speaker for support, and he was reinforced by the chairman of the committee, who delivered a little lecture on ethics and gave the hon. member for Halton a verbal spanking. But after the last slap had been delivered, the hon. member rose in his place and in a split second gave his position mature consideration and intimated that he would say nothing more about it; but the mature consideration came after he had received his little spanking from his senior, the chairman of the committee, and the minister then in charge of the house.

The hon. member for Halton rather scolded the hon. member for Vancouver South for not having attended all the meetings of the committee. No man in this house has done more for the returned men of this country than has the hon. member for Vancouver South. I complained previously because this committee sat while the pensions committee was sitting. The hon. member for Vancouver South divided his time between the two committees as best he could, and was absent from the war expenditures committee only when something of importance was being considered by the pensions committee.

Some of the rest of us found ourselves in an awkward position. Personally, I was supposed to appear on three committees, as well as in the House of Commons. That was four places I was supposed to be in at the same time. I had sat on the committee on railways and shipping since its inception; but this session, because a more important committee was sitting, I found myself of necessity absenting myself from the railway committee. I did not miss one meeting of the war expenditures committee, but at the same time I had to carry along my other work. Then the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Moore) rose in his place, and asked permission to have the committee on banking and commerce sit while the house was sitting. Then, in addition, the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines was sitting while the war expenditures committee was sitting. We were supposed to be in five places at one time. It is rather bad form for the hon. member for Halton to criticize the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) for missing the odd committee.

Then, after the demonstration to-day by the hon. member for Halton, it runs through my mind to ask what confidence the witnesses who are called in future to attend camera sittings will have, if they realize that the matters discussed in those sittings are to be discussed openly in the House of Commons. The hon. member for Halton has said either too much or too little. He has crippled our activity so far in carrying on a discussion of that subject, and not giving the whole thing. We wonder what really happened in the secret committee, and whether or not we shall find out. I do not know whether we shall ever find out exactly what happened.

Inasmuch, however, as I had the honour to serve on subcommittee No. 2, and inasmuch as that subcommittee was favoured with a chairman who took a fairly broad view of things and who kept the sessions wide open, perhaps I might confine my remarks to what occurred in that particular subcommittee. The sessions were open, and I congratulate the chairman of that subcommittee, the hon.

member for Swift Current (Mr. Graham) for keeping them open. I say to him and to the house that if his committee is reconvened it should be kept wide open.

Incidentally, we were all prematurely fired, as it were, or dismissed. But if we get together, and re-form ourselves, and if the hon. member is again honoured with the chairmanship of the committee, then let him keep the same broad, open view he has had with regard to the conduct of the affairs of that committee, and he may make some progress. Further, I say to him, and this in a critical tone, that when the chairman of the subcommittee drafts his report, and when he takes it to the chairman of the general committee, and they sit down to discuss the matter, he ought not to let the chairman of the general committee mutilate or destroy the original report from the subcommittee. I sat on a committee which passed a report of thirteen pages, and when we came back next day we found that the draft was mutilated. It was almost, in fact, destroyed. Only a few lines which the house now has before it remain of our report. Some of the vitals of that report were entirely removed from the animal, and he could not function. He was ruined, and much spoiled as a scarecrow—he had lost his scarecrow value.

The hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia (Mr. Mayhew) made the suggestion that it is impossible to cover the wide range the committee would have to cover. But the committee might be of some use on account of its scarecrow value. It might keep the crows out of the corn patch—the crows being those who would like to feed on the moneys available for war expenditures, moneys they are not putting up out of their own pockets. They would feed, even as the crow in the corn patch. If a scarecrow for each committee is going to be of any use, then I say to the general chairman, take that scarecrow out of the barn, put him up in the centre of the field, and keep the crows out of the corn patch. If any of the crows do get into the corn patch, I say that this house ought to realize the fact, as I said in my opening remarks, that these are serious times, and that what is now taking place is a very grim business. We ought to put that crow up against the wall, and shoot him. That is the way I feel about this procedure, and that is what I would do with those who would get into the corn patch to profit on war expenditures.

Therefore I criticize the hon. member for Swift Current most vigorously for permitting the mutilation of his report. And I am not alone. I call to witness the hon. member for Wellington South (Mr. Gladstone). He picked up apples at Lansdowne park and looked at them. He put some in his pockets, and brought them up for the examination of experts in the house who knew something about apples. I have in mind the hon. member for Durham (Mr. Rickard) who is not at present in his seat, the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for Northumberland, Ontario (Mr. Fraser). Any of those hon. members, or any hon. members who are not apple experts, but who know the difference between a domestic No. 1, No. 2, No. 3 and a cull, and who know the difference between fancy grade and domestic grade, must agree that some crow sold apples which were inferior to specifications, and had them delivered to Lansdowne park.

Why was the report mutilated? Why was that apple clause struck out? Some answer should be given. Just to keep the record straight I will read the specifications regarding raw apples. There are two general grades —and, in passing, why does the specification call for fancy apples in western Canada and domestic apples in eastern Canada? I believe the boys in the camps would be satisfied with good domestic apples, but why is there a distinction? I shall not take the time to read the specifications in detail, but the requirements for domestic apples state that the apples shall be Canadian grown, and at the time of delivery shall meet the requirements of domestic grade. The specification in the west, for fancy grade, is that the apples shall be Canadian grown, and at the time of delivery shall meet the requirements of fancy grade. I ask hon. members to rise in their places and say that the apples which they saw in these camps, and which we saw at Petawawa were either domestic or fancy grade —or were they just culls?

The hon. member for Waterloo South mentioned that we were talking so much about what kind of beef the troops are getting. I think we should know something about that matter, and I believe it would not do any harm to place on record some information as to what occurred. I get my information from a return which was asked for in the house by the hon. member for Huron North (Mr. Cardiff) and the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Tustin). They asked definite questions as to whether cow beef was being supplied in place of butcher steers. I point out these facts designedly to show that there seems to be a tendency on the part of the administration not to cover the whole field of an inquiry or to give a full answer to a question when it is asked in the house.

This return comes from the Department of the Secretary of State, and is signed by the Secretary of State (Mr. Casgrain). The return is dated Monday, March 31, 1941, and the questions are as follows:

1. Was cow meat supplied in place of steer meat to military district No. 11 during 1940?
2. If so, who was the contractor?
3. For how many weeks was this meat delivered to military camps in British Columbia?
4. Was quality of meat supplied up to department specifications?

The answer shows that on the afternoon of October 12, 1940—and I ask hon. members to note the date, because October 12, 1940, was a Saturday,—a contractor delivered a consignment of beef. The contract was to deliver such and so, according to specifications. The result was that a signed telegram was sent in these words:

Ration board rejected part shipment beef account wastage. Medical officer supports decision. Shipments cow beef this camp must stop. Matter being referred to headquarters.

At the same time another answer came down to a question which had been asked by an hon. member. He asked if the department had made a claim, and the answer was that they had made a claim and that $429 had been paid back in January, 1941. What else was paid back? Was there any voluntary contribution made to settle the claim? Is that the complete answer? If we could get a little more frankness, the answers might be worth while. Let me move to the next phase of this same question. What is cow beef? What are the specifications? Here are the specifications which were in effect prior to March 1, 1941, the old specifications:

Beef, fresh. The beef shall be butcher steer or heifers, both to be of good quality, properly fed, with suitable distribution of fat, and to be well slaughtered at least six days before the time of issue. The beef to consist of equal proportions of fore and hind quarters, the neck, head and offal to be excluded, and none of the suet to be withdrawn, the quarters to be standard dressing. The quarter of beef to weigh not less than 115 pounds nor over 185 pounds, or in cases where the demand is less than the weight of a quarter, it shall be supplied in one piece containing a fair proportion of best to other part. All beef must bear the official government inspection mark.

1. Beef shall be from steers or young female cattle. Beef from bulls, stags, and mature cows and thin, underfinished or excessively fat carcasses, shall not be included.

What happened in the meantime; what happened in between the two sets of specifications, the old one demanding that it be heifers, and the new one demanding that it be young, female cows? I have a constructive suggestion to make; otherwise I would not raise this question. In between comes the definition of what is required. I am going to put this on the record because I think it is a serious matter. Here is the letter:

H.Q. 1772-39-938 (DST)
Department of National Defence
—Army—
Ottawa, Ontario,
7th February, 1941.

D.S.T. Letter No. 3—1941
The D.S. & T.O.,
All military districts.

Re: Specification for beef.

1. As some misunderstanding appears to exist as to the kind of beef that is acceptable under specification No. 7-M-4, dated 31st December, 1940, and in order to clarify the situation, it is desired that all R.C.A.S.C. officers i/c supplies be informed that maiden heifer or heifer beef is acceptable.

2. The interpretation of heifer beef is a female animal which has calved once or twice but not more than twice, under these conditions the udder of such animals would be generally firm showing only a small percentage of sponginess. The acceptance of such beef will, of course, depend upon the carcass meeting all other clauses of the specification referred to in para. 1 above.

H. O. Lawson,
Colonel,
D. of S. and T.

It is absurd to ask officers in charge to tell whether or not the beef is cow beef or heifer beef. They cannot tell if it is a maiden heifer or whether she has had one calf or two calves, and they have no chance in the world to examine the udder. When the udder is taken off the carcase, it is shipped down to the mink or fox farms to be fed.

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): My constructive suggestion is that in the new specifications there should be a straight separation between the different kinds of beef.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member should read all the specifications instead of only half.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Here is the rest of it:

Beef shall be from relatively young animals as indicated by a range from red to greyish colour in the spinal process and the ends of the vertebrae must show the soft pearl-like cartilages or buttons. The aitch bone will be red in colour and porous, having a pronounced knob at the lower end, and showing the presence of white cartilage. Beef shall be well fleshed with an exterior covering of fat over the loins and ribs which may or may not extend over the full surface of the chucks and rounds.

Heads shall be removed at the atlas or first cervical joint. Feet shall be removed by dissecting with a knife at the knee joint; front feet at the top of the radius; hind feet at the top of the tarsus. All protruding sinews shall be removed. Carcases shall be split down the centre of the vertebrae and the spinal cord entirely removed. All bruises, blood clots and inflamed portions of the surfaces of the carcases shall be trimmed so that only the merest trace of the damage remains. Tails shall be removed at the second cocygeal or tail-bone joint. None of the suet shall be withdrawn.

Carcases shall be hung in cooler for six days prior to delivery. The beef shall not be beef that has at any time been frozen.

Quarters shall not weigh less than 125 pounds or more than 185 pounds, and shall be supplied in equal proportions of fores and hinds.

All beef shall bear the Canadian government inspection legend and shall be slaughtered in conformity with standard practices and according to methods and conditions approved by the health of animals division of the Department of Agriculture, Dominion of Canada, and the tenderer must state the establishment or establishments in which the beef he proposes to supply will be slaughtered.

Mr. RALSTON: Does my hon. friend say that from that specification one could not tell the age of the beef?

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): The minister can reply when I have finished. I know a good deal more about butcher steers and heifers than perhaps the minister. I make this constructive suggestion. In future military beef contracts there should be a new inspection service whereby the government grader marks the beef in each plant with the letters "D.N.D.". I suggest that separate prices be requested for steers and heifers, and that they be invoiced in that way. This would be the fairest way to deal with the matter. The military people want beef that is not wasteful. In heavy, well-finished cattle, they claim there is too much kidney fat. There should be a better way of distributing these contracts, which in the end would benefit the farmer. If the buying committee could allot the contracts month by month, in accordance with the contractor's facilities to supply same, and on an agreed basis of quota, it would make for better conditions in the industry and assure a more uniform supply of beef to the military camps.

Under the present plan, if one packer secures a large share of the beef business at below market value, he is in a position to reduce the price to the farmer on this type of beef, or he may skimp on the quality he delivers to the camp in order to avoid a loss. The government do not want to buy beef on a basis that will mean a reduced price to the farmer. It should be as important to the government to take steps to see that a fair price is paid to the farmer for cattle supplied on military contracts, as it is to see that a fair price is paid for hogs and wheat. Why did the hon. member who is chairman of subcommittee No. 2 allow his report to be mutilated and changed? Instead of saying that the beef supplied is stamped with "D.N.D.", why could he not be frank in his report and say that that which had been supplied previously, at least up until the last few weeks, had not been stamped "D.N.D."? The chairman of the main committee has said that individual members could not be allowed to take any credit to themselves for any particular feature of the work. In reply to that I would say that this committee ought to justify its existence by doing something of real value.

I shall discuss only one or two points in report No. 3. It might be all right to load up the inside service with civilians; there might be some economy there, but when it comes to the outside services and the camps, I am of opinion that all the men should be in uniform. At the present time there are too many civilians going into and coming out of the camps. Whether they are there for the good of the war effort or for their own good, I am not in position to judge. I would hesitate to allow a greater number of civilian personnel into the camps.

Subcommittee No. 3 made a few specific recommendations. They suggested that there should be a saving on stationery, printing, advertising, telegrams, telephones, transportation, heat, gas, oil and so forth. They might in the end get dollar for dollar value. The report in that respect alone has some scarecrow value. That little sentence alone will help. How much more helpful it would be if these meetings were wide open and the world knew what we were doing!

Another matter which concerns me greatly, and which I address myself to all alone, is the suggestion that the members of the committee receive pay while they are sitting during adjournment or recess, if we are going to sit. Speaking for myself, I say no. We are paid from session to session. That should be enough. I said in the committee, and I say to this house now, that for the duration of this war I shall be happy to serve anywhere. I shall be happy to serve at any war work at any time and do all I can to help out in our war effort in any capacity for the duration of the war. I am glad that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) is in his place to-night. I do not think I shall be breaking any confidence between him and myself if I remind him that at his telephonic request I arrived in Ottawa on October 15, 1940, and discussed with him some problems that he had on his mind in trying to check waste on behalf of Canada. At that time I had the honour and privilege of confirming our conversation, and the minister will recall that I wrote him a letter from Toronto which reads in part as follows:

October 22, 1940.

Hon. J. L. Ilsley,
Minister of Finance,
Ottawa, Ont.

Dear Sir:—

This will serve to confirm our telephonic conversation of Thursday, October 10th, the exchange of wires same date, and the interview given the writer in Ottawa, Tuesday, October 15th.

At this conference I intimated to you, in a like manner as I previously intimated to the Hon. Mr. Howe and the Hon. Mr. Ralston, that I am anxious to do everything possible to assist Canada in our war effort. I therefore place at the disposal of the government of Canada—

(a) My services as an individual to serve anywhere in any capacity.

I do not need to recite the other paragraphs because they cover just the matter of my giving the government material things over which I have some control. When I say to this house that I will not accept any remuneration whatsoever, I do not wish to tie other members of the house. Let their conscience be their guide so far as they are concerned. What matters if we do not win this war? That is the position we are in. In like manner I have also a copy here of a memorandum from one of the district recruiting officers, Toronto, as follows:

To District Recruiting Officer,
61 Albert street,
Toronto, Ontario.

Please interview the below-mentioned prospective soldier for enlistment in a branch of the Canadian Army (active).

Then particulars follow concerning the member for Danforth and his qualifications to be of some assistance in the ordnance department, signed by the recruiting officer for the district and myself.

While I am in this position, I will not under any circumstances accept any remuneration for any war work outside the ordinary sessional indemnity, and I intend to adhere to that course. Can we not realize, as the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Selkirk, said to-day, that these are grim days and this is a grim business we are in, and that we must have unity, we must have tolerance, we must not have speeches like that we had a minute or so ago from the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Fournier), ridiculing those of us who wish to serve. That gets us nowhere. We must have self-sacrifice. We must have a clear conception of the tasks that lie before us and start in to execute those tasks, let the chips fall where they will. Shoot the crows at sunrise. Make sure, Mr. Speaker, that every gun, every bit of ammunition, every tank, every ship, every plane, every man, and every dollar are placed at the disposal of democracy and used where democracy is fighting for its life. The front line of democracy to-day is in Britain, and let us help her in every possible way we can to complete the job.

The night before last I was rather intrigued by the closing lines of a radio address by Mr. Farrell in the "Between Ourselves" series, over the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's national network, and I shall delay the house long enough to read them because the sentiments expressed in these verses have moved me to make some of the remarks I have made to-night. Let us all say in the words of this verse:

For all we have and are,
For all our children's fate,
Stand up and take the war,
The Hun is at the gate!

Our world has passed away
In wantonness o'erthrown,
There is nothing left to-day
But steel and fire and stone!

Though all we knew depart,
The old Commandments stand:—
'In courage keep your heart,
In strength lift up your hand.'

Once more we hear the word
That sickened earth of old:—
'No law except the Sword
Unsheathed and uncontrolled.'

No easy hope or lies
Shall bring us to our goal—

I should like to repeat that top line, "No easy hope or lies shall bring us to our goal." Those easy hopers and wishful thinkers to my mind are worse than the fifth-columnists. No easy hope, for we are in a grim business. We have work to do:

No easy hope or lies
Shall bring us to our goal,
But iron sacrifice
Of body, will, and soul.

There is but one task for all—
One life for each to give.
What stands if Freedom fall?
Who dies if England lives?

Mr. V. J. POTTIER (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): I am not going to attempt to follow the eloquence of the last speaker (Mr. Harris, Danforth), but I should like to touch on one or two of the points discussed this afternoon by the members of the opposition on the committee.

First of all, it was suggested that in setting up the committee we should have followed what was done in England where there was, it was said, equality of representation on the committee; or, in other words, as many members of the opposition group on the committee as members of the government. I have looked at the composition of the British committee and of our own committee, and I find that in the committee of this house, where we have 184 Liberals, there are eighteen Liberals on the committee; there are thirty-nine Conservatives in the house, and four Conservatives on the committee; there are ten of the New Democracy group in the house, and one member on the committee; there are eight members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in the house, and they also have one member on the committee. If we followed the suggestion that was made by members of the opposition we would have as many Conservatives as Liberals on the committee except for the chairman.

Mr. GREEN: If I might interrupt the hon. member, my suggestion on that point was that the total opposition strength in the committee should be the same as the government strength, with the exception of the chairman and vice-chairman. My suggestion was not that there should be as many Conservatives as Liberals.

Mr. POTTIER: But other members of the opposition did not suggest that.

Let me now go briefly over the composition of the British committee. In the British house there are 387 Conservatives, and eighteen Conservatives on the committee; fifty-four Liberals, including the National Liberals, in the house, and there are three on the committee; there are 162 Labour members in the house, and eleven on the committee, and there is one member, Mr. Edwards, whose party I could not ascertain. Therefore we here in Canada have approximately followed the plan that was followed in England of representation by parties. If we look at the numerical strength of their parties, it will be seen that we have followed just about the same plan in the composition of our committee.

If we follow the reasoning of the opposition, we are required to assume that because a man happens to be a Liberal member of this house, there is something about him which disqualifies him from serving on a committee. This, it seems, is because the people of Canada happened to elect a large number of Liberals. After all, it was not the Conservatives who elected the Liberals; they were placed here by the people of Canada, and it is hard to understand why, because they happen to be members of a majority group, they cannot fulfil their duties or exert the privilege they have of serving the country on this committee. Such an argument altogether offends one's sense of fairness; for, after all, what can be fairer than to give hon. members the right to serve in the proportion that the people have elected them to this house?

A word about the subcommittees. It has been suggested that in the old country their composition is so balanced that there cannot be any partisanship or any flavour of politics about the membership. Let us see how they are composed. There are eight subcommittees, and with your kind permission, Mr. Chairman, I shall briefly indicate their composition:

Coordinating subcommittee: five Conservatives, one Labour, one Liberal, one National Liberal.

Army services: five Conservatives, one Labour.

Naval service: three Conservatives, one National Labour, one Liberal, one, I think, a Socialist.

Air services: three Conservatives, two Labour.

Supply services: four Conservatives, one National Labour, one Labour.

Home defence: three Conservatives, two Labour, one Liberal.

Trade, agriculture and economic warfare: three Conservatives, one Liberal Nationalist; one Labour.

Transport: four Conservatives, two Labour.

I find there no attempt to balance the membership of either the large committee or the subcommittees. Such a matter was never thought of over there. Members of the British parliament are given credit for having enough sense of fairness and justice to give impartial consideration to any and all matters when they are appointed to these committees. I do not take kindly the suggestion that because an hon. member happens to be a member of this group or that, he cannot give of his best in the present struggle and in our attempt to save every dollar and to see that a dollar's worth of service is given where a dollar is spent.

The next suggestion made by the opposition is that the proceedings of our committees should be open. They do not go to the British system to find arguments for that contention. In point of fact we go farther in this direction than they do in England. Opposition members in particular have been arguing that, because these committees operate in secret, there is something about them which should be looked upon with suspicion. Let me read a resolution passed by our main—Canadian—committee. The wording is important:

That the sittings of the subcommittee shall be in camera except as the subcommittee may otherwise from time to time determine.

I hold in my hand the report of the select committee for the sessions 1940-41 of the British parliament. It happens to be their fifteenth report, and at page 7 is this statement:

The subcommittee shall sit in private.

There is no provision whereby the English committee can sit openly from time to time if they so decide. Subcommittees there have not the power to hold an open meeting. It is a strange kind of argument which we heard, for example, from the last speaker, who said that he attended a number of committee meetings and that they were open, while the opposition speaker just before him argued that their party cannot continue to cooperate in this movement for efficiency of expenditures because the committees are meeting in camera. One contradicts the other. The committees and the subcommittees have the power to hold open meetings when they believe that the public welfare or the general good will be enhanced by so doing. There is no such power in the old country.

Let not the people of Canada be deceived by the notion that there is something suspicious about secret meetings of committees, that the members who serve on these committees have ulterior motives, that they have done something which should not have been done. Such conclusions are entirely wrong. We hear from the opposition that we should follow the English lead; the leader of the opposition himself (Mr. Hanson) suggested that these committees should adopt the English plan. Yet, when we follow that plan, and go even a step farther, we are accused of "muffling" practices, of doing things which should not be done, of standing for things which should not be tolerated.

Another criticism which rather disgusted me was the suggestion that steam-rollers were brought in and put into high gear. One might think that this committee was building highways or crushing stone or something of that kind. Reference was made to "political pressure". It is my conviction, recalling the speeches of opposition members to-day, that I have heard more talk of politics and partisanship in this committee from speakers in half an hour to-day than I heard in the month I served on the committee. It is my recollection, and I give it as such, that the only member who indulged in any partisan talk on the committee was the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green), who obtruded it on several occasions. At no time did I hear any Liberal member mention politics. I can say the same for the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and Social Credit representatives—the more credit to them.

Therefore, looking at this picture, I hope the country will not get the impression that there was a "scrap", as one hon. member remarked this afternoon. I have never attended a more friendly committee than the subcommittee upon which I served. We never took a vote; we never disagreed. There were two Conservatives and three Liberals, and we got along beautifully. I believe the same can be truly said of all the subcommittees. Contrary to the impression which has been spread here to-day that there was a lot of confusion and "scrapping", it is my recollection, which I am giving because I do not want the wrong impression to go out, that nothing of the sort took place.

It is unfortunate that the situation which exists now should have arisen. Suppose we go back a few months to the time when the leader of the opposition suggested the setting up of this committee. He gave as his reason the fact that expenditures made by the government had to be watched in the interest of the public. But what do we find now. One member after another of the opposition rises in his place and, for one reason or another, objects to the motion before the house being adopted, thus virtually breaking down the very fabric on which the committee is to carry on. One suggests that it should split up into territorial committees; another says that we should reduce the number; another says that we are not going at it in the right way; another says that it is too partisan; another says that there is not sufficient aggressiveness. Take all these and other representations that have been made, and you cannot come to any other conclusion than that they do not want the committee to carry on as it is. I give that as my frank understanding and impression.

Let us see what has happened. The leader of the opposition said that there were a good many expenditures, that a great deal of money was being spent and that a committee should be appointed. Very well; the government agrees. But what do we find to-day? They want the committee stopped. I say to the Canadian people that that is a good omen of what is happening in the departments if the purpose of the appointment of the committee, as was originally intended, is being made effective; that is to say, if they have to take the stand that expenditures have been fair, that there has been no extravagance or waste, then there is nothing further for the committee to do and their attitude can be understood. If they do not take that attitude, then they must adopt the alternative, which I cannot think they are prepared to adopt—that is, that they do not want to see economy in expenditures made.

I suggest to the opposition that they should close their ranks. Let them consider the suggestion their own leader made. Let them reflect that this is a creation of their own party, which came about just because they suggested it; and instead of one member of the opposition offering one criticism and someone else another criticism, let them close their ranks. Let them be of one mind. There is no place in Canada at the present time in which anyone can serve to greater advantage in the war effort than on this committee, and I hope that the members of the opposition, when they think of what has happened to-day, will see the light to-morrow, will see where their privileges and responsibilities are, and will see fit to continue the committee as it is at the present time.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry?

Mr. POULIOT: On division.

Motion (Mr. Thorson) agreed to on division.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE

EXTENSION TO FARMERS WHO MOVE FROM TOWNSHIP AT END OF CROP SEASON

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture) moved the second reading of Bill No. 95, to amend the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1939.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

On section 1—Computation of sum awarded as assistance.

Mr. GARDINER: Subsection 2 reads:

In an emergency year the minister may, subject as in this act provided, award to each farmer resident at November first of such year. . . .

That would mean that if he came four or five days before, he would be resident on that day. I wish to move an amendment that subsection 2 of section 1 be amended by substituting the words "resident from May first to November first of such year" for the words "resident at November first of such year".

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I move accordingly.

Mr. COLDWELL: Will the minister explain a point which has arisen in two or three cases? I have knowledge of one in particular. Someone was farming and left the farm on October 19. In this case it was a woman, and she was married on that date and apparently was cut off from the bonus because it was held that she did not qualify legally. Under this, what would be the interpretation? Would the farmer have to remain from May 1 to November 1?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes; that would be the interpretation. As the act now stands, the farmer is required to be there on May 1 to qualify. This means that he will have to remain until November 1, all through the summer season, in order to qualify. As the regulations stand now, no date is set, and even if he were not there in January and his payment had not been made he would not be entitled to payment, according to the interpretation given by the Department of Justice recently. This fixes a date.

Mr. COLDWELL: Suppose a man left in the middle of October when his year's work was done. He would not be eligible?

Mr. GARDINER: No. He would not be eligible, but knowing that if he remained until November 1 he would be eligible he would, I should think, remain.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: There is one matter which I think should be brought to the attention of the committee. This section as now amended will amount to a discrimination against any farmer who enlists for service in the present war at any time between May 1 and November 1. An exception should be made in that regard. During the past year several men whom I know completed their seeding operations and stayed on the farm during the summer. They did their threshing and enlisted, and they were denied the right to participate under this act, although they had contributed—as do all farmers—one per cent of the value of their several crops during the year.

Let me mention two examples. I have in my hand a letter dated May 6, 1941, from the prairie farm assistance branch at Regina regarding such a case. It is addressed to myself, and I am advised that a certain person has had his second payment of bonus denied him—"cancelled" is the word used—for the reason that he had discontinued farming, having joined his majesty's forces, and that the farm was not going to be operated in 1941 by any of his dependents.

The other case I have in mind is that of a young man of my constituency who enlisted in July, 1940, and, after service overseas, returned to Canada. He had his farming operations carried on, his harvesting and so forth after he enlisted and departed for overseas, but he has been denied this bonus. The reason given by the department is that since this young man enlisted in June, 1940 —which is an error—and was therefore absent during the greater part of the 1940 crop season, he was ineligible for payment. I do not think any hon. member wishes to discriminate against those who, while engaged in farming, decide to enlist in the service of their country, and I suggest that an amendment to this section and to the next section should be made so as not to apply to those who enlist in the armed forces of the country.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know of several cases similar to those mentioned by the hon. member for Lake Centre, which I was going to bring to the attention of the house, and therefore I am glad to support the suggestion advanced by the hon. member.

Mr. GARDINER: I think it is scarcely proper to suggest that there has been or may be discrimination against those who have enlisted. If we were to adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Lake Centre we would be discriminating in favour of the soldier, although I do not say we should not do so. The interpretation of the Department of Justice as to these provisions of the act, when cases of the kind mentioned were submitted to them, was to the effect that the act was intended to provide assistance to farmers in order to help them during the winter following a poor crop. That was said to be the principle underlying the act,—to make it possible for farmers to live on their farms until another crop had been put in; and I think in all fairness it should be said that this assistance was to be given for that purpose. But the Department of Justice say that since this is the principle of the act, any person who leaves the farm is not entitled to these payments under the act as it now exists, and they could not find any way of discriminating in favour of men who enlisted. We are now proceeding on the assumption that the man who has farmed all year, who has threshed and sold his crop, probably will be on his farm at least until along well into October. After that, he just requires to remain on the farm until November 1 in order to qualify under this section.

I do not wish to do anything by way of legislation that would prevent any man from enlisting even for a month or fifteen days, but it is difficult to make any further provision than is contained in this bill. I do not think it would be any great hardship to those who are seeking to promote enlistments to say to these men, "You had better wait for another two weeks after you have marketed your crop before you enlist." In any event I am told by those administering the act that their work would be made very difficult if we attempted to discriminate at all as between different groups. We do discriminate in behalf of the soldier to this extent. We say that if he leaves any member of his family in charge of the farm, whether it be his brother, his father, his wife, or any immediate member of the family, we pay the bonus. Therefore there are several ways in which anyone anxious to enlist can obtain these payments, and I would rather hesitate to suggest that we should go further than we have gone, although I should like to see anyone enlist whenever he wished to do so. Probably by leaving the land under the direction of some member of the family they will be able to overcome this difficulty. There may be a few cases where people will not have relatives in the vicinity who can take over the direction of their farms. Perhaps those concerned will try to carry on their operations during the summer and enlist in the fall, which will permit them to receive their payments. Under this provision, if a man is on the farm as of November 1, he is entitled not only to the first but to the second payment as well.

Mr. PERLEY: I am glad that the hon. member for Lake Centre has brought up this question, and I was glad to hear the minister's reply. I have one or two of these cases which I was going to mention, but what has been said deals very well with the points I was going to raise. I have the case of one soldier who is having the work done on his farm by hired labour. He has no relatives in the vicinity; I think he went through the last war, and he has had to take back this land from the tenant who had it last year. What would happen in that case?

Mr. GARDINER: If he was back on the farm before May 1 he is entitled to the payment.

Mr. PERLEY: He is in the army now and cannot be back, but he is having the work done by a hired man.

Mr. GARDINER: Is it being done by a relative?

Mr. PERLEY: No; the man doing the work is married and living on the farm, but the owner is supplying all the machinery and paying all expenses. How about that case?

Mr. GARDINER: We probably would have to deal with a case of that kind under the new regulations defining a farmer or a person resident on the land. This man would not be a resident farmer under the present regulations, but it is possible the case could be handled by regulation.

Mr. PERLEY: I have the letter here. It is not worth while reading it, but that is the situation as briefly as I can state it.

Mr. GARDINER: There are so many different types of cases that I am sure they could not all be covered by legislation. The whole administration of the act is along the line of doing everything possible within the terms of the act for men who are enlisting, but unless these men try to bring themselves within the terms of the act, the matter becomes rather difficult.

Mr. FAIR: I am glad that this amendment is being brought in at this time. I have had occasion to discuss certain cases with the minister and the officials of his department. I intended to mention those cases at this time, but I find that unnecessary in view of this amendment. In view, however, of the injustices which have been caused in the past, and in order that they might be corrected, I would suggest that the amendment be made retroactive, and I would ask the minister to give that suggestion his consideration.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 2—Sum to be awarded in a crop failure area.

Mr. GARDINER: The same amendment is being moved to this section.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I move accordingly.

Mr. PERLEY: Is there any increase in the amount payable in a crop failure area? I see the figure $2.50 mentioned here.

Mr. GARDINER: No; there is no change; it is just the same.

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Section 3 agreed to.

On section 4—Blocks ineligible for award.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the minister explain this section?

Mr. COLDWELL: I am very glad to see this amendment, because we all know that a great deal of difficulty was experienced in obtaining the necessary resolutions substituting one piece of land for another. Municipal councils naturally do not like to take something out of the bonus area as well as they like to put something in it. I am glad that the minister has extended the provision so that under some circumstances a quarter of a township may be included, but I had rather hoped that when the amendment was brought down, a quarter of a township might have been the unit instead of depending upon the inclusion of other adjacent land within the area. I believe the closer we can get to the individual basis, the better it will be. During the last several years, as the minister no doubt knows, practically all hon. members from the west have had brought to their attention cases of injustice or misfortune which could not be covered under the act, on account of the provisions of the act itself. When farmers are contributing to a fund which, many of them hope, will ultimately become a crop insurance fund, they are of the opinion with, I suggest, some reason, that when they make a contribution they should receive some benefit, if they are in a situation requiring aid.

Although this is a step in the right direction, I had hoped that the unit would have been made smaller this year, and that we might have got a little nearer to the individual basis. I know it is of no use now to suggest an amendment along those lines to the committee, but while I welcome the change in the act, one which I believe makes it fairer and better, still I hope that after another year's experience we may be able to get down to a unit smaller than the one provided under the present act.

Mr. PERLEY: I am more or less in agreement with this section. The minister knows a good deal about the difficulty there was last year in the area from which I come, and also in certain townships in his constituency. There was difficulty particularly in the townships, the south half of which were in the Qu'Appelle valley. I might say that it affected us particularly on the south side, owing to the good land which happened to be across the valley on the north side, in the minister's constituency. In that section last year they had a very good yield of from twenty to thirty bushels to the acre. That was the common yield immediately north of our district. Then, in the greater part of the valley, on the sandy land, they did not have a crop. As a matter of fact, they were below six or seven bushels to the acre, as the minister knows. I believe it is a fine thing that there is provision whereby these areas may be taken in so that they will be included in the bonus, if the yield is at a certain point. Therefore, with that part of the bill I am in accord.

There is one other matter I would bring to the attention of the minister. I would have been pleased to see an amendment to section 8 in the act, which would have eliminated the limit of 3,000 bushels. There were cases last year in two municipalities in my constituency where men had over 3,000 bushels, but they did not have any more than four or five bushels to the acre. Therefore I say that they were discriminated against. I suggest that if that section of the act were amended, so as to eliminate the provision for 3,000 bushels, it would be an improvement. There are many instances where that section serves to discriminate against producers. It so happened that some of these men had large areas, and had over 3,000 bushels. But it worked just the same where the yield was much less than 3,000 bushels. Has the minister given consideration to amending the act in the manner I have indicated?

Mr. GARDINER: We gave consideration to the points raised by the hon. member, but the provision in the act was inserted just last year. It provides that any person with 3,000 bushels and an average crop in excess of eight bushels is eliminated. Anyone with an average of eight bushels or under is taken in, though he has 3,000 bushels. Therefore there is provision for certain people who have low yield crops aggregating 3,000 bushels. That provision has been in only for one year. It is true that there were some hardships. Most of the complaints with which I had to do were cases which individuals could have corrected the situation had they seen fit to do so at the beginning. That is, these were family divisions which they claimed later on, and in connection with which no notification had been given in the early part of the season. Those cases could be rectified in some instances, but not in all. We thought it better to try out this provision for another year. The change now suggested will rectify most of the difficulty.

Mr. PERLEY: There is one further matter. I was wondering whether this year, in connection with inspection, the minister could work out a system whereby the same inspectors would do the work this year as did it last year. Last year we had a different inspector in our district from the one we had the year before, and he went over the territory in a different manner. I suggest that if a man is working in one territory year after year he would know the situation, and would become familiar with the farmers and their farms. The result would be that he would do his work more quickly and efficiently than a new man could do it.

Mr. GARDINER: I would suggest that if hon. members have any objections, they might make them when we are discussing the estimates. Some of the points raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle might be more properly discussed under the estimates which I intend to call, immediately after this bill is passed. One item in my estimates has to do with prairie farm assistance expenditures. Matters such as inspection, methods of inspection, and everything of that kind might more properly be discussed under the estimates.

Mr. PERLEY: That is satisfactory.

Mr. FAIR: I was disappointed with section 7 in the act, as amended in 1940, on account of the strings attached to it. I do not know of one case where people benefited from the amendment made in 1940. I am also disappointed with the section 7 as suggested in this bill, because it also has strings attached to it. As soon as possible I should like either to have the strings removed, or to have the matter brought down to an individual basis.

I am also in agreement with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle when he suggests the removal of the 3,000 bushel limit. It is not many weeks since I made the same suggestion to the minister. I am firmly convinced that he, too, believes it should be removed. Apparently, however, as in other cases, some of his colleagues do not think as he does. I hope his colleagues may possibly give some greater attention to a fair deal, and have this limitation removed before the summer passes. It has been there for one year, and in my opinion that is one year too long. I should hope to see it removed before another session comes round.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to add my observations to those which have already been made in favour of the amendments. I believe they are all to the good. In the part of the province from which I come we did not come under this act until last year when, owing to frost in that section of the province, certain areas came within the scope of the act I was in hopes that the minister would bring in an amendment whereby in areas where grain was frozen and the price was very low, the number of bushels to the acre would be raised, to permit the farmers to come under the act. Instead of four, eight and twelve, I suggest that in respect of frozen grain, which has only about half the value of No. 1 wheat, this might be raised to eight, twelve and sixteen bushels. Has the minister given consideration to that point?

Mr. GARDINER: I have, but the difficulty with legislation of this kind is, as hon. members are aware, that it is new legislation. I do not know of any other place where similar legislation is in effect. We had no experience to start with; we had to build up something entirely new. Our fear at the beginning was that every condition put into the legislation would increase the cost of administration, and we thought it would be quite easy to get the administrative costs so high that the legislation would be objectionable to government authorities generally. We have been trying to avoid that. To put in a condition to provide payment on other than a crop yield basis, on the basis of wheat grades—if wheat were frozen and reduced to No. 4, a man would require to have more bushels—there would be so much in the way of added inspection costs that in due course that kind of thing would kill the legislation.

That was what was in our minds when we hesitated to do what was suggested by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) and the hon. member for Melfort (Mr. Wright). They suggested that we use the quarter township right through. As you decrease the area taken as the unit, you increase the cost as well as the number of complaints. Most of our complaints are in connection with border-line cases. If you divide your township into four quarters, you have about 50 per cent more boundary line. The boundary lines are drawn down to such small proportions that you will have more farmers with land on both sides of the line. You will then run into trouble all the way round. It will also require extra inspection and extra checking and correspondence. All this would increase the cost of administration to a level where there would be criticism as to the cost.

One of the reasons why I feel that probably we made a mistake in inserting the 3,000 bushel provision last year is the fact that it has increased our inspection and administration costs. They will be almost double this year. If we go on doubling our costs of administration by inserting provisions that look reasonable on their faces, we shall eventually have the cost up so high and the criticism of the legislation will be so great that we shall probably lose it in the end. It is better to try to keep the costs of administration down to a reasonable point.

I went through the experience in 1914 and 1915 of establishing hail insurance legislation in western Canada. Hon. members who were in the west at that time will recall that there was far more criticism of that legislation than there is of this. But to-day one never hears any criticism. As people learn the regulations, as they learn what the legislation provides for, they fit their circumstances accordingly and cease to criticize. We are having the same experience with this legislation.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Could the minister tell us if consideration is being given to the resolutions which have been sent in asking that this scheme be put on an individual basis? Could he tell the committee the amount of money that has been paid under the one per cent, and the amount spent by the government in administering the scheme.

Mr. GARDINER: I have all that information ready to give on the estimates.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Were any payments made last year under section 7?

Mr. GARDINER: I shall have that too.

Mr. MacKENZIE (Neepawa): It seems to me that if we have a measure with no strings attached, we shall have a peculiar state of affairs. This amendment reduces the area, but the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has said that he would like to see this put on an individual basis. If you do that, you certainly will be placing a premium on poor farming.

Section agreed to.

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Vien in the chair.

30. Special. Prairie Farm Assistance Act, $500,000.

Mr. PERLEY: Could the minister explain the increase in this item, and perhaps make a short statement?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I gave the reason a few moments ago when we were considering the bill. On acount of the changes made last year in the legislation, increased inspection has been necessary.

Mr. PERLEY: I think the minister should try to reduce his staff of inspectors. I mentioned this a few minutes ago when we were considering the bill. To change the staff from one district to another does not facilitate the proper carrying on of this work. The municipalities could be used to a greater extent in making these field inspections; the secretaries and clerks could do much of this work. These field men and supervisors have been on the job quite a while, and there could be a considerable saving in this regard.

Mr. GARDINER: Perhaps it would be just as well if I were to place on the record the particulars of the staff of last year. The details are:

	Salaries	Expenses
1 superintendent	$ 4,000	$ 876 08
1 assistant superintendent	2,700	945 83
8 supervisors at $1,800....	14,400	11,088 83
9 assistant supervisors at $1,620	14,580	12,359 23
79 stenographers and clerks at $2.50 a day.....	40,062	.....

It will be noted by these figures that the stenographers and clerks do not work the whole year round. As a matter of fact, we have only thirty permanent stenographers and clerks. During the season, while reports are coming in, we call in an extra number of girls, mostly from round the city of Regina where the office is located, and they work anywhere from two to three weeks up to two to three months in the summer. The largest number at any one time was fifty-three, and the total number of permanent stenographers and clerks is thirty. Permanent in this case means just what it says. They are working the whole year round, while the others are not.

We have 281 inspectors at $5 a day, and the total amount which was paid to them in salaries was $103,920, and $113,245.02 in expenses. The largest number employed at any one time was 250 in October. If we take that number of inspectors at $5 a day, it will be found that the average time they were employed was about seventy-four days, or a little over two months. Therefore when it is said that there are 281 inspectors, it does not mean they are working all the year. The permanent staff consists of one superintendent and one assistant, eight supervisors and nine assistants, thirty stenographers and clerks. The others are all part-time employees who are put on during the rush season in the summer.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I should like to add my support to the submission of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle respecting a reduction in the present staff. I realize that there would be an increase in the administrative staff for the reason given by the minister, but I do not think that explanation is tenable so far as the inspectors are concerned. At a time like the present, when there should be conservation of our resources, the minister ought to make a special effort to reduce these expenses by placing more and more power in the control of the secretaries of the rural municipalities, who have the necessary data before them when the farmer comes to the municipality to secure his permit.

In connection with the inspectors I notice that one inspector, N. W. Berglund, of Melville, received a salary of $645, which means that he worked 109 days, and his expenses were $1,257.87, or an average of $11.50 a day. That seems to be an excessive amount of expenses.

I should like to deal for a moment with the regulations in effect under the provisions of the act. The act makes provision for every farmer contributing one per cent of the amount that he receives. I feel that the regulations should not be so drawn as to limit the purview of the application of the act. I am going to refer to three regulations that were passed which limit the meaning of the word "farmer" as defined in the act. "Farmer" is defined in the act as "a person engaged in farming in the spring wheat area". But in the regulations the connotation of the term has been greatly modified. Section 8 of the regulations provides:

> No person shall be considered to be a farmer under the act unless (1) he is owner or tenant of a farm from May 1 to November 1 in any year. . . .

All of us know that there are written leases as well as verbal leases, but under the administration of this act farmers all over western Canada have been denied their bonus on account of the fact that their leases in writing were dated after May 1, in spite of the fact that they had a verbal lease prior to that date.

Next is subsection 2 of section 8 of the regulations which provides that no one can receive a bonus, even though he is a farmer, unless he lives on the farm and his primary occupation is farming, or he lives not more than twenty miles away from the farm and has no other occupation than farming. I know of instances—I have the particulars with me—of farmers who are engaged in other occupations who have received the bonus, and yet in other cases the regulations have been applied to prevent persons in a similar category from receiving the bonus.

Subsection 5 of section 8 provides that a person residing with a parent or a brother of the full age of twenty years and operating a farm as a separate unit, and the farm consisting of at least a quarter-section of land, shall be denied the bonus. There is no reason at all why a young man under twenty years of age who is farming his land should be denied the bonus, but he is to-day. The regulations as they are presently constituted abrogate the definition of "farmer" as it appears in the statute. Changes should be made in those regulations because they are most unfair and most discriminatory against bona fide farmers who under the act are entitled to the bonus, but under the regulations are not.

I would suggest that the recommendations made by the legislature of Saskatchewan should be brought into effect, and immediately, in order to do away with anomalies and inconsistencies in the administration of the act. The recommendations made by the legislature of Saskatchewan are as follows, and in those recommendations I concur:

> (a) That the bonus be paid on the individual farm unit or, as an alternative, that provision be made whereby a township can be divided into two or more parts for the purpose of paying the bonus awards.

The objections to this regulation have to some extent been met as a result of the amendment introduced to-day. Then paragraph (b):

(b) That subsection (b) of section 8 of the act be deleted.

(c) That sections 3 and 4 in the act be made obligatory instead of permissive.

(d) Repeal of the regulations under which dispossessed farmers are unable to receive bonus payment until they have signed a lease for the following year, such provision to include those who have enlisted in the armed forces and to be made retroactive to cover the 1940 crop.

I have already dealt with that phase of the matter, what I have called the discrimination against those who to-day are enlisting in the service of their country, which places them in a position where, unless they stay on their farms from the 1st of May to the 1st of November, they are denied participation in the fund.

(e) Repeal of regulation prohibiting bonus payment to farmers who were in occupation of their farms previous to May 1, but who were unable to secure written lease until after May 1, this to apply to the 1940 crop.

(f) Granting request of rural municipal council for reinspection to determine eligibility of bonus, this to be made retroactive for the 1940 crop.

(g) That adequate representation be given to the producers on any board or commission appointed for the purpose of administration of this act.

I should like to have a statement from the minister as to whether the resolution passed by the legislature of Saskatchewan has been brought to his attention and what decision has been made by the government with respect to the implementation thereof.

I have referred to the regulations and their unfairness in interfering with the act and its application. That is not my opinion alone; it was the opinion of members of the legislature belonging to the Liberal party in Saskatchewan, who themselves introduced the resolution in the house and asked that these inconsistencies to which I have referred should be removed.

Mr. Danielson, the member for Arm River, said this:

The regulations were unreasonable, and they were . . . drafted by men who had not the least idea of what a western farm is like.

The newspaper report of his speech then is as follows:—

He stated further that the intent and purpose of the parliament of Canada when it passed the act were being thwarted by a bureaucratic and plutocratic civil service. He asserted that his remarks were not to be interpreted as a reflection upon the man in charge for he was doing his level best to carry on a difficult task, made difficult by unreasonable regulations drawn up by men who did not know what they were doing.

Would the minister explain to the committee what the intention of the government is in so for as the alteration of these regulations is concerned, so that the inconsistencies in administration may be done away with?

A great deal of good has been done under this legislation. I realize the difficulties of the minister, starting in a new field, but I think that now, after the experience of two years or more, the time is come when these regulations should be altered.

Mr. GARDINER: Just following the last remarks, I have here the regulations, and each one of these blue tabs represents an amendment. In the last two years we have revised them nine different times, so that I can assure the hon. member that they are being revised from time to time as we have experience with them.

I read the recommendations of the Saskatchewan legislature shortly after they were passed, as they were sent to me. I do not happen to have them on my desk at the moment, and I do not know that I can remember them all. But, as was suggested, the first one refers to the question which was brought up by hon. members when the bill was in the house, namely, whether we should inspect all individual cases. I wish only to say with regard to that what I said when the bill was brought into the house in the first instance, and what our experience since has justified me in saying. I do not think this legislation would stay on the statute books for three years if we attempted to investigate all the individual cases. Those who recommend that have no idea at all of the principles of this act or how it was intended to operate. Their impression is that this measure was introduced for the purpose of giving assistance to wheat growers. The bill was not brought in for that purpose at all. Its object was to help those who were living in the drought areas, no matter what they were producing, so as to assist them through the difficult drought period. In many of those districts farmers should be encouraged to decrease wheat acreage, or to get partly out of wheat growing and partly into something else. In other areas that would not be the proper thing to encourage them to do; they are probably growing wheat to as good advantage as they could produce anything else. But if we were to place the act on an individual basis instead of the basis it is now on, we would have to inspect every individual case, and not only that, but we would have to take an inventory of everything the farmer produced on his farm during the year. To try to operate legislation of this kind on that basis, would simply make it altogether inoperative.

Wheat is used in connection with this legislation only as a measuring stick. We take a township of land, six miles square, and we say that if the yield of wheat in that area is under twelve bushels to the acre, they have had bad weather, and the bad weather is responsible for the low yield. We use wheat to determine the farming conditions in that area, and the man who grows no wheat at all in that area will have just as poor a crop of grass, or coarse grain, or something else, or will have just as difficult a time pasturing his cattle, as the man has who is growing the twelve bushels or less of wheat. We simply go over the area and say, because the average yield of wheat in that area is less than twelve bushels to the acre the farmer requires some assistance, and then we provide the assistance. The intention of this act to begin with was that we would pay assistance to every individual in that area.

My hon. friend over here, who does not farm in the west but in the east, struck the nail right on the head when he said that if you start to deal with individual cases on the basis of wheat acreage and wheat yield, you will put all of the good farmers out from under this act almost any year. The good farmers in those districts, particularly, let us say, in the central part of Saskatchewan, the northern part of Manitoba, and through the central and northern part of Alberta, are carrying on mixed farming, and they grow whatever wheat they do grow only in order to get a more or less sure cash crop, and they grow it on a comparatively small acreage, the best acreage they have—that is, best in preparation for that particular year's production. Such a man may grow twenty bushels to the acre of wheat, or he may grow even thirty bushels on a small acreage, and the remainder of his crop, which is a coarse grain crop put in on spring ploughing and his grass may all be poor because of poor moisture conditions during the latter part of June and July. He is more completely up against it, because he has live stock for which he has no feed, than even the wheat grower alongside him who grew nothing but wheat and got ten bushels to the acre in that particular year.

I say again that wheat is used only as a measuring stick, and to carry out this legislation under individual inspections would be absolutely impossible. The costs of carrying it out in that way would be so great that in three or four years' time this house would not maintain this legislation on the statute books.

The alternative proposal is the one we adopted this evening in the legislation. The legislature said, "Do one thing or the other." We have undertaken to do the other, but we have not gone as far as the legislature suggested. They suggested that we reduce the units to the quarter township. When you go into a solid block of forty municipalities and the inspector drives over that and finds that it is all under twelve bushels, there is no necessity of going down farther than the complete area, although for convenience we divide the area into townships for administration. Sometimes there is an area round the rim, where there are better crop areas, and that is where all the inspection and checking have to be done. When we make that inspection and checking on the border-line, we take in or throw out quarter townships under the new legislation. We not only take in quarters out of the corner of the township, but we provide that a quarter township or more, so long as it is rectangular, shall come in as a separate township if it is under ten bushels to the acre. We have taken the alternative suggested by the legislature, and applied it as far as we can.

The second proposal is that paragraph (b) of section 8 of the act be deleted. That has to do with the 3,000 bushels, and we have decided not to delete it. The next is that sections 3 and 4 of the act be made obligatory instead of permissive. To all intents and purposes they are obligatory. The question that arises there is the same one that was under discussion between the leader of the opposition and myself early in the session in connection with another bill—that is, as to whether "may" means "shall" in certain cases. When this legislation was before the house at an earlier date, the same matter was under discussion. The then leader of the opposition Mr. Bennett, on the first occasion when it was discussed, took the position which I took earlier this session. When I took that position earlier in this session, the leader of the opposition checked it and sent me the book to indicate that Mr. Bennett had been right because, after all, I was quoting Mr. Bennett when I made the statement that in these cases "may" does mean "shall," and that these sections are obligatory. In other words, if all the conditions of the legislation are met in the area, then payment is made, and there is no way by which the minister can get out of making it.

Further, it is recommended that the regulations be repealed under which dispossessed farmers are unable to receive bonus payment. There is nothing in the regulations about it. A dispossessed farmer was refused payment, apparently, if he was put off the farm through foreclosure proceedings before he had received payment. Under the amendments brought in to-night he would lose payment only if he were put off the farm before November 1, and hon. members will agree that it is not very often that farmers are removed from the land in the summer months when they are going on with their farming operations. The courts usually take care of that. The farmer will get by the first of November and receive payment if he is on the land from May 1 to November 1.

The next has reference to repeal of the regulations prohibiting bonus payment to farmers who were not in occupation of their farms prior to May 1. Of course, the difficulty which was discussed a few moments ago before this was read is involved in that suggestion. The provision now is, and has been since the act was first put on the statute books, that a man must be in control of the land by the 1st of May. The first year we allowed that to go even by word of mouth so long as they could establish it. The second year we stated that there must be a written contract. We had run into some difficulties because contracts were not signed until after the 1st of May, but in actual practice we have ruled that if a man can establish that he was living on the place on the 1st of May we make payment. It is true they were denied payment in the first instance, when they made their claims, if the contract read at a date later than May 1, but those who have come back and can prove that they were actually operating the land before the 1st of May, or on the 1st of May, have been allowed payment; and if any others have not been paid and are in the same position, they can prove their right to payment.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Suppose a farmer had a verbal lease whereby he was to have possession from the 1st of May, but his lease in writing was dated the 3rd of May and he did not go into possession until the 3rd of May? Would he be entitled to the bonus?

Mr. GARDINER: He would not; but I suggest that if such a person, when legislation of this kind has been on the statute books for two years, and after all the discussion to which it has been subject, finds himself in such a position, the legislation cannot look after him. It will not take care of individuals who will not come in two or three days earlier in order to get claims which they later intend to make.

Mr. PERLEY: Will the minister come back to the statement—

Mr. GARDINER: The Minister of Finance would like to bring in an item if we can suspend this discussion for a moment.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Eleven o'clock.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1941-42

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1942 was presented by Hon. J. L. Ilsley (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): In tabling these estimates, I should perhaps say a word or two in explanation of the item relating to the proposal to the provinces to vacate the personal income and corporation tax fields for the duration of the war, in order that there may be no misunderstanding about what is intended. It is estimated that if all provinces accept the proposal, the annual payments to them in accordance with the formula which I described in the budget speech will amount to approximately $80,000,000. It was never anticipated that the payments to be made by the dominion in the current fiscal year would be as much as this because of the lag or interval which will occur before existing provincial tax revenues stop coming in. Our original thought was that the dominion's payments to the provinces might begin towards the end of the present calendar year, but after discussing the matter with the representatives of a number of the provinces who have been in Ottawa, we reached the conclusion that a more accurate and uniform procedure would be necessary. Accordingly the intention is to date the arrangements with the provinces from the beginning of their present fiscal years. The dominion will deduct from the amounts which would otherwise be paid to them the taxes which the provinces and their municipalities collect after the beginning of the provinces' present fiscal years which apply to incomes of the year 1940 or prior years, or which are based upon the taxpayers' operations or status in the year 1940 or prior years. Without a provision of this sort the provinces would receive in their 1941-42 fiscal year payments from the dominion equivalent to their previous year's tax collections, and in addition they would collect a substantial amount of taxes which they themselves levied on incomes of 1940 and prior years.

The amount which will be withheld by the dominion under the proposed procedure will be paid over to the provinces in the year following the termination of the agreement and will provide funds for provincial requirements during the interval which will occur before new provincial tax revenues begin to come in.

I am planning to answer the questions put to me at the beginning of last week by the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) when this item in the estimates is being considered in committee, but I thought this brief explanation was desirable at this stage in order to prevent any possible misunderstanding or misconception of what is proposed.

It being three minutes past eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, June 11, 1941.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

NEW MEMBER

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer certificate of the election and return of the following member, viz:

Of Mrs. Cora T. Casselman, for the electoral district of Edmonton East.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ARTICLES BY LAWRENCE JACK, OF SUN LIFE, IN TORONTO "SATURDAY NIGHT"

Mr. CHURCH:

1. Is Mr. Lawrence Jack, referred to on page 3352 of Hansard, Monday, June 2, the same Lawrence Jack who has been writing a series of articles, published in Saturday Night?

2. Have the said articles the sanction of the superintendent of insurance, under the rules, regulations, and statutes regulating life assurance companies?

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. No information beyond the statement on page 34 of the issue of the said publication for April 26 last that the contributor of the articles in question is a statistical expert in the investment department of the company.

2. The consideration of such articles for the purpose of sanction, approval or disapproval thereof is not one of the duties placed upon the superintendent of insurance by the statute.

THORBURN, N.S., RURAL MAIL SERVICE

Mr. BLACK (Cumberland):

1. Have tenders been recently called by the Post Office Department for the carrying of mails on rural route No. 1, Thorburn, Pictou county, Nova Scotia?

2. If so, when, what were the names of those who tendered and the amount of their respective tenders?

3. Has contract been let?

4. If so, to whom, for what amount and of what term is the contract?

5. If not, what are the reasons for delay?

6. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? If not, why?

7. Were tenders previously called for this contract?

8. If so, what are the names of those who tendered and the amount of each tender?

Mr. MULOCK:

1. Yes.

2, 3, 4, 5 and 6. Tenders were due at the Post Office Department, Ottawa, on the 21st March, 1941. The awarding of contract was delayed by investigations into competency of tenderers. While action has been taken to award contract to lowest competent tenderer, it is not considered to be in the public interest to furnish information concerning the tenders submitted until such time as the contract has been executed.

7. Yes—in January 1937.

8. R. A. McDougall, $594.60; Chas. A. MacLean, $800; Collingwood Grant Ross, $840.

The tender of R. A. McDougall was set aside for cause, and contract was awarded to Chas. A. McLean at $725 per annum.

POST OFFICE—COST OF CARRYING NEWSPAPER MAIL

Mr. CHURCH:

At what loss, from the commercial aspect, does the Post Office Department carry second class and other mail of the newspapers of Canada, per annum?

Mr. MULOCK: The estimated loss to the Post Office Department in the carriage of newspapers is $4,595,300 per annum.

The department has no information respecting a possible loss in the carriage of other classes of publishers' mail, as it is not practicable to keep a record of the revenue derived from such mail and the cost of handling same.

THE MINISTRY

CHANGE IN THE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL WAR SERVICES—TRANSFERS AFFECTING BROADCASTING, FILM AND TOURIST ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I intimated some few days ago that before parliament adjourned I would have an announcement to make with respect to one or more changes in, or additions to, the ministry. I wish to state that the Hon. Mr. Gardiner has resigned as Minister of National War Services, in order that he may give his time exclusively to the work of the Department of Agriculture, of which for some years past he has also been the head.

This morning His Excellency the Governor General has approved of the appointment of Mr. Joseph T. Thorson as a member of His Majesty's Privy Council for Canada and as Minister of National War Services. Mr. Thorson will be sworn into office some time this morning. I need not remind the house that not in point of years but in time of service, the hon. member for Selkirk is one of the oldest members of the House of Commons, having been returned to parliament first in 1926, and again at the elections of 1935 and 1940. Hon. members, I believe, are also aware that in the last war Mr. Thorson served with the British expeditionary force overseas. He was in France for some time, and distinguished himself in service in that country.

The Department of National War Services Act, 1940, provides that the minister may, with the consent of the Governor in Council, coordinate the existing public information services of the government, and originate or employ other means in order that the same may be used in the most efficient way for the obtaining of the utmost aid from the people of Canada in the national emergency which has arisen.

An order in council has been passed under the act I have just mentioned, setting forth that it is expedient to provide for more effective coordination of radio broadcasting, film activities, and the promotion of tourist business in Canada, with other public information services of the government. Therefore, with the concurrence of the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon), and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Cardin), provision has been made under this act, and under the War Measures Act, for the transfer of some of these several activities to the Department of National War Services.

The powers, duties and functions conferred under the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1936, with respect to broadcasting, and recently transferred to the Minister of Munitions and Supply, have been now transferred to the Minister of National War Services.

The powers, duties and functions of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with respect to film activities, under the National Film Act, 1939, have been transferred to the Minister of National War Services.

The powers, duties and functions of the Minister of Transport, with respect to the promotion of tourist business in Canada, have been transferred to the Minister of National War Services.

The control and supervision of that branch of the Department of Transport known as the Canadian travel bureau have been transferred to the Department of National War Services.

Reorganization of the work of the Department of National War Services in the directions indicated will be entered upon actively and immediately as soon as parliament has adjourned.

CANADIAN ARMY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING RECRUITING AND PRODUCTION OF EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I preface my question to the ministry by expressing a word of congratulation to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Thorson) on behalf of this group. We wish him every success in the office to which he has been elevated.

My question is this: In view of the general war situation and disturbing stories of prevailing dissatisfaction in the forces and across the country with the progress of our war effort, will the government place before the house, before adjournment, a full and complete statement regarding recruiting, by percentages of provincial quotas already filled; also a complete statement regarding the provision of equipment, particularly as to whether we are maintaining schedules, and what the position is regarding aircraft, tanks, anti-aircraft guns, et cetera? If this information cannot be given publicly, then will the government arrange for a closed session of this house so that a complete understanding of the situation can be obtained by the members before we adjourn?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) is keeping another engagement this morning, but he will be in the house this afternoon at three o'clock. I would prefer to delay a reply until the minister returns, but I will seek to see that an answer is given early this afternoon.

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO FREE RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION AND SYSTEM OF INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) if some decision will be arrived at before the session closes with regard to soldiers' fares and soldiers' insurance as a matter of national policy. These are two most important matters. The other day the Prime Minister said that there would be an opportune time to take them up. Surely we do not need all eternity to get an answer.

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health): The committee which was set up to study pensions and war veterans' allowances is still sitting. I cannot forecast its report, but I believe there will be some reference in it to soldiers' insurance.

Mr. CHURCH: What about soldiers' fares? That is what the minister said last year about insurance.

Hon. ANGUS L. MACDONALD (Minister of National Defence for Naval Services): I think the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston), when he returns to the house this afternoon, or at some time before the house adjourns, will be able to make a statement on soldiers' fares.

PROVISION FOR CIVIL EMPLOYMENT REINSTATEMENT OF DISCHARGED OR DEMOBILIZED SOLDIERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is felt desirable that all persons who have left employment to enlist should, in as far as possible, be relieved of worry about their reinstatement on their return. The government accordingly has approved of the principle of legislation to provide for civil employment reinstatement of those who have enlisted in his majesty's forces during the present war. When the house reconvenes the government will submit this legislation for the approval of parliament. It will provide that employers of those who enlist for service in his majesty's forces shall reinstate the employees in employment at the termination of that service in as far as practicable, under conditions not less favourable to the employee than those which would have been available to him had he not enlisted.

Conditions will necessarily be contained in the bill which will relieve the employer, under certain circumstances, of his obligation to reemploy as, for example, if the employee fails to apply for such reinstatement within a given period after discharge or demobilization, or having been offered reinstatement by the employer the former employee fails to present himself for employment.

The legislation will be generally modelled on legislation existing in Great Britain as to its terms and conditions but will be subject, of course, to the necessary variation in industrial conditions between the two countries.

The draft bill has been supported by the labour coordination committee, the national labour supply council and the committee on employment of the general advisory committee on demobilization and rehabilitation.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): May I ask the Minister of Labour whether the principle of the proposed legislation which, he said, will be given effect to when the house again meets, will also be made effective, so far as that may be possible, between the adjournment of and the time the house resumes? There will be, I believe, great need for it.

Mr. McLARTY: I did not get the significance of the question.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will the principle of the legislation which the minister has outlined apply until parliament again meets? Will the government take some steps to apply it in principle in the meantime, so far as that may be possible?

Mr. McLARTY: The matter is one which as yet has not received the entire consideration of council. But I take it that the act, when applicable, will be applicable to all the forces and not merely to those who join after the act is passed.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will it be retroactive?

Mr. McLARTY: I want to speak with this reservation, that it has not received detailed consideration by council, but I think it would be only fair if it were made retroactive, with no discrimination among the various forces.

WHEAT

REPORTED SHIPMENTS FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA TO THE FAR EAST IN JAPANESE BOTTOMS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word with respect to the export of wheat from Canada to Japan, supplementing what was said in discussion a day or two ago and also to correct any possible misconception.

First of all, may I make it quite clear that as long ago as February 13, 1941, an order in council was passed requiring exports of wheat and wheat flour to be subject to permit. From that time on no permits have been granted for any export of wheat or wheat flour to Japan other than with respect to certain shipments which had been purchased prior to the time at which the order in council prohibiting exports without licence was passed.

It was represented to the government that to prohibit shipments that had been provided for prior to the passing of the order in council was proceeding contrary to international usage. The Japanese government felt that an act of the kind, unless it could be justified on the grounds of grave necessity, would be provocative in character and liable to give rise to serious misunderstanding in that country as to the underlying motive. The Japanese position was made the more clear to our government in view of the fact that no such export permit was required in connection with shipments of wheat or flour from the United States, nor were such export permits required by the government of Australia. Both countries were and are continuing to export wheat to Japan.

On considering the representations of the government of Japan and realizing that Canada by her action might be seriously embarrassing relations between Great Britain and Japan, as the Japanese would not distinguish between an act by this government and what they would interpret as a direction or desire on the part of the United Kingdom, we felt it was obviously right to follow customary international usage, and to allow permits to be issued for the export of the shipments that had been arranged for prior to February 13. The question came up later as to how these shipments were to be made, whether in British bottoms or in Japanese bottoms. It was felt that we should conserve all our shipping for our own purposes. The Japanese were given the right to take these shipments, provided they took them to Japan in their own bottoms.

Before permitting the shipments the government took great care to ascertain where they were going. We acted in the matter, not only upon the advice of our own minister in Tokyo but also on the counsel and advice of the British ambassador. Our actions were not only fully known to the government of the United Kingdom, but they were in accord with the wishes of the government of the United Kingdom. I think that presents the matter in the true light. I have only this to add: On April 29, realizing that there might be a possible misunderstanding as to how these export shipments came to be made, I asked all hon. members from the province of British Columbia, irrespective of party, to meet me in my office in this building. I gave to them full information and imparted it to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) as well—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I beg your pardon; you imparted nothing to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend has not allowed me to complete my sentence. I imparted it to the leader of the opposition through his colleague who sits beside him, whom I asked kindly to see that the leader of the opposition was informed. I spoke subsequently to the leader of the opposition, saying that I had asked his deskmate kindly to pass on the information to him, and he told me that he had it and quite understood it. That is what I meant by saying I had imparted the information to my hon. friend. The only reason I did not ask him to leave the house to come to my office at the time was because he was leading the opposition. The meeting took place while the house was in session, and I felt that if the situation were made perfectly clear to his colleague, there would be no doubt in the world about his being fully informed as to the situation, and I believe he was.

At any rate the entire British Columbia personnel in this house was fully informed on April 29 of the intention or rather of the reasons which had actuated the government in permitting the shipments. Explanations were fully made and I went so far as to read dispatches from the British government and our own government to those who were assembled in order to make the situation perfectly clear. I think these facts should be made known in order that it may be made clear that at the present time the government is in no way reversing the policy which it adopted on February 13 of requiring export permits for shipments of wheat to Japan, but is simply taking in this matter a step which we felt was not only justified as being in accordance with international usage, but one which in the very critical situation that exists at the present time it was in the interests of the United Kingdom and all parts of the British commonwealth for us to take.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): May I ask the Prime Minister how near we are to an end of shipments of wheat to Japan to which he has referred, and will the policy of the government be not to issue such permits in the future?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I cannot say how near we are to an end of having the orders filled which had been placed prior to the date I have mentioned, but with respect to all future shipments they will have to be considered by the government before any permit is granted.

Mr. E. E. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): May I make my position clear in this matter? I had no knowledge of and no intimation from the members of British Columbia of the meeting mentioned. The only knowledge I had of the matter was long distance telephone calls and air mail letters that I received with respect to the deal, and with the knowledge I had of the whole affair I thought I was justified in making my reference to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not criticizing my hon. friend.

Mr. GREEN: I am not quite sure whether I heard the Prime Minister correctly or not, but I thought I heard him say that at this meeting to which the members from British Columbia were invited dispatches were read from the British government in regard to this matter. I was present at that meeting, and I heard no dispatches read from the British government. Certainly some members from British Columbia, myself at least, if the Prime Minister will remember, took the stand that we did not think we should be bound at all by being called in to the meeting and that we were not to be taken as agreeing to the policy of the government, which after having placed an embargo on this wheat and on hemlock logs and on pulp earlier in the year subsequently turned round and changed that policy and let these commodities be exported. The Prime Minister should say in fairness to those who protested at the meeting that such was the situation. I think he will also agree that no dispatches were read from the British government.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend with respect to the matter of dispatches from the British government that it all depends upon the manner in which my words are construed. I think I did read a communication from our own minister, or rather Chargé d'Affaires in Tokyo, in which he stated the view of the British ambassador in Tokyo, and the views of the British ambassador in Tokyo are the views of the British government. They are so expressed and so intended. I am quite sure I placed that communication before the members who were present.

With respect to concurring in the policy of the government, may I say that I made it quite plain to the members whom I asked to meet me that the government had already taken the action of agreeing to allow a permit to be given for these particular orders which had been given prior to the passing of the order in council requiring permits. I expressly stated that I had waited until the government had acted in the matter before explaining to the members present the action of the government, in order that they would not be embarrassed. I said the government would take the whole responsibility in the matter.

[Mr. Perley.]

But what I did desire to do and the purpose of the meeting was to place before the members from the province most immediately affected a full statement of the position so that they would understand it and understand the international implications and considerations of which in the present situation it is all-important to take full account.

Mr. GREEN: I take it that it is agreed that the only dispatch read was a dispatch from Mr. McGreer, the Canadian Chargé d'Affaires in Tokyo.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is the dispatch to which I have reference.

Mr. GREEN: Will the Prime Minister tell us the present position with regard to hemlock logs?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my hon. friend that there have been other communications that I did not read. I gave I think the general interpretation. At any rate I should like to make it perfectly plain at the moment that the action which this government has taken in this matter is an action which the government of the United Kingdom itself was anxious to have taken at this time. My hon. friend has mentioned another commodity. In passing the order in council compelling a permit to be obtained before any commodity could be exported our government went the length of making that order in council generally applicable. In other words our government, realizing the situation particularly on the Pacific coast, has, as respects Canada, gone a length in this matter that no other part of the British empire has gone in its trade relations in Japan. There was a shipment relating to the commodity to which my hon. friend has just referred which came in the same category and which was permitted for the same reason.

Mr. GREEN: Are hemlock logs being permitted to go out now?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I have perhaps said all that it is desirable to say at the moment. May I make this further statement which probably I ought to have made at the outset: that the action of the government, taken in the way it was, and in the complete measure in which it was, was taken in order to prevent the possibility of any unfortunate occurrence arising in British Columbia through any shipment. We wished to avoid all possibility of any provocative incident. It was not taken because the United States was not taking a similar course or because Australia was not taking a similar course or because of any enmity on the part of this country against Japan. It was taken to prevent the possibility of any disturbance arising in British Columbia in connection with shipments of commodities to Japan which disturbance, if one took place, might create a very serious situation in Japan. I made that plain to the Japanese minister here and to the Japanese government, that our action has not been aimed at Japan as an enemy but that we are anxious to avoid any incident arising in Canada which could be construed in Japan as an act of an offensive character towards that nation, thereby placing Canada in the position of taking an attitude towards Japan at this very critical time different from that which is taken by any other part of the British empire and making Canada responsible for consequences of which might come to be regarded as an unfriendly act.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to have it understood that I did not raise this question in the house because of any understanding as a result of the conference held with the British Columbia members. No conditions were imposed on me, and I said that there were none. I had received many communications about this matter but I did not raise it in the house until there was a press release from the Prime Minister's office. Then I asked my question, and only then, after I had been bombarded by many requests from the Pacific coast and western Canada.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I supplement what my hon. friend has just said? He went farther than that. He wrote a letter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. MacKinnon) before he asked the question and said that he would not ask it if it would prove embarrassing. If I had seen the letter in time myself I would have suggested that no question be asked.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My conduct is all right.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO PRODUCTION OF CANADIAN TANKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Munitions and Supply, based on a press dispatch from Montreal, on May 28 last, to the Financial Post, which states:

Work was started last June and the first tank, complete in most major details, rolled off the assembly line May 22. Officials, however, do not anticipate that regular production on assembly line style is to follow immediately.

Will the minister tell the house whether this is an accurate statement and, if so, when regular production on the assembly lines may be expected?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): The production of tanks at the Angus shops is proceeding favourably. We expect a considerable number of tanks to be delivered in the month of June. The intended production is three per day, and we expect that will be reached in due time. This is a most complex business. We have proven now that all the details have been taken care of. Of course, the great task in all complicated mechanisms is to get the first complete mechanism. All I can say is that production there is proceeding well.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

FREE RAILWAY TRANSPORTATION FOR MEMBERS OF THE MILITARY, NAVAL AND AIR FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): A month ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) said he would name an opportune day for consideration of Bill No. 2, to amend the Railway Act with reference to soldiers' fares. I would ask the Prime Minister, would he name a day, or shall I have to move for leave of the house to proceed with the second reading of the bill? I did move for leave, on May 8, and the Prime Minister then asked that it be postponed, and said he would name an opportune day.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I understand that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) will make a statement on that matter before the house adjourns.

SCRAP IRON

REPORTED MOVING OF DOMINION BRIDGE FURNACES AND ROLLING MILLS FROM CALGARY PLANT TO VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Munitions and Supply. On May 22 I asked a question with reference to the Dominion Bridge company's plans to move its furnaces and rolling mills from its Calgary plant to Vancouver. A return was ordered, and after a question asked on June 6, the return was made. That return contains only one letter, which the Dominion Bridge company wrote to the government, and there is no answer. I am informed that there was more correspondence. I wonder whether the minister would clear that point up. Surely the government must at least have answered their letter.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): I was told that that represented the complete file as of the day it was tabled. I shall be glad to check it and see if there is some further information.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am informed that there is. I think there must be some mistake there.

Mr. HOWE: I cannot understand why the full file would not be returned, but I shall be glad to look into the matter.

SUPPLY

STATEMENTS ON MOTION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE FOR COMMITTEE

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): Before Your Honour leaves the chair I wish to make some comment on the agreements tabled on May 29 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in reference to the diversion of waters from the Niagara river at Niagara falls.

Before doing so may I, as the first to speak to-day, extend my compliments to the new Minister for National War Services (Mr. Thorson)? There is one thing about his appointment which makes me glory in British institutions, and that is that he represents a race other than British, because he is descended from those who came from Iceland. I remember being at a great banquet in London during the coronation festivities, a banquet which was attended by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) and other distinguished statesmen from various parts of the empire. One of the principal speakers was Colonel the Honourable N. C. Havenga, a statesman from South Africa. He made what struck me as a very patriotic British speech, and he was of Dutch origin. The Minister of Justice also made a speech; he is of French origin. It is one of the glories of the British empire, Mr. Speaker, that races coming into our empire bring to it their strength, their education, all that they stand for, and assimilate it with that for which we stand. That is what makes the British empire the greatest in the world. That is why the British empire will win in the conflict in which we are now engaged.

With regard to the agreements tabled by the Prime Minister, I intend to be brief, and I am not going to oppose them. But I believe, having given perhaps as much study to this matter as any other hon. member, and having travelled thousands of miles in and around the watershed west and north of the Niagara river, that I might be expected to say something on this subject. I know the problems with which the Prime Minister has been confronted, and I am not rising in an attitude of combativeness or opposition.

The agreement states three things. First, on the United States side of the line 5,000 additional cubic feet of water per second may now be or at present is being diverted from the Niagara river south of the falls. Second, 3,000 additional cubic feet per second may be diverted from the Niagara river on the Canadian side of the falls. Third, works will be erected—I assume as promptly as possible—on the Niagara river south of Niagara falls, somewhat of the character of those so exhaustively planned and detailed in the report of Colonel—later I believe General—Warren, of the United States army, chief engineer of the United States division of great lakes, during his term of office.

In addition to the two diversions to which I have just referred, and which are mentioned in the agreements tabled recently, there was the agreement of March 19 which permitted the province of Ontario, the government having obtained the consent of the United States, to divert from Niagara river an additional 5,000 cubic feet per second on the understanding that the province would at once divert into lake Superior, from the flow of the Kenogami river, 1,200 cubic feet per second, and proceed to erect works, to divert from the Albany watershed a flow of 4,000 cubic feet per second into the great lakes.

It was necessary to have these two agreements to which I have referred because the diversions in question would violate the international treaty of 1909, which distinctly states that on the United States side of the line they shall have the privilege of diverting from Niagara river a maximum of 20,000 cubic feet per second, and on the Canadian side of the line Canada was to have the right to divert 36,000 cubic feet per second These two diversions are referred to in article V of the boundary waters treaty of 1909. It became necessary therefore, as I understand, to pass these two agreements to which I have referred. They are not laws, nor are they treaties; they are merely agreements and are subject, I presume, to abrogation or change at some future time.

The white book which was tabled some time last October refers in article IX to the diversion of 5,000 cubic feet per second by the province of Ontario as a result of their pouring water into lake Superior to that amount, either now or later on. What are the diversions at Niagara falls to-day? I feel constrained to make these remarks so that during the recess any hon. members who are interested enough to study the question will have at least some data before them on which to base their studies, and in 1942, when the recent agreement tabled on May 29 comes up for revision, hon. members if they so desire will be in a position to add something to any debate in connection with the further extension of the May 29 agreement.

The United States has the right to divert 20,000 cubic feet per second, and Canada can divert 36,000 cubic per second. But from the 36,000 cubic feet per second that belongs to Canada, for very good reasons which I will not go into now, having done so on previous occasions, the United States receives the power from 10,000 cubic feet, which really brings their taking up to 30,000 cubic feet; and then, from the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, they receive power produced by a further 3,600 cubic feet per second, bringing the amount now diverted, either on our side of the line or on their own side but for purposes wholly on their own side, up to 33,600 cubic feet per second, which therefore reduces the amount used on our own side for power in Canada to 22,400 cubic feet per second.

The agreement of May 29 permits the United States to divert immediately another 5,000 cubic feet per second out of Niagara river, which brings their taking out of the river on their own side, or from our side, for their purposes, up to 38,600 cubic feet per second. Under the agreement of May 29 we too shall be permitted to take another 3,000 cubic feet per second, which will bring our taking for our own purposes up to 25,400 cubic feet per second, apart from the 5,000 cubic feet referred to in the March 19 agreement, that belongs to us, since we are to divert from our own purely Canadian watershed into the great lakes watershed the equivalent of 5,000 cubic feet per second. Altogether, therefore, at the moment, there is being taken out of Niagara river south of Niagara falls a total of 69,000, plus 3,800 which is still to come from the Albany watershed, or 72,800 cubic feet per second.

On Sunday last I drove over to Niagara Falls to confirm rumours I have been hearing for some time with regard to the effect of this diversion of water on the great scenic beauty of the falls, at least, the former glory of the falls, which made it perhaps the greatest scenic wonder in the world. I drove over to ascertain the effect of the diversion of this 69,000 cubic feet per second, plus another 3,800, or, to be exact, 72,800 cubic feet per second. If hon. members will drive over they will be struck, as I was, that as far as the falls are concerned the effect upon their majestic beauty is a tragedy. The diversion of over one-third of the possible flow, which amounts normally to 210,000 cubic feet per second, though it does fall as low as 190,000 cubic feet per second, has had a marked effect on the beauty of the water flowing over the falls.

However, as I said before, I am not opposed to the present agreement, because it is stipulated in the agreement that this is for emergent war purposes. I have my own knowledge of these things. What I dislike about all these diversions is that they are asked for because of the war, though anyone who knows anything about Niagara falls, the watershed behind it and other watersheds, knows very well that all that power required could have been provided for during the last few years if either this government or the United States government—they would have had to do it jointly—had proceeded with the work south of the falls, which would have permitted a considerable additional diversion without affecting their scenic beauty. Why this government and the United States government have not done that I do not know.

In addition to what is diverted out of the river at Niagara Falls there is another deterrent effect on the flow over the falls, namely, the 3,900 feet diverted at Chicago. Chicago takes 1,500 cubic feet for dilution purposes, according to the order of the United States supreme court, and is permitted to take up to 2,400 cubic feet per second for domestic purposes, making a total of 3,900. That too has an effect on Niagara falls. The water taken at Chicago is diverted wholly out of the watershed into another watershed. However, I am not going to discuss that at the moment.

I now want to give the house some information about the power developed at the falls. These are not the latest figures; they are from the report of 1920 of General Warren. I believe that on our side of the line there has been a change in the amount of flow at Queenston which has altered these figures, but as I have not the authentic figures of to-day I give the ones which were authentic up to the time of this report. They are subject to change in reference to the increase of flow to Queenston resulting from the non-use of any other Canadian plant at the falls. I give the figures because I want to show that the water at the falls is not being used for power to the extent it should be. And someone is to blame for so much water being used to produce so much less power than could be produced were the water properly used.

For example, at the plant of the Canadian Niagara Power Company on our side of the line, all of whose power development goes to the United States side of the line, the diversion according to General Warren is 9,600 cubic feet per second, from which they produce 100,000 horse power. The head is only 173 feet and the horse-power developed per cubic foot per second is 10·4.

At the Ontario Power Company plant a diversion of 11,200 cubic feet per second produces 163,000 horse-power. The head in this case is 215 feet and the horse-power produced is 14·6 per cubic foot.

The Toronto Power Company I believe has been merged with the hydro power, but according to these figures it diverted 12,400 cubic feet, producing only 125,000 horse-power, with a head of 183 feet or 10·1 horse-power per cubic foot.

The Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission at Queenston via Chippawa at that time was using 10,000 cubic feet per second. I believe it is now using 16,000, and the power produced at the time of General Warren's investigation was 294,000 horse-power from a head of 313 feet, or 29·4 horse-power per cubic foot.

The Niagara Falls Power Company, with a diversion of 9,450 cubic feet, produced 100,000 horse-power at a head of 219 feet, or 10·6 horse-power per cubic foot.

The next major power production plant there, the Hydraulic Power Company, using 7,840 cubic feet per second, producing 145,000 horse-power at a head of 219 feet, with the most modern equipment, apparently more modern than used in some of the other plants for it produced 18·5 horse-power per cubic foot.

Someone has been to blame during all these years in not modernizing the power plants at Niagara Falls. It is apparent from the figures I have given that if the maximum height of 313 feet on both sides of the line, at Queenston via Chippawa in Ontario, and I believe it is Fort Schlosser on the United States side, an ancient fort site of long ago, the power produced at Niagara could be almost doubled. Someone should be responsible for the neglect to take advantage of the power resoures at Niagara Falls. These piecemeal agreements for diverting water are robbing us of the great heritage of power and are not the proper methods. Some other plan should be used.

I suggest to the Prime Minister, since he has added a new minister to his cabinet this morning, that perhaps the time has come to have a minister of power to control the development of the water power resources of this great country. I tell the Prime Minister that many of the power resources of this country are in danger of seizure by power barons, and the government should take command of all these vast resources that will last forever. There is nothing like water power for maintaining itself forever. In our great northern territory where I am going this summer, away up the Mackenzie river valley, I expect to see on the Slave river vast power resources north of Fitzgerald. I do not know who possesses those powers to-day, but perhaps the Prime Minister might consider some way of conserving them for Canada before the power barons seize the incomparable natural power resources still belonging to this country.

The agreement also states—and I am strongly in accord with this:—

> It is also proposed that the engineers of the two governments be directed to take in such steps as may be necessary with a view to initiating forthwith the construction of works designed to distribute the flow of waters over the falls in such a manner as to preserve their scenic beauty.

I am one hundred per cent behind that, and would urge the Prime Minister at the earliest possible moment to associate this country with the United States in arranging for those works. General Warren gave a very exhaustive statement on these works as a result of his survey. I myself have followed the watershed to its remotest confines to fix in my mind and visualize the tremendous power behind Niagara falls. Later the engineering board of review, in 1924, I believe, amended General Warren's plan and improved it. On Sunday I made a careful investigation at Chippawa to see what will be the effect there of the adoption of the plan of the engineering board of review. I believe to adopt it in full would raise the height of the Chippawa pool from 561 to 571 feet, meaning that the Chippawa power canal intake would have to be raised—and not only raised, but be dredged out. There would have to be dykes at Tonawanda and elsewhere, where the shore does not reach ten feet above the present level of the river. That of course would be a small matter.

The argument used in support of the new plan is that only one works would be required, consisting of a monumental bridge and control works, which would be situated approximately a mile or a little over a mile south of Niagara falls. It would be a controlled dam operated by gates which would rise and fall at will, and it would entail works and a weir immediately south of the brink of Niagara falls.

I doubt very much if on Sunday the depth at the notch in the Horseshoe falls was more than three or four, or perhaps five feet, at the outside.

The new plan proposes that a weir be built immediately south of the falls for the even distribution of water over the brink. The Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), being an engineer, will understand that the evening up of the water immediately south of the brink of the falls would to a great extent retard erosion, which now amounts to quite an item at the falls. Indeed, unless erosion is arrested before long, the two cities of Niagara Falls, possibly not within our own time, but within one or two hundred years will be away down the river from the falls. The falls will be farther up the river. I believe the average erosion is about seven feet annually to the south.

In my judgment it is imperative to preserve the scenic beauties of that majestic, natural wonder. As speedily as possible this government and the government of the United States should have works constructed to conform with the best engineering features the two governments can devise. We are now told that after the works are completed a further diversion of 10,000 second-feet on each side of the line can be taken, without in any way affecting the scenic beauty of the falls. My own judgment would be in accord with that, namely that more water could be taken by an even distribution of the water across the brink of the falls on both sides of the river without affecting their beauty. Provided that these proposed works would preserve the falls, why not use the additional horse-power, if we can get it? After all, God placed it there for the benefit of this country and the United States. A further 10,000 cubic second-feet on each side would mean a very great increase in the production of power. I hope—I am sure we all hope—that that power will be greatly needed after the war for purposes of rehabilitation in this country. I expect it will be rehabilitated.

In my judgment, therefore, the first consideration the government should have in mind is to proceed with the works proposed in the agreement. Do not delay. Do not let another twenty years elapse between the proposal and the time the work is done, as has happened in the past. We must make every effort to preserve scenic beauty which is unequalled anywhere else in the world, a beauty which each year brings vast sums of United States dollars to our side of the line. The beauties of the falls are best seen from the Canadian side. The works suggested would not only permit an increase of power, but would raise the level of lake Erie. Everyone knows that the level of that lake is sadly depleted.

I have before me the monthly report issued by the hydrographic map service of this government. It shows that in May of this year the average stage of lake Erie is 1·41 feet lower than the average stage in the past eighty-one years. The level of lake Erie would be raised on the completion of the works proposed in the agreement. Those who have investigated the levels of lake Erie—and I have done a good deal of it myself—know that at present the shore line of lake Erie extends out along the lake a quarter of a mile or more, and that some years ago those same points were under water. So that I will support any proposal to preserve the beauty of Niagara falls, and raise the water level of lake Erie. The raising of the Chippawa pool to 571 feet would retard the flow out of lake Erie. When the flow is retarded the lake itself rises. So that, as I understand it, no other work would be required, except this at Chippawa, to the height I have indicated.

I should like to present another angle of this whole subject to the government, in connection with its discussions of these matters with engineers from the United States. I would suggest that they try to persuade the United States to bring about the diversion of water from their own side of the line, into the great lakes. I fought like a tiger against the diversion from the Albany river watershed. That is past. I cannot do any more in that regard, and there is no use wasting more time on it. But we can compensate for what was done at that time by bringing about a diversion from the United States side of the line.

I spent considerable time in making extensive travels in the thousand lakes area of north Wisconsin. There are said to be a thousand lakes—there may be two thousand so far as I know. The whole country is dotted with lakes, and from those lakes several great rivers start. The water scarcely knows which direction to flow. Those lakes provide the source of the Wolf river, which flows into lake Michigan, the St. Croix, which flows into the Mississippi, and the Wisconsin, which flows into the Mississippi.

After making my own survey as to the possibility of diverting water out of the Wisconsin river along part of its ancient course via the Fox river, I went to Madison and discussed a proposal with the state engineer. I am happy to say that since that time the state of Wisconsin has taken into serious consideration the matter I talked over with their engineers. I pointed out the advantage to be gained from damming the Wisconsin river south of Portage, where its current ends, and from which point, until it reaches the Mississippi, it is often a nuisance to the state. It is a large, flat river, with little current in it west of Portage, and it frequently overflows its banks. One and a quarter miles east of Portage the Fox river flows north, in the opposite direction. The Wisconsin river flows south and west. The water level of the Fox river is six feet below that of the Wisconsin, and the Wisconsin would overflow into the Fox. For years there were great floods around Portage, making lakes miles long in the state of Wisconsin. All along the Fox river are vast coulees dug out by the overflow of the Wisconsin river in years past. To prevent further action of the kind the state government has built at Portage a dyke fourteen miles long and twenty-five feet high. This prevents the waters which ordinarily and naturally would flow into the Fox river at flood time and into the great lakes. I believe the engineers are now satisfied that they can divert out of the Wisconsin a flow of 1,500 second-feet.

Their first statement is that they could divert 1,500 cubic second feet for 120 days per year. That is based upon the erection of two large reservoirs at Big Eau Pleine and Little Eau Pleine. All they have to do is to erect other reservoirs in that district and they would be able to maintain a flow of 1,500 cubic feet per second from the Wisconsin into the Fox and then into the great lakes. They could then produce another 20,000 or 30,000 horse-power of electrical energy from the flow of the Fox, east of lake Winnebago from which the river descends a hundred feet, more or less, to lake Michigan via the Fox; there is an old natural course where in years gone by there was a large flow of water out of the Wisconsin river. But they have stopped that. On our side of the line we have been most generous. At the present time we are diverting out of the Kenogami watershed, which is wholly Canadian, 1,200 cubic feet per second, and are considering diverting another 4,000 cubic feet per second. I should like to see the government try to persuade the United States engineers to do just what I have suggested; dam the Wisconsin, take the surplus flow and send it into the great lakes. That would help their trouble at Chicago. It would be wholly their own water; they could do what they liked with it. They could do what they are permitting us to do with the Albany waters. They could use it as it flows down; they could divert another 1,500 cubic feet per second without injuring the lake level at Chicago.

This district is quite historic. Nicolet, one of the early French explorers, went up the Fox river in 1634, and Fathers Marquette and Joliet went through there in 1673. I spent some time along that river going into the history of the district.

I should like to refer to one or two other diversions. I referred to Chicago a moment or two ago, but I want to place it in order on the records. At the moment Chicago can divert up to 3,900 cubic feet per second, all lost to the St. Lawrence system. The agreement states that this proposed diversion at Niagara Falls will terminate in 1942. I have not much confidence in such promises. We have a bold example of the failure to live up to agreements at Massena, where 25,000 cubic feet per second are being diverted from the south branch of the St. Lawrence river. This was originally the main course of the river. This water is being diverted across New York state to generate 90,000 horse-power at Massena. Half of that, or 12,500 cubic feet per second, belongs to us. I am afraid that when the St. Lawrence waterway treaty comes into this house it will be found that the power barons may claim compensation for the loss of the use of this 12,500 cubic feet of Canadian water. I hope that when that treaty is being considered other hon. members will be prepared to vote against compensation being paid for the use of Canadian water diverted at Massena.

That agreement was made in 1918, and we heard the same story, that it was for war purposes. It was stated in the agreement that if and when the war ended, the diversion would be stopped. But that was not the case. The war was over before the diversion weir in the St. Lawrence had been completed. They were diverting some water before, but the agreement was to permit the erection of a weir which would raise the water and permit a greater diversion. Unless the signatories of this agreement will live up to it, what is the use of making it? We will live up to it, but our cousins south of the line must be educated to living up to agreements. They are sharper than we are. I do not find any fault with that. I like to see sharp people; I like to see people who are able to defend themselves and who get what is coming to them.

Under the present agreement they are to get 5,000 cubic feet per second and we are to get 3,000 cubic feet, but when we want another 2,000 cubic feet, we can have it. I hope that is correct, because it is only fair that we should have that. I have another case in mind where we lose everything, that of the St. Croix river between New Brunswick and Maine. Immediately south of the junction of the main branch of the St. Croix river and the west branch, a dam has been built to hold back the flow of the St. Croix river. The whole river is diverted into the state of Maine to produce power. Of course the water is returned to the river lower down. We get absolutely nothing out of it; at least I am not aware that any power which is developed is sent back to our side.

I am afraid of any further raids. Recently I read carefully a report of the engineering board of review in the United States, which stated the advantages of diverting 5,000 cubic feet per second out of lake St. Francis. I doubt if that will ever take place, but they pointed out the advantage of diverting that water to lake Champlain. Their engineers are on the job. This same report contains a plan for the diversion of the Black river in New York state, which now flows into lake Ontario at Sackets harbour. The proposal is to divert water from the Black river into the Fish river and Mohawk river. Any diversion of water from the lake Ontario watershed would violate the 1909 treaty. I hope it will never be permitted.

I think that is all I have to say. I am not opposed to the present diversion, since it states in the agreement that it is to be reconsidered in 1942. I hope the government sees to it that these works are constructed on the Niagara river in order that the lake Erie water level may be raised and the scenic beauty of this great natural wonder preserved.

I repeat what I said a moment ago. I hope the Prime Minister will take into consideration the appointment of a board or a minister or a departmental branch which will assume control of the undeveloped water-powers in territories which are still under the control of this government, preserve them for the people of Canada and prevent their exploitation by the power barons who may try to get possession of these great water powers in our vast hinterland, over a great deal of which I have travelled. I think I have covered all of Canada south of the sixtieth parallel and I should know something about its water resources. I hope the Prime Minister will consider preserving for the people of Canada the still vast water powers of this country.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I shall not detain the house from going into supply for more than ten minutes but inasmuch as for many years between 1921 and 1930 I have protested against the Chicago diversion and have taken part in the debates from February 26, 1929, on the various diversions in the Niagara river, I wish to take a few minutes to protest against the principles involved.

Prior to the statute of Westminster being passed a similar matter came up in this house on February 26, 1929, by way of a debate on a convention or protocol with Washington, and on that occasion I raised this important question of the further diversions of water in the Niagara river for power on both sides of the line. Ten thousand feet then on this side belonged to Ontario and half way out to the boundary line, including the water and the banks of the river and rapids, subject to the rights of navigation. The other half at that time belonged to New York state and the United States. This matter then came before the house in a convention or protocol for the preservation of Niagara falls by the construction of remedial works and for the experimental withdrawal of additional water from the Niagara river. There was a treaty before the house on that date on the very question; it was signed by His Majesty the King of Great Britain, Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India; and on behalf of the United States of America by the President. The terms of the whole convention as to 10,000 horse-power for each country, now reduced to 5,000 and 3,000, are set out in the statutes of Canada for 1929, at page xiii of the prefix. I am in favour of the further diversion for immediate power purposes, as I was in 1929, but I object to the new way of doing it.

What has happened since that time, and how are these matters done now? Just by a note of our executive, whereas at Washington the senate must approve. There were imperial conferences in 1926 and 1930. Up to that time Great Britain and the British empire did not have any written constitution or strict rules of law. The constitution of Great Britain consisted of a number of usages, customs and conventions which have bound the empire together by ties of race and blood and of other principles unwritten except by Canada to the 1867 British North America Act. But at these imperial conferences they changed the whole constitutional structure of the British empire. They passed the statute of Westminster, which made Canada a separate dominion, so that we can now make our own treaties over the head of the mother country and we had our own seat in the league and many other things. I should like to quote a few sentences from Wheare's "The Statute of Westminster and Dominion Status." He says at page 3:

This constitutional and international position may be set out partly in rules of strict law, such as statutes, passed by the United Kingdom parliament or by the parliaments of the dominions, and judicial decisions, and partly in non-legal rules, such as constitutional conventions. The most important of the rules of strict law which define dominion status at present are to be found in a statute of the United Kingdom parliament, the Statute of Westminster itself. The most important of the non-legal rules are to be found in the constitutional conventions between Great Britain and the dominions agreed upon and declared at the imperial conferences of 1926 and 1930, and set out in the reports of these conferences.

Then at page 5:

It is asserted, for example, that Great Britain and the British empire have an "unwritten" constitution. A constitutional statute is regarded therefore as something alien to the spirit of the constitution. On such a view of the nature of the British constitution, and of the constitution of the British empire, it was inevitable that the passing of the Statute of Westminster should appear to be a mistake. Some members of parliament, in the United Kingdom and in the dominions objected to the proposal to pass the statute, not because of the terms it contained, but because it was a statute. Lord Buckmaster, an ex-Lord Chancellor, put this point of view in the House of Lords during the second reading of the Statute of Westminster bill. He said that he intended to support the bill, but that he felt it was a mistake.

It is not—he said—that its actual terms offend any of the relationships existing between ourselves and our dominions. It is that it is, as I believe, for the first time, an attempt made to put into the form of an act of parliament rules which bind the various component parts of the empire, and that I regard as a grave mistake.

There is a footnote which says:

In Australia Mr. W. M. Hughes reiterated the view he had already expressed at the imperial conference of 1921 that it was unnecessary to write down the constitution of the British empire in black and white.

As a result of that empire-wrecking statute, the statute of Westminster, we are now a separate country and here now by a note of Canada's executive power we part with this heritage. Although the senate and house of representatives have to agree in Washington to what is done there by the text of a treaty, here in this country the Prime Minister of Canada, over the head of this parliament, even while it is in session, can by a stroke of the pen give all this away on terms instead of, as in the past, having it done by a protocal or treaty. We in this country can be gold-bricked in connection with this and future diversions, which they say is for emergency purposes. It does not need parliament's consent at all; we get it only for information and can do nothing about it.

Under the Boundary waters treaty, as I pointed out on February 26, 1929, the United States is entitled to 20,000 cubic second feet of water a second and Canada to 32,000 second cubic feet, of which Canada exports 12,000 cubic feet of water a second of her allotment by export to the United States. So that we receive 32,000 less 12,000, or a net 20,000 second cubic feet; now we are getting 3,000 additional second cubic feet and the United States, by this new diversion, 5,000 more. It is only 23,000 second cubic feet that Canada retains. What will the United States get? By the Boundary waters treaty the United States is entitled to 20,000 cubic feet per second. So that the United States will have 20,000 plus 12,000 of our 32,000 second cubic feet exported to them. The United States will now get an additional 5,000 second cubic feet as an emergency measure, making 37,000 in all as against our 23,000 up to date.

This new method of dealing with international questions upsets the whole constitutional practice. We are going to be gold-bricked sooner or later. Once that waterpower is given in this manner, it is gone forever, no matter what this note says. I object to this. I believe this is the greatest principle that has been raised in parliament since the war started. The last time, in 1929, the mother country had to sign the then convention; now it is different. If we are going to conduct business in this way and make our own separate treaties, I object on the principles that I objected to two others without the consent of parliament. Canada had no right to bind this country to the proposals there set out or to the Ogdensburg agreement and the Hyde Park agreement, good though they were, except by convention. The principle is all wrong; it upsets all our relations with the mother country. Under the lease-lend act Canada will be committed for munitions and supplies for Great Britain, over the head of this parliament, running up to an amount it may be of one billion dollars this year. This is done on the principle that we are a separate country and can make our own treaties over the head of the Canadian parliament and of the mother country. Someone will have to pay for all this after the war, Britain or Canada, or both, as it is only a lease and a lend to be paid later.

The power situation in the Niagara district was only redeemed for the province of Ontario by the establishment of the hydro-electric power system for the people at cost. True, my leader does not believe in public ownership, he says, but Ontario does. I should like to say right here that I did not say that the Calgary Power company, which was before this house the other day, had any affiliations with the Beauharnois or Montreal Light, Heat and Power company. Far from it. What I said about the Calgary Power Company was that there is a forward movement of aggression by this and other companies for extra power, to grab it for private ownership. The state of New York insisted on private ownership in 1929, but in Ontario we have established public ownership of electric power. I did not say the other day that the Calgary Power Company was tied up with Montreal Light, Heat and Power. I was referring to the proposition in 1926 and 1927 in commenting on the history of the company.

I have said that I believe Ontario has been gold-bricked before and Canada may in the future be gold-bricked in connection with any additional diversions. I need only refer to the Stormont Power company, which purchases power direct from Montreal Light, Heat and Power at $10.50 per horse-power, while the same company sells the same kind of power at less than one-third the rate it now charges at Cornwall for the same direct current, and commercial and domestic lighting to its Quebec customers for the very same class of service. The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario purchases power from the Beauharnois company for $12.50 per horse-power under a revised agreement which was formerly $15 per horse-power, and financially the Beauharnois and Montreal Light, Heat and Power are one. What I am objecting to is this particular way of doing business. No plans or specifications have been filed under the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. I wish to support what has been said by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), as to the principle involved here and the mistakes of the Chicago diversion.

Back in 1929 there was a debate in this house, which lasted for many days, in which the preservation of the scenic beauty and other works at the falls was much discussed. At that time the additional number of second cubic feet of water to be diverted was 10,000 to the United States and 10,000 to Canada; under the present arrangement it is 5,000 to the United States and 3,000 to Canada. We should know more about the plans and specifications and the weirs and remedial works. We should be informed what is to be the effect upon the scenic beauty of the falls, and know of the erosions in escarpment. In my opinion, it is going to be absolutely destroyed if this measure goes through unless we have properly constructed remedial works.

No doubt both sides need power, but there is a better method by treaty of getting it, as was shown during the course of the debates in 1929, in the speech of the Hon. J. D. Chaplin, reported in Hansard at page 469 where he supported the views I expressed there. As I said in 1929 a special international board was appointed when this matter came up in that year. It was appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite and was known as the special international Niagara board, for the purpose of finding how the diversion could be carried out so as not to ruin the scenic beauty of the falls. The American falls are slowing down and are beginning to run dry; for years there has not been the same volume of water there; far less water goes over them today than ever before. The Horseshoe falls will also be affected somewhat from lower lake levels as a result of the Chicago and other diversions. The board set up under the 1929 convention consisted of: J. T. Johnston, director of dominion water power and reclamation service; Doctor Charles Camsell, Deputy Minister of Mines, and Doctor J. Horace Macfarland, past president of the American Civic Association. Mr. Johnston and Major Jones were the members of the international board of control established in 1923. Why are not the successors of this board called together in connection with this present diversion? I wish to protest against this way of doing business. This diversion was proposed away back twelve years ago, in the form I have indicated. Why was nothing done about it until now in the dying days of this session, when more power has been wanted since 1929 from this very diversion by both sides?

I wish also to protest against any more export of power; 12,000 cubic feet of water a second going over there, and now 5,000 more added, while we in the province of Ontario are in darkness as a result of daylight saving all the year round. It is not necessary. What did the chairman of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, Hon. W. L. Houck, say at Buffalo yesterday, referring to this diversion?

> Daylight saving has not been a necessity in Ontario during the past year, but it was needed in Quebec, where there was a power shortage, and with its usual cooperation the Ontario government acquiesced with the suggestion of the federal government concerning daylight saving.

This extra development, 12,000 plus 5,000, represents 17,000, whereas Ontario gets only an additional 3,000. Does that mean that we shall have to continue daylight saving merely to save 150,000 horse-power for some alloys in connection with aluminum company plants which Quebec and Montreal and other companies could provide for by a readjustment and by their own power conservation? Consider on the other side of the account that Ontario is required to conserve power and turn over export and get less than its share by contracts while from six to nine in the morning the use of commercial and domestic lighting is twice what it should be, especially for domestic purposes. There is no saving for industry.

I warn the house that, without any reports from officials, without reports from this board, without reports from officers of the department under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, or any plan, we are going to sanction this diversion in a fashion which has never been done in principle before in this legislature or any provincial one. I can only say that, if we are going to do things this way, let us get some public ownership men in charge of daylight saving, and not one of those who helped to put the Abitibi company in the condition it is, a lawyer and other agents for the grain exchange, the Calgary Power Company, the Canadian National Railways, the Beauharnois company and the companies which I mentioned the other day, and who is or was listed as one of the directors of this Calgary Power company.

I protest against this principle, whether in peace or war, or giving away by this principle of a note our natural heritage, the water-power of this country, in the manner it has been done by this parliament.

Yesterday we were talking about a select committee, and that committee has found out nothing. I was one of those who helped to dig up the Beauharnois scandal and wake up parliament about it, and I was pretty nearly driven out of parliament because I proposed to support the policy of the province of Ontario in conserving its natural heritage, the water powers and natural resources for the use of the people of this country. As Theodore Roosevelt said of the United States, in twenty-five years that country may run out of coal. There may be a shortage in the next twenty-five years, with the result that power for industry, for commercial and domestic lighting, for labour and for the farmer will be hard to get. Considering the scarcity of coal which is bound to face us this winter, as well as the impending scarcity of oil and other substitutes, we should go slow in this kind of legislation. I object in principle to these agreements without the authority of parliament. While I am satisfied with the policy of immediate diversion, I am not going to consent to this going through in a way which violates the whole constitution of this country since confederation on boundary waterways matters, and which changes the procedure regarding our international relations with our great friends and neighbours from what it has been since 1844, when Sir John A. Macdonald made the great speech he did at Kingston City on our need of relations with the mother country who were parties to this diversion in 1929.

I hope we shall have more details about this matter. It is true we are told that it is only for an emergency. But everything that is put before us is supposed to be for a war emergency. As the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) aptly said the other day, you cannot blow your nose in this house without its being said that it is for the war effort. Every time a deputation goes down to Washington it gives away something or agrees to something over parliament's head. I protest against this procedure of conducting our relations by means of notes instead of treaties and conventions and protocols. There are notes about everything. Every time our officials go to Washington or the joint defence board or any other board meets, we hear about a new note which doesn't get us any place. People will wake up one of these days when their water power has been given away and when we are short of power, coal and oil. Look at the price of fuel as charged by this Cornwall company. The Stormont company purchases power of the Montreal Light, Heat and Power at the price of $10.50 per horse-power, which is about one-third of the price at which the company sells it to workers in the province of Quebec. The reason they are in that position is that parliament sanctions and passes some of these private and public bills without knowing what is involved in them.

If conventions of this kind are to be the result of our status as a nation separate from the mother country, if we are to divert in this fashion the waters of the Niagara, it will be a sorry day for the people of Canada.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): The Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) asked me to express to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) his regret that he was not able to remain in the house to reply to their remarks. He had an appointment at 12.30 which had to be kept, and he has asked me to make a few remarks in reply.

We are all greatly indebted to the hon. member for Davenport. He seldom rises to speak in the house on power matters without placing on Hansard valuable and accurate information. I am sure that all those who are interested in power developments in the St. Lawrence watershed will find, in his reported speeches, valuable material for their studies on this subject.

I would only take exception to one suggestion which he left with the house, and which I am sure he did not intend to have taken very seriously. I refer to his remark that there was sharp bargaining connected with the recent diversions of power on the St. Lawrence. I think that our present-day relations with the United States are such that no question of sharp bargaining can be allowed to intervene in relation to anything we are doing in discharge of the common effort. As you know, this country is in an all-out effort to aid Britain, and the United States is developing an all-out effort in the same direction. The needs for power in the United States are for the purpose of aid to Britain, just as are our power expansions in Canada. In recent months it has become more and more important for the two neighbouring countries to sit down together to see how the resources of north America can best be utilized to give that immediate aid to Britain which is so urgently required. As a matter of fact, for the last two or three years diversions at Niagara falls have not been a matter of sharp bargaining. We all recall that the United States, voluntarily and without pressure from Canada, offered to anticipate the Ogoki diversion by at least two years by permitting Canada immediately to divert equivalent water at Niagara before the diversion works at Ogoki had been built, and in spite of the fact that after the works have been completed it will be a matter of many months before the effect of the diversion will be felt at Niagara falls. In other words, the United States has already permitted Canada to divert 5,000 cubic second feet in addition to the diversion allowed Canada by the treaty, and that with no corresponding compensation to the United States.

The recent diversions were a matter of utilizing available facilities rather than a question of bargain based upon previous diversion permitted to Canada or upon any consideration except the maximum output of immediate power. The United States, on its side of the falls has installed equipment which can be immediately utilized to transform 5,000 cubic second feet of water into electric current, and Canada on the Canadian side has installed capacity to make immediate use of 3,000 cubic second feet.

This additional power is very urgently needed in Canada and in the United States. As hon. members know, June is the month when we should have adequate power reserves. The peak load comes in December and January, and usually the minimum load of the year comes in June. As a matter of fact, owing to the requirements of war production, every kilowatt of power that is being generated in Ontario and Quebec to-day is being utilized this day. This may not be true of the smaller developments in the more remote sections of Ontario, but it is true of the main network of Ontario and of the complete Quebec network. What is happening is that all surplus power that can be generated is being sent to the Saguenay district for the manufacture of aluminum. An effort is being made to store the waters of the Saguenay against the requirements next winter and to use water power that would otherwise be wasted to protect the Saguenay water power in order that the output of aluminum, so badly needed for aeroplanes for Britain, manufactured in the United States and in England, may be kept up to the highest possible maximum.

The hon. member mentioned the distribution of power from Niagara as between Canada and the United States. I think it is only fair to add to that with the development of 5,000 cubic second feet additional there will be a return to Canada of "at will" power. That has been sent across the border at Niagara for several years. When the time comes this "at will" power will be returned to this country where it will be urgently needed for the purposes of Ontario.

Mr. MacNICOL: I am glad to hear that. Has an agreement been made to that effect?

Mr. HOWE: That is understood in the documents that have been tabled. It is a matter between the Ontario hydro and customers in the United States, but the Ontario hydro have served notice that this block of power must be returned, and I think the application from the United States for additional diversions at Niagara provides for picking up the load that could not otherwise be taken care of when that block of power is returned to Canada.

Mr. STIRLING: What quantity will be returned in that way?

Mr. HOWE: Forty thousand horse-power, as I remember it. This power has been going across at Niagara for some years.

So far as the scenic beauty of Niagara is concerned, that question was looked into by the international board of engineers. Water conditions in the Niagara river are better this year than they have been for some years past, and it is felt that the scenic beauty of Niagara would not be impaired beyond the point which that impairment had reached in earlier years, owing to low water conditions in the river. Coupled with the proposal to divert is the proposal to build remedial works immediately. The effect of these works will be a more even distribution of the flow of water over the falls. The proposed work will increase the head on the Canadian power plants, and to some extent increase the output of power from those plants, and it will also have the effect of making possible a greater diversion of water on both sides of Niagara without impairing the beauty of the falls.

My hon. friend has suggested that the remedial works should have been built some years ago. He is aware of course that Canada has been pressing for an agreement which would have permitted the construction of these works earlier. The treaty of 1932, which was signed by Canada but was not ratified by the United States, provided that the remedial works should be built as part of the St. Lawrence development. The fact that the remedial works at Niagara falls were tied in with the entire St. Lawrence development has been the retarding factor that has prevented earlier undertaking of this work. However, coupled with the exchange of notes, as my hon. friend has observed, is a provision that Canada will join with the United States immediately in undertaking these works for the purpose of having them constructed by autumn of this year.

The Canadian part of this work is being undertaken by Ontario, by agreement between the province and the dominion, and I know that active preparations are being made for its construction.

I do not know that anything more needs to be said on my part except that we are working out our war problems with the United States in an endeavour to reach the closest possible cooperation for maximum output.

The United States has called upon us to assist in the production of greater quantities of aluminum, which will be the limiting factor in the production of aeroplanes for Britain. To that end the Aluminum Company of Canada is building on the Saguenay river a new power development which will generate 700,000 horse-power, of which 500,000 will be a net increase in the resources of that area. Every kilowatt of that power will be used for the manufacture of aluminum at Arvida, and no great relief will accrue to the power situation in the province of Quebec. It is to conserve water, until the new source of power comes in, that the power controller is sending to Arvida, Sunday power, daylight power, every kilowatt that is to spare at any hour of the day or week, in order to conserve the flow of water in the river until the new development comes in. What has been done at Niagara is simply in furtherance of that purpose to devote every possible kilowatt of power to the production of war materials for aid to Britain.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): The president of the Canadian National Railways, Mr. Hungerford, was asked a question which reads as follows:

Mr. Pouliot: I have a question to ask Mr. Hungerford and then I shall be through. Mr. Hungerford, I hold in my hand a copy of the statement that you made before the senate committee and it is entitled "Railway unification opposed by Canadian National president, 1939." You still hold the same view?

Mr. Hungerford: I do.

This is from pages 159 and 160 of the proceedings of the standing committee on railways and shipping of Thursday, May 22, 1941, No. 3.

Here is the statement made by Mr. Hungerford before the senate in 1939. It is a reprint from the text which had been published in the Canadian National Railways Magazine. It is impossible for me to read it all this morning; I shall read only the part which is in larger type and which summarizes the statement made by the chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways against the amalgamation of the two railway systems:

On these pages will be found the full text of the statement presented by S. J. Hungerford, chairman and president of the Canadian National Railways, to the special committee of the senate inquiry into railway problems.

Pointing out that never since 1923 had the Canadian National Railways failed to meet its operating expenses, that it had a very great earning capacity under normal traffic conditions, and that, serving almost exclusively the rich northern mining area of Canada, it had greater potentialities than its rival, Mr. Hungerford opposed unification of the two Canadian railways.

Most of the economies envisaged under unification schemes were unrealizable, he contended. Any that were practicable and in the public interest could be realized under cooperation, he said, holding that if the railways did not show a will to cooperation compulsion would be justifiable in the public interest.

Mr. Hungerford recommended a public body of three, consisting of representatives of each of the railways and a chairman representing the public interest, which would explore and develop cooperative measures and bring the railways together in implementing them.

Of course the question of amalgamation of the railways was never considered seriously by any political party except in later years. When Mr. Bennett spoke during the election campaign of 1930 he said, "Cooperation ever, amalgamation never," and that had always been the attitude also of the Liberal party. After that the Canadian Pacific had some favoured treatment from the then Prime Minister, Mr. Bennett, by a loan of $60,000,000, but it was refunded as soon as the Liberal government came into power. After that we did not hear about railway business until a committee was formed in the senate to study the question of cooperation between both railways. There were many senators who expressed their views, and to the great surprise of members of the House of Commons there was a majority of the senate in favour of unified management of the railways. It was the policy of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen in the senate; he strongly recommended that. He had changed his views. I remember having read in Hansard—I was not then a member—that Mr. Bennett, who was also a private member, called him the "gramophone of Mackenzie and Mann." At that time he was strongly for the C.N.R. and after that he changed his views and went over to the Canadian Pacific, as everyone knows.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

The house resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. POULIOT: I hold in my hand a copy of proceedings before the railways and shipping committee, and would direct the attention of hon. members particularly to the evidence taken on May 20 of this year. At page 79 I find this:

Mr. Pouliot: It is said here there was an order made by his majesty's treasury of the United Kingdom dated October 26, 1940, stating that such portion of the said debenture stock—

Of the Grand Trunk Railway.

—as was held by residents of the United Kingdom was transferred to the treasury, which means that the United Kingdom treasury took hold of the stock that was held by people living in Great Britain.

Mr. Cooper: Yes.

Mr. Pouliot: And the vesting order was made upon the condition that the Canadian National Railway Company would purchase the stock from the treasury under the vesting price. Well, then, did the order apply to the Canadian National Railway or was it done willingly?

Mr. Cooper: It was an arrangement between the finance department here and the British treasury in London.

Mr. Pouliot: Over your heads. Speak frankly, as you have done since the beginning, Mr. Cooper.

Mr. Cooper: Well, of course the repatriation of securities is not a matter which any corporation to-day has anything to do with or say about; it is a matter entirely in the hands of the government concerned.

Then, at page 80:

Mr. Cooper: Can we express it this way? The British government have from time to time named the United States and Canadian securities which became subject to their vesting order. These companies were not consulted.

Mr. Pouliot: No, it was done between governments.

Mr. Cooper: Yes.

Mr. Pouliot: And as I said, over the heads of the company.

Mr. Cooper: The British government, I think, does not even need to consult the Canadian government. They were taking away from their own citizens the property of those citizens.

Mr. Cooper is the accountant of the Canadian National Railways, and a man familiar with the business of the company. It is true that Mr. Hungerford stated the matter was approved by the directors of the company, but he did not state whether it was done before or after.

I read with astonishment in the press a statement made by the right hon. leader of the Tory party in the senate on the occasion of the celebration to the memory of Sir John A. Macdonald in Kingston. This is the passage:

Never at any time did he lose sight of, or subordinate to selfish Canadian purpose, the oneness of our interest, the oneness of our security and the oneness of our destiny with the British empire.

I strongly protest against that statement by the Tory leader in the senate, that being a Canadian means being selfish. It is only the natural and national point of view which must be respected. I respect his views—the views of an imperialist. He is entitled to hold them, just as I am entitled to hold mine. But he has no reason to call me selfish because I hold deep convictions, convictions as deep-rooted as his own.

Hon. members may look at any newspaper issued on April 4. I hold in my hand a copy of the Windsor Daily Star, and I find in it the statement made by the Right Hon. Malcolm MacDonald when he set foot first on the soil of the capital of Ottawa. Speaking of those who defend the British isles at the present time, he said: "Even if they were fighting alone, they could not be beaten." That was the way he appreciated the help given to Great Britain by Canada.

And now, sir, I hold in my hand a quotation from British Hansard, which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen a few days ago. This is from a speech by Sir Archibald Southby:

It cannot be right, when we are fighting for democracy and the right of free peoples to express their views, for the government to come to a major decision of this kind, which will have most far-reaching effects, without giving the House of Commons the opportunity, which is their right, of expressing their views. It is not a bit of good coming to the house when everything is signed, sealed and delivered, and saying, "Here it is; take it or leave it." We are a council of state. Of course, we shall support the executive in anything they do; but they also have a duty towards us and that is to allow us, as far as in their power lies, to express our views, and to make helpful suggestions.

Not only was that said by Sir Archibald Southby, but it was the tenor of the first sentence in the speech delivered this week by no less a person than the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, Prime Minister of England, who said that he welcomed criticism. Of course criticism is the privilege in a democracy. When we are deprived of the right to criticize we will no longer be a democracy—as we are no longer a dominion; we are just a colony now.

Turning to Hansard for March 20, 1941, I see a statement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) to the effect that the government had nothing to do with Sir Edward Peacock regarding the purchase or transfer of Canadian Pacific stock. Now, everyone knows that the shares, which had a par value of $100, have been divided into four. The par value of Canadian Pacific shares now stands at 25, but the market price is only 5. I wonder what would happen if the Canadian government takes possession of that stock.

Of course advances were made to the British government. No one knows when. We have only a superficial view of what has happened regarding the financial relations between Canada and Great Britain, but every member of parliament is entitled to full information on the matter. Sir Edward Peacock was to come here. He went to Toronto. He is a director of the Bank of Montreal and of the Canadian Pacific Railway company. He came here for what is called repatriation. He came to sell stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway company which was held in Great Britain either privately or otherwise.

Sir, I have noted the great change with respect to railway policy in the last two or three years, and especially since the time when Mr. Dunning, who was acting as a vice-president and manager of a subsidiary of the Canadian Pacific Railway, took the portfolio of finance in the government. Of course we know what has happened. Before he took the portfolio he was the director of several companies which are not mentioned in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, but which are mentioned in full in the British Who's Who. It states in that book that he entered "the business world" by sitting at council tables—council tables other than the one in the east block. He sat there with a man called Arthur B. Purvis, who is a director of many Canadian corporations, and who is now the Vulcan who manufactures chemicals and armaments, and urges the country to buy them from him. I shall not enumerate all these companies, but before becoming minister of finance Mr. Dunning sat at several council tables with Mr. Purvis.

I have before me an answer to a question appearing in Hansard of May 21, 1941. It mentions the names of the insurance companies in which Mr. Dunning is now a director, and in which Mr. Purvis is also a director. One has only to look at the tabulation of officials in the Department of Munitions and Supply to see that Mr. Dunning is now the official representative of Mr. Purvis' company in the Department of Munitions and Supply. The only hiatus between the earlier relations between Mr. Dunning, the Canadian Pacific Railway and Mr. Purvis, and the new relations between Mr. Dunning, the railway and Mr. Purvis, is the period during when he was minister of finance here in Ottawa. He was the creator of the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association and the Saskatchewan Cooperative Elevators; he was the power behind those companies. Those companies had no elevators. Who built them? I ask the Minister of Munitions and Supply if he is not the one who built elevators for Dunning and his companies when he was ruling the province of Saskatchewan.

I have another question to ask the Minister of Munitions and Supply. I should like to quote a report which appeared on the first page of the Montreal Gazette and which has never been denied. This report disappeared from the last edition of the paper. The minister was about to leave for England; he met representatives of the Canadian press, and here is the report under date of November 25, 1940:

> It is understood Mr. Howe's journey is planned partly for personal reasons, but he undoubtedly would consult British purchasing officials with a view to improving the efficiency of Canadian efforts to meet British requirements.

When the Minister of Munitions and Supply left the soil of Canada to meet Purvis and the Minister of National Defence in England, according to the press he was going there for personal reasons. That, to my knowledge, has never been denied. The Minister of National Defence cannot spend a cent in his own department. As I said yesterday, he has no right to buy a cap, he has no right to buy a bayonet, he has no right to buy a rifle; that is done by the Department of Munitions and Supply and paid for by the Minister of Finance. He has no right to do that, but he appoints as a financial adviser a codirector from Barclay's bank. He has accused me of attacking Colonel Magee because I mentioned that fact, but I was not attacking him. He did not understand what I was saying and I thought he had more intelligence than that. He has been telling hon. members that they should not be asking for patronage, so he had no right to bring in one of his codirectors to sit with him in the Department of Defence. The Department of Defence has no right to spend one cent. I hope this time his intelligence is wide open and he will understand that I am not attacking Colonel Magee. I am just mentioning the discrimination there is against members of parliament who cannot make recommendations to the Department of National Defence, even in the public interest. But he gets favoured treatment and brings in one of his friends to sit alongside him for financial purposes. He has not the right to spend one cent in his own department.

What is the use of having financial advisers over there? I will not insist upon having the facts referred to by the Ottawa Journal. When he is through with his ministerial duties he can go back to St. James street. St. James street has had a loud voice in the decision that has been reached with regard to the purchase of Canadian Pacific stock by the Canadian government. That is not a war measure; it is merely an attempt to get as much for the Canadian Pacific stock as was paid for the stock of the Grand Trunk Railway, which was bought at par, plus accrued interest, as the members of the railways and shipping committee know. I wonder if these people will succeed in this crime of having the government purchase the stock of the Canadian Pacific at more than its market value? I am strongly opposed to that.

It has been the policy of the Liberal party for years to stop any tendency toward amalgamation. That is my policy now, and it has been in the past. I do not want an amalgamation of the railways. I do not want it done when the house is in session and I do not want it done after members of parliament leave Ottawa for their homes. I do not want it done before our faces and I do not want it done behind our backs.

I regret to have to mention one name, a counsel, a barrister, a solicitor, a lobbyist of the city of Montreal, the lobbyist de luxe. I am talking about Mr. Aime Geoffrion, K.C., LL.D., who has been lobbying here for months to bring about the purchase of Canadian Pacific stock at a higher price. This is what has been done by a man who was appointed a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway just for that purpose. I know that he has been canvassing ministers. They will remember him by his Austrian hat and his Hungarian moustache. "Why don't you do that, why don't you do this; everybody knows it will be all right." He is the lobbyist de luxe and he probably does not pay the $25 fee required from any agent who comes here to canvass members of parliament. He does not canvass members of parliament or secretaries; he goes to the higher-ups and therefore he is above par. My information came from a lawyer who is strong for the Canadian Pacific Railway. He said, "Advances have been made to the British government; is it not better to take some guarantee; is it not better to have Canadian Pacific stock as a guarantee than to have nothing?" My answer to that is that if the government does not buy this Canadian Pacific stock now, it will fall lower in price. It would be good business to wait and buy it when it reaches the zero point.

This is an important matter. Why does not the brotherhood protest? They do not because one man who is the head of an international union, and whom I have denounced without mentioning his name, is now a public servant and wants the cover on the pot. I am not anti-British, I am pro-British, but I want Canada to act toward Great Britain just the same as Great Britain acts toward Canada. Mr. Speaker, I have freedom of speech to-day, but I did not always have it. I can say what I want to say because I speak in the shadow of the Chair. You, sir, are as ready to preserve democracy in Canada as are the soldiers who go out on the battlefield. I have the greatest respect for you. You respect freedom of speech and freedom of expression and you deserve to be placed in the ranks of the great Speakers who have sat in that chair.

What is said in England? Here again I quote from a daily paper. I hold in my hand the Ottawa Journal of yesterday morning, June 10. On the front page is a dispatch headed, "War 'Blunders' Blamed by M.P. on Coalition. Conservative says Churchill needs 'Better Team'". The dispatch reads:

London, June 9.—Sir Herbert Williams, executive director of the Incorporated Association of Electric Power Companies, to-day told the Croydon chamber of commerce that the coalition government was one reason "for the many blunders" of the war.

Sir Herbert, attacking the cabinet, declared Prime Minister Churchill needed a "better team" around him if Britain were to be better served. "In a coalition government you get rottenness and inefficiency," he said.

This is for the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce), who is not in his seat at the moment. It goes on:

"Half the ministers of the crown I wouldn't hire in business for £500 a year. Furthermore I wouldn't hire half the war cabinet for £500 a year," he said. It was a "real peril" to the country that Mr. Churchill "should be regarded as a man beyond challenge or criticism, as a sort of inspired demigod."

What he called the inefficiency of government departments would not improve "until we get a Prime Minister who will say: If you don't do your job, then you'll be fired."

Sir Herbert Williams served as Conservative member of the House of Commons for Reading, 1924-29. He was an unsuccessful candidate for the combined English universities in 1918 and 1931, and for Wednesbury in 1922 and 1923. He was Parliamentary Secretary to the Board of Trade in 1928 and 1929.

If that is not enough, sir, I have another quotation from no less a man than Lord Beaverbrook. This is from the New York Herald Tribune of Sunday, June 8:

Adolf Hitler has "given youth its head" in his plans and preparations, and Britain now found itself confronted "with a mentality which makes rings around many of our old ideas."

One may ask me, why are you speaking of these matters? I speak of these matters because we are on the verge of having in this country what I feel would have taken place if Mr. Manion had got into power, at the last election, and it is this: a formidable trust holding every commodity in Canada and ruling this government. That is my fear. My fear is that I may see some prominent business men in control of the commodities of life so that they can dictate their views, dictate their say, to the Canadian people. I am not going to start to discuss the Bank of Canada, and the still more absurd foreign exchange control board, which are no less than a hymn to bureaucracy. I have no time for that now. But I will say this, that in this country we must be very careful to remember that those who preach fascism and who organize it are not all, like ex-Mayor Houde, in concentration camps, because we may find two of them on the treasury benches. They have so much jitters that they are afraid of the coming ideas of socialism and communism, and they think they can put a check on it by installing fascism in this country. We had an example not long ago in the creation of the Department of Transport. It was an incorporated department, organized on corporation lines, on fascist lines. Sir, we must think of the future. At the present time those people have the jitters and they are colonials. They are not real Canadian citizens. They are just colonials who are afraid to speak on behalf of Canada. I was born here and my forefathers for many years back were born here. I am a Canadian citizen. But I do not exclude those who were born in the British Isles and who have decided to make Canada their own country, and who are better Canadian citizens than some who were born here. I have the utmost respect for them. I could name some members of this house who were born in the British Isles and who have true Canadian feelings.

Just a word about something of great importance. We should treat every country, Great Britain just as any other country, as equal. That was stated by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King). I am not a political heretic when I say that because I am just repeating what my revered leader has said many a time, perhaps a hundred times. But there is something else. It is that here in this country we should not forget our past; we should not forget our traditions, which up until this past year have been equal in glory to those of Westminster. I will say now, sir, that the British parliamentary tradition is kept by you here, sir, and by the speakers of all the legislative assemblies in this country, as well as it is in Westminster itself. But I do not think that we should have policies that will destroy the unity of Canada and will destroy the financial system of Canada. I do not mean by that the system that we have temporarily now. I refer to destroying the wealth of Canada which has accrued over the centuries.

I have here an extract from the Ottawa Journal of July 3, 1940, quoting what Mottistone has said in England—that he would put the Canadians everywhere. I do not see the use of that. I want the government to keep its pledges of the past. I do not want them to change from time to time. I remember that on the last day of last session, or a day or two before the last day, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) said that we would need to send no more men to England, that all those we were to send had reached there. But a few days or a week afterwards I saw that another contingent of Canadians had just arrived in England. No more to go—all those who were to go had left—and yet a day or two or three days afterwards, not long afterwards in any event, another contingent arrived in England.

No less a man than Philip Kerr, afterwards Lord Lothian, said that England needed food and needed munitions but did not need men. He is dead now, but what he said is recorded in the press. I want this country to be defended. I see the Minister of National Defence is taking notes. It is his habit. I think he would die if he had not a pencil in his hand. But let me continue as he takes notes. I want him to inform the house about Jardine McKerlie, that man who said he served in the British army and never proved that he was there, that man who was promoted from $200 a month to $5,400 a year within a few months, and is now inspector of accounts in the minister's department, a man who has a Ph.D. from a fake university, the McKinley-Roosevelt university. I will quote two letters, one from Walton C. John, senior specialist in higher education, federal security agency, United States Office of Education, Washington, dated March 17, 1941. It is not necessary for the minister to take notes: it is on record in the files of his own department:

The McKinley-Roosevelt university is a correspondence school which offers a wide variety of courses and grants degrees for work done by the correspondence method. We have had numerous complaints from different parts of the world regarding its activities. I find that it is not on any list of approved correspondence schools. In this country no reputable institution grants degrees of any type by correspondence, consequently the degrees of this institution have no academic recognition in the United States.

Is it enough? If it is not enough, I have another one. I send the original to Hansard.

Illinois State Examining Board for Teachers' Certificates
C. H. Engle, Secretary.

March 11, 1941.

In reply to your letter of February 26, I am sorry to state that the McKinley Roosevelt university located in Chicago, is not recognized by any of the regional accrediting agencies or by the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction in Illinois. Work completed in this institution receives no recognition whatsoever in Illinois.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is quite right: I did take a note or two, because he covered quite a number of subjects, and it was pretty difficult to keep them all in mind. However, I think there are only one or two to which I need refer.

First, the reference of my hon. friend to Mr. Dunning. I have no knowledge whatever of the matter of the Canadian Pacific railway stock to which he refers, except, that as I remember it, my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) stated the other night that there had been no mention or suggestion of a purchase of Canadian Pacific stock. It would seem to me that probably that was a sufficient answer.

At the same time, I do feel that this practice which my hon. friend has adopted, of making this house the sounding board for any grievances which he has against citizens of Canada, must be taken notice of, at least to the extent of one saying a word for those who cannot speak for themselves.

All I want to say in this connection is, that, regardless of what is my hon. friend's opinion of Mr. Dunning, and regardless of the insinuations which he has made, I believe I shall receive general approbation from the people of Canada when I say that no citizen who has been in public life was held in higher esteem by the people of Canada generally than the gentleman whom he has attacked this afternoon. Through many years of fine public service, in the legislature of Saskatchewan, as Minister of Railways, and as Minister of Finance in the government of Canada, Mr. Dunning stands in need of no encomiums from me. My purpose is simply to take notice of the fact that he has been attacked this afternoon. I know that citizens generally will feel, as I do, that the attack is entirely unwarranted, is quite out of place, and that the subject regarding which Mr. Dunning's name has been introduced is not a matter with which the time of this house need be taken up, especially at this particular stage of the session.

The hon. member asked a question with regard to my trip overseas. May I tell him that I did not go over there to settle financial questions. I do not recall that a single financial question was discussed when I was in Great Britain, although there may have been one or two financial matters incidental to the subjects with which I was dealing. What I did go to England for, as I endeavoured to tell the house when I came back, was to see the troops over there, to consult with the commanders in the field, to meet General McNaughton and his officers and men, to discuss the matter of organization with Canadian military headquarters, and to ascertain what further we could do in connection with our pledge to help in the war to the limit of our ability. I endeavoured to carry out these purposes. In doing so I interviewed from time to time quite a number of members of the British government and staff officials, and discussed fully what Canada might do to render further assistance. I have given, I believe, quite a full account of that to the people of this country and to the house, and I do not propose to take up time this afternoon in rehearsing it.

The hon. member mentioned another gentleman who is not here to answer for himself—Colonel Magee. He suggested that Colonel Magee was taken on the staff of the Department of National Defence as a financial adviser. Let me tell him that I occupied the position of Minister of Finance for about nine months. If I had wanted financial advisers, I can think of very few whom I would rather have had, from the point of view of finance and business, than Colonel Magee. But I do not recall having even talked with Colonel Magee when I was Minister of Finance, because assistance of that kind was not what I wanted. I may, of course, have met him on the street, but that is all. When I came to the Department of National Defence, however, last fall, I looked around for a citizen of Canada who had had some experience in connection with military matters, and who could be relied upon as having the confidence of his fellow citizens, and I found him in Colonel Magee, a man who had raised a battalion, who had taken that battalion overseas, and who had rendered sterling service in England and in France with the fourth Canadian division. Following that, Colonel Magee came home and took a special interest in connection with training: I believe he is one of the men who was chiefly responsible for the success of the officers' training corps in Montreal. The result was that I asked Colonel Magee to come to Ottawa in the capacity of executive assistant. He accepted, and I was glad of it. I believe I shall have the approval of hon. members generally when I say that no man could have filled that position more worthily and unselfishly or more acceptably to members of the house and to all the people with whom he has come in contact. He has not been called upon to advise upon a single financial matter of any kind or description in connection with the Department of National Defence. His services have been exercised purely in connection with matters of military administration training and the many details which come up from time to time in the department in connection with which his experience and knowledge of military matters can be of advantage.

My hon. friend made some remark to the effect that I have said that we were not to send any more men overseas. I do not know where he gets that statement. It does not appear in Hansard nor in any other published statement of mine, and I am satisfied that I can say without reservation of any kind that I never made such a statement in my life. The argument, therefore, which my hon. friend based on that is totally fallacious. I stated when I came home that we would be sending men overseas. I have stated frequently that we have been sending men overseas. When my hon. friend asserts that somebody said that Britain did not need men but needed munitions, any statement of that kind was based on the knowledge that Canada had pledged the various formations whose dispatch overseas this house has approved as part of Canada's contribution and that that pledge would be kept.

With regard to this man Mr. McKerlie: I never saw him. As a matter of fact I know nothing whatever about him, except that two long questions were asked concerning him in the house, and the department got the answers from the files. My hon. friend may make any statement with regard to that which he sees fit. But I know that Mr. McKerlie was recommended to the responsible officers concerned by Colonel Sherman, who I understand was in charge of the ordnance training centre at that time. He was recommended first with relation to the job which he at first filled, and the title of which I have forgotten, and afterwards to be director of training at the new trade training school because he was regarded as having the technical knowledge necessary for the position. The officers who had charge of that organization are the officers responsible for making that recommendation, and Mr. McKerlie took up his new position in connection with that work. I do not believe that he is with the department at the present time. As a matter of fact—this will probably bring another outburst from my hon. friend—I think he is in the department of my colleague the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) at the present time—I do not know just in what capacity.

I had not intended to speak at this length, but I felt it was due to these gentlemen that I should say what I have said.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Before the minister takes his seat, may I recall to him that he made one notable omission. A very savage and bitter attack was made on the Right Hon. A. B. Purvis by the member for Témiscouata. Mr. Purvis is not here to answer for himself.

Mr. POULIOT: I rise to a question of privilege. The leader of the opposition has no right to use the word "savage," and I want him to withdraw it at once.

Mr. RALSTON: As a matter of fact I did notice it but I really could not tell from what the hon. member was saying whether it was Mr. Purvis that he was attacking or Mr. Dunning. I thought it was Mr. Dunning.

An hon. MEMBER: Both.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Purvis did happen to be in England when I was there—

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. RALSTON: That proves something. I did not know that he was going to be there and he did not know that I was going to be there. As a matter of fact, I had dinner with him on one occasion—

Mr. POULIOT: Hear, hear.

Mr. RALSTON: —and at that time he was good enough to give me a statement—by the way, my colleague the Minister of Munitions and Supply was not there. That was a notable omission. Mr. Purvis was good enough to give me, in the way in which he can give it quickly, concisely and comprehensively, the fullest statement possible with regard to production in the United States and with regard to the needs of Britain with respect to munitions and supplies. I do not know when I have spent an evening which was more useful in connection with the work that I was doing, and it gave me an idea of how we could integrate our production with that of the United States and our needs with the needs of Britain. I kept that information for my friend the Minister of Munitions and Supply when he came. I need not say more than this, that Mr. Purvis, notwithstanding the hon. member's opinion of him, just before he left England received a full recognition from the British government by being made a right honourable member of His Majesty's Privy Council—

Mr. POULIOT: I rose to a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RALSTON: —and that was done, as I understand it, because under a resolution of this house it was not thought desirable to offer him an honour of a different description. That honour was done him in tribute to the work which he had accomplished for the cause of Britain and for those who are associated with her in this war. I do not think that anyone stands higher in the opinion of the British government, or indeed of the people of Canada, than Mr. Purvis for the work he has done and is still carrying on.

Mr. POULIOT: Not in mine.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that this is—

Mr. POULIOT: I rose to a question of privilege.

Mr. RALSTON: I understand that this is an instance in which one can speak of other things than the immediate matter under discussion. This morning two questions were asked when I was not here, and I might be permitted to reply to them now.

One question was asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) with regard to recruiting. Let me give to the house the figures I received this morning. Up to date 32 per cent of the number required have been recruited and actually attested. The total is 10,344, and that does not include those that enlisted prior to the actual date on which I made a public appeal for recruits.

Mr. HOMUTH: When the minister says, attested, does that mean those who passed A-1?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes. That does not include a large number—I will not give it—who had been enlisted on account of the quota, which is one of those provided for in the 32,000 for whom I called. I still believe, and I have spoken to the hon. member about it, that it is not in the public interest, nor would any good purpose be served by doing so at the present time, to publish the figures for each particular district. As I intimated to the house the other day, however, the figures are going to all districts so that they know exactly what their standing is. I find on examination that in some districts the local committees are just getting underway now. I attended a meeting which one of the members was good enough to call the other night in one particular district where they were making plans less than a week ago. Yesterday was the biggest day we have had in recruiting since the call was made, and I am advised that the momentum is increasing. That is as regards recruiting.

The other question was asked by the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Church) with reference to transportation of soldiers. I intended to make a statement in this regard on my estimates, but since the question was asked I would request the house to listen to the statement now.

A request was made in this house some time ago when the war appropriation bill was discussed that consideration be given to some amelioration of conditions in connection with fares charged soldiers, particularly on embarkation leave. That is what was referred to especially, although the request in some instances went so far as to include free transportation for soldiers on all leave. As an alternative to that there was a discussion with regard to the possibility of giving free transportation for a limited distance; that is to say, giving a zone rate or free transportation within a certain area so as to cut down expenses for those who have to travel long distances. There was a third suggestion which I promised to take up, and that was consultation with the railways to see if some substantial reduction could not be made in fares for soldiers, at least for embarkation leave, and possibly annual leave as well. I stated then, and I think I am correct, that the only occasion on which free transportation was granted in the last war was when troops were proceeding on harvest leave, and that was granted only in 1915 and 1916, and affected only the first three hundred miles.

I said at the time that the pay and allowances of soldiers was larger in this war than in the last, that the value of the dollar was greater in this war than in the last, and that these circumstances had to be taken into consideration in connection with the question of transportation. I undertook to consult the railways, however, and we have consulted them. All three ministers representing the defence services have been in consultation with the railway executives with the result that, I believe, an arrangement has been arrived at which the house will regard as meeting the situation.

There has been a misapprehension with regard to the present rates which men pay when going on leave. The public in travelling on the railways get a return fare not for a single fare, not for fare and a half, but for double fare less 10 per cent. Under the present rates the soldiers get a return fare for a single fare. The popular conception is that the return fare is based on three cents a mile one way or one and a half cents a mile both ways, a soldier paying one fare to make the trip there and back. That assumption is not correct. The railway fares are based on competitive rates, and there are many instances in which the fare is not three cents a mile one way or one and a half cents return. Moreover, the soldier can take advantage of excursion rates the same as anyone else.

Let me give a sample or two of the mileage rates in force at the present time available to soldiers. From Halifax to Vancouver the rate is not one and a half cents; as I have said, the soldier would get a trip to Vancouver for a single fare. That does not amount to one and a half cents but to 1·03. From Montreal to Vancouver it is 1·03 and from Debert to Montreal 1·06 a mile. Debert to Winnipeg is 1·1 a mile; Sussex to Quebec, 1·03; Sussex to Toronto, 1·10; Montreal to Winnipeg, 1·18; Borden to Winnipeg, 1·05. The only case I see on this partial list in which the full one and a half cents is payable is from Borden to Montreal.

These are some examples to show the rates paid by the soldier for railway fares at the present time. I have here table after table showing what the rates are from almost any point to any other point. But I think I can say that the average charge to soldiers under the present arrangements is not more than one and a quarter cents for the whole mileage there and back, or two and a half cents for the one-way mileage.

In the discussion with the railways we had particularly in mind the matter of embarkation leave, but we felt we should take up annual leave as well. We had a consultation with the railways by the ministers of the three service departments and their officers, and this is the arrangement which has been arrived at, which will give a very substantial benefit to sailors, soldiers and airmen. As I have said, the rates average about one and a quarter cents; some are below one cent. Speaking generally the effect of the arrangement which has been made is that in respect of annual leave and embarkation leave the soldier will pay only one-third of that low rate; the remaining two-thirds will be contributed equally by the government and the railway. That is the general arrangement. The railways are knocking off one-third, the government pays one-third and the soldier pays one-third, which means that in the case of a fare of 1·03 cents a mile the soldier pays about a third of a cent a mile.

Mr. NEILL: When will that come into effect?

Mr. RALSTON: It will come into effect at once. The administrative arrangements are being made now.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Will the men of the forces have the advantage of reduced fares for sleeping berths?

Mr. RALSTON: No change has been made in connection with that matter. I could give the hon. gentleman a schedule of that, comparing the three services; it is a very long and complicated subject, depending on size of party, length of trip, and the ranks concerned.

May I read this memorandum with respect to the arrangement which has been reached. As a result of the discussion the terms of the proposal are as follows:

1. Personnel of army, navy and air services proceeding on embarkation leave will be granted transportation at one-third of the existing reduced rates which are, round trip at the price of single fare.

2. If embarkation does not occur within six months of the date of enlistment, personnel entitled to ordinary leave or furlough in accordance with the regulations of the three services will be granted the same reduced fare concession, that is, one-third of existing rates, when proceeding on such ordinary leave or furlough, provided that when embarkation leave is eventually granted to such personnel they will be entitled to such one-third fare for such leave, if the date of such embarkation leave is not less than six months after the date of such ordinary leave or furlough.

3. Such one-third fare will apply in all other cases of ordinary leave or furlough where the date of such leave is not less than one year after the next previous embarkation leave or ordinary leave or furlough in respect of which such one-third fare has been granted.

4. The one-third fare concession will not be available under any conditions to personnel having less than six months service except for embarkation leave.

If it should happen that a man is going overseas within even less than six months after enlistment he gets his embarkation leave on the one-third fare.

5. Personnel granted leave or furlough under any other conditions will continue to pay existing mileage rates.

6. The one-third fare will apply only from the location of a man's unit, ship or establishment, to his bona fide home as defined in the regulations of his own service.

I put this on record so that hon. gentlemen may see it. I think it represents a very substantial and I hope acceptable concession to our sailors, soldiers and airmen in connection with transportation fares on leave.

Mr. POULIOT: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) to withdraw the word "savage" that he applied to me.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have had this under consideration. Under standing order 41 there are a number of words which have been held to be words which should not be used in debates in the house. It is true that among these words listed in paragraph 298 both in connection with this house and the British house, the word "savage" does not appear. It is perhaps of a milder type than some of those which do appear, yet this list has some similarity to the word used. I think the word should not have been used and I am quite sure that the hon. leader of the opposition will withdraw it.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I did not say that the hon. gentleman was a savage. That is an adjective which I used to describe his attack on a certain gentleman outside this house. If it was not strong enough I will substitute something else for it. If it was too strong and Your Honour says I should withdraw, I bow to Your Honour's judgment. I am not yet conscious of having been guilty of any violation of the rules of the house.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): In rising to answer the questions asked by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) this morning, perhaps I should make one or two remarks about the speech of the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). The hon. member has taken it upon himself to raise the bogy of railway amalgamation. Just why he found it necessary to mention my name in that connection and to slander a few of the officers in my department, I cannot imagine.

I occupied the positions of Minister of Railways and Minister of Transport for more than five years. I think there is nothing in my record in that office that would indicate that I had then or have had since any sinister plot for amalgamating the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Canadian National Railways, or for paying out the shareholders of the Canadian Pacific Railway from Canadian funds.

When I entered the government in 1935 I had certain business interests in this country. In order to qualify for the position I accepted, I disposed of all those business interests finally and irrevocably. Since 1935 I have had no business interests whatever in this country other than the job I have occupied as a member of the government.

My trip to England was for the purpose of carrying out certain business of the Department of Munitions and Supply. My hon. friend placed a sinister interpretation on a newspaper article which stated that I went to England for a personal reason. I do not mind telling the house what that personal reason was. It had to do with the timing of my departure on the trip. I timed my departure as I did in order to spend Christmas with my oldest boy who was graduating from Naval College.

I did not meet Mr. Purvis in London. He had been there and had departed before I arrived. The fact that he had been in London had nothing to do with my trip to London. While in London I discussed the affairs of the Canadian Pacific Railway with no one whatever. The discussions I had there had nothing to do with any matter of finance pertaining to Canada. I particularly resent the slander against Mr. Purvis. Mr. Purvis, at the beginning of this war, at the request of the British government severed all connection with his business interests in Canada, retired from the presidency of the company for which he had been responsible prior to the war, went to Washington and has, I think, devoted all his working hours to the interest of the government of Great Britain. I know of no one who has had a more profound effect on the defence of Great Britain, as it is carried on in the United States, than has Mr. Arthur Purvis, and I very much regret that any hon. member of the House of Commons would gratuitously use his name as it has been used to-day. I also resent the fact that men who give their time and their service to my department should be subjected to slander in this house.

I do not know what the hon. member for Témiscouata has given up in order to serve in this war effort, but I do know something of what the men he has mentioned here have given up in order to give their time to the work of my department.

The suggestion has been made that there is something sinister in the department, and that I have bargained with the chairman of the committee on war expenditures to leave the affairs of my department alone. I may say that if anyone has a suggestion as to anything sinister in my department, the doors of the department are open for any proper investigation; but until something of a sinister nature is brought to light, I very much resent the implication that something sinister actually exists.

After all, it is part of my job to build up across Canada the thought that munitions of war are being bought honestly, efficiently and at reasonable prices. I doubt very much if any man is doing a patriotic duty who, without any foundation in fact or any foundation whatever upon which to base his statement, spreads the story across Canada that the buying of war munitions and the war business generally of this government are not being conducted honestly and efficiently. I make that suggestion to all hon. members in the house.

If there is reasonable evidence that that is not the situation, then I am prepared to meet any charge in that direction. I suggest, however, that those who depend upon insinuations are not performing any real service in the war effort of Canada. I apologize for having taken the time of the house to make these few remarks. I doubt if they were really called for, but as I have occasion to be on my feet for another purpose, I have taken the opportunity to make them.

This morning the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) asked for a statement as to the position of armament production. I have before me a brief statement which was prepared for another purpose, but which perhaps will place before hon. members the information desired, and I shall proceed to place it on Hansard. This summary was written for the purpose of comparing the position of Canada one year ago with the position of Canada to-day with respect to the production of armaments.

One year ago armament orders in Canada totalled less than $60,000,000. War production consisted merely of a few types of shells, together with a modest output of small arms ammunition. During the past twelve months we have built up a gigantic armament industry in Canada. Over $400,000,000 has been spent in constructing crown properties for the manufacture of shells, guns, tanks, automotive equipment, bombs and machine tools. Total war orders placed in Canada to date exceed $1,700,000,000.

To-day we are turning out Bren machine guns in great quantities; trench mortars are being turned out by a plant in one of the smaller manufacturing cities of Quebec; two types of anti-aircraft gun barrels are in substantial production, and both types of complete anti-aircraft guns will be in production by September; 500-pound aerial bombs are being manufactured and filled in our own shell-filling plant; naval anti-aircraft gun mountings, highly intricate pieces of equipment involving the manufacture of 2,000 separate parts, are in production. To-day I can tell the house that Canada has already produced her first 25-pounder artillery gun, and this gun has passed all its firing tests. Before this month is out, these guns and carriages will be produced in considerable numbers. I can also announce for the first time that in another plant our production of 2-pounder guns has been commenced, and that the first consignment of these guns is being shipped overseas. This month has also witnessed the initial production of depth charges and mines.

A week or two ago Canada produced her first infantry tank, and this production is rapidly stepping up to considerable volume. Before the month is over, we shall have produced our first Canadian-made cruiser tank. It may be of interest to mention here that whereas the United States, Great Britain and Canada united to produce each its own version of a common type cruiser tank, Great Britain has already adopted the Canadian version, and the United States has asked for a sample Canadian tank for test purposes, with the likelihood that United States will also adopt the Canadian design.

Canada is now producing small arms ammunition at the rate of many hundreds of million rounds annually. We are also producing ten different calibres of shell, at the rate of millions of rounds a year. We are also producing the explosives required to fill these shells, together with cartridge cases, primers, fuses and all the shell components. Hon. members will appreciate the magnitude of the job when I state that each month we produce about 25,000,000 individual parts of shells. These shells are being produced in Canadian plants.

A new government plant has recently poured the first optical glass ever produced in Canada, and is in substantial production on optical and other instruments, and on secret radio devices. We are also manufacturing anti-submarine nets and equipment and mine-sweeping gear. By September we shall be in substantial production in practically every type of gun used in this war, from rifles to the largest type of anti-aircraft guns.

A year ago Canadian orders had been placed for some 9,000 automotive war vehicles, of which less than one-third had been delivered. To-day we have already delivered over 120,000 vehicles, and still have on order another 80,000 vehicles. The automotive industry is also delivering universal carriers in substantial quantity.

A year ago Canada had a small production of explosives from existing plants, and one major explosives plant was under construction. To-day nineteen plants are either in operation or nearing completion, involving a programme of $110,000,000. Ten of the nineteen plants are already in operation, and in another month the entire programme will have been practically completed. To give hon. members an idea of the physical size of this programme,

I may say that several of our major plants each occupy an area of from one to two square miles. Our output of military explosives for this year will exceed the entire output of Canada during the period of the last great war.

A year ago our aircraft industry was turning out about two aircraft a week. To-day the industry is producing more than forty planes a week, of which about twenty are fighting craft, and the remainder, training planes. The industry is also servicing aeroplanes and engines used in the air training schools, which is in itself no small project.

A year ago Canada had converted a few smaller vessels to naval use, and ship contracts had been placed to the extent of about $50,000,000. To-day, of eighty corvettes on order, fifty-nine have been launched. Of the sixty mine-sweepers on order, twenty-four have been launched. Three merchant vessels have been converted into auxiliary cruisers, and twenty-seven other boats have been converted to naval needs. In addition, we are building twenty-four patrol vessels and twelve mine-sweepers of a special type. Work is under way on a cargo vessel programme, involving an expenditure of over $200,000,000. We have also in progress a substantial small boat programme. Seventeen major shipyards and forty-five smaller shipyards are occupied on this programme. The major shipyards are being substantially enlarged to accommodate the cargo vessel programme.

Our industrial expansion and other war activities have involved a very large building programme. My department has placed construction contracts involving an expenditure of over $120 million for the erection of some 3,000 buildings. More than 100 aerodromes have been constructed.

We Canadians are accustomed to think of Canadian industry as being on a small scale compared with those of Britain and the United States. We need have no inferiority complex in the matter of armament plants. To illustrate, we have in Canada the largest factory in the world producing machine guns. We have the largest plant in the English-speaking countries producing field artillery, and this is the only plant anywhere manufacturing field artillery from scrap iron to the finished product. One of our government arsenals has the highest output of small arms ammunition in the English-speaking countries. Our chemical and explosives plants are among the largest to be found anywhere. Our war production has been organized on a vast scale, but we have not overlooked the small shop. Our "bits and pieces" programme has brought work not only to the small commercial machine-shops, but to machine-shops built for the private use of newsprint, mining and other domestic industries. We are constantly in search of new productive capacity, and if any has been overlooked, my officers would like to be advised of it.

To sum up the situation, I think we can be reasonably satisfied with our armament programme. Generally speaking, the plants have come into production as anticipated. I had thought that we would reach our production peak this summer, but as the months have gone by we have been called upon to assume additional responsibilities for new types of armaments. So far as we can see now, we shall still have an expanding programme running into the spring months of next year. I may say, however, that to-day production is up to any anticipation that I have ever had, taking the programme as a whole, and I believe that Canadian industry is capable of still further expansion. Steps are being taken to bring our output up to the new maximum that we can now visualize.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything on the motion to go into supply, but since the ministers have been good enough to make statements regarding the questions I propounded this morning, I shall take this opportunity to bring to the attention of the government some of the reasons why those questions were asked. They were not asked to provoke the kind of statements that we have received. I did not intend to ask questions in a manner which would merely invite an answer to the query regarding recruiting, or invite the kind of statement which the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) has just made. As a matter of fact, I think we have had too many of these statements. Statements of this type have not given to the house, and to the country through hon. members, the kind of information the country is seeking. What prompted my questions this morning was the fact that across Canada there is growing a feeling that all is not well with our own war effort. People read the newspapers, and they see the frank confessions of failure, if you will, that are made from time to time in the British House of Commons by Mr. Churchill and his colleagues. Then they pick up our own papers and read that all is going well with our own war effort. In my opinion public confidence in the government and in this house is being undermined. We are running the risk of losing that very essential thing needed to win the war—and we are going to win it—known as morale. The purpose of my questions this morning was to get a complete statement of our war effort in such terms, if they could be given publicly, as would give our people a more exact understanding of Canada's effort and vital needs than they now have.

From time to time there come to me, and I am sure there come also to other hon. members, opinions as to why men are not joining the army in larger numbers or why production lags. I believe a different type of educational campaign should be used across Canada in order to keep our young men and workers filled with that idealism which is necessary to carry on a struggle of this description. That is not being given to them. In Great Britain the morale of the people has been built up; they have been convinced that this war is a struggle for something worth while, that they will not return again to the pre-war conditions of unemployment, of want, of riding the rods as we say in this country. In my opinion these things have not been stated with sufficient definiteness to imbue our own people with a similar challenge. We are remote from the bombed areas of Great Britain, and that may have something to do with the present feeling that exists across the country.

Young men who attempted to join the army in the early days of the war were told that their services were not wanted. That confirmed the opinion that there was no immediate need for the recruiting of men. Those of us who believed that Canada's part in this war ought to be the providing of munitions, supplies and other aid without profit to this land, hoped that the government would organize this country so that we would be able to plan on the basis of a maximum output of those supplies, so that we would be able to give the people an idea of what was actually required in the way of equipment and manpower. To-day many people know that the men who have been enlisted have not been equipped in a manner which would lead us to believe that we have sufficient equipment for all the men whom we have placed under arms. This interferes with recruiting.

Some men were recruited and, after being in the army for some months, were returned to civilian life on account of some physical disability. Many found themselves again in the bread-line; others found that the job they had relinquished in order to join the army had been filled by somebody else. This condition will be partly remedied by the legislation which the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) announced this morning.

Then we read in the paper or hear over the air the statement that the first heavy tank has come off the assembly line. People are asking how many more tanks are coming off the assembly line, because there is a belief, well based or otherwise, that the production of the tank was a special effort and that we are not turning out the equipment which we ought to be turning out for our men. In fact, it is said that the tank did not come off the assembly line at all; that it was made specially for the occasion. That has been widely said across the country.

What I wanted to-day was not a general statement such as the minister has made that "production has come up to our expectations," but to ask that, either in a closed session of this house or otherwise, we should be given specific information with regard to our production of war equipment. I believe this is the only parliament within the British commonwealth which has not had a closed session in order that the government might inform the representatives of the people as to exactly what is going on. I know there is to be one in New Zealand to-morrow. That was announced over the air from Great Britain at noon to-day. I think I express the feeling which is held by many hon. members, and, I know, by the members of our own group because we have discussed it, that we as members of this house know no more of the actual position with regard to the war and our war effort than does the ordinary man in the street who reads newspaper and magazine articles regarding it. In fact, as we have not the time to read them, perhaps we know even less than the man in the street who reads these articles. Frankly I am disappointed that no arrangements have been made for a comprehensive survey of the present war position both overseas and in this country, and that this house has not been taken into the fullest confidence of the government in relation to the supply of equipment and the necessities in the way of supplies for the next few months.

We are facing, as we all know, probably the most dangerous period that our commonwealth of nations has ever faced, and yet we in this parliament of Canada have not been informed of the situation as it exists across the ocean and as it exists in our own country, or to what extent it is expected that we shall be able to provide the maximum aid possible in our war effort during the next three to six months.

The purpose of my question was not mere curiosity. I did not particularly wish to know where recruiting was slack. I asked my question in that form so that we as members might be given a comprehensive view of what was going on all across the country. Nor did I ask about production out of mere idle curiosity, but because I am convinced that the country feels that all is not well with our war effort and that this house should be informed so that our members may be in a position, when they go back to their constituencies, to render the greatest possible service in this dominion by assisting to maintain the morale of our Canadian people.

I said a few minutes ago to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) that in my opinion the morale of this country was not as good as it ought to be, and I am firmly convinced that one of the reasons for that is that we have not been put in a position to place before the people of Canada our war effort in the terms which they had expected.

Having said that much about the material side, let me repeat my opinion that we have not maintained the morale of our people to the fullest extent. If I may again refer to Britain, where some of us still have friends and relatives who write to us, again and again they tell us that when the war is over, a new and better England, or Britain in the larger term, will be born. The people of England are thoroughly convinced of that, and for that they are prepared to sacrifice and to fight. But we in this house have not given our Canadian people the same assurance. I said a few days ago, and I repeat, that I should like to see this House of Commons pledge itself unanimously and solemnly declare that when this war is over, every power that lies within this parliament—and all power finally rests within this parliament—will be used to ensure that every Canadian shall have the right to a job, and if he is sick or cannot find a job, shall have the right to an adequate and decent living. If we made that simple pledge in this parliament, our people would understand better what we hope for when this war is won.

Mr. HANSELL: But instead they are preparing the people for a depression.

Mr. COLDWELL: As my hon. friend says, the people are constantly being told that when this war ends there will be a great depression; in fact, some of our advertising for war savings certificates has been of that very nature—"Save now in order that you may protect yourself when the war is over." That kind of thing is not good for the morale of our people.

I had hoped that we should have been given a full statement regarding our war effort, that we might know the exact situation regarding the number of tanks that are being turned out; the number of anti-aircraft guns that there are in this country and the number that are being made in this country; the number of aeroplanes that are actually being completed in this country; how many fighter planes, how many bomber planes, and so forth; and the number of every other type of war equipment that is being produced in this country. If we cannot be given that information in an open session, I think we might be given such information in a closed session of this house.

Mr. RALSTON: I think my hon. friend is missing some information. Some of the information he has asked for has been given. The matter of tanks was dealt with in the MacMillan report, and the minister of munitions has stated to-day what the production of armaments is. My hon. friend also mentioned aeroplanes. In the statement that was read by my colleague it was set out that twenty service planes and twenty training planes were being made a week.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, I know.

Mr. RALSTON: And those were two of the items my hon. friend mentioned.

Mr. COLDWELL: I mentioned both those items, yes, but there is still a feeling in the country that the production of essential equipment ought to have been speeded up in view of the lack of it overseas at the present time. As a matter of fact, in the House of Commons in Great Britain yesterday the Right Hon. Winston Churchill appealed for greater production of equipment. He pointed out that the loss of Crete was due to the fact that we could not cover our operations there because we lacked planes and were insufficiently supplied with tanks. We may be living up to estimates which were made several months ago; we may be maintaining our schedule, but it seems to me that every effort should be made to produce in advance of that schedule. I mentioned particularly the matter of tanks because, as I have said, there is a belief, which I think is well-founded, that we are not producing heavy tanks, as many people suppose, "from the assembly line." Perhaps the Minister of Munitions and Supply can clear that up.

Mr. HOWE: Yes. There seems to be a popular misconception of what is meant by "assembly line" as applied to tanks. The impression appears to be that there is a belt running down a huge factory, with parts feeding in and tanks coming off it every two minutes. Tanks cannot be built on that kind of equipment. They are tremendous affairs; I believe that each tank contains something like 2,800 separate parts. Those parts flow in from a considerable number of factories to a central assembly plant, where they are put together. Perhaps they will be placed in a line to be assembled, but certainly they will be assembled one at a time. There is nothing of the nature of the automobile assembly line. We fully expect to turn out three tanks a day, but my hon. friend will at once realize that the process is not that of a travelling belt or anything of that sort.

The victory of getting the first tank together is that we know that the parts are complete, that they fit, and that all adjustments have been made. That is the significance of the assembling of the first tank. The others will follow more rapidly, because we can proceed with more confidence. I may add that we expect to have by the end of this month eight of that particular type of tank out of the Angus shops, and during next month we should be up to our full production.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is just the kind of information which I think the house should be receiving.

Mr. HOWE: There are so many types of production that it is hard to cover them all. If hon. members have specific questions, I shall be glad to answer them if I can.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have not seen these tanks in production. I confess, having seen belt lines in the making of other vehicles, my mental picture was exactly what the minister says it should not be: in other words, that of an assembly line. The purpose of my question this morning was to ascertain the difficulties which the government is facing in order that we may explain those difficulties to the people and assist the government in every way to maintain morale, interest and enthusiasm for what, after all, is a just cause. That, I fear, is what has not been done this session. For example, I am sure that the debate we had yesterday does not assist in that regard at all. It was a discussion of the war effort from an angle which is not informative, and may, indeed, be defeatist in its effect upon our people. I urge the government, even after these two statements have been made, to take the house, through the Prime Minister, into its confidence regarding the progress of the war, and have the ministers supplement, before we leave, what they have already told us with more specific and detailed information than we have had up to the present time.

Mr. C. E. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Before this question is finally dropped, I wish to say a word or two. It is certainly true that we are facing a very serious crisis, and I do not believe there was ever a time in the history of the British empire when the assistance of every one was more urgently needed. One of the greatest dangers is that the people will be lulled into a false sense of security.

As the hon. member who has just resumed his seat has observed, we are giving the impression that we are doing everything humanly possible to produce all sorts of munitions and supplies, limited only by the full capacity of our ability. Personally I do not believe that impression is correct, and none of us should leave a stone unturned if it will aid in the increase of our preparations.

There is a possibility, as the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) suggested, that some of us have a wrong impression about these tanks. I have never visited a plant which makes tanks; but when I heard the expression in the house that they were "coming off the assembly line", I connected it with the experience I have had of visiting automobile manufacturing plants where cars are assembled by a process which is so described. I believe that is the general conception of the term, and with that impression in mind, people build up confidence with such statements as this, "Well now, we are just pouring these tanks off, and certainly we are doing a wonderful job."

Mr. HOWE: May I interrupt a moment? I do not think I ever used the expression "coming off the assembly line". I have seen it in the press, and the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce) used the expression this morning in asking a question. But I never referred to tanks "coming off the assembly line".

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That is what the papers have said.

Mr. HOWE: No doubt.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): It was not my intention to accuse the minister of doing so. What I am pointing out is the danger of our people being lulled into a false sense of security. I believe that such a state of mind constitutes one of the dangers we are facing, one of the reasons why we have to go out so strongly for the war loan, and to appeal so much for recruits. When one goes to the movies and sees pictures of machine-shops with everybody working at full capacity, one can understand how people get the impression that that is typical of the way in which our production is proceeding. They become overconfident, and say among themselves, "Just let Hitler come over here, and we will show him we are prepared."

Mr. RALSTON: Will my hon. friend allow me to interrupt him? If he will read what I said in this house on March 31 last, he will not find any justification for an attitude of that kind. I have looked up to-day the report I made to the house in connection with equipment, and I am sure it is far from lulling anybody to sleep. I indicated that there were serious shortages in equipment, and I related how we were trying to improvise in the meantime. My hon. friend has missed that; perhaps it is so long ago.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I may have missed the minister's statement to-day, but I remember what he said on that particular occasion and used his very words when I was speaking to the public. Therefore I have not overlooked that phase of the matter.

Mr. RALSTON: The hon. member used which "very words"?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The minister's words with regard to lack of equipment and supply. I think he used the expression that the time would come when we would need more.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am just speaking from memory; but when the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) made the statement just now that everything was up to expectation, or at least was as much as he expected, I must confess that it is not as good as I expected. I also visited some of the camps, and I was not satisfied.

Mr. KIRK: Was the hon. member in a position to judge?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I was there. Were you?

Mr. KIRK: Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I can name some of the things with which I do not believe the hon. member will be satisfied.

Mr. KIRK: The question is, are we in a position to judge?

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am not going to bring up these matters, but I have them vividly in mind. So long as we lack equipment and the materials for that equipment, everything humanly possible should be done. I shall never be satisfied so long as there is in this country a plant not working twenty-four hours a day that should be working, and so long as there is an able-bodied man not working who should be working. Only then shall we have reached our maximum capacity.

Let me discuss for a moment a question I mentioned to the Minister of Munitions and Supply some time ago. I refer to the return for which I asked, which was passed, with reference to the Dominion Bridge company and its connection with the rolling mill in Calgary. For some time past, ever since the national war services department was started, there has been a great drive to get scrap iron in the prairies for use in the manufacture of munitions and supplies of various kinds, and this question of the Calgary rolling mill was brought to the attention of the government many months ago. I could not understand why that mill was not opened. There were all sorts of excuses. It was said that the plant had been there for a number of years and that it was not economically sound to open it, and other reasons were given. That is what led me to ask for the return. I was positive; in fact, I had been informed on good authority, that the matter had been drawn to the attention of the government by the company itself. When I received the return there was only one letter. The minister has promised to look into the matter further. I would have waited for a more complete file, but I did not know when I should have an opportunity to discuss the subject apart from this.

I wish to direct the attention of the house to certain parts of this letter. I shall not read the whole letter because hon. members can see it for themselves. The letter was written to the government on April 14, 1941, and so far as I know, it has not been answered. I say that because this is supposed to be a complete file.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is the writer?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The manager of the Pacific division of the Dominion Bridge company, Mr. A. S. Gentles. I quote:

> We understand that your committee is investigating the possibility of the establishment of a bar mill on the coast to utilize available scrap-steel, and are considering suggestions to this end.

I did not know that the house was considering any suggestions to establish a bar mill on the coast.

Mr. HOWE: To whom is the letter addressed?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): To. L. W. Killam, British Columbia committee on war production, Vancouver. This communication was tabled as part of the correspondence between the dominion government and the company. It is dated April 14. The first intimation that the company had was that an arrangement had been made for the establishment of a bar mill at Vancouver. They say:

> Our company, through a subsidiary, has for a number of years successfully operated a bar mill at Selkirk, Manitoba, converting scrap and pig iron using open hearth furnaces. We also have at Calgary a similar type rolling mill which, due to economic conditions, we have not operated for some time—

This is the important part.

> —and which is available for immediate production at that point.

Here we are in this house declaring that we need these materials now. We started a campaign to get scrap iron, advocating that members go out and assist the organization in getting scrap iron from all the provinces for conversion into steel so that we might have immediate production. It was very urgent, the Minister of National War Services told us. If he told us that, he must have been right; I would not contradict him. But let us take his statement in conjunction with what the company says. Speaking of this mill at Calgary, the writer of the letter says, as I have quoted:

. . . and which is available for immediate production at that point.

There is no mistaking that. We could have used that scrap from the prairie provinces at the Calgary mill immediately. The whole thing was well established. The writer goes on:

In 1933, we fully investigated the economics of moving our Calgary mill to Vancouver. It is adaptable either to open hearth or electric furnace operation.

There was no difficulty in either of these because we have the electrical power at Calgary, and we also have open hearth appliances. But the government did not take advantage of that. If we needed steel we should certainly have started immediately; if we did not need steel, then the Minister of National War Services was deceiving the country. I cannot see any way out of it, and I believe the minister was quite sincere, because as the results have shown, there is an abundance of this scrap iron at Calgary. But the Minister of Munitions and Supply was going to allow this company to move their plant from Calgary to Vancouver. I do not know whether that is still the intention or not; the Minister of Munitions and Supply could answer that question. I hope he has changed his mind in that regard. Let me quote further from the letter:

Owing to the temporary conditions created by the war and as a war measure, our company, subject to ratification by our directors, is prepared at our expense to move rolling mill equipment from Calgary to the coast, set up and operate a steel mill at or near Vancouver on the following basis.

I understood the minister to say the other day that no cost to the government would be involved. Let us see the conditions under which the mill was to be set up at the coast. First:

That the government policy in regard to scrap be such as to assure a continuous supply of steel scrap on the coast of from 30,000 to 40,000 tons per year.

They had to guarantee that, and my information is that they can do it. About 50,000 tons of steel are already at Calgary, and I believe the estimated amount that could be collected was over 200,000 tons. There is no reason why that mill should not be operating to-day at Calgary.

The second condition was:

That the government permit the complete write-off of the new capital invested against the mill profits or the consolidated profits of our company, within a period of not more than three years, preferably two years.

The Minister of Munitions and Supply told us there was no charge to the government; true, there was no capital outlay.

Mr. HOWE: To keep the record clear, may I point out that the letter was not addressed to myself. It was addressed to a gentleman on the Pacific coast who had a temporary assignment to act as chairman of a committee to recommend sources of production in British Columbia. I said that the government had made no commitment, and the government has made none. If the company want a write-off, there is the war-time depreciation board to which they must make application. It does not come under my department. If the company has war contracts, it is entitled to go to the board and get consideration. So far, however, as my department is concerned, we have no commitments to the Dominion Bridge company in connection with the Calgary rolling mill. It is the property of the Dominion Bridge company; no other concern in Canada has larger war contracts than the Dominion Bridge company, and if they could use this steel I assume they would. If they wish to move the mill to Vancouver, it is their business. So far as I know, that mill is no good to me in the making of munitions in this country. If anyone else can find a use for it, I shall not intervene in one way or another.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The minister speaks of it as being a business proposition and no concern of his department; but if this country needs steel, it is this government's business.

Mr. HOWE: We do not need that particular steel.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): If we do not need the steel, why are we fooling with this national war services scrap campaign? If we do not need the steel, it is time the people knew it, instead of asking the farmers to bring in scrap iron which is of no use and only making a profit for the railways and the junk dealers. I am glad that the minister said that, because I am not going to ask the farmers in my constituency to bring in scrap if we do not need it. I think the point is well put by the minister, and I am not going to say any more about it because I understand now that we do not need the steel.

Mr. HOWE: I said, we do not need that steel.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I understand now that the minister means that we do not need this scrap iron which it is the purpose of the salvage campaign to gather because we do not need the steel which would be produced from that scrap iron.

Mr. HOWE: I said nothing of the kind. I said that we did not need that steel. I have already spent much time and had many interviews regarding that steel mill at Calgary, which is in the position of a good many other steel mills in this country; it is not a modern piece of equipment. If anyone can operate it at a profit, there it is; they are quite welcome to it. I know of no one better able to operate it at a profit than the Dominion Bridge company, because they are the users of the finished product. There it is. As I say, it is not a modern mill; I have no particular interest in it as Minister of Munitions and Supply. If I needed a mill, I would want a modern mill that could use power efficiently and turn out material efficiently.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That may be true, but this company says that it is immediately available for production.

Mr. MAYHEW: As a member of that committee I think I could answer some of the hon. member's questions.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I think the minister is better qualified to answer. Then, if the hon. member wishes to add anything afterwards, it is within his right. I take this attitude. The minister says that so far as his department is concerned, they do not need the steel which would be made from that scrap iron. Then I can justly say to myself that the salvage campaign is just a bunch of rot; that is all it is; it is just deceiving the people, and I do not intend to be a party to it. There is not a thing that I will not do to help win this war, but I certainly am not going out to ask our people to give this scrap iron if it is not necessary. If we do not need that steel, then I am through so far as that part is concerned.

Mr. MAYHEW: So many references have been made to the rolling mill at Calgary that I should like to say a few words. To my understanding, the rolling mill where it is located is not of value because there is no place to use the output of that particular type of mill.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The company says something different.

Mr. MAYHEW: As the minister says, it is not a rolling mill of such type as I am sure is in the mind of the hon. member, a mill to roll sheets of any size. It is a small mill to roll bars and small angles. In British Columbia they have a very large programme of shipbuilding, and this mill will make the rivets for those ships. Each boat requires large numbers; the total is, I think, some 15,000 tons a year. They have also a nail plant in Vancouver, and it will make the wire for the nail plant. It will also make steel for reinforcement and small wares of that kind.

I happen to know Calgary and Alberta probably as well as the hon. gentleman. I am probably as loyal to it as he is and would be one of the last to attempt to move any factory from the city of Calgary to any other part of the country. But that piece of equipment has been idle in Calgary for a number of years. In Vancouver it can be put to valuable use at the present time.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Where is the scrap coming from?

Mr. MAYHEW: From British Columbia mainly. Some scrap from Alberta may go that way, but I think if hon. members investigate the idea of 200,000 tons of steel—steel, remember, not scrap iron—they will find it is very much exaggerated. I should be surprised if the scrap steel in Alberta amounted to more than 12,000 to 15,000 tons a year.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That is different from the information I got the other day from the city of Calgary.

Mr. MAYHEW: Let me go back to the beginning of this. It was the first year I was in this house when the estimates were brought down by the then Minister of National Defence, the present Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. Mackenzie). I suggested to him at that time that we put a complete embargo on scrap steel leaving this country, because if the equipment for which he was then asking the government was going to be needed, they would need the steel with which to make the bombs, shells and guns. That was how long ago this started. I have kept at it religiously ever since. When the committee was in Vancouver at the suggestion of the minister to outline a programme, I advocated electrical steel furnaces working twenty-four hours a day to produce approximately 50,000 tons annually. That amount would consume in three years the present available supply plus the annual accumulation over the three-year period. After that, it would have to go probably on an eight hours a day basis and the scrap steel accumulation in British Columbia, according to the information I have been able to gather from reliable sources, is nearly three times the accumulation of scrap steel in Alberta. We have at the present time in British Columbia a definite use for that steel. It is going to conserve the steel that will be made in eastern Canada, and, as the hon. member knows, steel is essential.

The President of the United States the other day asked the people of that country to increase their steel capacity by ten million tons. They have already increased it since the beginning of the war by about twenty-five million tons. We in Canada have increased our steel production by about 1,500,000 tons, and we are importing very large quantities.

The hon. gentleman now says that the gathering of scrap steel is not necessary. He says that he is not going to ask his people—

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I did not say that; the minister did.

Mr. MAYHEW: —to gather scrap iron. I say that if he does not do so, he is making a mistake.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Why?

Mr. MAYHEW: In the provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba this is a basic commodity—

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The minister said that it is not necessary.

Mr. MAYHEW: —and it should be accumulated, and eventually put to use. Anyone who says that it is not necessary to gather scrap iron and scrap steel is missing the point.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Page the Minister of Munitions and Supply, then.

Mr. MAYHEW: He asked it for a certain reason.

While I am on my feet I should like to make one or two further observations, because I have kept particularly quiet during this last part of the session.

I believe that the government and the people of Canada have made one mistake in this present war, namely, that they have underestimated entirely the capacity of the Canadian people to produce. A year ago we were saying that we did not have enough uniforms for our soldiers. What have we to-day? We have sufficient plants to supply all our men with uniforms, and to spare. We could double the amount. Two years ago we had thirteen boats; to-day we have over 200 naval boats in operation, all built in Canada. For a time we were turning boats off the ways at the rate of one a day. Would any person in Canada have said that we could have done that?

An hon. MEMBER: Yes.

Mr. MAYHEW: Would any of us have realized that we could turn out 190,000 transport vehicles to be sent all over the country?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): And we must do better than that.

Mr. MAYHEW: If anyone in this house has listened patiently, then certainly those of us on this side of the house have listened to you. Now you are going to keep your seat and listen for a moment or two to us. I am not objecting to your policy. I am quite prepared to sit and listen—and at times it is pretty tough to do so—but I have the floor now.

It was not estimated that we could build 200 vessels in Canada, plus all the rest of the equipment we have been turning out. Anyone who thinks that Canada is not producing should visit the harbours of Halifax, Saint John and Montreal; there he will see the assembly of goods produced in Canada, goods which are being shipped in enormous quantities.

Mr. GILLIS: To whose credit is that?

Mr. MAYHEW: It is to the credit of the workmen and to the credit of the manufacturers that the programme has been lined up as it is to-day.

Mr. JAQUES: Why was it not done before?

Mr. MAYHEW: We never had occasion to do it before.

Mr. JAQUES: There were a million people on relief.

Mr. SPEAKER: I must ask hon. members to address their questions to the Chair. The hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia, has the floor.

Mr. MAYHEW: In matters of production we have done wonders in Canada. We have underestimated our ability to produce. I am not saying that we are doing all we can do. In what I have said I am not suggesting that we should not have a programme which would be inviting and inspiring to the people of Canada, and one which would challenge them. I say: "Tell us what you want. Tell us the things you think we cannot do, and you will find there is engineering ability and backbone in our people, and resources sufficient to do it." I say, "If you want a bridge across the Atlantic built from boats, then tell us what type boat you want, and the Canadian people will give it to you." We have a boat-building programme now, and it can be enlarged. Probably it cannot be enlarged in steel, because we are short of steel; but we have plenty of wood on both Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and we can turn out more wooden boats. It is not a case of whether a piece of equipment is the cheapest we can get; it is a case of what we can give to the manufacturer, and what kind of equipment we can put on the ocean to carry our stuff from Canada to England.

I do not care how proud we may be of what we have accomplished; we have lost practically the whole of the last four weeks talking nonsense in this House of Commons, instead of getting down to planning about what we actually can do.

Mr. HANSELL: No, not four weeks—four years.

Mr. MAYHEW: I do not know whether it is four years or not; but we have lost four weeks, anyway.

Mr. HANSELL: Ten years.

Mr. MAYHEW: I can tell you this. In my opinion it was not the budget, or the amount of taxes our people have to pay, or the war loans they have to buy, which scared the people of Canada. There is, however, something quite evident in this chamber that tells us, "You must not do this"—or that we must not do something else. There is something about us that is tightening us up so that we do not know exactly what we are supposed to do.

During the Easter recess I was talking to manufacturers in my home city, and I said this, "Streamline every bit of equipment you have. If your plant is obsolete or obsolescent, renew it and put it into a position where it will give the best service, because you will need it after the war. You need it now, and you will need it after the war." However, I came to Ottawa, and I found that if one wants to streamline his plant he must have a permit to do so. That is not a good thing. I do not think we can win this war or save this country on a stingy programme. We must go ahead. I, for one, am not prepared to sit idly by; I am not prepared to sit idly by. I have piled up round my own plant at the present time over $100,000 worth of equipment. My boy wrote me the other day, saying, "Dad, what do they want us to do? Do they want us to go ahead and develop our plants, make them better so that we can pay more taxes, or do they want us to quit?" That situation must be cleared up. We must decide whether we are going to win this war by stingy methods, or whether we are going to win it by working and by production.

Mr. ROSS (Calgary East): I understood the hon. member for Bow River to say that there are 200,000 tons a year of scrap iron and scrap steel within reach of Calgary?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I was speaking from memory, but the figures are on Hansard. I placed them there the other day.

Mr. ROSS (Calgary East): Would the former Minister of National War Services or the Minister of Munitions and Supply give us the information.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That was the information I got from the Dominion Junk company at Calgary.

Mr. SPEAKER: We are not in committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Fournier (Hull) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

30. Special. Prairie Farm Assistance Act, $500,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister inform the committee whether last year a crop failure area was declared in Saskatchewan?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): No. No crop failure areas were declared in any of the provinces last year.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have before me sessional paper No. 110M, produced on motion of the hon. member for Weyburn, and dated May 15, 1941. In this document I find a telegram dated July 8 from Mr. J. G. Taggart to the minister, in the following terms:

> Review of crop conditions to-day indicate heavy deterioration and certainty of more than 135 townships under five bushels. Believe it urgent to proceed with proposed amendments which I am sure will greatly improve workings of act.

I shall not read all of the communications. There is one from the Minister of Agriculture to Mr. Taggart under date of July 31 advising that an amendment had been passed and that it would be necessary to raise the number to 171 townships. There is a further communication under date of August 1 from the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan to the effect that the number of townships having a yield of less than five bushels to the acre would substantially exceed 171. Then there is a list of the townships, which I have not counted. But there are thirteen pages each containing from thirty-five to fifty townships, and therefore the total would be well over 500. These are the townships which, in the opinion of the provincial department of agriculture, would have a yield of less than five bushels to the acre. Last night, when this matter was being discussed, the minister pointed out that where the act states that the governor in council may upon the application of the province make this mandatory, the "may" had the same effect as "shall". Would he be good enough to explain to the committee why he did not declare a crop failure area last year in view of the evidence submitted by the provincial department of agriculture at Regina?

Mr. GARDINER: The act requires that before the federal Department of Agriculture will even investigate to see if there is a crop failure area, the province must state that they believe there is a sufficient number of townships under five bushels to the acre to meet the requirements of the act. At the present time that figure is 171 townships; at the time the first application was made the figure was 135 townships so far as Saskatchewan was concerned. The minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan made application early in the season and declared that he believed there were more than 135 townships, all that was required at the time, and designated the municipalities which he believed were under five bushels to the acre. As is indicated by the return, I, as the minister in charge, communicated to him the fact that the required number had been increased from 135 to 171 townships. He came back with an application stating that he still believed there was a sufficient number of townships in Saskatchewan under five bushels to warrant the application being made, and he gave a list which, I assume, is the one referred to by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson). With that list in our hands we made an investigation, but this showed that there were not 171 townships which were under five bushels to the acre, and therefore we refused to declare a crop failure area.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister explain the wide discrepancy between the opinion of the department of agriculture of Saskatchewan and that of the minister's own department?

Mr. GARDINER: There is not a wide discrepancy. The department of agriculture of the province does not make an investigation. All it has are the reports from the municipalities or other authorities that the crop yield is expected to be under a certain figure. We expect that they will make application for all those townships which they have reason to believe will drop below five bushels to the acre. When that is done, we keep a check on the townships until the crop is harvested. After the crop is harvested we make a report as to whether or not the yield was five bushels to the acre. We found that there were not 171 townships in Saskatchewan with a yield of under five bushels to the acre.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How many were there?

Mr. GARDINER: I think the number was 156 or some such figure.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Mention was made yesterday evening of the cost of administration. Last year I made representations to the minister that municipal authorities should be used more extensively. The minister stated that there would be difficulties, that in administering funds where the dominion had so much at stake, they could not very well give responsibility to the municipal authorities which naturally would be concerned about having payments made to as many people in the municipality as possible.

Mr. GARDINER: I was going to put on the record certain figures in connection with the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, 1940 crop year. These figures are as of May 31, 1941. The records may not be complete, but they are almost complete. The figures are:

Townships dealt with by the board of review

	Yield in bushels	No. of townships
Manitoba	0 to 4	5
	4·1 to 8	38
Saskatchewan	0 to 4	146
	4·1 to 8	345
	8·1 to 12	780
Alberta	0 to 4	25
	4·1 to 8	72
			224
Grand total for the three provinces			1,666
Number of individual awards paid to May 31, 1941			49,835
Amount of awards			$6,410,890 71

Mr. QUELCH: How many applications were turned down because they had not been sent in by October 31?

Mr. GARDINER: I cannot give that at the moment. The number is not large in comparison with the number of applications made, but I am not in a position to give the exact figures.

Mr. QUELCH: The number may not be large, comparatively speaking, but the minister realizes that there were quite a number turned down on account of that fact. Many applications were late because the municipalities believed that the yield would be above twelve bushels to the acre, but upon the completion of threshing operations it was found that the yield was below twelve bushels to the acre. Will the minister object to a certain action that I am taking? I am writing to all the municipalities in my constituency reminding them of what happened in 1940 and suggesting that they make application before September 15, should it appear that the average yield is going to be less than twenty bushels. Apparently last year they tried to estimate whether the yield in the township would be less than twelve bushels, and many of them fell into the error of overestimating the yield. This is the action that should be taken if Ottawa is going to stand by the hard and fast rule of refusing to accept applications because they are sent in too late. A farmer in a municipality should not be discriminated against because the municipality has tried to do the right thing. I think the minister will appreciate what I am talking about.

Mr. GARDINER: The desire of the department is that the provinces and municipalities notify the federal authorities of any township which they believe will, on the average, go under twelve bushels to the acre. We have also intimated to the ministers of agriculture in the provinces—this probably was not done in sufficient time to take care of last year's crop—that we would much prefer them to err on the side of asking for those townships which we might turn down upon investigation to their erring on the other side. Any western member, indeed any hon. member of the house, will realize that it is difficult in the early part of July to say just what the crop yield may turn out to be, but we have been hopeful that some authority will notify us fairly early in July as to what they believe the crop yields will be in those townships. I think the government of Saskatchewan have probably been more active in that connection than governments of other provinces, probably because they have had more costly experience; for there have been much larger drought areas in Saskatchewan than anywhere else, and they have probably a more complete organization to check conditions all over the province. For these reasons perhaps they have put in more applications and got them in at an earlier date.

There was a difficulty, I must admit, in Alberta last year in view of the change through the death of the provincial minister of agriculture who was carrying on in the early part of the season, but we did intimate finally to them that we preferred that they would err rather on the side of indicating to us that a township should be examined which might not come within the area upon investigation to their erring on the other side. There were not very many townships that were passed over, if we are to judge by the number that came in afterwards and said that they had not been aware of the fact that they were under twelve bushels to the acre until after November 1. I have the figures here of those that were examined in the different provinces and will add them to the figures I have placed on the record in order to give hon. members some idea of the number of applications made in the different provinces.

In Manitoba we examined 316, and we passed 171; in Saskatchewan we examined 2,126, and we passed 1,271; in Alberta we examined 431, and we passed 224. It will be noted that there is not any great difference in the proportion of those passed, compared with the number examined in the three provinces. In all three provinces we examined 2,873, and we passed 1,666. I am informed that the number which have written in later from all three provinces and questioned whether they should not have been in, stating that they had not made application because they did not have information sufficiently early or for some other reason, is considerably less than 100. Therefore, out of over 2,873, it would be a comparatively small number. Applications were made in the case of these 2,873 before November 1, and they were all examined. I realize, of course, that that does not help the people who were in those districts which found they were under twelve bushels to the acre, and they have reason to complain that someone did not take action in sufficient time. I must say, too, that we do not absolutely rely on these applications that are sent in. Our inspectors do check some of the townships when they are in areas where they realize that a township may be making application later on. They will check some of these townships which have not asked for it, but we do not feel that we are expected to act unless a municipality or a province makes application.

Mr. QUELCH: But after the inspector finds out that the yield in such a district is below twelve bushels, does he not notify them to make application, or does he wait for them to find out? I think it is up to the inspector to tell the municipality that the district will be eligible for the bonus, without waiting to see whether they make application.

Mr. GARDINER: The inspector is not in a position to give anyone definite information. He checks a certain proportion of the farms in the district and gives his opinion that a certain township may come in, to the officials in the office, not to the municipality. There is somewhat of a check kept. We always expect that the municipalities will keep a check.

Mr. NICHOLSON: To return to the question of personnel, I have done a good deal of business with the department in Ottawa and with the office in Regina, and I think the minister is fortunate in having such an efficient personnel at headquarters. I am sorry I cannot say the same of the personnel in the country. Looking over the list of inspectors operating in my constituency, given in the return brought down for the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Perley), I have been struck by the expense accounts of some of the inspectors. This is the first year the act has affected the northern part of Saskatchewan where I live. I should like the minister to state, first of all, how the personnel in the country is selected. I notice the name of John Davies, for instance, of Farmingdale. How does the minister find out that John Davies, living away up in the bush, is a suitable person for this work?

Second, I should like to know what sort of check the department makes of the expense accounts of these inspectors. The hon. member for Lake Centre pointed out last night that one inspector working out of Melville turned in an expense account averaging $11.50 a day, and looking over the list of inspectors and their expense accounts I find a wide discrepancy. In my constituency most of the inspectors run up an expense account of nearly $10 a day. The cost of living is not as high there as in other parts of the province, and I notice that some other expense accounts are for $5 a day, and that some inspectors draw less for expense accounts than in salary. A great many are paid $5 a day in salary and run an expense account of around $10 a day. In my constituency I stayed with a friend at a hotel at Easter time. We had supper, bed and breakfast, and in the morning I asked for the bill and was told they were charging us two dollars. I asked, "Two dollars each?" and they said "No, for the two." True enough, the hotel was not in the style of the Chateau Laurier, but it was the best and only hotel in the village, and I cannot understand how these inspectors doing their work in the field can run up such large expense accounts. Would the minister tell the committee how these men are selected, and what check is made on their expense accounts?

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Mr. GARDINER: In selecting the men, we try to find some one who is not looking for a permanent job.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There are plenty of them in the country.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, but I think there are more who are looking for permanent jobs. Generally we try to find someone, to put it in another way, who is not in absolute need of a permanent job, who has some other employment. If we can find a good capable farmer who has had considerable experience and is in a position to give us probably two or three months of his time during the summer, and if he thinks it will not interfere too greatly with his own farming operations, we like to have a man of that type. Or we might choose a man in a village who has been accustomed to dealing with farmers, either through being in some branch of the grain trade perhaps or through making collections, and who knows farm lands and can estimate crop yields when he sees them, even as standing crops; he understands farming operations, and at the same time is prepared to devote to the work part of his time during the summer. We make some inquiries to assure ourselves fairly well that the man has either a business or a farm to return. That is the type we hope to get. We do not wish to call men away for anywhere from two to three weeks or two to three months, and have them say to us afterwards, "We expect you to find work for us for the remainder of the year."

This is one check we do apply. We make inquiries of municipal men, of members, of persons here and there over western Canada in order to find suitable types. For example, the first man who was put on, I believe, is one of the best-known municipal secretaries in Saskatchewan, a man who is known by every municipal official in the west; I refer to Mr. Truscott. I understand that he attends all the municipal conventions, and has done so for many years. He was given the task of going over the block of country of which he has charge at present, and selecting half a dozen men to go out immediately as inspectors. He made recommendations, and the names were placed on the list. In most districts we have asked for at least double the number of men whom we expect to use, and we leave it with the officers at Regina to select men from that list. They use a man for a period of time. If they find that he is efficient in the work they continue to employ him, and probably they will call him up the succeeding year. If they find that the man does not do the job as they wish to have it done, he will probably not be called up the next year; they will try someone else. But the lists are made up in the manner I have explained, and they are submitted to me as minister for my endorsation. Some of these men I know; many more I do not know, and I simply have to take the word of those of whom we inquire, who know these men, as to their abilities, and try them out.

The other question was what?

Mr. NICHOLSON: About their expense accounts.

Mr. GARDINER: The expense account, naturally, is made up of their board and sleeping accommodations while they are away from their homes, and the cost of operating their cars. A car operates on a basis of seven cents a mile until 4,000 miles have been covered, when it becomes six cents a mile. The cost in connection with the car is made up from that calculation.

As to how some of them might run up large expense accounts, that depends upon the type of work a man is put on. If a man is put out in a district the greater part of which is in a crop failure area or in which the crop is obviously under twelve bushels to the acre, he does not need to make the number of inspections which have to be made by a man who is working in the borderline areas. For example, a man can drive rapidly through a township which has three bushels to the acre, and say, "That is under five bushels" or "under four," as the case may be. But he cannot drive nearly so rapidly through a district which is on the boundary line between eight bushels and seven, or eight and nine, or twelve and thirteen, or twelve and eleven. The man who operates for the greater part of his time in the area of which I first spoke can earn much more on mileage, because he would cover probably double the area, entailing double the expense in mileage, and consequently might build up a large expense account. Burglund is one of the main checking men who has made inspections and checked areas which have been gone over. He is one of the men in the district who are sent out to check areas, and in many instances to recheck areas.

Mr. PERLEY: The hon. member for Mackenzie has, I think, touched a vital point. I had some experience last year and the year before in our district with these men. I talked with them, and found that the man who was inspecting the municipality in 1939 was driving home to Windthorst, about forty miles, every night and running up his expense account. I may say that he was checked up on this, and then he stayed in about the centre of the municipality.

I brought this matter up yesterday, and I contended that men who had a knowledge of the municipality should be reemployed if they are doing good service. In the instance I have in mind, a change was made last year. Another man, who, as the minister states, is a farmer in the district, did this work, and while I believe he was conscientious in many respects, he made what I would term a still quiet hunt. He inspected every quarter-section, driving round quietly, and put in an expense account considerably greater than his salary, and I would venture to say that nine nights out of ten he was at his home. I have here the list to which the hon. member has referred, and it shows that at least 70 per cent of these men have expense accounts which run over their salaries.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Twice as much.

Mr. PERLEY: Yes; some of them twice as much. I venture to say that the minister could make a great saving if these men were checked up in that respect. If the same man continued to do the work this year in that municipality, he could complete it in one-fourth of the time, because he has knowledge now of every quarter-section and of every farmer. In consequence, his expense account would be materially less.

As regards this matter of individual inspections to which the minister referred, the system followed last year amounted practically to individual inspection of every farmer and every farm in the areas to be inspected where they thought that the crop was such that the producers would come under the bonus.

I am not going to hold up this matter any further, other than to say this, that it is under this act, and under this branch, I understand, that the minister is to carry out the regulations with respect to the reduction in wheat acreage, the summer-fallow bonus, and so forth, this year.

Mr. GARDINER: Yes.

Mr. PERLEY: How many additions does the minister expect to make to the staff to do that work this summer? What increase has there been in the staff in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, with respect to this particular branch of the work?

The minister will recall that in 1939 there were quite a number of overpayments of bonus, and I believe he took steps to recover some of those payments. What success has he had in that direction? I have in mind four or five cases; I am not going to mention names, but I think the minister knows some of them. I know he was undertaking to make recoveries, and if there have been overpayments there should be some method of obtaining repayment. I believe also that there are a number of cases yet unsettled, still more or less in dispute, with respect to last year. How many are there, and what does the minister propose to do? Will there be some settlement of these cases?

Mr. GARDINER: There are about one-third of the questionable payments—I would not say it has been definitely decided that all of these questioned payments should not have been made—that have been collected. About two-thirds of those in respect of whom payments were questioned have not yet paid back the amounts. We have not been so much concerned about persons who were actually on farms and received overpayments or received payments when we afterwards found out that probably the land should not have been paid for on account of some of the regulations we have. Knowing the districts particularly in areas that have been on a number of occasions in the drought zone, we figure that if that farmer is due a payment later on we can withhold the amount out of succeeding amounts to be paid him. We have not been so persistent in pursuing these persons. There are some difficulties in compelling the repayment of moneys where persons have turned out not to be farmers, but all doubtful cases have been turned over to the Department of Justice, and they have been examining into these cases and trying to determine those that may be in a classification under which action can be taken. Up to date, however, no actions have been taken in court to collect. The result is that we have collected one-third of the money which we think should be repaid.

To give an idea of the amount which is involved—because a general discussion of this kind could leave the impression that with the payment of between $9,000,000 and $10,000,000 in the first year there might be a considerable part of that money about which there was some question—I might point out that the total amount questioned by the treasury department and ourselves is $13,156.73, and the recovery has been $4,736.22. In paying out a sum of money that is considerably over $9,000,000, under a plan that is entirely new, over such a wide area, and to some 58,000 people, we were fortunate not to have more cases than we actually had, and we are also fortunate to have been able to collect back about one-third of the amount. Most of the persons who returned the payments sent back the money quite voluntarily as soon as they found they had received payments to which they were not entitled.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How much was collected from the farmers for the last fiscal year, and what is the amount of payments made under the act in the same period? I wish to refer to a letter from the secretary of the United Farmers of Saskatchewan dated March 25, 1941. Copies went to the various political parties from Saskatchewan, and no doubt the minister has seen the letter. I promised that I would try to get an explanation, because there have been certain complaints about the board of review. I quote:

> I am enclosing a copy of an appeal which we have presented to the board of review, under the chairmanship of Professor E. C. Hope of the Saskatchewan university. Here we find a rather strange situation, in that I first of all presented the first two cases referred to in the appeal to A. R. Mackie, superintendent in charge of administration of the act. He refused the bonus because of a "ruling of the treasury board in December, 1940". I then referred these two cases to Hon. J. G. Gardiner, Minister of Agriculture, and he replied that he could not change the ruling.

They cite some nine or ten cases that came before the board of review. Could the minister make a short statement in connection with these problems to which attention has been directed by the United Farmers of Saskatchewan?

Mr. PERLEY: First, I would ask the minister to be good enough to give an answer to the question I asked. What was the increase in staff to carry out the regulations with regard to summer-fallowing?

Mr. GARDINER: I have not the exact figure here, but I understand that the increase in inside staffs will be about a dozen in the three provinces.

Mr. PERLEY: How about the field staffs?

Mr. GARDINER: There has been no increase in staff in the areas in which we were operating and the more southerly areas where there have been crop failures or low crop yields, but we have had to add to staffs in the northern sections, through the northern part of Manitoba, the northern part of Saskatchewan and into the northern part of Alberta, and we have had to make appointments in the Peace River section of British Columbia. The numbers on the outside staff will not make any material difference. The persons added on are added to the lists I have indicated. People are selected from these lists to do the work, and if double the number are selected they will do it in half the time, so that the figures in that regard are not as important as the total amount of money paid out in doing the work.

Mr. PERLEY: I understand that there were quite a number of men who went lecturing and attending farmers' meetings.

Mr. GARDINER: Very few of these men were employed. The provincial departments of agriculture offered the services of all their district agricultural men, and they went and held meetings. Many of the municipal secretaries, although we were paying them only for office work, held meetings in different divisions of their municipalities voluntarily, and they are paid on the basis of fifty cents a farmer who applies for a reduction in acreage, for all the work they do throughout the area in connection with the applications. They did make it convenient for farmers by holding public meetings and having the farmers come to the schoolhouse, or wherever the meeting was held, and sign their applications for wheat acreage reduction, but nothing was paid for these particular meetings.

Mr. PERLEY: What about those cases still in dispute, not yet settled? The minister knows the ones to which I refer.

Mr. GARDINER: I understand there are about a dozen individual cases before the board still for consideration, and there are a number of townships or applications from individuals that are before the Department of Justice for decision as to whether they are entitled to payment.

Mr. PERLEY: Will this be the final regulation with respect to the summer-fallow bonus and acreage reduction?

Mr. GARDINER: It will be final unless there are unforeseen developments. An undertaking was given here regarding a matter about which certain questions have been asked a number of times by hon. members in the last two or three days. I believe I am correct in saying that an undertaking was given by the Minister of Justice and myself that in order to make provision with regard to the right of members to apply, if it becomes necessary to do so, an amendment can be made to the regulations. Amendments of different kinds may have to be made, but in substance the regulations are as we intend them to operate.

The answer to the other question is this. In 1939 the number of townships was 1,923; payments, $9,904,300.77, and the levy $2,421,507.37. For 1940, to date, the number of townships is 1,666—this figure is a little larger than the one I put on record because it is of a later date. The payments amount to $6,500,217.18, and the levy—we have not the exact figure—is approximately $2,500,000, or almost identical with that of last year. It was $2,421,000 last year, and it will be in that neighbourhood now.

Item agreed to.

473. Marketing Service. Subsidies for cold storage warehouses under the Cold Storage Act, in the amounts detailed in the estimates—further amount required (revote), $12,332.48.

Mr. STIRLING: What does "revote" mean in that sense?

Mr. GARDINER: It is money which had been provided for before.

Mr. STIRLING: Had the work been begun?

Mr. GARDINER: Yes, and this is to complete it.

Item agreed to.

475. Special. To provide for assistance to encourage the improvement of cheese and cheese factories—further amount required, $395,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Will the minister break this down, the amount for equipment and the amount for cheese?

Mr. GARDINER: That is made up of the estimated cheese production for this year, 155,000,000 pounds; the premium averages 0·9 cent a pound. That makes a total of $1,395,000. Last year we estimated the total at $1,000,000, and we have to have an extra $395,000. That is largely due to the increase in production, the increased volume of high grade cheese compared with the estimate.

Mr. MacNICOL: Which is a good thing.

Mr. TUSTIN: Will the other bonus be paid out of the war appropriation?

Mr. GARDINER: The 1·6 cents will be paid out of war appropriations.

Mr. NICHOLSON: It refers to assistance to encourage the improvement of cheese and cheese factories. Have we a vote to go on capital equipment?

Mr. GARDINER: That is the name of the vote.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

476. To provide for compensation to provinces which agree to vacate the personal income and corporation tax fields for the duration of the war, the annual amount thereof being computed in accordance with and subject to the terms and conditions of agreements approved by the governor in council and entered into with such provinces by His Majesty the King in the right of Canada represented by the Minister of Finance and on a basis which will produce substantially the equivalent of either:—

(a) The revenues which the province and its municipalities obtained from these sources during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940, less the amounts collected after the close of such fiscal year by the province and its municipalities in respect of personal income and corporation taxes levied upon incomes of 1940 or prior years or based upon the status or operations of the taxpayer in 1940 or prior years; or

(b) The net debt service paid by the province during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940 (not including contributions to sinking funds) less the revenue obtained from succession duties during that period and less the amounts collected after the close of such fiscal year by the province and its municipalities in respect of personal income and corporation taxes levied upon incomes of 1940 or prior years or based upon the status or operations of the taxpayer in 1940 or prior years and for the payment of fiscal need subsidies to such of said provinces as enter into such agreements, and can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the governor in council that these are necessary: an amount not exceeding, $45,000,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Since this is a fairly large vote will you call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again this day.

Motion agreed to.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES

69 Departmental administration, $128,480.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Chairman, when we were discussing this item some weeks ago, the minister made a statement in connection with the sale of the salmon pack of British Columbia. He stated at that time what had been done up to date. Since then, I believe there have been some further negotiations in the matter. Perhaps he would be willing to make a further statement.

[Mr. Gardiner.]

Hon. J. E. MICHAUD (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Chairman, I shall be pleased to comply with the request of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and make a statement supplementary to that I made on May 26. Additional information has come to my attention since, and I shall inform the committee as to the further developments in connection with the matter of supplying the canned salmon requirements of Great Britain.

Last week the British food controller stated definitely that he was desirous of purchasing the canned salmon pack of the British Columbia fisheries for the present year. Immediately the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Fisheries set machinery in motion not only to give the assurance that this request would be met, but to give an undertaking that everything possible would be done to get together those large quantities of fish required to supply British needs, and to see that shipments were properly coordinated and shipped overseas in an orderly fashion.

Mr. NEILL: Will the Canadian government buy the fish direct from the British Columbia people?

Mr. MICHAUD: No. We believe the industry on the Pacific coast will take care of those requirements, as it has done in the past. We have advised the British food controller, through the British mission, that a maximum pack of 1,700,000 cases of salmon could be properly put up this year, if our expectations are realized, without impairing the future of the industry. Not only have we said that we would do everything possible to see that it was put up and delivered, but we have pointed out that home requirements and a certain share to go to other markets would be taken care of. We have assured the British government that we expect the industry to deliver 1,200,000 cases of canned salmon this year to the British market and, in order to make that possible, we shall have to curtail by 40 per cent the usual quota for home consumption and for markets other than British, or reduce the amount to 60 per cent of that packed for export to markets other than British and for home consumption.

This means that we shall keep about 500,000 cases for our requirements in Canada and for export markets other than those in Great Britain, and that we shall make available to the British consumer 1,200,000 cases.

Mr. NEILL: How does that compare with last year's catch?

Mr. MICHAUD: To give the committee an idea of the magnitude of the undertaking, may I point out that the average export to Great Britain in 1936, 1937 and 1938 amounted to 380,493 cases of canned salmon, while last year's shipments amounted to 568,441 cases. It is obvious, therefore, that our commitments this year are about double last year's shipments.

Mr. NEILL: It is estimated that the pack mentioned by the minister as 1,700,000 cases can be produced this year. How does that compare with the amount produced last year?

Mr. MICHAUD: It is between 350,000 and 400,000 cases more than the production of last year. In order to assure these British requirements, we shall have to take every precaution to see that priority is given.

Mr. NEILL: Priority will be given to the British orders?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes. Members of the committee may be interested in knowing the basis of this sale of salmon to Great Britain. The pack is divided into three grades: grade No. 1, comprised of sockeye; grade No. 2, comprised of cohoe and red spring, and grade No. 3, comprised of pinks and chums. The prices are to be from 10 to 15 per cent higher than those received last year, to take care of the additional cost of production. The prices for this year are $13.75 a case for No. 1; $10 for No. 2 and $6.25 for No. 3; the prices last year were $12.37 for No. 1; $8.65 for No. 2 and $5.60 for No. 3. These prices are for a case of 96 half-pound flats.

Mr. NEILL: Is there any indication that these prices, apparently set by the British government, will be satisfactory to the fishermen and the canneries?

Mr. MICHAUD: So far as I have been able to ascertain, they will be satisfactory to the canneries, and I have no reason to believe that they will not be satisfactory to the fishermen. The fishermen must consider themselves fortunate in having an assured market this year for this large quantity of fish, with conditions as they are. Had the British government not consented to take this large quantity, I doubt if the home market and the markets other than British would have been able to absorb such a large quantity. Since this year's prices take into consideration the increased cost of production, I think the fishermen ought to be satisfied with these prices.

Mr. NEILL: This seems to be an excellent arrangement provided that the required quantity can be obtained. Unless this happens to be a big run year, it will be rather difficult to get this quantity. However, the canneries will have an assured market, which they had not last year. The same condition will apply to the fishermen. I think the government ought to be congratulated for whatever part they took in bringing about such an arrangement.

The statement was put out to the press a few days ago by the department in connection with canned herring. I understand that the British government have agreed to take 35,000 long tons of canned herring, whereas last year they did not take more than 8,000 or 12,000 tons. This is an increase of over four times, a tremendous increase.

I hope it will be found possible to supply this quantity, but I doubt it. This bears out the argument which I have been advancing for many years and which I mentioned last week, that the Canadian government ought to stop the reduction of herring into oil and other products. It might be easy for me to say, "I told you so." For all these years I have been telling the government that they should not permit the reduction of herrings into comparatively low-class articles like oil and fertilizer. In that way we get the least possible out of the fish; we curtail spawning, and we reduce the amount of salmon food which is most essential. When a crisis comes along and there is an enormous demand at a profitable price for herring, we find that we shall not be able to supply anything like the quantity required.

We have out-fished these herring in years gone by, and enormous quantities have been reduced. The departmental reports show that the supply has been steadily going down. There is one step the minister could take, a step which he has the power to take, namely, to prohibit any reduction of herrings this year. It may be said that the more profitable price to be received for canned herring will bring about this result, but that does not necessarily follow. A plant may be equipped for reducing only, and it will go on reducing only, first pilchards and then herring, if allowed to do so. Great Britain does not want herring in the reduced form because she can obtain what oil she requires from whales, cod, et cetera, but she does want herring in this form. Apparently it is intended to have these put up in half-pound tins in order that they may be part of the men's rations, part of what they call the special ration. The minister should fall in line with the expressed wishes and needs of the British government. This will be to the advantage of the fishermen and canners because more money can be obtained from a ton of canned herring than from a ton of reduced herring.

Mr. MICHAUD: The British food controller has expressed a desire to be supplied with a large quantity of canned herring this year. As a matter of fact, I think it is the first time in the history of the British Columbia fisheries that canned herring has been demanded in such a large quantity. Thirty-five thousand long tons is what they ask to be supplied with. This will mean 1,630,000 cases of ninety-six half-pound cans to the case. In this connection, priority will be given to meeting these requirements. I am inclined to believe that when they are taken care of, there will be little left for reduction purposes.

Without committing myself definitely to a policy of prohibiting altogether the reduction of herring this year, I can assure the hon. gentleman that so far as I know, reduction will have to be prohibited in many sections. There is always a certain quantity of fish caught which are not suitable for canning or any other purpose than reduction for fish meal. There are fish caught which cannot pass the inspection and cannot properly be put into cans and offered to the consumer. Nor can they be thrown back into the water and be wasted, and we shall have to see that they are used to the best advantage and supplied possibly to other interests, particularly agriculture, for use as food rations for poultry, cattle and so forth. I think I am safe in saying that unless we have an overabundant supply of herring this year, we shall have to stop the reduction of herring at least until the requirements of Great Britain are assured.

Mr. NEILL: Thank you.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The minister promised on May 26 to give a breakdown of the expenditure on lobster control.

Mr. MICHAUD: I am pleased to give the hon. member the information which he requested, and which I hope will correct the misapprehension under which he was labouring on a former occasion, on May 5, when we discussed the expenditures for the canned lobster industry.

The season for canning lobsters opens generally in May. Last winter, after the government of Great Britain had placed canned lobster on the luxury list, the fishermen as well as the canners thought they could not operate with a market as limited as the Canadian and United States markets, judging from the volume of former exports. They appealed to the government, and we had to give them the assurance that the usual pack would be taken care of and that we would help to market it. The average annual pack of canned lobster for 1934, 1935, 1936, 1937, 1938 and 1939 amounted to 97,000 cases. Last year we amended the regulations and prohibited the canning of lobster smaller than six and a half inches in length. We knew that that would tend to reduce the pack and also to conserve the species. We also knew that a number of people who formerly gained their livelihood through lobster fishing had become engaged in other employment which they thought more profitable, and that the number of lobster fishermen would, therefore, be much smaller. It was, in fact, much smaller, but we anticipated a pack of 70,000 cases, and we gave our undertaking to the fishermen and the canners that we would see that this pack would be marketed.

We referred the matter, based on these figures, to the different boards advising the government as to production and marketing, and we adopted a plan which we thought would be helpful. We had no alternative but to try to develop the United States market and the home market. The consumption in the domestic market up to last year had amounted to 3,000 cases annually, and our average annual exports to the United States were around 12,000 cases, making a total of about 15,000 cases consumed on this side of the Atlantic ocean. The rest of the pack was exported mainly to Great Britain and some to the continent, where France, Germany and Sweden were the most important markets.

In order to influence the Canadian consumer to give some consideration to this commodity, we adopted the plan of advertising the goods on a wide scale, bringing to the attention of Canadian housewives the advantages of using canned lobster to a greater degree. Second, we canvassed the most likely purchasers in the United States, the large distributors of foodstuffs through large chain stores. The department, in order to give every assurance possible to the industry, decided that we would purchase whatever the industry itself could not sell. In other words, we agreed to be in the market to take up the slack. The results of the advertising were beyond our expectations. It is true that last year the pack was much smaller than we anticipated due to the factors I have mentioned and also to the fact that the weather last fall was much against lobster fishing, on account of several storms that raged on the coast during the fishing season in which many lobster fishing traps were carried away and much time was lost during the height of the fishing season. The actual pack was 58,898 cases. The department was offered 10,000 cases by the packers, who could not find a market for it themselves. These offerings were subject to inspection, and we could not place our seal of approval on some of the offerings. We refused to grade 4,757 cases, and we marketed 5,365 cases for the industry. The rest were marketed by the industry itself and by those who have been for some years in the brokerage business and have made it their business to market this commodity.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Who were the brokers?

Mr. MICHAUD: The brokers on government sales? We had no brokers. We sold through the controller. The deputy minister had been appointed as controller under this scheme. He employed Mr. Akins of Toronto, who consented to act without pay and who received only $1,300 approximately for expenses.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): But he belonged to an advertising firm in Toronto, did he not?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Then his commission would be got on the advertising?

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not know what he would get on the advertising. The firm was paid $50,000 to carry on the advertising campaign we had mapped out.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Well, then, the firm would get about 15 per cent of that, would it not?

Mr. MICHAUD: I do not know, because we do not pay the commission to the advertising firm.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): They get that from the magazines?

Mr. MICHAUD: They get that through the newspapers or publications which carry on that work.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Well, then, it was really paid through the advertising from the firm?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes. Accordingly we spent $50,000 on advertising, and the cost of marketing was $12,471.22. We had prepared for marketing 30,000 cases. At the opening of the season we had undertaken to take care of 55,000 cases, and we started to establish a structure and get the machinery to take care of that amount. After the spring season was over, we found that the quantity would not be as large as we anticipated, and we reduced our set-up considerably. We had labels and cases on hand to take care of about 30,000 cases.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The price per 8-ounce can was pegged at twenty-seven cents, was it not?

Mr. MICHAUD: No. That price represented an agreement among the retailers of the fish; it was not the price set by our department. The average price at which we sold was, on the Canadian market, $16.15 per case; on the United States market, including exchange, $19.40. Those are wholesale prices. The retailers agreed among themselves as to the retail price.

Mr. TUSTIN: How many cans are in a case?

Mr. MICHAUD: Ninety-six half-pound cans.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): There are only two months in which lobsters are harvested. What do these control men do during the rest of the year?

Mr. MICHAUD: The controllers?

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Yes. Are they kept on pay?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; they are not employed by us during the rest of the year. Two persons were employed in Halifax by the salt fish board, and during the lobster season we engaged them—an accountant and a bookkeeper—to keep track of the goods. We had nobody employed during the year except during the time that we took to gather the surplus which was offered to us and dispose of it.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): The minister said, when he rose first, that I was under a misapprehension on May 5. I do not think my mind is at all changed yet.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes. From a reading of a statement of the hon. member, I gathered that he seemed to be under the impression that all the money we spent, $62,471.22, was expended in marketing 5,365 cases.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): No; 4,410 $\frac{5}{8}$ths cases.

Mr. MICHAUD: At the time those were the figures, yes. But I am now giving the statement for the whole year, the final figures having been revised by the treasury. The controllers sold 5,365 cases; the cost was $12,471.22; but we had a set-up at the beginning of the year to take care of 55,000 cases; we had a warehouse in Charlottetown, one in New Brunswick, and one in Nova Scotia. When we found out what would be required of us, we closed two of them and kept open the one in Halifax, assembled all the merchandise there, and disposed of it from the one warehouse.

Mr. POIRIER (Translation): Mr. Chairman, during this discussion of the administration of fisheries, I wish to review the federal-provincial relations with respect to the Fisheries of Quebec. Though long discussed, the question has not yet been definitely settled. However as I shall show further on, it is almost settled in reality. Indeed, there remains practically only to give the form of a permanent agreement to what has already to all intents and purposes become an accomplished fact. There can therefore be no better occasion to bring the question to the fore, in the hope that both governments will this time arrive at a definitive settlement. Certain aspects of the matter lie beyond the scope of those of us who are neither lawyers nor experts in constitutional law. I shall therefore approach the matter solely from the point of view of the development of the fisheries of Quebec and particularly of the improvement of the fisherman's lot, which after all are the main things. Following a brief review of the discussions, I shall look into the bill paid by the fishing industry and the fishermen of Quebec and the basis of the permanent settlement advocated.

The question is far from new. It has its roots in the confederation pact itself. Confederation laid the foundations of a dispute between the dominion government and the various provincial governments. This dispute is still going on, at least in so far as Quebec is concerned. Taking its stand on the subsection "fisheries" of the British North America Act, the dominion government assumed both jurisdiction and ownership in respect of fisheries, not only deep-sea but also inland, save as regards small rivers and lakes. The dominion government, therefore, issued the licences, permits, leases, etc., for both commercial and game fishing. The provinces soon took the matter to the courts. The first litigation concerned inland fishing and the first province to institute proceedings was New Brunswick. As far back as 1883, in the then famous case of Robertson vs. the Queen, the Supreme Court of Canada invalidated the lease granted by the dominion government on the Miramichi river, thus recognizing the provinces' property rights in their territorial waters.

Following this judgment, the province of Quebec began immediately to exercise the prerogatives proceeding from the recognition of its property rights. Ottawa, however, did not renounce its judicial power and, consequently, its legislative power, which, in any case, no one had ever contested. It continued and still continues to make laws and regulations respecting the conservation of fish in the St. Lawrence and our other rivers and our lakes. In the interests of harmony, Quebec has supplied and paid, though in no way obliged to do so, the personnel required for the effective administration of these laws and regulations.

In 1898 the provinces challenged the dominion's jurisdiction over fisheries in tidal waters. The case, that of Quebec and Nova Scotia against the dominion, was heard by the privy council. In his judgment, Lord Herchell rejected the dominion's claim by establishing clearly the fundamental difference between legislative control and property right and affirming that one did not necessarily derive from the other. In 1914 the case was resubmitted to the privy council, this time by British Columbia, and again in 1921 by Quebec alone on account of the special situation in which it found itself in that regard. In the judgment which ensued, Lord Haldane held that the province, as a result of its ownership of the land, was entitled to ownership of any fishing gear attached to the land in any manner whatever, not only in the river estuaries, but anywhere along the coast. Our province was therefore entitled to issue permits and licences. But, as the right to fish in tidal waters is a public right, Lord Haldane denied to the province the right to issue exclusive leases or fishing rights therein.

Its rights having thus been clearly established and defined as regards its deep-sea fisheries, the province of Quebec set about exercising them by requiring, from 1921 on, a licence for salmon-fishing and for fishing-gear attached to the land along its coast.

But as the dominion government enjoyed, for purposes of legislative control as well as of revenue, the same right, though to a lesser extent because it did not in its case proceed from the right of ownership, it likewise required a licence. Our fishermen thus found themselves obliged to pay two licence fees. Furthermore, a fisherman holding a provincial licence but unable to obtain a federal one for the same purpose, or vice versa could only fish at the risk of breaking either a provincial or a federal law.

Such a situation could not last. Out of it arose an agreement with respect to our deep sea fisheries, along the lines of the one that had been concluded some thirty years before in connection with our inland fisheries. The dominion authorities retained the legislative power previously vested in them, as I said, and Quebec undertook to supply the staff required for the administration of those federal acts and regulations.

An agreement like that of 1922 could only effect a temporary settlement. Its full operation, with the inference drawn therefrom, could not and did not satisfy our province.

Consequently, as early as 1931, that is eight years after the agreement, a movement was launched in Quebec with a view to bringing once again that matter to the attention of the public. An editorial published in Le Soleil on March 24, 1931, stated the case.

In February 1932, the legislative assembly passed a resolution to the effect "That it was expedient that dominion-provincial cooperation be effected so that the development of our fisheries might be better ensured." That resolution found an echo in the House of Commons where all members recognized the benefit that our fishermen would derive from the cooperation of the two governments.

The question having thus been raised, the papers in turn took a hand in it. A delegation requested his Lordship Bishop Ross of Gaspé to lead the movement. He agreed on two conditions the wisdom of which cannot but be commended: (a) The matter should be considered solely from a social standpoint, outside all party considerations; (b) the newspaper campaign should cease. With his customary sense of duty, Bishop Ross set out upon his task. He met with the best reception on all sides. However, he wanted a complete agreement, with a complete programme. Honourable Messrs. Duranleau and Laferté had an interview and as a result the fisheries station of Grand River came into being. That was something, but it was merely one item on the programme. Consequently, in a letter to l'Action Catholique which that paper published with his permission, in its issue of April 18, 1933, the worthy bishop of Gaspé expressed his disappointment and authorized that paper to take up once again the campaign it had formerly waged so vigorously.

In 1934, the matter of cooperation between the dominion and the province with respect to fisheries was raised again in the Quebec legislative assembly by the then member for Gaspé, Mr. Alexandre Chouinard. Among those who took part in the debate were Mr. Pierre-Emile Côté, member for Bonaventure and now Minister of Lands and Forests, and Mr. Edgar Rochette, member for Charlevoix-Saguenay, now Minister of Fisheries.

The late hon. Mr. Kelly, who had raised the question in the legislative council, took it up again in 1935 and a substantial extract from his speech can be found in the February 28, 1935, issue of l'Action Catholique. That was the end of it.

That the agreement of 1922 entailed a great loss for the Quebec fisheries and indirectly for the fishermen is now generally recognized. Let us consider these two points, among others: industrial development and federal grants.

The war of 1914-18 greatly depressed the fisheries of Canada and, as ever, the dominion government, being so vitally concerned, launched a reform and expansion plan. The fillet industry along with the salt and smoked fish industry took a great expansion. Great strides were made in the use of fish waste and inedible fish, and in the matter of cold storage. The maritime provinces benefited from all that. The dominion government helped in every possible manner that expansion of fisheries along industrial lines, and in order that the fishermen from the maritime provinces might benefit from it, they even organized a fleet of fish-collecting boats.

Let me clear up one point right now, Mr. Chairman. In contrasting our position with that of the maritime provinces, we are not prompted by envy or jealousy, and our hon. friends who represent that part of the country in this house should not take offence. We have a respectful admiration for them. When they want something from the dominion government, they ask it with such strong and persuasive arguments that they never fail to succeed. Our task would be all the easier if we could prevail upon them to teach us their methods.

The best standard for ascertaining the development of the fishing industries is the marketing of fillets, a modern product in great demand among housewives. These fillets are sold fresh, frozen or smoked. Here are the figures for Nova Scotia and Quebec, according to official statistics:

Fillet Production

Nova Scotia

1918	1,519,700
1928	12,904,300
1938	22,996,800

Quebec

1918	Nil

However, I must say that during these last few years the fillet industry has progressed enormously in Gaspé. But, until 1938 Quebec had had no share in that development. Until the depression, the situation was not very bad because the dried cod market had quickly improved and become quite good between 1922 and 1929. However, the depression would have been less severe in 1932 if, as early as 1921, we had organized our production so as to secure our share of the national market. Since the depression, our fisheries have hardly regained 10·7 per cent of the lost ground, while Nova Scotia registered a gain of 45 per cent. And the reason is that the dominion government have not dealt with Quebec as they should have done. The whole industry has suffered from that arrangement. The bill has been paid by the fishermen. And from the amount paid in direct relief by both governments since 1932, one can see that the bill was pretty stiff. What makes it all the more distressing is the fact that, in 1921, the dominion was to begin in earnest to develop the Quebec fisheries.

In 1921, the dominion was ready to develop the Quebec fisheries according to a plan, which was set aside as a result of the 1922 agreement. That plan included the four following items: (a) building up of a competent technical staff; (b) higher salaries, in order that the members of this staff might devote their entire time to their duties; (c) establishment of a divisional fishery office at Quebec; (d) setting up in the Gaspé peninsula of an educational centre destined to become a combined biological and experimental station.

It should not be forgotten that Quebec's contribution to the national income is almost one-quarter of the total. It is only fair, therefore, that Quebec should obtain from the fishery appropriations a share somewhat proportionate to its contribution to the national treasury, or at least according to the number of its fishermen. Such has not been the case. Even before the agreement of 1922, Quebec did not receive its share; far from it. Take, for instance, the years 1904 and 1914, in connection with administration and fish-culture:

Year	Total appropriation for both purposes	Amount to which Quebec was entitled: On the basis of its contribution to the national revenue	Amount to which Quebec was entitled: On the basis of the number of its fishermen	Amount received by Quebec

In 1904, on the basis of our contribution to the national income, we should have received 29·4 per cent of the appropriation, and on the basis of the number of our fishermen, 16·6 per cent. The share we did receive amounted to only 6·5 per cent. For 1914, our share should have been 25 per cent in the first case and 12·8 per cent in the second. We received only 5·7 per cent.

May I quote a few further figures taken from the appropriations for fish-culture and administration expenses in the years immediately preceding the agreement.

Fish culture

Year 1918-19
Total appropriation	$341,211 61
Quebec's share	11,562 52
Per cent	4·8
Year 1919-20
Total appropriation	$305,476 75
Quebec's share	13,125 21
Per cent	4·3

Administration

Year 1919
Nova Scotia	$ 90,959 48
New Brunswick	88,818 22
British Columbia	65,955 79
Prince Edward Island	16,184 11
Quebec's share, per cent	2·7

More figures could be given, but these should suffice. Our fisheries and our fishermen are still feeling the effects of this parsimonious policy. In 1906, when our lobster-banks were being overfished, the Gaspé peninsula had only one inspector of fisheries, whose territory comprised the entire lower St. Lawrence right up to and including the county of Bellechasse. The same year Cape Breton alone, in Nova Scotia, had 27 inspectors. To-day, as everyone knows, our lobster fisheries are petering out. The average intake per lobster-trap has diminished from 66 pounds in 1890 to 8·2 pounds in 1932.

While prior to the agreement the province of Quebec received far less than its rightful share of the appropriation, its situation in that respect became much worse afterward. All grants, all contributions to administration costs ceased. Would it be possible to estimate Quebec's loss on that score? Doubtless the exact figures could be arrived at by setting down for each year either our contribution to the national income or the evolution in the number of our fishermen. That would be a long and unnecessary task, as the ratio would probably be the same as for the two years given above—1904 and 1914. The federal fishery appropriation for the twelve years following the agreement has averaged $2,000,000 a year. On the basis of our contribution to the total national income our rightful share would have amounted to $500,000 a year, or $6,000,000 for the full period. On the basis of the number of our fishermen we should have been entitled to something between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000. We received practically nothing, on the ground that the administration of the fisheries was a provincial matter.

To this amount must be added what Quebec had to pay directly for the administration of its fisheries and the development of fish-culture, some $150,000 a year, which in the other provinces is paid by the dominion government, and rightly so. While administration expenses are necessary, the fisherman cares little whether they are paid by Quebec or by Ottawa. But what he does care about is that Quebec, the provincial government which has done the most for its fishermen, is forced to divert to the administration of laws which Ottawa continues to make an amount of $40,000 to $60,000 a year which could be usefully employed directly for the development of fisheries and the improvement of the lot of the fishermen. If the dominion had, from the first decade, sought to make compensation by devoting an equivalent amount to the assistance of the fisheries of Quebec, the balance would have been restored and the question solved.

As far as fish-culture is concerned, the dominion government assumes the costs in the other eastern provinces and allows the provincial governments to draw the revenues, by means of licences and leases, derived from its restocking of their rivers and lakes. The fact of Quebec having the administration of its deep-sea fisheries in no way frees the dominion government from this responsibility.

What connection is there, indeed, between the administration of deep-sea fisheries and the artificial breeding of rainbow trout and speckled trout for the restocking of lakes and rivers? Yet, the dominion government assumes responsibility for the latter in the other provinces.

Therefore, to the above mentioned losses, must be added the sums appropriated for the administration of fisheries and pisciculture, and of which the development of the fisheries of Quebec has been deprived.

The fishermen and the fisheries of the province of Quebec have thus been fleeced. However, I do not wish to blame anybody in particular. I just wish to expose the facts in an impartial manner and assist in correcting a condition that nobody wanted, I am sure.

Could our fishermen be thus legally despoiled through the agreement of 1922? I am not competent to appreciate fully the juridical effects of that agreement, but if the federal government admits its obligation to help improving the condition of the fishermen, the contribution must be the same everywhere, and it is unjust to favour one section while discriminating against another. In my opinion, as members of the Canadian community, our fishermen can not be left out of the distribution and if they have been deprived of their natural rights by the agreement of 1922, it is through a biased interpretation unforeseen by its authors. In a democratic country, the government has no right thus to despoil an entire class of the population of one province. Jurisprudence, if I may use that word, agrees with my assertion. To extend the help that the present Minister of Fisheries has given to our fishermen during the last few years—for which I express my sincere gratitude, on behalf of all the fishermen of the Gaspé peninsula—it has not been necessary to rescind the agreement of 1922.

As a matter of fact, the two governments have done good work. During the first decade, that is from 1922 to 1932, the progress was rather slow; in Ottawa, because of the wrong interpretation given to the agreement, and in Quebec, as a result of a lack of organization inherent in such a succession. During that period, the province of Quebec, nevertheless, did some fish-culture, organized cooperation among fishermen, helped the cold storage industry, started to train specialists, established her administrative service, promoted the classisfication of fish and encouraged through grants the building and outfitting of fishing boats. During the last eight years Quebec has increased and diversified her aid, and covered the coasts with a wonderful network of cold storage plants. She has taken the leadership in endeavouring to gain for her fishermen a place on the national fish market, and she has promoted hydrobiologic research and established a fisheries school.

During the same period, the dominion has discarded its former policy. It has established an experimental fishery station in the Gaspé peninsula. It has paid grants to indigent fishermen, extended to our province the benefit of the salt fish board and, last but not least, it has contributed to the development of education among our fishermen. Thus cooperation between the two governments is not only possible but is actually taking place.

Here is the increase in the dominion grants to the Quebec fisheries:

Year	Appropriation
1935-36	$ 56,465 00
1936-37	135,379 11
1937-38	120,288 30
1939-40	360,306 17

Thus, a definite and final agreement is but the logical result of the work now being done; it will be the means of dealing with many matters that are not yet settled. Among the numerous tasks that devolve upon governmental authorities, there are some over which the dominion alone has jurisdiction and executive power; others might properly be assumed by Quebec and, finally, there are many where joint action, if carried on properly, might be twice as productive.

Among the tasks about which the dominion cannot delegate its powers to the provinces, may be mentioned sea patrolling and market protection. Both have an international character and it is difficult to see how the provinces could act efficiently in that respect. To those tasks could be indirectly added the classification of products. In the field of deep sea fisheries, the province of Quebec has dealt alone with that. But with respect to export products especially, would not a national classification impress importers more than a provincial one?

The proper function of the province of Quebec is to obtain a place on the national market, to promote production and to develop new industries. Finally, the two governments can actually cooperate, though not equally, in bringing about the general expansion of markets, in the development of scientific methods and their application to industry, in the extension of educational facilities and in the organization of cooperative societies. An agreement in that common field would have the advantage of preventing a duplication which, though non-existent at this time, is nevertheless, possible.

To those activities might be added fish culture. In our province and in British Columbia, the provincial authorities assume complete responsibility for it. However, cooperation by the federal government would be welcome and easily justified. In our province, in spite of the two administrative agreements concluded, the federal government has kept absolute jurisdiction over all our species of fish, without exception. I think that this should naturally entail the duty of restocking our waters. That is the case for the eastern maritime provinces and the local governments are even allowed to derive revenues from fishing licences and leases in the waters restocked at great cost through the federal government's own fish hatcheries. Quebec would be satisfied with less. Our province is doing a considerable amount of work in that field each year, but the size of the job offers plenty of opportunity for federal cooperation.

Quebec and Ottawa are fully cooperating in the development of our natural resources, especially mines and agriculture. The two governments have definite agreements in relation to youth training, unemployment, old-age pensions. Why not in regard to maritime fisheries? A few improvements in the present conditions, as I have just suggested, the defining of each one's part in the fields where the two governments cooperate, and everything would be definitely settled. In my humble opinion, it is time to give a character of permanence to this tacit but too fragile agreement, which is, however, essential to the success of the work undertaken.

I am under the impression that the agreement concluded between Ottawa and Quebec in relation to the fisheries is not complete. In order to get rid of us, the officials at Ottawa appear always ready to answer that Quebec has entire jurisdiction over her fisheries and that she has to look after their needs.

What about our share of subsidies, Mr. Chairman? We pay our share of taxes to the federal government, far more than the three maritime provinces combined. It is true that this government, as I said before and as the Minister of Fisheries explained the other day, has done more for the fisheries of Quebec than the Conservative party ever did. However, I maintain that during the war the estimates of the Department of Fisheries should not be reduced. I am convinced that the fishermen will suffer from this reduction in the estimates. The fishing industry is a national industry, just as much as agriculture, and it is during the war that we should try to obtain the best returns from it.

Mr. Chairman, I must add that I have full confidence in the present Minister of Fisheries and in the government of the Hon. Mr. Godbout at Quebec. I sincerely hope that the two governments may conclude a permanent agreement through which the province of Quebec shall obtain her legitimate share of grants.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Chairman, I should like to call to the attention of the committee an injustice, which has been done certain residents in the counties of York, Carleton and Victoria in New Brunswick, whose lands front on the non-tidal waters of the Saint John river, by reason of an order in council passed on May 9, 1940, and now embodied in section 9 of the special fishing regulations affecting that province. The effect of this so-called regulation is to take away from those people rights in property which legally belong to them, without any compensation whatsoever.

To take away from a man what he owns, without his permission and without compensation, is a theft, and I charge the Minister of Fisheries and the government of this country with the theft of property, by reason of this order in council. I realize, in saying this, that I am using rather harsh language, but I use it deliberately. I charge the Minister of Fisheries and members of the government with the theft of property, and I believe the only defence they can offer is that when they passed this order in council they did not realize what they were doing. That defence, after all, is a very poor excuse. It does not justify their action, and it does not correct the wrong that has been done.

The regulation in question reads as follows:

> The use of nets in non-tidal waters, except under a permit from the Minister of Fisheries, is prohibited.

That sounds innocent enough; but owing to the fact that no permits are ever granted, its effect is, as I have already stated, to deprive these people of their legal rights in property, without any compensation whatsoever.

In order that the committee may understand the position, I shall refer to it in some detail. At the conclusion of the revolutionary war—

The CHAIRMAN: The language used by the hon. member is strictly out of order, according to citation 298 in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is all right to say that the government is committing the theft.

The CHAIRMAN: Order, please. The leader of the opposition should know that when the Chairman is standing he should keep quiet.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): All right.

The CHAIRMAN: The leader of the opposition is also out of order. Will the hon. member for St. John-Albert please sit down? The hon. member stated that he used the language deliberately, language which was very strong. In so many words he charged the Minister of Fisheries with theft. That is strictly out of order, and the hon. member must withdraw.

Mr. HAZEN: I suggested they had a defence.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. There is no discussion permissible on the point. The language is out of order. There is only one thing for the hon. member to do, and that is to withdraw.

Mr. HAZEN: I withdraw the remark, then.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Your ruling, Mr. Chairman, is with respect to the minister, is it not?

The CHAIRMAN: I do not understand the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Your ruling that the charge of theft was out of order was with respect to the minister.

The CHAIRMAN: Oh, yes, surely.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But not with respect to the government?

The CHAIRMAN: With respect to the government, yes, because the government is composed of hon. members. This ruling would not apply to any other person than members of the government and members of this house.

Mr. HAZEN: In order that members of the committee may understand the effect of these regulations, it is necessary for me to explain the situation. At the conclusion of the war of the revolution the United States government passed edicts of banishment against the person and acts of confiscation against the property of those men who had been loyal to and who had fought for their king during that war. In consequence, these men, their wives and their children, who were known as united empire loyalists, were obliged to leave comfortable homes and a well-established form of living, go to the British colonies in the northern part of the continent and there, amidst great trials, hew out for themselves new homes in the wilderness. About 70,000 persons left the United States at that time and laid the foundation for a great nation in the northern part of this continent.

Some of these loyalists settled along the banks of the Saint John river in the province of New Brunswick. As a reward for their services they received grants of land from the crown. These grants conveyed not only a certain acreage of land, but, if the description of the Saint John river as given by the Minister of Fisheries on August 3 last, as reported at page 2449 of Hansard, that the waters in the summertime are very shallow and narrow, is correct, then there is no doubt that these grants extended to the centre of the stream, and that the owner of the soil was the owner of the fishery above it. There can be no question about that. I might add in passing that if the Minister of Fisheries intended by that remark to convey the idea that the river was non-navigable, I am in agreement with him. I agree with him that the river is shallow in many places, but I must take issue with him when he says that the river is narrow. I cannot give its average width, but in many places it is over a thousand feet wide.

The important point, however, is that the grants to these loyalists conveyed not only a certain area of land, but also, and I quote from one of the grants:

> All . . . fishings, fishing waters . . . profits, commodities, appurtenances and hereditaments whatsoever thereunto belonging or in anywise appertaining.

Now grants of this kind convey what is known in law as several fisheries, and in the case of these grants they convey a corporeal hereditament. They gave the exclusive right of fishing to the grantees, their heirs and assigns in the waters fronting on their land to the middle thread of the river, or, as some text books say, ad medium filum aquae. If the Minister of Fisheries has any doubt about this statement, I would refer him to Halsbury's "Laws of England," second edition, volume 15, commencing at page 42.

The most important fish that frequent the Saint John river is the salmon. There is only one way in which that fish can be caught in these several fisheries, namely, by netting. They will not rise to a fly; they will not take bait, and they cannot be caught by trolling. In consequence, from the time these grants were given about the year 1785 until last year these loyalists and their successors in title have exercised their legal right to net these fish in their several fisheries. It is hardly necessary for me to point out to this committee that netting is one of the best known and one of the oldest methods of catching fish. It was probably an old method when Simon and his brother Andrew cast their net in the sea of Galilee. It is the only way in which salmon can be caught in these several fisheries and, in consequence, the effect of this so-called regulation is to prohibit the owners of these several fisheries from exercising their rights to catch these fish in their several fisheries in the only way in which they can be caught. It takes away their rights and property; it amounts to a theft of property. It is a wrong which cannot be allowed to go unchallenged. It is an act of injustice which must sooner or later, and the sooner the better, be corrected.

The statement made in this house by the Minister of Fisheries on August 5 last, when he said, as reported at page 2454 of Hansard:

> It is possible for them—
> That is, the riparian owners.
> —to catch by angling if they want to use that method.

—was, I regret to say, misleading and incorrect. As I have said already, these owners cannot catch these fish by angling. In all the 120 odd miles of the river in question, there are only four or five pools in which salmon can be caught by angling. I ask the minister to keep in mind the fact that these pools are not publicly owned. They are owned by private individuals; and if they are fished by the public—and I believe they are—it is only with the permission of the owners.

For several years prior to last year the government has required the owners of these several fisheries to take out fishing licences before they put out their nets. When this matter was before the committee last year the Minister of Fisheries stated that these owners had never claimed that their rights had been encroached upon by their being compelled to take out these licences. In making that statement the Minister of Fisheries showed a lack of knowledge of the law. There is no question that the government has the right to impose a licence under the British North America Act. Under that act the dominion government has the right also to make regulations for the conservation of fish. The regulations provided that the nets used in this river should be thirty fathoms, or 180 feet in length. The practice had been for an owner to place stakes on his land and on his land under the water for a distance of from thirty to fifty feet out into the stream. The net was hung from these stakes, and then from the last stake the net was carried down river. Since the river in many places was a thousand feet wide, a net extending into it for fifty or sixty feet did not prevent the salmon from finding their way up the stream to the spawning grounds.

There is no doubt that the government has the right to make regulations. But it is one thing to regulate, and it is another thing to prohibit. It is one thing to make regulations as to how a person shall use his property, but it is an entirely different thing to say that he shall not use that property at all. The right to regulate implies the continued existence of that which is to be regulated—in this case, fishing in these several fisheries. But a prohibition takes away a right that previously existed. The effect of this regulation is not to regulate at all, but to take away absolutely this legal right in property, and that is why I have referred, as I have gone along, to this regulation as a so-called regulation. It is not a regulation at all. It is an absolute prohibition.

By orders in council passed on February 23, 1894, and February 23, 1895, the dominion government submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada a number of questions for the purpose of setting at rest differences of opinion which had arisen between the dominion government and the provincial governments regarding rivers, harbours, lakes and fisheries under the British North America Act. The riparian owners, I might say in passing, were not parties to this litigation. The case is reported in 26, Supreme Court of Canada Reports, at page 444.

The Supreme Court of Canada answered some of the questions submitted to it adversely to the dominion government, and some questions adversely to the provincial governments, and, in consequence, both parties appealed to the privy council. The privy council held that section 91 of the British North America Act gave the dominion government the right to make fishery regulations, and that the provincial governments had no jurisdiction to make such regulations, but it pointed out that the act did not convey to the dominion government any proprietary rights in relation to fisheries but gave it certain legislative jurisdiction. The privy council in the course of its judgment said:

> It must be remembered that the power to legislate in relation to fisheries does necessarily to a certain extent enable the legislature so empowered to effect proprietary rights.

The words "to a certain extent" in this sentence cannot be overlooked. They are of the greatest importance. It was never expected nor was it ever intended that the power to make regulations would be exercised so as to deprive citizens of this country of what legally belonged to them.

During the course of the presentation of their case before the privy council, it was submitted on behalf of the provinces that if the power to make regulations was vested in the dominion government, the power might be abused so as to amount to a practical confiscation of property.

Dealing with this argument the privy council said:

> The suggestion that the power might be abused so as to amount to a practical confiscation of the property does not warrant the imposition by the courts of any limit upon the absolute power of legislation conferred. The supreme legislative power in relation to any subject matter is always capable of abuse but it is not to be assumed that it will be improperly used; if it is, the only remedy is to appeal to those by whom the legislation is enacted.

The fear expressed by the provinces when the case was before the privy council that this power if placed in the hands of the dominion government might be abused so as to amount to a practical confiscation of property has now been realized. Section 9 of these regulations has the effect of practically confiscating private property without any compensation whatsoever. It is an abuse of legislative power which must be abhorrent to any court of British justice and to all British subjects.

The questions which the privy council was asked to answer in this case had to do with differences that arose between the dominion and the provinces over their respective powers and their respective jurisdictions under the British North America Act. But there was another question which the privy council was asked. It was asked as to the rights of the riparian owners. These riparian owners were not before the court to present their case and, in consequence, the court refused to pass on their rights without hearing them. The privy council said:

> Their lordships must decline to answer the last question submitted as to the rights of riparian proprietors. These proprietors are not parties to this litigation or represented before their lordships, and accordingly their lordships do not think it proper, when determining the respective rights and jurisdictions of the dominion and provincial legislatures, to express an opinion upon the extent of the rights possessed by riparian proprietors.

It might be noted in passing that these judges observed a fundamental principle of British justice, namely, that when a man's rights are in question he has a right to be heard before judgment is passed. Their grasp of fundamental principles of British justice is in marked contrast to the manner in which the Minister of Fisheries dealt with these people when without hearing them, he passed a so-called regulation confiscating their property.

When I brought this matter to the attention of the house in August last and pointed out the injustice that had been done to these people, the owners of these several fisheries on the non-tidal waters of the Saint John river, the Minister of Fisheries at once rushed to the defence of this so-called regulation. I was surprised that he adopted this unjudicial attitude in view of the fact that a fundamental principle of British justice was involved. I was more surprised at the arguments he presented to this committee. He said that the regulation merely restricted a right; that all it did was to control the method of fishing; that these riparian proprietors had simply been regulated as to the method of exercising a right; that "We have not interfered at all with their right to fish, if they had a right"; he did not think the department had dealt unjustly with these people.

I take issue with him on the statements he made. This so-called regulation does not restrict a right; it is an absolute prohibition; it is not a control of fishing, but is an absolute confiscation of private property. These people have been treated like non-Aryans living under a nazi regime.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is an indictment!

Mr. HAZEN: I do not wish to become too personal about these matters. There were some things I was going to say which, perhaps, I might just as well omit. But I will say this. It is only natural that, if you prohibit absolutely the catching of fish in certain parts of a river, more fish will be caught in other parts of that river. It is only natural that if you stop all netting, all catching of fish, and allow all the fish to reach their spawning grounds, more fish will be propagated. If the government of this country considers it advisable, either in the interests of wealthy anglers and their friends and supporters, or in the interests of commercial fishermen in other parts of the river, to take away from people in the non-tidal waters of the Saint John river their legal rights, to deprive them of their several fisheries, then I tell him that there is a right way and a wrong way to go about this matter. The wrong way is the method he has adopted by having this so-called regulation put into force. The right method is to expropriate the property owned by these people and to pay them what it is worth.

When private salmon clubs like the Restigouche or the Bonaventure wanted to improve the fishing in their river, they did not run to the government and ask it to take away somebody else's property in order that their sport should be benefited; they went to the fishermen along those streams and at the mouth of the rivers and paid them for their stands, and then they removed those stands. They acted in an absolutely legal and proper way.

I do not think there is any hon. member in this chamber who wants to see a person's property taken from him or stolen from him. But this so-called regulation has had that effect; it has taken away from these people their legal rights and property, and it has made no provision whatsoever to pay them for their rights.

The Minister of Fisheries said in August last that at some time—he did not say when—they were going to compensate these people to the extent of paying them for their boats and nets. That, as I said then, was but adding insult to injury. That is but a minor part of their claim. Their claim is based on a legal right of property. They are the owners of these several fisheries, and you cannot deprive them of their property by order in council followed by a special or any other kind of regulation.

The wrong done to these people must be righted. I regret that in the dying hours of this part of the session, I have been obliged to take up the time of this committee in discussing this matter. But I make no apology for doing so. A wrong has been done to these people. It is a wrong that must be righted, and the sooner it is righted the better.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I do not rise to discuss this matter. I merely desire to say that the hon. member for St. John-Albert has done a great service to the people living along the Saint John river by bringing this matter so fully to the attention of the committee.

As to the legal position, I do not think there is the slightest doubt. I do not say that a property right has been taken away explicitly, but the effect of the order in council has been to take away a right which riparian owners have had since the days it was first granted. Under the constitution of the United States that would be absolutely illegal and unconstitutional; compensation would have to be made. Under our position the crown need not make compensation, but surely there is an ethical principle which should appeal to the minister. If it is the desire of the government and of the department that there shall be no further netting in the non-tidal waters of the Saint John river, thus taking away a right which has been enjoyed for nearly a hundred and fifty years, the only decent thing to do, and one which should have been initiated as soon as the order in council was passed, is to ascertain what the rights are worth and pay the riparian owners. It would not be a very large sum, and it would be to the credit of the minister if he would at once institute proceedings to have this done.

From the point of view of politics this is a cardinal mistake on the part of the minister. I do not know of anything better that he could have done for me in my riding than just what he has done. Make no mistake about that; this is a vote-getter for me and against the government, and also in the constituency of Victoria-Carleton. That, of course, is not a proper principle upon which this matter should be discussed. I congratulate the hon. member for St. John-Albert upon his study of the legal aspects of the matter. I appeal to the minister to have the legal position investigated if he has not already done so, and do justice to these owners.

One word on the question of lobsters. I regret that I was not in my place when the item was discussed a moment ago, but I was busy composing a cable to my former leader, and it was, I wish to assure the committee, a labour of love. I suggest to the minister that his handling of the lobster pack last year was an illustration of how government cannot transact private business. What happened? You had a lobster pack on your hands, and an extraordinary sum of money was spent to sell this lobster pack, 5,320 cases. In a return brought down to the house, No. 131, on November 25 of last year, on the motion of the hon. member for Cumberland, we find that a total of 5,320 cases were sold up to October 31, 1940, and that the sum of $83,139 was paid, not to the fishermen, but to the canners; that the cost of operations in the marketing, handling and storage of the processed lobsters during the year 1940 at Halifax, Shediac, Charlottetown, and another place, was: for services, $6,733; for expenses, $2,602; making a total of $9,335, plus a sum of $538 for rental, plus $36,571 for cost of additional expenditures itemized, including $30,948 for advertising. The total expenditures, apart from the amount paid to the canners, was $46,446; the amount paid to the canners was $83,139; the total amount of the expenditure was $129,585. The actual amount received by the fishermen themselves, I venture to suggest, was less than one-third of the whole. Take away the cost, including the sum of $30,000 for advertising, take away the sum of $83,000 paid to the canners, and I suggest that not more than $40,000 of this money went to the fishermen. I am sure that half of this was paid out in the operations of the canners.

It may have been the intention of the department to help the canners, but I do not think parliament voted the money for that purpose. Parliament voted the money, if I apprehend the situation correctly, to help the fishermen and not the canners. What has been the result? Out of a total expenditure of some $130,000, I venture to suggest that less than one-third has gone to the fishermen. That is not good enough. Some other method must be adopted to deal with this industry. I suggested not long ago that the canning of small sized lobsters should be discouraged as far as possible. Anything under nine inches should be prohibited, and the propagation of the live lobster should be encouraged. It is the one method of dealing with the situation, even if the season has to be extended.

This situation arose in 1932—a short season, small lobsters. The government of the day handled it in a little better fashion. I admit that the canned lobster pack question was not to the front then. What we did in 1932 was to limit the size of lobsters that could be taken out of the water, and anything smaller than nine inches had to go back. We also extended the season for the fishermen, and the results to them were most satisfactory. Their income was more than doubled, especially in the fall. That is the only profitable method of handling the lobster fisheries. We must propagate the live lobster industry, putting the small lobsters back into the water so that they may grow and come to maturity. I suggest that, with the lobster considered such a delicacy as it is not only in our own market but in the markets of the United States, many more dollars would accrue to the primary producer than under the canned lobster industry.

In my opinion the whole situation must be reviewed, and I ask the minister to review it. Certainly the country is shocked to think that it cost this much money to sell 5,320 cases of lobster—$45,000. It is ridiculous. I do not care who is the father of this scheme; it is ridiculous. It is uneconomic; it is unsound—I cannot find adjectives strong enough to condemn it—and if the minister does not change it, he will hear further from me in succeeding years.

I know there is trouble in dealing with the situation. There is difficulty in connection with export. There is an absolute prohibition in effect so far as the other side is concerned. There is trouble in getting the product into the United States—just why, I really do not appreciate, unless it is competition with their own production. At any rate, the only solution for the lobster fishery—and I am thinking of the fishermen and not of the canners—is to propagate the live lobster industry. By so doing, I suggest that the lobster fisherman would get $5 for every $1 he now gets with his catch going to the canners.

The minister ought to look into this matter. I do not know what he is doing this year, but I presume he is following the course he did last year. I have not made inquiries. But if he does follow that course, and if he indulges in the costly advertising he did last year, he will hear from the daily newspapers of the country. If one wants to advertise an article of food, does anyone think that he should go to a high-class magazine in Canada, or to the daily newspapers where people see the advertisements? Fifteen per cent of the total amount is paid in commissions to some advertising agency in the city of Toronto. What is the connection between the advertising agency and the gentleman in Toronto who drew the $1,000 for expenses and took no salary? Is he the advertising agent? Does the minister know? I am not going to say more about that, but I should like to have an answer to that question: What is the connection between Mr. Akins, or whatever his name is, and the advertising agency? Are they one and the same person? Will the minister review the whole position?

I suggest that the minister should do everything he can to encourage the live lobster industry and to foster exports to the central provinces and the United States where the product will find a good buying market, rather than to encourage further canning of this delicacy. In so doing, he will preserve the industry. If you continue taking seven-inch lobsters, how long will there be lobsters? It is suicide; it is not conservation at all. I visualize the time when there will be no lobsters if we do not do something about the matter, and we ought to do it in conjunction with the United States on the Atlantic coast.

Propagate this wonderful sea food, preserve it, and above all, pursue that course which will bring most in dollars and cents to the primary producers.

Mr. POULIOT: Just one word. There is a word I do not understand in the remarks of the leader of the opposition. I have followed him closely for the last five minutes, but I think he made a slip. He is familiar with all the intricacies of the English language, but he said something that astounded me. He spoke of lobsters, a subject which is dear to his heart and which is appreciated by all those who are fortunate enough to eat lobster. Of course, the lobster will live; it will live long enough to be caught when it is the right size, and lobsters should not be induced to commit suicide, as the hon. gentleman has said. If the lobsters are committing suicide; if they are killing themselves, how can he blame the minister for that? The hon. gentleman should be more careful about his use of the English language. To-day he said that I had made a savage attack; that is another feather in my cap. But when he speaks of lobsters, would he be kind enough to explain to the committee how lobsters are committing suicide? Did he ever assist at one of these hara-kiris of lobsters? Is it done at the time they see the red bait when they are in the trap, or when they are still alive, ready to be broiled? The hon. gentleman must know. It must be one of the secrets of the Tory party.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Why make a joke of it?

Mr. POULIOT: The leader of the opposition made a joke of himself by using improperly the English language, a man who occupies the seat where that great philologist Arthur Meighen and that great viscount Lord Bennett of I don't know what sat. Let him explain what he meant by that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Do not be ridiculous. You have been ridiculous all day.

Mr. POULIOT: The hon. gentleman is ridiculous himself.

The CHAIRMAN: The item before the committee is for the administration of the Department of Fisheries. It is out of order to discuss questions of grammar or vocabulary.

Mr. MICHAUD: I regret that I cannot undertake to try to revise the great lobster industry on the principles laid down by the leader of the opposition. This committee knows well the reasons why the government was compelled to intervene in this industry. As I have already stated, it was because those interested, both fishermen and canners or manufacturers, were fearful that they would have to close and abandon that otherwise profitable industry in view of the fact that the market of Great Britain and other European countries was closed last year by reason of the war. Up to last year, 85 per cent of the annual pack of lobsters was sold on the European market; about 5 per cent went to Canada and 10 per cent to the United States market. Last year we were faced with this situation, that twenty thousand people, depending practically on that industry on the Atlantic coast for their cash crop, were to lose it. The only cash that most of them draw out of the fishing industry is from their lobster catch, which lasts six weeks of the year in each district. Now it is being stated that, owing to the policy adopted last year by the department, the fishermen suffered. Here are the facts. First I must tell the committee that it takes two hundred pounds of live lobsters to make a case of canned lobster, or, in other words, two hundred pounds of raw material to make a case which contains forty-eight pounds of canned lobster. Up to last year the fishermen were receiving for their raw material from three cents to four cents a pound. When we adopted this scheme last year and agreed to help the marketing of the catch, we made it a condition that the packers should pay the fishermen at least five and a half cents a pound for their raw material. Those who would offer their product to us and seek the help of our organization to dispose of it had to produce a certificate from the fishermen that the raw material cost them five and a half cents a pound. That is the first benefit derived by the fishermen.

This year we have again given this assurance to the trade, because last year was not a normal year. Had it been a normal year, with the success we had in marketing the pack, the government would not have intervened this year; but in view of the fact that it was an exceptionally low year, the trade was fearful that with a normal pack they could not take care of it. Again, a large number of people who depend on this industry for their livelihood would have been thrown out of employment, and we would have had to make it up by relief.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Does the minister speak of those employed by the canneries?

Mr. MICHAUD: No, the fishermen. The fishermen do not can their fish.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I know that. Do not tell me that. Why could these lobsters not be shipped to the live lobster market just as the other lobsters?

Mr. MICHAUD: Because there is a limit to the fresh lobster market. Anyone who knows anything about it should know that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The great market of 130,000,000 people that I have heard about for the last thirty or forty years cannot absorb the lobster catch of Prince Edward Island? That is nonsense.

Mr. MICHAUD: There are sections in Prince Edward Island, the Magdalen islands, the northern part of New Brunswick from which it would not be feasible to market live lobsters on the Montreal, Toronto or United States market. Fishermen from those districts cannot profitably market their live lobsters in the United States in competition with lobsters from Maine.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why?

Mr. MICHAUD: On account of the distance, the cost and the climate. Because of the lower temperature of the water, lobsters do not grow as large in those sections as they grow in Maine. For that reason, if the lobster is not canned, it cannot be marketed profitably. That has been established by all those who have some knowledge of that branch of the industry. If it were more profitable for these fishermen to sell their lobsters alive rather than in cans, with the added cost of the work, the waste and the capital that goes into the plant, and cans and boxes and labels, they would do so. But it is a physical impossibility.

Mr. POTTIER: There are too many fresh lobsters now on the market.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If they fed them all in in one day.

Mr. MICHAUD: We have created a demand on the United States and Canadian markets for canned lobster such that to-day in some sections accessible to the United States market they find it more profitable to can their large lobsters and sell on that market, which is very high at the present time.

The hon. gentleman says that we spent $62,000 to market five thousand cases. That is wrong. We spent that money to help market the whole pack, which was 58,898 cases.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then the minister's return is wrong. I have a return certified by the deputy minister showing the total number of cases was 5,320 plus forty-five.

Mr. MICHAUD: It all depends upon what question the hon. member for Cumberland asked. The whole pack put up by the industry last year was 58,898 cases, and our endeavour was to help the industry to market that pack. We would rather not have marketed any, had the industry been willing to market it all. But they came to us and told us that they were fearful, and had had no experience in the domestic and United States markets. The most which had been marketed on the Canadian and United States markets in the past had been 15,000 cases. They were expecting to put up 70,000 cases, and they actually put up 58,898 cases. They asked us to help them to market the product. They suggested, and we all agreed to confer. We got them into a conference before the opening of the season, and it was agreed that the best way to proceed was to create a demand on the home market.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister knows nobody wants canned lobster if he can get fresh lobster.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, but how many can afford to buy fresh lobster? In the winter time it cannot be purchased. It is available only during a restricted period of the year, and the cost of keeping fresh live lobster is tremendous. People in Toronto and Montreal are the largest customers. It would be scarcely physically possible; and even if it were possible, the price of taking the commodity to those markets, and keeping it there in a fresh condition, live, all the year round, would be so great that the cost could not be absorbed.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course it could not be handled in that way. It could not be kept on the fish market, but it could be kept by those to whom the producers sell. That is so, because I have seen it done. It can be fed into the market in the early months of the year, and in the fall.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes; but that is a limited and restricted market. It is a de luxe product.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Quite so.

Mr. MICHAUD: We proved last year that this is a commodity which a great number of people will take, when they are educated to it. We succeeded in educating them. I shall give the committee an indication of what I mean. Last year on the Canadian market we sold 28,000 cases, while in the past we had marketed only 3,000 a year. We marketed on the United States market 30,366 cases, while in the past we had marketed only 12,000 cases.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): All right, carried.

Mr. MICHAUD: Now—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Carried.

Mr. MICHAUD: —about advertising, we had figured on a production, last year, of 70,000 cases. We could not spend more than $50,000. We thought it was reasonable, based on the possible production of 70,000 cases.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It does not look reasonable now, does it?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, it does. It was not intended to be a yearly appropriation. It was intended only for last year and, as I said before, had production last year been normal we would have discontinued it. The industry, with the cooperation of the government, has proved that the whole pack can be marketed, both in the United States and in Canada.

Mr. KINLEY: It was an innovation, to meet an emergency.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Oh, the reserves are called up.

Mr. MICHAUD: The criticism which has been lodged by the leader of the opposition is about the only criticism we had had so far with regard to this matter.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Then the minister has not read the daily newspapers.

Mr. MICHAUD: The daily newspapers are not criticizing. Some have asked for explanations. I am coming to that. My hon. friend knows the value of advertising. In the past, when we had a sum sufficient to spread it across the country, we did spread it among all the publications in Canada. There are 961 daily and weekly newspapers we could use. Had $50,000 been distributed among 961 publications, no single publisher would have received a great deal. We have thought that lobster can best be advertised, with only a limited amount of money at our disposal, by using coloured advertisements. We use coloured advertising exclusively, for two reasons: We think it is the most appropriate way of advertising lobsters; second, we were restricted in the amount of money we had to spend, and we thought that in view of the small amount we had, this would be the best means to get our product before the public. The result from last year's experience has proven that method to be satisfactory.

The hon. member has asked for information regarding the gentleman who carried on the advertising. I do not know his relationship with the Walsh advertising agency, except that he has had advertising experience. He holds himself out as the Toronto agent of the Walsh advertising organization, the head office of which is at Windsor, Ontario. Advertising is always placed on the same basis, namely, on a space basis. Payment is made on a tariff rate arranged among the publications in Canada, including the daily and weekly newspapers and magazines. That tariff is known and published. It is checked by the treasury, and they all charge the same rate. We have nothing to do about it; we cannot change it. The publications control those rates, and we must submit to them.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. MICHAUD: Pardon me; with regard to the Saint John river I would make one or two observations. I have no doubt that the hon. member for St. John-Albert was not serious when he accused me of theft. He has since given me a certificate of honesty, and I am satisfied. I suggest, however, that he was not altogether fair, nor was the leader of the opposition, when they based their whole argument on the fact that we were depriving these good people of a vested right. It was not our intention to do so, and I am sure we did not deprive them of the vested right of fishing.

Prior to last year that portion of the Saint John river above tide-water was the only non-tidal water in which salmon was netted. In all other provinces and in all other waters the netting of salmon was not permitted. The action has been taken for the purpose of conservation. This controversy has extended for many years. The leader of the opposition knows that when he was a minister representations were made—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): We resisted them.

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes, I know. But the hon. member was in a difficult position. Several of those people, availing themselves of the opportunity of taking out licences for the netting of salmon, were residents of his constituency, and also voters. I do not blame him for resisting the representations made, and for not implementing those recommendations.

But we have not deprived these people of their rights. Regulations have been enforced against these people which provide that they shall not fish after dark; that they shall not fish in months other than those between May and August; that they shall not fish with certain kinds of flies. There have been many restrictions. There were restrictions on those who did not avail themselves of the privilege of taking out a licence. We have now told them—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The minister has been referring to regulations. The department is legally entitled to regulate, but it is not entitled to pass a regulation which has the effect of confiscation or prohibition.

Mr. HAZEN: Hear, hear.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There is a legal distinction.

Mr. MICHAUD: We did not confiscate. We simply said, "You shall not use your right—"

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Without permission.

Mr. MICHAUD: "—without permission, if you wish to use a set net."

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): But the minister will not issue a permit. That is the effect.

Mr. MICHAUD: We say, "If you wish to avail yourself of your right to take that fish with a hook and bait, or with flies, there are no restrictions whatsoever." It has been said that these fish do not rise to a fly. Well, statistics taken last year show a different story.

Mr. HAZEN: Whereabouts? Was that not in the pools?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; all along the river.

Mr. HAZEN: Does the minister say "all along the river"?

Mr. MICHAUD: Yes.

Mr. HAZEN: I take exception to that.

Mr. MICHAUD: Last year there were 1,072 salmon and 2,529 grilse caught in that portion where fishing with nets was restricted.

Mr. HAZEN: Has the minister the number caught in the pools, and how many pools are there?

Mr. MICHAUD: No; I have not that information.

Mr. HAZEN: Were all the fish mentioned caught in pools?

Mr. MICHAUD: I cannot give that information.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): What are those figures based upon?

Mr. MICHAUD: Upon reports from the inspectors.

Mr. HAZEN: The minister knows that salmon are caught in pools by angling only.

Mr. ROWE: You said they were caught both ways.

Mr. HAZEN: The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Roy), who is not here this evening, has asked me to submit a question. He would like to know if the minister proposes to grant any subsidies to assist in the construction of barkentines which, I understand, are small schooners, along the Gaspé and Atlantic coasts?

Mr. MICHAUD: There is no such intention.

Mr. HAZEN: I understand that a firm known as the Canadian Cod Liver Oil Company, Limited, has established a plant at Rimouski to manufacture cod-liver oil. Has this company received any financial assistance in connection with the construction of the plant or the purchase of the land? What progress is being made at this plant? Has the minister given any consideration to the bonusing of the fishermen who supply cod-livers to the plant?

Mr. MICHAUD: A plant to reduce cod-livers has been established at Rimouski in the province of Quebec, but this company has not received any subsidy or grant from the federal government. There has been no application made to the department for the payment of subsidies to fishermen who deliver livers to this plant, and I doubt if it would be possible. I understand that this company has a system of collecting the livers along the coast and has centralized the reduction at Rimouski.

Mr. HAZEN: What amount has the plant produced up to the present time?

Mr. MICHAUD: I have not that information.

Item agreed to.

74. Fish culture, $190,000.

Mr. MacINNIS: Might we have a breakdown of this item?

Mr. MICHAUD: The particulars are given at page 85 of the estimates: Salaries and wages, $109,825; allowances in lieu of dwellings, $515; printing and stationery, $950.

Mr. MacINNIS: It is not necessary for the minister to read those items because I can see them for myself. What I wanted was the division as between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts.

Mr. MICHAUD: With the exception of a small item for the western division, this amount is all spent in the east. A few years ago the fish culture activities which the federal government had been conducting on the Pacific coast were turned over to the province, which undertook to carry them on.

Item agreed to.

82. Special. To provide for the extension of educational work in cooperative producing and selling among fishermen, $25,000.

Mr. POIRIER (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on item 82. I want to thank the minister for the grant he has given to the school of fisheries at Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière. That $8,000 grant from the Department of Fisheries has been very useful, for the last few years, to the fishermen of my constituency and to those of Gaspé. The technicians who belong to the teaching staff of the school of fisheries, and Mr. Alexandre Goudreau in particular, have organized throughout the Gaspé peninsula cooperatives which have been of immense advantage to our fishermen. I call this item in particular to the attention of the minister and I hope that the grant will be continued. Already the different cooperatives organized have 1,681 members belonging to 11 syndicates operating, thanks to the grant which the Minister of Fisheries has allocated to the school of fisheries of Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière for the last few years, and as the estimates have been reduced, I am afraid that the minister might reduce the grant. Should the minister discontinue or reduce the grant to the school of Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière, I fear that the cooperatives and the syndicates which have helped our fishermen to recover from a very difficult situation could not survive by their own means, as they are not strong enough yet. I beg the minister to show the same sympathy to the school of Sainte-Anne-de-la-Pocatière and to continue the grant through which the cooperatives and syndicates of Gaspé have been developed to the point where they have sold last year over 6 million pounds of fillets.

Item agreed to.

83. To provide for assisting the salt fish branch of the fishing industry, $400,000.

Mr. HAZEN: How much of this vote was expended last year?

Mr. MICHAUD: The payments were as follows:

Province	Number of fishermen	Amount
Nova Scotia	8,973	$169,203 32
New Brunswick	2,768	35,073 30
Prince Edward Island.	629	11,398 74
Quebec	6,239	117,629 00

Included in the latter amount are payments to 2,553 fishermen in the Magdalen islands, totalling $48,210.69.

Mr. NEILL: What about British Columbia?

Mr. MICHAUD: There were no payments in British Columbia because they produce no salt fish.

Mr. KINLEY: What is the total for the maritimes?

Mr. MICHAUD: It is $333,680.95.

Mr. HAZEN: I do not wish to take up time unduly to-night, but did I understand the minister to say that the number of fishermen assisted was 2,768?

Mr. MICHAUD: That is right.

Mr. HAZEN: Would the minister at his convenience furnish me with the number of persons assisted in each county of New Brunswick in which assistance was given, the names of such persons and the amount they received?

Mr. MICHAUD: I think that can be done. If the hon. member asks for that information, we shall try to get it.

Mr. HAZEN: It will be a long answer, but I should like to have it.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

49. National Housing Act, administration, $89,390.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have the National Housing Act of 1938 before me and, according to the preamble "it is in the national interest that a limited experiment in low-rental housing should be undertaken now, creating needed employment and directing public attention to the importance of housing problems generally, and providing a basis of experience on which the provinces and municipalities may follow sound and proven policies in the future." Then by section 3 the minister, with the approval of the governor in council, may:

(a) carry on or arrange for the carrying on of investigations as to housing conditions and the adequacy of existing housing accommodation in Canada or any part of Canada and as to the best means to be adopted to improve housing conditions.

Would the minister make a statement regarding the position in Canada at the present time as a result of the work of the housing administration in accordance with section 3 (a)?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): I am not prepared to deal adequately with that question to-night. The hon. gentleman is really asking me to give the committee a survey of housing conditions all over Canada. It would be a pretty lengthy undertaking, and I am not in a position to give it to-night.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am sorry I was not in the house a week ago Monday when a discussion took place on the tax on building materials. To my mind, as I indicated when discussing the budget on May 7, housing is one of the most important national problems at the present time. If the minister cannot give this information to-night, would he agree to let this item stand until to-morrow and give the committee the information then?

Mr. ILSLEY: If the hon. gentleman wants the information for himself I shall get it for him; but if he wants it for the House of Commons he is asking for it at a very inconvenient time in the session. His question would involve a survey of housing conditions throughout Canada, and to cover that would require a forty- or sixty-minute speech. Generally speaking, I may say that there is a war-time housing problem, and that is the immediate and pressing housing problem. That is being solved by War-time Housing Limited, which is a corporation set up by the Department of Munitions and Supply. The problem with which that corporation is concerning itself has not much to do with the National Housing Act.

The National Housing Act, as the hon. gentleman has stated, was passed at a time when there was unemployment in the country, and had as one of its objects the furnishing of employment and the encouragement of building because there was unemployment at that time. That particular reason no longer exists, although perhaps there are some other reasons why the housing act should be carried on. Consideration is being given from time to time to the National Housing Act. We have not yet terminated it; we are still carrying it on. It provides assistance to private builders of houses, and there is a considerable demand. On the other hand, it is just a question whether the government at a time like this should go into any expenditures or incur any obligation to assist in the private building of houses. The two problems are entirely separate. The war-time housing demand exists in localities where there has been a rapid expansion of war industry and where temporary housing would probably not be required after the war. That is one problem. The other is to assist persons to own their homes at reasonable prices with government assistance. That is another problem entirely, and we are certainly not extending the field of those operations. More and more people now are able to assume those responsibilities themselves.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am still not satisfied with the answer which the minister has given. I know that a war-time housing administration has been set up, but according to a return tabled on June 4 there were not any housing units completed up to May 1. Contracts had been let in Halifax, New Glasgow, Dartmouth, St. Catharines, Welland, Merritton, Hamilton, Fort Erie, Peterborough and Fort William. As I pointed out on May 7, I believe the government is not attaching sufficient importance to this phase of our war effort. On that occasion I mentioned that in the United States in the last war there was a wastage up to 10 per cent as a result of not having housing available in strategic centres. The Minister of Munitions and Supply stated this afternoon that we are embarking on a $400,000,000 munitions undertaking. Five per cent is a very conservative estimate in view of our serious housing shortage to-day compared with conditions at the beginning of the last war, because we have a surplus of possibly 1 per cent of houses in Canada to-day compared with 7 to 15 per cent of vacant houses at the beginning of the last war. Supposing there is a 5 per cent wastage, we are going to run into a tremendous outlay. We have set aside $10,000,000 for war-time housing, but I am not at all satisfied that the government are giving the direction to this problem which they should. The personnel of the directors would indicate that they are dollar-a-year men who are giving their services free of charge. As I pointed out the other day, I think we should have men, and women too, directing the affairs of this organization on a salary basis. In my opinion there are too many dollar-a-year men directing important undertakings.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry, but the hon. gentleman is now discussing the war housing scheme, which is not before the committee. We are discussing the housing act.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Well, according to section 3 of the act the minister is charged with carrying on or arranging for the carrying on of investigations as to housing conditions and the adequacy of existing housing accommodation in Canada or any part of Canada and as to the best means to be adopted to improve housing conditions. I shall try to confine my remarks to the various clauses of this act.

With regard to the situation in Halifax, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar made some reference to the serious shortage in that important centre, and I am told that he was called to task by one of the hon. members for that city. I find in the Halifax Chronicle of June 4, a letter written by Doctor H. B.

Atlee, of the medical faculty of Dalhousie university, in connection with the situation which exists in that city.

Your columns this morning contain the information that Mr. M. J. Coldwell has been "censured in some quarters" for bringing to public attention the condition of the slums of this city. Surely this represents ostrichism in its blatant and unabashed form—that ostrichism which, head hidden in the sand—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. Again, this refers to a war condition which is intended to be taken care of by the war housing scheme, and therefore the housing act has nothing to do with the conditions to which reference is made.

Mr. MacINNIS: Does the chairman assert that there would be no housing difficulty in Halifax if it were not for the war? There is a housing condition existing in every city in Canada, war or no war. It is really nonsense to say that there is no housing trouble in Canada except that which is caused by the war.

The CHAIRMAN: I am not suggesting that. I am suggesting, if I understood rightly the article which the hon. member was reading, that it refers to a housing condition created by the war. If I am not correct; if this is a condition which could be covered by the housing act, that is different.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think, Mr. Chairman, if you listen to the letter, you will agree that it—

Mr. ILSLEY: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—and I am just asking for a ruling on this—is it not contrary to the rules of the house to permit a newspaper letter to be read in answer to a speech of a member of this house? I listened to the hon. senior member for Halifax the other day, and it was quite open, I should think, during that debate, and perhaps at the present time, for an hon. member to answer his speech, but to read a letter from a citizen of Halifax rebutting the speech of a member of this house, is, I believe, strictly against the rules.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is right.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes; that is so.

The CHAIRMAN: On the point of order, it is not in order to read articles from newspapers or letters written by private persons outside the house. Some brief reference can be made to them, and to articles in newspapers, but it is an abuse if the whole article or a lengthy letter is read. If no exception is taken, sometimes it passes as a measure of latitude given to an hon. member. But it is against the rules of the house to read articles from newspapers or private letters which originate elsewhere. Brief references to them may be made, but the reading of such documents is against the rule.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am very glad to bow to your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I refrain from making further reference to this letter. I should like to urge hon. members to read the Halifax Chronicle of Wednesday, June 4, and see what a distinguished medical practitioner in the city of Halifax says about the urgent housing problems of that city. Since I am not permitted to proceed along that line, I wonder whether the minister would make a statement regarding section 3 (b):

. . . investigations as to plans or proposals that have been adopted elsewhere than in Canada. . . .

I should imagine that his national housing organization, in carrying out the provisions of this act before the war-time housing scheme was set up, would have instituted a survey of housing problems across Canada, and I do not think it is too much to ask the minister to give the committee the result of findings made by that administration to cope with an urgent problem.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I have listened with great interest to what the hon. gentleman has had to say. I have been connected, as a matter of fact, with the Toronto housing company for a great many years. I thoroughly approve the stand which the government are taking to-day in connection with their temporary housing arrangements. I do not think this is an appropriate time for the government to spend money on permanent homes; the government need the money for war-time expenditures. I thoroughly approve the government's plan. Furthermore, these people who will be housed in various sections of the country owing to the contingencies of the moment will probably not remain in those districts after the war. Therefore we do not want to build up in the different communities a permanent provision for something which is not going to be permanent. I approve the plan of getting people to buy war savings stamps, invest in victory loans, and so forth. They will have something stored away, so that when the war is over they will be provided with some capital, will be able to return to the communities whence they came, and where permanent businesses will be established, and have some resources to go on with. Then, I believe, will be the time for the government to provide money for the construction of permanent homes.

If I may have the indulgence of the committee, because I must plead that I was a little deaf in missing the item when it came up, I should like to revert for a moment to item 46. I shall not occupy more than a minute or two.

Item 46 relates to a question of administration. I hold in my hand the report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, under date of Thursday, June 1, 1939. This committee was set up for the purpose of going into the monetary system of Canada, and it served a useful purpose. We had before us a great many witnesses, and those hon. members who sat on the committee had an opportunity to air their own particular theories and views. I am sure the minister will agree with me when I say that the meetings of that committee, at which we had evidence from such distinguished men as Mr. Graham Towers and Mr. Clark, have stopped a great deal of talking in the House of Commons by hon. members who know nothing whatever about banking or commerce. I admit that, having been a member of that committee, I did glean a little knowledge, and I think we got some idea of how little everybody knows about the monetary system to-day. I would refer to this statement in the committee's report:

> Your committee has been unable in one session of parliament to complete its study of so wide a subject and recommends that the study of the subject be continued during future sessions of parliament.

All the members of the banking and commerce committee, the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Kinley), the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Tucker), the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. McGeer) and all others, took an intense interest in the study which we carried out that time. We heard many witnesses, and a great deal of good was accomplished. I was going to make a suggestion. We have had a considerable amount of discussion on the budget. We have talked a great deal about it, and there are a good many members of the house—I say this with all due respect to all the members of the House of Commons including myself—who do not know everything. As a matter of fact, sometimes a good many of us have talked about things we do not know very much about. We are going to have to raise more money during the war, and my suggestion is that we have a meeting of the banking and commerce committee again along these lines.

I am sure the members of the committee will all be glad to serve on it and to give their time and talents to the work, with a view to offering the minister suggestions which would help him in his work. We could study the monetary system and also the principles of taxation. I might refer the minister to a few remarks he made in connection with taxation. He admitted on several occasions that he was inexperienced, and I do not think that is to his discredit. He has done a marvellous job in a great many ways, and it is all the more credit to him to admit his inexperience in some matters. Not only that, but he has imposed certain taxes which he has had to take back, and I admire him for so doing.

At any rate, I believe that a good deal of controversy could be eliminated in the way I have suggested, if the banking and commerce committee were allowed to convene next October, or whenever we come back, and call witnesses.

The deputy minister in his report has given some outstanding information. I certainly give him credit for it. No one knows more about most of these matters than Mr. Towers, and his views were very useful. The trouble is, there are so many subjects connected with the question of taxation. It is a study in itself. The law of diminishing returns is something that must always be kept in view. I am not a student of economics, but I have a little common sense and that is all we need. Without disclosing any idea of what there was going to be in the budget, the minister would get a vast amount of information from all parts of the country, from all members of the committee. From my own observations in the banking and commerce committee I doubt very much if another body of men could be found in Canada with a broader knowledge of three things—human nature, psychology, and banking and business.

I would also compliment the chairman of the committee, who is an economist of no mean understanding. There are a great many men in this country whom we could have before us, who have their own ideas. We could find out many things that would be helpful. We could have before us people from various parts of Canada, the westerner and the easterner, expressing their respective points of view with regard to taxation. Principles would be discussed, and everything would be done without disclosing what the budget would contain. We could get the advantage of the best brains in the country.

The minister has been so frank in some of the statements he has made in connection with taxation that I would urge upon him the importance of having the banking and commerce committee functioning. The minister knows how broad the whole subject is. I know the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg and all the other members of the committee will bear me out.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I wish to associate myself with the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Ross) in advocating that the banking and commerce committee be used for the purposes he has outlined. I am positive that before long the government will see its need to know more about money than it does at the present time; the most reactionary people will learn something progressive about money. I therefore take pleasure in supporting his proposal.

Mr. CHURCH: Under the national housing act a great deal of good work has been done in the outskirts of some of the larger cities; but during the debate the other night when reference was made to the administration of the act, and the details of the item on page 79 of the estimates, it was not pointed out that the whole thing grew out of what was done by the Bennett government when my motion for a housing committee was adopted. In 1935 a committee was appointed on this motion to consider the whole housing and reconstruction situation. It sat for three months and brought down a splendid lot of recommendations which resulted in the setting up of this act and a federal housing policy, and according to the figures given by the minister, something like $50,000,000 has been spent to date on it. One resolution which I myself proposed was adopted, namely, that the work should be done not by a government department but through the banks. The work has been well done, and I trust that, in view of the high cost of building, the need of small homes in cities and the high rates of interest—six and a half and six per cent, and some of the shark loan companies take bills of sale and chattel mortgages—the minister will take some steps to work out a continuing policy for the next few years of small houses which are badly needed.

There is some duplication in the administration of this department since the war started, and War-time Housing Limited is building these fabricated houses in Halifax and other places. I was looking over the situation in Toronto the other day, and I appreciate the work the department has done. I hope they will still continue and extend it, and take some measures through the banks or loan companies to advance money to these small wage earners, many of them munition workers, for the building of small houses. The Bruce report on housing in Toronto did not build any houses; it got some torn down because the city amended the by-laws, but the city of Toronto was one of the pioneers in housing. I do not agree with what was said here some three weeks ago about Toronto. Toronto has no slums; it has a few dilapidated houses, but the statements made were totally incorrect. Anyone visiting the outskirts such as Leaside would see many excellent small houses. Travelling between Toronto and Muskoka and Parry Sound and other parts of new Ontario, one sees unsuitable dwellings. I hope this work will not be forgotten during war time because it is one of the most necessary things the government can do, and this department has done good work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Would the minister answer my question about the survey work carried on by this department prior to the setting up of War-time Housing Limited?

Mr. ILSLEY: The national housing administration ever since it was set up has been making surveys in various parts of the dominion so as to acquaint itself with housing needs. That is in the ordinary course of its work in administering the National Housing Act. The surveys they made, the information they gathered, were of value to the government when the government was formulating its policy with regard to war-time housing. The government has full appreciation of the importance of supplying housing, seeing that temporary housing is furnished for these war industry centres, Halifax for example. But as I said, that is a different field of activity from that of the national housing administration. The tendency will be not to extend the national housing administration activities, but the acute housing problem in various parts of the dominion brought about by war conditions is being attended to by War-time Housing Limited, which is under the department of my colleague the Minister of Munitions and Supply, not the Department of Finance.

Mr. NICHOLSON: According to an order in council passed on February 24 set out in section 4, paragraph (c), it would be the duty of War-time Housing Limited to draw upon the personnel and other technical resources relating to housing at present in the government service, and in particular to utilize the services of the housing branch of the Department of Finance. In the order for return part of my question was:

Were members of the staff of national housing moved to Toronto and later brought back to Ottawa? If so, for what reason?

And the answer to that was:

Some members of the housing administration, Department of Finance, were temporarily moved to Toronto to assist in the organization of War-time Housing Limited. When their services were no longer required in this connection they returned to Ottawa to the housing administration.

Would the minister explain the relationship between those two departments? Why were some sent to Toronto and then called back, and what is their present position?

Mr. ILSLEY: At the present time there is no relationship between them, except that national housing administration is making available information they gathered. But employees of the national housing branch are not now working for or in War-time Housing Limited. War-time Housing Limited has perfected its own organization, and the initial assistance which it received from Mr. Nicolls and this branch has ceased. The employees who went to Halifax to assist at the beginning have come back to Ottawa, and the two organizations are now separate.

Mr. NICHOLSON: From the speech the minister made on June 2, I gather that he plans on national housing going out of business. He indicated that while national housing activities are all right in peace time, now the job should be done by war-time housing.

Mr. ILSLEY: They are two different jobs. I did not, I think, say anything to the contrary on June 2. I have said that the tendency is to curtail and not expand the activities of the housing branch, but that is different from going out of business. The hon. gentleman must realize that they have a tremendous job to do in any event with regard to the present investment the government has in all parts of the country in housing. No decision has been reached to cease further advances under the National Housing Act.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I understand that the rules prevent me from reading from previous debates, but the minister's reference on June 2, carried to its logical conclusion, would mean that national housing would automatically fold up for the duration of the war. I have been trying for six weeks to get information as to what War-time Housing Limited is doing, and I think the minister's department, the Department of Pensions and National Health, which has also done a good deal on the housing question in Canada, and the national research council, which has carried on very valuable research work, should be used by War-time Housing Limited.

I referred to this order in council passed on February 24, and I find that another order in council passed later, on April 24, rescinds that very important section. Would the minister explain what is happening? I think it was good business to pass the order in council of February 24 saying that—. . . it may draw upon the personnel and upon the economic and other technical resources relating to housing presently available in the government service, and in particular shall utilize the services of the housing branch of the Department of Finance.

Therefore some explanation should be given why it was decided on April 24 to reverse that policy.

Mr. ILSLEY: I gave the explanation. The employees of the national housing branch assisted War-time Housing Limited in the initial stages. Then it was decided by War-time Housing Limited that it would be preferable for them to go on with their own organization, not using the employees of another branch of the government. By mutual consent it was decided that those employees should return and continue in the employ of the national housing branch.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Might I intervene to say that by consent it has been arranged to sit until midnight. Therefore a formal motion will not be necessary.

Mr. NICHOLSON: According to this return the staff of national housing was moved to Toronto—

Mr. ILSLEY: Some members of it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: —to assist in the organization of War-time Housing Limited. How long were they there, and how extensive was their work in setting up War-time Housing Limited? I have been trying to find out what is going on in War-time Housing Limited. I still think they are not very well organized. How long was the staff of his department setting up War-time Housing Limited? How long did they work?

Mr. ILSLEY: Some of them were in Toronto nearly a month; some, not so long.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I realize that members of the committee are anxious to complete the business, and I certainly would not take the time of the committee unless I considered that this was an urgent question which is not receiving the consideration on the part of the government that it deserves.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member is wrong about that, I can assure him.

Mr. NICHOLSON: There are three departments of government which have given important consideration to this problem. My information is that their services are not being used by War-time Housing Limited. I refer to the Department of Pensions and National Health. I have before me a pamphlet they produced in 1938. It indicates that they have made a careful study of the whole question of housing, as it relates to the public health of Canada. I commend the department for this excellent publication. The bureau of national research has carried on scientific work in this field. My information is that their research facilities and their services are not being used by War-time Housing Limited.

The minister has not satisfied me so far as to why this order in council was passed on February 24, requiring the personnel of the national housing administration to be used by War-time Housing Limited. These are men who had training in their particular field. They are men over whom we have some control. On the other hand War-time Housing Limited is under the control of a group of directors who are serving on a dollar-a-year basis, without remuneration. They have engaged one Victor T. Goggin as general manager at $10,000 a year. I suggest that this procedure does not establish confidence in the minds of the people who have been interested in this problem.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member is discussing the hiring of a man by War-time Housing Limited. That has nothing to do with the subject matter before the committee. Whether or not the Department of Munitions and Supply has hired a man at a salary of $10,000 is not relevant, so far as the present item is concerned. It might be considered when we are discussing the estimates of the Department of Munitions and Supply.

Mr. COLDWELL: As I understand it, the hon. member is asking why the organization already in existence has not been used, and why another organization has been set up. That is his point.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, I know. I have answered the point, as best I can. I have told about the beginning of the activities of War-time Housing Limited in Toronto. I have told how Mr. Nicolls assisted in the initial stages. I have described how it was decided, by mutual consent—certainly it was the opinion of War-time Housing Limited, and I believe it was also the opinion of Mr. Nicolls—that it would be better if War-time Housing Limited got together its own staff and its own organization, thereby permitting Mr. Nicolls' staff to return to Ottawa. They had plenty of work to do, themselves.

It was considered desirable that those two organizations continue separately, instead of together. Because the terms of the order in council seemed to make it obligatory upon the members of the national housing administration, the employees of the national housing branch, to serve in War-time Housing Limited —something which War-time Housing Limited, after a trial, considered undesirable, and a consideration in which Mr. Nicolls concurred—the change in the order in council was made.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I believe hon. members in all parts of the house are proud of the accomplishments of the national housing administration. The minister stated that prior to the setting up of War-time Housing Limited, a survey had been made regarding needs in Canada. That was part of the routine work of national housing. Can the minister give any good reason why the national housing administration could not have gone on and carried out the work now being undertaken by War-time Housing Limited? Could it not have done that work more efficiently and more economically for the Canadian taxpayer?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is a different matter altogether. They could not do both.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Why not?

Mr. ILSLEY: Because they have too much to do in the national housing end of the work. The national housing branch has a long-term and a steady job, of a particular type. They are working on one problem, while War-time Housing Limited is dealing with a temporary and a different type of problem altogether. It is dealing with temporary, government-built and government-owned houses. Other houses are not government-built or government-owned. They are permanent houses, privately built, with government assistance by way of loans. It is a different matter entirely.

We felt that the building of temporary houses was a war-time problem, a temporary problem, and one of the type for which the Department of Munitions and Supply was designed. The Department of Munitions and Supply did take charge of the problem. They used our employees for a while and, under circumstances I have indicated to the committee, they decided that it would be better for them to go on with their own organization, completely, and to let the national housing administration continue with its good work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If I understood the minister correctly, he pointed out that before War-time Housing Limited was set up, the national housing administration went to those points where there were acute housing problems, and carried out their survey work.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Were they not making a plan to deal with this problem? Were they not changing national housing activities so that they could enter the field of pre-fabricated houses, or temporary houses? Was there any definite reason why the national housing administration might not enter the temporary housing field, and do it more economically and more efficiently than War-time Housing Limited?

Mr. ILSLEY: It was thought they could not.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Why?

Mr. ILSLEY: They may have had plans to do that, but it was decided by the government that the other plan would be the better way of doing it.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I say that the minister is handing over $10,000,000 which should be given to the national housing administration. That is something to think about, and something which ought to be the concern of this committee. I realize that a discussion of War-time Housing Limited activity does not come under this vote, and I must bow to the ruling of the Chair. But I suggest that the minister of this department has something to answer for.

Mr. ILSLEY: Of this department, do you say?

Mr. NICHOLSON: Yes, the department of the Minister of Finance has something to answer for in failing to keeping the activities under a government-controlled organization—

Mr. ILSLEY: I have no ambition to take charge of war-time housing, I can assure the hon. member. It is not the function of the Minister of Finance to regulate housing. In this instance its functions are predominantly those of lending, on good credit.

Mr. NICHOLSON: And you are still going to lend.

Mr. ILSLEY: So long as we carry on the administration of the National Housing Act. We administer that act which has to do, mainly, with the lending of money to private individuals. That is a different matter altogether from building houses. Even if I had the power, I would not let the Department of Finance go into the business of building government houses.

Mr. NICHOLSON: But the Minister of Finance is going to hand over $10,000,000 of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: To War-Time Housing Limited?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I think it would be much better to have that $10,000,000 spent under the minister's supervision, on a lending basis, if necessary, for the use of corporations which are going to need additional housing.

Mr. ILSLEY: I disagree.

The CHAIRMAN: Does not the hon. member realize that he has been discussing War-Time Housing Limited? We are not discussing the National Housing Act in the terms he has indicated. The hon. member has stated his case more than once, and the minister has answered. I believe I am quite fair in drawing the hon. member's attention to these facts.

Item agreed to.

50. Old age pensions, including pensions to the blind, administration, $42,320.

Mr. GREEN: Has any consideration been given to the provision of some sort of cost of living bonus for old-age pensioners? I realize there will have to be some discussion with or endorsation by the provinces—at least, I presume there will have to be because they pay a portion of the old age pension. We find in our districts that these old people are suffering a great deal because of the increased cost of living, while their pensions remain strictly limited. I suggest that this problem should receive the serious consideration of the government, particularly in view of the fact that Canada is the most backward country in the British empire with regard to old age pensions and general security legislation.

Mr. ILSLEY: We have received quite a number of representations, but we have not taken any action nor have we given the matter extended consideration. It would require an amendment to the act to raise the amount beyond $20 a month, and there would have to be new agreements with all the provinces. The cost of living has not advanced more than 7 or 8 per cent since the outbreak of the war, and I do not think there would be a sound reason for amending the act and entering into new agreements.

Mr. GREEN: Has the government received any representation from any of the provincial governments?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not so far as I can recall; I think they have all been from private individuals and organizations.

Mr. GREEN: Is the government willing to negotiate with the provinces?

Mr. ILSLEY: I could not say, because the question has not been considered by the government. I am more than doubtful about the provinces being willing to do it although I have no definite information on that.

Mr. NEILL: Did the minister say that he had received no representation from any of the provinces, from British Columbia, for instance?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think any representation has been received from any provincial government.

Mr. NEILL: My impression is that the matter was discussed in the local house and that a resolution was passed, but I may be wrong. I noticed in the papers yesterday that the electric railway men in the home town of the hon. member for Vancouver South have been given a wage increase of six cents an hour, which works out more nearly to a 12 per cent increase than 6 or 7 or 10 per cent. A 10 per cent increase on the $20 would be $2. That may not seem much to us, but it would mean a great deal to these old people. We have only to look across the line at Washington where for some time they have been receiving something like $30 a month.

Mr. MacINNIS: This is a matter of great concern to the old people of Canada. If we take the dominion as a whole, at least 50 per cent of the population over seventy years of age are in receipt of old age pensions. This pension of $20 a month provides only for a niggardly means of sustenance. The average pension received does not amount to $20 a month. A return tabled a few weeks ago by the Minister of Finance gives the following average pensions:

Alberta	$18.56
British Columbia	19.12
Manitoba	18.70
New Brunswick	14.65
Nova Scotia	14.92
Ontario	18.56
Prince Edward Island	11.32
Quebec	15.66
Saskatchewan	16.93
Northwest Territories	20.00

It is only in the Northwest Territories that the full pension is paid. The minister said that the cost of living has risen some 7 or 8 per cent. The papers to-day give the figure as being almost eight per cent. The old age pension received in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and Saskatchewan is $15 or less, and 8 per cent of $15 would be $1.20. What it really amounts to is that, instead of getting $15 a month, these old people are getting less than $14 a month.

We are making provision for the payment of bonuses to people in industry. In many instances this is being done, not to make adjustments, not because we think they should have it, but because we are afraid if they do not get it they will make trouble. Surely we should not overlook these old people who are not in a position to make trouble, who must take what they can get and get along with it. When, as was pointed out a moment ago, the government can provide $10,000 a year for a man who is going to do something that we do not know about as yet, surely it can do something for the old people of this country.

Mr. JAQUES: I should like to associate myself with those hon. members who have spoken on this subject. I have spoken on it quite often in the past, but apparently with no success. I should like to make a few remarks because I think this matter has an important bearing upon the economy of this country. As the hon. member for Vancouver South has said, Canada lags behind every other country in the British empire in the matter of old age pensions, both as to the age limit and as to the amount. I do not know why the age limit is set at seventy years, unless it be that according to the good book, if a man is not dead at seventy, he ought to be.

Mr. MacINNIS: They do not think he will live long after that.

Mr. JAQUES: Small as the maximum pension is, most of the recipients receive even less. I have often wondered why Canada lags behind in old age pensions. There are psychological reasons. I believe it is because we are supposed to be a thrifty people. It is thought that if a man has been a virtuous citizen he should be able to provide for his old age. If he has not been able to do so, then he should be punished for his sins in the past. Originally thrift meant putting a thing to its best use, but to-day it means nothing more or less than saving money. I tried to prove in the committee on banking and commerce, but in vain, that no man can save money except at the expense of the community. It is bound to cause a shortage in purchasing power. What is the purpose of this drive to encourage savings, if not to decrease purchasing power? The reason for this is the war, but the war will not last forever. I want to be on record with regard to this matter.

I can only hope that the policy we followed after the last war, that of deflation, will not be followed after this war is won. We shall have to do the opposite, and I do not know a better way of putting out fresh purchasing power than through the old age pensions, by increasing the amount of the pension and by lowering the age at which it is payable.

For those who might object to my statement that an individual saves money only at the expense of the community, let me put it in this way: If a man saves money he is producing more than he is consuming—I think there can be no argument about that—or he is selling more than he is buying. If he succeeds in doing that, someone somewhere must be buying more than he is selling, and the unemployment problem in all countries is partly due to this craving for saving money. For the benefit of those who do not agree with these ideas, let me quote briefly from "Essays in Persuasion" by John Maynard Keynes. He says this on that subject:

> There are to-day many well-wishers of their country who believe that the most useful thing which they and their neighbours can do to mend the situation is to save more than usual.

This was written in 1932, and at that time there was a depression, which we are promised we shall have when this war is over—unemployment and depression. Keynes wrote in similar circumstances after the last war. He goes on:

> If they refrain from spending a larger proportion of their incomes than usual they believe that they will have helped employment. If they are members of town or county councils they believe that their right course at such a time as this is to oppose expenditure on new amenities or new public works.
> Now, in certain circumstances all this would be quite right, but in present circumstances, unluckily, it is quite wrong. It is utterly harmful and misguided—the very opposite of the truth. For the object of saving is to release labour for employment on producing capital goods such as houses, factories, roads, machines, and the like. But if there is a large unemployed surplus already available for such purposes, then the effect of saving is merely to add to this surplus and therefore to increase the number of the unemployed. Moreover, when a man is thrown out of work in this or any other way, his diminished spending power causes further unemployment amongst those who would have produced what he can no longer afford to buy. And so the position gets worse and worse in a vicious circle.
> The best guess I can make is that whenever you save five shillings, you put a man out of work for a day. Your saving that five shillings adds to unemployment to the extent of one man for one day—and so on in proportion.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The hon. gentleman can make a brief reference to the text, but surely he cannot read page after page of a book.

Mr. JAQUES: I have not read a page yet, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: I am sorry but—

Mr. JAQUES: I have only three lines more, and I think it is a pity to spoil this quotation.

Mr. MacNICOL: What book is my hon. friend reading from?

Mr. JAQUES: It is "Essays in Persuasion" by John Maynard Keynes, an economist of some note and not a Social Crediter. Great minds think alike, as I may remind the hon. gentlemen. To conclude this quotation:

> On the other hand, whenever you buy goods you increase employment—though they must be British, home-produced goods if you are to increase employment in this country. After all, this is only the plainest common sense. For if you buy goods, some one will have to make them. And if you do not buy goods, the shops will not clear their stocks, they will not give repeat orders, and some one will be thrown out of work.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member has crowded a lot of material into three lines.

Mr. COLDWELL: He lost his place and found another one.

Mr. JAQUES: Yes; I missed my place and I think I read one part over twice. This passage seems to cause some merriment, but let me put this to hon. members. What was the position of this country before this war started as a result of the policies which they evidently still believe in? The Prime Minister of Great Britain said, "Never did so many owe so much to so few," and that applies to us in this country just as much as to anybody else. I say that the policies of deflation which were adopted after the last war not only made this war inevitable but made it impossible for those countries which followed these policies, and stayed with them to provide themselves with adequate protection.

Mr. COLDWELL: When the estimates of the Minister of Mines and Resources were before the committee, I drew his attention to the fact that persons who had lived in the Yukon and had removed to other provinces were not entitled to count their residence in the Yukon for pension purposes in the province to which they removed, and that this causes a serious hardship to a comparatively small number of aged people. I was hoping that some consideration might be given to straightening out that difficulty and relieving these few aged people of the distress which is thereby caused. I am not going into particulars of this case because I mentioned it the other evening, and no doubt it has been brought to the attention of the department.

I thoroughly endorse the requests of those who to-night have asked for a bonus, or, what is better still, an increase for the aged people who are in receipt of the pension. The cost of living is going up. The staple articles which they use have gone up in price, and the new taxes on sugar and on other commodities containing sugar still further increase the cost of living for these aged people and the blind.

Mr. ILSLEY: If I may interrupt for a moment, is it not true that a dollar will now buy more than it would in 1927 when the Old Age Pension Act was enacted?

Mr. COLDWELL: It depends upon how you spend the dollar. So far as foodstuffs go, the minister is probably right. But that does not alter the fact that the pension is insufficient. May I point out that we have a very large number of people in Canada in receipt of old age pensions. I have here a copy of the report on the administration of old age pensions and pensions for the blind in Canada for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1941, and I find that we have altogether 185,946 pensioners, old age and blind. To me it is a striking commentary on our economy and on the economy of certain provinces to look over the list and note the percentage of pensioners in the various provinces. When I went west thirty-one years ago I remember how at that time we thought we were going to a new land where in later years there would be security for all who toiled there. But when I look at the figures for Saskatchewan I find that 59·6 of all persons over seventy years of age are in receipt of an old age pension. In Alberta the percentage is 56·56; in Manitoba, 55·33 per cent; in British Columbia, 49·79 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 51·62 per cent. The worst, of course, is New Brunswick, with 61·83 per cent of all persons over seventy years of age in receipt of old age pensions.

There is another factor which ought to be considered. I was speaking this afternoon about the necessity of maintaining morale in this country, and I believe that morale depends to a very large extent upon the home conditions and the security of the people of our land. If we are going to give that security when the war is over, we might offer some indication of it now by giving the old age pensioners some increase, at least, of their pensions. This is being done in other parts of the British commonwealth. The motherland, with all her tremendous financial undertakings and obligations, has raised the old age pension quite substantially in the last year or so. New Zealand has done the same. But we in this country have not given any indication to our people that we have in mind anything but returning when this war is over to the old pre-war conditions. It is not good enough, and it is undermining the morale of our people.

I suggest that here is one place where we could show the people of Canada that we have something better in mind, by increasing for the old folks the comparatively small pensions which they now receive. I associate myself with all those who in this chamber have made this plea to-night.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister be willing to open negotiations with the provinces concerning the question of paying such an increase?

Mr. ILSLEY: It is primarily a provincial responsibility.

Mr. GREEN: Oh, no, it is not. The dominion pays 75 per cent; it is primarily a federal responsibility, and it cannot be shoved off on the provinces.

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, no; the provinces pay the pensioners and administer the system, and we make a grant.

Mr. GREEN: They administer it, but the dominion pays 75 per cent of the amount, and certainly the provinces cannot make a move without the help of the dominion.

Mr. COLDWELL: And the auditor general has the last say.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is primarily provincial. They administer the system and pay the pensions, and we make a contribution.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes; but the pensioners are paid with the approval of the auditor general. If the province grants a pension, and the auditor general believes that the proof of age, for example, is insufficient, although the province has accepted it, the auditor general has the last word and turns down the pension. It would seem to be true that the province does administer it locally, but the final say and certainly the heavier responsibility are in the hands of the dominion government.

Mr. NEILL: I would point out to the minister, as regards responsibility, that while, according to the British North America Act, it may originate in the province, yet it is a matter of record that, when we here passed the Old Age Pension Act, in 1927, it was the dominion that approached the provinces, and not the provinces the dominion, asking them whether they would "come through" if the dominion paid a certain portion. I remember that distinctly, because the question was asked here, and the minister made a reply stating how many provinces had replied to the invitation, and what their answers were. There is no question that the initiative did come on that occasion from the dominion.

Item agreed to.

54. Pensions—Sir Frederick G. Banting, $7,500.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West) moved:

That vote No. 54 of the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1942, be deleted.

Mr. COCKERAM: May I ask the minister why that is being deleted?

Mr. ILSLEY: Because Sir Frederick Banting was killed on February 23.

Mr. COCKERAM: What about his family? Care was taken of the family of the late Minister of National Defence, Mr. Rogers, and I think there should be similar action here.

Mr. ILSLEY: Well, consideration was given to that, and it was decided not to place any item in the estimates. The committee will understand that precedents are created every time pensions are granted in that way, and they are capable of indefinite expansion. I am informed that there was a considerable amount of insurance. I am not sure of the amount nor what the facts are with regard to that. But his wife and daughter are being paid a pension at the rate of $1,188 per annum under authority of the Canadian Pension Act. The late Doctor Banting held the rank of major in the Canadian Army.

Motion agreed to.

56. Subsidies and special grants to provinces. Special grants—New Brunswick, $900,000; Nova Scotia, $1,300,000; Prince Edward Island, $275,000; Manitoba, $750,000; Saskatchewan, $1,500,000; British Columbia, $750,000.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West) moved:

That item No. 56 of the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1942, be deleted.

Mr. COLDWELL: Why is that being deleted?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is an item in the supplementary estimates for a very much larger amount which makes this unnecessary.

Mr. GREEN: Is that part of the arrangement with regard to income tax?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Are not these votes which are now being deleted special subsidies?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Were they covered by the offer to the provinces?

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes. These are special grants, and all these are to be dropped with the provinces which accept the offer, and all these provinces have indicated their intention of doing so.

Motion agreed to.

62. Miscellaneous grants and contributions. To provide for report on cultural conditions in Canada (literature, art, drama, education, etc.), $2,500.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Is this necessary?

Mr. MacINNIS: Would the minister explain to whom this item is to be paid, and what it is for?

Mr. ILSLEY: This item has been here for some years. It is really a pension or grant for the benefit of a distinguished Canadian who has rendered a great service to Canada in the realm of literature. Questions are usually not pressed beyond that, on this item.

Item agreed to.

63. Miscellaneous grants and contributions. Federal district commission—maintenance and improvement of grounds adjoining government buildings, Ottawa, and for improvements to the parkway system under the control of the federal district commission, $133,500.

Mr. CHURCH: This vote is for maintenance and improvement of grounds adjoining goverment buildings, Ottawa, and for improvements to the parkways system under the control of the federal district commission. Then there is an item for maintenance of parks, parkways and plant, Ottawa and vicinity under control of the federal district commission, and another item for the corporation of the city of Ottawa. The amounts for these three items are, respectively, $133,500, $200,000, and $100,000. Other municipalities do a considerable amount of similar work and do not get anything for it.

I would ask the minister whether consideration could not be given to a rearrangement of the monuments around these grounds. The monument to Sir John A. Macdonald is away at the back and Alexander Mackenzie is supposed to sleep on the strong box—I do not know if the minister guards it as closely—and D'Arcy McGee is in the backyard. I asked the Minister of Public Works about this matter last year, and I also discussed the question when my former leader, Mr. Bennett, was here. I thought there should be some rearrangement of these monuments in view of the changed situation in connection with the Canadian National station. Sir Wilfrid Laurier is in the front, and I am glad to see him there, but I suggest that in the recess the government might consult a landscape artist about this matter, because these monuments are not very creditable to the present arrangement. Some are, as I say, in the backyard, some on the main street, and some obscured by a number of motor cars. In view of the ceremonies held at Kingston last Saturday, I suggest that some better position should be given the monument which was erected to the chief author of confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald, more in keeping with the prominent part he played in confederation and afterwards. I hope the government will take this matter up and try to beautify the grounds so as to have them harmonize better with the general surroundings, in view of the amount of money that has been spent. We are spending a great deal on purely municipal work while other places are entitled to consideration. I would ask the minister to give his consideration to this whole question and to consult the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. ILSLEY: I will bring the hon. member's request to the attention of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. COLDWELL: What does the word "vicinity" mean in connection with statutory vote for the federal district commission? Do we go much beyond the city limits?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is a district under the control of the federal district commission.

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the mileage?

Mr. ILSLEY: There are parts of Hull and parts of Rockcliffe under the control of the commission.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Could the minister induce the city to do some better sanding, putting some calcium chloride in the sand? Round parliament buildings and the main streets of Ottawa it is terrible in the winter for cars as well as for people crossing the streets.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member must be a tenderfoot.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): No matter who you are, you have to have creepers on.

Mr. COCKERAM: Cannot some saving be made on this maintenance item?

Mr. ILSLEY: A very large cut has been made in it.

Item agreed to.

67. General. To provide, subject to the approval of the treasury board, for salaries, reclassifications and increases, $100,000.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain this item?

[Mr. Church.]

Mr. ILSLEY: This is a continuation of a similar provision made in previous years to provide for salaries and increases for which provision is not made elsewhere in the estimates. It is intended to cover unforeseen contingencies that may arise with respect to staff and to avoid the possibility of crippling essential services. Allocations are made by the treasury board as required during the year.

Mr. NICHOLSON: How much was spent last year?

Mr. ILSLEY: About $25,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: All for the finance department?

Mr. ILSLEY: No, for the whole service.

Item agreed to.

66. General. Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, 1934, and Municipal Improvements Assistance Act, 1938, administration, $261,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the cost of the operation of the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act?

Mr. ILSLEY: The cost of administering the Municipal Improvements Assistance Act is almost infinitesimal. There is practically no staff at all. We are not making loans under that act.

Mr. COLDWELL: How many cases were taken up in the last year, and what was the total amount adjusted?

Mr. ILSLEY: For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1941, the number of farmers interviewing official receivers was 3,514; proposals submitted, 1,808; meetings of creditors held, 1,925; voluntary settlements effected by official receivers, 348; cases dealt with by boards of review, 3,418; total number of cases dealt with, 3,766.

Mr. EDWARDS: The boards of review dealt with 3,418 cases in 1941. How does that compare with the previous year?

Mr. ILSLEY: In the previous year the number was 6,162.

Mr. EDWARDS: Then there is a falling off of almost 50 per cent in the number of cases dealt with?

Mr. ILSLEY: Thereabouts.

Mr. EDWARDS: Is there any disposition on the part of the government to close up the boards of review and wind up their operations?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not think we could do that; there are still a good many cases to be attended to.

Mr. WEIR: Has the minister received any request in connection with the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act with regard to Manitoba?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes.

Mr. WEIR: What consideration has been given to it?

Mr. ILSLEY: Much consideration has been given, but it was decided not to introduce any amendment before we adjourn this time at any rate.

Item agreed to.

68. General. Unforeseen expenses, expenditure thereof to be subject to the approval of the treasury board, and a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within fifteen days of next session, $80,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should like an explanation of the words, "a detailed statement to be laid before parliament within fifteen days of next session." Does it mean within fifteen days after the session is opened?

Mr. ILSLEY: That is right.

Mr. COCKERAM: How much was spent last year?

Mr. ILSLEY: Up to February 20, 1941, the amount spent was $32,827. That is in the fiscal year 1940-41. After that, $1,271 was spent, making about $34,000 in all.

Item agreed to.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S OFFICE

33. Salaries and expenses of office, $455,790.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What is the relationship between the auditor general's department and the special government-owned corporations set up by the government in connection with war-time business?

Mr. ILSLEY: They are all audited by the auditor general just as if they were branches of departments of the government.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the reason for eliminating from the auditor general's report a vast number of items, the doing of which has materially reduced the value of the report from the point of view of searches by members into statements?

Mr. ILSLEY: There was an explanation given in the report at page 561, but perhaps that was not considered sufficiently explanatory. Here is some further explanation.

Up to last year the report mingled English and French versions in the same volumes. In size the pages totalled 1,354. Last year separate volumes in each language were issued. These totalled 1,137 pages.

The act states what information must be included in the auditor general's report, but leaves to him the form in which it is to be presented. As a result the predecessor of the present auditor general stated in his report for 1923-24, page xx volume 1, that he had reduced the size by 1,000 pages that year. In the report for 1925-26 he advised that he had again reduced the size from 2,260 pages to 1,694, and further reductions were subsequently made, for the last report prior to that signed by the present auditor general consisted of 1,354 pages.

The auditor general says that what he did was to save over 130 pages when information supplied was duplicated elsewhere in the report. He also dropped certain tables of a statistical nature when the information is provided in other official reports, for example the tables of outstanding loan issues, because that information is to be found in the public accounts, also certain statistical tables which might be queried. One was that listing payments to newspapers, because, since much advertising is placed through advertising agencies, who receive commissions from the newspapers, the precise amount actually paid to a paper may not be that included in the statement.

The form is not always readily comparable with the report of the year before. Apparently it is within the discretion of the auditor general as to the form in which he puts his report, and he felt that he was saving duplication.

Mr. CHURCH: The title of the auditor general's department is not properly descriptive. Does the auditor general's office audit all war-time expenditures? As I understand it, the Department of National Defence and others have their own auditors, and the auditor general is an auditor of auditors. Does this office, costing $455,790 a year, audit all the government's war expenditures? I understand that each department dealing with all these outside boards and dollar-a-year men and all the departments, fifty-six of them, have auditors themselves. Does the auditor general re-audit them or lay down rules for the audit by the sub-auditors of the various departments? Does the auditor general supervise all the war expenditures that have been gone over by some roving committees of the House of Commons?

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not know that I can give a quick description of exactly what he does. The comptroller of the treasury, representing the Minister of Finance, has his officers, who are numerous, in every branch of the government service, and sees to it that money is not spent unless duly authorized.

The auditor general's function is that of a representative of parliament. He is responsible to parliament, not to the government. He supervises and audits here and there throughout the whole government service, and reports to parliament.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I presume this vote covers the peace-time activities only. Has the minister available the additional amount required to look after war-time activities?

Mr. ILSLEY: There is some vote authorized out of the war appropriations. I have not the amount here. I am sure it has been given to the house at an earlier time.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to say a word in support of the argument of the hon. member for Davenport. The remarks regarding the saving by the auditor general may be correct, and of course cutting out duplication is all to the good. But so far as the average member of parliament is concerned, practically the whole usefulness of the report is destroyed. Time was when if someone came along and said that Tom Jones was getting too big a salary or too much in his expense account, one could look him up and find exactly what pay he was drawing and what expenses. Now one cannot do that. One can go to the auditor general's office as I have done, and he was courtesy itself and gave me a great deal of information about the particular man, but what I want is to be able to check up on any man in the government service. It very often stops claims that a man is being heavily overpaid, and I used to appreciate it very much, but now the auditor general's report is of no value at all from that point of view.

Item stands.

SPECIAL WAR REVENUE ACT

CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the said amendment be now read the second time and concurred in; but that this house, while disapproving of any infraction of its privileges or rights by the other house, in this case waives its claims to insist upon such rights and privileges; but the waiver of the said rights and privileges is not to be drawn into a precedent; and, further, that this house agrees to the incorporation in this bill of Bill No. 101, an act to amend the Special War Revenue Act,

And that a message be sent to the senate to acquaint their honours therewith.

He said: The amendment made by the other house to the Special War Revenue Act is very small in relation to the revenue collected. It is scarcely a revenue amendment. The amendment proposes a change in a section of the act. The suggestion is that proclamation of coming into force is not to be made until their constitutionality is submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada. As I had agreed that immediately these sections were passed—if they were passed—they would be submitted to the Supreme Court of Canada anyway, I am making this motion now, but asserting the principle that this house is waiving none of its privileges with regard to money amendments.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

On motion of Mr. Mackenzie (Vancouver Centre), the house adjourned at 12.05 a.m.

Thursday, June 12, 1941.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

TRANSFER OF DUTIES ACT

ORDERS IN COUNCIL EFFECTING CERTAIN TRANSFERS TO NATIONAL FILM BOARD AND WAR SERVICES DEPARTMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I desire to table copies of orders in council respecting the transfer of duties act transferring certain powers and duties to the Minister of National War Services (Mr. Thorson), and certain duties to the national film board.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) follow the usual custom and lay on the table any correspondence which passed between himself and the retiring Minister of National War Services (Mr. Gardiner), and other related correspondence?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I shall be glad to table all orders. Attached to one order is, I think, a single-line communication from the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) indicating his resignation from the Department of Natonal War Services.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS

AMENDMENT OF ACT RESPECTING ELIGIBILITY OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT TO SERVE IN AIR FORCE

Right Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Minister of Justice) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 102, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act.

He said: I should like to ask the leave of the house to introduce a bill which I think will receive general approval. A couple of days ago the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) drew my attention to section 12 of the Senate and House of Commons Act which provides that service in the naval or military forces shall not render a member ineligible to sit in parliament. When that section was enacted there was no air force, and there is a possibility that some doubt might arise if the word "air" were not added to the section. There are members of the present house who are serving in the air force. This amendment merely adds the word "air" to section 12, and adds another section that the act shall be deemed to have come into force on the tenth day of September, 1939.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East) moved the second reading of the bill.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I had this matter under consideration and formed an opinion thereon. I wrote the minister and apparently this bill is the result. I think it is necessary to remove any doubt, and I concur in the proposed legislation. I may say that this matter was definitely raised for the first time by the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) who made it clear that the Senate and House of Commons Act was deficient in this regard. To him is due the credit for having raised the point. I merely followed up what he had to say in that respect.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time and passed.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

BUILDING OF WOODEN SHIPS ON PACIFIC COAST

Mr. NEILL:

1. Has the government decided not to build any cargo wooden ships on the Pacific coast?

2. Will the government place any more orders on the Pacific coast for small wooden vessels such as Fairmiles or seine packers?

Mr. HOWE:

1. As no requisitions have been received for wooden cargo vessels, the government has not been required to make any decision.

2. The placing of such contracts depends on the receipt of requisitions from the competent authorities.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MOTION TO ADJOURN TO NOVEMBER 3—ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AGREEMENT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns on conclusion of current business of the session it stand adjourned until November 3, 1941, provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with his majesty's government, that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am in accord with the date of adjournment to the third of November, but I desire to direct attention to the phrase "if it appears . . . that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment." The right hon. gentleman (Mr. Mackenzie King) was good enough to consult with me before this motion was placed on the order paper, I understood the purpose of it and am in agreement with it, but I am wondering how the Prime Minister will interpret "the public interest". Does that include the calling back of this house before the third of November to consider ratification of the St. Lawrence waterway agreement? I should not think that the house ought to be called back in the middle of the summer for that purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, as to what would be in the public interest, one would have to have regard to all the circumstances that would be existing at the time, and the government necessarily would have to take the responsibility for exercising its judgment in the matter. With regard to the St. Lawrence waterway agreement I doubt very much if the agreement will have been approved by the congress of the United States before well on into the summer, although, of course, I cannot say definitely as to that. If it should be approved at an earlier day it would be necessary to consider at once the time of calling this house together so as to have the agreement considered by both houses of the Canadian parliament as soon as possible after its adoption by the United States congress. In these matters, however, I would seek to confer with my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition and try to arrange that the house would be called at a time that would be as nearly convenient to all hon. members as possible.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): One word more, if I may, I want it distinctly understood that if the exigencies of the war situation should be such that the right hon. gentleman thinks this house ought to be called together I agree most readily and I should not even expect to be consulted in such an emergency. But if it should be for any other reason I would thank the right hon. gentleman if he would consult me.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, we approve the resolution moved by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), holding, as we do, the view that the house should not prorogue but adjourn. We have been of the opinion that an adjournment should not exceed ninety days, but in this particular case, with the harvest season running at least into the end of October, I think the date selected by the Prime Minister is a wise one. If the war situation, as the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) says, should compel reconsideration of the date of reconvening, we understand that the house will be called.

May I also say that we hold the view that if the United States congress approves the St. Lawrence waterway agreement the house should be called to give to that matter the consideration which it deserves. Courtesy to our great neighbours to the south demands that we should not unduly delay the consideration of this matter.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, the members of my group agree with the Prime Minister's motion and we shall hold ourselves at his disposal whenever he sees fit to call parliament. We shall be glad to cooperate with him in every respect.

Mr. T. L. CHURCH (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to oppose the motion but I believe that before parliament adjourns the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) should inform the house what is Canada's foreign policy, whether it is that there shall be no further commitments and that parliament will decide in all these matters in the future as in the past. So far parliament has not been consulted at all. The executive does it. Private, secret agreements, notes and appeasements, have been made without parliament knowing anything about them. I think the Prime Minister should also tell us whether he proposes to continue the same appeasement policy respecting 500,000 bushels of grain to Japan and north China, because if Britain cannot appease them, how can Canada, as has been demonstrated in the last three years with respect to Japanese action towards Britain at Shanghai and Hong Kong?

Secondly, the Prime Minister has consulted some members of the House of Commons on Japan, secretly, unknown to other members of the house. All of it is known to our allies. In the recess of parliament no secret meetings of this kind should be held because we have a duty to the mother country and the other dominions, and the situation at the present time is too dangerous for these secret meetings and failure to give the house the facts.

Lastly, the Prime Minister should be in a position before the adjournment to inform the house as to the loss of Canadian merchant shipping off the coasts of Ireland, of men, food and munitions, part of which is reflected in our tax rate. Yesterday the United States was refused the use of these same empire bases off Ireland, and we have not heard a word here as to what our policy is.

There should also be some stand taken immediately by this government as to the Vichy movement against the allies and our recognition of it here.

I should like to know whether the Prime Minister is prepared to make a statement on these three matters before the house closes. I support the motion, because in an emergency the members can be called together very quickly, but how can we and the people of this country know what is going on unless parliament is given all this information? What is the use of looking for recruits and victory loans if the people are not informed of our foreign and defence policy? We should have an informed public opinion. We might as well meet in secret for all the information that has been given to the country throughout the whole of the sittings in the reports to the house or with regard to the unreported business.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): Mr. Speaker I should like to offer a suggestion. The members of parliament were greatly inconvenienced last fall because the preparation of the revised edition of Hansard and the publication of the statutes for last session was proceeded with only after prorogation. As the first part of the session is now almost concluded, I wonder whether the government would not be disposed to give instructions so that the statute book will be published at the earliest opportunity on account of the important legislation that has been passed, and so that revised Hansard will also be published at the earliest opportunity?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I would say first of all to my hon. friend from Broadview (Mr. Church) that I hope he will not regard me as an appeaser. I seek to be a conciliator where that is likely to prove helpful. There is a great difference between the two. Perhaps, in the latter capacity, I may be pardoned if I do not provoke a discussion on the floor of this house with regard to some of the questions to which he has made reference. There is the responsibility of inviting discussion of certain matters; there is equally the responsibility of seeking to avoid discussion. If I thought it would help the position of the allied nations in the war at the present time to have a discussion here with respect to Japanese matters, bases in Ireland, and other questions which my hon. friend has mentioned, I would not have waited until this time to invite such discussion. But, where there are the strongest reasons for believing that no good purpose would be served by any such discussion, I prefer to take the responsibility of not inviting it. All the matters to which my hon. friend has referred have been carefully considered by my colleagues and myself, and we have taken in these matters the course which we believed to be in the interests of the war effort of the entire British commonwealth.

As to my hon. friend's reference to myself and conversations with certain private members, he evidently refers to the meeting I had in my office with hon. members from the province of British Columbia. I believe it is not only the right thing, but very much the duty of one who understands the situation affecting constituencies of a particular province, to seek to make known to those in the parts affected matters of which they would wish to have full knowledge. But that does not imply that one is seeking to impart to others information which one would not be prepared to impart to all. I could not have said what I said to hon. members from British Columbia in a statement to the entire house at that time; had I said at that time publicly in the house what I said yesterday, I believe the understanding of it by hon. members would have been quite different, and the intent of it on their part and by others might have been viewed quite differently from the way in which it was. I do not think I have anything further to add on that subject.

My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) asked me a day or two ago about the Canada-United States permanent joint defence board agreement, as to whether that was not in the nature of an agreement which should have been submitted to parliament. I did not catch at the time the full significance of my hon. friend's remarks, and I therefore said I would like before replying to give the matter a little further thought.

As my hon. friend knows, that agreement is an agreement for the study of certain matters affecting defence, by representatives of the two governments, and such recommendations as are made under that agreement, are made by the representatives of the two countries to their respective governments. The study relates to sea, land and air problems. In the broad sense it has to do with the defence of the north half of the western hemisphere. There are no commitments made by the permanent joint board of defence. The board's representations are made to the respective governments by their respective representatives on the board. The governments then take up with their own departments and themselves decide as to the particular course to be taken. There is no commitment of the country in advance to any obligation. For that reason it has not been thought necessary to put the agreement before parliament for approval.

Mr. CHURCH: Was it not upon Canada's urging that the Anglo-Japanese alliance was abrogated in 1921, driving two of our best loyal allies, Italy and Japan, into the axis camp?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My hon. friend will have to ask his leader in the senate as to that question, because I was not at the conference nor in office at the time the matter was raised.

Motion agreed to.

THE WAR

PROPOSAL OF ONTARIO PREMIER FOR CONFERENCE OF PROVINCES ON CANADA'S PROBLEMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) a question, based upon the correspondence exchanged between himself and the premier of Ontario with respect to matters of taxation, and upon the recent request of Mr. Hepburn that the Prime Minister call a conference of all the provinces to consider the whole subject of the financial relations as between the dominion and the provinces. The reply of the Prime Minister was to the effect that, if requested so to do by all the provinces he would call such a conference. May I ask the Prime Minister if he will give further consideration to the proposal? I would also ask the Prime Minister if he will, of his own motion, call such a conference, to be held at an early day, at which would be considered not only matters of finance and taxation but also the altered constitutional powers resulting from the invasion of the provincial field by the dominion under the provisions of the war measures and mobilization acts, and because of the necessities of war.

I have recently read a survey of public opinion as reflected in the press and I am impressed with the almost unanimity of public opinion favouring such a conference, based on the theory of the promotion of national unity.

The Prime Minister may have felt that after what happened in January last and what has occurred since he could not, without loss of dignity, call the provinces together in conference without a unanimous request from the provinces. May I suggest—

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, this is a speech, and this is not the time for a speech.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): May I be allowed to proceed for just a moment? I am practically through.

Mr. SPEAKER: I may say that in my opinion the position and status of the leader of the opposition are such that I have considered, and I believe the house has recognized, that when he addresses a question to the government with regard to policy he is entitled to more latitude than is extended to a private member.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. May I suggest to the Prime Minister that I feel sure that there would be no loss of position if he, upon high consideration of national unity, and in a sincere and honest effort to unite this country in a supreme war effort, were to call a conference for the purposes suggested. It would be an exhibition of magnanimity and would, I believe, be applauded by all the thinking people of Canada.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might refer at the outset to the concluding remarks of my hon. friend, in which he has suggested that there would be no loss of dignity on my part were I to call a conference, no loss of position if I were to do so, and that it would be an exhibition of magnanimity on my part and be applauded by all the thinking people of Canada if I were to call another dominion-provincial conference at this time.

I think my hon. friend will agree that I have never been one to stand on my dignity, nor have I much regard for those who do. With respect to magnanimity, I think I have given ample evidence to the country that I am not afraid to assume that particular attitude in public. I have, to the best of my ability at all times, with respect to public affairs, sought to be as magnanimous as it would be possible to be not only towards my political opponents but towards any who may differ from me in opinion on any matter. As respects my hon. friend's remarks in that particular, I believe I need not say more.

But the leader of the opposition asks, would the Prime Minister of his own motion call such a conference, to be held at an early day, at which would be considered not only matters of finance and taxation but also the altered constitutional powers resulting from the invasion of the provincial field by the dominion under the provisions of the war measures and mobilization acts, and because of the necessities of war. Well, hon. members will recall that the conference which was held in January was, among other reasons, precisely for the purpose of considering the whole question of finance and taxation and the matter of the altered constitutional powers which might be necessitated by certain courses of action. But when the conference was held, one argument which was put forth for not continuing the conference—the argument which I heard most vigorously asserted—was that this was not a time—a time of war—to be considering constitutional questions; that ministers, particularly federal ministers should not be wasting their time discussing questions of finance, taxation and the like, but should be attending to their duties as ministers of the crown responsible for the war effort of Canada. We were told we had powers of taxation and it was for us not to talk about them but to exercise them as we thought the country's war needs required. That was the ground on which, broadly speaking, the last conference found it impossible to proceed. That ground was taken, not by myself nor by any member of the dominion government but by one or more of the provinces, and unless some of the provinces have had a very material change of mind on that score I fail to see how another conference called at this time would not raise precisely the same arguments.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It might be a change of heart.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it might be a change of heart, but some hearts change too often. I do not speak with any expert knowledge of changes of heart in domestic affairs, but I can say something about them in relation to public matters.

I am obliged to my hon. friend for bringing up this subject at this time because it may help me to clear what appears to be either an intentional or an unintentional misrepresentation of the reply which I have made to the Premier of Ontario with respect to the calling of a conference. My hon. friend says he has reviewed the press in regard to the matter. I have not found the unanimity of opinion that he has with regard to the wisdom of having another conference called. Very different views have been expressed in the publications I have read. What I have noticed, however, is that some of the journals of the country are stating that I had refused to have another conference held. What I said has been construed as representing an arbitrary stand; that I was unwilling to have another conference called.

May I read the concluding paragraph of the communication which I sent to the Premier of Ontario:

> If, however, the premiers of the several provinces should unite in a request for another dominion-provincial conference, the dominion government will be prepared to give immediate consideration to any such request.

The words "immediate consideration" were used advisedly. They were not intended to imply that we would not call such a conference, but rather that, before deciding upon any question of this kind, it would be necessary to do so in the light of the circumstances as they might exist at the time. It might be wholly inadvisable, under conditions that cannot be foreseen at the moment, to call a conference at any one particular time. That is all that is meant about giving the matter consideration—considering the nature of the replies that might be received from the several provinces, and what it would be wisest to do in the circumstances existing at the time.

Let me make it perfectly clear that if the premiers of the provinces of Canada unite in a request for a conference that conference will be called. I have no hesitation whatever in saying if I receive from the different premiers of Canada communications to the effect that they believe it would be in the national interest, and in the interest of Canada's war effort at this time, to have a conference called that I will undertake to see that such a conference is speedily called. But without receiving such assurances from the premiers of the different provinces, I am afraid that in calling a second conference I should be open to exactly the same course of chastisement and criticism that was followed at the last conference.

My hon. friend, and rightly so, places his question on the ground of high considerations of national unity. It is precisely on that ground that I would view the whole question of the wisdom of holding another conference. If I believed that another conference called at this moment would help to further Canada's war effort by giving to the nation an exhibition of national unity on the part of all, particularly with respect to questions of taxation, constitutional problems and the like, I would be the first to have a conference called immediately. The conditions that should govern are I believe those which I have stated in the telegram which I sent to the Premier of Ontario, as contained in the following paragraph:

> Having in mind the circumstances which occasioned the failure of the conference of five months ago, our government is of the opinion that unless there were general agreement on the part of all the provinces upon the desirability of holding another dominion-provincial conference, such a conference called at this time might only serve to accentuate the differences raised at the last conference. Were such to be the case, it would certainly prove prejudicial rather than helpful to Canada's war effort.

I do not think that anyone can deny the accuracy of that statement. Let me make the position perfectly clear. The premiers of all the provinces will have full knowledge of this correspondence. They will see in the press this afternoon and to-morrow the statement which I am making at the present time. I do not wish any of them to wait to be asked what their views are. I invite them now, if they wish to have a dominion-provincial conference called at Ottawa, to write and so notify me and indicate in their letters the agenda they wish to have considered at the conference; and if I receive requests from all the provinces to have a conference called, and agenda are supplied to show what they would wish to have considered at the conference, I will take the matter up with my colleagues immediately to see if we cannot so arrange the agenda as to meet the wishes of all, and have a conference called at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CHURCH: Does not the Prime Minister think it would be better to call off the battle of wits and get together and settle things with Ontario? The dominion government and Ontario are not so very far apart.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the hon. member referring to his wits or somebody else's? If he is referring to his own, I cannot battle with him on that score.

Mr. CHURCH: If Ontario had a stronger representation in the cabinet we would not have all this trouble with Queen's park.

KING'S REGULATIONS AND ORDERS

PUBLICATION IN "CANADA GAZETTE"—AVAILABILITY OF AMENDMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot) yesterday referred to a question he asked some time ago and I said I would look up the information. With regard to the publication of King's Regulations and Orders I am informed that all amendments to King's Regulations and Orders which have been made since the beginning of the war have appeared in the Canada Gazette, with the exception of three items which have been recently approved by the governor in council. These will appear in due course. The subjects of these three items are: 1. Qualifications of signal officers, reserve forces. 2. Change in district audit system providing for audits twice a year instead of once. 3. As regards powers of commanding officers.

The Department of National Defence does not issue King's Regulations and Orders with amendments to members of parliament.

RIGHT HON. R. B. BENNETT

QUESTION AS TO RESOLUTION OF CONGRATULATION UPON HIS ELEVATION TO THE PEERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): In view of the great honour that was conferred yesterday by His Majesty the King upon a former leader of the Conservative party and Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, would the government introduce a resolution of this house extending congratulations to him on his elevation to the peerage for distinguished services rendered to this nation and to the empire as a whole?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I think that each individual member of the house is quite capable of conveying his own expression of views with regard to any honour conferred. I should not think that, having regard to the resolution of the House of Commons with respect to some of these matters, the introduction of a resolution on the subject to which the hon. member has referred would be appropriate at this time.

INCOME AND CORPORATION TAX

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES AS TO THEIR WITHDRAWAL FROM THESE FIELDS FOR DURATION OF WAR

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Last evening, near the conclusion of the sitting, item No. 56 of the estimates of the Minister of Finance, subsidies and special grants to provinces, was on motion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce deleted. This refers to special grants and subsidies to six of the provinces, and the Minister of Finance is reported at page 3851 of Hansard as having said:

> These are special grants, and all these are to be dropped with the provinces which accept the offer, and all these provinces have indicated their intention of doing so.

That is to say, he was indicating that six of the provinces were ready to withdraw from the corporation and income tax field for the duration of the war as outlined in the suggestions of the minister during his budget speech.

I would ask the minister if he would be good enough to lay on the table all the correspondence and other documents, if any, exchanged between himself and the Prime Minister or any member or officer of the government and the premier, provincial treasurer or any official of any provincial government with respect to the withdrawal of the provinces from the income and corporation tax field, upon which this motion for deletion was based.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, I will do that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): To-day?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, I will get it together at once. I want to say, however, that most of the communications were verbal. The provinces sent representatives here to discuss this in an informal and exploratory way, but indicating their intention of accepting this offer.

DAIRY PRODUCTS

BRITISH PLAN FOR VOLUNTARY CREAMLESS DAYS—PRESS DISPATCH IN NEW YORK "DAILY NEWS"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): I should like to direct a question to the new Minister of National War Services. I had given notice to the Prime Minister of my intention to refer to this matter yesterday in the house and asked if he was prepared to make an announcement of the appointment of a new minister. He anticipated my question by making an announcement, therefore I did not put the question. I am sorry I have not had the opportunity of sending the question to the new minister; therefore I shall give him plenty of time to do what I am going to ask of him.

My question is based on a statement made in this house on June 4 by the then Minister of National War Services that he had not authorized a recent press dispatch appearing in the New York Daily News which said that Canadian householders were unwilling to come within the scope of a British plan for voluntary creamless days in the United States, so that increased food supplies might be available for Britain. Will the minister give this his immediate attention and try to offset the unfortunate effect of what appears to have been a slip by the department over which he now presides? Secondly, will he try to bring about a creamless day in Canada also, and in this way make additional food supplies available for Britain?

Before sitting down may I offer my congratulations to the new minister, and express the hope that he will put his usual energy into the department over which he now presides.

Hon. J. T. THORSON (Minister of National War Services): Before I deal with the question asked by the hon. member for Parkdale I should like your permission, Mr. Speaker, to express my very great appreciation of the kind manner in which the announcement of my appointment was received yesterday by the house. I should like to thank the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) for his expression of good wishes, and I am deeply grateful to the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) for the kind reference he made to the race from which I come.

(Translation) I wish also to thank my friends from the province of Quebec for their cordial congratulations.

(Text) The hon. member for Parkdale will of course appreciate that I have not yet had the opportunity of entering upon my new duties, and therefore I cannot at this moment give any expression of opinion as to the questions he has raised. I shall be glad to give consideration to them.

OIL CONTROL

GASOLINE CONSUMPTION AND POSSIBLE SHORTAGE OF TRANSPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. EARL ROWE (Dufferin-Simcoe): I should also like to ask a question of the new Minister of National War Services, to whom I have already extended my congratulations and good wishes.

In view of the possible shortage of transportation for fuel oils, will he give some consideration to the matter of gasolineless Sundays in Canada during the next few months?

An hon. MEMBER: Why Sundays?

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Vien in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

86. Insurance. Expenses of work in the interests of fire protection, $10,580.

Mr. MacNICOL: What have the officials in this department to do with fire prevention? Every province has a fire prevention department. Will these men have to do with the territories, or do they assist the provinces?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): The work is almost entirely of an advisory, educational and consulting nature, maintaining records of fire losses and preparing reports upon fire prevention legislation and fire protection methods in Canada and foreign countries, with a view to establishing reasonable standards of fire safety and standardization of fire prevention measures throughout Canada. The item provides for the salary of a dominion fire commissioner and clerical assistance, also printing, stationery, travelling expenses and so forth, in the interests of fire prevention carried on by the Department of Insurance.

Mr. MacNICOL: What is the name of the fire commissioner?

Mr. ILSLEY: W. L. Clairmont.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): This is a peace-time activity, which costs the country $10,580 a year. It is a branch of government which is purely consultative and I think it could very well be done away with at this time. The provinces are primarily interested in this matter and are doing the work. I suggest that this should be the last time this item appears in the estimates, at least for the duration of the war.

Item agreed to.

476. To provide for compensation to provinces which agree to vacate the personal income and corporation tax fields for the duration of the war, the annual amount thereof being computed in accordance with and subject to the terms and conditions of agreements approved by the governor in council and entered into with such provinces by His Majesty the King in the right of Canada represented by the Minister of Finance and on a basis which will produce substantially the equivalent of either—

(a) The revenues which the province and its municipalities obtained from these sources during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940, less the amounts collected after the close of such fiscal year by the province and its municipalities in respect of personal income and corporation taxes levied upon incomes of 1940 or prior years or based upon the status or operations of the taxpayer in 1940 or prior years; or

and for the payment of fiscal need subsidies to such of said provinces as enter into such agreements and can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the governor in council that these are necessary: an amount not exceeding, $45,000,000.

Mr. ILSLEY: This is an important item, and I promised that at some stage I would make reply to some questions which were asked by the leader of the opposition.

In his speech on June 2, on the motion for second reading of Bill No. 87, to amend the Income War Tax Act, the leader of the opposition asked that certain aspects of the proposed arrangement with the provinces be clarified, and I undertook to answer his questions when I had an appropriate opportunity of doing so. The first question dealt with the amount which would be payable to the province of Alberta in the event that province should choose option B. I quote from page 3386 of Hansard, where the leader of the opposition said:

What is to be the attitude of this government with regard to that province, having regard to the fact that for several years the government of Alberta has repudiated its solemn obligation to pay in full the interest upon its bonds, much to the loss of its credit and also potentially affecting the credit of other provinces? Is this government, in dealing with Alberta, to pay only to that province the actual amount of bond interest paid by that province, and thus recognize its default and thereby in effect condone its action? Or will it insist upon an arrangement being made by that province whereby the Alberta government will respect its responsibilities?

Before I answer the question directly I should like to refer briefly to the proposal to the provinces which I described in detail in my budget speech. In that speech I dealt with the great difficulties with which we were confronted in our search for the necessary revenues with which to prosecute the war, because of the varying levels of taxation in the different provinces; and I said we had come to the conclusion finally that we should introduce taxes at rates which would be possible if the provinces were out of the personal income and corporation tax fields. At the same time we proposed to make an annual payment each year for the duration of the war to provinces which would temporarily vacate those two tax fields. It was difficult to decide upon a satisfactory formula for arriving at the amount of those annual payments to the provinces; indeed the one we decided upon would not do as a basis if a permanent arrangement were contemplated. But after very careful study we came to the conclusion that it was as good a formula as any that could be found for this particular and temporary purpose. It has the merit—when coupled with the proposal to discontinue the present annual grants to Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and when the proposal to pay fiscal needs subsidies to provinces which can show they require them is taken into account—of providing an annual payment which will leave all the provinces in substantially the position they were in, from the revenue point of view, in 1941.

The formula is to pay either: (a) the revenues which the province and its municipalities actually obtained from personal income and corporation taxes during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940; or (b) the cost of the net debt service actually paid by the province during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940, not including contributions to sinking funds, less the revenue obtained from succession duties during that period. In simple terms, the annual payments to the provinces are based upon either the cash actually received from taxes in 1940, or the cash actually paid out in interest. The formula is not based on the taxes which should have been collected or the interest which should have been paid. It is based upon the amount of the actual cash receipts or the cash disbursements.

Now the question is asked whether in the case of Alberta the formula should be changed so that the dominion would pay either the taxes actually collected, under option (a); or, under option (b), the interest which would have been paid if Alberta had paid its bond interest in full. According to preliminary estimates made by the Alberta treasury department, which were presented for purposes of discussion only and are subject to checking and revision, the annual payment to Alberta under the present formula, if it accepts the dominion's offer, would be approximately $4,000,000 under option (a), or $3,200,000 under option (b). If option (b) were changed and based upon the interest at full rates, irrespective of whether such interest was paid or not, then the amount payable under that option would be approximately $5,750,000. Under the present formula, therefore, Alberta would receive $4,000,000 under option (a), or approximately $800,000 more than it would receive under option (b). If option (b) were changed, however, and were based on the full amount of the bond interest, then the amount paid under this option would be increased to $5,750,000, which is $1,750,000 more than the amount which will be paid to Alberta under the present formula. I take it that no one would suggest that the dominion should pay an additional $1,750,000 to Alberta unless Alberta undertook to pay its bond interest in full. Otherwise, for no good reason, the dominion would be making a present to Alberta of a very large sum of money, which would be quite unjustifiable.

I must assume, therefore, that the suggestions which have been made that the annual payment to Alberta should be based upon the full amount of its bond interest are predicated upon an agreement by the Alberta government to pay its bond interest in full, but I have heard no suggestion on the part of the Alberta government that it would be prepared to pay this interest in full.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The privy council said it should do so.

Mr. ILSLEY: I believe that is so. It may be willing to do so, but I have not heard of it; and in the absence of any declaration to the effect that Alberta is prepared to pay its bond interest in full it seems to me the present formula is fair and reasonable, in that Alberta is dealt with in exactly the same way as all the other provinces. I do not see how, by the widest stretch of the imagination, this can be construed as condoning the attitude of the Alberta government in defaulting on its bond interest. To me such a construction does not make sense. Surely the dominion has given ample evidence of its attitude toward the repudiation of contractual obligations and of its desire, indeed of its anxiety, to find a constructive solution of the financial difficulties which have faced a number of the provinces as a result of depression.

While, therefore, I do not propose to change the formula for determining the amount which will be payable to Alberta if it accepts the dominion's proposal, this does not mean that the door is shut for all time, or that this government will not reconsider the matter if the situation changes. For example, if the Alberta government were to work out some refunding plan with its bondholders, and then ask the dominion to reconsider the basis on which the annual payment is to be computed, we should be prepared to sit down and discuss the question, or any other reasonable proposal that might be presented.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Perhaps the minister does not wish to be interrupted at this stage.

Mr. ILSLEY: It is all right.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Does the minister mean by that—and I ask the question for purposes of clarification—that if the Alberta government should indicate that it proposed by some scheme to refund its past due indebtedness and to observe the principles of the law as laid down in the privy council decision, this government would review the whole position and, assuming the proposal was accepted, make a grant sufficient to cover the debt service?

Mr. ILSLEY: We should be prepared to sit down and discuss the question or any other reasonable proposal that might be presented. I cannot give any commitment further than that. I cannot see that any good purpose would be served by trying to cross this bridge before we come to it.

In case these remarks should be interpreted by bond speculators to mean more than they do mean, I should add, perhaps, that if in the future any such arrangement should be worked out, and the dominion were a party to it in any way, undoubtedly it would be necessary to impose a capital gains tax or take other practicable steps to ensure that speculators were not allowed to reap profits out of appreciation in bond values arising as a result of the discussion or negotiation of such a programme or its consummation.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): When the minister refers to the obligation of the provincial governments to pay their past interest, does he mean the interest which is accruing now and which the government itself would meet, or that the provincial government would have to make up all these back payments?

Mr. ILSLEY: I did not say either, and I did not mean either. I am making no commitment of any kind.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The minister suggested that if the provinces would do this—

Mr. ILSLEY: I said a new situation would be created which might be discussed; that is all.

The second question raised by the leader of the opposition had to do with the position of the municipalities which are now levying taxes on income and which will be asked to discontinue them. This problem is particularly important in New Brunswick, where many, if not all, of the municipalities collect income tax. In one or two other provinces some of the principal cities levy an income tax, but except in New Brunswick the practice does not extend to all municipalities and is not so general in its application. In discussing this the leader of the opposition read into Hansard what he described as a summary of the dominion tax proposals as submitted to New Brunswick and the other provinces. Although I do not see it in Hansard, my recollection is that at the time he commented on the fact that this summary did not touch upon the problem of the municipality.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): By implication, not expressly.

Mr. ILSLEY: In order to clear up any possible misunderstanding about this so-called summary, I should like to state that it is described in its heading as "a preliminary memorandum upon some of the points to be covered in the agreements with the provinces, if the offer outlined in Mr. Ilsley's budget speech on April 29, 1941, is accepted." This preliminary memorandum covers the points raised by the leader of the opposition and one or two others which I shall not read as they have no bearing upon this particular subject.

On May 16 an officer of my department wrote a letter to the Honourable J. J. Hayes Doone, provincial secretary treasurer of the province of New Brunswick, enclosing a copy of the preliminary memorandum referred to. As the letter comments on the question under discussion, I propose to read it. It is as follows:

Dear Mr. Doone:

Following our discussion the other day, you asked me to let you have a general outline of the basis on which the personal income and corporation taxes imposed by any of the provinces which accept the offer outlined in Mr. Ilsley's budget speech of April 29th last, will be discontinued. No final decision has been reached upon this matter, but I enclose a copy of a preliminary memorandum which may serve as a working guide for the time being, on the understanding that it is not binding upon the dominion in any way. You will see that this memorandum covers a number of the points which we have discussed, but that these are limited to the questions which will apply to all provinces which accept the offer. Other questions which apply particularly to your province, such as the arrangements which might have to be made with your municipalities if you accept the dominion's offer, are not dealt with in the memorandum, and presumably will have to be the subject of further discussion.

If there is any further information you would like from me in the meantime, please be sure to let me know.

Yours very truly,

W. L. Gordon.

It will be seen therefore that the problem of the New Brunswick municipalities was not overlooked. As the leader of the opposition himself stated, the municipalities are the creation of the province and their jurisdiction to impose income tax is derived from the province. The agreements which we are making will be with the provinces and not with their municipalities. The question is, should we stipulate in the agreements which we make with the provinces that they must deal fairly with their own municipalities, or should we leave this to the good judgment of the provincial governments concerned? I appreciate that in the opinion of the leader of the opposition it is desirable to include a definite stipulation respecting the position of the municipalities in any agreements which we make with the provinces. I think, however, that before arriving at a final conclusion I should prefer to discuss this further with the representatives of the government of the province of New Brunswick, who will be as anxious as the leader of the opposition to protect the position of their municipalities. On Tuesday, June 3, the leader of the opposition asked that a statement be placed on the record showing the net amount which would be payable to each of the provinces under option (a) and under option (b) of the proposal. In giving these figures I should make it quite clear that they are preliminary estimates only and are subject to revision:

	Amount payable under Option (a)	Option (b)	Estimated amount payable
P.E.I.	$ 250,000	$ 275,000	$ 275,000
N.S.	1,500,000	2,725,000	2,725,000
N.B.	2,575,000	3,250,000	3,250,000
Que.	17,000,000	1,975,000	17,000,000
Ont.	29,000,000	10,800,000	29,000,000
Man.	5,000,000	3,175,000	5,000,000
Sask.	2,075,000	6,300,000	6,300,000
Alta.	4,000,000	3,200,000	4,000,000
B.C.	12,600,000	6,000,000	12,600,000
Total.....			$80,150,000

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Do the figures for New Brunswick include the municipalities?

Mr. ILSLEY: Option (b) is in connection with the bond interest, but option (a) would take into account the income tax collected by the municipalities. Until we receive and carefully analyse complete statements from all the provinces, it will not be possible to say which provinces will be entitled to receive a fiscal need subsidy or the amount thereof. Generally speaking, I think that any of the provinces that think they may be entitled to a subsidy will have to prove it on the basis of their 1940 statements of revenues and expenditures adjusted to give effect to the changes which will result from the proposal.

I should remind hon. members that these changes include the discontinuance of the present special grants which are voted annually, and which are as follows:

Prince Edward Island.....	$ 275,000
Nova Scotia.....	1,300,000
New Brunswick.....	900,000
Manitoba.....	750,000
Saskatchewan.....	1,500,000
British Columbia.....	750,000
Total.....	$5,475,000

For budget purposes we made a rough assumption that the fiscal need subsidies would amount to $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, or say, $2,000,000 less than the present special grants.

The leader of the opposition also asked for information respecting the estimate of $90,000,000 which I gave in my budget speech as the net increase in the dominion's revenues from the changes in the personal income and corporation taxes, less the payments to the provinces. Hon. members will recall that the increased rates of graduated income tax, not including the national defence tax, were estimated to produce an additional $75,000,000 of revenue in a full year. The increase in the minimum rate of excess profits tax is estimated to produce $80,000,000, or a total of $155,000,000. If we add to this approximately $2,000,000 as representing the difference between the present special grants to the provinces which are to be cancelled and the fiscal need subsidies which will be paid in future, and $12,000,000 in special taxes to be imposed on banks, insurance companies, railway companies and other groups which might otherwise benefit from the discontinuance of existing provincial taxes, we get a total of $169,000,000. If we deduct from this the annual payments to the provinces which I have estimated at $80,000,000, we are left with a net increase in dominion revenues of $89,000,000. At the time I delivered my budget speech this estimate was placed at $90,000,000.

As I mentioned when the supplementary estimates were tabled, the total amount to be paid to the provinces in the present fiscal year will be much less than $80,000,000 plus whatever fiscal need subsidies may be necessary. From this total, whatever it may be, there will be deducted the amount of the taxes which the provinces are themselves collecting at the present time upon the taxpayers' incomes in 1940 or based upon the taxpayers' operations or status in 1940, and also their collections of arrears which pertain to 1939 and earlier periods. It is difficult to estimate the amount of such taxes which the provinces will collect this year, but it will be substantial, and the amount of the dominion's payments will be reduced correspondingly. All things considered I think it is safe to say that the net payments to all provinces this year will not exceed $45,000,000, the amount called for in the estimate. If any of the provinces do not accept the proposal, the amount will be reduced.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Chairman, anxious as I am to facilitate the business of the house I must ask the committee to bear with me for just a few minutes to discuss this, one of the most important matters that will come before us. I regret that we have not more time for its consideration.

The minister's statement has the advantage of clarity, if in some respects it has not the distinction of finality. I want to deal with the second topic referred to, namely, the position of the municipalities in New Brunswick. I think I correctly stated their position when I dealt with the subject before. They are the creatures of the province, and this government cannot deal directly with them. But they are the same set of taxpayers who are paying to the dominion and to the provinces, and we have some obligation to protect them in any financial changes that are contemplated.

The only purpose I have in alluding to the position of the municipalities is twofold. The statement of the Minister of Finance did not make it clear that the municipalities would be protected. My hon. friend, I have no doubt, proceeded on the assumption to which he referred in his statement, that, the municipalities being the creature of the provinces, the provinces would be concerned in protecting them. This is an assumption which of course may be quite true. But I was fearful that at one time it might not be given all the consideration which it deserves. I do believe, however, that discussion of the matter in this house, calling the attention of the house and of the minister to the position, will have the effect I desire, namely, the protection of the municipalities.

If the minister cannot see his way clear to stipulate that the position of the municipalities be protected, I must say that I disagree with him. I think he can do it. He has the power and authority to make it a condition that the position of the municipalities shall be protected, and I think he should do so. If he does not do so, and they are not protected, there will of course be a tremendous reaction, in New Brunswick at all events. I am not going to say more than that. I am going to ask the minister to protect the municipalities if he feels that it is his duty, as it is undoubtedly within his power to do so.

There is just one collateral point that has not been touched upon by the minister. Municipal income taxation, as I understand it, is to be frozen at some level. I do not know whether it would be possible to make the proposal elastic enough so that there might be an increase, or, on the other hand, a decrease, in the amount of the allowance to the provinces by reason of anticipated increase or decrease in the revenue of the municipalities from this source of taxation. I do know that with a rising national income there is a rising revenue from this source for all the municipalities, including the larger ones, and I must say including the smaller ones because it has come to my knowledge that certain municipalities, what I may term rural municipalities, until recently have not properly, shall I say, explored this avenue for revenue. It is only within the last year or two that certain municipalities have been invoking the law which was set up in their favour for that purpose. I am informed by my colleague the member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Hatfield), who is the warden of his own county, that the freezing of this source of revenue to the municipalities at the 1940 figure, say, will work a distinct detriment to that municipality, because they are just beginning really to enforce the law, and the 1941 taxation returns from that source, if I understood him correctly, will be substantially in excess of the revenues for 1940. I know this is quite a difficult point to deal with and that there must be some finality. How it can be measured in the future other than on the basis of a given year is not quite clear to me. I shall not discuss the point further; I think I have performed my duty by referring to it. I ask the minister to do what he can to see that the position of the municipalities in New Brunswick is safeguarded and that, if possible, it be stipulated in the agreement itself. If we have it in the bond, then of course we shall be sure. If we haven't it in the bond, anything may happen.

The position of Alberta is, I admit at once, a very difficult one, not only for the minister but also for us here in this house. I am obliged to the minister for the statement of his position, as to its clarity, although I am somewhat disappointed in the attitude which he has taken. The minister waved the big stick over those who are speculating or are said to be speculating or who, he intimated, might be speculating in Alberta bonds in the hope that they would make a killing if the government required the Alberta government to pay its bond interest in full. Let me say at once that I am not concerned with these individuals who are speculating in Alberta bonds. If there be such I am not aware of them, and I have had no communication with them. I need not tell the minister that I am not myself an Alberta bondholder. That is one thing I have escaped—not many, but that is one. I am not a bit concerned about the position of the bond speculator. I do not think, however, that the volume of Alberta bonds in the hands of speculators can be very large. My understanding is that the greater part of these bonds are held by financial and municipal institutions; that a substantial proportion of the holdings of Alberta bonds is in the hands of our municipalities and other governmental bodies in the form of sinking-fund investments, and that it is a very serious matter to them. The great bulk of the investment of Alberta bonds is in the hands of institutions such as insurance companies which gather together the savings of the people in small lots, and the position of which, as a result of the default, the deliberate default, of the Alberta government, has been impaired.

In addition to that, I suggest to the minister—probably his department knows it better than I can state it to him—that a substantial quantity of these bonds is held by foreign investors of the type to which I have alluded, namely, the association of insurance companies in the United States of America. I have had some communications from one or two of them; I can say to the minister that their holdings are substantial and that they were acquired not for speculative purposes but for the purpose of safe, sound investment, on the theory that in the belief that a Canadian province would never default in the payment of its solemn obligation, or that, if it were compelled to do so, this federal government, the government of Canada, would come to its assistance.

Mr. ILSLEY: May I interrupt a moment? I want to make it clear that I was not stating that the bonds generally are held by speculators.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, I do not think the minister did say that; but he waved the big stick against those who are in that category, and he raised the bogy of the speculator—we had it once before in this chamber—and a demagogic appeal was made not to save the bondholders. I know that that is a popular attitude to take in certain quarters, and I am not constituting myself in any degree a champion of the speculator. But I am one of those old-fashioned persons who have always believed in the sanctity of contract. The issue of a bond by a province and the sale of that bond to a bona fide investor is a form of contract and the contract should be carried out.

May I point out what gave rise to this position. In 1935 a new government was born in Alberta. In 1936 that government passed a series of statutes which, I believe, were intended to impair, or at least had the effect of greatly impairing, the financial position of the province. Among other measures, the provincial legislature in 1937 passed what is known as the Provincial Guaranteed Securities Interest Act, chapter 12 of the Statutes of Alberta, 1937, which act purported to reduce by one-half the interest on certain securities guaranteed by the province of Alberta; and the Provincial Securities Interest Act, chapter 13 of the same year—one statute following the other—which purported to reduce the interest payable on securities issued by the province to, in general, half the agreed rates. Those are the two statutes to which I refer: first, the direct obligations of the province, and second, the guaranteed obligations of the province.

The federal government, so far as my research has led me, did not intervene to disallow those statutes. It left the bondholders to fight their own battles, although, as was ultimately shown, the passing of these acts was a clear invasion of the federal authority and jurisdiction. The matter was tried first before Mr. Justice Ewing; then it went to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Alberta, these proceedings being carried on in 1937, 1938 and 1939, and finally got to the privy council, but private interests had to bear the burden of demonstrating the invalidity of these statutes. The privy council decided that the underlying principle of both these statutes was in pith and substance dealing with the matter of interest within the meaning of head 19 of section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867, a subject matter within the exclusive legislative competence of the dominion parliament, and that the acts were therefore ultra vires of the province. The case is reported in 1940 Appeal Cases, 513, and I would refer to the judgment of the Lord Chancellor, Viscount Caldecote, at pages 531 and 535, where in substance that was the conclusion reached. I am not going to inflict a reading of the judgment upon the committee. It establshes beyond peradventure the illegality and unconstitutional position of the province of Alberta, and that position has never been corrected by the province. It has been, in my view, a defiance of the laws of Canada; I do not think there can be any gainsaying that statement. I should like to go just one step further and say it does not reflect any credit on the government of Alberta to defy the law of this country. The figures of their budgets have amply demonstrated that, with the increased income they have had as a result of new sources of revenue and the invasion of certain fields of taxation, they could, for the most part, if not all the time, have paid this bond interest, and the people of Alberta would not have been reduced to the position where they cannot hold their heads up in common with other citizens of this country. Their province, and their province alone, has defaulted—I believe, much against the will of the best elements in Alberta.

This dominion government—I do not speak of it at all in its party sense—would, I am sure, have been quite as willing to help Alberta fulfil its obligations to its bonded creditors as it was to help other provinces, which I shall not name, which did endeavour to keep their contracts with the investing public. I remember very well one occasion upon which the former government assisted the province of Alberta, after the change of government, I believe. But when the incoming Minister of Finance found that these statutes had been passed he was amply justified in taking the stand that he did—that he could not properly assist the province of Alberta because it would not fulfil its obligations.

What is the position to-day? A war has intervened. Alberta has made default in the payment of its bond interest. It has been obliged to make default in payment of certain principal issues that have fallen due, and without any relief from the dominion, on the basis entirely of the theory I have suggested, namely, that the dominion could not and would not condone the action of that province. War has come, but in the meantime Alberta, as I said a moment ago, has increased its revenues and has entered into new fields of financial operations; and if one is to believe what one hears—I do not wish to guarantee the truth of the observation which I am about to make—Alberta has entered new fields of financial endeavour which have cost many hundreds of thousands of dollars and which may not redound to the benefit of the people of the province.

I am not in a position to express an opinion on that last phrase, but that is the position that has been stated to me. It makes it abundantly clear, however, that Alberta as at present constituted, desires to be generous, if I may say so, before it is just. That is the only thing I will say in that regard.

Coming down to the proposals, the necessity for increased revenues for the prosecution of the war is before us. No one knows better than the Premier of Alberta the necessity of an all-out effort in connection with this war, and that means money to his province as well as to anyone else. I have read some of his protestations in that regard. I do not question for a moment his bona fides with respect to participation; that is not the point at issue now. The Minister of Finance, however, in his budget proposals announced, in fact he intimated beforehand, that it would be necessary for the federal authorities to invade certain taxation fields of the provinces, and I think we all generally understood what was suggested. But in his budget speech on April 29 he was very definite and gave the reasons for his proposals, and as is well known, this House of Commons has unanimously concurred in the proposals in that regard. Now we are down to the point where it is intended to implement the position by voting the sum of $45,000,000 which the minister says it is anticipated will be required if the provinces enter into arrangements with the dominion to vacate the fields indicated, giving up their sources of revenue for the duration of the war.

Under the proposals the provinces are given the choice between two alternatives. I will not go over them; I have already alluded to them two or three times. The minister himself, in his observations to-day, again stated what they were, and I believe every one in the house and in the country who has given any study to the matter understands them. What I do suggest is that alternative (b), namely, the cost of net debt service actually paid by the province during the fiscal year nearest to December 31, 1940, not including contributions to sinking funds, less revenue obtained from succession duties during that period, and the wording of the estimate itself, clearly constitutes a recognition of the status quo with regard to the province of Alberta—and I have already indicated what that status is. It is a status of default.

The minister says that by no stretch of the imagination can it be declared that the wording of the estimate in the way it is drawn up, and the position he has taken, could be considered condonation of the position taken by Alberta. Well, that is pretty strong language. Assuming that is true, then it is a poor reflection upon the intelligence of a good many people in the country who have studied the situation. What can it be but condonation of the attitude of the Alberta government?

Mr. ILSLEY: What is condonation? Is it not approval?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Answering the minister's interjection, I would say there are all kinds of approval. There is express approval by words and there is approval by action, and this comes within the second category. This is approval by action.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not agree.

[Mr. R. B. Hanson.]

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And not only is there approval, but it constitutes a discrimination.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is a different point.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is another point, I agree.

Mr. ILSLEY: I do not agree that this implies or expresses any approval.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I know the minister does not want to agree to it. That is the point. He does not want to be driven into the position of making any admissions. That was the whole tenor of his prepared argument here to-day. But I want to tell him that the investing public believes that it is condonation, and it will be a distinct blow to the credit of this Dominion of Canada—absolutely. He has it in his power to-day to say to Alberta, "If you accept a certain proposal here you must accept it on the condition that you fulfil your legal obligations to the people who have advanced you money." When is a bond not a bond? That is a question that has arisen in the public mind.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): When it is an Alberta bond.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I was not going to answer the question quite so broadly. The people are beginning to be fearful by reason of repudiation. That is a harsh word to use. It is conditional repudiation. That is what the position of Alberta is, and the government, by granting fiscal aid to the province in consideration of the vacating of certain fields of taxation, and by limiting the amount under (b), which is to be paid, to the amount of net debt service actually paid by the province, is putting the seal of its approval on that partial repudiation.

That is the position I take. I know that the government does not want to hear about it. I know that the Deputy Minister of Finance does not want to hear about this sort of thing. It is not a pleasant thing to say, that by implication or inference the federal Department of Finance is recognizing the position taken by the province of Alberta. It is not a pleasant thing to contemplate, but $45,000,000 for a part year and $80,000,000 for a full year is to be paid out to the provinces on certain considerations, and a substantial portion is to go to Alberta provided that accommodation or agreement is reached.

The taxpayers of this country who invested in Alberta bonds, the institutions which gathered the savings of the people of this country and in good faith invested them in Alberta bonds, have a right to assume that by no word or action, express or implied, will the federal government do anything to perpetuate a situation which the highest court in this land has declared to be illegal. I cannot state the position any better than that. I can argue the matter further and give illustrations which might clarify the view I take, and perhaps I should take a few minutes to do that. Reams have been written about this position in days gone by. Let me put this first position to the minister—I put two or three the other day, but this I think is the strongest I can take, and it is qua the taxpayer of Alberta, not the investing public.

It is clear that the result of alternative (b) is to discriminate between the taxpayer of Alberta and the taxpayer of the other provinces. That is the second point to which I alluded and which the minister and I agreed was not the same as the question of condonation. Let us compare the position of the taxpayer of Alberta and the taxpayer of Saskatchewan. To illustrate it as pointedly as possible, let us assume they live in adjoining towns with the provincial boundary between them. Each will now have to pay this new dominion tax, the increased levies of every kind as a result of the budget now passed. Each is offered under alternative (b) a consideration, a quid pro quo. This quid pro quo in the case of the Saskatchewan taxpayer is substantially double what it is in the case of the Alberta taxpayer. That is a relative term, of course.

Mr. ILSLEY: In what way?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Let me proceed; I think I can demonstrate it.

Mr. ILSLEY: The payment to some provinces of course will be greater than the payment to others.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The payments to Saskatchewan, which will pay its bond interest in full, are larger and therefore more effective on the Saskatchewan taxpayer than the payments to Alberta, where they pay only half the interest. It may be exaggeration to say it is double, I have not figured out the ratio, but the principle is there. No amount of argument that this discrimination is justified by the action of the Alberta government can obscure the fact that it is a discrimination. In other words the Alberta taxpayer is being discriminated against in relation to his brother across the line. One is receiving more money on the same account than the other.

Mr. ILSLEY: No, no.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The interest is not extinguished in the case of the Alberta taxpayer. It is held in abeyance.

Mr. ILSLEY: If we were to pay Alberta $1,750,000, all the taxpayers in Canada would pay more, to begin with.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes, I agree with that.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is what the hon. gentleman is advocating, that we ask all the taxpayers of Canada to pay $1,750,000 more for the benefit of the Alberta bondholders—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is not an answer to my argument.

Mr. ILSLEY: Let me follow this through —provided the thing is practicable at all. But we have had no intimation from Alberta that they would pass this on. As a government they would be $800,000 worse off if they were to do that, and there is not the slightest intimation that they would do anything of the kind. Surely there should be some suggestion from that government before we take $1,750,000 of the money of the taxpayers of Canada and attempt to force it on them for the benefit of the holders of Alberta bonds. In saying that, we have not condoned anything. I express in the strongest way our disapproval of the repudiation by the Alberta government; I am quite prepared to do that and I do it, but no approval is implied here. The hon. gentleman is repeating the arguments of the committee representing the Alberta bondholders and making a suggestion made by that committee. For those gentlemen I have the highest respect; I know they are sincere and I think the leader of the opposition is sincere. But having given this matter the most careful consideration I can I do not think that when we are making an offer to the whole of the provinces we should go back of this: we will pay you on the basis of cash received in taxes, or on the basis of cash paid. We do not go into the moral history of these people; we do not by that act express approval or disapproval. I am willing to express disapproval here and now of that repudiation, but that is not implied in the offer we have made to Alberta.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): When the minister rose I thought he was insisting on controverting the argument I was putting forward. But instead he rose to make a speech and got quite hot about it. I do not see any necessity for heat. I can discuss this matter as calmly as anyone.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. gentleman has been attacking the deputy minister and the department—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): No, I did not attack the deputy minister, I said the deputy minister would not want to hear even a suggestion of condonation.

Mr. ILSLEY: And there is none.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Well I am suggesting that there is. I have the right to suggest it if it appeals to my reason, and it does. The minister evidently does not want to hear any more argument about this thing. I have stated the position, that this is condonation and discrimination. I am not going to labour the matter. The minister has made it abundantly clear that he is not going to do anything about it, so that I am wasting my eloquence on the desert air. I have been trying to prove a position, but if the minister takes the flat-footed, inflexible position that he usually takes, what is the use? The minister will I think learn from time to time that there are other points of view besides his own. Usually he is courteous in hearing them; I have not much complaint on that score. But I suggest that there was nothing in what I said to-day to cause him to take the attitude he did and to impute to those who hold other views that in effect they are talking nonsense. Because that is what his original declaration that by no flight of the imagination could it be considered that there was condonation spelled to me. That is a poor compliment to my intelligence at least. Perhaps the minister did not intend it that way; I am willing to think he did not. But I do impress upon him that there is more than one point of view in this matter.

Mr. ILSLEY: I realize that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): And that the credit of Canada will suffer. Suppose the United States neutrality law should be lifted and this country should find itself in the position of having to go to the United States to borrow money. That is a possibility if the war goes on long enough. One of the first things the minister will be met with is this very question of the Alberta bonds. It is one of the things he would have been met with if he had persisted in the 15 per cent tax on interest on provincial government bonds held by people outside the jurisdiction. The minister very properly, I think, went back from that position. I hope he did it not because of pressure from Mr. Hepburn, but because as a matter of national policy it was desirable to maintain the credit of the provinces, that that credit should not be impaired by federal taxation. I know the minister has heard some of these arguments before. Knowing the inflexibility of the minister's mind I have no hope that anything I may say will be strong enough to induce him to change his position, but I am going to tell him that the whole financial world is watching this operation and the actions of the government. It is unfortunate that this discussion arose right in the midst of the victory loan campaign. I certainly hope it will have no bad effect; it is not intended to have such an effect, and if I had thought it would I never would have raised the question. As a matter of fact it should not have any effect on the loan situation to-day because these are two entirely different positions, and I have no doubt there will be no such effect.

I do say to the minister, however, that I think the government might very well have given consideration to the Alberta position to the extent of saying, "We will offer you not only the net debt service you have actually paid; if you will do your part we will offer you a sum sufficient to pay your debt service in full from now on, disregarding the past." I would not go any farther than that at the moment. Certainly we would not pay their arrears; and with respect to the principal obligations that have matured and are in default, certainly we should not offer to pay those at the moment. A matter such as this should be threshed out by the finance department with the province of Alberta and if possible they should be made to see that in war time the position adopted by the province is detrimental to this country's credit, and that position should be reversed.

Now, having regard to the heat with which the minister rebuked me, shall I say—no, I do not think he intended to rebuke me, but the heat with which he controverted and interrupted me—I do not think I will say anything more, because I am afraid it would be useless. But I do ask the minister and the department to review the whole position between now and when we meet again in November, in order to see if something cannot be done to remedy the situation. In the meantime I lay down the principle that if the present policy is pursued, on the one hand it is condonation and on the other it is discrimination.

Mr. COLDWELL: I want to say to the minister first that I was very glad to hear him make the statement that if the Alberta government had approached the dominion government, and if an arrangement had been made under which the full debt service would have been paid to that province, no speculator would have been allowed to benefit by any appreciation of the bonds, and a capital gains tax would have been instituted. It is a reiteration of the position the minister took during the dominion-provincial conference in January, though apparently that was overlooked by many of the critics of the conference who tried to make people believe that those of us who thought it better to straighten out difficulties as between the dominion and the provinces by conference before the end of the war, in order that we might continue the war and prepare for the aftermath, were friendly to the bondholders.

This morning we have listened for nearly an hour to the leader of the opposition making a plea for consideration of the bondholders and the creditors of the province of Alberta. I hold no brief for the government of that province, as I think everyone knows, but I do say that at the time Alberta found it necessary to reduce the interest on its bonded indebtedness the people of that province, like the people of Saskatchewan, were suffering one of the greatest financial and economic depressions that any people had ever been called upon to suffer. The necessities of the situation compelled the province, and I think perhaps ought to have compelled the neighbouring province of Saskatchewan, to do something in regard to the interest on its bonded indebtedness. I do not say that the right plan was adopted. I believe it would have been much better if the provinces of western Canada, in the situation with which they were faced, had entered into negotiations with a view to relieving themselves of a part of this burden. But let me say this also in defence of the province which did take a step in that direction, that the creditors during the years before the step was taken did not offer at any time to consider such proposals or to attend any such conference.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): If the hon. member will allow me a word, is it not usual for a debtor to seek out his creditor, and is it not the duty of the debtor to do so if he wishes to make a compromise?

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): And if I may ask a question, was not a thorough investigation made by the Bank of Canada as to the ability of the province of Alberta to pay its debts? Was it not found in that investigation that the one province which of all the western provinces needed relief least was Alberta? Was it not found by the Bank of Canada that they could pay their interest?

Mr. COLDWELL: Well, probably the hon. gentleman is right in a part of his contention. No doubt there were provinces on the prairies that required relief even more than Alberta, but that does not say Alberta did not require relief also. I was and still am critical of Saskatchewan in that it did not seek some relief at that time, because the failure to do so placed a burden upon the people of Saskatchewan from which they have not as yet recovered.

I have in my hand a graph taken from the report of the royal commission on dominion-provincial relations, appendix 4, indicating quite clearly what happened. Taking 1926 as the base of 100 in dividends and interest payments, in 1930 these went up to just over 120 as compared with the 1926 level and then in 1933 dropped down to the lowest point, which was 78 as compared with 100 in 1926. But when you look at the condition of the people of the agricultural provinces, what do you find? Taking 1926 as the base of 100 we find that by 1932 they had reached the unprecedented depth of only 18 as compared with the 1926 level. And then my hon. friend the leader of the opposition speaks of the sacredness of a contract! I say that a contract ought to be sacred, but that human life, human happiness and human welfare are even more sacred.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Did not the Sirois report also recommend payment of the back interest; and did not Mr. Graham Towers, who made a survey of the whole position, say that Alberta could pay?

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. COLDWELL: Just before one o'clock the leader of the opposition asked me if I knew that the Bank of Canada and the Rowell-Sirois reports had stated that Alberta could meet her full indebtedness. I have not looked up the Bank of Canada report in that connection, but if my memory is correct the only statement that could be interpreted in that way is one to the effect that Alberta's debt was not out of line with the debt of other provinces. I find the following at page 239 of volume I of the Rowell-Sirois report:

> National interest has been centred on Alberta's arbitrary reduction of debt charges. These have consistently been the highest of any province in Canada and it is perhaps not surprising that they were singled out for attack. Provincial net debt charges in 1930 were $4·3 million annually, and in 1937 at full interest rates would have been (after adjustment for interest received) $5·4 million; actually they were $3·6 million. Only 22 per cent of the provincial funded debt is payable in Canadian currency only, and more than one-half the debt bearing 4½ per cent coupon rates or higher does not mature until after 1950. It is consequently evident that the provincial debt at its original coupon rates was in a technically rigid and vulnerable position, and only small reductions in carrying charges would have been possible through orderly refunding.

However much we may dislike the idea of repudiation or forcible reduction, the Rowell-Sirois commission recognized that something more than was generally suggested had to be done about the matter. Although I am not defending the action of the Alberta government in making an arbitrary reduction, faced with the acute situation to be found on the prairies at that time, I believe that they were justified in bringing about a reduction in the carrying charges of their debt. This morning I said that my criticism of the government of Saskatchewan was that it had done nothing of a similar kind to relieve the terrible situation that existed. I am glad that in this suggestion of the Minister of Finance some removal of the debt burden will occur for that province. I should like to justify what I have said by quoting again from the Rowell-Sirois report at page 237:

> Expenditures on education and public welfare (excluding relief) were cut between 1930 and 1937 by one-quarter. Education was particularly hard hit—joint provincial-municipal expenditures on education were reduced 40 per cent and rural municipal expenditures were cut by two-thirds. In the long run, when the personnel affected can find alternative employment, these reductions must produce serious deterioration in standards, and, as we have observed elsewhere, this concerns not only Saskatchewan but the whole country. The reduction in public welfare expenditures at a time when needs were increasing on a gigantic scale is the cold statistical reflection of a tremendous amount of human misery. It is not a surprising, although a tragic, commentary that the pressure on mental institutions became particularly acute and beds are lacking for one-third of the serious cases. It is true that expenditures on a per capita basis are not materially below the Canadian average, but in relation to the needs (and in relation to the previous standards which were maintained) they were inadequate.

What happened in Alberta was that the government, faced with the choice of maintaining certain social services—they were dropped to some extent—or maintaining contractual obligations on the bonded indebtedness, chose the former rather than the latter. When we discuss these matters in this house we should try to see both sides of the question. The minister, in making the statement that he did this morning was explicit when he said that even if some agreement were reached with Alberta, the speculators in provincial bonds would not be allowed to benefit. This will do much to relieve the minds of many people who have believed, quite honestly but without proper foundation, that the Rowell-Sirois report was drawn up from the point of view of bondholders rather than from the point of view of the welfare of the provinces.

I should like to repeat what I said yesterday, that if we are to maintain the morale of our people we must give them some assurance that this parliament will endeavour to relieve distress now and, when the war is over, lay a foundation for something better than we have known. It seems to me to be useless to make speeches in this house decrying the attempts, however feeble or wrong they may be, that are made in that direction. The thing to do is to try to straighten out these difficulties and lay some foundation so that we may build more properly in the future. In the long discussion that has taken place I think there has been—I see the leader of the opposition is in his seat and I am going to make this criticism—a feeling on the part of some of us that the interests of the bondholders and the financial elements in this country were being too well looked after, and that not enough attention was being given to the interests of the human family. I hope we can get the difficulties straightened out so that in the future we may be able to build for something better than we have known in the past.

Mr. BLACKMORE: In his tirade against Alberta the leader of the opposition probably overdid himself a little, and perhaps he merited a measure of attention on that account. May I proceed to give him that attention?

I gathered from what he said that he thought that the trouble in Alberta with respect to the cutting down of interest rates, default on maturities, et cetera, began with the election of a Social Credit government in 1935. It really is too bad that before the hon. member made such a reckless statement he did not more accurately inform himself concerning the history of Alberta. Considering, however, the fact that he is rather new to his job and has a great many tasks thrust upon him, perhaps we must forgive him, but I believe it is my duty to point out to him certain facts so as to help him from falling into such errors again.

I am going to read some quotations from the Bank of Canada report on the financial position of the western provinces, but before I begin this rather tedious task may I observe, Mr. Chairman, that it is a great pity that people do not know more about the province of Alberta, and it is purely in the interests of giving general information to the people throughout Canada that I am imposing upon the committee this somewhat lengthy discussion this afternoon. May I now read from the Bank of Canada report, at page 4, concerning Alberta:

> The policies pursued from the time the province was created (1905) until the year 1922, had a profound effect on the financial position of the government of Alberta. The roots of many of Alberta's present problems were developed during this period. Only the exceptionally rapid economic progress of the time can account for the fact that extravagant governmental expenditures, direct and indirect, were allowed to proceed on such a scale and to last so long as they did.

Almost immediately after the formation of the province, ambitious telephone and railway policies were launched. Poor judgment, loose administration and over-expansion were to make both utility ventures costly.

May I draw to the attention of the leader of the opposition the fact that any government which takes power in Alberta has to assume responsibility for the results of those policies, regardless of the name that government may bear; the behaviour of that government therefore is going to be in large measure controlled by those policies and their effects going on through the years?

May I now read another passage from the same Bank of Canada report, at pages 34 and 35. While I am finding this passage may I pause to congratulate the governor of the Bank of Canada on what I consider to be one of the finest services he ever did for the dominion when he went out and made an impartial investigation into the province of Alberta. When from coast to coast there was misrepresentation, misunderstanding, ignorance and foolhardy passion concerning the province of Alberta, this young man went out there and calmly and judiciously investigated conditions in the province and set down the facts as he saw them in this report. I quote from page 34:

In appraising the present financial situation of the province of Alberta, we found that special emphasis must be placed on the events of the years 1905-22. In 1922, after Alberta had been in existence for 17 years, the province's debt (including guarantees, subsequently implemented) was approximately $95 millions. This debt was over twice as large as that of Saskatchewan in the same year, and 50 per cent larger than that of the much older province of Manitoba. Substantially more than half of the Alberta total represented accumulated losses and deficits, and so-called assets which, in fact, were proving a constant drain.

Mr. HANSELL: That was under a Liberal administration, too?

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes. One could remark about a Liberal administration but I do not wish to interject politics into this.

Mr. BRADETTE: Oh, no.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Not at all, and I am talking, and no member knows what is in my mind except myself. I continue the quotation:

After making full allowance for the rapid economic development of the new province, and the legitimate cost of facilities provided by the government to aid and stimulate this development, it remains the case—in our opinion—that the 1905-22 period was characterized by waste, loose administration, and incurrence of debt to an extent which could not be justified even when allowance is made for the optimistic spirit of the times.

During the fiscal years 1923-30—on the whole a period of prosperity for all three prairie provinces—the Alberta government did not take the opportunity to improve its financial position; in fact, a deterioration would have taken place had it not been for the fact that the province was successful in selling its railways to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian National Railways in 1928 and 1929. In doing so, the province realized a substantial loss, but was fortunate in getting out of a venture which had cost, on the average, $3 millions per annum in cash advances and carrying charges during the twenties. The province was left with a residual liability of $24½ millions, involving interest charges of approximately $1¼ millions a year. The advantageous sale of the railways enabled the province to regain its 1922 position in respect to net debt. As we had previously noted, the 1922 position was such a poor one that the necessity for an improvement should have been recognized at that time. The opportunity afforded by the years of prosperity was allowed to pass, and in only one year during this period would Alberta have had a real surplus on current account if allowance is made for the items which were capitalized instead of being charged to ordinary expenditure, where they belonged.

May I pause to point out that there again is the story of a series of events for which the Social Credit administration could by no honourable and fair-minded man be held accountable? The report goes on:

During the six fiscal years 1931-36, the net outstanding liabilities of the province increased by some $52 millions. Of this increase, approximately $16 millions was accounted for by deficits on current account.

May I stop there a minute? You notice that the report says "deficits on current account". Is the new administration coming into power in 1935 supposed to be able to run the province without a deficit of any kind? That is the question. And if it is to run the province without a deficit, then where is the safety-valve going to be? I continue the quotation:

Of this increase, approximately $16 millions was accounted for by deficits on current account, $13 millions by expenditures on fixed assets such as roads, bridges, buildings, irrigation, et cetera, and $19 millions by relief and relief works (including relief expenditures capitalized as public works). About half of the net increase took place during the first two years of the period, when capital expenditures were being continued on a substantial scale, and no marked retrenchment in ordinary expenditures was taking place. Moreover, debt charges were substantially increased during these two years, partly because of new borrowings to finance the capital expenditures and current deficits, and partly because of the large amount of refunding which had to be done under unfavourable market conditions.

May I now read another passage from this same Bank of Canada report, this time at page 36:

> Of the 1931-36 period as a whole, it may be said that delay in effecting the adjustments made necessary by the depression was responsible for a substantial increase in debt and debt charges. When measures of retrenchment were applied they were severe, but, even so, it was not possible to balance the budget on current account, much less provide for the province's share of relief costs.

Again, I read from page 25:

> By the summer of 1935 Alberta had largely exhausted its liquid and realizable assets—

May I pause there to draw the attention of hon. members to this fact?

> By the summer of 1935 Alberta had largely exhausted its liquid and realizable assets in order to meet its chronic cash deficiencies, and when a run on the savings certificates took place in August, 1935, the necessary funds were not available.

That run took place before the Social Credit government was elected and some time before the Social Credit government took office.

Now, if the leader of the opposition is going to be entirely fair, as I know he wishes to be, he will make allowance for facts such as I have outlined.

May I turn for just a few moments to the question of savings certificates, which was referred to in the last part of the excerpt that I just read. The savings certificates were, in a way, somewhat like our dominion savings certificates. For a good many years people in Alberta had been encouraged to lend their money to the province and to take a savings certificate in return therefor, with the guarantee of a specified rate of interest. As I recall it, the rate was four and a half per cent. As a result, a great deal of money had been lent by the people of Alberta to their provincial treasury, until, in 1934, their loans to the government totalled $12,000,000,—$12,000,000 of savings certificates which were, in effect, demand documents on the provincial government, just as though a person had money in a current account in the bank. Now it is quite clear that just as soon as people began to be uncertain about the stability of their government, or just as soon as they began to get into financial difficulties, there would be a heavy drain on that $12,000,000 and consequently a heavy drain on the government treasury.

In 1934 Alberta was off the money market of the world. I suppose the rumour has reached Ottawa that the Social Credit government destroyed the credit of Alberta. Never was a bigger lie created and foisted upon the people. The credit of Alberta had been destroyed in 1934, because in that year Alberta was already off the money markets of the world.

Again, there was a run on the savings certificates in the fall of 1934. In order that hon. members may be able to realize the import of that statement, let them call to mind that the Social Credit government was elected on August 22, 1935. There had been a run on the savings certificates in the fall of 1934. By 1935 the government then in power had redeemed $2,000,000 of these certificates in an endeavour to recover the financial stability of the province. But their cash was completely exhausted. As the Bank of Canada report points out, their liquid assets were gone. On July 28, 1935, the government suspended payment on the savings certificates. That meant immediately, of course, that the credit of the province was gone, if it could have been destroyed any further than it already was.

Those are not all the troubles. I am not complaining; all we want hon. members and the people of this country to realize is that when the new Social Credit administration of Alberta went into office it faced an exceedingly difficult task, and it set about to solve the problem confronting it with all the honour, the courage, the determination and industry that a group of men, honest and sincere, could command.

May I point out some other troubles which that group of men confronted when they assumed office on September 3, 1935. In the first place there was an overdraft at the bank against Alberta of $5,700,000. Let any hon. member of this committee imagine that he is the premier of a province taking office in a new administration; that he goes to the bank and finds an overdraft of $5,700,000 against him to start with. There were unpaid salaries of the civil servants amounting to nearly a million dollars. I notice that four or five hon. members have not begun to take this seriously at all, although others have.

Mr. PINARD: Do not stop.

Mr. BLACKMORE: All right, I will go ahead fast enough.

Mr. PINARD: Pause once in a while; then go ahead.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It is only a cough; we will forgive it. I said that there were civil service salaries unpaid in the amount of a million dollars which had to be met; the money had to be got somewhere, and the administration had to get it with, already, an overdraft of $5,700,000 against them, with their province having been off the money market for over a year, and with $10,000,000 of savings certificates in default against them throughout the province.

That was not all their trouble. In 1935 the United Farmers of Alberta government borrowed a quantity of money in addition to its budget and committed the province for those borrowings to the extent of $8,927,000. It is almost as though the bird knew that it was going to get off the nest, and decided to do everything in its power to foul the nest before it got off! Further there were in Alberta on the books of the tax collectors $17,000,000 of uncollected taxes.

Mr. WOOD: They should be an asset against a liability of $5,000,000.

Mr. BLACKMORE: All one needed to do was to try to collect those taxes in 1935, and he would soon find that they were not much of an asset. Wait till you hear the facts. So much depends on the facts. You are getting them, and you will get them a lot faster if you will let me do the talking.

Mr. WOOD: I am a bit dumb on social credit.

Mr. BLACKMORE: This has nothing to do with social credit. This is just the highly-lauded orthodox economics on which my hon. friend is such an authority.

Mr. WOOD: Well, I am always suspicious that we will get a shot of social credit before we are through.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I would suppose that 1935 was one of the most disastrous years in the history of Alberta. We were burnt out in the south, frozen and flooded out in the centre; we had too much moisture away in the north, and there was a great deal of hail. Once in a while a great calamity like that occurs. It occurred in Alberta's history in 1935. I remember having met members of the caucus of the Social Credit government when they first came together to consider the tasks which had been placed upon them, and I recall one man in the caucus saying that there was not a constituency from the north of the province to the south that was not seeking agricultural relief in that particular year, 1935. In 1936 there was a repetition of the drought, and in 1937, believe it or not, there was another repetition of it.

May I call the attention of hon. members to the fact that the first debenture security to become due for the new Alberta government fell due on January 15, 1936, before the new government ever had a chance to draft a budget at all, and while it was still struggling to adjust itself and to make ends meet under the last budget of the United Farmers of Alberta. That maturity was $1,577,000. I am not going to weary the committee by repeating the figures I have already given, but if hon. members will take the trouble to go over them, taking the financial commitments and obligations which faced the new administration, they will be astounded. The amazing thing was that the administration was able to get under way at all.

I will read now a statement from the provincial treasurer of Alberta which was given last year in the banking and commerce committee. I am not going to run the risk of misstating anything. I have had only a very short time to prepare this speech, as hon. members can see, because the last thing I expected was an attack upon Alberta to-day—the very last thing! I certainly was not prepared to deal with anything of the sort. I have had to rush around and get together some information that would help to put the case for Alberta. Let me read from page 68 of the proceedings of the standing committee on banking and commerce of last year, 1940. Mr. Low is speaking:

> Immediately after this government came into power, you will remember the premier and a number of his advisers—I was not then a member of the government—came down to Ottawa; and on September 26, 1935, these are the amounts which they borrowed from Mr. Bennett's government. By the way, they asked Mr. Bennett for a lump sum of money which he said at the time he was not prepared to advance because of the imminence of a federal election. But he did say to the premier at the time, "If you will be content with this much, then after the election is over, if we are returned to office, come back and we will consider the remainder. Then you will get along all right."

As I remember, the leader of the opposition was in the administration of the man who made that statement. You can see quite clearly from that incident that the Prime Minister, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett as he was then, was quite in sympathy with the financial situation which existed in Alberta, because he knew it thoroughly.

> These sums were then taken back or arranged for at the time of the premier's visit to Ottawa, in September, 1935, just after we took office: For unemployment relief, $330,000, for which commitments had already been made,—

The previous government had said that the money would be paid and they went out of office and left the new government to pay.

> —for agricultural relief, $1,200,000, for which commitments had already been made. We had to have that money to pay the amounts that had been committed. For re-loaning to the city of Calgary, another $200,000 which had been promised them by the previous administration. Calgary had been promised $450,000. They obtained $250,000 in June by loan from the federal government and another $200,000, the balance of their request, in September. For completion of the trans-Canada-Jasper highway, a joint relief project of the dominion and the province, $300,000. The work had been done by September 26 and the contractors wanted their money; they came to us and asked us to pay it. We had to dig up the money somewhere. For public institutions, $25,000—for enlargement, by the way, of the mental institution at Ponoka; and for general purposes, including salaries of civil servants which were in arrears, $995,000. Those are the sums that were arranged for on September 26, 1935, on our first visit to Ottawa.

Mr. Donnelly: How much is that altogether?

The Witness: I have not the total here. I could figure it out for you if you just let me have a moment.

Further than that, in November of 1935, arrangements were made for further borrowings for unemployment relief of $1,000,000 for which no provision was made in the budget, but which we had to meet. These were absolutely uncontrollable.

January 15, 1936, is the date of the first debenture maturity after the Alberta government came into office. On that date $1,577,000 of bonds fell due, which amount had to be borrowed because no provision had been made in the budget; and for unemployment relief also in January of 1936, borrowings of $2,600,000.

May I point out once more to the members of the committee that the Social Credit government had not yet been able to draft a budget. They were still carrying on under the budget of the previous administration and had to meet commitments over which they had had no conceivable control.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They asked for it.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Just in the same way that my hon. friend will ask for control of this government in the next election.

There are one or two other matters that have a certain bearing on the question. Let me read now a statement or two from Right Hon. R. B. Bennett before he left this house—he is a viscount now. It is really too bad that the leader of the opposition of the present time was not a member of the house at the time his leader made these remarks; I think he would then have been sufficiently advised not to make the reckless statements which he has made. I am going to read from Hansard of April 9, 1937, at page 1410. I think we can pretty safely say that Right Hon. R. B. Bennett at that time was in an ideal position to pronounce definitely upon Alberta. He was himself the member for Calgary West; he knew Alberta as perhaps no other man in the dominion government at that time knew it; he had himself been in the Alberta legislature for a considerable time and understood the problems which were being considered; he had participated in the famous debate in the Alberta legislature which destroyed one administration—the debate in connection with the Alberta and Great Waterways railway. Altogether he was in an admirable position to know whereof he spoke, and he was the man who was prime minister when Premier Aberhart first came and laid his cards upon the table and explained the situation. Mr. Bennett said:

When the minister said to the province of Alberta that he would not help them out of their difficulty by advancing them, through loans or otherwise, sufficient money to enable them to pay their maturing obligations, his statement was regarded as a policy. Many people scattered throughout the province in which I have long lived, as well as people residing in other parts of Canada, found themselves in straitened and difficult circumstances because their investments had been wholly in those securities the market value of which fell to a very low figure, and the interest upon which was reduced to half of what the coupons carried. If that policy is reversed, if it is not applied to the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba, obviously a situation is created in which the people of Alberta have just cause to say they have been discriminated against. Because if the minister will accept what I think he will, namely that the implication of his refusal to assist Alberta involved the thought that the same policy was to be applied to all the provinces—

Mr. Dunning: And it was.

Mr. Bennett: No, no.

Mr. Dunning: I refused British Columbia and Saskatchewan at the same time and on the same grounds, in connection with the same class of matter.

Mr. Bennett: Yes, but the provinces of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia have not defaulted. The province of Alberta defaulted.

Mr. Dunning: If the right hon. gentleman will permit, on the maturity which was the occasion of the default, both British Columbia and Saskatchewan had maturities at the same time and received precisely the same answer.

Mr. Bennett: Yes, but I am pointing out that Alberta defaulted.

Mr. Dunning: Yes.

Mr. Bennett: And the others did not. Alberta defaulted because it was unable to secure money from the dominion government to prevent it from defaulting;—

Note those words:

Alberta defaulted because it was unable to secure money from the dominion government to prevent it from defaulting; that was regarded as an indication of a policy which I believe, rightly or wrongly, should not have been put in force at that particular time.

May I read another statement coming from the same right hon. gentleman after he had had another month or so to reflect and to read over the Bank of Canada report. The leader of the opposition will be impressed by the fact that Right Hon. R. B. Bennett read through the Bank of Canada report with great care, the report from which I have quoted, and he estimated very accurately, I would say, the true situation with respect to Alberta. At page 2882 Mr. Bennett is reported as saying:

On a review of the report made with respect to that province—

That is, Alberta.

—I find that it has been treated entirely differently from the provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. When Alberta first made application for a loan to enable it to meet its obligations, the application was refused. As a result of that refusal, and the statement made subsequently, they cut down their interest payments to half.

Now that is definite enough, surely!

As a result of that refusal, and the statement made subsequently, they cut down their interest payments to half.

Hon. members see where the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett placed the responsibility for the cut in the interest payments.

The report points out that if they had been in a position to discharge their obligations in that regard they would have been able, by securing money from the dominion, to be in exactly the same position as the other provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. The report concludes in this way:

"Its position would be little worse than that of Manitoba, but distinctly better than that of Saskatchewan; and a claim for assistance would, no doubt, be considered in the light of these facts. It is the case, however, that Alberta's budgetary position differs materially from that of the other provinces, by reason of the fact that interest payments have been reduced by 50 per cent, or $3,400,000, and, other things being equal, its cash requirements have been reduced by the same amount. We can only deal with the situation as it is—not as it might have been in other circumstances. We find that Alberta can maintain its governmental services on as favourable a basis as Manitoba or Saskatchewan without receipt of additional assistance, and we therefore see no basis for recommending that temporary financial aid should be extended by the dominion government."

The Bank of Canada was taking it for granted that Alberta had cut its interest and was computing on that basis. Mr. Bennett continues:

Preceding that, the report states:

"Our recommendation of dominion government assistance in the cases of Manitoba and Saskatchewan was based on urgent needs of those provinces for cash during the time required for the examination which will be conducted by the royal commission. If Alberta were now paying full interest on its obligations the province in 1937-38 would presumably have to borrow its full share of unemployment relief from the dominion, and on the basis of budgetary estimates (not including debt retirement) would have had a cash shortage of about $600,000."

May I interject, before going on with Mr. Bennett's remarks, that the leader of the opposition made the statement that Alberta deliberately defaulted. Now I challenge the word "deliberately" as applied to the default, except in this sense: men are faced with two very unpleasant and disagreeable paths, either of them is subject to many objections. They choose the one that they think is the less objectionable, the lesser of two evils. If the path they chose led to default, surely when the statement is made the qualifications and reservations should be included.

I read on from Mr. Bennett:

Then follows what I first read, and that condition exists because the government of this country declined to make an advance to that province which would have enabled it to meet its obligations. The minister may shake his head as much as he likes; it does not have any effect on my mind. I have read this report. Because of this refusal, because Alberta did not join the loan council, because it took the action it did, we find it treated differently from Saskatchewan, which was able to secure $3,000,000 from the Bank of Canada. Under the law that bank could no longer continue to loan that money, so it was compelled to purchase bonds of the Saskatchewan government, and to that extent it has made an investment in a bankrupt province, admitted by the bank to be such. Alberta has been unable to secure money from the bank or from the dominion; it has been denied any assistance, and as a result the bondholders have been compelled to take fifty cents on the dollar, while we are voting money to enable the other provinces to pay one hundred cents on the dollar in connection with their bonds.

May I interrupt here to express my admiration and my commendation of the Minister of Finance for the remarks he made in reply to the leader of the opposition. The spirit of fairness which he manifested in that speech will I believe redound to his credit for many a year. There was in it clearness of vision and willingness to be fair.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. I have to inform the hon. gentleman that his time is up.

Mr. ILSLEY: I should like to say a few words, not specifically in answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blackmore) but in order to bring this debate back to where I think it ought to be. I would remind the committee that we are concerned with an item voting $45,000,000 to make good our offer to the provinces, and in discussion of that item the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) suggested that our offer, so far as Alberta is concerned, should be amended; that we should not offer to Alberta the two alternatives we offer to all the other provinces, but should modify that offer so that one option should be not on a basis of cash paid but on the basis of cash which would have been paid had the bond interest of Alberta been paid in full. Upon the speech of the leader of the opposition some discussion has developed, and unfortunately I think has now developed into a debate as to whether the Social Credit government of Alberta was justified in taking the steps it did and whether dominion governments in the past have been fair in their treatment of Alberta.

I am not prepared to deal with those issues. I can hardly agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, in his view as to the necessity of Alberta's default. I do not approve that default; I expressly disapprove it. I condemn it in no uncertain terms, and if the hon. gentleman had read some other parts of the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada he would have seen that the governor of the Bank of Canada took the same view. At page 39 of the report I find the following:

In our reports on the financial positions of the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, we expressed the opinion that the dominion government would be justified in extending temporary financial aid, pending the report of the commission referred to above.

As regards Alberta, we must note, in the first instance, that the decision of the government to pay only 50 per cent of the interest due on bond issues and savings certificates has had a major effect on the budgetary position and on the amount of the province's cash requirements. Yet we cannot report on the financial position of Alberta without expressing regret that this repudiation of interest liabilities should have taken place. There are legal and moral reasons for the fulfilment of contracts, but, leaving these entirely out of consideration (although we do not minimize their importance) we believe that self-interest alone should have induced Alberta to fulfil its contractual liabilities in respect of interest. Default produces a lack of confidence which is not confined to prospective buyers of government bonds. It has its repercussions on the investment of capital in enterprise, and hampers economic development. In due course the government revenues are bound to be adversely affected by such a situation. If it were thought that Alberta was permanently on the down grade, that the era of expansion had ended, and that the government would have little or no occasion in future to provide the additional facilities which are needed by a growing and prosperous community, there are some who might claim that the loss of credit standing was of no great importance. We could not subscribe to any such pessimistic view of the future of Alberta. It is, therefore, our opinion that a situation which involves impairment or destruction of Alberta's credit standing also involves an indirect cost to the province far exceeding the immediate pecuniary advantage gained.

I want to point out that while the governor of the Bank of Canada thus somewhat decisively condemned the default of the province of Alberta, when he went on to make his recommendations, which appear at page 41, he did not suggest that the dominion should make a grant to Alberta on the basis of Alberta having paid or paying its bond interest in full. He said the situation would have to be taken as it existed. I want to quote from page 41:

With a scale of taxation no higher, and a scale of expenditure no lower than in Manitoba and Saskatchewan in 1937-38, Alberta expects to balance its budget on all accounts (ordinary, capital and relief) with the exception of debt retirement. Our recommendation of dominion government assistance in the cases of Manitoba and Saskatchewan was based on urgent needs of those provinces for cash during the time required for the examination which will be conducted by the royal commission. If Alberta were now paying full interest on its obligations, the province in 1937-38 would presumably have to borrow its full share of unemployment relief from the dominion, and on the basis of budgetary estimates (not including debt retirement) would have a cash shortage of about $600,000. Its position would be a little worse than that of Manitoba, but distinctly better than that of Saskatchewan; and a claim for assistance would, no doubt, be considered in the light of these facts. It is the case, however, that Alberta's budgetary position differs materially from that of the other provinces, by reason of the fact that interest payments have been reduced by 50 per cent, or $3,400,000, and, other things being equal, its cash requirements have been reduced by the same amount. We can only deal with the situation as it is—not as it might have been in other circumstances.

I want to call those words to the attention of this committee:

We can only deal with the situation as it is—not as it might have been in other circumstances. We find that Alberta can maintain its governmental services on as favourable a basis as Manitoba or Saskatchewan without receipt of additional assistance, and we therefore see no basis for recommending that temporary financial aid should be extended by the dominion government.

I am answering now both the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore), who says that Alberta was unjustly discriminated against—

Mr. BLACKMORE: If the minister will allow me, I should like to point out that I did not say that. I was reading the words of Right Hon. R. B. Bennett.

Mr. ILSLEY: That is correct; the hon. gentleman was quoting, with approval, Mr. Bennett's words, and Mr. Bennett was arguing that Alberta was being discriminated against. In answer to that I am quoting the governor of the Bank of Canada, whose report has been cited in this house with great approval by the hon. member for Lethbridge, and with which I also agree.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Perhaps the minister will allow me to say also that I was answering the leader of the opposition by quoting the words of his former chief.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am also answering or attempting to answer the leader of the opposition, who seemed to think that unless we deal with the province of Alberta as though there had been no default; that is, unless we pay them sums of money which perhaps we would have been prepared to pay if there had been no default, we are condoning that default. In 1937, when Mr. Towers made that report, it was never argued that we should pay the province of Alberta a large additional sum of money on condition that they pay it to the bondholders. Nor was it ever argued that this government condoned the action of Alberta because it did not take that step. I will come back a little later to the hon. member for Lethbridge, but the leader of the opposition argued strongly to-day that we were condoning or approving the action of Alberta by this step. My first point is that we are not doing so now, nor were we doing so in 1937 and 1938. We went upon the only possible basis, which is put very clearly in Mr. Tower's words; we can only deal with the situation as it is, not as it might have been in other circumstances.

The purpose of this offer to all these provinces is to make it possible for the dominion to collect the necessary tax revenues. The purpose of this offer is not to straighten up situations that may exist as between provinces and their creditors. Those situations might be various. We are now in a time of war, when we have to impose taxation efficiently and equitably, and the purpose of this offer to the provinces was to make a uniform offer which would be on the same basis for all and which would enable us to impose taxation efficiently and equitably. In making this offer it was important to have some regard to provincial sensibilities, shall I say, or at least certainly not to give the impression that we were wielding the big stick on the provinces. For that reason we made an exceedingly fair offer to the provinces, an offer which several times the leader of the opposition has said he thought was generous.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think so yet.

Mr. ILSLEY: When it became apparent that some provinces would not want to leave the succession duty field, we made no attempt to get them to leave that field; we left them there and imposed moderate additional succession duties. It was pretty well known that some provinces wished to control their natural resources and to be left the right to tax those natural resources; so it was an express provision of this offer that the provinces would continue to tax their natural resources and that such taxation would not be affected by this offer. In regard to the gasoline tax revenues it was not clear what the future would be with regard to the revenues which would be derived in that way; we therefore gave an undertaking to the provinces that we would see to it that their revenues from gasoline taxes were maintained at the 1940 level, provided that they did not alter the existing rates. We gave an undertaking that the arrangement would be entirely temporary, so that it could not be said that we were attempting to move into this field permanently, as we knew in all probability would be said. To ensure that it would be temporary we provided that any province could, at any time, withdraw from this arrangement.

The whole spirit of the offer was to give the provinces a chance to finance themselves and to raise their necessary revenues, and to give them all the necessary safeguards and guarantees. It would be inconsistent with the spirit of that arrangement if we went to one province and tied a condition on to the offer made to them. That is what is suggested—that we offer to pay Alberta a larger sum it is true than the amount mentioned in our actual offer, but that we attach to that a condition which in effect says to Alberta, "You, alone among the provinces, will get so much money, but you will get it only on the condition that we say what the destination of that money will be." That is contrary to the whole spirit of our offers to the provinces, which offers as I see them had a high regard for provincial autonomy, for provincial rights and for provincial sensibilities.

I cannot help saying again that I think the question is largely academic so far as Alberta is concerned. There is not the slightest indication that Alberta would want us to make an offer of the kind or would accept such an offer if we made it. They would be $800,000 worse off than they would be under the offer that is made, and I cannot help thinking that it would be just an idle gesture. It might muddy the waters, and it would place this province out of line with the others. It would be incorporating into these offers an element of domination by the dominion.

Before I conclude I should like to say something about the argument of the hon. member for Lethbridge which was, I think, that Alberta is not able or has not been able to pay its bond interest in full. That argument may have been quite good in 1936. I listened with interest to the facts which the hon. member has given but I should like to tell the committee that there has been a vast improvement in the financial showing of the province of Alberta since that time. I have Mr. Low's consolidated revenue and deficit account. It shows that for the fiscal year 1935 revenues were $15,698,000 and in 1940, $24,410,000. In 1935 the expenditures were $17,436,000 and in 1940, $21,922,000. These expenditures include ordinary expenditures and unemployment relief but do not include agricultural relief or capital expenditures. It is hard for Alberta to maintain its position that it is unable to discharge its obligation. It may have been unable to do this in the past, but I do not think it is now.

Mr. BLACKMORE: The minister is giving a fine dissertation on the matter, but I think it is only fair to point out that Alberta is reducing her indebtedness. She has cleared off over $3,000,000 of these savings certificates that were causing her trouble, and she has made commitments to meet her debts just as rapidly as she can. The day will undoubtedly come when, if Alberta sees she can do it, she will pay off all the debts that it is possible to pay.

Mr. ILSLEY: Those are internal obligations; she is discriminating in favour of her own residents.

I conclude with a reference to the condonation which the leader of the opposition was pressing so hard this morning. He dealt with this matter before on May 26. It is most interesting to see the hon. gentleman's first reaction to this question of condonation, which I think was a sound one.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): You think I am not sound to-day.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think the hon. member has been misled by the representations that have been made to him, the same as have been made to me. His immediate reaction was sensible and natural and sound. I quote from page 3142 of Hansard:

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): Has consideration been given to what it is proposed to do under the circumstances? Is it proposed, by making a grant in that particular instance, to put the imprimatur of this dominion upon the default of one of the provinces?

Mr. Ilsley: I do not think it does that.

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): It may have that effect.

Mr. Ilsley: It is argued by certain Alberta bondholders that we have condoned the action of Alberta in arbitrarily cutting its interest in half.

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunury): I would not put it in that way. I do not think you have condoned, but I think that, when you come to work out the position with that particular province, consideration should be given to what I have indicated. It may have the effect—depending entirely upon the action to be taken after these negotiations have been completed—of condonation. I hope the minister will not put himself in that position.

[Mr. Ilsley.]

Mr. Ilsley: The offer to Alberta is very clear. The offer is, the actual debt service assumed by the province, or the proceeds of the taxes—whichever the province likes—and since the amount collected in taxes for 1940 is higher than the actual debt service, undoubtedly the province will elect to take the amount collected in taxes.

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): If they do, that would eliminate the situation to which I have referred. There would not be in that event any condonation of the default of the particular province.

Mr. Ilsley: That is what I think, but—

Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury): At least, that would be my judgment. If, however, they should happen to accept the other alternative, the minister is faced squarely with this position: shall he, in consideration of their going out of the field, pay them a sum which would equal one-half of what, we shall say, they ought to pay if they keep their contract? That may be the alternative which the minister will have to face; and if he concludes an arrangement on that basis he will have said to the people who have invested their money in Alberta bonds, "We approve what has occurred in Alberta: we are going to pay that, and no more." Then, God help the credit of these provinces, because it will be an invitation to some other provinces to do likewise.

Mr. Ilsley: I do not think it is. For example, we offer to Saskatchewan their debt service or their taxes, whichever is the greater; and Saskatchewan will undoubtedly elect to take their debt service.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I cannot see any great difference between the language just quoted by my hon. friend and the position I have taken to-day. It may be that I was approaching the matter with caution; I was inquiring as to what the minister's position was to be, and I was giving my first reaction to this subject matter. I am not going to debate the matter further. The minister seemed to be so definite before the luncheon recess that further argument would appear to be useless. I had not quite finished my argument, but I am not going to make a further argument at this time. I should like, however, to make one or two observations.

A few moments ago the minister made it abundantly clear that according to the data available, Alberta could pay as of this date. I am going to leave it on the basis of the minister's statement. The second thing I should like to say is this: the Rowell-Sirois report recommended the same treatment for Alberta as for the other provinces. My recollection is that it went even a little further and recommended the payment of back interest. I may be wrong about that, because it is a long time since I have read the report, but I think I am correct. Mr. Towers' report, part of which the minister read and part of which the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) conveniently omitted to read, I think makes it abundantly clear that they could do the same thing now in the light of present-day figures. He recommended certain assistance in respect to both Saskatchewan and Manitoba, and said that he would make the same recommendation for Alberta had they been paying the full rate. Of course, it was apparent that they were not paying the full rate, but to-day they could. Therefore the same arrangement should be made with them. In the next place, at the conference it was proposed that Alberta should be treated on the same basis as the other provinces.

Just one word more and I am through with that subject. I think the minister should alter his second proposal to come to this position, that the amount paid to the province in each fiscal year during which the arrangement is to be in effect should be the amount of the total net debt service, provided that the amount so paid shall not in any year exceed the amount of interest due on the provincial indebtedness during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940, not including contributions to the sinking fund, less the revenue obtained from succession duties during that period. That, I think, would put them exactly on a parity with the other provinces. The present wording of the estimate does not go that far.

Mr. CHURCH: We have no ministers from the province of Ontario here this afternoon when this invasion is going on. What is the principle on which this vote in the supplementary estimates is based? The principle is this, that we shall revert to the old policy we had with respect to relief works, when the dominion, the provinces and the municipalities spent nearly a billion dollars on relief and relief works. At that time agreements had to be made between the governor in council here and the provinces, and that principle has now been extended to this particular vote, to provide compensation. We have had this compensation feature in our legislation for many years past, but Ontario has never got any compensation. Do not forget in connection with this principle that the loss of income tax and corporation taxes affects most seriously the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. When I entered the house in 1922, Mr. McCrea, the former government member for Sherbrooke, had a return brought down with respect to over-government and over-taxation in this country which showed that aside from the subsidies under the British North America Act the two central provinces, Ontario and Quebec, where we have so much real estate that is very heavily taxed, were paying 81½ per cent of the cash taxes of the dominion. The taxes covered by this vote are cash taxes, and this proposal is going to destroy our municipal institutions in this country. I know something about the burdens of our municipalities, as past-president of the Union of Canadian Municipalities, and I know that the municipalities in all the provinces have had a very hard time to live during the last thirty years. The city from which I come has a tax rate of 3½ to 3¾ mills to carry purely federal burdens. The income tax was taken away from the municipalities in the first place and given by duplication to the dominion, and now it is to be taken away from the provinces and given to the dominion.

I know it is said that these agreements are to be made only for the duration of the war. This same game was played on the municipalities in 1917. I came to Ottawa with a delegation of municipalities at that time to protest against the invasion by the federal authorities of the income tax field. It was said that the invasion was only for the duration of the war and that after the war the income tax would be surrendered to the municipalities again, but we never got it back, and it will be the same with the corporation tax. Then some of the provinces invaded the income tax field and took it away from the municipalities.

Most of the income tax and corporation taxes are paid by the two central provinces. I have always believed in the principle, for all the provinces, of the old Cornish battle cry, " each for all and all for each," and that what should be for the benefit of one should be for the benefit of the other. But this big-stick proposal of the minister is going to make of Ontario a hewer of wood and a drawer of water for the rest of confederation and force a duplicate income tax on Ontario over the heads of the municipalities.

As to the Sirois report, I advised the government the day the report was on the table to forget it, and they did for six months. I advised them to commit it to the archives—earth to earth, ashes to ashes, dust to dust, in the sure and certain hope that it would never be resurrected so far as this government was concerned. It was only a half-baked scheme. If the Sirois report had been left alone you could have made a much better agreement with Ontario and other provinces for the duration of the war regarding income and other taxes, and coordination and cooperation, just as you made an agreement respecting the charitable fund. Business men from all the provinces agreed to give up certain features of their charitable war work so that all could get together and work together in unison under a harmonious system for the duration of the war. The same plan should have been followed with respect to income and corporation taxes. Where were the Ontario ministers when this matter was raised this morning and this afternoon? I believe that the federal government should at once meet Ontario in a spirit of good-will, and this matter could then be settled in half a day or a day and a new interprovincial conference held immediately. Why should Ontario be soaked duplicate taxes? Why should we be made the goat of the proposals of the finance department in the dying days of the session by big-stick methods? I protest against it. You may criticize Premier Hepburn as you like, but if Ontario had the representation in the cabinet we are entitled to, we would get fair play in taxation as the chief taxpayer of Canada. The Premier of Ontario wants to protect provincial and municipal institutions.

I believe that the people of our province are very much disappointed with this budget, and with the proposal to assess all these costs and burdens of taxation against that province by duplicate taxation. I was one of those who brought forward a motion eleven years ago for parliamentary, cabinet, law, taxation and constitutional reform in this country; I proposed amendments to and a reconstruction of sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act, and after ten years' work that resulted in the appointment of a commission to investigate the whole economic basis of confederation and those five matters now referred to. I believe that the report of the Sirois commission is not accepted by a large majority of the people of Ontario so far as its municipal and educational features and other sections are concerned. Some of the principles proposed are not fair in principle to the two central provinces. It is a case of robbing Peter to pay Paul in taxation matters and leaves no adequate compensation, taking away something from one province and giving it to another. Some of the provinces are bankrupt, as we found out in connection with relief appropriations. I say that you should not interfere with the financial arrangements of the province of Ontario and of the municipalities of this country in the way it is proposed to do here, after they have passed their annual budgets and added so to their taxes. How are the municipalities going to live? It is all right to make an agreement with the provinces about income tax as to compensation, but the municipalities will not be listened to by the province who will grab the bulk of what this vote gives back. If a municipality gets a new source of revenue to-day, within a week or a month the province appropriates it to its own purposes. The municipalities of this country are getting a raw deal from federal and local authority. The city of Ottawa is well looked after through various votes in the estimates, but other municipalities are not. I do not know anybody who wants to own a foot of real estate to-day in our municipalities of Canada because of the heavy taxation upon real estate.

It is said that this proposal of the Minister of Finance is only for the duration of the war, but we know that once these taxes are given over to the federal government as in 1917 they will be kept by the federal government.

While I believe that the four parties in this house should get together for the war, I do not propose to sit here and see any political theories or doctrines that are not relevant in war time put over on the country as a war measure, when the country is not ready for them, and they should not be brought forward if you want to have unity in this country during the war. The battle of wits, by a correspondence course, between the Premier of Ontario and this government could be settled in a day in my opinion if the two parties would get together and forget a few things at a time like this, but it will never be settled by correspondence, telegrams and telephone calls. There should be a meeting; otherwise there will be no agreement. From a reply the Minister of National Revenue made the other day, I understand that no effort has been made to meet or confer with Ontario before these big-stick methods are to be used on that province in income tax, death duties and corporation tax. How are the municipalities to live? It is all very well for two or three officials here in Ottawa to propose these things. The minister has surrounded himself in two or three lines in his department with a great many officials in Ottawa, and we have learned a great many lessons from theorists in the Department of Finance who only call for help from Ontario and the municipalities when their own plans break down. That is the only time we ever hear from them as provincial and municipal revenues are taken away.

Although a brief of the mayors of the largest cities of Canada was left with the minister last year to deal with, not one of the terms of their proposals has ever been discussed and their ideas have been discarded. Why are they not here to oppose all this? The municipalities and the provinces are at the mercy of those who, by means of this big-stick policy, take their revenues and lay by duplicate taxes the whole burden on real estate and industry. That is what we are coming to. The minister is just making a scrap of paper out of the fundamental principle and doctrine of confederation, which was an agreement between the provinces. They came into this union with an agreement that it should not be changed without their consent. The minister is upsetting the whole principle of taxation under confederation, and provincial governments might just as well be abolished, if all this big-stick taxation continues. It is true, as the report says, that we never should have had this overgovernment and overtaxation; indeed, we should never have had the province system in 1867; they were the creation of the fathers of confederation for political and not for economic reasons. There is no such system in Great Britain and we never should have had it here—a duplicate municipal system one within the other; for that is what it is, with both authorities fighting each other to grab each other's revenues and thus force taxes upon real estate, industry and labour.

I protest on behalf of the people of Ontario, who may be forced to pay duplicate taxes all along the line because the two sides will not meet and settle it. They would have been compelled also to pay duplicate "sales taxes," under a bill introduced three years ago by this government, if the hon. gentlemen in the other part of the building had not thrown it out so properly, and saved further duplicate taxes.

Mr. EDWARDS: My observations with regard to this resolution will be very brief, and I hope it will not be necessary to answer all the questions as to where, why and by what means the province of which I have the honour to be a citizen finds itself in the predicament in which it is to-day.

I suggest that if the minister would consider amending the resolution in one respect only, and with respect to one figure, Alberta would be placed in a position analogous to that of the other provinces.

The alternative contained in paragraph (b) of the resolution reads:

> The net debt service paid by the province during the fiscal year ending nearest to December 31, 1940. . . .

I suggest that if the latter figure were changed to "1941", the minister would put Alberta in the position in which every other province of the dominion will find itself. From 1936 to the present time the government of Alberta has invariably said "We cannot pay our interest debt." Now, to all the other eight provinces the minister is saying, "We will put you in a position, if you vacate the income tax and corporation tax fields, where you can take care of your net debt service, in other words pay those people, wherever they may be, who bought your bonds, their full interest. You will be in that position by accepting (b) alternative, whereby every province in this dominion will be able to carry out its contractual obligation to its bondholders."

The cut-off date here having been fixed as of December 31, 1940, Alberta is not put in that position. If the cut-off date were made December 31, 1941, then, without any dictation from this government or from any other body, Alberta would be put in a position similar to that of every other province, whereby she could implement her contractual relations to her bondholders. Whether or not she would do it, she alone must take the responsibility; but at least it never could be said that this government in any way condoned or approved or attempted to take advantage of the situation in which the government of Alberta finds itself.

In round figures, the situation as I appreciate it is this. The net cost of carrying the debt of Alberta is approximately $6,000,000. The income in 1940 from the income tax and the corporation tax amounted roughly to $4,000,000. Alberta will have paid for net debt service last year $3,000,000, by reason solely of the fact that she pays only half the interest on her bonded indebtedness. If she is put in a position analogous to that of the other provinces, she will receive out of the common pot $6,000,000, but perforce she must pay it all out in interest to those who hold her bonds, and she cannot get it unless she pays it out. All she will be able to get from the federal treasury is the amount she has paid to carry her debt.

This would put Alberta in the position of being treated on the same basis as all the other provinces. It means that the government of Alberta will be worse off by something less than one million dollars, which she will have to find from some other source. The only other source available to her is her own people, and from my knowledge of those people I feel quite satisfied that they will and can make up the difference.

I do urge upon the minister that the offer should be dated as of December 31, 1941. It is the only change which need be made in the resolution. If you put the responsibility where it belongs, you forever close the mouth of the government of Alberta with respect to the oft-repeated assertion that "we are not in a position to pay our bond interest." The fund is there available for that purpose; let her make her internal adjustments as she sees fit. I for one am, as I trust every Canadian is and should be, jealous of the credit not only of Canada but of the provinces—

Mr. BLACKMORE: Hear, hear.

Mr. EDWARDS: —not of one province alone, but of all, and it is a matter of regret if one of the daughters of this fair dominion repudiates her obligations. Alberta does not say that she repudiates: in the evidence given by Mr. Low before the banking and commerce committee he side-tracked and side-stepped and refused to admit that there was repudiation. He simply said, "We cannot pay". Now the other provinces, or at any rate some of them, faced with the same situation, did get from the federal treasury in years gone by funds wherewith to meet their obligations. I do not think there is any doubt about that, and I believe the reports will show that the dominion is still carrying those obligations. Why not now, without giving any assurance to speculators in Alberta bonds that the principal will be redeemed or that bygone interest will be paid, say to Alberta: "If you will pay your bonded indebtedness from this time on, you will be treated on the same basis as the other provinces, but if you do not pay, then the federal treasury, perforce, does not assist you."

I am concerned with respect to another matter, and the fairness of this proposition, if I may say so, is reflected in this, that of the nine provinces to which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) referred this morning, in making up his estimate of $45,000,000, five it would appear, or at least it is assumed, will resort to option (b), thereby indicating that the revenues from corporation taxes and income tax are not sufficient to pay their net debt charges. It is worthy of note that these provinces are the maritimes and the prairie provinces. It is a trite story in itself which we may not traverse this afternoon. I am suggesting to the minister that alternative (b) would be more advantageous and would undoubtedly be accepted by Alberta if it were made 1941; or if Alberta were in fact paying her interest charges, then undoubtedly alternative (b) would be the one.

Mr. ILSLEY: No. We have not the slightest indication that the Alberta government would take (b). If we had any such indication we would discuss it with them.

Mr. EDWARDS: Has the government any indication that other provinces will take the alternative which is the basis of his estimate.

Mr. ILSLEY: Oh, yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: They have all so intimated?

Mr. ILSLEY: I would not say it is very definite, but it is assumed, so far as Saskatchewan is concerned, for example, because it will get a much larger sum under (b) than under (a), and it would be superfluous for them to say that they would take the larger sum. That is assumed.

Mr. EDWARDS: My suggestion is that Alberta should be put in the same position as it is assumed Saskatchewan's position will be, because there is no question that that province met its bond interest in years gone by as the result of grants in aid from the federal treasury.

There is another aspect of this matter that is likely to be overlooked. After all, this money is interest. We are dealing only with interest, and a substantial portion of the money which will be paid out by Alberta will in turn be recaptured by the Minister of Finance under his income tax proposals, so that the amount involved is not as large as might appear at first blush. I do urge upon the minister that if December 31, 1941, were substituted for the year 1940 he would have removed, so far as this government and the house are concerned, any question of taking advantage of the default, so-called, of Alberta.

Mr. ILSLEY: I think I should say a word in reply. I can only repeat what I said in my statement this morning, that if Alberta were to work out some refunding plan with its bondholders and were then to ask the dominion to reconsider the basis on which the annual payment is to be computed, we should be prepared to discuss the question, or any other reasonable proposal that might be made. I cannot see any good purpose, however, to be served by trying to cross this bridge before we come to it.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

340. Administration service. Departmental administration, $126,480.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not see any particular item in the estimates under which I might ask a question in reference to the export of grain from Churchill.

Hon. J. A. MacKINNON (Minister of Trade and Commerce): It will be quite all right under this item so far as I am concerned.

Mr. MacNICOL: I wish to know what plans the department has put into operation recently—last year, if I may suggest it—or any plans that are proposed for this fall for the shipment of grain from Churchill, Manitoba. In view of the war and the necessity for convoy, it may not be practicable at the present time, but it was a year or two ago. When I visited there a year ago I learned from people at the elevator that for the past year

2,500,000 bushels of wheat had been in storage To whom does that wheat belong? Did any loss occur while it was in storage? Who bears that loss, and has the department any plans for the shipment of wheat from that port?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am glad to have the question asked under this item. With regard to the port of Churchill, there is stored in this elevator at the present time 2,617,000 bushels of wheat. The bulk of this quantity has been in the elevator since the fall of 1939. At that time charters were made for the movement of some of this wheat from Churchill, but immediately after the outbreak of war the British Minister of Shipping commandeered the boats intended to lift some of this wheat, and they were diverted to more urgent use. Since that time conversations have been carried on with the British Minister of Shipping, with a view to arranging for some boats for the Churchill movement; but owing to the difficulties of placing these boats in Churchill and then moving them to north Atlantic ports for convoy purposes, the British Ministry of Shipping consider that the boats cannot be spared for the additional period of movement, and the efforts to divert shipping to Churchill have not been successful. In view of the difficult shipping situation we feel that we should not press the ministry of shipping to do something which will affect their shipping programme.

Within the last week discussions took place with the agent of the British cereals committee in Canada with regard to the prospect of movements from Churchill, but his view was that the position was unchanged, and he could not hold out any hope for any movement from this port during the coming shipping season.

Mr. COLDWELL: Would the minister like us to ask questions now on this administration item, or would he prefer that we wait until the appropriate item comes up?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It would be quite all right now.

Mr. COLDWELL: First I wish to draw the minister's attention to the freight car situation that arose on the prairies last year. I wrote to the minister and also to the wheat board about it. For many years there were railway car rights under the grain act for which the farmers had agitated over a period of years and ultimately secured. These rights were practically taken away from them during last season. There was set up under the Department of Trade and Commerce a committee known as the car allotment committee. It decided that cars should be allocated between elevators not on the basis of the percentage of the grain they had handled during the preceding years but rather on the amount of elevator space, including the old annexes that had been built in former days. The temporary annexes, as the minister knows, were not included. In addition, cars of grain billed to Duluth, Portage la Prairie and Kenora, where some of the private firms had storage facilities, were not taken out of the car allotment. I believe it is now proposed that this shall be done during the coming year. The car order-book has not been maintained, a new car allotment committee taking the place of it.

This has affected adversely the farmer-owned and cooperative elevator companies in western Canada. These pool elevators to my knowledge—and I went over my own constituency, which was rather a strong pool constituency—were filled to the roof quite early in September of last year. I remember the situation was particularly acute at Beechy. There, if I may digress for a moment, one of the line companies still had, I think it was nine cars, to be filled—I speak from memory—and so long as they did not fill them, no further allotment of cars could be made to the pool elevator.

This situation caused a great deal of misgiving on the part of the farmers who were cooperatively minded. They were forced to market their grain through line elevator companies with which they had done no business for a number of years, and there was a serious amount of discontent, particularly among the keen and ardent pool members. The result was that over the province of Saskatchewan last year the pools did not maintain their percentage of crop receipts. I believe they dropped about 6 per cent, which is a considerable drop in percentage from around 45 or 46 per cent. This system undoubtedly played into the hands of the line elevator companies. Consequently there is at the present time a feeling of resentment on the prairies about this whole system.

It has been suggested to me that since the wheat board has been handling the wheat, it might be well if the distribution of cars were placed entirely under the wheat board. At present the distribution is supervised by the car allotment committee, which I believe consists of nine persons, three representing the three western pools, two representing the two railway companies, three from the line elevator companies, and I am not sure how the remaining one is appointed. If that could be done it would assist materially in satisfying the farmers. But if the space is to be considered, then it seems to me the space in the new annexes should be considered as well as that in the old annexes. I can, however, assure the minister that last autumn as I moved around my constituency there was serious dissatisfaction with the condition. As I say, I took the matter up last September with the proper people and received prompt attention.

Further, why should the farmer not declare, when he applies for his permit, the elevator at which he wishes to deliver his crop, as well as the point to which he wishes to deliver it? That is, restore to the individual the right to decide through what facilities his crop shall be handled.

I place that suggestion before the minister because I believe that before the new crop moves, this matter should be given consideration, and at least this should be done, that the cars should be allotted not on the basis of space but on the basis of the percentage of the business of the elevator companies, during years that the minister thinks it right and proper to take, say 1937-38-39, the average of these years. Of course he would not take years when there was serious congestion as there was in 1940. On that basis I think there would be much more satisfaction with the local wheat-handling situation than there was last autumn.

At one point I was told that out of forty pool members only fourteen were able to deliver their wheat to their own cooperative elevator. The others had to find accommodation elsewhere with companies with which they had not been dealing in former years. That, of course, was bound to develop a good deal of dissatisfaction.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I shall be glad to take note of the hon. member's suggestion that distribution of cars be placed entirely under the control of the wheat board. During the past season I had complaints about the alleged unfair distribution of cars; in each case they were investigated by me through the wheat board, and so far as I remember, reasonable explanations appeared to be given.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think attempts were made to minimize the difficulties. We appreciated what the department and the wheat board did.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I appreciate the hon. gentleman's remarks. His suggestions will be given careful consideration.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask who owns the elevator at Churchill?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The Canadian government.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mr. MacNICOL: Who owns the wheat in the elevator?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The wheat board.

Mr. MacNICOL: I understand that at the present time this elevator contains approximately 2,600,000 bushels of wheat. This would be the equivalent of five or six boatloads, which would be sufficient to make up a convoy. It occurs to me that this wheat should be moved out, which would leave that space available for use this fall and perhaps eliminate the necessity for the construction of extra storage capacity on the prairies. Has the department considered this point?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am afraid the hon. gentleman did not quite follow what I said a moment ago. We have made attempts to have that wheat shipped out, but the difficulty is purely one of shipping accommodation. It would take eight or nine ships to move this wheat, and under ordinary circumstances the ships would have to go to Halifax or some other eastern port in order to join a convoy.

Mr. MacINNIS: When we were discussing this item a few days ago and the question of the shipment of wheat to Japan came up, I asked the minister if he had any information as to whether lumber from British Columbia was being shipped to Japan at the same time. The minister said he would look into the matter and give a reply later.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): As a matter of fact I have not been able to make inquiries. I do know that no permits have been issued for the shipment of lumber or any other materials to Japan except in connection with orders which were placed before the permit system came into operation. I will make, however, the inquiries to which the hon. gentleman has referred.

Mr. MacINNIS: At the time the British Columbia members were advised that this wheat was being shipped to Japan the question of certain shipments of hemlock lumber was also discussed. Do I understand that there have been no permits for shipments of lumber other than those? When the minister has answered that question perhaps he would say whether these permits are continuous, or whether they apply only to a particular quantity of lumber.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No shipping permits have been asked for or granted in connection with any orders not placed prior to the inauguration of the permit system. I know nothing about the logs referred to, but in connection with wheat I understand there are separate permits for each boatload that is shipped.

Mr. MacINNIS: Perhaps before the house closes, or before I leave Ottawa, the minister could obtain the information I have requested in regard to lumber.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I should be very glad to do so.

Mr. QUELCH: I should like to add a suggestion to the one advanced by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, which I thought was thoroughly sound. If the government cannot see its way clear to allocate cars on the basis of demand by farmers instead of on the basis of space, then the space in the annexes which are not connected with the elevators by an auger also should be taken into consideration. As I understand it at the present time, if an annex is not connected by an auger the space in that annex is not taken into consideration. At the point where I live the pool elevator, which is a large one, is not so connected and therefore the annex is not taken into consideration in this way.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am informed that this is being done.

Mr. WRIGHT: Has the department given any consideration to the question of the freight rate to Churchill? On the line from Prince Albert to Hudson Bay junction the freight rate to Churchill is three cents less than the freight rate to Fort William; but if the grain grown by farmers on that line goes to Churchill they have to pay the Fort William rate, which makes a difference of about two cents a bushel on that grain. These farmers feel that they should have the advantage of the Churchill freight rate, since farmers living in Alberta have the advantage of the freight rate to Vancouver even though most of their grain goes to Fort William. I should like to know also whether the department intends to make an advance on grain stored in granaries on the farms this fall.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The question of the rates to Churchill does not come under this department; it is under the Department of Transport.

Did I understand the hon. gentleman to ask whether it was the intention of the government to pay storage on farm-stored wheat?

Mr. WRIGHT: No; whether there would be a cash advance on farm-stored wheat.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That matter has been given a great deal of consideration, not only by the government but also by the bodies advising the government in connection with wheat. No decision has been arrived at as yet, and no decision can well be arrived at until we see what will be the nature of the crop now growing.

Mr. FAIR: When this item was under discussion a couple of days ago some hon. members brought up the question of section 17, and I was wondering whether anything has been done in this connection. I feel quite sure the minister realizes that farmers have certain costs to pay. In a great many cases they have no other way of paying those costs except by delivering their quotas, and if others are allowed to horn in on these quotas under this section the farmers may have difficulty in threshing their grain. The minister understands, I am sure, that at present in the various provinces threshing bills are a first charge on the grain, and in many cases farmers are compelled to obtain credit for twine, binder repairs and other things as well as groceries. I am sure the minister also realizes that the farmer is responsible for the wages of the threshing gang while they are on his farm; that is the rule in Alberta, and I believe in the other provinces as well.

The CHAIRMAN: Would the hon. gentlemen speak a little louder, so that I may understand what he is saying? What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Mr. FAIR: I am not reading from anything, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman was quoting section 17.

Mr. FAIR: I was not reading from anything at all.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman referred to a regulation. I must understand what he refers to, in order to determine whether this has any relation to the item under discussion.

Mr. FAIR: This is from order in council, P.C. 3849, passed at government house at Ottawa, Friday, the 30th day of May, 1941, and section 17—

The CHAIRMAN: The order is in relation to what?

Mr. FAIR: In order that it may be clear I shall read the order in council.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman must state what he is talking about. I believe he is out of order because he is not discussing the item now before the committee. The minister has allowed some latitude with respect to matters referring to the grain board, but that latitude must necessarily be restricted. If I understand the hon. gentleman correctly, what he is directing attention to has no relation to either item 340, now under discussion or item 349, to which the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar made reference.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I understand what the hon. member wishes information about, and I think I can give it to him. What is bothering him as well as other members, including those of the government, is section 17 of the order in council referred to. The situation is very serious. There are two classes of purchasers, the farmer and the mortgagee. The matter has been discussed thoroughly by the wheat committee of the cabinet with the wheat board in the past week or so, and a decision was arrived at yesterday that the wheat board should go back to western Canada and take this matter up with the provincial governments concerned and see if some arrangement cannot be arrived at.

Mr. FAIR: Section 4 of order in council, P.C. 3849, reads as follows:

> 4. No person unless he is duly authorized by the board so to do, shall during the crop year commencing on August first, nineteen hundred and forty-one, buy, take delivery of, or mill wheat and no person during such crop year shall sell, deliver, or otherwise dispose of any wheat to or have it milled by any person not so authorized by the board.

Should a farmer be unable to pay a debt owing to another farmer in cash, would he be permitted by this section to give him wheat instead? Would a storekeeper be permitted to take wheat in payment of a debt for groceries?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The storekeeper could take wheat, but he would have no permit which would allow him to deliver it. Without having given the question much consideration, I do not think there is anything to stop one farmer from trading wheat with another farmer, or selling wheat to another farmer.

Mr. FAIR: Will a farmer who grows only coarse grains—his land may not be suitable for the growing of wheat—be allowed to deliver those coarse grains to the wheat board?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There seems to be a mistaken idea with regard to coarse grains being taken by the wheat board. The only authority the wheat board has under this order in council is in connection with the acceptance of coarse grains at the elevator, in order to give them the power to accept wheat quotas as arranged.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. COLDWELL: The other evening the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Ross) was explaining the operations of the grain exchange under war conditions, but I did not follow him as closely as perhaps I should have done. I certainly did not gather the information I wanted. Perhaps the Minister of Trade and Commerce can give this to the committee, or perhaps the hon. member for Moose Jaw could elucidate further the point he was making the other evening. From the explanation given, I am under the impression that in some way wheat sales pass through the grain exchange twice. There is a great deal of confusion in the minds of many hon. members, even in the minds of those who, while they do not speculate on the grain exchange, have made some little study of wheat marketing. We have been told that the cereals controller of Great Britain wishes the grain exchange kept open. On the other hand, we know that at the moment our wheat is being sold by direct deals between the wheat board and the cereals committee. I should like to know what function the grain exchange fulfils in these transactions. In order to have it perfectly clear, perhaps we could be given the history of a quantity of wheat from the time it is delivered to the country elevator until it gets into the hands of the cereals committee in Great Britain. What does the export firm do in connection with such a transaction? How does the wheat come into contact with the grain exchange? How do these other organizations enter into the picture?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): During the last few days I have seen the hon. member for Moose Jaw around my office in earnest conversation with the officials of the wheat board. I do not know of anyone in the House of Commons better qualified to give this information than the hon. member, and I believe he is ready to do so.

The CHAIRMAN: I want to be fair to all members of the committee. It is absolutely impossible for the Chairman not to discriminate unless we follow the rules of the house. The minister has declared his willingness to discuss the administration of the Canada Grain Act, but there is only one way of doing that under the rules of the house. We shall have to do what was done the other day in connection with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, that is, give unanimous consent to considering items 340

(departmental administration), 349, 350 and 351 (Canada Grain Act) together. Is it the pleasure of the committee that these items should be taken together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has asked me to explain the movement of wheat from the country elevator to export, and I shall endeavour to do that. When the wheat business was operating in the ordinary way on the open market, before we had a wheat board or even afterwards, grain was taken into the elevator, was purchased by the elevator company from the farmer and then was hedged on the Winnipeg market by the sale of futures. This was often done by wheat boards which acted prior to this one, I believe. It was done for the purpose of protecting the later sale of the wheat by the elevator company, but it is unnecessary now because the wheat board guarantees the price to the elevator of the wheat delivered to it for their account. Therefore, there being no necessity for futures trading in connection with that wheat purchased at the country elevator for the board, there is no futures trading in connection with wheat bought at the country elevator and delivered to the wheat board at Winnipeg.

The wheat is purchased for the board and comes to Fort William-Port Arthur. The board take actual possession of the wheat there and it becomes cash wheat in their hands. They pay the elevator companies under their contract with the wheat board for the handling of that wheat east to Fort William. The British cereals import board does not want to set up machinery in this country for the purchase of wheat. They have intimated that they would rather purchase wheat through the ordinary exporters in this country and that they would be willing to pay them a commission on the deal.

Mr. COLDWELL: They have already agreed to buy the wheat from the wheat board Where does the exporter come in?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I got a little ahead of myself. The wheat board this year have made a contract with the British cereals import board for the purchase by that board of 120 million bushels at a figure. I do not know what that figure is. Nobody knows it except the wheat board and the British cereals import board. That is not a trade through the grain exchange. It is a contract to deliver to the British cereals import board 120 million bushels of wheat over a period of time at a price. In order that the ordinary exporter in the trade can get that wheat into position at our ports to be delivered when required, the wheat board then sells for cash to the Canadian exporter. A commission of one-sixteenth of a cent a bushel is paid to the cash broker who sells that cash wheat for the board to the Canadian exporter. The Canadian exporter moves that wheat down, but at the same time that he makes his cash deal when buying the wheat he sells back to the wheat board a delivery option in a future month.

Mr. COLDWELL: What for?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In order to protect himself, at the time he buys the cash wheat on the market he sells a future option to the wheat board.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): What is the commission on that?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): It is one-fortieth of a cent a bushel. That trade is made, and the wheat board, by buying that option, agrees to take delivery of that wheat, if necessary, at the end of the option. The wheat is moved down to the port. When the British cereals import board wish to take delivery of part of that wheat they get in touch with the different exporters in Canada who have that wheat in position, and these exporters make offers of their wheat. These offers are made on the basis of so many cents over a July future, or over an October future, or whenever they are selling. They have so many cents over for handling charges, insurance, freight, storage, brokerage or commission.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): What would that amount to?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): In all, the charges would be around eleven cents.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): But what would be the brokerage on that last transaction?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): That brokerage is fixed by the British cereals import board. They know exactly what the exporter bought the wheat at; when he offers the wheat he knows exactly what he has paid in brokerage, and they make their deal in competition with other exporters in this country who have wheat in position.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): What is the brokerage on that transaction?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I do not know exactly, but I would not think it would be over one-quarter to three-eighths of a cent a bushel. The British cereals import board then buy cash wheat from the Canadian exporter, and when they buy that wheat they buy it at so many cents over the option. Then they ask the Canadian wheat board to take in to their account that short option or to give a long against the short and close out the trade, which is closed through the clearing house at Winnipeg. There is a charge of one-fortieth of a cent a bushel on that trade on the Winnipeg grain exchange, and, as I understand the situation, the exporter pays one side of the trade and the wheat board pays the other side.

I said the other night that nobody could tell what the price was at which the wheat was sold. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who is not in the chamber at the moment, thought that perhaps that could be learned, but the reason why nobody can tell is this. No matter what that wheat is supposed to be sold at by the exporter at the port of shipment, that is not the price at which it is sold. That is the price at which the wheat was bought, plus freight, handling charges, insurance, storage and commission up to that point. They take back in the option; then an adjustment is made between the wheat board and the British cereals import board for the balance of the price whatever it may be, and nobody knows that except the wheat board and the British cereals import board.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Perhaps the minister—I am addressing myself to the hon. member for Moose Jaw who seems to be the minister at present—would tell us what the commission is and what the handling charges are.

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): I was asked that question before by an hon. gentleman opposite, and I said that I did not know exactly but that it was probably one-quarter or three-eighths of a cent a bushel.

An hon. MEMBER: There are five brokerage transactions in the handling of that wheat?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): The cash brokerage sale at Winnipeg carries a charge of one-sixteenth of a cent. Then there is the exporter's brokerage which is paid by the British cereals import board, not by the wheat board, and it is paid by them because they would rather pay it than set up in this country the necessary machinery and offices to handle that part of the business. That is done at their request.

Mr. WRIGHT: The brokerage which the British cereals import board pay is a direct charge against our wheat. When the British cereals import board and the wheat board settle up, that brokerage is taken into consideration, and therefore we should know what that brokerage is because it enters into the price when the import board make their final settlement with the wheat board.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The cereals import board pay that commission to the exporter, and it is not deducted from the price realized by the wheat board. It is an additional price for handling that wheat.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If I got correctly the figures of the hon. member for Moose Jaw, there would be a total of nearly half a cent a bushel on these different transactions. Would that be about correct?

Mr. ROSS (Moose Jaw): There is one-sixteenth of a cent, cash wheat brokerage at Winnipeg; there is one-twentieth of a cent which covers two transactions—one each way—on the futures trade; that is all. In fact, that is more than all that comes out of the wheat board. There is only one-fortieth of a cent provided by the wheat board on the option trade and one-sixteenth of a cent on the cash wheat brokerage. The other brokerage spoken of, of the exporter, is over and above the price of the Canadian wheat and is paid by the British cereals import board direct to the exporter.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I believe that all three brokerages amount to a little less than half a cent.

Mr. COLDWELL: We now have a much clearer picture than we had before. I was born in the old country; and when I hear about this extremely complicated way of handling a direct trade, I wonder how Great Britain has managed to wiggle through her wars and worries in the past.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I followed very closely the remarks of the hon. member for Moose Jaw. He has explained how we dispose of $600,000 in connection with one transaction, and for the life of me I cannot see why the cereals import board want to spend $600,000 in that particular way. I could think of a dozen other ways in which the British people might spend $600,000 and which would do them much more good. I think we should have a little more information.

The CHAIRMAN: We cannot discuss the operations of an imperial board. Whether or not it intends to pay that commission over and above other outlays, for this committee there is only the question whether that is deducted by the Canadian board from the price paid to the farmer. The other question is outside the scope even of the four items taken together.

Mr. COLDWELL: In order to get the picture, we have to know this.

The CHAIRMAN: I have allowed that; but I should not like suggestions to be made that they are wrong in their trading operations. I believe we are going much farther than the items call for.

Mr. FAIR: I was not going into that at all.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member did not, but another hon. member did. I was addressing myself to the hon. gentleman who spoke just before.

Mr. FAIR: Has the government considered the question of paying storage from September 1 until November 1 to the farmer who has grain stored on his farm?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): We have been discussing this question in the last few days, but no decision has yet been reached. A very large part of the threshing in western Canada has not started by September 1.

Mr. FAIR: What percentage of the grain in storage in elevators in Canada to-day is held and owned by the grain companies?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): By the wheat board?

Mr. FAIR: By the grain companies, or the wheat board? It does not make any difference —either one.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I have not the figures available to answer that question properly. The cereals import committee of the United Kingdom have a very considerable quantity of grain still in Canada. The mills and elevator companies also hold a considerable quantity.

Mr. FAIR: Can a farmer sell wheat direct to a grain company after this date?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I did not hear the last few words of the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. FAIR: I was just wondering whether it was legal for a farmer to sell grain direct to a grain company, as it has been during the past year.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I would certainly think so.

Items 340, 349, 350 and 351 agreed to.

342. Electricity and gas inspection services, including administration of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act, $270,905.

Mr. MacNICOL: If the minister has the information, I should like to know how much electricity is shipped from the power companies in the province of Quebec, including Beauharnois, to the United States; that is, how much from each one; and also from Niagara to the United States.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I have not that information before me here, but I shall be very glad to get it and submit it to the hon. gentleman, either directly or otherwise.

Item agreed to.

344. Motion picture bureau, $159,810.

Mr. COLDWELL: What motion picture bureau is this? Does the national film board come under this item?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No. This item relates to the motion picture bureau, which is, to a certain extent, the workshop of the national film board. As to this item and the later item of the national film board, I may say that these organizations have just passed out of the control of the Department of Trade and Commerce and are transferred to the Department of National War Services; I refer to the national film board and that portion of the bureau having to do with films.

Mr. COLDWELL: But the new Minister of National War Services will not pilot these items through the committee?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No.

Mr. COLDWELL: The Minister of Trade and Commerce will. I think the committee should take some notice of the work which is being done by this bureau and by the national film board under the leadership of John Grierson. A tremendous amount of imagination has been shown in connection with our films which have been exhibited in some thousands of theatres in the United States, Canada and Great Britain. The money we are spending for the national film board—

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Will the hon. member permit me? This is not really the item under which the hon. member can appropriately deal with the work being done by Mr. Grierson. If, however, he likes to couple this with the other item it will be in order.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is what I was going to do.

The CHAIRMAN: Which is the other item?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Item 348.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall we consider item 344 and item 348 together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

348. National film board, $39,100.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was just about to conclude. I merely wanted to say that having seen a number of these films, and having been interested for a number of years in visual education, because of my former profession, I think that the work which is being done under Mr. Grierson is remarkably fine, and that we should continue and extend it and do our level best to keep the man who is doing it in the position which he now holds. I do not mean that I assume there is any danger of losing him, but I hope that his services will be appreciated.

Items 344 and 348 agreed to.

346. Publicity and advertising in Canada and abroad other than in the United Kingdom and Europe, $54,360.

Mr. HANSELL: Will the minister give us some information as to the difference between advertising dealt with by his department and other advertising, coming under any department, which involves trade and commerce. What I have in mind is that I have noticed some advertising put out by the Minister of Agriculture having reference to beef and agricultural products. I have observed also advertisements by the ministry of fisheries with reference to fish. Does the Minister of Trade and Commerce advertise only such products as come within his particular department, such as wheat? That is the only matter that he could advertise as coming directly under his department. Will the minister elaborate?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The department advertises its own services. The Department of Agriculture advertises those products which it handles, such as cheese, bacon and butter.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Would that be for uses in Canada? The Department of Agriculture would advertise those products for consumption in Canada?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): But the Department of Trade and Commerce advertises products for use abroad?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): We try to interest British importers in the products of Canada.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): For consumption outside Canada?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The department would have nothing to do with advertising any Canadian commodity for use within Canada?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): No.

Mr. MacNICOL: The details are given on page 188 of the estimates. While it is interesting to note that the vote has been increased for advertising—in south American countries, I presume—I think it should have been increased a great deal more. The vote for the item as a whole has been cut down, but inasmuch as advertising in Europe is now and will be off during the war, and a market is open in south America and can be exploited, I have been wondering whether the minister next year will bring down a larger vote for advertising Canadian products in the south American countries.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Economy is the only reason for the reduction in the vote. Whether it is wise or not, that economy is based on the judgment of the department.

Mr. HANSELL: I am not quite familiar with the difference between advertising carried on by the Department of Trade and Commerce and advertising done by other departments. I am afraid that if I go to one department and suggest that they advertise certain commodities I shall be told that this comes under the Department of Trade and Commerce, and when I go to the Department of Trade and Commerce I may be told that the very same commodities come under some other department. Under which department would come the advertising of Canada's coal products?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The Department of Trade and Commerce deals with exports. The question the hon. member raises would come under the Department of Mines and Resources.

Item agreed to.

347. Weights and measures inspection service, $436,840.

Mr. MacINNIS: Who is the director of weights and measures inspection service, and who is the supervisor of short weight?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The director of weights and measures is Mr. Way, and the supervisor is Mr. Cuddy.

Mr. MacINNIS: Has the minister any knowledge of the report made by Mr. Cuddy to Mr. Way, director of weights and measures, under date of October 13, 1939, with reference to short weight in the coal trade in the city of Montreal? Has he any information in that regard, and is there anything he can do? The situation is, or at any rate ought to be, a very serious one for the citizens of Montreal.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The matter has come to my attention two or three times, and I have gone into it carefully. The report was a confidential one made by an officer of the department.

Mr. MacINNIS: Has any action been taken in the matter? Has it been brought to the attention of the authorities in Montreal?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The officers advise me it is a secret report. Action was taken by the department, but we were not consulted with regard to any prosecution.

Mr. COLDWELL: Some arrangement should be made for the advertising of our Canadian goods. I asked for a return to certain questions, two of which were as follows:

2. Which department of government is charged with the responsibility of advertising or otherwise encouraging the use of domestic coal?

3. How much was spent in 1940 by the government in advertising Canadian coal in Canada?

The answers were as follows:

2. The Department of Mines and Resources is charged with the responsibility of administering coal subsidies and subventions but does not conduct any advertising with a view to stimulating the use of Canadian coal for domestic purposes.

3. Nil.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Who gave that return?

Mr. COLDWELL: It is sessional paper 175B.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): From what department?

Mr. COLDWELL: It was given me by the Secretary of State. The answer is from the Department of Mines and Resources.

Mr. MacINNIS: Why cannot the minister's department deal with the question of short weight, as referred to in this report?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The report deals with coal weights in Montreal. In that city there is a municipal by-law covering coal and coal weights. The officers of this department have adopted the policy of not interfering beyond making any necessary investigation and reporting.

Mr. MacINNIS: Do I understand that so far as the Department of Trade and Commerce is concerned, operating through this branch, all it does is to see that the scales weigh correctly, that if there is some other dishonest practice in connection with weighing, the department is not concerned, but is only concerned that the scales weigh sixteen ounces to the pound?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I have a memorandum on this matter. As a matter of fact the principal duty of this branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce is the checking of weights and measures. In this particular case I might say that the only authority possessed by the department to enforce correct weight is the short weight provision of section 63 of the Weights and Measures Act. But there is no offence on which they can act until sale and delivery has taken place, and deliveries of coal cannot be check-weighed in private cellars. The alternative means of public protection is the check-weighing of coal in course of delivery, by city officials under municipal by-law, as practised in most cities. Such local supervision is both legal and valid, and has recently been declared so by Judge Constantineau in his judgment in the recent prosecution of the city of Ottawa.

The royal commission on coal, dealing with complaints of short weight, mixing, substitution, et cetera, stated:

The remedy appears to be in the strict enforcement of adequate regulations for the protection of consumers. These should include enforced public weighing, rigid inspection and checking of delivery slips, proper identification of trucks and men, and an appropriate but not prohibitive license fee. Any municipality has the powers and ought to have the competence to enact and enforce such regulations.

Item agreed to.

Dominion bureau of statistics.

353. Statistics, $934,520.

354. Census of population, $2,886,350.

Mr. NICHOLSON: At the outset I should like to express appreciation of the valuable work performed by the bureau of statistics. I do not suppose there is any service of government that is used as widely by all hon. members as this department.

But what I rise to complain about is the method that has been followed in carrying out the census at this time.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the wish that we take items 353 and 354 together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. NICHOLSON: A year ago, when it was decided to take the national registration, the then newly appointed Minister of National War Services (Mr. Gardiner) appealed to all hon. members to give their whole-hearted support to the completion of this project. Although the then Minister of National War Services has never been supported in the west by this group, I am sure all members of the house gave him complete cooperation. In my own case I did what might seem an unusual thing, I named two Liberals to occupy the key positions in my constituency of registrar and deputy registrar—

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member was not playing politics, was he?

Mr. NICHOLSON: I did this because these two men had recently completed the work of returning officer and clerk, and their services were, on the whole satisfactory; they knew the constituency, and I thought that experience should warrant their appointment for this responsible position. The people throughout the constituency carried out the work in the same spirit. They thought that with the war on, we should forget partisan politics.

I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce made a start on those lines in connection with the census.

I have here a return showing the correspondence that went out from the minister's office. I am sorry that he did not carry through. I find that a letter went out from the dominion statistician—there is no date on it—mentioning that he was sending out this letter on the request of the minister. The letter reads:

> In this connection I am now writing on the instruction of the minister to bespeak your special care in selecting enumerators who are in every respect suitable for their duties and who will be acceptable to the general public. . . .
> I am instructed also to direct that you make a fair distribution of the appointments from amongst the political parties represented in your district and to this end that you confer with both the sitting member and the defeated candidates for your constituency.

Hon. members on this side complain about those instructions not being carried out. In my own constituency the instructions were carried out to the extent of consulting me, and I spent two or three hours in going over my constituency lists carefully. To fill one hundred positions I suggested some thirty names, giving special consideration to the requirements outlined in another letter which went out from the bureau of statistics, and which I have here. This other letter set out the special qualifications for the enumerators, and laid special emphasis on the fact that the enumerators should have certain qualifications. First, there should be a preference to men who served overseas; second, crop correspondents of the dominion bureau of statistics should be considered; third, officers and leading workers in farmers' organizations, live stock associations, et cetera, progressive farmers and their sons and daughters, and especialy young men and women who have attended agricultural colleges or universities. Then school teachers when available, and it was further suggested that in certain sections women would make excellent appointees, owing to the fact that in many instances the information must be obtained from the female head of the house. It said that in the last census several women had done excellent work as enumerators.

The next paragraph of course gave the commissioners a way out:

> At the same time we want you to clearly understand that the appointment of enumerators rests solely with you and that you are responsible for the efficiency and accuracy of the census of your electoral district.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): What is the date of that letter?

Mr. NICHOLSON: There is no date on any of these letters.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I may be wrong, but I think the hon. gentleman must be quoting from notices or forms that went out on some other work, because I do not remember those forms going out on the census work.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Perhaps I should have pointed out that I am quoting from sessional paper No. 290A, "copy of all letters, telegrams, recommendations and other documents in the possession of the department relative to the appointment of the census commissioner for the constituency of Mackenzie, Saskatchewan."

This last letter is No. 4, prepared by the Department of Trade and Commerce, R. H. Coats, Dominion Statistician, on "appointment of enumerators, eighth census of Canada, 1941."

I might mention that in the future I think these letters should be dated. There is a whole series here. There is no indication to whom the letter was sent, but I presume the policy was of writing to the defeated candidate.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): These were the general letters that went out first. I thought the hon. member was referring to communications direct with the census commissioners.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I explained that I was reading the general instructions given in order that the enumeration might be carried on impartially with a view to having the information so collected that the people would feel that this money was being spent to get information which would be of use instead of appointments being made of friends of the party in power. Naturally I thought that these recommendations were going to apply to my riding.

As I said, I spent considerable time in going carefully over my lists, giving special consideration to returned soldiers and the other qualifications mentioned. I was given to understand from the commissioner that these recommendations would be taken into consideration. Out of one hundred to be appointed, I suggested thirty, if I remember correctly, but I have a list here of the hundred later appointed, and not a single name that I recommended appears on this list.

An hon. MEMBER: The hon. member has not enough pull.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I know that the commissioner has his way out, seeing he takes final responsibility. I am not saying that these people are not qualified. I am not suggesting that; I know many of these people will carry on their work efficiently; but so far as I can see, these appointments have been made on a strictly partisan basis, and that is not good enough.

An hon. MEMBER: He would not accept any of the Liberals recommended by the hon. member.

Mr. NICHOLSON: As a matter of fact I did recommend two Liberals last year to the Department of National War Services, in order to indicate that for my part I was not going to play politics in this emergency. In carrying out this census the minister might have gone as far as the Minister of National War Services went last year, in order to see that all the people of the country were asked for their whole-hearted cooperation. I know it is too late now to do anything about the matter, but in future an important service such as this should be taken away from petty ward heelers, who seem to be doing most of the work this year. In every community throughout the country there are people who have a special flair for this sort of work. In my constituency I have people who for thirty-five years have been voluntarily sending information to the bureau of statistics because they are interested in compiling and studying statistics. I believe this department should have tried to locate people in the various communities across the country who will supply the department with a constant stream of valuable information every month and every year. After looking over this list, I think I am safe in saying that 90 per cent of these people will feel that they have no further responsibility after they receive their pay cheques, and their interest in this work will end. This is one field where, as part of a permanent policy, we should get away from narrow partisan politics and see that appointments are made on the basis of merit. I cannot let this item pass without a protest over the failure of the minister to carry out this census according to the outline he gave the house originally.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to endorse what has been said by the hon. member for Mackenzie. I was not even approached with regard to my constituency; not that I particularly wanted to be, because I think these matters should be handled altogether apart from any member or any defeated candidate. In my constituency, however, there is a good deal of feeling that since many of the people volunteered their services in connection with the registration last year, and have been busy this year with the salvage campaign, the sale of war savings certificates and now the victory loan campaign, this census should have been handled altogether apart from local politics. As I say, I was never approached in my own constituency. I have sometimes said that I was suspicious that some so-called Social Credit candidates who were brought into Saskatchewan in 1935 became Social Credit candidates just in order to split the vote and elect the Liberal candidate. In my own constituency the gentleman who has been appointed commissioner was the Social Credit candidate in 1935, having transferred his allegiance from the Liberal party to the Social Credit party a few weeks before the election. When I was in my constituency at Easter I found that the people had been told they would have to approach not only the defeated federal Liberal candidate but the sitting Liberal members or defeated Liberal candidate for the provincial legislature. Apparently the recommendations were being received through the local provincial politicians for parts of my constituency which is a bad situation.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): We have nothing to do with that.

Mr. COLDWELL: I know the minister had nothing to do with that, but I am pointing out that the local political game is going to destroy any unity we may have in connection with our war effort. I should like to add that so far as this group is concerned, we have leaned over backwards in trying to play the game fairly with the government. There have been times when we might have been more embarrassing but refrained from doing so because we did not wish to do anything that would undermine confidence in Canada's war effort. We expect that in all constituencies there will be a measure of non-partisanship exercised in government expenditures in war time. I want to protest most emphatically against what has been done. I quite agree that this practice has not been followed everywhere; that in many constituencies the sitting Liberal member has tried to carry on this work more or less on a proper basis. But there have been constituencies, and mine is one of them, where the sitting member was never asked for a recommendation. I would not wish to be approached, because I do not believe in any form of political patronage. At the same time, however, I object to having what I may call—and I do not use this term disrespectfully but because I know of no other—local ward politicians making recommendations for remunerative government employment, when a great deal of voluntary service is being rendered by all the people of the constituency, irrespective of their political persuasion.

Mr. GILLIS: I find myself pretty much in agreement with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, particularly with regard to the question of political patronage. As I understand it, one of the fundamental principles of our organization is that political patronage is one of the first things we would eliminate if we were in a position to do so.

I find fault with the Minister of Trade and Commerce specifically with respect to this matter. I view the minister of any department exactly as I view the commander of a battalion or regiment in the army. He should be and is responsible for the discipline and direction of his department, and any violation of orders issued by the department is the direct responsibility of the minister. As the hon. member for Mackenzie pointed out, the minister did issue specific instructions to those selected as census commissioners across Canada, that with respect to appointments the commissioners were to get in touch with the defeated candidates and also the sitting members. I was in my constituency, in the very town where the commissioner for the constituency lives, for some weeks after the appointment was made, but I never saw or heard from this gentleman, whom I know very well. On May 7 I wrote the minister pointing out that I had not been consulted in any way, shape or form by the man to whom had been delegated the authority to appoint enumerators for the constituency. The minister replied on May 8 stating that he was suggesting to his permanent officials that they check up on this particular case, but to date I have heard no more about it.

I have nothing at all against the man who has been appointed in my constituency. He is a local merchant; he is very well off, and I know many men better qualified and more in need of the work than this gentleman. I can say that without reservation. In my constituency it has always been the practice—I hope it still is, although I cannot say—in matters of this kind to make the fullest possible use of the ex-service men's organizations. They have always been given preference. This gentleman of whom I speak is not a returned man, nor do I expect him to become a returned soldier in this war, although I believe he is not too old to make his contribution. What I am finding fault with is this. I do not care whom the Minister of Trade and Commerce appoints; that is his responsibility, but when he sends out specific instructions to small-town politicians throughout the country, I expect him to see that those instructions are obeyed and followed out.

The registration campaign was conducted on a voluntary basis. I travelled throughout my constituency and checked every registration booth. A good job was done there. I am reasonably sure that the people who carried on that work will receive absolutely no consideration in this connection. I am adding my protest to those of other hon. members. When orders are issued by the government to people on the outside, those orders should be carried out.

INCOME AND CORPORATION TAX

CORRESPONDENCE WITH PROVINCES AS TO THEIR WITHDRAWAL FROM THESE FIELDS FOR DURATION OF WAR

The house having reverted to the order for motions:

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): This morning the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) asked me if I would lay on the table of the house the correspondence between this government and the governments of the provinces relating to the offer to the provinces. I told him that I would get the correspondence together and do so. I now beg to lay on the table this correspondence, but I wish to repeat what I said this morning, that some of the negotiations were by word of mouth, by telephone and otherwise. I should like to add also that this correspondence is not complete, there being certain letters which I do not think should be tabled. These relate to matters of detail which I do not think should be made public during the course of the negotiations. They will probably be subject to modification as the negotiations go on, and to make them public during the negotiations might occasion some embarrassment to some of the provinces. For that reason I have used my discretion and have left them out.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

Dominion bureau of statistics—

353. Statistics, $934,520.

354. Census of population, $2,886,350.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, I can agree with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar so far as the present census taking is concerned, but if it were not for the war I would disagree because, in the past, census appointments have always been made by the party in power. Personally I take no exception to that method except in war time when we should all be united in our war effort. During the war I do not think these appointments should be made in a political manner, and to that extent I agree with the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar.

I have no fault to find so far as my own riding is concerned. When the registration was taken last year, the minister of the department sent out regulations that the sitting members should name both the chief registrar and the deputy registrar, and likewise the enumerators. When I received my instructions I at once got in touch with the Liberal candidate who had opposed me at the last election, and I said to him, "You name one-half of the appointments from top to bottom, and I will name one-half from top to bottom." Then I—and when I say "I", I mean my association—named the registrar, and the Liberal association named the deputy registrar. My association named 131 enumerators, and the Liberal association named 131 enumerators. In that way we eliminated politics in Davenport riding; the registration was taken efficiently, and everything was harmonious throughout.

When it came to taking the present census, the instructions sent out by the minister or by the department were quite clear to me, and, I am glad to say, quite clear to the commissioner who had been named by the department for my riding. He was a Liberal. He got in touch with me, and when I was home on Saturday last I got in touch with Mr. T. W. Meriam, the president of my association, and asked him how the census preparations were going in my riding. He said, "Fine. The commissioner has been fair, and I have no cause for complaint. In fact, he was quite willing to give me more than I was entitled to." Therefore, so far as Davenport riding is concerned I have no fault to find, and I am convinced that if fault has been found elsewhere it has probably been on account of partisanship in the appointments. I have seen no evidence of that in Davenport, but here and there one will find a Liberal candidate or a Liberal member, perhaps as a Conservative candidate did in other times—

Mr. HOMUTH: Oh, no.

Mr. MacNICOL: —who has reverted to former times and appointed all Liberals or nearly all Liberals. But there are other ridings like Davenport in which everything has been eminently fair.

I have in my hand an editorial from the Huron Expositor, of Seaforth, of May 16, 1941. That is in the riding represented by the hon. member for Huron-Perth (Mr. Golding), who is not in his seat at the moment. He is the Liberal member for that riding, and this editorial shows that he deserves credit for what he did. I may say that ever since I have known him in this house I have always found him fair, and the way this newspaper represents him to be convinces me that he is fair. The editorial is headed "The Wrong Presumption" and reads:

> Speaking of the forthcoming census, the Globe and Mail said in a recent editorial:
> "On June 2nd seventeen thousand census enumerators, presumably all good Liberals, will sally forth with armfuls of nine different kinds of forms for the decennial stock-taking of the Canadian people."
> As far as this riding is concerned, the Globe and Mail's presumption as to "all good Liberals" is very wide of the truth. In this riding of Huron and Perth, and, we understand, in a good many other ridings, the census enumerator appointments are made on a fifty-fifty basis—half Liberal and half Conservative.

The hon. member for Huron-Perth told me that as soon as he received notice that the census was to be taken, he got in touch with his commissioner and instructed him to split the appointments from top to bottom. There is no trouble in Huron-Perth.

I would close by saying that had all the commissioners interpreted the regulations sent out by the department as they were interpreted in Huron-Perth and in Davenport, there would be little criticism of the department. But, as I said, there is the occasional partisan who cannot get away from partisanship even in war time. They will have to answer for that.

Mr. HLYNKA: Before I say a word on this item, I wish to ask the minister three questions: First, whether or not there are committees set up in each constituency to act in an advisory capacity to the census commissioner, and, if so, by whose authority are such committees appointed?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There are no such committees which have any authorization from the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. HLYNKA: The minister has repeated time and again on the floor of this house that census-taking will be conducted on a strictly non-partisan basis. I would ask the minister if he still considers that that is the attitude which all the census commissioners have taken, and is that the attitude which his department is taking?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I do not remember having stated that the census would be taken on a strictly non-partisan basis, but I do remember distinctly stating that so far as we could make it possible, the census would be taken on a non-partisan basis.

Mr. HLYNKA: The third question is, will the minister give us the assurance that if something goes wrong in any constituency which should not be going on, will he check it immediately?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): It is a little late now to do very much more checking, but the department, the gentleman in charge of this work, and I, as minister of the department, have made a sincere effort to carry this on as reasonably and fairly as we possibly can.

Mr. HLYNKA: So much for questions. I understood from what the minister has told us that the census commissioner in each constituency would get in touch with the sitting member. In my case I have not heard from the commissioner. I wish to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce has been very considerate in all dealings with me, and I wish to make it plain that the reflection is not upon him but upon the political machine which is being set up and which is disrupting the unity of this country. Let me illustrate what I mean. I hold in my hand a letter written to a gentleman in my riding by the commissioner of the federal constituency of Vegreville. It is as follows:

Eighth Census of Canada,
1941
Commissioner's Office
Vegreville, Alberta,
May 17, 1941.

Mr. D. Prokop,
R.R. 1, Andrew,
Alberta.

Dear Sir:

With reference to your recent letter, I regret I was unable to have your appointment made as enumerator, as there was some objection by the committee on the grounds that you were connected with the Social Credit work in the last election. However, if any enumerator fails to take his appointment, I will endeavour to put you in without having to resort to the committee.

Yours truly,
John Decore
per JD

I should like to know what "committee" that was. Was it not a political committee, the Liberal committee in the constituency? Of course it was. Because of incidents of this kind I must lay at the door of this government some responsibility for the result of certain national efforts in which I have been asked to cooperate. I have here a telegram sent to me from my constituency, telling me that the victory loan campaign is going on very slowly in the riding for the simple reason that the people of the district are disgusted with politics. I should like to know why, in time of war, when we are confronted with the gravest responsibilities, we see fit to behave like school children. I should like to know what possesses grown-up men, in times like these, to make appointments upon a political basis. To be a true Canadian and a loyal citizen does not necessarily mean that one has to be a Liberal. I respect men who have Liberal views, but we want the Liberals to respect our views as well. That is why we have a democracy.

Mr. MacINNIS: What about Liberals with conservative views?

Mr. HLYNKA: Well; it is quite a mixture. There is not much difference at times.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is why they are successful.

Mr. HLYNKA: As member for one of the western constituencies, I was asked to assist the government in the matter of national registration. I did my best, and with the cooperation I received from every group and from all parties the thing went over wonderfully. Next we were asked to help in the salvage campaign. I sent out a circular and invited the people in my constituency to help, and everything was done that could be done. Next, we were asked to help in the war savings certificates campaign. We enjoyed very general cooperation in that effort. I received a letter a week or two ago from the Minister of National Defence requesting help in the recruiting campaign. I have tried and am trying to do as much as I can along that line. Then came the victory loan campaign, and, of course, there are the Red Cross and other appeals which require our support. I wish now to make it clear that I am not going to stand for any party politics in connection with our national problems. I will go on the platforms and just tear politics to pieces if anyone tries to introduce partisan politics in my constituency in times like these.

Mr. POTTIER: Including the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation?

Mr. HLYNKA: Anybody at all; I do not care who it is. In one district of my riding named Podola, where the people have not had a good crop for ten years, they contributed to the Red Cross fund $100 last year, $100 this year, and have pledged themselves to contribute $100 every year until the end of the war. In that district the people, who are mostly Social Crediters, are really poor; yet that is what they have done. Now, when it comes to census enumeration, this chap writes and tells Mr. Prokop he cannot accept him because he is a Social Crediter. Is that not a shame? It is enough to break one's heart. I must confess that after coming to this house I soon became disillusioned. I do not wish to reflect unfairly upon any hon. members, some of whom are very good men, but I must admit to having been disappointed at the petty attitude which is so often shown at a time when we should cooperate, when we should try to understand the other fellow's point of view. Instead of doing so, we play party politics; we do petty things which one would not expect of high-school kids. I have already given the committee an example of what I mean.

The people of my riding are of varied racial origins. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that it is quite a job to bring them together, to speak to them in, probably, two or three languages, to organize and to put anything over. Yet I have tried to do it, and I have had wonderful success. Then there comes along the Liberal political machine and spoils the whole effort.

To some this may be a laughing matter, but I say that in time of war we cannot stand this sort of thing. I do not wish to say much more about this, but I insist that the people of Canada are sick and tired of party patronage; they are not in the mood for petty politics. As I have already said, I believe the minister is trying to do his best, and I do not wish to reflect unfairly upon him. But we in Canada must rid ourselves of these political machines which are being built up and which interfere seriously with our war effort.

I happen to be the only member in this House of Commons of Ukrainian extraction. I travel from one end of the country to the other trying to explain to our people the problems that face Canada. It is not an easy matter, and when I get letters and telegrams from my riding indicating that politics are carried on, it breaks my heart. It makes it hard for me to do much in other parts of Canada. I shall leave the matter at that. If there develops in my constituency anything that will interfere with the victory loan campaign—because there have already started some mass meetings which are being held protesting against politics of this sort—and if we are not able to get as good a result as we might otherwise obtain in all these campaigns, do not blame me, place the responsibility on the government.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I have listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Hlynka) on the question of partisanship. I have a very high regard for the hon. member, and I think he is playing an active, interested and earnest role in this house. I have considerable sympathy for him to-night, and I hope, therefore, that he will not resent what I am about to say with reference to his remarks concerning partisanship. About ten days ago the hon. member took the trouble, in a partisan way, to go to the constituency of Edmonton East and endeavour to keep the latest member of this house from taking her seat.

An hon. MEMBER: Why shouldn't he?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am happy to say that his efforts in that partisan way anyhow were not successful.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): With some degree of concern I have listened to the answer of the minister to the hon. member for Vegreville. With a good deal of what he had to say I am in accord, and in speaking for a moment or two I should not like to detract from the sentiment expressed by my colleague the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol), but if I might be permitted to do so, I would amend it somewhat, or perhaps add to it a little, with regard to the idea which he enunciated, that all is well and that there is no partisanship or anything of a political nature occurring in the area whence he comes. I might say that he has not got out of the confines of his own little district, because in the first place the citizens of that community feel that this idea of spending two or three millions on this census is wrong. The citizens of that community feel that they would like to step out and do this work without any cost to Canada, and perhaps help in a small way in the solution of Canada's problems at this time. They would like to be able to feel that in some small measure they are doing something to help in the war effort.

An hon. MEMBER: Did they do it?

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): They did it to perfection in connection with the registration which took place some time ago, and not only did they do it then but they are ready to do it at any time in order to help Canada through this difficult period. Partisanship has been displayed to a degree in my riding, but we can overlook that. There is something more important to-day than the little odd display of partisanship in the taking of the census. Any hon. member who to-day had the privilege of listening to the words that emanated from the United Kingdom would feel disposed, I should think, to sit in silence in his place to-night and allow this work to proceed and the estimates to go through without holding up the session. The Minister of Pensions and National Health says "Hear, hear" in that regard. Let me ask this chamber to absolve me from any attempt to hold up the proceedings of this session at any time. I do not, however, wish the record to go out with the suggestion that there has been a pure, undefiled sheet, so far as the conduct of this particular vote is concerned, in the area from which I come. Quite true, they said, "We will take one or two of your nominations". They have three of mine—three nominations out of some hundred odd; and when more were suggested they said, "Oh, we must take care of those who are assigned to us from the churches, those who are assigned to us from the returned soldiers, those who are recommended to us from the schools, the schoolteachers—yes, provided they have the right kind of stripe—and we must take care of those who belong to what is known in my constituency as the Liberal association of Danforth." All these must be looked after; and when these are all taken care of, the member for Danforth may make one or two nominations—make a dozen and get one or two appointed.

I have no complaint. Go to it; get the census over this year. That is your policy; take the responsibility for spending $3,000,000. I say it is wrong. The excuses which the minister has given for spending the money are not sound. The representations he has made on the floor of the house that, so far as possible, he has tried to be fair and has done it just as it was done ten years previously—

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Very differently.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): —or twenty, or thirty or forty years previously, and all that sort of thing, are not good excuses. Surely we are living in a new decade and a new generation, and the people are quite aware of what is taking place. I do not complain too much, but at the same time I do protest a little, and I say that in time of war this expenditure of $3,000,000 odd, going through the mill of the political machine, does not help Canada at this juncture. I question whether it will have any bearing on the victory loan. Let us subscribe our victory loan to the full, and those who would use this as an excuse for not subscribing to the loan, those who would use it as an excuse for not encouraging recruiting, are not real Canadians. This is a small, piffling political matter, and we cannot do anything about it. The minister is unable to do anything about it. It is part of the system. At the same time, however, let us not forget that this system, which in a time of war is almost iniquitous, is something which the minister, when he has to make decisions with regard to complaints that come from individual constituencies, should disregard, taking, instead, a broad and generous view. He should not base his decisions on any considerations arising out of the system. Let him not think of his place in a political party; instead, let him consider the difficult situation in which we find ourselves to-day and ask himself what would be best in the interests of Canada.

With these few comments, may I add what I have said as an amendment to the remarks of the hon. member for Davenport—not perhaps entirely a negative amendment—to show that it is not all sweet and well in the constituencies of the Toronto area.

Mr. HANSELL: I do not think the minister's remarks concerning the hon. member for Vegreville going into Edmonton East a few weeks ago are well taken. Perhaps I may have some right to say this because I also was one of the Social Credit members who went into Edmonton East then. I might say for the minister's information, if he is not yet aware of it, that the stand of the Social Credit forces in the Camrose provincial by-election was that in time of war the sitting member should have an acclamation. That was our stand in connection with the Edmonton East by-election. There would have been no Social Credit or New Democracy candidate in Edmonton East had not a certain gentleman from Toronto invaded that constituency and forced those people to a vote, which would have forced our own supporters either not to vote at all or to vote Liberal or to vote for that other gentleman. When the present hon. member for Edmonton East took her seat here yesterday, I was one of the first to go over and welcome her. I confessed to her that I did my best to keep her in Edmonton, but since the hon. lady is here and the people in Edmonton East have spoken, this group welcomes her to this house.

Some observations made by other hon. members speaking to this item in the estimates have revealed that appointments of enumerators have indeed been political. The fact that the hon. member for Mackenzie recommended thirty names not one of whom was appointed is evidence of that fact. The fact that a letter was sent out by the chief statistician to all chief enumerators suggesting to them that they communicate and confer with the sitting members; the fact that there are some chief enumerators who never did so —the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar says he was not informed; I was not consulted in a single case; the hon. member for Bow River says he was not, and I suppose other hon. members could say the same thing—and the fact that the hon. member for Vegreville places on the record a letter which declares that one name was not considered for the particular reason that he was an active Social Crediter in the last election, certainly savour of politics. I would suggest that if the gentleman mentioned in that letter had been active in Liberal politics in the last election he would never have received a letter of that kind.

These conditions, together with the fact that we are now asked to vote nearly $3,000,000 in order to take the census in time of war, put the question to us whether or not we are justified in voting this huge expenditure. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bow River:

That vote No. 354 be reduced to one dollar.

Mr. STOKES: In connection with this vote for the census-taking, which I must admit is an unpopular vote in the riding from which I come, I wish to say that, comparing my own position with that of the hon. member for Davenport who referred to the manner in which we made the registration last summer in our various ridings, I think I went him one better; I made a Liberal the registrar and a Conservative the deputy registrar.

An hon. MEMBER: Were they paid?

Mr. STOKES: A great many sub-registrars were not paid, but the full-time registrar was paid. In connection with this vote I should like to repeat a paragraph that was read by the hon. member for Mackenzie a short time ago from a letter of the dominion statistician in sessional paper No. 290:

I am instructed also to direct that you make a fair distribution of the appointments from amongst the political parties represented in your district and to this end that you confer with both the sitting member and the defeated candidates for your constituency.

I would ask the minister what penalty he would impose on a commissioner who did not follow out those instructions.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There is no penalty; the act does not provide for any penalty. Just the ordinary procedure has been followed.

Mr. JACKMAN: Will anyone who received the patronage in connection with these census enumerators and abused his privilege be given any further patronage by the Liberal government as long as the war lasts?

The CHAIRMAN: The question put to the minister was not in relation to the motion. The motion is to the effect that vote No. 354 be reduced to $1.

Mr. MacINNIS: It was not my intention to say anything with regard to this, and I am not going to detain the committee more than a moment. We ought to get on with the estimates because we have a great deal of important work to do.

So far as Vancouver East is concerned, I do not know whether a census is going to be held there or not. I never heard anything about it from anyone except one old gentleman in the constituency who wrote me asking if I would get him a job as enumerator. I took his letter rather as a compliment because he told me he had been a die-hard Liberal for fifty years. Not having anything to offer him, I forwarded the letter to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with my hope that he would do something about it. I think we should get finished with this, because, after all, there is nothing we can do about it.

Motion (Mr. Hansell) negatived on division.

Mr. JACKMAN: I asked the minister a question to which I should like an answer. In my riding there has been a flagrant violation of the instructions issued by the dominion statistician under the authority of the minister; and I asked the minister whether, if this is proved to be the case, further patronage during the period of the war will be given the gentleman who has had the patronage in connection with the census.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I wish to be very careful in my reply, and I do not wish to say anything that might provoke. Quite frankly, however, partisanship did not enter into the minds of those in my department who were in charge of this census, nor did it enter into the mind of the minister. The appointment of the census commissioners was proceeded with by the department in the ordinary way, and I ask hon. members to accept this statement in all sincerity. No request came to me for the nomination of any particular individuals; it was only after the matter had been taken up in this house, with regard to the selection of enumerators by the census commissioners, that I really took an interest in the matter, and that was the only time I thought of any political patronage or partisanship.

Mr. ROWE: I should like the minister to explain what he meant when he said that these appointments were made "in the ordinary way."

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I wish to avoid any argument about this, but this was done in the ordinary way, the way in which the census has been taken every year since 1871.

Mr. JACKMAN: The minister has not yet answered my question.

The CHAIRMAN: I have already pointed out to the committee that in discussion the same question cannot be repeated ad nauseam. The question is put to the minister and he makes his reply. If hon. members are not satisfied with that reply, their remedy is to vote the item down. Tedious repetition of the same question is against the rules of the house.

Items 353 and 354 agreed to.

358. Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions. Atlantic ocean. Canada and South Africa, service between, $100,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is this a subsidy to some steamship service, or what is it? Then may I ask the minister if he has succeeded in obtaining any shipping space for the export of several million bushels of Canadian wheat to south Africa, if that matter comes under this item.

[Mr. Jackman.]

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): This is a subsidy that has been granted for a number of years.

With regard to the shipment of wheat to south Africa, the difficulty in the way of meeting the wishes of south Africa and the desires of Canada is the question of shipping space. Very large shipments of war supplies from Canada to south Africa have made it almost impossible to secure space for the shipment of wheat. In addition, south Africa has been in the habit of buying a certain quantity of our hard wheat to mix with its own wheat. This year, on account of difficulties with regard to foreign exchange as well as lack of shipping space, south Africa is relying on its own wheat and also on the use of rye and soya beans. We are very anxious to sell wheat to south Africa or any other part of the empire, but the main difficulty at the present time is in connection with shipping space.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have in mind a particular case which I mentioned to the minister some three months ago, with regard to an order from south Africa for three million bushels of wheat, as to which I received some information. The difficulty at that time was in connection with shipping space; I spoke to the minister about it, and I have been wondering whether that amount of wheat, which I think was bought through James Richardson and Sons, had been shipped. The minister will perhaps recall the matter now. One of the shipping firms spoke to me about it when I was in Montreal.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I recall the conversation I had with the hon. member. After making inquiries, I have been able to find no trace of any firm order for any such quantity of wheat.

Item agreed to.

359. Mail Subsidies and Steamship Subventions. Pacific ocean.

British Columbia and South Africa, service between, $80,000.

Canada, China and Japan, service between, $595,000.

Prince Rupert, B.C. and Queen Charlotte Islands, service between, $22,000.

Vancouver and Northern ports of British Columbia, service between, $15,000.

Victoria, Vancouver, way ports and Skagway, service between, $10,000.

Victoria and West Coast Vancouver Island, service between, $10,000.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain the situation with regard to the service across the Pacific ocean now that the Canadian boats have been taken over by the Admiralty? As

I understand it, all shipping across the Pacific ocean is now being carried in United States bottoms.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The question of the Vancouver-Far East steamship service has given us a very great deal of concern. One after another the Canadian Pacific steamships on the Pacific have been requisitioned for war-time purposes, and the situation at present is that there is no Canadian or British shipping service between British Columbia ports and the Far East. Any shipping that is available at the present time consists of tramp steamers. If we could get any ships to carry our goods and our mails to the Far East, the subsidy could be paid, but at the present time no subsidy is paid because we have no ships available.

Mr. GREEN: Does that apply to the $595,000 portion of the vote?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes; that is the item.

Mr. GREEN: In ordinary times, how is that divided between the shipping companies?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): This amount was to provide for seventeen trips by the Canadian Pacific ships, at $35,000 a trip.

Mr. GREEN: Those were the regular passenger steamers?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Then, as long as they are out of the service, no subsidy will be paid to any firm at all?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The Canadian Pacific have been trying so far unsuccessfully, to obtain other ships to take the place of those which have been requisitioned.

Mr. GREEN: Is any portion of this subsidy available for tramp ships, or ships of any other line than the Canadian Pacific?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): Any part of this item could be used, but it has not been contemplated to do that.

Mr. MacINNIS: Unless the Canadian Pacific Ocean Services, Limited, are successful in getting other ships to replace those which have been taken, this item will not be used this year?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is correct.

Mr. ROWE: I notice that the second item is for $595,000 for services between Canada, China and Japan.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is the one we have been discussing. Unless the Canadian Pacific can secure ships, it is not likely that any part of this item will be used. But we wanted it in the estimates because we want the services if we can possibly get them.

Mr. ROWE: Surely a subsidy should not be paid for transportation services to Japan, when we are stopping the shipment of other products to that country.

Item agreed to.

361. National research council. Salaries and other expenses of the national research council, $832,635.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is this vote to cover operations, or is it for capital account?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There is an item in the supplementaries, No. 523.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that items 361 and 523 be taken together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

523. New premises for annex laboratories—(revote), $342,754.

Mr. COLDWELL: Apparently item 523 is for new premises?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): That is for capital account.

Mr. COLDWELL: Could the minister tell us briefly what is being done here?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The special committee on aeronautical, electrical and hydraulic research facilities, comprising representatives of the departments of national defence, public works and transport, and of the national research council, under which the project has been developed, held its first meeting April 12, 1939. The design of buildings and equipment is being carried out by the council staff. Contracts are let and construction supervised by the Department of Public Works. Expropriation proceedings were initiated in April, 1939, and active design of buildings and services commenced that month.

The new laboratories are located on a site of some 130 acres, adjacent to the Royal Canadian Air Force, Rockcliffe air station, at the corner of the Montreal and Skead roads, about four miles east of Ottawa. The original project comprised some fourteen separate laboratories and buildings. Subsequently, following the outbreak of war, the construction of four laboratories, not of direct war importance, was postponed. The present project includes ten of the original buildings and an explosives laboratory, a total of eleven structures.

Construction on the first building commenced October 17, 1939. The present position is as follows. Settlement of all expropriation claims has been affected. A water supply and distribution system has been installed; sewers laid, and construction of a system of roads is well advanced. The Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario has constructed a transmission line to the site and a transformer station on the property. The corner-stone of the aerodynamics building was laid on July 23, 1940. Construction of the following buildings is nearing completion and they are now occupied wholly or partly:

Aerodynamics building (wind tunnels and aircraft instrument laboratory).
Central heating plant.
Instrument and model shops.
Storage building.
Aircraft structures laboratory.
Gate house.

The following buildings are in various stages of construction and all should be completed by September 30:

Aircraft engine laboratory.
Model testing basin (floats and hulls).
Gasoline and oil laboratory.
Flammable storage building.

The design of the explosives laboratory is practically finished, and tenders are about to be called.

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the total estimated cost of this project?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The total cost is $1,782,168.

Mr. MacNICOL: Has the national research council been carrying out any investigations in connection with the extraction of magnesium from dolomite?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): As the hon. gentleman knows, that work is secret. I have no information on it, but something has been done.

Mr. MacNICOL: Could any report on what the council has been doing be obtained?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): For reasons that will be readily understood, this report is not for publication. I do not think there would be any objection to giving such information to any hon. member.

Mr. MacNICOL: I do not understand why it is not published.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): I am in the hands of my advisers.

Mr. MacNICOL: During the past few months I have seen this metal being extracted from dolomite most successfully. Perhaps this would come under the Department of Mines and Resources.

Items 361 and 523 agreed to.

Mr. HOMUTH: Before we leave the estimates of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I should like to ask a question with respect to the Hecker H-O company in my riding. I was unavoidably absent this afternoon when the minister's estimates came up. Could the minister make a statement now as to whether there has been any change in the situation with regard to this company getting permits to export to Great Britain?

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Homuth) has spoken to me about this particular company and its shipments to the United Kingdom markets, and since it is a typical case, I think I should make a brief statement respecting the negotiations between this company and my department.

On the outbreak of war in September, 1939, the United Kingdom prohibited importation of many commodities and subjected others to import licence. From time to time new commodities were prohibited or restricted by licence control. Cereal breakfast foods, including "Force" manufactured by the Hecker H-O company, were subjected to import licence as from March 21, 1940.

The Department of Trade and Commerce on March 21, 1940, instructed the Canadian trade commissioner in London to give every assistance possible to the representatives of the Hecker H.-O company in the matter of obtaining import licences for "Force". The trade commissioner replied on April 9 that the representatives of this company had received licence to import 8,700 hundredweights of "Force" during the ensuing three months.

In July, the Hecker H.-O company informed the department of further difficulty in obtaining licences for "Force". The Canadian trade commissioner was again asked to assist. He reported on July 18 that the matter had been discussed with the dominions office of the British government and also that a subcommittee of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, comprising London representatives of different Canadian breakfast cereal companies, had been formed for the purpose of negotiating with the ministry of food over import licences.

Writing further on September 11, the trade commissioner stated that owing to the urgent necessity of concentrating overseas exchange resources and shipping and port facilities upon essential services, the ministry of food had decided that they could not issue licences for importation of breakfast foods. The general and economic situation had become even more critical than earlier in the year. The trade commissioner was of opinion that in view of the attitude of the authorities toward various staple food products, no useful purpose would be served by pressing the matter with the ministry. For example, about this time licence was refused for importation of packaged rolled oats.

A further effort was made to assist the Hecker H-O company by furnishing a statement of their case to the Canadian delegation, headed by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), which went to England in September, 1940. On their return, the delegation reported that discussions with the ministry of food definitely indicated that there was no prospect of any reversal of the position taken by the ministry regarding breakfast foods at this time. The whole matter is one of shipping space.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE

35. Civil service commission—salaries and contingencies of the commission, $406,900.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister explain the attitude of the government with regard to that portion of the annual report of the civil service commission for the year 1940 which is to be found at page 5 and deals with salaries of employees in the lower grades who have been brought into the service since the war started? The passage reads:

> The commission accordingly recommended that the salary of these employees should be increased on satisfactory service to $65 per month after six months' service, $70 after one year's service and $75 after two years' service. This recommendation was not approved by the treasury board, although an increase to $65 after six months' service was allowed, and a new class carrying a salary of $75 per month was set up for duties of a higher nature, to apply to certain employees giving exceptional service and having served for at least two years.

The commission goes on to use these significant words:

> While this step affords some alleviation, the commission is still of the opinion that the form of increase originally proposed by it is best suited to meet the situation, and that it is in the public interest that it should be applied.

Will the minister explain to the committee the attitude of the government with regard to that recommendation?

Hon. P. F. CASGRAIN (Secretary of State): That is a matter to be dealt with especially by the treasury board. At the present time there is before the government a petition from the Civil Service Association with regard to that matter, and that is under consideration as well as other representations received more recently from the Amalgamated Civil Servants. This will be considered, I think, at the same time as the other matter is being adjusted.

Mr. GREEN: What about the next paragraph of the recommendations of the commission found at the top of page 6, which has to do with the present limitation on the number of permanent positions in a department? The report reads as follows:

> Difficulty has also continued during the year with reference to the granting of permanent status to employees who are performing work that is permanent in nature. This does not apply to war employees, but the reestablishment of the quota regulations limiting the number of permanent positions in any department to a definite proportion as set by the treasury board has renewed difficulties which it was hoped had disappeared when the original quota order was rescinded by order in council in 1939. The commission is of the opinion that permanency in tenure should depend not upon an arbitrary figure but upon the permanency of the work involved, and that if the work is permanent, the employee, if giving satisfactory service, should also be permanent.

I think that is the belief of many members of this house as well as being the belief of the civil service commission, and I would ask the minister to explain why the government continues to insist on a certain percentage of employees in any one department not being allowed to become permanent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am given to understand that there is always a certain percentage of permanent employees in a department, 80 per cent, and that the rest are what are called "temporaries" by the nature of their service. It has been thought from time to time that certain temporary employees should be permitted a permanency. For instance, the other day, as the hon. member will recall, certain readjustments were recommended by the civil service commission with respect to the servants of this house, and the commission's report was adopted by the house whereby certain temporary employees on the house staff were made permanent. I have in mind to bring this matter up anew with a view to seeing that action such as my hon. friend has suggested be further considered.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to support what the hon. member for Vancouver South has just said. Until 1936, I think it was, the proportion of temporaries to the permanent staff fluctuated from time to time according to the needs of the departments. There was no arbitrary figure or fixed percentage of temporaries to permanents. The civil service committee which met in 1938 and again, I think, in 1939 reported on that question, and the passage just quoted from the commission's report is, I believe, in accordance with the findings of the civil service committee of those years. That is a matter which should be taken into consideration at once by the minister, because it is not right that persons employed in work which is of a permanent nature should be continued year after year as temporary employees and thus debarred from participating in the advantages which come to the permanent staff.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I might say that this rule which I have mentioned, whereby 80 per cent of the employees are permanent and the remainder are temporary, is a rule of the treasury board. As to many of these cases, the hon. member should bear in mind that although there is a minister in charge of the operation of the civil service commission, all these matters which have to do with increases in salary that are recommened by various committees of the house which have sat from year to year, as well as changes in the personnel, have to be dealt with by the treasury board. They become, therefore, matters for the finance department. For that reason I am not in a position to say that all these recommendations will be carried out, because even though the minister made them, they would have to be scrutinized and passed by the treasury board.

Mr. MacINNIS: If the operation of the civil service commission comes under the Department of Finance, why is this item not in the Department of Finance estimates? How can we discuss estimates of a department unless the minister under whose jurisdiction that department comes is in the house so that he may be in a position to answer questions which are asked?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I wish I were able to give my hon. friend the answer he desires. At the present time the functions are distributed in this manner. The civil service commission is a public body created by parliament, and it so happens that its minister in the house is the Secretary of State. But when there is a question of adjustment of salaries, the civil service commission investigates them. When a body of employees of the civil service makes representations to the civil service commission that certain positions be made permanent, or with regard to other matters such as we have discussed this evening, they are referred to the civil service commission for attention. Then the commission makes its report, which is dealt with by the treasury board, and finally the government assumes the responsibility of either adopting or amending the recommendations.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: On June 10, upon motion of the Prime Minister, a report of the civil service commission classifying certain positions to which employees on the temporary staff of the House of Commons are to be appointed on a permanent basis, laid on the table of the house on March 5, 1941, was approved, whereby it was provided that the six constables transferred to the messengers and cleaning branches in the reorganization of the house services be made permanent by the civil service commission at the same salaries as they are now receiving.

The last clause reads:

> It is recommended that appointments of temporary employees with five years of service be authorized at their present salary rate, or, if there is no rate in the range equal to their present salary then at the next higher rate, but not exceeding, however, the maximum rate of the class.

I should like to inquire of the minister, regarding some of the sessional employees, such as messengers and the like, who have been here for a period of five years or more, not continuously, but just from session to session, whether they would come within the purview of this section which provides that "appointments of temporary employees with five years of service be authorized at their present salary rate." I speak particularly of these men, some of whom have been here for more than five consecutive sessions, some as many as ten, and I put in a plea on their behalf and ask the minister if he is able to bring them within the purview of that section, or, in any event, to enable their appointments to be made permanent.

Mr. CASGRAIN: My hon. friend knows that if the messengers and other employees of whom he has just made mention are among the classes of employees mentioned in the resolution adopted by the house, they would come under the recommendation and would be made permanent. If not, it would be for the internal economy commission of the house to make a recommendation to the civil service commission; the civil service commission would deal with it; another motion would be made such as was made on June 10, and then they would be made permanent. It is a matter for the internal economy commission of the house; it is then referred to the civil service commission for investigation and further report of the commission, and thence to the house.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I wish to find out from the minister whether these men do come within the purview of the section, because there is considerable doubt.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I cannot express an opinion on that. Legally there may be some question about it, but it is my opinion that they would. Personally, I think they should. If a man has been here for over five years and has rendered meritorious service, he should have an opportunity to be appointed permanently.

Mr. GREEN: Is it possible for civil servants who have permanency to get regular increases at the present time?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think they do. I understand that, as the law now is, employees who have been permanent for a certain number of years are entitled to what are called statutory advances in their salaries, which they get. I see here certain items wherein there are increases, in some of my estimates and in those of some other departments, and I am told that they are statutory increases. In some instances the amounts are $60; in others, $100 and more, according to the positions that are occupied.

Mr. GREEN: Has any order in council been passed which prevents them from getting statutory increases?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am not aware of that. The answer is, no.

Mr. MAYBANK: I have before me a copy of an advertisement of a civil service examination. I should like to ask a few questions, not exactly with regard to this particular position, but with regard to positions of a similar nature. This is an advertisement for a caretaker for an armoury in Winnipeg. The rate set is $60 a month, and the question to my mind is, who sets such a salary? While this has reference to a particular appointment, I have no doubt that it is typical of many positions.

The advertisement goes on to state that $15 additional will be allowed in lieu of quarters. It appears that as a rule, in positions of this sort, a man is employed at a certain rate and quarters are provided, but in this particular case quarters are not to be supplied, and that is the situation now in quite a number of such positions. I should like to know how the figure of $15 came to be set, because I should say at once that a salary of $60 for a man who has to be a mature person—in all probability the sort of man who would take this kind of position would be a married man with a family—is an entirely inadequate remuneration. I do not think it is a fair wage to offer any person for this sort of work.

In the second place, I cannot imagine who ever thought any person could rent a house in a city in Canada for $15 a month. I wish to know who is responsible for fixing so small an allowance in lieu of quarters. I suppose that if I were to rent a tent here in Ottawa to camp out on the banks of the river and enjoy the view—and accommodation is so difficult to obtain that it might be necessary to get a tent and live that way—and if I were to put it up myself, it would probably cost me $7.50 a month. One cannot get quarters in any city in this country for $15 a month, and it seems absurd to me for some organization to have fixed such a figure.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The salaries are generally fixed by the treasury board, and the reclassification is recommended by the civil service commission. I will look into the case which the hon. member has mentioned and see what can be done.

Mr. GREEN: In the Department of Pensions there are returned men, married and with families, who although they are permanent are receiving only $60 a month, and yet in some instances they are training temporary men who sometimes receive as much as $125 a month. That situation is absolutely unfair, and there should be a change. I do not see how the government can expect any married man to carry on with a salary of $60 a month. In some instances people in charge of war veterans' allowance investigation receive that small a salary. In one of our largest cities such a man is getting a very small salary, and while I suppose it is not the fault of the Minister of Pensions, who is bound by the salaries that are fixed, it is a disgrace to Canada. Something should be done about it. These men are actually training other men who come in as temporaries and who are getting nearly twice the salary.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I fully appreciate what the hon. member has said, and I may tell him that a few years ago I was prompted to make changes so that some temporary employees would not get as much as old permanent civil servants in similar situations. I do not know the facts of this case, but I will look into the matter myself to see if we cannot remedy it.

Mr. GREEN: It is a question, not of the temporary employee getting too much but of the permanent civil servant getting too little. In the cases I have mentioned I should have said that the salary is $60 plus $5 bonus.

Mr. ESLING: If the treasury board is responsible for such salaries as are paid to non-permanent employees, the government or whatever minister directs non-permanent employees should bring one circumstance to the attention of the board. Here is a young lady, an artist. She is an exceptionally capable artist. She colours photographs for the government, and during the recent visit of their majesties in May, 1939, a large photograph was taken for presentation to the president of the United States. This young lady was sent to the archives to colour that photograph, making as nearly as possible a reproduction of the magnificent gown the queen had worn. That was a sufficient indication of her capabilities. She has been with the Department of Mines and Resources for nearly six years and receives the munificent sum of $60 a month. Surely some steps should be taken to remedy such a discrepancy. When the matter was brought to the attention of the minister the reply was that the treasury board would have to remove a permanent employee, who was a married man earning $60 a month, in order to advance this young artist to a permanent position which would give her a better salary. If the Secretary of State has any interest in that matter he will bring it to the attention of the proper authorities with a view to having the situation remedied.

327. Naturalization branch, $60,470.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Will the minister make a brief statement of policy with regard to naturalization?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I cannot do much more than repeat what I said in March last when a certain question was debated in the house, and supplement the remarks I made on July 15 last, when I first presented my estimates. At the present time the naturalization proceedings follow their usual course as set out in the statute, but when reports of any judge come up, the case is subject to review by the minister. He has discretionary power under section 4 of the act to grant or to refuse a certificate. In practice we have a conference with the officials of the department. We have decided that persons who are of enemy origin or extraction, such as Germans or Italians, shall not be naturalized and we do not naturalize them. We do not issue certificates of naturalization to enemy aliens. As regards all other persons who have made out clear cases, if it is found, after further investigation in the department and by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, that they are not connected with, or come within the orbit of people associated with the enemies of the empire, we look into the merits of each and every case and, if they are of reasonably good character, issue certificates.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Therefore certificates are being issued. How many were issued last year?

Mr. CASGRAIN: In 1940 the following persons were naturalized:

Under section 4	7,111
Under section 4, paragraph (5)	182
Under section 6	50
Under section 7, paragraph (2)	19
Section 8	5,902
Section 13, paragraph (4)	75
Section 13, paragraph (5)	3,886
Section 15, paragraph (2)	1
Total	17,226

Mr. GREEN: How many of those were of German or Italian origin, and how many of Japanese origin?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have not that information here.

Mr. NEILL: Will the minister not say that a great many of those are not new naturalizations? There is a section of the act changing the three-year period to five years?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Yes.

Mr. GREEN: Are the judges hearing naturalization applications still under instructions to hear applicants of enemy origin?

Mr. CASGRAIN: They have the right to hear the cases.

Mr. GREEN: The special committee on the defence of Canada regulations which sat last year recommended to the government that that practice should be stopped, because it meant that aliens of enemy origin were appearing before these judges where the public could see them; the public had the idea that they were being naturalized, and this caused great dissatisfaction. The committee recommended that that practice should stop and that these applications should not be heard. Why has the government not followed the recommendation of its own committee? It was our understanding last year the government would do so.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That declaration I made in the house in July of last year on this very matter practically stopped the applications of such persons from coming to the courts. I have been told that on good authority.

Mr. HLYNKA: Would the minister advise the committee whether persons who owe for relief are refused naturalization on that account? I understand that some judges take that position and refuse to hear the case until the applicant pays back all the money he has drawn for relief. Is there anything in the act that requires these persons to pay back the money they owe for relief, be it provincial or local, before they can be naturalized?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have not heard of such cases, and I am informed that there is nothing to that effect in the act.

Mr. GREEN: Has the practice been established of requiring an applicant for naturalization to produce some proof from his country of origin that they renounce all their claims against him before he can obtain naturalization in Canada?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am afraid I do not understand the question.

Mr. GREEN: In other words, if a Japanese citizen applies for naturalization in Canada, must he produce a renunciation from the Japanese government of all further claims on him before he can obtain Canadian citizenship?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am told that under the order in council passed in 1934 they have to produce a certificate of renunciation of their nationality.

Mr. GREEN: That is, a Japanese applicant would have to produce a certificate of renunciation from the Japanese government?

Mr. CASGRAIN: They have to produce a release from their government, the same as the people from Switzerland.

Mr. NEILL: It is not exactly like that. They have to produce a certificate from the Japanese government that they have done their military service or for some reason are not liable for it. They have to do their national war service before this release will be given. That is absolutely so; I looked it up recently.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I do not know exactly what it is, but they have to produce a certificate of release from their country before they can get a naturalization certificate from this country.

Mr. NEILL: And after all that is done, if they go back to Japan and reside there for three months they can regain their citizenship there.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not our fault.

Mr. GREEN: If that is the law in Canada, why is it that the Japanese government last year was allowed to take a census of the Japanese in Canada?

Mr. CASGRAIN: That would be a question of international law. I should not like to speak on that.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Is it a fact that they did take the census?

Mr. QUELCH: I have found in western Canada that British subjects and Canadians may be called up for military service, while on the other hand foreigners who have resided in this country for a long time are exempt. It is high time we said that when foreigners come to this country and have resided here for five years, if they do not think this country is good enough to become citizens of it they should be deported, unless they can show good reason for not having taken out their papers. I do not wish it to be inferred that I am suggesting that all foreigners who have not taken out papers should be deported, because I know that many apply and are refused.

I have in mind two or three cases with which I am familiar. I sat in at the court hearing when they made application. Apparently at that time it was not considered advisable to grant those men naturalization papers, and therefore they were asked a series of questions that I believe the majority of our Canadians could not answer. For example, they were given a geography test that the majority of Canadians could not answer and were asked many questions of that kind, obviously with the intention of making it impossible for them to obtain papers. Consequently, when I say that all foreigners who have not taken out papers should be deported, I am not referring to those who have tried but who through no fault of their own, have been refused citizenship. It is, however, causing a great deal of resentment at present throughout the country when there are two or three families of British origin and two or three of foreign origin who have not taken out papers, and the sons of the British families are called up for military service, while the sons of the foreign families can jump in and take their jobs. That will not help recruiting. It is time we took a different attitude on this whole question of naturalization.

328. Companies branch, $45,000.

Mr. McNIVEN: Montreal and Toronto vie with each other for the financial leadership of Canada. By reason thereof, a large number of our national corporations have their head offices in those cities, or in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Most, if not all, of these corporations have their shares listed on the stock exchanges in Toronto or Montreal or from time to time offer their securities through brokers to the people of Canada. Response is made to that appeal from people all over Canada, and it is well that it should be so, that investments should be made in our national corporations from all parts of Canada. When this investment is made and something happens the holder of the security and it becomes necessary to probate his estate, whether that estate be in Nova Scotia or British Columbia or on the prairies, it is necessary that letters of probate be taken out in the province in which the head office of that company is situated, and a permit must be obtained from the succession duties branch of that province before the securities can be disposed of. In a great many instances there are only a few shares of stock or a few bonds held. But the executors of the estate must go to the trouble and expense of obtaining letters probate and paying the succession duty, if any; yes, in some instances, double succession duties. The Bank Act makes specific provision for banks maintaining transfer agents in each province, so that if an individual is the holder of stocks or shares in a bank, or of any of its securities, at the time of his death, his executor may present those shares or bonds to the transfer agent of that province for registration, and he does not have to comply with the succession duty laws of the province in which the head office of the bank happens to be located.

My suggestion is that during the recess the minister might give favourable consideration to the introduction of an amendment to the Companies Act, similar in terms to the provision contained in the Bank Act, requiring companies listed on the stock exchanges and particularly those national companies which offer their securities to the people of Canada, to maintain transfer agents in each of the provinces in which their securities are held.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The idea being that it shall be compulsory?

Mr. McNIVEN: Yes, most assuredly.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I think it is open to any company to do that now under the Companies Act; I remember discussing the matter in 1934. The difficulty is that they must comply with the rules of the stock exchange, and I have run into that difficulty on many occasions. I sympathize with the hon. member in his desire, and I am all for it if it can be done.

Mr. McNIVEN: My recollection is that International Nickel, for example, maintains its head office somewhere in Ontario and has transfer offices in Montreal, New York and I think, Halifax. I know of several companies that maintain such transfer offices, and I think it would be a real service to the people of Canada if a simple amendment were introduced requiring those companies whose shares are listed on the stock exchange to maintain transfer offices in all the provinces of the dominion. I think it would help to promote unity in Canada, because many who seek advice as to whether or not they should invest in these national corporations are told what is the situation, and refrain from so doing. People all over Canada should be encouraged to invest in our national corporations, and a step in this direction would do a great deal to promote unity within this country by making these matters as simple as possible.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I thank the hon. member and the leader of the opposition for their remarks. The question which has been raised is one which I can assure the hon. member I shall look into carefully during the recess, in order to see what can be done to remedy the situation.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to add one more illustration to those already mentioned. The bonds of the Canadian National are widely held, and the head office of the company is in Montreal; while dominion government bonds are transferred here in Ottawa. Therefore an estate in Ontario holding these bonds would have to be put through both Ontario and Quebec, and I believe in Quebec the rate is charged not on the two or three hundred dollars worth of bonds that may be held but on the proportion of the whole estate.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Of course that is not the law. The Supreme Court of Canada, in the case of the National Trust Company and the provincial treasurer of Quebec, decided that where the bonds were locally situated in the province where the testator resided, they did not have to pay succession duty in Quebec. But the authorities of the province of Quebec will not obey the judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. NEILL: Quebec will not sign the releases?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That is so.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask if there is any revenue from the administration of this branch and, if so, whether the revenue is greater than the expenditure?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Under section 121 of the Companies Act, the number of returns filed for the fiscal year 1940-41 was 6,544, and the fees amounted to $63,484.70.

Item agreed to.

330. Trade marks division, $25,210.

Mr. MacNICOL: I would ask the same question in connection with this item; is the revenue greater than the expenditure? If the minister has not the information at hand, perhaps he could send it to me.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I have not the information at the moment.

Item agreed to.

331. Canada Temperance Act, $1,500.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Why is this old friend still in the estimates? I thought it was dead and buried long ago.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This is still necessary. Only within the last few weeks I have received applications from different parts of the country to put into operation the law with regard to referendums.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Is this the proper item under which to take up the question of the reduction of the drink bill in Canada as a war-time measure?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am sorry I cannot accommodate my hon. friend, because that does not come within the purview of my department.

Item agreed to.

334. Patent and copyright office. Patent division, $150,800.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask if the revenue obtained by this branch is greater than the expenditure necessary to maintain it?

Mr. CASGRAIN: The fees received last year amounted to $350,606.67, and therefore this branch is more than paying its way.

Item agreed to.

335. Patent and copyright office. Copyright and industrial designs division, $11,105.

Mr. ESLING: Will the minister during the recess consider an amendment to the Copyright Act to provide that societies registering copyrights by assignment must pay the same fee for registration that is charged to individuals. Corporations and concerns, such as the Canadian Performing Right Society, are permitted to register without paying any fee, while an individual must pay a fee of $1. I think if what I suggest were done, it would bring to this dominion, in this time of war, a revenue amounting to nearly a million dollars, and I believe that is an item worth noting.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I thank the hon. member for these remarks. I can assure him that I will look into the matter and if what he has suggested can be done, I shall be glad to adopt his suggestion.

Item agreed to.

336. Patent and copyright office. Patent record, $36,320.

Mr. MacNICOL: Do the revenues received from this publication exceed the cost?

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is not as good a paying proposition as the other, but we do not lose much money on it. This is a valuable service to engineers and others in industry.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

195. Customs and excise divisions. Inspection, investigation and audit services, $1,134,530.

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West): Is there any commission paid to the collectors who take in the extra tax from the automobile companies?

Hon. C. W. G. GIBSON (Minister of National Revenue): No; there is no commission paid to collectors. This is all done by our own men who are on salary.

Item agreed to.

499. Income tax division. General administration, including authority to create positions and make appointments, within the division, notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act and the said positions and staff so appointed are hereby wholly excluded from the operation of the said act—further amount required, $57,710.

Mr. COLDWELL: Just what does this item mean?

Mr. GIBSON: The income tax division does not come under the civil service commission; while the salaries are set by the commission, selections are made by the division.

Mr. COLDWELL: Are they made by competitive examination, on the basis of merit or upon recommendation?

Mr. GIBSON: People apply to the different district offices, and they are examined by the district inspector of income tax. He makes recommendations to the minister for appointments.

Mr. MacINNIS: How do applicants know that there are vacancies? Are the positions advertised, or is news of a vacancy carried by word of mouth, by someone already in the branch telling someone else that there is a vacancy?

Mr. GIBSON: No; it is not altogether that. We generally have a long list of applications on file, and when a vacancy occurs, it is filled from that list.

Mr. MacINNIS: How do names get on the list?

Mr. GIBSON: We generally have a number of applications coming in, and they are kept on file so that they can be used when a vacancy occurs.

Mr. MacNICOL: Why should there be an item in the main estimates for $433,000 and then this one in the supplementaries for $57,000? Why could not both amounts be in the one vote?

Mr. GIBSON: A great many changes have taken place since the time when the main estimates were drawn up. Income taxes may now be paid in monthly instalments, and this has created considerable additional work. The national defence tax has added to the duties of the branch, and now we have the new succession duties coming into force. All these require an increase in staff.

Mr. MacNICOL: Sometimes applicants for positions in the Department of National Revenue are not politically minded, and occasionally they make mistakes. A short time ago a man came to me and told me that he had applied for a position in the national revenue office in the district—I shall not mention the office because I do not want to comment upon any official in the service—and had been told that he should get a letter from the Liberal member. Not being politically minded, apparently he did not know whether I was a Liberal or a Conservative, and he came to me and told me the story. I want the minister to rise in his place and assure this committee that, so far as he is concerned, during war time partisanship will be eliminated entirely in making appointments to his department. This is particularly necessary when the department is not under the civil service commission.

Mr. GIBSON: My assurance is that we endeavour to get the best assistance we can. That is the one deciding factor in making appointments. We are having difficulty in getting people with the necessary qualifications, especially for the income tax division. This is especially true in the case of assessors because business concerns are picking up many of these men. No young man without special qualifications who is eligible for army service is taken on.

Mr. MacNICOL: A man's political persuasion is not referred to when he makes an application?

Mr. GIBSON: Not at all.

Mr. MacNICOL: Then I ask the minister to instruct his officials not to ask applicants to get a letter from the Liberal member of parliament.

Mr. GIBSON: That complaint has been made before, and I have already given those instructions.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

99. Departmental administration, $134,543.
101. Combines Investigation Act, $45,315.

Mr. MacNICOL: Mr. Chairman, since this item relates to combines which are investigated under the Department of Labour, I should like to bring to the minister's attention the experience of a gentleman whom I have known for years, a man of very high character, whose story is this, and I have implicit confidence in his integrity. He told me that he had been an employee of a company manufacturing electrical equipment. Having had a lot of experience in salesmanship myself and having engaged salesmen, in my judgment this gentleman would be one of the best salesmen who could be employed by anybody. He worked for this electrical equipment company and was so accomplished in selling electrical equipment that another company obtained his services, then another, and then a fourth company. That is the way the story is told me. In due course, it is alleged, these various companies got together and decided how this or that contract was to go; that company No. 1 for instance, was to get, say, a contract for "X" specifications, the other companies, it is alleged, laying off going after that particular order. This man, being such an excellent salesman and so capable, apparently was able to get all kinds of orders, and he was given orders that he was not supposed to take, with the result that in the end, it is alleged these companies agreed among themselves not to employ him, and he was laid off and has not been able to obtain a position since that time. In my judgment that is a serious matter. The question I would ask the minister is this: If the gentleman to whom I refer will submit to the department a bona fide statement, supported by evidence, would this be a matter for investigation under the Combines Investigation Act?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I find it a little unusual that a man cannot secure employment because he is too efficient, but the circumstances outlined by the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) are, I think, such as would justify a preliminary investigation under the combines act if the facts as alleged are correct, and appropriate action can be taken.

Mr. BRADETTE: Mr. Chairman, I presume I am in order in making a few observations on a matter which was mentioned in the house last fall by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. Gillis), dealing with gold mining and silicosis in my section of the country. I shall deal with the matter, not in a critical way but rather in a constructive and national way. Since that time I have had the pleasure of meeting the hon. member for Cape Breton South personally, and no one can doubt his sincerity of purpose, also his profound knowledge of the workers' problems and trade union interests throughout Canada.

Last fall he made mention—it was not an accusation—of silicosis in northern Ontario. A few weeks ago he made another trip to the gold mining section of northern Ontario. Only last Monday, the 9th of this month, the hon. member stated, and rightly so, that he knew conditions in the coal mining industry in his own constituency because he represented a coal mining riding. The same remark should apply to myself with reference to gold mining, for I represent a gold mining section, and it is my duty to correct a misapprehension that the hon. member may have left on the minds of the Canadian people by his remarks on silicosis.

I do not think on his last trip the hon. gentleman visited the Porcupine section. He was at Kirkland Lake, and he was quoted by the Northern News of May 27 as having made the statement with reference to the silicosis situation, "You have to stir up trouble to get anything done." Of course the word "trouble" may be interpreted in several ways. I do not want to tell any member of parliament or any labour leader who visits my section of the country or anybody else what their line of behaviour should be, but it would be fine if some of the so-called labour leaders, because some are real and some are not, would see the management of Canada's nationally known mines. They will find them alert and progressive. I have in mind a labour leader whose name is well known in every section of Canada who made it a point to see the management of some of our mines in this country during his last visit, and I believe the interviews and conversations he had were beneficial both to the labour leader and to the mine management.

I am going to read to the committee a letter that was issued by the Ontario Mining Association in February, 1941. If my information is correct, this letter was sent to every member of parliament. It deals with the problem of silicosis, and I believe it is worth while putting this letter on Hansard. I have wanted to speak on this matter before, but I had to wait for the department to get in, and always it seemed I waited a little too long. I repeat, however, I believe it is my duty for the welfare of the workers, for the good of labour unionism and of the gold mining industry itself that I should bring this matter before the committee in an absolutely unbiased way. I impute no motives to anyone, and certainly none to the hon. member for Cape Breton South. The letter dated February 15, 1941, reads:

Dear Sir:

In the House of Commons Debates, as published for November 18, 1940, Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South) is recorded on pages 180 and 181 thereof as having made certain remarks relative to—

Mr. GILLIS: I rise to a point of order. Is it permissible for the hon. member to read into the records of this house a letter with reference to statements made by a member of the house? I observed your ruling last night, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Mackenzie was speaking, and that is why I raise my point of order now.

The CHAIRMAN: It is not in order for an hon. member to read from a letter a criticism of any statement that has been made by a member of the house. A brief reference to such letter may be made, or a member may assume as his own a statement that has been made by others. Paragraph 306 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms states:

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. BRADETTE: I certainly wish to abide by the ruling, but I am astonished to hear it. I have not spoken much during the present session, but I yet have to be accused of reading speeches. I have never done it, over a period of sixteen years. I wish to place on record—

The CHAIRMAN: The point of order was, not that the hon. member was reading his speech, but, if I understood rightly, that he was reading from a private letter, written by somebody outside the house, commenting upon and criticizing a statement made by an hon. member. That is out of order.

Mr. BRADETTE: Then I shall read a brief dealing with the facts as far as silicosis is concerned, and dealing with the gold-mining industry of northern Ontario, without making any comment upon the statement made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I hope that in this I shall be in order.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman will understand that my ruling does not prevent him from commenting, on his own responsibility, upon a statement made by any other hon. member. But it is not permissible to read a comment or a criticism made by somebody outside the house.

Mr. BRADETTE: I am going now to give the facts, answering some of the arguments made by the hon. member last fall. I believe I shall be in order in making these statements on my own responsibility, as a citizen of northern Ontario who has lived in that gold-mining section for the last thirty-four years, I know something about the gold-mining activities dealing with the problem of silicosis.

The Workmen's Compensation Act of Ontario was amended on April 8, 1926, to include silicosis as a compensatable disease.

Since that time, the Ontario mining industry has paid, solely in connection with silicosis, the following amounts to the workmen's compensation board:

(a) Paid for silicosis claims, completed and active	$3,843,198 80
(b) Paid for administrative expenses and for referee board	169,756 91
(c) Paid for X-ray examination of miners	566,388 59
(d) Assessment for silicosis for 1940	534,911 36
Total silicosis costs to Ontario mining industry to end of 1940	$5,114,255 66

To the end of 1939, 462 claims for silicosis were allowed by the workmen's compensation board. The sums paid into the silicosis fund as outlined above indicate the extent to which benefits have been provided for the mine workers and their dependents on account of silicosis.

No industry could face such a staggering burden without making a complete study of the situation with a view to all possible improvements. The Ontario mining industry has taken the following steps:

The Ontario Mining association has a very active silicosis committee which has been constantly studying the problem and which has actively joined in research work conducted under other auspices. This committee employs two engineers who investigate conditions at the mines and who make recommendations to the managers for improvements in mining practice to effect the lowering of silicosis incidence. This has cost the mining industry $58,000.

The McIntyre Porcupine mine, at Porcupine, has been exceedingly active in research work in connection with silicosis. Their investigators, the late J. J. Denny and Doctor W. D. Robson, made important discoveries indicating the preventive effect and possible curative effect, of aluminum dust on silicosis. They have actively carried on this work for many years and for a great part of this time in conjunction with the Banting institute. This company has not published the cost of this work, but it cannot have been less than $70,000.

[The Chairman.]

Three years ago I had the great honour of meeting the late Sir Frederick Banting, who was spending some time in the Porcupine section and also in the Kirkland section in order to study silicosis right on the ground, and make reports. Even at that time the mining industry believed they had found an aluminum dust which would prevent silicosis to a very large extent. I am sorry, however, to have to state that it was not found to be applicable; it was not a remedy for that disease but laboratory work is still going on.

To enable the Banting institute to study general silicosis problems and to cooperate with the McIntyre mine in the study of the effects of aluminum dust on silicosis, the Ontario Mining association has supplied them with funds each year as requested. These investigations were made by members of the staff of the Banting institute, particularly Doctor D. A. Irwin, under the personal direction of Sir Frederick Banting. Contributions to the Banting institute up to date have amounted to $61,000.

In 1939, the mines of Porcupine supplied funds for the setting up of a clinic in Timmins for experimental treatment of men who had contracted silicosis. The matter was handled by the Ontario department of health and the workmen's compensation board. The work is being conducted under the direction of doctors from the Queen Alexandra sanatorium, London, Ontario. While more funds will be supplied as needed, the first cost to the Porcupine mines was $25,000.

In 1940, the silicosis committee suggested a still further investigation of one aspect of the effect of aluminum dust on a non-occupational disease, by the doctors of the Queen Alexandra sanatorium, London, Ontario, and the Ontario Mining association granted for this purpose the sum of $4,000.

It was early recognized that lessening the dust content of mine air would automatically lessen the incidence of silicosis. Studies for the furtherance of this object have been carried on by many mines and by the silicosis committee. The underground practice in ventilation, drilling, blasting, et cetera, has been improved immeasurably since 1926, and constant further improvements are being sought. This has been the major effort of the industry, and while figures cannot be presented for this, we know that these improvements have cost the industry many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

I also know personally, Mr. Chairman, that at the present time the mine managements are trying to diamond-drill every one of their holes, every one of their shafts, hoping that by that means they will do away with the hard-rock dust which is responsible for silicosis.

I have seen some of these experiments, and there are great hopes in all the hard-rock sections of this country that something will come out of these activities in helping the fight against that terrible disease.

The workmen's compensation board of Ontario maintains four X-ray examination stations in the principal mining centres. These are staffed by doctors and mechanicians who have become real experts in this work. Well over 25,000 X-ray examinations are made every year in these stations. All the X-ray films are studied carefully and filed for record, each workman's films being kept in a separate file.

When the films disclose a disabling silicotic condition, the workman in question is advised by the examining doctor to file a claim for compensation. A very large proportion of the claims are made in this way. Shortly after the claim is made, this man appears before a referee board—of three doctors—which gives him a thorough physical examination and examines his X-ray films and the records of same which have been kept for this purpose. The workmen's compensation board either grants or disallows the claim depending upon the finding of this referee board. Should a claim be disallowed, it is subject to review from time to time as the case may warrant.

The referee board is composed of three doctors from the Ontario department of health. The members of this referee board are all specialists on lung diseases. They have been functioning since 1927 and have acquired great skill in interpretation of the X-ray films in correlation to the physical condition of the man himself.

Workmen are examined at the X-ray stations before being permitted to work in dust-hazard occupations. Only men free of lung and chest disorders can get work cards. Thereafter they are examined yearly, and should they begin to show signs of silicosis they are examined every six months, or oftener, as the examining doctor may decide. Each man's accumulated X-ray films and the records of same are available to the referee board when a claim for silicosis compensation is made on his behalf.

Every device known to be useful for the purpose has been employed on this work. The members of the referee board and the examining doctors have maintained constant contact with known authorities on lung diseases. Nowhere on this continent have more complete facilities been set up for this purpose than in Ontario. This is evidenced by the stream of inquiries received from all over the world.

Comparisons on a question of such importance are always odious. However, I listened attentively to the arguments of the hon. member for Cape Breton South wherein he stated, and no doubt sincerely, that Nova Scotia is more advanced in the treatment of silicosis than we are in Ontario. If that is so, it is the duty of the department of health of Ontario and of the mining interests as well to study the problem as it affects Nova Scotia. I would go further. We are coming to the stage where we are going to have more and more hard-rock mining, and I think some credit should be given the hon. member for bringing up the question, because it is undoubtedly becoming increasingly a national problem. There is hard-rock mining in all Canada to-day with the exception of Prince Edward Island—in eight of the provinces—and wherever you have hard-rock mining you are bound to have silicosis which, as hon. members know, is practically incurable.

We have made wonderful strides with tuberculosis in the last twenty-five years, and although we have done something in grappling with silicosis we have been unable to find any permanent cure. The problem is becoming so grave that the time is not far distant when the federal authorities, through the Department of National Health, will have to undertake the study of it as a national matter. They have the necessary machinery in the national research council, and they could cooperate with the different provinces in which miners are occupied in hard-rock mining. I leave that thought with the government, and I urge upon them the importance of trying to find some means of dealing with this question.

The hon. member mentioned an individual case. I know of a few that are very sad indeed. There are times when these men, although they are properly taken care of, although they are given hospitalization by the management and financial help through the compensation board, tend to get impatient. They believe that sufficient progress is not being made in the treatment of their cases. There may have been some acceleration. I do not want the committee to be under the impression that Ontario particularly and the gold-mining industry as well have not been doing their utmost to solve the problem. The solution of the problem would be welcomed by the workers, and also certainly by the mine managements. I make this statement in no spirit of antagonism.

I know it is hardly proper at this late hour to make any long speeches, but I have not inflicted myself upon the house to any extent this session, and I wish to say a few words on the question of labour organization and unionism.

I have always been in favour of the proper organization of labour. I have always advocated the greatest cooperation between capital and labour, and I believe that so far as our section of the country is concerned, there has been cooperation between capital and labour to an admirable extent. But even in our own section of the country—and I say this in all sincerity—men who would like to belong to labour unions are baffled. They do not know where to go. We have some wonderful labour leaders, such as the Moshers, the Drapers, the Charpentiers, the Meikles, and others who have had at heart the welfare of the workers, but in my opinion what labour unionism stands in need of to-day is house-cleaning. In my own section we have the spectacle, in one mine, of three or four different kinds of unions trying to establish leadership, and there is rivalry among them. I want labour to have its full share of the comforts of life; but, I repeat, our workers are baffled. They do not know whether it is for membership fees that they are approached or because one particular section desires to get the upper hand over the rest so as to hold the whip-hand over the other sections. I appeal to all labour leaders in Canada; it is not sufficient to talk of union; you must unite in your own ranks.

Speaking of labour leadership, I have never been in favour of class representation. I represent tens of thousands of gold miners, but I wish to see the problem studied from all its angles—management, administration, labour, farmers, bushmen, professional men, and everything else. The same applies to the sulphite and newsprint industry in my constituency.

As regards most of the miners and workers in northern Ontario, the section of the country I know best, I can say that they are not socialists, and the moment any labour organization or any labour leader tries to tie up the principles of socialism with unionism, there is a profound reaction among the workers. They want to know why an attempt is being made to tie them up with socialism. The labour leaders will experience the same antagonistic reaction if they advocated their belonging to the Liberal party, or the Conservative party, or the Social Credit group, or the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation? Labour unionism has a right to be represented in this house or any legislature in Canada, but I make this statement on behalf of real labour organization, that it should be divorced from any outside "ism". It is heavy enough and important enough to stand by itself. There are terrific conflicts going on at the present time within the labour leadership, and to prove the truth of this statement I should like to quote a few passages from an article that appeared in the Canadian Unionist in February, 1941—and no one can doubt the national spirit of that publication. This is what it says:

> Canadian labour is far from being ready to take advantage of the opportunities which to-morrow is almost certain to bring. It is just as well to face the situation frankly now while there is time to do something about it, for in a year or two we are either going to drift before the historic forces now bearing down upon us or we are going to use those forces to direct society toward a way of life which will be worthy of human beings.
> Labour is taking a leading part in Great Britain in giving direction to this better way of life. In Canada, however, labour is by no means ready for the task which this involves.

This article goes on to say there is no unity within the ranks of labour. But the author of the article, Mr. Lee McIntyre, makes the same mistake as do most of the labour unions, namely, that he relies on socialism as a panacea for all the workers' problems. I have no quarrel with socialism, although personally I feel that it borders on utopianism, or with the representatives of that philosophy in Canada; but I do say emphatically that when it comes to applying that principle to our section of the country, it is absolutely repugnant not only to the mine owners but to the workers themselves, because these workers know that there are different blueprints of socialism, and there is no agreement, and absolute disunity in the manner of its application. Moreover, most of our miners become property owners. They own their own homes in many instances. The housing commission will bear me out in that statement. The business of gold-mining in our country could never have been developed to the stage it has reached to-day had it been carried on under a socialistic system or governmental regimentation.

I believe in governmental regulations, but I suggest that in many cases of strikes the trouble is not so much dissatisfaction with the management of certain industries as dissatisfaction among the workers with leadership which is given by so-called labour leaders. I wish to pay this compliment to many speeches I have heard on labour, that they were constructive, logical and practical; but the same cannot be said of the views of some so-called labour leaders we have in our section of the country. Some are out-and-out communists, who set out to destroy the work of the Moshers, the Drapers and others. They do not want a solution of the problem, and it is up to our national labour leaders to see that Canadian workers are properly led. We have also the sad spectacle of agitators endeavouring to destroy Canadian unionism, and I speak on this question as a working man; for I spent my youth in connection with railway construction, farming and lumbering work. In my day the trouble was not as pronounced as it is at the present time, but I have seen a good deal of it in the Porcupine area and in northern Quebec. I have seen people who have never had at heart the solution of the workers' problems keeping up this sort of agitation. In my opinion, there is need of house-cleaning so far as labour unionism is concerned, and the practical sense of the workers realizes and feels strongly about that situation.

That is all I wish to say at the moment. I could enlarge greatly on that problem. I want to thank the committee for giving me this opportunity of stating to a limited extent the problem we have in our section of the country. I could cite case after case of big mines which have done everything possible for their workers—life insurance, bonuses at Christmas, improvement of working conditions. The situation is not perfect yet, and it is the duty of the workers themselves to do all they can to work with the management for further improvement.

The other day I had the good fortune to visit the Sault Ste. Marie section and was speaking with some labour leaders of the Algoma Steel corporation, and I found there that collective bargaining was working to perfection. I found a union-management cooperation committee and one of the managers told me, "This thing has not only been good for the workers; it has been a wonderful institution for the management"; showing that in that big steel industry proper leadership and organization will do wonders to help labour and industry to work together to their mutual benefit. Labour has passed the diaper stage; it has taken on heavier responsibilities the same as industry has. We have some Bourbons among industrialists, and we certainly have a few of them among labour leaders also. This is not a time to play into the hands of any subversive or mushroom organization, anything that would be a bar to the efforts of our loyal workers in this country, and the closest cooperation possible between capital and labour, and this for the welfare and progress of Canada.

Mr. GILLIS: I am sorry I had to object to the hon. member's reading of that letter. I did so because that letter was circulated by the Ontario Mining association to every hon. member of this house; they were familiar with the statements in that letter, and we on this side of the house are religiously held to that rule. I have no objection to the hon. member making his own argument, but I did not think he could bring in the analysis of the mining association. I did not intend to raise this matter at this time, although I did intend to speak of it on the estimates of the Minister of Pensions and National Health.

I am very much impressed by the fair and reasonable way that the hon. member made his presentation. That leads me to believe he is interested in the question, and the fact that he has raised it here is, I think, a vindication of my statement that if the working people of this country are to obtain redress of their problems, they must of necessity bring them to the notice of those who can deal with them. That is what I meant when I told the workers in northern Ontario that until they became vocal and could bring their needs, desires and aspirations in an intelligent way through an organization to the people in authority, no attention would be paid to those problems.

The only comment I have to make with reference to that letter is this: I accept it from the mining association because it is the kind of letter I would expect them to write. I am not discounting the activities of the government of Ontario with respect to finding a solution for the problem of silicosis. I have a fair conception of the medical difficulties surrounding that question. They are perhaps doing the best they can with the machinery they have. I am not discounting the work done by the Banting institute. But I would say this in reference to the figures presented by the mining association. They say, "We, the Ontario Mining Association, have paid this amount of money." I say that the Ontario Mining Association did not pay any money. The man who goes under the ground and gets the ore that creates the wealth of those who live on that wealth within the structure of that organization that functions above ground paid the bill 100 per cent.

Mr. BRADETTE: That applies to all industry.

Mr. GILLIS: Exactly. The first charge on any industry when you are negotiating a wage agreement is compensation, and the miners of Ontario will find that out when they begin to sign collective agreements with that association, which I am reasonably sure they will be doing in the near future. In the final analysis the men pay the bill, but the mining association takes the credit.

There is one statement they make here which I am not going to say is wrong; for we have no access to the facts and figures, and we must accept the statement they make. They say that in the settlement of silicosis claims they have paid out the sum of $3,843,-198.80, and then in the next paragraph they say:

> To the end of 1939, 462 claims for silicosis were allowed by the workmen's compensation board. The sums paid into the silicosis fund as outlined above indicate the extent to which benefits have been provided for the mine workers and their dependents on account of silicosis.

If 462 claims cost the mining association or the workmen's compensation board $3,843,000, that would work out at about $81,000 a claim, and I cannot see any individual claim settled by the compensation board costing $81,000.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. member could easily get all the statistics he wants from the workmen's compensation board as to the money paid in individual cases. It certainly never meant $80,000 to each individual case.

Mr. GILLIS: Exactly. I say the statement can be questioned on the face of it. That letter in my opinion did not refute anything I said. I brought this matter to the attention of the government for that section of the country on account of the fact that at a convention of unions in Toronto about a year ago I met one of the gold-miners from Kirkland Lake who brought to my attention the fact that I pointed out here. He handed me a copy of the last will and testament of a man employed for a considerable time in the mines of that section who developed silicosis, and had considerable difficulty in the establishment of his claim. They ruled that he did not have silicosis, and in order to protect his family after his death he willed his body to his friend in order that an autopsy might be performed and his family protected in the event of silicosis being diagnosed. I thought that was a peculiar situation. Our situation in Nova Scotia is much better than that because we do not have to pass away to establish our claim. That man has since died; an autopsy was performed some three months ago, but to date there is not any report as to the cause of death. That is the information I got two weeks ago in Kirkland Lake.

I recognize silicosis as a national problem. When I find in the Department of Pensions and National Health an appropriation being made for industrial hygiene I think that includes research work into industrial diseases, and the minister agrees. Therefore I bring the matter up here.

I had the pleasure of an invitation to a miners' union that was in process of formation at that time. They asked me, not as a politician but as a unionist with considerable experience in the legitimate trades union movement, to give them the benefit of my experience in laying out a proper organization, free from the subversive elements described by my hon. friend. I made it clear that I was not there representing any political party. I firmly believe, and instructed them so, that in order to get anywhere politically in the labour movement you must first ground yourself in your economic organization and set up your trade unions. Then they will judge for themselves where they are going politically.

One of the first and fundamental things they have to do is to form a collective bargaining organization. I discussed these matters with the men themselves. They have no organization that is functioning; they have no contract with their employers, no understanding and no recognition; they have not the necessary machinery to deal with compensation boards and provincial governments. They told me their stories individually, and with all due respect to the efforts of the people of Ontario, that story was disturbing. For example, when they are X-rayed and silicosis is diagnosed, even in the incipient stages, they are taken above ground and given work, and then X-rayed every four, five or six months. They may be kept working above ground for a year, two years or five years, but in the latter stages silicosis becomes tuberculosis. If, after five or six years of service, a tubercular condition develops, it is said that they are suffering from tuberculosis, regardless of the fact that it was caused by silicosis, and when they die, their families receive no compensation.

I think my hon. friend will agree that round these mines there are many men who have been brought above ground. They are not paid compensation; they are given work above ground in order that the condition may have a chance to clear up. It is, however, something that does not clear up very easily. When that silicate gets into the lungs it rots them; in the end the diagnosis is tuberculosis, and many cases are ruled out in that way. I also met many men in that section who, after working in the mines for perhaps twenty years and reaching the age of forty, when they began to go down hill, were laid off, not because they were unable to work, but because they had reached the point where they might be more susceptible to this disease. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with that.

Mr. BRADETTE: On the contrary, I know some men over seventy years of age who are still working underground. They certainly were not let out at the age of forty.

Mr. GILLIS: I do not deny that, but I am only dealing with those I met. These men of seventy years of age did not come to see me, and I have no knowledge of them. I did meet many men of forty or forty-two years of age who had no work, who apparently were considered unemployable.

Mr. GRANT: Were they dead?

Mr. GILLIS: No; they were not dead.

Mr. BRADETTE: But they received some compensation.

Mr. GILLIS: No; the hon. gentleman misunderstands what I am saying. For the moment I am referring, not to silicosis but to men who have been laid off because they have reached the age of forty or so. In that section of the country a man cannot get a job if he is forty years of age.

Mr. BRADETTE: Not if he just applies for one; but if he has been working, he is not laid off then.

Mr. GILLIS: After they pass the age of forty, many of them are let out. I met many men in Timmins and Kirkland Lake who told me that story. I think if you check in any of these mining sections you will find perhaps two or three hundred men working in and around these mines who have been diagnosed as suffering from silicosis but who have not reached the point where they have to be laid off. Their fear is that when the silicosis reaches a certain stage and tuberclosis develops, they will not be eligible for compensation. That is the story which was told to me, and that is why I bring it up here. That is why I asked the Minister of Pensions and National Health to use the machinery at his disposal in order to look into this question, to augment the work already being done. If I am wrong in what I say, someone should prove me wrong; if the men in that section are wrong, they should be given that assurance, but if the system at present followed in that section of the country is continued—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Did I not send my hon. friend a thorough report on this whole question last year?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes; I was coming to that. I wish to pay tribute to the Minister of Pensions and National Health, because, after the matter was raised in this house, I received enough information from him to give me a pretty fair education in it.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. gentleman could very easily have obtained that information from me, because in that part of the country we have been living with this problem of silicosis for many years.

The CHAIRMAN: Order, please. I have allowed this discussion to continue because I thought it had to do with industrial disputes, which come under the Department of Labour. I have had serious doubts, however, as to the propriety of this debate under these items. Now that the hon. gentleman has spoken at this length, I would not wish to curtail his remarks unduly, but I do not think I should permit this discussion to continue very much longer.

Mr. GILLIS: I never would have raised the question if I had not been brought into it.

The CHAIRMAN: I appreciate that.

Mr. GILLIS: I have no intention of continuing the discussion. I should, however, like to pay tribute to the Minister of Pensions and National Health, because he did not let the matter drop after it was raised here. He got in touch with many experts in Ontario and sent me copies of all the reports he received from them, and as a result I obtained a fair education with regard to this question. I am now quite satisfied to let the matter rest, because it is receiving some attention, and I believe we shall get somewhere with it. I am glad that the hon. member for Cochrane has become interested in this question, since he lives in that section of the country.

Mr. BRADETTE: The hon. member must realize that I have been interested in it for a long time.

Mr. MacINNIS: But the hon. member never raised it in this house.

Mr. BRADETTE: Perhaps I am just as conversant with this problem as anyone else in this house.

Mr. GILLIS: While I am on my feet, there are one or two matters I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I wish to support what has been said with respect to the question of organization in that section of the country. I know that for a number of years the miners in the gold-mining districts have been endeavouring to build up an organization, and have met with considerable opposition on the part of the operators. That organization made some progress within the last few years, but I believe the wrong elements got into it and did much to discredit it. Last November, however, I had the pleasure of visiting that part of the country; I was there also two weeks ago, and to-day in northern Ontario they have a legitimate organization, sensibly and intelligently led, with ninety-nine per cent of the men heading the organization employed in the gold-mining industry and living in that area. They have made a great deal of progress during the last few months. I believe the minister would be well advised if he got in touch with some of these men who are making an effort to establish legitimate unions there. With respect to strikes, sabotage, and the wrong kind of people leading these unions, just so long as the operators remain unaware of their own interests and those of the country and continue their opposition to signing agreements, establishing satisfactory working conditions and cooperating with committees of their employees, then just so long will the door be left wide open to every subversive element to play upon the fact that in this country we have no industrial democracy; and just so long shall we continue to pave the way for the trouble we are experiencing in many sections of industry to-day.

That is all I have to say on this point. I believe the minister is fully aware of these matters, and I hope that within the near future he will utilize his department in an effort to bring about the results I have suggested.

I should like to bring to his attention a matter that came to me in a brief from Sydney, Nova Scotia; possibly the minister has received a copy of the brief as well. It is from the Sydney organization of carpenters and joiners, and I should like to read one paragraph:

> We have been employed in the construction of huts in this district for the Department of National Defence, to accommodate the troops stationed here, in some instances 50 per cent of those employed were men in uniform, while a large number of local mechanics including carpenters, painters and labourers could not secure employment.

They go on to give more specific information. I wish to know if the labour end of this national defence work, especially with respect to wages, is under the Department of Labour. Apparently this was a unionized project, and these men object to men in uniform receiving $1.30 a day being used on construction work.

The CHAIRMAN: This discussion would properly come under item 102. Shall we take that item with this one?

Mr. McLARTY: We shall probably confuse matters if we take too many items at once. I would sooner clean them up as we go along.

[Mr. Gillis.]

Perhaps the hon. member would be willing to let his remarks stand until we reach that item.

Mr. GILLIS: I am quite satisfied.

Mr. COLDWELL: How many men engaged in the mining industry in Canada were killed, injured or disabled by disease during 1940?

Mr. McLARTY: I am sure we would not have that information in the Department of Labour.

Mr. COLDWELL: Where would it be?

Mr. McLARTY: In the Department of Pensions and National Health. I know that the question of silicosis would be under that department. It is possible that we have those statistics, but I should be surprised.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was reading an article dealing with the diseases which affect miners, and this quoted figures given out by the British ministry of labour. The number of killed, injured or disabled by disease between 1928 and 1937 is given as 1,602,497, and the comment in it is that it is a startling figure. I was wondering whether we had comparable figures so that we might be able to see how we were progressing in meeting the diseases referred to by the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Bradette) and others.

Mr. McLARTY: I imagine that the only way we could obtain those figures would be from the workmen's compensation boards of the various provinces.

Mr. COLDWELL: We shall take it up with the Minister of Pensions and National Health a little later.

Mr. MacINNIS: Perhaps this would be the time to have a statement from the minister on the general labour situation. During the last few days the labour situation has received a great deal of publicity. That eminently respectable and utterly reactionary organization, the Canadian Manufacturers' association, has been holding a convention in the congenial atmosphere of the Seigniory club at Lucerne, Quebec. They appear to be greatly disturbed over the activities of less fortunate people who are not able to hold conventions at the Seigniory club and enjoy its many pleasant and comfortable facilities. The press tells us that their three-day convention was largely taken up with labour questions, not with the ordinary business of the Canadian Manufacturers' association; not in discussing ways and means of improving production and the efficiency of their industries. They ended the convention by sending a long telegram, a most amazing telegram, to the Prime Minister. They asked the government to intern everybody who might interfere with the Canadian Manufacturers' association doing as they jolly well pleased. Those are not the words I should like to use, but parliamentary procedure compels me to use them. There are certain words in this telegram which all trade unionists should enlarge and frame, for they compose the best illustration of unmitigated gall that I have seen in the last twenty-five years.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I understand there is consent that we sit until twelve o'clock, and therefore a formal motion will not be necessary.

Mr. MacINNIS: This telegram is printed in the Ottawa Journal of to-day, and it reads in part:

> Second, that you immediately make these laws effective by the internment, not only of those who are guilty of inciting to illegal strikes and generally doing their utmost to create discontent and unrest, but also the disseminators of subversive propaganda, written or oral, whose object is to obtain control so as to degrade decent unionism, sabotage the efforts of industry and play into the hands of our enemies to the end that our war effort may fail.

I refer particularly to the words "to degrade decent unionism." How long since has the Canadian Manufacturers' association come to the conclusion that there was any such thing as decent unionism? If unionism is decent, why have they opposed unionism of every kind right up to this very minute?

Mr. MacNICOL: Oh, no; do not make it so all-inclusive. I was in business myself.

Mr. MacINNIS: Let us be quite clear on this.

The CHAIRMAN: I fail to see how the opinion of the Canadian Manufacturers' association on unionism would come under this item. The opinions of the Canadian Manufacturers' association certainly would not come within the ambit of the administration of the department, and therefore I cannot see that this debate is in order.

Mr. MacINNIS: The opinion of the Canadian Manufacturers' association is of the utmost importance in dealing with the labour question because, when the opinions of that organization clash with the opinions of the workers who are attempting to organize or who are organized, trouble is created, and the Department of Labour is called in to solve the difficulty in one way or another. Consequently the opinion of such a body as the Canadian Manufacturers' association or any labour organization, is of importance in a discussion of this item, the administration of the Department of Labour.

The CHAIRMAN: Except that this is not a public forum in the meaning generally given to that phrase. This discussion might be in order when the house was discussing labour legislation, when it was discussing underlying principles which should be laid down. But when we are confronted with estimates or the administration of the Department of Labour, I would say that it is not in order to discuss all kinds of labour questions and opinions.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, you are trying to inject something entirely new into the discussions in this house. If this house is not a forum for the discussion and airing of those problems which confront us from day to day, we ought to close the house and go home, for there is nothing here for us to do.

The CHAIRMAN: I am relying on standing order 58, subsection 2, which I have quoted time and again and which says that in committee the discussion must be strictly relevant to the item under consideration. The hon. gentleman is discussing general labour policies. General labour policies may be in order when discussing legislation but are not in order on a specific item of administration expenditures in committee of supply.

Mr. MacINNIS: But, Mr. Chairman, this is not a specific item; it is a general item of departmental administration expenditures, and if we cannot discuss on this general item the whole work of the department which it covers, where in the world and on what item can we discuss it?

The CHAIRMAN: I have mentioned twice that general labour conditions and general labour problems or policies may be discussed when legislation is before the house, and otherwise perhaps, but certainly not on a specific item of the estimates. The discussion on a specific item of the estimates must be relevant to that particular item, and I must rule that the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): With the utmost respect for the Chair I would submit that on an item for departmental administration in any department it is absolutely in order to discuss questions of general policy affecting that department. I think it has always been the practice on items of general administration, whether concerning the labour department or the health department or any other department, to have a general discussion on questions of policy respecting the department under review, and I think for the sake of progress in getting along with the business of the house it would be far better to allow hon. members to have a full and free discussion on this particular item.

The CHAIRMAN: I have always seen a general discussion on an administrative item of a department take place by unanimous consent. I must say with all due respect for the minister's opinion that it is not done without unanimous consent, and by standing order 58 it would be out of order to discuss general policies on the item that is before the committee, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. BLACKMORE: With all deference to yourself, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis) is quite in order, and I submit that it is also in the interests of progress that he should be allowed to continue his discussion.

Mr. McLARTY: I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that there would be the slightest difficulty in obtaining the unanimous consent of this committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of this committee that the hon. member shall have unanimous consent to proceed with his remarks?

Mr. COLDWELL: I was going to suggest respectfully to you, sir, that we do not require unanimous consent. As the Minister of Pensions has just stated, under the general administration item all matters concerning the department which come under the supervision of the minister should be open for discussion, and we should not create any precedent here and now by giving unanimous consent, because we do not require it. There is one place and one place only in this parliament where private members are supreme, namely, in supply when discussing the estimates. This is his majesty's purse, and the age-old right of members of parliament is to decide to what extent his majesty's purse shall be filled. That is what we are doing now, and I certainly wish to protest against any precedent being established that would curtail the right of this parliament to discuss any matters in connection with the administration of the minister's department, the minister's salary, or any question of general policy.

The CHAIRMAN: The house itself has established rules of procedure, and standing order 58, subsection 2, says that discussion in committee must be strictly relevant to the item under discussion, and the word "strictly" is there in all its letters. The item of administration for any department is not capable of covering any kind of discussion of any opinion such as the one to which the hon. member referred of the Canadian Manufacturers' association. It has been my experience that when a minister in charge of the estimates of a department has desired to open discussion freely, it has always been done, in order to sustain standing order 58, with the unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. HOMUTH: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think hon. members will recall that throughout the whole of the session when discussion has arisen on certain bills, members of the house have been told that when the estimates come up they will have the privilege of discussing all these matters. On two or three occasions I recall that the leader of the opposition raised that point, and if that be so, surely the Chairman ought to see that that leeway is given to all members.

The CHAIRMAN: If there is the unanimous consent of the committee, to sustain the rule.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am objecting, Mr. Chairman, to that limitation of our privileges as members of the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Let us agree to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN: I take it that the hon. gentleman has the unanimous consent of the committee to proceed?

Mr. COLDWELL: I protest against you putting it that way, Mr. Chairman. I maintain that we do not need unanimous consent to discuss general matters on an item involving the expenditure of money for general administration and supervision.

The CHAIRMAN: Let us proceed. Everybody is unanimous.

Mr. MacINNIS: I have been in the house, Mr. Chairman, for the past ten or eleven years, and this is the first time I have found even an attempt being made to limit general discussion on the item in a department's estimates for departmental administration. Certainly these questions I have been discussing come under the Department of Labour, and certainly the Minister of Labour and his department have to deal with them because they affect people outside this house. Otherwise we should have no opportunity to speak on their behalf. The Chairman may not like my opinions, but that is no reason why I should not state them to this committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The ruling of the chair is not debatable. The hon. gentleman will proceed with his argument.

Mr. MacINNIS: The reason why I raise this matter at this time is that within a day or so we hope we shall have finished our business here for the present, parliament will adjourn and the members will leave for their homes. What I am fearful about is that pressure such as was indicated by the telegram to which I referred and part of which I read may be brought to bear upon the government and action be taken which will not make for industrial peace in this country. If industrial unrest has come to the stage that the Canadian Manufacturers' association maintain it has, then, as was told them at one of their convention meetings by Mr. Ralph Bell, director of aircraft production, the fault is largely their own. If we are going to have orderly and harmonious labour relations in this country, we can have them only by encouragement and recognition of labour organization.

We can leave it to the workers themselves, when they have established decent working conditions and decent wages, to take care of subversive activities within the organization. But when we resist, as employers in this country have resisted, trade union organization, there comes a stage when only desperate men will be heard, and the ordinary, orderly trade union official has no chance at all. Any hon. member who has had experience in the trade union movement knows that is correct. I could give any number of authorities to prove the point. The late Hon. Norman Rogers, in addressing labour on New Year's eve, 1938, stated that most of the labour disputes during the previous year had been caused by the refusal of employers to recognize the trade union organizations of their employees.

Therefore I earnestly plead with the Minister of Labour, who, I know, is just as anxious in this matter as I am, not to let himself be stampeded by pressure of a kind which I know is even now being used, to take action which would not only be harmful to our war effort, but would embitter labour for many years to come.

I am not going further into this question at the moment, but as we get into other items there are other specific points I wish to raise. I wish, however, to refer to one statement made by the hon. member for Cochrane. He referred to the necessity of keeping politics out of trades union movements.

Mr. BRADETTE: Isms.

Mr. MacINNIS: You will have the isms anyway.

We look to-day with high regard and with hope to the labour movement in Great Britain. Possibly nothing which has happened in the last year gave us more hope than the entrance of labour's representatives into the Churchill cabinet last May. I met Sir Walter Citrine when he was in Canada last winter. Walter Citrine had no apologies to make for labour being in politics. As a matter of fact, he said, they found it necessary to create their own political party. When he spoke in Vancouver as a guest of the trades and labour council I had the honour of a seat on the platform with him. Sir Walter Citrine was not a bit ashamed of saying that he was a socialist—

Mr. BRADETTE: Certainly a mild socialist.

Mr. MacINNIS: —and said that there would have to be a great many changes such as he and the labour movement in the old country were demanding, before there would be any hope of a better world organization. I am not, however, going into that; the Chairman could very well have brought me to order for referring to it.

Mr. McLARTY: I understand that these estimates are to be discontinued at half-past eleven, and I should like to make a more lengthy reply to the hon. member for Vancouver East. I will say at this time, however, that in the matter of collective bargaining this government has gone about as far as any government can go. We passed section 502A of the criminal code, making it an offence to discharge a man for the sole reason that he is a member of a trade union. In our order in council No. 2685 we recommend, as one of the principles on which better labour relations can be established, the freedom of any man or group of men to engage in collective bargaining.

Mr. MacINNIS: Will you take into consideration interning employers who won't carry it out?

Mr. McLARTY: I have nothing to do with internment, nor am I a great advocate of internment unless necessary evidence is there on either side. But I consider it would be undesirable to make compulsory that provision in order in council 2685. When you enter the field of compulsion, the principle works both ways and, I believe, inevitably gets you into trouble.

Mr. HOMUTH: That is what we are fighting in Europe.

Mr. McLARTY: Exactly. If you compel one side you have to compel the other, and eventually it leads to a form of government such as we are fighting in Europe.

Mr. MacNICOL: Conciliation is much better.

Mr. McLARTY: Much better. The hon. member referred to Sir Walter Citrine's visit. I wish we had in this country the happy situation they have over there, in that they have one large trade union congress, the only one body with which it is necessary to deal. In this country we have a number of bodies, and it increases the difficulty where a unanimous opinion cannot be obtained on a number of questions.

In addition to this, the hon. member referred to the conference of employers held at Lucerne. I must say that I received the telegram only yesterday afternoon. The same telegram was received by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice, and so far I have not replied. But I would point this out, that the telegram is largely directed toward subversive activities. The Department of Labour cannot deal with subversive activities. I have prepared a short statement which I wish to make in this connection.

In another place it was suggested that when difficulties arise, the Department of Labour washes its hands of the problem and turns it over to the Department of Justice.

It has also been suggested that the Department of Labour should not tolerate any subversive action.

Might I make this perfectly clear, that the Department of Labour has never been and cannot be the appropriate department to deal with breaches of the law, or any subversive activities. It has no police force, nor has it any machinery to conduct prosecutions.

It is quite true that subversive activities may make the work of conciliation much more difficult, but it was never intended that the Department of Labour should become a department for carrying out any provisions for the enforcement of law and order, or for the punishment of subversive activities.

In fact, so far as the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act is concerned, the department is definitely precluded from doing so.

The only possible course of action which the Department of Labour can take in the event of an illegal strike is to report the matter to the law officers of the crown, and they take such action as may be necessary to enforce the penalty provisions of the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act.

The Department of Labour is not the department to enforce the law, whether the subversive activities refer to a labour dispute or to any other acts of a subversive nature.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, the impression seems to be abroad that the Department of Labour should clamp down on labour; that it should apply the law in a rigorous way to the activities of labour. That is not my conception of the duties of this department. We are there to provide for fair wages, to provide conciliation, to furnish facilities for settling a dispute once it arises. But it is not and cannot ever be the function of this department to act as a police force.

I do not know that there is anything more I would care to say to-night on that particular point. I thank the hon. member for Vancouver East for according me an opportunity of making that statement.

Items 99 and 101 agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

182. Normal services. Cadet services, $171,500.

Mr. COCKERAM: I wish to make a statement on the militia department set-up and on training in this country. About a year ago the department was completely reorganized. A new minister was appointed, a new chief of general staff, a new adjutant general, a new quarter-master general, a new master-general of ordnance. Those of us who have been serving in the forces had great hopes that there would be a decided improvement in the efficiency with which the department was run.

The third and fourth Canadian divisions have been mobilized now for over a year. During that year the basis on which we have been trained does not in my opinion compare with the intensive training which the men received in 1914 and 1915, when I was a private in the 21st battalion, whereas in my opinion the training should be based on the type of war to be met in 1945 and 1950, because, certainly we should have on the general staff men who can think of the possibilities of the future and the type of fighting we may have to come up against. During the year in which those divisions have been mobilized we have had, so far as the fourth Canadian division is concerned—

The CHAIRMAN: We are on item 182, cadet services.

Mr. COCKERAM: If I understood the minister correctly, he said that we might discuss any subject.

The CHAIRMAN: Not on cadet services.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): I did not notice the number of the item called. I suggested that anything could be discussed on the salary item, but I am quite satisfied for the hon. member to proceed on the item of cadet services. I said that there would be an opportunity to discuss general subjects and I suggested the item of minister's salary, which is statutory. If, however, my hon. friend desires to discuss the subject now, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN: The minister moves that the discussion be general on item 182.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not move it. I intimate that I am satisfied if the committee is agreeable that that be done.

Mr. COCKERAM: So far as the fourth division is concerned, we were organized as from June 8, 1940. We had our artillery organized, and the other technical units. Early this year, after the announcement that the fourth armoured division was to be formed, these troops were transferred over to that division and as a result we of the fourth Canadian division—and I think I can speak for the third too—have had no training in cooperation with other arms of the service.

After thirteen months of active service, surely the department should be in a position to bring about the combined training of all arms of the service. After all, if we go on active service we must have that training before we can possibly be fit to go into action. We have had no brigade or divisional training, and nothing that would fit us for active service if we had to meet that situation to-morrow.

Again, the fourth division has been organized for a year but we are still without a divisional commander, and without a divisional staff. I cannot see any business man taking on his workmen first without having a management to carry on the business. I suppose the government have not yet decided to whom they wish to give that political plum; but there is no question about it that, as a division, we are entitled to know who is to command us if we go on active service.

Reverting to the fourth division we were regarded as an overseas division. The men of that division gave up their civilian employment on the word of the minister that we were an active service unit. In all the speeches made by the minister during the last few months no suggestion has ever been made that the fourth division will go overseas as a division, and the minister owes it to those men who took his word they were enlisting for active service, to make a statement to them and so hold out some hope that the division will go overseas as a unit and not be broken up like the fifth division in the last war.

The minister knows as well as I do that the third and fourth divisions are still under strength, the fourth division especially so, on account of the transfer of certain services to the armoured division. In forming the armoured division, the militia department did not take the units which had completed their basic training. They mobilized completely new units, and as yet they are not up to strength. Had we had an efficient militia department, they would have taken complete units out of the fourth division or some of the unbrigaded units and transferred those units to the armoured division, so that the armoured division would have the benefit of completely trained units. What will happen is that the manner in which new units have been taken on will retard the progress of that armoured division.

Speaking of the armoured division, the Minister of Munitions and Supply said the other day that after a short period tanks would be produced at the rate of three a day. If I know my figures correctly, it will take at least six months to supply the tanks necessary for that division. Then again, let us take the equipment for artillery units. There is no up-to-date artillery in this country, and I am surprised that the department has not improvised such equipment. I understand that on the coast they are still using 18-pounders from the last war and 75-pounders they got from the French, whereas the arm of the artillery is the 25-pound field howitzer.

We come now to the question of vocational training. Last December it was decided by the Minister of Labour, together with the Minister of National Defence, that tradesmen in the various units would be sent to school. The unit with which I am connected sent something like forty-eight men to trade schools in Hamilton and Brantford. After three months, those men came back to us, and we did not know what to do with them. They stayed with us for about a week, and they were sent away on another course. The consequence is that the men do not know what is going to happen to them. Within the last few days, before the unit moved from Toronto, they were struck off the strength, and they do not know what fate is going to overtake them.

Regarding the medical boards, I think the minister will agree with me, that when he served during the last war, once a man was in the army he was in the army and he did not get out. But it seems that we in Canada have demobilized well over a division of men. In other words, half of the 32,000 recruits which the department is looking for to-day have been demobilized on account of the medical boards. There is something wrong there. Surely when a man gets in the army, although his category may be changed, there is something he can be given to do to keep him busy.

Then we come to the question of national defence headquarters, district headquarters, and various headquarters of the army service corps, ordnance corps and other branches of the service. It seems to me that with the minister conducting a great recruiting campaign at this time, he should comb out those departments, and men who are A-1 should wear their uniform in the front line or the field of action, not in the headquarters in Ottawa and other places. I do not think there is any job in national defence headquarters, and district headquarters that cannot be filled by a man who saw service during the last war, who has the capability to do it and who would not be willing to fill the job. The minister should make a clean-up of that situation. I could give him names of officers who served in the militia in peace time, who are here doing senior staff jobs and who never saw active service. That condition is definitely wrong. I think everyone will agree that those of us who wore the uniform in peace time should fight in the front line.

Then we come to the recruiting. If the Minister of National Defence had organized his recruiting campaign as the victory loan campaign has been organized, he might not have been faced with the difficulty he appears to be facing with regard to recruiting to-day. I was very much surprised to hear that certain suggestions or guidance to speakers had been sent out. In this there is one paragraph to which I take great exception. This paragraph states:

> While the empire theme has naturally many attractions for the public speaker it should not be stressed too frequently. Rather for recruiting purposes Canadians should be taught to think of this war in terms of the battle of Canada.

That does not seem to me the right way to get recruits, at any rate not in the province from which I come. We believe that we are fighting for Canada and fighting for the British empire. Whoever was responsible for sending that out should be disciplined.

Last July the Department of National Defence organized what they call to-day the reserve army. There have been so many changes in the designation of the active force and the reserve army in the last six months that I doubt whether anyone in the reserve army or in the active army knows definitely what initials are supposed to come after the name of a regiment, whether it is Canadian Army active, or what have you. It seems to me they must have someone in the Department of National Defence who must be playing alphabet instead of doing a job with maximum efficiency. I am positive that the men who are serving in the army to-day have not the confidence in the Department of National Defence that they had six months ago. Orders are made, and no sooner do you get them than they are changed. It is like the old habit, when men were marching, they would yell, "Lost again." I think there are many officers in the Department of National Defence who are lost again. As one who served in the last war and in the militia for a period of years, and one who is serving to-day, I am not satisfied with the direction of the militia. If we have to defend this country, we must have faith in those who are going to be in charge of the defence of the country. This country does not lend itself very well to defence; we have too many roads; supposing the Bismarck had been able to land her extra thousand men somewhere along our coastline with the necessary equipment, and the Prinz Eugen had a similar number of men, I am sure that with the equipment our men have for the coastal defence we would be licked; they could do anything with us.

Let me give an illustration of what I mean as to lack of equipment. I believe the minister stated in this house on March 31 that equipment would be coming along; I think the third division was to be completely equipped at this time and those of us of the fourth division would be getting equipped. Since that date the regiment to which I belong has not received one additional piece of what we call technical equipment. We are on our way to the east coast, presumably to defend this country. Our establishment of Bren guns for instance is fifty; we have twelve. We have some obsolete Lewis guns, I think twelve of them. We are supposed to have ten carriers; we have none. We are supposed to have two 3-inch trench mortars; we have one. In that connection the department waits until we get trench mortars before teaching the men how to operate them, instead of giving them a prior course so that when we receive the equipment they would know how to operate them. We are supposed to have twelve 2-inch mortars; we have none. We are supposed to have six anti-tank rifles; we have one. That is the condition in which the regiment to which I belong is going to defend the east coast of this country. What would happen if we were attacked? Surely it is time that the Department of National Defence came to life and that some system of training should be conceived and that bottle-neck removed. I ask the minister to see if he cannot have a clean-up in that department. Let those of us who are serving in the army know that we have guidance that we can trust, because we do not have it now. We have no faith in the officers directing the destiny of this country.

Possibly every member of this house and the people of Canada are responsible for that, because over the period of years we have had a militia, a great deal of it carried on by voluntary effort, with the result that those members of the service who were permanent became nothing but senior civil servants. They had nothing to work with, and any imagination that they may have had and anything they may have learned during the last war have definitely disappeared. I am of opinion that there should be drastic changes. When General Crerar was appointed chief of the general staff, although I had been in the militia for many years I had never heard his name until he was appointed commandant of the Royal Military College. He was sent over to England with General McNaughton, and I had high hopes that when he came back he would be able to put into that department the pep that is necessary if we are to have a well trained army. I would hate to think of the third division leaving here and being sent to the island of Crete, for example, with the amount of training it has had to date. I appeal to the minister to do something, to give us some dynamic system of training that will put renewed vigour into our men, because he must know that with the system of training which prevails to-day, the morale of our men is going down. I think the minister has the ability to do this; he has been a soldier for some years, but for some reason or another we are getting nowhere. With these remarks I shall resume my seat.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I think my hon. friend forgets just what the situation is and has been in Canada with regard to the training of large formations. What my hon. friend is suggesting is, I think, that there should be training of divisional formations, or training of brigades. My hon. friend knows, or should remember, that in the last war we never had a division formed in Canada. In the last war the first 33,000 men went overseas and the division was formed. After that, all the divisions were formed in England, and were trained there. Here we are endeavouring to form the divisions in Canada and to complete, so far as we can, the individual, platoon, company and battalion training here. So far the units which have gone overseas have not had sufficient time to do formation training; and if my hon. friend will remember, there is at present in Canada only one formation which is concentrated. That is the armoured division, which is concentrated at Borden; but even that division is not completely concentrated there, because both the artillery and engineers are at Petawawa, where the facilities exist for their training.

My hon. friend should realize that we must walk before we can run in connection with training, and I wish to say to him that the training which is being done here is basic training, and that is required before the higher formation training can be attempted. Let me read to him what the chief of the general staff of the United States, General Marshall, said only a short time ago:

> Our training programme is building a seasonal body of men who have the basic knowledge and skill to handle any job we may give them. We are making soldiers and leaders. . . . The fact is that each individual soldier must receive the basic training of an infantryman no matter in what branch he will ultimately serve.

Later, speaking of the soldier, he says:

> He has spent his time learning the things that make a man efficient in combat, that make him act intelligently in an emergency and that toughen him physically to withstand the rigours of modern warfare.

Let me say to my hon. friend that contrary to the idea he seems to have, I have received—and I am not complacent or contented about it—not from Canadian officers but from British officers who are at present at Borden, the highest testimony with regard to the quality of the men we have at Borden at the present time, and the training that is being given them.

With regard to the third division, the hon. gentleman will remember that this division was organized, that is to say mobilization was ordered, in July; but as a soldier my hon. friend knows that mobilization is only the first step—that you cannot have effective mobilization, and training cannot begin, until the officers themselves have received training, and until there is a trained cadre formed. In the old days we would mobilize a battalion of officers and men, who would go into camp together. The officers would have had no special training, with the result that we never had the concentrated and intensive training which is being given to-day. At the present time the method of mobilization is to warn the units so that they may have their men enlist; but in the meantime, before you actually call them up and before unit training commences, the senior and junior officers train so that they may be able to take care of the men when they actually come into the unit. That takes time; and let me tell my hon. friend that although the third division was actually ordered up for mobilization, I think in June or July, two brigades of that division were concentrated at Debert, I believe as late as November, if I am not mistaken. Even at that, I believe one brigade was two battalions short, and those two battalions did not arrive until some time later. As a matter of fact one battalion did not go into camp until early this spring.

There has been no opportunity, as yet, for brigade training. There has been less opportunity, of course, for divisional training, because even when the two brigades were there at Debert there was still a brigade over at Sussex. We did not plan to accommodate them down there. These men were placed as a mobile force, and at the same time to do all the training possible. The general officer commanding the third division was appointed; he came over here, and he has been conducting an intensive system of training during every waking hour. He is not a man who was given some political plum, to use the words of my hon. friend. He is a seasoned soldier, a man who gave fine service in the last war, a man who has devoted his life to soldiering and who was recommended in the highest terms by General McNaughton himself.

Mr. COCKERAM: To whom is the minister referring?

Mr. RALSTON: Major-General Sansom.

Mr. COCKERAM: I agree with the minister there, but it was another gentleman to whom I was referring.

Mr. RALSTON: There was no political plum in what my hon. friend was talking about. Those are the facts with regard to the third division, which is carrying on its unit, platoon and company training every day. I believe, when that division leaves Canada, it will go in as high a state of efficiency as any formation that has ever left this country, and I think that is saying something.

Let me now say a word with regard to the fourth division. As my hon. friend knows, the fourth division was mobilized later and was not concentrated. The fourth division was in different camps throughout the country during the winter. Training is difficult in winter; nevertheless training was carried on intensively. Then, when we came back from England, and the decision was made to send over an armoured division, my hon. friend is quite right when he says that we did take the artillery and the technical units from the fourth division and put them into the armoured division, and probably they were very glad to get into that formation. What we are doing now, as I have said—I have made no secret of it whatever—is recruiting men to fill up the technical units of the fourth division. I say to my hon. friend that I feel he is a little impatient about this. I do not pretend to be an expert in training, but I believe that in the chief of the general staff, General Crerar, we have a man who does understand training and who has put into effect a system of training which, I believe, will show excellent results.

My hon. friend has said that he never heard of General Crerar before. That is unfortunate, but at the same time I do not think it is anything against General Crerar. Let me say to the hon. gentleman that when I wanted a chief of the general staff I did not appoint him myself; I did not ask my colleagues with regard to the matter; I did not select someone to be given a political plum. I asked General McNaughton to recommend to me the best man he had over there, the man he would recommend as chief of the general staff. General McNaughton himself had been vice-chief and chief of the general staff and knew what was required. He had served under General MacBrien, and had acted as chief of the general staff himself. He recommended General Crerar to me in no uncertain terms, the gentleman to whom my hon. friend has referred. General Crerar has been on the job constantly ever since. The changes which have been made from time to time—I admit they are many, and I make no apology whatever for them—have been due to no small extent to the recommendations which General Crerar has made.

Let me to say to my hon. friend that if I could take up the time of the committee I could go over the training syllabus, go over the schools which have been established in order to train men in every branch and every arm of the service. There is the question of training men in their units with their officers or training them in training centres. I had a recommendation the other night from an officer commanding an active unit. The question was whether or not a second battalion would be formed in order to reinforce that unit. This officer, like my hon. friend, had been an officer in the last war. He had spent three or four months at a training centre, and he said that he would prefer to have reinforcements from a training centre than reinforcements from the second battalion, mobilized in the ordinary way. The testimony from United States officers who have been in England, and the testimony from British officers, is unanimous that the training centre system which has been adopted during the last year is the only system which can be adopted in order to give results.

I say to my hon. friend that nobody is satisfied with the training, and he should not think that General Crerar is satisfied with the training. The officers at headquarters are doing everything they can to improve it. What are they doing? We sent the director of military training to England, and I believe he spent two months with the different units in England, with General McNaughton and his staff, finding out what the necessities of training were. He came back here and put these suggestions into effect. We are doing more than that. We are sending officers and non-commissioned officers to England in order to get training in their special arms of the service. We are bringing officers from England to take charge of training and to deal with the special problems which have arisen in connection with this war.

Mr. ROWE: Does this change the original policy of having men rise from the ranks rather than through the training centres?

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has misunderstood me. The men in the training centres are men in the ranks.

Mr. ROWE: I understood the minister to say that the men from the training centres were highly trained officers.

Mr. RALSTON: There are officers' training centres, and there are other ranks' training centres. I am speaking of the other ranks' training centres. I was saying that the training centre system is the system which has proved itself to the British and to the United States authorities, and I believe it will prove itself to the people of Canada when they see the results.

Only to-day I was called upon by a gentleman who had been most critical last July. He is a man who knows a great deal about training, and he called upon me with regard to that matter. He has been watching this training quite closely, being in charge of an officers' training centre. He said that in his opinion the present training far exceeds anything that has been done before. I am not puffed up about that, I only wish to say to my hon. friend that there are some people who do not agree with him in connection with this matter of training. This training has been done on the advice of officers in whom I have the greatest confidence, and it is producing results.

My hon. friend spoke of demobilization on account of medical boards. I dealt with that matter as frankly as I could not very long ago. I told the house that I considered the 10,000 that had been discharged as excessive, and I said that steps were being taken to correct this matter. Yesterday I had a talk with the director general of medical services. He had made a personal tour of all parts of Canada and, in addition, has sent medical officers to the different centres in order to see that the medical boards are doing their duty. The complaints I am receiving is that the medical examination is too strict. It is that way because we do not want to have these medical discharges if they can be avoided.

Mr. GREEN: How many men have been discharged from the active army since the war began?

Mr. RALSTON: Since September, 1939, 14,000.

Mr. GREEN: Not only those by medical boards, but also those discharged on other grounds?

Mr. RALSTON: I have not those figures.

Mr. GREEN: We were told in the special committee on pensions that they are being discharged at the rate of 1,800 a month, even yet.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know that.

Mr. GREEN: Could the minister get those figures?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Does that cover only those who have been sent back from overseas?

Mr. RALSTON: No; all who have been discharged anywhere, in Canada too.

Mr. CASSELMAN: Could the minister give the proportion of those sent back from overseas?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot give that to-night. My hon. friend referred to front line officers and suggested, to use his own words, that I clean out national defence headquarters. We have sent quite a number of national defence headquarters officers overseas, and we shall be sending more from time to time. We are also bringing officers back from overseas.

Mr. COCKERAM: I am talking about A1 men who should be utilized for active service, men who did not see service during the last war.

Mr. RALSTON: I heard what my hon. friend said. I thought he was talking about officers.

Mr. COCKERAM: Officers and men.

Mr. RALSTON: Every endeavour is being made, not only in connection with this recruiting campaign, but at all times, to see that, wherever possible, civilian employees are used. Without wanting to reflect upon my colleagues, I think national defence, army services will show a favourable record compared with the other service departments, with regard to the number of civilian employees compared with military clerks. When I was overseas I found a demand for military staff clerks in the units which is very difficult to supply. We have to keep and train a certain number of military staff clerks in order to supply that demand. A number of military staff clerks went down on the Nerissa. They were being sent overseas partly to fill the demand. I say to my hon. friend that I have in mind what he has in mind, and I assure him that men who can be spared, will be replaced by men who are not physically fit, or by women. We are glad to do that at National Defence and will see that it is done.

My hon. friend referred to his own unit, which is in the fourth division. He knows that our present commitments are for an army tank brigade, for a third division and for an armoured division. Those are the commitments we made for this year, and our endeavour naturally is to see to it that these units are supplied with equipment just as rapidly as possible. I cannot get equipment for these units any faster than Canadian industry turns it out. I can assure him that every step is being taken so far as my department is concerned to see that the equipment is turned out as rapidly as possible. At times I have felt I have almost gone too far in butting into matters which are for my colleague, the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe). I have frequently visited plants and interviewed executives of plants which were engaged in the production of this equipment, and endeavoured to impress upon them the seriousness and urgency of equipping our forces.

Just a few days ago I interviewed a man who was most anxious for me to see his plant. He was getting together components to prepare for production. I told him I appreciated what he had shown me but that I should like to take him down to some of the camps; since he had shown me what he had to show, I should like to show him men who needed equipment. He said, "There is no use in your taking me down there; I know what the situation is, and I assure you that I am working just as hard as you are in trying to get this equipment out; it will be in your hands just as rapidly as possible." One of the jobs of the vice-chief of the general staff is to keep up tables, from month to month, of equipment supplied and forecasts of deliveries. He endeavours to see to it that industry, through the Department of Munitions and Supply, lives up to the forecasts which are made. I assure the committee that the equipment position is improving. I could name over a dozen items in respect of which there has been marked improvement, even since I spoke in March last. It is true that there are some items which it will be difficult to get for some time to come. There still is a serious shortage in equipment, but that shortage is being made up just as rapidly as Canadian industry can do it. I took the trouble to go yesterday to the meeting of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to say a few words about that very matter.

With regard to the fourth division, I say to my hon. friend that his Bren guns will come along before his unit is called upon to meet any operational situation, and that the other items of equipment, in so far as they are procurable, will come along too. When he says that he has no confidence in the officers at national defence headquarters, let me say to him that I do not share his views. Judging from the results which I have seen since they took the situation in hand, I believe they know their business. Some changes may have to be made, and I do not propose to hesitate to make them. As a matter of fact, I am not making any reflection on other officers, but I have felt that round pegs should go in round holes and square pegs in square holes. I was not in the defence department very long when, as my hon. friend suggests, I did make a number of changes in the senior positions. He will find that there is not a district officer in this dominion to-day who was occupying the position of district officer commanding in the same district a year ago. Those are the changes we endeavoured to make, and a number of them have been new appointments entirely. My hon. friend will not find any political plums among them. At all events my political friends do not think so, judging from what I hear. These appointments are being made on account of merit and on the recommendation of a board of officers in whom I have confidence, and who know the qualifications of these officers. I have no complaint whatever against my hon. friend for bringing this matter up. I am not complacent; I am not contented; I am not satisfied about the matter; but I assure him that if hard work and industry, if concentration, if faithfulness to a job and determination to do it count, he will find that national defence headquarters will fulfil his expectations.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health) moved:

That the reports of the committee of supply made to the house this day be now received, read a second time and concurred in.

Mr. STIRLING: Is that a formal stage of the proceedings now?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No; it is in order to have the resolutions printed in the Votes and Proceedings tomorrow.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MacKenzie (Vancouver Centre) the house adjourned at 12.05 a.m.

Friday, June 13, 1941.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE

Fourth report of the special committee on the Pension Act and War Veterans' Allowance Act.—Mr. MacMillan.

THE WAR

REVIEW OF RECENT DEVELOPMENTS AND OF CANADA'S WAR EFFORT

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) on Wednesday last expressed the hope that before parliament adjourned for the summer months I might find it possible to make a brief statement with respect to recent developments in the war situation and our own war effort. He expressed the view that such a statement might serve to strengthen the morale of the country, which as he rightly believes is apt to suffer when faced with severe reverses or seeming reverses such as those which have recently taken place in the middle east. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that a true perspective of the situation should go a long way toward strengthening the national morale.

With the consent of the house I should like to make the statement at once, as in all probability either to-day or to-morrow will be the last occasion on which there will be a favourable opportunity.

Whether it is better to fight and lose, or not to fight at all, is one of the oldest questions facing military strategists confronted with an enemy of superior strength. Reverses there are bound to be, and we must not lose heart when they come.

When we recall that up till a year ago Britain placed her main reliance on the French forces in Syria and north Africa and on the French fleet in the Mediterranean for the protection of the common allied interests in the whole Mediterranean basin, and then reflect that a year has passed since the collapse of France and no vital British position has yet been lost, it should give us cause, not for satisfaction certainly, but at least for thankfulness.

In an attempt to capture the changing phases of a world-wide war, it is obvious that the picture, if relieved by sunshine, must also be darkened by shadow. To-day there may be an encircling gloom—to-morrow there will be shafts of light.

I can but reiterate what I have previously said to this house and to the people of Canada. We shall only be helping the enemy and not ourselves if we are unduly elated by temporary success, or if we are unduly downcast by temporary failure.

No thoughtful man could ever have believed that this war would be over in a few months, or won by a short, sharp thrust. From the very beginning it was obvious that the volcanic forces let loose in the world were so mighty that a long, grim struggle was inevitable. It was bound to spread from nation to nation, from ocean to ocean, and from continent to continent.

The weak, the unprotected, and the perversely neutral were obliged to fall by the wayside. The final conflict was inevitably destined to be waged between the strong.

To-day, in what may be the bitterest chapter of the battle for freedom, state discipline fights self-discipline. The strongest men ever forged and hammered by a state meet on many fronts the strongest men ever tempered by the fires of liberty.

In this last chapter a few indubitable facts stand out in bold relief. The war will be won or lost not in Africa or in Asia or in the islands of the Pacific, but in the wide waters of the Atlantic, on the shores and in the skies of Britain. The Mediterranean is but an outskirt of the city of liberty. The battlements are in the Atlantic and the English channel. Freedom falls only if Britain falls.

Let me for a moment seek to balance our advantages and our disadvantages in the air, on the land and at sea.

In the air, the balance of machine power is gradually being adjusted. Increasing numbers of nazi bombers are being destroyed at night; British raids on German objectives have not only grown more effective, but no longer can the official silence of the usually overloquacious German propaganda ministry hide their results from the German people.

In his Reichstag speech on May 4, Hitler was forced to promise still better weapons next year. This statement was the first indication given to the German people that the war would not, as hitherto forecast by Hitler, be ended this year. Thus are the prophecies of the violent put to confusion by free men.

The stream of machines continues to flow. If any further evidence were needed of the growth of the British and allied air power, it is to be found in aggressive activity in the Atlantic ocean, in the North sea and in the Mediterranean. It is to be found too in the steady defensive activity that every day pursues its revenges against those who scatter indiscriminate murder and destruction upon British soil from the British air.

Everywhere in sky warfare a situation, not yet mastered, nevertheless improves from day to day.

On the sea the curve of loss has recently shown a decline. The shipping losses for May were considerably lower than they were for April. The attack of the Bismarck upon H.M.S. Hood was followed by relentless pursuit and swift retribution. The reality of British sea power remains. The catalogue of the heavy losses sustained by enemy shipping proves that, if regard is paid to the comparative available resources of tonnage, targets and striking power, the balance of effective destruction is not tilted as heavily as might appear upon the side of Germany and Italy.

Most heartening of all in the present situation is the attitude of the United States. The promises of President Roosevelt are not only being kept, they are being enlarged. The announcement by the president on April 29 that United States warships would be sent wherever the needs of hemispheric defence required their presence; the speeches of Mr. Stimson and Mr. Knox early in May; the passage by the congress of the bill authorizing the seizure of foreign vessels in United States waters; all these were encouraging signs of stiffening opinion. But the decisive point was reached by the president in his broadcast on May 27, when he made it plain that the United States would take whatever steps were necessary to ensure the delivery of American supplies to Britain.

Mr. Roosevelt did not minimize the seriousness of the battle of the Atlantic. His statement that British shipping losses far exceeded the present combined shipbuilding capacity of Britain and the United States marks a thoroughly realistic facing of the facts.

This continent is rapidly becoming not only the arsenal of democracy, but the shipyard of the freedom of the seas. Canada has mobilized all possible resources of men, material and suitable location to build ships. American and Canadian construction have begun the race against destruction. Every ship added to the Canadian navy helps to relieve the tremendous burden so gallantly borne by the British navy. Every new American warship, every new Canadian warship, helps the British navy to detect and to destroy. Every new merchant ship is a guarantee of men, machines, munitions and food.

In connection with land operations, there is nothing which can be added to the closing remarks of Mr. Churchill made in his speech on Wednesday, June 11. If we eliminate the occupation of the Channel islands by German forces, at this time of speaking, after nearly two years of war, no enemy soldier has a foot on British soil. As Mr. Churchill said:

> If anybody had said in June last, we should to-day hold every yard of the territories for which Great Britain is responsible in the middle east, that we should have conquered the whole Italian empire, that Egypt, Palestine and Iraq would have been successfully defended —anyone who said that would have been thought a foolish visionary. Yet that is the position at the moment.

Those briefly are the salient, they are the outstanding facts about tangible things.

As far as Canada is concerned, our own war effort in men and materials has steadily gained in momentum, in volume and in power. We are adding every day to the material and strength of the allied cause. Every month sees more Canadian troops, more Canadian sailors and more Canadian airmen added to the number of the defenders of Britain.

For some time past we have had an army corps of two divisions in the British Isles. As the corps commander, General McNaughton, has pointed out, they are helping to garrison the one vital citadel, the retention of which decides the war. We have made known to all the world that our forces overseas are ready to go, and that we are equally ready to have them go wherever their services may count for most. We are dispatching to Britain two additional divisions, one a third infantry division, the other an armoured division, also a tank brigade and many reinforcements. All will have been despatched in the course of the present year. This is apart altogether from the forces we are retaining in Canada.

Ships of Canada's navy have, as all hon. members are aware, been engaged with British ships in the coastal waters of Britain. They are now taking an increasingly important part in the defence of the Atlantic coast and in the duties of convoy on the great passage way of the Atlantic so vital not only to the present of Britain but also to the future of Canada and of the United States of America.

Canadian airmen and Canadian squadrons, as all are aware, have from the beginning been taking their part in the battle of Britain. In the Royal Canadian Air Force we have to-day 55,000 men. The British commonwealth air training plan this year will double the number of its enlistments. In Canada nearly one hundred training schools, manning depots and recruiting centres are already in full operation. From this source is flowing to Britain an ever-growing stream of pilots, observers and gunners. They have crossed to Britain in thousands and will continue to cross in ever-increasing numbers.

We have recently sent from Canada to Britain one thousand radio technicians whose help has been invaluable and will be invaluable in the cleansing of the midnight air. More are following on.

We are making machines for Britain's armed forces as well as for our own. Canadian motor transport vehicles, machine guns, aircraft, corvettes, mine-sweepers as well as shells, explosives and chemicals are being sent in growing volume across the Atlantic. We are sending and will continue to send to Britain all the goods which ships can be found to carry, but we are not stopping there. We recognize the tremendous financial burden which the British peoples are bearing. That burden, as well, we are continuing to share in ever-increasing measure.

Without complaint our people are bearing the heaviest taxes in their history. In addition they are lending their savings to the government. I know that with loyal willingness they will lend and, if necessary, give, whatever is needed to strengthen and supplement the financial resources of the government of this country. The Canadian people are performing a magnificent task. They will not fail the cause to which we have pledged our all. They are producing, and will produce to the limits of their strength and genius, the material, tangible things, without which victory cannot be won.

There remain, also, as our sure strength and shield, the intangible things of the human spirit. The will to live, and to endure every hardship that all may continue to enjoy the blessings of freedom is a part of Canadian character. We in Canada have a veritable passion for human brotherhood; a hatred of hate; an intolerance of intolerance. Ours is the unshaken and unshakeable purpose to reestablish upon the earth, now hideous with the blackened ruins of civilization, a freedom, wider and more deeply founded in social and international justice, than ever before in human history. All these intangible things are the very fibre and fabric of the national character alike of the British and Canadian peoples. Tried by many onslaughts, tested by many defeats, the inner fortresses of that character remain unbroken and unbreakable, impregnable, indomitable. Against their walls, the tides of tyranny and the waves of battle will beat in vain.

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): On the day which the optimists think may be the last of this session before adjournment, and I sincerely trust they are right, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has drawn together the threads of international affairs, the war story, and particularly that part of it which Canada is playing, into one statement which will go out to the public of Canada and to a wider public than that. I trust that it will have the effect which I have no doubt the right hon. gentleman had in mind, namely, of strengthening, if strengthening be necessary, the morale of the people, and driving home once more to the intelligence of every individual that there is just one thing which will bring us through to victory, and that is the spending of ourselves individually in the whole effort.

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I would endorse what the acting leader of the opposition (Mr. Stirling) has said, and, in doing so, convey to the Prime Minister appreciation of his act in having placed this statement before us. The statement, both in its comprehensiveness and in its literary style, if I may say so, is something which I am sure will be appreciated by those who read and study it, not only now but in future days. I believe it is essential to strengthen the morale of the people in every particular, and it has been shown—the Bismarck incident proved it—that when we have the equipment, the planes, the ships, the guns and so on, we shall have every assurance that the present menace will be overcome.

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): We have listened with much satisfaction to the admirable statement the Prime Minister has made. I wish to assure him, in these closing days of the session, that the movement for which I stand in this house will be behind him in his effort to make Canada's part greater, more effective and more satisfactory than it has been in the past.

THE MINISTRY

LETTER OF RESIGNATION OF HON. J. G. GARDINER AS MINISTER OF NATIONAL WAR SERVICES

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) asked me to lay on the table the letter of resignation of the former Minister of National War Services, the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I now table the communication in question.

WAR EXPENDITURES

CHANGE IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have been asked to move that the name of Mr. Hansell be substituted for that of Mr. Marshall on the special war expenditures committee.

Motion agreed to.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

QUESTION AS TO PROVISION FOR DOMINION-WIDE APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. GROTE STIRLING (Yale): May I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has given consideration to, and arrived at a conclusion on, the question of dominion-wide daylight saving.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): The government has given some consideration to the matter, but no member of it has studied it more closely than the Minister of Munitions and Supply. Perhaps my hon. friend will allow him to reply.

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): The introduction of daylight saving in a community has always been by action of the community itself. Some months ago the power controller, supported by the electricity board of the province of Quebec and the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, asked the government to act under the War Measures Act to extend daylight saving during the winter months to those communities which had already adopted it by their own action. That action was taken, with the result of saving some 180,000 primary horsepower which was made available for war industries. Since then the government has had communications from city councils and boards of trade asking that it take action to introduce daylight saving in their localities. We have consistently replied that the matter is one for local action, and while we believe that the introduction of daylight saving would be beneficial to the war effort, the government has maintained its position that the introduction of daylight saving is a matter for local action. There are many sections of Canada which have violently opposed the introduction of daylight saving. There would be no particular gain to the war effort in forcing daylight saving upon these communities—for the most part rural communities—and therefore up to the present the government has felt that any further introduction of daylight saving should be by local action.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

DOMINION PUBLIC BUILDINGS

PURCHASE OF BRADING BREWERY PROPERTY ON WELLINGTON STREET, OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. BLACKMORE (Lethbridge): On the basis of a report appearing in the June 13th issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail concerning the purchase by the federal government of a brewery in Ottawa for $500,000 to beautify Ottawa, may I ask the government: (1) Has the Brading brewery been purchased? (2) Does the government actually feel that an expenditure of over half a million dollars to beautify Ottawa is justifiable in this critical war year? (3) Will this expenditure be submitted to the special committee on war expenditures for examination at an early day?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I have not had an opportunity to look at his question, but what the hon. member has reference to, I believe, is the expropriation by the government a considerable time ago of certain properties on Wellington street, in view of the improvements which the government itself intended to make in that particular area. As my hon. friend is aware, two of the largest government department buildings are on Wellington street and the plan of development has in view the extension of further buildings along that street. It was thought advisable, before all the property in the adjoining areas, and in that area itself, became enhanced in value in consequence of improvements being made by the government, that the government itself should acquire property for its use later on. The brewery referred to is in that particular area, and while there may be some who will be sorry it is going or gone, I imagine their number will not be great.

SUGGESTION THAT FLAGS BE FLOWN CONTINUOUSLY DURING SUMMER MONTHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. GLADSTONE (Wellington South): I should like to direct an inquiry to the Prime Minister with respect to the flying of the flag on dominion public buildings, especially on these parliament buildings in Ottawa. Tradition, I believe, has established, without any legislative requirement, that the flag shall be flown on these parliament buildings while parliament is in session and on dominion public holidays. It would seem that in war time, and especially during the months of July and August, when large numbers of United States tourists are visiting Ottawa, it might be appropriate to have the flag flying on these buildings. I wonder if the government would consider this matter and, so far as possible, have the flag flown on dominion buildings throughout Canada during the summer months.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I shall be glad to look into the question raised by my hon. friend. I imagine, however, that there are many considerations of which account would have to be taken. One reason for not flying the flag on the parliament buildings at all times is that it may be a distinguishing mark with respect to the time at which parliament itself is in session, and also with respect to certain occasions of a national character. I am afraid that if the flag were flown the year round as a matter of course much of that significance would be lost. However, I shall be glad to look into the practice at Westminster and also to consider what I have already mentioned, the other facts which may bear on the matter. I see no reason why, in connection with government buildings throughout the country, effect might not be given to the suggestion of my hon. friend. That matter also will be carefully considered. I might say that I understand that such is the present practice.

MUNITIONS AND SUPPLY

UNCOMPLETED NAVAL VESSELS IN TORONTO HARBOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I bring to the attention of the Minister of Munitions and Supply the fact that several uncompleted corvettes are lying in Toronto harbour. This end of the war effort is being scandalously neglected. What does the government intend to do about it?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): I think the ships in question are mine-sweepers. They have been launched, and as soon as the electrical work and other fittings have been installed, they will be delivered to the government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO STRIKES IN WAR INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HUGHES CLEAVER (Halton): Could the Minister of Labour advise how many strikes exist to-day in industries engaged in war work?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): My information is that the workers at the Canadian General Electric plant in Toronto have returned to work. That being so, I think I am safe in saying that there is no strike of any consequence to-day in any war industry.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

JOHN DE KUYPER GIN—QUESTION WITH RESPECT TO LABELS ON BOTTLES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): I hold in my hand a bottle which bears a certain label and I should like to ask for some information from the Minister of Pensions and National Health. On this label appears the word "genuine" when it is not genuine; it bears the word "Hollands" when it is not Hollands; it bears the word "Geneva" when it is not gin; it bears the word "Rotterdam" when it is not Rotterdam; it also bears the words "John de Kuyper." Will the minister see to it that these labels are changed immediately, and any stocks of this product that may be in the stores seized at once?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health): Replying as an amateur to a question asked by an expert, I may inform the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), with his inquiring mind, that all the regulations under the Food and Drugs Act with reference to the contentious question of gin have been complied with as the result of instructions issued on April 24 last.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

STATEMENT AS TO RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT AND THE BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. DOUGLAS G. ROSS (St. Paul's): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he will consider having the banking and commerce committee meet in the fall when we come together again, for the purpose of continuing our discussions on monetary matters and going into the principles of taxation?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): The hon. gentleman asked a similar question when my estimates were before the committee, or at some previous stage. I shall be glad to see that the government gives consideration to the desirability of the banking and commerce committee being called for this purpose. I should like to say a word about the banking and commerce committee and about the submission of monetary policies to that committee. I do this because the Premier of Alberta has issued a statement which perhaps makes it desirable for me to say something about the relationship between the government and the Bank of Canada.

As hon. members know, the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada was considered by the banking and commerce committee in the spring of 1939, with I think most beneficial results. On June 2 this year, I made certain statements in this house with respect to the relationship between the government and the Bank of Canada, statements which were referred to by an hon. member on June 5. Whereupon I made certain other statements in relation to that matter. I note that the premier of Alberta has issued a statement which probably will be widely used to show that the government has no control over monetary policy. Therefore, I should like to make the matter clear before the house adjourns.

When I made my statement on June 2 we were discussing whether the internal administration or operations of the Bank of Canada should be subject to discussion in this house. At least that is what I had in mind, and I think a careful reading of what I said on that occasion will bear me out, although I will admit that it is open to another construction. I tried to make it clear that that is what I had in mind when I spoke on June 5.

As the committee knows, the Bank of Canada was created by parliament as an autonomous corporation with its stock owned wholly by the government, but with its own management and board of directors appointed by the government. It is an arm of the government, but not a department of government. The character of the act is such that responsibility for its operations is placed squarely on the shoulders of the governor and the board of directors. In this connection I wish to quote from Hansard of June 20, 1938, a statement made by the then minister of finance when proposing certain amendments to the Bank of Canada Act:

> There is, of course, no intention nor any hope that it—> —will dispose of political discussion regarding the use which shall be made from time to time of this instrument of national control of monetary policy. I should say in this regard, however, that it is not the intention of the government by the introduction of this measure to make the Bank of Canada merely a department of government. If the central bank of a country is to serve the high purpose for which it is created, it must be manned by men who not only are expert in monetary policy, economic and financial matters, but also have a sufficient independence of judgment to be able at all times to talk on equal terms to the government of the day with respect to the matters which come under the jurisdiction of the bank in the ordinary course of business. It is not the intention that by this resolution the Bank of Canada should become in any way a political arm of government. That, indeed, would be fatal to the successful operation of the control of monetary policy and credit in this country.

Meaning the change in the constitution of the bank.

The point which I would like to emphasize is that the responsibility with which the governor and board have been charged by parliament does not in any way relieve the government of responsibility for the monetary policy being pursued by the bank, nor in any way militate against public control of monetary policy. The monetary policy which the bank carries out from time to time must be the government's monetary policy, but the government must leave the carrying out of that policy, the choice of ways and means of executing it, to the management of the bank in whose judgment it has confidence.

If the government is satisfied with the policy which is being pursued, there is obviously no quarrel between it and the bank. Let us suppose, however, that the management of the bank and the government do not see eye to eye in the matter of monetary policy. Let us assume that after the usual careful consideration of the pros and cons, a serious difference of opinion remains. In such a case there can be no question whatever as to the outcome of the dispute. The government's views will prevail.

In view of the statutory responsibility placed on the governor and the board of directors, I do not believe that those of them who disagreed with the government on a fundamental issue could conscientiously carry out the government's policy. It would therefore be necessary for them to resign, and they would be replaced by others who were willing to accept responsibility for the type of policy which the government believed to be appropriate. It follows that if a serious dispute ever occurs, it will be brought to the attention of the house and of the country.

The type of organization which parliament has created combines the essential factor of public control with the extremely desirable factor of managerial responsibility. I know of no better way of safeguarding the public interest. It is, of course, always open to parliament to question and reject any policy, including monetary policy, which is being followed by the government of the day.

I think it is desirable to have this on record. I regret that the matter should have been dealt with—I am speaking now for myself—by question and answer on another matter, as it was, and I think it was due to that that some misunderstanding arose on the part of certain hon. members of the house and apparently some outside the house.

PROPOSED COMMITTEE TO EXAMINE REPORT OF BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): I should have liked to place this question on the order paper, but it is too late now to do so. I would ask the Minister of Finance if before the next session of parliament the government will give consideration to the setting up of a standing committee to examine the report of the Bank of Canada, similar to the existing committee on railways which examines the reports of the Canadian National Railways.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Well, Mr. Speaker, there would be no objection to giving consideration to this request, but I should say that duty could be acceptably discharged by the banking and commerce committee.

WHEAT ACREAGE

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS TO MEET COST OF SUMMER-FALLOWING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). I have a volume of correspondence which I have received in the last few days in reference to the question of summer-fallowing and the inability of farmers generally in western Canada to finance their summer-fallowing operations by reason of the fact that the oil companies are refusing to advance them credit. Would the minister advise whether the government is prepared to advance say 50 per cent of the cost of summer-fallowing to farmers in order to enable them to get the work done? Or as an alternative, will the government devise a scheme whereby the municipalities could guarantee a percentage of the cost of summer-fallowing and the government pay direct to the municipalities the amount guaranteed?

Hon. J. G. GARDINER (Minister of Agriculture): I do not think the federal government has at any time taken part in the promotion of summer-fallowing activities in the western provinces. That has always been looked upon as a responsibility of the provincial governments in so far as it has been taken care of by governments. I do not think the provinces will expect the federal government to take on a load at the present time which has not been carried even in peace time.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE

182. Normal services. Cadet services, $171,500.

Mr. POULIOT: Before this item is voted I should like to place on record copies of two letters I have sent to the Minister of National Defence, under date of May 15, 1941, and May 16, 1941. The second letter reads:

Ottawa, May 16, 1941

The Honourable J. L. Ralston, K.C.,
Minister of National Defence,
Ottawa.

My dear Minister,

Referring to your letter of May 11, there is something that I do not understand.

Eleven months ago, the Prime Minister pointed out to me that in doing voluntary recruiting for the defence of Canada, I might be making the greatest mistake possible with respect to the national interest.

Would there be no mistake possible with respect to the national interest in doing it for overseas service? In other words, how can I do, at your request and for another country, what I had been precluded to do by the Prime Minister for our native country?

Please find herewith attached supplementary memorandum in the form of a letter which completes this one.

Yours truly,
Jean-François Pouliot.

The first letter reads:

Ottawa, May 15, 1941

Colonel the Honourable J. L. Ralston, K.C.,
Minister of National Defence,
Ottawa.

My dear Minister,

I have received your letter of May 11 and copy of a broadcast of your colleague, the Honourable C. G. Power, with regard to voluntary enlistment.

I take the liberty to refer you to a most important statement made in the house by the right honourable the Prime Minister, on June 19, 1940, Hansard, page 922. In the forenoon, at a general caucus of the Liberal party, I had offered to recruit in my constituency, within a week and for the defence of Canada, a regiment composed mostly of lumberjacks, farmhands and day labourers. I mentioned the fact that all those men would be in excellent physical condition and besides that, nearly all of them would have been familiar with the handling of a gun. I added that if every member did the same, we would have in a very short period of time an army of 245,000 fresh recruits of the best kind.

The remarks of the chief, which appear at page 922 of Hansard (last line of first column and first lines of the second one), honoured me by mentioning in the house what I had said at a caucus, but at the same time I was deeply disappointed as I happened to be the one he referred to on that occasion. Here is the text of his remarks:

"An hon. member on this side of the house made the statement publicly this morning that he felt he could go into his constituency and, by making it known to his constituents that this measure had to do with the protection of Canada and our own Canadian soil, bring forward in a very short time men from the forests, from the fields and from the factories, all prepared immediately to join the Canadian forces to resist any possible invasion, and that he would be prepared to guarantee that that could be done in constituency after constituency throughout the country, once it was understood that there was the necessity of defending our own Canadian shores. I pointed out to him that in doing that he might be making the greatest mistake possible with respect to the national interest; that, to win this war, we might wish to keep at work in the forests the men who are now working in the forests, to provide the timber which will be required for docks and wharves and required immediately; that the men who are working in the factories may be a thousand times more useful to the government of this country in giving their skilled labour to the manufacture of aircraft, munitions, or other weapons of war than they could possibly be in lining up and presenting themselves for military service; equally that on the farms, if we are to perform what will be expected of us, we shall need all the production that can be effectively and rapidly carried out on the farms of our country."

It was undoubtedly because my offer was turned down by the Prime Minister eleven months ago that no other member made a similar one until you did it yourself a few days ago.

After the chief had told me in very definite terms that "I might be making the greatest mistake possible with respect to the national interest" if I did some recruiting in my constituency, that very statement and the wide publicity given to it made it impossible for me as well as for any other member of parliament to do any recruiting in his constituency.

At that time the government had already announced their policy about conscription. In fact it was the day before that the Prime Minister had presented a resolution for mobilization of human and material resources in the present war. I wonder if it was precisely because of that new policy of conscription that members of parliament were prevented from doing recruiting on a voluntary basis, which would have shown that conscription was unnecessary to recruit as large an army as could be equipped and maintained for the defence of this country but, in spite of the rebuke that I received and which was evidently inspired by the brass hats of the war departments because it was much stronger in the afternoon than in the morning, I did not remain inactive and I did my best to assist all those who expressed to me by writing or verbally their desire to enlist into the militia, the navy or the air force.

The policy of the war departments as put into effect by those who were in contact with the people was to give the least possible chance to those who were willing to enlist.

I cannot mention all cases, but I sent you copy of a correspondence of Antoine Lagacé, of Rivière-du-Loup, who has done some military service and who has written to three commanders for enlisting into the home guard: he was turned down because he was not a veteran of the first great war.

Another man, in a similar case, could enlist only because his brother-in-law was a sergeant, and it was considered something like a government favour to be accepted in the army.

I insist on that; it was considered a government favour to be accepted in the army.

How many men wanted to enlist as truck drivers, and how many were accepted?

I have mentioned in the house the difficulties that our boys had with regard to medical examination. Many difficulties have arisen from the fact that those who were unfit were accepted and those who were really fit were declared unfit. Finally, since the establishment of conscription, some who desired to enlist had to travel at their own expenses from Rivière-du-Loup to Quebec city and if they were declared unfit by your medical staff, they had to pay their travelling expenses from their own pockets.

Whatever could have been the intention of the government in the application of the mobilization act, in my constituency, I had the impression that everything was done not to recruit the best army, but to justify the uncalled for policy of conscription.

Please find herewith enclosed copy of letter which I am sending to-day to your colleague, the Hon. Minister of National Defence for Air. It is from Jean-Joseph Lajoie, who has a brother in the air force and another one in the navy. He says that he is so anxious to enlist in the Royal Canadian Air Force that, although he knows English very little, he is ready to spend the money that he has to learn it. I presume that he will have no opportunity to get there, although I am sure that he would do very well because that career appeals to him. I also enclose another letter to the same effect which I received to-day from L. Paul Ouellet, of Rivière-du-Loup station. It speaks by itself.

That man has been taken in.

My first cousin, Yves Bertrand, had won medals as an athlete and a marksman. Squadron-leader Stewart could tell you the trouble I had to have him enlisted as a gunner and it is only thanks to Mr. Stewart's intervention that he could get in.

Now, regarding the manufactures of munitions, you could be astounded in reading the letter from Donat Champagne, a settler of St. Elzear, in the back country of my constituency. I wonder if it would not be possible to secure work for him although he is a mechanic of great experience.

By the way, three people in the employment office in Quebec have been arrested because they were selling jobs, and no one could get in unless he paid something to the people higher up. This explains why we have trouble. I mentioned the matter a long time ago to some people, but I never succeeded in getting anywhere until those people were arrested. I continue with the letter:

Sometimes, you may find that I am grouchy and of unpleasant disposition: there is always a reason for it and I will give some of them.

Before the war, I recommended more boys for the air services than any other member ever did. General Lafleche could tell you about it, and he was satisfied with those boys amongst whom was a nephew of your colleague, Right Honourable Mr. Lapointe. But now, since the war started, it seems as if French-Canadians were unwelcome in the army, in the navy and in the air force, and the first thing to do would be to remove all barriers seen or unseen, and, in the latter case, badly felt, which prevent French-speaking Canadians from enlisting when they are perfectly willing to do so.

In the first place, the medical examiners shall be competent and unbiased; they shall be thoroughly familiar with French language and easily accessible, which means that no one would have to pay travelling expenses to undergo medical examination which will establish definitely and to the satisfaction of the recruit whether he is fit or not.

In the second place, the French-speaking Canadians shall be under French-speaking officers and the men shall be in a position to expect and to receive legitimate promotions in due course. On this point, I will quote the case of Sergeant Major Leo Pinel who has been in the army for several years, had won all the cups and trophies of his regiment, and has been on guard at Buckingham Palace. Colonel DesRosiers could tell you about it, as I took up this case unsuccessfully with him.

I do not blame Colonel DesRosiers; he just placed my letter before general headquarters overseas. It continues:

That fellow is very popular in a certain part of my constituency. In fact, on the occasion of the opening of a new post office at Cabano, where his family lives, I paid a tribute to him as a sportsman and a soldier, adding that on account of his services it was expected that he would soon get the promotion he was entitled to in the army. At that point, there were prolonged cheers from the whole crowd. You will understand that if Pinel gets a well-deserved promotion it will have a very good effect for increasing voluntary enlistment where he is so favourably known.

What astonishes me is the considerable number of French-Canadians who have already enlisted in spite of so many obstacles to overcome.

It is bad for a man who is ready to enlist to have a door slammed in his face. He is not anxious to go back. The letter continues:

It is true that the members of parliament are more familiar with the feelings of the people because they are in daily contact with them, but if they convey to you suggestions that really originated from the people, whatever it is, you pay no attention to it and you seem to prefer to listen to the so-called military experts that Hore-Belisha has expelled from the war office.

I wonder if you ever realized that the success of voluntary enlistment in this war is largely due not to any public speeches, but to the painstaking efforts of the members of parliament who are spending lots of time with their people trying to explain and make as acceptable as possible policies for which they have never been consulted.

Hon. J. L. RALSTON (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend sent me the letter to which he has referred, enclosing the memorandum—or a previous letter, I have forgotten which it was. As he understands, I could not go into a long and detailed correspondence in connection with the various matters indicated in the letter. But I did, as a matter of fact, make inquiries about it.

His first letter has to do with a statement made by the Prime Minister in the House of Commons with regard to the relative benefits of recruiting, and of the calling up of men under the National Resources Mobilization Act. If hon. members will refer to the passage in question I am sure they will realize at once that the Prime Minister was endeavouring to indicate that under the National Resources Mobilization Act provision was made for the postponement of those in essential industries. That, I believe, was what was meant by the Prime Minister's statement, and I do not feel that it would be a justification for my hon. friend's feeling that he could not take part in a recruiting campaign and in asking men to enlist.

The other part is more important, so far as I am concerned. It has to do with the welcoming of French-Canadians to the Canadian Army. May I say to the hon. member for Témiscouata—and this is no idle statement, no platitude—that I do not think any matter of policy has received more intensive attention from me than has that same matter. And I can say to my hon. friend that I have tried day in and day out, avowedly—I have made no secret of it—to see to it that just as far as possible our friends in French Canada are represented in the army, and are represented in as high places as they could possibly fill.

As a matter of fact Brigadier Archambault was recommened for a brigade in the third division, since I have been Minister of National Defence. Brigadier Reynaud has been made deputy quartermaster general. Brigadier Leclerc was given a brigade overseas. He has just been returned as being medically unfit. I may point out further that a number of staff appointments have been made.

I must say to my hon. friend and to the house and country generally that instructions at National Defence headquarters are that every effort should be made to see that French-Canadians have fair representation in appointments. There is no reason for not doing so; that is part of the national effort. It is part of the effort for the unity of Canada. I make no apology for taking that stand, and I believe hon. members of the committee will concur with me in the stand I have taken.

There are difficulties of course, and my hon. friend has pointed them out. One difficulty is connected with the question of language. I take the position that there are two official languages in this country, and that a man is entitled to speak French and to say, "That is all I can speak," just as a man is entitled to speak English, and to say, "That is all I can speak." May I pay this tribute to the French-Canadians, that there are far more French-Canadians than there are English who are bilingual—yes, far more.

The situation with regard to enlistments and appointments is this, that in connection with units other than infantry units a man who does not speak English finds difficulty. It is difficult for a man to hold a position of command or responsibility in those other units. In fact, it is difficult for a man in those units to carry on, unless he does understand English. The technical terms in connection with the artillery, signals, ordnance and army service corps is in English. It is therefore difficult to have all French-Canadian units in those particular services. But we are trying to meet the situation in two ways. We are having French-Canadian units as far as we can, and I want to pay my tribute to those units which I saw overseas representing the province of Quebec. They were fine units, wholly French-Canadian, and officered by French-Canadians. They have done a fine job, not only in the field, but through their second battalions, in recruiting reinforcements. Those as mostly infantry units.

We are also endeavouring to recruit French-Canadian artillery and other technical units. In that connection, in order that there may be coordination, because artillery units cannot be used alone but in conjunction with divisional formations, we have sought to have a sufficient number in the artillery units who are bilingual, so that they can understand the directions which are given. And we have a school now which is opening up to give special instruction. I think it is in the interest of the country that we should do this for the French-Canadian boys who do not understand English, particularly those in the technical units, so that they will understand the phrases and commands which are used, the articles which are referred to, and the orders which have to be communicated between their own and English units. We are doing that. We are endeavouring to form French-Canadian units and we are watching to see that our French-Canadians get fair representation, just so far as their qualifications permit.

I am sure that my hon. friend would not suggest on behalf of French-Canadians or anybody else in this country, at this time, when we need men who are equipped and trained and efficient that we should take men simply because of language or race unless they are efficient and have the necessary training. We are endeavouring to provide that training. My hon. friend will find that the French-Canadians stand up well in the officers' schools to which they go.

I do not think I can say any more, except to assure my friend that this subject is very much in my heart and in the hearts of the officers at headquarters. I know that he has not the same confidence in or the same warm feelings towards some of the officers at headquarters that I have, but I assure him, nevertheless, that the matter he speaks of is not being lost sight of either here or overseas, as he would know if he could see the exchange of cables which has taken place with regard to various French-Canadian appointments.

Mr. POULIOT: If I may ask one more question, will it be possible for charitable organizations to get for the people in need in the poorer districts some of the used clothing from the Department of National Defence as was done before?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot make any general statement on that. I received a very special application last night, an application on behalf of sufferers in the recent forest fires in Quebec province, and I did authorize the use of some unused and some discarded clothing for that purpose, to the extent of helping something like six hundred persons. But answering my hon. friend's question, each case will have to depend on its own merits.

Mr. CHURCH: I was not here yesterday or on the last two occasions when the minister's estimates were before the committee and I wish to have about ten minutes this morning to offer to the government some constructive suggestions.

As to the point raised about home defence, there is no such thing as home defence in this country. The defence of this country, as I have pointed out before, is not going to be decided at Halifax or Vancouver or Saint John or Montreal. It is going to be decided in the primary theatre of war, in Britain and on the Mediterranean and on the Atlantic.

Canada up to the present has not in my opinion measured up to its responsibility as the senior dominion of this empire in the matter of home defence, as I interpret it. Home defence is not as important in Canada as in Great Britain, where the people are within range of enemy guns and are in danger of bombs falling on them every night.

On the question raised by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Cockeram) and replied to by the minister, there are certain amenities in British public life that I do not find in Canada, and I believe that public questions should be discussed on certain principles as they are in England, where men are free to express divergent views. In the riding I represent I have held no public or other meetings and have discussed no politics whatsoever, only once a year to reelect officers. In my riding men and women's associations do nothing but war work.

At different times I have represented four or five ridings in the city of Toronto. I have been transferred around wherever there was a fight. But undoubtedly this is a different war from the last one, as the minister has said. In the old days a war might last only a matter of days. Now wars last for years and this one may last ten years in view of its widespread nature; it may break out again elsewhere. The war is different, too, because of the greater mechanization of the armed forces, the vast numbers of people involved and increased population. The hon. member for York South comes from the Toronto district. He is a soldier and belongs to a regiment I have not seen much of, but which the late Sir John Eaton and the late Colonel Boyd Magee many years ago came down with me to Ottawa to raise in the great war. Another was the 75th battalion. I was interested in a sort of city's own battalion.

I believe that a member of parliament should offer constructive criticism of the government, not of individuals in particular departments. The question that has arisen between the hon. member for York South and the Minister of National Defence arose in the British house in the days of Peel, Palmerston and the Crimean war, and this one. But in this war the principle was laid down both by Mr. Chamberlain when war broke out and by Mr. Churchill that a member of parliament can enter the British house wearing his uniform. It is the right and privilege of a soldier member of parliament to exercise the principles laid down by Burke in his address to the electors of Bristol, outlining the functions and duties of a member of parliament, and stating that the exercise of his rights must not be interfered with. That relates to peace only, though. In war there must be of necessity some difference.

As I have said, in my constituency I have held no meetings since the war started except executive meetings for the election of officers once or twice a year. The hon. member for York South was within his privileges, as I see it, in making any criticism he saw fit to make in war time of the work of the department if he did it within the house. The minister in his reply, in effect, laid down the general principle followed now in the British house I believe. I notice that in the British house in a week some forty-six questions were asked on the orders of the day on war and defence, and they can ask supplementary questions there. We can here too according to the evidence in 1929-30 by the committee which revised the rules. We are bound in the end by the British rules.

Turning to other matters I am glad that the minister has reduced soldiers' fares one-third; he did good work in that, I know. I hope that all charges for soldiers' fares will be eliminated next year. The hitch-hiking order should be rescinded, and I would like to see it done. The minister last year wrote a letter to me and to three or four other members of parliament about hitch-hiking and suggested that we had better appeal to the motor league. We did make an appeal, and I think the minister himself made a very strong appeal to motorists. That order ought to be rescinded, if I may respectfully suggest it. In England almost every car has a little sticker on the windshield, I am told, saying "Soldiers invited. Free rides." I was on the outskirts of Toronto at York Mills not long ago and one Sunday night I saw fifteen soldiers for Camp Borden trying to get a car ride, but everybody passed them by. On the 24th of May on my way to the Argonaut club secondary schools regatta, I passed two young soldiers in front of the exhibition grounds, and I saw the two still standing there on my way back an hour afterwards. I gave them a lift. The groom sat in the front seat. They belonged to the Irish regiment. I asked him where he came from, and he told me from such and such a street. "I am going to be married," he said, "at seven o'clock to-night by the chaplain." He said the soldier in the other seat is the best man; said he was a Scotsman and lived on Roncesvalles avenue, which is in the riding of the hon. member for Parkdale, but he did not know him. I asked him what school he went to. He said he was just out of Parkdale collegiate. I said I went there myself once. I asked the groom-to-be on what street he lived. He said that he lived on Pape avenue. I said, "Who is your member of parliament?" He said, "Tommy Church." He said to me, "Do you know him?" I said, "I never heard of him." Well, I took them to within a block or so of the place of the wedding. They asked me if it was right to go to the bride's home before the hour named with the best man. I said, no; she might change her mind. They asked me to the wedding, but I did not go. But the point I wish to raise is the principle involved in this regulation. I saw a thousand cars pass that baseball park in two hours on their way out to Sunnyside, on the road which, while I was chairman of the harbour commission, my board was responsible for constructing along twelve miles of waterfront. Those motorists are supposed not to help soldiers on their way. They might do so, but did not.

I think that that hitch-hiking order has somewhat hurt recruiting, and I appeal to the minister to rescind it. I do not wish to offer the government anything but constructive suggestions, but criticism is a tonic and stirs governments to action, so long as it is founded on fact and is not actuated mainly by party bias or a desire to embarrass. The responsibility under our constitutional practice is on the government and minister. It is a heavy task at such a time as this. In my opinion the order is illegal, yet young fellows from Toronto who have enlisted in the service of their country are fined $5, which they can ill afford out of a week's pay. At Camp Borden you have a most able, popular and excellent officer. I am sorry to have to mention his camp in connection with this matter, because I do not wish a thing like hitch-hiking to interfere with a lifelong friendship for him. But I insist that the order is illegal, and I may mention that the provincial minister of highways, Hon. Mr. McQuesten, wrote to me that the Ontario government had never prosecuted a man under that order, and magistrates I have consulted tell me that they have never had a case like that before them. Why should a man getting only $1.30 a day be subjected to treatment of that kind? I appeal to the minister to reconsider this matter. He did good work in connection with the appeal for free fares; he approached the railways immediately and obtained some results. But the time has come when we should provide these men with free transportation, particularly when one remembers that 700,000 free civilian passes are issued every year.

Another matter should be mentioned at this time. The other day I travelled on the train with the chancellor of the university of Toronto on our way to the unveiling of the Macdonald memorial tablet. I do not often see the chancellor, who is an old friend of mine, but I had occasion to observe some things which he did not seem to notice. At the rear of the morning train every morning recently, going to Kingston was one car which, when we stopped at Trenton, was soon filled by men of the air force. Indeed last Monday it was so packed with air force men and so overcrowded, there was no room for other soldiers who joined the same car at stations further on. I do not know why this overcrowding is necessary on the Canadian National Railways. Quite a number of cars used on Canadian National trains consist of old-fashioned carriages built at least thirty years ago. It is a shame that troops should be transported in that way all over Canada. They should have first-class accommodation. The minister wrote me and got some reform recently.

Then as to meals on the trains. The minister conferred with the management of both railways about a matter I raised as to the heavy cost of meals on trains, and secured some reduction in the cost of meals for soldiers. I am glad to see that, but in my opinion a corporation such as the Canadian National Railways which has spent vast sums on branch lines and entertainments, and which has received hundreds of millions of dollars from the public, should give further relief to the troops as to meals and trains and accommodation.

I believe the minister is making some inquiries about the records system. How does it come about that, in connection with the victory loan, announcements can be made every day in the newsapers of how many subscriptions by municipalities have been received, the amounts of individual subscription, and so on, when it is so difficult to get information about recruiting by municipalities? I know it is hard to do. I believe that there is need for a change in the records office system to the unit system. Last July the civic board of control allowed to General Alexander clerical civic help—three clerks to do this for Toronto for the army. I asked the Royal Canadian Air Force to do it for the manning pool. In June Deputy Minister Duncan said he could not do it, but in July again he wrote he would do it. Why cannot the records be segregated so as to show the figures with relation to every district, every municipality? These facts will have to be available when the war is over, if only to enable the authorities to deal with matters of old age pensions, relief, hospitalization and employment. I hope that something will be done in this connection, although I admit it will be a heavy task.

Another matter which requires attention is the utilization of public property. I obtained a return with regard to what has been done by the various Canadian universities in Canada to supply the government with facilities. I will name just one university, the great university of Toronto, which did so much in the great war in arts and medicine and science and the noble contribution of graduates and splendid undergraduates, men who never came back. In that war the university of Toronto put all its buildings and other properties at the disposal of the Royal Flying Corps and army. The city did much the same; they turned over to the department, free of charge, all the exhibition grounds and splendid buildings which have a commercial value of $22,000,000. The school board lent free of charge all its buildings and other properties. I am not criticizing our great university in respect to the present war; far from it. They gave all that was asked, no doubt, but I notice that the government has rented various stores and properties near my own office and on our main streets. A building which is not fit for recruiting has been rented on Albert street. But little seems to have been done by institutions which enjoy exemption from taxation. The university of Toronto, the return shows, has contributed only a basement in the engineering building, and accommodation for a rifle range has been provided in a room at Hart house and a small house at 184 College street. But why should the government have to pay for practically all the accommodation it requires when there are exempt properties for education, schools and church property? The Ontario government has, in this respect, taken the lead among the provinces by making available to the department its properties at Guelph, St. Thomas,, and many other places, including new Ontario, and it is willing to give more. Yet the federal government has rented from the Quebec government a large property in Quebec for five years at a rental of $177,000, to be put to other uses no doubt later on.

A word with regard to the officers and the staff. The minister's predecessor, the lamented young gentleman who occupied that office at the outbreak of the war, wrote to members of parliament the second day after the war broke out asking us not to use any influence with the officials of the department to secure appointments for persons as commissioned officers and otherwise in the public service. I believe hon. members have respected that request. I know that I have, because I never got a man an appointment. I have been here since 1921, and I have yet to get any man an appointment any place in Ottawa; if I asked for it I know I would not get it, even to-day.

Reference was made last evening to Major General Harry Crerar. I have known his whole family for a great many years. I have not seen him since before this war began. It was a splendid appointment. He is a brother-in-law of the late Sir Adam Beck. His youngest brother, Malcolm, was killed in action when he was 19 years of age while serving with General Allenby. He had only been out of the Royal Military College about six months. The general and his other brother served in France in the great war. His mother, the late Mrs. P. D. Crerar and his sister, Lady Beck, were the finest patriotic workers in Canada. I am not here to defend him; he needs no defence. I believe he was recommended as the minister said by General McNaughton. However, there are one or two other brigadiers who I know should not have been appointed. One of them, I was told by a fellow member here, claimed he had eight senators supporting him. Whether that is so or not I do not know, as the minister has said he is sure there is no political consideration given in such promotions although many others claim they can get no promotion.

One or two other things I wish to mention. The first is that of the soldiers' bonus. If by means of an act of parliament, or by rules of construction relating to it, we are to give a new bonus to certain officials in the Canadian National Railways, or to some of their officials who enlist for civilian and military work and still hold their positions and are not going to the war, something should be done in the matter of soldiers' free transportation. If anybody is to get a cost of living bonus the soldiers should get it; the men receiving the $1.30 a day should have some consideration as is the case of the civil service.

So far as home defence is concerned, I have already raised this question; I say that we have no home defence in municipalities, but local militia. They can have all the black-outs they like; they have some soldiers as home guard—they have already got it started as well as the air raid precautions I referred to here in 1938-39. My views on this matter were expressed as soon as the war broke out, and again in May, June and July of last year. I thought we should follow the example of Finland, and train every man, woman and child to handle a rifle. I interviewed the present minister on the home guard matter. That is the proper course for a sparsely populated country like Canada. There is no use in letting the people think they are protected with black-outs, trying to persuade the people of Canada, in every municipality, that they have home defence when they have nothing of the kind, suggesting that we are armed for an emergency in all places, when in some towns and small places we have not so much as a pinwheel, a firecracker or a skyrocket for home defence. The hon. member for Témiscouata, when speaking the other day on the needs of his own constituency for defence remarked that you cannot blow your nose in this house without saying that it is for the war effort: everything is "for the war effort".

We are assured that the British government consents and agrees to everything which this government has done. That is the reply given to everything mentioned. I do not know whether they consented to the hon. member here blowing his nose and agreed that that too is part of the war effort. But everything, it is said, is consented to by the British government; they asked for it, and it is all right; and this we are expected to believe, without any document supporting it, because somebody says so.

In my opinion people should be told the truth and the grave danger we are in. So far as the municipalities are concerned, there is no such thing as home defence. I discussed last July the question of air raid precautions with the minister and the deputy minister as to adopting the Finland way. I did so three months before the matter was taken up by the provincial authorities in Ontario. I suggest that we should follow the example of Finland and have every man, woman and child taught to handle a rifle. Miniature ranges should be established all over Canada as the first step in local defence, and air raid precautions also are necessary.

We have an information department which is known here as the publicity bureau. That is the only bit of humour I have heard during the session apart from one or two other examples. A publicity bureau giving only propaganda information.

I was speaking a little while ago about the amenities of British public life. As we all know, pacifists like Morrison, Alexander, MacDonald and others one could mention were promoted to the cabinet. The First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. Alexander, reduced the navy from 72 to 50 capital ships, would not build destroyers, and Britain was no longer a first class power. Mr. Morrison, head of the London County Council would not allow certain facilities or buildings to be used by the air force three years ago, and Mr. MacDonald a pacifist, who helped with the Irish bases, was league-minded. Our information bureau now has at its head a gentleman who was a pacifist and isolationist, who introduced into the house on March 31, 1939, a bill which I talked out, because it had for its purpose the declaration that when war came we would be neutral and parliament would decide. I objected to our small militia votes.

Who is to blame for the absolutely defenceless position of the country when war broke out? The answer is that all parties were responsible, because, almost everyone in the house seemed to be saturated with the Geneva fad, the Geneva nonsense, with the result that we reduced our army, our air force and our navy to practically nothing—so much so that Hitler thought that some of the dominions would not come to the support of the motherland but would remain neutral.

As regards the question of theatres of war, it is my opinion that the primary theatre, Great Britain, should be looked after. Canada has only 80,000 troops in England. We should have a large army over there so that when Britain has achieved the mastery of the air they might help Britain take the offensive, with the aid of the fleet.

Coming to the question of cadet services, I may say that at one time I was the only member of parliament who stood up for this highly essential institution when every attempt was made to abolish it in the years from 1932 to 1937. In fact, it was abolished by the school board of Toronto. But if it had not been for the cadet services, away back in the time of the Northwest rebellion and the south African war as well as in the last great war and this present struggle, I do not know where the militia would have been in Toronto. The cadet services are a valuable auxiliary, and always the backbone of the militia.

As regards the medical services, the minister stated that 14,000 men had been discharged since the war started. In the pension committee I think the figure given was 1,800 in one month. The minister of pensions has done good work in pensions, as he did previously when at the head of the army, and I trust these men will be generously dealt with.

The only question I should like to discuss for a moment now in conclusion is one that was raised by the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce). I have myself discussed it on four or five different occasions. I say now that we could have done better, even under a voluntary system, and could have had a volunteer army of 750,000, if recruiting had been encouraged, instead of on again, off again, on again. The present minister is not altogether to blame, because he took over the department when recruiting had fallen down and enthusiasm had been somewhat spent. The fact is that nothing was done to encourage young men who were eager to enlist at the right time and tried to get in. I remember seeing outside the armouries in Toronto at 9 a.m., men who stood there between the hours of six and nine in the morning on January 6, 1940, when it was eight below zero, a line-up of men who quite obviously were anxious to get into the army; but these men were not even allowed to go into the armouries so as to get out of the cold. Here are the newspaper pictures of it. There were young fellows from Mimico and Aurora and other districts who were wearing sweaters at the time, and many of these young fellows had to get a meal at the Scott institute. There has been a considerable improvement, but I suggest that if the minister cannot get recruits he should adopt some other method. He should study the situation critically between now and the time parliament reassembles and be prepared to make a report that will satisfy the people as to whether it is necessary to take other methods. We compel our citizens to be educated in order to be able to take their places in civil life, and I do not see why one of the first essentials of education for responsible citizenship should not be training to fit men to defend their homes and their country. If we compel every worker to insure himself against the chances of unemployment in industrial life, while working with the vast mechanization of to-day, and the discoveries in arts and science and other matters, why not also equally to insure oneself and one's fellows against this present German disaster, which means not only loss of wages but of the very life worth living for free men. The only European countries which did not have compulsory service were little Luxemburg and Vatican city.

Australia and New Zealand have had compulsory training and service for home defence for many years—true for home defence mostly, as they are so close to Japan.

Conscription is the only system that is just to all; the pity of it is that in the last war it was mixed up with politics and never had a chance. If we had run the voluntary system properly it would not be necessary. As I said in 1937 and 1938, the most exposed provinces are the maritimes, Quebec and British Columbia. Are we going to wait until the enemy appears on our own soil, as it did in the small countries of Europe, with its vast mechanization, and brutality and savagery, before we get a proper army, navy and air force and raise a million men?

With regard to recruiting, we could have had 750,000 men under the voluntary system if we had gone about it properly. Compulsory national service is the most democratic system that could possibly be devised. Under such a system none can complain. All are treated alike; all are required to render the same sort of service, to submit to the same system of discipline. Nothing increases so much the spirit of loyalty and patriotism as service. To make every citizen feel that he, individually, is part of the defensive force of the country would make him justly proud; the physical and mental training and discipline and practical instruction which is part of the education of a soldier to-day, would make him a more valuable citizen in every way, and the time spent in his military service would be returned to him many-fold in increase of efficiency and ability for sustained and disciplined effort in all his subsequent career.

National service is fair in principle, avoids discrimination and the practice of substitution or securing an exemption by payment of a stipulated amount. It makes a better man, a self-respecting man—in all, a better citizen. We can only become really strong and invincible when every man in the broad expanse of our land can be taught cheerfully to recognize his obligation of service and to take pride and satisfaction in the knowledge that he is a qualified defender of our common liberties and one of the guardians of this glorious land.

By the New York State constitution, all able-bodied male citizens between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, who are residents of the state, constitute the militia. There is no more danger of our nation becoming militaristic through preparedness than there was that the students of colleges would become ruffians or prize-fighters when the colleges made attendance in the gymnasium compulsory. There is more danger of militarism from unpreparedness than from the maintenance of a sufficient army and navy. Can anyone doubt that any great defeat suffered by this country in war would change this country to a militaristic nation, because the man of the sword would become the national hero, since through him our national rights could most potently be restored?

The late Mr. Hamilton Merritt in his book on national service, is responsible for the last fifteen lines which I have quoted with reference to the state of New York.

I have just a few more words to say. I have received a letter from a lady who has a son in Singapore. He has been with the navy and has been anxious to come home on leave. He has six months' leave, but the foreign exchange control board will not give him any Canadian funds to come home, and his father and mother are ill. I do not like to be sending the minister letters all the time. If all members send him letters it would mean 245 multiplied. Also a traveller on the train from Montreal met a boy the other day whose mother had died. He had no funds with which to get home; he had had a hard time getting enough together to get him to Toronto and it will cost him three weeks pay. I hope the minister will be able to arrange for a fund of some kind to take care of cases like this. I apologize for detaining the committee, but I represent a military district and I get a great many complaints. They do not all belong to my riding, but for some reason or other they write to me. I should be glad if a lot of them would write to somebody else, because I do not want to take up the time of the house and of our overworked officials.

We do not know where we are going to be until we come back here. Everything is as usual in Canada and every member of parliament should see that it is not as usual. You cannot go into any amusement place without seeing it. I had a complaint this morning from a man whose son was killed in the present war off England. He served with the 1st battalion in the last war and he complains that people are asking him to enlist. The boy's mother has received some kind of cross from the government which she appreciates very much, but the father has been stopped, even by soldiers, and asked to enlist. I think such men should be given some sort of button to wear.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, I should like to commend the very encouraging statement made this morning by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and express the hope that it will have a splendid effect upon the morale of our people. I also hope that the spirit as well as the words of that statement will be carried out. If the facts were given to this house, as they are in the British House of Commons, I am sure that we would all agree with what the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mrs. Casselman) is reported to have said a few days ago. I quote:

> I see no value in criticizing until fully informed upon a subject, and then being prepared to offer suggestions for improvement.

May I digress for a moment to congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton East upon her recent success at the polls and to voice the opinion that by her grace and culture she will prove a valuable addition to this house. My only regret is that the whip did not see fit to place her opposite these benches.

Although the Minister for National Defence (Mr. Ralston) placed the blame for the lack of essential equipment for the troops in Canada upon the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe)—

Mr. RALSTON: I must interrupt my hon. friend. I have placed no such blame. My hon. friend is used to making that sort of insinuation and I ask him to withdraw that statement. He will not find it anywhere.

Mr. BRUCE: That was my interpretation.

Mr. RALSTON: My hon. friend has no right to say that. I ask him to point to a single sentence upon which that interpretation could be placed. My hon. friend is too prone to do this sort of thing.

Mr. BRUCE: May I just finish my statement?

Mr. RALSTON: I am interrupting to object to my hon. friend stating that I placed the blame for lack of equipment upon the Minister of Munitions and Supply. That is absolutely untrue. There is nothing in the records to justify that or from which my hon. friend could make an interpretation of the kind.

Mr. BRUCE: I shall leave that to members of the house.

The CHAIRMAN: A point of order has been raised in connection with statements made by the hon. member for Parkdale reflecting upon something that has been done by the Minister of National Defence. The Minister of National Defence raises a point of order and has made a statement with respect to his own declarations and with respect to his own actions. Under the rules of the house an hon. member must accept a statement made by another hon. member with respect to what he said or did not say. Therefore, I request the hon. member for Parkdale to withdraw the remark from which such inference could be drawn.

Mr. BRUCE: I abide by your ruling, and I am glad to withdraw the conclusion which I thought I was justified in arriving at from the remarks made last evening by the Minister of National Defence.

The Minister of National Defence will then have to assume responsibility himself for the deplorable situation disclosed by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Cockeram). As he pointed out, there has been widespread dissatisfaction with the functioning of the defence department, which I believe is partly due to the confusion engendered by the constant changing of plans for training. That is not only my own view; it is held by others. I should like to quote as evidence an article written by Mr. Williamson, a veteran of the last war and now secretary of the Canadian corps. This is entitled "We can't run two armies" and was published in Saturday Night of May 10. It reads:

There should be only one army and it should be an extremely active army. Canada is not defensible with any force that we could raise. If Britain falls, we fall. An army for home defence may contribute to that fall. It will sap the strength of the overseas army. It will take men, money and equipment. It will add complication to an already muddled situation. The thirty-day and four-month schemes were bad enough in all conscience, but to immobilize thousands of our young men for duration is madness. It would unnecessarily impede our industrial output; it would be unfair to the voluntary army overseas, and it would add nothing to the safety of the country.

The utter failure of the reserve army, as a source of reinforcements, must now be plain to all. It is no longer to be considered as a reserve. It is to be moved to the sea-boards as an army for Canada's defence, a duty it could never perform. Its failure is so abject that already it is proposed that units of the third and fourth divisions are to be broken up for reinforcements. This did not happen in the great war until four divisions had gone through the hells of Passchendaele and the Somme. With the announcement of the latest scheme, it is admitted that it never was in fact an effective reserve. The minister now says that the organized units were, in great part, composed of men unfit for service or of those who, for personal reasons, could not go overseas. It may be nothing more than stupidity that has brought us to this pass, but the government is not keeping faith with the men who have volunteered. It has gambled, and to-day is gambling with the existence of the empire and of Canada at stake. There must be one army and one type of enlistment from this point on. Battalions of veterans and lower category men can undertake such duties as are necessary in Canada.

I received a clipping the other day from the Winnipeg Tribune of May 28 containing a letter in favour of conscription. I shall not read the letter, but I should like to refer to the editor's footnote which is as follows:

Recruiting figures show that the number of active service force volunteers, per thousand of population, is higher for French-Canadians than for English-speaking Canadians.

No one would be more pleased than I if that were true, but so far as I am aware no reply has been given by the minister to the questions which have been asked in connection with recruiting in the various provinces, unless it was his speech of May 12 last, when he said:

The thirty-day plan for compulsory training was accepted by every province including Quebec. The four-month compulsory training plan was accepted by every province. I may say that young men in the province of Quebec have come to the camps in larger surplus numbers perhaps than in any other province.

I submit that this statement does not justify the interpretation placed upon these words by the editor, and I would ask the minister to clarify the situation by giving the figures previously asked for, as well as the figures to date, of active service force volunteers per thousand of population, of French-Canadians and of English-speaking Canadians respectively, so that there may be no cause for misunderstanding. I think it would be very helpful if the minister also would give a break-down of the recruiting figures for the various military districts in Canada up to date, showing first the number enlisted for active service overseas, and second those enlisted for home defence. In this connection I should like to ask the minister if any of the men previously discharged from the army for the reason that they were not regarded as likely to become efficient soldiers are being reenlisted. I am informed that this is so.

Heretofore we have been lulled into a sense of false security by the statements made in this house that more men were not needed. Can anyone doubt to-day that men were urgently needed, when one recalls with chagrin what happened in Libya, in Greece and in Crete, where British armies suffered a severe defeat because of lack of man power? Still more men will be needed if we are to play our part as loyally as have the other dominions of this empire.

The Minister of National Defence is modestly asking for 32,000 men. Has he any expectation that this will meet even our immediate needs? I venture to say that if Canada is to play its part proportionately to the other dominions we will need to raise at least 300,000 men. Instead of four divisions we should now have twice that number. A Canadian Press dispatch from Hamilton, New York, dated June 9, containing a report of the speech made by the minister to the graduates of Colgate university, at which time he received an honorary degree—on which I wish to congratulate him—contains this statement:

When war began, we had 10,500 men on active service in the three fighting services, and to-day in those services we have a quarter of a million men enlisted to serve wherever duty may require them, together with a reserve army of 175,000, subject to call for the defence of Canada.

This makes a total of 425,000. Since this figure very greatly exceeds the figures given to this house so far by the minister in regard to those on active service who have enlisted for duty anywhere, will the minister say whether or not he was correctly reported?

Mr. RALSTON: I can say now to my hon. friend that I am correctly reported. That statement has been made frequently.

Mr. BRUCE: I understand that we have had a third Canadian division at Debert for about a year. I should like to ask the minister if they have received sufficient training to be ready for active service, to face the enemy on equal terms. If not, is there any reason why they should not receive that training in Canada? If these troops can be trained in Canada, and I see no reason why they should not be trained here, then to me it would seem almost a criminal imposition upon the hospitality of an overcrowded, harassed England, to ask them to provide food and space to enable these troops to complete their training after they arrive in that country.

As a veteran of the last war I feel it incumbent upon me to express disagreement with the attitude of the minister towards members of the reserve army who are also members of this house, in respect to their right of criticism either inside or outside this house, in connection with the preparedness of the armed forces. I do not propose to enter into a discussion of military law, upon which the king's regulations and orders are based, but I should like to quote from a speech made by Mr. Churchill in the British House of Commons on November 21, 1940:

> I entirely agree with what has been said about the desirability of members of parliament serving not only in the military services but in all other forms of warfare and discharging their parliamentary duties at the same time or in alternation. No doubt difficulties arise, but I think they are well covered, and that the good sense of the house and of hon. members will enable these dual and occasionally conflicting functions to be discharged.

During the last war, as well as this war, there have been notable instances of such criticism in the British House of Commons. For instance, Admiral Keyes spoke in criticism of the Norwegian fiasco, and during the last war Admiral Beresford also criticized the government. If this can go on in England under the stress of war surely it would have been better if the Minister of National Defence had not insisted on too legal an interpretation of the words rather than the spirit of the king's regulations and order.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Churchill was talking about speeches in parliament. I have raised no objection to speeches in parliament.

Mr. BRUCE: I think I am right in assuming that the minister did object formally in the house.

Mr. RALSTON: Well, if my hon. friend has another assumption or impression or interpretation I am saying that I did not.

Mr. BRUCE: Of course I am bound to accept the minister's statement. I would suggest to him that criticism is often the truest form of loyalty. Prime Minister Churchill evidently thought so, for in his statement in the British house a few days ago he said:

> No one, however ministerially minded, could possibly complain of the tone, temper and matter of this debate. The kind of criticism we have had to-day—some of it very searching—is the kind that the government not only accepts but welcomes.

May I express the hope that the ministerial benches will profit by this statement by Mr. Churchill.

Mr. RALSTON: I adopt that statement of Mr. Churchill's in November.

Mr. BRUCE: I am very glad to hear the minister make that statement.

Mr. RALSTON: That is exactly what I was suggesting, that there would be conflicts from time to time and that I thought they could be reconciled; and that is what Mr. Churchill has said.

Mr. BRUCE: I had not intended during this session to reply to the minister's totally unjustifiable attack upon me on May 12 last, but since the subject has been again opened I feel called upon to make some comment.

It was a little over a month ago that I recommended selective compulsory enlistment as the only fair and efficient way to meet the complex needs of Canada. As I stated then, I now repeat, I spoke then and now speak only for myself. The minister characterized my remarks as a blow at our national unity and, whether I intended it or not, an attempt to undermine it. I entirely dissent from that view. In my belief there is nothing that would better promote national unity than the idea that every citizen in Canada, irrespective of his racial origin, is playing an equal part in this great struggle.

The other day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) stated that equality of sacrifice, according to ability to pay, has been the basis for taxation. I ask that equality of sacrifice, according to the ability to serve, should also be the basis for enlistment. I believe that one large section of our population, the French-Canadians of Quebec, are as much concerned about the preservation of their freedom and the survival of the British empire as are any other sections in Canada. To suggest otherwise is an insult to their loyalty.

I should now like to quote from a French-Canadian newspaper to show the changed attitude in that province in respect of Canada's participation in war outside of Canada. I hold in my hand an editorial from Le Soleil of Quebec, June 4, 1941, and, I quote in part, as follows:

It could not be otherwise, because we are the most genuine and the truest Canadians. We have said that among us, as in all the other provinces, there will always be a sufficient number of volunteers to defend our country—even if to defend Canada it is necessary to meet the enemy on another ground to prevent them from coming here. No intelligent and bona fide Canadian doubts this. On the other hand, everything shows that Canada is menaced. The theatre of war is enlarging. Who would refuse to admit that it is better to prevent Canada from becoming a battle field? That it is better to spare our women and children the unfortunate lot of the women and children of Europe? That it is better to meet the enemy where they are and halt them in their march toward America?

I am afraid, however, that the question has been approached rather from the point of view of political expediency than in any other way. I may say quite frankly that at the present time I am not concerned about the fortunes of any political party, but I am concerned about the survival of Canada as an integral part of the British empire. If we lost this war Hitler would very soon get rid of all political parties, as well as our democratic way of life. Nearly a year ago the United States, although not at war, called up 1,000,000 men for compulsory selective draft. I believe the word "draft" is a better word than the one which I did not use in my former speech, but which was used by the minister himself—"conscription".

Surely after nearly twenty-two months of war, and with the disasters which have happened in Europe staring us in the face, we should now be eager to throw aside all political considerations, and to face stern realities. We should be ready to adopt the speediest and fairest means of securing man power to meet immediate and future needs, both in the field and in the factories.

Mr. RALSTON: That means conscription of labour, as well, does it? That is the way I would understand it. I am asking my hon. friend if that is what he does mean.

Mr. BRUCE: I believe a system of selective draft for all, whether in the army or otherwise, is the better way. It was accepted in the United States without protest, and it did not cause disunity, because the president was wise enough to call into his cabinet two outstanding Republicans, Mr. Stimson and Mr. Knox.

A few evenings ago we listened to an almost frantic appeal from Lord Beaverbrook for more tanks, more ships, more aeroplanes and more men. He said that life was in the balance, and made an urgent appeal for more help from Canada. The Hon. Ronald Cross, on his way to Australia, expressed himself in similar terms. These men I submit are in a most advantageous position to know what the real needs of the present situation are overseas.

When in his speech on May 12 the minister referred to me as one who spoke glibly and without thought, he made an incorrect statement. When I advocated a change in the system I spoke only after the most mature consideration. I would point out to him that it is the realist who is serving Canada and the empire best at this time. I would also give him the same reply I gave to the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) on June 5, 1940, when I spoke in the house regarding Canada's ability to make tanks. The Minister of Munitions and Supply said as reported at page 309 of Hansard 1940—and I took it that he was referring to me, and to something I had said on May 28, 1940—

So when a man stands up and makes reckless statements about two firms in Hamilton that can build tanks—

And so on. I replied as follows:

I wish to tell the minister that I am not in the habit of making reckless statements.

And I say to the minister of defence that I am not in the habit of speaking glibly in the house.

My whole training and habit of life have been to observe scientific accuracy, and I resent the minister's accusation.

The Minister of Labour in England, Hon. Ernest Bevin, speaking on June 6 in the British House of Commons, said that the next three months will be the most vital in our history—a forecast which may be only too accurate.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. BRUCE: Mr. Chairman, when the committee took recess I was about to speak of a matter to which I referred in a resolution which I put on the order paper on June 3 last, and which reads as follows:

Whereas criticism has been made regarding the lack of any recognized comprehensive training plan to which training can be adjusted, as distinguished from our military plans of operation,

Therefore be it resolved that, in the opinion of this house, a planning committee should be set up to devise a training plan in keeping with the tremendous changes that have taken place in military science since the beginning of this war.

I would not venture personally to suggest a training plan but I am going to give a brief synopsis of a training plan proposed by a competent artillery officer who served in the last war and who has been connected with artillery organizations ever since. He says:

Officers of vision and imagination should be chosen to constitute a military planning committee for the purpose of devising a master training plan.

Might Canada not be used as the training ground for the main hitting force (or shock troops) which will be used for victory? The Canadian corps was used as shock troops in many historic battles in the last war. These "shock troops" are highly specialized men whose job it is to break the resistance of the enemy and pave the way for the movement of the larger formations.

The "shock troops" are armoured divisions working in close cooperation with aircraft specially trained for this work. The larger formations already organized to resist invasion in the British isles, added to their normal dense population and the difficulty created by German air raiders, will add enormously to the task of training specialized "shock troops" needed in modern offensive.

The same ideal conditions found in Canada, which have enabled us to make a great success of the commonwealth air training plan, exist for the specialized training of armoured divisions.

It is believed by competent military authorities that ultimate victory depends upon the organization of a larger number of extremely mobile armoured fighting units, manned by a relatively small number of highly trained men. It is almost impossible to give adequate training for this purpose in Great Britain. No country in the world is more admirably suited for this purpose than is Canada. If this is to be our role, then Canada should specialize in the training and coordination of land and air forces suitable for attack.

Referring further to the training plan he says:

It may be necessary to create a distinct air army for the armoured fighting forces.

Germany did not delay her training until she had all necessary equipment, guns, et cetera. She used improvised equipment.

One thing that will probably attract recruits more than anything else is the knowledge that their time will not be wasted and that from the very day they enlisted their abilities will be directed into useful channels. In the opinion of many competent officers, nothing is deterring recruiting more at the present time than the fact that our young men know how ineffective the training of our land forces really is. Such methods, i.e., the use of improvised equipment, were used by Germany for years and it would be futile to deny the effectiveness of the methods they adopted for training for land forces. The urgency for such a national training plan has been stressed on many occasions by representative military groups and the urgency becomes more apparent every day as we sit by and read of continued German victories.

I think the best answer I can give to the minister's charge that I was attempting to drive a wedge of disunity into Canada's war effort and that my suggestion was ill-timed and unnecessary will be to quote from a letter of Major-General Elmsley, D.S.O., C.M.G., appearing in the Globe and Mail about a week ago. General Elmsley was chief of staff at military headquarters here and is one of Canada's most distinguished soldiers. He spent thirty-three years as a professional soldier, of which seven were spent in war, which should surely equip him to speak with knowledge and authority; and I think his opinion should command the respect of all. The letter to which I refer will be found in the Globe and Mail of June 7. I quote it only in part. General Elmsley says:

Conscription honestly administered without political interference ensures equality of sacrifice, and equality of sacrifice in a democracy ensures unity. What, then, is this question of disunity that is referred to so often by politicians but never openly discussed in actual words?

We of Ontario and other provinces feel that Quebec has been represented by the existing government as irrevocably opposed, en masse, to conscription. This I cannot believe, for two reasons.

1. As a Roman Catholic I am of the same religion as the majority of the people of Quebec, and our church maintains that we should take up arms in support of our government in a just war, and there is admittedly no question about the justness of this war. No Roman Catholic either of Quebec or of any other province can therefore refuse his armed support to his government on religious grounds.

2. As a soldier by profession of thirty-three years' service and of this seven years spent in war, may I state that I have served under French-Canadians as my superior officers, with French-Canadians as my equals and under me, and they have proved repeatedly in peace and in war that they are a gallant and honourable people. . . .

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): The hon. member should say that to Doctor Shields.

Mr. BRUCE: He will probably be able to read that.

Colonel Ralston has stated publicly that there is no need for conscription. Others have said with equal emphasis that we have come to the end of our resources of man power on a voluntary basis of enlistment. Only the results of the present appeal for an additional 32,000 men on a voluntary basis will give an indication of the correctness of these claims. It is certain, however, that heavy fighting and heavy casualties are bound to occur in the near future, and the question will arise shortly whether our war effort overseas is to be restricted by the use of volunteers only, or whether the whole of our man power is to be utilized under conscription.

History has shown that conscription enforced unexpectedly in a panic or emergency—and an emergency may arise in a matter of weeks or months—is a criminal disservice, as it creates bitterness and distrust among fighting men who have enlisted on a voluntary basis and those who have enlisted on a compulsory basis, and furthermore disrupts our war industries by introducing grave disputes between the employers of labour and the requirements of our fighting services.

Conscription should be discussed now, and if deemed advisable adopted forthwith.

He concludes by saying:

We cannot serve two masters in this war, that is, the cause of our king, Great Britain and our sister dominions on the one hand, and our local political interests on the other. These interests are obviously not identical and will, therefore, come into conflict to the detriment of our fighting activities.

In view of what the minister said this morning, I should like to call attention to the rebuke which he administered to the hon. member for Hastings-Peterborough when he spoke in this house on March 11, as reported in Hansard at page 1416. I wonder what has caused the minister to change his views since 1917, when he was serving in France in his majesty's forces, as to the freedom allowed officers. The minister did not hesitate at that time to take part in a political campaign in Canada, although he was not a candidate. According to the Halifax Chronicle of December 14, 1917, he sent the following cable to A. K. Maclean, the candidate of union government for Halifax:

France, Dec. 12, 1917.

I strongly favour the immediate operation of the Military Service Act, and hope Nova Scotia will heavily support candidates pledged to that policy.

Ralston.

I should like to ask the minister if he considers the situation to-day less critical than it was in December, 1917. At that time we had the support of Russia, the powerful fleets of Japan, and Italy, unbeaten France with its superb army, and the help as an ally of the great United States of America, in addition to receiving supplies from many neutral countries all of which are now under the heel of Hitler; while to-day, Great Britain fights alone.

Mr. RALSTON: Let me at once refer to two or three points which my hon. friend has brought up.

Regarding the training of the army, with all due deference to him I prefer to accept the advice of the officers who know conditions overseas, who have been overseas, who have been in close touch, not only with General McNaughton, but with the staff overseas of the war office, from the chief of the Imperial General Staff down, and who therefore have some idea of the requirements of training in this country.

Let me say further that while I respect General Elmsley's views as a military man, the opinion he expresses with regard to conscription is expressed not in his capacity as a military man but in his capacity as a citizen of this country, just the same as anybody else. So I do not think that all the build-up which my hon. friend has given to General Elmsley in connection with his military record has anything much to do with the soundness or otherwise of his expression of opinion as a civilian upon this particular question.

Mr. BRUCE: It shows his experience.

Mr. RALSTON: It shows his experience as a military man, but my hon. friend is quoting his opinion on a matter quite apart from his military experience.

Let me now come to the matter dealt with by my hon. friend in the last three minutes of his speech, in which he observed that in 1917 I favoured the national service act of that time. My hon. friend asks, what is the difference between now and then? Let me tell him. At that time we were in the third year of the great war; in fact it had been going on for nearly three years and a quarter. So far, the present war has lasted for about twenty months, and in all three services we have had probably seven hundred casualties. Up to December of 1917 Canadian casualties were numbered in the tens of thousands. Already the fifth division had had to be broken up in order to furnish reinforcements. When that telegram was sent, I, as an officer of a battalion, had had the experience of receiving men from dismantled battalions from all over Canada—units which had had to be broken up in order to provide reinforcements to replace casualties. At that time the battle of Passachendaele had just been fought and the Canadian corps had been decimated. The casualties in my own battalion in the two days we were engaged numbered between four and five hundred, of which 138 were killed. That was the condition in December, 1917. What is the condition in Canada to-day? It is that we have enlisted less men at this time than we had at the corresponding stage of the last war, that we have had comparatively few casualties, that the army has not been in action, although it is holding a strategic position in England at the suggestion and request of the British government. I say to my hon. friend that, at that time, recruiting campaign after recruiting campaign had been put on in Canada, from one end to the other. I myself in the spring of 1916, a year a half after war was declared, was engaged in an intensive volunteer recruiting campaign, and after that time, battalion after battalion after battalion was raised in this country under the volunteer system.

So that the condition then and the condition now cannot be compared. We are at this time, as I pointed out the other day, engaged in the first intensive campaign for recruits since this war began—the very first. And I ask my hon. friend again in all seriousness as a citizen of Canada: Why raise this question of conscription at this time? He knows that in 1917 it split Canada from top to bottom.

We had at that time no such united position as we have in Canada to-day. As I said the other day, in October, one month after war was declared, the province of Quebec had an election on the issue as to whether they would participate in this war. What did they do? They voted overwhelmingly to stand with Canada in the war—to stand with Canada, who was standing by the side of Britain. That was followed by compulsory training, known as the thirty-day training scheme. That plan was advised by the chief of the general staff, and put into effect. I venture to say it did a great deal to bring the young men of Canada—not simply the young men of Quebec—to a realization that there was a national duty to perform. Eighty thousand men were trained at that time. That was followed by the four months training plan, whereby the men took not only basic training, but advanced training as well. That was put into effect. Both those plans were accepted all over the Dominion of Canada, without exception anywhere. Then the plan was announced which stated that those who had their four months' training would be drafted—to use my hon. friend's expression—for service in Canada. That, too, was accepted all across Canada.

Having regard to that situation, and to the unity which undoubtedly prevails, I really feel my hon. friend is not doing a service to Canada at this time when he advocates conscription. Probably this afternoon the premier of Quebec will be doing what? He will be asking the young men of Quebec to volunteer to enlist in connection with this recruiting campaign. That is an example of unity. I ask my hon. friend why he wishes to introduce this discordant note at a time when we are engaged in raising recruits. The effect of it is—and my hon. friend must be able to see this—that it provides a young man who may doubt whether he needs to enlist with a reason for delaying to do so. It hinders the war effort, as I said the other day; and it hinders the campaign which is going on across Canada at the present time.

It will be noticed that my hon. friend is not advocating anything of this kind in regard to money. I have no doubt that he is serving on some kind of committee. He is no doubt asking Canadians to subscribe their money to our war loan. But my hon. friend suggests that we pass a law right now before we have really tried the volunteer system, fold our arms, and request these young men to come in.

Some suggestion has been made about compulsory service in other dominions. I made a mistake myself the other day, and I wish to correct it. In New Zealand there is provision for compulsory service but in the other dominions, Australia and south Africa there is no such law. Enlistments are voluntary.

I say to my hon. friend I had the feeling that at this time he might—and those who think as he does—help in every way possible in connection with this campaign to get men. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this campaign will do a great deal in the Dominion of Canada to encourage future enlistment. I must agree with those who say that we have not put to the young men of Canada, perhaps as we should, the need for men. I agree that we did not take all the men that were offered. Why? Because—I can say this now, as I said it the other day—because conditions were such, in connection with shipping, that we could not send overseas the men we intended to. We were having to shift plans from time to time. There was a necessity for accommodation. There was a necessity for armament. It was considered that recruiting could be allowed to take its normal course according to our needs. We began recruiting again in February, I think it was. The number recruited did not come up to the quota, which meant that next month you had to add to that month the deficiency of the month before, and so on with the next month. That is one of the reasons for the call for recruits now in this first intensive recruiting campaign that has been put on.

But that was not the only reason by any means. Another was that establishments, particularly in connection with the technical units, were increased, and men who had been expected to be used for reinforcements were used instead to fill up those increased establishments.

Another reason was, and is, that we took the men out of the technical units from the fourth division to form the armoured division. We did not plan to build the fourth division up until some time later, but we decided in view of the situation to accelerate that, and we are now asking for something like 8,000 men for the fourth division.

Then there were discharges on medical grounds which were greater than we expected. When I found there was doubt as to the physical capacity of some men, and I have in mind particularly certain units, to stand the strain, as I wanted to see that we sent over to Great Britain an army that could stand up with any of them, I insisted that there be a further medical examination. That examination was made, a large number of men were discharged, and that adds of course to the number we are requiring and asking for to-day.

We are making a special call for 32,000 recruits, and there will be the quotas from month to month to make up wastage. But I believe that if we educate the people of Canada now in connection with this recruiting campaign as to the need for men from this time on, and if we have them realize that there is a situation which demands their support, we shall get it and the impetus given by this campaign will assist us with the further quotas needed.

That is the position. My hon. friend and I differ in connection with it but I deprecate again my hon. friend bringing this question up before we have even really tried out the voluntary system in Canada.

With regard to the other matters to which my hon. friend has referred, I do not think there is very much point in my going over them in detail at this late stage of the session. He has dealt extensively with training. I have already received a letter and a memorandum from the author of the memorandum which my hon. friend read to the committee to-day, and I have had that memorandum examined, sentence by sentence, by the training officers of the department. I have had it examined, not in a spirit of defence or in a spirit of excuse, but to see what there was in it that was good and that we could make use of, to stack up the suggestions made therein against actual performance, against what is being done to-day, and to adopt any remedial measures when such seemed to be indicated. Certain suggestions I think in the light of the experience of the training officers, particularly the experience we have had overseas, would not prove to be sound. But in so far as the memorandum makes constructive suggestions which can be used, I assure my hon. friend they will be used.

I do not propose to follow my hon. friend in connection with the other matters he mentioned. Let me just say this: The man who is speaking to you to-day has a fairly heavy task. I need all the help and all the support I can possibly get. I believe that in the interests of Canada at this time the thing to do is to drive on with this recruiting campaign and have young men realize that young men are needed and ask them to come in, and I propose to do that. I believe I would not be a good Canadian if I did not do that. That is my position, and I ask my hon. friend and all others to put their shoulders to the wheel in connection with this campaign, and instead of suggesting alternative methods in the middle of the recruiting campaign, to endeavour to assist in every way possible to impress on young men that they are required and the attractions of service for Canada in her hour of need.

May I say just a word to the hon. member for Broadview. He brought up quite a few questions, and I am not going to deal with them in detail. I only say to him, as I have had to say to him before, that the suggestions which he has made will be considered. I have given a good deal of thought to some of the subjects to which he has referred, and he knows I have had a good deal of correspondence with him. I do want to say one word, and it is because the man is not here to answer for himself. The hon. member introduced—perhaps through inadvertence—but I would not want it to remain on the record as it is—the suggestion that General Crerar was selected on the suggestion of—I understood him to say—"a late senator". I do not know to whom he refers. I have no idea who he is talking about. All I want to say is that no suggestion of any kind or description came from any senator or any member of the House of Commons or, for that matter, anyone on this side of the water with regard to the selection of General Crerar. The selection was made, as I said last night, and I give my word to the house for this, solely on the recommendation of General McNaughton after I had a personal conversation with him and after he had considered the matter fully.

I am not going to take up the time of the committee any longer. I only say that I feel from the bottom of my heart that we are trying to do a job in the Department of National Defence. I have said time and time again, and I repeat, that we are not content or satisfied. I can only pledge to the house that I will give my best in order to see the job through.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: As I listened to the concluding words of the Minister of National Defence with reference to those who would at this time raise one part of Canada against another, I thought the time has come when we must forget this question of racial descent in this country and be Canadians first and foremost. I have felt for years that one of the things that may break down the fabric of this country is the fact that every ten years men who are and whose ancestors have been Canadians for generations have to register in the census their racial descent. That is one thing that perpetuates in this country the type of citizenship that we do not want. I have no French blood in my veins, but I believe that those who do come from that part of Canada are as anxious and as willing to serve as those from any other part of this dominion and to assert the contrary is to do a great disservice to Canada and its unity of purpose.

Mr. McDONALD (Pontiac): Why all this talk about it? Why always cite Quebec?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Mention was made of that by the minister.

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; the mention was first made by the hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I was replying to the observations of the minister. The minister admits to-day something that we have said over and over again on this side of the house, that so far as this government is concerned there has been no concerted policy of recruiting. It has been spasmodic, and lackadaisical. He says—and I realize the load of responsibility he carries; have some appreciation of what it must be—that up to the present time we have not tried to get recruits in a large way. The result speaks for itself.

Mr. McNIVEN: He gave the reasons.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: In my opinion it is due to the failure to have recruiting speeches and bands, but the consequence to-day is that this country is in a deadening torpor of complacency.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Hon. members can say what they wish. The reason why the minister says it is necessary for speeches on the part of members of parliament and others including the premier of Quebec is that the people have to be aroused now. Only a few days ago the minister made the statement in a speech that he delivered before the Rotary club in Toronto: "I think our most dangerous enemy on this side of the Atlantic is the idea that there is lots of time."

Too late, too late, has been the history of many countries in Europe to-day. We to-day have our Jena, our Austerlitz, we shall have our Waterloo if we realize before it is too late that something has to be done now to encourage recruiting, and to assure an ample production of the instruments of war, tanks aeroplanes and munitions.

The minister criticized the hon. member for Parkdale for some reference he made to there having been a failure in production. This is what the minister himself said—

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. RALSTON: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; the only reference I made to the hon. member for Parkdale was in regard to his reference to a late senator. I mean the hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The statement that the minister made as I understood it was this, that there had been no criticism of the Minister of Munitions and Supply in any statement that he made last night. The words of the minister were these:

> He knows that our present commitments are for an army tank brigade, for a third division and for an armoured division. Those are the commitments we made for this year, and our endeavour naturally is to see to it that these units are supplied with equipment just as rapidly as possible. I cannot get equipment for these units any faster than Canadian industry turns it out.

Now after almost two years of war the minister of one department states in answer to the allegation made by the hon. member for York South, "What you say is true; there is not the equipment there should be; we have not been able to equip because industry has not produced." I ask the minister this: what about the National Resources Mobilization Act passed last June? It gave powers to this government asked by the Prime Minister as an emergency measure. It gave the government power to take over industries that were falling short. Why have the powers granted under this act not been utilized in order to ensure the required production? Yet we have been told repeatedly by the Minister of Munitions and Supply that all is well, that everything is in order, that tanks are being produced. Did the tank that was produced the other day have a Canadian engine or transmission? Then there is the question of aeroplane production, on which we have not had a report since March. We have had no report, nor have the people of Canada had a report, as to the present situation with regard to the production of aircraft. All we have had are general statements that all is well; and the psychological effect of the government continuously painting a picture of self-satisfaction in connection with Canada's war effort and the progress of the war has in the past engendered and will continue to engender apathy.

Why is there not the enlistment there should be? Look at the province of Saskatchewan, where we have a very fine record. Sometimes aspersions are levelled against those of racial descent other than British, but consider the record of the Ukrainian people and the contribution they have made and are making to our armed forces. If there is a failure to secure recruits it may be for one of three reasons. The first is that so far as the various departments of this government are concerned there is no coordination. I am not going into any detail in that connection except to say that one of the strongest objections to recruiting has been the fact that the men in Canada did not receive fair treatment in the matter of transportation while on leave. The minister now has seen fit to remove that objection in large measure. Why was it not removed months ago? Six months ago the minister said it could not and would not be done.

Mr. RALSTON: Oh, no. If my hon. friend will permit me, what I said exactly was that free transportation could not be given. I stated that I would consult with the railways to see if there could be a reduction of fares; I did that, and that reduction has been made.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that was the last statement, after hon. members had brought up the matter time and again from June, 1940, on. It was postponed and put off. To-day that criticism has borne fruit. Why? Simply because of the fact that public opinion has been aroused and has demanded that something be done. One of the salient criticisms that I direct against this government to-day—and I say this in all kindliness—is that in many things it will not move until public opinion forces it to move.

Let me go back to the situation in Saskatchewan and western Canada generally. I have mentioned the wonderful record of the Ukrainian people and what I have said applies to Canadians of other racial descents in my province. One of the things most seriously hampering recruiting is the attitude that was taken by this government in an order in council passed on September 25, 1940, with regard to the Doukhobors. These people are antagonistic to any participation in warfare. Everyone, of course, respects religious scruples. The Doukhobors came to Canada, their rights being contained in an order in council dated December 6, 1898, which included the following paragraph with regard to military service:

> The minister recommends that under the power vested in your excellency in council by the above provision, the Doukhobors, settling permanently in Canada, be exempted unconditionally, from service in the militia, upon the production in each case of a certificate of membership from the proper authorities of their community.

That was the exemption; that was the pledge upon which they settled in Canada. What happened in September, 1940? This government set up a higher type of citizenship for the Doukhobors in Saskatchewan and British Columbia than is enjoyed by any British citizen in this dominion when it passed an order in council extending the order in council of 1898 to—> —the descendants of such immigrants who have continued without interruption to be members of the aforesaid sect or denomination . . .

The other day I was speaking to a Ukrainian who has two sons overseas with the forces of this country. He pointed out the situation in reference to the Doukhobors and said, "Nobody objects to their not having to fight in the armed forces of this country, but what did they do?" They refused to take their medical examinations when they were called up; they just did not turn up. Did the government punish any of them? And when the question of exemption was brought up they were ordered to appear before the military tribunal set up in the province of Saskatchewan, or at least they were ordered to appear along with all the others.

Mr. RALSTON: Not a military tribunal.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: The tribunal headed by Hon. Mr. Justice Embury.

Mr. RALSTON: Not a military tribunal.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Then what do you call it?

Mr. RALSTON: The tribunal under the Department of National War Services.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: That is it. Did they turn up when everybody else did? No. The Doukhobors said, "We will stay at home," and at home they stayed, and as yet they have not been proceeded against. This is what they said, according to the statement I have here: "We refuse to serve in any capacity. We will not leave our farms. We will refuse to appear for medical examination." The toleration of that sort of thing does not encourage recruiting. Why should these people, entitled as they are to exemption, be able to flaunt the laws of this country?

I have in my hands a copy of a letter written by the Doukhobors to the Prime Minister on June 24, 1940, which was attached to a return brought down the other day. In this letter the Doukhobors tell the Prime Minister what they are going to do in reference to the matter of military service. There is one paragraph in this letter which may afford an explanation for the unusually tender treatment being accorded these people, under which they are allowed to break the law at their own convenience.

> You would no doubt recall that while on your election campaign the delegation of Named Doukhobors, consisting of Nikoto Popoff, Alex

Cheveldave and others of Blaine Lake, Saskatchewan, have approached you at Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, on or about 29th day of February, regarding this same subject, and were assured by you that while there were no conscription of compulsory service required at that time, the issuance of such exemption certificates was unnecessary. And you have further assured them that the government would grant such exemption certificates to be issued in case the conscription or compulsory service would be necessary.

It was following this letter that the order in council was passed extending the order in council of 1898 to the descendants of those who entered this country at that time. The passing of the order in council has had a detrimental effect on recruiting in the province of Saskatchewan.

Let me give two other reasons. The first I pointed out the other day, and I am asking the minister to take it up with the Minister of Agriculture with a view to having it altered. In Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta the Prairie Farm Assistance Act is in effect, under which the farmer must contribute one per cent of the value of his crop. Yet, Mr. Chairman, if any farmer who has contributed his proportion, as required by law, which assures him against failure in his crop, proceeds to enlist in the army of this country, between May 1 and November 1, he loses his bonus. Surely there is no justification for that. It is penalizing the man who enters Canada's army. We are asking for recruits across the country, in the agricultural districts as elsewhere. How can we ask for recruits if we say to a man who is prepared to leave his farm after sowing his crop, that if he enlists we will take away from him the right to share in the bonus provided by the government of Canada.

Surely that is inexcusable. It is an inexcusable detriment so far as recruiting in the agricultural districts is concerned.

I now pass on to the next matter.

Mr. CRERAR: What does my hon. friend mean by the word "bonus"? He has said that the men will lose the bonus. What does he mean by that?

Mr. ROWE: The hon. member should understand that.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: I thought the minister would have understood what I meant when I referred to a bonus under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, to be paid when there has been a failure in crops. The bonus is then payable, as the minister knows.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is using the term in the wrong sense.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Oh, I do not think I have to be informed by the minister as to just what the right sense is,—no, no! I am using it in this sense: if a man enlists in the army, in answer to the call sent out by the Minister of National Defence, and if there is a failure in the crop area in which that man lives, every other person in that area is entitled to a bonus. I say that the man who enlists should be entitled to a bonus as well.

Quite a few farmers came back after the last war and took up land under the provisions of the Soldier Settlement Act. They have been farming ever since. They are in no better financial position than the general run of farmers, but from year to year they have continued to farm their land. Those men are re-enlisting in this war. What is happening to-day? They leave behind them their dependents, their wives and children. Would hon. members not think that the department in charge of the administration of the Soldier Settlement Act would refrain from badgering those dependents at times such as these?

Let me explain. On March 19, 1941, this government passed an order in council providing as follows:

> Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any of the regulations providing for payment of dependents' or marriage allowances in respect of dependents of members of the Canadian armed forces, that in all cases where the dependents of an enlisted person continue to occupy the farm for which such person is indebted to the director of soldier settlement and in respect of which the contract terms are not otherwise satisfactorily provided for, there may be deducted from the dependents' or marriage allowance amounts sufficient to provide for payment of taxes—

And so on. What an invitation to enlist! Those people go overseas, and this is the way they are treated. I have letters here—one from a man who left his wife and two children on the land. He is advised by the department—I should say that she is advised—that $15 a month is to be deducted from her allowance in order to pay taxes against land owned by the government of Canada. A portion of the letter she received from the department of dependents' allowances reads:

> It is felt that in your own interests and those of your husband this financial provision is essential in order that the debt against your home and farm will not amount to proportions beyond the capacity of the farm to carry.

In effect the department informs her: "Your husband is in the army. You are not going to get the dependents' allowance that others get. You are not to get it, because your husband owes money to the soldier settlement board. We are going to deduct from the allowances made to you."

Mr. RALSTON: As taxes.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes. Here is the explanation—so that the land will not be lost.

Mr. MAYBANK: Is the hon. member referring to municipal taxes which must be paid?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Yes, municipal taxes. From year to year the soldier settlement board before the war continued to keep up the taxes, and did not permit the amount to grow larger and larger; but as soon as the purchaser enlisted in the service of his country his dependents were deprived to the extent of $15 a month of their statutory allowances. I would ask the minister to consider this matter. I have several letters along similar lines, one from a woman whose husband is overseas, and whose older son is overseas. All she has at home with her is a sixteen-year-old boy to assist her in her farming operations.

Mr. ILSLEY: In respect of a city dweller is not the dependents' allowance to cover such charges as rent, as well as charges for living expenses of the dependents? That is to say, is it not expected that out of the dependents' allowance the dependents of a soldier will make some provision for the renting of premises in which they live? Is it not just as fair in a case where there is no rent that at least the taxes should be paid out of the dependents' allowance?

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: Well, that is a legalistic justification of a situation which, I am pointing out, in its practical application is doing harm to recruiting. For years the soldier settlement board has allowed these men to remain on the land. Why now, in an hour of national peril, take it out on their dependents? Legal justification may be found, but after all I suggest to the minister that we are trying to encourage recruiting and that such treatment on the part of any department of the government can have only an adverse result in the recruiting campaign in which Canada is now engaged.

We on this side of the house are not trying to create difficulties for the government. We are pointing out these things with a view to having them remedied. Hon. gentlemen may have read Ambassador Bullitt's speech the other day in which he said that 5,000 tanks and aeroplanes would have spelled the difference between victory and defeat for France. Just a few more men—

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): They had the men.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: They had men dispersed in various parts of the world and men who were lulled into a false sense of security behind what they thought was an impregnable line, the Maginot line, just as some people in Canada think we have an impregnable line for the defence of Canada, in the Atlantic ocean, and apathy was the result.

I place this matter before the committee, Mr. Chairman, with a view to having this injustice remedied, so that we shall be able to secure that enthusiasm which is necessary if we are to overcome the apathy of the last few months engendered as a result of the failure, as I see it, on the part of those in authority to make the people of Canada realize the need and the danger and awfulness of the prospect that faces us unless Canada acts now.

Mr. GREEN: Mr. Chairman, some time later in the day, or perhaps some time tomorrow, the Canadian parliament will adjourn, and apparently the intention is that it may not meet again for a period of approximately five months. During that time anything may happen in this world. Those five months will be the most critical five months in the history of civilization, and as a member of this parliament representing a great riding on the Pacific coast I feel that it is my duty to bring to the attention of the house before we adjourn certain suggestions and criticisms in connection with our war effort.

May I say at the outset that I listened this morning with great interest to the statement of the Prime Minister. I was very much concerned about certain portions of that statement and about the attitude of the leader of Canada, because it seemed to me that he was satisfied with Canada's war effort. I wish most heartily that I could convince myself that he is right, because it would be a great relief to me. But I cannot do so, and I do not believe that the Canadian people are satisfied that Canada is doing everything that can be done. They ask for nothing less. They insist on having that much. There is uneasiness, there is misgiving across this nation to-day, and may I point out some of the things which I think are wrong in connection with our war effort, some of the things which need to be remedied and need to be remedied without further delay.

In the first place we have too few men in Great Britain, too few men in the battle line. There are two battle lines in this war, one in Great Britain and one in the Mediterranean. Our battle line is in Great Britain, and I do not quarrel with such disposition of our troops, for Great Britain is probably the best place they could serve. Canada's battle line is in Great Britain, as every member of this house well knows, and the time of battle is in this year 1941, not in 1942 or 1943, or five years hence. The hour of Canada's battle comes this year. Yet what do we find?

We find that there are brave Canadians in Great Britain, two infantry divisions and corps troops as well as the men serving in the navy and the air force. We find at home here in Canada, thousands of miles from our battle line, two more infantry divisions, and an armoured division and a tank brigade, made up of equally brave men, men who have been recruited, most of them, for over a year; some of them have been on active service for nearly two years—men who are without exception keen to do one thing and one thing only, and that is to get to Great Britain to fight.

It is clear—I do not think this can be contradicted—that these men can receive their final training and their full equipment only after they arrive in Great Britain. They cannot get these things here in Canada. It is equally clear that if they were sent to Great Britain it would be a spur to recruiting in Canada. Nothing would make it easier to get recruits in Canada. It is clear also that sending them to Great Britain would improve the morale of the troops themselves, and it is obvious that Great Britain needs every fighting man she can get. Our motherland has had to call up men in their late thirties. We find this statement made in April by a leading British general; I quote from the Vancouver Sun of April 15, from a Canadian Press dispatch:

> London, April 15.—Lieutenant-General Sir Wilfrid Lindsell, in charge of administration, home forces, indicated to-day that the war office is ready to equip the Canadian tank brigade when it comes to England to join the Canadian corps.
> "The more divisions of Canadians to arrive here the better," General Lindsell declared.

Mr. RALSTON: The more divisions we can send the better, and my hon. friend knows as well as anybody why they are not going faster.

Mr. GREEN: No, that is one thing your hon. friend does not know. I cannot understand why portions at least of these divisions have not been sent over to England long before this.

Mr. RALSTON: If my hon. friend will think twice he can imagine the reason. He knows the demands on shipping around the cape in the last three months.

Mr. GREEN: I sometimes wonder whether the wish, whether the desire to get fighting men to England from Canada is as strong as some people would have us believe.

Mr. RALSTON: It is as strong as I could wish.

Mr. GREEN: In January of this year the Minister of National Defence announced to Canada that Canada's commitment for this year would be a third division, an armoured division, and a tank brigade, and he said again yesterday that that was Canada's commitment for the year. I could not understand the way in which he used that word "commitment." Surely the position is such that if Canada's commitment for this year is too small, it may be too small for all time. We may be wiped out in this country. Things have happened since last January. Let us review our commitment in the light of events which have taken place since then. The year is almost half over, and yet none of these troops have gone to Great Britain. I say to the government that they should be sent over just as quickly as possible and that the fourth division should also be sent to Great Britain instead of being kept in Canada on what might be called home guard duties.

The second point that I wish to place before the minister is this. I believe that the fighting departments, the navy, the army and the air force, are not adapting themselves to modern warfare as quickly as they should. One has the feeling that the Department of National Defence has become departmentalized into three channels—navy, army and air channels. Things have been happening recently in Europe, particularly in Greece and in Crete, and I suggest that we should set up in our defence department a small war council to direct the whole military effort of Canada, having in mind all arms of the service.

For example, why should we not raise air divisions in Canada such as the Germans used with such success in Crete? I understand that they are smaller in personnel than the ordinary infantry division. Why should we not train such troops in Canada? Let us build up air divisions which could be used in the forefront of the battle when the time comes to take the offensive. The men could be trained here in Canada much more easily than in Great Britain, where they would be subject to attack by enemy bomber and fighter planes. No arm of the service would be so likely to attract recruits as air divisions, and such divisions would be invaluable not only overseas but during the time of their training here for the defence of Canada should it be necessary to defend Canadian territory.

I suggest also that full scope is not being given to Canadian initiative. One of the greatest assets of the Canadian man and the Canadian woman is his and her initiative, and I suggest that that quality should be used to the full at this time; let us make more use of the initiative of those in civilian life, of our citizen soldiers, and of course of Canadians in the permanent force. Let us not in all these matters slavishly follow Great Britain. Conditions are different over there. Moreover, as we found out in the last war, the British do not always fight in the most efficient way. Brave as they are, they make mistakes, just as others do.

In the third place, I suggest that the ministry are not facing the facts about manpower. I do not wish to say anything which will hurt the minister's recruiting campaign—

Mr. RALSTON: It is not mine. It is the campaign of Canada.

Mr. GREEN: Well, the recruiting campaign of Canada. As the minister knows already, I have offered to help him in any way I can. But there is this fact to consider. This is not the only recruiting campaign which will be carried on. It will be necessary continuously to raise recruits, and are we to take it that the minister will object indefinitely, or until the end of the war, to anything that may be said which might be considered as affecting adversely his recruiting campaigns? I am sure he does not mean that. I believe he wishes to be fair, and that he would not wish seriously to question the right of any member of the opposition to point out defects in present recruiting methods.

Speaking on this subject, the minister told us on June 5, as reported in Hansard, page 3534:

> I have every reason to believe that, with the acceleration which has taken place in the campaign, and with the assurances we have received, the campaign will be a complete success.

Now that, Mr. Chairman, is soothing the Canadian people; I do not think it is putting the facts squarely before them. It is a mistake for the minister to make statements of that kind. May I cite a statement made by Major-General Alexander, officer commanding the Pacific command, as reported in the Vancouver papers on May 31. It is a call for volunteers, and begins as follows:

> An urgent call for volunteers for the Canadian active army was issued to-day by Major-General R. O. Alexander, general officer commanding-in-chief, Pacific command.

In his statement General Alexander used these words:

> A special recruiting campaign is now being carried on from coast to coast. The result of this campaign in this district, to date, has been far below the actual and urgent need.

That statement was confirmed on June 7, six days ago, in an editorial in the Vancouver Sun which, as the minister knows, is a strong supporter of the government—

The CHAIRMAN: Order, please. I have allowed the hon. gentleman a great deal of latitude, but certainly it would be against all the recognized rules of debate in the house to continue much longer any more than the briefest references to statements in the press. I do not want to restrict discussion at this hour of the session, and the minister yesterday agreed that the discussion should be wide open. On the other hand, to read articles at too great a length is against the rules of debate.

Mr. GREEN: I wish merely to read three short paragraphs from this editorial, because it shows the position with regard to recruiting on the Pacific coast. It says:

> Recruiting has fallen down in this province. There is no use blinking the fact. We have got to face it, and see what must be done about it. The army wants 32,000 men from all Canada, 3,100 of them from British Columbia. Mr. Ralston told the House of Commons this week they had about one-quarter the needed number.
> When Mr. Ralston says this is "satisfactory" we wonder where he gets his complacency. The drive has been on since May 11, and is scheduled to finish at the end of June.
> In British Columbia they have still to get 2,445 men between now and the end of the month. In four days of this month they added only 91 men.

I suggest to the minister that he would be more likely to get recruits if he placed that position squarely before the Canadian people. Do not let them believe that this recruiting campaign is going well if it is not.

There are reasons why the campaign is not going well, and I believe they should be pondered by the government, particularly in view of the fact that further recruits will be called for from time to time.

One unfavourable circumstance, of course, is the failure to use the enthusiasm of young Canadians which manifested itself so clearly when the war broke out. This is ancient history, and I do not intend to say anything with regard thereto except this, that it has engendered in the minds of many of these young men the attitude, "Oh, they would not take me when I was willing to go, now they can come and get me." One encounters that feeling time and time again in talking to these young men. There is no lack of courage among them. I think we must be most careful not to accuse them of lack of courage, no matter from what part of Canada they come or from what race they spring.

Another point which is worrying them is the inequality of sacrifice. Here is a young man in a job; he is willing to enlist; he enlists; another young man comes and takes over his job. There is that possibility always present in the minds of these men. An employer who operates big logging camps on the Queen Charlotte islands, writing me a few days ago, pointed out this fact. He said:

> Take for instance, our own operation on the Queen Charlotte islands; eighty-five per cent of our crew is now composed of foreigners; most of them are not naturalized. These men are taking the places of young Canadians who are to a great extent being used as home guards.

That is the position which the minister has to face.

Then, let the government not forget that it took over the direction of the young man power of Canada when it brought in compulsory training. Now the tendency of these young men is to wait for a lead. They wait for the government to say what is to be done next. Our whole way of living has changed since the last war. We are subject to government direction in many, many more ways than we were at that time. That is another reason why these young men are waiting,—waiting to be directed into whatever channel they are required to go, waiting for action by the government. I am convinced that the government must face the possibility, and face it now, that it will have to decide who is to serve, and how. That applies not only to the men but to the women. Eventually we shall have to put every man and woman in this country in his or her proper place in this war effort, and the government has to accept the responsibility for making the decisions with regard to who goes where.

Another reason why these young men have not been enlisting is the treatment given to men already in the forces. I hate to say this, but I must, because I believe it is true and is important. It may be that the cause has been the great rush of events; there have been so many things to do. But in this war, far more even than in the last, Canada must go to any length to see that the men of her fighting forces are properly treated. Only in that way can she get volunteers in adequate numbers in this war.

Take for example the question of dependents' allowances. I find in Saturday Night of May 31, 1941, a full-page advertisement calling for recruits:

> Step up and step out in a uniform!
> Down below are these words:
>
> You are needed now for active service.
> Rates of pay in the ranks.

The rates of pay are set out, and then we read this:

> Dependent allowances in cash: $35 to wife, $12 each per month for 2 children—only 3 dependents per soldier.

That decision was made at the beginning of the war because Canada did not want men with more than two children to enlist. Men who had more than two children did enlist, but they have never been able to get allowances for more than the two. Now we are calling for any Canadian and every Canadian to enlist, and yet men with three or four children can get only an allowance for two. That is an unfair situation, it is one which will hamper recruiting, and it should be remedied without further delay.

A week or two ago there was an argument in this house about pensions. In the last war any man who enlisted was covered by what was known as the insurance principle of pensions, or the "incurred on" principle. In other words, if he incurred disability on service, even here in Canada, he got a pension. In this war that has been greatly modified. It was wiped out for a year, from some date in May last year until a few weeks ago, in so far as the men serving in Canada were concerned. However, within the last two weeks some change has been made, as was announced in the house. But we did not go the full length, we did not make that insurance principle applicable to the men who are going to England to do the fighting for us. Things like that hamper recruiting.

Again, we have not to-day provision in Canada for reconditioning the men who are discharged from the forces. A man comes back with a stomach ulcer and is discharged. If he is in need of active remedial treatment he can get treatment in a pension hospital for the period of a year. But as between the man who can qualify and the man who is put out of the army but is yet not really fit to go to work, there is a large gap. Canada should set up some sort of reconditioning depots or convalescent camps, so that these men can be nursed back to health. In many cases they could be put back into the forces, not perhaps to go overseas, but to relieve other men who are fit to go overseas.

Further, we have not yet decided whether the privileges of land settlement will be extended to the men of the present forces, or whether they will be able to get soldier insurance. Those two matters should be considered right away and, in my opinion, put into operation. They would provide just that much more attraction to the men we wish to enlist.

Finally, members of this government may not like this, but I believe it is true—the general attitude of this Canadian government is wrong, because it is moved as the result of its fears. An outstanding example of that is what it has done recently with regard to wheat for Japan. Time and again this government moves because it is afraid of something, or more afraid of something else. That is an attitude which is entirely out of line with the courage of the Canadian people. They are calling at this time for fighting leadership, and to fighting leadership they are entitled. Right Hon. Winston Churchill said a day or two ago in London, at a gathering of dominion and allied representatives:

> But here also, duly authorized by the parliament and democracy of Britain, are gathered the servants of the ancient British monarchy and accredited representatives of the British dominions beyond the seas, of Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa, of the empire of India, of Burma, and of our colonies in every quarter of the globe. They have drawn their swords in this cause. They will never let them fall till life is gone or victory is won.

Till life is gone or victory is won. That is what the Canadian people face to-day. I plead with the government to announce as our war aim the smashing of Germany. Let it be as simple as that—that we are out to smash Germany—and let this government give bold and tough leadership. If it will do that, the Canadian people will rush to follow.

Mr. TURGEON: I had not intended to say anything in this debate, particularly since we have reached the last stage of this part of the session, and especially since we are discussing estimates; but as I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Green) I began to realize some of the reasons why there is not a better response to the efforts that are being made for recruiting than we have been having in the last little while.

I am decidedly of the opinion that the hearts of the people of Canada have not yet been properly touched with what this war means to us. Every now and then I ask myself why that is, and I am afraid I have found the answer during the last ten or fifteen minutes.

Let us go back and see what has taken place during the time that we, the elected representatives of the people of Canada, have been sitting in this House of Commons. There is a recruiting campaign going on, and very much depends upon the success or failure of that campaign. I am certainly hoping it will be a success. I believe that hon. members who have been speaking also share that hope. But what is going to be the result if it is a failure? How long has this house been in session? What have we been doing that is of importance to the war effort during the many months that we have been sitting in this chamber? The hon. member for Vancouver South said that he had told the Minister of National Defence that he was willing to do everything he could to help to make the campaign for recruits a success. Of course, he is willing to help; he is anxious to do what every hon. member in this house wishes to do, and has probably made an effort to help the Minister of National Defence. He read extracts from newspapers to indicate that if the campaign is going to succeed it must succeed during the month of June. Why was not some effort made to permit the members of the house to get away, at an earlier date, from this portion of our parliamentary duties so that we could assist the Minister of National Defence in making the campaign a success? I challenge any member of the house to look over the records during the last six or eight weeks and find more than ten per cent of what has taken place to have been of benefit to the war effort of Canada.

I know that when I say that, if it should be reported, I am perhaps helping to bring down the level of this institution of parliament in public opinion. But what I say is true. As I listened to the hon. member, he told us of some of the causes of the lack of response on the part of the young men of Canada to the appeal to engage themselves by voluntary effort in this war, which is a war of Canada's, just as much as it is a war of the people of the British isles or of any other part of the world. But did he appeal to the young men of Canada to put aside the sense of injustice to which he made reference and to enlist anyway because of the gravity of the situation?

Mr. GREEN: I am talking to the old men of Canada to-day, I am afraid.

Mr. TURGEON: Very well. But what the hon. member has said to-day is, after all, only a repetition of what has been said in this house practically since the beginning of the war. The hon. gentleman read extracts from newspapers. These same newspapers time after time have devoted all their energy to creating disaffection in the young men of Canada toward those who are in the armed forces and those who have not yet enlisted. Unfortunately that is what a good many of us have been doing in this House of Commons. Effort after effort has been made to destroy the confidence of the people, old men and young men, women and children of Canada, in the government that is charged with the responsibility of carrying on this war. To-day, some people not being satisfied with trying to destroy confidence in the ministers themselves, there appears to be taking place an effort to destroy confidence even in the military men who are at the head of the armed forces of Canada. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and through you every hon. member wherever he may sit, can we induce young men to enlist on a voluntary basis by continually trying to destroy confidence in the men who are going to lead them, by continually referring to the injustices that without question have been heaped upon the men who suffered from the last war? We must do more than call the attention of the men and women of Canada to things that some of us think to be unjust. In addition to that, we must show them that in spite of anything that may have the appearance of injustice and, in fact, be unjust, it is their duty first of all to assist Canada when this, their country, is in distress, and second, we should show them on every possible occasion that if they do not assist Canada to-day, then Canada will not be able to assist in saving the world from the fate that is threatening it at this moment.

Another cause for the lack of response is, I understand, this. We have heard expressions in this house, and echoes of these expressions in the country at large, and it has struck me that unfortunately many men, leading men who have set ideas are thinking more of the particular idea that they have in mind than of making a serious effort to help in the winning of the war. For instance, there are very many who are strongly in favour of conscription, in opposition to the voluntary system. I am taking no exception whatever to those who wish for conscription, and when I make the general statement which I am about to make I do not say that it includes every person who is in favour of conscription. But I ask hon. members, is there not a tendency on the part of those men and women of Canada who want conscription to place all their energies behind a campaign to bring about conscription rather than to place those energies behind a campaign to make the war effort of Canada stronger and better and more successful than it is to-day? The same thing is true of those whose main idea centres round questions of social progress and reform. Is there not a tendency on their part, or on the part of many of them, to place all their energies behind a campaign to bring about more and more rapid social progress rather than to direct their energies towards accelerating the speed of Canada's war effort?

Turn back to what I said about the records of this house. I have wondered why we were not released long ago to go out and help the ministry of defence in getting recruits. I said that if hon. members would look back over the last six weeks, they would not find more than 10 per cent of the record of the doings from day to day of this house devoted entirely to the effort to win the war. What is more, I venture to say it would be found that nearly 50 per cent of the debates in this house consist of repetitions, restatements, of what has already been said by some other hon. member, repetition of question after question, each question dealing with something that has already been answered. We who represent the people of Canada would have been doing far more service to Canada, to Great Britain, to the British empire and to all who are allied with us if we had been out in the country, each where he thinks he can do the most good, making, first, an appeal for recruits and, second, trying to convince the people of what every one of us believes to be true, namely, that whatever injustices have been allowed to germinate and grow in the past are soon going to be uprooted. We who sit here, no matter on which side of the house we sit, know that as a result of this war and the efforts being made in connection with it, there is going to be a greater measure of social progress in the next few years than there has been during a century in any country of the world. We know that; why can we not each one go to the country and convince the people who listen to us of what is taking place, that they should not lose hope of a greater measure of justice than was given to the men who enlisted and fought for us in the last war. Let us try to make them see, notwithstanding some of the disaffections which naturally are theirs to-day, that the only way to reach that state of social progress is to make certain that Canada and those associated with Canada win this war, and that the only way in which Canada can win the war is to have her people more deeply touched with the necessity of winning it than they are to-day.

I rose to speak not for the purpose of chastising but rather for the purpose of suggesting that from now on we should stop trying to destroy confidence in our leaders both civil and military, stop trying to destroy confidence in the determination of the people of Canada, and set ourselves to restore that confidence and try to impress upon them the necessity of realizing that although mistakes may have been made they should join the colours and do everything they can to have Canada carry on a greater and more stupendous war effort even than she has been doing in the past.

With that hope I take my seat. I trust we shall not be here much longer, and I sincerely hope that when we return in the summer or the fall we shall devote ourselves with all our capacity and ability and energy to trying to create, always to create, a greater war effort and not to destroying confidence in our military and civil leaders.

Mr. QUELCH: I shall not take any longer than the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. He has given some reasons why he believes our war effort has been slowed up, and I wish to touch upon one or two other reasons which I think are of equal importance. I come first to a matter which has been referred to, which I think should be clarified and in which I am myself interested. I have no intention of getting into an argument as to whether or not a member of parliament who is in the armed forces should have the right to address public meetings outside the house. If, however, it is considered unwise to allow these men to make public speeches outside the house, the same rule should apply equally to all hon. members, whether Liberals or Conservatives, Social Crediters, or C.C.F-ers: also whether they be colonels or privates or generals. If, on the other hand, that is not to be the rule and Liberal members in the forces are to be allowed to address public meetings in praise of the government's war effort, then I think members of the forces who may be Conservatives also should be allowed to address public meetings in criticism of the government's war effort. Otherwise the minister is going to leave himself open to the charge that he is using the army for the purpose of spreading political propaganda, and I think we all agree that it is an undesirable state of affairs when politics are allowed to enter the army.

The last speaker referred to the war effort. Can we be satisfied with our war effort to-day? Are we making an all-out war effort? I should say that the answer to this question is most emphatically, no. I say that because, if we lose this war—and I am not going immediately to add that we are bound to win, because I believe that unless we have a far greater realization of what we are up against, we face a very real danger of losing the war—it will be because we have failed to develop the resources of this nation to their full capacity as rapidly as possible. When I mention resources I am referring to the financial and industrial resources, and, lastly, to the man-power of the nation. The Conservative members have urged the conscription of man-power, but I think the minister raised a very good point when he stressed the fact that so far we have not conscripted finance. This group believes that before any attempt whatever is made to conscript the man-power of this nation, we should and must have the conscription of our financial resources, then of our industrial resources, and, finally, of our man-power.

The other day the hon. member for Victoria, British Columbia (Mr. Mayhew), stated that before the war no one in this country realized that we could expand our production as we have; and the hon. member also stated that he had listened to many speeches from this corner of the house. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that if he had really listened to our speeches he must have been impressed by the fact that day in and day out, from 1935 to 1939, we stressed the need for expanding the production of this country. Day after day we pointed out that the industries of this nation were running at only a very small percentage of their capacity, and we urged that they should be expanded. Unfortunately, during that period the Department of Finance considered it necessary to impose a deflationary policy upon this country; and during the period from 1932 to 1939, while Germany was building up probably the greatest army and air force that this world has ever seen, we in this country were allowing industry to remain in a dormant state. We were allowing half a million men to remain unemployed, with a million people on relief. The result was that when war was declared we found that industry was in low gear and that the skilled labour was not available to put industry immediately into high gear. Men had to be trained. Men were recruited for the army. Many applying for enlistment were turned back because they were physically unfit. Twelve years of the lack of those things necessary to maintain a healthy existence had sabotaged their health; and ever since then we have been discharging men from the army at the rate of eighteen hundred a month. Who will say that the responsibility for that condition does not rest directly upon the Minister of Finance, who compelled this country to operate under a deflationary policy?

In connection with the sabotaging of industry in this country, we find that those in charge of the financial policies of Britain have been going to even greater extremes. I should like to quote just three lines from a speech made in the British House of Commons by Mr. Stokes, who, I believe, is a Labour member of parliament, quoting a statement by Mr. Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England. Mr. Stokes reports Mr. Norman as having said in 1939, just prior to the outbreak of war:

> We will have to give Germany a loan of £50,000,000. We may never be paid back but it will be less loss than the fall of nazism.

That man is still governor of the Bank of England and is still largely controlling the financial policy of that country. Yet when he made that statement he branded himself a traitor, and should have been interned long since. To what degree does the Bank of England dominate the Bank of Canada? On previous occasions we have asked that the correspondence between the Bank of England and the Bank of Canada be tabled, but our request has been refused. Members of this house are entitled to know just what kind of policy has been urged upon this country by the Bank of England. I say that the governor of the Bank of England has proved himself to be a traitor, and I believe that all association with this bank, so far as Canada is concerned, should be cut off.

I do not consider that Germany's successes have been achieved on the field of battle alone. I think Germany's successes have been very largely due to acts of treachery committed by people in high places in various allied countries. We know that happened in Norway; we know it happened in France. I am suggesting that it has happened and is happening in England, and I am wondering to what extent it is happening in Canada to-day. There are many things in this country that people cannot understand. As the hon. member for Battle River stated the other day, there are brakes on our war effort. We think those brakes should be removed, and should have been removed a long time ago. We all know that from September, 1939, to May, 1940, we slumbered. Apparently we felt that we were safe so long as the Maginot line remained, but after May, 1940, we suddenly realized that it was necessary to wake up. But it is impossible for a country to wake up immediately and develop at once a fighting force ready to go overseas. Now we are told that one reason why we cannot expand our production at a greater rate is the lack of skilled labour. The other day I made the statement that we should do the same with labour as we have done in connection with the army. We do not refuse to take men into the army on the ground that they are not skilled, although the soldier of to-day has become a highly skilled man. We take men into the army and train them, and I maintain that we should do exactly the same so far as industry is concerned. We should take unskilled people and give them the necessary training to enable them to take their places in industry. The other day the hon. member for Essex East asked if I was aware of the fact that we were training or had trained in the neighbourhood of fifty thousand men, but those men were not trained to the point that when they finished their training they were able to go into industry. What we lack to-day is a link between the schools and industry; in other words, we need schools to give advanced training. In the United States they have schools that provide such training, but so far as I know, there is only one such school in Canada, namely, in British Columbia.

[Mr. Quelch.]

The other day we were discussing this question in the pensions committee, and it was admitted that in the west there is a very long list of people waiting for training. Many people are trying to get into those schools in the west, but there is no room for them. So far as the east is concerned, they seem to be actually short of applicants. I suggested that we might well move some of the people from the west to the schools of the east, but I was told that it would be an expensive business. Then I suggested that we might put more schools into operation in the west in order to give these people the training they want, but I was told that then we would be training more men than industry could absorb. Yet in this chamber we had been told by the Minister of Munitions and Supply that we had a shortage of skilled labour. One of those statements cannot be true. If industry cannot expand because we have not skilled labour, then we want more skilled labour. If we want more skilled labour, then we should equip more schools in the west to train those men. Yet we are told that there is no use in having more schools, because we would be putting men into the labour market who could not find jobs. Those are questions which people are asking. A situation like that will do more harm to our war effort than will any other situation of which I could conceive. For this government to say that they are doing everything in their power to expand the war effort, while there are thousands of people throughout Canada looking for jobs, just does not make sense.

I did not intend taking the time of the committee further, because I know it is the desire to close down either to-night or to-morrow. For this reason I shall not speak at greater length. I suggest to the minister, however, that if we do not do anything else at this time to expand industry, we should at least put into operation advanced training schools which will take up that slack between the state of a man's training after he comes out of the training schools, and the state of training required by industry—one of skilled labour.

Mr. ADAMSON: As one of those who have been in some way entrusted with a certain degree of responsibility for the success of the recruiting drive, I believe it my duty to mention certain conditions which I have observed and believe to be general in that part of Canada in which I live. These are circumstances of which I have learned while in contact with troops and officers from all parts of Canada.

There can be no doubt that those who are charged with the recruiting effort to-day are doing everything humanly possible to get recruits. In the metropolitan area of the city of Toronto, alone, we have fifty recruiting stations. The officers entrusted with this grave task have worked zealously day and night. So far as possible we have enlisted the services of patriotic civilians. The work has never flagged. I disagree, however, with the minister's statement with regard to national service. I am not advocating anything; it is not my duty to advocate. But I believe, and I believe this in absolute sincerity, that a national service act would not disrupt the country, but rather would unite it.

I believe the Canadian people are looking anxiously for some such act, some such move. That is my opinion. I have seen and talked with officers and men in the army, with civilians, with youngsters coming out of school, and I believe they would welcome it. If this government finds it necessary to enact such a measure, I make this pledge, that so long as I am in the public life of this dominion I shall never use the discomfiture of the government, if they have to bring in national service, for political purposes. Had this been done ever since the last war there would have been no talk of racial disunity in Canada to-day. That is all I have to say with regard to compulsory national service.

I know the recruiting figures; I see them every day. I am naturally not allowed to mention them in this house, but I can say that we need men and that the need is imperative. It has not been impressed on the country how badly we do need men, and that we need the best men we can possibly get for the army. The man in the army to-day, particularly in the armoured formations, has to be a better mechanic, a better signaller, a better craftsman, a better tradesman than the man in the factory. We want the best in the army. The man in the army must be prepared to do all the things that a man in industry must do. He must be prepared to do them in the most frightful discomfort and he must be prepared to do them twice as fast and in shocking working conditions. I do not believe that we have stressed the vital need for the best we have in Canada for the army to-day.

The army is the highest of the professions in Canada at the present time. I notice that there is a certain bitterness about the war effort, a bitterness which is growing. The Globe and Mail of Toronto had an editorial this morning which would repay everyone's reading. It says that civilian morale is bad. There can be no question about the justification of that editorial. Civilian morale is bad all across Canada because we have not had from the beginning that candour, that downright leadership which we must expect. It should be a great thing to be a Canadian. People are now going round as if it were a disgrace, but it is a great thing to be a Canadian. We are a great country. Let us see to it that our effort is put out in this war and that the name of Canada will remain gallantly at the masthead.

With regard to national service, I should like to quote from an article by General Wavell. I will be brief, but I think there is a message in it for us. He said:

> The soldier is apt to disregard or underrate the statesman's difficulties. I remember one of our present politicians giving an apt illustration of this tendency. He instanced a soldier's impatience at the slowness of the statesman to implement some political measure which was agreed to be essential, say compulsory service. If you agree it has to be done, why not do it at once? says the soldier. The politician might retort thus: When you come to a river line defended by the enemy, which you must cross to reach your objective, do you assault it forthwith? Of course not, the soldier will reply; it is essential to reconnoitre, to group the artillery, to construct bridges, to draw the enemy's attention away from the point of crossing, and so on. Just so, says the politician, so must I prepare public opinion, anticipate objections, draw up a measure which will be fair to all classes, arrange for the medical examination of men liable, decide on exemptions, and so forth.

That article has a great message for us in Canada to-day.

With regard to man-power, had we been able to have a division in Libya it is altogether probable that to-day we would still occupy Libya. We have recently been told by Mr. Churchill that the army of the Nile consisted of a mere two divisions, so that we can see how desperate the need is for man-power and machines. These are matters that must be brought home to the Canadian people. We are all in this war, every single one of us. Another division in the near east might have entirely averted the threat to Suez. I do not believe for an instant that Suez will fall, but I believe we must have more men for the near east, and I believe the Canadian troops are the most mechanically minded in the British empire. I see in the headlines of the papers to-night that Vichy reports that Canadian troops are already in Syria. May I ask the minister whether there is any truth in that statement. Is he prepared to make a statement, or is it a matter on which he cannot speak?

That is all I wanted to say, but I wish to impress upon the committee that what we must do, all of us, is to go out and get our pride back, for it is a great thing to be a Canadian. We are a great country, and we are not going to get our pride back by stopping criticism. We are not going to do it by innuendo. Talk about racial differences, as if we were a split country, must stop. We must be a united country, and I believe we are. I believe we are capable of going ahead, and it is up to the government to give the lead. The country is with the government, but it is demanding action. I am absolutely convinced that no matter what measures may be brought down, the government will find no difficulty from the Canadian people. But they will find grave and serious difficulty, even peril, if things continue as they are and Canadians continue to believe that the government is not prosecuting this war with an all-out 100 per cent total effort.

Mr. GILLIS: I was tempted to rise because of a statement made across the floor. It was said that some of our difficulties at this time were due to the fact that men were trying to stress and to press for social reforms that were not called for. Another hon. gentleman to my right makes the statement that Canada, when she moved for the compulsory training of the youth of the country, indicated that she had taken a step in the direction of conscription. I do not agree with these statements. Most of the discussion this afternoon I would construe as an attempt to force the government on the question of conscription. For the past two months, listening to the different ministers reporting to the house on the activities of their respective departments, I have become convinced that it is not man-power of which Canada is short and that there is absolutely no necessity at this time to talk about the conscription of man-power.

We have in Canada to-day under arms and in training camps many more men than we are capable of equipping. I would also call the attention of the hon. gentleman who suggests that military training is now compulsory in Canada, to the fact that when we passed the mobilization act we gave the government power to mobilize the whole financial and industrial resources of the country; and if there is need at this time for conscription of anything, it is conscription of the resources of the country to manufacture the necessary arms to equip the men who are in our camps already. In my part of the dominion I do not think there is any difficulty in securing recruits, because a large percentage of the men who are employed in the coal mines at all events, are only too anxious to get into the army; for leaving the coal mine to go to war is a vacation to them. I think the recruiting officers will find that that is the situation there.

We can make speeches in the house until further orders, but all the oratory in the world is not going to cure the situation. We must do something about the causes that affect the war situation generally. In addressing myself to the Minister of National Defence I am not going to deal with production and other matters which have nothing to do with his department, but I should like to bring to his attention one or two things which I believe have an adverse effect on the morale of our army particularly, and on the men who are going into training at the present time. Complaint after complaint is made that men who have enlisted for military training and are paid $1.30 a day go into the training camps and are put to work on national defence construction projects, in the erection of huts and so forth in the camp, replacing the ordinary labour which should be employed on such work. The result is that the men who have enlisted for military training find themselves doing carpenter's work or plumber's work or some other form of labour which should be done by men outside the army who are dependent for their livelihood on these particular lines of work.

I would call the minister's attention to a brief which was prepared by local union 1588 in Sydney, of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America. The local union has a membership of five or six hundred, and in this brief they complain specifically of the erection of huts by enlisted men. That is not good for the army itself. The man in uniform does not want that kind of work; it is not good for recruiting, because those who would join up for military training see the men in the camps engaged in that kind of work, and it is not good for labour to have men in uniform doing the work at a lower wage than is paid outside for such labour. This brief speaks very strongly against soldiers being used on any national defence project where there is a labour supply available, as there is in Sydney. It gives many instances where work of this kind has been done by men in uniform, and if the minister has not a copy of the brief I think he should familiarize himself with its contents. As I say, this sort of thing is bad both for the potential soldier and for the soldier himself, and if it is being carried on right across Canada in community after community, we can all appreciate what the effect will be.

Some hon. gentleman has made the suggestion here that the services of each and every individual who belongs to any of the services at this time should be fully utilized on the basis of his experience, that he should be placed in a position where he can make his maximum contribution. I agree heartily with that statement.

I would call specifically to the minister's attention the case of a young man who came over here from the United States, as many are doing at the present time, in order to enlist. He left a good job in his own country, being sufficiently interested in the principles for which Canada has engaged in this war. He is a newspaper correspondent who has been all over the world, knows the international situation thoroughly, and was prepared to make a contribution in his own field. It is some ten months since he came to Ottawa and offered his services. He was advised at that time that the way in which he could make his best contribution would be to get into the army. He enlisted as a private soldier and has been at the depot since then in that capacity.

He started in to make a valuable contribution to the army. I believe that if there are any people in Canada whose morale must be built up, it is the young men who have enlisted in Canada's forces. In a great many instances Canada has not been very good to them in the past, and there is no doubt that most of them are coming into the army in a bad frame of mind. This young man undertook the responsibility of issuing a magazine. He published biographical sketches of the Minister of National Defence and the Minister of National Defence for Naval Services, and carried on a line of education—I would not call it propaganda—for the benefit of the troops from camp to camp. What cooperation did he receive? From the beginning he had to turn out that magazine from his own pay of $39 a month. He continued that work until last month, by which time he had gone so far in the red that he had to discontinue it. He got no financial assistance from anybody; he rented a typewriter at his own expense, bought his own stencils, and did all the work himself. He has tried every way he can to get into the field wherein he has specialized. I should have thought that a United States newspaper correspondent with contacts all over his own country and with credentials from some of the most influential people there could have been fully utilized in offsetting the influences of Lindbergh and the isolationist groups in the United States. But that was not done, and this young man to-day is in a frame of mind that he wants to be discharged. If the minister is not aware of the case of which I have spoken, I shall be glad to give him the information privately. I do not care to broadcast these things. I have talked on several occasions to this young man and am convinced that he is all he appears to be. I have confirmed my opinion by reference to the mounted police, who inform me that there is no suspicion of his bona fides, and that his credentials are in order. I do not know why, at this time, when a man of this type volunteers his services, we cannot undertake to place him and those like him where they can make their maximum contribution in influencing United States opinion on behalf of our cause.

Our recruiting campaign, I understand, is somewhat slack in this city. A young man of this type, whose services have not been utilized, and whose treatment may become more widely known, will not have a very good influence on recruiting.

Talking will not cure the conditions to which I have referred. Something must be done. I believe that the Minister of National Defence must accept in the present emergency more responsibility with respect to direction. The government will have to cut through the line of red tape which has been the system for the last twenty or thirty years. It would take one six weeks to put an order through from the Jackson building and to have it finally O.-K-ed and ratified, and that is not good enough to-day. The minister himself must make an investigation—and he is capable of doing so—into what is necessary at this time for the promotion of the best interests of the country in the administration of the department, instead of having the system of pigeon-holes, putting a thing into one pigeon-hole after another, as in the past. He should issue orders directly and have them carried out. He must cut through the maze of red tape which I know exists, has always existed and will always exist until someone is big enough to accept responsibility and will stand up and recognize the emergency, brushing away everything that is irrelevant.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I resent the remarks of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Turgeon) and those of the hon. member for Brantford City (Mr. Macdonald), delivered the other day. Both these gentlemen said the same thing—that we on this side of the house were endeavouring to undermine the confidence of the people of Canada in this government. I do not think either of these gentlemen should have made that statement. They are not right in saying it. Certainly the last thing we have in mind is undermining the confidence of the Canadian people in the government. We have already, on many occasions, offered our cooperation with the government, and they are getting it to-day for the sake of Canada's war effort.

There are many apparently minor matters, however, that mean a great deal to the enthusiasm of the people for a greater effort in connection with the war. For example, I would call the attention of the committee to something that has had a bad effect. Yesterday, a man who has been an outstanding personality in Canada, an eminent Prime Minister of the country—I refer to the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett as he was then—had a very high honour bestowed upon him by His Majesty the King, and it seems to me it was rather small of us not to show some public recognition of that fact on the floor of the house. With other members of the House of Commons, I cabled my congratulations, but I do think that this honour, conferred upon a great Canadian, should have been recognized from the floor of the house. I have received several telegrams from different people who are very much upset over the manner in which that honour was recognized.

Let me assure the government that we are not criticizing without reason. I have listened to a good deal of criticism to-day, and I think it is good for the government that there should be such criticism. To go back to the earlier days of the war, had it not been for the prodding we gave the government, a good many things that have been corrected would have been left untouched. I know it has happened. Let me call the attention of the committee to the words of Mr. Menzies. He said that the people of Australia had said to him: "You go ahead; you lead this country." I say that to the government: "You lead this country, but lead it, and if you go too slow we will prod you." There is no reason, however, why we should be subject to abuse for doing the prodding in a constructive way in an endeavour to secure a better war effort and to have certain things that are not right remedied. I will go further and say, in the words of Mr. Menzies, "If you go too fast we shall be delighted, because we did not expect it of you." That is the attitude which I feel should be taken. In my opinion, I repeat, some recognition should have been given the honour conferred upon Mr. Bennett. I do not see any difference between a man receiving a degree from a university, honoris causa, and receiving an honour from the king for meritorious work. The only difference is that the latter comes from a higher and greater power than a university. It is unfortunate that the honour to Mr. Bennett was not better recognized, because what has happened has had a disturbing effect upon a good many people.

Mr. GREEN: I asked the minister yesterday for the figures of the men discharged from the forces from the beginning of the war. Has he them to-day?

Mr. RALSTON: All discharges to the 31st of May were 32,461, all ranks, including 473 discharged overseas. The number of those returned from overseas and discharged is 1,658. The break-down is, medically unfit, 60 per cent —these are rough percentages—under age, irregular enlistment, 6 per cent; not likely to become efficient, or misconduct, 24 per cent; the note says that the larger number of these took place in the early days of the war. The recent regulations have reduced the number discharged for these causes. The percentage of those transferred to other services is 3 per cent; those discharged for miscellaneous reasons, including compassionate grounds, to resume civil occupation, et cetera, 7 per cent.

Mr. GREEN: At what rate are they being discharged each month?

Mr. RALSTON: Up to May the number was 1,912.

Mr. GREEN: Per month?

Mr. RALSTON: Monthly average for five months.

Mr. COCKERAM: What is being done in the department with regard to women's organizations? The department should take some definite stand and give some assistance to these organizations, which are being developed across Canada. They are useful to the country, and I think we should know something of what they are doing.

Mr. RALSTON: That is something with regard to which I expected the former Minister of National War Services would have made a statement, but owing to the change in portfolio this has been left to his successor. The whole matter of the organization, or of interest in the organization, of women is a much larger subject than simply affects the department of defence. So far as the defence departments are concerned, in order to be ready for whatever plan may be worked out, we are making a survey of all the positions in which women can be utilized, and are receiving reports from all districts, camps and headquarters as well. One of the branches at headquarters now is the D.A.G.(M)—deputy adjutant general (mobilization). That officer is working with the Department of National War Services, particularly in connection with those activities.

Whatever general work is done with regard to the coordination of women's activities in governmental services will be done by the Department of National War Services, and the defence departments will get their requirements from the Department of National War Services. It is anticipated that each defence service will have its own branch in which women who can be employed will be engaged.

Mr. COCKERAM: What is the function of the reserve army? As the minister knows, within the last few weeks their training strength has been cut down by at least 50 per cent, and I believe that those men who joined the reserve army last year did so on the understanding that they would assist their country. But to-day their morale is being definitely destroyed. The minister owes it to the men in the reserve army to tell them what their task is, what is expected of them, and not, merely for the purpose of saving a few dollars, to cut everything from under them at every opportunity.

The commanding officer of my reserve unit has resigned because he was quite dissatisfied with the role that the reserve army has been called upon to play at this time.

Mr. RALSTON: As my hon. friend knows, the role of the reserve army has been definitely laid down in instructions from headquarters. One of its primary functions is to provide reinforcements to the active service force, wherever it is a counterpart to a unit in that force. Second, it must be in such a position as to be ready for mobilization should the necessity arise. Third, it must provide aid to the civil power such as has been the function of the reserve army for many years. These are the three outstanding and primary roles.

My hon. friend speaks of camps. He knows the situation in that regard. We have a great many troops; he knows what our plans are with regard to the movement of troops, and the difficulties in connection with accommodation are considerable. A decision was arrived at with regard to the reserve army, that a certain proportion of its strength should go to camp. The role of the reserve army is well set out, and in a great number of instances reserve units have done remarkably well in the furnishing of reinforcements.

It has been a matter of some disappointment to me in certain instances that the reserve units have not done more. It is said that many men in the reserve army enlisted to do something for their country who did not find it possible to enlist for active service, and at the same time, on top of that, with respect to some units, I have received applications from time to time that units be mobilized. Obviously, one cannot mobilize a unit with any considerable prospect of success if there are not many men in the unit who are prepared to enlist for active service. I do not find fault, but I mention that as one of the difficulties which presented themselves to the department in connection with this very anxious question of reserve units. All of them are eager to serve in some capacity, and many of the communities where they are localized are particularly desirous of being represented in the active service force. But there are difficulties owing to the fact that men who have enlisted with the idea of doing the best they could to serve their country, in such a capacity as a reserve unit might afford in Canada, have been precluded from taking a more active part for various reasons, business, medical or family.

Mr. McCANN: I wish briefly to bring to the attention of the minister and the government the question of medical services in connection with our armed forces. Let me say at the outset that I am not critical of the personnel which goes to make up those particular forces. It is true that there are many square pegs in round holes in this branch of the force, as perhaps has been said of some other branches. By that I mean that it has been necessary to give special training to certain men in the army medical corps where men could have been found who had had that training in their professional and civilian life. I would say to the minister that the medical profession are not convinced that, having in view efficiency and economy, we have the best set-up at the present time. We have three forces: one for the air, one for the navy and one for the land. It is the general opinion that we have more duplication than is necessary. For instance, in the city of Halifax we have hospitals for the men of the navy, the men of the air force and the men of the army. That is an unnecessary duplication of both buildings and personnel and certainly must cost considerably more money. After all, when men in any of these forces become casualties or become ill, when they reach a hospital they are all in the same category. When you have to set up three distinct arms of medical men, you can well imagine that what appears in the papers is true, that there is a shortage of doctors.

Mr. RALSTON: Not if they were all busy.

Mr. McCANN: But they are duplicating work. I am going to suggest how there will not be that shortage if use is made of those who are already in the service. Let me first suggest that instead of spending a good deal of public money for military hospitals, we first make use of the civilian facilities which are already built and equipped and available. That has been done to some extent but not to the extent to which it should be done.

Then, looking further ahead to conditions in the post-war period, if the money were spent on additions to civilian institutions, those could be used to advantage in the after-war period. That is preferable to erecting temporary buildings which will be done away with when the war is over. We could also make use of the staff of these civilian institutions instead of having the military medical staff look after the treatment of men in hospital.

I am also led to believe that there is great duplication in the purchasing of supplies. Old regulations that are in some of the army books are carried out. I have been told by pharmaceutical houses that they receive requisitions for drugs, instruments and other things that are entirely out of date and are not being used in this country.

I bring these suggestions to the ministry not with a view of being critical of the administration. As I say, I have no criticism of the personnel of the army medical corps of the different forces. But I do believe that they could be used to better advantage and that the duplication of services is unnecessary. So far as erecting new hospitals is concerned, that should not be done until such time as civilian institutions are in full use, and when it becomes necessary to build, it should be done as an addition to already existing civilian institutions which are established, and which can be made use of in the post-war period.

Mr. RALSTON: As to duplication of medical services, as my hon. friend knows, the medical service for the air force was separated from that for the army some six or eight or ten months ago after a pretty thorough examination by a medical man who came out from England. I think the ground was that the air force requires special examination on account of the higher medical specifications which are required, and that it was to the advantage of the service that there be separation. My hon. friend will know far better than I the soundness of that view.

The question of the use of civilian hospital facilities has been before us within the last four weeks, and we have found it impossible to lay down any absolute rule that in every case civilian facilities should be used. But we have a rule, and it is being adhered to, that whenever civilian facilities offer themselves the case will be considered on its merits. There is going to be no rigid rule that the army must have a separate hospital no matter what the possibilities are in the particular community where the facilities are needed.

With regard to duplication in purchasing of supplies, I had not heard of that before. My hon. friend also suggested that supplies are being purchased that are outmoded—

Mr. McCANN: And duplication of both supplies and equipment.

Mr. RALSTON: Of course my hon. friend knows that supplies are always bought through the Department of Munitions and Supply. But I will make a note of my hon. friend's point.

[Mr. McCann.]

Mr. JAQUES: I do not know whether the recruiting campaign is entirely to the minister's satisfaction or not. I am not going to argue one way or the other, but it does seem to me that amidst the glamour and excitement of the victory loan campaign the mere recruit must feel like the forgotten man. After all, the problem that faces the common man in Canada at the present time is not so simple as it is in England. In England the people do not have to be told that they must fight or die, kill or be killed. The problem here for the majority of people, not perhaps for members of parliament, but for the masses of the people throughout the country, is not so simple as that. Nor is it made simpler by those who keep on reminding us of the inevitable unemployment, poverty and bankruptcy that must follow victory in this war. Those who are responsible for the recruiting campaign could do no more useful work than to make it clear to the Canadian people that the government will no more tolerate losing the peace than they will tolerate losing the war.

Mr. GREEN: There was an announcement in the press a couple of weeks ago that the number of men called for compulsory training for June had been reduced to about 2,700 men. It was our understanding before Easter that there would be some 5,000 men called up every month. Apparently that number has now been reduced. Will the minister explain why that is, and tell us how many there will be in the future?

Mr. RALSTON: There is accommodation for about 40,000 altogether; that is, about 10,000 a month. The basic centres are combined; the active and the reserve recruits are combined in the basic training centres. The more active enlistments there are, the fewer recruits will be necessary. That has been made plain right along; forty thousand is what we are turning out every four months. The more active recruits there are the fewer will have to be called up under the compulsory training plan.

Mr. GREEN: How many is it expected there will be during the rest of the summer?

Mr. RALSTON: I cannot tell. It depends on the number of active recruits who are enlisted. Does my hon. friend understand that?

Mr. GREEN: Is the minister yet in a position to make any statement with regard to the escape of the twenty-five or twenty-six German prisoners from the prison camp in northern Ontario?

Mr. RALSTON: As my hon. friend knows, a court of inquiry was held under Mr. Justice Embury. The finding of that court was filed with the department, and the matter is now in the hands of the adjutant general. As a matter of fact, further proceedings are now pending in connection with the matter. I am not in a position to make any statement in regard to it until those proceedings are concluded.

Mr. COLDWELL: I have not yet asked a question in connection with this department, but there is one thing I should like to know. A short time ago I received a complaint with regard to the central mechanization depot in the city of London. I understand that this is practically an ordinary civilian set-up, except for the fact that it is under the Department of National Defence.

Mr. RALSTON: That is a pretty important exception.

Mr. COLDWELL: At least the employees there were on a civilian basis; I will put it that way. Unionization of the men was going on; organization was being carried out, and a conciliation board was applied for. In the midst of the discussion the men were notified by a conciliation officer, I believe named Mr. Chapel—

Mr. McLARTY: There is no such conciliation officer in my department.

Mr. COLDWELL: My information as to the name may not be correct, but the men were notified that the government was about to place this depot definitely under the Department of National Defence, and that in these circumstances a collective bargaining agreement could not be negotiated. I should like to know whether the facts were as I have stated them, and whether this depot comes under the Department of National Defence or under the Department of Labour. Both departments seem to be involved in the situation. Could the minister tell me anything about the matter, as far as his department is concerned?

Mr. RALSTON: So far as my department is concerned the central mechanization depot at London is under the master general of the ordnance, and is a Department of National Defence organization. The depot was established for the purpose of receiving, storing and issuing mechanically propelled vehicles. It also performs the same function for the spare parts and accessories required to maintain and equip such vehicles. Its purpose includes the performance of any work which may be required upon vehicles between receipt from contractors and issue to military formations, such as the addition of special equipment not included in the main vehicle contract. It will also serve as a central repair depot. There is capacity for storing 3,300 vehicles under cover, and these storage facilities permit the following advantageous practices: (a) the flow of production by the automotive industry may be kept relatively even and therefore at the maximum of efficiency; (b) the full establishment of vehicles for a military formation may be purchased, but any quantity not required during the period prior to active service may be held in reserve; (c) a reserve for unknown emergencies may be held.

Mr. COLDWELL: Who are employed at this plant? Are they civilian employees?

Mr. RALSTON: I think they are ordnance men. I am advised that the depot is in process of being turned completely into an ordnance organization.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is just the point. Up to the present time, according to my information, a large number of civilians have been employed in this work, and it was not until the men became dissatisfied with the rates of pay, which are very considerably lower than those in automobile plants such as General Motors and others, and began to organize, that action was taken to place the men directly under the control of the master general of the ordnance, or to militarize the plant. Many of these men, of course, will lose their jobs because of this action, which it is felt was taken to prevent the organization of the men in this plant. That is rather a serious statement for the men involved to make, but it came to me through one of the legitimate trade unions, if I may use that term, and the union officials were very disturbed and wondered if this was going to be a precedent to prevent the organization of men in government plants of this description.

Mr. RALSTON: I can only say to my hon. friend that it may have been concurrent with, or synchronized with, or at the same time as, what my hon. friend mentions, but as I understand it the master general of the ordnance intended this to be a military establishment. I will tell my hon. friend the reason for that, as it was given to me. That was the intention in order to give these men training in handling and repairing these vehicles. As the country knows, one of our most difficult jobs is the training of tradesmen and familiarizing them with these vehicles. This was one of the preliminary steps taken to provide, in effect, a trade school where repairs could be made and familiarity acquired with the various vehicles being used. I cannot tell my hon. friend more than that.

Mr. COLDWELL: So that it was intended, some time before this, that this depot would be militarized?

Mr. RALSTON: That is my understanding. This matter was not discussed with me at all, but if I had had anything to do with it there would have been no question about it, and I believe the master general of the ordnance had this fully in mind from the very beginning.

Mr. GILLIS: Under present regulations, as pointed out by the hon. member for Lake Centre, a man joining the army to-day who has more than two children is obliged to leave a certain number of his children without a subsistence allowance. Is there any intention on the part of the government to change the regulations in this regard? I know men in the unit of which the minister is honorary colonel who have left six children at home, which means that the wife, with an allowance for two children, is required to care for four in addition without provision being made for their maintenance. Is there any intention to change that regulation?

Mr. RALSTON: All these matters are constantly under consideration, but I cannot give my hon. friend any assurance that there is any intention of changing the regulation. I may say that I have made a note of no less than ten different reasons which have been given in this chamber this afternoon as to why men should not enlist. All these matters are being given attention. I can assure hon. members that the recruiting committee, which is in charge of this campaign, have had most of these matters in mind. Notwithstanding all these reasons, however, some of which may be sound and some unsound, I do ask hon. members, though they have given expression to these views here, to do as an old medical officer of mine often suggested: "Don't tell me the difficulties; tell me how to get over them." I ask my hon. friends to do the same thing in connection with this recruiting campaign, because I do not think many of these difficulties are really serious as long as a man is imbued with the spirit mentioned a while ago, the desire to serve his country. I do not wish any hon. member to understand for a moment, however, that because I have not replied to all these matters they have not been considered and are not being kept in mind. Naturally I want to do all I can, and the department wants to do all it can, to make recruiting and army life as attractive as possible under the circumstances, and having regard to the needs and duties which have to be performed.

To supplement my answer to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, perhaps I did not emphasize as I should the fact that the mechanization depot is a place where vehicles actually owned by the army are kept, and from which they are issued.

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not know very much about the depot; I just had the complaint. There is one other point to which I think the minister should give his attention, namely, the position of mothers whose sons have enlisted, such sons or mothers having been on relief before the boys joined. The ruling was—I do not know whether it is still in effect—that because the boy was not a wage-earner and in support of his mother before joining up, the mother was not eligible for any allowance. I do not know whether that has been changed, but if it has not, I believe the minister should give it his attention.

Mr. RALSTON: I believe the ruling was changed about nine months ago.

Mr. COCKERAM: I believe I can say from experience that it is a mistake for the government to accept in the army men who have big families. Consideration should be given to seeing that they are not recruited in the future.

Item agreed to.

185. Normal services. Battlefields memorials, $14,680.

Mr. COLDWELL: Where are those memorials? Are we able to get access to memorials in France, or is there some agreement under which they are looked after?

Mr. RALSTON: I understand these memorials are in occupied France and Belgium. The question may be as to whether payment can be made. However it was thought desirable to make provision for such things.

Item agreed to.

186. Normal services. Book of Remembrance, $6,500.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the Book of Remembrance finished yet? I believe it was to be completed this year.

Mr. RALSTON: When I was in the department before, I made some predictions about that matter. It is calculated that the photostating of completed pages can be forwarded during the current year so that the whole of the decorated pages can be sent to the Dominion archives for binding not later than December 31, 1941. All materials for binding are on hand.

Item agreed to.

187. Civil pensions—Robert Allen, $269.52.

Mr. COCKERAM: Who are these people?

Mr. RALSTON: These are ex-employees or their dependents who have been getting these pensions for many years. They were injured or killed while on duty. The department makes these grants year after year.

Mr. ADAMSON: Are they civilian employees?

Mr. RALSTON: Yes.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

257. Departmental administration, $188,030.

Mr. COLDWELL: I should like to know what the agreement is between the dominion government and the Bell Telephone company, through the Department of Public Works, with regard to service to government telephones. I ask the question for several reasons, one of which is that the Bell Telephone company is of course a very powerful organization, charging, in comparison with what we pay in western Canada to provincial telephone companies, a very high rate on short-distance calls. At times there is a difficulty in having calls put through quickly from this building to Toronto and Montreal. I have heard complaints in that regard. Upon making inquiry I have been told the reason is that although the company is making very high profits for the United States parent company, as well as for itself, it has not the necessary trunk lines to give that service to which at least the government of Canada and these buildings ought to be entitled. What is the contract with the Bell Telephone company? What are the rates, and cannot some pressure be brought to bear upon this company, whose profits since the beginning of the war have shown an increase, to give at least this city and this building better telephone connection in return for the very high rates everyone has to pay?

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Public Works): There is a special item in the estimates providing for the use of telephones, but possibly I could answer the hon. member now. The telephone service throughout the government offices in Ottawa is supplied under an agreement entered into in 1937. According to section 4 of the agreement the telephone company is to provide and maintain all telephone apparatus, equipment and facilities required to furnish the service, and the crown must pay the company for such equipment and telephone service at the company's standard rates.

The charges borne by the crown may be divided in this way: Telephone service, which includes rentals of telephone instruments, and mileage, and private branch exchange equipment, including automatic switch devices, switchboards, and so on. The total amounts paid by the crown in the last three fiscal years for telephone service are as follows: 1938-39, $92,000; 1939-40, $102,000, and 1940-41, $144,000. This increase is due to the larger number of telephones installed as a result of the war. For example, in 1939-40 the increase due to the war was $8,000, and in 1940-41 the increase amounted to $50,000. The total number of telephones installed for war purposes since September, 1939, had amounted, in March, 1941, to 1,650. But we are paying standard rates for the service given to the government.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is, the government receives no discount?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: On account of the larger number of telephones?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. COLDWELL: Are the rates fixed by the board of transport commissioners?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: And we have no way of getting a reduction?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HAZEN: Mr. Chairman, there is a matter I wish to bring to the attention of the minister. A building was recently erected at the Lancaster military hospital, at West Saint John, New Brunswick, to be used, I understand, as an isolation hospital or a hospital for contagious diseases. The specifications for the building required the hinges or butts as they are called in the trade, on the inside doors to be of solid bronze. I am informed that these bronze hinges cost about $6 a pair and that they serve no better purpose and cannot be distinguished from steel chromium-plated hinges, which cost about $1.10 a pair. I should like to know why bronze hinges were used when they cost so much more than the steel chromium-plated hinges. It seems to me that this is a waste of money and that there is inefficiency on the part of the department in specifying hinges of this kind. I would also point out to the minister that it affords an opportunity for a contractor, if he wants to be unscrupulous, to use steel chromium-plated hinges instead of the bronze hinges called for, because it is impossible to distinguish one from the other.

I would also point out that the specifications provided for steel knobs with cylinder lock on the outside door. This form of knob will rust on exposure to the weather. The specifications should have provided for bronze knobs, which will stand exposure to the weather. I do not know if the minister is in a position to give an explanation now, but it is a matter which I think should be investigated.

Mr. CARDIN: I thank my hon. friend for bringing the matter to my attention. I am reminded by the officer here that this building is being erected for the Department of Pensions and National Health and that the specifications had to agree with their requirements. I am not in a position to explain why such a fitting was specified or to give the reason justifying such a requirement, if in reality this fitting was called for by the specifications. In the main I am free to say that I agree with the observations of my hon. friend, but of course there may be some reason which cannot be given at the moment. I will undertake to look into the matter and inform my hon. friend.

Mr. COLDWELL: I wish to ask the minister a question about the stationary engineers employed by the Department of Public Works in Ottawa. It has been brought to my attention that a number of the stationary engineers employed by the public works department in this city are not receiving the one day rest in seven. If that is so, it is a matter of long standing. I would point out that the Lord's Day Act compels the citizens of Canada to observe a weekly day of rest, and if the situation is as I am told it is, the public works department ought not to be breaking one of Canada's own statutes.

The late Doctor Hyndman, former member for Carleton county, asked some questions with regard to this matter and they were answered on June 1, 1938, as reported at page 3433 of Hansard. The answer shows clearly that at that time a large number of the stationary engineer employees worked for long periods without a single day of rest. For example, in 1937-38, J. D. Stratton, worked from November 1 to February 20 without a day of rest, and again from March 16 to April 30. E. Nunn worked from November 19 to December 19 without a day of rest, and again from from December 28 to January 29. F. Deavy worked from November 1 to January 16 and from February 1 to April 10 without a day of rest. H. R. Clarke worked from November 1 to January 12 without a day of rest, and then after one day's rest he worked from January 14 to February 7 without a day of rest and again from February 25 to March 9. R. G. Whalen worked from October 15 to November 21 and from November 23 to December 17, or over two months, with only one day's rest in between those two periods, and again from December 19 to January 2, and from February 8 to February 25, without a day of rest. C. Graham worked from November 1 to January 10 without a break, again from January 23 to March 14, and again from March 25 to April 10 without a break. All this was in 1937-38, and I am told that the situation is now very similar to what it was then. If the facts are as I have stated them, this is a flagrant breach of our own statute. How on earth can we expect private companies and organizations and individuals to obey the law when we ourselves break it? These men are entitled to at least one day of rest in seven, and surely the government of Canada, as a model employer, ought to be setting the example to private employers. I bring this situation to the minister's attention.

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot recall the situation as it existed at the time that report was brought down, but my information is that at present all these employees are enjoying one day of rest in the week. Of course it happens that they have to replace each other, but when one of these employees has to work on a Sunday he gets a day off during the week.

Mr. COLDWELL: Is the minister sure of that?

Mr. CARDIN: That is the information which comes to me.

Mr. COLDWELL: The correspondence I have here would not bear that out.

Mr. KINLEY: The information that came from the hon. member was all on the winter season. It may be that in the summer time the duties are very light.

Mr. COLDWELL: The information I have does not seem to bear that out. I should be glad if the minister or the officials with him would make further inquiry.

Mr. CARDIN: I will.

Mr. COLDWELL: Before the dinner recess I was speaking about the Bell Telephone company. Would the minister table that agreement.

Mr. CARDIN: With pleasure.

Item agreed to.

261. Chief architect's branch. Telephone service at Ottawa, $97,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask a question about items 261 and 262 together?

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the wish of the committee to take items 261 and 262 together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

262. Telephone service other than at Ottawa, $8,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: I notice that the amount voted under item 261, "telephone service at Ottawa," is $97,000, whereas apparently for all the rest of Canada the cost of the telephone service is only $8,000. What makes the cost so excessively high at Ottawa?

Mr. CARDIN: The difference between the telephone service at Ottawa and the outside service is that here we have a governmental service for all the public buildings. We have exchanges for all the services in Ottawa. In the other cities we use the ordinary telephone services without any special switchboard such as we have in Ottawa.

Mr. MacNICOL: Are there more telephones under government control in Ottawa than there are under government control in Toronto, Montreal, and all the great cities of Canada, put together?

Mr. CARDIN: Oh, a very large number.

Mr. MacNICOL: Far more than all the rest of Canada?

Mr. CARDIN: Far more.

Mr. MacNICOL: We are using too many telephones in Ottawa.

Items 261 and 262 agreed to.

267. Chief architect's branch. Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings. Saskatchewan. Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $35,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: May we have a break-down of this expenditure, please?

Mr. CARDIN: It is not possible to give a break-down of this item. The wording of the item is in general terms, because we cannot ascertain long in advance what will be the requirements for each building in a province.

Mr. COLDWELL: There is no large extension of any public building?

Mr. CARDIN: This covers maintenance only.

Mr. COLDWELL: Just the maintenance?

Mr. CARDIN: Just maintenance and operation.

Item agreed to.

268. Chief architect's branch. Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings, Alberta. Dominion public buildings—improvements and repairs, $35,000.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Could the minister explain one matter which arrests my attention? I notice that the appropriation under item 263 for the maritime provinces generally, is the same this year as it was last, and the same is true of Quebec, but Ontario's appropriation is reduced, and the appropriation of each of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, is also reduced. I am curious to know how the minister has been successful in effecting economies on buildings in the three prairie provinces but has not been so successful in the case of Quebec and the maritimes?

Mr. CARDIN: The reduction in this item, as in some others, is due to the fact that we do not expect to have to do as many repairs or as much maintenance work as we had to do in the past year; and, according to the very severe direction which is being given to us by the Minister of Finance, we have to reduce items as much as we can and limit ourselves to the most necessary repairs. There is no prejudice.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I grant fully the validity of what the minister says, but it seems to me that his general principle should apply to Quebec and the maritime provinces with the same force as it does to the prairie provinces.

Mr. MacKINNON (Edmonton West): There are more buildings to maintain in Quebec and the maritime provinces.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There would not be any more in Quebec, I would think, than in Ontario. I notice that there is a reduction of $25,000 in Ontario, but none in Quebec and the maritime provinces. It just arouses my curiosity; that is all.

Mr. CARDIN: I assure my hon. friend that there is no prejudice in so far as I or the departmental officers are concerned in the matter of the treatment of Alberta in comparison with other provinces. We did not spend last year all the money which had been provided for the maintenance of public buildings in Alberta, and accordingly we thought that this year, particularly in view of the policy of economy, there was no use in providing for a larger amount than would be required. Of the vote of $40,000 provided last year for Alberta we expended only $18,000 on repairs of public buildings in that province.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I assume, then, I would be justified in forming the conclusion that we in Alberta must have learned how to take particularly good care of our buildings?

Mr. CARDIN: Probably.

Mr. GILLIS: The policy of the department now is that no new buildings shall be erected. Some time ago the town of Dominion, Nova Scotia, petitioned the Department of Public Works, pointing out that the building used for postal services there is totally inadequate and a disgrace to the Post Office Department. Is it the intention of the department to make any repairs or put that building in some kind of decent shape, in view of the fact that a new building cannot be erected at this time?

Mr. CARDIN: If it is a publicly-owned building, we are providing under the general vote for repairs that may be necessary. If it is not a publicly-owned building, if it is rented, we do not make the repairs ourselves; they are supposed to be made by the proprietor of the building.

Mr. GILLIS: It is a rented building.

Mr. CARDIN: But we make representations to the proprietor and probably induce him to make the necessary repairs, or we suggest that a change be made. Is it a post office?

Mr. GILLIS: Yes.

Mr. CARDIN: We are governed to a large extent by the representations which are made to us by the Post Office Department. My information is that the Post Office Department pay the rent for the building which they occupy. I will undertake to make the necessary representations. I will make a note of what the hon. gentleman has said.

Mr. GILLIS: I have a copy of representations made by the town council of Dominion to the department with regard to the erection of a suitable building in the town. The reply was that no new undertakings were to be made at this time. From the description I have of the building, it is a distinct reflection on the Post Office Department. I brought the matter up when the Postmaster General's estimates were before the committee, and he referred me to the Department of Public Works. In the light of the correspondence, will the department consider putting the building into decent shape or providing a building that is suitable?

Mr. CARDIN: The Postmaster General, I presume, was thinking of a new building. If the building is rented, the rent is paid by the Post Office Department. I will, however, look into the matter.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Will the minister put on Hansard the value of the public buildings owned by the dominion in the various provinces? We cannot tell very well what is necessary unless we know the values of these properties. I do not want the answer now.

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

271. Chief architect's branch. Dominion quarantine stations—maintenance and repairs, $17,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Where are these stations?

Mr. CARDIN: In Halifax; Sydney; Tracadie; Quebec-Savard Park; William Head, and Bentinck island in British Columbia.

Mr. COLDWELL: I was wondering what the accommodation was like at Halifax, where there was some difficulty this winter with certain diseases brought in by sailors. Perhaps that comes under the Department of Pensions and National Health, and I was wondering why there was not an amount included for the extension of that work if the accommodation was insufficient at any of these ports.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): So far as the Department of Pensions and National Health is concerned, I took up the question immediately after my hon. friend made his speech in the house, and I was assured that with regard to both accommodation at the quarantine stations and hospital beds there was ample provision in Halifax. The lack of accommodation was in connection with the social care of men and not in hospitalization or in quarantine.

Mr. COLDWELL: I am glad to hear that.

Item agreed to.

273. Chief architect's branch. Flags for dominion buildings, $2,500.

Mr. MacNICOL: Is any other flag than the union jack flown on any public buildings?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Item agreed to.

279. Chief engineer's branch. Dredging. Maritime provinces, $349,700.

Mr. HAZEN: Where was dredging done last year in the maritime provinces; what was the cost in the different places, and what quantity of material was removed?

Mr. CARDIN: I regret that I am not able to give the places where dredging was done. There were three dredges in Prince Edward Island, two in New Brunswick and six in Nova Scotia, doing minor work which it was not thought advisable to give under contract. It was decided to have it executed by the equipment of the department. The details are not before me, but I can give them to my hon. friend, probably to-morrow.

Item agreed to.

280. Chief engineer's branch. Dredging.—Ontario and Quebec, $259,300.

Mr. MacNICOL: On page 170 of the estimates there is a detail of the increase of $59.300 in this item. Where are the extra works being erected?

Mr. CARDIN: I cannot give the reason for the increase, but I can give certain figures which may explain the situation. The big items are: Cobourg, $20,000; Oshawa, $20,000; Port Hope, $11,000, in round figures; Toronto, eastern channel, $15,000; Whitby, $9,000. These are the big items; the others are small items of a few hundred dollars.

Item agreed to.

282. Chief engineer's branch. Dredging. British Columbia, $190,000.

Mr. BLACKMORE: How is it that we find economies effected in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia, but they are singularly lacking in the case of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. CARDIN: The only explanation I can give is that the location is responsible. There are many more places in Ontario and Quebec where dredging is necessary than in Alberta or Saskatchewan or even in British Columbia, although in British Columbia there are large areas that have to be dredged, and dredging is going on continually.

Mr. BLACKMORE: It would seem to me that in Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba there would be about the same number of areas to dredge this year as last, and I do not see how labour would be any cheaper. Therefore it is difficult to see how these economies have been effected. Of course I should not like to have the minister go to the trouble of giving a complete break-down of the figure, but it seems unusual.

Mr. CARDIN: The amount being voted this year for the three prairie provinces is practically the same as last; there is a decrease of only $24.

Item agreed to.

287. Chief engineer's branch. Maintenance and operation of graving docks, locks and dams, etc. Locks and dams, $49,174.

Mr. HAZEN: Where is the St. Andrews lock and dam located?

Mr. CARDIN: It is on the Red river in Manitoba?

Mr. HAZEN: What about the locks on the Rideau canal in Ottawa? Does the minister's department maintain them?

Mr. CARDIN: That comes under the Department of Transport.

Item agreed to.

288. Chief engineer's branch. Maintenance and operation of graving dock, lock and dams, etc. Snag boats, $41,600.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not find any item here for Churchill. In view of the large expenditure the government has made there, would the minister make some statement—

Mr. CARDIN: That is under the Department of Transport.

Mr. HAZEN: Where do these snag boats operate?

Mr. CARDIN: Both of them in the Fraser river in British Columbia.

Item agreed to.

312. Telegraph branch—reconstruction, repairs and improvements, British Columbia—Vancouver island district, $9,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Before we leave these telegraph branch items, may we have some idea what these telegraph and telephone services are, just generally?

Mr. CARDIN: These telephone and telegraph services are established and maintained to promote communication with the remote districts which privately-owned organizations do not serve. It is a public service which is of great importance for the people living in the remote sections. It is operated at a loss, but I think the service is worth it. The private companies will not go there; that is the important point.

Mr. COLDWELL: I asked the question in order to bring out that information. It is another of those cases where the private companies cannot make a profit, and accordingly they do not go in. If our people understood that the government carries on many services which are not profitable, we might have a little less criticism of the ordinary normal expenditures of the country.

Mr. HAZEN: What income is derived by the government from the operation of these services?

Mr. CARDIN: I regret that that information is not tabulated. I would have to take each one separately. We have for each section a statement showing the revenue and expenditure. I think I could give my hon. friend the total to-morrow morning.

Item agreed to.

313. General. National gallery of Canada, $43,720.

Mr. COLDWELL: The amount is I see, almost entirely taken up by salaries. When the country decides to purchase pictures, if it ever does, out of what account would that come?

Mr. CARDIN: It comes out of this vote.

Mr. COLDWELL: Do we ever buy any pictures for the national gallery?

Mr. CARDIN: We have not done so for a long time.

Mr. COLDWELL: It seems to me that even in war time we should keep up our expenditures for some educational and cultural objects. We should be encouraging in every possible way the promotion of Canadian national culture. We have a number of artists who are doing fine work in developing a particular kind of Canadian art. I should like to see something included in our estimates that would enable the national gallery to purchase some of the best of the pictures that are painted each year, even if only a relatively small amount is devoted to this purpose.

We should do much more than we are doing now to encourage Canadian art and literature; I believe the country is really doing very little indeed in that direction. I am not suggesting that anything should be included at the present time, but I hope the question of inserting an item in the estimates on some future occasion will receive consideration.

Item agreed to.

315. General. To supplement, on approval of treasury board except where less than $200 is required, any of the appropriations of the Department of Public Works, $100,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask if the palace of justice, the supreme court building, has been completed?

Mr. CARDIN: It is practically completed.

Item agreed to.

515. Special. Chief architect's branch. Construction, repairs and improvements of public buildings. To close out contracts—further amount required, $370,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: These items are going through so quickly it is impossible to follow them; as a matter of fact in my copy of the supplementary estimates the numbers are not very clear, and therefore I could not follow them in any event. I presume these are all right, but I imagine I shall have to rely on the judgment of other hon. members.

[Mr. Cardin.]

Mr. CARDIN: I am now in a position to comply with the request made a short time ago, and table herewith a copy of the agreement between the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and His Majesty the King.

Mr. COLDWELL: Thank you.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

363. Administration of the Transport Act. Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada —administration, maintenance and operation, $280,760.

Mr. GREEN: Will the minister tell the committee whether there have been any agreed charges under the Transport Act which was put through two or three years ago; that is, where an agreement is made for a reduction in rates. I think in each case any such agreement has to be approved by the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. HOWE: Perhaps I can answer that question, since I was very much concerned with the question of agreed charges. There have been some ten agreements put through, I think none within the last year.

Mr. WRIGHT: I should like to repeat a question I brought forward the other day in connection with another department, when I was told to wait until the estimates of the Department of Transport came up. The question had to do with freight rates to Fort Churchill. In the northeastern part of my province, on the Canadian National line from Prince Albert to Hudson Bay junction, the freight rate on wheat to Fort Churchill is something like three cents a hundred less than the rate to Port Arthur and Fort William. All the grain that goes to Churchill is shipped over that line, but the farmers do not obtain the benefit of that freight rate. They pay the freight rate to Fort William, and the difference is credited to the wheat board. In Alberta, where most of the grain at the present time is shipped to Port Arthur and Fort William, they are given the benefit of the Vancouver freight rate, and I am just wondering why the people on the line from Prince Albert to Hudson Bay junction are not given the same consideration.

Hon. P. J. A. CARDIN (Minister of Transport): I am afraid the question raised by the hon. gentleman is rather involved, and I am not quite sure that I am the one to answer it. I will undertake, however, to look into the matter and to discuss it with the other departments that might be concerned and also with the board of transport commissioners. At the moment I am not in a position to give a proper answer to this question.

Mr. WRIGHT: Would the minister send me that information when he obtains it?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Item agreed to.

376. Canals service. Canals service administration, $37,810.

The CHAIRMAN: It will be observed that items 364 to 375 inclusive have been left for the time being. They will come up later, when we consider air services.

Item agreed to.

377. Canals service. Canals—operation and maintenance, $2,213,669.

Mr. COCKERAM: Will the minister break down this item, please?

Mr. CARDIN: This item can be subdivided as follows: permanent staff, $1,065,000; temporary assistance, $728,000, or a total, for staff of $1,794,000. Allowance—this means board for employees on dredges and tugs—travelling expenses and so forth—

Mr. COCKERAM: I have that information; thank you.

Mr. COLDWELL: How are these employees appointed? Is this just casual labour or are they permanent employees appointed by the minister, or by the civil service commission?

Mr. CARDIN: By the civil service commission.

Item agreed to.

385. Marine service. Construction, maintenance and supervision of aids to navigation, including salaries and allowances to lightkeepers, $1,802,560.

Mr. POTTIER: I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a serious situation which has arisen as a result of the employment of men on lightships. For some twenty or thirty years these men were considered temporary employees, and until some two or three years ago no provision was made for their superannuation. Some of the men who were retired in 1933 and 1934 are now receiving old age pensions. They served faithfully on these ships, and I should like the minister to give some consideration to their case. In my constituency there is Captain Larkin, who served for thirty-five years on the lurcher lightship and who is now in such circumstances that he requires and should receive some assistance. I am asking the minister to give this matter his attention.

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that in the last few years it has come under superannuation.

Mr. POTTIER: In the last three years.

Mr. GILLIS: I have in mind the salary of a harbourmaster at Glace Bay, Nova Scotia. Considerable correspondence has passed between the minister and myself with reference to this matter. I understand the regulations state that in the smaller harbours the harbourmaster must depend for his wages upon fees paid by boats entering and leaving the harbour. This man is in quite a busy harbour, where perhaps 400 or 500 boats go in and out. The department requested that he make his returns for the year 1940, and he has forwarded me a copy of a statement showing cash receipts at that harbour in 1940. The statement shows receipts of exactly fifty cents. It would seem, therefore, that he is not too well paid.

I have spoken about the matter because the man in question has been known to the fishermen around there for many years. He is one of the best qualified men in his line of work who could be secured in Canada, and is a valuable official for the department. He does a lot of work at that point. The minister has informed me through correspondence that the act will have to be changed to permit the payment of a salary or any other remuneration to this man. Is there any regulation under which he could be compensated? If he leaves his present job I am sure he will never be replaced at the same salary. He is carrying on a very necessary work among the fishermen. He must have food; he is very well qualified and sticks to his job religiously because he realizes the value of his services to the fishermen in that harbour.

Mr. CARDIN: I am afraid that at present there is no means of coming to the rescue, if I may use that word, of this gentleman. We have no means of compensating him for the services he is performing. When there is no return for the government we cannot pay the officer who is supposed to be looking after the harbour. However, the man is not forced to occupy that position; he is free to do any other job of which he is capable in that locality. He is not what might be described a regular employee of the government, and therefore he is not prevented from doing other work. Unfortunately at the present time nothing can be done to remedy the situation. There are several other cases similar to the one described, because we have a number of harbours in Canada where the revenues are not great enough to pay harbourmasters. In fact we have some difficulty in some places in finding persons who are ready to act as harbourmasters, because the revenue is so small. I regret I cannot do anything in this instance.

Item agreed to.

399. Railway service. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $41,120.

Mr. POIRIER: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to try the patience of the committee, but while we are on the railway estimates I desire to inform the house that on March 28 last I handed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Cardin) a brief on the subject of the Baie des Chaleurs railway. In substance, this brief stated:

Work has been begun on the establishment of a naval base and an air base at Gaspé. Now that the battle of the Atlantic is under way and that German submarines and cruisers are only some three hundred miles from our eastern coasts, this project is of incommensurable importance. It is quite possible that the enemy may enter the gulf of St. Lawrence and attack the Gaspé coast, which lies open and defenceless. Thus the urgent need of pushing forward the organization of these two defence bases.

In order to establish communication with these bases, to move the requisite supplies, material and troops, it is a matter of imperative necessity and immediate urgency to improve the Baie des Chaleurs railway. This line, some two hundred miles in length, is the property of the Canadian National Railways. At present, it cannot carry heavy locomotives and freight cars cannot be loaded to full capacity on account of the poor condition of the line. The road-bed needs to be ballasted throughout its entire length and light rails replaced by heavy ones over a length of 45 miles. This would ensure a twofold result—the normal defence of the Gaspé peninsula and the whole country in wartime, and normal railway facilities in time of peace.

May I point out further that while industrial activity, employment and prosperity are the rule in most sections of the country at present, the Gaspé peninsula remains in a state of unemployment and comparative poverty. Doubtless it would be difficult to establish war industries in that section of the country. But that could be made up for by improving the railway line. The result would be (a) to provide work for the unemployed; (b) to strengthen our national defence; (c) to anticipate postwar needs, and (d) to give justice to this section of the country which has never enjoyed its share in the Canadian confederation and has always been looked upon as a poor relation.

This is not the first time that the house has heard of the Gaspé railroad. My predecessor, Hon. Charles Marcil, frequently pointed out the poor condition of the line and the state of inferiority in which the Gaspé people found themselves as a result.

Many of the older members will recall the fine personality of Hon. Charles Marcil. An intimate friend and counsellor of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he represented Bonaventure during thirty-seven years without interruption and without suffering defeat at the polls. A most eloquent speaker, he often held the house spellbound. He was rightly called golden-tongued. He had the honour of accompanying Sir Wilfrid Laurier from one end of the country to the other during the campaigns of 1904, 1908 and 1911.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, my predecessor, Mr. Marcil frequently called the house's attention to the Gaspé railroad. I shall quote from a speech he delivered from this floor on the 21st of June, 1923, as the words he uttered then are applicable to the present situation:

The two counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure are inhabited by 60,000 people, and we could easily have three times that population if we had a proper railway service. These two constituencies cover 10,000 square miles of the most fertile territory in the province of Quebec, with a double advantage of being situated by the sea, having thousands of miles of timber and pulpwood, mineral resources, fertile soil, and splendid fisheries producing some of the finest fish of the North American continent. Our rivers are visited yearly by the cream of American and Canadian society. Nevertheless the district has remained in a quiescent state. During the decade from 1911 to 1921, the population increased by only 500. Why? Because the industries in both Gaspé and Bonaventure, one after another moved away across the Baie des Chaleurs to the Intercolonial where they could get service over which they could send their produce. At Nouvelle, to begin with, the Province of Quebec Lumber Association transferred all its lumber over to Dalhousie, and it is operating on the main line of the Intercolonial. The same thing happened at Bonaventure and New Richmond where the mills of the McLean Lumber Corporation were transferred to Bathurst, and to-day we witness the spectacle of this lumber being cut in these two counties and being transported in booms across the Baie des Chaleurs, a distance ranging from 25 to 50 miles, to be sawn and placed on board cars to be exported to the Canadian and American markets at great disadvantage and loss. The result of this is that the young people are leaving these two counties daily, and settling, unfortunately a large number of them, in the United States. We are losing our population, and this because we have not an efficient railway service which would develop the resources of these constituencies as they should be developed.

Hon. Mr. Marcil's speeches always ended with a request to the government of the day to have the Baie des Chaleurs railroad made part of the Canadian National Railways.

Finally in 1928, thanks to the personal intervention of the Minister of Justice (Mr.

Lapointe), the Baie des Chaleurs road was taken over by the Liberal government and incorporated into the national system.

I wish here to convey to the Minister of Justice the gratitude of the Gaspé people for this act of justice. In spite of the minister's well-known modesty, we have been definitely apprised of the fact that he is responsible for the success met by Hon. Mr. Marcil in attaining the object of his oft-repeated requests. The Minister of Justice has earned the admiration and gratefulness of the people of Gaspé for having thrown all the weight of his influence on the side of their section of the country.

As a consequence, Mr. Chairman, the Baie des Chaleurs railway has been operated by the Canadian National railways for almost thirteen years. Many complaints have been attended to; we enjoy freight rates that are considerably lower than formerly; the right of way is better kept and the service much more convenient than under the old management.

However, I must say, as suggested in the brief from which I quoted that we are still a long way from perfection. The Canadian National boasts of having expended $1,300,000 in the last twelve years in improvements of all sorts. Well, Mr. Chairman, this line was in such a bad way, that even the expenditure of this seemingly large sum of money still leaves it in a deplorable state.

Two hundred miles of that line require ballasting. In many places it follows the shore so closely that protection walls had to be built to check the eroding effect of the sea. Many of those works are in such a bad shape that people are fearful, and not without cause, when travelling over these precipices.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is reading and reading so fast that I cannot follow him.

Mr. POIRIER: I would say, Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Parkdale said a few weeks ago, that I am referring to my notes.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): But he is reading them too fast for me to follow him.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) requests the hon. member to read more slowly, in order that he may follow.

Mr. POIRIER: Furthermore, and I presume to call the Minister of Transport's attention to this fact, all through the spring period the trains had to reduce their speed to ten or twenty miles an hour on account of the poor condition of the right of way. At least forty-five miles of this line is built with light steel weighing only fifty-six pounds a yard. As everyone knows, modern locomotives cannot use rails of such light weight and consequently, the equipment running on this line remains inadequate.

I hope the Minister of Transport, whom I have made conversant with this condition, will consider the matter in conjunction with the board of railway commissioners and decide to undertake, with the shortest possible delay, the improvements requested.

Mr. CARDIN: The hon. member may rest assured that I will send his request to the management of the Canadian National railways with the greatest pleasure and give it all possible support.

Item agreed to.

400. Railway service. Hudson bay railway—construction and improvements—capital, $14,000.

401. Hudson Bay railway—To provide for the difference between expenditures for operations and maintenance, and revenue accruing from operation during the year ending March 31, 1942, not exceeding, $350,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: When the hon. member for Qu'Appelle left for home the other night, he asked me if I was going to say anything about the Hudson Bay railway, and I said I would on my own behalf and also on his behalf. It shows his interest in the Hudson Bay railway. Here is an item of $350,000 to cover a deficit in the operating expenses of the Hudson Bay railway. I realize that this year little if anything can be done to eliminate the deficit because, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said, it is not possible at the present time to convoy wheat shipments from Churchill across the ocean, but a year or two ago that would not be an excuse. The Hudson Bay railway is to my mind a very good road when it is being operated. There is no vote here for a deficit on capital account, but if there were and it were added to the $350,000, we should have a considerable sum. I wish to say for the Hudson Bay railway that it is a well built road, with fine rails, and smooth to ride over. The trains of the Canadian National which run up there in the summer to take tourists into that country are good trains and well operated.

During the last year or two, no grain, so far as I can ascertain, has been carried over the road; but, as the Minister of Trade and Commerce said the other day, for over a year 2,600,000 bushels of wheat have been stored at Churchill. To-day, however, the road is carrying no freight that is worth while between the Pas and Churchill.

Has the department control over the protection and guarding of the bridges from the Pas to Churchill? There are three large and magnificent bridges. The second at Manitou and the third at Kettle Rapids, both on the Nelson river, are two of the finest bridges I have ever seen. I am aware that the Minister of Munitions and Supply knows all about them because he has been over them many times. If these two bridges are not guarded they should be, because if they were destroyed it would stop traffic over the whole road to Churchill. The same remark applies to the bridge at the Pas, which is the first. It is a six-span bridge over the Saskatchewan river, about 1,000 feet long.

If the elevator at Churchill belongs to the government, it also should have protection, but so far as I can see there is little protection there. It is a magnificent elevator, built by the Minister of Munitions and Supply, and it is a credit to him. In addition to these bridges which should be protected, there are four roundhouses at the Pas, Wabowden, Gillam and Churchill. The road has equipment enough to carry a thousand times the freight that is going over it to-day. I talked to one of the main men on the road, and he told me that if they had ten million bushels passing over the road yearly it would pay the operating costs and there would be no deficit.

May I say to the Minister of Transport that when the time comes again that wheat can be shipped by Churchill, if he is the minister, I hope an effort will be made to ship at least 10,000,000 bushels. That is not very much out of a crop of three or four hundred million bushels, but it would be sufficient to take the cost of operating the road off the backs of the Canadian people. I do not see why western members, particularly those from Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta, do not take this matter up. I realize that there is not much hope for this year, because the Minister of Trade and Commerce has told us that there cannot be any convoys out of Churchill. In the past, however, the western members should have fought for fair play for the Hudson Bay railway.

Mr. COLDWELL: I think they did.

Mr. MacNICOL: I never heard of anyone fighting for it.

[Mr. MacNicol.]

Mr. COLDWELL: The hon. member for Mackenzie did.

Mr. MacNICOL: Perhaps I should not be so all-inclusive. It may be that some of them did. At any rate, I hope that when the time comes again, some of them will, and that the minister will be sympathetic, because it cost the Canadian people about $50,000,000 to build the road and it is costing them about $400,000 this year to pay the deficit on the operating costs.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like to go on record as supporting what the hon. member for Davenport has said. Those of us from the western provinces are tremendously interested in the success of this route. Hon. members will recall that I raised the question two or three times last year, and the present Minister of Munitions and Supply explained at that time that the position was that ships would not be available without convoy protection being supplied, and that that was not practicable. I understand that is still the situation. I suggest that other hon. members should do as the hon. member for Davenport has done, namely, take a trip to Churchill at some time during the recess and learn something of the possibilities of that country. They might consider engaging the hon. member for Davenport as special publicity agent. We appreciate very much the publicity he has given to this channel of transport.

Mr. COCKERAM: Mr. Chairman, you rushed by item 390 so fast that I did not get a chance to speak on it.

The CHAIRMAN: I understand that some other hon. members wish to speak on items 400 and 401. If the hon. member wishes to revert to item 390, I shall call it again, with the consent of the committee.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I have not been able to get a clear understanding why it is that grain cannot be shipped out of Hudson bay.

Mr. CARDIN: It is because we cannot get any ships to call at that port.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why cannot we get ships?

Mr. CARDIN: Well, shipping involves convoys, and I understand that there are difficulties in view of which the authorities in London do not wish to send ships to Churchill during the war.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am not satisfied, by any means.

Mr. CARDIN: We cannot control the situation.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to ask one or two more questions. The information I have up to the present time justifies me in the belief that for some reason or another, which simply will not hold water—

An hon. MEMBER: The Hudson bay?

Mr. BLACKMORE:—the Churchill route is not being used. It is stated that the authorities cannot supply convoys for ships out of Hudson bay. First, I should like to know why convoys are necessary until the ships get out of Hudson bay entirely. Surely there are not enemy submarines in Hudson bay; why should there be convoys until ships reach the open sea. If there is a sufficient number of ships, why cannot escorts accompany them from the entrance to the Hudson bay just as they accompany them from the St. Lawrence?

Mr. CARDIN: The responsibility does not rest with the Department of Transport. It is not for me to decide. I have no authority to impose my will on the proprietors of the ships, or on the companies, and if no escort is supplied for ships navigating in the bay I cannot force companies to send over their ships without convoys. I have no idea what the Canadian government could do to improve the situation in that regard. If there were any possibility of improving it we would be ready and anxious to relieve the condition, instead of paying a deficit such as we are providing for this year.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am to understand, then, that the matter of using that valuable harbour, that railway, and that magnificent elevator does not lie in the hands of the Canadian government? Is that right?

Mr. CARDIN: No; that is not it. But we cannot force proprietors of ships to send their boats to Hudson bay against their will. We have provided a railway, elevators and aids to navigation, and it is not our fault if shipowners do not wish to take advantage of these facilities at the present time. To a certain extent the reason which they give is a good one; they do not desire to navigate their ships during the war without convoys.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is the minister in a position to tell us how many years there has been a deficit on that railway? Was there a deficit in 1936?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. ROWE: There has been a deficit ever since it was built.

Mr. CARDIN: The deficits were:

Year	Amount
1935-36	$239,000
1936-37	252,000
1937-38	364,000
1938-39	285,000
1939-40	330,000

Mr. ROWE: It is getting worse all the time.

Mr. CARDIN: Last year we provided for $350,000, plus $68,000 in the further supplementaries.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Am I to conclude then, that British companies had an objection to sending their ships into Hudson bay in 1936?

Mr. CARDIN: No.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Why was there a deficit then? Manifestly the line was not being used in 1936, and if the reason given for the present deficit is that we cannot get convoys, what was the reason for the deficit in 1936?

Mr. CARDIN: Movements of wheat, by years, have been as follow:

Year	Wheat shipped bus.
1935-36	2,351,633
1936-37	2,683,415
1937-38	Nil
1938-39	3,201,167
1939-40	2,101,089
1940-41	120,315

The revenue from the wheat movement in 1940-41 was $8,587.33.

Mr. COLDWELL: At the moment, of course, the difficulty is really a matter of convoy. Ships have to be assembled somewhere in large numbers in order that warships may escort them across the sea, and some other ports in Canada are suffering in consequence of that assembly. I would join with those who have spoken in suggesting that the Hudson bay route is feasible. It is several hundred miles shorter than the route now used.

Mr. MacNICOL: It is much more than that. From Churchill to Liverpool the distance is very little more than from New York to Liverpool.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is several hundred miles shorter.

Mr. MacNICOL: Over a thousand.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is several hundred miles shorter than the routes now used, and undoubtedly the route has never been given a fair trial. I do not know exactly what the minister in charge of marine matters could tell us about aids to navigation which have been placed there, or whether the Minister of Public Works is responsible for the placing of aids to navigation or for the provision of them. These departments get so mixed up sometimes that it is difficult to sort them out. When the war is over, I am sure there will be pressure from western Canada to give the route a fairer trial than it has had up to the present time. The British are very conservative. Shipowners and naval men usually like to do what they have been used to doing, and if the war is prolonged and becomes intensified there is still a possibility that this route may be of immense value to Canada and Great Britain. It is short; it is well north, and it would save a perilous passage for ships along the Atlantic coast. I do not profess to know much about shipping or naval affairs; but if the war is prolonged, the conservatism of the authorities may be broken down, and this route may yet be a valuable outlet for supplies to Great Britain. I am glad to know that the road and the facilities are being maintained, and even if we are spending a great deal of money this year and taking a serious deficit, I believe it is worth while keeping everything in good shape, because the time may come in this war when we shall find that route a useful one.

Mr. CRERAR: I should like to say a word or two on this question because, as it happens, the port of Churchill is in my constituency. The fact of the matter is that Churchill has suffered in the last five or six years from conditions beyond the control of any government. In 1937-38 no grain was shipped there. Why? Because in that year Saskatchewan did not produce enough wheat to meet its own requirements. From the date of the opening of the port there has been a steady increase in business until adverse conditions arose.

What the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar suggested a moment ago was correct. There was a conservatism in shipping circles regarding the practicability of the Hudson bay route, but from the first or second year of its use as a port the insurance rates on cargoes of grain and on hulls were reduced, not to the point they would ultimately reach but considerably.

The hon. member for Lethbridge offers criticism because the port has not been used in the last two years. Well, shipping in Great Britain since the outbreak of war has been under the direction of the minister of shipping, and they will not send ships to Churchill on account of the risk involved. The ship would come out through the Hudson bay strait, but submarines are operating not very far off the coast of Greenland, a very short distance indeed from the outlet of the strait, and consequently cargo vessels are exposed to the risk of sinking by submarines unless accompanied by convoy. Therefore this route is not practicable at the moment.

I am as much interested as any hon. member in seeing the port developed. I have been one of its consistent advocates from the earliest date, and I am as much convinced as the member for Rosetown-Biggar that the day will come, not perhaps in the next few years but some time, when the route will be one of the great trade routes of the world. There are no doubt practical difficulties to-day against it, but not from lack of sympathy on the part of the Minister of Transport or of the government. The people in the district fully recognize the difficulties. When the war is over, however, and we return to peaceful conditions and safety at sea, the port will come into its own and will be used.

It is worth while mentioning that there is less than one hundred miles difference in distance as between that port and the port of Montreal in relation to Liverpool, and consequently all that area which lies in the northwestern and central part of Saskatchewan is many hundreds of miles closer to Liverpool by that route than by Montreal or Vancouver. Churchill is not the only port that has suffered from war conditions. Let the hon. member inquire as to the amount of wheat that has gone out of Vancouver in the last eighteen months, and he will find it has been practically stationary so far as shipments to Great Britain are concerned.

These are conditions that arise out of the war and they are beyond the control of the Minister of Transport. They are beyond the control of the government, and they will not be remedied until the war is over; but I have every confidence in the future of the port when the war is over and we return to peaceful conditions.

Mr. ROWE: What steps if any have been taken to make sure that bridges at different points on the railway are protected? Our chief concern should be about the possible necessity before the war is over, of resorting to greater use of the road.

An hon. MEMBER: Keep a pack of wolves round every bridge.

Mr. ROWE: There are many wolves round bridges in this country, and we are fortunate that some of them have not been blowing up some of our bridges at vital points of transportation across Canada. We should be thankful that we have not been disturbed by acts of sabotage and other destructive efforts of enemy aliens in this country. Even in that outlying district and even if the bridges are not in great use, the government should see that they are guarded.

Mr. CARDIN: Guards have been appointed to look after these bridges. They are protected in the same way as all the works of the Canadian National Railways.

Mr. ROWE: They are on duty?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: What has happened to the bridge across the Nelson river at Port Nelson? Is it still there? It is a beautiful bridge standing alone.

Mr. CARDIN: All the works that have been erected at Port Nelson have been abandoned since Churchill was chosen.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has anything been done to reclaim for war purposes the steel in that bridge? There is a huge amount.

Mr. CARDIN: My information is that the steel has not yet been reclaimed.

390. Marine service—Administration of pilotage—$194,600.

Mr. COCKERAM: There is an increase of $65,000 in this item. The details show "recoverable loan to pilots, $65,000". What is that?

Mr. CARDIN: This is to make a loan to the pilotage authority in Halifax to build a pilot boat to replace one which was lost. That money is to be reimbursed to the government. It is an advance such as we make to all the pilot authorities to build the boats they require, and the money is reimbursed to the government afterwards.

Mr. COCKERAM: Have the government a mortgage on the boat?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

405. Canadian travel bureau service—To assist in promoting tourist business in Canada, $500,000.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister explain the situation with regard to tourist travel this year? Last year tourist travel was nothing like it was hoped it would be.

Mr. CARDIN: It is very difficult to outline completely the situation. We all know it is difficult on account of the war to move from one country to the other, and there is no doubt an agitation is being made in the United States against people coming to visit Canada.

Mr. GREEN: Is that so this year too?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes, and according to the information given to me the campaign against Canada has been intensified. Recently the director of the tourist bureau made a visit to the United States and spent three or four weeks there visiting all the important centres, and when he came back he reported that the situation was very bad; that the propaganda against Canada was very extensive and was having a great effect.

Mr. GREEN: What steps are being taken to counteract it?

Mr. CARDIN: It was with great satisfaction that he learned that the invitation issued by the Prime Minister explaining the situation had a very good effect upon the United States public. The director made a proposal to have a certain number of our public men deliver addresses explaining the situation, to dispel the misapprehension which exists in the United States. He recommended in particular that the Minister of Justice be asked to broadcast from Washington, and said he undoubtedly would be given the advantage of the broadcasting stations in the United States capital. It was suggested also that members of parliament and all those who have an opportunity of going to the United States take advantage of their visit to explain that it is not so difficult to visit Canada and that the embarrassments spoken of so much by the propagandists are not true. There is a possibility of combating in the United States press this bad influence against our tourist traffic, but it is quite a job.

Mr. GREEN: Are we doing any broadcasting from Canadian stations to clear up that situation? Take, for example, the stations near the boundary; why do we not have regular broadcasts from them?

Mr. CARDIN: That is done. I have had control of that branch of the Department of Transport for only a short time, and now it is going to be handed over to the new Minister of National War Services.

Mr. GREEN: But there must not be any delay, because the summer is advancing, and it will be too late.

Mr. CARDIN: I am sure there will not be any delay.

Mr. COLDWELL: The minister suggested that members of parliament if they go across the line do a little work; I wonder whether for that purpose they can get enough foreign exchange to get there and back again.

412. Marine service—river St. Lawrence ship channel—To provide for extension and improvement of control weirs—capital, $155,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: May we have a breakdown of this item?

Mr. CARDIN: It is for repairs to be made to a certain number of weirs or submerged dams built in the St. Lawrence river for the purpose of raising the level of the water in and below the port of Montreal. They are built between islands at the opening of lake

St. Peter, about fifty miles below Montreal. The amount required is for the repair and maintenance of these submerged dams.

Mr. COCKERAM: That is what I understand, but I wanted a break-down.

Item agreed to.

413. Marine service. To provide for the completion of a combination ice-breaker and service vessel—capital (revote), $80,000.

Mr. HAZEN: Where is that vessel being built, and who is building it?

Mr. CARDIN: The vessel is being built in Lauzon, Quebec. This is the ice-breaker known as the Ernest Lapointe, and this amount represents the last payment on the purchase price. There is also an amount for repairing the hull following the spring season, but that is covered by a supplementary item.

Mr. HAZEN: Who built the vessel?

Mr. CARDIN: It was built by the Davie Shipbuilding and Repairing company, after tenders were called.

Mr. COLDWELL: When was it placed in service?

Mr. CARDIN: This spring.

Item agreed to.

Government owned enterprises.

415. Non-active accounts. National Harbours Board. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures during the calendar year 1941 or any or all of the following accounts:

(a) Retirement of maturing debentures—Saint John, $2,000; Quebec, $400,000. Total, $402,000.

(b) Reconstruction and capital expenditures —Saint John, $3,000.

Generally—unforeseen, $200,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: What is the reason for this increase?

Mr. CARDIN: This is to retire maturing debentures amounting to $400,000 at the port of Quebec and $2,000 for Saint John. There is also provision for the expenditure of $3,000 at the harbour at Saint John, and the $200,000 is for unforeseen expenditures in the harbours generally.

Mr. HAZEN: How much of the $200,000 voted last year was spent?

Mr. CARDIN: I am informed that the expenditure was somewhat over $100,000.

Mr. HAZEN: Where was that money spent?

Mr. CARDIN: It was used for the purchase of floating equipment for Halifax and Saint John, and also for timber handling equipment in the port of Montreal.

Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited.

416. Advances to Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, repayable on demand with interest at a rate to be fixed by the governor in council upon such terms and conditions as the governor in council may determine and to be applied in payment of capital expenditures in connection with vessels under the company's control during the year ending December 31, 1941, $20,000.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I am wondering how long this custom has been followed of granting an advance to Canadian National Steamships Limited of $20,000, or $21,000, which was the amount voted last year. How long has this custom prevailed?

Mr. HOWE: I happen to be familiar with that matter. This item is required by the Canadian National act. They are not permitted to spend money for capital account unless it is voted by parliament. As a matter of fact, this year, as I remember the statements made in the committee, the net earnings of the Canadian National Steamships Limited were substantial, amounting to about $400,000. In spite of that fact, however, any capital expenditure either by the railway or the steamship company must be voted by parliament.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I gather from the item that this money is advanced to the company with the understanding that it may be repaid by and by. Have any of these advances ever been repaid by the Canadian National Steamships?

Mr. HOWE: This is a capital vote, the money being spent to improve the property; it is a permanent capital investment. As a matter of fact, at the present time the Canadian National Steamships are returning money to the government out of earnings.

Mr. BLACKMORE: They are ahead on revenues, then?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Under what item is that shown, or where could we find a statement of that amount?

Mr. HOWE: It will be found in the report of the Canadian National Steamships, which was dealt with by the committee on government-owned railways and shipping. Under the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act passed in 1932, it is necessary for the railway and the steamship company to come to parliament and get a vote for capital expenditures, regardless of the amount of their earnings. That is, even though they may have a large surplus of revenue, that surplus cannot be spent on capital account unless it is voted by parliament.

Mr. COLDWELL: How many ships have we on the West Indies route now, and are they passenger or cargo boats?

Mr. HOWE: At one time we had six passenger and six cargo boats, but I think a number of the cargo boats have been put on the north Atlantic run to help out the situation there, and I believe one or two of the passenger boats have been transferred to the British government for use as hospital ships. I cannot give the exact number.

Mr. COLDWELL: The service is practically out of commission, then?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

DEFICITS

Canadian National Railway Company
Appropriation not required for 1941-42 (decrease), $15,000,000.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): There is no number attached to this reduction of $15,000,000 for the Canadian National Railways; nevertheless I think I should ask one or two questions in order to clarify the general picture. First, it is a matter of congratulation that in the conduct of this railway we are $15,000,000 better off for the coming year, which, of course, is due almost entirely to the war.

Under the report and the recommendations brought down by the committee on railways and shipping, after suggestions from the directors of the Canadian National Railways, the system of bookkeeping employed makes it mandatory that a depreciation charge be set up. This amounts to the sum of $11,000,000. My question is: Will the $15,000,000 reduction and another $11,000,000 depreciation be the total amount for the coming year, or is the new bookkeeping set-up which is now authorized and mandatory and brings our methods of bookkeeping into line with the systems employed by class I railways in the United States—under the supervision of the interstate commerce commission—designed to make the amount $15,000,000 plus $11,000,000 depreciation?

Mr. CARDIN: No; because we had depreciation last year also.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Yes; but it was not set out in the books last year. It was estimated, but it did not go into the bookkeeping system.

Mr. HOWE: Practically the same amount went in as a retirement allowance.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): I want a clear answer to my question. Will the $11,000,000 appear in the present bookkeeping system as a charge against the operations of the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. CARDIN: Yes.

Mr. HARRIS (Danforth): Then I shall make this observation. I say to the administration that if that $11,000,000 is on the record as a depreciation charge, then with that amount, which is almost $1,000,000 a month in the year, there should not be nearly the requirement for temporary loans throughout the twelve months to take care of the deficits which occur from month to month.

Item agreed to.

Prince Edward Island Car Ferry and Terminals.

417. Amount required to provide for the payment during the fiscal year 1941-42 to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the national company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport, made from time to time by the national company, to the Minister of Finance and to be applied by the national company in payment of the deficit (certified by the auditors of the national company) in the operation of the Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals arising in the calendar year 1941, $400,000.

Mr. COCKERAM: Why is there an increase here?

Mr. CARDIN: This is only an estimate of what the deficit will be this year.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

364. Air service. Air service administration, $11,435.

Mr. GILLIS: Piloting a bill through the house on March 20, the Minister of Munitions and Supply, who is in charge of this item, made a statement with reference to the extension of passenger and air mail service into Sydney, Nova Scotia. He stated at that time that it was the intention of the department to extend these services and to cure the situation which exists there at present. Has the minister any further information relative to the extension of the service?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): A radio beam to connect the airways is now under construction. The tower at Sydney is being constructed. Within the next six weeks or two months the beam should be installed, and at that time it is hoped we shall be able to extend the service to Sydney.

Mr. JACKMAN: Is this an account of Trans-Canada Air Lines, or is it a government expenditure?

Mr. HOWE: It is a government expenditure. It has not anything to do with Trans-Canada Air Lines. It is for government supervision of aviation generally throughout Canada.

Mr. JACKMAN: What is the set-up in the minister's department? Is there a staff including one or two senior men to look after air transportation, as well as those men connected with Trans-Canada Air Lines?

Mr. HOWE: All aviation is in the Department of Munitions and Supply. This particular vote covers the supervisory staff, including the director of civil aviation and his staff.

Mr. JACKMAN: Who is the director of civil aviation?

Mr. HOWE: Mr. J. A. Wilson.

Item agreed to.

366. Air service. Civil aviation division. Airways and airports—Construction and improvements, including lighting and radio facilities—Capital, $1,231,460.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): When a road is being constructed from a city to an airport, and it happens to pass through private property, what arrangements are made for compensating the owner for the lands taken from him?

Mr. HOWE: If the road is built by the federal government—and this is seldom done, because it is not our practice to build roads to airports—an attempt is made to purchase the road by private agreement. If that attempt is not successful, expropriation proceedings are taken, and the price is settled by the exchequer court.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): The road I have in mind is the one which runs from South Hill Ogden, a suburb of Calgary, to Shepard. I believe it is a dominion operation.

Mr. HOWE: Probably in connection with a military airport, is it not?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Yes, at Shepard.

Mr. HOWE: An attempt would first be made to purchase the land from the owner.

[Mr. Howe.]

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): How would the department arrive at a valuation? Would it be the average price for the district, or would this be done by adjusters?

Mr. HOWE: We have been using the real estate division of the Canadian National Railways. Those men have had wide experience in purchasing land, under similar conditions. Mr. Clark, of the Canadian National Railways, is in charge of purchasing for the Department of Munitions and Supply. His local representative would endeavour to reach what would be considered an equitable price. If that failed, the matter would be settled by court action.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I hope the minister's department would not pay the same price as was paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway for a supply depot in East Calgary. The price they paid was about $500 an acre. A farmer would do all right if he could get that much. If a road happened to run through summer-fallow, or through land bearing crops, would there be compensation for the summer-fallow or the crops?

Mr. HOWE: Yes; if the land is under crop, we pay compensation.

Mr. ROWE: Has the minister given consideration to assistance to municipalities for roads through townships?

Mr. HOWE: No.

Mr. ROWE: From one airfield to another?

Mr. HOWE: Highways are a responsibility, first, of the province and, then, of the municipalities. The federal government is not responsible for roads.

Mr. ROWE: I mean roads from airfield to airfield.

Mr. HOWE: Under the air training plan, where it has been necessary for operational purposes, we have sometimes built roads to the airport.

Mr. ROWE: The department should give more consideration to the maintenance of higher class roads to the airfields used for training purposes. I am not going to delay the passing of the item by going into details, but I would mention the roads from the airfields in Simcoe county between Beeton and Camp Borden and between Camp Borden and Edenvale. The aviators and airmen in training have to endure considerable hardship from the dust and rough roads in that district, and the department should give more consideration to maintaining these roads in better shape by assisting the municipalities.

Item agreed to.

365. Air service. Civil aviation division—Control of civil aviation, including the administration of the Aeronautics Act and regulations issued thereunder, $245,400.

Mr. MAYBANK: Mr. Chairman, I desired to ask a question on item 365, but it passed before I had an opportunity. I had also a question to ask on item 366. Perhaps it would be convenient if I asked that one now and then asked my question on item 365.

The CHAIRMAN: All right.

Mr. MAYBANK: My question on item 366 relates to the airport on the outskirts of Winnipeg, sometimes referred to as the Winnipeg airport, and as to the road leading to it. I know the minister has had some dealings with respect to that road. It is in pretty bad shape. There is one road leading out there in a westerly direction and another leading in from the south. Are any negotiations going on to have the road to the airport fixed up? It is not strictly a federal matter, but the authorities there have been seeking some help here and I should like to know how the matter stands.

Mr. HOWE: The matter lies between the city of Winnipeg and the municipality of St. James, and we sincerely hope that between them they will improve this road. We realize, of course, that it is of interest to the airport, but once again this is not a federal matter, and the federal government has no funds to devote to that purpose.

Mr. COCKERAM: Item 366 deals with airways and airports, construction and improvements, including lighting and radio facilities, $1,231,400, and the next item is also for airways and airports, operation and maintenance, including lighting, radio and meteorological services, $1,729,585. How long will this expenditure continue?

Mr. HOWE: The programme is pretty well finished, and we expect that expenditure will decrease rapidly after this. We have been bringing the airway system up to standard, and this will probably be the last year in which the item will exceed a million dollars.

Mr. HAZEN: Were any airports constructed this year, or is it planned to construct any airports this year under item 366? The item uses the word "construction."

Mr. HOWE: No. There will be certain minor improvements to airports but no new airports will be constructed so far as we know.

Mr. MAYBANK: To revert to item 365, can the minister give us any information with reference to the development of an air route in the northern part of the country? A newspaper in Winnipeg recently referred to the Canadian Pacific Railway commencing to operate, under some other name, I believe, an air route that took in Prince Albert, Edmonton and a couple of other cities. It seems there is a movement to establish another line across the country. Can the minister indicate just how far that matter is advanced and what the plans of the government are with respect to it?

Mr. HOWE: A few northern routes have been purchased by a new owner, but there is no indication of any plan to connect these routes with an east and west service. As a matter of fact, the Trans-Canada act protects the government service against any competitive service, and if any attempt were made to establish a service between towns served by Trans-Canada, such a service would not receive the approval of the board of transport commissioners.

Mr. MAYBANK: It would not require very much, as I understand the matter, to connect between towns already served by companies under Canadian Pacific Railway control. What I have been wondering about is this. Here we have an organization spending a considerable amount of money, and if they should at some future time endeavour to connect these towns by air service—and it is only a matter of seven or eight hundred miles—would we not be in rather a difficult position? They would be able to point back and say that they had been spending money in preparation for just that sort of thing and that we had not adequately warned them but had allowed them to start in with a service which would become a competitor with Trans-Canada. Are all such organizations warned that we shall not tolerate a competing system of that sort?

Mr. HOWE: There is no indication of any attempt or desire on the part of that organization to operate an east to west service.

Item agreed to.

375. Air service. Radio division. Issue of radio receiving licences—(transport department only), $156,406.

Mr. COLDWELL: Mr. Chairman, I have waited for this item to come up, and I regret that at this late stage of the session I shall have to say something about the broadcasting corporation. I would have dealt with the matter earlier, but the opportunity did not arise. I was also awaiting some further information which I obtained only a short time ago.

On two occasions last autumn, on November 12, as reported at page 64 of Hansard and on December 3, at page 622 of Hansard I drew attention to the conditions in the broadcasting corporation and asked for the appointment of a parliamentary committee to inquire into them. I referred then to serious charges against the corporation, the management, and the board of governors by a member of the board who had resigned and by high officials of the corporation who also had resigned, apparently for somewhat similar reasons. I put before the government and the house accusations of an anti-democratic bias on the part of certain Canadian Broadcasting Corporation officials made in Le Jour, a French weekly published in Montreal, and finally I protested against the treatment of employees of the corporation for their attempt to organize an association. Out of this I suggested that a parliamentary committee would be justified. The minister at the time refused an inquiry. He ignored the statements made by members of this house and left the impression that there was no ground for the statements and no reason for concern, that everything was all right. Yet what has happened since? By order in council the whole constitution of the corporation has been changed, and the general manager has in fact, if not in name, been demoted. The future of the corporation is, in my opinion, being jeopardized by a division of control and responsibility. Certain financial practices have been the subject of comment by the auditor general's department, and a general overhauling of the constitution and of the corporation has apparently been taking place. Why has all this been necessary if everything was well last autumn?

I intend to deal in greater detail with these matters a little later. For the moment I wish to say quite emphatically that this action with regard to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the changes which have been made in it, are, in my opinion, a neglect of the rights of parliament and parliamentary control. If it was considered necessary to make such far-reaching changes in the management and the constitution of the corporation, there should have been a preliminary inquiry by parliament into the reasons which made these changes necessary. Personally, I think this committee should be seriously concerned with what has happened to the broadcasting corporation.

First, it is a public utility, owned by the people of Canada, and, as is necessary in all such cases, it is essential that this house be eternally vigilant. There are private interests in the picture which would like to displace it and undertake the work themselves. The present development in the corporation gives rise to very grave concern to many of us who have believed for a number of years in publicly owned radio. We have every reason to wonder whether the presence of certain business interests on the board is responsible for some of the things which have happened.

When the present general manager, Major Murray, was appointed, the appointment was generally approved on account of his long association with the British Broadcasting Corporation and with publicly owned radio. Whatever may have been the importance of radio in peace time, during the war it becomes of primary significance from the point of view of the country's war effort. We cannot fail to realize the use which the totalitarian powers have made of radio as a system of propaganda for their cause. Yet I venture to say that our own radio propaganda has been ineffective, and the criticism is made—and I repeat it—that it has also been too partisan. According to a return tabled in this house last month, to the date of the tabling of the return seventy-six speeches over the national network had been made since the war began by representatives of the government. To my knowledge only one speech, that of the leader of the opposition, had been made by any member of parliament representing other than the government's party. I am not protesting, because I believe the members of the government should be given every facility to address the people of Canada in war time; but it is also wise, it seems to me, to prevent any idea that the government has a monopoly of radio broadcasting. Since that return was tabled, three broadcasts, which were described when the speakers were introduced as "experimental broadcasts", have been made, by the leader of the opposition, the leader of the social credit group, and myself.

I wish now to deal with some of the disclosures which were made in the parliamentary return tabled on May 16 in answer to certain questions which I had addressed to the minister.

According to that return, the by-laws of the corporation have been amended lately in such a way as to alter fundamentally the whole structure of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation constitution, and to alter it for the worse. In effect, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation will now have three managers—the general manager, the assistant general manager, and the executive committee of the board. This is contrary to the clear recommendations of the 1936 parliamentary committee, and contrary also to the clear intention of the act. The report of the committee stated, at page 784, as recommendation No. 1:

1. It has been amply demonstrated that a commission of three cannot be moulded into a unit that can formulate and execute policy successfully. Evidence adduced before this committee has made it apparent that under the existing organization there has been a lack of coordination in dealing with some major questions.

It goes on to say:

1(a). After carefully reviewing the administration of radio broadcasting, we have reached the conclusion that the recommendation of the 1934 committee, namely "that in the opinion of your committee radio broadcasting can best be conducted by a general manager", is justified in all respects, and your committee hereby endorses and repeats that recommendation.

The act provides, in section 6:

There shall be a general manager who shall be chief executive of the corporation.

This policy of unified management and control was carefully embodied in a former by-law of the corporation, in which the general manager is made the chief executive officer, subject only to the direction of the board of governors. The assistant manager is made responsible to him, as is every other department, and he alone is given the power of employment, dismissal, and remuneration of employees, with the exception of anyone receiving more than $4,000 a year.

All this was done as a result of the 1936 parliamentary committee report and was fully approved by the 1938 and 1939 parliamentary committees. The following quotation from the 1938 committee report is relevant:

Your committee believes that the constitution of the corporation ensuring a proper division between policy and management and a degree of flexibility and independence essential to the medium of broadcasting, together with ultimate parliamentary control, is well suited to the purpose for which it was created.

Furthermore, this point was emphasized above all others in the report of Mr. J. C. Thompson, which was tabled in this house some time ago. The whole plan of administration which he recommends throughout his report, and which he illustrates in appendix F attached to that report, hinges upon his opinion that efficient management requires "unified control of operations throughout Canada."

In short, four parliamentary committees, four statements by the heads of the corporation, and this latest survey by Mr. Thompson, all agree that to divide the management, to divide control and responsibility in an organization like the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, is to court disaster. In fact, as the 1936 report stated, it was precisely such divided authority which caused the difficulty under the former broadcasting commission and which brought about the changes that were recommended in that year. Yet the board of governors, and the government by the passage of order in council P.C. 2845, have seen fit to ignore all this evidence, and the recommendations of these committees and the act itself, and to reintroduce precisely the very arrangements which experience had proven to be disastrous.

Who is in charge of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation now? According to the return, the following is the confusing and confused situation. The general manager is in charge of certain departments. The assistant general manager is in charge of certain other departments. The former has the right of employing staff for certain of the departments, while the latter—

Mr. MacNICOL: Does he employ staff directly or through the civil service commission?

Mr. COLDWELL: Directly. The latter appoints those in other departments. Major Murray has to be responsible "for the carrying out of the provisions of the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1936, and of the by-laws and regulations made thereunder," while Doctor Frigon is to be responsible "for the internal management of the affairs of the corporation." To add to this confusion, neither of these gentlemen is to be responsible to the other, but both are to be subject to management and control by the executive committee, which apparently is to have the final say.

Note that another thing which wrecked the old radio commission was that, in fields of policy and management, there was no clearly defined line of separation; and that, of course, is something which is essential to the organization of any efficient body such as the broadcasting corporation.

The radio act sought to achieve this essential condition by putting management in the hands of the manager and leaving policy to the board. But the new by-laws upset all this. Members of the board who form the executive committee are given the final managerial authority —men who were not appointed for that purpose, nor with those particular qualifications for that particular function in mind. Can anyone in this house think of a more inefficient and a worse form of divided management?

Why was all this considered necessary? The minister last autumn certainly implied, and gave the house the impression by his silence, that he was satisfied with the corporation's management. Indeed, the board of governors went further. They passed a resolution which was published in the press on November 27, 1940, proclaiming "their full and complete confidence in the general manager." Yet, I submit, a clearer case of none too gentle demotion cannot be found. One cannot escape the conclusion that the board, with the approval of the government, P.C. 2485, is prepared to do irreparable damage to the publicly owned radio system in order to cover up its own or the board's incompetence of management.

I say that such action ought not to be tolerated by this parliament. It should not have been tolerated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King), who took such a keen interest in the establishment of the publicly owned corporation.

I am also disturbed by the implications contained in the answers to my questions regarding the expense accounts. The reply to my question whether expense allowances had been exceeded was, no. But the answer to my question, whether the minister's attention had been directed by the auditor general to expense accounts having been overdrawn was, yes. Furthermore, the return shows that the general manager had incurred additional expenses amounting to almost $6,000, without any apparent authorization.

Mr. MacNICOL: Did he give any details of how he spent that large sum of money?

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not know. Since then, the auditor general's letter of February 25 has been tabled in this house. What are the answers to the two pertinent questions which are posed in the concluding paragraph of the auditor general's letter? Indeed, what is all this about? The matter may not, in fact, be serious, but the government must know that there are rumours floating round this city, and suspicions of this sort can and will discredit the corporation unless they are allayed. My purpose is to end these rumours and suspicions and to restore confidence in the nationally owned broadcasting system.

I now come to a question to which this committee should demand a very clear answer: To whom is the corporation responsible, and what is its status? Ever since its formation in 1936, the government and the minister have maintained that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was an independent body similar in status to the Canadian National Railways. On this ground, information regarding the internal management of the corporation was refused in this house on several occasions. For this reason, too, there were parliamentary committees in 1938 and 1939 to inquire into the affairs of the corporation. To the latter, Mr. L. W. Brockington, chairman of the board of governors, made an exhaustive statement on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, during which he had the following to say on the point of the corporation's status:

I make this submission as our view of our own position. We are not part of the government of Canada. We are not civil servants, nor part of the civil service. . . . We are trustees for the payers of licences. In other words, we are trustees for that class in the community which can be described as licensed listeners. They include people who speak the French language and people who speak the English language; they include Liberals, Conservatives, Social Crediters, members of the C.C.F. party and members indeed of many other organizations, both those which are in esse and in posse. Our listeners represent the east and the west, the rich and the poor, and for them we are trustees.

Later in his presentation, Mr. Brockington gives the reasons why the 1936 parliamentary committee recommended that the corporation be set up, as it was, as a separate corporation under a radio act. He said that this was necessary in the case of broadcasting, and I quote again:

(a) because, from all points of view, it is in fact in the nature of a business;

(b) because the character of broadcasting requires the utmost flexibility of administration;

(c) because the national broadcasting authority must be removed from the direct control of the government of the day and be non-partisan and independent.

Many references could be given to statements by the Prime Minister, and by the Minister of Munitions and Supply while he was Minister of Transport, stressing that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was an autonomous corporation. I shall give one or two. In a letter written on behalf of the Prime Minister on November 21, 1939, to the Ontario secretary of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, the following paragraph occurs:

Mr. King wishes me to point out that the relationship between the government and the corporation had not been altered by the existence of a state of war, except that the censorship regulations apply to broadcasting as to other forms of publicity. The board of governors of the corporation have retained full control of broadcasting, and of the arrangement of programmes, in accordance with the responsibility imposed upon them by parliament.

Then the Minister of Munitions and Supply made the following statement in this house on January 20, 1939, as reported at page 192 of Hansard:

I might remind hon. gentlemen that the Canadian broadcasting corporation is an autonomous body, set up by this parliament under the broadcasting act of 1936, which superseded the broadcasting act of 1932 sponsored by hon. gentlemen opposite. In drafting that act and in its course through a committee of the house every effort was made to divorce the corporation from political interference, or, in fact, any direction from the government of the day.

A little later, on February 15, 1939, he emphasized the point in answer to a question. On page 949 of Hansard he is reported as saying:

> This question refers to a matter of the internal management of an autonomous corporation. Inasmuch as a committee of this house has been appointed to investigate all matters affecting the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, I think we should take the same position as is taken in connection with the Canadian National Railways and decline to answer a question of this type.

Finally I am informed that in three cases which have come before the courts the question of the status of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was an issue, and the courts, including the courts of appeal of Ontario and Quebec, held that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was a distinct and separate corporation which was properly suable although not taxable. In short, it has always been considered settled, both in parliament and throughout the country, that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was a separate corporation and not a government department. Yet, when a short time ago, its employees sought to form a union and to bargain collectively with the corporation, it becomes a sort of government department, and the union is informed that the corporation has no right to enter into an agreement with them.

Surely the Prime Minister, and perhaps the Minister of Munitions and Supply, who has been exceedingly busy, have not fully realized what has been happening. If they do realize it, and allow this condition to continue, they and the entire government are guilty of seriously damaging proper democratic and parliamentary control of a public utility which is of great importance to this country for the successful prosecution of the war and the maintenance of national unity.

I think I have said enough to substantiate my former statements that conditions in the broadcasting corporation are serious. I suggest that the recent actions of the government and the board show clearly that they have been aware of the seriousness of the situation.

Why then was a parliamentary committee not appointed when there was a request for it in the house and in many sections of the press? What interests, if any, were at work to advise against such an inquiry? Mr. Bannerman, president of the Canadian association of broadcasters, is reported in a weekly called News, dated May 8, 1941, to have stated that although his association had not made any deliberate lobby, they had advised the government against an inquiry. Why was it the concern or the right of private broadcasters to advise the government against a parliamentary inquiry into one of parliament's own creatures and institutions? Why was it the business of these people, who opposed throughout the idea of a publicly-owned radio at the beginning, and probably still do, to advise against allowing parliament to exercise its right?

In March I asked the minister some questions regarding the granting of certain channels to certain private stations. I asked whether this implied a change in Canadian Broadcasting Corporation policy. The minister gave what I thought at the time was a vague answer. According to an article in the May issue of the Canadian Forum, three days after the minister's reply—

> Representatives of the leading private broadcasting interests appeared before the board of governors to demand the right to increase their power to the limits allowed under the Havana agreement.

Is one to conclude that private interests are daring to interfere because they feel that they can get concessions out of this situation? I am told that on Monday of this week the governors of the broadcasting corporation met and that they were under pressure or had some application before them to allow increases in power for the high-power wavelengths now used temporarily by private broadcasters. There is no reason in the world why that should be done or even considered. These high-power wave-lengths under the Havana agreement were meant for our nationally owned system, and we have had that assurance from ministers in the house. Those wave-lengths need not be occupied for five years from April 1; that is to say, until March 31, 1946. During those five years the country has an opportunity of utilizing those channels, and if we do not utilize them, then the country can decide afterwards what it will do with them.

It is not too late to correct some of the mistakes that have been made. I appeal to the government to agree to the appointment of a parliamentary committee as soon as we meet in the autumn, so that such a committee may go into the whole situation and study the changes that have been made and understand the influences, if any, that are at work. The excuse that a committee is unnecessary in war time surely cannot be accepted. On the contrary, it is because we are at war and because radio is so powerful a factor in modern war, that it is the duty of this parliament and of the government to ensure that the broadcasting system is functioning as effectively as possible in the best interests of the country. If it is suggested that members of this house are too busy to inquire into radio, it is doubly certain that members of the government have been and are far too much occupied to give adequate attention to this matter. Perhaps this is the reason for the ill-advised, ill-considered and unfortunate steps that have just been taken.

A parliamentary committee should inquire into this whole situation. It should hear the members of the board, the officials of the corporation, Mr. Plaunt, the former member of the board who resigned on account of conditions which have now been shown to have been there, and to justify his resignation, Mr. J. C. Thompson, Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Pickering, all of whom I named last November as having recently resigned from the corporation on grounds which should have been investigated by a parliamentary committee. If the inquiry shows that certain people were on the board or among the administrators who should have been removed, then let us do the courageous thing, instead of tolerating something which may cause serious harm to a public institution of great importance, just in order to hide some weaknesses in the set-up which ought to be rectified.

I was going to say something about the channels that were allotted, and the national coverage that might be given by the further use of some of those channels, but I do not propose to go into those matters to-night; I do not wish to detain the committee at any greater length. But as I did in November last, so to-night I appeal to the government to provide for a thorough investigation into all that surrounds the broadcasting corporation. When I find men on the governing board who are so tremendously interested in a competing form of public entertainment, such as the film industry—in the person of Mr. Nathanson—I am not satisfied that this is a good thing. I think we should see to it that nothing is done which would undermine this great public institution. When the original act to set up a publicly-owned radio corporation was before the house, Right Hon. R. B. Bennett said that the air at least should not be alienated, that the time had come when we regretted having alienated some others of our great public utilities. I have been interested in this publicly-owned radio ever since radio came into prominence, because I have believed it to be one of the greatest means of education, and by the same token one of the most dangerous weapons of propaganda, that it would be possible to find. When public confidence in a corporation of this kind begins to be undermined, the educational value of the organization ceases, and we are in danger of losing it as the effective instrument it ought to be for the education, entertainment and good of the people of Canada.

Mr. HOWE: Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose at this stage of the session to make any extended remarks in reply to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. It seems to me, however, that the hon. gentleman is exceedingly inconsistent in his argument, in that in one breath he argues that this corporation is a department of the government, and, in the next, that it is an independent corporation.

Mr. COLDWELL: May I suggest that this is exactly what the minister has been doing, and I was trying to find out exactly what it was.

Mr. HOWE: This is my interpretation. This is a corporation set up by an act of parliament. The members of the corporation are the governors. The powers of the board of governors are the powers granted to them by an act of parliament, and the management of the corporation is vested in that board. Neither the minister in charge of the department nor any parliamentary committee has authority to manage the corporation. A parliamentary committee can recommend to the government any change in the broadcasting act. The government can appoint the governors of the corporation. The minister in charge of the department is the channel of communication between the board of governors and parliament and between the board of governors and the governor in council; but the management of the broadcasting corporation has been vested by this parliament in the board of governors. During the time I was in charge of the department, after the last broadcasting act was passed by this house, I was the channel of communication between the board of governors and this parliament and between the board and the government of Canada; but I was always careful to respect the position that it was the board of governors who were operating the corporation.

As to the position of the employees of the broadcasting corporation, that is entirely a legal matter; and in legal matters we of the government rely upon the Department of Justice, as we are bound to do. The question of whether the employees of the corporation are in the position of being employees of an independent corporation, or whether they are, in fact, employees of an emanation of the crown, is a legal question, depending entirely upon the position in which they were placed by the act of this parliament establishing the corporation. The Department of Justice has considered the matter and has handed down a ruling that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is an emanation of the crown, and that the employees are in fact employees of the crown. As I say, that is a legal decision, and I do not think it is for me or for any other member of parliament to argue with the Department of Justice as to the correctness of that decision.

My hon. friend stated that changes have been made which have destroyed the position of the corporation. Those changes were very minor indeed. One change was that a new officer has been appointed, in the person of a comptroller. As companies grow and staff matters become more complex, it is quite customary to appoint a comptroller; that is, a man especially entrusted with the internal audit of expenditures and the control of staff. The changes in the by-laws had to do with the appointment of the comptroller, and the duties of that office were added to those of the assistant general manager. At the same time the control was strengthened somewhat to some extent by the appointment of an executive committee which could meet more frequently than the board as a whole, and which was given additional responsibilities particularly in connection with the financial control of the corporation.

I might point out that during the last year the corporation has been under some stress and strain due to the fact that a number of its senior officers have had to spend long periods of time in the British isles helping out the corporation during a difficult period there. As a result, the other senior officers of the corporation were called upon to double up in their duties, and a certain laxity of financial control was called to my attention by the auditor general. I reported the communication of the auditor general, who is also the auditor of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to the board of directors, and asked them to take prompt steps. The steps taken were those which the board of directors thought necessary to overcome the lack of financial control which had been apparent, as a result of the auditor general's report.

The situation referred to by the auditor general was a very small matter in dollars and cents, and, when called to the attention of the board, was immediately corrected. Obviously, however, it was the duty of the board to take steps to see that the controls were tightened so that a similar situation could not arise again. I make no apologies for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or its management. I believe it is a stronger institution to-day than it has been in any time in its history. I believe it is giving better satisfaction to the public to-day than it has done at any time previously. At least, the complaints which used to come to my desk in great volume are coming now only in an attenuated stream. In handing over the duties to another minister, I can only wish that his relations with the corporation itself will be as happy as mine have been to this day.

Mr. FULFORD: I wish to complain about a coverage—perhaps I should say a lack of coverage—by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of the locality in which I live, and the county of Leeds, which I have the honour to represent in this house. I have reference particularly to the town of Brockville.

During the day we get excellent coverage from CBO, but just as soon as night falls, the set starts to whine and the first thing you know pandemonium is loose. We have station CFRC at Kingston, only fifty miles away, but we cannot get it either day or night. When one writes corporation headquarters the reply is, "Why, you are listening to the wrong stations. Neither CBO nor CFRC are your stations. You should listen to station CBL Toronto"—over 200 miles away.

Mr. MacNICOL: And you could not get it.

Mr. FULFORD: No, we cannot get it. Then, we have station CBM Montreal, which is audible during the day and inaudible at night. We have CBF in Montreal, but since ours is an English-speaking community, we find that station CBF does us very little good. The one station we can get is CBA, Sackville, New Brunswick, if you please, and then only if atmospheric conditions are perfect.

It is a hardship to have to pay $2.50 for a radio licence and then have to depend entirely upon United States broadcasting stations. Surely that is not fair to those people who pay licence fees, and I do not believe it is the principle upon which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was built, namely, that of nationalizing our radio system.

I wish to take this opportunity of complimenting the commission upon the improvement in their programmes because, when we can hear them, we notice a decided improvement. The corporation has taken the best programmes from United States stations, and is bringing in excellent programmes from Great Britain. But of what earthly use are those programmes to us if, when we sit down before our radios, we hear nothing but squawks and squeaks and a few words in Spanish?

I admit that the reallocation of stations has made some difference. Formerly we used to get two stations on the same wave-length; now we get three or four. I must point out that this is a most aggravating, and, I believe, an unnecessary condition which obtains in the particular part of eastern Canada in which I reside. I believe it is a condition which might be easily overcome, either by stepping up the power of CBO at Ottawa, thereby giving eastern Ontario complete coverage—and this is the logical point from which to give that coverage—or by building a directional station somewhere which would give coverage from Belleville to the Quebec border.

As matters now stand, I can only restate that I do not think it is fair to those who are asked to pay radio licence fees, nor do I think the present condition reflects due credit upon the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the improvement it has made in its programmes. I would urge the minister to give this matter his serious consideration.

Mr. CRERAR: It is now within a few minutes of eleven o'clock, and if we are to sit beyond that time—and I believe it is the wish of the committee to do so—we shall need the consent of the committee.

Mr. MacNICOL: If we cannot finish, there is no use in sitting beyond eleven o'clock to-night.

Mr. CRERAR: We would require the consent of the committee to do so. If it is necessary, I would move that the committee remain in session, by unanimous consent, until we make further progress.

Mr. COLDWELL: I shall not agree to that.

Mr. CRERAR: Do I understand that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar does not wish to sit beyond eleven o'clock?

Mr. COLDWELL: I did not say that. I said that I would not agree to any motion permitting us to sit indefinitely. There are 144 items in the estimates still to be considered.

Mr. MacNICOL: And they are important ones, too.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes; they are important. We cannot possibly finish to-night, and I think, after sitting night after night and day after day, as we have been doing, from eleven o'clock in the morning until twelve o'clock at night, if we cannot finish we might just as well quit right now. Certainly I would not be prepared to agree to an open motion such as that which the minister has just suggested.

Mr. MacNICOL: I take the same stand. A good many of the items which have gone through to-night have gone through in a farcical manner; there is no doubt about that. The present government is no worse than previous governments have been in this regard. But I am going to protest next session with regard to the way in which estimates have been going through at this and other sessions—both when we were in power, and under the present government. Governments leave estimates to the last minute, and then they are taken quickly—many of them involving millions of dollars. We voted $3,000,000 to-night in one second's time—just while the chairman said "carried". That is not fair to Canada or to the House of Commons.

All spring we sat neither Wednesday nor Friday evening. I suggest that we might have had meetings on both those evenings, and attend to some of these matters in the regular way. If we could finish to-night I would not be opposed to sitting, but there are some important items on which I wish to speak. All this cannot be done in an hour, and in that event, what is the use of sitting any further to-night?

Mr. CRERAR: There are two suggestions which can be made. First, should we continue until midnight, as we have done on previous evenings this week, and then if it appears unlikely that we can finish to-night, could we sit to-morrow?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Certainly.

Mr. STIRLING: That is more sensible.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): We can continue only by unanimous consent of the committee.

Mr. MacNICOL: Let us sit to-morrow.

Mr. CRERAR: I would suggest that we continue until midnight and resume sitting to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock. If there is no objection, perhaps that proposal could be carried?

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Crerar moves, seconded by Mr. Cardin that the house shall sit—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I do not think a motion in committee can be accepted. It can be implied that there is consent of the committee to carry on. Then, when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, there should be a formal resolution moved.

Mr. COLDWELL: We shall need authority to sit to-morrow morning.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is the wish of the committee now to carry on until twelve o'clock, and that may be done by unanimous consent. Then, when the committee reports progress at twelve o'clock, and when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, the motion must be moved that we meet to-morrow morning, such motion being made with unanimous consent of the house, not the committee.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall item 375 carry?

Mr. NICHOLSON: No. The minister referred to the auditor general's letter dated February 25 as dealing with minor matters.

Here is question 10 which was asked by the the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar and answered on May 16:

Were either or both of these officials entitled to a stipulated expense allowance last year, in addition to salary; if so, how much for each allowance?

The answer to that was:

Allowance of $4,800 to general manager, $2,000 to assistant general manager. Allowances to cover expenses at base of operations.

My hon. friend's twelfth question was:

Were both or either exceeded? If so, by how much?

The answer to that was:

No. In addition to regular allowance general manager received $5,697.90 to cover expenses incurred while absent from base of operations. For similar expenditures the assistant general manager got $24.60.

These amounts, of course, were in addition to the salary of $13,600 paid to the general manager and $12,000 paid to the assistant general manager.

Here is the letter of the auditor general to the minister, dated February 25:

Dear Mr. Howe:

The broadcasting act places at the command of the broadcasting corporation certain moneys and, within the terms of the act, the corporation decides on the purposes to which these moneys are to be put.

Section 19 gives to you, as minister, powers with respect to the accounting system, reports, et cetera, and the following section names this office as auditor of the corporation.

Certain points have been brought to my notice, and being in doubt as to the authority to whose notice I should bring them, I address this letter to you.

The act provides that the general manager is to be appointed by the governor in council. This was done and the salary named by order in council. On examining the records of the corporation, it is observed that an allowance at the date of $4,800 "at the base of operations", was authorized by the board, "pending an adjustment in the general manager's salary, as requested by the board." In view of the language used, the question arises as to the administrative power to give such a direction, if the true interpretation to be given to the act is that payments to the general manager are within the sole discretion of the governor in council.

Associated with this is a second point which arises out of the fact that last spring the Minister of Finance gave to the House of Commons an explanation of the interpretation to be given by the income tax authorities to living allowances paid to various men on war work for the crown. The corporation has left to the general manager the question of deciding what officers may be paid per diem allowances and the amounts which may be claimed, in lieu of actual details, when away from their official stations on official business. The accounts show that $20 is the amount claimed by the general manager, but this has apparently been selected by himself as being commensurate with his disbursements. The sum involved is not of concern, but it seems to me probable that the decision in such a matter is associated with the powers of the governor in council, or is one which rests on the board.

After you have had an opportunity to peruse the attached memorandum—which was prepared on my instructions to illustrate the problem—might I be informed:

(a) If you are satisfied that the corporation acted within its powers in granting the $4,800 annual allowance to the general manager? and

(b) If the establishing of a per diem travel allowance to the general manager is a subject of concern to the governor in council?

Yours faithfully,
Watson Sellar,
Auditor General.

I think the committee is entitled to a full statement as to the answers which the minister made to the auditor general. If an allowance of $4,800 has been provided, why this additional amount of $5,697.90 "to cover expenses incurred while absent from base of operations?"

Mr. HOWE: The legal position is this. Under the broadcasting act the salaries of the general manager and assistant general manager are fixed by order in council. Early in the history of the broadcasting corporation the board of governors in its judgment granted an allowance to the general manager. I protested at the time, taking the view that the granting of special compensation to the general manager was a function of the governor in council. However, the question was referred to the justice department, and the justice department determined that the board of governors had the right to fix an expense allowance for the manager and the assistant general manager. The right was established several years ago. I replied to the auditor general that the matter of an allowance was one for the board of governors to determine; that it was a matter of internal management, but that the situation called to my attention was a matter of concern to the government and that we had referred his letter to the board of governors and asked them to examine the situation and to take appropriate action.

The action taken by the board of governors is a matter of internal management that is not discussed in this House of Commons. It can be looked into by a parliamentary committee at an appropriate time, but it is not a matter that I can discuss here because I had no part in the action taken. It was taken by the board of governors in the course of their duties.

I might point out, however, that we have had demands for parliamentary committees on three or four occasions, and we have a demand now. We have had three parliamentary committees on radio since the broadcasting act was passed, and to the best of my knowledge and belief those three parliamentary committees have not changed the broadcasting act in one iota from the act as it passed in 1936. I have the greatest confidence in the world that if another parliamentary committee on radio were held in 1941 or in 1942, the results would be exactly the same as from the three preceding parliamentary committees.

Mr. COLDWELL: I do not think it would be a question of changing the act. That is not the point at issue.

Mr. HOWE: That is the only way by which the conduct of the broadcasting corporation can be affected.

Mr. COLDWELL: As a matter of fact, I think the board of governors has, during the past week or so, departed from the original intention of the parliamentary committee and of the act itself. I was not arguing particularly about the labour situation. I introduced that only incidentally. I have the third and final report of the committee containing the recommendations, dated May 26, 1936. Let me just make this one sentence stand out. I quote from the report:

That in the opinion of your committee radio broadcasting could best be conducted by a general manager.

That was a reiteration of the recommendation of the parliamentary committee of 1934.

Mr. HOWE: But the general manager is in sole charge of broadcasting to-day.

Mr. COLDWELL: No; he is not.

Mr. HOWE: What does he not do about broadcasting?

Mr. COLDWELL: I have here the new by-laws of the corporation, adopted April 29, 1941, and I find this:

(3) Subject to the control of the board of governors the executive committee shall have power—

Not the general manager:

(a) to manage the affairs of the corporation, to control its finances and to supervise its operations, in accordance with the general policies laid down by the board of governors;

(b) to define the functions, duties and responsibilities of the officers and employees of the corporation and to direct them in the performance of their duties.

Mr. HOWE: One cannot imagine the board of governors not having the powers my hon. friend suggests. The board of governors are delegating their powers to a smaller number of themselves.

Mr. COLDWELL: I would say to the minister that they delegate to this executive committee the powers that ought to lie in the general manager, because surely it is the function of the general manager to direct the officers and employees of the corporation.

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Here we are told that it is the function of the executive committee. What I am objecting to is that we have gone back to exactly the same position in which the old commission found itself before the Radio Act. If we look into the new by-laws we find the other divided authority:

8. (1) (a) The general manager of the corporation shall be its chief executive officer, and, subject to the direction of the board of governors or of the executive committee, he shall have charge of programmes, of policies, and relations of the corporation with the press and the public and be responsible for the carrying out of the provisions of the Canadian Broadcasting Act, 1936, and of the by-laws and regulations made thereunder.

(b) The general manager shall have authority to appoint the officers and other employees of the corporation other than—

Authority over other employees is taken away from him.

—the technical, commercial or business staff, but such appointments and the salary rates of these appointees shall be subject to the approval of the executive committee.

In other words, power which lay with the general manager now rests with the executive committee.

The by-laws state:

He may at any time suspend for cause any such officer or employee.

(c) He may delegate any of his powers to the assistant general manager, or to any officer or employee of the corporation.

Then we come to the assistant general manager.

8. (2) (a) The assistant general manager, subject to the direction of the board of governors, or the executive committee—

Note this.

—shall have charge of the technical and commercial operations of the corporation;

No longer is there a general manager managing the corporation. The assistant general manager is removed from his control entirely; he is to be subject to the direction of the board of governors, or the executive committee, and he——shall have charge of the technical and commercial operations of the corporation; he shall be responsible for the internal management of the affairs of the corporation, and shall fulfil—

What?

—the duties which may at any time be delegated to him by the board of governors or by the executive committee and shall exercise the powers of the general manager in his absence.

In other words, the assistant general manager is taken out from under the control of the manager, although the recommendation of the parliamentary committee of 1936 was that "in the opinion of your committee radio broadcasting can best be conducted by a general manager." That conclusion was a reiteration of the recommendations of 1934 and was incorporated in the statute. Then:

(b) The assistant general manager shall have authority to appoint the technical, commercial and business staff of the corporation, but such appointments and the salary rates of such appointees shall be subject to the approval of the executive committee—

Not of the general manager, ever, but of the executive committee.

He may at any time suspend for cause any such officer or employee.

On the other point, we have the position of comptroller which the minister mentioned, and which I think is an excellent move in the right direction. The comptroller shall report direct to the board of governors or to the executive committee. That is quite proper; no one can have any objection to that. In the event of there being no comptroller of finance, or in his absence, the powers shall be exercised by the general manager or the assistant general manager or any officer designated by the board of governors and the executive committee. The financial control, I quite agree, is where it ought to be. But I submit that the purpose at the time of the passing of the broadcasting act, the recommendation of the parliamentary committee in 1934, reiterated in 1934, endorsed in 1938 and 1939, was for a unified management of the corporation, and to-day we have the assistant general manager taken from under the control of the manager, and the executive committee assuming managerial powers which ought not to lie in the committee. That is my contention, not that I was talking about the legal status of the corporation in order to deal with labour disputes, although in that respect, may I add, we cannot have it both ways. If it is a government corporation, an emanation of the crown, then of course this house cannot deal with labour disputes between the corporation and its employees, nor can we ask for and receive reports in this house regarding the corporation. If, on the other hand, it is a corporation like the Canadian National Railways, which I believe it to be, then we have the right to ask for all particulars in the house, and the employees have the right, like the Canadian National Railway employees, to organize a union and negotiate for conditions with the corporation. But that was not the point I was making.

The point was that there has been a distinct change in the whole set-up of the corporation in the last month or so. To-day we have the executive committee becoming the manager, the general manager demoted, and the assistant manager, with certain duties, reporting not to the general manager but direct to the executive committee. The whole basis of the corporation, as we have known it, has been destroyed.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I do not wish to prolong the discussion. I understood that the Prime Minister said that this organization had been transferred to the Department of National War Services. Is that correct?

Mr. HOWE: Yes.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I should like to take the opportunity of commending the government for this wise move. I believe that that is where the organization should belong. I do not believe that the Minister of Munitions and Supply, who is burdened in many directions, should be burdened with this. I urge upon the newly elected Minister of National War Services that he give careful consideration to the recommendation made this evening by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, namely, to set up a committee to look into this whole question at the next session of parliament.

Item agreed to.

524. Air service. Civil aviation division. Airways and airports—Construction and improvements, including lighting and radio facilities—capital—further amount required, $238,500.

Mr. MacNICOL: May I ask the acting leader of the house, where do the estimates come in for national defence for air?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): There are none. They are all covered by the war appropriation vote carried earlier in the session.

Mr. MacNICOL: Does the same apply to national defence for naval services?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

100. Annuities act, $255,742.

Mr. COLDWELL: This relates to the new act under which annuities are bought and paid?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): Yes.

Mr. COLDWELL: Has there been an increase of recent years in the business in annuities? In some places campaigns have been put on to sell more of the government annuities.

Mr. McLARTY: Speaking from recollection, although I shall endeavour to obtain the figures, I believe that in 1939-40 it was about $21,000,000, and in 1940-41 it was about $19,000,000. My recollection is that there is a decrease of about $2,000,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Would that be due to the increase in the rate? At one time our annuities had a favourable rate compared with those of insurance companies. But the insurance companies made representations, and I do not know whether it was on account of their representations or as a result of some inquiry, but the rate was raised, I believe by 15 per cent. Has there been a drop in the annuities since then?

Mr. McLARTY: No. There has been no drop in the rate. The rate has been 4 per cent, and that is what it has been for, I believe, four or five years.

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, but I meant the 15 per cent increase in the rate which brought it up to 4 per cent?

Mr. McLARTY: Yes; I think that is right if the hon. member refers to the cost rate.

Mr. HAZEN: Who are the agents to whom commissions are paid? I mean, are they private individuals?

Mr. McLARTY: Oh, yes, they are private individuals.

104. Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, $40,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. MacInnis), speaking last night on estimates pertaining to labour, took occasion to say something about manufacturers and their unfair treatment of their employees. There are undoubtedly some manufacturers who in the past have not perhaps treated their employees as they should have done, but the statement of the hon. member was all-embracing and included everybody. That is not the situation. There are many earnest and sincere manufacturers and businessmen who do treat their employees as employees should be treated, in a spirit of brotherly love, which enjoins a man to follow the Golden Rule and do unto others as he would have others do unto him. I myself was a member of a trade union some thirty-five years ago, and in those days I was fairly well posted on trade unionism. I have not been a member for a long time because I graduated from the plant to the executive section of the business, and in my experience I have had both sides of plant life. My experience in plant life has been that managers who treat their men as they should be treated get much more out of them than do those managers who fail to treat their employees properly. A live manager who wishes to obtain the greatest output does, as he should, treat his men properly, just as he would like to be treated, or as he felt he should be treated when he himself was an employee.

I have found, in the course of many dealings with labour leaders, that they too are anxious to avoid strikes. A real representative of labour, a first-class union man, tries at all times to maintain harmony between men and employers, and at the same time he does his best to get fair play for the men. I have found labour leaders, times without number, doing everything they could to avoid calling out their men. Such leaders should be complimented upon their sincerity. Now is the time, if ever there was such a time, when harmony should be encouraged in every possible way; for to-day all should be united, both men and employers, in a common desire to produce the utmost in order to win the war. That is our main objective. Therefore the department, under this vote for the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, should try, and perhaps it is trying, to bring about harmony.

The minister has had a good deal of experience because he has had much to do in his time with adjusting disputes between men and employers. For years I have known of his activities in such matters, and he should be qualified so to direct his department as to avoid to the last limit any dispute between employers and their men, in view of the necessity of producing for war purposes. I have a high regard for my hon. friends to the left. They are doing their best as they see it to represent labour, but I am and I have been a practical labour man—not lately perhaps, because it is some years since I laboured, although in former years I did labour, and I laboured hard in plants. I know, therefore, what labour conditions should be and what labour men should do. As I say, I was one myself. The labour unions have done a great deal and they deserve credit. I have seen much improvement in plant life through the earnest intentions of labour leaders—honest leaders—working for the betterment of the conditions of their men. On the other hand, I know many employers who have diligently endeavoured to improve the conditions of their working men. It was that way in the plant with which I was associated.

Where you have harmony between employers and men, there is much more production. A strike is at all times not only contrary to the welfare of the men themselves but injurious to the plant as well. Therefore every earnest man, be he employer or agent of a union, tries to avoid strikes. Part of the trouble in Toronto at the moment is due to the fact that the government itself now controls certain plants there and, doing as the government should do, it gives good wages and the best working conditions. This has had an effect on a large number of employees in plants owned by private individuals. Whether the plants of private individuals are able to live up to the standards set by the government I do not know, but some of the strikes which have recently occurred in Toronto have come about because the private plants felt unable to maintain standards set by government. Every effort should be made to avoid strikes.

Since the war broke out, many of the plants—not so many lately—have operated three shifts a day. Many have reduced the number to two shifts of ten hours each, and they say that they are getting good results, but other plants still operate three shifts. One man told me last Saturday that a certain plant operates three shifts a day of eight hours each, but the shifts alternate. Using an arbitrary figure, I presume one shift would start at midnight and work until eight in the morning, another from eight until four in the afternoon, and a third from four until midnight, and they vary from hour to hour, so that often one of the shifts will work all night. Those men who have been working all night think there should be a distinction in the wages received as between those working at night and those working in the daytime. There is something in that. There should be some adjustment in favour of those who work at night, and those who work in the daytime would get the benefit of the adjustment when it was their turn to work at night. That is one cause of complaint.

Then I am informed that there is considerable child labour. I know that is supposed to be under the control of the province. In New York state they recently adopted a child labour law called the Nunan-Moffat law, which prohibits child labour, and where a plant uses child labour they prohibit the transport of the material produced in that plant over the roads or the transportation services of the state. I see a lot of very young-looking people going to work here; they look less than sixteen to me.

In conclusion, I would just say that we all look to the minister to use the conciliation methods in every possible way between employers and men in order to keep the plants going, and see to it that fair play prevails all round, fair play for the company and fair play for the men, because men cannot do a good day's work if they are dissatisfied, and furthermore they are liable to be injured while thinking about their conditions. Therefore every effort should be made to have men happy at their work.

Mr. GILLIS: I understand the hon. member for Davenport is an employer of labour.

Mr. MacNICOL: I was also an employee, but held a responsible position for many years.

Mr. GILLIS: I was going to say that it is too bad there are not more employers who have the same attitude of mind as the hon. member with respect to the questions he has just been discussing.

Mr. MacNICOL: I should have said I was an executive official.

Mr. GILLIS: I wish to bring something to the attention of the Minister of Labour. I refer specifically to the Hamilton plant where at the present time the government is in the position of employer. I do so on account of the fact that the Minister of Labour a few days ago, in answer to a question as to the number of strikes in Canada at the present time, answered that there were none of which he knew.

Mr. McLARTY: In war industries. That was this morning.

Mr. GILLIS: I have received from the steel workers organizing committee a copy of a resolution which was sent to the Prime Minister, and I presume the Minister of Labour is familiar with the subject matter of it. If conditions in that plant are as set out, then I think the Minister of Labour under his conciliation machinery should take immediate steps to iron out that situation.

I find myself in this position, being a member of a union and this house closing within a few days. I go back to a district where there is considerable unrest, and, as pointed out by the hon. member for Davenport, men who are interested in the legitimate unions do at all times use whatever influence they have in the unions to avoid strikes and live up to collective agreements and so forth. That has always been and will in the future be my attitude. While the house is in session, I believe the great majority of the men who have grievances that might culminate in stoppage of work will be marking time, thinking that this house will enact some legislation which will give them a way out of their difficulties other than a strike or stoppage of work. But with the attitude that the government apparently have been taking with respect to the implementation of order in council 7440, which is the basis to-day for the settlement of all disputes in labour, if we leave with the decisions that have been rendered and the interpretations that have been placed on that order in council standing as they are without doing something to clarify them, I am afraid that after this house adjourns we may run into an epidemic of trouble. That is why I rise at this time.

I think the minister would be well advised if he studied the subject matter of the resolution to which I have referred, and if the controller in the Hamilton plant at the present time is taking the attitude said to be taken in respect of conciliation, recognition of the union and the extension of his power there to probe the matters that apparently are bothering the men employed in that plant, it would be basis upon which other difficulties across the country might be settled. If the government as employer set the example for the other plants in the country with respect to that order in council and its powers as related to labour disputes, in my opinion that would be doing something to avoid the troubles that I see in the future unless something like that is done.

Another board which, I believe, has reported recently to the minister, is that set up for the purpose of examining into the situation of the railway employees with respect to bonus and so forth, representing, I think, some eighteen different organizations in the railway running trades. I understand that is a split decision; that there is a majority and minority report. The minister is now in this position: if I understand order in council 7440 correctly, if a conciliation board render a decision and have erred in their judgment, the Minister of Labour has the power to review that position, and if it is not in accordance with his interpretation of the order in council, or if the intention of the order has not been carried out, he can reinstruct that board and see that a proper decision is given.

If that were done, I think much of the trouble we have been running into would be avoided. I see most of the men who sit on these boards. I read and interpret that order in council as I think it was intended to be interpreted and see no difficulty with respect to its administration. There is much latitude given; the language is very clear, and I think anyone who misunderstands it does so deliberately, working in the interest of someone else. In the final analysis, however, the Minister of Labour has the right to interpret it.

[Mr. Gillis.]

In connection with that railway matter no decision has yet been made public. I should like the Minister of Labour to give an interpretation now of how he thinks order in council 7440 should apply to that case, and to state what he is prepared to do with respect to eliminating the difficulty that exists in that Hamilton plant at the present time.

Mr. McLARTY: In connection with the Hamilton plant, as the hon. member is aware a board has been set up there. The board is reconvening on Monday. I am given to understand that there are certain things to be ironed out in that plant. I do not wish to anticipate what the board will do. It would not be fair to them, but I believe that when they meet on Monday, a genuine effort will be made to iron out the difficulties.

In connection with the railway matter, that report was received last night. I have not yet had an opportunity to review it; but, as the hon. member correctly points out, the right of review is specifically provided, and I can assure him that the report will be reviewed very carefully.

Item agreed to.

109. Special—to provide for commitments under relief settlement agreements with the provinces, $75,000.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Hon. members will notice that there is a drastic reduction in this item, from $500,000 to $75,000. It was announced some time ago that the contributions made by the dominion government to the provinces would cease some months ago.

As outlined in the annual report, some years ago the federal government, in cooperation with the provinces and municipalities, entered into a resettlement plan under which settlers in a number of provinces were reestablished on the land. According to the report, in 1939 activities were carried on in New Brunswick, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. A great many people from the drought area were reestablished in my constituency under this act and similar arrangements. Last year I brought before the house some of the conditions that prevailed in the districts where these new settlers were living. Some hon. members came to the conclusion that I was referring to all the farmers of Saskatchewan as living under those conditions, which, of course, was not my contention at all. I was confining my remarks to the conditions that prevailed in those areas in which the people were being reestablished under these government schemes.

I think this government has followed a mistaken policy in discontinuing assistance towards this important work at this time. The other night I raised the question when the agriculture estimates were before the committee, and the Minister of Agriculture said that he was sure the spirit of Saskatchewan was such that if a family was without flour some neighbour would come to the rescue. That is the spirit of Saskatchewan, of course; I think people in their poverty are more generous than people who are well to do. I have heard many remarkable stories of the extreme generosity of those who themselves have been in dire want. But the situation is that there are whole blocks of communities in which from 90 to 100 per cent of the people have been dependent upon government assistance for their supplies of food month by month. I am sure hon. members of this committee would have difficulty in grasping the meagreness of those supplies. I placed on the record previously some of the allowances that were made, and I am not going to repeat my statement to-night, but the conditions I described a year ago still prevail. Two or three weeks ago I was in my constituency for a few hours, and I saw two men who were leaving their wives and children because the government had notified them that no further relief would be given after May 31. These men were going to join the army, but I wish to tell this committee that they were not in the proper frame of mind to make their best contribution.

As I pointed out to the Minister of Agriculture, there are some things I think this country can do. We should be able to see that every home in Canada has all the flour that is necessary; and in a province like Saskatchewan, where they have had very little money spent in the development of war industries; where conditions are such that I think it will be extremely difficult for the provincial government to discharge its responsibilities to those people who are being reestablished, surely ways and means can be found to see that everyone has enough to eat. In the second place, I think the Minister of Labour should see that if these people are not going to be reestablished they should be given a chance to find some other employment. This government has been a party to taking these people from their homes in the southern part of the province—

Mr. McLARTY: No.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I understood that at the outset—

Mr. McLARTY: No; this act never applied to Saskatchewan.

Mr. NICHOLSON: But, as I understand it, this department has been guaranteeing a part of the money necessary to provide food for the people who were being reestablished. Is that not correct?

Mr. McLARTY: Yes; up to this year we have been supplying direct relief.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The food the people require in order to live is an important factor in that reestablishment. I do not know how those people are going to be able to survive because, as I have said, I do not see how the province of Saskatchewan can fulfil its responsibilities to them. If this government is not going to carry out the terms of the contract under which those people have been reestablished, then it is our duty to see that they are given a chance in industry. I know of some people being reestablished who were machinists and mechanics in the cities. They went north a few years ago to avoid going on relief or to get off relief, as they thought at that time. Some of them have been appealing to me to make contacts so that they may get back into industry in order to render some useful contribution in the present crisis. Some time ago the hon. member for Davenport told me that he never knew it to be so difficult to find employment for people in his riding; and there is not an hon. member who has offered me any encouragement to have people from my constituency come to Ontario or Quebec, or any other eastern province, in the hope that they may find employment. The Minister of Labour should do one of two things. He should either set up the necessary machinery to enable those people to find employment in those parts of Canada where industries are being operated, or continue to see that they have the wherewithal to obtain sufficient food in the meantime.

Mr. McLARTY: This relief settlement project never did apply to Saskatchewan. It applied to Quebec, Manitoba and Alberta.

Mr. NICHOLSON: This report mentions Saskatchewan.

Mr. McLARTY: It should not, because the project has never applied there. The provision under the act is that one-third of the cost is paid by the dominion, one-third by the province and one-third by the municipality. What the hon. member suggests is that we should revert to the system of providing direct relief in Saskatchewan. That matter has been debated in this house; and the difficulty is that if an exception is made for Saskatchewan, it would have to be made for other provinces as well. I believe Saskatchewan has received fairly generous loans in this connection from the dominion treasury, and I suggest that rather than establish any precedent by reinstating the system of direct relief in that province, if the necessity exists and they cannot finance it themselves it would be more appropriate to do it by way of loan than by reopening the direct relief legislation.

Mr. HOMUTH: I do not know that the hon. member who preceded the minister really referred to the reopening of direct relief. The more we see of this whole industrial and unemployment situation, the more we begin to realize how we have fallen down in connection with our national registration. Industries throughout Ontario are calling for mechanics to-day; and not only for mechanics but for labourers as well. I know a great many men who registered as having been machinists. I know men who were expert machinists at the time of the last war and who to-day are driving bread-wagons or doing other jobs not connected with war industry. We have men on the farms of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta who were formerly mechanics, but who to-day are in the position described by the hon. member for Mackenzie, of requiring relief.

The whole system of national registration has fallen down, because we have not taken advantage of it. If one talks to one minister of the government and says, something about industry, his reply is that this is the responsibility of some other minister. Minister after Minister will say, "This is not my responsibility; the Minister of Munitions and Supply will answer that." Another minister will say, "This is not my responsibility; the Minister of National Defence will answer that." There is not the coordination of effort in our war effort which we ought to have. The result is that if we had used national registration in the way we ought to have used it, we would have been in a position to choose the men who on their national registration cards said they could do this or that job. We could have moved them to those jobs.

Members of the government will reply that that is conscription of labour. I say that it is not conscription of labour. It is an allotment of labour to the jobs those people can do. The great difficulty has been lack of coordination among various departments of government, a failure to see to it that those who are on relief are moved to those sections of the country in which they could do something in our war effort, and earn an honest living without having to accept relief. In that way there would be coordination of our whole effort among the various departments, and we would be getting somewhere.

To-day some industries are being bogged down on account of the recruiting campaign. Industries are saying to departments of government, "Here are men we cannot spare; here are men who are most important to our war effort." But because the government are anxious to see that the enlistment quota is filled before ninety days have expired, they are paying no attention to the necessity of retaining certain men in industry. On the other hand, there are a great many men in other parts of Canada who could be put into those industries, but to whom the government is paying no attention. My objection is that this lack of coordination among various departments of government is doing a great deal of harm to our whole war effort, and is making it necessary for members from various constituencies in western Canada to make appeals for the relief of their people.

Mr. COLDWELL: The point of view of the government in respect of these matters is wrong. I have always been opposed to a system of direct relief. I believe that in 1931, when this procedure began, a most profound mistake was made. While the cost of public works may be greater, still the morale of the people is maintained by a public works programme. I certainly believe that if we have to face the situation again, we should never go in for a system of direct relief.

In the past few days in the House of Commons we have been speaking about recruiting and morale. I am of opinion that we are not going to maintain the morale of our people if we allow conditions to remain as they now exist in some parts of Saskatchewan, and in some of our larger cities. I read in the Montreal Gazette this morning that in that city there are 6,000 heads of families unemployed. If that condition continues, surely it offers no hope for the post-war period. As a matter of fact, it gives people the idea, "Well, we are going back to the same old conditions again, when this is all over."

At noon to-day I had the privilege of having lunch with a minister from a sister dominion, namely, New Zealand. He was describing the enthusiasm there was in that country. They have conscription for overseas service in New Zealand. But the main point is that they are not going to return to the kind of conditions to which our young men may have to return. Already they have organized wealth and industry, and they have compelled wealth to lend its money without interest to the state. They have given to the aged pensions at sixty, amounting to 30 shillings a week, or about $30 a month at the normal rate of exchange. They have free health services, hospitalization and maternity services.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Is that a contributory system?

Mr. COLDWELL: Yes, a contributory basis. Those factors maintain the morale of the people. Here to-night we are discussing unemployment relief. Of course, if we were manufacturing the commodities so badly needed overseas, we should have no unemployment in this country. But the fact is that we have unemployment; we have relief right at our doorsteps. I have said a number of times, and I shall say it to-night for the last time during this session, that if we wish to have the high morale we need in order to win the present conflict, we must plan for something better than the bread-line. We must see to it that during this war the people are fed and clothed and given an opportunity to work. I wish to impress that fact as forcibly as I can upon the minister and the government at this time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: One more thing we must do: We must open our eyes and recognize the fact that when there are unemployed in Canada there are unemployed in Canada. We have not a shortage of labour. It is astounding to me that members of the administration and members of parliament generally will persist that we are short of men in Canada. Yet when we read the newspapers we find there are 6,000 unemployed in Montreal. How on earth people can possibly square the two situations, I do not know. We have enough labour and enough unused resources to produce plenty of all the commodities Canada can produce for all her people, and still give to great Britain a great deal more than we are giving her. But we simply must reorganize our way of doing things so that we may bring together the labour, and the natural and financial resources of our country in order to achieve the desired end.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar):

That on Saturday, June 14, 1941, the house shall meet at eleven o'clock, and the order of business and procedure shall be the same as on Friday.

In making this motion, I desire to thank the committee for its cooperation to-night, and to offer also my thanks for anticipated cooperation to-morrow. I believe it is the general desire that the session be adjourned to-morrow. I do not speak for myself or for members of the government, because we live in Ottawa, and it would not make much difference to us even if we sat next week. But it is the desire of hon. members generally, many of whom have already left, and others who have made arrangements to leave, that we should expedite business to-morrow in order to reach that end.

I wish to point out, however, that some time must be left for the hon. gentlemen of the other house in order that they—

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The other place.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Yes, the other place, so that they can consider the supply bill, and also some time for the representative of the crown to tell us when to come back to Ottawa.

Mr. HOMUTH: Might I ask the right hon. gentleman who is leading the house whether, in view of the fact that government orders will come before questions to-morrow, the house might not first be given the answers to the few questions that remain on the order paper?

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): With pleasure.

Motion agreed to.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East), the house adjourned at 12.05 a.m. until Saturday, June 14, at 11 a.m.

Saturday, June 14, 1941.

The house met at eleven o'clock.

WAR EXPENDITURES

CHANGES IN PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the names of Messrs. Coldwell, Reid, O'Neill and McIlraith be substituted for those of Messrs. MacInnis, Mayhew, McGeer and Gray on the special committee on war expenditures.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RESIGNATION OF ASSISTANT CHIEF OF FRENCH JOURNALS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister) moved:

That the recommendation of the honourable the Speaker with respect to the resignation of L. P. Desrosiers, Esquire, assistant chief of French journals, House of Commons, laid on the table of the house on the 10th of June, 1941, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TITLES OF HONOUR

ELEVATION OF RIGHT HON. R. B. BENNETT TO THE PEERAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): I desire to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the approval or opinion of the government of Canada sought regarding the elevation of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett to the peerage of the United Kingdom?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): In reply to my hon. friend, who was kind enough to inform me of his intention to ask this question this morning, I would say that some little time ago the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom informed me of what he had in his mind with respect to recommending the appointment of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett to the House of Lords, and asked if I had any observations to make with respect to the matter.

Perhaps I can best explain the situation by reading the resolution of the House of Commons which was adopted in 1919 with respect to titles and orders, or rather, that portion of it which is pertinent. An address was presented to his majesty praying that his majesty may be graciously pleased:

(a) To refrain hereafter from conferring any title of honour or titular distinction upon any of your subjects domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada, save such appellations as are of a professional or vocational character or which appertain to an office.

(b) To provide that appropriate action be taken by legislation or otherwise to ensure the extinction of an hereditary title of honour or titular distinction, and of a dignity or title as a peer of the realm, on the death of a person domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada at present in enjoyment of an hereditary title of honour or titular distinction, or dignity or title as a peer of the realm, and that thereafter no such title of honour, titular distinction, or dignity or title as a peer of the realm, shall be accepted, enjoyed or used by any person or be recognized.

All of which we humbly pray your majesty to take into your favourable and gracious consideration.

A suggestion was made that the title of "right honourable" and "honourable" be discontinued, but the suggestion did not meet with the approval of the committee.

The house will see from what I have read that the question which was of importance in connection with what the Prime Minister of Great Britain had in his mind was as to whether or not Mr. Bennett might be regarded as being "domiciled or ordinarily resident" in Canada. My attention was drawn by the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom to the fact that Mr. Bennett had been a resident of the United Kingdom for some time, and had permanently established himself in England, and did not consider himself as a resident of Canada, that he had abandoned his domicile in Canada and become domiciled and ordinarily resident in Great Britain, and therefore, in the opinion of the Prime Minister's advisers in the United Kingdom, any recommendation by him would not fall within the terms of the 1919 resolution of the House of Commons of Canada. It was added that Mr. Bennett had expressed his intention both in Canada and in Great Britain to live in England for the remainder of his life, and therefore that he could now rightly be regarded as falling outside the terms of the resolution as regards honours, and as a person who could properly be recommended for the award of an honour in Great Britain. In reply to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom I said that I had no observations to make on what he had in mind, but I added that I was sure that Mr. Bennett's own statement would be accepted as a complete answer to any question arising out of the resolution of the Canadian House of Commons of 1919, as to whether or not he is to be regarded as domiciled or ordinarily resident in Canada.

I was also advised of the intention of His Majesty the King to invite the Hon. Vincent Massey to become a member of His Majesty's Privy Council in the United Kingdom, and of the intention of the Prime Minister of Great Britain to make the necessary submission. I was asked specifically whether I would approve the appointment. I replied I would approve most cordially of the appointment should it be made. I may add that I think the appointment has met with high approval in all parts of our dominion.

An hon. MEMBER: What about the other one?

Mr. STIRLING: Would the Prime Minister be good enough to lay on the table copies of all correspondence pertaining to Right Hon. Mr. Bennett's appointment?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I may say to my hon. friend who is leading the opposition that the correspondence is marked confidential. I have given to the house that part of it which I think is pertinent and I can assure him that there is nothing else in the correspondence which I believe the house would wish to know, though there are references to some matters which I think possibly Mr. Bennett himself and others would prefer to have remain confidential at least for the present.

WOMEN IN WAR WORK

PERMISSION TO PROCEED TO THE UNITED KINGDOM ON RED CROSS TRANSPORT SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Some days ago the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Bruce) asked me a question as to the alleged refusal to have a permit granted to some ladies in Toronto who were anxious to cross to the United Kingdom to offer their services in connection with the Canadian Red Cross transport work. At the time the application was received there was nothing to indicate that the ladies who were applying for permission to proceed overseas were members of the Toronto detachment of the Canadian Red Cross transport service. The application came simply under their own names. When it was ascertained, after the hon. member for Parkdale drew my attention to the matter, that it was in connection with the transport service that the application had been made, the government immediately took steps to see that the necessary permission would be granted. The only reason for which it had been refused was the order in council which applies to individuals and which prohibits women from travelling to the European war zone unless granted special exemption.

The question of granting permission to Canadian women desiring to serve in this and similar organizations has recently been taken up with the government of the United Kingdom and tentative arrangements have been made as to the conditions under which women would be accepted for engagement. I understand that a representative of the corps has arrived in Canada to look into the question of securing suitable personnel and it is hoped that arrangements can be worked out under which women who have been accepted for employment in the corps may be granted permisison to proceed to the United Kingdom.

I have just read from the communication which I sent to the hon. member for Parkdale a day or two ago in order that he might understand the situation. There is every desire on the part of the government of Canada to see that women are given the fullest opportunity to participate in all phases of war work in which it may be thought advisable and helpful for them to take part.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

109. Special service. To provide for commitments under relief settlement agreements with the provinces, $75,000.

To provide for contributions to youth training programme, $1,500,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): The first of these amounts is to provide assistance for relief. I do not quite understand why we should have any relief at the present time, but the fact is that we have it. There has been a national registration in Canada and the government ought to have all the statistics available by now, and ought to be able to put every man, woman and child in the proper place so that a maximum war effort may be attained. I am going to make another plea for the assistance which was asked for by the board of education in Toronto.

I have here, as I have no doubt the minister has, photographs of the work that has been done at the central technical school in Toronto. The lads who go to that school are drawn not only from Toronto but from outside places as well, and it is only right that the government should give some assistance to the board. It is hardly fair that all the burden should fall on the taxpayers of the city. The minister has said that he cannot hold out much hope, but I certainly think that at a time like this the government should not worry about establishing a precedent in order to give this assistance to the board.

And now a few words with regard to the question of labour organization. I suggest that the government should do everything it can to assist workmen at this time to organize, but it certainly is not doing so. We know what the situation is in connection with some government companies—the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and Federal Aircraft Limited. The men have been told they are not allowed to organize. We must remember that they wanted to organize under the American Federation of Labor and the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, which are recognized organizations, and in my opinion it is their right so to organize. An opinion was obtained from the Department of Justice which the Minister of Munitions and Supply read not long ago:

Your corporation is, in many respects, in the position of a department of the government and I would not think that the board of governors or the general manager would have the authority to enter into such an agreement which would restrict the authority of the corporation to act as freely as the government itself in all matters relating to its own employees.

May I point out that when we ask for any information with respect to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The question of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was taken up last night on estimates then before the committee. The committee is now on item 109, to provide for commitments under relief settlement agreements with the provinces, and

I would point out that we must, if we desire to finish some time, stick to the items under discussion.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I wished to discuss under this item a few questions with respect to labour. It is about the only item under which I can do it. I would be very brief.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. member might find some appropriate item under labour.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I suppose I could do it under youth training. But if I might have the indulgence of the committee I should like to finish my argument.

The CHAIRMAN: I would ask the hon. member to wait until we come to item 112, and we can see whether his remarks fall within the scope of that item.

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): When the house rose last night I was about to make a statement in answer to a question raised by the hon. member for Mackenzie and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar. I stated that Saskatchewan is not under the relief settlement plan. In one sense that statement is correct, but it might be misleading. When the relief act was passed in 1932, Saskatchewan, with all the other provinces except Prince Edward Island, was covered by an agreement in the matter of land settlement. In 1934 the situation became very serious on account of the drought there, and Saskatchewan was taken out entirely from the relief settlement act and a special vote placed in the Department of Agriculture estimates under which I believe some 900 families were settled in the northern part of the province. To that the dominion contributed the usual one-third and the province and municipalities contributed accordingly.

The suggestion was made that we should endeavour to transfer some of the surplus labour from that province to other provinces where there is a much greater demand. Two steps have been taken. In the first place a vote was passed for the province of Ontario, where they alleged a shortage of agricultural labour, of $60,000, to which the province is contributing dollar for dollar, in order to obtain such labour from areas in Canada in which there is a surplus of agricultural labour and move it into sections in which there is a demand for agricultural labour. That applies to only one phase. In addition it has been suggested, I think by the hon. member for Mackenzie, that there is a surplus of industrial labour as well in Saskatchewan. Heretofore it has been somewhat difficult to transfer that surplus to points at which the manufacture is carried on.

[The Chairman.]

Let me be quite frank; it is of course desirable that the plants be taken there, but that seems to be extremely difficult, if not impossible. The employment officers have, as the hon. member knows, been under the control and direction of the provinces. On July 1, under the terms of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the employment offices will come under the control of the dominion. In other words I think that we can work out, through the employment offices, a coordinated scheme which will carry out the idea which the hon. member expressed. At the present time it is the intention to open employment offices in Saskatchewan at Moose Jaw, North Battleford, Prince Albert, Regina, and Saskatoon. These will be principal offices. But in addition we shall have suboffices, and I am hopeful that use could be made of the national registration and of those employment offices to endeavour to draw upon that reservoir of surplus and in some cases skilled industrial labour which it is suggested exists in Saskatchewan.

Item agreed to.

110. Special. To provide for contributions to plans for rehabilitation of unemployed higher age persons, $125,000.

Mr. GILLIS: The regulations with regard to youth training, with particular reference to plans for rehabilitation of unemployed higher age persons, are somewhat vague. Will the minister explain just what these plans are, and what amount of this appropriation has been apportioned to each province?

Mr. McLARTY: No apportionment has yet been made. The agreements are not completed.

Mr. GILLIS: What are the regulations with respect to the training of unemployed higher age persons? I have had many letters of inquiry from unemployed men who have reached say fifty years of age and find it impossible to get into industry. They are prepared to make some contribution and want to know how to go about taking advantage of any government provision with respect to training for men in that age group.

Mr. McLARTY: I do not believe there are any special regulations applying to men in that age group. They are eligible for the war emergency training that is being given in that class. For instance, in April, 29 per cent of the trainees were over thirty years of age, but I have no break-down as to the number that would be over fifty. The thing for them to do is to apply just as any other trainees do. A large percentage are of course returned soldiers, which would indicate that a considerable percentage would be around fifty years of age.

Mr. GILLIS: This matter was discussed at some length on the pensions committee. One of the officials in charge of this work, one of those who circulate throughout industry endeavouring to establish closer cooperation between industry and those responsible for laying down this training scheme, pointed out that there was considerable difficulty in securing men trained in shipbuilding, for example, and they were having difficulty in securing the cooperation of those engaged in the industry in the inauguration of some plan that would be workable.

It was pointed out that in Nova Scotia there is a large number of plants which are perhaps not large enough to engage in the turning out of boats of the size required for war work. Apparently they are making very little contribution to the war effort, and there is a serious shortage of men skilled in that trade. Would it be possible for the government to make use of these smaller plants by setting them up as training centres for shipbuilding?

Mr. McLARTY: I shall be glad to have that matter looked into.

Item agreed to.

111. Special. To provide for relief projects (revote), $2,722,700.

Mr. NICHOLSON: The vote this year is reduced from the $20,000,000 appropriated last year; and in last year's estimates there was a reduction from $27,000,000 to $20,000,000. How is this amount to be spent? The minister said last night that in the event of Saskatchewan being unable to finance her relief undertakings to those who have been reestablished under the land settlement scheme, credit will be given so that loans can be made from the federal treasury to see that at least people have enough to eat.

Mr. McLARTY: This item is simply a revote to cover accounts already incurred in connection with direct relief. I might add that I believe the hon. member for Mackenzie would do better to consult the Minister of Finance in the matter of provincial loans, rather than the Minister of Labour.

Item agreed to.

112. Special. To provide for administration expenses generally, including temporary appointments which may require to be made for such purposes notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act:

Unemployment relief and youth training, $97,936.
National registration, $33,000.
Comptroller of the treasury, $18,000.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): Perhaps I can make my remarks on this item.

The CHAIRMAN: If they are relevant to the item.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): This item has to do with administration, and certainly my remarks have to do with the administration of the department.

The CHAIRMAN: This is for administration in connection with unemployment relief and youth training, national registration and the comptroller of the treasury.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): It is to provide for administration expenses generally.

The CHAIRMAN: Very well.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I read the opinion of the Department of Justice with respect to the right of the men employed by the broadcasting corporation, Federal Aircraft, and so on, to organize. I do not agree with that opinion; I think it is perfect nonsense that this stand should be taken. When we ask for any information with respect to the internal workings of the broadcasting corporation we are told that it is a separate corporation, and we cannot get that information. If it is a separate corporation for that purpose surely it must be a separate corporation to the extent of permitting these men to organize. Employees of the Canadian National Railways, of the Post Office Department, of the printing bureau and other branches are organized; why cannot these men organize? This is the sort of thing that causes unrest as far as labour is concerned.

I agree with Mr. Ralph Bell, director of aircraft production, that industry must bear no small part of the blame for the present attitude of Canadian labour; and certainly the government is not blameless. This is the time for employers to assist their employees in organizing. It is all very well to say that there is no unrest, that everything is fine. That is true; in some of these plants the employees are well looked after, but is it suggested that these labour organizations should be made up only of employees who are dissatisfied with their jobs? I call now on employers and employees to get busy and settle all the unrest what does exist in connection with labour. There has been a general surrender of the rights of the individual, both here and in Great Britain, but we must be sure that these rights will be returned to the individual after the war is over. They cannot be permanently taken away from the people without their consent.

We must remember that this is a life and death struggle. I would remind hon. members of what Mr. Roosevelt said in one of his speeches, that the issue is one of freedom or slavery, that to-day we cannot have struggles between capital and capital, between labour and labour, or between capital and labour. We should also remember what was said by Mr. Bevin, the minister of labour in England, that anyone who promotes a lock-out or a strike, except after exhausting every means of settling the difference, is a traitor. The manufacturers have the right to belong to any organization they wish; so should labour. It would be better for labour if we could get things down to a simpler basis and have all the labour organizations more or less under one head. One of our difficulties to-day—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. We discussed general labour policies on the item covering the general administration of the department. Later we discussed the question of unionism and the set-up of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, under the appropriate items in the estimates. Now we are on item 112, which is to provide for administration expenses generally, including temporary appointments which may require to be made, with respect to unemployment relief, youth training, national registration and the comptroller of the treasury. If it is the unanimous wish of the committee that the hon. gentleman should have leave to discuss general labour policies, personally I am quite satisfied; I am in the hands of the committee. But I cannot apply the rules to one hon. member and refuse to apply them to others. I have to be fair and reasonable to all hon. members, and I am sure the hon. gentleman will appreciate my difficulty if I refuse to apply rule 58, paragraph (2). Unless the hon. gentleman secures the unanimous consent of the committee I must rule that he is out of order.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I thought I would have an opportunity to say what I have to say in a few words on this administration item.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

The CHAIRMAN: There were two other opportunities for any such discussion. If we should now revert to items already passed, how could I refuse the same privilege to other hon. members? Of course I am in the hands of the committee, if that is its wish.

Mr. ROSS (St. Paul's): I do not want any special privileges, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN: Then I am afraid the hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. GREEN: This item is partly for the administration of youth training. In this connection we were told a few days ago in the pensions committee that there was some difficulty in connection with setting up schools on the Pacific coast to help train men for shipbuilding. That evidence was given by Mr. Crawford, who I believe is—

Mr. McLARTY: He is director of plant training.

Mr. GREEN: I think that situation is sufficiently important to warrant an explanation by the minister. Mr. Crawford said the shipbuilding yards on the Pacific coast were not desirous of having the government set up training schools, from which we took it that they did not think such schools could be of any use. At the time no mention was made of private schools. There are several private trade schools there which are doing very good work, and whose graduates are being taken on by the shipbuilding yards. There will be so many men needed for shipbuilding that it is of the greatest importance that we get away to the right start in training men for that work. I would therefore ask the minister to tell the committee what is the situation at the present time.

Mr. McLARTY: I am afraid I will have to give the hon. gentleman the same answer I gave to the hon. member for Cape Breton South, who advocated a similar use of schools in the province of Nova Scotia. All I can say is that I shall be very glad to go into the matter immediately and see what can be done along the lines suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. GREEN: In what way does the government cooperate with the private trade schools? Is there any plan of cooperation at all?

Mr. McLARTY: No, we have no plan of cooperation.

Mr. GREEN: Why is that? Might it not be wise, where there are such schools already established, for the government to cooperate with them and perhaps, by arrangement, expand their facilities and have some of the training done in that way?

Mr. McLARTY: The suggestion made by the hon. member is well worthy of consideration, and I shall give it immediately.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Sometimes in my constituency I have had trouble in securing employment for skilled workers. I have written to the minister on two occasions in regard to men who were qualified artisans, and who have come to me wanting to know how they could get in these shops or schools as instructors. I have one man in mind who is qualified as an electrical welder, and who also does acetylene welding. He has been trying for the past year to get this kind of employment. I have written the minister on his behalf, and in reply to me the minister suggested that I write to Mr. Ross of Calgary, and to a Mr. Henderson of Edmonton. I wrote these two gentlemen on this man's behalf, and also instructed him to write to them. I do not believe I received even an acknowledgment of my letters. He went to see the man at Calgary and also the one at Edmonton, but has been put off from time to time.

Surely there is something wrong. When men come to us as members of parliament and ask how they can get these positions, and we write the minister,—I suggest he is the proper person to whom to write—and he instructs us to approach someone at Edmonton, and there is no result, the persons affected become disgusted. I would not blame them. People go around wanting to know what is the matter with the government, and why there are not jobs for these skilled workmen. I suggest the minister should check up on the men who are supposed to be in charge of these training schools, because, so far as I am concerned, there is no satisfaction when one tries to get a man a position.

Mr. McLARTY: I do not recall the name of the person to whom the hon. member has referred, but if he will send me a memorandum I shall be glad to check it up.

Mr. GILLIS: In items 110 and 111 we make provision for youth training and for relief. The minister has said he will be glad to take into consideration the extension of training and the provision of more facilities. I notice however that in these items the amounts are substantially decreased. While the minister may be desirous of improving our present facilities, I suggest that he will not do so by cutting down the appropriation. In view of the fact that provision for youth training has been made in votes 109 and 110, and that the government has discontinued any connection with unemployment relief, why is it necessary to have an appropriation of $97,936, and how is it to be used? If we are not in the relief field, and if we have provided for youth training in earlier items, why is there need for this additional amount? If there is a need, how is it to be used?

Mr. McLARTY: The reductions in these estimates may be misleading. There is an appropriation in the war appropriation measure for about $4,300,000, which makes up the difference. So far as the items for unemployment relief and youth training are concerned, the general supervision of war emergency training and youth training, all of which is devoted to war purposes, is still under that branch.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: One of the chief recommendations made by the war expenditures committee in the United Kingdom, and one from which a great deal of good resulted, was that there should be a national registration of all technically trained men in the United Kingdom, and that a national register should be set up listing the men whose services, as occasion arose, might be required. I have personal knowledge of men in western Canada who are trained mining engineers. Men are graduates of recognized universities, and yet for the time being they are out of employment, and their services are in no way being used. Then, there are numbers of mechanics throughout western Canada who during the last war devoted themselves to mechanical work in connection with the production of munitions and the like. Their services have not as yet been utilized. What is being done to mobilize the scientifically and technically trained men in Canada? I have in mind engineers, and the like, who would be willing at this time to give their services to the state in return for a reasonable compensation.

Mr. McLARTY: Some time ago under the chairmanship of Mr. Little we set up a wartime bureau of technical personnel. A vote of $41,000 was included in the war appropriation for that purpose, and it will probably have to be increased. The bureau is making just such a survey as has been suggested by the hon. member for Lake Centre.

Mr. DIEFENBAKER: How many have registered so far?

Mr. McLARTY: I am afraid I cannot answer that question at the moment, but I shall supply the information to the hon. member.

Item agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF PENSIONS AND NATIONAL HEALTH

202. Departmental administration, $114,460.

Mr. GREEN: When the civil service estimates were before the committee I referred to men in the Department of Pensions and National Health, permanent employees, returned men and married, who are employed at the rate of $60 a month, with a $5 bonus. I am informed that in one city a man drawing that small salary is in charge of investigations under the War Veterans' Allowance Act. Perhaps the same condition exists in other centres. In some instances these men are training temporary clerks who are to carry out such investigations and who, as temporary clerks, are drawing practically twice the salary. Why does that situation exist? Is there some way in which it can be remedied?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I understand that this matter has been taken up departmentally, but we have been delayed in regard to definite action by a treasury board regulation and by a definite instruction from the civil service commission applying to all departments of government.

Mr. GREEN: How long has that condition existed?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): For one year, roughly speaking.

Mr. GREEN: In British Columbia the minimum wage set by provincial law for a stenographer is $65, yet there we have married men employed by the dominion government and receiving salaries of $60 per month. That is quite unjustifiable. I should like to have some assurance that the situation will be remedied.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I can assure my hon. friend that it is not what might be called a departmental fault. It has been taken up repeatedly and will be taken up again.

Mr. GILLIS: It would not be necessary to say many of the things that I should like to say at this time if the minister could assure me that the report of the special committee will come before the house for adoption or consideration.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Does my hon. friend refer to the report tabled yesterday?

Mr. GILLIS: Was it?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: The minister is in charge of air raid precaution work. There have been some developments along this line since the subject was last discussed in the committee. Perhaps he could tell us what the situation is at the present time.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Strictly speaking this discussion is not in order because, as my hon. friend knows, it comes under the war appropriation. An item of $250,000 was voted this year for air raid precaution work. Broadly speaking, the situation is that five provinces are organized and organization is proceeding rapidly in the Ottawa district and in Ontario. Doctor Gliddon is the federal air raid precautions officer, and he is primarily responsible for equipment and the issuance of such pamphlets and regulations as are thought necessary. Black-outs have been arranged in various parts of Canada, and they have been very successful, especially in the city from which my hon. friend comes.

Mr. GREEN: From which we both come.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. There is to be one in Toronto on June 18, and Montreal had one last week. A request has been made from Hamilton and, generally speaking, there has been a marked revival of interest in air raid precaution work. The contribution, if I may use that word, that we are making is mainly by way of instruction and cooperation and the providing of equipment. In connection with compensation, the committee upon which my hon. friend served made a recommendation that compensation be paid to those engaged in air raid precaution work. I have every hope that that will be implemented.

Mr. GREEN: Has the government taken any further steps to provide establishments in the different centres in which equipment may be stored? The minister will remember we asked about this some months ago and he said that if Doctor Gliddon recommended it, such steps would be taken.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I remember that quite well. So far as I am aware, no specific recommendations have been made in that regard. Many communities have made provision for these centres. If the responsible officers find that it is a duty we should carry out, I shall be glad to see that it is done.

Mr. GREEN: Recommendation 12 of the report of the select committee on pensions reads:

> That by appropriate measures, the government make provision for compensation to the members of the auxiliary services who are serving the armed forces in an actual theatre of war, and their dependents, comparable to that provided for members of the armed forces.

As I understand it, the men serving overseas with the Young Men's Christian Association, the Salvation Army, the Knights of Columbus, and the Canadian Legion are not covered by the Canadian pension act and no provision is made to provide for compensation for disability, or compensation to their dependents in case of death. I understand that this is making it extremely difficult for these organizations to get men to go overseas, particularly men who are married. Is the government prepared to make provision to cover cases of this type? For all other purposes these men are treated as though they were members of the forces, but when it comes to compensation for disability or death, they are considered as being outsiders.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I cannot assure my hon. friend that the compensation which may be provided for the personnel to whom he has referred will be exactly the same as is paid to those who are duly attested to his majesty's forces. I took up this matter actively last December and an interdepartmental committee was appointed some three or four weeks ago. They have made a report and the matter is now before the treasury board for consideration. I can assure my hon. friend that so far as my influence goes, it will be for provision to be made in connection with these cases.

Mr. GREEN: In the meantime there have been actual deaths.

Mr. MacKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): One case that I know of.

Mr. GREEN: Has that been provided for?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Not so far, but I feel absolutely assured that it will be adequately provided for.

Mr. GREEN: Why cannot these men be treated for pension purposes on the same basis as the men in the forces?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): One reason is that they are not attested as such. Another is that they are not medically examined for the higher categories which are requisite for active service.

Mr. GREEN: Could that not be overcome by having them attested and by insisting upon their being medically fit for service overseas? I believe in the last war these men were all regularly attested.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That might interfere with many of the cases known to my hon. friend and myself. Many veterans of the last war are now overseas and doing excellent work. If my hon friend's suggestion were carried out they might be debarred from serving in England. I think the situation will be met if we provide reasonable and equitable compensation in the case of injury or death.

Mr. GREEN: Are not the great majority of these men really in a medical category that would entitle them to serve overseas?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I have no information on that point; I could not possibly have it.

Item agreed to.

205. Pensions branch. War veterans' allowance board, $192,565.

Mr. MacNICOL: Has any definite conclusion been arrived at in connection with the payment of pension to widows of soldiers who received a pension during their lifetime but not sufficient to entitle their widows to one?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The matter was comprehensively reviewed by the committee whose report has been tabled, and an able presentation was made by my hon. friend with reference to the matter. I am not in position at the moment to announce any government policy. The report asks for further consideration of these cases. As my hon. friend knows, during the last few days I have had no opportunity of even discussing the report with my colleagues. The report will be considered between now and when the house meets in November, and in due course the government's policy will be announced. In my judgment this is not so much a question of pension administration, or something that would come under the War Veterans' Allowance Act; it is really a matter of social legislation, a measure of social security which later may commend itself to the government or to the house.

Mr. GREEN: Other suggestions with regard to the War Veterans' Allowance Act were made by that special committee. For example, one was that the men who had served in the Riel rebellion should be eligible for war veterans' allowance. Another recommendation was that a portion of the allowance should be made payable to a recipient when he is in hospital. Will there be an opportunity at the next session to consider amendments to this act?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): All I can say to my hon. friend is that during the recess I shall go through the report very carefully. I shall take up with the government the various recommendations, and government policy will be announced with respect to them as soon as we reconvene.

Mr. GILLIS: There is another matter which is not mentioned in the report. I made the request that recipients of the war veterans' allowance be permitted to earn per annum the equivalent of the maximum of the allowance. I stated at that time that it would not mean any additional cost to the country. I think the minister remembers that discussion.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes, last year.

Mr. GILLIS: I am disappointed that there is not something in the report with regard to that, and perhaps I am somewhat responsible. Will the minister give consideration to the suggestion? The chairman of the committee made the statement at that time that it would involve additional expenditure, because of the fact that in some cities men employed on elevators, receiving below the maximum amount permitted under the act, would be in a position to claim sufficient allowance from war veterans' allowance to bring their wages up in accordance with the maximum amount allowed, namely, $480 for a married man and $240 for a single man. What I had in mind was this, and I think that in the great majority of cases to which it would apply it would mean no additional expenditure. Men who were employed in industry, having had these years of war service, followed by years of employment in heavy industry, are likely to break down for a time. Take the case of a man in that situation at fifty years of age, which is about the average present age of the ex-service man. He has a rest for six months or a year, and rebuilds himself to the point where he can do a little of something. But he is restricted to earning just half what the war veterans' allowance permits him. I do not think there would be anything wrong with granting sufficient latitude to those who administer the act that in such cases, after investigation, men should not be prevented from earning a certain amount of money to augment the war veterans' allowance, in some occupation which was not their previous occupation. It seems to me to be a matter of administration; I do not think there is any necessity of changing the act. There could be an understanding that the board could deal with cases such as I have described. I am not speaking of the man who is working for $240 or $480 a year: he is not working at all, he is on a pension; there is something wrong with his head if he will work for that amount. But in the cases I have described, many men I know who are receiving a war veterans' allowance have the feeling, "If I go out and try to earn $200 it means a reexamination of the case and the possibility of disturbing the arrangement"; and as a consequence, men who really could be doing something are sitting at home and deteriorating. If the minister would make an investigation and have some understanding with the board along the lines I have suggested, it would eliminate a lot of resentment.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I am informed the difficulty is that to some extent at least the regulations are based on those of the old age pensions legislation. There is voted every year by this parliament $32,000,000 for old age pension purposes, and this vote is about $8,000,000, and the idea has been to keep a balance of benefit between the two systems. Whether my hon. friend's suggestion can be carried out I cannot at the moment say, but certainly I shall be glad to consider it carefully.

Mr. GREEN: When the minister is considering the War Veterans' Allowance Act during the adjournment, will he also take into consideration the advisability or otherwise of including under that act men who served in the imperial forces who have been in Canada for, say, a period of fifteen years? I believe recommendations were made to the committee that those who came to this country before 1930 should be covered. Others said that they should have been here fifteen years, and some argued that the minimum period should be twenty years. I would ask the minister to take into consideration the case of these imperial veterans.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. As my hon. friend is aware, strong recommendations were made—by the Canadian Legion in particular—in regard to these men. I can hold out no definite promise, but I shall be very glad to take my hon. friend's observations into consideration.

Mr. GREEN: There was not time to consider the question thoroughly in the committee, and for that reason we find no recommendation in its report. But this is a very important matter, and should be given consideration.

Mr. BLACKMORE: There was one remark made by the minister to which I should like to give a little attention. As I gathered it, he conveyed the idea that the fault with respect to our war veterans' allowance is not that the War Veterans' Allowance Act is not sufficiently generous, but that our other social legislation is deficient. I think I gathered that aright. Well, I believe we ought to take for granted as a basis of our thinking this statement, that our social legislation generally in Canada is deficient. For example, I understand that New Zealand grants mothers' maternity benefits for each child. I understand also that New Zealand is granting the old age pension at the age of sixty. I have not had an opportunity of verifying those two statements, but I think they are correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): On a contributory basis.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Yes—well, on any basis whatever. The simple fact remains that in Canada we cannot get it on any basis. These are only two examples of the way in which Canada is lagging far behind other progressive civilized countries in the matter of social services.

It is not our business on this occasion to discuss social services, but our concern is to see to it that the widows and dependents of the men who fought or who served for Canada in the last war are not permitted to suffer. If the trouble is that our social legislation is deficient, we must not make that an excuse. I would say that the minister should demand, with all the emphasis of which his being is capable—and that is no small amount—that until such time as the social legislation of Canada is extended to the point where the widows and the dependents of our veterans are cared for, the War Veterans' Allowance Act simply must be made more generous until it provides for these people—every one of them.

Item agreed to.

206. Direct payments to veterans and dependents. European war pensions, $39,600,000.

Mr. GREEN: Would the minister tell us how many applicants there were for pension during the last fiscal year? I am referring to figures made up in such a way as that, for example, in 1938-39 there were 10,109 applications and in 1937-38 there were 10,450. I have not the figures for 1939-40 or 1940-41.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): There were first hearings in the last year: 6,343 granted, 12,271 not granted, making a total of 18,614.

Mr. GREEN: How many of those were for men of the old war, and how many for men of the new war?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): All from the old war.

Mr. GREEN: That seems to be a great increase in applications. Perhaps the minister is referring to some different set of figures.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): In the actual year from April 1, 1940, to March 31, 1941, the total was 1,772. I was taking the figures from the amendments to the act in 1936, the total being 18,614. The total actually in the year was 1,772.

Item agreed to.

208. Direct payments to veterans and dependents. Unemployment assistance, $1,100,000.

Mr. GREEN: There is a considerable reduction in this item. Has there been a reduction in the number of returned men getting unemployment assistance?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): A very definite reduction, caused principally by improvement in employment conditions, and also by a number of enlistments in the veterans' guard and other organizations.

Mr. GREEN: How many men have been granted assistance?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The number is 6,302.

Item agreed to.

210. Services to veterans and dependents. Care of patients, $2,923,028.

Mr. GREEN: In the vote this year there is nothing for probational training allowance. There has been a vote for that work for several years now. Why has it been deleted this year?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The vote as such is not shown, but the same provision is made under hospital and other allowances for the same purposes.

Mr. GREEN: The work is being carried on?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: The same thing applies to several votes. The vote for sheltered employment, which in the last estimates amounted to about $72,000, has been deleted. There was another vote for continuation of projects or schemes commenced by the veterans' assistance commission. Last year that amounted to about $70,000 and it has been taken from the estimates this year. Why is that?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The provision for poppy manufacturing is made under the care of patients vote. Many of the other projects which were in existence since the report came in have been abandoned because they were unsound economically and, although their purpose was laudable and justifiable at the outset, it was the opinion of those who were advising me that they should be closed up and that we should direct our efforts to other methods of assistance in the days to come. The vetcraft shops have also been closed up. The workshop in Victoria is carried on by the Red Cross, who receive buildings rent-free from the dominion government.

Mr. GREEN: What about the projects that were recommended by the various veterans' assistance committees? Have they all been abandoned?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Some are being continued under the local committees functioning in the various localities.

Mr. GREEN: Which ones are continuing?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Windsor, Toronto—

Mr. GREEN: Is Montreal discontinued?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes. Winnipeg is having special arrangements made with respect to a scheme of local land settlement, and I believe Regina is carrying on. It is all done with the concurrence of the local committees in charge.

Mr. GREEN: Is the government not putting up any of the funds for the projects?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): No.

Mr. GREEN: Who finds the money?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is done through funds already provided and by local financing by these committees, and they have assured us that in these cases they are able to do it.

Mr. GREEN: What about the different offices under the veterans' assistance commission? Have they all been closed or are they being amalgamated with the new dominion employment offices, or what is being done about them? At one time there were seventeen or eighteen across Canada and the government paid all the office expenses including salaries of the secretaries in charge. Have all these been closed?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): They have not been paid from the old vote since March 31, but provision has been made from funds that were made available by parliament for the veterans' welfare division until such time as the new organization is created, which will be within the next week or two.

Mr. GREEN: What is the intention with regard to these secretaries? Are they to be taken into some other branch of the government service?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is entirely a matter for the civil service commission. If these men applied and have qualified, then on the strict basis of merit they will be taken in; otherwise they will not.

Mr. GREEN: The offices are to be closed?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): New offices are to be organized in conjunction with the new employment service.

Mr. GREEN: That is, the veterans officials will be in the employment offices?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Yes.

Mr. GREEN: There will be no veterans' assistance commission offices any longer?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): That is right.

[Mr. Ian Mackenzie.]

Mr. DONNELLY: I notice that the total for the pensions branch amounts this year to $53,921,407. Since the great war, what is the total amount that has been paid under all these various sections?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): The figure was given in committee the other day—$1,233,474,172.26.

Mr. GREEN: This item is for care of patients. There is an increase this year of about $70,000. Have any steps been taken yet to provide for the reconditioning of men who are discharged from the forces as medically unfit? For example, for men who might be nursed back to health so that they could be used in the services in a lower category.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): My hon. friend is familiar with the various orders in council dealing with the treatment of those discharged from the present war. The most recent one provides free treatment for those who are in such financial circumstances as to require it, and they get that treatment if they apply within one year after discharge.

Mr. GREEN: If they are in need of what is known as active remedial treatment?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): They get free treatment within one year if they need it financially. There must be the basis of need for active remedial treatment, but otherwise there is no limitation. All the benefits of treatment of the old war are being applied to those who are discharged from the present war. With regard to treatment for those with special meritorious service, class 18, there would not be any yet qualified for it but there will be some day, and they will automatically come under the regulations on October 5 applying to soldiers of the new war.

Mr. GREEN: Would it not be possible for our pension hospitals to recondition many of these men so that they could be used again in the forces? At present they are discharged and I think there is great wastage of man power in that way. The Minister of National Defence said last night that over 32,000 men had been discharged since the beginning of the war. I forget how many thousands were discharged as medically unfit, but approximately half. I am quite sure that many of these men could have been reconditioned if they had been treated in our pension hospitals. Now that we are having such difficulty in getting recruits I suggest that it would be worth while to attempt something along that line.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I understand there is reference to that in the report laid on the table. Before that report was made I personally took steps to discuss this question with the three service ministers and to study reconditioning from two angles —in the first place, reconditioning of the men rejected on account of unfitness. That is an important point.

Mr. GREEN: Is that done now?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): It is being considered now by an interdepartmental committee.

Mr. GREEN: But no such reconditioning is done now?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Not as far as this department is concerned. I cannot speak for the defence services. Of course, there is reconditioning after discharge, of those who could not be considered as fit to rejoin but must be reestablished in civil life and industry.

Mr. GREEN: I think there has been a tendency in the defence services to get rid of a man once he is not A-1, and the time has now come when that policy can be no longer followed. We must make more use of these men, even though they are not in the first category.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I cannot speak for the policy followed by the services but I am inclined to agree with my hon. friend that as the demands of the war grow more intense we may have to relax some of these stringent rules. In the meantime I have sent the hon. member for Mackenzie an excellent article on social security in New Zealand.

Mrs. CASSELMAN: I would urge that the individual be considered wherever it is possible along the lines just now mentioned, and also that the women and children receive special consideration at times when their cases are exceptional. I believe the women need right now, perhaps more than they ever did, the comfort and encouragement which would come from knowing that the individual is not lost in the mass. Many cases have been brought to my attention already, although I am very new at this; perhaps these people think I might be able to do something just because I am new, or perhaps they are giving me the old cases that have resisted for some time, thinking that a new person might do something with them. But there is probably a tendency to allow no exceptions to the rules. I know we must have rules, but sometimes exceptional circumstances do arise, and circumstances alter cases. I urge that the individual case receive consideration, and in some cases perhaps even favourable consideration.

May I also say how very grateful I am for the warm reception and welcome given to me by the house. I have been welcomed by hon. members on both sides of the house, and I should like to thank them. I should also like to thank hon. members for the regard they have expressed to me for my husband. I feel that I am undertaking this responsibility with his full knowledge and approval. I cannot, however, speak much of that. I should like to think of myself as in no sense an ornament to this house but rather as a useful working member with sufficient elasticity to follow the principle of give and take.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): May I be permitted to congratulate the hon. member (Mrs. Casselman) upon the fact that her maiden speech in this house was made for such a splendid humanitarian cause as that to which she referred, the cause of widows and children and those who are confronted with some of the hard conditions of life. I am sure that her contribution to the discussions and decisions of this house in the years to come will be very valuable. May I assure her that this year the power of discretion under the pensions act has been broadened more than ever before, and that in some of the regulations of the department there is a wide power of discretion. So long as I am in charge of the department I shall endeavour to administer these regulations with all the humanity and sympathy possible.

215. Health branch. Health branch administration, $49,570.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I have here publication No. 21 of the Department of Pensions and National Health dealing with the question of housing. I should like to draw the attention of the committee to a couple of important sentences:

> Dark, gloomy, insanitary hovels, which submerge the thoughts of their inmates to the level of the beast are not conducive to health or later to good citizenship; moreover, under such conditions sickness and poverty occupy so much energy and thought as to preclude much effort for better things.
> The development of good citizens in a country like Canada is of the greatest importance, since the future of the nation depends on the physical, mental and moral health of the young people. Good housing therefore becomes an important means towards that end.

I should like to commend this department for concerning itself with this very important national problem. I shall not take time to discuss peace-time aspects of it, but would ask the minister whether his department has been used by the newly-organized war-time housing corporation in this particular field of engineering.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): Only so far as the author of that pamphlet is on an advisory committee which I believe gives advice and assistance to those in charge of the war-time housing programme.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I understood that the services of this department had not been used by war-time housing. I know there are other engineers in Canada who are quite capable of doing the work which has been done by this department, but I submit that at this time when every individual should be doing necessary work we should not have overlapping, we should not have new engineers assigned to do work that has already been done by this department. I suggest that the minister draw the attention of war-time housing to the fact that he has a department with a staff and with information that should be of value to war-time housing in the work they are undertaking. Would it be considered presumptuous on the part of the minister to do that?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall be very glad to draw it to their attention. Our function is purely advisory; when we are called in for consultation. Not only in regard to this particular project but in regard also to munitions projects generally, we advise and send our men there for inspection to see that health conditions are being observed. This feature of the work I believe is functioning very successfully.

Mr. NICHOLSON: But war-time housing are now engaged in housing projects in a number of places in Canada; they should not wait until they are half through before consulting this department.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): If they do not come to us we will go to them.

Mr. BLACKMORE: At the outset may I also congratulate the hon. member for Edmonton East (Mrs. Casselman) on the fact that her first speech here was delivered in the interests of the suffering, among whom unfortunately women and children in this country form a large number. We have neglected our health problem in Canada far too much in the past; we are paying a fearful price right now for our neglect, and I am afraid we have only just begun to pay.

[Mr. Nicholson.]

I wish to mention four or five matters which in my opinion should be constantly in the minds of those who are administering our affairs in Ottawa with respect to health. First, I do not believe that the education which our children and people generally receive is adequate to teach them the fundamental principles of health. Of course some may say at once that this is a provincial matter. In Canada virtually all our considerations are affected more or less by the division of responsibilities between the provinces and the dominion. But it must be borne in mind that provincial revenues are definitely limited, and the invasion which is now taking place of the provincial income and corporation tax fields by the dominion will tend to make the matter worse. The result is that if anyone is to take up the slack in the matter of health the dominion government must do it. If, therefore, education for health purposes is not adequate, it must become the concern of this government.

I believe that every year there ought to be a physical examination of every child in our schools at least. I have had a good many years of experience as a teacher and principal in our schools; my life has been largely devoted to the youth of Canada; my heart is drawn to them, and one of the main reasons for my being here is my great interest in the young people growing up in this country. There should be a physical examination every year, if not of those over eighteen years of age certainly of those under eighteen. Obviously many of the parents cannot all provide for such an examination, so that someone must absorb the cost.

I believe there are a great many operations which ought to be performed. The provinces are struggling to take care of this problem; to see that adenoids and tonsils are removed, that tuberculosis is cared for when it develops, that victims of infantile paralysis are reconditioned, and that all serious accidents are looked after. But unquestionably the resources of the provinces are limited.

At the risk of incurring your displeasure, Mr. Chairman, and being called out of order, I should like to refer briefly to the little altercation that developed the other day between myself and the leader of the opposition. The hon. gentleman was insisting that we should see that our contractual obligations were taken care of. I believe that the health of the community, and other similar matters, ought to be taken care of at least to a very great extent, even if as a result we are not able to take care of our contractual obligations. I am not willing to neglect those obligations, but neither am I willing to neglect the sacred matters concerning human life and human happiness that go to the well being of a nation.

I believe someone will have to look after those who suffer serious accidents, and so on. Suppose a family is in receipt of the war veterans' allowance, and a child is seriously injured so that as a result he may become a cripple for life. How in the world can that family provide the necessary medical care and pay for the operation that may be required? If the province is unable to do it, and the municipality is unable to do it, who will do it? I believe we as a dominion must take such matters into our consideration and see to it that such matters receive the necessary attention.

Many thousands of children throughout this country suffer from lack of adequate dental care. Such dental care costs money; it costs two dollars to have a tooth removed. Tens of thousands of people in this country live on budgets so limited that the loss of two dollars becomes a calamity. The head of the household and the mother simply do not know what to do when they have that extra expense to meet. As a result thousands of our children are going about with bad teeth, with unfilled teeth, losing their teeth, losing their health, simply because there is not some way of absorbing that cost.

Thousands of children suffer from poor eyesight. They need optical care, but they dare not have their eyes examined; they are unable to obtain glasses. Then if, having secured glasses, they break them, the result is tragic. I have seen children twelve or thirteen years of age break-down and cry because their glasses were destroyed and they knew they would be unable to get the money with which to have them repaired, and they could not go to school and do their work without them. Of course all these things are a part of human life, but we are getting to an age now when, living in a country like ours, children should not have to cry and be broken-hearted because they happened to break their glasses.

These are all matters which come under this item, which has to do with the health of Canada. If the provinces are unable to take care of these matters the dominion must be prepared to do so. I do not like to take up too much of the time of the committee, but someone has to say these things. I was glad to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton East; I shall listen to her in future with great attention when she deals with humanitarian topics in this house.

Then there is the matter of food. I do not believe we are taking enough care in that regard. I have spoken rather severely about these things in this house, and at times I have been accused of being extreme. I am sure if the actual facts were made known my remarks would not be found to be in the least extravagant. It is coming to be recognized more and more that the health and well being, the moral tone, the mental tone and everything else about a human being is determined to a very large extent by the food he eats. I have been making inquiries of some of the good housewives in Ottawa in order to ascertain what they believe would be the cost of adequate food to keep a child in good health. They tell me that they cannot possibly figure out any menu providing the fresh vegetables, fresh fruits and other things required for less than $2 a week per person. For a family of five this means $10 a week for food alone, if the children are to be kept in a healthy condition. I am not going to mention clothing, but certainly money will be required for that purpose. Then there is the question of shelter. Hardly anywhere in Canada to-day can anything like an adequate house be procured for less than $10 a month. Food at $10 a week means $40 a month; if you add $10 for shelter, which does not take into account light, water and fuel, much less the occasional repair of a broken window, you have a total of $50 a month in absolutely unavoidable expenses.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): If I may interrupt the hon. member for just a second, I would inform him that a conference on nutrition will take place in Ottawa next week. Four surveys have been made already, in Halifax, Quebec, Toronto and Edmonton, and the conference will meet here to consider a campaign of education with reference to the subject the hon. gentleman now is discussing.

Mr. BLACKMORE: That is very fine; I rejoice to hear that, and I hope when these committees tell the country what has to be done, that it will be done and that we will not be told that there is no money for it.

I was just going on to say that for this family of five the absolutely unavoidable expenses amount to $50 a month. Imagine, if you can, how a family of five can get along on the war veterans' allowance of $40 a month.

An hon. MEMBER: Carried.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Oh, no; it is not carried yet. We still have time to do a good deal of serious thinking. Not very long ago when I condemned the Pension Act, which in a way has to do with war veterans' allowance, I had in mind such conditions as these. We have placed our people in an impossible position. I know the minister is anxious to do all that can be done; and just to strengthen his hand—because I believe it needs strengthening when he has to deal with some of the other members of the cabinet—I am going to point out that in the United States this year, under the LaFollette-Bulwinkle bill, the federal treasury of the United States is granting $6,500,000 to the states for one item alone. I am not going to mention what that item is, but this amount is being granted in addition to what the states themselves can collect. If Canada should grant as much money, in proportion to population, this year her contribution to our provinces would amount to $650,000—it is at present just nothing. Let hon. members just take a glance at the very modest sum the minister is permitted to spend, and they will recognize that he is handicapped almost to the point of impotence. Surely conditions in Canada are no better than they are in the United States. If the United States needs such a large amount of money, then surely Canada needs at least a proportionate sum.

I should like to revert for a moment or two to the family of five receiving $40 a month, with an unavoidable expenditure of $50. Is it to be an accepted fact by governing people in Canada that such a family can have no amusement at all, that they cannot have twenty cents to go to a picture show once in a while? Are they to have no culture such as singing lessons, music or dancing lessons? Hon. members will see what we are condemning them to.

Having done that I turn my attention to an article which the minister kindly sent to me. A few moments ago I pointed out that Canada is lagging shamefully in the matter of social legislation. I shall give only the headings in this pamphlet, and I believe they will show Canada's deficiency when compared with her small sister dominion of New Zealand. The title of the article is "Social security in New Zealand", and the subheadings are "Universal superannuation" —have we that in Canada? Of course we have not. "Age benefits"—have we age benefits? "Widows' benefits, orphans' benefits, family benefits, invalids' benefits, miners' benefits, unemployment benefits, sickness benefits, emergency benefits." I wish I had time to deal in detail with each of those points, but any hon. member who is interested may find the information at page 200 of this little booklet called "The National Health Review," published in October of 1940, by direction of the minister.

May I close what I have said in more or less rambling fashion with an adjuration to the minister to exert himself to the very maximum to get more and more money in this dominion to be spent for the improvement of health conditions of the people of Canada, in widely varied ways. If he will do that he will greatly increase the productive capacity of the country; he will increase its consumptive capacity. He will make the country very much happier, so that it will be much easier to get men to enlist in the army. Those men will fight much more happily when they realize that while they are in the army their people are being cared for at home, and that they will be cared for if anything should happen. In addition to that, when we collide with the enemy we will be strong and confident.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I thank the hon. member for his very constructive suggestions.

Yesterday the hon. member for Cape Breton South discussed the question of silicosis, and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar asked a question respecting fatal accidents in the mining industry. With the consent of the house I should like to place on Hansard the information on both these subjects. It is as follows:

Fatal Industrial Accidents in Mining Industry
Canada

Due to	1936	1937	1938	1939	1940
(a) Industrial diseases (predominate—namely, silicosis)	8	14	15	22	29
(b) Dangerous substances (exclusive of silicosis and includes explosions and gassing)	25	29	36	25	21
(c) Grand total	173	198	236	161	160

Information respecting incidence of Silicosis, taken from Annual Reports of Provincial Workmen's Compensation Boards

Nova Scotia:

Act amended in 1940 to include silicosis in coal mining.

3 cases were allowed under the act in 1940.

1 of these proved fatal.

A number of cases are still under observation and are slated for reexamination.

New Brunswick:

Not compensable.

Quebec:

No details included in Quebec reports—1939 or 1940.

Ontario:

Year	Total cases compensated	Number fatal
1936	29	14
1937	21	9
1938	14	6
1939	22	7

Manitoba:

Silicosis not dealt with specifically in 1940 report.

Saskatchewan:

1940—all industrial diseases classed together. One case—not likely silicosis.

Alberta:

No reference to silicosis in 1940 report.

British Columbia:

During 1939—6,000 individuals X-rayed (chest) under requirements of Metalliferous Mines Regulations Act.

113 claims allowed for silicosis from January, 1936, to December, 1938.

"Pathological, clinical and diagnostic aspects of this disease are now well established"—Dr. Leroy U. Gardner, Director of the Saranac Laboratory for the Study of Silicosis.

Present day control of the problem of silicosis can be effectively brought about by provision of adequate ventilating facilities in mines where silica dust is known to occur.

Consequently, control of silicosis is a responsibility of provincial departments of labour, health, and mines, who administer provincial legislation governing this question at the present time.

The control of this problem is to be brought about by the application of existing knowledge rather than by further research work which, in the absence of application, is of little use.

The inhalation of aluminum dust by miners exposed to silica dust for the purpose of preventing silicosis, has by no means proved efficacious as yet. This method of approach to the problem of controlling silicosis implies the substitution of aluminum dusting for control by ventilating equipment. Ventilating equipment is exceedingly expensive—but has been accepted in American mines as a necessary aspect of cost.

224. Health branch. Treatment of sick mariners, $206,470.

Mr. HAZEN: This item was before the committee at the last session, and I asked the minister at that time what provision had been made for the dental treatment of mariners. I point out to him I had been informed that no provision had been made for X-rays for seamen suffering from dental trouble, and that in some cases X-rays were necessary. The minister said the matter had not been brought to his attention before, but that he would look into it and inform me. Has he had an opportunity to do so, and if so what arrangements have been made?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I thought I had sent my hon. friend a letter fully outlining the situation. I took immediate action upon his request, and got immediately from the departmental officers the information desired. I was under the impression that I had sent that information to the hon. member. If I have not done so, then I shall do so immediately. Medical provision is made however for whatever medical officers deem it necessary that mariners should receive.

Mr. HAZEN: Perhaps the minister did send a letter; I may have overlooked it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall make inquiry as to that.

Item agreed to.

240. Pensions and other benefits. Pensions payable to men on active service, northwest rebellion 1885, and general pensions, $18,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: My question may not be pertinent to the item, but I shall ask it before all the items have passed. Last session the minister intimated that a grant would be placed in the estimates for the dental association. I do not see it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I was once again unsuccessful.

DEPARTMENT OF MINES AND RESOURCES

126. Mines and geology branch. Mineral resources investigations, $394,350.

Mr. MacNICOL: What progress is the department making in investigating the production of magnesium metal from dolomite? Ontario is the province in which probably the greatest deposits of the source of magnesium metal are to be found. As the minister probably knows it is a metal lighter than aluminium being only two-thirds of the weight, but has the same tensile strength. While aluminium requires 8 per cent of magnesium metal to give it rigidity, magnesium metal requires 8 per cent of aluminium to eliminate the possibility of fire or explosion from the magnesium metal.

I would expect that at the next session detailed information would be given with respect to the production of magnesium metal in Canada. Recently and for some time past a famous engineer in Hamilton has produced a method of extracting magnesium metal from dolomite. In the area from Niagara falls to lake Huron there are billions of tons of dolomite or limestone ore from which the metal comes. What is the department doing to bring about the production of magnesium metal in Canada?

Hon. T. A. CRERAR (Minister of Mines and Resources): The possibilities of these metals are constantly under study by the mines bureau of the department. I am not able at the moment to say just what progress has been made in the process to which my hon. friend alludes, but the question is under continuous consideration. I am just informed that the Aluminum Company of Canada is building a plant up the Gatineau river for the production of magnesium and that tests are being carried on in the laboratory of the mines branch in respect to several deposits to ascertain their quality and possibilities. This is being done at the request of private interests.

Mr. MacNICOL: Has the department been cooperating with the inventors in Hamilton who are now producing the metal?

Mr. CRERAR: We have been cooperating with them.

Item agreed to.

131. Mines and geology branch. Drafting and map reproduction, $122,865.

Mr. HAZEN: What is the explanation of the increase of $10,462 in this item?

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to ask the minister something about the iron resources of Canada, and perhaps it may not be considered out of order on this item. Have we plenty of iron in Canada to meet our requirements if all deposits were fully developed? I have heard that there are great deposits in Canada which have not been developed for one reason or another, probably because they would cost too much.

Mr. CRERAR: There is quite a considerable body of low grade ore now being developed and worked in the Michipicoten area of western Ontario, and in the last few years there was an important discovery of high grade hematite ore 130 or 140 miles west of Port Arthur. While the exploratory work to delimit the extent of this ore body has not been completed, it has gone far enough to indicate that there is a substantial tonnage of this quality ore. This ore is similar in quality to the ore obtained in the famous Mesaba range near Duluth. There are deposits of low grade ore in British Columbia and also some higher grade on Belcher island in Hudson bay, but until recently practically all our iron ore was secured from the United States or Newfoundland. The ore from Newfoundland is used at Sydney and other points in Nova Scotia.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Not very long ago I read in a miner's paper that there was a great range of iron ore in Labrador.

Mr. CRERAR: The surface indications are that there may be deposits of iron ore in Labrador, but they are three hundred miles from any transportation system. At the moment these deposits certainly are not an economic possibility for development, whatever they may be in the future.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Are we in position to develop our own iron ore deposits to the point where we would have a chance of matching Hitler?

Mr. MacNICOL: One of the mines the minister refers to is the Steep Rock mine, a specimen of the ore from which I hold in my hand. It is equal to that produced on the Mesaba range on the United States side of the line. The other mine referred to is the new Helen mountain mine in Algoma where a low grade ore is produced. They are now taking out about 4,000 tons a day, from which after sintering and purification they are able to produce about 2,000 tons of pig iron a day. This reflects great credit upon those who have helped to expedite the production of iron ore in Algoma.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Will the minister say that there is plenty of iron ore in Canada, that it is just a matter of development?

Mr. CRERAR: I should like very much to give my hon. friend the assurance he desires, but I can add nothing to what I stated a moment ago. Production of iron is a problem which depends not only upon the presence of iron ore but upon the means of converting the ore into iron. That is why these developments are usually found where coal and other minerals are in close proximity. There is probably a very large quantity of high grade ore 130 or 140 miles from Port Arthur, but there is no smelting coal within a thousand miles and consequently a problem is created in the development of this resource. To a lesser degree, the same thing can be said about the ore being taken out of the Algoma district, about which the hon. member for Davenport (Mr. MacNicol) gave us some useful information.

The mineral possibilities of Canada, not only with regard to iron but with regard to other metals, is perhaps little more than scratched, if I may use that term. There was a time about forty years ago when it was thought that the precambrian shield contained no minerals, but we now know that we may reasonably expect to find minerals in this belt all the way from Labrador, around the southern end of Hudson bay and up to Great Bear lake in the Arctic region. Here and there mines are now operating profitably, not only in connection with the precious metals, gold and silver, but also in connection with the commercial metals such as nickel, copper and zinc. He would be a bold man indeed who would attempt to place any limit upon the possibilities of mineral development in this country.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Do we lack in Canada any of the metals essential to the manufacture of aeroplanes, tanks and motor cars?

Mr. CRERAR: I think we have them all, with the possible exception of chromium. We have zinc, copper, nickel, and we are now producing iron.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Is tin required in the construction of these armaments?

Mr. CRERAR: We have a little tin, not very much. Tin, I understand, does not enter extensively into the manufacture of automobiles and guns. It is a useful commodity in certain places, but not necessarily there.

Mr. MacNICOL: The minister mentioned chromium. We are producing chromium in northwestern Ontario, in the vicinity of a town the name of which has escaped my mind; I believe it is Collins. Is the mine not still in operation?

Mr. CRERAR: It is quite true that we have, I believe at the Soo, a chromium reduction plant.

Mr. MacNICOL: But the ore comes from northwestern Ontario?

Mr. CRERAR: I am informed that most of it now comes from outside Canada.

Mr. MacNICOL: A few years ago the government granted facilities—

Mr. CRERAR: Quite true.

Mr. MacNICOL: —to construct a road into Collins, I believe it was, in northwestern Ontario. Perhaps the chromium mine has not developed as it was anticipated it would.

Mr. CRERAR: That is quite true. As I recall, $8,000 or $10,000 was spent on getting a road into a deposit somewhere north of Port Arthur, I believe.

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes. Northwest.

Mr. CRERAR: But the deposit did not prove to be a very large one. While considerable ore was taken to the Soo, the plant there, I am informed, depends now very largely, if not altogether, upon sources of supply outside Canada.

Mr. BLACKMORE: Just before we conclude, I believe the hon. member for Davenport held up, for the committee to see, a piece of iron ore. He sent me a little note which I think is good enough to put on Hansard. It is this:

Sample of hematite ore from Steep Rock mines, northwestern Ontario; 65 per cent of iron and millions of tons in sight.

I wish to make just a short comment which seems to me valuable. The minister will have heard many times the statement, uttered and reiterated by leaders of thought to-day, that the things which matter in our war effort are materials and men. Where a thing is physically possible it can be made financially possible, and when he points out that the iron ore deposits are a thousand miles away from coal, it is well that we realize in this committee at this present time that, if the coal is there, if the iron deposits can be made accessible to the railroads, then the coal can be transported to the iron deposits and the iron can be made. If the government of the day neglects to take cognizance of that fact, and as a result, through lack of iron, Britain should be in danger of losing the war, the government of the day will never be forgiven—not in centuries to come.

Item agreed to.

159. Indian affairs branch. Branch administration, $54,800.

Mr. MacNICOL: What I have to say will relate to the items from 159 to 168. I shall be brief; I want, as much as anybody else, to see the end of this part of the session.

The CHAIRMAN: Shall we take together items 159 to 168?

Mr. MacNICOL: They all pertain to Indians.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that we shall take these items together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

160. Indian agencies, $654,893.
161. Administration, $40,365.

Medical.

162. Indian hospitals and general care of Indians, $1,442,217.

163. Grants to hospitals, $4,320.

Welfare and training.

164. Welfare of Indians, $967,374.

165. Indian education, $500,616.

166. Grants to residential schools, $1,398,944.

167. Grants to agricultural exhibitions and Indian fairs, as detailed in the estimates, $6,870.

168. Grant to provide for additional services to Indians of British Columbia, $100,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: During the last few years it has been my pleasure to call at quite a number of Indian reservations. On every occasion I made the best inquiry I could into the administration of Indian affairs, to learn what could be done to improve the lot of the Indians from the educational, health and vocational points of view. More and more I am impressed with two phrases which we have had with us for a long time, namely, "lo, the poor Indian!" and, "the noble red man." I have had the pleasure of travelling with Indian guides on many occasions for many days at a time. I cannot now, in the moment or two I am going to take, say all I should like to say about Indian administration. I can say this, that I heard in numerous places that since Doctor McGill became the head of the branch there has been a considerable improvement in the administration; and for that I am glad.

As I travel round I can see that there is yet a great opportunity to do better for our Indian wards, to make their lot in life better than it is. I am afraid that many reserves are so remote that they are not investigated as often as they should be. It takes time to visit them. I engaged a small diesel-driven boat, with guides, an engineer, and a wheelsman, at considerable expense, to take me to visit certain reservations on a northwest Ontario lake. I do not think I need mention the reserves or the lakes, but I shall relate one or two examples of what I found.

First, as to the habitations. We vote large sums of money for Indian administration, and as a white man I am shocked and ashamed at what I have seen of the housing conditions of Indians on certain reserves. If we were not supposed to assist them and develop their manner of life, it would be a different matter, but that is the obligation of the white man. He has, to a very large extent, taken their lands away from them. He has given them reserves, and he undertakes to direct them and look after them. There is a great opportunity to improve their lot.

I should like to have a parliamentary committee set up, say at the next session. I make no reflection on the department, which probably is doing all that has been done before, and, as I said a few moments ago, is improving on it. But I think we should have a committee, with power to call witnesses, including Indian agents and the occasional chief, not with the intention of finding fault or criticizing, but with the sole desire of improving the lot of the Indians.

[The Chairman.]

I have visited a number of reserves in the United States, and I find that both federal and state governments have done a great deal for the Indians. They have gone so far that they are now discussing giving them representation in the legislatures. For a long time the Maoris of New Zealand have had representation in the legislature of that dominion, and the south African government has now provided representation for its coloured people. Perhaps it would be a good thing if we had someone—how he would be elected or selected I do not know—to represent in this house our Indian people and be a spokesman on their behalf.

I recall one of dozens of habitations which I visited in northern Ontario. Upon measuring it, I found that it was twelve feet by fifteen feet. There were twelve Indian folks living in that house, and only two bunks. Therefore, undoubtedly some of them had to sleep on the floor. In many places one could see out through the roof. The smoke pipe where it went through the roof had no tin round it to prevent fires.

The Indians are our wards and we should take proper care of them. I am interested in the welfare of the noble red man—and he is a noble man, from what I have seen of him, even though some are not quite what we should like them to be. For that matter, however, I suppose they are no worse than many of our own people. Some years ago an estimate about a hospital on a reservation was going through the house, and we were told that the hospital on the reservation had cost $7,000. I went to see it and I found it was not a hospital at all. At the time I called, it was filled with hay and the walls were bursting from the pressure of the hay on every side. Indian money had likely been used to build that so-called hospital and it was not completed.

Mr. CRERAR: Where was that?

Mr. MacNICOL: On lake Nipigon, Gull river reservation. I did not intend to mention any reservation. I find that the cost of medical services, hospital and drugs, is excessive for the Indians, when one takes into consideration the number of Indians there are and the cost on the reservation I have in mind. I have here the facts with regard to a certain agency, and I find that medical expenses and expenses for hospital, doctor, dentist and so forth for 1,724 Indians amounted to $17,240, or $10 each. On another occasion I asked the minister about gardens and the raising of poultry by the Indians for their own use. In one reservation I visited there were two tractors, and they were cultivating from ten to fifteen acres. One tractor was afterwards moved to operate a small sawmill and another was placed in an outshed. Cultivation becomes expensive under such conditions, especially when one considers that they raised 1,000 bushels of potatoes of which they used only 200 bushels, sold 200 bushels and allowed 600 bushels to rot.

I suggest that the situation with regard to launches should be investigated. If a launch cost $1,500 and it is found that it already has had approximately $7,000 of repairs put on it, there is something to be looked into. I am not blaming anyone. Perhaps it was left outside during the winter, the same as was done in connection with a sawmill, with its belts and wheels, and tractors, with no covering, except a board roof but without sides. That is expensive.

However, I will close my remarks, although I should like to have said a good deal more on behalf of the noble red man. His fish are being killed through pulpwood operations; the streams and lakes being poisoned so that one can find dead fish strewn on top of the water. There seems to be no one delegated to defend the Indian. The department in Ottawa is hundreds of miles away from the remote reservations and cannot possibly know what is going on. If we had a parliamentary committee with power to look into the whole question thoroughly, then I think many things that are not as they should be in our Indian administration would be remedied. They are not attributable to anyone and I hope no one in the department will take offence but there is room for improvement.

Mr. CRERAR: Substantial progress is being made in administration.

Mr. MacNICOL: I said so.

Mr. CRERAR: The Indians are scattered over Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, there being a total Indian population of 118,000 or 119,000. Their welfare and their health are the constant study of the officials of the department, and while in many instances the progress which has been made has not been such as we should like to have seen, I can assure the committee that considerable advance has been made. Take, for example the matter of health. In 1936, for the first time, we tackled the problem of tuberculosis among the Indians, and we have made considerable progress since then in eradicating this disease so far as the Indian is concerned. That is of importance not only for the welfare of the Indian but from the point of view of the white population as well.

Another thing I would mention is the effort that has been made in the last four or five years towards the restoration of fur in the northern parts of the provinces. One-third of the Indians live in the northern parts of the provinces or in the Northwest Territories, and their only means of livelihood is their fur catch. By wasteful methods it has become depleted, and it may be of interest to the committee to give some of the results of what has been attempted in restoration in this direction. In the northern part of Manitoba there are over 5,000 Indians and their livelihood had practically gone. In one particular area, sixty or seventy miles east of the Pas—

Mr. MacNICOL: I have been there.

Mr. CRERAR: —there used to be at one time a large production of muskrats, but it had declined to the point where in 1935 fewer than 2,000 muskrats were taken off that area. I approached the provincial government in 1936 and offered to pay half the expense of rehabilitating that area, and the province was interested from the point of view of the half-breeds. We were interested from the point of view of the Indians. Works were carried on at a total cost, including supervision and everything else, of around $130,000 over a period of two years. The area was opened up for trapping in 1940, and in that year the amount of fur taken off the area was valued at about $162,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: To the Indians?

Mr. CRERAR: No, to the half-breeds and the Indians. The share of the Indians was $35,000. About 100 families of Indians were provided for at $20 a month the year round. A few months ago the trapping season for this area was opened, and the total catch for this season was about 200,000 pelts. The revenue from it was $350,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: How much will go to the Indians?

Mr. CRERAR: There were 700 trappers of whom 180 were Indians. Of these, 155 will receive about $300 each, and twenty five head trappers will receive about $380 each. That is not paid out to the Indians when the fur is sold. It is placed in a trust account and each Indian trapper is paid so much a month. We have taken several hundred Indian families in that region off relief in the last two years. Some investigations are going on in Ontario, and there are other areas in Manitoba that are being developed. In Quebec we have had the full cooperation of not only the present Quebec government but the government that preceded it. We have had set aside two large areas for the restoration of beaver. At the southern end of James bay we have about 1,000 Indians.

Mr. MacNICOL: That is on the Ontario side?

Mr. CRERAR: On the Quebec side.

Mr. MacNICOL: There are about 1,000 on the Ontario side.

Mr. CRERAR: It is east of James bay. We have secured there over ten thousand square miles, and we are developing a similar area north of the lake St. John country. Development work is being carried on in northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories. I can say with some confidence that if these policies are wisely and sanely followed, we shall take that population of Indians who have been dependent for their livelihood upon fur in the past practically off relief within ten years, probably within seven or eight years. That is a bit of work that I think is constructive and well worth while. Then we are endeavouring to develop the reserves that have agricultural possibilities so that the Indians will have live stock and meat and cereals for their support.

There is no problem to-day that offers a greater challenge to the Canadian people than the Indian problem. I think there are definite possibilities of solving them. My hon. friend suggested that the whole Indian problem might be a matter of review by a special committee. I shall be glad to take his suggestion under consideration. In fact we have at present under review the whole Indian Act, which stands almost in its entirety as it was passed sixty or seventy years ago. If we come to a consideration of the revision of the act, these other matters to which my hon. friend has referred might be examined into at the same time.

Mr. BLACKMORE: I should like to commend the minister for the laudable work he has done. I have no use for carping criticism which overlooks the fine things that have been done.

I have noticed the hospitals that have been established for Indians. These hospitals are highly commendable and are increasing the numbers of the Indians and adding to their happiness.

But with the many commendable things I wish to point out two or three matters that also should be borne in mind. We should not dream too much of great things to do by and by but should get under way what we are going to do. The Indians are suffering seriously from certain ills which are developing among us and which we are treating with a measure of indulgence. I refer to such as marketing difficulties. If the white man finds it difficult to understand why we cannot produce and sell wheat, let hon. members imagine how the Indian feels when, after having learned to produce wheat, he finds he cannot sell it or the price is so low that he cannot make a profit. I have in my constituency one of those reserves on which farming has been developed. I have known Indians who were successful stock raisers to be reduced to despair simply because they could not sell to advantage. The government must be particularly careful and give special attention to the Indians' problems while we are going through these trying times. I have talked with Indians from the reservation in my constituency who were bewildered by the unemployment problem. They have learned to harvest sugar beets, to pick up potatoes, and built themselves up so they could get along fairly well; they had teams and bundle racks to go into the grain fields and supplement their income, and then when troubles came in 1929 and following years, they could not get that work and income upon which they had been dependent. This condition applies all over Canada and is causing great trouble.

I would point out that, if I am correctly informed—and I have information from dependable sources—there is developing among the Indians in Canada a bitterness which is really dangerous, notwithstanding all the good things the minister is doing. I point this out so that the minister may be a little more indulgent than he has been.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I was out of the chamber for a few minutes and did not hear the first remarks of the minister. Did he say anything about the tuberculosis problem?

Mr. MacNICOL: Yes; it is gradually improving.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I am glad to hear that, because my information was that the problem was not being adequately handled. The department did not have sufficient money to cope with it. Is there anything further the minister might say?

Mr. CRERAR: Nothing was done especially with regard to the tuberculosis problem among Indians until 1936. At that time a survey was carried on in many of the Indian schools and revealed deplorable conditions. The vote was increased last year. It was $300,000, and this year it is a little more. I can assure my hon. friend that the matter is receiving attention and that progress is being made.

Items 159 to 168 inclusive agreed to.

Immigration branch.

169. Administration of the Immigration Act and the Chinese Immigration Act, $164,030.

170. Field and inspectional service, Canada, $1,127,515.

171. Field and inspectional service, abroad, $103,630.

172. Relief of distressed Canadians, outside Canada, $10,000.

Mr. MacNICOL: As the sole representative of the Conservative party present, I might take a minute or two to speak of immigration, particularly in connection with one race. I am sure the heart of every hon. member has been touched by the terrible trials through which the Hebrew race has been going ever since the war broke out. The great mass of them that are still left in Europe will suffer as they have all through the ages. It is not for that mass that I speak at the moment because nothing I could say could help them.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman is making general remarks. Does he wish to take items 169, 170, 171 and 172 together? Is that the pleasure of the committee?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. MacNICOL: I speak for a few cases that came under my observation lately which have touched me very deeply. I have in mind a man who before the war is said to have been worth millions of dollars, a resident of Poland, owner of many large plants, who lived in a fine palace. Like other Hebrew residents of Poland, since the war broke out he has been despoiled. He fled first to Lithuania; after being subjected to all kinds of pilfering by agents of one kind and another, he at last succeeded in getting to Russia and, after being again pilfered there, he got to Japan and, I believe, is now in Japan. A friend of his came to see me, and I told him there was little I could do. But it brought to my mind the dreadful horrors which a large portion of a race that has contributed so much to this world is now enduring. I have in mind a mother who fled from Poland to France, then to Spain, then to Brazil; she has one daughter and two sons in Toronto, but it has been impossible for the sons and daughter to obtain permission for the mother to come to Toronto. I mention these cases merely in the hope that the department may view with the greatest compassion the plight of some of these people who are asking to be permitted to come into this country. I can say for the Hebrew people of Toronto that they have contributed materially towards building up that city, from every point of view that may be considered.

Mr. COLDWELL: I agree with the remarks just made by the hon. member for Davenport. It is regrettable that people so far forget themselves as to vilify a whole race on account of the misdeeds of some of its members. After all, we have only to look among our own people to find many who are no credit to us.

I hope the immigration department will give heed to some of the representations that have been made on behalf of refugees. I know there is pressure from both sides, from those who wish to admit and those who wish to keep out, but as a Christian country I believe we ought to be practical in the application of our ideals and do what we can to assist those who have suffered in a cause for which we are at war. I noticed that in the British House of Commons the other day Miss Rathbone asked a question of Mr. Herbert Morrison with regard to the people who were picked up in a panic a year ago last summer and sent to Canada, asking if they were to be regarded as enemy aliens. Mr. Morrison replied by saying he was convinced that a large number of people had been picked up who ought not to have been, but that in the difficult situation in which they found themselves this was considered necessary in order to protect the country.

Many of those people came to Canada, and I know, as other hon. members do, that some steps have been taken in connection with them. We of the defence of Canada regulations committee had the privilege of hearing Mr. Patterson, his majesty's commissioner of prisons, who was here investigating these cases. I believe that about eight of these people, some of them boys, have been admitted to Canada in order to continue their education, and a large number can obtain permission to enter the United States provided they do not enter directly from an internment camp in this country. I hope it may be possible for this government to enter into some arrangement with the British authorities so that at least those who can get visas for entry into the United States if they are permitted a short residence in this country outside the internment camps, may be given permission to establish such residence in order that they may enter that country. As Mr. Morrison made clear to the British House of Commons, among these people are many who have suffered more than any others have suffered under the heel of fascism and nazism. They are much more the enemy of Hitler than even the bitterest of our own people could be, and there is no doubt as to their loyalty to the allied cause.

In closing, I would add that I know, of those who have been returned to England, some hundreds are to-day serving in the army or doing other essential war work as chemists, scientists, technical men and so forth. A few days ago there came to my desk a letter from a man who was allowed to enter this country, I think some two or three years ago, a German who had fled from Germany to Austria, thence to Czechoslovakia, thence to Switzerland, thence to Belgium, thence to England and finally to Canada. To-day that man is in his majesty's uniform and is urging all his compatriots who have likewise suffered, or who have made their homes in Canada, to follow his example and defend the cause of democracy. Therefore I do not think our people should get the idea that all those who knock at our gates, or any large proportion of them, are enemies in disguise. No doubt there are some blacksheep among them, but I believe that in the main those who have represented themselves to be refugees are genuinely fleeing from the terrors of nazism and fascism.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I notice that item 172 provides $10,000 for the relief of distressed Canadians outside Canada. In view of the fact that we have so many distressed Canadians in Canada who need relief and cannot get it, would the minister explain this item? What qualifications would these people require to have in order to obtain this assistance?

Mr. CRERAR: This is a small vote required in many cases to bring Canadians back to Canada from enemy countries. A country such as Roumania, for instance, may be threatened with German invasion. Before the invasion actually occurs, a Canadian resident may go, say, to Greece, where he will be stranded. This fund is designed to meet cases of that kind, distress arising through no fault of the individual concerned.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): No one permanently residing outside Canada could get any of this assistance?

Mr. CRERAR: No.

Items 169 to 172 inclusive agreed to.

Coal subsidies and subventions.

173. Dominion fuel board administration and investigation, $27,415.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

174. Payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council, $4,500,000.

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross, Moose Jaw): These two items both deal with coal, and perhaps we might take them together.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Agreed.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I have purposely refrained from taking part in the discussions of the last few days in order that the house might make rapid progress with its business, and in order that when we came to this question of coal the Chairman would understand that I have not held up the business of the house at all within the last week or so. I believe the coal situation in Canada needs a thorough going over. We all realize that the coal industry is going to play a vital part in our war effort, and I think this matter should be given a great deal of consideration at this time even though we are in a hurry to get through.

I represent a constituency which has suffered perhaps more by reason of conditions prevailing in the coal industry than any other constituency in Canada. Even to-day in the city of Drumheller there are hundreds of miners unemployed. I should like to read part of a resolution which I have received from the miners' union of sub-districts 1 and 2, district 18 of the United Mine Workers of America. It states:

> That this meeting protest strongly against continued importations of United States coal and that we demand that steps be taken immediately to provide additional markets for Canadian-mined coal, so as to conserve Canadian exchange during war time, and to eliminate the necessity of Canadian miners applying for relief. In the meantime, until these markets are made available, we demand the dominion government bear its fair share of necessary relief.

The government of the day should be ashamed to see qualified miners having to bring up at this time the question of relief. As I understand the minister, in the coming year there is going to be a great shortage of fuel. He is now going to appeal to these miners. He is going to appeal to their patriotism, and from various other angles, so that they will get busy and produce coal. That is exactly what those men have been wanting to do for the last three or four years. They at least had the foresight to see that the time was coming when their services would be required. Apparently, however, the government has not taken that attitude. It has not had the vision to see that that time was coming, and coming very fast.

In a report tabled in the House of Commons on June 12, 1940, I find set out the value of output of Canadian coal mines from 1929 to 1939, and these figures show a steady decrease. In 1929 the value was a little over $63,000,000, but by 1939 it had gone down to about $48,000,000. There was a gradual decrease in those ten years, showing that the value of coal mined in Canada was decreasing, and the inference is that the miners were having less work all that time. In the very same report we find figures as to importations of coal entered for consumption in Canada in the same years. Between 1929 and 1939 the values of United States importations decreased from $50,000,000 to $27,000,000. But then, after 1939, there is a jump to almost $49,000,000. The amount was almost doubled. Yet at that time of increased importation we received a resolution from these miners, in one of the greatest mining districts of Canada, complaining that they are on relief. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is in the committee, he is from Alberta, and he knows that what I say is true. No doubt it is also true of mining districts in Nova Scotia.

Nevertheless we have double the importations of coal from the United States. I say that was not necessary. The minister may reply that we have to keep up our end of the agreement with the United States. But when we think of the tremendous amount of trade taking place between the United States and Canada, and the tremendous amounts we are buying from that country, we must conclude that in view of the trade the United States is getting from Canada, that would be a poor argument. To-day they are doing more business with us than they ever did before.

Here is an essential industry: coal mining. The government have gone so far as to put the industry under the National Resources Mobilization Act. They are going to make it an offence for miners to go on strike. Yet these miners are appealing to the government to give them work. All this time, when they have been begging the government to make a thorough survey of the coal situation, so as to make it possible for the miners to stay in those districts, the government have been overlooking the industry. The result is that more than double the amount of importations are coming from the United States. In the last four months of 1940 close to $10,000,000 worth of coal was imported from that country.

The same report shows that importations from other countries between 1929 and 1939 ranged from $5,500,000 to $8,000,000. It is clear, therefore, that importations from countries other than those of the north American continent have increased in those ten years. I can see no good reason for that. Of course there were plenty of ships available in those years. Then, from 1939 to this date the importations have dropped off materially, no doubt due to the hazards of ocean transportation. Instead of using our own coal mines to produce that difference in supply, after the war broke out, we adopted other means. Did the government have foresight enough to see that the time was coming when it would have to demand that Canadian miners should do everything possible to produce more coal? No; they just sat back, idly.

When war broke out and the importations of coal from across the ocean dropped off, the only increases in importations or supplies have been from the United States. That, in itself, certainly does not look good to the coal miner. There are many people in Canada who are materially interested in the coming situation. I hold in my hand an excerpt from the National Home Monthly. It is headed "Patriotism and Coal," and in part reads as follows:

> What are we thinking of, if we continue this wastage at such a time as the present? It was bad enough in relatively quiet years to send so much money out of Canada, for a benefit in great measure illusory; it meant that we had to provide a livelihood in idleness for large bodies of miners who, but for our habit of thus buying abroad, would have been sustaining themselves by their own labour. But it is many times worse now, when there is so much that we cannot produce at home to meet our war needs, so much for which we are bound to draw upon the United States manufacturer, and for which we must pay in such American dollars as are obtainable only at high discount in exchange for our own. We cannot too soon bethink ourselves of how to maintain a tolerable balance of trade, and each practicable reduction of imports makes the task easier. Coal is our most obvious product on which to become, as the Germans in their four-year plan say, "self-sufficient".
> To learn from a resourceful enemy is a valuable practice, especially during war.

The article would show that the question is being widely discussed, and that others have seen the practicability of the suggestion I make. I believe the government would be well advised to look into the feasibility of producing by-products of coal. I have in mind particularly fuel oil, which can be successfully and commercially produced from coal. That is not illusory by any means, because in Germany it has been done for years, and they are doing it now.

These are matters of particular importance, especially when we read in the press articles such as that which appeared in the Ottawa Journal of June 13, 1941, under the heading: "U.S. to build world's biggest oil pipeline." We find this expression in the text of the article: "The United States government's answer to the threat of an east coast petroleum shortage."

Over a year ago I pointed out to this government the grave situation which might develop with regard to oil. I stated at that time it was definitely possible that the British oil supplies in Iraq and Iran might be lost to us. I can well recall some hon. members interrupting and saying that I was a great pessimist, that I should not be predicting such things. I should like to see the hon. member who would say that to-day. At that time I pointed out the necessity of developing the oil fields in Alberta and at the same time making plans to produce oil from coal. Had we had that foresight we would not be in the position we are to-day. Here is an article in the paper entitled:

Cut in use of oil products near in Canada. Very threatening situation being faced by oil controller, supply minister tells manufacturers.

What are we doing about it? What is going to happen if we delay the process very long? It is obvious that the minister is going to run up against great difficulty when he asks for increased production of coal in the next year. As the resolution, which I read a moment ago, points out, these men have been living on relief, but they are not going to continue to do so very long. They are going to look to other fields of endeavour for work. There is a shortage of labour in many industries in Canada. These men spend their lives equipping themselves to become miners and they are now being forced to find other work. Some are even joining the army. While it may be necessary to have some miners in the army, it should be clearly understood that once they are in the army they are taken away from coal mining. When the minister comes within the year and asks for an increased production of coal, where will he get the miners? He will be forced to reply, "Well we should like to have more coal produced, but we have no miners." That is the condition which is coming and coming fast, unless some provision is made at this time to see that these mines are put into production, and that more Canadian coal is used in Canada so that the miners may be kept fully occupied.

It would help our economy if, when we returned in the fall, a committee of this house were set up to investigate this matter and suggest a national coal policy. There will never be a time when the public could be more easily influenced to use Canadian coal. They are going to have to do so in any event. I realize that the minister faces some difficulty in bringing this about in those communities situated on water because coal can be brought in from the United States by water transportation much more cheaply than it can be brought from western Canada. There are, however, other places which should be using Canadian coal. The minister will say that we cannot increase the subsidy, but I think that argument is not at all well founded when we are considering a national coal policy. I believe it would be well worth while to increase the subsidy another fifty cents or even another dollar a ton. This would give more employment to our railways and would assist in getting rid of their terrible deficits.

There is, however, another way in which the production of coal could be increased, a way which has been brought to the minister's attention and with which he is quite conversant; this is something that could be carried on between now and the time parliament reassembles. Every effort should be made to increase the consumption of Canadian coal in those places in which it is now being used. Quite a few districts in central Canada, Ottawa being one, now use Alberta and Nova Scotia coal, and the district north of the great lakes, round Sudbury, could use much more of this coal. A proper advertising campaign should be carried on to induce the people to use more Canadian coal. A great deal of misinformation has been sent out about this coal, and if the people were properly informed as to its advantages I think we could almost double the consumption.

The minister will probably reply that such an advertising campaign would not come under his department. When the estimates of the Minister of Transport were being considered he was asked about advertising coal products, and he said that that did not come under his department, that it would be a matter for the Department of Mines and Resources. We are now considering the estimates of the latter department, and perhaps the minister can give us an answer. I do not care what department should deal with this matter; the point is that it should be dealt with. I think everyone will agree that such a campaign would increase the consumption of Canadian coal in those areas in which it is already being used. The estimated cost of such a campaign is $10,000, but that is a small amount to spend to bring about this increased consumption.

The minister will have a great deal of difficulty in getting the necessary men to increase this production, and something had better be done immediately. He will be appealing to these miners to come back to their jobs when they may not be in a position to do so. A miner cannot be trained overnight; there are certain qualifications which he must have. If these men leave the mines, the minister will have considerable difficulty in finding others competent to take their places. I do not wish to hold up the committee any longer, but I hope the minister takes this whole situation in hand at once and decides to do something in the form of an interim programme until such time as the house reconvenes in the fall and proper preparations can be made to formulate a definite national coal policy.

Mr. GILLIS: Mr. Chairman, I realize that everyone is anxiously awaiting the end of this part of the session, and that there is a definite arrangement to close up at three o'clock. I am going to be as brief and as explicit as possible. I agree with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston) that it is absolutely necessary at this time to bring to the attention of the government the necessity of doing something with respect to the coal industry. At the present time there is chaos in this industry from coast to coast. While I believe the idea of subventions was good, they are absolutely inadequate to take care of the situation. That is not merely my opinion; it is borne out by facts. We see the same condition from coast to coast; it is developing into a serious situation. This press dispatch appeared in the Ottawa Journal of June 8:

> Domestic and industrial consumers Wednesday were advised by the wartime prices and trade board to order next winter's fuel supplies now.

According to sessional paper 175B, tabled in answer to a question by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, the government spent by way of subventions in 1940, $4,315,589.83 to move 3,008,290 tons of coal. If the government supposes that that policy as carried out for the past several years is going to solve Canada's coal problem, all it has to do is to make an examination of the industry from coast to coast and it will find that we are drifting into a mess from which, if continued for any length of time, we may not be able to extricate ourselves.

Referring to the comparative figures with respect to the importations of United States coal, I find that whereas in the first nine months of 1939 we imported 7,658,255 tons, for the corresponding period of 1940 we imported 12,569,565 tons. While the government spent nearly four and a half million dollars last year on subventions, imports from the United States have practically doubled. And what has happened meanwhile in our own industry? On the west coast we find, according to a newspaper item of May 15, that more than 400 Cumberland, British Columbia, miners, members of No. 7293 local of the United Mine Workers, and their wives met last Saturday morning to discuss the serious economic situation which has developed. In that area they are working three days a week, seeking relief, holding mass demonstrations, trying to impress on their provincial government the necessity of relief. We heard the hon. member for Bow River describe the position of the industry in Alberta, where mines are actually closed.

Turning to Nova Scotia, the same situation prevails. Mines are closing at the present time. I drew the attention of the house three months ago to the closing of a mine in Cumberland county at River Hibbert, throwing 115 men out of employment. I took occasion to mention the contribution which these people were making to war industry. The minister of mines and resources for our province was quite indignant that I mentioned the matter here, asserting that the provincial government had a cure for the situation. That was three months ago. The day before yesterday I received a letter from that section reporting that those 115 men are still totally unemployed, and they asked me to bring the matter up here to see whether something could not be done. In Inverness county, at the other end of the province, we find that orders for coal for use on the Canadian National railway have diminished to a point where one hundred men are threatened with unemployment. As I have said, there is chaos in the industry from coast to coast.

I do not understand why concurrently the imports of coal from the United States have doubled. It does not make sense. From coast to coast in Canada we are closing mines; miners are demanding relief. Yet the fuel board, the government agency set up for the purpose of finding a solution of the problems of the coal industry, is advising the Canadian people that there may be a coal shortage. The facts speak for themselves. No effort is made by the government to deal with this difficulty in a practical way with the help of people who understand the situation and are desirous of curing the trouble.

I urge the minister to do what the hon. member for Bow River has advocated. A national fuel policy must be laid down for Canada. If the minister needs practical advice, those he should call in are the people who have made representations to his department and to the government during the last ten years on the matter of a national fuel policy. Thereby there could be worked out a solution of this problem

The payment of subventions to railroads and mining operators as set out under the order in council is not a cure; it is not even a palliative.

The representatives of the mine workers in districts 18 and 26, who have studied the matter, recommended in the past that a national fuel policy in this country must be one whereby economic markets for both east and west should be zoned, and if they were zoned, a sufficient amount of coal which is being imported would have to be kept out of the country to guarantee our own industry a market.

Mr. CRERAR: How would you keep it out of the country?

Mr. GILLIS: Put an embargo on a sufficient amount of it to guarantee the marketing of our own coal. I do not think that a tariff would be a solution; tariffs can be juggled. They have not been a solution in the past. I say, impose an embargo, be definite about the matter, and so try to cure what is developing into a very bad situation.

I have here much statistical material to which I could make reference, but I am not going to do so at this time. I believe the minister is fully aware of it, because if it is sent to me no doubt it is sent to his department. I would call his attention, though to the issue of the Mine Worker, the official magazine of district 18, for May, 1941, in which they go very thoroughly into this question of a national fuel policy, and lay out a programme which, if followed, will provide a solution. Not only that, but they show definitely there, in the matter of marketing western coal alone, that this government could save approximately seven million dollars a year to the dominion, taking into account the exchange involved in the importation of coal from the United States.

Again may I call to the minister's attention, as I did on the last occasion when his estimates were before the house, the discrimination against Canadian coal used for metallurgical purposes, in the manufacture of steel. Coal brought in from the United States for this purpose is given a drawback of 99 per cent; on 75 cents a ton they are handed back 74 cents. The same allowance applies to coke. Yet Canadian coal used in the manufacture of steel is bonused only to the extent of 49 cents a ton. I see no reason why the rate of bonus granted to United States coal should not be made applicable to coal mined in Canada. It would be an incentive to operators to expand the industry, something they are not doing at the present time.

The consequences are reflected, too, in the wages paid the miners. If the same bonus received by the United States operators were applicable to Canadian coal production, there would not be the difference in wages, because the basis of the argument for lower wages in Canada would have disappeared. The minister would be well advised to call the representatives of the miners and come to an understanding. With all respect to their ability, I have not much confidence in the men who have been handling the situation, because the results that have been achieved in the last ten years on the basis of the policy of subventions have certainly not brought very much benefit to the industry in Canada.

Mr. SOPER: As far back as May, 1940, we were told that we could not get Nova Scotia coal further west than Montreal. Consequently all through the eastern part of Ontario and in the west there has been very little Nova Scotia coal in use in the last two years.

Mr. MacNICOL: We use several thousand tons a year in Toronto. The Toronto board of education uses nothing but Nova Scotia coal.

Mr. SOPER: That was the notice the coal dealers got. With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston), the miners are not working at this time of the year because you cannot ship coal here and put it in the cellars now or there will be too much deterioration. The Alberta people, I would point out, were the only ones who raised the price of coal in the season of 1940-41. This upset the market just when it was getting in good shape. There will be a good deal of Alberta coal used this year.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Wages were increased and that was the reason for the increase in the price.

Mr. SOPER: It was bad business to raise the price in the middle of the season when they were beginning to get a market. There will be a good sale for Alberta coal in Ontario this year, but the business is one that must be handled properly or the dealers will lose a good deal of money.

Mr. COLDWELL: I intended to say something about coal from a different angle, but at this stage I will refrain. I will let it go until next session. Good grades of Alberta coal like Saunders Creek, Big Horn and Alexo stand up well because they are semi-hard coal. The British thermal heat unit in that type of coal approaches closely to the thermal unit per pound in anthracite. Speaking from memory, I believe it is 11,800 per pound in the coals I have mentioned as against 13,000 in anthracite. That can be sold under the present subventions in Ontario at around $12.50 a ton, but American coal, with exchange and so on, will have to be sold this year around $15.75 or $16.00. Consequently it would be a good plan for the minister to engage in a little advertising campaign on behalf of western coal. We have good coal in the west and unfortunately some very poor coal too, and I regret to say that some of the latter has been shipped here. It ought never to be shipped. There is need of supervision, and only grades of coal that are really worth while should be shipped. I have no doubt that if this policy were pursued we would continue to expand the Ontario market for western coal. When the minister, in reply to a question of mine the other day, said that nothing was being spent on advertising this great natural resource of Canada, I thought there was neglect on the part of the department.

Mr. GILLIS: The hon. member for Lanark said it has not been possible to get Nova Scotia coal west of Montreal since May 1940. Under the subvention regulations, I understand, no subvention is paid on Nova Scotia coal unless it moves beyond a certain point in Ontario. The return furnished the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar in May 1941 shows that on Nova Scotia coal the bonus was paid on a net tonnage of $1,940,570. The subventions paid amounted to $2,643,-366.54. That would lead me to believe that the quantity of coal here indicated moved west of Montreal in the year 1940; otherwise a subvention was paid that should not have been paid. I would ask the minister whether it is true that no Nova Scotia coal has been marketed west of Montreal since May 1940.

Mr. CRERAR: It is not correct. Nova Scotia coal has been marketed west of Montreal since that date. Naturally the quantity has declined from what it was in previous years owing to the greatly stimulated demand east of Montreal. My hon. friend (Mr. Gillis) is incorrect in the figures he has given with regard to the increase in imports of American coal in 1940 as against 1939. In 1939 the total imports from the United States were 9,800,000 tons and in 1940, 13,400,000 tons, or an increase of 3,600,000 tons. But that did not mean any decrease in the production in either Nova Scotia or Alberta. It did not mean a decrease in production in any of the existing Canadian fields. As a matter of fact, production was increased in both Alberta and Nova Scotia, and this was due to the very considerable stimulation in business—railway traffic, industrial development and expansion, and so on, which require coal.

Mr. GILLIS: I am not vouching for the figures I gave. I took them from a booklet called Coal and the War, dated January 29, 1941, published by the war-time economic coal committee, Western Canada Fuel Association.

Mr. CRERAR: My hon. friend is quoting figures on a nine months basis. The figures I have given are on a twelve months basis.

Mr. FAIR: There are one or two things that should be reiterated. An hon. member has just told us something of the poor grade of coal being shipped here. For his information I might say that someone interested sold some poor grade Alberta coal here in former years and that had a very specific purpose. It had a damaging effect on the sale of Alberta coal. I understand Alberta now has under consideration a policy which will permit only suitable grades of coal being shipped to a particular market.

The point brought out by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar should also be mentioned again, because we have in Alberta some of the very best coal obtainable in the world.

I would also support the suggestion that a national coal policy be instituted. If that is done it would be in the interests of eastern as well as western Canada and prevent much of the abuse that is going on and has gone on in the coal business.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Why was the subvention on Alberta coal going to Manitoba withdrawn?

Mr. CRERAR: As has been stated in discussions in the house in previous years, the subvention is based on the principle of equalizing the cost of Canadian coal with the laid down cost of United States coal. The cost of United States coal had gone up, consequently the subvention was not required to meet that competition in Manitoba. The principle on which the subvention has been based ever since it was inaugurated is applied in precisely the same way this year as in other years. It has not meant any decrease in the production of Alberta coal, because the amount of coal produced in Alberta in 1940 was considerably more than in 1939.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Do I understand that Alberta coal can be laid down and sold in Manitoba for the same price as United States coal?

Mr. CRERAR: I am informed that the amount of United States coal consumed in Manitoba has not increased as a result of this, in fact it has decreased. But Alberta coal is finding competition from Saskatchewan coal in certain markets in Winnipeg. To what extent that has operated to affect Alberta coal shipments I cannot say at the moment.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Will the minister give some assurance that he will take into consideration the advisability of establishing a national coal policy?

Mr. CRERAR: Right here, may I ask my hon. friend what he means by a national coal policy? I asked the hon. member for Cape Breton South what his idea was, and it was to place an embargo on, that is absolutely prohibit, the entry of a certain amount of outside coal into Canada. Is that the attitude of the hon. member for Bow River?

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): If it is the desire of the committee to go into the details of a national coal policy I shall be glad to do so.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

The CHAIRMAN: The hon. gentleman put a question to the minister, and the minister asks him to clarify his question.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): I am just asking if it is the wish that we go into details of a national coal policy.

The CHAIRMAN: If the hon. gentleman desires an answer to his question he must make his question clear, not by a speech on national policy but by stating what he has in mind in putting the question.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That is the reason I asked for a committee to be set up when we come back to consider thoroughly this question of a national coal policy. That should be very satisfactory to the minister because he apparently does not know what that means. In the meantime would the minister give consideration to the desirablity of advertising more extensively the further use of Canadian coal in areas in which it is now being used?

Mr. CRERAR: The latter question is now receiving the consideration of the officials of the department and is a matter I propose to take up with them as soon as we finish here. In regard to the other question, I shall be glad to take his representations into consideration.

Mr. GILLIS: The minister stated that my idea of a national fuel policy was an embargo on United States coal. It was not as flat-footed as that. What I recommended to the minister was that he should call in someone who has sufficient knowledge of the industry and the marketing of coal to frame a national fuel policy. I said the markets of Canada should be zoned so that the coal industry—

[Mr. Crerar.]

An hon. MEMBER: Cut it short.

Mr. GILLIS: If we wanted to go into that question I could keep the committee here until five o'clock, but I am not going to have the minister make statements which the press, which is very ready to write them up, can use to hold me up to ridicule. We are trying to make a contribution to the discussion, which is something the hon. member is not doing. What the hon. member for Bow River and myself are trying to do is to assist the minister to avoid the difficulty that he is running into, whether he knows it or not, a difficulty which may call for a great deal of assistance in the coal industry if he is to be extricated from it. The policy that is being carried out at the present time is certainly not going to do it. I could sit down and write a national fuel policy for the minister and go into details if he wants me to do it.

Mr. CRERAR: I should be very happy if my hon. friend would give me the benefit of his experience and judgment on that point.

Mr. GILLIS: I shall certainly do it, but I do not want the impression created that I imagine that all the government has to do is to declare an embargo on United States coal and the problem would be solved.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): That emphasizes my statement of a few minutes ago that when the house reconvenes the minister should set up a committee to go into the whole question of a national fuel policy.

Item agreed to.

177. Lands, parks and forests branch—National parks bureau. National parks, $299,500.

Mr. FAIR: What is being done in connection with the Wainwright buffalo park?

Mr. CRERAR: The Wainwright national park has been placed at the disposal of the Department of National Defence.

Mr. FAIR: Is any use being made of it, or is it just idle?

Mr. CRERAR: I understand that up to the present they have not used it. I have not made inquiry as to when they are going to use it or what use they propose to make of it, but it is at their disposal for training purposes.

Mr. McNIVEN: At the top of page 23 of the estimates, Mines and Geology Branch, it says: "Appropriation not required for 1941-42." My only reason for referring to this matter is that in the May issue of the Pre-

Cambrian I find a eulogistic reference to the mines and geology branch of this department, by no less a distinguished person than Doctor S. G. Blaylock, of Trail. This reference was part of a symposium dealing with the work of this branch, and it concludes with these words:

He recommended that the geological survey be reestablished as one of our most important departments, that every effort be made to secure for it the ablest directorship we can find, that it be protected from political influence, and that it be given the greatest latitude in carrying on its work.

He goes on to say that his own company, Consolidated Mining and Smelting company had benefited from the work of this department in developing the Marysville magnesite deposits, the Pinchi lake mercury deposits and the Yellowknife gold area. This statement, coming from such a distinguished authority, should be sufficient to warrant the minister giving favourable consideration to furthering the work of this important branch of his department.

I should like also to refer the minister to an article appearing at page 2 of the same magazine entitled The Steep Rock Hematite Deposits, by Charles Clay. I hope I am not incurring the displeasure of the Minister of Finance in making these observations, because I had him in mind in considering this matter. The substance of this article is that 135 miles north and west of Fort William there is the largest deposit of good hematite ore to be found anywhere on the north American continent.

Mr. MacNICOL: That was discussed about an hour ago.

Mr. McNIVEN: I have been waiting around for two days in order to bring this matter to the attention of the minister.

Mr. CRERAR: This was all taken up some time ago.

Mr. McNIVEN: Then I want to concur in what was said, if the immediate development of this deposit of hematite ore was urged. It will increase our steel production and protect our foreign exchange; and I am informed that it can be developed in such a way that western Canadian coal can be utilized. If this large deposit, so close to us in western Canada, can be developed, there is no doubt it will be of assistance to the agricultural industry of the country. I would commend the article to the minister and urge that he convey the substance thereof to his colleagues, and in particular to the Minister of Munitions and Supply.

421. Loans and Investments. Soldier Settlement of Canada. To provide for soldier land settlement and British family settlement net advances, $105,000.

Mr. STIRLING: With the indulgence of the committee I should like to ask the minister one question before he concludes his estimates. The question is based on a telegram which has just been placed in my hands and which asserts that war bonds are being sold to the Doukhobors bearing a special sticker indicating that the money will not be used for war purposes. I want to know if this is true. It seems to me it would be of advantage for the government to deny it, or, if it cannot deny it, to explain it.

Mr. ILSLEY: Some time ago we had an issue of non-interest bearing bonds which were quite widely purchased. Then members of certain religious denominations in Canada, which do not believe it right to kill people under any conditions, applied for bonds with the provision that the proceeds should be used for the relief of suffering and for humanitarian purposes in connection with the war. We provided, therefore, for the issue of non-interest bearing bonds, series B, and either in the bonds or in the prospectus it was stated that the proceeds would be devoted only to humanitarian purposes and the relief of suffering arising from the war. Then when the victory loan was announced representatives of these religious denominations which, as I say, believe it wrong to kill people under any conditions or circumstances, nevertheless wanted to support the war effort provided the money was not actually used for the purposes I have mentioned; and they wanted to know if there was any way they could buy victory bonds with the assurance that the money would be devoted to humanitarian purposes or for the relief of suffering arising from the war. We agreed to do that; we agreed that if persons having these religious views applied for bonds we would sell them victory bonds carrying a sticker such as the hon. gentleman has described. I do not know whether the description he has given is accurate, but as I could follow it I believe it is substantially correct.

Mr. STIRLING: I appreciate the indulgence of the minister in explaining this matter.

Item agreed to.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT OF CANADA

338. To provide for the cost of administration of soldier settlement and British family settlement, $578,465.

Mr. FAIR: This item deals with the administration of the soldier settlement board, and so on. I wonder if the minister would give us a statement of the position of the soldier settlers, indicating the number who are at present in debt, the amount to which they are in debt, the amount paid in interest and principal during the past year, and so forth.

Mr. CRERAR: I will endeavour to give that information, but I think the hon. gentleman will find practically all of it in the annual report of the department.

Mr. FAIR: I do not think that is a very satisfactory answer at this time. I know the house is in a hurry to get through, but I also know that these soldier settlers are suffering and have suffered during the past twenty years. I believe they should be given some consideration at this time, instead of just telling me to go back and look at the report of the department. I have received figures from the department which indicated that not enough money was being paid in to even cover the interest, without providing anything for the cost of administration. I believe something should be done. I think those in charge of this department could be given other work which would be far more useful at this time, and these soldier settlers who have suffered for the last twenty years should be given a break and an opportunity to earn a decent living. I have in mind a neighbour of mine who bought a half-section of land, with equipment, for $8,000. The last report I had, which was a couple of years ago, showed that he was in debt to the extent of more than $13,000, and now he is in uniform. Something should be done; the matter should not be put off in this way while these people are still suffering.

Mr. JAQUES: I should like to add a few words to what has been said by the hon. member for Battle River. In my own riding I have a soldier who has received notice to vacate his farm next fall. I do not wish to blame those who are administering the department, the inspectors and the others. They have to administer the act as it is. But conditions are so different to-day from what they were when the scheme was started, that in my opinion it is time the act was revised. I have seen figures of this man's account, and on the surface it does not look good. On one side are the figures showing what the man has paid in, while on the other is shown the amount he still owes. But as I pointed out to the director acting for the soldier settlement board, they do not show on the asset side the fact that twenty years ago that soldier, with thousands of others, offered his life in the service of his country. Large numbers of these men, if they were not totally disabled, were certainly handicapped from their experiences in the war.

Neither does it show on the asset side the value of the improvements made in twenty years' work on that land. Further than that, this man has six children, and they are not shown on the asset side. Hon. members may smile when I mention the children, but surely healthy children are the greatest asset that this or any other country can have. If this man is turned off his farm next fall, where is he to go, and what are those children to do for the next few years? I suppose they will drift into the towns, and go on relief.

Which is the better policy for this government to follow—to allow this man to stay on the farm, or to drive him off? Up to the present he has not been on relief. He is raising his family to be healthy and patriotic Canadian citizens. Or should the family be turned off the farm and the children raised in an atmosphere of relief? Furthermore, when this farm was bought—probably about 1919—values were at their peak, both for land and agricultural products. When we consider that in 1917 a debt of $100 could be settled by raising 35 bushels of wheat, and that in 1932 and 1933 it required fifteen times that amount of wheat to setle the same debt, we get some idea of the conditions these men have been up against.

I believe my sense of honesty is as well developed as that of any man, but if one can see anything honest in a system under which our debts are contracted at a certain level of prices and then, through a deliberate policy of deflation put into effect by various governments—because these things do not happen by accident—instead of repaying the $100, which was the amount contracted, the debtor finds himself saddled with an obligation of probably $500 or $1,000, all I can say is, heaven save us from anything dishonest!

I draw this case to the attention of the minister at this time, when the government is trying to draft recruits. Here is a man who served in the last war. I have no doubt his war experiences have been a handicap during the past twenty years. In addition to that, I have been over his farm, and I can say that if one were in the Gatineau district adjoining Ottawa, he might imagine himself on that farm. Part of his farm is on a mountain, and none of it is flat land.

This man has been struggling against physical and financial difficulties for twenty years. In the middle of this war he is faced with being turned out of his home, with his wife and children. He tells me he does not know where to go or what to do. I hope the minister will be able to do something for him. I have no doubt there are other similar cases. Surely this is the worst kind of policy which could be followed either at this or any other time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Some time ago when the orders of the day were called I raised a question of policy in connection with the administration of this department, and I was advised that the discussion should stand until the estimates were before us. I referred in particular to a soldier settler who for the second time in his life has joined the army. Shortly after joining he was notified that unless he made payment within thirty days he would lose all equity in his farm. I took the matter up with the minister, and I appreciate the consideration given by him. I understand that man's case is to stand over until the conclusion of the war. The point I make is that a notice of that sort, going out to a man in uniform who is associating with other soldiers, has a disturbing influence. I know the board was able to show that the man had been on the place for twenty years and had not made any large payments. But if it took the board twenty years to find that this man was not an efficient farmer—and I am still not prepared to agree he was not efficient—surely such drastic action should not be taken. I believe very few hon. members would have gone to that place twenty years ago and worked as hard as this man did. I think it would be agreed that he settled on submarginal land. He was a good citizen; so far as I know he did not spend his money on drink or gambling or in other objectionable ways.

My submission is that if the board saw fit to leave him on the land for twenty years, at least it should leave title to the land with him until the war is over. I would ask the minister to make a statement of policy as it affects men who join the army. It is most unfair to put the squeeze on them and close out their equities, thereby making the land available to someone who may have a few hundred dollars in cash. The minister should announce a policy which would indicate that these men could go back to their land. I understand protection is given under some provincial legislation, but that is not applicable to land held under the soldier settlement scheme. I would ask the minister to make a statement regarding the man in uniform whose dealings with the board might result in his being deprived of his equity while away on service.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Before the minister replies, I would draw his attention to certain cases I have had described to me in the last few days. There were in fact five of them. I have written to the soldier settlement board concerning these, and with respect to four I have so far received no information. The fifth case the board has turned down flat. The circumstances in that case were somewhat similar to those which have been described by the hon. member for Mackenzie. The man I have in mind has been on the land for the last fifteen or twenty years. I am speaking from memory, but I believe in that time he has had ten crop failures. In 1940 he had a fairly good crop, and he promised the board that he would contribute a certain amount of it as a payment on his land, but since he did not make that 1940 payment, the board is kicking him off his land. From what the director of the soldier settlement board says, they will not do anything else. I do not know what I can do with this fellow. He has two sons in the active service, and it does not seem like a square deal. As I said before, since the last war he has had ten complete crop failures and some partial failures. If this is the reward a man is to get for active service, it is no wonder that we are not getting recruits.

Mr. CRERAR: The administration of soldier settlement matters has had careful consideration, not only by myself but by officials of the department. Undoubtedly there are problems associated with it. I would remind my hon. friends who are now criticizing us, that in the past a great deal of consideration has been given to the soldier settler. On at least two occasions parliament has granted reductions, and further reductions have been made under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act. Quite a considerable number of these settlers have paid their way, and there are others who will pay their way; yet in the very districts in which some have succeeded, there are others who have failed. Those are the ones for whom my hon. friends are making their appeals.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): Local conditions affect different farmers in different ways.

Mr. CRERAR: Local conditions are taken into account by the department. The hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Nicholson) mentioned a case, one in connection with which he has had some correspondence with me. This man is in uniform and his farm, upon which there is no stock or equipment, is being left in the care of his brother. We shall get nothing from it, and we shall probably have to pay the taxes in order to keep it from being sold for taxes by the municipality. Yesterday the hon. member for Lake Centre (Mr. Diefenbaker) offered some criticism of the soldier settlement administration in the matter of payment of allowances to dependents of enlisted soldier settlers. In this connection I have in mind a man who enlisted and who left a wife and two children on his farm. He had not been a successful farmer, and it was not the fault of the land. I think my hon. friends, if they are honest, will admit that there are some farmers who do not succeed largely because they lack some quality which is necessary to success.

Mr. JAQUES: The best farmers do not always succeed.

Mr. CRERAR: This man assigned $20 of his pay to his family; his wife receives $35 allowance and $12 for each child, making a total of $79 a month. Criticism was made, and probably would be made by my hon. friend, because under these circumstances we are asking that the taxes be paid so that the government will not have to put up additional money for that purpose. Is that a hardship on the family? I suppose my hon. friend will say that it is.

I should like to make one more observation before I sit down. The recent increases in taxation—and I do not say that we have reached the limit—have been such that next year hundreds of thousands of people who have paid no taxes to the federal government will be paying taxes direct to the federal government. It is about time that the people of this country became tax conscious. There is no group in this house who have more suggestions for the spending of public money than my hon. friends who sit diagonally opposite. On almost every occasion we hear suggestions that we should put up for the relief of the soldier settler, should bonus this and should do something more about that. Where will we get the money to do all the things? It must come out of the pockets of the taxpayers. The government does not get it off rose-bushes, notwithstanding all the theories of my hon. friends from Alberta. The money must come from the pockets of the taxpayers or by means of loans. If the hon. member for Mackenzie and the hon. member for Bow River want to stand well with the electors in the next election they must soon give some attention to relieving the burdens of the taxpayer. In the years to come, the taxpayer will have something to say about it, and he is going to say it pretty loudly, if I do not miss my guess.

[Mr. Crerar.]

Mr. COLDWELL: I had not intended to say anything on this particular item, but I see that the figures show that the burden placed upon these men was such that they could not carry it. The percentage of soldier settlers who have completed their contracts is very small, and only a very small percentage of those settled under the British family scheme remain on the land. I think our people are tax conscious now, but we are not obtaining all the taxes that could be obtained in the right places. Yesterday I was speaking to a minister from one of our sister dominions, New Zealand. Wages are lower in that country than they are here, but they have social services which make the real wages higher. I was interested in finding out the basis upon which farmer debts in that dominion had been reduced, and I was told that they took the price levels over a period of ten years and then decided what the land could bear, after the farmer was left £3 a week—that is £156 a year which at the present rate of exchange amounts to $700—before he was expected to pay anything on the indebtedness on his land. That was the basis of the adjustments which were put into effect several years ago in New Zealand.

The minister said that $79 a month is a considerable income for a woman with two children and whose husband is overseas. The minister must realize that many of these people who have been living under these conditions have nothing in their homes. I know that the hon. member for Mackenzie, the hon. member for Bow River and I have gone into settlers' homes where there was not sufficient clothing in the house, or sufficient equipment in the kitchen to get a decent meal. A soldier settler in uniform from near Prince Albert came to my office and told me that he had enlisted in order that his wife and family might be able to eat and be decently clothed for the duration of the war. That is not the spirit in which a man should enter the army.

Mr. CRERAR: Does my hon. friend blame that condition on the soldier settlement administration?

Mr. COLDWELL: No; I am not placing this on the doorstep of the minister. What I am urging is that every consideration should be given at this time to the soldier settlers, and particularly to those who have gone back to the army. These men have not the provincial debt protection which other people have, and I do not think our government departments should exert the pressure which, it seems, is being exerted upon some of these people.

The minister will say, of course, that some of these men have not farmed properly, that they do not know how to farm. I believe that is true. But when we did not know what to do with these returned men back in 1920 and 1921, we persuaded many of them to go on the land,—men who ought never to have gone on the land. And there they are. I have forgotten what the percentage of completed contracts is, but if my recollection is correct—and I have a fairly good memory—not more than 25 or 30 per cent of the contracts originally made have been carried to completion. Would the minister tell us how many of the original soldier settler contracts have been completed and the loans paid out in the terms of the contracts?

Mr. CRERAR: I think I can get that information for my hon. friend in a moment. It may be of interest to the committee to know that the total reductions or concessions made in amounts originally advanced to soldier settlers for the purpose of land, live stock and equipment, amount to over $43,000,000.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is, the write-off?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes.

Mr. DONNELLY: What was the original investment?

Mr. CRERAR: I am told that it was around $108,000,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: That would include both accrued interest and original principal?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes, but largely principal reduction.

Mr. COLDWELL: But that proves nothing.

Mr. DONNELLY: What rate of interest does the department charge?

Mr. CRERAR: Five per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: Was it always 5 per cent, or has it been reduced?

Mr. CRERAR: I understand that it was always 5 per cent to the soldier settler. On some of the civilian contracts which replaced soldier settler contracts it may have been 6 per cent.

Mr. DONNELLY: How many soldiers have taken up land, how many have left the farms, and how many are yet on the farms?

Mr. CRERAR: I am informed that 2,592 of the original settlers have cleared off the indebtedness and have titles to their lands.

Mr. COLDWELL: What percentage is that of the original contracts?

Mr. CRERAR: That would be around 11 or 12 per cent. Of the remainder of 8,118 soldier settlers whose contracts with the department are still in force, 3,004, or 38 per cent, have a substantial equity of 40 per cent or more in their farms.

Mr. COLDWELL: After twenty years?

Mr. CRERAR: They have their accounts in good standing, and should pay off their loans. There are 1,645 or 20 per cent, who have an equity of from 10 to 40 per cent in their farms and have a fair prospect of success.

Mr. COLDWELL: That is after twenty years?

Mr. CRERAR: Yes. Probably in some cases it would be twenty years; in others, it would be less.

Mr. JOHNSTON (Bow River): They have quite a bright future!

Mr. CRERAR: Then 3,469 or 42 per cent, have little or no margin of equity. Most of this last group have had their loans reduced under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act during the past three years: 2,300 of this group have a fighting chance, but 1,100, despite a heavy debt reduction under the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act, have little prospect of establishing any personal equity in their farms, probably due to inefficient farming methods, aggravated in many cases by advancing age or other physical disability. That is the picture as it is at the present time.

I happen to know, because I have lived in western Canada, quite a number of cases of soldier settlers. I recall one case where there was only a public road between two men. They got the same advantages; their land cost practically the same; in each case they received practically the same assistance. One man has paid off his obligations in full, owns his farm and has good buildings on it; the other man has made a failure of his farm. How are you going to adopt any form of administration which will meet the case of that man? All you can do in the end—and that is what the policy of the department has been—is to nurse him along, recognizing the service he has given in the past. Probably he will stay there as long as he lives, because it provides him with a home, but we may abandon any idea that he will ever pay for his farm, because I cannot conceive of any conditions under which that individual would make a success. The fault was not in the policy of the government. The fault was not in the quality of the land he had. Nor can it be attributed to the conditions, because the man across the road made a success when the other man failed. The failure was due to, shall I say, some lack of ability, of capacity to manage, however you like to describe it.

Mr. COLDWELL: Perhaps, lack of suitability for the work he was doing.

Mr. CRERAR: Well, probably. The probabilities are that he never should have attempted farming.

Mr. JAQUES: I brought to the notice of the minister the case of a returned man who is to be turned off his farm this fall. The minister replied that we in this corner were, or would be, very free with the taxpayers' money. But may I remind the minister that, so long as that man is on the farm, he is not there at the public expense, so far as I know; but if he is turned off his farm and is forced on relief, in all probability he will be living at the expense of the taxpayer.

Let me say this, for it is something I do not talk about as a rule, that I know western Canada. I have been there since the year 1901, and I have lived always on the land; I have never engaged in any other business. When people argue that, because a man over here makes a success or what is called a success, and a man over there does not, the difference represents the real values of these two men, I say they do not know what they are talking about.

Let me point to the case of the most successful farmer Alberta ever had, the late George Lane. He came on a saddle-horse to the province before the province was formed. He lived to accumulate over a million dollars; yet when he died, George Lane was absolutely broke in mind, body and pocket. I can instance any number of men who have had similar experiences. It is easy enough for a firm or an accountant to press the keys on a machine and then turn a handle, and produce a result. But that does not represent the conditions on a farm.

Remarks about taxpayers' money come ill from those who were responsible for one million Canadians being on relief—people who would still be on relief had it not been for this war. Will anyone say that these one million people were inefficient or too lazy to work? They are not too lazy to fight, as we have found out. I wish the minister would look into this case and see that this man, after serving the country in the last war and having raised a family, living not at the expense of the taxpayers, is not turned on the road now or at any time. If he lived through the depression and the weather we have had in Alberta in the last twenty years, he deserves at least to be let alone to live as best he can.

Item agreed to.

339. To provide for the payment to the government of the United Kingdom on account of losses under the 3,000 British family agreement of August 20, 1924, and the New Brunswick 500 British family agreements of August 4, 1927, and August 27, 1935, $20,000.

Mr. COLDWELL: Can the minister give the comparable figures with regard to the British family settlement scheme—the number of original contracts, the number completed, the number of people who still remain with those who have barely more than a fighting chance to come through?

Mr. CRERAR: I have not that information. Under the 3,000-family scheme the original number was slightly below that figure, but I am bound to say that the scheme has not worked out successfully. There have been heavy losses, and more losses will accrue to the federal treasury before the full scheme is finally liquidated.

Mr. COLDWELL: It is the old story. We did not choose sufficiently well the people who were adapted to that kind of work, and in some instances the land was not good. I went to the quarantine section in southern Saskatchewan and saw the people trying to make a living on land that had been passed up for nearly fifty years. They were grubbing on Canadian Pacific land—and how the Canadian Pacific fleeced them!

Item agreed to.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

516. General administration—further amount required, $15,836.75.

Mr. COLDWELL: Reasonable consideration should be given to these estimates. They are being called so rapidly that I have not been able to turn the pages to see what we were approving. I have no objection to passing over items that are not contentious. I wanted to see what item 45 was, but I found that we were six jumps ahead of it.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Those were all rather routine items—for instance, to pay the indemnity of members of parliament.

Item agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved:

That the reports of the committee of supply made to the house on February 25, 27, May 2, 13, 23, June 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 11, less amounts voted in interim supply be now received, read a second time and concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

WAYS AND MEANS

SUPPLY BILL

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of ways and means.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. ILSLEY moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to His Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1942, the sums of $163,431,321, $35,000,000 and $48,453,183.14, respectively be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Ilsley thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 103, for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1942.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first and second times, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Vien in the chair.

Mr. STIRLING: I take it that both the clauses and the schedules are in the customary form. Is there anything unusual?

Mr. ILSLEY: Not that I know of. I have not the previous acts before me. There is a borrowing power in section 5 but I do not think it is at all unusual.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House, Ottawa,
June 14, 1941.

Sir:—

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. Sir Lyman P. Duff, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber on this day at 3 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
F. L. C. Pereira,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

The house having reverted to the order for questions:

WAR-TIME HOUSING LIMITED

Mr. FRASER (Peterborough West):

1. Is James MacKay, of Eastern Woodworkers, building any homes for War-time Housing Limited, in Nova Scotia?

2. Has James MacKay, or Eastern Woodworkers, received a contract from War-time Housing Limited?

3. If so, were any tenders called for the construction of these houses?

4. Has any land been purchased in Nova Scotia by War-time Housing Limited?

5. If so, from whom was the land purchased?

Mr. HOWE:

1. No. The building project at New Glasgow, N.S., has been abandoned.

2. Answered by 1.

3. Answered by 1.

4. Yes.

5. In Halifax (a) A parcel of land known as the St. Paul's glebe lands was purchased from the rector warden and vestry of St. Paul's Church, Halifax, N.S.; (b) a single lot to round out the parcel was purchased from the Home Realty Limited, Halifax, N.S.

In Dartmouth (a) a parcel from Michael Lahey and wife; (b) a parcel from Thomas Notting, K.C.

In Eastern Passage (near Dartmouth) (a) a parcel from Allen Horne, Esq.; (b) a parcel from Ralph Horne, Esq.

In New Glasgow, land was expropriated, but the project has been abandoned and the expropriation of land cancelled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION ASSISTANT GENERAL MANAGER

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. In regard to return No. 84C, what adjustments referred to in answer No. 14 were made?

2. What reply was given to the auditor general to questions (a) and (b) in the last paragraph of his letter referring to C.B.C. accounts, addressed to the minister and dated February 25, 1941?

3. What policy and under what legal authority are future arrangements regarding such matters to be made?

Mr. HOWE: See minister's statement, pages 4308, 4309 and 4311, unrevised Hansard.

Mr. COLDWELL: Referring to the answer given in reply to my question, I have looked through Hansard at the pages mentioned and I cannot find the answer. I wonder if this question might be reconsidered.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I shall bring my hon. friend's observations to the attention of the minister.

*AWNINGS FOR JACKSON BUILDING, OTTAWA

Mr. HOMUTH:

1. Is consideration being given to the placing of awnings on the Jackson building, Ottawa?

2. If so, what is the estimated cost of equipping this building with awnings?

Mr. CARDIN:

1. No, as far as the Public Works Department is concerned.

2. Answered by No. 1. But the Department of National Defence for Air have thought it advisable to buy for the drafting-room windows of that building awnings the cost of which is $60.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO MR. SPEAKER ON FULFILMENT OF DUTIES AS PRESIDING OFFICER

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): May I take this opportunity to congratulate Mr. Speaker upon the magnificent way in which he has conducted the affairs of the House of Commons?

Mr. M. J. COLDWELL (Rosetown-Biggar): That is unanimous, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid when all men speak well of me.

On motion of Mr. Lapointe (Quebec East) the house adjourned at 4.10 p.m. until Monday, November 3, 1941, at three o'clock.

Monday, November 3, 1941

The house met at three o'clock.

THE LATE ARTHUR B. DAMUDE

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Before the house enters upon the proceedings of this afternoon, I regret to have to announce to hon. members the passing of one of our number in the period of the recess which we have just had. Mr. Arthur Damude, the late member for Welland, passed away on the fifteenth of September at the comparatively early age of fifty-two years.

Mr. Damude entered the House of Commons in 1935 and was returned as a member at the last general elections. He was of a retiring disposition and took little part in the discussions in the house. He was, however, faithful in attendance, followed the proceedings of the house closely, and was very helpful on committees. He was keenly interested in the social problems of the day, and had given much of his time and thought particularly to the welfare of labour and also of those who are engaged in agriculture.

In his own constituency as a younger man, he had taken part in municipal affairs and in the work of local charitable institutions. Those of us on this side who knew him well will miss him greatly, because he was one of the most companionable of men and one of the most loyal of friends and supporters. He had the promise of many years of useful service before him. Unfortunately he has been taken away at this early age.

Mr. Damude suffered bereavement in the loss of his wife only a short time before his own death. There is only one member of the family left, Lieutenant Ross Damude, who is in the Canadian armed forces. I am sure it would be the wish of hon. members that we should express to Lieutenant Damude something of the great respect we have for his father's memory. It will be revered by all who knew him, and he will long be remembered by the citizens whom he served so well.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): I desire to add my tribute to the memory of our late colleague. Mr. Arthur B. Damude was still in the prime of life, fifty-two years of age. He evidently had a flair for public service because he was a candidate for the House of Commons on two occasions prior to his election. His ambition culminated in his election by a substantial majority in 1935 and again in 1940. I have no doubt that he contributed a great deal to the public life of his county, besides making his contribution here in parliament.

I regret to say that I did not know Mr. Damude personally. During the brief time since I came here in 1940, I do not recall that I ever had the privilege of meeting him. I suggest to you, sir, and to this house, that his untimely death at the comparatively early age of fifty-two exemplifies how fleeting is human life and how heavy the toll among those in public life.

I desire to associate myself with the Prime Minister in all that he has said and in extending to the family of the deceased member our very sincere sympathy.

WAR EXPENDITURES

FOURTH TO TENTH REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. J. T. THORSON (Minister of National War Services): I wish to table the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth reports of the special committee on war expenditures.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DARTMOUTH, N.S., AIRPORT—TILLEY INVESTIGATION

Mr. POULIOT:

1. What is the daily remuneration, including living and travelling expenses, of Mr. W. N. Tilley, K.C., for the investigation and report referred to by the hon. Minister of Air, and the hon. member for Cumberland, on the orders of the day, May 30, 1941?

2. How much has been paid to him?

3. Did he send a final account?

4. If not, what accounts did he send to the government to date?

Mr. POWER: Mr. Tilley has not nor does he intend to render an account for his services or personal expenses resulting from his investigation into the development of the Eastern Passage aerodrome.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

COAL FOR SWIFT CURRENT, SASK., PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. COLDWELL:

1. What are the names of those who tendered for the supply of coal to the post office and dominion experimental farm at Swift Current, Saskatchewan, during the years 1936-1941, inclusive?

2. What was the amount of each tender?

3. What are the names of the successful tenderers and the amount of their respective tenders?

Mr. HOWE: Return tabled.

MR. J. S. WOODSWORTH

CONGRATULATIONS ON HIS RETURN TO THE HOUSE AFTER ILLNESS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure it will be the wish of hon. members of the house that I should say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) how pleased we all are to see him again in his place to-day. As we all know, my hon. friend is leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, and as such has been unsparing in the time and energy he has devoted not only to the work of that political party but particularly to his duties in this parliament. Many of us felt that at times he worked far too hard; he did not spare himself but overtaxed his energies and occasionally those of the government as well. We were genuinely sorry when we learned that he had suffered a somewhat serious indisposition, which kept him away from Ottawa during practically the whole of the last and all of the present session of the house, but we are delighted to have him back to-day. I can assure him that on all sides of the house there is genuine pleasure at the progress he has made in regaining his strength. We hope he may find it possible to continue to attend the sittings of the house, and that he will enjoy a complete recovery of his health.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I trespass upon the time of the house to add just a word to what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has said. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and I entered this house in the same year. I think I can safely say that during most of the intervening time we have not thought alike on public questions, but on one point I am sure I can agree with my right hon. friend and with all other hon. members of this house; that is, how glad we are to see the hon. member back, I trust in improved health. I hope the time will come when he will be able to bear his full share of the duties and responsibilities of this house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN CONCLUDING THE SESSION—WELCOME TO RIGHT HON. CLEMENT ATTLEE, LORD PRIVY SEAL

On the orders of the day:

Speaker, if I were to say a word about the reassembling of parliament to-day, if only to remind hon. members of the stage of the session we have reached. As hon. members will recall, the house adjourned on June 14 last, at which time I made a motion, which was carried unanimously, that we should reassemble to-day. This date was fixed with the idea of deciding in the light of circumstances at this time whether it would be better to continue the present session for such time as might be necessary, and begin a new session in the new year, or whether it would be preferable to do as we did last year and meet simply to prorogue, beginning the new session before the end of the present year.

I think the experience of last year went to show that beginning a new session at the end of the year simply meant that when we resumed after the Christmas adjournment, much of the time of the house was taken up in debating anew questions which had been the subject of discussion in the debate on the speech from the throne, and that in the end public business would be expedited, and certainly expenditure lessened, if the house were to meet at the beginning of the new year for its third session rather than before the close of the present year. It is therefore the intention of the government not to call parliament together for the new session until some time in January, at a date which I shall be glad to fix after conference with my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) and the leaders of other parties.

I want to make it clear that in coming to this decision the government has had in view first of all what would best serve the interests of the public and secondary, but still important, what would best serve to meet the convenience of hon. members. Beginning a new session at once or within the next few days would mean that hon. members would have to secure living accommodation in the city for a short period and then either hold it until after the beginning of the new year or risk losing it altogether by letting it go meanwhile. With the difficulty that now exists in securing accommodation in the capital we have felt that to begin a new session at once would entail unnecessary inconvenience and expense to many hon. members. On the other hand I should like to make it quite clear that while we are at the end of the second session of the present parliament the government has no desire to terminate the session before hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as those on this side, wish to have it terminated. We are here to answer any questions which the opposition may wish to ask the government; to give to the country information which we believe the country will wish to have at this stage, with regard to the progress of Canada's war effort, and also to give information on other public matters as to which hon. members or the country may wish to be informed. When that part of the work is over I will introduce a motion similar to the one I introduced in June, that the house adjourn until a date then fixed for early in the new year. I am careful to say "adjourned" again. I do so because I know it is the wish of hon. members that at this time of war parliament should be kept in session so that if between now and the end of the year a critical situation should arise which would render it desirable that hon. members be brought quickly together, the session would not be terminated and hon. members could be called together at very short notice. If we were to prorogue it might take a longer time to bring hon. members back. But if there should be no occasion to reconvene the house between now and the end of the year, we will begin the new session as has been more or less customary in the first month of the new year.

I have thought that to-day hon. members would probably wish to have from me a statement in the nature of a review of the international situation as it has developed since we last met together. Since the commencement of the war, it has been customary to make a statement of the kind, at the beginning of a new session or after an adjournment of any length of time, and if hon. members are agreeable I shall make that statement this afternoon. Further proceedings for to-day is a matter which may well be left to the house itself to decide. I would suggest that it might be advisable for the leader of the opposition and myself to meet with the leaders of other groups, and also for the whips to confer with some of the hon. members, to see if between to-day and to-morrow we might not find it possible to agree upon a procedure which would facilitate the work of the balance of the session. It is the desire of the government as far as possible to proceed in accordance with the general wishes of the house.

Speaking of procedure I am reminded that, in common with some other hon. members, I had to-day the pleasure of being present at a meeting of the Canadian and Rotary clubs, of Ottawa, and of hearing a splendid address by the Right Hon. Clement Attlee, Lord Privy Seal in the government of Great Britain. In the course of his address Mr. Attlee spoke of our parliamentary institutions. From his exceptional experience both as a leader of the opposition and deputy leader of a government, and from having served in both party and national governments, he made clear to those present that one of the virtues or advantages of the British system of government is that it always has a way of meeting whatever situation may arise and of having its procedure work out smoothly. He pointed out that, so far as procedure in the House of Commons was concerned, that very desirable result was obtained by conferences between the leaders of parties and groups, and their whips. When I made my suggestion as to procedure that portion of Mr. Attlee's remarks was much in my mind.

However, my chief purpose in introducing Mr. Attlee's name at this moment is to say on behalf of the government and parliament of Canada, and on behalf of the Canadian people, how pleased we all are that Mr. Attlee has found it possible in the short time he is able to spend on this side of the Atlantic, in attendance at the conference in New York of the International Labour Office, to spare sufficient time to visit Canada, to deliver public addresses and to see something at first hand of the war effort of our country. His visit will afford him a fuller knowledge than would otherwise have been possible of the position of Canada in the war. He will be able to take back to the people of Britain no uncertain assurance of the intention of men and women of all classes and in all parts of Canada to put forth their utmost effort in the winning of the war. We are gratified indeed that one who is not only the leader of a political party in Great Britain but who has played such an important part in British public life especially in the furtherance of all that is best in industrial relations, as well as in the interests of his country in a time of war, has been able to spend these days with us. I am pleased to be able to avail myself of this opportunity to express our appreciation of Mr. Attlee's visit.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate myself with the expressions of welcome the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) has extended to the Right Hon. Clement Attlee. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Attlee on an all too brief occasion in September, and I was greatly impressed by his dynamic personality. On behalf of those surrounding me may I add my word of welcome to that of the Prime Minister. I hope Mr. Attlee's stay in Canada will be a pleasant one, and that he will take back happy recollections of his all too few days here with us.

With respect to the Prime Minister's statement in connection with the business of the session which remains to be disposed of, when parliament adjourned on June 14 my understanding was that the house would reassemble on November 3, the date then fixed. It was my further understanding that the house would prorogue and that a new session would begin immediately, as was done a year ago. So far as this party is concerned, that would have been a satisfactory solution. It does seem to me that, other things being equal, it would be well that this session should be brought to a close, because, may I remind hon. members, it is just a little under a year since this session was opened on November 7, 1940.

Something, however, has occurred to alter the government's decision in that respect, and I am not controverting the suggestion which has been made. As the Prime Minister has said, if we were to prorogue, and then open a new session and debate the address, as we did a year ago, what was said in that debate might be repeated later in the same session. I have seen that happen, and in my opinion it is not conducive to progress in our deliberations.

But why should the government not have some business ready for parliament at this time? We have been away from Ottawa for almost five months. Is there no necessity for legislation? Is there no necessity for motions for supply or ways and means, or for other government business which would afford hon. members an opportunity of doing some work? One of the crying needs in the House of Commons is that private members should be given something more to do than they have been given in the past. I am not going to dwell upon the point I have made more than once, namely that having delegated to the executive all the powers they have asked for or could think of—and I do not know what more they could ask for or think of than they now have—parliament has really been reduced in status to that of a debating society. So far as the executive are concerned it would appear that the only procedure required is to call us together from time to time to pass such supply as they may require. I do not believe that is the will of the people of Canada, even in war time. I suggest to my right hon. friend and his colleagues that they give some consideration to submitting to parliament national problems which arise from time to time, so that at least the people's representatives may have an opportunity to express their opinions.

Looking at the order paper I find that government orders are only three in number. The first is for the third reading of a bill in the name of the Minister of Mines and Resources (Mr. Crerar). It has been on the order paper for many months, and I understand the minister does not intend to proceed with it. The second order is a pro forma notice in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley), for committee of supply, and the third order is for committee of ways and means.

I do not know under what order of business the house may proceed to discuss public questions. I am glad the Prime Minister has extended the invitation to which he has referred, so that we may talk matters over and make arrangements under which opportunity will be given to hon. members to express their opinions in the house. While I have a rough knowledge of the rules of procedure, I am not an authority, but from my understanding I would assume that whatever is done will have to be done by consent.

So far as we are concerned we will of course cooperate. I do wish, however, that in relation to measures of national importance the government would consider taking us into their confidence, and would remember that we are still living in a democracy. I do not say this in any querulous spirit; I am simply asserting a principle. The people's elected representatives are still the representatives of the people, and while we have delegated all kinds of authority to government, it does not follow that the people's elected representatives have given to this or any other government carte blanche to do as it pleases by order in council. I commend these observations particularly to my right hon. friend, and I do so even in war time—because he will recall, as I do, what a steadfast opponent he has been of rule by royal commissions and orders in council.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to debate this matter, but I should like to give a word of explanation concerning one of the points which my hon. friend has raised. He has referred to the fact that there is no business on the order paper. The reason for that is that the session was really over when we adjourned. The purpose of the adjournment till to-day was simply to keep parliament in session to meet any emergency that might arise before the session was prorogued. We are not therefore proceeding simply as we please by order in council but rather under the authority which parliament has given us in the enactments which were passed at this very session. I want to make that clear.

May I remind hon. members of the circumstances which last year occasioned two sessions beginning in the one year. As will be recalled, in 1940 we had a general election in the early part of the year. Then we had a session of parliament in the late spring and early summer. The second session, the one we are now in, started in the late autumn of 1940. This was done largely to suit the convenience of hon. members who, in addition to the session, had also been through a general election. Instead of continuing the session, we entered immediately upon a new session. It has been the custom in parliament for some years past to have the different sessions identified with the calendar years. The government feels that it will be found best in the end that the second session of parliament should end in this year, 1941, and the third session begin in 1942.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, the members of this group would like to associate themselves with the welcome extended by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) and the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson)) to Right Hon. Clement Attlee, Lord Privy Seal in the imperial cabinet. I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Attlee some five years ago at the labour party conference which took place that year in Edinburgh. I believe Mr. Attlee has since been in the very thick of things and I am glad to know that he and the party which he represents are working to-day for the cause of democracy.

May I also on behalf of this group thank the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition for their kind references to our leader, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). We all missed him, and it is very gratifying to know that others missed him. It is one of the glories of democracy that while we may differ fundamentally, we are ready to recognize the character and worth of other individuals. That is one of the things that we hope to maintain when this war is over. It is one of the things that does not exist in the totalitarian state—there you either conform or you are liquidated.

In regard to the business of this session, we of this group think it would be a calamity if we were to depart without being able to discuss the questions which are foremost in the minds of the people of Canada. There is a great deal of misgiving as well as a great deal of inquiry, and I think it would be a bad thing for the government if we were to be sent back home, after some of us have come great distances, without having discussed many of the questions in which our people are interested.

I am not at all sure about the rules, but I notice that item No. 2 on the order paper for to-day, under Government Orders, says, "House again in committee of supply." I believe the Prime Minister could move accordingly, make his statement, and then those of us who wish to speak would have an opportunity of doing so. Otherwise this item on the order paper has really no sense. If we are satisfied that we shall have an opportunity of discussing these matters we shall be glad to cooperate and expedite the work which should be done before we leave.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I shall not repeat what has been said already in respect to the visit of the distinguished gentleman from Great Britain, Right Hon. Clement Attlee, and the welcome extended to one whom we have learned to respect, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I simply concur in the remarks that have been made.

As to the procedure to be followed in the present session, it has seemed to me, particularly since the war, that this parliament has gradually become a parliament of the government instead of remaining a parliament of the people. Private members' days have been almost obliterated. I cannot agree with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Hanson) when he says that there is nothing on the order paper. I can see notices of motions to the extent of twenty, but I realize that since private members' days have gone by the board, these resolutions will never be discussed. Some of them cover matters that are most important to Canada in these days. I think I express the view of many private members when I say that if parliament is to sit and adjourn again and again, some time during the year should be given to private members in order that we may discuss matters which perhaps can be presented only by a private member, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) should make the necessary provision to that end.

So far as the present session is concerned, the members of this group have always shown a willingness to cooperate in expediting the business of the house. We are ready to do so again, but we also want to serve the country to the best of our ability.

JOY OIL COMPANY

REPORT OF DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE ON ADVERTISEMENT RESPECTING GASOLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. KARL K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): May I ask the Minister of Munitions and Supply whether he has yet received a report from the Department of Justice with regard to the advertisement which the Joy Oil company had in the press of this country?

Hon. C. D. HOWE (Minister of Munitions and Supply): I have not seen it myself but I shall be glad to make inquiries.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

WAR EXPENDITURES

INQUIRY AS TO CONCURRENCE IN REPORTS OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. G. DIEFENBAKER (Lake Centre): Is it the intention of the Minister of National War Services to move concurrence in interim reports 4, 5, 6 and 7 of the special committee on war expenditures laid on the table of the house this day?

Hon. J. T. THORSON (Minister of National War Services): I do not think there is any intention of making a motion of concurrence.

Mr. E. G. HANSELL (Macleod): In view of the minister's suggestion that there will not be a motion for concurrence in the reports of the committee, may I ask whether an opportunity will be given at any time for the house to discuss those reports?

Mr. THORSON: I think this house will follow the practice at Westminster. I do not recall that at Westminster there is any motion of concurrence in the reports of the various committees. Whether there will be any opportunity to discuss the matters contained in the committee's reports will have to be determined later.

PENSIONS

NON-PENSIONED WIDOWS OF DECEASED SOLDIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): May I ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health whether the committee set up last session to consider pensions for non-pensioned widows of deceased soldiers has made a report, and, if so, when it will be tabled?

Hon. IAN A. MACKENZIE (Minister of Pensions and National Health): The only report was the one presented by the committee of this house on June 13 last. That report is now before the house, and I shall be glad before the session ends to make a statement with reference to the action taken by the government.

QUESTION OF BONUS TO PENSIONS OF SOLDIERS OF THE GREAT WAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. MacNICOL (Davenport): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether the government has considered granting a bonus to the pensions of soldiers of the great war?

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): A great deal of consideration has been given to a large number of problems allied to that which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, but I am not in a position to make any statement with reference to it.

LABOUR DISPUTES

MCKINNON INDUSTRIES STRIKE AND CAPE BRETON COAL MINERS SLOW-DOWN STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. KARL K. HOMUTH (Waterloo South): Is it the intention of the Minister of Labour to give the house during the present session reports on the McKinnon Industries strike and the slow-down strike of coal miners in Nova Scotia?

Hon. N. A. McLARTY (Minister of Labour): I think as the business of the house progresses a statement can be given if desired in connection with both these matters.

THE WAR

REVIEW OF INTERNATIONAL SITUATION SINCE JUNE 14, 1941

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the review of the war which I gave to the house just before its adjournment on June 14 last, I sought to impress upon hon. members that it was inevitable that the existing conflict between the forces of aggression and the defenders of freedom would continue to spread from nation to nation, from ocean to ocean, and from continent to continent. Since the middle of June, the war has grown in intensity and extent. Threats have become realities; prophecies have been fulfilled, and fears have been turned into terrors.

The period of the parliamentary adjournment witnessed a vast expansion of the area of conflict in Europe; continuous, though desultory, fighting in north Africa; increasing tension and uncertainty over vast areas in Asia. In all the countries of north and south America, there has been growing concern as to the consequences of the struggle, immediate and remote, to themselves.

Two years of continuous aggression by Germany have made increasingly clear not only her pattern of aggression and the aim of her successive conquests, but, above all, the might of her military power. The organized strength and size of Germany's war machine is the all-important military factor in the world to-day. No doubt remains that world conquest is Germany's aim; there is equally no doubt her method of world conquest is intended to follow successive stages of military, economic and political control. All peoples are beginning to perceive that behind the intrigues, the deceptions, and the horrors of nazi Germany and the revolting brutality of her methods of warfare, will be found plans and designs progressively developed from those which inspired and guided Prussian militarism under Bismarck and Wilhelm II. The war machine with which the forces of freedom are faced to-day is not only vaster in extent than anything hitherto conceived, but its sources of power are more deeply and firmly rooted.

Every conceivable means by which freedom can be crushed is to-day being employed by nazi Germany. We may expect that for some time yet her might will continue its sway, and violence and bloodshed on a growing scale be a part of the human lot. This is an appalling prospect. Until its ghastly potentialities are squarely faced in all quarters of the globe, the sufferings of humanity may be expected to increase.

Since our adjournment, the outstanding development has been, of course, the Russian campaign. It is scarcely possible to believe, but it is nevertheless true, that when we adjourned no one in authority could say whether, before we met again, Russia would be fighting at the side of Germany, or would be attacked by Germany, or whether her ultimate plans and intentions would continue to remain obscure. The real attitude of Russia to the war had been obscure ever since August, 1939, when she signed the non-aggression pact with nazi Germany. That agreement made it appear that Russia had become an ally of the aggressor nations. Up to the moment of the attack it was, I think, generally believed that war would not come between Germany and Russia. It seemed more probable that Russia would yield to German pressure, to an extent sufficient to afford Germany some accommodation, and at the same time enable Russia, for a still longer period, to remain out of the war altogether.

The fact that Hitler attacked Russia when he did, and as he did, may yet turn out to be the most important event of the whole war. To form an estimate of the significance of its consequences for other peoples and countries, we need only ask ourselves what the situation would be to-day had Hitler turned the might of nazi Germany's power elsewhere than upon the Soviet Union! I will not ask what the present situation might have been if the power which Russia has so magnificently exhibited in resisting Germany had, instead been joined with German power in attack upon Britain and British interests throughout the world. We must indeed be profoundly grateful to the Providence which has spared the British commonwealth such an ordeal. But we should, I think, also look beneath the surface of Russian resistance into the heart of the Russian peasant. From him we may learn that nothing is quite so precious as the freedom of one's own homeland. In the Russian resistance and all that it signifies, we find the surest ground for belief in the ultimate triumph of the forces of freedom.

I am not in a position to answer the question: Why did Hitler attack Russia when and as he did? I am prepared, however, to suggest three reasons. Each in itself might be a sufficient reason. All three, taken in combination, afford, I believe, the true answer.

Hitler attacked Russia, first of all, for the same reason that he invaded other neutral countries of Europe, as a stage in Germany's march toward world conquest. The conquest of Russia would, he knew, bring the whole of Europe under his control.

Secondly, Hitler believed it would prove in the end to be the quickest and surest way to gain his larger objective of destroying the British empire. In the face of British resistance and American aid to the democratic powers, he had come to see that the conflict would be much longer and harder than he had anticipated. He recognized that fresh sources of supply were an essential means to any decisive victory. He feared without them the war might end only with the exhaustion of the civil populations and the armed forces of both sides alike.

A third reason—which I am sure was as powerful as either of the others—was that Hitler himself mistrusted Russia. He had every reason to believe that Russia could never be really friendly to a Hitlerite Germany. He no doubt expected that Russia, following tactics similar to his own, and those employed by his Italian partner, would continue to wait, while he pressed his campaign elsewhere, watching for the hour at which nazi Germany might become most vulnerable. In the hour of decisive conflict with the democracies Hitler did not wish to risk an attack from behind. His fear was the long-standing German fear of a war on two fronts. Hitler's success in exploiting hostility to Russian communism in his own rise to power, and as the key to his close association with Italy and Japan, forced him to recognize that, whatever the advantage to nazi Germany and the convenience to Russia of the nazi-soviet pact, at the time it was made, there could be no enduring good-will between forces so traditionally hostile and so diametrically opposed. He had every reason to expect that, before the end, the conflict would return to the place where he himself began it. He probably never doubted that at some stage the issue would be fought out between the Russian proletariat and the war lords of Germany.

It is clear that Hitler miscalculated the probable duration of the Russian campaign and the military strength and skill, as well as the patriotism, of the Russian people. He mistook, also, the effect of years of nazi and fascist propaganda. He may have expected a revolt behind the Russian lines; he met instead a united people prepared for any sacrifice. There is no doubt that the solidarity of opinion in Great Britain, in the dominions, in the United States, and in fact throughout all free lands, which followed the nazi attack upon Russia, was as much a surprise as it was a disappointment to Hitler and his accomplices.

It was on June 22—a Sunday morning—that Hitler launched his attack. Seldom has a situation arisen where there was more need for an immediate interpretation of its significance and implications. The remarkable fact is that, without prior consultation, the same interpretation was given, in almost identical terms, in all parts of the British commonwealth and in the United States; and that, regardless of considerations of race or religion, the view expressed was much the same. It was immediately recognized that nazi Germany had again broken the peace, and again broken her own pledged word. Germany was plainly and clearly the aggressor. It was recognized that the nazi attack on soviet Russia was not a crusade against any Red menace but a new phase of the nazi attack on all the democracies.

This interpretation was the one set forth in the statement I issued, in the name of our government, on the afternoon of the day on which Russia was attacked. I stressed the fact that Germany, and not Russia, was the threat to freedom and peace; that every force fighting Hitler was fighting, whether consciously or unconsciously, for the preservation of Christian civilization; that every power which engaged our enemy advanced our cause. I pointed out that the German attack removed all shadow of doubt concerning Hitler's purpose; that it constituted a fresh call to arms throughout the British commonwealth. I pointed out that Hitler's agreement with Russia had been broken with the same perfidious cynicism with which it had been sealed; that its making and its breaking had but one object—to eliminate danger in the east in order that there might be a concentration of force against Britain and the west. I emphasized that, therefore, it was not a time to debate differences of view or to relax effort, but rather a time for strengthened unity of opinion, and for still greater effort. That view has been everywhere accepted throughout our country. How true it has proved to be, that every day Russian resistance has held up the German advance has been a day contributed to the cause of freedom, and the growing power of the British commonwealth and the United States!

I shall not attempt to outline the Russian campaign or to predict its outcome. For over four months hostilities have continued on a long front stretching from the Arctic shore to the Crimea on the Black sea. There, notwithstanding the might of the German onslaught, a front still remains. The front line of defence runs through the rivers and plains of Russia. Fighting has been concentrated in three main sectors: in the north around Leningrad, which at the moment is in a virtual stage of siege; in the centre toward Moscow, in which area there has been continuous heavy fighting with enormous casualties in both men and materials; and in the south where strong German forces have already penetrated a long distance into the Ukraine. Here Germany has already captured many of the key centres beyond the Dnieper river where much of the Russian heavy industry is concentrated. After a stout defence of many weeks the Black sea port of Odessa has been evacuated. German hostilities have been extended into the Crimea. The most serious strategic threat to successful Russian resistance is in this southern sector. The way appears to be opening for further penetration southwesterly into the Caucasus; one of the few areas in which Russia and Britain have direct communications by land and sea.

Russia, the largest European nation, is fighting every inch of the way. Never in human history has battle, reckoned in machines and men together, been waged on such a scale. Never have casualties been heavier. Only rarely, I believe, has the spontaneous sympathy of people throughout the world been so aroused.

It is not surprising that in so flagrant a case of aggression promises of support for Russia should have been forthcoming without delay. Britain, hard pressed though she is, took immediate steps to furnish military and economic aid. The government of the United States pledged all practical economic assistance. As an outcome of the Atlantic conference between President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, the governments of Britain and the United States undertook to send a joint mission to Russia to plan and organize the largest possible measure of assistance. In their recent conferences, the mission speedily reached agreement with the Russian government under which assistance in growing volume is already being provided.

The Canadian government kept in close touch with the activities of the Beaverbrook-Harriman mission both before and during its visit to Moscow. In consequence the members of the mission were in a position to count upon tangible support from Canada in the fulfilment of the undertakings given to the soviet government. It is not possible for me at this time to give details of the character or the extent of Canadian aid to Russia or of the precise arrangements being made with the governments of the United Kingdom and the United States with whom Canada is cooperating in sending the aid. In a general way the programme of aid includes war supplies, food, medical supplies and transport equipment.

The Russian campaign was preceded, as hon. members will recall, by the sweep of the nazi forces through the Balkan states and by the invasion and conquest of Greece. In a general way, on either side of the Mediterranean, at Gibraltar, along the north African coast, through Egypt, and to the Suez, the relative positions of the opposing forces have remained, throughout the summer months and since, much what they were at the time of the conquest of Greece. There has been continuous fighting on and over the waters of the Mediterranean, but all this, and much else, has been largely overshadowed by the immensity of the conflict in Russia.

A plane, flying from Gibraltar throughout the length of the Mediterranean, and pursuing its flight in an easterly direction to northern India, would fly in practically a straight line across Syria, Iraq, Iran, and Afghanistan. These countries are all immediately to the south of either Turkey or Russia. Geography is in itself sufficient to disclose how important, for strategic reasons, their position is.

There are, however, economic as well as geographical considerations which make the political disposition of each of these countries a matter of first importance. In Iraq and Iran lie the vast fields which supply much of the oil required by Britain for military as well as industrial purposes. For these countries to become hostile, or to pass into the hand of the enemy, might well prove a major disaster. When it is realized that the Ukraine and the Caucasus, because of their economic resources, are the possessions which above all Germany hopes to wrest from Russia, it will be seen how important to Russia and Britain alike is the retention of these areas in friendly hands.

As was to have been expected, there were evidence of enemy intrigue and penetration throughout Syria, Iraq, Iran and Afghanistan, even before the Russian campaign commenced. Secret agents were at work in each of them, fostering discontent and making alliances calculated to serve German interests. To preserve order, and to prevent her own position from being undermined, the British government has been obliged to take quick and decisive action in all these countries.

Trouble came first in Iraq. Open revolt was followed by the establishment of a rebel government friendly to the axis. In accordance with their treaty rights British forces intervened and suppressed the revolt. The legitimate government was restored.

It will be recalled that, during the campaign in May which ended in the crushing of the axis-inspired revolt in Iraq, the nazis were permitted to use the air fields of the French mandates of Syria and Lebanon in order to facilitate the sending of aid to the Iraqi rebels. This axis penetration of Syria constituted a grave threat to the whole allied position in the eastern Mediterranean.

It was accordingly decided that a nazi occupation of this vital strategic area must be forestalled. On June 9 the British and Free French forces invaded the mandated territory. The same day, General Catroux, the leader of the Free French forces in the middle east, proclaimed the independence of Syria and Lebanon. Although the allied invasion was resisted by the French troops in Syria, the government at Vichy refrained from describing the hostilities as actual warfare. An open breach between Britain and France was thus averted. The allied occupation was completed a month later and an armistice arranged, which was ratified by the government at Vichy on July 15.

Since the allied occupation of Syria and Lebanon the most significant development in the middle east has been the intervention by Britain and soviet Russia in Iran. During August, both the British and Russian governments became increasingly apprehensive of the effects of a German "tourist" invasion of that country. Diplomatic action at the Iranian capital had no effect, consequently, on August 25, British and soviet forces entered Iran to protect the oil fields and safeguard communications. They met little resistance, and after four days of desultory fighting the Iranian forces were ordered by their government to cease all resistance. By September 10 a settlement had been reached by which the government of Iran agreed to turn over the axis nationals in that country to the allies, and to expel the enemy legations.

More recently, the government of Afghanistan has agreed, in response to allied diplomatic representations, to expel the axis nationals.

In all four countries Britain has made it perfectly clear that in no way has she in view the expansion of her own empire by the acquisition of additional territories. Assurances have been given that, at the close of war, the fullest measure of restoration of the sovereignties of these countries will be made.

The strategic importance of safeguarding communications between the British and Russian forces in the middle east can hardly be overestimated. Prompt action is being taken to improve transport facilities on the Iranian railways. In this vital task Canada has undertaken to share.

Now a word as to the far east. As with the countries bordering on the waters of the Mediterranean, so with the Asiatic countries bordering on the waters of the western Pacific, and with the far east generally, the situation has remained, until quite recently, pretty much what it was before the beginning of the Russian campaign. The effect of the latter, however, has been greatly to intensify the tension which previously existed, and which arose from the political and military activities of Japan and her claims to the establishment of a "new order" in east Asia. The Japanese leaders have not disguised the fact that Japan was giving consideration to the further use of force to expand her influence in this area. At the same time Japan has clearly been uneasy at the prospect of taking military initiative in the face of the firm attitude displayed by the United States, Britain and the Netherlands Indies.

At the moment when parliament adjourned, trade negotiations between Japan and the Netherlands Indies had broken down. A Japanese drive southwards seemed imminent. Before action came, the nazis attacked soviet Russia. There is no longer any doubt that the nazi attack was a complete surprise to the Japanese government and to the Japanese people. These soviet-Japanese pacts of non-aggression had been meant by the Japanese to be the counterpart in Asia of the nazi-soviet pact in Europe. Both agreements were being made use of as evidence on the part of Germany and Japan of their desire to limit the arena of hostilities. By Germany and Japan alike they were doubtless intended to secure the neutrality of Russia in a way which would free their own hands in any action which might be taken by either or both of them against the anti-axis powers. Germany's perfidious act seemed to require, if the axis front was to be maintained, a similar volte-face on the part of Japan. This necessary change of front found its expression, not immediately, but by the middle of July, in a change of government in Japan. Mr. Matsuoka, who as foreign minister of Japan had negotiated the Japanese-soviet pact, was not included in the new government. His exclusion was interpreted generally as a sign that the neutrality pact with Russia would, sooner or later, be repudiated. Since that moment serious consideration has been given the possibility of a northward attack on Siberia.

Until Germany's invasion of Russia, Japan's objective appeared to be the expansion, by force, of her "co-prosperity sphere" towards the south.

The first, and indeed the only actual expansion of Japanese military activity, since the adjournment, has been into French Indo-China. Late in July the Japanese government extended the penetration of that colony, which began in the autumn of 1940. This penetration was facilitated by the attitude of Vichy, under German duress. The result is a virtual Japanese military occupation of Indo-China and Japanese possession of its important naval bases. There were signs that Japan intended to continue her military advance into Thailand, and that she was restrained only by the formidable economic measures taken by the United States, Britain, Canada, the other nations of the commonwealth, and the Netherlands Indies. The promptness and firmness of the steps taken by the democratic powers were clearly a rude shock to Japan.

On July 25, Mr. Eden announced in the British House of Commons that defensive measures had been taken in Malaya. Late that evening President Roosevelt issued an order "freezing" all Japanese assets in the United States. Parallel action was taken by the United Kingdom and by this country on July 26, and the commercial treaties between Japan and Britain and Japan and Canada were denounced.

On July 28 the Netherlands East Indies cut off Japan's oil supply from those islands. Two days later Mr. Eden warned Japan to "reflect", while there was still time, on the effect of her foreign policy. At the same time Britain excluded Japanese shipping from her coaling stations throughout the empire and from the inter-empire carrying trade. On August 1 President Roosevelt ordered an embargo on the shipment of aviation gasoline and oils to points outside the western hemisphere, the British empire, and unoccupied territories of nations resisting aggression. The result of these measures has been a virtual cessation of Japanese sea-borne commerce.

Despite frequent statements that Japan must defend her economy by proceeding with the establishment of her Asiatic "co-prosperity sphere", tension in the far east relaxed in August and September. The anniversary of Japan's adherence to the axis, September 27, passed quietly. The celebrations in Tokyo were subdued in character.

Towards the middle of October tension once more began to increase rapidly in the far east. The growing tension was again reflected in a change of government in Japan, and the formation of a new cabinet headed by General Tojo. The new ministry represents the strongly anti-Russian tendencies among extreme militarists. General Tojo himself, while holding political office, remains on active service. He is minister of war, and has also under his direction the home ministry, which controls the extensive police services. It would appear that, for the present at least, political power in the cabinet has passed more firmly into the hands of extreme militarists than has been the case at any time in recent years.

It will be seen that the developments of the past four months have now brought matters to a point where a very definite conflict of interest has developed between Japan, as the axis partner of Germany and Italy on the one side, and the United States, Britain and Russia on the other. The critical character of the far eastern situation, occasioned by the aggressive designs of Japan, was clearly indicated by Mr. Churchill in his broadcast to the world on August 24. After referring to the Japanese war on China, the British Prime Minister said:

> Now they stretch their grasping hand into the southern seas of China. They snatch Indo-China from the wretched Vichy French. They menace by their movements Siam. They menace Singapore, the British link with Australasia, and they menace the Philippine islands under the protection of the United States. It is certain that this has got to stop.
> Every effort will be made to secure a peaceful settlement.
> The United States are labouring with infinite patience to arrive at a fair and amicable settlement which will give Japan the utmost reassurance for her legitimate interests.
> We earnestly hope that these negotiations will succeed. But this I must say, that if these hopes should fail we shall of course range ourselves unhesitatingly at the side of the United States.

The Japanese occupation of Indo-China has created two menacing threats: the first, a possible encirclement of southern China, through the occupation of Thailand and an attempt to cut the Burma road; the second, an attack on the Netherlands East Indies from the bases in southern Indo-China. Whether aggression, if it takes the form of open conflict, will be directed toward the north against Russia, or in a southerly direction toward Thailand and the Dutch East Indies or in both directions simultaneously, cannot at the moment be foretold. It is important, however, that both eventualities should be kept in mind.

A word now as to China. No reference to the situation in the orient would be complete unless it recalled the fact that China is now in her fifth year of unbroken war against aggression. If any nation ever fought against an evil which it had done nothing to deserve, that nation is China. The sufferings of her patient people are as great as any ever visited upon any country. The uncomplaining courage of the Chinese has not been surpassed in the annals of human resistance. Like the Russian peasants and workers who within the last few months have been so mercilessly slaughtered, the Chinese continue to die in staggering numbers in defence of their humble habitations and the good earth which for countless generations has given to the ancestors they revere and to themselves their scanty sustenance. The Chinese ambassador in London, speaking recently to the people of Great Britain, used words which go far to make clear the spiritual foundations as well as the underlying unity of the cause of the democracies:

"China's resistance," said Dr. Wellington Koo, "is sustained by her faith in the ultimate triumph of good over evil. In the Chinese view violence and aggression are a curse to humanity and contrary to the will of providence as manifested in the gospel of love, good-will and friendliness which should rule amongst nations as amongst governments. The Japanese invasion is a great wrong, and China's defence is a righteous cause which cannot fail to prevail in the end. And the more energetically this cause is defended the sooner will it be able to vindicate law and order, liberty and justice, peace and security."

Now I come to a reference to the United States. The survey I have given of warfare, actual and potential, as it has spread in the course of two years throughout Europe, Asia and Africa, should be sufficient to disclose its menace to every other portion of the globe. It is not surprising, therefore, that the world-encircling danger, which already has engulfed the eastern hemisphere, should have increasingly aroused the peoples of North and South America to an awareness of the encompassing threat to the security of the western hemisphere.

The sweep of the nazi hordes to the waters of the Mediterranean; the German penetration of north Africa; the prostrate condition of the once free nations of Europe, emphasized to-day by horrors and atrocities too ghastly to recount; the present struggle of titanic forces in Russia; the continuous siege of Britain by sea and air; the unconcealed nazi designs to obtain bases which would bridge the Atlantic in the north via Iceland, Greenland and Newfoundland, and on the south, from the northwestern coast of Africa to the most eastern coast of South America via the Cape Verde islands and the Azores; the combined threat of Germany and Japan to the whole vast regions of Asia; the movements of Japanese fleets and armies along the whole western Pacific shores from Thailand and Malaya to the waters that divide Siberia from Alaska; the threats to Singapore and the Philippines, to the Netherlands Indies and Australasia;—all these developments, and much else, have combined to destroy the myth of American isolation.

The ever-increasing dangers have brought opinion in the United States to the point where even a nominal maintenance of official neutrality has long since ceased to be a part of national policy. The idea of neutrality implies two nations at war and a third in friendship with both. Officially, such a position seemed possible in the fall of 1939. Even to appearances, it has long since ceased to be countenanced. Instead, the whole trend of American opinion and official decision has been to regard neutrality as a mask and to throw it off altogether.

The aggressor nations, by their acts, have brought down upon their own heads the wrath of the United States. The methods by which nazi Germany has invaded the several countries of Europe; has manifested her intention to dominate on sea, as well as on land; and has, in collaboration with Italy and Japan, demonstrated her ambitions of world conquest —all of these, in corresponding sequence, have provoked the United States to increasingly vigorous protests and acts of self-defence.

It will be recalled that on May 27, the President of the United States proclaimed a state of unlimited emergency. On June 14, the day on which our parliament adjourned, German and Italian assets in the United States were "frozen." Two days later the German consulates were ordered to close, and shortly afterwards the Italian consulates were closed. Three days following Hitler's attack upon Russia, United States assistance, which previously had gone mainly to Britain and China, was offered also to Russia. On July 7, to forestall German attack, United States armed forces were stationed in Iceland. Two days following July 23, on which date Japan again intervened in Indo-China, Japanese assets in the United States were "frozen," and, within a week, an embargo was placed by the United States on the export of aviation gasoline.

In August came the historic meeting at sea between President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill. In the middle of August, the president joined Mr. Churchill in proposing a three-power conference with Russia. Three days later, the American ferry service for combat planes to the middle east was announced. On September 4, the United States destroyer Greer was attacked by a submarine. The day following, the president ordered the United States fleet to "eliminate" the submarine if possible. By the middle of the month, further American ships having meanwhile been sunk, a "shoot first" order went into effect. About the same time, it was disclosed that convoys had been included in the defence pattern of the United States. In mid-September the president asked congress to make a second huge appropriation for the lend-lease programme. A bill was signed by the president on Tuesday last, thereby bringing to a total of nearly thirteen billions of dollars the amount voted for lend-lease purposes.

At the end of September the joint meeting of Britain, the United States and Russia was held in Moscow, and agreement reached on joint United States-United Kingdom assistance to Russia.

On the 9th of October the president asked congress to permit the arming of American merchant vessels. The House of Representatives has already voted to amend that part of the neutrality act which previously prevented such a course.

The removal of the ban on sending American vessels into belligerent ports, or so-called combat zones, has become another immediate object of American policy.

These facts, in their cumulative effect, serve to show how rapidly the mirage of isolation has been disappearing, and how completely the appreciation of the interdependence of free peoples has grown in the minds of all but a small minority.

The position of the United States in the matter of neutrality could not have been more clearly set forth than it was in the formal statement presented by Mr. Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, before the foreign affairs committee of the House of Representatives at Washington on October the 13th. The following were Mr. Knox's words:

> As a matter of simple truth and realism, from the outset of this war, or at least from the time when we began to thoroughly understand what the war was all about, we have never been neutral. . . . We have been entirely unneutral, vigorously and actively supporting one side and contributing in many ways to the defeat of the other side. . . . We neither think nor act neutral in the present war. It is only honest to make our laws consistent with our actions.

The American official view as to what the war is all about was set forth with equal frankness by Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, who said:

> The blunt truth is that the world is steadily being dragged downward and backward by the mightiest movement of conquest ever attempted in all history.

The significance of Britain and the British fleet to the security of the United States was stressed by Mr. Henry L. Stimson, Secretary of State for War, in the following unequivocal words:

> The chief hope of defeating Hitler is by preserving the safety of the British isles, and the existence of the British fleet. This fleet for many years has been engaged in protecting the freedom of the seas upon which our own safety and welfare also depend.

No statements describing the position of the United States could, however, be more graphic or emphatic than those which the president himself has used in his recent public utterances. In his message to congress on the revision of the United States neutrality law, delivered on October 9, the president said:

> We know now that Hitler recognizes no limitation of any zone of combat in any part of the seven seas. He has struck at our ships and at the lives of our sailors within the waters of the western hemisphere. Determined as he is to gain domination of the entire world, he considers the entire world his own battlefield. . . .
> We will not let Hitler prescribe the waters of the world on which our ships may travel. The American flag is not going to be driven from the seas either by his submarines, his aeroplanes, or his threats. . . .
> We intend to maintain the policy of protecting the freedom of the seas against domination by any foreign power which has become crazed with a desire to control the world. We shall do so with all our strength and all our heart and all our mind.

A further statement of United States policy and its practical enforcement was set forth in no uncertain terms in the president's navy day address to the American people, delivered as recently as October 27:

> Very simply and very bluntly—
> Said the president.
> —we are pledged to pull our own oar in the destruction of Hitlerism.

Remarking that it was the nation's will that America should deliver vital arms and supplies, and that, in open defiance of that will, American ships had been sunk and American sailors killed, Mr. Roosevelt added: "We do not propose to take this lying down."

> Our American merchant ships—
> Said the president.
> —must be armed to defend themselves against the rattlesnakes of the sea. Our American merchant ships must be free to carry our American goods into the harbours of our friends. Our merchant ships must be protected by our American navy.

"The navy," the president said, "has orders to shoot and the order stands." "Shooting has started," were the words with which the president began this address. He concluded by saying: "To-day, in the face of this newest and greatest challenge, we Americans have cleared our decks and taken our battle stations."

These words may be taken as describing, as effectively as words can, the present position of the United States.

I have, from the very beginning of the war, in parliament and out of parliament, stressed two things above all others; first, the world aspect of the danger; and second, the moral character of the issue.

I have consistently maintained that world domination was Germany's aim; that she hoped to achieve that aim through the might of her own power, and the ambitions of her axis partners. I have maintained with equal consistency that the issue fundamentally was a moral one, and that the conflict was one between a pagan conception of a world order, which ignores the individual and the value of all contractual relations, and a Christian conception of a world order which has regard alike for the sacredness of human personality and of the pledged word in all the relationships of life. In other words, the conflict is one between a society which bases its relationship on the doctrine of Right, and a society in which human relationships are based on the doctrine of Might; it is a struggle which will decide whether mankind is to become increasingly free or revert to a condition of existence which is worse than slavery.

It has taken the past two years for most countries to come to see the all-encompassing aspect of the conflict. Most of the neutral nations of Europe did not begin to see it until their own freedom was gone. Other parts of the world have come to fear it only as encroaching dangers have drawn near to their own shores. What all have still to learn is that to-day no nation is sufficient unto itself, no continent and no hemisphere great enough, in its own strength, to maintain its own freedom. A recognition of interdependence and combined action based thereon is as necessary, indeed, it is infinitely more necessary to the democracies of the world if they are to maintain their freedom, than it is to the axis powers in the furtherance of their acts of aggression.

Of all developments in the growing substance of cooperation among nations, the most heartening has been the deepening interdependence of the British commonwealth and the United States. That interdependence found noble expression in the joint declaration of August last which was made public after the historic meeting at sea between Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt. The conference in itself was evidence of the control of the seas which the combined fleets of Britain and the United States continue to possess. The joint declaration is an authoritative statement by the two great powers represented at the Atlantic conference of principles in international relations which they are agreed should govern the post-war world. At a meeting in London on September 24, formal adherence to these principles was given on behalf of the Allied powers and governments in exile.

The question it seems to me is no longer one mainly of assisting Russia, or assisting China, or assisting Britain, to save those countries from the might of the aggressor, necessary as this certainly is. Nor is it a question of helping to restore freedom to countries which have lost their freedom, essential as this also is. Nor is it a matter primarily of defending ourselves from attack, or of what shall be the precise scope of the post-war order. It has now reached the point of being a matter of saving freedom itself, and of saving the world from a condition of universal anarchy and chaos.

I have said that it has taken the past two years for most of the countries to come to see the all-encompassing aspect of the conflict. I doubt if any country has, as yet, come to see the undermining character of nazi doctrine and practice, or how completely subversive it is of Christian belief and humanitarian ideals, and how ruthlessly it seeks to destroy the precepts and standards of conduct based thereon. It is a menace alike to men's minds and souls, for it seeks to enslave both. It aims to destroy all true religion. It would substitute a materialistic interpretation of life for a spiritual one, brutality for charity, despair for faith, the worship of Hitler for the worship of God. All this, as well as the conquest of their lands, it seeks to impose by force upon the peoples whom it robs of their freedom. One has only to look at what the new order of nazi Germany is, and how it has been carried out in Germany itself, to see how it would be imposed by nazi tyrants upon their subject peoples. Even now, it demands one hundred innocent lives for the life of a single nazi.

Whether we speak in terms of nations or of individuals, we can no longer think of freedom as related solely to the bodies or the possessions of men. The only freedom worthy of the name is freedom of the mind and of the soul. We can no longer afford to think of our own freedom and the freedom of others as two things which may be considered apart from one another. We are all members one of another. The freedom of all is bound up in the lives of all. The issue is indeed a moral one, and it is a moral issue of the profoundest concern, not only to every nation but to every individual as well. The cause is indeed the highest which it has ever been given to man to defend.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I am sure we have all listened with great interest to the Prime Minister's review of international affairs for the last three months or more. In order that the discussion may be regularized and in accordance with the suggestion which he made at an earlier stage of the proceedings, perhaps he will be good enough to move the adjournment of the house. This will give us an opportunity of analysing, so far as it may be necessary, the statement which he has just made. We can then have the conference to which he referred a short while ago.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MACKENZIE KING moved the adjournment of the house.

He said: Perhaps I may suggest to my hon. friend and to the leaders of the other parties that if it is convenient to them they meet with me immediately. We could then plan the procedure for to-morrow and the subsequent days of the session.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

Tuesday, November 4, 1941.

The house met at three o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN PRESENTATION OF STATEMENTS ON CANADA'S WAR EFFORT AND DISCUSSION THEREON

Right Hon. Mr. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I might perhaps report to the house the outcome of the conference which was held yesterday afternoon between the leader of the opposition, the acting leaders of the two other parties in the house and myself with regard to a suggested procedure to facilitate the business of this concluding part of the session.

As the house is aware, it is the privilege of the prime minister on the orders of the day being called when no question is before the chair to make a statement to the house on a matter of policy or on any important matter. A similar opportunity is extended by courtesy to the hon. member who is the official leader of the opposition. Yesterday I made a statement to the house reviewing the international situation. It did not purport and was not intended to go further than that. To-day the leader of the opposition desires to make a statement in regard to matters of policy or other matters of general concern and interest. A similar privilege is not, under our rules, accorded to leaders of groups. But if the house is agreeable to having its sitting continued in committee of the whole so as to allow greater freedom of discussion, an arrangement might easily be made whereby, by grant of special permission by unanimous consent, following the leader of the opposition, the leaders of the two groups, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation and the Social Credit or New Democracy groups, would have the opportunity of also making statements of a like character. I might say we were all of the opinion that this arrangement would be the best. The house would continue to sit in committee of the whole, and the ministers in turn would make their statements on the progress of Canada's war effort. This procedure, if acceptable to the house, would enable hon. members to ask questions and would permit as full discussion as the house might wish in a way that would not be possible with the Speaker in the chair.

In order to make the discussion itself as relevant as possible it is thought that it would be best to have the ministers make their statements one after the other until matters of interest with respect to the war effort of the administration during the period of adjournment have been stated to the house more or less in their entirety. Hon. members would then have before them information which otherwise they might be obliged to solicit by means of question and answer. When the statements have been presented it is proposed that we then begin such discussion as may be desired upon the first statement, and, after discussion upon the matters to which it relates, proceed to the other statements in such order as may seem most advisable. For example, this afternoon, if the house agrees to the procedure proposed, the leader of the opposition, who will speak upon the orders of the day with the Speaker in the chair, will be followed in committee of the whole by the acting leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party, and he will be followed by the acting leader of the New Democracy party. On the government side it is proposed to have the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) make a statement, to be followed possibly by the Minister of National War Services (Mr. Thorson). The government would wish to have the ministers of defence speak at a time which will enable the three ministers to speak as nearly as may be possible in consecutive order. As hon. members are aware, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) returned to Ottawa only last night; we would wish to have defence matters discussed together. This arrangement would afford the minister at least some opportunity to prepare himself.

If these suggestions are acceptable to the house, after the leader of the opposition has made his statement, I shall move that the Speaker leave the chair and will suggest that the sitting be continued in committee of the whole with the Deputy Speaker in the chair.

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): The statement just made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) I think substantially covers the arrangement made yesterday afternoon. It will be recognized that the observance of this arrangement depends almost entirely upon consent; I do not see how we can go on at all unless we come to some agreement. Therefore, while all the details of the matter are not exactly to my liking, I hope the house will concur in what the Prime Minister has suggested.

ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT AS TO PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Before the next order of business is called may I ask the Prime Minister to give to the house and the country, to-day if possible, a brief statement on the present position of the St. Lawrence waterway proposal. If he cannot give that statement to-day, will he be good enough to do so to-morrow?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): I should prefer to make the statement to-morrow. My understanding at the moment is that the agreement has not yet been reported out of committee in Washington, and that therefore it is impossible to say just when or if the agreement itself will be passed. However, I shall make inquiries between now and to-morrow and give the house a further statement then.

PRIVILEGE—MR. ROY

STATEMENT OF MEMBER FOR GASPE AS TO HIS CHANGE OF SEAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. ROY (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in order to make a statement with regard to my change of seat in this house. I am sure the house will be interested to know why I intend to follow hereafter an independent course in this parliament.

A political party is usually composed of men with the same principles, and among whom there is some friendship or brotherly spirit. The Liberal-Conservative party founded by the MacNab-Morin coalition in 1854 was a real partnership composed of some Quebec moderate Liberals and Conservatives, who wished to wipe out old dissensions and form, with Ontario high Tories and moderate Liberals, a party with Conservative tendencies. Mutual respect was at the base of this union of different groups, and as long as MacNab and Macdonald were at the helm the aims and desiderata of French Canadians were not ignored when the party's policies were considered. Friction sometimes occurred, as I am sure it now occurs in the Liberal party, but we managed to preserve mutual respect and to keep a reasonable share in the appointments of high officers in the civil service and in the building of such public works as were required for the trade and commerce of the dominion.

The bonne entente between the two main elements of the Liberal-Conservative party gradually deteriorated. As time went on, French Canadian influence dwindled in the party. This was largely due to the demise of Sir John A. Macdonald. The Liberal party was strongly organized, and it manœuvred the Conservative party into becoming an English Canadian party in which French Canadian sympathy was forcibly thrown into the background. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) cleverly followed Sir Wilfrid's tactics, and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) is using the Minister of Justice for all he is worth. Sir Robert Borden and Mr. Meighen were never able to control the element which is bent on wrecking our efforts to make Canada a country in which three million French Canadians will be considered. Mr. Bennett, now Lord Bennett, was the man who said we ought to be pleased with the concessions granted to us by English speaking Canadians. He went back on the principles of the party which had put him in power, and did more than all the Liberals put together to shake public confidence in political conservatism.

Any French Canadian member of this house who has mixed with the Conservative party as it now exists must realize that he is not a member of their political family. He is at best a tolerated stranger, accepted from necessity and looked at with a certain degree of curiosity. In the opinion of Conservative members he is and always will be a poor relation. His views of Canada are not their views; his ambition for more French Canadian influence in our public life is not their ambition. They are firm in the opinion that we French Canadians are a source of trouble in their endeavours to make Canada an American England. There is no friendship or sympathy between them and us. I may add, however, that a good proportion of English speaking Canadians, particularly the young generation, show us more sympathy, because they have a real sense of true Canadianism.

I have decided to leave them, and I did not do so hastily. For the past few months I have been in consultation with people in Quebec who all expressed the opinion that it is useless for the province of Quebec to make any further attempts to work hand in hand with the Conservative party. Warm sympathy, the main element, is lacking. You all remember the story of the man who called upon an acquaintance. He was first told that the man was not at home; he then forced the door but he was received with a heap of abuse. He went a third time, when he was taken by the scruff of the neck and kicked down the verandah. He then said, "Well, I don't think that man wants to see me." Take out the violence and I think you will see there is something like that in the attitude of the Conservative organizers toward Quebec Conservatives.

It is my intention to stand at the next general election as a Canadian desirous of contributing, in my humble capacity, to the progress of the whole dominion without racial or religious prejudice, recognizing the rights of all citizens and fighting against bigotry wherever it is found.

SOLDIERS' DEPENDENTS

QUESTION OF INCREASED ASSISTANCE AND COST OF LIVING BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. G. ROSS (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government if they will consider granting increased assistance to families of enlisted men, consisting of more than two children, and also whether they have given consideration to the granting of a cost of living bonus to the families of enlisted men.

Hon. J. L. ILSLEY (Minister of Finance): Consideration is being given to those matters, but I am not in a position to make any statement on them at the moment.

CANADA'S WAR EFFORT

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU OF INFORMATION IN NEW YORK

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. A. BRUCE (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of having Canada's war effort more widely known in the United States than it is at present, will the Prime Minister tell the house whether it is the government's intention at an early date to establish a Canadian bureau of information in New York?

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter of how best to have Canada's war effort appreciated in the United States is one to which we have been giving full consideration. No final decision has been reached as yet as to the particular method or places in which that aim may best be accomplished. Personally I cannot think of a better means of making Canada's war effort known in the United States and elsewhere than to have our own press give a full appreciation of it. I believe the press of the United States obtain most of their information with respect to Canada's war effort from what appears in our own press. However I do see the necessity of having information from that source supplemented, and the government is giving attention to the best possible methods.

THE WAR

INTERNATIONAL SITUATION SINCE JUNE 14, 1941—CANADA'S WAR EFFORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. R. B. HANSON (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset express to our friend, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) our pleasure at his safe return from the strenuous and perilous trip upon which he embarked some weeks ago. I am sure all hon. members are glad to see him back looking so well. I hope he has not suffered any ill effects from a journey which I found to be somewhat difficult. I shall not say more than that.

Yesterday when the house was discussing the reasons for our being here I took occasion to place on record what was my understanding when we left here in June last. I had assumed as a matter of fact that when we resumed our sittings yesterday we would do so for the purpose of prorogation, and the opening of another session. For reasons which now appear as a matter of record, and which I have not challenged—because either course is satisfactory to me—the decision has been otherwise. I shall not traverse that matter again, further than to say that while it may be difficult to regularize discussion at this stage of the session, without there being any specific proposals before the chair, there should not be the slightest appearance of attempt on anyone's part to choke off discussion or to close this part of the session in an unduly short period of time.

I am not unmindful, however, of the fact that this has already been a long session, not only in point of elapsed time but in point of time actually spent on the floor of the house. Unduly to prolong discussion merely for the sake of exchanging views and not for that of doing business, while it might add to the sum total of our information respecting the state of the country, the government's war effort, international affairs and the like, in my opinion would not be desirable unless we could accomplish something by so doing. I shall not say more on that point.

Yesterday afternoon we listened with much interest to a statement from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mackenzie King) in which he outlined to the country the progress of the war since we adjourned in June last, and reviewed the international situation. He dealt with the position of Russia, and aid to that country. He dealt with the position in the middle east and, quite properly in my opinion, with the increasingly difficult position which has developed in the far east, one which I know must be giving those in authority on this side of the Atlantic, as well as those on the other side, increasing concern. I think it was well for the Prime Minister to do that, because it drew to our attention a situation which is likely at any time to become increasingly menacing. I do not say that in an alarming sense, because I have no information on the subject matter. But I believe each of us realizes the importance of watching as closely as possible the situation which has developed on the Pacific front, if I may so describe it, a development due largely I believe to the change in government in the Japanese empire.

Then the Prime Minister gave us his conclusions. As a delineation of current history and of what has taken place since we last met, it was excellent in tone and style and was a fine portrayal of current events. But I must also say that it left me very cold. I was disappointed. I had hoped, and I believe the country had hoped, that after the Prime Minister's visit to England and after his conference over the week-end with the President of the United States, and after being so fully apprised, as he must be, of the international situation, he would have lifted the veil a little and told the house and the country what this government and our great neighbour propose to do about a situation which by his own account is getting more serious every day.

He warned us that every conceivable means by which freedom can be crushed is to-day being used by Hitler and nazi Germany. I agree. I am glad he gave that warning. And it is timely enough, because even after twenty-seven months of war I fear that Canadians are still too complacent, still not impressed with the dangers of the whole situation, and still sitting remote from the realities of what is occurring in this war-stricken world.

I do not know what more can be done than has been done by members of the government, by public propaganda or by whatever other legitimate means are available, to bring home to the Canadian people a realization of the seriousness of the situation. And yet I feel certain that it has not yet been brought home to them. I wish I could add something to the sum total of knowledge of the people of Canada respecting the seriousness of the situation overseas, and especially in Europe. I shall not say anything about the seriousness of the situation which may confront us from other theatres of possible war.

What the country had expected from the Prime Minister—what I had hoped for, at all events—was some stirring statement of what Canada proposes further to do to meet the menace delineated by him. I had hoped that he would announce proposals for measures designed not only to indicate a recognition of the steadily increasing danger of the situation, but to ensure that every conceivable step would be taken to aid in overcoming it.

It may be that during the course of this short part of the session the Prime Minister and his service ministers will indicate with clarity and with precision what more we should do; and I invite them to do so. But if the Prime Minister will tell the house that because of the necessity for secrecy, especially with respect to one aspect of this menacing situation, it is the view of the government that matters of high policy should not be divulged at this time, then I suggest that a statement to that effect should be made. The Prime Minister should make it clear that matters of high policy to deal with new and threatening menaces are under consideration by the government and will be revealed in due course. But unless some assurance is given I fear that the Prime Minister's message of yesterday will prove to be a great disappointment. I fear that it will be taken as additional evidence of lack of leadership. It must have brought cold comfort, not only to the members of the house but to the country generally.

I do not wish to take up unduly the time of the house; in fact I do not feel that I am capable of making any lengthy or extensive remarks, but I should like to give the house and the country a brief review of the trip which my colleagues and myself made to England in September. May I express to the Prime Minister and those of his cabinet who assisted us in making this journey to England our thanks for their intervention and for making the trip possible. I should like to thank the Minister of National Defence for Air (Mr. Power) for the valuable suggestions which he made to me during a call which I made upon him just prior to going overseas. Last, but not least, may I publicly give recognition to the civility and courtesy which my colleagues and I received at the hands of Mr. Massey, our high commissioner in London, and his charming wife. I think one of the best lunches that we had over there was the one we had at the officers' club, which I think is on Cockspur street, as a guest of Mrs. Massey, when she treated us to good old-fashioned Canadian pork and beans. Mr. Massey found himself perhaps a little restricted because our journey to England had been delayed and he had made other arrangements, but I do want to make this public recognition of his kindness to us while we were overseas.

Through the Canadian headquarters and the good offices of Mr. Massey it was made possible for us to meet all the members of the British cabinet whom we felt we should meet or could meet in the limited time at our disposal. Mr. Massey was good enough to introduce us to the Secretary of State for Dominion Affairs, Lord Cranborne, and from then on we had a succession of interviews with important cabinet ministers, some of which I shall mention and some of which I shall not. We had the high privilege of a most satisfactory interview with the Prime Minister, Mr. Churchill. Without question he is the national hero of the British people. Having listened to him speak in the House of Commons on September 30, I feel certain that he is giving the leadership that the British people require at this time.

We had the good fortune of having an interesting conversation with a former resident of my province, Lord Beaverbrook, the present Minister of Supply. This interview was just on the eve of his departure for Moscow. He told us many interesting things. We had the good fortune to have a conversation lasting more than an hour and a half with Mr. Ernest Bevin, the Minister of Labour. He told us in some detail of the activities of organized labour in Great Britain, and explained the situation which confronted the nation at the time the national government was formed, as well as the situation as it is to-day. I was greatly impressed by the strength of this dynamic gentleman, as well as with the strength of Lord Beaverbrook. The latter seems to get things done with such celerity as actually to astonish the British civil servant.

We had most interesting interviews with the service ministers, if I may use the term which we have developed in Canada, especially with the Secretary of State for War, an outstanding young man who recently joined the ministry and is now in charge of the war office. He has a most realistic idea of the conditions which confront that great nation. He gave us a great deal of information with respect to the British army at or prior to the outbreak of the war, after Dunkirk, and at the present time. We also had the opportunity of an interview with the foreign secretary, Mr. Anthony Eden, and with the three chiefs of staff.

These interviews lasted for nearly a week, and as a result of them we acquired a mass of information. In nearly every case it was distinctly understood that the information imparted should be confidential, and confidential it shall remain. Had it not been so understood, we could not have obtained as clear a picture as we did during the course of the ten or a dozen interviews which we had during that first week in London. This means that I cannot give the authority for any opinions which I may express about the position in England, nor should I be called upon to give chapter and verse as proof of any assertion I may make. I assume that this will derogate from the value of the impressions or the expressions of opinion which I may give on this or on other occasions. Be that as it may, I wish to make it perfectly clear that any expressions of opinion, or statements of fact on my part are the result of impressions that were gained in many quarters and are not to be considered as binding upon anyone over there. They will be mine and mine alone, and I must assume responsibility for them.

As a result of the kindness of Major-General Price Montague and Air Commodore Stevenson we were given every facility to see the Canadian corps and the Canadian divisions in England and some of our Canadian flyers. We came away greatly impressed by the Canadian divisions, especially the first division, which has been over there now for nearly two years. We had the advantage, my colleague and I, of a long and earnest conversation with General McNaughton. May I say, as a result of expressions which I heard fall from the lips of many men, that General McNaughton occupies to-day a high and commanding position in the counsels of the empire, and very deservedly so. I want it to be known that every opportunity was given to us, having regard to the limited amount of time at our disposal, to see the things which we desired to see. I could regale the house with many human-interest stories and tales of things that happened while we were in England, such, for instance, as the thrill I felt at dining with a distinguished admiral in a mighty ship, lying in an historic port, and the kindly reception I received from a revered archbishop in a famous cathedral in England, and the prayers that he said for the strangers within his gates. I could not possibly ask the house to take the time to listen.

May I just tell the house about a Canadian boy from my own part of the country whom we saw at an airport in central England. He had been in a very difficult position during the depression years in this country in 1936 and 1937. He wanted to get into the Royal Canadian Air Force but did not have the necessary educational qualifications. He wanted to become what he is to-day, a great flyer. I could tell of his attempts to get into the Royal Air Force, and of how he wrote to England on his own account and was told that if he could produce educational qualifications equal to junior matriculation, then, other things being satisfactory and equal, he could come to England at his own expense and they might enlist him. He was able to produce the educational qualifications required, and he crossed the Atlantic to England, not as a passenger on a luxury liner but working on a cattle boat. He enlisted in the Royal Air Force in 1938. To-day that young man is a squadron leader. He bears on his breast, pinned there by his majesty himself, the Distinguished Flying Cross, for valour. He told me that he had been over Germany in recent months no less than forty times, and that he had often led his squadron over various countries of occupied Europe. So far he had come through without a scratch. I was exceedingly proud of that young man, and it will be no betrayal of emotion if I say to you that I myself breathed a humble prayer that he and the others like him might be preserved to the empire and to his loved ones.

I should like to make this further preliminary observation, and perhaps I should have done so before. We did not go to England with any idea of party advantage. We went there out of a sincere desire to learn at first hand what the situation was, and then to find out what more, in our opinion, Canada could do. I should also like to make this perfectly clear, that we did not go to England to disparage the war effort of Canada, and we did not do so. Let that be abundantly clear. No one will ever be able to say that either in private conversation or publicly did any member of our party attempt to disparage, in any degree, the war effort of our own country.

Neither did we go over there, and I want to make this equally clear, to misrepresent the attitude of the government of Canada. The government of Canada represents the people of Canada for the time being on a party basis, and whether we like it or not, the government of Canada speaks for the people of Canada not only here but over there. We in Canada, of course, have the right while here to make representations about the government's effort. But I assure the house that I did not by any word I uttered, nor did any of my colleagues, attempt in any degree to misrepresent the government of Canada while we were in England. We went over there at our own expense, outside of the mere item of transportation across the water.

Perhaps I am dwelling too long on matters of minor importance. At this point may I pay a simple tribute to the people of Britain for the spirit and courage they have demonstrated during all the adversity they have encountered during these two years of war. Make no mistake about it; the people of Britain, in certain areas particularly, have had one terrible time. They have suffered, and they have had fear instilled into them to a certain degree. Hon. gentlemen must have read the graphic story by Mr. Grattan O'Leary which appeared in the press the other day describing the bombing he encountered at Bournemouth. Luckily or unluckily we did not experience anything like that.

The British people, instead of being demoralized, as was anticipated by the Germans, by their experiences in the terrible blitz which was showered on them, especially last spring, have come through their time of trial more determined than ever that they will never be conquered. I pay tribute to the spirit of "no surrender" which animates every man we talked to, whether he was the highest in Whitehall or a humble dweller in the east end of London, in Poplar or Stepney, where we spent a whole forenoon looking at the damage that had been done.

No peace talk, no compromise, no deterioration of the race is in evidence there; and yet they are just as mindful, as I would have you be mindful, that the end is not yet. They are as sure as anything can be that when the great conflagration that is taking place now on the eastern front is settled one way or the other, Hitler will return to the attempted invasion of Britain, and that invasion will be accompanied by a more terrible blitzkrieg from the air and from every available branch of German arms than the British people anticipated in days gone by. And they do not intend to be conquered or to be invaded. The last thing that Mr. Churchill said to us when we left him on a lovely Sunday afternoon was this: "Better to die than to be conquered, and we do not intend to be conquered."

What is the position in England to-day? They have recovered from the position that existed after Dunkirk. I should like to make it clear that we were given full information with respect to the losses on the continent at the time of Dunkirk. This may be a commonplace to most hon. gentlemen, but Britain had sent over to the continent the finest army that was ever assembled in England. We are assured of that. It was supplied with the best equipment that was ever assembled for an expeditionary force leaving England, and when, after Dunkirk and the fall of France, the cost was counted, it was found that practically all of that equipment had been lost. Very little was brought out. Fortunately through the efforts of the navy, the merchant marine and what not, they were able to bring out from France the greater part of the personnel of that army. But they lost in prisoners and wounded many thousands of the flower of that army, and they had to begin all over again.

I discussed this aspect of the matter with Mr. Bevin, and you will find that he made a statement with reference to it in a speech which he delivered in August, 1941, before the Trade Union Congress. It is therefore in no sense confidential. When you come to analyse the position between Dunkirk and Christmas, 1940, and what was accomplished between those two dates by the army, the navy, the air force and the merchant marine—about which so little is heard, but which has done so much—and also by the working people of Britain, is it too much to say, as Mr. Bevin said in the speech to which I am referring, "Verily, the civilization of the world was saved by reason of the opportunity for recovery given at that time."

I do believe that is the exact position. And while I mention the working people of Britain last, I should not like to have it thought that this indicates the measure of their achievement in connection with this resurrection of the equipment of the British army. Perhaps it should be placed first, because without the cooperation of the trade unions, of the labouring people of England, men and women, this would not have been possible. I pay them that tribute.

Britain to-day has its professional army—I will not say how many hundreds of thousands. This professional army includes the Canadian corps, and it is as well trained to-day for defensive purposes as it can possibly be having regard to the fact that all equipment has not been on hand all of the time. That professional army is a mobile force which constitutes the first line of defence against invasion. In addition there is the territorial army of two million men or more, scattered from Land's End to John o' Groats, and comprising all the services. You see them everywhere, at every cross-roads.

We were privileged to go into some of the coastal defence areas. From every headland, from every crag, on every beach, we saw these territorials, many of them officered by men who are not professional army men at all; and there they stand prepared against invasion. Together with the professional army they are to-day the army of Britain. But I would not have you think that that is all. In addition to that professional army, that territorial army, there is a vast army numbering literally millions in the employ of the state, some in uniform and others not, most of them men, many of them women, doing civil defence work of the utmost importance. Literally speaking there are millions of men and women forming the defence of Britain at this time, and because of the spirit of these men and women I am satisfied that invasion can never be successfully accomplished. Defence has been built up to a high degree of efficiency. The whole preparation has been marshalled for defence and not offence. That is the situation to-day, and I think that is as far as it has gone. I am not dealing of course with offensive operations in other theatres of war such as Africa and the near east. I am dealing only with the position of Britain.

There was borne in upon us one further fact, namely, that it is the general opinion in Britain that Britain cannot win this war by bombing Germany and occupied Europe. That I think is conceded, and once you concede it the effect is important. I do not wish to minimize the disruption wrought by the nightly attacks of our magnificent airmen. But even so, informed opinion believes that Germany cannot be defeated in that way. There is full recognition in Britain of the fact that the war cannot be brought to a decisive conclusion without the invasion of enemy territory.

Britain's main preparations and main objectives, the training of her armies, the training of our Canadian contingents, have been largely if not wholly based on defensive tactics. To contemplate the invasion of Europe requires an entirely new conception of a total or all-out form of warfare. And what an heroic conception! Britain cannot possibly do it alone. With the united efforts of Britain, the dominions, our great neighbour to the south and all the democracies of the world, aided if you will by any totalitarian state that is willing to join us, even then the task is colossal. I do not like to suggest even for a moment that it is not possible, but it takes a stout heart to contemplate an invasion of Europe. Hon. members who are students of history will recall the days of the Napoleonic wars. Well, multiply Napoleon's strength many times and you have Hitler. Furthermore, in those days Britain had allies in Europe. What has she to-day? It is difficult to say she has any. What is the situation? Civilian populations unarmed and dominated by nazism—nazism in control of the entire European continent from the Pyrenees to Norway—yes, and if he wanted them, Spain, Portugal and all the rest. Continental Europe from the Atlantic to Russia is under his control. That gives the picture of the present nazi domination of continental Europe.

What is to be done about it? Well, I have no doubt that the battle of Britain will be won. Is that to be the end? I ask that question in all seriousness. I asked it in Britain, and the answer that came back was: No, that is not to be the end. But if it were the end, what flows from that? Hitler wins. In two years, five years, ten years or at some time the whole thing will have to begin over again. By that time he will have recruited his whole resources and will have only Britain and this north American continent to oppose him. That is the situation which confronts the whole world. It is appalling to think that this could be the end. That is not the spirit of Britain to-day. But to those who are clamouring for an invasion of Europe I say that in my opinion, to ask Britain to start a campaign in western Europe to-day is to ask the impossible. Russia will have to be aided, but in some other way. And Canada will have to do her part.

Now, what do they contemplate? They contemplate invasion—when or where or how I do not know; probably they do not themselves. What competent observers contemplate is this: a superior force of men, trained in offensive operations, equipped with offensive weapons, an overwhelming force, which, once established in Europe, will roll on irresistibly. That is the vision. That is what Hitler has to-day. They contemplate that they will have to have something bigger and better and more mobile. Once a landing is effected it will have to be supported by lines of communication by land, sea and air, which cannot be interrupted. That in itself is a gigantic task. That is not now possible, but it is their objective. It can be attained, as I said, only by the combined efforts of Britain, the dominions, our great neighbour to the south. Nothing less will suffice.

This super-force of men and machines is not yet in being. The conjunction of all these factors is not yet accomplished. It will take time and effort and much treasure and the best equipment and strategic ability that can be produced. I am confident that, gigantic as is the task, heroic as is the conception, the genius and will of the British people and their gallant allies, present and future, will accomplish it.

What of Canada and her contributions. We have in being or in process of development six divisions, some overseas, some in Canada, some well trained for defensive purposes, some not so well trained. The task of maintaining them at full numerical strength is for the government of Canada. So far we have a policy of voluntary enlistment for overseas service, with partial national service for home defence. I think that is a fair statement. Six divisions at this time is certainly not too many. Six divisions at the end of the second year, fully trained and equipped, would have been a fair contribution. Comparisons of course are odious, but we have to remember that we are stronger in numbers now than we were twenty-five years ago and stronger in potentiality. I am not complaining that so far we have set up only six divisions; I doubt whether we could have done much more, having regard to the equipment available. But will that suffice? If Canada's maximum effort and man-power is to be confined to six divisions, not all overseas, and a home defence army composed of drafted men, then possibly the voluntary system of recruiting will do. I doubt it, but we should hear from the minister just what the problem is with respect to recruiting—I intend to return to that later. My own view is—and I am giving it only as my own view—that if the invasion of the continent is to be successfully accomplished Canada must provide more than six divisions, must provide an ever-increasing volume of man-power adequately trained and equipped for the offensive. Is it not reasonable to suggest that these men should be provided now, should be enlisted at once, trained and equipped as soon as possible, as an effective fighting force?

When I say at once I do not mean to-day or to-morrow, but should not that be the objective of the government?

In a recent appeal for recruits after the June and July campaign the adjutant-general said:

> The war can be won only by man-power. Our army must have more and more men, the best and finest men of the dominion, trained to fighting pitch, skilled in the handling of every weapon.

Frequently and emphatically the Prime Minister has stated that the only way to wage total war is by total effort. With that we all agree; but does not total effort require the complete utilization of every resource in man-power as well as materials? Until every man available for service in the armed forces has been enlisted in the armed forces can we honestly claim a total effort? Recently the Secretary of State (Mr. Casgrain) made a recruiting speech, in which he said:

> Canada needs soldiers and needs them in greater numbers than they were needed in the last war.

If that be true, as I believe it is, then is it not obvious that our duty is to provide that strength now, or as soon as possible? In the last war, if I recall aright, the total number of Canada's enlisted men was 595,000. If, as the Secretary of State and I believe, men are needed in greater numbers than in the last war, I suggest that this is the time to enlist and equip men if we are to join in the invasion of Europe and help end the war. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) made a speech, in the course of which, according to the Canadian Press report, he said:

> Canada can muster 1,000,000 men for the armed forces and still attain the necessary production in farm and factory.

That is a pretty high figure. My hon. friend was Minister of National War Services for a time, and I do not know of anyone who should better know our potentialities in regard to man-power. At all events that was his statement. If that be true—and I believe it is—is not this the time to muster these men? If we have a potential man-power capacity of a million men, how can it be said that we are now engaged in a total, all-out effort to win a total war when we have mustered less than one-third that number of men for active service?

This issue of man-power must be faced realistically. Total effort requires total enlistment at once of all available man-power, whatever system may be used to enlist them. At the bar of history Canada will be judged by the manner in which she responded to the challenge to provide man-power, not by the tenacity with which her government clung to any particular system of recruiting. Canadians have the same capacity for service and sacrifice as Britons. Canadians will not shrink from any service or sacrifice, and if this war goes on much longer they had better be prepared not to shrink, because it is going to get much worse, I think, before it gets better. Nor is it conceivable that they will fail to do their duty when the need for man-power is placed before them. Has not the time arrived when the government of Canada, in the light of present day conditions, in the light of what is contemplated for the future, should review the whole position in relation to man-power? I urge the government to do so, and at once.

That, I think, is the magnitude of the task that lies before Canadians. History teaches that victory depends upon a superior number of men, with superior training and superior equipment; and upon Canada falls a large measure of the responsibility for creating such a force in this war. Henceforth we must be guided by the strategy of offence. We must realize that the only defence against Hitler is attack. Wars are won not by defence but by attack; and if that attack is to be successful we must have superiority in every respect. That superiority can be achieved, but only if we use all our resources. So that my message to the House of Commons and the people of Canada to-day is that the salvation of Canada, of the empire and of the democracies, the defeat of Hitler, demands at once an infinitely greater contribution than we have made thus far; a greater contribution in material resources as well as a greater contribution in trained and equipped man-power. And I suggest that there is the opportunity of helping to create a force such as I have outlined, here in Canada.

Now I should like to put a query to the Prime Minister and the members of the administration. We have declared for a total war. What is the objective of the government of Canada? Neither the Prime Minister nor anyone else, as far as I can recall, has stated our objective in terms of material things or in man-power. Is the sky the limit, or has the government in mind an objective in relation to either of these things? The Prime Minister has spoken eloquently of a total effort for a total war. What does he mean by that? I think he should enlighten the Canadian people as to his exact meaning. Or are we to take his words at their face value? If we are to have a total war effort, what are the means to be adopted to bring it about? Can we safely rely on the voluntary system of enlistment, or should we not review the whole policy? What is the position to-day with regard to voluntary enlistment? I have not before me the figures of the monthly quotas required, but I understand that the quota for military district No. 7, which is the New Brunswick district—and which I am proud to say has filled its quota at all times up to the present—is something like 450 men a month. I am speaking subject to correction, of course, because I have not verified the figures. But I am told that since this drive for recruits has been in progress that district has enlisted only a little more than half that number. I frankly confess that I am astonished at that. I had thought that New Brunswick, where there is no national war work of any consequence going on, would have been able to produce at least 450 men each month by the voluntary system, if the information which I have just given the house is correct. I regret it very much indeed. What is the situation throughout Canada? I am going to ask the minister if he will tell us, when he makes his statement, what are the monthly objectives, and a little later I will have some further questions which I shall leave with him.

Do we know what are our potentialities in Canada? In August, 1940, we had a national registration which cost us over a million dollars. So far as I know it has been used only for the purposes of the four months' training plan. Perhaps that statement is too sweeping; but do we know, in terms of numbers, what are our potentialities in regard to man-power for war, for industrial production and for agricultural purposes?

Now I want to make a personal reference. Recently I made a speech in Toronto. Perhaps it is a mistake to make speeches; I do not know, but that speech has been completely misinterpreted by the press. On that occasion I briefly referred to the question of compulsory national service and said that in my opinion it should not be treated as a political issue. At the moment it is not a party issue. At the moment it is no matter for party or partisan strife. It is too serious for that. At the moment—and I hope always—it is a national problem which we must all consider as Canadians, not as Liberals, Conservatives. In my view it transcends political or partisan advantages. That was the purport of the message I gave in Toronto. The crisis is now too serious for any party to endeavour to gain partisan advantage from the issue. This country must wage total war with a total effort. I went farther and stated that leaders of public opinion outside the house have a heavy responsibility resting upon them. It is their duty to make known their views to the country and to the government. Some of them I believe are accepting that responsibility. Leaders of public opinion outside the house can educate the public on this question without the risk of raising untimely political controversy, and I believe that they have a duty to do so.

I did not hesitate to make known my own personal views. I believe the greatest responsibility rests on the Prime Minister. As Prime Minister, as the representative of the people and as a Canadian charged with the responsibility of government, he should declare his position, and I invite him to do so. Will the Prime Minister give a clear and specific statement of his position, and tell the country how it is possible to wage total war without total effort? The responsibility is his and that of the government. If the situation is that we are in a total war and are to have a total war effort, then the duty of the government is clear, namely, to put into effect measures which will ensure the full utilization of all the resources of the country, for service in any capacity.

I had intended to say something about production, but I shall not weary the house on that score. Production in England is growing by leaps and bounds. I wish I could tell what was told to me by one of the cabinet ministers, but I cannot. I should like to say, however, that I appreciate now more than I ever did before the reticence which has been shown as to revealing terms of production. Of course we in this country were fed up with statements to the effect that production was well up to schedule, or ahead of schedule, and all that sort of thing. It did not mean a thing to us. But over there they made it quite clear that they do not release the terms of production, and I understand the reason for it.

I should like to have this thought made clear—and it was made clear by Mr. Churchill in the speech he made in the British House of Commons on September 30, to which I had the pleasure of listening—that aircraft production in the United Kingdom is to-day ahead of the best Germany ever had. I believe I can say that. To give anything in the nature of figures would be only a guess. I think I could give an intelligent guess, but I do not believe it would be right for me to do so.

Definitely, production of aircraft in the United Kingdom is as good as or better than Hitler has had at any time. That is the information I have. I am told, too, that that production will increase, and with the aid of our great neighbour to the south it will bring superiority. Mr. Churchill definitely declared in his speech that with respect to the channel and western Europe there is superiority in the air. That is the claim for British arms to-day.

May I at this point say a word about labour. Although I do not wish to speak at too great length, I believe it is time I said something in this respect. I have avoided saying anything in the house about labour because I did not wish to add to the difficulties of the minister or the administration in what must necessarily be a baffling problem. To-day however I am inviting the Minister of Labour (Mr. McLarty) to give the house and the country a clear-cut statement of the government's labour policy. I do not think we have ever had one. We have heard about numerous orders in council which each may construe for himself. My impression is that organized labour thought they were being handed a bill of rights, but instead of that they got a statement of principles without any legal effect. I now ask the minister to give us a clear-cut statement of the labour policy of the government, and to tell us what orders in council are in force and what have been repealed.

It is true that for the moment Canada is comparatively free from labour problems. I know of only two minor problems, one in my own province and one in the adjoining province. I should like also to learn from the minister whether the provisions of the recent declaration respecting wages are designed to do away with the policy of collective bargaining. And if there is to be a ceiling on wages, what about the bonus system, which is in effect an increase in wages? How will that react to the ceiling on prices, especially on food prices? It is a fact that food prices are on an uneven basis. To freeze them on that basis is to do a great injury to the agricultural population of the country.

I am a defender of the consumer, because I belong to that class myself. I do say to the government, however—and I may have something further to say about the wage policy later on, because I do not wish to take the time to say it to-day—that to freeze food prices at the uneven level of to-day is to do a grievous injustice to the primary producers in Canada, who have had a pretty hard time of it since the war began.

Mr. ROWE: And to production itself.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Yes. The order in council making the provisions, it is true, indicates that these inequalities will be ironed out. What does that mean? It means simply that the fellow with the most push and pull will get farther, and the fellow who has not so much push and pull, or who has not the opportunity or the money to present his case, will get nowhere.

Mr. SENN: And he needs it most.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): As the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Senn) suggests, it is the man who is least effective in protecting his own position who needs it most. I agree with that entirely.

Perhaps the most satisfactory interview we had in England was with Mr. Bevin, who is now Minister of Labour and National Service. He was not in politics prior to the war, but was drafted to a portfolio when the national government was formed. I believe he entered the government from a sense of duty.

In a word, what is the position there? It is that organized labour has voluntarily forgone the right to strike for the duration of the war. I never thought organized labour would forgo the right to strike. On the other hand the association of employers in England has agreed that there shall be no lockouts for the duration of the war. Of course there are disputes. Minor disputes are referred to regional agents who conciliate between the men and the employers, and in that way settle the difficulties. This is done day after day. But any major disputes are settled by compulsory arbitration. I believe in a word or two I have stated the position of labour in England. What an example for Canada to follow—and, may I add, if I am not presumptuous, what an example for the great republic to the south of us! Is it not possible that some such arrangement as that could be worked out in Canada? I leave that suggestion with the government. I do not think you can do it on a party basis. I do not think you can do it without labour being represented in the government. I do not think you can do many of the things which I have visualized without broadening the base of this government.

May I suggest to the Prime Minister that if we are to have a total war effort he must broaden the base of his government and bring in men of national stature, men upon whom the people can rely. The people are naturally suspicious of a party government. The fellow on the other side will say, "Oh, they are Grits; I cannot trust them." If you bring in men of national stature and have a truly national government—I do not mean a coalition or a union government, but a government made up of national figures—the country will respond and support such a government through thick and thin. I return to that suggestion, and I should like the Prime Minister to give effect to it.

I had not intended to refer this afternoon to the reaffirmation by the Prime Minister, either when he was in England or shortly after his return, of his belief that an imperial war cabinet was neither necessary nor desirable. I shall not refer to that now, but I may do so on a later occasion.

I think we should have from the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe), a full explanation of the gasoline situation and the gasoline conservation measures which are in effect in Canada. Such a statement is due to the country. I have not been critical of Mr. Cottrelle, but I was astonished to read a full page advertisement of the Joy Oil company not so long ago. The minister has stated that this has been referred to the Department of Justice for a legal opinion as to whether or not it was subversive or libellous. We have heard nothing more from him, and the gasoline situation in Canada needs clarification. I invite the minister to make such a statement. I do not want to seem critical; I simply feel that we ought to know just what the position is.

I wish to say something about price control. I think we all know of the evil which has been brought about by inflation at certain periods of our history. I have never been afraid of a degree of inflation in times of depression. From 1933 on, during a period of depression, our great neighbour to the south used a substantial degree of inflation in order to raise the price levels of commodities. Whether or not that had the desired effect I do not know. One of the things done by the leader of that country was to raise the price of gold, with the result that to-day the gold deposits of the United States are a liability rather than an asset. I think it will be agreed that the NRA failed in the objectives sought to be attained.

I think we all admit that in war time inflation may become a real danger, especially inflation in the prices of the necessities of life. But even in the wildest dreams I ever had I never thought that inflation could be controlled by legislation, or by orders in council, which are equivalent to legislation. The economists will tell you that the old-fashioned method of taking care of inflation was by having more production. What does that mean? Longer hours; more sweat and toil. No matter what the Prime Minister may resort to by way of legislation to prevent inflation, I suggest that the only orthodox method of dealing with inflation is more production, more labour, longer hours, and more sweat. They are sweating in England. Trade unionists over there are working twelve hours a day. They are nearer to the situation and to the scene and that is what they are doing. I suggest to the Prime Minister that unless he has the one hundred per cent cooperation of every producer, every tradesman, and every man interested in the exchange of commodities in Canada, this system cannot succeed. It is a great experiment and I hope it will work out successfully, because I know the dangers of inflation.

I trust that no word of mine to-day will be construed as being a condemnation of the objectives which the Prime Minister seeks; what I have to say is being said against the method and the manner of bringing it into effect. Why was it necessary only a few days before this house reassembled to legislate on such an important economic development by way of order in council? Could we not deal with a question of this kind? Are we so effete, are we so inefficient, are we so blind to our duties as members of the House of Commons, that we cannot be trusted to debate a matter like this before it becomes an accomplished fact?

I suggest to the Prime Minister that this is one more example of his contempt for parliament. I may be alone in holding that opinion, but we have had so many examples in days gone by that I now have a sense of frustration as to the utility of democratic institutions in war time, as practised by this government. What are we fighting for, their preservation, or their domination by regimentation? I wish the Prime Minister would take us into his confidence and tell us whose baby this is. Is it the product of the war-time prices and trade board? I do not think it is. Is it the product of the ministry? Of course the ministry must take the responsibility. Is it not the product of the brain trust with which this government has surrounded itself and which is running the country to-day?

I think the Prime Minister should have brought this matter before parliament in order that we might debate it. If urgency was important we would not retard it. The Prime Minister knows that whenever a war measure has been brought before this house—and this is a quasi war measure—and he has wanted it put through in a hurry, it has been put through. I received the order in council only yesterday afternoon after this house adjourned and I barely had a chance of glancing at it. I doubt if any hon. member has been able to give that order in council the intensive study that is necessary to an understanding of it. We understand its implications, but we do not understand all its ramifications. I suggest, therefore, that this matter should have been brought to the floor of this house where it could have been explained to hon. members. It could have been threshed out and truth would have evolved.

What were the serious economic circumstances which necessitated the Prime Minister's rushing into this action? We had a system of control before; how has it failed? How had the price situation got out of hand? In what way were economic circumstances in Canada more serious than in Britain, where the principle of fixing a ceiling only on certain commodities and allowing ordinary economic laws to operate with respect to the rest has been retained? Similarly in the United States.

The government should give us also a clear statement of the situation as it existed prior to the institution of price and wage control, and specifically a statement of the conditions which there was reason to fear had that policy not been instituted.

Price control does not meet the important problem of restriction of civilian consumption. Indeed, price control may well lead to increased civilian consumption, and the restriction on instalment buying will not curtail that sufficiently. The problem still remains of decreasing consumption of unnecessary goods, for two purposes: (1) the diversion of money which would be so used for the financing of the war effort, and (2) the progressive diversion of the plant and labour used in production of unnecessary consumer goods to production for the war effort. This problem has not as yet been faced with sufficient realism.

I wish to say something to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Ilsley) with respect to the proposals he made in his last budget for the vacation by the provincial governments of the fields of income and corporation taxation. This subject is one of great importance, not only in relation to our war effort but in relation to the effect upon the taxpaying public. It is important to municipalities which heretofore have looked upon this source of revenue to round out their budgets. What has been done? We are near the end of 1941. Some of us have paid our 1941 municipal income tax. Are the municipalities to be compensated, and if so, at what level? Is it to be frozen on the basis of 1940 or 1941? What is the position of the provinces? Has the great and wealthy province of Ontario agreed to the proposals, and if so, on what basis? What are the compensations proposed to be given to this and other provinces? May I request the minister to inform the house on these matters?

I should like to speak briefly on certain international problems. There is the important declaration of the Atlantic—one of the most momentous statements ever uttered by men in authority. When I first read it, I was reminded of President Wilson's "fourteen points". It bears a close resemblance, but after careful study I think it goes much farther. The principles enunciated have on the whole been well received by the democratic world. But I found on discussing the matter with certain people in England, with one or two leading personages, that every man has his own interpretation of the declaration of the Atlantic. If the statesmen of the world ever come into a round-table conference to work out the problems that arise out of the declaration of the Atlantic every nation will have its own interpretation, and that may be the weakness of it.

Over the week-end the Prime Minister made another journey to the United States. If it was a private visit to the president I have not a word to say, nor should I have. But if it had any international importance, the Prime Minister should so advise the country, and I invite him to do so. Are there any new commitments, and if so, what are they?

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to detain the house at any greater length this afternoon. It may be that later an opportunity will be provided in committee for a detailed analysis of government policy and its implications. We of the opposition will require clear, specific and detailed information on every matter associated with the war effort. For example, we desire to have a full and complete report from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Ralston) on the following subjects, and with respect to him I must say that he should take all the time he wants to get ready to reply; for I realize how tired he must be after his journey. We would like to know from him:

1. The ultimate objective in man-power which it is hoped Canada may contribute.

2. The present state of enlistment in the army, and, specifically, the following:

(a) The total number of men enlisted in the Canadian army in all its branches since the outbreak of war.

(b) The total number of men now serving in all branches of the Canadian army.

(c) The total number of men attested for service overseas.

(d) The total number of men now serving in overseas theatres of war.

(e) The total number of men serving beyond Canada but not in actual theatres of warfare.

(f) A statement as to the number of rejections of enlisted men sent overseas, men whom this country trained in Canada, then took overseas and trained them there, and then rejected as medically unfit or likely to become unfit for service; and the reasons for their rejection.

How many were rejected because of bad discipline records?

3. We should also like to know from the minister the result of the recruiting campaign of June and July, and the results of the monthly recruiting campaigns, and specifically:

(a) The method by which the quota for the general recruiting campaign and for the monthly campaign was settled. Was it based on population figures in a given military district?
(b) The percentage which such quotas bear to the total population of military age within each military district.
(c) The actual number of recruits which each military district was required to raise in the general recruiting campaign and has since been required to raise each month.
(d) The actual number of recruits which each military district has raised.
(e) The actual number of recruits in each military district who prior to enlisting were serving in Canada under the National Resources Mobilization Act.

Then from my friend the Minister of Munitions and Supply (Mr. Howe) we desire a complete report on production. I do not suppose he will want to give us that after what I have said this afternoon, but I think he should give us at least a general survey of our production of all implements of warfare—tanks, guns, small arms, merchant vessels, naval vessels and so forth. We should also like to have from him an analysis in detail of the statement he made not so long ago that "we are now producing practically everything required by a fully equipped infantry division at a rate which enables us to equip a new division every six weeks." That, if true, is a remarkable statement.

Mr. HOWE: It is true.
