It has been a great discovery and so far has been fairly costly. It will, I think, and I know in the future be enormously profitable, but it lacks one thing that is necessary in a man's life or a nation's life. It lacks any possible idea of romance, it is purely and simply practical—beef, wheat, pork and other things. I believe that if the small amount of money that is asked to help Captain Bernier in this expedition, it will not be an extravagance for Canada. I believe the amount can be saved ten times over to the people of the country by the reduction of many items in the estimates which we have had before us this session and which represent money that will be expended without profit or glory to the country. I believe that if this money is granted to Captain Bernier, it will, at all events, show the world that we Canadians are not altogether so wedded to what is only the practical side, but that we have with us a little of that old romance that caused our forefathers to go to all parts of the world on voyages of discovery, and, as a rule not of profit to themselves. I think, we, in Canada, as the most northerly nation and the nearest to the North pole, might very properly grant the small sum that is asked to help on this expedition, which, if successful, will redound to the credit and glory of Canada and from a purely practical standpoint will be of no small advantage.

Mr. GERMAN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Osler) if he is in favour of the present government granting the bonus to Mr. Bernier for his expedition to the north pole ?

Mr. OSLER. Certainly I am in favour of the persent government granting the bonus that is asked for.

Mr. HAUGHTON LENNOX (South Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I would regret, I think, in future, if I allowed this opportunity to pass of speaking upon this great and important question. When Captain Bernier does discover the north pole, either with the assistance of Canada, or with the assistance of some other government to which he will necessarily apply if Canada fails him, there will be many hon. gentlemen in this House who will regret that they had not some part in endeavouring to assist in this great project. I notice that two hon. gentlemen, the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McEwen) and the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) tried to introduce a political question into this matter, and one of these hon. gentlemen went so far beyond the record as to suggest that those of the opposition who are now advocating the expenditure of this money would be the first to decry the government in case they had acceded to the suggestion.

Mr. McCREARY. So you would.

Mr. LENNOX. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McCreary) says: So we would. I particularly got upon my feet to speak, so that there will be no question about the position which I occupy upon this matter. I have, as a rule, the courage to say what I believe to be right and to act in accordance with what I believe to be right. Whether I may be right in this instance or not, is of course another matter. The people whom I have the honour to represent sent me here not necessarily to vote for one political party or the other but to exercise the best judgment I possess upon the various questions that come before this parliament. Some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House may laugh because I understand them to dissent from that proposition. Perhaps they do not understand an hon. gentleman acting upon that basis. I have confidence that if the people who sent me here to represent them should come to the conclusion that in the attitude I now take I have made an error of judgment, believing that I have done it sincerely, they will forgive me, but I do believe that this project will be successful. I believe that if there is a man in the world to-day who is likely to reach the north pole he is Captain Bernier. He is a native Canadian, he is a very intelligent and progressive man, a man who has faith in what he undertakes and it is a pity for Canada to fail to respond on this occasion to the opportunity which now presents itself of enunciating to the world the capabilities of the Canadian people. On the field of South Africa, the one characteristic that distinguished our noble citizen soldiers above all others, except their bravery, was that they were the people for an emergency, that they were capable people all round and that is the type of man who asks us to invest $100,000 in order to see if we cannot accomplish this great scientific discovery and incidentally advertise Canada in a way that nothing else could do. I want to say distinctly that the hon. member for South Huron and the hon. member for Selkirk, hardly appreciate the point when they talk about the opposition carping at the expenditure of public money. There is a great and broad distinction between the opposition objecting to specific expenditures, because they are not judicious expenditures, and the suggestion of these hon. gentlemen. We are not saying on this side of the House that we cannot pay our way, we are not saying that Canada cannot pay for all she needs, that Canada is not in a position to pay money for anything that is in the interest of Canada, but the opposition do criticise, and it is the proper attitude of an opposition, expenditures of money in some instances because they think they are not wise or judicious expenditures. This is not a political question. It is a question for every man to exercise his honest judgment upon. It is a question for every hon. member to feel that whether it exactly suits his constituents or not he will, at this juncture, have done that which he believed to be right in saying that this small sum of money, comparatively, should in all reason be voted in support of this measure. I have little doubt that we will within a few years have the honour of having discovered the north pole.

Mr. F. B. WADE (Annapolis.) Mr. Speaker, I do not purpose making any speech on this occasion. I suppose that will be pleasant to hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, but I wish to take my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) to task, because, when he saw the first suggestion of reformation upon the part of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, he should not have chided them with their past errors. They have complained, it is true, about the expenditures made by the government and we have not only stood by these expenditures, but we say that the government should go on and make increased expenditures, doing all things necessary for the welfare and benefit of Canada. I do believe that a small expenditure in connection with this matter would be an expenditure in that direction. We are not living in this world alone for the few dollars we may gather together; there are other things which we have to live for as individuals. There are other things for us to live for as a nation; as a Dominion, and one of these other things may be possibly accomplished by the sending out of this expedition. It is not possible for any man to tell to-day what the result of it may be. Whether it will add to the material interest of Canada; whether it will demonstrate a great scientific problem or not; but it is worthy an attempt. I regret that an hon. member on the other side of the House robbed me of one of the strongest arguments I had to make when he said, that it would only cost the country from one cent or two cents per head of the population. Now, there are some certain scientific questions which may or may not be settled by this expedition. We have all worried some of them. We have worried as to the reason why the needle points to the north; we have worried as to the variation of the compass, and why the compass varies more in one section of the globe than it does in another. These things may or may not be settled by this expedition, but I do believe that the country as a whole would support the government if they gave a reasonable grant in aid of this expedition which is being already aided by private enterprise in different parts of the empire. I simply wished to express my views in that direction, and to say that so far as I am concerned I shall be most glad to support the government in any reasonable expenditure for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAM ROSS (South Ontario). If Captain Bernier does not get the bonus he desires for this expedition to the north pole, this debate will at least have done good, for I with others have obtained increased information with regard to the project, and I must congratulate the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on the able and eloquent manner in which he presented his proposition to the House. I am very sorry that at present I cannot bring myself up to the idea, that the discovery of the north pole will be of any use to us except from a sentimental point of view. It is not long since I read Nansen's 'Farthest North,' and the privations and trials that he endured are more than any person should be called upon to endure. If the country around the pole is anything like the country which Nansen traversed, we do not want such a country as that. That is my feeling, and I cannot get over it. I cannot help but think that the moneys which we would vote for this expedition could be much better spent in advancing the interests of Canada internally. I quite appreciate the sentiment connected with the project; the glory there would be in planting the British flag upon the north pole. I quite admit that it would be in that respect a grand and glorious thing. I may not be venturesome enough, but after reading Nansen's work I am apprehensive that no man can reach the pole. It is possible that he might, and if so I should be glad to rejoice with the rest; I should be more pleased to rejoice if the discoverer of the north pole were a Canadian, but at the present time I cannot see my way clear to support any appropriation for this purpose.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, personally I am certainly not insensible to the view which has been urged to-day upon the government by those who think that Canada should be the discoverer of the north pole, and that the efforts of Captain Bernier should receive some recognition. I largely share the enthusiasm of those who believe that it would not be a barren thing for Canada, if an enterprise which has combatted the efforts of so many brave and strong men were at last to be brought to a successful issue by a son of Canada. I do not share the views of my hon. friend from Ontario (Mr. Ross). Even if there was nothing in that enterprise but sentiment, that alone is a thing which no nation can afford to be indifferent to.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. There is not only the material prosperity of a nation to be considered; there is also the moral elevation, the sentiment, the enthusiasm—all these go to make up a nation, and no nation can exist unless it proves itself to possess those qualities. But nobody can say that even from a material point of view there would not be something gained by the successful accomplishment of this project. From all accounts the north pole is a desolate part of the world, but we have learned to believe in this age, that no part of the earth's surface however desolate is not productive of wealth. As was pointed out by my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) we have lately found wealth where it was least expected—in the Yukon. I remember very well that some years ago the Yukon was ridiculed; the very name excited scorn; but now we are glad that the Yukon is within our territory. We do not know but that perhaps there may be something in this enterprise if it were successful which would bring to us material profit. However that may be, and leaving aside altogether the idea of the material advantages, if a son of Canada were to plant the flag of his country at the north pole, if he were to achieve what so many brave men have struggled in vain to achieve, there is not a Canadian heart that would not beat with pride at the thought of it. Canada would be only too glad to purchase at a small cost such a glory. In Captain Bernier we have a man who I think is fit to take charge of such an enterprise. He has all the qualities which would lead us to believe that if that enterprise is to be brought to a successful issue, he is the man to do it. He is an experienced mariner; he has enthusiasm, he has pluck, he has courage and he has the technical knowledge of his profession. If these qualities cannot discover the north pole it will not be discovered. At the same time I am not insensible either to the fact that Canada has many useful enterprises of immediate interest to prosecute, and between the two contentions perhaps it is difficult to come to a conclusion. The only thing that I can say is, that personally, and I believe, speaking also for some of my colleagues, I would rather be proud of contributing something to secure this glory for the Canadian people. I would have been more satisfied if my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) who presented this case with great force and great ability, had given us some idea of the amount which it was expected Canada should contribute. I never understood that it was contemplated that Canada should bear the whole cost of the expedition. I always understood that Captain Bernier had some enthusiastic friends who were ready to help him, and I am told that he has now secured assistance to the amount of $20,000. Well, I must confess my disappointment at that, for I had hoped he would have secured a much larger sum. He has received enconium, commendation and praise, but in the way of substantial assistance he has not received as much as one would have expected. Last year, in giving my personal views and after consulting with only some of my colleagues, I made bold to say that if Captain Bernier secured something of material assistance from private individuals in this country and outside of it, the government might perhaps come to his rescue and supply the balance. But I had no expectation that the sum of $100,000 would be asked from us. I see now that if Canada is to contribute anything at all it must be not less than $100,000. The views of the members of the House have been expressed generally, and if I understand aright, with very few exceptions, the members would be ready to sustain the government if they were to give $100,000 for this purpose. All I can say at present, and it is not to be expected I should say more, is, that the government cannot be indifferent to the views which have been presented here to-day. They shall receive due consideration, and if after having given the best consideration we can to this worthy scheme we come to the conclusion that it should be carried out, then, judging by what has been said here to-day, the government will be defended from the opposite side of the House against the charge of extravagance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker, I agree that it was not purely in a spirit of ascertaining the material profit that we should deal with a question of this kind. There is a great deal of force in what has been said by some hon. gentlemen here to-day on both sides of the House, that in matters of this kind we have to look a little beyond considerations of that nature. I have had several interviews with Captain Bernier in regard to this expedition. While I have not been able to look into his plans as fully as some of the gentlemen who have spoken to-day, I am fully prepared to assent to what has been said with regard to Capt. Bernier's earnestness and capacity. He comes of a race who have been unsurpassed in past days in Canada in the spirit of adventure, in their efforts to discover and colonize the vast regions of Quebec, Ontario and the great West, as well as a considerable portion of the United States ; and Captain Bernier, I believe, has in himself all the qualifications which are necessary for making a success of that which has been attempted by so many individuals and by so many nations in the past. I do not overlook the fact that there is a great deal of this kind of work for us to do in Canada, or I might say in nearer portions of Canada, if it be true, as hon. gentlemen have stated to-night, that the limits of Canada to-day embrace the North Pole. In the nearer portions of Canada there are a great many unexplored regions as to many of which we have not done our duty. But these are portions of the country which do not attract the attention of the world to the same extent, and I do not think our efforts with regard to these would be handicapped by our giving a moderate measure of support to the enterprise of Captain Bernier. I would therefore say, so far as I am personally concerned—and in saying this I speak only for myself—that I would be inclined to give favourable consideration to a proposal by the government such as has been suggested by the hon. gentleman opposite.

THE BRITISH CATTLE EMBARGO.

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle). Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion of which I gave notice yesterday, I may in a few words state the case of our cattle trade as it stands to-day in Great Britain. We have heard a good deal about it, but I do not think we have ever considered in this House the exact situation and the legislation of the British parliament as it now exists. Between 1878 and 1893, the British parliament adopted various laws, one after another, with a view to extirpating from the United Kingdom the different contagious diseases that were affecting cattle. Finally, in 1894, all these laws were combined in one statute, which is still in force, except one section, which I shall refer to later. This Act is called 'an Act to Consolidate the Contagious Diseases (Animals) Acts, 1878 to 1893.' It is chapter 57 of 57 and 58 Victoria. By section 24 of that Act it is provided :

> The provisions set forth in part I. (slaughter at port of landing) of the third schedule to this Act shall apply to all foreign animals other than—
> (a) Foreign animals the landing of which is for the time being prohibited by order of the Board of Agriculture ;
> (b) Foreign animals the landing of which is allowed by order of the board without being subject under the provisions of this Act to slaughter or quarantine ; and
> (c) Foreign animals intended for exhibition or other exceptional purposes, and the landing of which is allowed for the time being by the board subject to the provisions of part II (quarantine) of the third schedule to this Act.

Now, Section 26 of this Act gave to the Board of Agriculture a certain amount of discretion in regard to admittance of foreign animals at the ports of entry without requiring them to be slaughtered. In the third schedule of the Act, in the first part it is provided :

> 1. The animals shall be landed only at a part of the port defined for that purpose by order of the Board of Agriculture, to be called a foreign animals wharf.
> 2. The animals shall be landed in such manner, at such times and subject to such super-visions and control as the Commissioners of Customs direct.

3. The animals shall not be moved alive out of the wharf.

I need not point out to the House the detriment which this caused to importers of animals in the United Kingdom as well as to the exporters. The ports of entry not being supplied with cold storage facilities such as might have been expected, the animals were slaughtered, and the meat was exposed for sale on the different markets in the United Kingdom, in a more or less deteriorated condition, and was of course sold at a much lower price than the meat produced by the local trade. Moreover, the very fact that our cattle were subjected to such a disposition of the law, which was really a law for the protection of the cattle trade of England, but was enacted to prevent contagious diseases spreading in the United Kingdom, caused the meat which came from the abattoirs at the ports of entry to be looked upon as coming from countries where contagious diseases were in existence. Of course, protests were immediately entered by the Canadian government. Two years later, another Act was passed, chapter 15 of 59 and 60 Victoria, entitled 'an Act to amend the Diseases of Animals Act, 1894.' By this Act, section 24 of the Act of 1894, which I have just read, was repealed, and the following section substituted :

The provisions set forth in part in part I (slaughter at port of landing) of the third schedule to this Act shall apply to all foreign animals other than—

(a) Foreign animals the landing of which is for the time being prohibited by order of the Board of Agriculture ; and

(b) Foreign animals intended for exhibition or other exceptional purposes, and the landing of which is allowed for the time being by the board, subject to the provisions of part II (quarantine) of the third schedule to this Act.

This Act also repealed section 26 of the Act of 1894, which was the only section that gave some discretion to the Board of Agriculture. The result of this was that cattle sent from Canada could not enter the United Kingdom unless they were slaughtered at the ports of entry, except in the case of any animals which might be admitted for exhibition purposes. So that from the time of the passage of the statute of 1896, as Mr. Hanbury said last year, and Mr. Elliott, the secretary of the Board of Agriculture, said this year, in a dispatch which I have already given to the House a few weeks ago, the Board of Agriculture has no more power to admit our cattle except under the slaughter schedule.

I need not say how unjust and unfair this provision is to the cattle trade of Canada ; yet in spite of all the representations made by the Canadian government, nothing has been done towards the removal of these restrictions. I need not insist on the importance of having them removed. I quite agree with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that should the British government and parliament declare in favour of a protective policy for the encouragement of the British cattle trade, we would have no right to make any protest. But what we have a right to protest against is that our live stock should be refused admission to the English market on the false ground that our cattle are diseased. We have the right to protest against our cattle being excluded on the ground of disease when, as has been proven time and again to our British friends, there is no disease among the cattle in Canada. The only cases of disease in Canada were a few that occurred among animals imported from Great Britain, and these were immediately slaughtered at our quarantine ports. As far as the health of our cattle is concerned, we stand in a better position than do the British Islands.

If I have brought up this motion, instead of supporting the one proposed yesterday, my reason is that I consider that the resolution I have the honour to submit is more in the interests of Canada than the one which was proposed yesterday. I submit that it is in the interests of Canadian trade that this question should be dealt with by this House, and presented to the British government, divested of any party spirit whatever, and free from any reflections or criticisms as to the amount of work done by the Canadian government or not, or as to the protective character or otherwise of the policy of the British government. I simply ask the House to support this motion, so that when the First Minister attends the Colonial conference in the city of London, he will be able to show that he has the whole House of Commons at his back in asking the British government to repeal this injustice inflicted on our farming interests and our cattle trade. I have somewhat modified the motion of which I gave notice yesterday, by taking from it everything that might savor of an aggressive spirit, both as regards the Canadian and the British governments. I have added a clause relating to the foreign trade, because the restrictions imposed under the British statute, not only injure our trade with Great Britain but also with foreign countries. When it is known in France, Holland, Belgium and Germany, that our cattle are excluded from our own motherland under the provision of the Contagious Diseases Act, that is certain to have a most injurious effect on our dealings with those countries. From all points of view, I think that the motion and the spirit in which I present it should meet with the approval of the whole House. I would beg to move :

That evidence having been furnished to the British authorities proving that there is no justification for the application of the Diseases of Animals Act (Great Britain) to the cattle of Canada, this House regrets that the provisions of this Act continue to be applied to Canadian cattle, thereby preventing the sale of Canadian animals in Great Britain on fair terms, and injuring the cattle trade of Canada in all foreign markets.

That this House hopes that the government of Canada will avail itself of the opportunity afforded by the approaching imperial conference in London to urge upon the British government the removal of this unjust restriction on the sale of Canadian cattle in Great Britain.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). As a rule the government does not receive with favour a motion made in amendment to the proposal to go into supply, but there are exceptional cases and this seems to be one of them. The subject which the hon. gentleman invites the House to consider is one of recognized importance, and the terms of his motion are such that I think they will find favour on both sides. Inasmuch as complaint has been made for several years, and a well founded complaint, that the regulations of the imperial government in relation to the cattle trade, are unreasonable and unfair as respects Canadian cattle, it is not out of place that we should express the opinion of the House with the view of bringing about a change if possible. The motion of my hon. friend is a respectful remonstrance against what we all feel to be an unfair condition of things. We do not question the right of the imperial government to make such regulations as may be deemed best in the interests of the mother country, and if these regulations were justified on the ground of what is called a protective policy, if it were declared that their sole purpose was to restrict, in the interests of English farmers, the importation of Canadian cattle, irrespective of disease, I do not think we would have any right to protest, because the question of policy is one entirely within the judgment of the imperial government and parliament. But when these restrictions are imposed because of disease said to exist among Canadian cattle, the government and parliament of Canada may well protest in moderate and respectful terms against any such baseless imputation. The government have from time to time made every reasonable effort to bring about a better condition of affairs. The Minister of Agriculture has done all that lay in his power to impress the British government with the necessity for a change, but has so far failed, and there is no reason why the Prime Minister, when he goes to London, should not bring this matter up in connection with others, and be in a position to show that he has the unanimous support of the House of Commons. Such unanimous support will strengthen his hands and perhaps enable him to convince the imperial government of the advisability of taking a different view from that to which they have so strongly adhered hitherto. We accept the motion in the spirit in which the hon. gentleman offers it, and hope it may be productive of much good.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). The motion which the hon. gentleman has just submitted is not at all in the language of that of which he gave notice yesterday, and I think it would have been far better for him to have taken a little more time and given the House an opportunity of considering his motion. The motion of which he gave notice yesterday was very different in its language from the one just submitted. It would have been far better, if the hon. gentleman proposed to modify it in the way he has done, to give notice of it and move it to-morrow, instead of giving us, at the conclusion of his speech, a motion which we really have had no time to properly consider, and which we cannot very well consider on the spur of the moment.

Mr. BOURASSA. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—I do not think there is the slightest difference so far as the sense of the motion is concerned. But representation was made to me that by leaving the word 'protest' in the motion, it might be interpreted as indicating a desire on our part to interfere with the sphere of action of the British government and British parliament. And I thought that was right, so I made the change. I think I made it still clearer by basing the motion on the fact that we had given evidence to the British government that there was no more reason to apply the law, and then I added the part about our foreign trade. As to the rest, the hon. gentleman will notice that it is exactly the same language, especially the conclusion as to the advantage the imperial conference will offer to the government in pressing the settlement of this question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the verbal phrasing is concerned, it is a great improvement on that which the hon. gentleman first suggested. For it would be impossible for us, I think, to pass the motion in the shape in which he gave notice of it yesterday. It would be absolutely inappropriate and undignified for this parliament to pass such a resolution as the hon. gentleman told us yesterday he proposed. As to the present motion, I am not wholly satisfied with it, though I sympathize entirely with the object the hon. gentleman has in view. He says:

> Evidence having been furnished to the British authorities proving that there is no justification for the application of the Diseases of Animals Act (Great Britain) to the cattle of Canada.

Are we not saying rather too much when we venture to suggest that? Would it not be better to express our own opinions instead of commenting on evidence furnished to the British authorities and declaring that that evidence proved so and so? My only desire in making this suggestion is to have the motion pass in such form as will comport in every way with the dignity of this parliament, so that we may not suffer a rebuke for the wording of a resolution which, I trust, will pass the House without a dissenting voice. The mother country has a right to protect her home productions, either cattle or any other, in any way she sees fit. She has given us that right and she certainly can exercise it herself. The points we wish to make are two. In the first place we do not wish to have any imputation cast upon the condition of the cattle in Canada; and, in the next place, we do not wish our cattle to be excluded from the market of the mother country. I think that the Minister of Agriculture has stated in this House both last session and this session that, from his interviews and correspondence with the authorities in the mother country, he is fully satisfied that this measure is not continued for fear of any disease to come in from Canada, but purely as a protective measure to the producers of the mother country. I have gathered that from the Minister of Agriculture's statements in the past. If I am wrong, I hope he will correct me. That being the case, it is not out of place that we should make representation to the mother country such as are covered by the spirit, if not by the words, of this resolution. I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) and also to the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) two considerations. Have they not given some grounds for the continuance of this embargo by the change of the quarantine regulations which prevailed with regard to the entry of cattle from the United States into Canada? Has or has not that point been made, in the negotiations, by the representatives of the mother country? As I understand it, years ago, before this government came into power we had pretty strict regulations regarding the entry of American cattle into Canada. Since then we have admitted these cattle without subjecting them to stringent examination or quarantine, if we subject them to any at all. The result is that there is more danger to the cattle of the mother country from free importation of cattle from Canada than there formerly was. That is one of the considerations which, I think, should be spoken to by the Minister of Agriculture and as to which we should have some information from him. The other consideration is this—if it was known, as I suppose it was, in 1897 and in 1898 that this was a purely protective measure to British industry, why was it that we did not enter into negotiations for the remedying of this grievance at the time we gave the mother country the advantage first of 12½ per cent, afterwards of 25 per cent and still later of 33⅓ per cent in our markets? Did not the Minister of Agriculture realize at the time that this was a protective measure to British producers? Did not the Minister of Finance realize this? If they did not, what new light have they had on the subject since then? And if they did realize it, why was some negotiations not had with the mother country in order to redress what my hon. friend from Labelle and the Minister of Finance consider a very serious grievance so far as this great Canadian industry is concerned? Would that not have been the proper time to consider the matter, instead of waiting for five years and then having a resolution passed which the right hon. gentleman will take home with him and bring to the attention of the British government? If this is a protective measure, it would have been proper and by no means ungracious at the time when we were giving a considerable preference to the products of the mother country, to bring to the attention of the authorities there the fact that this was essentially a protective measure enforced against Canadian cattle entering the mother country and asking that the redress sought by this resolution should be afforded. I think my hon. friend from Labelle was very enthusiastic in support of these measures brought down by the government giving a preference——

Mr. BOURASSA. Not very.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At least, he was sufficiently enthusiastic to support them by his vote. Of course one cannot always perceive the future, but it might have been better if he had brought to the attention of his friends of the cabinet the considerations he has put forward so forcibly in his speech this evening. Now, I have not had time to scan the language of this resolution very carefully. I submit that it should not contain any statement of facts which it is not thoroughly in order for us to make. I am not satisfied that the wording of the first part of the resolution could not be improved. So far as the spirit of the resolution is concerned, and so far as the object with which it is presented to the House is concerned, I can only say that I am thoroughly in accord with it. If I can be satisfied that the language is in all respects proper and in accordance with the dignity of this parliament, I, for one, shall be inclined to give it my support.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The government have done in this case what they could do in the case of any motion in amendment to motion for Committee of Supply, except one of direct censure—they have agreed to accept the motion as not being one of want of confidence. There have been many motions moved in this House in the past having for their object equally praiseworthy aims with this one which the government have called upon their friends to vote down because they were in amendment to a motion to go into Committee of Supply. The government availed themselves of that excuse, and their friends in justification of their position have declared that they did not want to vote against the government and so voted against the motion. I am glad to know they have given us another example that it is possible to accept motions made on going into supply without regarding them as motions of want of confidence. This motion seeks to make such an impression on the imperial government that they will amend the statute as to admit Canadian cattle without the necessity of their being slaughtered on landing. We enjoyed that privilege before 1896, and we found it of considerable advantage to the farmers of Canada. For reasons best known to the imperial government they amended their regulations and passed an Act of parliament compelling the slaughter of Canadian cattle at the port of landing.

At that time this question was discussed at great length in this House. It was introduced for two or three years in succession by the present Postmaster General, then in opposition, and the government were taken severly to task as being responsible for bringing about this embargo on Canadian cattle. His contention was that the embargo was due to the fact that the regulations which we had made for transporting American cattle through Canada were laxly enforced, and the British people came to the conclusion that the disease could not be kept out from the United States, and therefore the embargo was put on. The Postmaster General, then representing North York, read a great deal of correspondence that took place between Sir Hector Langevin, a member of the Conservative government in Canada, and the home authorities, regarding this question, and he gave us a recital of the contract that was entered into between Canada and the mother country to ensure the freedom of Canada from importation of diseased cattle. In the first place the quarantine regulations provided that no animals could be imported unless they were detained at the frontier for ninety days so as to satisfy the people of this country that they were not in any way diseased. In the next place application was made to allow the Grand Trunk Railway and the Great Western Railway to carry American cattle through Canada on condition that they were accompanied by an agent on each train, that they should not be allowed off the train except at a quarantine station for the purpose of feeding, at which time the cars were to be run into an inclosure surrounded by a double board fence so there could be no possibility of the cattle in the neighbourhood coming in contact with them. After they were fed they were to be reloaded and passed through the country. All cars carrying cattle were to be disinfected before they were used for any other purpose. The cattle were to be inspected at the boundary line. It was afterwards found that the railway companies desired that the cattle should be inspected immediately upon landing. At first the cattle were inspected in daylight only, but afterwards it was contended that the inspection could be made equally well at night if proper provision was made for lighting and so forth. The railway companies agreed to provide these facilities, and the inspection was made at night, and the business went on. Now, the whole contention of the hon. member for North York and of those who supported him, was that these regulations were not enforced as strictly as they should be on the part of the Canadian government. An endeavour was made to show how much Canada lost by it. It was stated that had the regulations been strictly carried out the embargo would never have been put on. The opposition concurred in those views, and the government were severely brought to task for negligence in carrying out those regulations.

Well, time went on, and there was a change of government. After the present government came into power they gave the country to understand that they would attempt to get this embargo removed. What was the first thing they did to that end? It was to do away with the quarantine regulations providing that cattle coming from the United States should be detained for ninety days to show they were not diseased. That was one of the first requirements to convince the English people that there was no possibility of the disease being imported into Canada, and that requirement was abolished. Then the restrictions which surrounded the transportation of cattle through Canada were relaxed, and we have practically none to-day. Yet the Minister of Agriculture goes over to England and asks that this embargo be removed, after doing away with all the restrictions and precautions that were held to be so necessary by the English people to prevent the importation of disease from the United States, where it was known occasionally to exist. If the arguments that were then advanced against the government for not carrying out our agreement faithfully were of any weight then they have ten times more force against the present government. The present government have done the very thing that they should not have done, and they have left undone the very thing that they ought to have done to convince the British people that there was no danger in importing cattle from Canada into the British market. We were told in 1896 that the reason for this embargo being put on was laxity of enforcement of the regulations. But we find there was another reason.

I have here a report of a conference of the Scottish Chamber of Agriculture and Associated Societies held in Edinburgh, on October 9th 1901. This conference took place with the Minister of Agriculture, and the desire of those associate societies was to get this embargo removed. In his reply he did'nt say the embargo was exactly due to the fact that he was afraid of the importation of the disease from Canada, because he admitted that it had been clearly demonstrated to the Minister of Agriculture as well as to the British parliament, that no pleuro-pneumonia had existed in Canada for a length of time ; and he said that was not the only cause of this Act being passed. But he said an effort to remove the Act would be unsuccessful for certain reasons. What were those reasons ? He explains what they were :

Then there is another idea abroad, that only Canada suffers, and that only Canadian cattle are effected by the present Act. But of course that is not the case. It applies to live animals all over the world, and in that respect Canada is exactly on the same footing as any other country. Oh but, it is said, Canada is the only country where there is no disease, and therefore you should treat Canada specially. But that is not the case. The United States claim equally with Canada to be absolutely free from disease, and the fact is that we cannot differentiate between Canada and other countries. Once any other country shows, what is no doubt very difficult to prove, that it has a clean bill of health, you cannot stop at Canada. You would have to make an alteration in the law to affect every country that could supply us with store cattle.

And why can you not stop at Canada ? He goes on to say why ?

One gentleman talked about undoing, not only the Act of 1896, but also any other arrangement made for putting all other nations on the same footing as Canada. You cannot do it. You cannot revise your treaties at a moment's notice ; and it is under treaties with other countries that we are obliged to afford to them exactly the same treatment as to Canada.

It is a wonder that our government never thought of that when they gave the magnificent concession to the British government of a preference on the importation of their goods. They were allowed a concession which was not granted to other countries. They were allowed a special consideration in our market and nothing was asked in return. Would it not have been an opportune time to have said to them : We give you a consideration which we give to no other country in the world. We give you a special consideration in our market. Is it not proper for us to ask you to give us a consideration which you say cannot be done unless you give it to all other countries ? Would it not be proper for us to ask you to cancel these treaties so as to enable you to give us a consideration which will be equal to the consideration which we give you ? We know that the government made no effort in that direction. They were perfectly indifferent in regard to it because there was not a word said about it. If the British government were right in their contention in 1896 that it was because of the laxity of quarantine regulations and because of the enforcement of other regulations which permitted the carrying of American cattle through Canada, and if this laxity was responsible for the adoption of the embargo, I would remind the House that there are no regulations now at all. If the embargo was due to these causes before how can you expect, having removed these restrictions as to quarantine, without providing other regulations, to convince the English people that there is no danger of the possibility of the importation of disease ? We have succeeded in convincing them that there is no disease in the country. Then, we want to take a step further and convince them that under our quarantine and other regulations there is no possibility of the importation of it. We have not been able to do that, and the government have not addresed themselves to that phase of the question. They seem to be perfectly indifferent to it. I think so long as our quarantine regulations remain as they are, it is almost useless to pass such a resolution as this, because the English people can answer at once by saying that there is nothing to prevent the importation of disease from the United States into Canada where they have had occasional outbreaks of pleuro-pneumonia in that country. They would say : As long as your regulations remain as they are we shall consider it unwise to amend the law which prohibits your cattle from being imported into our country without being slaughtered at the port where they land. Last summer when the hon. Minister of Agriculture was home, when he incidentally mentioned that question and intimated the importance it would be to Canada to have the embargo removed, he did not make the effort he should have done to have it removed. He did not seem to go about it in a business way, in a way to convince the British people that there was no danger of the importation of disease by the admission of Canadian cattle, and that we thought we should have some consideration for what we have done for them. It is all generosity on one side and all laxity on the other side, for while he boasted of giving a preference to the English people, he never took the slightest interest in asking them in consideration of that preference to do something in return, and give us a preference that they were not prepared to give to the United States or any other country in the world.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). In consequence of what the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has said in regard to this matter, I think it would be well for me to make one or two slight explanations. In the first place, I would say in regard to the wording of the motion, that while I did not see it until this evening, I take no exception to it in its general terms or to the statements of fact, which are there declared. The motion says that :

Evidence having been furnished to the British authorities proving that there is no justification for the application of the Diseases of Animals Act (Great Britain), to the cattle of Canada, &c.

I have no hesitation in endorsing that statement. The evidence was so completely submitted to the Minister of Agriculture in England, the Hon. Mr. Hanbury, that he first, privately, to myself, when I was interviewing him, acknowledged that there was no disease amongst our animals in Canada against which the provisions of this Act ought to be entorced. When I suggested to him that it would be well to make that statement publicly he shortly afterwards, in an interview, which the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has just been alluding to, made that statement publicly, saying in answer to the assembly of the associations in Edinburgh that he believed to-day that in Canada there was no contagious disease such as they feared the introduction of into England. We therefore say that the evidence has been supplied to Great Britain to show that there is no justification for the application of this Act as against Canadian cattle. Since I have spoken of the interview at Edinburgh, I would refer to the fact that the hon. member for East Grey has quoted Mr. Hanbury's statement about the favoured-nation clause. He seems to think that this favoured-nation clause would interfere with any application of the Diseases of Animals Act. The two things have nothing whatever to do with each other. The favoured-nation clause applies simply to customs duties and has no reference whatever and does not in any way interfere with the application of Animals Diseases Act or of its relaxation. That was brought to Mr. Hanbury's attention shortly afterwards by myself through Lord Strathcona and an officer of his department wrote acknowledging that Mr. Hanbury had made a mistake in making that reference to the favoured-nation clause, because it had nothing to do with this matter at all. As far as this motion is concerned, I have already stated on more than one occasion that I believe the people of Canada are unanimous in regard to this matter. I believe that everybody in Canada who has given the slightest attention to this question of the embargo on our cattle is fully convinced, in the first place, that no disease exists in this country, and, in the second place, that it was not necessary for the protection of the herds in Great Britain. I feel that the parliament and government of Canada can approach the imperial authorities on this question with the greatest force and strength. The line which is proposed by this resolution is exactly the line I took myself last year in Great Britain. It is following up with greater force the line which I took then, having a formal resolution of the Canadian parliament at its back, and with greater force because the representations would be made, not by the Minister of Agriculture of Canada, but by the Prime Minister of Canada, acting in his capacity as the plenipotentiary of this country at the imperial conference. I think it is well this resolution should be passed, that this enforcement and strength should be given to the Prime Minister of this country when he goes as the plenipotentiary of Canada to the imperial conference in London, and when he will be able to take the position which is here taken. There are one or two other matters which I would like to allude to. I feel no hesitation in asking this of the British authorities, because I am satisfied that in asking it we are not asking anything which will, in the slightest degree, hurt Great Britain. I do not wish to ask a favour from the mother country which she might think would hurt her people, but in this case we are asking something which will not only not hurt her, but which will really help her. It is a well known fact that the cattle-raisers of Great Britain do not wish to have Canadian stockers freely imported into the interior of the country, but it is also a well known fact that a very large number of farmers in Great Britain who are feeders of cattle and who buy stockers for the purpose of feeding them are very anxious that there should be Canadian stockers available for purchase. We also know that butchers in the large centres of Great Britain would be glad to have either our stockers or fat cattle permitted to be imported into the interior of the country, there to be slaughtered whenever it was thought best for them to be slaughtered.

They appreciate the fact that these animals, when they land at the six ports in Great Britain which are open to them, have to be slaughtered within eight days after their arrival whatever their condition may be. It not unfrequently happens that Canadian cattle, as well as American and Argentine cattle arrive in Great Britain, and are taken to the lairages after a tempestuous voyage, sometimes severely injured, it would of course be a great deal better in the interest of the food of the people, if these animals could be turned out on pasture and fed for a while before being slaughtered. The butchers of Manchester, Birmingham, Wolverhampton and the inland cities where there are no lairages are all very keen to have Canadian cattle permitted to enter the country free.

My hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) has alluded to the quarantine between Canada and the United States. I have here the representations that were made last spring to the imperial authorities in a formal despatch from the government of Canada to the government of Great Britain. It is distinctly stated in that dispatch that the quarantine of 90 days beween Canada and the United States had been removed in 1897, and it is clearly outlined why it was removed, and the well known fact is mentioned that in the United States for nearly ten years, there never has been a single case of pleuro-pneumonia. It is stated that in consequence of the fact that in the United States this disease is unknown, and that the American people were fully convinced that this disease was not in existence and never had been in existence in Canada, the authorities of the two countries felt themselves justified in removing that 90 days quarantine. I have also here the answer of the imperial government to that memorandum, and in that answer there is not the slightest reference made to the removal of the quarantine between Canada and the United States. That fact is not given as an excuse in any shape or way for refusing to remove the embargo against our cattle. It was not considered to be a thing which entered into the argument at all, and I venture to think that if it were one of the chief reasons why the imperial authorities declined to remove the embargo as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) contends, the imperial authorities would have put it forward as a reason in their reply to our memorandum.

Mr. SPROULE. I did not say that so much, as I showed that the contentions of the friends of the Minister of Agriculture in 1896 were absurd, because if when the quarantine regulations were restricted it was sufficient to induce the British government to put on the embargo ; it would be unlikely they would remove the embargo when there was no quarantine.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was not in the House in 1896, but I watched the discussion pretty closely, and the contention then was that animals had come across the frontier and had been exported from Canada to England, in which the disease was found. We contended that these animals were not afflicted with pleuro-pneumonia and I think that was pretty fairly proven at the time. Sir Charles Tupper very clearly argued that then, and he thought he had proved it pretty conclusively. But if there was any danger at that time from animals coming through here, since then pleuro-pneumonia has ceased to exist in the United States. I do not remember the year in which these animals were supposed to be diseased.

Mr. SPROULE. 1892.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes. As a matter of fact in 1897, when the quarantine between Canada and the United States was removed, it was clearly shown to me by the Bureau of Animal Industries in Washington, that in the United States there had been no known case of pleuro-pneumonia for four years before 1897. As a matter of fact there were a few isolated cases in the United States in 1892, but from that to the present day there has not been known to be a single case of pleuro-pneumonia in the United States or in fact on the North American continent. I can say this of our neighbours in the United States ; that they have to-day a very complete organization in their Bureau of Animal Industries in Washington for the supervision and control of contagious diseases of animals, which they are working from Washington all over the Union. Under these circumstances I feel that there is not the slightest reason for the imperial authorities maintaining the embargo because of any danger of pleuro-pneumonia coming from Canada or the United States. But I wish to point out, that if the imperial authorities are willing to remove the embargo and make it a condition that we should put the quarantine against the United States, we are perfectly free to do so to-morrow. We are free to do just as we find most conducive to our own profit and advantage. We have removed the quarantine between us and the United States by Order in Council, and we are free to impose it again by Order in Council any day, just as the Americans are free to impose the 90 day quarantine against us any time by an Order of their Department at Washington. If any difficulty might arise from that, we are perfectly free and they are perfectly free to take whatever course we believe to be in the best interest of our own people. Therefore the argument based on that falls to the ground. I would like to add that I am perfectly satisfied that the imperial authorities appreciate and understand that there is no cattle disease in Canada. The reason which Mr. Hanbury gave to me, and gave to the people of England who interviewed him for the continuance of the embargo is : That he believed it better, in the interest of the trade, to have a fixed statute rather than to have a regulation which might be changed from time to time. It is an ingenious reason and it is put forward pretty plausibly. I confess that it does not appeal to me at all strongly, and I think that it does not appeal to a very large number of people in England. He has receded entirely from the position that he was maintaining that embargo as against disease in Canada. I may say to my hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, that I do not think that I said anything which would indicate that Mr. Hanbury or any one over there acknowledge that they were doing this because of protection to their cattle industry, or from a protective point of view, as we understand protection in Canada. Neither Mr. Hanbury nor Mr. Chamberlain nor any one I came into contact with, would acknowledge that. Whatever may have been their thoughts or whatever might have been the conclusion we might draw from their action, they have never acknowledged that they were doing this for the purpose for what we call protection in Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What I said was that the Minister of Agriculture himself had stated that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think I ever stated that. I am certain that I have never stated that, but I have stated this : That I was led to believe myself from their action that they had some such reason for doing it. But I never said that Mr. Hanbury or Mr. Chamberlain acknowledged it, because when I rather taxed them with it they distinctly disclaimed it and refused to acknowledge for a moment that they did this out of a protective spirit.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). All I said was : That the hon. gentleman himself had stated that he was satisfied that the real reason they retained the embargo was because of protection to the British producers.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think I have stated that, but I understood the hon. gentleman to say that I said that they had acknowledged this in England.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am glad I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, because I would not wish that impression to get abroad.

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Gill says in his speech before Mr. Hanbury :

The real question is that it is a battle between free trade and protection.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Oh yes, some of the people in England have said so, but no official and no one in any responsible position has acknowledged to me, or acknowledged so far as I know, that that is the case. I think myself there is a possibility, on such an occasion as the imperial conference between Great Britain and the colonies, of general questions of commerce and trade between the different parts of the empire being taken up ; and I think that is a fitting occasion on which to discuss this question—to approach it on a broad and imperial ground. I think therefore it is well that the Prime Minister should do that, and it is certainly better that he should do it endorsed and supported by a resolution of the House of Commons, which would show that the representatives of the people of Canada feel strongly on this matter, and are unanimous in their opinion in regard to it.

Amendment agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). I understand that a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee has been called for Tuesday, and Mr. Kemp, who has left for home, wished to ask the Minister of Public Works to have sent to the clerk of the committee the papers, vouchers and correspondence in his office in connection with the question regarding Mr. Boudreau. There was a resolution passed calling for the vouchers and documents which are in the Public Works Department. Mr. Kemp also wrote a letter to the minister a day or two ago about them, but they are not down yet.

Main motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Prince Edward Island Railway, $510,650.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. On the last day that we were discussing these estimates, I was asked to state to the committee what was the departmental estimate of the total cost of the works in contemplation at Sydney. I am able to do that now. The total cost is estimated in round figures at $400,000. We have already appropriated and partly expended $314,000 of this amount. I was asked also with regard to Lévis. Our estimate of the expenditure there, covering the whole period from 1896 down to the present moment, is $340,000, and we require, in addition to the estimates placed on the table, $60,000 in round figures. I do not know that I was asked as to the expenditure at Stellarton, but whether I was asked or not, I have a statement showing that the total expenditure contemplated there amounts to $116,000. Our appropriation for last year was $20,000, of which we have expended, from the 1st of July, 1901, to the 31st of March, 1902, $10,000 in round numbers, which leaves $9,623.49 of that appropriation yet to be paid out. There is about $80,000 yet required to complete the works, but we are not asking for that amount at present. We are proposing to complete the scheme as speedily as we can, according to the plans that have been laid down. I was asked how much of the appropriation of $15,000 for works at Rivière du Loup was for grading and how much for land. Our estimate of the grading is $9,000, which would leave $6,000 for the land. We have not yet made any arrangements for the land or approached the persons who own it, but our officers estimate that that amount will suffice. The total expenditure at Point Tupper is estimated at $113,000 in round figures.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understood from the minister that the Hillsboro' bridge is to cost $1,200,000, that to complete the branch to Murray harbour it will cost $1,400,000, and that $200,000 is the cost of extra locomotives on the Prince Edward Island road ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does that cover all the contemplated expenditure on capital account on the Prince Edward Island Railway ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When do you expect to have it completed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In two or three years.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the hon. gentleman furnish us with the amount of track already laid on the Intercolonial Railway with the new steel rails of the heavier weight per yard. How much of it is completed and how much remains to be completed ? What will be the cost of the contemplated improvements on the Intercolonial Railway altogether and when they will be completed ? Will the hon. minister bring this information down when we are next on the items of the Intercolonial Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will ask the officers of the department to furnish that information and see that it will be available when we take up the first item in supplementary estimates. I may say now that we laid last year 124½ miles of the new and heavier rails. This year we have laid some 64 or 65 miles, and expect to lay about 40 miles or 50 miles more before the end of the present fiscal year.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to make a remark or two in connection with the Murray Harbour and some other railway matters in Prince Edward Island. Any remarks which I may make need not be considered as adverse criticism of the money vote, because that vote is necessary, and the complaint I am making is that there is not sufficient money expended on the Prince Edward Island Railway. This Murray Harbour branch was contemplated many years ago. When the Prince Edward Island Railway was built in 1872-3, this section of country lying south of Hillsborough was left without any railway accommodation. Since then the people have been clamouring for this accommodation, and it is only lately that their request has been granted. This railway runs through an extensive area of country lying south of Hillsboro, some 30 or 40 miles away from any railway communication. The country is an agricultural one, settled by people who are frugal, industrious and honest, and as they have been contributing to the building of railways all over Canada, it is only right that they should receive some consideration. And though this amount may appear large for the building of the railway and the completion of a bridge across the Hillsborough, it is not anything too great in the interests of the people. This branch of railway extends from Southport to Murray Harbour, having a bridge across the Hillsborough to which the people of Prince Edward Island are obliged to contribute. It will become an important feeder of the Prince Edward Island Railway and eventually assist in largely reducing the deficit on that line. There are also other branches contemplated, and I want to call attention to the branch line in West Prince, which was also part of the scheme of building feeders for the purpose of assisting to develop the main line. I refer to the branch line at or near O'Leary station, on the west shore of Prince Edward Island, a distance of some 12 or 15 miles from the main line. The people living in that section have neither harbours nor wharfs nor any facilities for shipping their produce, and are obliged to haul their stuff a distance of 15 miles or so over pretty bad roads. Last year I brought the matter up before the hon. minister, and he said he could not have a survey or an estimate made of the cost of building the line then but he hoped at a future day to be able to obtain these. I hope that this year he will see that a survey is made between O'Leary and the western shore of Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between O'Leary and Cape Wolfe.

Mr. HACKETT. I am glad to see that the miniser understands the situation. The building of that branch will prove not only a feeder to the main line but be a great benefit to the farmers and fishermen on that section of the coast.

I want also to call attention to the fact that Cape Wolfe is only about 20 miles distance from the shores of New Brunswick at Richibucto in the county of Kent. From Richibucto to the Intercolonial Railway there is a line of railway known as the Kent Northern Railway, which is controlled by Mr. Brown, at Richibucto. If this branch were built to the west coast, there is commercial enterprise enough in that section of the country to place on a small steamer to open up communication with Richibucto, which is distant 15 miles, and communicates directly with the Kent Northern Railway and the Intercolonial Railway. This would develop trade there and afford greater facilities to the people. The people in the western end of Prince Edward Island have to go all around to the eastern part before they can ship their produce. This railway would very much lessen the distance, and prove of great advantage to the people. I trust the minister will order a survey and an estimate to be made, and I hope that on some future occasion we will find a sum in the estimates to build, this branch line, which is so necessary to the people.

We know that in these days of progress more rapid transportation facilities are required, and the people who have not got these are absolutely out of the race. In the western part of the island, from Summerside to Tignish, in the summer season, for about eight months, we have two trains a day running in that section. During the winter season one train is taken off, and the people are obliged to put up with the accommodation afforded by that one train per day. Realizing the difficulties under which they labour, a large meeting of the electors of West Prince was held in the village of Tignish last November for the purpose of discussing the matter. It was largely attended by the leading men of the district, including four or five members of the local legislature and the Hon. Senator Yeo and other gentlemen of standing. At this meeting the following resolution was passed. And, if it would strengthen my claim at all I would tell the hon. minister that these gentlemen are strong Liberals and have always been so. One of them, the mover, is a member of the firm of J. H. Myrick & Co., and one of the greatest patrons of the railway, and the seconder is Rev. D. M. Macdonald, who has been for thirty years parish priest of Tignish and that part of the country. The resolution is as follows :

Whereas the train accommodation accorded to West Prince is altogether inadequate to the needs of country, and little if any improvement on that afforded at the opening of the road quarter of a century ago.

And whereas one single train per day for this large and prosperous section of country is in nowise calculated to engender traffic for the road itself, since traffic only follows proper facilities.

And whereas, much if not all the enormous expense of keeping the road free from blockades would certainly be saved by operating two trains in winter ;—

Therefore resolved, that this mass meeting of the electors of West Prince, do hereby urge upon the Minister of Railways, Hon. A. G. Blair, the necessity of running two trains in winter as well as summer over this best paying section of our railway ; and further resolved that the representatives in the Senate and House of Commons be requested to urge upon the Railway Department of Canada, until granted, these altogether necessary improvements.

This resolution was unanimously passed at this large and representative meeting of the electors of all shades of politics in West Prince. The meeting also appointed a committee composed of Rev. A. E. Burk, Mr. McFayden and Capt. Reid, M.L.A., to wait upon the manager of the railway at Moncton and also to see the minister himself with regard to this accommodation. These gentlemen, at great personal expense and at a busy part of the season, did see the manager at Moncton, and I understand also that some of them saw the minister. We expected that as a result we would have last winter this second train per day. Nothing was done. However, the second train was placed on the route a little earlier this year than last year—the 14th of April, as against the 14th of May last year—but the spring has been a month in advance of last year. The minister knows that we have the two trains for eight months in the year, and surely he will see that for the accommodation of the people west of Summerside—some of them sixty-eight miles from Summerside—the two trains a day should be kept on for the other four months of the year. I trust the hon. minister will give the matter his favourable consideration and that he will find himself in a position to say to me this evening that we are to have the two trains a day.

Mr. HACKETT.

Another improvement that is needed on the Prince Edward Island Railway is a new station at Alberton. The minister referred to this yesterday, and said that some day in the future it would actually be required. The station buildings at Alberton, Charlottetown and Georgetown—he provides for a station at Georgetown in the estimates which we discussed last night—are three of the old stations erected by the contractors when they built the railway nearly thirty years ago. They may have been considered first-class buildings at that time. They are not only old, but they are antiquated, out of date. The building at Alberton especially is rapidly going out of repair. The hon. minister will remember there is a 'Y' at the station. If he does not recollect it, the deputy minister and chief engineer, who built the railway and knows all about it, will be able to inform him. The train coming from east or west, is obliged to back up a quarter of a mile or so to take the main line, a matter which involves not merely delay, but also danger to the trainmen and passengers. I trust that when the hon. minister builds the new station, which I hope he will do soon, he will do away with this 'Y' nuisance. I shall be very glad if the hon. minister can give me an answer this evening with regard to these matters.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure the hon. member (Mr. Hackett) that it is not because I have not had the importance of these subjects very urgently pressed upon me that attentions had not been given them before this, and that parliament has not been asked to give us money wherewith to make the improvements. I refer now particularly to the improvements at Alberton, Charlottetown and other points on the main line. I am fully aware of the need of a good deal being done, but we are making such a large outlay with respect to the Hillsborough branch railway that I have not felt that I should be quite justified in taking up these works to the extent we might do if we had not so large an undertaking on our hands. I sympathize fully with the view the hon. gentleman presents, and, for my part, would be well disposed to go as far as it is possible to go in order to meet his views. I have been pressed by other representatives from the island in the same direction, but have been obliged to say to them what I am compelled to say to the hon. gentleman to-night that, they must exercise some patience until a more favourable opportunity offers for taking these things up properly. As to the matter of the train, I think that possibly something might have been done last winter towards establishing a second train during the winter but for a variety of causes. It was late in the season when it was taken up, and then the question was somewhat complicated by the proposal to establish connection between Cape Tormentine on the New Brunswick side at the end of the Cape Tormentine Railway and the Prince Edward Island road on the other. Efforts were being made in that direction, and, until we knew just how they would develop, I was advised by the officers of the line, the final conclusion to run these trains as proposed, perhaps, had better not be pushed. While it was late in the summer season it was very early in what is called the winter season. Then circumstances personal to myself arose which really prevented me for quite a time from giving any attention at all to the subject. And so the season went by. I am only desirous, and, even at some cost to the country I would be willing to give to the people on the island a reasonably good service. I think they are entitled to it, and I sympathize very fully with their wishes in that direction. I do not think I can say more at this moment. I do not think it would further the object in any way for me to make a more definite statement. The hon. gentleman will have to be content with the expression of my desire to go as far as I possibly can, consistently with all the considerations that affect the question, in meeting the wishes of the people with respect to these trains.

Mr. HACKETT. With regard to the second train, I am satisfied to let the matter rest with the minister, and I presume he will do right by the people of that section of the country. I would like to ask what the intention is with regard to the branch line from O'Leary to the west shore ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That subject, though it has not been brought prominently before me, has been debated a good deal in connection with the Kent Northern Railway. Those who are interested in the Kent Northern Railway have in the public press and various other ways been urging it as a desirable road at all events in the summer season and to some extent in the winter for persons who wish to reach the island from the west in a most expeditious way. It would make a quicker and in some sense a closer connection than they now get by either Point du Chêne or Cape Tormentine. But it has not been really urged upon my attention as an urgent question. I would not like to encourage the hon. gentleman to expect that, while we have in hand this Hillsborough undertaking, we would be likely to take up the branch line that he spoke of to Cape Wolfe. I think that will have to remain pending for a time. No doubt it has much to recommend it ; but at present I am not able to express a decided opinion upon it.

Sault Ste Marie canal—To deepen and widen entrances, $50,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to continue the work of deepening and widening the entrance of the Sault Ste Marie Canal. I think it is generally known that we are at a disadvantage as compared with the entrance to the canal on the American side. We have but an inch or two of 18 feet at best, and some serious accidents have occurred. We desire to place our canal upon an equally satisfactory footing with that of our neighbours. The entrance to the lock on the American side is 22 feet, and we would not like to have anything less than that. I am proposing to carry that work on until we have a sufficient entrance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will it cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost for both the upper and lower entrance is in the neighbourhood of $450,000. The lower entrance will cost in the neighbourhood of $140,000 to $150,000, and the upper entrance in the neighbourhood of $300,000. We have not commenced the upper entrance yet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon. gentleman know what he is paying per yard.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deputy minister tells me we are paying $2.95 per yard. It is a mixture of loose rock and earth.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was this by tender and contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Would the department be able to furnish what quantity of it is rock and what is clay, so that we may be able to see whether the price is correct ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is reasonable. I will let the hon. gentleman know whether the information is available.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It ought to be available, because the department ought not to let the contract without knowing that. Would the hon. gentleman tell me what is the average height of water on the mitre sill of the lock now, and whether the water of lake Superior is lowering or rising at Sault Ste Marie ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deputy states there has been no perceptible fall in the water, if anything it is a little higher. The height is now 20 feet and 3 inches.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In order to make that available to navigation it would need to be a couple of feet more in the prism.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the prism is all right.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But there is a prism on the bottom from the lock down, and that ought to be at least 22 feet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what we propose to make it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who are the contractors ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Bowman is the contractor.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Were there many tenders ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were three, this was the lowest.

Mr. SPROULE. When will this be completed ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The lower entrance is completed now, the upper entrance has not been commenced.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose that is virtually to provide accommodation to the people of Sault Ste Marie. If I understood rightly, the contract was made with Mr. Ryan to have the whole of it excavated as far as the American channel, and this money you are expending now is to reach the wharf in the town.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, this is the main entrance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But you say the principal part of this vote is below the lock ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To the lower entrance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understood that under the old contract that was provided for, but that there was not sufficient depth to allow vessels coming through the canal to go to the wharf in the town, and that large expenditure was necessary.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not the fact. There is only 18 feet and 6 inches provided for in the Ryan contract, and also for the general purposes of the canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Perhaps it is under the Public Works Department that they are doing this excavation at the town.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it is. We are not doing it.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. minister aware whether the Canadian Pacific Railway boats use this canal or not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think they do. There is a question of coal that arises which may perhaps tend to divert a certain portion of the traffic. I think they use it occasionally.

Mr. SPROULE. I have heard it contended that it was owing to the privilege they have of coaling on the American side providing they use the American canal, but I have also heard it contended that it was owing to the unsuitability of the canal for boats to pass through. It would be a matter of importance to know whether or not that is a fact, and if it is a fact it would be much better that the canal should be finished at the earliest possible date.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am given to understand that there is nothing in the suggestion.

Mr. BENNETT. I think the statement of the hon. minister is quite correct as to the coaling privilege which vessels receive on the American side ; in other words, that by touching there they are enabled to coal up without paying duty. Persons who are conversant with the names of some of the larger craft on the upper lakes will notice that many of these American boats go through the Canadian lock and there is no question as to the superiority of the Canadian lock as compared with the American lock. It is always a startling thing to people who recognize the names of the larger American vessels to see how many of them pass through the Canadian lock. The fact that vessels go through the American lock is not a question of the superiority of that lock but it is entirely due to the fact, as I have been time and again informed by vessel men that they desire to avoid the high price of coal on the Canadian side.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is as I understand it.

Trent canal—construction (revote, $300,000), $300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a revote out of the appropriation of last year. We are not expecting to spend more than $315,000 and we are asking that the balance of the unexpended vote of last year be authorized this year.

Mr. BENNETT. I think that the ridings or counties that are abutting on this system of navigation, commonly known as the Trent Valley canal, can hardly find fault with the government for the manner in which they are treating them. Commencing with the year 1896 and down to 1901 there have been very considerable expenditures in connection with the works, running from $400,000 in 1896 to $486,575 in 1897, and amounting to $284,503 in 1901. The work has therefore been pushed with much more vigour within these past five or six years than heretofore. In connection with this work I am sure that if the general public knew the importance of it more attention would be paid to it. Let me tell the committee and the hon. minister that at the town of Peterborough there is being erected now a very large industry that is entirely due to the presence of this system of navigation. I refer to what is known as a factory for the manufacture of cereal foods in which some Americans are investing an immense amount of money, and I was told yesterday that they intend to start in a few months with a daily consumption of at least 20,000 bushels of grain, so that the extent of the business may be realized. It is intended at this factory to manufacture these so-called prepared foods not only for consumption in Canada but for export to the old country. I was assured by a gentleman in Peterborough the other day that it was likely, that, if the canal had been an accomplished fact to Lake Ontario, they would have secured a very large iron industry a little time ago. I must congratulate the ministry on the fact that they have pressed this work forward and that they have accomplished a considerable amount within the past few years, but while this has been going on there are some sections of the work which, I think, call for some explanation as to why they have not progressed faster. Let me call attention to the construction of the lock a little below the town of Peterborough which I am pleased to say I saw a few weeks ago and which is really a wonderful work. I see by reference to the report of the hon. minister the following statement in regard to this work.

> Section No. 2, Peterborough—Lakefield division. The contract for this section was awarded to Messrs. Corry & Laverdure, on May 21, 1896, and the time for completion was fixed by this contract on November 1, 1897.

Here we are in 1902 and while, of course, a large amount of work has been done, that contract is not finished. I would like to know when that lock will be completed and in running order. The completion of that lock means that from a distance above Fenelon Falls there will be, for 20 miles at least, a stretch of clear water to the town of Peterborough, and yet it is impossible for that long stretch to be utilized until this lock is completed ; not only from there but all the way down to Hastings on the eastern end. Yet, in this report it would seem that the completion of that part of the work was called for on the 1st of November, 1897, and is still in an uncompleted state. Can the hon. minister inform us when the lock below Peterborough will be completed which is covered by the Corry & Laverdure contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A great deal of the delay has been due to the non-execution of the contract for the steel work of the structure. True, the masonry contract has not been carried out very rapidly, but I think it would have been done more quickly if we had felt any confidence that we could have got the steel portion of the structure completed and in shape to erect. I think it is some two years ago since we made the contract and I do not know that we can look with very much confidence to having the steel for the structure ready before next year.

Mr. BENNETT. The report contains the following reference to the hydraulic lock contract :

> The contract for the steel work in connection with the hydraulic lock was awarded to the Dominion Bridge Company. The date in the contract calling for the completion of this work way May, 1900, but owing to the concrete work nor the press wells not being completed it was impossible to commence the erection of the steel work.

By the report it would seem that the steel work was to have been completed by May, 1900, and yet we are two years past it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BENNETT. Can the hon. minister state approximately when it is expected that the hydraulic lock will be in working order ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not think before next year. We will hardly get it finished during the fiscal year for which we are now asking an appropriation. The best we can hope is at the end of next year.

Mr. BENNETT. I understand that there is to be an hydraulic lock at the end of what is called the Balsam lake section ? How is that work progressing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The work is progressing fairly well. I think it is very near completion as far as the ditching is concerned.

Mr. BENNETT. I mean as to the lock at Kirkwood—not the section below.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We expect the concrete work to be finished this summer. Larkin & Sangster are the contractors and they are getting on very well.

Mr. BENNETT. The report does not state when Love & Aylmer's contract is to be completed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The deputy cannot inform me at the moment, but I will give the information later.

Mr. BENNETT. I would judge from my observations in passing there that the contractors are pushing the work with commendable vigour. The Grand Trunk Railway Company are at present raising the track to obviate the necessity of a swing bridge. As to the general work I hope the Minister will require these contractors to press their different contracts to a completion at the earliest possible date. The possibilities of this canal open up a new field of thought. It was looked upon for many years as being of a local character, but it is now demonstrated that it may be used extensively for the transportation of grain. I may tell the House that I know from conversation with the owners of a large elevator at Midland with a capacity of a million and a quarter bushels, that they might have built their elevator at Buffalo, but that one strong reason that prompted them to come to Midland was that when this canal was constructed it would be a competitor for the transportation of grain, and that it would hold the railway rates in check. I strongly urge the minister that he should press vigorously the work between Balsam Lake and Lake Simcoe, and as soon as possible let the contract for the section on the Georgian Bay.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have Corry & Laverdure completed their contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not yet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understood they had a claim against the government which was left to arbitration, and that the arbitrators have made an award against the government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They had a claim in the neighbourhood of between $320,000 and $330,000 and while the deputy minister could not certify the amount which they claimed or for any amount which would be accepted by them as reasonably satisfactory, we adopted the expedient of having the matter adjusted by selecting reputable and competent engineers who would advise the chief engineer on the subject. It was not an arbitration in the ordinary sense, but it was an advisory board of three engineers who would go upon the work and examine it and state what in their judgment would be a fair allowance to make in respect to the claim. We selected Mr. Hobson and Mr. Surtees, and they suggested Mr. Brophy of the Public Works Department. We thought it would be impossible to have made the choice of any three men who would inspire more confidence or be better qualified to pass upon the question. They went into the subject very faithfully; some items they rejected, with respect to others they made recommendation to the chief engineer, and as a result the claim is practically settled on the basis of an allowance of $126,000. I need not say that result was very unsatisfactory to the claimants.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was the principle item of dispute as to quantities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. It was as to the prices. The work was of a unique character. We could not foresee what was required to be done. It is the first hydraulic lock that has been constructed in America, and I think there are only two or three anywhere. When I was in the old country I went to Brussels to see one of these locks, but our lock is on a much larger scale than that. We sent Mr. Rodgers there to examine it, and yet conditions arose which no past experience enabled us to grapple with. There were difficulties in connection with the prosecution of the work which led to differences of opinion between the officers of the department and the contractors, which had to be settled in some way, and which it will be admitted, I think, were settled in as satisfactory a way as possible. Even a resort to courts would not, I think, be as satisfactory or as advisable.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the council approved of the award?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not yet. It is still open. The stage to which the matter has progressed is this. The recommendation has been received from these gentlemen by the chief engineer, but it has not yet been followed up. It came in since the session opened, and we have not had time to enter into it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the chief engineer of the department mentioned his opinion or pledged himself according to the recommendation of these three engineers?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. It happened that they all three agreed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the chief engineer given his certificate yet?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. All I can say is that it is a most extraordinary proceeding. The Exchequer Court was formed for the purpose of settling these difficulties. By the contract the chief engineer is the judge as to the quantities and the work, and upon his certificate the amounts are paid. Then, a board of engineers is appointed, for what purpose? To inform the chief engineer what he ought to know himself, and the other engineers on the work, and they recommend that he shall give a certificate for certain prices and certain quantities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no question about the quantities.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The prices surely are fixed by the contract. There could be no difficulty at all with the chief engineer nor with the engineers in charge of the work, and I suppose there was not any. They certified as to the amount of work done. The contractor is not satisfied. In that case, there is a way of proceeding which we intended should be followed in all these cases, that is, to go to the Exchequer Court. But a convenient way is adopted of referring the question to three arbitrators—for what purpose? To provide a conscience for the chief engineer, to tell him what the prices and the quantities are, and he perforce has to follow their opinion and give his certificate in accordance with it. I hear that he has not given his certificate, and that the matter has not yet been before council. I hope that such an objectionable manner of proceeding will never receive the sanction of council, but that it will be sent back to the chief engineer for his certificate. If he has not certified to it, there must be a difference of opinion between the chief engineer and the contractors, or the contractors would not ask for a board of engineers to be appointed to look over the works and see what quantities are. The contractors must in some manner have received from the department the prices which the department chose to put on the work; and, if I understand the minister properly, there is a difference in the prices, but not in the quantities. They knew the prices the department was putting on the work, and if there was any difference, there was only one right way of settling it, that was, to go to the Exchequer Court, which was formed for the purpose of deciding such cases.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can only say that, from my experience in the department of the results of appeals to the Exchequer Court, I cannot concur in the conclusion the hon. gentleman has arrived at. The differences which arose were differences respecting the value of the work which these people did. My hon. friend said they should be governed by the prices, which prices would of course be stated in the contract. It does not happen that there were any prices in the contract for the particular work which formed the subject-matter of this claim. The engineers and officers had not foreseen—and that is where the difficulty of this particular class of structure came in—the necessity which arose for many descriptions of work separate from the contract. These claims were claims for extras, and it was necessary and proper that the amount of allowance which could properly be made to these people should be settled in some way or other. It is not unknown to the hon. gentleman in his experience that questions of that kind constantly arise in the department, and you could not ask the chief engineer to act as an arbitrator as between these parties, so that they would feel that they had fair consideration. The chief engineer, having an opinion on the subject, as far as he could form an opinion in respect of it, would not be willing to act, and he has always uniformly since he has been in the department declined to act in any such capacity. The hon. gentleman knows that right well. He says that in that alternative we could go to the Exchequer Court. Could anybody who wished to be fair and reasonable say that an Exchequer Court is an ideal tribunal for the purpose of ascertaining the value of the work that these people did? Or would a better tribunal be a board of engineers in whom you are entitled to have confidence, men of high standing, and men who you know would give you the benefit of their very best judgment. As between man and man, which would any one say was the proper tribunal to go to? I cannot think that there is any room for doubt. If anybody will say that Mr. Joseph Hobson or Mr. Robert Surtees, known as they are by everybody as reliable men as could be found in Canada, are not many times more competent to pass on a question of this kind than a judge of the Exchequer Court, then I will admit that we have gone the wrong way about bringing this matter to an end. You have to bring these matters to an end in some way; you cannot leave them hanging for ever. It is the duty of the minister in the department, and I intend to pursue that course while I am in the department, to have these claims disposed of as speedily as possible. There is no advantage in having men hanging around you from time to time waiting to have this question or that question disposed of. You had better pay a little too much than have that condition of things. If it were my hon. friend's own business and he wanted to protect himself, he could not pursue a wiser or more proper course, and he could not select any men who would be worthier of public confidence in such a trust than the men we chose for the purpose.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the amount of the original contract and by whom was the plan prepared?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You will get the total amount by taking the quantity. The original contract totals up $500,000 and the extras $126,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The contract is not finished yet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is an estimate based upon the schedule prices in the market.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand the minister to say that the contract is going on still and that this is an arbitration on progress estimates?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it will take some three or four weeks perhaps to finish.

Mr. BENNETT. As I understand the case, the contract is not for a lump sum for the entire work, but an estimate was made that a certain quantity of walls and other work would be required, and a price was fixed of so much per yard for concrete work, labour and materials. These were all placed in a schedule. It seems to me that if plans and specifications were prepared, which showed a superstructure of a certain size, surely one could arrive at a lump sum for the contract, but instead there were schedule prices fixed, and after the completion of the work and measuring up the entire structure, the amount due was to be arrived at. It does seem odd that on a contract involving approximately half a million dollars, the departmental engineer should be one-quarter out. The minister says that half a milion dollars was what the work was to cost.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was a change made in the work.

Mr. BENNETT. Which involved a cost of $129,000 more. There should have been no difficulty in arriving at a price to be paid for the extra work done. The minister had the benefit of the prices given in the original contract, and surely these would have furnished a basis for estimating the extras. It does seem odd that before the extras were begun, a hard and fast bargain was not made with the contractors. When the extras were commenced was there any basis settled, showing how much per yard or otherwise these extras should cost, or any schedule prices agreed to ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was a material change made in the plan, and in some other respects, and upon this change a claim was based. The handling of the material was made very much more expensive by reason of that change, and that is one of the items.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did the chief engineer certify as to the amount he thought these parties were entitled to ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had his views with regard to what would be a fair price.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Did he certify to that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman ask his chief engineer, who is alongside of him ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He certified to the progress estimates.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There has not been a final estimate made out yet ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is $139,000 over what the chief engineer certified to, on progress estimates, that he thought the parties were entitled to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is going up a little. He has increased the figure from $126,000 to $139,000.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. minister has not answered the question I put to him, which was this : Before the extras began, were any prices arrived at and submitted to the contractor ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the chief engineer had his views of what was a fair price, but they were not satisfactory to the contractor, and hence the difficulty.

Mr. BENNETT. If I understand the minister aright the position was this. Here was a contract let by the department to a firm of contractors under schedule prices for the work to be done. No lump sum could be arrived at because it was not known what quantities of material would pass into the work and what amount of labour would be required. But schedule prices were prepared and plans and specifications made out and the work began. At a certain stage the minister made up his mind to change the formation of the work to a certain extent, and the contractors were shown a plan of the changes contemplated and asked to go on with the work. The minister had in his own mind an idea of what the prices should be for the extras, but the contractors refused to accept his figures. The minister then said to the contractors : You go on with the work and we will make a settlement afterwards. I think I have put the case fairly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You put it fairly enough if the facts were as you have stated them.

Mr. BENNETT. I have put the facts as I understood the minister to have stated them. The extra work was contemplated by the minister. He will not deny that. He had information from his engineer as to what would be fair prices.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The difficulty had really arisen long before it first came to my knowledge. The work had been proceeded with, and I did not know it. It is not many months ago when the matter was first brought to my attention. The progress estimates had been going on some time before, based on the ideas of the chief engineer. His ideas did not agree with those of the contractors, and they began to think it was time some agreement was reached. Then the question was put before me, and after talking the matter over with the chief engineer, I agreed that these three men should arbitrate.

Mr. BENNETT. A change was contemplated in the plan ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was actually made in the work.

Mr. BENNETT. Is the House to understand that a change was made in the work with the consent of the minister or that it was unknown to him until this claim was made ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not know about the change when it was made. I never knew anything about it until the question came up as to what would be a proper price.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not understand the minister in that light Now we are in this position—here is a contract for work that will cost approximately half a million. While the work is progressing, the contractor, of his own accord, makes certain changes in the work, the minister knowing nothing whatever about them. After the contractor has performed the work in part he comes to the minister and says : I have made a lot of changes in the work and I demand from you payment for the extra work involved. And it seems that something in the neighbourhood of $125,000 is to be paid for work which the contractor alleges he did but which is entirely unknown to the minister. Is that the position ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I was unaware personally of what was being done. As I say the first knowledge I had of any difference between the department and the contractors was when the matter was brought before me, as it were, on appeal between the chief engineer and the contractors. At the time the question first came up a number of engineers had been down there at the instance of Messrs. Corry & Laverdure for the purpose of estimating the character and the reasonable cost of the work. There were some five or six of these engineers, including Mr. Kennedy, of Montreal, Mr. Keefer, Mr. Jennings and a number of others whose names are quite familiar to us all. These gentlemen had written their reports—not jointly—setting forth what they thought this character of work was worth. There was a very considerable difference of opinion between these engineers and the chief engineer of the department. We knew that if the matter went to the Exchequer Court that court would have no means of reaching a decision except by summoning engineers and taking their evidence under oath. Therefore we hit on the expedient of agreeing that engineers who had not previously been invited by Messrs Corry & Laverdure to look at the work and who had no connection with them should examine the work and give their opinion to the chief engineer. This idea we carried out.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For the better understanding of this matter will the hon. minister give the quantities of the work as originally let to Messrs Corry & Laverdure and then the change in the work with the quantities. The hon. minister must see that when extra work is performed by a contractor under the government and the engineers differ as to the prices or quantities —for the principle would apply to quantities also—they would have the same right as Messrs Corry & Laverdure to have an advisory board of engineers selected. I very much doubt that the chief engineer, having given his certificate of the value and quantity of the work, will change his certificate upon the recommendation of any set of engineers in the country. It is an extraordinary proceeding that, after giving his decision, he would revise it on the advice of other engineers. He is the chief engineer and ought to be as capable of forming an opinion as to prices and quantities as any board of advisory engineers can be. And, in view of just such disputes as the present one, this country formed a court to decide such matters, and when such cases arise, they ought to be sent to that court.

Mr. BARKER. As I understand the case, as developed by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) and the hon. Minister of Railways, these contractors performed certain work wholly unauthorized by the minister and without his knowledge. The question is, is the minister, under these circumstances, going to pay for the work ? Is he making these preparations with a view to paying for that work thus done without his authority ? If that can be done by one contractor there is no end to the expenditure that may be incurred in spite of the minister. Surely, there must be some control over public works. These gentlemen, according to the hon. minister's own statement, did work that he never authorized, yet the hon. gentleman is making every preparation to ascertain just what they ought to be paid for it. Surely the only way to deal with contractors who take this view of their position is to let them lie on the bed they have made—not pay them. Then, perhaps, they will keep within their contracts.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to know the difference in quantities.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, if he was expecting an answer to-night, I thought I said that we had not the information at hand and could not give it to him.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then the hon. gentleman will give it to me some other time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there any item on which this subject will come up again ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly, we have supplementary estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think we should have some explanation from the minister how it happened that the work for which a claim of $300,000 is made and for which an award of $126,000 was made subsequently, could be done without the knowledge and authority of the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) who was in the department before me would have more experience than I in that direction. Many changes are made in these works. Either the chief engineer or the engineers under him by his authority may make these changes, which do not necessarily come to the personal knowledge of the minister.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. gentleman did not state before that this was done on the authority of the chief engineer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Undoubtedly, it was on the authority of the chief engineer. And no doubt, the contractors were fully authorized to do it. I have not the slightest recollection of any question at all arising with reference to the canal or the possibility of these claims coming up until they actually arose. My first knowledge of it was when the work had progressed and we were nearing the time when the final estimate had to be paid and the question would have to be settled in one form or another.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In view of that explanation, which I did not understand before, it is clear that the question of my hon. friend from Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) remains to be answered. He wanted to know, if these changes were made, why the scale of prices was not fixed at the time the changes were authorized, and the minister answered by saying they were not fixed because he did not know anything about it. That might be a very good answer if it were correct. It turns out now it is not correct, because when we speak of the minister we speak of his department, of his officers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated to the hon. gentleman that the chief engineer had his ideas then as to what would be proper prices at the time the changes were commenced, but the contractors notified him that the work could not be done at those prices. I think I said that, at all events I intended to say it.

Mr. BENNETT. Then the position of the matter is this, according to the minister's last statement. When these changes were contemplated a discussion ensued between the chief engineer and the contractors as to the extra work. Now, the minister has not stated whether this was simply a matter of conversation or a matter of record in the department. Can the minister tell us whether these negotiations on the part of the contractors to make these changes, and the statement made in turn by the chief engineer as to the prices which he thought fair, were these matters of record in the department ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by negotiations. There were not any until after the work had progressed. The chief engineer stated what he thought were proper prices, and he made his progress estimates and the amount of the estimates was accepted, and payments were made upon them. But the contractors protested from time to time that this work was costing a good deal more than they were being allowed.

Mr. BENNETT. Then it was agreed upon between the contractors and the chief engineer that certain extra work was to be proceeded with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was decided by the chief engineer that changes should be made.

Mr. BENNETT. Changes that are commonly called extras. Now when these extras were contemplated there was a difference of opinion between the engineer and the contractors. The engineer said what he thought would be a fair price for the work, that is to say in the gross amount at schedule prices. To that proposition there was demurrer on the part of the contractors, they not acquiescing in the prices proffered by the chief engineer. Now I ask the minister is that a correct statement of the facts ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that is substantially correct, as I am given to understand. Prices were named by the chief engineer, the contractors did not agree with those prices, and from time to time, as the work went on, and it was found what the work cost, the contractors protested, and protested, and protested again.

Mr. BENNETT. Then this whole matter of negotiation must either have been by discussion or conversation between the contractors and the engineer, or by connected correspondence. Can the minister say which was the case ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer was not presented with a written protest ; they verbally protested from time to time.

Mr. BENNETT. I am referring to the proffer of prices on the part of the department through the chief engineer, and the refusal of the contractors to accept such prices. Is that a matter of record ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The matter of record is that the chief engineer made his progress estimates allowing certain prices in regard to the extras.

Mr. BARKER. That is after the work is done. You cannot make an estimate of progress until after the work is done. The question is, before they began these extras did the department offer the contractors certain terms, certain prices for the extras that were contemplated, or did they not ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the chief engineer said : Now we propose to make this change and we propose to allow such and such prices.

Mr. BARKER. Was this proposition in writing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it appeared in the estimates, the chief engineer said.

Mr. BARKER. The estimate cannot appear until the work is done. I am asking, when the proposition was made that they should do certain extras.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are progress estimates.

Mr. BARKER. But a progress estimate is not made until a certain amount of work is done. I am asking as to these extras, how were they done or entered upon ? Did the department propose that these extras should be done, alterations made in the work, and did they offer certain prices, and are those in writing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer says he thinks the first time the price appeared was when the first progress estimate was made.

Mr. BARKER. Then the work was begun without authority ; the extra work must have been begun without authority, if the first time it was brought up was when he was making an estimate for progress work already begun.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were authorized to go on and make these changes.

Mr. BENNETT. Is that on record in the department—anything to show the changes contemplated ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They were instructed to make these changes as the chief engineer suggested, they were bound to make them.

Mr. BENNETT. That is coming to the point. Now the point in this. The minister had decided upon certain changes in the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The department had.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, the department is the minister and the minister is the department. These changes being contemplated, without having any record at all or any agreement as to the price to be paid, these contractors went on with the work. Now is that a fair statement of the case ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would be a fair statement. They were instructed to go on with this work, and there were no prices allowed until the first progress estimates came up.

Mr. BENNETT. Then may I ask the minister what was the nature of the extras ? Was it similar to the work under the original contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it was not.

Mr. BENNETT. Then wherein did they differ ? In the changes that were made was there additional masonry work, or in what particular was the change ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am told there was a large quantity of water-tight embankment required that was not provided for in the original contract ; that was in place of steel work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. He must have had the written authority of the chief engineer for that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was instructed to do it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A contractor is not entitled to any extras unless he has the written authority of the chief engineer to make them. Further, when he does extra work beyond his contract, he has to notify the department within a certain number of days in writing. If he does not do it, no matter what his extras are, he is not entitled to anything under the contract. He must first have the authority of the chief engineer to make any changes in the contract. No engineer on the contract has authority to do it. We ought to have the facts. The hon. minister has promised to furnish them afterwards. We should know what changes were made in the original contract and what the work which was authorized to be done by the chief engineer, together with the quantities and prices allowed.

Mr BENNETT. The hon. minister cannot ask to have this item passed without the information which is the whole basis of the discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you have all the information I can give you to-night. There will be another item, or if there is not another item in the supplementaries. I will agree that the matter may be discussed on one of the other items.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. minister is willing to discuss the question on another item and have all the information ready when we ask for it I suppose the item may be allowed to pass.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly.

Soulanges canal, construction and equipment, $100,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are the construction and equipment, and what sums are necessary ? I would ask the hon. minister to just tell me at the same time the position of all the contracts upon the canal—whether any final estimates have been passed, and what the final estimates are on the different portions of the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Final estimates have been prepared for sections 12, 11 and 8. The other question the hon. gentleman asked me was what we were doing still in respect to the Soulanges canal work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are finishing and cleaning up throughout the entire length of the work. We are sodding. Sections 4, 5, 6 and 7, on which Mr. Onderdonk was the contractor, required to be sodded.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, it is all under contract and this is the completion of the contract. We are putting in the electrical equipment for the gates and valves. That work is pretty well completed now and the vote is for this purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Who has the contract for the electrical work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean for the plant ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Canadian General Electric Company.

Mr. SPROULE. At what price ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. One hundred and eight thousand will be the amount that will be coming to them probably when the contract is completed.

Welland canal—Improvements at Port Colborne entrance, $300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Of this amount $100,000 is a revote out of the appropriation of last year. We did not expend the whole $300,000.

Mr. BENNETT. How much was spent last year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $200,000. When I say last year, I mean the current year. We expect to spend $200,000 this year out of the vote of $300,000. We are revoting $100,000 and we are adding to that $200,000. We think that will complete the work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will be required to finish this work, and what will be the total expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimate of the total cost of this work is $1,100,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You have no idea as to the proportion which the Public Works Department are doing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I have not. I think they stated their portion of the work would cost another million.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When do you expect to have it finished ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We will have our part finished just as soon as the breakwater is completed. It is not worth our while to push our portion of the work through before the breakwater is completed.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the nature of the work being done by the hon. gentleman's department at Port Colborne ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are widening the entrance and deepening it. We are erecting piers and extending the piers along the west side and we are erecting two docks so as to afford facilities for the docking of two steamers on each side.

Mr. BENNETT. I have never been at Port Colborne so that I am not very conversant with the position of the harbour. Am I to understand that there is a dock on either side of the entrance ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, only on the west side. There is a short projecting pier on the east side. There is a long projecting pier on the west side, and at the end of that we are making arrangements for two docks on which elevators may be constructed.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the contractor for this work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Messrs Hogan & McDonald are our contractors.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much are you going to lower the mitre sill at Port Colborne ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Three feet.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the use of deepening the water on the mitre sill unless you deepen the reach.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The mitre sill at the entrance only shows 13 feet and instead of lowering it so as to make sure of a clear 14 feet we have made it 16 feet, because of the effect of the winds which makes the water shallower at the entrance. We do not propose to lower the other locks because they are able to afford 14 foot navigation, nor do we propose to make the channel 16 feet.

Rapide Plat—Canal, $57,600.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $32,600 of this is a revote.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who is working there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Gilbert Brothers.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This is simply work to remove work that was done there by Mr. Broder the contractor under the plan of the present superintending engineer. I do not find fault with the present work, but I do say that it has been become necessary because of work which was done at great cost by the present superintending engineer. We are spending this money to undo work that should never have been done in the first place.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you mean that the work which is being taken out was authorized by Mr. Rubidge.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes. There was a great deal of piering being done there and when it was being done the boatmen complained that the entrance could not be used, but notwithstanding that the engineer persisted in going on with the work and that work has now to be removed. The original work was done by Mr. Broder.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer believes that the work must have been done before he came into the department. He says that since he came in there was nothing done by the Broders.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That may be, but the original work was laid out by the present superintending engineer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am more concerned, and I suppose the Chief Engineer is also, as to the propriety of doing what we are now doing, and I understand from him that it is necessary that this work should be done.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think it is right too that this work should be done.

Galops canal, enlargement, $293,600.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $55,000 of this is a revote.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I claim that the work that is being done in the Galops channel interferes with the entrance to the canal to a certain extent, because it draws the water away from that. I have always taken the stand that that work in the Galops channel is an outrage, and I would like to bring it to the attention of the minister and make an appeal to him to have it stopped. The work was advised and commenced a number of years ago by the present superintending engineer, and was carried on for a number of years. I think that in the neighbourhood of $1,000,000 has been paid to the contractors who have been working there since the hon. minister has had charge of the department. The work was originally started with a view to enabling large steamers to navigate the Galops rapids. Steamboat men from year to year appealed to the government, claiming that those people could never navigate those rapids, even if the channel was made 17 feet deep. At the same time they claimed that that deep cut through the rapids would lower the water in the St. Lawrence above the rapids. After eight or ten years work in the channel, it was said to be completed and fit for use. I complained myself to the government, and insisted on an investigation, and instead of there being 17 feet of water, it was proved that there was only some 10 feet. Previous to my complaint, it was proved to the satisfaction of the government that the channel would never be of any use, and the scheme of putting a lock below the rapids was entertained, and the work was completed, and that is now being used. Every marine man that I know of on the river will admit that every vessel will go through that lift lock and will never use the channel.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are occasionally vessels that go down.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I live right there and see the rapids every day, and there are no steamers using that channel, unless a very small steamer which is more like a yacht. Even the old propellers, which are now out of date, all go through the canal. The hon. gentleman will find that no marine insurance commpany will take any risk on a steamer that will go down that channel. The firm that was working there last year, from the 1st of May to the 1st of December, were getting $425 a day. The minister said they only received $18,000 last year. That must be an error. They must have received $80,000 or $90,000 for last year's work, and it is currently reported that as soon as this session is over they are going to do it again. I wish to appeal to the hon. minister, as I did before, to have this work stopped, because in the eyes of the people it looks like an outrage to see the money squandered in this way. I do not think the minister has looked into this matter as he should, or he would never allow that work to continue for one hour longer, because it is simply squandering the public money and making a present of $375 a day to that firm. They are not working every day, and you are paying them $425 a day, and they do not work 25 days in the season. Why should this government pay $375 a day of clear profit to any firm in this country ? The people in my county would rather see you pay this firm a bonus of $30,000 or $40,000, rather than put it in this way, when they know that the whole thing is an imposition on the country. I would like the minister to let us know when this thing will be finished, so that it will be known that it is through, and no more money will be squandered on it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think, from what I am told, that there is something due to these people for work done last year, and I am advised that there will be a sum placed in the supplementary estimates, not a large sum, for the work—not for the purpose of making any new excavation, or taking out any new rock, but simply for the purpose of removing the rock which has already been disturbed and is lying loose on the bottom, and is, I am told, an obstruction to navigation. I cannot say that I see any particular advantage myself in having the work continued, since the canal will afford all the navigation that is necessary. As the hon. gentleman has mentioned the matter, it would be well to have it looked into fully before asking for any further appropriation. This is one of the works that the superintending engineer recommends very strongly.

Mr. BENNETT. Is this work paid for by the day or according to the quantities ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is on the basis of the agreement which was in force when I came into the department.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like the minister to ask the superintending engineer to give me a list of the steamers which use that channel, and I would like to know the name of any insurance company which will take a risk on steamers that will go down that channel. I intend taking this matter up again next session, and I would like to have the names of any good reliable vessel men who will agree to take any steamer drawing 14 feet of water down that channel. As to the agreement, these people had a contract for so many yards of excavation at $8.40 per yard, and I think it was the minister himself who changed that agreement to $425 per day. That plant is standing there and we are paying $425 per day for nothing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My chief engineer says that the price and everything else was settled before I came to the department.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Railways has a very short memory.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman very proud of his ?

Mr. REID (Grenville).

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes, I have a good memory, and I know that there was a contract under which these parties claimed a certain amount from the late government. I ordered the contract to cease and refused to pay, and gave them their remedy in the Exchequer Court. The hon. gentleman has asserted again and again that he is only continuing the contract which was made by the late government, and I have again and again pointed out the absurdity of his contention. These gentlemen had a contract per yard for excavation, and in order to find out whether the excavation was done to the proper depth or not, they had Mr. Kennedy, the engineer of the Harbour Commissioners at Montreal, up for the purpose of making an examination. I objected to paying the sum they claimed, because I looked upon it as one of the biggest frauds ever perpetrated by any firm on a government. It is utterly absurd to keep these dredges employed doing work which is entirely useless, and pay them besides this exorbitant price per day which my hon. friend from Grenville mentioned. Look at the enormous sums we have paid these contractors, nearly $1,000,000, and we have the same excuses offered every year. Last year the hon. minister told us that not only were they clearing out stones in the channel, but they had taken a contract to deepen it one foot more. Every year we have the same excuse, and every year we are told by the hon. gentleman that he is simply continuing the contract which his predecessors made. Even if that were true, that is no justification whatever. The engineers of his department might tell him that the work is entirely useless. As my hon. friend from Grenville says, the vessels that navigate the ordinary depth of the canal never use it at all, but utilize the canal altogether, and it is only light crafts that go down. Very seldom does a boat go down this channel, and yet these parties are year after year continuing this contract and being paid large amounts. I see that in the supplementary estimates he is asking $50,000 for work that was done last year in excess of the vote parliament gave.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not get any vote last year at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then the hon. gentleman must have been carrying on this work without any vote or authority. Is the $293,000 for the enlargement of the Gallops canal principally ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minister says he had no vote last year, yet he proposes to spend to the 1st of June next, $50,000, for which he is asking a vote in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to continue this way ? If the statements be correct, this expenditure is a burning scandal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The great trouble now is that if they do dredge out any more there, no matter how small, they will be drawing the water away over to that island and across the rapids and really interfering with the entrance of the present canal. If that water is to be drawn off by this dredge, something will have to be done. Since the minister has had charge of the department, $240,377 have been paid this firm, according to the Auditor General's Report, and then there is this $50,000 more, making a total of about $300,000. Previous to that there was $1,000,000 sunk right in that rapids, simply thrown away entirely.. I am quite satisfied that the minister cannot produce a man in his department, other than Mr. Rubidge, who will say that that channel is of any use. I am quite satisfied that if the chief engineer were put under oath, he would have to admit that the channel would be of no use at all. Why it should be continued, I cannot understand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It does seem rather an extraordinary condition of affairs that this dredge is employed at $425 a day to do work, according to the statement of my hon. friend, which is not only of no value to the country, but is actually a detriment, as it draws water from the mouth of the canal and makes it more difficult for vessels to get through. I do not suppose that any of the small craft that go down the rapids would have any difficulty in getting through the canal, and yet the minister expended $50,000 last year without a vote, in doing this work that is of no advantage at all. I notice that in the supplementary estimates the hon. gentleman has $50,000 for deepening and widening these rapids. I suppose that this is to pay for the work for which a vote should have been taken last year, and which the hon. minister says is not yet paid for. I may be wrong in my understanding of what the hon. gentleman said, but if my construction is the correct one it seems an extraordinary way to administer the department. He proceeds with this work at $425 a day, and then asks for a vote of about $50,000, and that for work which my hon. friend says is useless.

Mr. REID (Grenville). These small craft I may mention, never use this channel, but go down the regular steamboat channel on the other side, which has been used for forty years, because it is a very difficult matter to get into the channel. I do not believe that any large steamer can get through it. I remember the first trial made by a steamer to get through. She was one of the old Welland Canal steamers. Owing to the way the current runs she turned around and went backwards. After that, there were one or two small propellors tried it, but they tried it only once.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do not the Richelieu steamers go through ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Not one goes down that channel. They come up that channel, as they always did. The hon. gentleman knows there is not one of the Richelieu steamers running the St. Lawrence that draws more than seven feet, and that 25 years ago there was nine feet of water there. The Richelieu steamers went up the identical channel thirty years ago. So, the fact of deepening that channel is no help to them at all. Ever since this new lock has been there they go into the lock on the way upwards. But on the downward trip they go along the old channel they have been using for 25 or 30 years. I was speaking with the gentleman who has charge of the Woolvin fleet. They have chartered 20 steamers, the first of which is to sail from Duluth on the 5th of May.

Mr. BENNETT. What capacity are they?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Sixty thousand bushels. But there is not one of these steamers that the insurance people will allow to go through that channel. And I am satisfied that next session the minister will not be able to stand up in this House and say that one single steamer of the Woolvin people's fleet has gone down through that channel. The lockmaster in charge of the lock right opposite can give the names of all the steamers that have used that channel this year. If the hon. minister next session can name one steamer of the size of those of the Woolvin fleet—and this was supposed to be made for vessels similar to those of that fleet—that goes down that channel and gets through safe, I will not say a word further, and he can go on paying these people $100,000 a year as long as he is minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They will draw fourteen feet, will they not ?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, the channel was supposed to be fourteen feet safe. It was made seventeen feet so that a vessel drawing fourteen feet would go through safe. Though it was seventeen feet, and they were paid in full for the seventeen feet, they were paid one hundred or two hundred thousand extra to make it one foot deeper, so that there might be no possible danger to vessels drawing fourteen feet. But will the hon. minister have a vessel sent down drawing fourteen feet, and assume the responsibility of accident, instead of asking the companies to do so ? I feel quite justified in laying this matter before the minister and trying to get the expenditure stopped. This is not the first appeal I have made, for I have spoken of the matter year after year. If the minister wishes to continue the contract I will have to continue making this appeal every year to try to get the matter straightened out, so that this $100,000 a year may not continue to be divided among a few people, with profits of about $80,000. If it is to go on, I would rather have it put in straight as a charitable grant than to have it the way it is.

Mr. SPROULE. What explanation has the minister to give for the expenditure of this money without a vote of parliament? And how does he manage to satisfy the Auditor General?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Last year when the question came up as to whether or not I should ask for an appropriation for this work, in view of what had taken place in parliament and the strong opinions that had been expressed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House about it, I declined to ask for any appropriation. I understand from the chief engineer that he informed Mr. Gilbert that there was no appropriation and that the work could not be continued. There is no appropriation in the main estimates, as hon. gentlemen can see, nor is there an appropriation for next year. But there will be found, as has been said, an appropriation of a small amount in the supplementary estimates for the current year. The appropriation, I am advised by the chief engineer, is necessary—not for the purpose of continuing the work, I do not propose to ask parliament for any money beyond this, a part of which is needed to pay the drawback. There is the amount of the drawback which we have to pay out of that $50,000. Then, I understood from the chief engineer that some rock had to be excavated which had been carried down into the channel, and which would impede navigation, and perhaps cause injury to vessels using the channel; and I have asked in the supplementaries for a small sum in addition to the drawback in order to clear this out, so that there would be no ground for a claim for damages. There is nothing in the estimates inserted with any intention to continue this expenditure or to continue this work. Mr. Rubidge and his assistant engineers are all strongly of opinion that this is a very useful work. They do not agree with my hon. friend. But I do not propose to take the responsibility of continuing this work this year, and have nothing in the estimates for that purpose.

Mr. SPROULE. Has this company been going on earning money during the year, or are they putting in a claim for money earned which was not voted, and after being notified by the minister that he does not intend to continue the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If they have done anything they have done it without any authority. My decision was last year not to proceed with the work. The chief engineer was advised of that, and he notified the contractors that there was no appropriation for the purpose and therefore the work would not be continued. If they have gone and done any work they certainly had no authority, and it would be against my view that they should go on with the work of last summer.

Mr. SPROULE. Are there any claims put in?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer said they did some work without his knowledge.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This firm started work a year ago this spring and they worked until the close of navigation, up to December, 1901. Therefore I can hardly believe they were working there for fun. I think they were getting $425 a day, at least they will put in a claim for that amount. For that reason I was under the impression that they had been authorized to do it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer says he gave them no authority to do it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, they were working there right along. Were they only paid up to the expiration of that vote?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then they worked on afterwards and got nothing for it. Have they put in any claim for it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They certainly have got nothing.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, have they put in any claim for work up to December?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer says that he has received no claim from them, though they have asked for an estimate.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The government engineer that was in charge of that work remained there until December, lived right there on the boat, I know, until navigation closed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer advises me that he does not know that to be a fact, and that if these people did work, they did it at their own risk without any authority from him, and they certainly had no authority from me.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I may say for the benefit of the minister that the story of the rocks washing in there is the same old story we have been told year after year. I understand that this story has impressed him with the need of going ahead. But I cannot see where the rocks come from that were washed into this channel. The bed of the river is flat above and I cannot see where the rocks can come from. But that excuse has been given year after year to the minister in order that they may go on with this work. If the minister will take any thorough marine man and send him there, I am satisfied he will report that the channel is not navigable for any large steamer. Why cannot the minister simply wind up the work. I am afraid—because it is not the first time we have heard this story, not only from the minister but from others, that it would be ended up—I am afraid that next session I will come here and be told the same old story. Could the minister tell us now if that work is to be continued ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think I have come pretty near making that statement. I do not want to commit myself too positively as to the future without hearing all that is to be said and considering it. But I have certainly decided not to ask for any appropriation for next year, I decided last year not to ask for any appropriation for this year, and I have put in that item of $50,000, and am advised that one-half of it at least is a drawback that has to be paid.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is your engineer attending to the work if you are not going on with it, and who gives a certificate for the progress estimates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The chief engineer says there has been no progress estimates sent in at all. I presume these people have been putting in their time and hope perhaps to get something. But they have made no claim, or intimated in any way to the department that they intend to make a claim.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to me to indicate very peculiar ideas as to the business methods of the department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Well, they have had a long number of years in which to form a judgment on the question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see that there is any particular need of a vote of parliament if they go on in this way from year to year. I do not quite understand the procedure. Is the engineer who is supposed to have been in charge of the work during the past season an officer of the government, and if so, has he been paid by the government for his work during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have an engineer—I understand his name is Ross—in charge of the canal. It may be, as the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Reid) has said, that he was not paid at the time. I do not know about that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If this engineer, who is acting for the government, has been superintending the work which these men have been doing without any appropriation apparently and apparently without any instructions, the government will be in rather an awkward position when the question of liability is raised. If the government's officer has been superintending the work which these men have been doing at the rate of $425 a day during the past season the government may have incurred liability, and it may be that an appropriation of parliament would be needed, but it is certainly a very undesirable way of doing business. No appropriation was asked by the minister last year for the reason that he had not concluded to go on with the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I had concluded not to go on with the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Nevertheless, in some mysterious way, as to which we have not had any satisfactory explanation, the work has gone on and if we are to accept the statement of the hon. minister an officer of the government has been on board the dredge superintending the work which has been done without instructions from the department and with no appropriation of public money to pay for it. Now, I see an appropriation in the supplementary estimates of $50,000 out of which this work may be paid for. What is the purpose of that supplementary estimate if it is not for the purpose of paying for this work ? A part of it, I know the hon. minister says, is for some drawback, but there is a portion of it, $25,000 at least, which, I suppose, is designed to pay for this work which has been done during the past season without the authority of parliament. It certainly seems a most extraordinary way of carrying on the business of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the name of the firm that is doing the work now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Gilbert Dredging Company.

Mr. SPROULE. What are the names of the gentlemen who control the firm ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The two Gilbert Brothers. That is all the chief engineer knows and I do not know any more.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think these are the only two.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it perfectly clear that no portion of the vote which is now asked is to be applied or can be applied for the purpose of paying for this unauthorized work ? This is not enlargement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for the Galops canal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And it does not touch this subject at all ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. During the time that the work has been going on the appropriation has always been under the heading of 'Galops Rapids.' That is the way it is entered in the supplementary estimates.

Mr. BENNETT. It would seem that the Gilbert Brothers were working from the 1st of July, until the 1st of December, at a cost of about $12,000 a month, without any understanding with the department. As the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), has pointed out the hon. gentleman can hardly hope to escape responsibility. These people have their plant, they have been engaged by the department, under the engineer or some officer of the department. He has been on this plant or on some part of it and he remained in possession of that work for five months. They incurred a liability of $60,000, and the hon. minister comes down now and does not ask the House for anything to provide for payment. The hon. minister cannot hope that these people will consent to go without their pay. The hon. minister proposes apparently to deal with these Gilbert Brothers in the same kindly manner in which he dealt with them before. I remember last year that a claim came up for $25,000 which Gilbert Brothers had made against the department. They put in a claim for $25,000 for extras done several years before the hon. minister came into the department. That claim the then hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart)——

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is very interesting of course, but we might read it all over some Sunday when we have nothing else to do. I can put my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) upon the right track if he will allow me. The Gilbert Brothers who preferred that claim which he has in contemplation are not the same Gilberts, so I am told by the engineer, and I believe that to be the case. There are five brothers and they are not by any means associated together in business.

Mr. BENNETT. Then, it only shows how very pernicious the example of the hon. minister was. Here are two men named Gilbert, who had this claim against the department when the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was at the head of the department. He offered them a fiat to go into the courts and prosecute that claim and they refused to go into the courts with it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What is the use of my hon. friend starting at one o'clock in the morning upon a controversial question which he knows is not one-sided, which he knows has another side and which he knows has been debated in parliament two or three times and which might be debated again if it were a little earlier in the session and a little earlier in the evening. I would be pleased to hear the hon. gentleman repeat the speech he made on a previous occasion, but I appeal to him whether it is not a little late to revive that subject.

Mr. BENNETT. I was starting out to say that the hon. minister by his kindness to these Gilbert Brothers, seems in that particular case to have inoculated the whole family of Gilberts with the result that we must pay this $60,000, and the hon. minister cannot shelter himself behind the statement that he has made because these men certainly went on with the work and he did not stop them.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the hon. minister will look at his report for the last year he will see that Mr. Rubidge says :

> Operations on north and island shoals were resumed in May and June, 1901, will be continued until the close of the season.

And they were. The appropriation for the Galops rapids runs to June 30, 1901, at which time notice was given to the contractors. I will admit that according to his statement Mr. Rubidge gave notice to the contractors, but on the 1st of May, when Mr. Rubidge had that dredge at work on these rapids, he placed Mr. Ross and a staff of engineers in charge of the work. They were not in charge of the canal, they were in charge of the work and that staff of engineers, notwithstanding the fact that he notified them that the vote had lapsed, remained on these vessels until the snow made them stop in the fall. They were not taken off the work but the work went right along.

Mr. SPROULE. And the government engineers were right there.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Mr. Ross has another position on the Grenville canal. When the hon. minister states that Mr. Ross was in charge of the canal I understand that once a month he took the pay cheques down and paid the men, but he was in charge of the work, and I know the names of other assistants that were with him. If they had stopped the work on the 1st of July then, of course, no fault would be found. I am making this appeal to try and get this straightened out so that it will not be continued.

Mr. SPROULE. Did the engineer send in no report in regard to the work that had been done during the summer ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). They seem to have had a pleasant little time amongst themselves; these gentlemen with the dredge at $425 a day, and the engineer and his staff enjoying themselves without sending in any report. They apparently have expended nearly enough to enable Captain Bernier to discover the north pole, and all that has been done without the knowledge of the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I make no claim to omniscience or to omnipresence, and I certainly could not be supposed to know that the men were going on to prosecute a work that we had decided we would not continue and for which we obtained no appropriation.

Mr. BENNETT. There were no applications made by these people from the 1st of July, to the 1st of December, for remuneration ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None whatever.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the date of the first application ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not until within a month of this date. The chief engineer tells me they came up about a month ago to ask whether or not there would be any appropriation in he estimates next year for the carrying out of the work.

Mr. BENNETT. What was the amount of the claim ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no amount stated.

Mr. BENNETT. It seems incredible. These men were paid for a time up to the 1st of July, on monthly estimates I suppose, but then they continued, under the supervision of the government engineer, doing work from the 1st of July, to the close of navigation they never made a claim for it until a month ago when they came to the department and incidentally mentioned this trifling amount of $60,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am informed by the chief engineer that they stated no amount. The only amount mentioned was that one mentioned by the superintending engineer.

Mr. BENNETT. When did Mr. Rubidge make this report ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When he was asked for his report in view of the preparation of the estimates.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When Mr. Rubidge was notified by the department that the vote had lapsed was it not his duty to take his staff off ? Did he inform the department that these people were persisting in the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As far as I can see now, I would like to hear what Mr. Rubidge has to say in his own defence. It seems to me that was his duty.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I should think he would be entitled to censure for not doing that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should think so.

North channel—forming dam, $56,250.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This is simply throwing this money away. You had better throw the money into the river than put that dam across there. This is a scheme put up by the Gilberts to get work for $56,000. There is no question about that. I would really like to know what this dam is going to be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Gilberts have nothing to do with this. Cleveland is the contractor.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is the dam put there for the purpose of improving this channel that we have been discussing ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The report is that there are cross currents.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This channel that the Gilberts have been working at for the last twenty-five years——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. REID (Grenville). They commenced the channel in 1876 and they have been working continuously ever since. This water that comes between these two islands runs directly across the channel the Gilberts have been working at, and this dam is simply put there to stop that current. Really and truly if the minister looks into it, he will see that it is of no earthly use whatever. I appeal to him not to put a dam there, because it would injure the rapids, and I believe that the vesselmen will condemn it. It would be far better to give whoever the contractor is, half the amount he would make in profit and not have the dam there at all. I appeal to the minister that that dam should not be put there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will tell the hon. gentleman what I will do. I will undertake that the money will not be expended until I have the subject thoroughly investigated, and until I have had the opinion of other engineers. Not being an engineer myself, I cannot form judgment upon a question of this kind. I can, however, probably decide not to spend, and I will not do so until I ascertain from independent engineers that it would be a proper expenditure to make. Of course, my hon. friend knows that there is always a great difference of opinion with regard to the navigation of channels.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I can quite understand that, and the answer of the hon. minister is quite fair ; but large vessels will never go through these rapids, and this is a part of that other scheme. If the hon. minister will look into the matter, I feel satisfied that he will never spend the money.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already mentioned that this is a continuation of work that has already been started in the same direction.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That other work of Mr. Cleveland's is satisfactory, and he is doing his work very well. But it is not part of Mr. Cleveland's original contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The building of the dam will not absorb the whole of this money.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Yes, it will, because it is in a bad place and is a very large dam. It is a mile and a half from Mr. Cleveland's original contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to undertake to say that no part of this money will be expended, because it may be necessary to spend a portion of it for the purpose of completing the channel which I spoke of, and which the hon. gentleman says is a very proper work to do; but I will undertake to say as to the dam, to which he takes exception, that nothing will be expended until inquiry is made.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Any money voted for Mr. Cleveland's contract is perfectly right.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do I understand that this vote is not for any part of the Gilbert work at all?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has no connection at all with their work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman not think that we have gone far enough to-night?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentlemen opposite will consent to the rest of the items of my department going through to-night, I shall be willing to discuss any of these items on the supplementary canal votes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There are a couple of members of the House who want to speak on the Trent canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will say the same with regard to them.

To repair locks one and two Lachine canals, $100,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why spend such a large sum on the old locks?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are in a very insufficient condition and we have to repair them.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance the House adjourned at 1.30 a.m. Friday.

Hon. Mr. BLAIR.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 2, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 150) to amend the Weights and Measures Act.—Mr. Campbell.

Bill (No. 151) respecting the remission of penalties.—The Minister of Justice.

HALIFAX INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 152) further to amend the provisions of Chap. 183 of the Revised Statutes with respect to the Halifax Industrial School, and Saint Patrick's Home at Halifax.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the nature of it?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is merely to extend the age at which boys shall be admitted to the reformatory. At the present time the age limit is sixteen years, but the local legislature has passed a Bill to extend the age to eighteen years. This is to make our statute conform to the statute of the local legislature.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. BELL. I wish to call the attention of the First Minister to a return which I moved for on the 26th of February, which is not yet down.

The PRIME MINISTER. About dismissals?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend called my attention to this matter of dismissal some few days ago, and I sent an urgent letter to all the departments but have so far not received the information required. I shall call attention to the matter again.

POST OFFICE ACT.

Bill (No. 106) to amend the Post Office Act (the Postmaster General) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. CLARKE. What is the object of removing these officers from the provisions of the Civil Service Act?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). By the Civil Service Act

they are required to undergo a preliminary examination and it is intended to discontinue this system and substitute the departmental examination. It was not considered of any practical importance that these officers should be required to have special qualifications necessary to pass the examination required by the civil service examiners. A more practical examination would probably be better.

Mr. CLARKE. What would be the nature of the examination ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That would be for the department to prescribe. It would be such an examination that would call for a knowledge of the elementary subjects, such as reading and writing and a little arithmetic, in order to see if they have the necessary education to enable them to discharge the duties of their office.

Mr. CLARKE. That is practically the examination that they are called on to pass now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In the first place, they will not have to pay anything. At present a very large number of persons present themselves annually for examination who are never called to any position, but under this Bill no man will be requested to undergo an examination unless there is a position for him. It will be the same practice as is followed in the Toronto police corps, I presume. Under the present law, thousands of persons have presented themselves at the annual examinations, at considerable cost to themselves, and the great majority of them never receive an appointment.

Mr. SPROULE. This Bill will afford opportunities to the department to pass those whom they wish to pass, whether eligible or not. I think that the system of submitting these young men for examination to some entirely independent board, where each applicant stands on his own merits, is much better than to leave the department to select those to whom they wish to give appointments and exclude those whom they do not want to pass.

Mr. PUTTEE. This Bill will take that branch of the service altogether out of the operation of the Civil Service Act. It will be excluded, not simply in respect of examinations, but of everything else. This brings up the question of the terms of employment. Under the Civil Service Act these men are yearly employees, getting yearly salaries, but under this Bill their salary will be so much per day, and it does not provide how many hours will constitute a day's work. If we are to change from the yearly system to the day system, we should define how many hours constitute a day's work, and will entitle a man to a day's pay. It seems to me that eight hours work in the eleven between 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. should be the limit. It is an essential principle of employment by the day, that the number of hours should be defined. A man might work a sufficient number of hours in a day to entitle him to two day's pay. That cannot be the case under the present system, under which the employees are paid by the month or the year.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is nothing in the law to-day defining what should be the length of a day's work. It seems to me it is equally necessary to pass a rule in the one case as in the other, if it be necessary at all. There is nothing to show that there has been any abuse as regards overwork in the branch I have to do with. Some people have very exaggerated ideas of the labour exacted from many of these officials. So far as the length of the day is concerned, the only class that takes exception to this measure is the letter carriers. I had an account taken of their labour, and I find that the average day of the letter carriers on duty throughout Canada is eight hours and twenty-one minutes. There will be no enlargement of that day, and there is no necessity for any statutory provision on the subject.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the hon. minister give us the particulars respecting the information he has collected as to the length of day? These men have to go to the post office in the morning to get the letters and put them in shipshape before beginning delivery. Is that time included ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I understand that the eight hours and twenty-one minutes includes all the time they are on duty.

Mr. PUTTEE. If that be the case, it ought to be easily arranged to have the number of hours specified in this Bill. At present there is no specified number of hours. The employees are under the monthly wage system, under which a man does what work there is to be done, and will sometimes have longer and sometimes shorter days. But when we change to the day system, we are paying so much money for so many hours work, and the question is how many hours work should be in the day. If a man does ten hour's work, that would amount to $2.50 at 25 cents per hour. We should either have the one system or the other. If we introduce the day labour system, we should specify the number of hours per day.

Mr. BARKER. Many letter carriers are very uneasy as to what their position will be after this Bill becomes law. This Bill puts them on day work. They regard their positions as of a permanent character, and they are very uneasy as to whether they will simply be in the position of men employed for the day, whose services may be dispensed with to-morrow.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The measure will in no way whatever weaken their tenure of office. There is a clause in the measure saying that they shall be removable only by Order in Council. That is all the guarantee that any one in the civil service has, and there is no more possibility of their being dismissed without cause under this provision than under the existing condition of affairs. I am not aware of any parliament having fixed by law what shall be the particular hours constituting a day's work. My hon. friend (Mr. Barker) may know of some case of that kind and if so, I would like to hear of it. The postal departments may, as a matter of policy, name a number of hours in their regulations, but I am not aware of any legislative body or parliament binding its hands in that way.

Mr. BELL. Will the Postmaster General allow a question ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, with pleasure.

Mr. BELL. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that, at present, under the Civil Service Act these officials could be dismissed only by Order in Council, and that hereafter they would have the same protection. But, this Act declares that it shall supersede the Civil Service Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But in clause 12 of this Act it is provided :

> Appointments, promotions, reductions in grade and dismissals under this Act shall be made by the Governor in Council.

Mr. CLARKE. What practice obtains in the United States respecting the hours of employment of letter carriers ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not familiar with the American practice.

Mr. HEYD. The objection I see to fixing the hours of labour to a day's work is that the men have a certain beat in which to discharge their duties and an active man can probably do his work in six or seven hours, while a slower man will take eight or nine hours. To keep all employed for the same length of time, it will be necessary to make the beats for some men at least 25 per cent greater than for others. A man exercising diligence in the pursuit of his business can lessen the number of hours to a considerable extent. If the average is now, as the Postmaster General has said, eight hours and twenty-one minutes, that is not too long a day's work.

Mr. PUTTEE. That may be an argument why the staff should be left under the present Civil Service Act, which allows and provides for all that. But we are adopting a new policy, a new principle altogether, and it seems to me that it is absolutely necessary that the number of hours' work should be specified and limited. I think it should be eight hours within eleven, which would give two or three hours a day when the men are not required on the beat.

Mr. HEYD. What action would the Postmaster General be compelled to take if a man could not do an ordinary day's work in eight hours ?

Mr. PUTTEE. If an ordinary man could not do the work it would be necessary to engage more than one ordinary man for the work.

Mr. SPROULE. In what respect is the Civil Service Act so defective that the Postmaster General introduces this Bill ? This seems to be rather in the line of discrediting the Civil Service Act and taking a large number from under it that were intended originally to be under the provisions of that Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My hon. friend only sees what he thinks are the bad spots in this Bill. I hope he will be able to see something good in it.

Mr. CLARKE. We do.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will try to point out some of the good points. This is not forced upon anybody now in the service. It applies to those to be appointed hereafter, but gives those now in the service the privilege of availing themselves of it, if they think it is to their advantage; but if they do not think so, they are left in the full enjoyment of their rights. Now, I have not heard any complaints from any of the classes in question, with the exception of the letter carriers. Let me state what the position of the letter carriers is to-day. As far back as 1872, the law with regard to the appointment for letter carriers provided that their initial salary should be $300 a year, with an annual increase of $40 until a maximum of $560—or a possible maximum of $600 under certain conditions—was attained. That continued to be the rate until 1874. On the change of government in 1874, a change was made in the initial salary, the Mackenzie government fixing the amount at $400. No other changes were made at that time. That continued to be the law until the downfall of the Mackenzie government. When the new government came into office, they reduced the initial salary to from $400 to $300 a year. That reduction continued in force from 1878 until 1882, when the then government made a change reducing the annual increase from $40 to $30, and confirming the reduction of initial salary from $400 to $300. In 1885 they increased the initial salary from $300 to $360, leaving the annual increase at $30. This continued from 1885 up to the present time. In the public interest it is advisable that there should be some incentive to letter carriers to report for duty when duty calls. The public expect their mail to be delivered to them with regularity. But this cannot be accomplished if when the letter carriers should appear for duty on a given morning a considerable number of them are absent. Experience has shown that those who are on yearly pay are absent very much more often than those who are on day's pay. It becomes necessary sometimes to engage persons to act as letter carriers, who are not eligible to be appointed under the Civil Service Act. They discharge the same duties as those appointed under the Civil Service Act and their pay is, perhaps, slightly less. Good men taken on in that position are allowed to continue and my information is that those who are on the civil service list are absent from duty three times as long per annum—over and above the statutory holidays—as those who are on by the day. The day's pay is an incentive to them to report for duty. I understand that in England the same principle obtains, and if a letter carrier does not appear for duty at the proper time he loses his day's pay or a great portion of it. There are substitutes appointed and the letter carrier suffers a pecuniary loss because of his absence. I do not know how it is in the United States, but, perhaps, my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) is informed on that point.

Mr. CLARKE. .The information I have is very limited, but I was going to say after what had been stated by the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) with regard to the reduction of hours, that I understand there are two staffs delivering, beginning earlier and continuing later, and that the men work eight hours a day. I am not sure, however, that such is the case.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. At all events there is a manifest advantage in having some means of exerting pressure upon this class of officers, so that they shall appear at the time of duty. It is as essential for them as for the trainmen to appear when required. They are required to perform a class of duty the regularity of which is, all important, and we are frequently embarrassed because letter carriers at the last moment fail to appear at the time appointed. It is necessary to meet that weak point in the service, and a measure of this kind is in the public interest in that respect alone. Now I have said that this measure is in other respects an advantage to the employees. For example, I have had a statement prepared by the officers to show the difference between the salaries received under the present law and those which will be received under the proposed law. Take the case of a letter carrier to-day entering the service. As the law has been for about the last twenty years, entering at $360 a year, his salary increasing at $30 a year until he attains the maximum of $600, he will enter upon his ninth year before he will attain the maximum of $600. Under the proposed measure he will enter as a probationer for a period of six months, he will be learning the route and the small matters they have to learn. At the end of six months he is supposed to be qualified to be confirmed in his position. During that probationery period he is under instructions, we have to detail a man, so to speak, to teach him, not necessarily go with him all the time ; but he is under tutelage for a time. Nevertheless during that period of tutelage he is paid $1.20 a day for six months. As soon as he is qualified to be confirmed in his appointment he then begins his salary of $1.50 a day, which amounts to $469.50 per annum. We give him two weeks leave of absence, and at the expiration of two years his pay goes up to $547.75 a year. At the end of those two years he will be entitled to promotion, assuming always that he has deserved it, to $2 a day, or $626 a year. His salary will remain at $626 unless he should be promoted or reduced in rank. Assuming he remains at $626, when he has entered upon his ninth year of service, an officer appointed under this law will have received during that period from the commencement, $713.50 more than under the present law. In addition to this there is a provision that a letter carrier may get every year a bonus of 10 days extra holidays where his conduct has been reasonably satisfactory. It does not mean that there is a prize only to the top man, but I am hoping that a number of men in the service will win this 10 days extra holidays, or he may at his option receive $2 a day, or $20, in lieu of these extra ten days.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you strike off his pay for each day's absence ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Now if he should accept $20 a year in lieu of the holidays, he would receive during that comparative period that I have referred to, $883.50 more under this proposed measure than under the existing law, or an average without the bonus of $20 a year, of $83.94, and with the bonus of $20 a year, an average of $103.94 more than under the present law.

Mr. CLARKE. What about superannuation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The Superannuation Act was repealed some years ago, and the Retirement Act has been adopted in lieu of it. They are living under the Retirement Act, and that is wholly for their benefit, not for the benefit of the country.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman was making a comparison of the condition of the letter carriers under his law, and the conditions under the old law. Will he give us an idea of how much better off these men will be in respect to superannuation?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is not necessary to discuss a repealed Act ; if the hon. gentleman will ask me to discuss the Retirement Act I will be glad to do so. The Retirement Act is now in force as to all new appointees and all appointees of recent years, so that the Superannuation Act each year is having less and less application, and if this Act was to drop it would not affect anybody, either under the Superannuation or the Retirement Acts.

Mr. SPROULE. When the hon. gentleman was speaking of the salary, I asked if he made any provision for striking off from their salary for days they were absent, and he did not deign to answer.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Because the question was not applicable to my observations, and would have been more fittingly asked at a latter period. At the same time I would say to the hon. gentleman that the Bill provides for payment of a day's work, it also gives the men two weeks leave of absence. I believe the hon. gentleman is an employer of labour himself, as I am sure many of us in this House are, and he knows something about fines, rates of pay, and so forth. Perhaps the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) will tell us whether he considers these rates will be regarded in his part of the world as reasonable to be paid by the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that is merely evading the question. I asked what I regarded as a proper and a courteous question.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have answered the question.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister does not choose to reply he need not do so. The answer he has given is no answer at all.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman asked me if there is a provision made for leave of absence.

Mr. SPROULE. I asked whether there was a provision made for a reduction of their wages when they were absent.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As I explained, they are paid for the time they work. That is a system perfectly easy to understand. A man is paid so much per day for the time he works, he is also paid for two weeks that he does not work, and may be paid for ten days further that he does not work. If he is absent more days than that, his pay is stopped during the additional period of absence.

Mr. COCHRANE. I want to remind the minister, when he wants members on this side to be courteous to him, that when he was on this side of the House himself he did not draw the line so closely, and he was not very courteous.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I hope I have improved my methods.

Mr. COCHRANE. Not much.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What about cases of sickness ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I was about to say when I began my observations, that no class of officials except letter carriers take exception to this measure, and inasmuch as those who object to it are not bound by it, I hardly see that they have much standing. I happen to have received yesterday the following communication which shows another side to this question :

Toronto, April 26, 1902.

Hon. Wm. Mulock, P.M.G.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the employees of the Toronto post office including porters, messengers, box collectors and mail transfer agents, it was unanimously agreed that your amendment to the Post Office Act is a move in the right direction and we would be glad to see it pass and will be pleased to come under the provisions contained therein.

Respectfully submitted.

Your obedient servants,

F. S. RUTTAN, Secretary (pro tem),

W. J. RAY, Chairman.

Mr. CLARKE. You do not know where the meeting was held in Toronto ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I know nothing except what the communication says.

Mr. CLARKE. Does it refer to the letter carriers being pleased ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have read every word of it. Shall I read it again?

Mr. CLARKE. If you please.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL : (reading)

Toronto, April 26, 1902.

Hon. Wm. Mulock, P.M.G.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting of the employees of the Toronto Post Office Department including porters, messengers, box collectors and mail transfer agents, it was unanimously agreed that your amendment to the Post Office Act is a move in the right direction and we would be glad to see it pass and will be pleased to come under the provisions contained therein.

They have the option of coming in or not coming in.

Mr. SPROULE. That does not include the letter carriers because it says nothing about them.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not speaking for the letter carriers. I am explaining that I have heard from all these employees except the letter carriers. As to the others they have sent me this communication.

Mr. CLARKE. You do not know how many were present at the meeting ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have told the hon. gentleman that the document contains all the information I possess on the subject.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. My hon. friend has not answered my question in regard to cases of sickness. Employees should lose their pay, of course, if they are absent from work, but in cases of sickness will they be deprived of their pay ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The law makes no provision for their being paid when they are not at work, except for two weeks annual leave and for ten days additional pay as bonus.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Does not my hon. friend think it would be unfair to make them lose their pay if they are sick ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, the ten days bonus will more than pay them for that. During the year gone by statistics have been collected and they show that the ten days bonus that we give them will quite pay for absences from other causes than holidays.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. So that they will have to get sick during these ten days, or otherwise they will lose their pay ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That will be for their election. This will cure a great many of sickness.

Mr. CLARKE. If they get pay now during sickness and they are to be deprived of that pay under the provisions of this Bill they will not be in as good a position. They get pay now if they can get a medical certificate, but under the provisions of this Bill, they will be deprived of pay during the time they are sick. Am I right in saying that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have explained that they are paid for the days they work, and they are paid for fourteen days holidays when they do not work. They are also paid a ten days bonus, and as to the rest if they do not work other days, they are not paid for other days, whatever be the cause of absence. The civil service is very bad for the health at times. We find a great many absent when pay goes on who might perhaps be able to do their work if pay did not go on. We have had numerous cases of rapid recovery when it was made clear that longer absence would be accompanied by loss of pay. I was about to give the committee some information as to the rates of pay in other walks of life for people who are more or less in the public service. Take the case of policemen. I have a schedule showing the rates of pay of that class of people. In the city of Brantford the rate of pay is $1.30 per day for the first year, increasing to $1.40 the next year, and then, in the fourth year, to $1.50, after ten years $1.60 and after sixteen years $1.70 per day. They receive no pension, they work nine hours a day and receive uniforms.

Mr. TAYLOR. They have lots of pickings.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I should be sorry to think that of them. I think they are a highly respectable body of men. In Hamilton the policemen receive $1.40 a day at appointment, after one year $1.80, and after six years $1.90 per day. They have the benefit of the police benefit fund, their hours of work are eight hours a day and they receive uniforms, except shoes and underclothing. In Kingston policemen receive $35 a month upon entrance, and $40 a month after. They receive no pensions but they are granted $45 per annum as a clothing allowance. They work twelve hours a day. In London they receive $1.40 a day on entrance, $1.55 after a year, and $1.90, usually, after three or four years. They are entitled to the police benefit fund, they receive uniforms, but no boots or underclothing, and they work eight hours during day duty, and nine hours during night duty. In Montreal they receive $9.20 per week on entrance, $10.20 after one year, $11.20 after three years and $12.20 a week for specially good men. They are entitled to share in the Police Benefit Society fund and they receive uniforms. They work twelve hours a day, six hours of inside and six hours of outside duty.

Mr. CLARKE. What about sick pay at these different places ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no information here as to that.

Mr. CLARKE. You did not get the information on that ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is nothing in regard to that.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that a return from the Labour Department ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No. In Ottawa policemen receive $35 per month for three months and after three months $40, after one year $45 and after that $50, $55, or $60 on recommendation. They receive uniforms, no pension, work ten and a quarter hours day duty, and eight and three-quarters hours night duty. In Toronto they receive $1.30 a day on appointment, $1.50 after one year, with good conduct ; $1.75, after three years. That $1.75 continues until the end of seven years after which the pay is $2 per day. They receive half pay after 25 years service. They work eight hours a day which can be extended when necessary. In St. John they get $1.40 a day upon entrance.

Mr. CLARKE. Will the hon. Postmaster General allow me to interrupt him ? What did he say in regard to the pay in Toronto ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They get $2 a day after seven years service.

Mr. CLARKE. Well, there is a further provision for increase of pay after a given number of years.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not that. What is it ?

Mr. CLARKE. They get ten cents a day additional for each good conduct mark.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. How long do they serve before receiving good conduct pay ?

Mr. CLARKE. I cannot remember that. Besides, this pay of $2 is for seven days in the week.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Well, the good conduct stripe may be a good feature.

Mr. COCHRANE. What has all this information to do with the Bill ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is to show the committee what is paid in other walks of life. In St. John they get $1.40 on entrance, $1.50 after three years, and $1.60 after six years. They are on duty twelve hours in day time and ten hours at night. In Winnipeg the pay is $50 per month on entrance, $60 after one year, $65 after two years, $70 after three years; no pension; they get two full uniforms; work nine hours a day. In Vancouver the pay is $60 a month, increased to $70 after the first year. They receive two uniforms a year and equipment, work nine hours, including one hour for luncheon. It says a pension fund will be shortly established. In Halifax the pay is $400 a year, increased to $450 after one year's service, and they receive full uniforms and work ten hours a day.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where did the Postmaster General get these statistics ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. My department wrote to the different cities for them.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the Postmaster General gathered all the facts? Can he tell us whether when a constable is off duty on account of sick leave, his pay is docked, as in the case of the post office service?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no information on that point.

Mr. TAYLOR. When you get the statistics you should get all the facts, so as to make a fair comparison.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What comparison is there between policemen and letter carriers; irrespective of salaries, of course?

Mr. CLARKE. They both have to walk.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Some people might think that a policeman's duties were altogether more onerous and hazardous.

Mr. CLARKE. They have different beats from the letter carriers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The letter carriers work, as a rule, during the day time, and policemen are on duty at night often. I should think that if a man had a choice of serving as a letter carrier or as a policeman, the pay being equal, no doubt he would be a letter carrier. I think this because we are deluged with applications for the position of letter carrier, and they are often from men who have good callings; not unskilled men, but men who have trades. Why do they come to the government service when they have a trade of their own ? They evidently admire some features of it. There is constant employment, regularity of occupation, and their employer is sure to be able to pay them.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. That is the reason why I tell my hon. friend that he makes a grave mistake in comparing letter carriers to policemen.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. In what way ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Because it shows that in most cases the policemen are better off than the letter carriers.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It shows altogether the other way.

Mr. TAYLOR. Might I ask the hon. gentleman why he makes the law in reference to letter carriers and mail clerks different from that of government employees in other departments. As I understand it, in the inside service, where persons are working by the day they are paid for seven days. The Minister of Agriculture told us the other night that in the census department the officials are being paid for seven days, and I think that is the rule in all the other departments. Why make a different rule for these hard-worked letter carriers, who have to be out rain or shine, perhaps ten or twelve hours a day, and who if they are sick, lose their day's pay.

Mr. PUTTEE. I hope the Postmaster General does not think that we are only picking out the bad spots in this Bill. I have been carefully through the Bill and have compared it with the present system, and I am prepared to say that there are some good features to it, but at the same time it is our duty when in committee to pick out the bad spots. There is no doubt that the limitation of the time for reaching the maximum salary is a good feature in this Bill. The old system of $30 a year increase for nine years before a man reached the very low maximum was altogether absurd. If we can get some necessary amendments as regards the hours, and one or two other things in this Bill it will accomplish a great deal of good. One good feature is that it does away with Sunday work. As a matter of fact, at the present time in some cities, if not all, the letter carriers are brought to the office to do some kind of work on Sunday, but under this Bill the local officers will have to report if there is necessity for that, and they will be paid for Sunday. But better still, it will have the effect of doing away with Sunday work altogether, and that is a good feature. My own opinion, however, is that this Bill does not touch the right spot. The Postmaster General wishes to make his letter carrier staff more effective, and there is no doubt that an effective staff of letter carriers is an absolute necessity. The reason the staff is weak to-day is because of the system that has been followed.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the matter with the system ?

Mr. PUTTEE. The patronage system ; that is the matter with the system.

Mr. CLARKE. Does this Bill do away with that?

Mr. PUTTEE. Not at all. A bad system does not produce good results, and I am not surprised to hear the Postmaster General say that there are weak spots in his staff. The very fact that a Bill of this kind is thought to be necesasry to cure some of the diseases is evidence that there is a bad system, and that it is producing bad results. I had hoped that the Postmaster General would have been able to take the bull by the horns in this case. An effective staff is necessary, and I thought that the hon. gentleman might be able to take the matter of appointing and governing the staff altogether out of the field of politics; and partisan politics at that. That is what makes the staff non-effective and inefficient. It is that that some men know they can be sick and they can play with the officials because they will be sustained by the influence they can bring to bear.

Mr. HEYD. I would like the hon. gentleman (Mr. Puttee) to give us the information on which he bases his statement that this staff is inefficient.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am only drawing what I think to be the proper inference from what the Postmaster General told us himself. He said that men paid by the day are only sick one-third as much as men working under the Civil Serive Act.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you state that is a fact yourself?

Mr. PUTTEE. I heard the Postmaster General state it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I stated it. I have information in my department to that effect.

Mr. CLARKE. Have you information to the effect that when men are employed by the month or year there is three times more sick leave than when they are employed by the day?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. These are statistics I have from the Toronto office.

Mr. TAYLOR. We should get the ministers working by the day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. And the members of parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it not a fact that when a man is off sick he has to send a medical certificate to the department?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certificates should be produced, but we very often find that these certificates are not wholly what they appear to be. Men may be sick in reality, and yet they may have occasioned their own sickness. We have many instances, if your want details.

Mr. CLARKE. That often happens.

Mr. PUTTEE. I am inclined to think, at all events, that there is some foundation for this opinion. I am not stating that the letter carrier staff is inefficient all through ; but, as a necessary result of the system, there are very weak spots in the operation of the service. The very fact that it is thought necessary to introduce a Bill of this kind, in order to get the men there every morning and not to have any misses, means that there have been misses in the past, and that as a matter of fact the staff is not as efficient as it would be under a better system. I thought we might possibly have a proposition to take this service away from the influence of politics altogether, and put it on a basis where merit and proper attention to work would be recognized and well paid. Now, there are some weak spots in this Bill, and if there are not some radical amendments made in it, I question very much whether it would not be better to keep to the Civil Service Act. For one thing, it does not state the hours which shall constitute a day's work. Then, it should include labourers, sorters and stampers. Then, subsection 2 of section 4 recognizes a new and bad principle, which I hope will be struck out of the Bill ; that is, it provides that in the case of inefficiency, reductions in grade may be made.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not a change in the law.

Mr. PUTTEE. It is a bad principle. This service consists wholly of manual labour, and we start on the very proper system of having men enter at the lowest grade and go up to the maximum. In labour of this kind, when a man is young, he is at his highest efficiency, and as he grows old he necessarily becomes less efficient, and this provision means that he is going down the ladder. It is a bad principle to recognize in an Act of parliament. If the man has performed his duties faithfully in the best years of his life, he should not be reduced in grade ; but he should be kept so long as he is able to do the work, and should then be superannuated. This provision should be made to read that in case of inefficient or unsatisfactory service or the committal of any offence against the rules, a man should be suspended as a penalty. That, it seems to me, would accomplish any object the Postmaster General has in view. But if we are going to leave the service under political influence, it is a bad principle to place in the hands of a minister the power to put a man down instead of up. It is a principle to which I cannot agree.

Mr. HEYD. I have taken considerable interest in this Bill and have given it careful study. One reason for that is that since I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this House, we have established in the city of Brantford a free letter delivery, and I naturally made myself conversant with that system, in order to see that the men employed were not overworked and were not underpaid; and a great many of the letter carriers throughout the country have written to me asking me to look after their interests in this matter. Now, I can say, after a careful study of this Bill, that it establishes a system most favourable to the working classes, and the most liberal in its pay, of any that exists anywhere in the Dominion of Canada. There is no agricultural or machine or carpenter shop anywhere in this country where men are getting as good pay as these men will receive under this Bill, or where they work shorter hours.

The Bill applies to two classes of people—those who are trying to get into the government employ, and those now in it. Those that are in do not need to take the benefit of these provisions unless they like. Those that are without do not need to come under its provisions unless they want a government job. The first question is, how will the Bill affect those who are trying to get into the service? At present a man is appointed at $1.15 a day, whereas under the Bill he will be appointed at $1.25, and he will be expected to act as probationer for a period of six months, during which time his pay will be $15 greater than it was under the old system. Under the old system a man was appointed at $360 per annum. Under the new system, after six months probation, he gets $469.50 per annum, or $109.50 more than under the old system. After the first year, under the present system, he gets $390. Under the new system he will get $469.50, or an increase of $79.50. At the end of the second year he can be put into grade 'C,' then his pay becomes $1.75 per day, or $547.75 per annum, which is $127.75 per annum more than he gets under the old system. In the fourth year, under the old system, he gets $450, while under the new system he gets $547.75, or an increase of $97.75. So that the man coming into the service will improve his position in four years by $414.50, and from that time he will be in receipt of $626 per annum.

Mr. SPROULE. Does the hon. member in his calculation provide that the employee shall work every day except Sunday?

Mr. HEYD. I am assuming that. As the Bill applies to those of the present staff who choose to come under these provisions, it has this effect upon all men who have been one, two, three, or four years in the service. If a man has been four years in the service he passes at once into class 'D,' which gives him $600 a year. If he has been five years in the service, and is drawing $480 a year at present, he will draw $626, or an increase of $146 a year. If he has been six years in the service, his wages will increase by $116; if he has been seven years in the service, they will increase by $86; if eight years, by $56; and if he is becoming a $600 man, the highest point to which he can reach under the present system, his wages will be $26 more. No injustice is done to anybody in that class, and the only man who has any cause of complaint at all is the man who is now getting $600 a year. This whole thing originated because a petition was sent in by the letter carriers for an increase of pay; and the desire of the great majority of the employees of the Post Office Department has been gratified by this very radical increase. But it applies with less force to the class now getting $600 a year, and we have the right to ask whether $600 a year is not fair pay. We must not forget that there is another class into which a man may enter at the end of four years. By diligent service or by the discharge of especially arduous labour, he can be advanced to class 'E,' in which his wage is increased to $704.25 per annum.

I regard that as a very high rate of wages, higher than is paid in any manufacturing establishment in Canada to any class of employees no matter what years of apprenticeship they have to serve. In addition these post office employees get two weeks leave of absence, and under special circumstances that leave is extended ten days longer, equal to twenty dollars in money, besides getting clothing for the ordinary discharge of their duties, and also shoe leather. All classes under this Bill will be better off than they are now. The only class that has any occasion to complain is that which is now getting $600 and desires more pay, and which may not be satisfied with an increase of $26. We have a right to compare the salaries paid these men with those paid in other walks of life, to see whether these men are really underpaid at $600 a year. I suppose we would regard a street car conductor as a man sufficiently intelligent and qualified, physically, morally and mentally, to be a letter carrier. Well, the salary of an Ottawa street car conductor is $9 a week for ten hours work per day, whereas the pay of a letter carrier is $12 a week for an average day's labour of eight hours twenty-one minutes, or say nine hours. Or in a year the letter carrier gets $150 more than the man who is employed on an Ottawa street car. We do not need to take policemen or firemen or men of that class, but you can go into the big factories and look at the wages paid there. Take the tool makers in the machine shops, the lathers, the planers, the vice hands and fitters and others, and you will find that they are not paid the wages paid in the Post Office Department. Is there any reason why a man who is a messenger in the post office should have more wages than a man who has served an apprenticeship five, six or seven years in a manufacturing establishment? What are the necessary qualifications for a letter carrier? He requires sufficient intelligence and education to read the addresses on the letters and sufficient honesty to deliver them. He does not require any special training. When I had the honour of appointing six letter carriers in Brantford, the system was arranged, the letters were delivered, and the whole thing worked like clock work from its very inception. There was not even a slip from the very start. That shows that it does not require special intelligence to do the work. We have got along so far without trouble or friction in Brantford. It may be said the letter carriers there do not do as much work as in Toronto and in Ottawa. But judging by the receipts in the Brantford post office, the Brantford postmen do more work than those of any other city in Canada, because the receipts are greater in proportion to the number of letter carriers than they are anywhere else in the Dominion. The work does not demand special intelligence. It does not require an apprenticeship of five or six years, and the wages of $600 per year are abnormally high as compared with those paid in other walks of life where years of apprenticeship are required and a considerable amount of technical skill. My sympathies are always with the men who work for a daily wage, but at the same time we must not make the position of a letter carrier so exceedingly desirable that men in other avocations will begin to grumble. Why should a tool maker, a trade which requires superior expertness and years of experience, be paid less wages than a letter carrier? A tool maker works in Toronto fifty-five hours for $14.70, and in Brantford fifty hours per week for $12. The lathe hand, who has to serve an apprenticeship of six years, gets in Brantford an average weekly wage of $9.25 for a day of twelve hours, and in Toronto $12 a week, which is a small wage compared with what is paid a post office messenger. And when these men only show up at 9 a.m., do they get paid a full day? Not at all. And when they are absent one or two days on account of sickness, do they get paid in full? No, they only get paid for the hours they work. In all these avocations a man is paid only the hours he labours, and I do not see why a letter carrier should be in a different position.

Take the planers and shapers in an engine shop, also high class work, they get from $10.30 to $11 per week in Brantford and $13 in Toronto. Take the vice hands and fitters, they get in Brantford from $10 to $11.80 per week and in Toronto $12.75. Then there are the drill hands, who do an inferior class of work, they only get $9 per week in Toronto. You can go through all the agricultural implement establishments in this country, take any branch of their business requiring the greatest amount of training and years of apprenticeship, and no where are they paying the wages received by the letter carriers of Canada to-day. Go to St. Thomas, where recently the government built a drill shed under the schedule of fair wages, which is always regarded as pretty high, and what do we find. We find that the contractor's foreman carpenter gets $2.25 per day; the excavators, $1.50 per day; builders' labourers $1.50 per day; joiners, $2 per day; stair builders, $2 per day; plumbers, $2 per day; metal roofers, $1.25 per day. I do not need to go on through the whole list, but when we find the highest class men in these factories are not paid as high a wage as $626 a year, we are justified in asking that their case be considered fairly on its merits and not solely from the point of view of its disadvantages. I am glad that in Brantford our letter carriers are pretty well satisfied with the arrangement now proposed. They drafted a resolution and sent it on to me as follows:

> Dear Sir,—I am instructed by the letter carriers of Brantford to inform you that they have had a copy of the new Post Office Act, that is now before the House, and after giving it the consideration that is necessary to come to any conclusion as to its merits, and how it will affect us under present conditions, after all due consideration having been given to all the changes it contains, as far as it affects Brantford, we are satisfied with the Bill as it stands, and would ask you to support it in the House, as we are confident you will. We learn that Toronto is against it and may ask for its withdrawal, but we do not want to see any such thing happen, as we are of the opinion that on the whole it is as good as the most of us could expect and better for us in Brantford than we expected, and we hope that it will become law without any opposition from the carriers.
> On behalf of Brantford carriers, I have the honour to be,
> Yours respectfully,
> GEORGE BROATCH, > Letter Carrier.

That is the opinion of the men in Brantford, whose wages will be advanced immediately to the extent almost of $146 per annum. Why should they not approve of this? There is not a man in the whole employ of the Post Office Department, there is not a letter carrier who has any right to complain except the man who is now getting $600 a year, and will only get $26 more. I have stated that a wage of $2 a day for a man who gets his appointment, say at the age of 25 and holds it as long as he can do the work has a pretty good thing. Take the agricultural implement shops, the Massey-Harris Company. They will pay their hands a less wage than these letter carriers get, and for ten weeks in the year they are shut down.

There is hardly an agricultural implement shop in this country in which they do not lay off their men from six to ten weeks in the year, and they do not then pay as high a rate of wages as is paid to these men. Take bricklayers, earning $3 a day; they apparently get big wages, but they only work for eight months in the year. Plasterers earn $3 a day, but work nine months in the year. Stonemasons are paid $3 a day and work for only nine months in the year. And all these trades require skill, they require training, they require an apprenticeship. These employees of the country get more money than those engaged in other avocations, and besides they have steady employment, no dockages as long as they discharge their duties, and they have the possibility before them of getting into a class in which they will draw $700 a year. They have no right to complain. The Postmaster General in this Bill, is treating the employees of the country with almost prodigal liberality, such as I am fully persuaded, will satisfy the great mass of the letter carriers.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Heyd's) defence of the Bill is commendable from his point of view, and admirably gotten up. But it is not quite so strong as it might appear to be. The hon. gentleman evidently starts with the assumption that any one who rises to ask a question is thereby condemning the Bill.

Mr. HEYD. I did not say that.

Mr. SPROULE. That is the only inference to be drawn from the tenor of the hon. gentleman's argument. And the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) when invited to give legitimate information which might enable us to judge the merits of the Bill seems to jump at the same conclusion. My first observation with regard to the Bill was designed to elicit on this point—it seemed that the effect of the Bill would be to remove a large class of civil servants from under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, and I wished to know in what respect that law was defective. It seemed to me that, if the Civil Service Act were not what it should be, it would be better to prepare one that was more suitable and so improve the whole service, rather than make a special law for one class. I regret that the asking of questions with a view to gaining reasonable information disturbs the Postmaster General and ruffles his temper. When members put courteous questions, I think they are entitled to respectful answers, without the minister immediately concerned jumping to the conclusion that the request for information indicates opposition to his proposals. I had neither intention nor desire to oppose the Bill, but merely sought to elicit such information as would enable me to judge whether this Bill would improve the public service and do greater justice to public officers than the Civil Service Act or not. I do not think that any member of parliament is stepping aside from his duty in asking for such questions, and I think that a Minister of the Crown is doing less than his duty who is not prepared to answer those questions courteously. The time when the Bill is brought up is the time for us to get information that we may intelligently judge of the merits of the Bill. The hon. Postmaster General, no doubt, gave us a great deal of information in connection with the measure. But there was information he did not give, whether it was because he misunderstood the question or because his mind was running in another channel and he wished to engage in a general defence of the Bill, I do not know. At any rate, he seemed to be more anxious to prove that the Bill would have good results and that it would do justice to the letter carriers than to compare the Bill with the Civil Service Act and prove that this Bill is better. I listened with a good deal of attention to the speech in support of the Bill delivered by the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd). I have no doubt the hon. gentleman prepared his brief very carefully. When he read his certificate of character to the Bill which he had received from the letter carriers, it sounded to me as if it were something prepared by the hon. gentleman himself to give to the House as a clincher of his argument.

Mr. HEYD. If I may be permitted. I would like to say that I did not know the letter carriers had had a meeting and passed resolutions or that they were going to write to me.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad to know that, because it relieves my mind of the impression that the whole thing had been got up by the hon. gentleman himself and that he had done it out of kindness to the Postmaster General and to help him over a difficult place. It seems necessary that I should assure the Postmaster General that I am not opposing the Bill, nor do I regard the Bill as altogether a bad one. I think it has some features that might be improved, but that in some respects it is ahead of the Civil Service Act. But there is one thing about it that struck me from the first as being somewhat inappropriate. If the Civil Service Act is not a suitable one, it seems to me we ought to amend it and have all branches of the service under the one Act.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There are many others besides the letter carriers who are outside the Act.

Mr. SPROULE. I know there are. And for that reason I have always regarded the Civil Service Act as requiring amendment. If the Civil Service Act is entirely unsuitable, we ought to do away with it and have another in its place. I would not complain of this Bill if it results in giving us more efficient employees and in doing justice to those who engaged in the service of the country. But I wish the Postmaster General to understand that when I put a question I do not put it with a desire of interfering with him in the discharge of his duties, or of ruffling his usually good temper in conducting matters on the floor of the House.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he does not think that this would be a good time to provide for a free delivery system in all the cities of the Dominion? I notice that some cities have that system, while others of equal importance are without it. That strikes one as not being in accord with the principle of one law for all. My hon. friend from Brantford was able to tell us how well things were working in Brantford and how the Bill would apply there. I can hardly know anything about the matter because we have no letter carriers. Yet I represent as important a city as does the hon. gentleman, the city of St. Catharines. As we have no free delivery system there I can hardly know what these hon. gentlemen are talking about. Would not this be a good time for the Postmaster General to propose an enactment, if an enactment is necessary, that all cities of the Dominion shall have the same system of free delivery? Of course I can understand that in large cities there must be more frequent delivery than in small cities. In a city like Toronto they may well require five or six deliveries a day. But why should not a city like St. Catharines have at least two deliveries, one in the morning and one in the afternoon. What fairness is there to that part of the country in the present state of affairs? I would like to ask the Postmaster General to give me some words of encouragement as to what we may look for in that respect.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When I took charge of the department I found that St. Catharines was not enjoying free delivery. The hon. gentleman's friends had had an opportunity during many years of giving that city a free delivery system.

Mr. LANCASTER. The city has grown since then.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad to hear it has made such progress, and I hope the government have contributed toward it. I have made some progress in the way of extending the free delivery system by giving it to the city of Brantford. Therefore, my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) will see that there is movement in the direction he suggests. I am not able to tell him, however, on what day the system will take effect in St. Catharines. Such a provision will not find an appropriate place in a Bill of this kind, an item in the estimates would be necessary for that purpose. Whenever Council can be induced to provide the ways and means, then the Post Office Department will put the system into force.

Mr. MAXWELL. I was glad to hear the hon. member for Grey declare that he was heartily in sympathy with this Bill. I may say that I also rejoice that this Bill has been introduced, because I do not think there is the slightest doubt but that it is a great improvement on anything that we have had, so far as letter carriers are concerned. We have quite a staff in the city of Vancouver, somewhere over thirty now, which this Bill more or less affects, and I think I voice their sentiment in saying that they will be very glad of the changes proposed in this Bill. So far as I have information by letter, they are very anxious, in common with other letter carriers of the Dominion, that some change should be made for their benefit. While they have naturally been looking for more, perhaps, than they are going to get, I think every fair-minded man will come to the conclusion that they are on the whole fairly treated in the present Bill. The hon. member for Brantford might have gone a good deal further in his remarks, so far as the pay of the men is concerned in his province. I have in mind a class of men who have to spend three or four years at a university in the Dominion of Canada, and then have to take a theological training as well, and the salary of the great bulk of that profession in Canada to-day is from $600 to $700 a year. So that when we compare their salary with that of the letter carriers, I think the latter receive very fair treatment, not only from the government, but from the people of Canada. But my main object in rising was to say a word in favour of the stampers and sorters of the post office.

Mr. HEYD. They are affected in the same way.

Mr. MAXWELL. No, they are not included in the Bill, and I would like to have them included. So far as Vancouver is concerned, we have some very intelligent and industrious young men who have been appointed as stampers and sorters, and who show considerable intelligence by the fact that they have passed the qualifying examination. Their pay is particularly small I think for men of that calibre.

Mr. CLARKE. What do they receive?

Mr. MAXWELL. $40 a month, the same as the letter carriers. I think the benefits are so important in this Bill that they ought to be extended to the stampers and sorters.

Mr. ROBINSON (Elgin). I would suggest to the minister that he add a clause to his Bill giving all cities of 10,000 inhabitants the benefit of free mail delivery. I think that would meet the approbation of nearly all cities of that size in Canada.

Mr. CLARKE. There are some good features in this Bill, and I cheerfully recognize that fact. I refer to the shortening of the time, after a man enters the service as a letter carrier, when he may receive the maximum salary of the position. I think in view of the fact that the Postmaster General has abolished the Superannuation Act he was in duty bound to shorten the time, and I congratulate him upon having done so. A young man who is qualified to act as letter carrier does not require to train for six, eight or nine years before he receives the maximum salary. If he is not fit to discharge the duties of letter carrier at the end of two or three years, he ought not to be permitted to remain in the service. I think it is only reasonable and just that the amendment which the Postmaster General has made should receive the approval of the House. I cordially support it, and have great pleasure in doing so. But when the hon. gentleman and his friends opposite attempt to argue that this Bill improves the position of the letter carriers of this country beyond what it was before he came into office, he has a very difficult proposition to prove. He and his friends seem to forget that before the Superannuation Act was abolished the letter carriers contributed 2 per cent of their salary towards a superannuation fund, and after they had served from 20 to 35 years they got a pension of 20-50ths or 35-50ths as the case might be, of their salary for the remainder of their lives. The abolition of that Act put this class of men who have been appointed since that time, upon a very different footing from that occupied by the carriers before. The position of a carrier under the Superannuation Act was far better than it is under the proposed amendment to the law. I need not take up the time elaborating that fact, it must be patent to every one who will give it consideration. But I refer particularly to the case of men who entered the service prior to 1896, the men who have served the public as letter carriers for a great many years, and it must not be forgotten that these men served the country on a very small salary for a number of years, commencing at $300 and increasing by $30 a year; but, as the hon. gentleman says, it took eight or nine years to attain the maximum of their class. These men are not benefited by this Act; and these men constitute the vast majority of the letter carriers of this Dominion. Their position is not improved in any way by the Act which has been introduced, notwithstanding the fact that they have been very largely supported by public sentiment in the demands which they have made for several years past upon the Post Office Department for an increase. Now, it seems to me they have not been treated as frankly as they had a right to expect, in view of the statements that were made to them when a deputation waited upon the Postmaster General to represent and to advocate their case. During his absence last year the question of remuneration to be paid to letter carriers was brought before the House by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Birkett). I find in the 'Hansard' of May 21, last year, at page 5792, the following remarks by the hon. member for Ottawa:

Mr CLARKE.

Yesterday I placed a resolution on the Order paper, asking the attention of the acting Postmaster General, to the increase of salaries which he admitted he intended giving the letter carriers. I was one of the deputation that waited on the hon. the Postmaster General a day or two before he left, and he assured the deputation that the gentleman he was leaving in charge of his department would see that the matter was carried through. Several deputations have since waited on the acting minister, and I think it would be a gracious act on his part to carry out the promise made by the Postmaster General. The letter carriers are a very deserving class of men and certainly have presented a case that is well worthy of consideration.

The present hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was acting Postmaster General during the absence of that hon. gentleman, and he made the following remarks:

My hon. colleague, the Postmaster General, had taken the matter into consideration before he left, and had practically devised a scheme by which these men would be given an increase. I had two or three deputations of the letter carriers wait on me. There was some difference of opinion as to the best plan to be adopted, and after full consideration I concluded it was best to allow it to stand over until next session. I think that the letter carriers themselves were pretty well satisfied also to have the question remain over. While I am not in a position to say what will be done, I can assure my hon. friend that the Postmaster General and the government are favourable to an increase, and that a plan will be adopted which will, I trust, meet the views of the letter carriers and the House generally.

If that statement means anything at all it means that the increase will apply to the great body of letter carriers and not to a small percentage of them. Yet, in the Bill which the hon. gentleman has brought down, we find that the great percentage of letter carriers are not affected beneficially by its provisions. The hon. Postmaster General quoted from a communication which he received the other day that at a meeting of the employees of the Toronto post office department, including porters, messengers, box collectors and mail transfer agents, this Bill was unanimously endorsed. The hon. gentleman does not state when the meeting was held, where it was held, or how many were present at it. I have been advised that there were not more than half a dozen people present at the meeting at which this resolution was passed, and of course, the men who adopted this resolution were not letter carriers at all. They were not the men who have been memorializing the hon. Postmaster General for an increase. They are men who have only been in the service of the Post Office Department for a year or two. But, I did not notice that the hon. Postmaster General referred to a resolution passed at a meeting of the letter carriers held a week or two ago in the city of Toronto at which a very large number were present. The resolution, which was passed unanimously, according to the report of the Toronto 'World,' reads as follows :—

That, whereas this assembly petitioned the Postmaster General praying that the letter carriers be granted an increase of 20 per cent in salary, owing to the increased cost of living ; and whereas the assembly has received from the Postmaster General an acknowledgment of said petition promising that said increase of salary would be considered, thereby leading us to believe that our prayer would be granted; be it resolved that we again reiterate our former prayer that the letter carriers be granted an increase of 20 per cent in their salary. Feeling assured as we do that the present prosperous condition of the country warrants it, we are not asking more than a fair day's pay for a long day's labour ; and be it further resolved that, as the Bill No. 106, entitled an Act to amend the Post Office Act, in no way answers organized labour's prayers for an increase of salary for the letter carriers, we do hereby express our strongest disapproval of said Bill and trust that it will be altered or amended to conform with this and our former prayer. Copies of the resolution will be forwarded the Postmaster General, Ralph Smith, M.P., A. W. Puttee, M.P., and the press.

That does not seem, Mr. Chairman, to look as if the letter carriers, whose petitions have been presented again and again asking for an increase in their pay, were satisfied with the provisions of the Bill now under consideration.

An hon. MEMBER. Where is the member for Nanaimo ?

Mr. CLARKE. I do not know where the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Smith) is. He is not in his seat. I have no doubt he is otherwise engaged. During the early part of the year the 'Globe' newspaper took up the cudgels on behalf of the letter carriers and strongly supported their contention for an increase of pay. I find, on January 6th, the following article :—

The Letter Carriers' Pay.

The Post Office Department ought to begin the new year by raising the salaries of the letter carriers. Rent, food and expenses of all kinds are higher to-day than some years ago, and the carriers' wages are now altogether too low. Economy is a good thing, no doubt, but what can be done by keeping down the wages of these men will make hardly an appreciable difference in the annual expenditure of the Dominion, while it makes a big difference to the postmen. Parliament ought to sympathize with these men. The indemnity of members of parliament, including the senators, has been raised from $1,000 to $1,500. If it costs a member $1,500 to live for four months, how does he expect a postman to live for a year on a fifth or fourth of that amount ? This matter has now been delayed long enough, and we hope that the very reasonable request of these faithful servants of the public will be complied with at an early day.

The hon. Postmaster General, in the statement which he presented to the House, gave statistics as to the pay which was given to the letter carriers as far back as 25 or 30 years ago, but it is an acknowledged fact, and the hon. gentleman will not deny it, that the cost of living has substantially increased since that time. The letter carriers, living in cities, have to pay more rent, they have to pay more for their food than they did then, and in view of the increased expenditures which they are called upon to make in order to live it is not unreasonable or unfair that the demand which they have made should receive the favourable consideration of the government. The hon. Postmaster General has the advantage of having at his elbow all the time the Minister of Labour to aid in preparing measures affecting the working classes, and I am sure that hon. gentleman must have drawn his attention to the resolutions which have been passed by representative labour organizations as to the compensation which the letter carriers are receiving to-day. On page 33 of the report of the Proceedings of the Eighth Annual Session of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, held at Toronto, September 8th-14th, 1892, the following resolution was adopted. This resolution was moved by the gentleman who now occupies the position of fair-wage officer in the Department of Labour, and it was seconded by the gentleman who now occupies the position of secretary of the Labour Bureau of the province of Ontario. These gentlemen were well qualified apparently to speak in the interests of those on whose behalf the resolution was moved. The congress which they addressed was so impressed with the reasonableness of the resolution that it was passed unanimously. I will read it for the information of the committee :

Moved by Mr. D. J. O'Donohue, seconded by Mr. R. Glockling and resolved,

That in the opinion of this congress the minimum salary of letter carriers in the public service should be not less than $600 per annum, and that it be an instruction to the executive committee of this congress to use its best efforts in pressing this view of the case upon the government.

In 1898 the Trades and Labour Congress wrestled with the subject again and passed the following resolution :—

Moved by Mr. Mortimer, seconded by Mr. Watson and resolved,

Whereas, the letter carriers and other postal assistants of Canada have frequently appeared before different trades councils of the Dominion and complained that the conditions under which they worked were not such as should exist among government employees ; and whereas, these trade councils have investigated and found that these men had a just grievance, in that they received insufficient wages, had no set hours of labour and had no definite system of promotion ; therefore be it resolved, that we urge upon the Dominion government the necessity of establishing a minimum wage of $2 a day for eight hours work, and so regulating the department that letter carriers may depend upon promotion for faithful services.

Last year, at Brantford, the Trades and Labour Congress again dealt with this matter, so that the attention of the hon. Postmaster General and his colleagues must have been drawn to the attitude which organized labour has taken in respect to the pay of the letter carriers. In 1901 this resolution was adopted :

That the letter carriers of the Dominion having, by petition, requested the hon. Postmaster General to consider the advisability and justice of granting an increase of 20 per cent in the present scale of wages, and as the letter carriers have not as yet received the consideration which their petition merited, be it

Resolved, that it be an instruction to the incoming executive committee of this congress to immediately, by petition or otherwise, draw the serious attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that the increased prices of the various necessaries of life, such as food, rent and fuel, render it necessary that this urgent and important question should receive immediate and favourable consideration and settlement.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what consideration has been given in this Bill to the large body of the letter carriers of the Dominion ? Has their position been improved ? Not in the slightest degree. Those who have been in the service for eight years and have obtained the maximum are getting $49 per month, while in the scale provided for by the Postmaster General those in class D will receive $49.40. That is the only difference I can see, except that in the case of men appointed since 1896, they may reach the maximum in 4½ years, but, as I have said, those who have already obtained the maximum pay will not have their position improved in the slightest degree. They have asked for bread and it looks to me as if they had received from the Postmaster General a stone. Their position remains exactly as it was before. There is not the slightest difference made in their position, notwithstanding the petitions which they have presented from time to time ; notwithstanding the assurances which they have received from the Postmaster General and his colleagues; notwithstanding that they have established that the cost of living has substantially increased during the past five years. The position of these letter carriers, proven to have been unsatisfactory, has not been bettered in the slightest by the Bill introduced by the minister (Hon. Mr. Mulock). It does not affect the men who are receiving the maximum. The hon. gentleman from Brantford (Mr. Heyd) read a resolution that was passed by the letter carriers of his city. Their position undoubtedly will be improved under the operation of the Bill, and they ought to give credit to the Postmaster General. But the reason why their position will be improved is because they have only been appointed during the last two or three years, and they will reach the maximum in a shorter time than if the provisions of the old Act were in force. They are in duty bound to give credit to the Postmaster General, because the Bill beneficially affects them to that extent. I do not desire to speak at greater length, because I know that the time of the minister is very short here this afternoon, and I would not like to interfere in any way with his arrangements. I repeat that the Postmaster General has not done what the letter carriers expected he would do, or what they were given to understand he would do. No amount of specious argument can establish that the position of these industrious, hard working, faithful men has been improved in any way by this measure. In August last there was a flourish of trumpets in the 'Evening Star,' a very excellent paper printed in Toronto, which supports the Postmaster General, and it was owing to the fact that some order had been issued by the Post Office Department respecting the purchase of supplies for use in that department. It is worth reading. It says:

Current Wages and Union Hours—The stipulations for all who furnish Post Office supplies.

Ottawa, Aug. 28.—Hon. William Mulock has decided that all men or firms furnishing supplies of all kinds to the Post Office Department must pay the current rate of wages to their employees and adopt the union hours of labour. This applies to goods whether sold under contract or not. At present the regulations apply only to contracts, but the principle has now been extended so as to become operative in the case of all who are on the patronage list of the department. Hereafter all persons who sell goods to the Post Office Department will have to make a sworn declaration that they have complied with the new regulation before they will receive payment.

If that statement is correct, the Postmaster General deserves credit for having issued the regulation, but I think the rule should apply to the employees in his own department as well as to those from whom supplies are purchased. It is a notorious fact that those who have been employed in his department in collecting letters from the street letter boxes have had to work seven nights in the week. Their hours of labour are more than nine or ten hours. They were on duty from eight o'clock in the morning until sometimes ten o'clock or eleven o'clock at night. I think, therefore, that it is a good rule to have a regulation of this kind apply first of all to the employees of the hon. gentleman's own department. I think charity, justice, and fair play should commence at home, and I believe with my hon. friend from Winnipeg (Mr. Puttee) that an amendment should be made in this Bill, fixing the hours which the letter carriers have to work, if their wages are not to be increased. The hon. gentleman said that one man could distribute a greater number of letters in a given time than another. That is quite true, but I wish to say that so far as the city of Toronto is concerned, in many cases the letter carriers are overburdened with work. They are not able to carry out all the letters and mail matter, and so not only automobiles but wagons are used to bring an additional load to meet them on their beats, when they have their work partially done. This is a condition that should be remedied. These men are employed, some of them, from six o'clock and half past six in the morning until five and half past five at night, and they are out in the most severe weather. As the hon. gentleman knows, they are employed on holidays, when there is at least one delivery. They have to discharge arduous duties; they are a faithful body of men, and they deserve better consideration from the Postmaster General. I hope that before this Bill goes through, the Postmaster General will concede that the grades shall be rearranged, and that men, after having served a reasonable time in class D, will be put into class E. There is no provision made for them going into class E, except on the recommendation of the officer who has supervision. The whole trend of this Act places these employees practically in the hands of the administration of the day. They need not be raised from class A to class B, or from class B to class C, or from class C to class D, or raised to class E unless the officer says so. The letter carriers who are affected by this Bill are entirely in the hands of the government of the day; they will owe their promotion to superior officers in every case, and in that way the Bill will have an injurious effect, and ought to be amended before it is passed. I would suggest that it should be amended in this way: That unless these men are reported against as being inefficient, they should in the natural order of things and at the end of a given time be promoted from class to class. Is that an unreasonable proposition? I submit that promotion should not be on account of some extraordinarily arduous service, but that if they have faithfully served for a given number of years they should be promoted from class D to class E. Why is grade E put in? Why is the hope held out that they may some day succeed in getting $2.25 a day? Who is to determine when that promotion is to be accorded to them? It is most unfair to them that the provision should be worded in that way. The highest class ought to be attainable by them after a reasonable length of service with good conduct, or else it ought to be struck out of the Bill altogether. I hope the minister will amend clause 3 by providing that at the end of a certain number of years men shall be promoted from grade D to grade E, thus making the maximum $2.25 per day, instead of $2 as at present. The men who are now in the service get holidays and they are paid if they are absent on sick leave. Under the provisions of this Bill they get 14 days holidays, but they have now 21 days, and under the Bill they will receive no pay whatever if they are sick. Is their position improved under the new order of things? Not at all. The Postmaster General says that if men are not paid for the time they are absent on account of sickness there will be less sickness. That is hardly a warranted reflection to make on these men. If men are found shirking their work; if men are found shamming sickness they should be dismissed from the service. I repeat that the position accorded to the letter carriers under this Bill is a much less favourable one than the letter carriers of the Dominion had a right to expect. I hope that the Postmaster General will so amend the Bill, that after a certain number of years' service men can reach class E and receive $2.25 a day, and that some definite time should be fixed as to the number of hours in a day's work. The hon. member for Winnipeg says the day should be eight hours. That is a reasonable proposition, and I hope it will be embodied in the Bill before it is eventually passed.

I notice that in the United States Congress an effort is being made to substantially increase the pay of the letter carriers on the other side, and the same arguments are there used on behalf of the men as may fairly be used here. For instance, the increased cost of living and the increased amount of work done. Under these circumstances and in view of the efficient manner in which our carriers do their work, I think the Postmaster General ought to make the maximum pay at least $2.25 per day, and fix the hours of labour at not more than eight in the eleven. If the Bill were amended in these respects, I am sure it would be generally acceptable to all the men in the service and be highly appreciated.

I notice that there is a clause providing for the appointment of a superintendent of the city post offices. Who is superintending the city post offices now? Is the work not being done efficiently now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There is no regular provision for the superintending of city post offices in the full sense of the word. These offices are supposed to be more or less under the supervision of the inspector, but the post office inspectors have not got that intimate acquaintance with the technical post office work which makes them competent to discharge the duties that would be required of a chief city superintendent. I mentioned on a former occasion the gentleman I had in my mind for the office, and I think my hon. friend will agree that a better appointment could not be made.

Mr. HEYD. I find that one of the objections in the minds of the letter carriers is this. Under the present Civil Service Act, the wages of the letter carriers, sorters, and others increase from $360 to $600 per year by annual increases of $30. The letter carriers are under the impression that this works automatically, and that the increase takes place without the intervention of anybody, but under the new Bill, a recommendation is required and thus the increase may be refused.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I may say that parliament was informed some time ago that the late Minister of Justice, Sir Oliver Mowat, gave it as his legal opinion that no civil servant was entitled to the annual increase provided in the Civil Service Act, except on the recommendation of the Governor General in Council, and on the money being voted by parliament. He gave it as his opinion that no civil servant has any legal right to the increase, but that the increase is a matter wholly within the discretion of parliament and the government. Recommendations for the increases are therefore necessary to-day, and these words do not in the slightest degree vary the law, but give expression to what is the law, so that the letter carriers and others will know quite well that they have to depend for their increase upon the recommendation for the promotion. There is every disposition to be lenient with all public officers. In my own department my instructions are that every civil servant, who has a salary of $800 or less, should be given the annual increment unless there is good ground for disqualifying him. Every one is given the increase unless his superior officer reports against him. That is the rule adopted, and it is no unkindness to the staff to let them understand that even if the hand is not very often used, there is a master hand which may be used. They are treated with the utmost consideration, and this Bill is in no sense a measure to give arbitrary power, which might or might not be abused, and I am satisfied that these observations which I am making will be of benefit to the staff themselves. They are meant in kindness, whether accepted in that light or not. As to the provisions whereby some of the letter carriers might be promoted to class E at $2.25 per day, there will be some appointments of that kind, especially in the leading cities, where there are greater responsibilities devolving upon some of the letter carriers and where their duties are perhaps more onerous. Those who are getting the maximum to-day will get $26 more to begin with, and if they work the 313 days they will get a $20 bonus besides, if their services were satisfactory. It is not meant that the work must be specially satisfactory, but what would be considered a reasonably fair and satisfactory service, such as would commend itself to any respectable man. Public officers cannot withhold or give certificates arbitrarily. They are amenable to public opinion even if they are not actuated by conscientious motives, and the general disposition is to be very friendly to those beneath them. You can rely on it that every superior officer will, wherever possible, recommend the letter carriers and these other various officials for the increase, and unless these officials have disqualified themselves by bad conduct, they will get the extra $20 as well as the $26. Those in receipt of $600 a year will get $46 extra, and will have the chance of getting a further increase in grade E of $78 a year. The increase of $46 on the salary of $600 is an increase of between 7 per cent and 8 per cent, which is not an insignificant increase.

As regards the hon. gentleman's statement that I had made some promise, I must disclaim anything of the kind. I am aware that some organizations have passed resolutions in which I am reported as having promised to a delegation which waited on me in March, 1901, that there would be an increase. But I was extremely careful, as I am on all occasions, not to make any promise. You have yet to find an occasion when I have made a promise to any individual or deputation as to what the government or council would do. What I stated was that the matter would receive my best consideration, and that I hoped to mature a plan which I would leave with my hon. colleague the Minister of Finance to present to parliament. The Minister of Finance was present. I had a scheme in my mind at the time, which is somewhat the same as that presented to-day, and which does provide a measure of increase to those who chose to avail themselves of it. I wrote a confidential report to my colleague, the Minister of Finance, setting forth my views and requesting him to take up the measure and bring it before my colleagues. But during my voyage I came to the conclusion that the views that I had left behind were not sufficiently definite and that it would be better to defer the matter until the present session, and I cabled to my colleague, the Minister of Finance, to that effect. But I want to make it quite clear that I never made a promise beyond what I have stated on the floor of the House to-day.

Mr. HEYD. I understand that there is a rule in force that no man can be appointed as a letter carrier who is over 25 years of age. Will that be rescinded by the adoption of this Bill ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. There are many persons over 25 years of age who would be able to perform the duties of these various positions, such as packers, messengers, and so on ; and if they are paid by the day, there is not the same objection to men advanced in years being appointed that there would be if they were paid by the year.

Mr. CLARKE. The Postmaster General said, if I understood him correctly, that all the persons affected by this Bill would receive at least $46 a year increase.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. If I read section 7 correctly, I do not so interpret it. Probably the Postmaster General can set me right.

The men now receiving the maximum will not come under section 7, will they ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If they wish.

Mr. CLARKE. But they will have to abandon their superannuation ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, there is a saving clause in section 6, which provides that they shall not.

Mr. BARKER. I hope the Postmaster General will extend the privileges of class 'E' to the present employees, whether they accept the provisions of this Bill or not. There is a strong feeling among the old employees of the department that this Bill does not do them justice. The hon. minister has told us, as the fact is, that the present employees to attain the maximum salary have to serve nine or ten years. There are many who have served these nine or ten years, and there are a good many perhaps who have served six or seven years. By this Bill these men will have placed side by side with them other men who will attain the maximum salary in four and a half years. That will, I think, breed discontent and a state of things not to the advantage of the service. If the men now in the service were allowed to have the advantages of class 'E' in common with those who come under the Bill, I think it would do much to remove any cause of dissatisfaction in that respect. I think it is not a gracious thing for the government to treat an old and faithful civil servant in such a way that he has to be coerced to accept this Bill in order to get the advantage of it. It does seem reasonable that the special class 'E' should not be confined to men who are appointed after this date, but should also be open to old servants who have served the public well in the past.

Mr. PUTTEE. Has the hon. Postmaster General considered the suggestion made by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell), to include sorters and stampers in clause 1 ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. When we get through the Bill, I propose to offer an amendment in the form of an independent substantive clause dealing with stampers and sorters.

Mr. MAXWELL. Will you allow me to make another appeal ? According to the ruling of the Postmaster General a short time ago, the age limit at which a man could enter the service was changed. He must now be between 18 and 25, and I am in hearty sympathy with that rule. I think the younger you can get a man into the service the better, both for the service and for himself. But unfortunately there were a number of men in the service before that rule came into force, and these men, after having passed—some the preliminary and others the qualifying examination—were refused to be put on the permanent list because of the age limit. When this Bill is coming into force, I think it would be a gracious act to allow all those men who have been in the post office service to receive the benefit of the Act as well as the permanent staff.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think my hon. friend's request is perfectly reasonable, and I will say that it is intended, as soon as this measure becomes law, to go through the list of all those now performing temporary work, and all who are suitable to be brought under the provisions of this Bill will be brought under its provisions.

On section 3,

Mr. PUTTEE. This provides that those in grade 'A' shall receive only $1.25 per day. Even the trackmen on the Intercolonial Railway are going to be paid above that rate very soon, and it seems to me that this is too low a sum to recognize here as a minimum at all. Seeing that the grade only lasts six months, I think it would be a great deal bettter to make this read that the salaries of those in grades 'A' and 'B' shall be at the rate of $1.50 per day. The hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) says that in this class of work a man is efficient as soon as he enters the service. There is nothing to learn; there is no apprenticeship; it is work that needs a man and not a boy; and therefore there is no reason why he should be paid at that low rate. It seems to me that it should be fixed at $1.50. Then a man would be in grade 'A' while on probation, and when it was decided to appoint him permanently, he would be moved into grade 'B.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am willing to meet my hon. friend's objection in a certain way. The six months is about as short a probationary period as you could reasonably fix; but if a man deserves the appointment sooner, then the $1.50 will begin. I am willing to put in words to provide that he shall be subject to a probationary period of not less than six months, or until he shall on the recommendation of the proper officer, be sooner confirmed in his appointment.

Mr. PUTTEE. That goes a long way towards meeting the point. But if I were the Postmaster General and were willing to go that far, I would do away with this eyesore of $1.25 a day.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, I want efficiency.

On section 4, subsection 1,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved that the clause be amended by striking out the words 'not less than' in the 20th line, and, after the words 'months' in the 20th line adding the following: Or until such earlier period as he shall, on recommendation to the proper officer, be confirmed in his appointment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. PUTTEE. I would like to know if there is any possibility of this grade 'E' being made more open. I suppose that the idea at present is that very few will enter it. But it seems to me that any man who has not been especially reported against ought, after twelve years service, to enter grade 'E' as a matter of right.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think it better to let the Bill go into force as it is in that respect. We will see how it works for a while. I could not agree to-day to any amendment.

Subsection, as amended, agreed to.

On section 4, subsection 2,

Mr. PUTTEE. I think the Postmaster General will see the reasonableness of asking that that subsection be altered in some way. It seems to me that the principle of reduction in grade as a man grows older should not be recognized.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the law to-day.

Mr. PUTTEE. It should be worded in some way so that, in the interest of discipline a man may be subject to suspension from time to time. But, for myself, I totally object to the subsection in its present form, because it involves what seems to me an altogether harmful principle. This power to reduce the officers in grade may not be used except in case of change of government, or something like that, but the subsection does give the department power as a man grows older to reduce him in grade.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But it does not change the law. Civil servants are liable to be reduced in grade at any time. That is very rarely done, but it is quite right that they should understand that it is possible. Civil servants are sometimes reduced in rank.

Mr. BARKER. Is it to be done by Order in Council ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Of course.

Mr. BARKER. Would it not be better to say so here ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is covered by section 12, which provides that appointments, promotions, reductions in grade and dismissals under this Act shall be made by the Governor in Council.

Mr. PUTTEE. Then, why put in this subsection at all ? If it is put in it must be because it is expected that it will be made use of. The idea is to reduce men as they grow inefficient. And, of course, when it is a matter of carrying weight and walking miles a man must grow less efficient after a certain age.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a clause that is in the interest of the employees, for it makes it possible to continue old men in the service. According to my hon. friend's (Mr. Puttee's) view the employees should be kept so long as they can work under the full head of steam, and then dismiss them. But, under this subsection that will not be necessary, but a man can be given suitable work as his efficiency grows less. Whether it works well or otherwise depends upon the man in whose hands it is. An arbitrary use can be made of any power, or a fair use can be made of it. Governments are amenable to public opinion, and I do not think it would be fair to assume that this power will be cruelly or unfairly used. The same power exists with regard to the whole civil service to-day, and it is as well for those in the whole service to be aware of the existence of this power.

On section 10,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why say 'chief superintendent' ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have a number of superintendents, and it is to prevent any confusion. We have post office inspectors who have certain duties of superintendence, and in some post offices there are persons called superintendents. He will be called the chief superintendent in order to avoid any confusion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This would not interfere with the appointment of inspectors?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

11. No person over thirty years of age should be eligible for appointment as railway mail clerk or as stamper and sorter.

Mr. PUTTEE. Would it not be necessary here to make some such provision as this :

Other than those serving as temporary employees at the time of the passing of this Act.

I believe there are some who have been in the service for years and are called temporary employees, who would be debarred for appointment under this section. There are some over thirty years of age, I believe.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have no objection to those words. I move that these words be added after the word 'age,' 'other than those at present temporarily in the post office service.'

Amendment agreed to.

On section 13,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are these sections that are repealed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Those are sections dealing with the rates of postage upon parcels. I mentioned in course of the debate the other evening that the rates for parcel post are in great confusion. Some rates are fixed by Act of parliament and some are left to the Postmaster General to be fixed, and it is impossible for postmasters to determine the legal rate upon many parcels passing through the post office. We cannot stop and overhaul them, and it is proposed to repeal all these statutory provisions, and leave them as under the general Act. When this clause is repealed, then the Postmaster General will deal with all the rates.

On section 14,

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The only change in this section is this: There is at present a fund derived from assessments to make good losses that arise through the default or wrong-doing of any of our officers, and it has been held that we cannot use that fund for payment to any one except to the Crown. For example, a person has deposited money in our savings bank, and suppose a postmaster has embezzled that money, we could draw upon the assessment in respect to that loss. But if an individual transmitted a letter containing money through the post office and one of our officers misappropriated it, although it was quite clear who had done it, we could not pay out of the assessment to the individual who had lost the money. The amendment is to make that fund liable to the individual citizen in case of a loss sustained by him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are there regulations in force now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There were, and there will be more. There is no power to make the assessment fund available for a private citizen.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL moved:

That the word 'or' be inserted after the word 'derived' in the 14th line.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How do these regulations come before parliament, or do they come before parliament in any way? How does parliament know what they are?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They have to be gazetted, and they are published in the Post Office Guide, and they get to the public in that way. I do not know that there is any other way of their receiving publicity. Would the hon. gentleman (Mr Borden, Halifax) suggest something?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would suggest that these regulations might perhaps be laid on the Table of parliament within a certain number of days after the opening of the session next after they have been enacted.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They might be incorporated in the report.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, unless there is some provision in the statute.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We generally incorporate them wherever we can. We want to give them the widest publicity. Still, I will endeavour to meet the hon. gentleman's suggestion as far as I can.

On section 15,

Mr. PUTTEE. I would like to ascertain whether the hon. Postmaster General can give any assurance as to meeting the important question of providing for the length of the day's work. I believe that it would make for the smooth operating of every city post office if the suggestion which I make were adopted. It would tend to a greater degree of equality in dividing up the beats and therefore save a great deal of trouble. In the United States eight hours is a day's work, and the salaries which they pay are 50 per cent higher than what those which our letter carriers receive. I would suggest that a clause something like this be added to section 3:

A days work shall consist of eight hours and the eight hours shall not, intermissions included, extend over eleven hours.

That would not interfere with the service, but, on the contrary, would improve it.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is really an amendment which is not necessary. It is quite impossible to fix the exact length of time that a letter carrier will be on his beat. He must remain on his beat until his work is completed. If the hon. gentleman would peruse the time tables in Canada I am sure he would not make that suggestion, because he will find that in many instances the length of service is under eight hours. We cannot measure off the beats so as to fix the exact time during which a man will be out. When he goes out upon his beat he must stay there until the work is completed. The average number of hours during which letter carriers work throughout the whole of Canada is eight hours and twenty-one minutes.

Mr. CLARKE. The work is being steadily increased, and of course it takes longer to do it. The number of letters to be delivered on each man's beat is steadily increasing. He has to go up and down stairs and up and down in elevators, and all that kind of thing, and it might not be unreasonable to expect that you should fix some hour for commencing and finishing work.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The debate is sufficient to indicate the view of the committee, and we will endeavour to live up to the spirit of the discussion this afternoon. The practice in the past has not inflicted any serious injustice on these men, and you can depend upon it that we will not retrograde at least. I propose to move an amendment to the Bill. There is at present a third class in the post office outside service entering at $400 and going up to $800. I propose to divide that third class into two classes, one to be called the fourth class, which will come in at $400 and go up to $600, and the other to begin at $600 and go up to $800, to take power to transfer to that third class stampers and sorters, and to make the annual increment in the case of the fourth class $50 a year. I beg to move :

That portion of schedule 'B' of the Civil Service Act entitled 'Clerks in the City Post Offices' is amended by adding after the words 'post offices' the following :

Fourth-class on appointment $400, by annual increase of $50 up to $600.

And by striking out '400' after the words 'third class' and insert in lieu thereof '600.'

Any stamper and sorter may be promoted to the fourth-class and on such promotion his initial salary as such forth-class clerk shall be equal to the amount of his salary as such stamper and sorter at the time of such promotion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not relevant to this Bill, but I would like to mention a subject as a mere matter of notice. I would like to have the hon. Postmaster General bring down the three affidavits mentioned in the memorandum of the deputy minister, dated May 1st, respecting the dismissal of Mr. Robert Kaulbach. This memorandum refers to the affidavit of Mr. John A. Shaw, Mr. George B. Phalen and Mr. Ainslie B. Shaw.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will do it.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 109) respecting the Molsons Bank Pension Fund.—Mr. Osler.

Bill (No. 123) to incorporate the Canada Eastern Railway Company.—Mr. Fraser.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 143) respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 127) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of George Depew.—Mr. McCarthy.

Bill (No. 145) respecting the Western Alberta Railway Company.—Mr. Copp.

THE ORTHODOX RUSSO-GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

Mr. OLIVER moved second reading of Bill (No. 140) to incorporate the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church for North America and Aleutian Islands, and each of the parishes and missions of the said church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, I am not going to offer any factious opposition to this Bill ; but there seems to be a fatality attached to it. I see that the French translation of the Bill provides for the incorporation of the church, not the bishop, while in the English version it is the bishop of the Orthodox Greek Church. I must also call the attention of the House to the fact that in the body of the Bill there is no responsible name at all. We are asked to incorporate the bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church of North America and the Aleutian Islands and his successors in office. A bishop has no successor in office as bishop, because the word bishop itself does not imply that there is a succession.

The PRIME MINISTER. How do you know ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How do I know that a king never dies ? We had a Bill before a committee this morning, containing the name of a bishop, and we incorporated that bishop and his successors in office. Surely we ought to have a responsible name, because a bishop in that sense is not an individual. There are many other irregularities in connection with this Bill. The party who is seeking incorporation under this title has never proved his identity. We have no petition besides his own, and, as I said on another occasion, he is a foreigner living in a foreign country. He claims to be Bishop of North America and the Aleutian Islands, which is a very vast diocese. Before recognizing the authority of that high clerical official, I think the House should give this matter a second thought. I will allow my hon. friend to have the second reading carried on a division, because I do not want to be committed to the principle of the Bill.

Motion agreed to, on division, and Bill read the second time.

Census, $120,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. minister laid on the Table the papers he promised at the last meeting ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I think so, with the exception of the accounts which the hon.

member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) asked for in connection with the investigation in the province of Quebec, which I now lay on the Table. The other papers asked for were laid on the Table the day after the discussion.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman promised to bring down the stub check-book showing the checks that were paid during January and February to the friends up in Lisgar.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Here is a statement of the payments to the enumerators.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman laid any information on the Table with regard to a matter which I brought to his attention? I asked him to give me the names of the enumerators who had their attention directed to the charges of fraud in connection with the taking of the census, before these charges were made public.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may say to the hon. gentleman that I was misinformed when I said I believed that the enumerators had been notified of the charges made against them. I believe there was only one enumerator really who was spoken to about this investigation, and he was spoken to informally by the hon. member for Bagot, who was looking into the matter in the county of Bagot. I had a conversation with Mr. O'Connor, of Montreal, who made the investigation there. He told me that one of the enumerators, who had been working in 1891, was enumerator also in his division in 1901. I asked him if he had spoken to this enumerator, and he said that he had not spoken to him definitely, although he had asked him about it, but intended doing so. I thought he had done so, but I found afterwards that he had not. I thought that several other gentlemen were spoken to, but I find that they were not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman was very positive the other day that a number of the enumerators had these charges of fraud brought to their attention, and had been requested to send in their replies before those charges were made public. The hon. gentleman ought to know positively before making any statement of the kind. I think it is one of the most humiliating admissions ever made by any man in this House, which the Minister of Agriculture has just made. He admits that he has brought charges broadcast against these men, and that in not one instance were these charges brought to their attention before they were made. What justification has the hon. gentleman for slandering these men behind their backs and scattering those charges throughout the length and breadth of the country, without giving them the opportunity of saying a word in their defence? It is only due to the hon. gentleman himself and the government and this House that some justification of that extraordinary mode of procedure should be given. We have these charges made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and then repeated over and over again by the hon. gentleman. I did not think it possible that such a course could have been adopted without some notice having been given these men. The charges against them were not made under oath. These enumerators were not given the opportunity of examining witnesses, but they were denounced as guilty of fraud on these ex parte statements, not made under oath, and made against men who were under oath in the discharge of their duties. Surely there must be some explanation of this extraordinary mode of procedure. Surely it has not been resorted to merely to make political capital.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What we wanted was to get at the proof and find out what explanation there was of the extraordinary condition of affairs, shown by comparisons of the figures of the census of 1891 with those of 1901. The figures of 1901 showed in many cases great decreases in population, in places where the people, who were familiar with the neighbourhood, could not believe such decreases could have taken place. The first mode of procedure was to try and check over the results of the census of 1901, and in the province of Quebec we had a ready means in the parochial returns of making this check. Our check shows that the census of 1901 was fairly accurate. The difference between the parochial, and the census returns of 1901, in twenty-one constituencies, was only 8,000, and that was as close as could be expected, considering the three months difference in time between the two. The question then was whether there had been any mistake in the census returns of 1891. Going back we found a difference of 44,000 between the census of 1891 and the parochial returns of that year, which was a most extraordinary discrepancy. The question then was: Where did this discrepancy take place? We found that a number of people had been enumerated in the Dominion census, who were not present when that census was taken, and we established this by incontrovertible evidence. I must confess that while I expected that some of the enumerators implicated had been notified, I did not give any definite instructions to that effect, and did not take any particular means for the purpose of consulting them. The evidence we had was such that it was impossible not to believe that the enumerators had unduly swelled the returns of 1891, and that being the case, I could not see any necessity for consulting the enumerators. No doubt if I had, they would have tried to shuffle out of the responsibility.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is certainly a remarkable reason. The hon. gentleman listens to ex parte statements, not made under oath, made behind the backs of these men, and assumes them to be true. He says that these men are such scoundrels that there is no use at all appealing to them. Just as if some one should accuse the hon. gentleman of burglarly, and a third person should be appealed to who would say that the hon. gentleman was guilty. It would be suggested that the hon. gentleman should be heard in his own defence, but the answer would be: No, if the Hon. Sydney Fisher is guilty of burglarly there is no use in asking him, because he would deny it. That is a specimen of the hon. gentleman's logic with regard to these men. And he considers that he is doing justice to himself, I suppose, when he makes that explanation. He accused these men over and over again, in his speech, of fraud, and this is the only answer that he has to give to this House and to the country when he is expostulated with for making these charges without giving these men an opportunity to answer. And he has a number of gentlemen around him who were shocked because the other day the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) was not disposed to give the name of a gentleman who had informed him that Mr. Wm. Pugsley had gone to New York. These gentlemen almost wept with sorrow and grief over that refusal. Yet the hon. gentleman and his colleagues and his friends have nothing to say when an explanation is asked with regard to this extraordinary occurrence. Fifty or sixty or perhaps a hundred enumerators—I do not know the number—are charged deliberately in this House with fraud of a most serious character, with perjury, with violating their oaths of office, and yet the Minister of Agriculture says that the only excuse he has for making these charges against these men behind their backs and without giving them the slightest opportunity to answer, is that the charges are true and the men must be such scoundrels that there is no use in asking them about the facts. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should venture to rise in this House when he has no better explanation than that. I venture to think that it would have been far better for him to have retained his seat, to have said nothing at all, than to give so useless an explanation of his conduct as he has given. I deeply regret, for the sake of this country, that these gentlemen, members of this government, should have so little regard for the decency of civilized life as to make these charges against the public officers without giving them the slightest opportunity to be heard in their own behalf, without even speaking to these men before the charges were made thus publicly in this House. Why, the position taken by the Minister of Agriculture is a monstrous one. The charges that he made were not supported by any evidence under oath, they were supported by hearsay evidence, statements made, in many cases, by persons who did not pretend to speak from their own personal knowledge of the facts. The statements were not made under oath, but the returns made by these officers which are called in question, were made under oath. The work of these men was in discharge of their duty as public officers, and surely any man who undertakes to perform service for the country is at least entitled to expect that members of the government under whom he serves, or of any future government, will not attack him behind his back as has been done in this case, will not accuse him of fraud without at least giving him an opportunity of being heard in his own defence.

Mr. CLARKE. Who was the chief census officer in 1891?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Mr. George Johnson.

Mr. CLARKE. Is he still in the employ of the government?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Was he asked for any explanation of these alleged discrepancies, or called upon to make any report as to how they arose?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He has not been called upon for such a report yet.

Mr. CLARKE. And he is still in the employ of the country, and occupying a responsible position. He was responsible to the government of that day and to the people of the country for the accuracy of the statements that were made as to the results of the census of 1891. As the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has pointed out, most serious charges have been made by the hon. minister (Mr. Fisher) and one of his colleagues impugning the integrity of the enumerators in many places. Yet the gentleman who was responsible for the census and who is still a government officer has never been asked to give his views or to offer any explanation of what would appear to be very grave discrepancies in the census. Hon. gentlemen opposite have made so many statements within the last three or four years as to the progress Canada was making, as to the exodus being stopped, and as to the population of Canada increasing by leaps and bounds, that when the result of the census of 1901 was made known they had to find some pretext to justify their statements. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) in 1898 estimated the population of Canada at five and three quarter millions, and expressed the hope that it would soon be six millions. But when the census figures were made known and the hon. gentleman found that he was wide of the mark, he devoted all the energy and ability he possesses to pouring vituperation upon those who had taken the census of 1891.

Mr. COWAN. Did he not give pretty good evidence for what he said ?

Mr. CLARKE. Not a particle of evidence that would be accepted by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) himself as a professional man. Not one single allegation was buttressed with statements under oath from those who knew the facts. It was ungenerous and unjust for a minister of the Crown to charge these officers with fraud and perjury and with giving false returns of the census of ten years ago. But the extraordinary spectacle is presented to us to-night of the Minister of Agriculture having still in the employment of the Crown in his department the man who must have been responsible for this loose condition of things, if it existed. Surely he should have been treated as an honourable man, and if these inaccuracies had been discovered, as alleged, he should have been asked for an explanation of them ? He surely might have been invited to consider whether the statements as to frauds were correct or not and to say whether the figures presented in 1891 in connection with the census were worthy of credence or not ?

Mr. COWAN. He might have been asked to explain the knitting factories and the carpet factories shown in the census of 1891.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cowan) will say something germane to the subject before you, Mr. Chairman, I shall be happy to discuss it. I can only hear something about 'knitting factories,' and I do not see what that has to do with the question. We have here a most humiliating state of affairs. Hon. members of this House occupying the most responsible positions in Canada, ministers of the Crown, have not hesitated to make statements in this House which their friends in the country will be expected to believe, but which statements have not, so far, been justified by such evidence as to make them appear statements which can be relied upon as well founded. Is it the intention of the Minister of Agriculture to give Mr. Johnson an opportunity to explain, to call Mr. Johnson to his aid in making an explanation of the discrepancies which are said to have been found in these various towns and parishes ? Would it not be reasonable to ask Mr. Johnson for an explanation ? If that gentleman is still worthy of being retained in the public service, surely he is the man who should be asked to account, if he can, for these alleged discrepancies ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not come to any conclusion as to what steps I shall take in the further investigation of the census of 1891. As I said on a former occasion when this question was discussed, this whole investigation arose out of a desire to check the census of 1901, and was carried on for that purpose, and with that object in view. The developments are shown by the papers laid on the Table of the House. As head of the bureau of statistics in 1891, no doubt Mr. Johnson is responsible for the census. But I have not suggested in any way that Mr. Johnson was responsible for these inaccuracies. All the evidence points to the fact that the enumerators in the different localities put on names for the purpose of swelling the returns. It has been suggested, though that may not be the proper explanation, that, as they were paid according to the names they put on, they sought to get more pay than they otherwise would. I have not gone into that question, and have no results except those that I have laid on the Table. But I think these documents fully justify me and my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in the conclusions we drew that the census of 1891 was materially and very largely stuffed in those counties in which we have had an investigation.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Minister of Agriculture came before this House last session and the session before and asked us for an appropriation for the census of 1901. That money was granted. Now the minister comes and informs this House that he has misappropriated some thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars of that money to employ commissioners to ascertain whether the census of 1891 was correct or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On what does the hon. gentleman base that statement ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The minister himself stated he had paid out of the census fund $13,000 or $14,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. When did I say that ?

Mr. TAYLOR. At the last meeting when we discussed the question.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Did I mention any sum ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, you did not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman's statement of the sum is absolutely incorrect.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will get at it. The minister did make the statement that he had paid these commissioners out of the census vote, $13,000. I am credibly informed the sum was about $13,000.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have laid the statment on the Table, and if the hon. gentleman will look at it he will find it was 200 odd dollars.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, if it is only 200 cents the minister had no right to misappropriate funds. He never asked this House for a vote for that purpose, yet he has the audacity to come forward and say he took a sum out of the money voted for taking the census for 1901, to make an investigation of his own, and I will read the result of one of these investigations. I have here a letter from an honest man whose signature is as good as his oath. None of the other statements are made under oath, neither is this one. This gentleman is of high standing, and a strong supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Belleville, January 22, 1901.

Archibald Blue, Esq.,
Ottawa.

My dear Sir,—I have completed the work in connection with the examination of the census of 1891 for the Townhip of Thurlow and the city of Belleville, as requested by you.

I could have done the work much more quickly and easily had the numbers of the lots and concessions, as well as the names of the streets been given. This difficulty, and another, which applies particularly to the city of Belleville—I refer to the numerous and flagrant mistakes in spelling—greatly increased my work. In many cases I at first supposed whole families had been added, but in every case I afterwards ascertained that the names had been incorrectly spelled either by the census taker or by the copyist.

The decrease of population in the township of Thurlow is attributable to two chief causes, first, the general movement to the unsettled parts of the Dominion and secondly to the fact that no work is being done at either of the large limestone quarries at Foxboro and Point Ann, where, ten years ago, fully six hundred inhabitants were directly dependent upon this industry. It the city of Belleville there were ten years ago, twenty or perhaps twenty-five small industries, conducted by men of moderate means, that gave employment to a considerable number of men and boys. These have been almost entirely wiped out by the large concerns of other places. This fact coupled with the general movement west, to which I have adverted, are the causes of the decline of the population of Belleville. I am glad to be able to report after a very careful examination, that I find the census of 1891 for the township of Thurlow and the city of Belleville to have been correctly taken.

I am, dear sir,
Faithfully yours,
(Sgd.) N. VERMILYEA.

Now, Mr. Vermilyea reports the census in that district, which is one of the suspected ones, was correctly taken; yet the minister, with that statement in his hands, comes forward and charges the enumerators for the whole Dominion with having perpetrated frauds and stuffed the lists; and he misappropriates funds, not voted for the purpose, to pay Mr. Vermilyea and these other commissioners who went round to investigate what was done ten years ago. If a crime has been committed the minister has committed it, for he has done what no other minister ever did in this country before—take money voted for one purpose and use it for another purpose entirely different. In the whole record of the late government he cannot find anything of that kind. Yet this minister comes forward and asks for an appropriation, and steals part of that money to pay some of his political friends.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, 'take it,' if that is a better word—take money out of one appropriation and use it for a purpose altogether different, without informing parliament. Now, the minister may as well understand it as not. He promised us last night that he would bring down the cheque book for the payments, made in January and February, to the parties in Lisgar. He brings down a little statement here to-night, but no payment for January or February, nothing since September, October and December. I am informed that a large number of cheques were issued out of the census fund, and that there was a number of cheque books. I fancy the commissioner of census is the party who issues the cheques for paying the census claims, and he has the stubs for January and February, and I want to see them. The minister has not brought down a statement for January. I am credibly informed that a large number of cheques went out there in the Lisgar election early in February when the campaign was on. The minister promised to bring down the cheque books so that we may see what cheques were issued. We want those papers before this item goes through.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman is evidently so excited that he does not measure his language very closely. He said a few minutes ago that he was credibly informed that this investigation about which he was talking cost $13,000 or $14,000. I have laid on the Table all the payments that have been made in regard to that investigation, and they amount up to the present time to $254, speaking from memory.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps they are not all paid.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All in the province of Quebec are. The hon. gentleman goes on and says he is credibly informed—on the same ground I suppose—that many cheques were issued for payment of the Lisgar census accounts in the months of January and February. Well, the hon. gentleman has in his hand a list of the payments, all that were made in the Lisgar census work. There has not been a single payment made except those in the list the hon. gentleman has in his hand. I have not got the cheque books here, because the stubs of the cheque books out of which the Lisgar payments are made are all regular cheque books that come in their order. There are no other payments made than are found in those cheque books. I thought if I gave the hon. gentleman a list and told him on my responsibility as a minister that that list contained all the payments made for the Lisgar census, he would accept my statement. If he does not choose to, I can bring down the actual cheque books and place them on the Table ; and the hon. gentleman will find, on the statement of the accountant and the register of the bank, the date when the letters were sent out containing those cheques. These can be brought down if the hon. gentleman has any doubts.

Mr. TAYLOR. Were there cheques issued just previous to the Lisgar election by the census department and sent out there ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has them all in that list under his hand.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the minister answer my question ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will answer it as I proceed. I do not know the date of the Lisgar election.

Mr. TAYLOR. The 17th or 18th of February.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If that is the case, I will look at those dates and see my accountant, and find if any were sent out at that time. The hon. gentleman has under his hand a list of every cheque that was sent to Lisgar to pay the accounts in that district. If he examines that list he will find out the date of every cheque sent, and he will find that there was not one cent in the month of February, nor in January either. Now, the hon. gentleman went on to talk about money being misappropriated, and he used very strong language. The hon. gentleman cannot substantiate that statement in any shape or form. There was no money misappropriated. The money which was spent in that investigation was spent properly and rightly in dealing with the census of 1901 ; it was spent for the purpose of finding out whether the census of 1901, as it was taken by our enumerators, was correct. The first thing that struck us in the census of 1901 was that, in certain parts of Canada, there was a decrease of population as compared with the census of 1891. That seemed an extraordinary condition of affairs. Possibly there might have been some mistake in the census taking of 1901. We therefore took means to check over the census taken in 1901 and in that process of checking over the census we took the parochial returns in those constituencies where the population is practically altogether Catholic and consequently where the parochial returns would include practically the whole population. We found that in 21 of these counties there was a difference of 8,000 between the parochial returns and the Dominion census returns of 1891. I may say that at the same time that was done the parochial returns of 1891 were consulted to see what the comparison was between them and the census returns of that year. The result was that we found in the parochial returns that there were a lot of names, but not by any means all of the names that were in the census and we found that the census contained numerically names that were not in the parochial returns. The question was to find out whether these census returns were correct, to find out whether the people enumerated in the census returns were there or not, and whether a mistake had occurred in the parochial returns or the census returns, and we found, on the evidence of men who knew these parishes through and through and year after year, many years before 1891, that there were people who were enumerated in the census but not in the parochial returns who were not present in these parishes and were not present when the census was taken. That was the object of the investigation. It was not an investigation to prove that the census of 1891 was incorrect but it was for the purpose of proving that the census of 1901 was and is correct, and I think it is proved beyond peradventure, and if as a result of this investigation it has been found that the census taken by hon. gentlemen opposite in 1891 was false and was stuffed, so much the worse for them and so much the worse for the way in which their census was taken. It was also proved that the Dominion of Canada has not been standing still, as it was thought to have been when the census returns first came out, but that, as a matter of fact, probably has increased in population at as fair a rate as could be fairly expected. The hon. gentleman speaks of this being a misappropriation of funds. As a matter of fact it was a perfectly proper expenditure for the purpose of proving that the census of 1901 was correct and was properly taken.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did the hon. gentleman, in the statement which he gave to the House when he asked for money for taking the census, say that he wanted to use a portion of that money to inquire into the census of 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I had no intention of doing it at that time.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman asked for money to take the census of 1901 and not to inquire into the census of 1891. Whether this amount of money which has been expended in this way is small or large it does not affect the question. The hon. gentleman hands in a typewritten paper containing a few names but I do not see the name of the reverend gentleman that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) has referred to for having done a large amount of work. I do not see any account of money having been paid to him. The statement contains the names of the following gentlemen and the amounts they received :—

Rev. E. Roy, Montreal..	$ 5 00
Rev. J. R. Leonard, Rimouski.. ..	10 00
Rev. N. Marchand, Three Rivers..	40 00
Rev. F. A. St. Germain, Nicolet ..	10 00
Rev. T. B. Morin, St. Jean de Matha..	15 00
Archbishop Begin, Quebec..	25 00
E. G. O'Connor, Montreal..	90 35
Dr. C. S. Gauthier, St. Ephrem d'Upton....	50 00

making a total of $245.35. I do not see any reference to any money being paid to the reverend gentleman referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know that that gentleman has received any. That is all that has been paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then, there must be a lot unpaid. I do not see any account of a payment to Mr. Vermilyea, nor do I see any record of a payment to Mr. Petrie who looked after the town of Simcoe and the village of Port Dover. Nor, do I see anything paid to——

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. These are the payments in Quebec. I told the hon. gentleman that the statement did not contain the list for Ontario. The other bills have not been paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much of the vote is the hon. gentleman going to misappropriate ? I do not see the account of a payment to E. O'Callighan, of the town of Cornwall, who was a candidate in the last election. He has to have his election expenses paid and the hon. minister asks him to find out the frauds perpetrated in Cornwall in 1891 so that he may pay him a little bill. As to the statement which the hon. minister brings down I did not ask him for a statement of how much had been expended in Lisgar. I asked him for the cheque book for January and February. He puts in a statement of the expense of taking the census in Lisgar during the year, giving the names of the enumerators, when paid, the amount paid, the total paid, and the balance claimed. In this statement he shows the balances claimed but the last payment which he shows to have been made in this statement was in the month of December. There has nothing been paid according to this statement since the month of December. Are these balances that we find to have been claimed unpaid still ? Will the hon. minister say that these balances which he shows in his statement are still unpaid or were the enumerators in Lisgar paid just previous to the election ? That is the information which I have received.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, the hon. gentleman's information is entirely wrong. The statement shows what has been paid. Nothing else has been paid in Lisgar. There was no cheque sent out in January or February to Lisgar at all. I have sent my accountant for the cheque book and the hon. gentleman will have it in a few minutes, and he will be able to see for himself.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman refer these accounts to the Public Accounts Committee and allow us to have an inquiry into them ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will move that they be referred to the Public Accounts Committee next session he will have an inquiry.

Mr. TAYLOR. This session.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, the Public Accounts Committee does not deal with the accounts of this year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. gentleman say that these accounts are unpaid ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman will see the total amount paid and that is all that has been paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the hon. minister if these balances which are claimed are still unpaid.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly, if they are not included in the total amount paid they are not paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. minister only shows what has been paid up to December.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Nothing has been paid in Lisgar since the last date contained in that list. I do not know that I can make it more clear.

Mr. McCREARY. I do not much wonder that the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is a little anxious about Lisgar. Lisgar may be rather an important matter to him. Sitting beside him are the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche) and the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd), both of whom took an active part in the recent election in Lisgar.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. McCREARY. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Roche) may not have been there. I will retract the statement as far as that hon. gentleman is concerned. But the hon. member for Macdonald took an active part in that election. He exercised all the eloquence of which he is possessed and put forth every effort to secure the support of the people for the Conservative candidate. He also had the premier of the province of Manitoba, the Minister of Public Works, the Attorney General and other members of the local government with him, and yet, Sir, all the Conservative electors they could find in Lisgar were 1,300, just sufficient to lose the Conservative candidate his deposit. It is no wonder that some hon. gentlemen think the population of that county is not as large as it should be. In regard to the census taken in 1901 and the census taken in 1891 I would say that anybody who has known Winnipeg during the last few years must know that a large increase in population has taken place.

I well recollect that in 1891 when the ex-mayor of Winnipeg, Mr. McMicken was enumerator, he went so far that he was kicked out of some of the houses in Winnipeg because of some impertinent questions which he asked of certain people. Every one in Winnipeg who is acquainted with the facts, knows that as a matter of fact, large numbers of people left the province of Manitoba in 1894, 1895 and 1896. I remember travelling one evening from Winnipeg to Deer Lodge, a distance of five miles, as a representative of the Board of Trade, and I met on that trip 26 covered wagons with people coming from Alberta and going across the line south. But what is the condition of affairs to-day ? I have here some immigration returns published in the Winnipeg 'Free Press' of Wednesday, April 30th, and they are well worth reading, so that hon. gentlemen can compare the condition of affairs at the present day as regards immigration with the condition formerly :

The number of immigrants arriving from the United States, for the month of March, was 3,243. The States from which they came and the numbers from each, are :—

Iowa	573
Minnesota	499
Nebraska	410
S. Dakota	291
Kansas	249
Utah	201
Michigan	111
Wisconsin	95
Missouri	86
New York	68
Massachusetts	70
Montana	59
Illinois	54
Oklahoma	49
Indian Ter	38
Pennsylvania	40
Texas	22
Idaho	22
Rhode Island	14
New Hampshire	16
Indiana	8
Ohio	9
New Jersey	6
Maine	5
Wyoming	3
Virginia	2
Vermont	2
N. Carolina	1
Washington	1
Florida	1
California	1
	3,243

The British immigration during the same period was as follows :

English	647
Welsh	24
Scotch	275

The British and American immigration into Canada for the month of April last was 4,355. This year it was 7,243, an increase of nearly 60 per cent. The total number of British and American immigrants who have come to Canada this year is 10,069, as against 5,821 for the first three months of 1901.

I trust that every member of this House will weigh these figures carefully. These men who are coming to settle in Canada are our brothers ; they are coming to help us to build up our country, and there is no use of our quarrelling with the census of 1891 or or 1901. I believe there were mistakes made in both census. I know that there were mistakes made in the census of 1891 and there were mistakes made in 1901. But so long as the people are happy and are coming into our country in such large numbers, just as large as our railways can handle, surely we should be content and need not quarrel about the census of 1891 or of 1901. I notice that reference is made quite frequently in this House to the population of the city of Belleville. That is no doubt a remarkable city, but I am not much surprised that it is somewhat depopulated. As far as I know the city of Belleville is the home of some gentlemen who were known as the nest of traitors a few years ago, and I am not surprised that some of the best young men of that city took the idea into their head to go west. I think they are all the better for having done so. I believe that men living in a city with politicians of that sort are far better to go west than to remain there. I do not think that the members of the west should decry the census of 1901. I believe that if Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his government remain in power for another ten years, as I believe they will, any one who decries our population now will be ashamed of his language when the census of 1911 is taken. I believe we are going to have in the west at the end of the next ten years a population, not of 400,000 but a population of 2,000,000 between Lake Superior and the Rocky Mountains. If that happy result flows from the acts of this present administration it will be something that not only the western members but the eastern members should be proud of.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no doubt that the member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) has enlightened the minister by the eloquence he has just displayed. Perhaps the hon. gentleman can give me a little information which I would like to know. There is a person in his constituency by the name of John Menery who put in an account for $280.60 and was paid $250.10, leaving a balance of $30.50 due him. Perhaps the hon. member for Selkirk can tell me whether that balance is still due to Mr. John Menery.

Mr. McCREARY. And suppose it is.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. George E. Laidlaw claimed $211.73 and he was paid $162 on account, a balance being due him of $49.73. Can the minister tell us if these accounts are still due or are claimed by these gentlemen ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman does not seem to understand this statement. There is first of all the name of the enumerator, then the date the cheques went out, then the amount paid. Mr. John Menery sent in a bill for his total claim of $280.60, but the accountant cut down a portion of that as not being properly charged and a cheque for $250.10 was sent to Mr. Menery in settlement. The amount of $30.50 is what was not allowed of his account.

Mr. TAYLOR. And he claims the balance yet.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not know whether he does or not. We have had no communication from him saying whether he is content with what he got. Unless he can show some good reason that his account was unjustly and improperly cut down, he will not get more than the $250.10 that was paid him under the rules and regulations issued for the payment of the enumerators.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps I had better read his entire statement, so that some of these gentlemen who are claiming balances in Lisgar may know whether they have been paid or not since December. The minister says that there was not a dollar paid in Lisgar in January or February.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said that and I maintain it, nor up to the present date.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the minister will hear later on something different. There are numerous claims by enumerators here averaging from $1 up to $56. My information is that all these gentlemen were settled with previous to the Lisgar election, and that the cheques were sent to them for these balances either in the month of January or February.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That information is entirely incorrect.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, perhaps we will have a way of reaching it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will give the hon. gentleman the stub cheque books, and if he can find there that payment was made to any one in Lisgar in January or February, I will take back everything I have said.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one statement in the list of documents laid on the Table of the House which I would like to inquire about. One of the officers of the department says :

> The object of procuring the parochial statistics was, first, to ascertain the correctness and accuracy of our own census ; and incidentally we discovered that the census of 1891 had been unduly stuffed, and made a thorough investigation in a few counties here and there throughout Canada.

I would like to inquire what meaning the hon. gentleman attaches to the expression 'unduly stuffed.' To what extent would the census have to be stuffed before it was unduly stuffed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I should say myself that if it were stuffed at all it would be unduly stuffed. What was meant was that there were names improperly entered in the census of 1891, because the people were not in the country when the census was taken.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What were the counties in which a thorough investigation was made ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The list was placed on the Table. There were twenty-one counties in the province of Quebec in which the parochial returns were examined.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). May I inquire whether the hon. gentleman acquiesces in the view of his officer that that constitutes a thorough investigation ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, I think it is a thorough investigation to take the counties eminently entirely Catholic, and to check the census returns with the parochial returns in those counties. We took practically all the counties in the province of Quebec where that was the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But this is a general statement, that the census of 1891, not in those particular counties, but in all the counties of Quebec at least, was unduly stuffed.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think what we found in those counties would justify the statement that very generally the census of 1891 was unduly swelled by the insertion of the names of people who were not there. I referred on another occasion to a statement made on the floor of this House in 1894 by hon. friend the Minister of Militia (Hon. Mr. Borden) as to what occurred in the province of Nova Scotia in his county on that occasion, and I think the accumulation of evidence is such as to justify the statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In other words the hon. gentleman thinks he is justified in accusing the enumerators in every county in Canada in 1891—

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not in every county.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what counties, then, was the census of 1891 not unduly stuffed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot tell in what counties the census was honestly taken and in what counties it was not, but we have evidence to show that in a large number of counties there was clear dishonesty in entering the names of people who were not in the country, and that being the case, I made the general statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says he has sufficient evidence on which to make a general statement that the census of 1891 was unduly stuffed, whatever that means. What I want to know is whether his information is sufficiently definite to enable him to state whether there is any county to be excepted from that statement. If there is, I would like him to name that county.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has just heard the statement read by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), a statement to which I referred the other evening that the investigation in the town of Belleville and the township of Thurlow showed that the census there was accurately and properly taken. That is the only statement I have received to show that in any particular place the census was accurately taken. I must correct myself in saying that. I am informed that there were reports laid on the Table from some counties which showed that the census was accurately taken in those counties. I cannot give the names of the counties at this moment.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are not the hon. gentleman's officers prepared to give us the names of those counties ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not got those names in my mind at the moment. The list was laid on the Table with the full statement in regard to them.

Mr. HACKETT. With regard to these parochial returns were they asked from the Roman Catholic clergymen of Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, we made no investigation in the province of Prince Edward Island at all.

Mr. SPROULE. In listening to the statements in this House regarding the conduct of the census enumerators in 1891, what they had done and what they had not done, one would readily come to the conclusion that human character was either of very little value in Canada, or that the moral code of some gentlemen in the country was at a very low ebb, because the freedom with which sweeping statements have been made regarding a large number of enumerators, extending to some thousands, that they were practically perjurers, and had done what, if established in court, would land any one of them behind the bars of the penitentiary, is something astounding ; and when one comes to analyse the evidence on which these statements are made, one is forced to the conclusion that the parties who made them either had very little regard for men's characters or very little idea of what they were saying. I have in my hands one of these returns. It is from the town of Simcoe, and I give it as a fair sample of the others, though I have not gone over many of them. It is in just such returns that the statement was made in this House that these men had deliberately perjured and forsworn themselves. Mr. H. G. Petrie, of Simcoe, says :

> The lapse of time and the consequent lapse of memory of persons having knowledge of the facts has rendered it very difficult to get information ; but notwithstanding this the list contains 120 names of persons improperly enumerated—77 in Simcoe and 43 in Port Dover—which alone instead of a decrease would have shown an increase compared with the returns of 1901.

He goes on and gives a number of these names, but the significance of the matter is that he nearly always speaks of them as being out of the place two years previous to the time the census was taken. He can manage to establish that data from the memory of people living in the locality, no matter how imperfect it is, with sufficient care to say that they were absent two years from the place or never lived in it. Then he goes on to say where he has given many of these names, that they were names of parties living in some other locality, but he is innocent enough to give himself away by saying that the names entered in the various schedules have not corresponded with many of the names. When he is giving duplicate names to show that the parties were taken in two places, he says the names do not correspond. That is sufficient to satisfy any person that the chances are that they were not the same parties at all. Although the names are the same, they were names of different individuals living in different localities.

He was depending on what was told him by people who were trying to charge their memory back with conditions that existed ten years before. What hon. member can say who resided ten years ago in the particular village or town in which that hon. member happens to be living ? How many of us could say on oath whether such an individual lived ten years ago in our own town or not, or how long such an individual had been out of the place previous to 1891 ? In my opinion, had these people been put upon oath and questioned carefully and reminded that the information they were giving was information which was going to damn some people's character, they would have been much more careful. They were probably not aware of what use would be made of the information they were giving, or they would have been much more careful. If we consider the lapse of time, ten years, we must conclude that it would be very difficult for any one to say who were living in a certain place ten years ago. He might remember some of the prominent families or his associates in business and social relations, but a great many other people he would utterly fail to recollect. And supposing he could remember that some were out of the place ten years ago, how could he tell how long they had been out of it, and whether they intended to come back or remain permanently away. We must not forget that in the instructions given, the enumerators were ordered to enumerate any people who had left the place temporarily and were expected back. My attention was drawn to this in 1891 by a gentleman from the province of Quebec, who told me that this regulation would lead to an incorrect taking of the census. The enumerator puts the question to the head of a family: How many children have you? The head of the family replies, so many, and gives the names. Then the enumerator asks of each: Is he at home? The head of the family replies: No. Then he puts the question: Do you expect him back? And in forty-nine cases out of fifty, especially in the province of Quebec, the parent will reply in the affirmative, even though the child had been away for years, and had married or settled down elsewhere. It is a fact that the heads of French Canadian families, in nearly every instance, expect their children back. So that many names would go down in the census of people who were not in the locality at the time the census was taken and who did not come back as was expected. Then the instructions go on to say that if the party is absent for a long time and the answer is not given that he is expected back, the enumerator must put this other question: Has the party been away over two years? If an answer be given in the affirmative, his name is not taken down. But you can see how easy it would be for parties to be taken down, when the first question was answered in the affirmative, and how easy it would be to have many members of the family enumerated although they were out of the country at the time. I only mention this as an illustration to show how easy it was to make an incorrect census, and to do so innocently and in the faithful discharge of duty, according to instructions given. Then an analysis is made and the census is found not absolutely correct, according to the memory of men living in the locality ten years later, and on such statements these enumerators are declared to be perjurers who ought really to be in the penitentiary. The parties who make these allegations must have very little respect for their fellow men, when they make these charges in the wholesale way they do. Take some of these as an illustration. I find the following statement: 'McBride left Simcoe permanently in 1891, and has not lived here since.' How could the man who made that statement know that McBride had left prior to 1891 and had left permanently? And is it not possible that McBride's name was taken down, on the statement of his parent that he was coming back; and because he has not come back since, we are to assume, on the statement of a party who is looking back ten years, that the enumerator is a liar and a perjurer? Is that evidence on which we should rely in order to damn any one's character? The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce ought to be ashamed of themselves when they make use of such statements to bolster up these flimsy charges. Here is another statement: 'James Bray, married, and not resident in Simcoe.' There is not a word said about the time. Yet this is taken as evidence that the enumerator did not do his duty. Here is another: 'George Bray, married, and gone permanently, not resident in Simcoe.' There is nothing said as to when he left Simcoe or how long he had been out of the place or whether he was there in 1891 or not, but this is considered as evidence that the enumerator is a liar. Here is another statement: 'James Weston, permanently engaged out of town, and not resident in 1891 or several years prior.' I took a number of other cases, and in every instance the party was declared not to have been a resident for two years before 1891. The statement is very specific with regard to the exact time, notwithstanding the fact that the memory of the parties who gave the information may have been defective, and there is a strange coincidence in the fact that in nearly every instance two years is given as the length of time when the parties mentioned were absent prior to 1891. Here is another statement: 'George Kelly, employed permanently on the railway, with headquarters elsewhere than Simcoe, was away a year previous to 1891.' There is nothing to verify the statement, but the statement is made simply on recollection going back ten years. How does the party know that this man had been away a year before 1891? Is his memory infallible? Is it not possible that he may be all wrong? Yet such statements as these are taken to prove that the enumerator was a liar and perjurer. What can the Minister of Agriculture think of himself when he takes such flimsy evidence for the purpose of damning human character? I never heard of anything so disgraceful, and find it difficult to believe that any one who considers himself an honourable man should lend himself to such unworthy proceedings.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A few moments ago I asked the Minister of Agriculture if these parochial returns had been asked for from Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand the clergy in the province of Prince Edward Island were asked for these returns but only one was sent in.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A moment ago the hon. minister said there were none sent in.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were asked for, but only one was sent in, and that was from the Rev. Mr. Gallon.

Mr. HACKETT. That would be Bloomfield ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not say what parish.

Mr. HACKETT. What township ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot give that information just now.

Mr. HACKETT. It appears that out of a large number, seventy-nine, he was the only one that made any reply. I would like to know what part of the island he resides in ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My officer informs me he cannot remember the parish, but the name of the only one who made a return from Prince Edward Island was the Rev. Mr. Gallon.

Mr. HACKETT. Were the enumerators in Prince Edward Island appointed by townships or by polling divisions ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The enumerators everywhere were appointed by polling divisions.

Mr. HACKETT. Who was the enumerator in the first polling division in West Prince ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The memorandum does not show for which polling divisions the several enumerators were appointed. But if the hon. gentleman will give me any name he wishes to check--

Mr. HACKETT. A man called Doyle.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman spoke of him the last time this item was under discussion, and I have obtained the information he desired. Doyle was appointed one of the enumerators, but when he was asked to take the oath, he declined to do so. The commissioner recommended Anthony Broderick as enumerator, and, on reference here, Broderick was appointed. He did the work and received the money.

Mr. HACKETT. Is the hon. minister aware that Doyle went around two days taking the census ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. On the contrary, my information is that Broderick did the whole of the work. The books show that all the returns were made by Broderick and that the money was paid to him.

Mr. HACKETT. I happen to come from that county and I know all the facts. Doyle went about for a day or two taking the census, but found that he was incompetent and looked around for another man to take his place. Peter Broderick was anxious to get the job for his son, and Doyle offered for $20 to get him appointed. Broderick gave him $20 and got his son Anthony appointed, and he went around and took the census. It is difficult to say whether Broderick began where Doyle stopped or where he stopped himself.

Mr. COCHRANE. But Doyle got the $20 ?

Mr. HACKETT. Yes, he did.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So far as the records of the department show, the commissioner there reported that Doyle, the man first appointed, refused to take the oath and the commissioner, Mr. Tweedy, recommended the appointment of Broderick. That was discussed here and the commissioner was authorized to appoint Broderick. The returns from the polling division are signed by Broderick and countersigned by the commissioner. Broderick received the money from the department as having done the whole of the work. The cheque was made out in favour of Broderick. We have no knowledge whatever of Doyle having done any work in connection with the census. If the statement which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hackett) makes is correct—and I have no doubt that he is convinced it is—it has never come to our attention at all. If any farming out of the work has been done, it has been done in direct contravention of the instructions given to the commissioners and the enumerators, and we would not have recognized it. If, as the hon. gentleman says, Doyle did some of the work and Broderick got paid for it, we know nothing of that here.

Mr. HACKETT. I am not finding fault with the minister in this connection, but I want to get at the facts. Will he please tell me who recommended Doyle and who recommended Broderick ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that the recommendation of Doyle came from Mr. McLellan and Senator Yeo. When Doyle refused to take the oath Mr. Tweedy recommended Broderick. That was submitted to Sir Louis Davies, who was then a minister of the Crown, he endorsed it and Broderick was appointed.

Mr. HACKETT. I am pleased to get the information, and, as I say, I attribute nothing to the hon. minister in this connection. I know the parties very well. I was speaking with Doyle on my return from Ottawa last year. I had learned here that he was to be the enumerator. When I met him, I said : 'Well, Martin, how are you getting along about the census.' He said :

'I am getting along fine; I have got $20 in my pocket that I got out of it, though I have only done one or two day's work. I found it was a difficult undertaking, and I could not go ahead and take it, so, after working for a day or two I saw Peter Broderick and asked him if he would allow his son to do the work. And, I said: If you will give me $20, I will have your son appointed to take the census for the balance of the polling division.' So, it was accomplished in that way. If this kind of thing has been going on all over the Dominion, the hon. minister will see what an inefficient enumeration we have had. He will see that there must have been great looseness in the taking of the census. I am not finding fault with the minister, but simply pointing out the need for careful inspection in this work.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If anything of the kind the hon. gentleman speaks of has occurred elsewhere, of course it is something we know nothing about, and is directly contrary to the instructions given to all parties concerned. Of course, it could not have occurred had Broderick not been appointed. He was appointed from here and it was supposed that he did the whole of the work. Broderick stands on our books as the enumerator for that polling subdivision, Doyle having disappeared in consequence of refusing to take the oath. That is the whole record in the department; therefore, there is no question so far as the department is concerned of any farming out of the work. If there was a bargain between Doyle and Broderick that Doyle should give up his work, or refused to take the work for a consideration from Broderick, that is a matter entirely outside the knowledge or business of the department. I confess it is an improper thing, and should these gentlemen be referred to me again for employment, I would not employ them. I consider that farming out government work and traffic in offices is a most improper thing, and I should never allow it to be done by any of my officers, to my knowledge.

Mr. HACKETT. Anthony Broderick, then, was appointed solely on the responsibility of Mr. Tweedie, the commissioner, and not recommended by anybody else. Was he recommended by Mr. McLellan?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, he was recommended by Commissioner Tweedie, and that recommendation was endorsed by Sir Louis Davies. The appointment was made on that recommendation. I have just been informed that the parish of the reverend gentleman whose name I gave a few moments ago is Palmer Road.

Mr. HACKETT. That would be the Rev. Dr. Chaisson.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have in my hand a cheque book for December, January and February. It commences December 21st, 1901. That is the only date I discover in the book; it runs on after that date until the end of the stubs. But I find some accounts on this page that I fancy belong to some part of February, because the cheques show a balance of account up to the 31st of January. I find some payments to enumerators concerning which I would like some information. What is the average pay for an enumerator?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is difficult to give the average pay, because they are paid according to a schedule of rates, according to the number of names, the number of farms, and so on. The only way I could find the average would be to take the whole number of enumerators and find out how much they had been paid in the aggregate.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the minister can tell me who Geo. Coutts is, because the stubs of the cheque do not give any information at all except the name and the service.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I could not tell off-hand who Geo. Coutts is.

Mr. TAYLOR. There are here three suspicious looking cheques. Geo. Coutts received for his services as enumerator $1,198.10.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed this man was in the Atlin district, in the north of British Columbia, on the road to the Yukon.

Mr. TAYLOR. And Robert Patrick, services as enumerator, where is he?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot find that out at the moment.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps these are the gentlemen who visited Lisgar.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I don't think they went from Atlin to Lisgar. I find in looking up the list of enumerators for the electoral district of Burrard in British Columbia, that Geo. Coutts and Robert Patrick were two of the enumerators for that district, which includes the whole coast line from Vancouver to the Yukon territory.

Mr. TAYLOR. How many names would an enumerator have to take to earn $1,198?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Those men were paid by the day. Men in the outlying districts, where they would have to cover a large extent of territory, were not paid by schedule rates.

Mr. TAYLOR. I find there are three gentlemen; one received $1,198, Mr. Patrick received $758, and Harry E. Brown $643.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That, no doubt, is quite correct. The figures here are a little more. I suppose these cheques have been supplemented by others. Brown received $768, Geo. Coutts $1,216, and Robt. Patrick $800.

Mr. TAYLOR. The cheque book gives practically no information. The hon. gentleman knew that, I fancy.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave the hon. gentleman the information on the statement which was made out by the accountant.

Mr. TAYLOR. The statement shows there were balances.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is the difference between the amount claimed by these enumerators when they sent their accounts in, and the amount allowed them under the schedule rates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do they still claim a balance ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot say whether it is still claimed or not. It was the difference between the original amount as sent in by the enumerators and the account as it was allowed in the department by the auditor.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Is there a further balance ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not unless there was some extraordinary reason, because the amount paid was fixed by schedule rates. There are a few instances where the difference may be legitimately paid if proof is supplied. For instance, the voucher may not be supplied with the account at first, and if it is properly supplied afterwards the account would be paid. I cannot tell whether these balances are due to that or due to improper charges, for too many names, for instance, or too many farms, or something of that kind. The accounts of the enumerators in every case have been carefully checked over. I regret to say that a large proportion of them, I daresay more than half of all the accounts sent in by all the enumerators have had to be cut down materially, and have been so settled. In some cases the settlement thus awarded is accepted, in other cases the enumerators send in statements afterwards which show that in some cases the reduction had been improper, that is to say, they had a proper account if they had supplied it in proper form, and with the proper vouchers and explanations. In those cases, where that is clearly shown, the difference would be paid, but not unless the account was shown to be in strict consonance with the regulations and schedule rates.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the hon. gentleman what is known as supplementary cheque books ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are none except those the hon. gentleman has.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to ask about Mr. J. P. R. Drouin. Who is he, and where is he working ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is working in the census bureau at the present time. He is a gentleman from Montreal, appointed on the census staff, and is receiving $2 a day. The pay list is on the Table.

Mr. TAYLOR. He is being paid $2.25. Has he special qualifications which entitle him to be paid that salary, while many other men are paid $1.50, $1.60 and $1.75, only occasionally $2 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is in charge of a certain number of other men in the office there, looks after their work, and is therefore given extra pay.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is he a brother of the candidate who retired from St. James division, Montreal, Mr. Drouin, and who, at one time, threatened to run against the present hon. member (Mr. Brunet), but who was withdrawn ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He is a brother of Mr. J. A. Drouin.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was it on account of being a brother that this gentleman was given this appointment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was appointed about a year before this occurrence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was he down doing electioneering work for his brother during the campaign in Montreal for a couple of weeks or more ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, not that I am aware of.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the hon. gentleman's commissioner will know ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not that the commissioner is aware of.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the hon. minister be surprised to know that he was there for a couple of weeks and drawing his pay at the same time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I would be.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that information can be supplied to the hon. gentleman. That gentleman was provided with free transportation besides drawing his pay. He went down to help run the election for his brother and drew pay at the rate of $2.25 a day for the two weeks he was down there.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I did not provide him with free transportation. I should be very much surprised to find that he was taking part in the campaign in Montreal and drawing pay here.

Mr. SPROULE. It will be in order for the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) to get up.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that Mr. Drouin was one day in Montreal some time ago to see his sick father, and that he was not there for a fortnight at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRiviere) and the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) are not in the House to-night? They would have had something to say on this question had they been present.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Perhaps their statements would be about as accurate as those of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the hon. minister had better hold over the item until the information is furnished. I may say that I have been informed by gentlemen who know this to be the fact that he drew his pay for the full two weeks while he was in Montreal during the election campaign.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall this item be adopted?

Mr. BELL. Is it understood the item should be held over?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is not understood.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word in reference to the matter that was mentioned in respect to which the hon. minister undertook to make the statement that the census of 1891 was dishonestly taken and stuffed with names of numerous persons who were not in the country. I think that the hon. minister has not at his command at present sufficient evidence to warrant him in making such a statement. Apart from the fact that it would seem very improper to make a statement of that kind which involves the accuracy and honesty of most of the enumerators employed in 1891, I would be inclined to think that the hon. minister did not have at his command such evidence as would justify him in making that statement. He must rely upon evidence to make it and upon what evidence? He simply says that certain statements are made to him by some individuals whom he has employed to revise the facts connected with the census of 1891. What reason has the hon. gentleman to attach more value or more importance to the statements given to him by the persons whom he has employed to revise the census of 1891 than he had to attach value to the figures given by the enumerators at that time? Is it a certainty that all the enumerators employed by the commissioner, or the chief census officer who took the census in 1891, would be dishonest and that all the persons from whom the hon. minister obtained that information in the course of this present year would be absolutely honest? It seems to me that there is no good ground advanced here to warrant the statement that has been made. Now, if it were true that sufficient evidence had been advanced to prove that the census of 1891, was a dishonest census, I think, unquestionably, the hon. minister would have proved the fact that a great wrong had been done to the country which had been deceived by a census which was dishonestly taken, and I would suppose in that case that the hon. minister would consider his duty not done until he had proceeded to punish, by reason of the power which the law gives him to punish the dishonesty in men who are employed by the country to do this work, any persons guilty of wrongdoing. If it be the truth that in the province of Quebec, in 21 counties, the enumerators, who must have been nearly all of the Roman Catholic faith, because we are told that the population was nearly all Roman Catholic—if it be the truth that in 21 counties of that province in 1891 the enumerators with one accord violated their oath and made false returns, I do not think the hon. minister will do himself justice until he proceeds to establish that fact by prosecuting these individuals in the courts. I do not see how he can stop short of that. I think he should have had that end in view before he made the statement in public which he has made. I am sure that so far as a large part of the population of Canada is concerned, they will never accept the statement made by the minister, or by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) for that matter, that they will not regard it as being of much weight, or as having been fully considered if the hon. minister do not proceed to vindicate the rights of the country and to punish these men who have done wrong, if they have done wrong. I would call attention to the fact that there cannot be much confidence attached to the investigation said to have been made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. It is entirely ex parte and there is the further fact that what has always been looked upon as a binding rule in connection with the census has been clearly violated. The schedules of the census communicated to the enumerators and the officials of the country by the people under the seal of confidence, which is absolutely necessary in order to secure correct returns from the people who will not reveal their private affairs to any officials of the country unless they are satisfied that it is done in confidence, have been handed over to persons who apparently were not sworn to do exactly what was right and to act justly, or to maintain that secrecy which is necessary in order to secure the confidence of the people in that investigation. Why should the hon. minister assume, as he does assume, that all the officers whom he has employed to make this investigation are absolutly correct, are absolutely honest, and that all the persons who were employed in 1891, under the chief census officer of that day, were absolutely dishonest? Why should he ask this country and ask this committee to accept a statement prepared ten years after the facts, an ex parte statement, prepared by men not under oath and to believe that it should be more correct than a statement prepared in the regular official manner by the sworn enumerators and which was checked over by the chief census officers? Why should the hon. minister, himself, believe such an absurd thing, and if he does believe it, why should he ask the committee and the country to believe such an obviously absurd story? I think there could not be a more gross wrong done to these enumerators than to make this charge against them and then to leave it hanging in the position in which it now is. I believe it is due to these gentlemen that they should have this investigation now carried out to completion, that they should have it carried on carefully before a judge, or before an independent man, one who can command the confidence of both parties in the country, that all questions asked and all answers given should be under oath and that such evidence should be adduced for the use of the country as would command the confidence of every man in it.

It is well known to the Minister of Agriculture that the census of 1881 was supposed to be in excess of the actual facts, not on account of any intentional wrong doing, but because under the system which had been adopted, a great number of names of persons had been taken who were out of the country for more than one year, and in some cases for more than twenty years. It must be in the knowledge of the minister, that when the census of 1891 was taken, a new regulation was introduced in order to guard against that, and so far as the government of the day was concerned and so far as the officer who had charge of that census was concerned, they laid down a new proposition by which it was intended to avoid that error and to reduce the figures so that they would be more nearly accurate than the census of 1881. The result was what might have been expected; that instead of the figures of 1891 showing such an increase over those of 1881 as might have been expected, the figures of 1891 were disappointing. Of course under the new rule a great many more names were excluded from the census of 1891 than in 1881, and the census of 1891 was more nearly correct. In the case of the census of 1901, simply because the growth of the country is less than these hon. gentlemen opposite expected, they proceeded without the authority of parliament, and in order as they alleged to vindicate the correctness of the census which they are now in process of making; they proceeded not to inquire into the correctness of the figures taken by their own officers—which they could have verified to a large extent because the circumstances are all fresh and the officers are living—but they proceeded to investigate the correctness of the census of 1891, relying upon the memory of persons as to facts eleven years old in order to test the correctness of the census made now. That is a most extraordinary course to pursue. The natural course would have been to have checked over the present census, or if they desired it to have checked both census. I am satisfied that no body of people in this country will accept the figures that have been given under such circumstances, as having the slightest value. I believe that the investigation should be continued, and that not only the census of 1891 but the census of 1901 should be investigated with all the solemnity of a court in a trial before a judge, and that we should in that way arrive at a nearly correct knowledge of the exact population of our country. That is a basic fact, and it is of the utmost importance that succeeding governments should know precisely the number of the people in Canada so as to mark the progress of the country. There are one of two circumstances by which we can measure to some extent the character of the census of 1901. About the month of August, 1891, the chief census officer issued a statement of the population of Canada which agreed with the finally corrected statement as closely as one-quarter of one per cent; an error only of some 2,000 persons. In the case of the census of 1901, in the month of January a statement was issued that the final determination of the figures was 5,369,666, but since that there has been another change made. It will be noticed that the census of 1891 was practically accurately and finally determined in four months after the census was taken, but in the census of 1901, ten months after it was taken and when we get the final result, we see that the first estimate shows an error about ten times as great as that which was made by the gentlemen who took the census of 1891, and the result of which was announced four months afterwards. This is a fact which is clear to us all, and it goes to show that there was more ability, and more care, and more thoroughness, and much more expedition shown in taking the census of 1891 than in taking the census of 1901. For that reason a great many persons in this country will continue to prefer to believe that the census of 1891 was a better census, cost less money, and was more quickly completed than the census of 1901. I do not suggest criminal wrong doing in connection with the census of 1901, but there are some circumstances in connection with that census which inspire a want of confidence in the people, and which were absent from the census of 1891. In the province of Nova Scotia there is, according to the census of 1901, but a very slight increase in the population. We find that increase entirely among the people of the French race in that province. If you take out of the census returns the increase shown in the few limited localities where people of the French race are to be found in Nova Scotia, you actually show a decrease in all the rest of the province. Now, to say the least, that is a highly improbable circumstance. It seems to me that in order to give the people of Canada confidence in the result of our census, it is not sufficient for the minister to make this partial, incomplete, and unsatisfactory investigation into the figures of 1891, but he should go on to make an absolutely thorough and exhaustive examination—not an expensive one—into the returns from some parts of the Dominion which will enable us to satisfactorily determine the result of the census of 1901, and which of course can be done much more thoroughly and much more satisfactorily than any inquiry into the census of 1891, which is now eleven years old. It has been suggested by the minister that there was a motive in 1891. I will not refer to the absurd suggestion made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) as to the reasons why all these enumerators in 1891 proceeded to make themselves criminals. But I shall refer to one reason given to-night by the Minister of Agriculture. He suggested that the enumerators in 1891 swelled the figures because they were paid for each name. But the minister must know that if that had any effect in 1891 it would have a hundred fold more effect in 1901, because he raised the price paid per name. Instead of paying 3 cents per name, as was done in 1891, the minister paid 5 cents per name in 1901. The minister must see that if 3 cents per name would increase the number unduly in 1891, the payment of 5 cents per name in 1901 would necessarily aggravate the error, if the error arose from that circumstance. I do not believe we have any reason whatever to conclude that men who are taken at random, selected by the different members of parliament to act as enumerators, could be found by a government that is bad enough to look for such characters, in such numbers as would be required to make all the enumerators of the Dominion of Canada absolute criminals and willing to obey the hint or nod of any government that is bad enough to require them to falsify the figures that they put down on their schedules. I would be sorry to think that it were possible that any one could believe that it is within the bounds of possibility that any government could, through the chief census commissioner, summon to its aid and service, thousands of formerly reputable men ; men for the most part respected by their neighbours, who were willing to deliberately break an oath solemnly taken, and to repeat an act of perjury or falsification 500 times over; and to do that for what reason ? Simply because a political enemy suggests that the government of that day had a motive in securing a dishonest and improper return from these enumerators. I think it is a terrible charge made against the people of Canada to insinuate that there is such a class of people among us, and that they are deliberately suggested by the representatives of the people of Canada who sit in parliament, when those representatives are asked by the government to supply them with trusty men to take an honest census of the people. It is a most improper suggestion, and if it has been sincerely made by the minister, I think he owes it to himself, to his character and reputation in the country, to every enumerator, and to the chief census officials—because they are all involved—to give them an opportunity to disprove the charge, and to show that they have acted as honest men and worthy citizens. And I would suggest—and I hope the government will accept the suggestion—that having gone as far as they have gone to raise this question and to make this charge, through the mouths of two ministers, and I dare say a third—because the Minister of Finance seems to concur in the idea that the census of 1891 was exaggerated—having made this charge against an important section of the people of Canada, they owe it to their own reputations and to the men assailed to carry that investigation to the point of enabling any fair-minded man to determine whether there is anything beneath the charge or not.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am glad in one way to have the endorsement of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, of my course. He says I ought to have begun by investigating the accuracy of the census of 1901. That is exactly what I did, and what has led to all this discovery in regard to the census of 1891. The apparent anomaly which we discovered, that a large number of the rural districts of Canada had decreased in population between 1891 and 1901 according to the census returns of those years, led us to check our own returns of 1901 with the different parochial returns of the province of Quebec for 1901, and we found that they corresponded in a marked degree. We therefore believed that our census returns were correct. We then made a comparison of the parochial returns of 1891 with the census returns of 1891, and found such discrepancies that we had to believe that either the parochial returns of 1891 or the census of 1891 were inaccurate.

Mr. BELL. But the hon. minister did not proceed to do that in such a way as to divest the investigation entirely of partisan or government manipulation. It was done secretly. Would it not have been better to have put this investigation into the hands of a commission or a judge, so that the result would compel the acceptance of every one ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The returns were taken as a purely departmental work. It was not done, as hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think it should have been done, by a special vote of parliament, outside of the census of 1901. It was done with the money voted for the work of the census, for the purpose of checking our returns and ascertaining whether they were correct or not. But we had to go the length we did go before we could prove it to a demonstration, and we believe that in the results which were found, which we were asked to lay on the Table, and which we have laid on the Table, it has been proved to a demonstration. Unfortunately this was not the first exposé of the census of 1891. The hon. gentleman will remember that the hon. Minister of Militia of to-day, in 1894, brought up in this House the results of the census of 1891 in his county, the county of King's, N.S., and he proved conclusively at that time, by the list of names he was able to give, that the census of 1891 had been unduly swelled in that county.

Mr. BELL. In the case of one enumerator.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And he offered to go on and show that the same was the case generally in the county; but the hon. gentleman's own friends, sitting at that time on this side of the House, shut off the inquiry, and refused to give the information by which he could have shown it, because they knew perfectly well that if my hon. friend had been allowed to go on, he would have been able to show that it was general in his county.

Mr. BELL. I do not agree with that.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman may not agree with the motive, but if he goes back to 'Hansard' and other records of that day, he will find that the facts were as I have stated; and the Minister of Militia, who is here, can corroborate me in that regard.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman says I ought to prosecute the men who did that work. I would ask him what his own friends did in the county of King's?

Mr. BELL. They proceeded to prosecute the enumerator, and he left the country.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am credibly informed that he did not leave the country, but that two weeks later he was in an adjoining county.

Mr. BELL. That may be, but he left his own home.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He left his own home and went into an adjoining county, where my hon. friend's friends did not make any effort to find him or prosecute him.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. If I may be allowed to interrupt for a moment, I may say that the enumerator in question had moved from my county to Amherst before the matter was brought up here at all, and he has never left Amherst from that day to this.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is even worse than I thought it was. The hon. gentleman's friends did not take much trouble to find him. They did not take the advice the hon. gentleman is now giving me, and prosecute this man, when they had the proof of what he had done.

Mr. BELL. He can be got at yet.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is possible he can be, and I am not prepared to say that no step shall be taken against the gentleman who did this work. That is a question that has not been reached yet. I may say frankly that I do not think the end of this investigation is by any means reached yet. I am not prepared to make a statement to-night, but it is quite possible that this matter is of such importance that further steps may be taken, either in the courts or otherwise. But I want to point out the injustice of the hon. gentleman in taking me so severely to task for not prosecuting these men when his own friends did not attempt to prosecute this one enumerator who was within their reach, and has been for eleven years, and could have been prosecuted during all that time. I think the hon. gentleman is a little unjust in allowing his bias to give one law for me and another for his own political friends and leader at that time. I do not wish to blame the hon. gentleman; but I think that under the circumstances he is taking a position which is hardly justified and which does not become him. As far as the investigation is concerned. I have pointed out that I did undertake to investigate the census of 1901, for which I was responsible, and in the province of Quebec, where the parochial returns were obtainable, the comparison showed, as far as it went, that the census of 1901 was accurate; and in going further with that same investigation, I found that a comparison of the parochial returns with the census of 1891 showed that the census of 1891 was inaccurate.

I went further to find out the details and got those details—name after name, family after family, given in full and laid upon the Table of the House weeks ago. It is not a matter of making general statements, but a statement based on particular facts, which leaves no room for doubt. It may be necessary to have an investigation under oath, but that would be long, elaborate and expensive. Personally I would be glad to have such an investigation because I am satisfied it would show clearly and distinctly that the census of 1901 was well taken and that the census of 1891 was unduly swelled in the way I have pointed out. That would be an endorsation of the work done by my department, but whether it would be worth while incurring the expenditure and taking the time, I am not prepared to say just now.

Mr. GANONG. How is the census of the manufacturing establishments taken ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The larger manufacturing centres were taken by special enumerators and the other places were taken by the ordinary enumerators.

Mr. GANONG. Were the enumerators who took the manufactures appointed on the same principle as the general enumerators—on the recommendation of the defeated candidate or local member.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were recommended in the same way as the others.

Mr. GANONG. No special qualification required ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It was understood what they were needed for.

Mr. GANONG. What about the question of the fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The fisheries were taken, as a general rule, by officers of the department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. GANONG. Who took the census of the fisheries in the county of Charlotte ?

Mr. PRINGLE. What amount was paid Mr. E. O. Callaghan, who makes a report with reference to the town and township of Cornwall ? I find here a report from him dated January 24th, which does not seem to convey much information to the Minister of Agriculture. Mr. Callaghan finds that a number of McPhails and McDonalds have been duplicated. I would call the ministers attention to the fact that in the township of Cornwall, which is settled largely by Scotchmen, there is a number of McPhails and McDonalds who have the same names, and it is quite possible that the enumerators in 1891 have got them quite correct. There is quite a reflection cast in this report on the enumerators of 1891. I may say that I am familiar with the names of these enumerators. They are all men of good standing in the electoral district of Cornwall and Stormont, who, I am quite satisfied, would not duplicate names. This report, to my mind, is very indefinite. Mr. Callaghan winds up by saying that the list which is appended to his report shows that there were at least 150 persons whose names were duplicated by the enumerators of the district. It seems to me that these names have not been duplicated. There are many McDonalds of the same name and many McPhails and many Lapointes of the same name. I would like to know what has been paid Mr. Callaghan for this very indefinite report. I am quite satisfied that the enumerators in 1891 did their duty correctly and that there have been no errors in the census taken by them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will read the report carefully he will find that Mr. Callaghan refers to that very fact. He says that there were a great many people of the same name, but he took particular pains to put in that list of 150 names those he knew perfectly well were duplicated.

Mr. PRINGLE. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong in his construction of that report. That is not what Mr. Callaghan says, what he says is this : 'I do not therefore pretend that my inquiry has been full or exhaustive.' Then he goes on to point out the great difficulties in coming to any conclusion as regards the town and township of Cornwall, owing to the fact that there are many McDonalds and McPhails and many of the other names mentioned in the list. I wish to ascertain the remuneration paid Mr. Callaghan as commissioner for this report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. His account has not been sent in yet and nothing has been paid him. I may inform the hon. member for Charlotte that Mr. Patrick McLaughlin of St. John took the fishery enumeration in Charlotte county.

Mr. GANONG. On whose recommendation was Mr. McLaughlin appointed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the gentleman who opposed the hon. member in the last election.

Mr. GANONG. What pay did he receive ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. $157.70.

Mr. GANONG. That account just covers one fishery district I believe ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. GANONG. Have the returns been published ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, they are in but have not yet been tabulated.

Mr. GANONG. This is just an illustration of what I said the other night. We could have furnished the minister down there with all the Reformers he needed to take the census in New Brunswick, and in the selection of this gentleman I must say that, of all the Reformers in the county, he was the least fitted for the work. We have in that county one of the most important fish industries in the maritime provinces, and why the minister did not send a man qualified for that position to take the fishery census is what I cannot understand. This man at one time drove a mail and I know not what else he has done. There is not a man less qualified than he to take the fishery census in that county. The minister had good officers there, men who had been fishery overseers, who could tell pretty well whether the fishermen were giving correct statements or not. Why were none of these appointed. But instead we had a man appointed who formerly drove a mail to take the census of the most important industry in Charlotte. I certainly think that if you get the report from the gentleman and compare it with this blue book you issue here, you will find that you have made a mistake in his appointment. I have consulted several gentlemen in the fishery business and it has been a perfect marvel to them that any such appointment should have been allowed to have been made by the department. In fact, I think that the information he would get from some of those engaged in the business would be very meagre. One gentleman said he did not propose to tell his business to an old woman who would report it all over the county. That is the opinion that the fishermen generally have of the census commissioner in that county. If the census of the fisheries business for the Dominion generally is taken like that in this county I think it will show very poor results for the business.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Of course I do not know the gentleman personally, nor what his qualifications are. He was recommended as qualified for the position, and I am informed by my officer that the returns he sent in are in good order, and look as if the work had been carefully and accurately done. Until the results can be tabulated and checked over, we cannot tell much more about the matter. I did not know whether he was a farmer or a mail driver. But I can understand that a man who carries the mail through the county would be pretty well acquainted with the people and with the business that is being carried on——

Mr. GANONG. He does not drive the mail over the fishing waters.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, but he drives along the highway where the people live who carry on the fisheries. As I say, I do not know the gentleman or his qualifications.

Mr. BOYD. I would like to ask the minister if it is his intention to stop when this item is passed ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. But there is an item for the census in the supplementary estimates, and on the discussion of that item any of these questions can be taken up and any information that is desired given. But, as this item is the last one that I have in the main estimates, I think it should be passed to-night.

Mr. BOYD. I have taken very little part in the debate, but I have listened attentively to what has been said by others. I must say that, regarding it with as little bias as possible, it looks as if this census business was to a great extent being made the ground of party conflict in this country. I heard the discussion in this House about the census of 1891. The debate was carried on at great length. And, as I say, the same accusations that are heard upon this side of the House were made by hon. gentlemen opposite who were then in opposition. But the importance of the question involved in this census can hardly be exaggerated. It has been shown that the present census will cost more than twice as much as did the census of 1891, and counties have been named in which, although there are fewer people than there were ten years ago, the cost of taking the census is double what it was then. Observing the minister as he made his explanations, I feel sure that he was not able to explain to his own satisfaction. For, whatever opinion I may have of the hon. gentleman politically, I believe he does like to be able to explain things to his own satisfaction. In fact, I never knew a man to take greater delight in explanation than the hon. minister does. But he has not been able to please himself, I am sure, with his explanation of the enormous expense that has been incurred in the present census. As regards the county of Lisgar, which has been a good deal discussed, the information I gave was from men who saw the cheques in that county, cheques which were issued to straighten up the accounts of men who had not, up to that time, been able to get their accounts settled, but who had no difficulty in doing so in the warfare that went on there in the by-election. I did not see these cheques myself, I would be very much surprised to find that the hon. minister would lend himself to such dealings as was indicated by my informants. But at the same time, I do not know how to disbelieve or disregard the facts that were given to me. This item has been a good deal discussed, and, if hon. gentlemen on this side are satisfied to let it go, provided that there is another item on which we can get any further explanation that may be desired, I, for my part, would be willing to have it pass. The right hon. premier, who was peacefully slumbering a short time ago, has wakened up. And, as he is to represent us soon upon a very important occasion, and as we desire that he should leave here in perfect health, I should be glad not to have him detained here very much longer. If the right hon. gentleman promises to adjourn the House after the passing of this item, I, for my part—though of course, I do not speak with any authority —would be disposed to consent to its passing.

Mr. PRINGLE. This report has only been placed in my hands this moment. But, having glanced at it, I must say I find it somewhat surprising and would like to ask one or two questions in connection with it. I do not wish to cast any reflection on the commissioner, Mr. O'Callaghan. That gentleman, I believe, attended the convention at which I was nominated, and he was then seeking the Conservative nomination, but is now, I believe, a very active Liberal in the local contest. I do not know exactly why he should have been converted so suddenly. But he has a perfect right to change his politics, if he so desires. But he says in this report :

> There were hundreds of persons employed at the time on the canal work who lived in temporary boarding houses along the canal, of whom there is no record except the pay sheets of the contractor and the schedules of the census.

Then he winds up his report by saying he thinks there have been some 150 duplicated. He casts reflections upon men who stand very high in the electoral districts of Cornwall and Stormont, and I cannot allow this report to pass without saying a word. The men who were enumerators in the township of Cornwall stand very high in that township. I do not know what their politics are. But when he mentions men in the township of Cornwall like Mr. T. J. McDonald and Mr. McLaughlin, and men in the town of Cornwall like Mr. Broderick, Mr. Shaver and Mr. Buteau ; and men in the township of Finch like Mr. McNaughton and Mr. Wood, I would be recreant in my duty if I allowed to pass without protest a report casting reflections upon gentlemen who stand so high in that community. Mr. Callaghan, I must say, is very indefinite in this report. He says he thinks there are about 150 persons whose names were duplicated by the enumerators ; but he admits in another clause of the report that it was utterly impossible for him to say whether these enumerators were right or wrong, as a large number of these people have left the locality since 1891 who had been employed in connection with public works, or on the Cornwall canal. I would like to ask the minister upon whose recommendation Mr. Callaghan was employed. Was it upon the recommendation of Mr. Mulhern, the Liberal candidate at the last election ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think Mr. Callaghan was recommended by Mr. J. F. Mulhern. I would like to say in regard to that report—which I would like the hon. gentleman to send over to me if he would—that the two parts of the report which he says are conflicting, to my mind do not conflict at all. Mr. Callaghan says distinctly there was a large number of people on the lists who were probably canal employees and who passed away ; but there is nothing in his report to indicate that any of the 150 names which he mentions as being duplicated were of that class. Mr. Callaghan declares distinctly that these 150 were people about whom he knows, and were not of the class which he refers to in the other part of the report as people about whom he could not say anything. So I think that what the hon. gentleman calls an inconsistency in his report is on the contrary a confirmation of the report, and shows that what Mr. Callaghan does state he states it with positive knowledge. In the other part of the report he acknowledges there were many people there besides these 150 about whom he could not give information. He says the list which is appended shows there were at least 150 persons whose names were duplicated by the enumerators of the district, and at least ten others were recorded who were domiciled elsewhere, who were not in the place when the census was taken.

Mr. PRINGLE. If the hon. gentleman will look through the list of names there he will find McPhails and McDonalds. We have any number of McPhails and McDonalds, not only in the town of Cornwall, but in the township of Cornwall.

Mr. HACKETT. I fully endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Pringle) that the minister is endeavouring in every possible way to satisfy the committee with regard to his estimates. I believe he is perfectly conscientious in what he is saying to us. I would like to ask the minister who was appointed for taking the fishery census for Prince county, Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. John Davidson, of Bedeque.

Mr. HACKETT. What was his salary and travelling expenses ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He was paid on the whole $184.25. I have not a statement of how much his travelling expenses were. He was paid at the rate of $3 a day for the time he worked.

Mr. TAYLOR. And $1.50 for horse hire ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. For all expenses, provided they showed vouchers for the accounts.

Mr. HACKETT. Mr. Davidson is a very competent man, I think he is all right, but he is a fishery officer.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think all the men who took the census in Prince Edward Island were fishery officers except one.

Geological Survey, $64,430.

Mr. BELL. Might I ask who is the head of this department now ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). There has been no permanent director appointed yet. Dr. Bell, as senior officer of the survey, is the acting director.

Mr. BELL. Is there any prospect of an appointment at an early date ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the appointment will be made in a few months.

Dominion lands—chargeable to income, $157,532.

Mr. BOYD. Will there be some supplementary estimates in regard to Dominion lands ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will have a vote on which my hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) may speak if he wishes.

Superintendence of insurance—to meet expenses in connection with this service, $11,500.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is an item which properly speaking is not a charge against the Dominion treasury as it is recouped to us by the insurance companies. There is a readjustment of salaries and statutory increases in two or three cases so that there is nothing special about it.

Maintenance of assay office at Vancouver, $16,000.

Mr. EARLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) if it is his intention to establish an assay office at Dawson ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have no positive intention in regard to that, but I may say to my hon. friend that the question of establishing an assay office at Dawson would depend largely on the time that the mint gets into operation so that we could buy the gold ourselves. I am under the impression that as soon as the mint is in working order we will probably require an assay office at Dawson, although I cannot speak positively about it as yet.

Mr. EARLE. It has been the opinions of the trade, and of merchants generally, both on the coast and in Dawson, that the establishment of an assay office there would be more beneficial to them than an assay office at Vancouver. It appears that they are obliged in trade to take gold at a valuation something in excess of what it is really worth, and there is great difficulty in establishing the value of it, because it cannot be ascertained in Dawson. It has been and is the occasion of a very considerable loss to the traders there. They are at present taking gold dust at the value of $16 per ounce, and they find that when sent to the coast it does not realize more than $15 an ounce, and they have been memorializing the department to the effect that the establishment of an assay office at Dawson would enable them to handle the gold at its actual value. The banks could purchase it, or traders might remit the gold bars instead of remitting the dust, and they would be able to ascertain the actual value on the spot. I noticed in the press only a short time ago that the traders of Dawson have recommended very strongly that an assay office should be established there, and established at as early a date as possible ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) that my information is much to the same effect as his own. The probability is that the miners are not receiving altogether full value for the gold. They propose, and I think in many ways it would be desirable, to establish an assay office there. I have discussed the matter very fully with Mr. Ross, the commissioner of the Yukon, who has been here for some time, and all I can say to my hon. friend is that the whole subject will receive very full and careful consideration.

Maintenance, construction of roads, bridges and other necessary works in connection with the Hot Spring Reservation near Banff station, N.W.T., $19,420.

Mr. HACKETT. What is the meaning of that item ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a general vote for the maintenance of the national park at Banff. It provides for taking care of the buildings, the museum, and the construction of roads which goes on to some extent all the time under the supervision of the superintendent. There is an increase of $5,000 this year which is to provide for the erection of a new building for the museum. The museum at present is very small and it is absolutely necessary to have a little more accommodation. The museum is one of the things that attracts the attention of visitors.

Mr. HACKETT. Has the park been increased in size ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, the Bill for the increase of the size of the park received its third reading a couple of days ago. The park will now be about 5,000 square miles in extent.

Mr. HACKETT. Are there many visitors in the summer season ?

Mr. EARLE. The number of visitors is so great that the Canadian Pacific Railway are enlarging their hotel by the addition of several hundred rooms in order to be able to accommodate them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The number has very largely increased; in fact, the number was so great that during the last couple of months of the season the Canadian Pacific Railway had to send word ahead that visitors could not stop there because they had not any accommodation. As my hon. friend says, they intend to very largely increase the accommodation. It will be a matter of gratification to the House to know that the expenditure upon this work has not been without effect in attracting visitors and has caused it to become very much more popular as a resort.

Mr. HACKETT. That is very satisfactory, and I am glad to hear it, because in the east a great many people say that this park is simply a pleasure ground for some of the government members. I am very pleased to hear that it is visited by a large number of people and that it is going to be a great success.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The park is becoming a place of very general resort for visitors who take the transcontinental trip. My recollection is that when I was there in December I was told that the visitors for the year numbered something over 13,000. That is a very large number, and they generally remain a considerable length of time.

Department of the Interior—Cost of litigation, $1,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. When the Liberals were in opposition they charged the Conservatives with wasting this money and not employing the Solicitor General to do the work. Now we have a Solicitor General and a Minister of Justice, and the Liberals are not doing what they promised.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is not much.

Department of Labour, $34,900.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will there be an item for this in the supplementaries, or the further supplementaries, or the further further supplementaries, because if not I will ask it to stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think there will. At all events, I will give my hon. friend a guarantee that he will have an opportunity of raising the question.

Printing Bureau—Plant, 5 Linotype machines, $15,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. With this new machinery will the Printing Bureau be able to do all our printing. Large sums have been paid to outside newspapers and others to do the printing, and even some of the departmental reports have been printed in that way. Surely the Printing Bureau ought to be able to do all the printing of the government without employing the Montreal 'Herald' and other newspapers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not know that I can guarantee what my hon. friend desires, but with this additional equipment we certainly can do more and there will be less occasion to go outside.

Cost of arbitration respecting the accounts between the Dominion of Canada and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec (payments on account of services rendered may be made to members of the Civil Service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $3,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is this arbitration going to sit for ever ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not wonder that my hon. friend asks that because it has sat for several years longer than I imagined. We are doing everything possible to have it closed up, and I think it possible that at no distant date we will succeed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has any return been made of their work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A statement is made every year as to how the matter stands.

Mr. BELL. How often do the arbitrators meet ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are judges in the different provinces and they cannot meet always at our convenience. We have to consult their convenience and also the convenience of the provinces, all of which means slow progress. We have so little now to take up in the main estimates that we might finish them to-night. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is not present, but these estimates are not in any case increased, and that being the case, we might pass them, and there will be in the supplementaries some items relating to that department, so that if there is anything that requires notice hon. gentlemen will have an opportunity of bringing it up.

Mr. TAYLOR. The leader of the opposition may have something to say on some of these mail subsidy items, and we will call them carried if a promise is made that they can be discussed later on.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We will afford every opportunity for discussion at another stage.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is there anything in these estimates for the fast line ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Not at present. That will come in the further further supplementary estimates that my hon. friend has spoken of.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. The leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), who has been called away, requested me to ask when the return respecting passes on the Intercolonial Railway, the motion for which was passed in this House on the 6th March last, will be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. I will inquire about it.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 5, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 154) to amend the Naturalization Act, Chapter 113 of the Revised Statutes.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Bill (No. 153) respecting the St. Lawrence and Adirondack Railway Company.—Mr. Pringle.

SELECT STANDING COMMITTEES.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved :

That the Select Standing Committee of this House have leave to sit during the time the House is in session.

Motion agreed to.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF DEBATES.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright). With your permission, Mr. Speaker, and that of the House, I would like to move, seconded by Mr. LaRivière, that the fourth report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to revise the official reports of debates of this House be adopted.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). If my hon. friend (Mr. Champagne) will permit me, I would suggest as the House is very thin this morning, that this matter should be deferred until to-morrow.

RELIEF OF JAMES BROWN.

Bill (No. 118) for the relief of James Brown considered in committee and reported.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Before this Bill is read the third time, Mr. Speaker, I desire, for more than the third time, to renew my protest against the method pursued by this parliament with regard to the granting of divorces. The system is one which, I believe, cannot be justified upon any principle of law or good sense. If a divorce is to be granted at all, it is, of course, to be granted for reasons—for reasons which the law will define. I do not believe that the parliament of Canana is the body that can properly deal with these reasons and render a decision upon them. The case before this House is one that I know nothing about; it is one that, I venture to say, not one member of this House in ten has taken the trouble to examine. We are called upon to pass judgment in a case of the very greatest importance to the parties interested, and we do this, Sir, in a way that is nothing less than a travesty upon justice. If divorces are to be granted in this country, they should be granted by a properly constituted court, a court which shall take evidence and examine into the facts bearing upon the case, a court that shall render its judgment in accordance with the evidence. I repeat that, however it may be in the other branch of the Dominion legislature—where these cases may receive the consideration which they should receive—this case and cases of this character have not received and do not receive that degree of consideration here. The evidence is not published, The investigation is a sort of Star Chamber investigation; and I protest again, as I have often protested, that, if we are to grant divorces in Canada at all, if we are to recognize any cause as sufficient for granting a divorce, it is time that these matters should be placed in the hands of a proper legal tribunal.

Hon. WM. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) When the representatives from Nova Scotia first came to Ottawa after confederation, among the things that they found in existence were dual representation and the holding of elections in different parts of the country at times selected by the government. We had that changed. By the influence and example, I think, of the representatives from Nova Scotia, we had dual representation abolished and simultaneous polling adopted. But we found also a system of granting divorces which has continued to this day, a system which, in my opinion is a perfect disgrace to our legislation and practice. In Nova Scotia, divorce cases are referred to a judge of the Supreme Court. Each case is decided in a day, and not an item of the evidence in either side is published in the newspapers. But here a lot of low, nasty literature finds its way to the public. I remember one case which arose in a former parliament of which I was a member. A man from Hamilton sought a divorce and his Bill was passed in the Senate. The Bill came before this House in due course. But the wife was a relative of a member of this House, and this member commanded such influence with the vote of the people who are opposed to divorce altogether and others that the Bill was defeated in this House. The petitioner had to come back to parliament a second year, and this he did. I remember his name perfectly, but I do not care about mentioning it. Before the Bill was presented a second time the man whose influence had secured its defeat died. On the second application, the Bill was passed. This is all very well where a man has enough money to bear the heavy expense of securing such legislation. But a poor man or a poor woman, as the case may be, must be subject to all the trouble attending an application, and yet never be able to get a divorce. People have often referred to the small number of divorces granted in Canada, but that is owing to the fact that a poor man or a poor woman cannot obtain one under the present system. I think there is perhaps nothing in the annals of our legislation in the Senate or the House of Commons that requires amending as much as the present system of granting divorce.

Motion agreed to ; Bill read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARKE moved :

That a message be sent to the Senate to return to that House the evidence, &c., taken before the Standing Committee of the Senate, to whom was referred the Bill (D) No. 118, intitled : 'An Act for the relief of James Brown.'

Motion agreed to.

THE DYMENT BANKING COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 151) to incorporate the Dyment Banking, Loan and Savings Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

On the preamble.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I would call the attention of the Minister of Finance to this word 'banking.' Is it usual to allow a private company other than a bank to use the words 'bank' or 'banking'?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). My hon. friend's remark is quite pertinent. I drew attention to that in the committee and objected to it, and it was agreed that the date should be changed. But, the Committee on Banking and Commerce has no power to make the change, we can only do it here.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Shall I report the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This Bill, when before the committee on Banking and Commerce, was the subject of considerable discussion which touched not merely the Bill itself but the whole question of the restrictions and limitations which should be placed upon the operations of loan companies. There was some difference of opinion in the committee and it was thought that it might be necessary on another occasion to make some amendments to the general Act, and it was deemed wise that we should say that by consenting to the passage of this Bill through the House we would not in any way prejudice our right to deal with this question under the general Act, if it shall be deemed necessary to do so a year hence, or at any future time. There are one or two questions relating to the power of investment of loan companies about which there seemed to be a difference of opinion in the committee. It was thought well to place some moderate limitations upon the proposals of this company and then leave the matter to be dealt with further under the general Act. Then, the point was taken that if we gave this company special powers under the Bill they might come back in the course of a year and say we have no right to interfere with them. It was agreed that I should state to the House that if we should desire to make a change in the general Act a year from now, or at any future time, we would not in any way be prejudiced by the passing of this Bill, but that this company would come under the operation of the general Act as it might be amended. That was agreed to by the promoters of the Bill and it was also agreed that I should make this statement to the House on behalf of the whole committee so that it might go on 'Hansard.'

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Would it not be better to have a clause to that effect put into the Bill ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it is necessary. We have the power to make the change and we will not save our power by putting a clause in the Bill. If you were to put this in the Bill in a special way we might thereby imply that we were limiting our right as respects other companies.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is right, but the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) takes an entirely different view. He thinks that notice should be given to investors that their interests may be effected from time to time by the Railway Act as it is amended.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The conditions may differ.

Hon. Mr. TISDALE. The committee thought that a statement placed on 'Hansard' would be sufficient.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 126) to incorporate the Bishop of Moosonee.—Mr. Clarke.

QUESTIONS.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS AT BATHURST.

Mr. WILMOT, by Mr. Ingram, asked :

1. Is the government aware that P. J. Venoit, the collector of customs at Bathurst, took an active part in the elections of 1900, leaving his office for days at a time, and going out into the country canvassing for the Liberal candidate ?

2. Did the government grant him leave of absence during the months of October and November, 1900 ?

3. Did the government grant him leave of absence for any time between April 1st and April 10th of this year ; and if not, is the government aware that he was absent from his office several days between the 1st and 10th of April, 1902 ?

4. If formulated charges are laid against Mr. P. J. Venoit for political partisanship, will the government grant an investigation ; and if the charges are proved, will the government dismiss him ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. W. Paterson.)

1. The answer to the first question is no.

2. P. J. Venoit, Collector of Customs at Bathurst, N.B., obtained the usual leave of absence for about one week in October, 1900, on application to give evidence as a witness in a suit against the municipality of Gloucester. He did not obtain leave of absence in November, 1900.

3. He did not obtain leave of absence in April, 1902, and the government is not aware that he was absent from his office several days between the 1st and 10th of April, 1902.

4. If formulated charges are laid against this officer the government will see what action should be taken.

YARN ADMITTED DUTY FREE.

Mr ROSAMOND asked :

1. How much yarn has been admitted duty free under Order in Council, No. 1149 B., file No. 52658 ?

2. What regulations has the Minister of Customs issued to the end that yarn so admitted duty free is exclusively used for the purpose for which it is permitted free entry ?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. W. Paterson.)

The quantity of yarn admitted free of duty under Order in Council as per memo. No. 1,149 B., file 52,658, since the 1st July last to 1st of April, 1902, amounted to 114,945 pounds, valued at $39,108.

The regulations issued by the Department of Customs respecting the free entry of Botany yarn are as follows :—

Department of Customs,
Ottawa, July 2, 1901.

Botany Yarn. (Classification and Samples.)
File 52658.

Referring to memo. 1149b., for the free entry of Botany Yarn, it is to be noted that such free entry is to be allowed only for the said yarn under the following circumstances, viz.:—

'Botany Yarn, single, in numbers 30 and finer, on mule cops, dry spun on what is known as the French or Belgian system, not doubled or twisted, in white only, when imported by manufacturers of cashmere socks and stockings, to be used exclusively for the manufacture of such articles in their own factories.'

Collectors will observe that 'mule cops' are closed at one end and that yarn under the Bradford system is spun with oil, while under the French or Belgian system it is spun dry, without oil.

Representative samples of each importation of Botany Yarn admitted free are to be selected personally by the custom officers, from the body of the package, and are to be forwarded to the Department of Customs for decision as to their tariff status.

A certificate is required on the face of each entry, from the Collector of Customs, that to his own knowledge the importer is a manufacturer of cashmere socks and stockings.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155) to amend the Railway Act. He said : Notice of this Bill appears on the order paper, but at the moment when the orders were called, I did not have the draft of the Bill in my hand. This Bill is introduced for the purpose of making a small amendment to the general Railway Act to relieve certain sections or clauses of some ambiguity that seems to have arisen in respect to them. Under the law, as it stands at present, it has been recently interpreted by the courts that the powers of expropriation for the purpose of running a spur line from an existing railway to a gravel pit cannot be exercised, if, perchance, there should be a river or lake, or anything of that kind, intervening between the point at which they can carry the railway nearest to the gravel pit and to the gravel pit itself. It has been differently understood and it was not until recent questions had arisen that the point was brought to the attention of the department.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COASTING TRADE LAWS.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick) moved :

That the House go into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following proposed resolution :

'That it is expedient to amend the law respecting the coasting trade of Canada, and to exclude a foreign-built British ship from that trade unless it has obtained a license, which the Minister of Customs may grant, upon the payment of a duty of twenty-five (25) per cent ad valorem on the fair market value of the ship.'

Motion agreed to.

TAXATION OF CHINESE IMMIGRANTS.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved :

Resolution respecting the taxation of Chinese immigrants. (The Minister of Trade and Commerce) read the second time and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE introduced Bill (No. 156) concerning the taxation of Chinese immigrants.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

LOAN FOR $15,000,000.

House went into committee on the following proposed resolution :

That it is expedient to provide that in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorized by parliament by any Act heretofore passed, the Governor in Council be authorized to raise by way of loan :—

(a.) Such sum or sums of money, not to exceed in the whole, the sum of fifteen million dollars, as may be required for the purpose of paying the floating indebtedness of Canada, and of meeting any expenditure authorized by the parliament of Canada ;—and

(b.) Such sum or sums of money as may be required from time to time, over and above any available sinking funds, to pay and discharge the Funded Debt of Canada, or any portion thereof, as the same matures and becomes payable either in England or in Canada ;

Such sums to be raised in accordance with and under the provisions of that portion of chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to the public debt and the raising of loans authorized by parliament, and the sums so raised to form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada ; the rate of interest to be paid on any such loans not to exceed three and one-half per cent per annum.—The Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). This is the resolution respecting the raising of money by way of loan, which the House will remember I announced in the budget speech. Our last loan Bill was passed in the year 1897, and was for $15,000,000, which is the smallest amount that has been taken for many years in a loan Bill. The outstanding borrowing powers at that date, including the $15,000,000, amounted to about $23,500,000. Out of that, we raised a loan of something less than $10,000,000 (two million pounds sterling) in 1897. We have a current floating indebtedness, as stated to the House, of about $6,000,000, and our savings bank borrowings, which are regarded in the light of a loan, have increased to the extent of about nine and a half million dollars. The net result of these and some other operations is, that our borrowing powers unused are now reduced to a very small figure, being on the 30th day of April, about $2,329,000. It is of course necessary that there should be a borrowing power available to the government from time to time. We have had no loan Bill since 1897, and we have been engaged in very large operations. I do not anticipate that it will be necessary to go into the market for a loan during the current calendar year. The conditions of the money market are not too favourable, and they are likely to be better after the close of the war. However, that is a question which would be determined entirely by the state of the money market; as to whether or not we shall continue to float temporary loans, or whether we shall place a public loan on the market. There is another clause in the Bill which gives us power to renew loans falling due. In that case there is no new obligation, but merely the power to renew such portions of these loans as may be necessary, after taking account of the available sinking funds.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What amount of loans are falling due, and at what interest ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They are all set forth year by year in the public accounts, and a statement of those falling due within the next few years was made in the budget speech.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Very well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not gather in what way the borrowing power under the Act of 1897 has been nearly all exhausted.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The amount available in 1897, prior to the passing of the Act of that year was $8,611,752. The Act of 1897 added $15,000,000 to it, making the total available borrowing powers, $23,611,752. Since that we have borrowed the 2½ per cent loan of 1897, two million pounds, amounting to something less than $10,000,000. We have temporary loans, as stated in the budget speech, amounting to $6,083,333, and we have increased our savings banks deposits—which is another form of public loan—$9,648,080. There are several specially authorized loans—for example, the Montreal Harbour Board loan and things like that—I have not referred to these as I am dealing with general loans. We have practically used up all our authorized borrowing powers, or nearly so, and in order that we may meet the necessities as they arise this Bill would be necessary.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. When you borrow money from the savings banks, have you to get authority under a loan Act ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think probably without a special Loan Act we could do it; but in stating to the House from time to time, the amount of our borrowings we have always included the savings bank deposits. We look upon the amount so taken as a public loan, and it is referred to in the Audit Act as one of the methods by which we may raise money.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where was the temporary loan of $6,000,000 raised ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Bank of Montreal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At what rate ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. 3¼ per cent, and I think there was a small portion of it which bore a shade above that.

Mr. CLARKE. At what rate of interest was the last loan ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The stock bore 2½ per cent; authorized minimum 91, and yielding £91 10s. 5d., if I remember aright, or equivilent to about $2.83 per cent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When you effect a temporary loan of that character for what period does it usually run ? In the present case is it for a definite period, or is it on demand, or is it renewable ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is sometimes for a fixed period of a year, but in the recent case it was only for six months. Owing to the state of the money market the banks preferred a short period of six months, and they gave a better rate than for a year. That, of course, was advantageous to us, because it is renewable and the conditions may be better later.

Mr. CLARKE. How is the interest payable on these temporary loans ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have an annual appropriation which covers general interest as well as the specified bonds.

Mr. CLARKE. How frequently is interest paid ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is practically a discount; you discount Treasury Bills.

Mr. CLARKE. It is practically paid in advance.

Resolution reported ; read the second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) authorizing the raising by way of loan of certain sums of money for the public service.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FRUIT MARKS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 136) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901 (the Minister of Agriculture) read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the minister would be good enough to explain what change in the law is effected, and for what reason this amendment is introduced.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). There is practically no change in the intention of the law. There was some confusion found in the enforcement of the Act as to the definition of the term 'packer,' a doubt arising as to whether it referred to the person on whose behalf the fruit was packed or the individual labourer who packed the fruit. The change makes it clear that it is the person on whose behalf the fruit is packed who is responsible for the packing. Then, it has been found in practice that the trade wish to adopt a standard of marks, and in this Bill we provide for marks of two different kinds—one set being XXX, XX and X ; the other being No. 1, No. 2 and No. 3. The reason the alternative is given is that in the maritime provinces the X marks are used, while in Ontario the numbers are used. People may use, along with these, their own private marks if they choose. We wish gradually to introduce these marks, but we do not wish at present to make them absolutely the only marks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as the first change is concerned, there seems to be every reason for it ; but the other seems to be remarkably indefinite. What would you regard as a designation inconsistent with XXX ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would be one of an inferior grade ; for instance, No. 2 with XXX. The point more particularly is that a designation must not be used inconsistent with X or XX. For instance, if 'specially selected' were used with XX, it would be inconsistent; or if No. 1 were used with X, the two would be inconsistent. The difficulty arises in the fact that certain dealers have their own special grades, and if they were to use XX as the proper designation of the fruit, and were to accompany it with another designation of their own, which meant 'special excellence' or 'highest grade,' that would be inconsistent with XX ; and though they might truthfully say that the fruit was legally marked, yet the marking would mislead the purchaser.

Mr. CLARKE. Have these changes been made at the suggestion of the fruit packers or fruit exporters ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, largely on the recommendation of fruit inspectors, who are charged with the enforcement of the Act, and after discussion with the fruit dealers, and as a result of the experience of the last season.

Mr. CLARKE. Was any intimation given to the fruit exporters as to the amendments which were likely to be made in the Act of last session ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. They were discussed with them by the inspectors and when the inspectors were here about two weeks ago, they made these recommendations to me.

Mr. CLARKE. They discussed them previously with the fruit exporters ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I must say that this section strikes me as very indefinite—indeed, so indefinite as to be practically useless. If a dealer puts any other designation whatever upon a package of fruit, it must mean either the same thing as one of the marks already there, or it must modify it in some way. If it modifies it in any way is it to be regarded as inconsistent with it ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It must mean practically the same thing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it means the same thing, what is the use of putting it on ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Because certain dealers have marks which are known to their customers, and we do not wish to debar them from using those marks if they wish.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I cannot understand how 'specially selected' can be inconsistent with XX or X, because that particular variety or class of fruit might be specially selected. The third-class might be specially selected as well as the first-class.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It would not be so considered by the trade.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But in dealing with an act of parliament it would be so determined. I am taking the English language in its ordinary acceptation ; I do not know anything about the technicalities of the trade. However, I do not suppose there is anything in this that can do any harm, though I fail to see that it can do any good. In fact, my hon. friend admitted last session that the chief merit of the Bill was that it could not do any harm. None of us were able to see how it could do any good.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It has been found to do a great deal of good already.

Mr. HENDERSON. Subsection 'a' requires that the packer shall mark the package with the initials of 'his' christian name. In the event of the exporter being a woman, how would the marks be designated ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe that 'his' is supposed to include 'her'.

Mr. HENDERSON. Under what authority ? Is there an interpretation Act which makes 'his' stand for 'her' ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I believe there is.

Mr. HENDERSON. I regret very much that a Bill of this importance has been left to be dealt with by a thin House at the close of the session, when men who thoroughly understand the marking of fruit are absent. I think it a great pity that this Bill has not been dealt with two months ago.

Mr. WADE. I would like to ask the minister if he has considered the question of making any description of No. 2 and No. 3 grades. I have had several communications from fruit growers who think that would be desirable, if possible.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The inspectors thought it was hardly feasible at the present time to make a correct and reliable definition of those grades.

Mr. GILMOUR. Is it designated anywhere, either in this amendment or in the original Act, what XXX means ? If it is, this Act is of some service. If it is not, it is meaningless, and a man might put XXX on anything.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In section 6 of the original Act the definition of the first quality is given.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is this change ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is simply to put in section 6 of the Act the words 'No. 1' as well as 'finest,' 'best' and 'first quality.'

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are two ways in which this Act works. One is that the fruit shall be marked certain grades, and if the inspector finds it is not up to the grade he is authorized to put on the words 'falsely marked.' There is another part of the Act which provides that the fruit shall be equal, all through the package, to its face, and there is no means of authorizing the inspector to label the package 'falsely packed' where that provision of the Act is violated. I therefore ask to be given the authority to have the package labelled 'falsely packed' as well as 'falsely marked.'

Mr. CLARKE. I sent copies of the Bill to several fruit exporters in Toronto, but have only had a reply from one of them, so that I take it there cannot be any serious objection to the measure on the part of the others. The gentleman who did write me suggests that the words 'offered for sale' should be added after the word 'package' in the first line of section 9 and also in subsection 3, He gives as his reasons :

> Owing to unavoidable hurry at times in getting fruit under cover, also deterioration when held any length of time, a shipper should not be held responsible for marks excepting when offering the fruit for sale ; were it otherwise every one handling same would become liable over and over again during a season ; I would therefore urge you to secure the insertion of the saving clause proposed 'offered for sale.'

It would be a harsh provision to have the Act amended as proposed in this Bill, and my correspondent suggests the advisability of adding the words 'offered for sale' so that a penalty will not be imposed upon the person whose name or initials are to be found on the outside of the barrel, unless the fruit contained in the barrel is being offered for sale.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think the addition of those words would make the Act practically unworkable. When fruit is hurriedly put into a warehouse, the seller need not mark the package at all. It is only when the fruit is offered for sale, that the package need be marked. If the merchant is going to repack the fruit, he does not need to mark it until it is repacked. In the second place, the fruit is very frequently already sold and in the hands of a purchaser, and legal technicalities might interfere materially with the working of the Act, if these words were inserted. In the third place, we have often to deal with fruit in transit for the foreign market, and I do not know how we could deal with it if these words were inserted. The fruit is in Toronto, and whether it is being offered for sale or has been sold or to whom it belongs, are questions which would raise a number of legal technicalities and obstruct the working of the Act. I think the danger which my hon. friend's correspondent fears is not a grave one, because he is not required to mark these packages at all until he is ready to offer them for sale.

Mr. CLARKE. If this Act be found to work harshly, I suppose the hon. gentleman would consent to an amendment at some future time ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have been enforcing the Act in a very lenient way up to the present and do not propose to administer it harshly at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of the third clause ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It is the same as in the original Act, the only difference being that the inspector must give notice when he marks the packages 'falsely packed,' as he does in the case when he labels them 'falsely marked.' The object is to let the shipper or seller know that his fruit has been found to be wrongly marked, so that he take what steps he think necessary to protect himself. That is necessary when the fruit is in transit.

Mr. COCHRANE. Are we to understand that if the inspector finds certain packages falsely marked, he will condemn the whole shipment, or only the barrel so marked.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is a matter of regulation. I think I will have to make a regulation by which a certain number of barrels will be examined, and if found falsely marked or packed, the whole of that particular shipment will have to be thrown out. Last year we only marked the barrels examined, and serious complaint were made from the old country. In one case a lawsuit resulted over a large shipment, in which some barrels were marked and others were not, because not opened. I will have to make regulations to deal with this matter more strictly than in the past.

Mr. COCHRANE. Frequently the shipper or his agent buys the orchard. Sometimes he has the picking done himself or he may pay so much for the whole orchard and repack the fruit after delivery. Supposing a lot of barrels were marked by the apple grower as instructed by the shipper and were not up to the standard of the inspection, and the purchaser intended having them repacked before being put on the market, how would the Act work then ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In such a case the barrels need not be marked at all. If they were inspected and the markers found them incorrect and fraudulent, I think that the person on whose behalf the apples were packed would be responsible and not the owner of the orchard.

Mr. WADE. I do not think that the hon. gentleman could, under this Act, make such a regulation as he speaks of. He could only have such fruit marked as not being up to the standard, which was really examined.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that is probably correct.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The regulation I propose would be that when a certain number of barrels are found wrongly packed or marked, the inspector would have to go through the whole lot. I do not propose that he should mark any package without examining it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If out of a dozen barrels we found two falsely packed, would the inspector examine every barrel of the shipment ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In the case of two out of ten, I would not consider it necessary for the inspector to go through the whole lot. But if he found seven or eight out of ten wrongly marked or packed, he would be instructed to examine every package.

Mr. COCHRANE. If the inspector went through the whole lot, would the shipper not have the privilege of repacking ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. Where does the responsibility end in this matter? Suppose a retailer buys 50 or 100 barrels wrongly marked and offers them for sale. If the customer finds that the apples are not as represented, has he any recourse against the retailer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Is that not likely to do injustice to the retailer ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The intention of the Act was that the retailer should have his recourse against the person who sold the apples to him.

Mr. CLARKE. I think a case arose in Toronto where information was laid against the retailer. My recollection is not clear as to the circumstances, but I remember that it seemed to me at the time a very great injustice to the retailer that, after he had purchased so many barrels of apples and taken them into the store and sold certain barrels, one or more of which were found not to be as marked, proceedings should lie against the retailer. It is the person who packed the fruit and not the retailer who should be proceeded against.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The person who packs is responsible, but, by another section of the Act, anybody who offers for sale fruit improperly marked is also responsible.

Mr. CLARKE. Yet there is responsibility upon the retailer for every barrel, although he has had nothing to do with the packing.

Mr. WADE. Let him buy from a reputable party.

Mr. CLARKE. All the wholesale dealers are reputable parties. But does not the minister think it would be unjust to the retailer who buys twenty-five or fifty barrels of apples from a reputable firm and finds after they are sold by him, that some packages of the fruit are not as marked, that he should be proceeded against ? Would it not be better to provide that when a customer informs the department, the department should proceed against the wholesale man or shipper ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I do not think it would do to debar the purchaser from proceeding against the retailer. But I may say that, under such circumstances as the hon. gentleman has indicated, the department would not proceed against the retailer, but against the parties who packed the fruit, or for whom it was packed. It would not do, however, to relieve the retailer of all responsibility.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any provision under which the retailer has a remedy against the person who supplies him ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The whole Act would give him that—he has the same remedy that the person who purchases from him has against him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what way ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If he has purchased fruit, marked of a certain grade from A. B., a dealer or shipper or packer, he can proceed against that party if the fruit is not as marked.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For penalty ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes, and for damages also.

Bill reported ; read the third time, and passed.

INCORPORATIONS OF BOARDS OF TRADE.

Bill (No. 132) to amend the Act respecting the Incorporation of Boards of Trade (the Minister of Trade and Commerce), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). I may explain that this Bill is to facilitate the incorporation of Boards of Trade in mining districts, and to reduce the unit of population in the districts for which Boards of Trade may be incorporated in certain cases. This Bill applies only to British Columbia and Yukon Territory.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Department of Public Works—Further amount required for contingencies, $3,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). We require an additional amount for telegrams, stationery and printing. We are receiving a great many telegrams from all parts of the country, unpaid, of course.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the telegrams do not absorb the whole of this $3,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It includes printing, advertising, stationery.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is the printing done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. At the Printing Bureau.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the hon. gentleman quite sure about that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure of that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to know how the total vote compares with that of the previous year. There are so many supplementaries, and the thing is in such a state of confusion, that we cannot exactly compare the expenditure of one year with that of another.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year we asked for $2,000 in the supplementary estimates, and this year for $3,000.

Parliament buildings, Ottawa—Addition to building over engine house and improvements in main vestibule, including elevators, &c., $21,500.

Mr. BELL. What will that make the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $56,000.

Mr. BELL. Does that cover the whole cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BELL. I would like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that his elevators are not very satisfactory. If there was a fire, all the members of the Railway Committee in that committee room would be burned up. If both elevators go wrong at once there would be no way of getting out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure the trouble is not with the elevators. Sometimes during the session the power has been short. During the recess I will see that that trouble is remedied.

Mr. BELL. Another trouble is the noise; the echo in that Railway Committee room is a very serious evil, and makes it almost impossible to do any business there. I suppose that will be attended to by the hon. minister in some way ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that in every new building there is something wrong with the acoustics. We have remedied that to a certain extent by the draperies the hon. gentleman has seen. The chief architect informs me he will be able to remedy it still further.

Mr. BELL. I would suggest that possibly another remedy might be found. The chairman's table and platform might be shifted to some point nearer the middle of the room at one side. It is almost impossible to hear anything now at the extreme end of the room.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know where to place the seat of the chairman. For a time we put it just across where my hon. friend would like it to be; but on reflection we changed it. Of course, if the committee would like it to be changed, I have no objection.

Ottawa public buildings—heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen, elevator attendants and caretaker, $12,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the cause of the increase ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the first place we have been obliged to buy 1,000 tons more coal on account of the greater number of public buildings we have in this city. Moreover, after public tenders last year, I was obliged to pay 65 cents per ton more for coal. I have just received tenders for next year, and the price of coal has still increased.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What kind of coal is it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Hard coal.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How do you buy it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By public tender.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much does this increase the vote over the previous year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By $12,000. We will be obliged to ask for more in the supplementary estimates. The total increase in the amount will be $24,000. We are obliged to pay $15,134 for an additional 1,000 tons of coal. We are obliged to pay the balance, because the price of coal has been increased.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Coal does not cost $15 a ton ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we are paying $6.45 a ton.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And the increase on the total coal, together with the additional 1,000 tons, makes an increase of $15,000 altogether in the cost of coal for the buildings.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman taken into consideration the question of making further provision for the public service in Ottawa by building instead of renting so many buildings about the city ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have considered the matter, but as the government have decided to erect a museum, a mint, and an astronomical observatory, my colleagues have thought that this year's budget is large enough, and we have not resolved to erect any new public buildings.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not urging the expenditure of any more money. I believe that possibly there might be a saving of money. The difficulty that has been mentioned in the past is that you will have to buy land. I never could see the slightest necessity for buying more land. I believe that you have all the land required for putting up additional departmental buildings for the public service. As far as the observatory, the mint and buildings of that kind are concerned, I do not profess to know about them, but it seems to me that there is ample room for increasing the western public building, and there is ample room where the Supreme Court building is to erect another building. I think it would be well to consider whether or not that cannot be done, so as to save a considerable sum of money that is spent in rent, because, I believe the interest on the cost of these buildings would be less than the rent which the government are paying out in the city of Ottawa annually. Of course, I would not profess to speak about that with as much knowledge as that possessed by the hon. gentleman and the officers of his department. There is, however, no difficulty about the land.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Supreme Court site has been pointed out to me several times and it is a very fine site indeed. I must admit that in my personal view it is better to erect the buildings required, but my hon. friend knows already, and he will perhaps know later on, that when budgets have reached a certain volume it is pretty difficult to get more money. We are paying out in the city of Ottawa $18,000 in rent. I am going to reduce that amount by $1,000 or $2,000, because I am going to improve the post office and provide accommodation there for the Department of Customs. We are now renting an office on Sparks street for that department. We are paying, as I was saying, about $18,000 for rent, and, I suppose, $400,000, or $500,000, would erect a very fine building for the public service. I hope that next year we will be in a position to have a more definite policy upon that point.

Mr. CLARKE. Are not the office buildings which have been rented for the public service in this city under lease for ten years ? What is the shortest lease ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the shortest lease is one year. We are not bound by any length of time except in the case of the brick building at the corner of Metcalfe and Slater streets, where we are bound for ten years, of which two years have gone.

Mr. CLARKE. There are no other buildings leased for ten years ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BELL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works if he has any intention of building a new House of Commons chamber ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Suggestions have been made that as the library is too small we might perhaps make an exchange, but this is a big question and at the present time I have not the information necessary to enable me to express an opinion upon it.

Mr. BELL. I suppose that those of us who are so favoured by our constituencies may expect to remain in this chamber for some years ? And if so, it seems to me that the hon. minister should direct his attention to the subject of the ventilation of the chamber. I shall not say very much about it, because I know it is a subject which has been discussed very often, but really, it seems to me an extraordinary thing that the House of Commons should be condemned to spend year after year in a chamber whose ventilation is absolutely disgraceful and prejudicial to the health, and that the matter should get so little attention. What is the reason that it is absolutely impossible to provide the House of Commons with pure air ? I think it is a most serious reflection upon the hon. Minister of Public Works, who has proved himself in every other direction so energetic and so capable. I hope that he will direct himself to the question of providing a remedy for what is unquestionably a scandalous evil.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have, over and over again, called the attention of the chief architect to the ventilation of this House. Of course, we cannot change the nature of this chamber. It has been constructed on certain lines that we all know. It is a room in the middle of the building. As to the ventilation the chief architect tells me that he cannot see very well how he can change it now. It is as good as we can make it, although I grant it is not good.

Mr. BELL. It is not modern. It is an antiquated system.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If we open the windows over our heads there is a draught and everybody is sick. I want parliament to be in good shape and in good health.

Mr. CLARKE. How long is the census building, at the corner of O'Connor and Sparks streets, leased for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Three years.

Mr. CLARKE. What portion of that time has expired ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have leased it for five years, but two years have gone, so that we are not bound for more than three years now.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it expected that the census will be completed in that time ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not for me to answer that question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose you have an arrangement so that it can be renewed if necessary ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We can always renew.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At that price ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no desire to renew the lease of that building. I had enough trouble to put it through before.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before leaving the matter referred to by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) of the ventilation of this chamber, I desire to say that during this session, we, on this side of the House, and more particularly those of us who sit on the middle row of seats, have found very great inconvenience and discomfort from the system of ventilating the chamber. I do not object to the air not being so pure at all times; we can put up with that, but there is another matter we do desire to enter our solemn protest against, and it is that the fans that are used to force fresh air into the chamber are turned on while we are sitting in the chamber. When a cold blast of wind is driven directly against our heads, being uncovered, no man is free from a severe cold. During the greater part of the session, I have been subject to a cold. I am sure this is a matter the minister can remedy by instructing the engineer that these fans shall not be turned on after six o'clock until the members have left the chamber.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Get out.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Minister of Customs says 'get out,' but we are not provided with suitable and comfortable rooms in other parts of the building as he is. We are compelled to remain here, and do our work and it is absolute cruelty to subject us to such treatment. I have spoken time and time about it, but without having any remedy applied. I think Mr. Chairman you will remember that when you sat on this side of the House you suffered in the same way. We will put up with impure air if we have to, but we cannot put up with a Yukon blast blowing about our ears continually.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I come often to this chamber when the House is not sitting and I generally find a good many members here so that the difficulty is to turn on the fans when there are no members. I assure the House that during the recess I will give my best attention to the ventilation of the chamber. I will consult not only my own officers, but men who have acquired experience in that line of business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would gather from the statement of my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) that what the Minister of Public Works does is to turn the fans on against the members of this side of the House so as to kill off the opposition, and that he does not do so on the other side. If there is any truth in that, it is of course taking a most unfair advantage of us.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend may rest assured that that side of the House has been blown up enough without me.

Maritime provinces—General repairs, harbours, rivers and bridges, $8,000.

Mr. BELL. Is there anything in this vote for the works on Pictou Island, to which I have called attention several times.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that we have taken the amount out of the general vote of last year to do that work and the work is going on now.

Slides and booms—repairs, &c., $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the necessity for this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Trade is developing and there are more demands for works of all kind. We make a rough estimate for the general vote. We cannot tell of course whether storms will destroy one wharf or ten wharfs throughout the country and the estimate is always approximate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But this is for slides and booms. The explanation of the minister is very satisfactory so far as it is definite, but it is not very definite.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These works are quite outside of the ordinary vote. These are revenue bearing works.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much revenue do you get ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I never handle a dollar of the revenue, but I think the revenue reaches about $130,000 a year. These works which pay best are on the St. Maurice and the Ottawa rivers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The total expenditure is how much ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $107,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So that the work is really paid for out of collections ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Telegraphs—Land and cable telegraph lines of the sea coasts and islands of the lower rivers, and Gulf of St. Lawrence and maritime provinces, including working expenses of vessels required for cable service, $17,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This sum is asked for in connection with our cable and telegraph system. We have cables between Anticosti and the north shore, and between the Magdalen Islands and Meat Cove on the Island of Cape Breton, and also in New Brunswick. The steamer 'Newfield' was wrecked, and we have been obliged to buy another steamer, the 'Tyrian,' and to equip her, and this sum is asked in connection with that.

Mr. CLARKE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if he is prepared to give the House and the country a full statement as to the policy of the government with respect to the improvement of the telegraph and cable service in the gulf. In view of the lamentable record of losses in the gulf last season, I think we should have a comprehensive statement as to what steps the government are taking to mitigate the evils to which that route has been subject.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that we have completed our telegraph system to Belle Isle. We have laid a cable between Belle Isle and the north shore, and we have equipped two Marconi stations—one on Belle Isle and one on the north shore. When the supplementary estimates come, I think my hon. friend will find that I have not forgotten that important question. I think our telegraph system down by the sea should be completed. I feel that we should be at home, if I may so speak, with our telegraph system, so that it will be connected with all the cables of the continent.

Mr. CLARKE. We shall have full explanations from the hon. minister before the supplementary estimates pass ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the hon. minister had any communication with the shipping interest on the subject ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. I suppose the correspondence will be brought down, so that we may see if anything can be done to effect some improvement in the insurance rates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will bring down all the correspondence I have.

At one o'clock committee took recess.

Committee resumed at Three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount is asked to supplement last year's vote, it is to pay for accounts that are due.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the 'Tyrian' to be used entirely as a cable steamer ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Have you sufficient work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many miles of cable have you to lay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total mileage of our system is about 6,000 miles, including the Yukon Territory. We have 230 miles of cable to lay.

Mr. LEMIEUX. The hon. minister was kind enough to provide for a new cable between House Harbour and Amherst, Magdalen Islands last year or two years ago. The cable is, I understand, on board a steamer, but has not yet been laid. Will the hon. gentleman attend to this matter this year, as our telegraphic service there is very poor indeed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The cable was purchased in England and has reached Canada, and as soon as the season permits, it will be laid down.

Yukon public buildings, including revote of $23,723.32, lapsed $84,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A part of this vote is composed of a revote, amounting to $23,723. That sum lapsed because the accounts for last year did not reach Ottawa in time. The balance of the vote is to cover expenditure incurred on public buildings in the Yukon, besides the appropriation. In other words the resident engineer, Mr. Fowler, has been obliged to spend more than he thought on the public buildings out there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What public buildings has the government erected in the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The government house, which is a residence for the commissioner, a building for the post office and custom-house, and administration building, in which all the branches of the public service are located and a court house. We have several other public buildings in the Yukon, and I gave the list in the previous debate. In the supplementaries we have arranged in such a way that the Yukon government will have charge of all local business just as has the government in the North-west Territories, and my department will keep charge only of the federal business, that is to say, the post office and the government house. It would be easier for the Yukon government to take charge of all the local buildings there as they are on the spot and know more about them than I do.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are there official residences also for the judges ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, but we pay the rental of the government judges residence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What are the furnishings ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not furnish the judges house residence, but we had to provide the furnishings for the buildings I have mentioned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How is it the hon. gentleman wants $60,000 more than he thought last year would be required ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was very difficult to form an accurate estimate of the cost of work in the Yukon, especially when there was no telegraphic communication, and Mr. Fowler, the resident architect, under estimated the cost.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman's department a resident engineer in the Yukon ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These estimates were made, I suppose, in the Yukon and not in Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These estimates were sent by Mr. Fuller, who was our resident architect. But the estimates were exceeded. However, Mr. Fuller is here in Ottawa, and if my hon. friend would like to have him before the Public Accounts Committee, there is no reason why he would not do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that there is any need of that but——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I was just explaining that the reason why we asked for this vote is that the resident architect exceeded his appropriation. But he tells us that, these buildings having been commenced, he was bound to complete them.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is quite right. But what is the vote last year which was exceeded ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The appropriation last year was $145,000 ; as against this Mr. Fuller has drawn cheques to the amount of $228,947, a deficit of about $84,000, for which I am asking this vote. Of course, out of that, as I have explained, over $23,000 had lapsed from last year's appropriation, so I am really only asking for a vote of $60,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not quite understand that. If there is a difference of $84,000 between what was estimated and what was expended, how can $23,000 of this be a revote ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because the money has not been spent ; the accounts did not come in time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But I understand the hon. minister to say that cheques were issued for $228,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister has explained the matter to me, and as I understand it, the appropriation was then exhausted. As a matter of fact before we had telegraph communication we never knew where we were in these matters. Our officers would delay and then the slowness of postal communication would cause further delay. But the case is as I have stated—we had an appropriation of $145,000 against which we have an expenditure of $228,947.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the vote of last year does not expire until the 1st July next. I do not understand the minister's statement that a portion of the vote has lapsed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister explained that what was exceeded was the vote of last year, and out of this year's vote we have had to pay this $23,000, therefore we are short by that amount on this vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why did not you get it revoted last session ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because, I am informed, the session was over when we learned of it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, I cannot help myself in these matters. The money has to be paid.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand now—the lapse is one lap back ; but it seems to be a pretty wide margin of error—$84,000 in $145,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I grant that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How were the buildings erected, by tender or by day's work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that we gave small contracts for material, and so on, but most of the work was by day's labour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How would it be possible to have so large an error as that in doing the work in that way ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot explain more than I have already done. As I have said, we had a resident architect, a man who has been several years in the department and who was recommended to me as the best man for that work. We controlled the expenditure as much as it was possible to do from this distance, but the appropriation was exceeded. In a country where charwomen are paid $5 a day, money goes pretty fast.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The money goes pretty fast—I am disposed to admit that. But what margin of error does the minister think we ought to allow in future ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad to say there will be no more errors in this, because these works have been completed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What has been the total cost of these buildings that the minister has spoken of ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I find that the total cost of the buildings up to 1st January, 1902, so far as reported to Ottawa, was $297,435.45.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the estimate ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I really cannot say. It is rather difficult to make an estimate out there.

To refund the Yukon local council the balance of their outlay in connection with the construction of the Ogilvie bridge, viz.: $32,403, together with the sum of $15,748.27, advanced by them so as to permit of the Hunker Road being completed ready for traffic in 1901-02..	$48,151 84
To pay Palmer Bros., in full and final settlement of all demands in connection with their contract for the construction of a wagon road from Williams Roadhouse to mouth of Gold Run..	19,800 00
	$67,951 84

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What funds do the Yukon local council administer ? Why is there a refund ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to answer the question as it does not belong to the Department of Public Works. But so far as I can say, they are funds collected from the royalties and so on. Out of their local funds they have advanced a sum for roads which we are asked to reimburse to them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who had the contract with the government for building this wagon road ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Messrs. Palmer and Russell had a contract with the Department of Public Works for the construction of this road. That work was recommended by Mr. Ross, the commissioner, and it was on his recommendation that the contract was awarded.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the length of the road ?

The MINITSER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Fifteen miles and a half.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Had you authority from parliament to enter into contract for building that road ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had a vote for roads last year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this in excess of that vote ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to complete payment for the construction of that road.

Mr. CLARKE. How much was paid before on account of this road ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had voted $10,000 before.

Mr. CLARKE. Then the road cost $29,800 for 15 miles. Is that right ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the total cost of that road was $31,479, and we have paid $11,000. The length of the road is 16 miles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There was a contract, apparently, according to the wording of the resolution. What was the amount of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The deputy minister reminds me that in point of fact the commissioner was the real party who contracted for the road, with the consent of all the officers. The contract price was $10,418 for the first section ; for the second section, eight miles in round numbers, the contract price was $10,950.80. Then there were extras that Mr. Ross, the commissioner, granted. I may say that Mr. Ross being a man of experience, when he went there I asked him to certify all the expenditures for the Department of Public Works. I thought it was safer to have him supervise my own officers, and in everything I am asking from the House to-day I have the sanction and approbation of Mr. Ross.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Were tenders called for by public advertisement ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I desire, Mr. Chairman, to call your attention to the fact that there is so much noise in the Chamber that it is difficult to hear. While the committee is going on in supply we will have to have better order. On Friday evening it was almost impossible to hear the minister who was in charge, and it is very difficult this afternoon. Unless we have better order I shall move that the committee rise.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I cannot be heard from this side of the House I will go across.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Very frequently when the committee begins work there is a system of interviewing going on in the House. Members gather in little groups around certain seats for the purpose of transacting business, which causes a hum that renders it almost impossible for the average member to hear what is going on. I hope that will be avoided as far as possible.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I may point out to to the minister that on Friday evening he was making a good deal of noise himself while the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were going on. I am glad to see that he is being taught a lesson on the present occasion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must apologize for my past faults. I have the best intentions for the future.

Mr. ROCHE (Halifax). I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that from our seats up here we hear nothing whatever of what is going on down below, and we have to amuse ourselves as best we can.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Tenders were asked for for this work, and thirteen were sent in. The lowest tenderer was a gentleman named Forsyth, but he had to be passed over because his securities went back on him. The next lowest tenderer was Mr. Palmer, the man to whom we gave the contract.

Mr. EARLE. When was the contract let ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. July 27th, 1900.

Mr. EARLE. That was previous to Mr. Ross going in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, perhaps so. But he was consulted. I remember very well, when our final settlement took place.

Mr. EARLE. That is the account that Palmer & Russell had a dispute with the department about ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there was a difference.

Mr. EARLE. What was the difference ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were extras for about $10,000, or $12,000, and as I did not know exactly what to do, I referred the whole thing to Mr. Ross, in whom I had implicit confidence, and he settled with them with the aid of my officers.

Mr. EARLE. That is unfair to the lowest tenderer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The lowest tenderer was passed over because, before accepting his contract, his securities went back on him, and for no other reason.

Quesnelle Atlin telegraph line—Yukon system, $107,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the explanation here ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This money is asked to pay two different accounts. First to pay back accounts incurred in 1899-1900 and also in 1900-1901, amounting to $55,640.09. It is also to pay the cost of the gap that had to be completed during last session. When I came to the House on a previous occasion I stated that we had every reason to believe that the gap to be filled would be about 50 miles long. Of course, this is a wild country, and nobody had ever previously travelled over the ground between Hazelton and Telegraph Creek. Instead of having to complete a gap of 50 miles, we had 111 miles of telegraph line to build. Now, we had to carry our provisions on boats and in other ways, and we had to spend $30,000 to take the men in in the spring and bring them out in the fall. We would seem to have spent $79,000 for that 111 miles of gap, but we have really and practically spent only $49,000 upon that work, as $30,000 had to be spent to take the men in and bring them out again. I am asking this amount of money to pay $55,000 of old accounts and to pay the cost of this gap. During the last winter there were a couple of months in which there were 27 feet of snow. For the next season, as soon as spring is open, I intend buying cable and laying it down so that in the winter months there will be no interruption in the telegraph system.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why did you not run straight across the country ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is altogether out of the question. They were obliged at times before reaching these points to shovel five or six feet of snow on both sides.

Mr. BELL. At what season of the year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was in the month of April that they started. It cost us $30,000 to take them in and bring them out.

Mr. BOYD. I have heard it remarked that in building this line, the engineers or those who were responsible, ran past one another about 50 miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They did not. If my hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) will be good enough to look at the map he will find that there was nothing of the kind.

Mr. BOYD. Then it is not the case that they did run past each other ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I say on the report of the engineers who were there and who are here to-day, on the report of Mr. Boyer, who is a most reliable officer, that nothing of the kind occurred.

Mr. BOYD. My information was that the parties building the line ran past each other about 50 miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am quite sure that information is incorrect, as the map shows.

Mr. BOYD. I am pleased to hear that it is not so.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This map has been prepared by the officers who built this line.

Mr. EARLE. I asked some information from the hon. minister the other evening which he was not then prepared to give. What is the total length of the Yukon telegraph line from Ashcroft to Dawson, the total cost and the number of men employed?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total length of the Yukon lines, including the Port Simpson to Hazelton branch, is 2,135 miles. Here are the distances : first section, Ashcroft to Quesnelle, including the branch from Ashcroft to Lilloet station and other branches from Quesnelle to Barkerville, 281 miles ; second section, which extends from Quesnelle to Atlin by way of Hazelton and Telegraph Creek, 397 miles; Hazelton to Telegraph Creek, 333 miles; Telegraph Creek to Atlin, 214 miles, making a total distance from Quesnelle to Atlin of 944 miles; branch line from Port Simpson to Hazelton, 200 miles ; Atlin to Dawson, including branch to Cariboo crossing, 611 miles ; branch from Dawson to the American boundary, 97 miles, making in all 2,135 miles.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $786,224.41 not including $94,000 for supplies and provisions which were left at the different camps on different occasions, and which have been paid out of construction money.

Mr. KEMP. Does that include this estimate ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the total estimate. If the total sum of $786,224.41 is divided by the total mileage of 2,135 miles, then the general cost per mile would be $368.23, and if the House wants to know how much per mile was the cost on the different sections I am prepared to give it.

Mr. BOYD. How many telegraph offices have you ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have 70 offices including refuge houses and about 119 employees.

Mr. BOYD. What kind of wire did you use ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. 8 wire. As I have said, next winter season we contemplate laying a cable on the most difficult part of the line so as to avoid the great damages caused by the storms. Between Hazelton and Telegraph Creek last winter there were 27 feet of snow, which accounts for the interruption in the service. We expect that by using the new device we will be able to have an uninterrupted service the whole winter round. The cost of the different sections of the line is as follows :

From Ashcroft to Barkerville 281 miles, less 62 miles to Lilloet making 219 miles ; total cost $24,000 or $110 per mile.

From Quesnelle to Atlin 944 miles, total cost $500,494.75, or $540.77 per mile.

From Fort Simpson to Hazelton 200 miles, total cost $64,637.52, or $323.18 per mile.

Atlin to Dawson including branch to Bennett 637 miles, total cost $178,480.53 ; cost per mile $280.19.

From Dawson to the boundary, 95 miles, total cost $18,611.39, or $195.90 per mile.

Mr. KEMP. On which section did one of the civil servants in the employ of the government contract with the government to supply the poles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Bennett and Dawson line.

Mr. KEMP. Had any civil servants contracts on any other sections ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not admit that a civil servant had a contract at all, because Mr. Rochester is not a civil servant. He was a temporary employee for a time. I have already explained to the House how this matter happened. Mr. Rochester started from Ottawa and the intention of Mr. Charleson was that Mr. Rochester who had long experience was to be employed as foreman of works. When he had been a few months there he contracted for the poles. We were then paying $3 for the poles and he offered to supply them for $2. Mr. Charleson rightly or wrongly accepted his offer, and after his contract was completed he began again as foreman of construction. Let me say at once that Mr. Richardson who was then in charge of the construction of the line was the gentleman who accepted all the poles from Mr. Rochester. These are the facts as they are.

Mr. EARLE. I asked the other evening a question with regard to the amount of business done by that telegraph line. Can the minister tell us the amount of messages and the revenue received ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The revenue since the 1st of July, 1901, has been as follows: July, $7,478.78; August, $7,583.52; September, $8,904.13; October, $8,976.16; November, $6,670.83; December, $6,509.36; January, 1902, $6,950.48; February, $7,683.71; March, $8,898. I may remark that the line was interrupted for several weeks, otherwise I suppose our receipts would have been larger.

Mr. EARLE. Can you tell me what proportion of the revenue is derived from the government service, and what proportion from general business ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is our net revenue. For next year we expect a revenue of $125,000 at least. The expenditure during the last six months or a year has been very large, because we were still building. We shall be able to reduce the expenditure very largely.

Mr. EARLE. Will you be able to reduce your rates ? The impression is that if the rates were lowered to a reasonable figure, the business would be very greatly increased.

An hon. MEMBER. What are the rates?

Mr. EARLE. I think they are about $4.75 for ten words from Victoria or Vancouver to the Yukon. I am informed that if a message is sent from Ashcroft to London, the full Yukon rate is added to the cable rate, whereas in cabling over any other line there is only the usual local rate added to the cable rate. I understand that in cabling anywhere along the government line, the full Yukon rate is added to the cable rate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, I would be only too glad, if possible, to reduce the rates. We have not had many complaints. The rates, I grant, are not low; but that line has cost a large amount of money, and the rates must be judged according to local circumstances. Everything is high out there.

Mr. EARLE. But that does not affect the case I mention. If you telegraph from Ashcroft to Victoria the rate is perhaps 50 cents; but if you cable from Ashcroft to London, the full Yukon rate is added to the cable rate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Is the hon. gentleman sure of that ?

Mr. EARLE. I have been told so by a party who has cabled.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad my hon. friend has called my attention to that. I will immediately look into it.

Mr. BOYD. What class of instruments are used in those seventy offices ? Are they repeaters, or can the hon. gentleman give me some idea of what batteries are used ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the prices of the instruments here, but if my hon. friend wants them, I will give them with pleasure.

Mr. BOYD. The average cost of that line is $368.23 per mile, with offices about 30 miles apart. In Manitoba it costs about $150 a mile to build and equip a telegraph line with offices about 10 miles apart, although we have to bring the telegraph poles three or four hundred miles. This line must have been built through a wooded country where the telegraph poles must have been very near. In the district of Keewatin you can get large cedar telegraph poles at 50 or 75 cents. What kind of poles were these, which cost $2 each ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think we could have used cedar there. We had to use the native timber.

Mr. BOYD. How could the poles cost $2 each ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The cost of transportation has been the greatest expense. Some parts of the work have not cost even $150 a mile. For instance, that part of the work from Ashcroft to Barkerville cost only $110 a mile. In other words, in a civilized country it did not cost nearly so much. The last gap cost over $700 a mile, because we had to pack provisions, wires, and so on, for a distance of 100 miles, and in some cases the men had to shovel away snow and ice to a depth of 6 feet.

Mr. BOYD. What wages are paid the operators and what are their duties ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The average price paid was between $80 per month and three dollars a day. I am speaking of the whole staff. For the coming year we have reduced the wages. The line was opened in a very hasty way, and we have reduced all the salaries, so that I expect next year the expenditure will be about $125,000.

Mr. KEMP. The cost of the poles appears to have been $2. I understand that there are no great transportation charges because they were floated down the river. I hope that the hon. minister does not approve of officials of the government taking contracts of this kind. I understand that the contractor was on salary before he took this contract and that after he completed the contract, he went back on salary again and has been in the employ of the government ever since. I also understand that while he was carrying on the contract he kept the books of the government. I hope the hon. gentleman has taken steps to find out what the poles really cost, because the government would be entitled to the profits, the contractor being an official of the government. A civil servant has no right to take government contracts, and the officials implicated should be severely reprimanded.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not prepared to admit that Mr. Charleson did right in giving Mr. Rochester this contract. I told him that if I had been in his place I would not have done it. But we must look into the circumstances. Our employes were in a wild country. The poles had been supplied to Mr. Charleson by the Victoria Trading Company for the line between Bennett and Caribou Crossing at $3 each. Mr. Rochester who has been employed in bush operations all his life, offered to supply the poles for the remainder of the work between Bennett and Dawson for $2 each, and Mr. Charleson gave him the contract at that price. My hon. friend is not quite correct in saying that Mr. Rochester continued in the employ of the government while he was carrying out this contract.

Mr. KEMP. He kept the books.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend should be fair. Mr. Charleson was alone and had no bookkeeper. Mr. Rochester is a first-class bookkeeper, as my hon. friend knows, because he heard Mr. Rochester give his evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. Mr. Charleson had no other man to keep his books, and Mr. Rochester agreed to keep them free of charge while carrying out his contract. He kept the books at night. I do not say that that was right or regular. But I say there has been no stealing, so far as I can see. I think that Mr. Charleson should not have employed him. I would not have done so, because I would have anticipated criticism, and of course fair criticism, but the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. COCHRANE. Could not Mr. Rochester have bought the poles for the government instead of Mr. Charleson ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not prepared to agree to that. My hon. friend and myself are pretty able men, but if we would venture to start a trade in poles, I think we would lose a good deal of money and a good deal of prestige—both of which we require.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Rochester was bookkeeper for the government and resigned his position to become a contractor. That is to say, he did not draw any pay as bookkeeper after he had contracted to furnish the poles for $2 apiece. Would it not have been just as easy and much better for the country if Mr. Rochester had bought the poles for the government at $2 apiece instead of Mr. Charleson.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If he had bought the poles for the government, I would not be obliged to give the explanations I am now giving. But I cannot help it. The poles were bought and paid for and I cannot do any thing more. I told Charleson that he could have spared me all that trouble if he had acted differently.

Mr. KEMP. How much increase in salary did Mr. Rochester get after the contract was completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He did not get any increase until the next spring when he had full charge of the work, which was more difficult in that wild place than it was between Bennett and Dawson. That increase of salary was not kept very long for I reduced it as soon as I learned of it.

Mr. KEMP. The minister has told us that he reprimanded Mr. Charleson for this transaction. Did he reprimand him by letter or verbally ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When Mr. Charleson came back, I told him that he had not done what I would have done. He said he had not done anything wrong and had done for the best, but I told him that it would give me a great deal of trouble to defend him as I am now doing.

Mr. CLARKE. Do you save $1 a pole on the price ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From what I could learn, I really believe the price was a fair one.

Mr. BOYD. You have not learned what class of wood was in those poles and the size.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It could only have been the kind of wood that grows in that country—a kind of spruce, I understand.

Mr. BOYD. You will have to replace the poles inside of three years.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure my hon. friend would not advise me to import the wood.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the diameter of the bulk and the height.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot tell you that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was only curious to know how it was the minister came to the conclusion that the price was a fair one, since he does not know the kind of pole or its size or its height.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the very best information. The gentleman who was in charge of construction is a Mr. Richardson, who is an employee of the Canadian Pacific Railway on their telegraph line. He has built nearly all their lines, and it was because he was an experienced man that I instructed him to supervise the structure of our work. He came back and, of course, I asked him for all possible information and he told me the price was fair. He was before the Public Accounts Committee last session, and I think he made that statement.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would be desirable to know whether he was aware of the size of the poles at the butt, their height and material. If he did not know anything more about it than the hon. minister seems to know, his opinion would not be of much value. In what particular section was it that Mr. Rochester supplied the poles ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It may be true that my opinion on these matters is not of much value, but Mr. Richardson was on the spot and received the poles, and he has been a telegraph constructor all his life. The section for which Mr. Rochester supplied the poles was between Bennett and Dawson City.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister has spoken of the difficulty of getting in supplies, explaining that in one section it cost $30,000 to take in the men and their supplies to the ground and back. Would the same difficulty exist on this portion of the line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, not so much.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where would the supplies come from ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The supplies would come from Vancouver.

Mr. EARLE. From whom were the supplies bought and how were they purchased ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say at the moment how it is done this year, but last year and the year before they were bought by tender.

Mr. EARLE. My information is entirely different—that there was no tender asked for a dollar's worth of supplies that went to the Yukon, either for the Public Works or for any other department, and that, moreover, this business was peddled out, as was done some years ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I remember distinctly that the last time we discussed this matter in the House, it was shown very clearly that tenders were asked for groceries and provisions.

Mr. EARLE. Where ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In British Columbia.

Mr. EARLE. I am positive that that information is incorrect.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am corrected by my deputy minister, who tells me that circulars were issued and that we got eighteen tenders and that out of these eighteen tenders Kelly, Douglas & Company were the lowest.

Mr. EARLE. My information is that the very opposite of that, even that firms contemporary with Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Company, in Vancouver, including many Liberals, who declare that supplies were bought regardless of tenders, and that they were given no opportunity to get the business. I am as positive as I am standing here that that is correct.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The information from my officials is what I have given—that tenders were called for and Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Company were the lowest, and that since then, provisions have been bought at this lowest tender price. It happened that I was away when these circulars were sent out, although, of course, I am responsible for all that has been done. But I am sure that my officer would not make a mistake upon this point, and that tenders were asked for and that they were asked for exactly as my hon. friend (Mr. Earle) would do. In his large business he would not advertise for tenders, except in the way we did. I do not say that it is right or that it is wrong; I am only giving the facts.

Mr. CLARKE. Were there eighteen tenders from eighteen different firms ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have some recollection of the discussion, and I think the information furnished was that a number of circulars were sent out. I believe I was consulted, when they were sent out, as the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was away, and the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), who was acting Minister of Public Works, was also absent at the time. I think these circulars were sent to parties in Victoria, Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal, and some cities in the east. I am sure that my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Earle) will find that that statement, as regards the original purchase of groceries, is entirely correct.

Mr. EARLE. It may be, and I hope it is. But my information is different. Not only from my own knowledge of the business there, but from the statements of parties in the trade in Vancouver, some of them life-long Liberals, who complain very bitterly about it. It is a well known fact that everything is carried to Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It was not so in the original purchase; as to later purchases, I do not pretend to be informed. In the original purchase circulars were sent out, as I have stated.

Mr. EARLE. But I am speaking of the purchase of supplies for the telegraph line for this year 1902.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that Mr. Charleson has bought his supplies at the same prices that were quoted by Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Company when the former tenders were given.

Mr. REID (Grenville). When were the original tenders asked for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In 1899, I suppose—I was away.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Three years ago?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two years ago.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Prices have changed since the tenders were asked for.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Prices of provisions have not lowered.

Mr. REID (Grenville). They certainly have lowered in some cases.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What prices have lowered—sugar? Or bacon?

Mr. REID (Grenville). Flour and many other articles. Is it not customary to ask for tenders each year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have the figures now under my hand, and I save my neck once more. Here are the people from whom we bought provisions last year: Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Company, $5,908; the Hudson's Bay Company, $7,655; Messrs. J. Y. Galbraith, Telegraph Creek, $4,265; Messrs. Cunningham & Son, $4,220; and other small purchases—these are for provisions. Hardware seems to have been bought right and left.

Mr. EARLE. These are dealers in the interior, except Messrs. Kelly, Douglas & Company.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Kelly, Douglas & Company have only a limited amount.

Mr. EARLE. The accounts are not all in yet up to the 30th June.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have here the figures up to the completion up to 31st January, 1902.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is it the intention to continue buying supplies for the current year on the same contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. gentleman will ask for new tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will say to the House that I intend to change the system under which we have bought in the past. I am going to try to get quotations, as has been suggested to me by some hon. gentlemen in the House, and ask people to sell on those quotations. I shall be very glad to welcome suggestions from hon. gentlemen on either side of the House as to the best way of purchasing.

Mr. KEMP. Do I understand from the minister that in future tenders will be asked from people who are in business regardless of politics? I do not mean advertised tenders necessarily, because sometimes the purchases are so small it would not pay to advertise. But in cases where a fair amount of purchases are to be made, will the minister authorize requisitions to be sent to firms in the different localities, regardless of politics, and let them quote their prices, and will he accept the lowest tenderer?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is going too far. Extremes are always to be avoided. Moderate men like my hon. friend are always to be preferred. I am a moderate man on this question. My position is this: I must first serve the party to which I belong.

Mr. KEMP. No, no. Country first.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Other things being equal. That is my duty.

Mr. KEMP. Country first.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am speaking of patronage. There are a great many good men in both parties, and I find there are enough good men in the Liberal party to supply the government in many lines at the lowest prices. I may, however, mention to my hon. friend that on many occasions in the past I have asked for tenders and quotations from men who differ with me in politics. I am prepared to appeal for the truth of my statement, to the lists of my purchases from Montreal and Toronto, especially from Montreal, where I have asked for quotations, for instance, for hardware, for boilers, and things like that. My instructions to our officers are: When you find enough competition in the Liberal party, our duty is to stand by the party; but when you cannot, then go outside the party. I have done so repeatedly, and I will do it again. We are asking for tenders for nearly all the works, and the lowest tenderer invariably gets the contract, in my department, at any rate. But let me add that I will change to a large extent the mode of purchasing. I am willing to meet the trade, and I will improve on my predecessors, on myself even. I have just instructed my officers very lately to purchase direct from the manufacturer. That is a good policy to follow.

Mr. KEMP. I am afraid the minister has qualified his first statement to such an extent that the country will get no benefit. Now there are many friends of the government who support the government in election times, who are in business in a wholesale way, but they don't happen to come to Ottawa and go about the departmental buildings here, bothering the ministers to secure contracts. But if a requisition was sent to them they would be very glad to quote prices. Then there is another class of people who come to Ottawa and lobby and work among the different departments, and the minister must know they come. They are a class of people who are not able to sell at the lowest prices, but who, through their influence in many ways, are able to get orders. The other class to which I have referred are doing business in a wholesale way, and although they may be supporters of the government, I know as a matter of fact that some of them never get an opportunity of quoting. It is frequently the men who are not in as good a position to quote low prices that get the business, because of their persistence in visiting the offices and presenting their claims upon the government, telling what they have done for them in this election or that election, or what they will do, or some other nonsensical thing. I would strongly urge upon the minister to qualify his last statement, and to send out requisitions broadcast to business firms regardless of their politics.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am willing to make an appointment with my hon. friend for next session, and if I do not convince him that I have bought at the lowest possible prices of the market, I want him to tell me.

Mr. REID (Grenville. The minister is not quite so good as the Postmaster General, who, when he advertises for tenders for the mail service, gives the contract to the lowest tenderer irrespective of politics.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do the same thing in every public contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But the minister won't give the Conservatives a chance to tender. If he would let those who are opposed to the government have an opportunity to tender, and if then he finds that supporters of the government tender on the same terms, then it is all right that he should give his own friends the contract. Why should not Conservatives have an opportunity to supply the goods if they are willing to do so at a lower price than men who support the government?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman must know that we are all in politics, all of us. We are playing the game the best we can. When I ask for public tenders for public buildings, for a wharf, a breakwater, or any other important work, I always accept the lowest tenderer. I challenge any man from either side of the House to point to a single case in my department where I have not awarded the contract to the lowest tenderer, whether he is a Conservative or a Liberal. For doing this some of my friends on this side of the House have called me an old Tory. Now, I am accused of being bad because I do not give everything to my hon. friends opposite. Why, they have been eighteen years in office, and it is time that the poor Liberals who were so long in the cold shades of opposition should now have a little show. But my hon. friends opposite when they cross the floor of the House, will do just as I have been doing, and if they do not do worse, it will be a blessing of Providence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the average cost of the poles for the whole line?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not bought any poles except on that section, because our men made most of the poles themselves.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There must be some idea of what they cost, because the reason advanced by the hon. minister was that Rochester could get them for $2 each, and that the cost had been $3 each at some particular time. If you know they cost $3 each, you must know what they cost on each section. You have the same information in regard to each section.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There was an arrangement for a small part of the line with the Victoria Grading Company. We were to pay them $3 per pole, but that arrangement was cancelled and Mr. Rochester got the contract at $2 per pole. Later on, instead of going on with that subcontract, the men made the poles as they went along with the work. But my hon. friend must not lose sight of the fact that all of the sections were not alike. A mile of telegraph line in the gap we filled last year cost more than a mile elsewhere. It is quite impossible to give the price of each pole, because, suppose we had fifty or one hundred, or two hundred men carrying on this work it is impossible to be able to say that a pole here or elsewhere, would cost so much. These men were paid by the day and they were doing their work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was it only on the line between Dawson and Bennett that poles were obtained by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many were purchased at $2 and how many at $3 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We got 330 from the Victoria Grading Company at $3, and it was proved before the Public Accounts Committee that the number of poles supplied for the balance of the line between Dawson and Bennett was 6,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Were not tenders called for in respect to those that were supplied by the Victoria Grading Company?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where did Mr. Rochester get those which he supplied?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has no information whatever as to where Mr. Rochester got those poles?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. None, except that Mr. Rochester, in the Public Accounts Committee, said that he made a sub-contract with Mr. Johnston. He admitted that. Beyond that I cannot say where the poles came from. I do not know.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At what price were they to be delivered by the sub-contractor to Mr. Rochester?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know. I have no right to know, either.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who was the sub-contractor ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Johnston, I understand.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where does he live?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know. I have never met him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did Charleson call for tenders before he awarded this contract to Rochester?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And the hon. gentleman thinks that is a proper course?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Asking for tenders under the circumstances might have been difficult, but all the same, I say again—I have nothing to hide—Mr. Charleson might have avoided giving that contract to Mr. Rochester. It is not necessary to repeat it. I admit, although I believe that the price, if I have been rightly informed by those who have been on the spot, and by Mr. Richardson, who is a very competent man, was reasonable.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was Richardson doing there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He was supervising the construction of the line.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For whom ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For the government.

Mr. BELL. Under the control of Charleson ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, Charleson was at that time a kind of general officer, not only for the completion of the telegraph line, but for works elsewhere and Richardson was in charge of the construction of the telegraph line.

Mr. BELL. That would mean that he was foreman of construction for a portion of the line under Charleson.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BELL. And took orders from Charleson ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Charleson was a superior officer. Richardson would be in the position of my chief engineer here in relation to myself.

Mr. BELL. Do you make them do what you want ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I have never tried to make them do wrong.

Mr. BELL. I would not suggest that the hon. minister would try to make them do wrong.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister says we have no right to know the price at which Johnston supplied poles to Rochester. Why have we not a right to know that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For a very simple reason. My hon. friend is a lawyer and he has factums to be printed; suppose that he comes to 'La Patrie' office when he has a Montreal case, and we would be glad to see him there, he will give us a contract for the printing of the factum. Suppose that my sons gave to another printing office the work of printing the factum, that they sub-let the contract, he would have no right to know how much they paid for getting the work done. It happens every day in the Department of Public Works that we give a contract for a public building, for a bridge, or some other public work and the contractor gives a sub-contract. What right have I to ask this contractor how much he has paid for his material ? I have no right to do that. The contract is given and the contractor buys his stone, his iron or his timber and we have no right to know how much he pays for it. In this case the principle is absolutely the same.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long after Rochester left the service of the government was it before this arrangement was made with him ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He left the service of the department—he did not leave the service, but he did so for two or three months when he got that contract. He carried out his contract and then resumed his position as foreman.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is something like Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Comparisons are odious.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) suggests that it was odorous. As a matter of fact this contract was made while he was in the employ of the government, under salary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, he left the employ of the department, even the ablest lawyer cannot mix me up on occasions like this. He cannot do it. That man took the contract and carried it out at $2 per pole. While he was carrying out that contract he did not get a dollar from the Department of Public Works. That is the whole case.

Mr. EARLE. Did Rochester, the contractor, inspect the poles furnished by him on behalf of the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I said repeatedly and it has been proven in the Public Accounts Committee that Rochester had nothing to do with the inspection of the poles. Richardson inspected them. The thing was done in the ordinary way of business, and although I say it again, it should not have been done, because we would not have had all this discussion and it would have been regular if it had been done in some other way.

Mr. EARLE. Are these people still in your employ ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, Richardson is not in the service of the government.

Mr. EARLE. Richardson or Rochester ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Rochester is just completing our accounts.

Mr. EARLE. And Charleson ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Richardson and Charleson are just completing the accounts of this line.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On what date did Mr. Rochester leave the government service.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It was established before the Public Accounts Committee, but I cannot remember now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course this is not the Public Accounts Committee and when the minister is putting through his estimates I should like to know the facts. There was some negotiation for the supply of these poles, and while that negotiation was going on between Mr. Rochester and Mr. Charleson was not Mr. Rochester in the employ of the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose he was.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Well, that is perfectly frank. Then the position is, that Mr. Charleson who was superintending the building of this line for the government entered into a negotiation with an officer in the employ of the government for the supply of these poles at $2 a piece, and eventually he awarded a contract for some 6,000 poles to Mr. Rochester without asking for tenders from any other person. The minister does not know officially or otherwise at what price these poles were supplied to Mr. Rochester by the sub-contractor.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that Mr. Rochester had not much to do with getting these poles out and matters of that kind. What was Mr. Rochester doing while this contract was being carried out by the sub-contractor.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Rochester was the contractor and he gave a sub-contract and I suppose he was looking after the delivery of the poles on his own account.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did not the sub-contractor cover everything that he was obliged to do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but we had nothing at all to do with that man. Mr. Rochester was our contractor and I suppose he had to see that the goods were delivered. They were not moved after they were delivered to Mr. Rochester by the sub-contractor.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, but Mr. Rochester was our contractor and he was obliged to see that he delivered the goods. I was not watching over it myself.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps it would be better if the minister had been watching over it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, he did not steal any poles.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I really do not understand yet what Mr. Rochester was doing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Rochester had to look after the construction of the whole line and the poles are only a part of that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At what particular date of the negotiation did Mr. Rochester leave the employment of the government so as to cease drawing a salary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Deputy Minister tells me that he thinks Mr. Rochester left the service in the beginning of May and the contract was made then.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Made on the day on which he left the service.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When did he resume.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In October.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That was the date when the poles had been delivered.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did he resume in the same position and at the same salary and for the performance of the same duties.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am informed that he resumed service at the same salary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As a matter of fact it amounts to this, does it not—if I am wrong the minister will correct me :—That Mr. Rochester remained there from the 1st of May until October, and instead of drawing a salary he took his profit off these poles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is about the substance of it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is the substance of it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For the matter of appearance he did not draw his salary during the time he was making a profit because of course he could not receive both—that is right I suppose.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He did not draw his salary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But he had charge of the books in the mean time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As there was no other bookkeeper on the spot and as he opened the books he agreed to work at night on the books without charging a dollar to us. What my hon. friend says is perfectly true. From May to October instead of being employed as an employee of the department he acted as a contractor.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When were the first poles delivered under the sub-contract by Mr. Johnston.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Upon my word I don't know.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the minister will find out from his officer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will be only too glad to get the information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How long did Mr. Rochester remain in the employ of the government in that same position after the sub-contract was performed.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He is still in our employ. He remained as foreman of works until the whole work was completed, and I may say in passing that Mr. Rochester has proved to be a very able man and in spite of what is being said here to-day—

Mr. EARLE. You had a thoroughly practical man independent of him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let me finish the sentence. In spite of what has been said here to-day I think Mr. Rochester is such an able man that he can be employed for some other work. He is an energetic man and a sober man. Of course when I learned that a sub-contract had been given I took special care to go through his accounts and the whole work, and I make bold to say, unless I make a very great mistake indeed, he is a thoroughly honourable man and able too.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not made any criticism so far either on his ability or upon his honour. What was his salary, and what were his duties, and what were his living expenses before this contract was entered into ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. His salary was $200 a month, and I understand that they had no living allowance, but lived together in a mess under canvas which they thought was the best way. He was foreman of works.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifox). What did that involve.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It involved construction under Mr. Richardson.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did he continue to mess in the camp with the rest while the contract was going on ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Perhaps the minister would be able to find it out from his officer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will get the information. I would not be surprised if he continued in the mess as he was keeping accounts for us without charge.

Mr. REID (Grenville). According to the Auditor General's Report, J. Y., Rochester received from February 1st to October 31st, $15 per day, and yet the minister says he only received $200 per month.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, but he had full charge when Mr. Richardson left. Mr. Richardson constructed only that part of the line between Dawson and Bennett, and Mr. Rochester had full charge of the work in the more difficult part of the country and received more pay. I may say that when I found that I reduced his salary myself later on.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That was in 1900?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). From October last it was reduced to $200 a month ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is he getting now in the city of Ottawa ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $200 a month, but no allowance. He will not be employed for more than a week or so now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has Mr. Charleson given any explanation why he did not ask tenders from any one but his own officials ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, he has not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the minister asked for any explanation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I asked Mr. Charleson why he gave the contract to Mr. Rochester, and he said it was the best bargain he could have made. Suppose we had asked for tenders. The line was built in the summer, and there was great pressure to get the work finished. It would have taken 3 or 4 weeks to get tenders, and the result might have been that the line would not have been completed that year. Would my hon. friend advise such a course ? In those days papers were scarce in the Yukon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There would not seem to have been great difficulty in asking for tenders from all the employees in the government, if it was a proper thing to do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All the employees were not capable of making poles. A bushman is better qualified for that work than others.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That only shows how absurd and wrong the whole thing was.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must protest against that statement of my hon. friend. No minister could possibly control the expenditure or the work on this telegraph line, owing to the want of means of communication. To-day such a thing could not happen. If I had been informed then that Mr. Charleson had given a contract to one of his employees, I would have told him it was wrong, as I did tell him when he came here. But that does not show that any wrong was done, though it was a wrong proceeding.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, and I have not the slightest doubt, on the minister's statement to-day, that the government could recover every dollar of profit Mr. Rochester made on the contract. I believe that Mr. Charleson had no authority from the government to give a contract to one of his employees, and I have not the slightest doubt that this government has the right to every dollar of profit he made, although I know that two ministers of the Crown have prevented that information being brought before the public in the Public Accounts Committee. Unless Mr. Charleson possessed extraordinary powers, beyond those which any man in his position should possess, he could not have made this pretended contract with one of his employees, without any outside competition at all, and then have the man go through the form of leaving the public service when as a matter of fact he remained in it, as the minister admitted to-day; but, instead of receiving a salary during that time, he was doing very much better by making a large profit out of this contract created in this very indefensible way.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. How does my hon. friend know that Mr. Rochester made a large profit ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Shall I tell the hon. gentleman ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. With pleasure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Because the hon. gentleman and his colleagues refused to allow that question to be asked in the Public Accounts Committee and suggested to the witness that he need not answer it, which leads me to suppose that they did not want the facts to come out; because I understood that the objection came, not from Mr. Rochester himself, but from two of the ministers.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If that is the only ground on which the hon. gentleman bases his statement, it is baseless. In the Public Accounts Committee there are rules, and it is the duty of the ministers of the Crown to see that they are followed. I have been here a good many years, both as a newspaper man and as a member of parliament, and never have I known a question to be asked as to the prices paid to sub-contractors. My hon. friend has no right to say that ministers of the Crown have prevented rightful information being given. We have followed the ordinary rules of evidence. Nor has my hon. friend any right to state that Mr. Rochester has made large profits. But if he has, does that prove that Mr. Charleson made a bad bargain? Not by any means. A man may make a large profit on a government contract, and the government may make a good bargain at the same time. The proceeding was not right; I am not going to say that it was. I would not defend it. I told Mr. Charleson in a very firm manner what I say now. It should not have taken place, but all the same there is no evidence that the bargain was a bad one. At the same time, let my hon. friend admit that he has no ground for stating that we have prevented rightful evidence being given in the committee, because we have followed the ordinary rules of evidence.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the objection to this evidence?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The objection to it was the objection of the witness himself.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). After it was first suggested to him.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; he was not there, while I was. Mr. Rochester made the objection first, and the chairman ruled. At the next meeting of the committee, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) tried, in an insidious way, in his able way, to induce the witness to go back on the ruling of the chairman, and then we said, 'Mr. Rochester, you are not obliged to answer.' But Mr. Rochester had first declined to answer, on the ground, which was well taken, that it was his own private affair. Before a court of justice my hon. friend would take the same ground; he cannot deny it; and he would be sustained by any court in the land.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If I had anything to do with it, I would probably have a judicial inquiry and ascertain the rights of the parties in a court below. In that case Mr. Rochester would probably find that he would have to answer this question without very much discussion before the judge who tried the case. The minister may be right as to who first took the objection. I was informed the opposite; but I do not know, as I was not there. It does not make the slightest difference, however, whether the facts as to what took place on the first occasion are as the hon. gentleman says or not. There is no doubt at all, according to the minister's own statement, that upon the question being put, he, himself, and another minister of the Crown suggested to Mr. Rochester that he was not obliged to answer. It was perfectly proper for Mr. Rochester to answer, as far as he is concerned, if he chose, and I do not see why a minister of the Crown should suggest to him that he should refuse to answer. I do not see any special reason why ministers of the Crown, in a matter of this kind, should act as the advocates of an officer of the Crown, who had taken a contract from the government under these very extraordinary circumstances.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When a witness is examined before a committee, I see no objection to any member of the committee saying to the witness that he was not obliged to answer a question put to him. A witness who is a layman, and who is being examined by a lawyer, may be under the impression that he is compelled to answer every question, but I see no harm in any member of the committee putting him right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What particular harm would there have been in his answering the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was for him to say.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It was a perfectly fair transaction according to the Minister of Public Works, although he admits that it is one which should not have been entered into. But if it was a perfectly fair contract between the government and Mr. Rochester, what special detriment could there have been to Mr. Rochester's interests in answering the question?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no objection to Mr. Rochester answering any question relating to his contract with the government, but the point was whether he was obliged to answer a question as to what his own sub-contract with another party was, which was quite a different matter.

Mr. BOYD. I wish to refer again to the salary of the operators. The hon. minister has told us that those employees are now receiving $80 per month, and that it is his intention to reduce their pay. Considering the cost of this work and the reasons given for the enormous expenditure, I think that instead of lowering the wages of those operators, their pay should be increased. I do not hesitate to say that telegraph operators working in that country should receive a higher salary than $80 per month. Only a night or two ago, a judge in the Yukon district was given $5,000 as a living allowance on account of the expense of living there, and considering this large sum allowed one man for living expenses, it seems to me that an operator ought to be paid $150 a month and his board. The hon. minister admits the charwomen get $5 a day, and the Auditor General's report shows that an ordinary labourer there gets $4 a day, and that Mr. Rochester got $15 a day, and yet we have skilled men, men doing, not ordinary labour, but expert labour, getting only $80 per month, and we are told that they are to get less in the future. I do not think that that pay is sufficient, considering the country they are working in. It takes longer to learn to be an expert operator than to be a judge, and the $5,000 living allowance given to one judge would give each of these seventy operators $70 per month extra, and I say that they should receive it. There was evidently no scarcity of money for the purpose of construction. The construction has cost one-third more than it should, and I am perfectly satisfied, after watching the Minister of Public Works, that he is not satisfied with himself, for he has had to get another member of the cabinet to defend his expenditure. And notwithstanding the enormous cost of construction and all that, the minister is not able to tell us what kind of poles have been used and their size. Had the poles to be brought a long distance, there might be some excuse, but they were cut along the line. Every one employed in the work of construction evidently was paid whatever wages he saw fit to ask, but we are to pay skilled expert labour only $80 a month, and that pay is to be reduced. Then the hon. member for Victoria asked what were the averaged earnings and we were told $7,000 per month. Is that the gross earnings and does it include the telegraphing of the government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend is of the opinion that the telegraph operators are not paid sufficiently at $80 a month, but he must not forget that those men are lodged and provisioned.

Mr. BOYD. I know all that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We must also not forget that we have no trouble getting telegraph operators at that rate.

Mr. BOYD. Nor would you have any trouble getting judges at $5,000 a year either.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be very much surprised if, when we can get operators at $80 a month, I would be complimented by hon. gentlemen opposite for deciding, out of the kindness of my heart, to give them $150 a month. I am perfectly sure that I would be censured for doing that. We did not compel these men to go there. They went of their own sweet will and are glad to remain at the wages I have mentioned besides lodging and provision. As regards the size of the poles, the diameter of the butts is between nine and ten inches, the diameter of the top is five inches, and the length 22 feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are the operators paid $80 per month and their board and all expenses.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. When did Mr. Richardson, who had charge of the construction of the line, enter the employ of the government, and when did he leave ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He entered in March, 1899, at the very beginning of the work between Dawson and Bennett, and left in October, 1899.

Mr. CLARKE. Was he in the employ of the government when these poles were purchased from Mr. Rochester.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and accepted delivery of them all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is it a fact that the minister is paying labourers $4 a day and their board.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot really say, but the hon. gentleman must remember that while the operators are employed by the year, the labourers may be only employed for a month or two.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the operator is a married man, does he get provisions for his family ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we only give a certain quantity of provisions to each man.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What was the cost of operation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The cost of operation this year would be large. When the supplementary estimates for this year come down I will apply for the necessary amount to meet this expenditure, and then, if my hon. friend desires I will give him all the information.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will be all right. The hon. minister mentioned the item of revenue—$20,000 a month, as I understood.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, $8,890, or something like that, for the month of March.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does that include messages sent by the departments of government ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Apart from that, what is the revenue ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no statement to show that, but if my hon. friend wants it, I will get it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That also can be given on the supplementary estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can hardly promise that, as the figures will be a little difficult to get.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the hon. minister has not the data here, and will have to send for them ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The question having been asked, I will take care, next year to have detailed statements of the revenue. And, as we are discussing that point, I would like very much to know the feeling of the House as to the rates. Am I expected to make a paying business out of these lines ? I think I can do so, if I maintain the rates as they are now. I do not wish to be judged, so far as the working of the line is concerned, by last year, because that was the first year, and every one connected with such matters knows that the first year, is, so to speak, only a construction year. But in future I think I could make a paying business by charging the present rates. This is not a party question, and I would like to know the views of the House upon it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can the hon. minister tell us even roughly, what part of the revenue is from government, and what part of it from private business ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of the revenue, of last month, I am quite sure, departmental business cuts a very small figure indeed.

Mr. COCHRANE. What are we to understand by the statement of the minister that he could make this a paying business ? Does he mean to pay something over expenses, or to pay expenses and interest on the capital expenditure as well ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I make it pay interest on the capital with a balance to the good, I think that will be all right.

Mr. COCHRANE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE. There is an opportunity for a great object lesson here. There were great difficulties to be overcome—there is no doubt about it—in the construction of that line, as there are in maintaining it in an efficient condition. The obstacles are so great that, as I understand it, the minister intends to have a cable laid to overcome the difficulty of snow on a part of the line. It seems to me that he ought to charge only such rates as are necessary to yield a revenue that will pay working expenses and interest on the indebtedness. If the government can do that and can give us a low rate—low considering the conditions—it will be, as I say, a great object lesson, and will be an argument in favour of the government taking over all the telegraphs of the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be glad if the House would give its attention to the telegraph system in British Columbia and the Yukon. We have constructed 2,135 miles of telegraph in the Yukon, and also have a certain number of miles in British Columbia. From Nanaimo to the coast, we have a telegraph line that will connect that part of our system with the prospective Australian cable. The time may not be distant when our telegraph system in the Yukon may be connected with advantage with that cable. I think we should make ourselves as much at home as possible on land and sea. Regarding the matter from that standpoint, I take the liberty of calling the attention of the House to the maps of our country, asking hon. members to study them. These are not party questions, and I think a more careful study of the map would help us to solve many difficulties to the advantage of the country.

Mr. BOYD. Speaking with some experience in this business, I would suggest that the government is much more likely to make money by lowering the rates than by keeping them at high figures. They have their staff, which they must keep in working order, and they must keep the batteries and supply the electricity. The outfit is there, and the men are there, and might as well be employed. I understand that a message costs about $5.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is $4.50 between Dawson city and Ashcroft.

Mr. BOYD. At that rate, if a man can wait for a letter he is not going to telegraph. But, by lowering the rates, you will induce him to send two, or even three, messages where he would send only one. The expenses are about the same, whether we send ten messages or ten thousand. The men on the staff would just as soon be employed. If you keep operators employed steadily as some of the men here are kept during the whole working day, passing messages through their hands at the rate of one a minute, a comparatively low rate will make money for the line. But, with high rates, the men will sit with their heels on window sills. From practical experience, I would say : Lower the rates. Moreover, whenever the government is prepared to take over the whole telegraph system of the country, they will have my support; for I believe we could have our telegraphing done a great deal cheaper than we have now. I have said before, and I say again, we ought to have our telegraphing done for a cent a word anywhere within reasonable distances in Canada.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have made the press rates on the Yukon line one cent a word. The rate was three cents a word, but I changed that, for, at these rates, the newspaper men could not use our line. Since then, we have made pretty good business. The trouble is, if I lower the rates and the result is not favourable, it will be difficult to raise them again. I am sure there is a good deal in the suggestion that has been made. When the session is over, I intend to give my best consideration to the rates on our telegraph lines in general. And when the supplementary estimates come up for discussion, I hope we shall discuss the subject at greater length. There are good opportunities now to make ourselves independent in these matters. Our telegraph system has been completed to Belle Isle, and now it is finished to Murray Bay. It would take very little to complete it and carry it up to the city of Montreal; and instead of relying on New York for our coronation news, we may make Montreal a distributing centre for the news. From the British standpoint and from the Canadian standpoint it would be better.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I fully endorse the sentiment expressed by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd). I think the rates we are paying for telegraphing in this country are rather too high, much higher than in cases where lines are owned by the government. I hope to see the day when the whole telegraph system of the Dominion of Canada will be under the control of the government. I am glad to find that that sentiment is increasing rapidly on both sides of the House. Look at our condition to-day. We are laying a telegraph cable between our own country and Australia and New Zealand, and the moment you land in British Columbia you are at the mercy of a telegraph company. Then when you come to the Atlantic you are at the mercy of another telegraph company. All the lines from Australia to Great Britain and to the continent should be owned by the government. I hope when our friends go over to London to discuss all these large questions among the representatives of the different colonies, this question will come under their consideration.

Mr. BOYD. I would like on another occasion if the minister would give us the average number of words that have been sent daily since the line was opened, or the average number of messages.

Mr. EARLE. I would suggest to the minister that he should take action during this busy season of the year, and if he is going to make any change in prices, it should be made early.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will discuss the question to-night. But I must warn the hon. gentlemen that if I find I am losing too much, I will raise the rates again.

Mr. EARLE. I am satisfied he will make more money by lowering the rates to a figure where the line can be generally used.

Mr. CLARKE. The minister can readily ascertain from experts what the capacity of the line is. There are certain fixed charges that must be borne.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The line is all right. From what I can learn, we can do a much larger business. It is a question whether we are receiving all the business that is to be had at the rates we are now charging. I have often discussed the matter with my officers, and they do not share the views that I have expressed here. I have been advised by them that it would not be wise to decrease the rates. But having reduced the expenditure I think we may fairly try to reduce the rates a little.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand the minister is going to make a comprehensive statement on some other item of his policy respecting telegraph lines, and telephones as well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not much to do with telephones. I am not the minister of telephones, and I do not know who is. I cannot find the minister of telephones, so far.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We will limit it to telegraphs, then.

Telegraphs — Port Simpson — Hazelton telegraph line, $25,100.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is practically the same. We require more to complete from Port Simpson, because, instead of the line being 130 miles long, as we expected, we find it is 200 miles long.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why did the hon. gentleman not have this $107,000 for the Quesnel-Atlin telegraph line in the main estimates last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had not sufficient information, the country had never been explored.

New Brunswick—St. John immigrant building, including interest to contractor on overdue amounts, $12,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you want this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To carry out the work on the immigration building at St. John. The total cost of the work is estimated to be $33,596.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is there interest on overdue accounts ? Were the contractors not paid ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had not enough money to pay the contractor, and we are obliged to pay interest on what we are owing him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why did you not have enough money ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because we did not ask for enough. The contractor went faster than I thought he was going. We are paying 5 per cent interest.

Mr. WILMOT. Was there any competition for tenders for this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there were public tenders and the lowest was accepted.

Quebec—Peribonka—immigrant building, $1,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in the Lake St. John district. A large number of immigrants are settling there, coming from Holland, Belgium, Finland and all parts of the continent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what part of the province is it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the Lake St. John district. I would invite the hon. gentleman to visit that place. We will give you the freedom of the country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman take me in as an immigrant ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the hon. gentleman went there I think he would settle.

Mr. KEMP. I thought the object was to bring Canadians back from the United States and induce them to settle in that district ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. There are some Canadians from the United States and the North-west Territories, but this is purely immigration from abroad. This season on one train, there were 700 people who came from the continent. Large numbers of settlers are going in and they are of a good class. I am informed by the Colonization Company of Quebec that these people have enough money to buy property and settle in a comfortable way.

Mr. KEMP. Were the agents of this government or the local government instrumental in getting people to go to that district ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is in the city of Quebec a colonization company which is a kind of independent company working with the corporation of the Lake St. John Railway Company. Mr. Dupont went last year to the continent of Europe, and I understand he has been very successful indeed. The local government have helped and this government have helped the railway company by giving them $8,000 a year during the last five or six years.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This is to complete the building.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Roberval, immigration building, $2,650.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The very same object.

Mr. CLARKE. Does that complete the building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

St. Jerome public building—improvements, repairs, &c., $1,775.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are small repairs to the public building which is in existence at St. Jerome in the county of Terrebonne behind Montreal.

Quebec Military buildings—rolling mill for cartridge factory, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the work that is under contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Rolling mill or cartridge factory ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) knows, the Department of Militia and Defence manufacture arms in Quebec, and I am the builder for the department.

Drummondville public buildings, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To complete.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much is the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $15,800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). By contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, by contract and by public tender.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why did you not have it in last year's estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We were short. We give contracts for public buildings and when we come to pay for them we find we are short.

Ottawa—Majors Hill park, plant house, &c., $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman kindly explain this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. During last session of parliament the House gave me a sum of money—$8,000—if I remember rightly—less than that, for greenhouses in Major's Hill park. When we were about to arrange for the work Sir Sanford Fleming made us a gift of a very valuable collection of plants. Then I thought that while we were at work it would be just as well to have a green house of larger dimensions than the one we contemplated at first, I took it upon myself, I may say, to change the plans that had been entertained and to build a more expensive green house. I think Major's Hill park is an ornament to the House and it is a portion of the government grounds. Although we have not decided altogether on the site, we contemplate the idea of erecting our museum on the Major's Hill park ground. A few thousand dollars more or less under circumstances of than kind. I think, do not amount to much. I am asking the indulgence of the House for the change which I have taken upon myself to make. I think that these park grounds should be made as nice as we can make them without spending too much money. I am sorry to say that under the system of contract which has been in existence for some years the grounds have been allowed to run down too much. I have changed the system. I have given charge of the grounds here and of Major's Hill park to Mr. Davis who is a very capable man. For these reasons I am asking the House for this amount of money.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is this a new building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is not yet painted, but I think it is all right.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $14,000 to complete ; including the heating and fittings. Part of the work has been done by contract by the W. C. Edwards Company.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the use of it particularly ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, it is to winter our plants. We must have plant houses and greenhouses to winter the plants that we use on the ground here and at the same time it beautifies the city and the government property.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman erected this building before he came to parliament and asked for a grant with which to build it. I passed there the other day and I found it completed. I inquired what it was and they said it was a new building that the government had erected.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I had a grant last year.

Mr. TAYLOR. To erect this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, to erect this building, but when I changed the plans I found that I required more.

Dominion public buildings—improvements, repairs, &c., $2,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the reason for this increase ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is not an increase. My hon friend must not lose sight of the fact that the number of our public buildings is increasing. Many of them are run down and they are in very bad shape. We want this money for small repairs.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These are all over Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Brockville drill hall, $2,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To pay the balance of the contract.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How much was the total contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract was for $42,000, the work having been awarded to the lowest tenderer.

Toronto Post Office—building for branch office in west end of city, site, &c., $15,000.

Mr. CLARKE. What will the new building cost in the west end ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will cost, we expect, about $35,000.

Mr. CLARKE. $35,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. How much of it will be for the site ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $6,000 for the site.

Mr. CLARKE. From whom was the site purchased ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From the Land Security Company.

Mr. KEMP. Is it the intention of the government to improve the old post office ? There is nothing in the estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, but if my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) allows me, when the supplementary estimates come down he will find, I hope, that we will have some money to improve the old building. Our intention at first was to enlarge the old building, but the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) has made up his mind to have a new system. He thinks that sub-stations will give a better service. When the mail is delivered at the main post office in Toronto it takes a good deal of time to deliver newspapers and letters, but in future they will be delivered direct to the sub-stations and the distribution will be quicker.

Mr. KEMP. We had quite a discussion on this point the other evening. Hon. members speaking on behalf of Winnipeg, Montreal, Charlottetown and Toronto, questioned the Postmaster General in regard to these matters. It appears that Montreal is also in a bad position regarding post office facilities as well as Toronto. This question of sub-post offices is an important matter for the Minister of Public Works to consider. It is departing altogether from the principle that has been adopted in all large cities on this continent and in other places. It would be a great credit to the city of Toronto and to the country, if we had one first-class post office building in that city, and I suppose the same would apply to Montreal. For my part I do not think the policy of sub-offices is a wise one. If these branch post offices have to be erected at a considerable expense, that principle will involve the doing away with the central building to some extent. If the present post office in Toronto is not suitable, then a first class building should be erected. The responsibility does not rest altogether on the shoulders of the Postmaster General because the Minister of Public Works has charge of the public buildings, and he ought to have something to say on the matter. If the present post office in Toronto is not in the centre of the business part of the city, then the government could dispose of that property to advantage and erect a first class building in the centre of the city. This principle of doing away with a central building is a radical change, and I would like to hear the views of the Minister of Public Works in respect to it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On questions of policy of this kind the Minister of Public Works is only responsible as one member of the government. When my hon. friend (Mr. Kemp) is Postmaster General, some time in the future, he will make recommendations to his colleagues and they will accept them or not. In the present case it is evident that the Government in Council have agreed to erect sub-stations, and I become a builder pure and simple, carrying out the instructions of my colleagues. The government have decided on the recommendation of the Postmaster General to adopt the sub-station policy, and I am charged with the duty of erecting buildings not only for the Postmaster General but for all my colleagues. As to the wisdom of such a policy, I think my hon. friend, on reflection, will agree that there is a good deal in it. Toronto and Montreal are becoming large centres of population and the people want rapid distribution of the mails. In Montreal a letter which reaches the post office in the morning is often not delivered at my house until 11 o'clock. The Postmaster General thinks that by subdividing the work he will get better service all around.

Mr. KEMP. In what other place in the world is this system in existence ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have enough of my own work to defend without having to defend the Postmaster General. On this occasion I am prepared to defend the erection of this building.

Mr. CLARKE. This matter was brought to the attention of the House a few days ago when the Postmaster General was present. The difficulty in Toronto is that the main post office is now in the wrong part of the city. Toronto has made substantial progress westward, has annexed some municipalities in that direction, and the great bulk of the population is now far west of the general post office. We believe that what is the more pressing necessity is the construction of a main post office building further west and north of the present site, which is not even on the line of the tram cars.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The post office in New York is very far from the centre of population, and sub-stations are in existence there.

Mr. CLARKE. In view of the opinion expressed by the Postmaster General, I speak with a good deal of diffidence, but I think it will be found that his idea will not facilitate distribution. The erection of a main post office building within easy access of the Union railway station and on the line of the tram cars is what we want to give us a more rapid service.

Alexandria Reformatory—balance of arbitration, $174.02.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is it that we have so many of these small votes to complete contracts which are supposed to be let by tender?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The policy of the department has been to vote only the money that we expect to spend during the year, and then afterwards we ask for the balance. Suppose I am erecting a building in Halifax which will cost say $200,000, I ask for only $20,000 or $30,000 which I will expect to expend during the current year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But these contracts usually provide that the work shall be completed within a fixed time, and it seems to me it would not be a very difficult matter to provide for an adequate vote each year without bringing in all these supplementary estimates and dividing it up so that one cannot get an adequate idea as to what the whole work will cost.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is very difficult to make an accurate estimate.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The trouble is that in all these contracts the cost is far in excess of the original estimate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What was the original tender for the Brockville drill hall ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend must not lose sight of the fact that in addition to the contract there are the fittings, the heating, and so forth.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What was the original estimate, and what is the amount of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My officers tell me that their estimate was $55,000 for the whole work, heating and all, and it will be completed for that amount. The estimate for the building was $42,200. The amount of the contract is $42,000, and there are no extras.

Mr. CLARKE. Is this Alexandria reformatory built ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. CLARKE. What did it cost to get rid of the obligation ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember; a small amount of money.

Mr. CLARKE. Then, it is not the intention of the government to have a reformatory for boys ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not there.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, it takes $13,000 to fit up the interior of the drill hall in Brockville ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Heating, fitting, sidewalks, footpath, and things of that kind.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Lethbridge immigration building, $2,600.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This work is under contract. The total cost will be $5,600. This will complete it.

Kamloops public building, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This work is under contract. This vote is to complete it. The total cost is $20,000.

New Westminster public building—reconstruction, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The original building was burned down. This work is under contract, and this vote will complete it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has there been no public building in New Westminster since the time of the fire there some years ago ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have rented one.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the total cost of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $72,000.

Vancouver drill hall, $7,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the total cost of the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $100,000. I understand that the cost of the site was given free of cost by the provincial government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose all these buildings were constructed by public tender ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes

Public buildings generally, $2,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is there a general item of this kind in the supplementary estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have so many public buildings, it is out of the question to see in advance what small repairs are required. The caretaker writes to the chief architect that such and such repairs are required, and we have to provide for them.

Salaries of resident clerks of works, assistants, $2,800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I can see no reason why this should not have been in the main estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We were short on this appropriation because we have more work than we ever had, and it is necessary to have more officers.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many more officers have you employed since this time last year on these buildings ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is pretty hard to have all these details at a moments notice. Some day when my hon. friends are in my place and I am in theirs, they will appreciate the difficulty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are these resident clerks of works men who are temporarily employed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, they are officers who have charge of certain districts. In Quebec we have Mr. Belland; in St. Annes, we have Mr. Waterbury; in Halifax, we have Mr. Doddburn; in the North-west Territories, we have Mr. Paradis ; and in British Columbia, Mr. Henderson.

Mr. EARLE. That does not cover Mr. Henderson's salary ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, travelling expenses, and so on.

Toronto Post Office locomobiles—maintenance of, $5,000.

Mr. CLARKE. We want a very elaborate statement from the minister about these locomobiles. I have seen them in all stages of decrepitude on the streets of Toronto. One-third of their time was spent in the blacksmith shop, and the unfortunate postmen who were obliged to use them had to spend part of their time in the hospital. They have proved a dismal failure. The hon. minister is not responsible for the purchase of these machines, because the purchase was recommended by the Postmaster General, but we ought to know what they cost in the first place, then how much it has cost to maintain them, and how much time has been lost by the employees who attempted to utilize them. I hope the hon. minister, in view of his expensive experience, will abandon these machines or pass them over to the Post Office Department.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is a locomobile ?

Mr. CLARKE. It is a machine which is one-third of the time on the road, one-third in the ditch, and one-third in the repair shop.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. While I was representing to the best of my ability, my country in a foreign land, my progressive and economical colleague, the Postmaster General, unloaded those locomobiles on my department. I have to carry the load and to give the best information my limited ability will permit. Those locomobiles do not seem to have given the satisfaction which the Postmaster General expected from them, and I am not going to ask anything for their maintenance in my estimates for next year, but this year I have to foot the bill. The Postmaster General tried the experiment and we have to pay for it. I do not know anything more about the matter except that as the service did not turn out very satisfactory, we are going to put an end to the employment of these machines in Toronto.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many did you buy ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My department has nine.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman would get them repaired, he might take them over to England and challenge the Australians to a race between London and Brighton.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think that His Majesty can be crowned without those.

Mr. KEMP. Before the locomobiles came into use, the mails were gathered by officials using horses and wagons. After these machines go out of use, will the hon. minister have charge of the carriages and horses ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope not. I have had enough of the locomobiles. They were unloaded on me while I was away, and the Postmaster General will have to answer for any expense he may incur in the future.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much did they cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They cost $1,000 each. It was an experiment. It is true, it has not succeeded very well.

Mr. KEMP. Why does the Minister of Public Works allow the Postmaster General to experiment in this way at his expense ? The policy in regard to the post office building in Toronto is the policy of the Postmaster General, but the Minister of Public Works does not approve of it. Here is another policy which the Postmaster General has forced on the Minister of Public Works Why does he sanction it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, in his absence, the Minister of Public Works appoints, as master of the administration for the time being, the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General wants to be economical and at the same time to make improvements. So he unloads his experiments upon me.

Mr. KEMP. Then the Minister of Public Works has to father these schemes ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let the hon. gentlemen wait until the Postmaster General is in his seat, and then he will answer them all.

Rideau Hall, including grounds — Improvements, renewals and maintenance, $7,500.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What was the total spent on Rideau Hall ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have spent a large sum of money on Rideau Hall, but largely to fit it for the reception of their Royal Highnesses on their recent visit. I venture to say that the Vice Regal buildings are in better condition today than they have ever been in the past.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Are the expenses of this service any more than they were under the Conservative regime ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There were years when the Conservatives spent less. During the last year or two of the Conservative regime, when Mr. Foster was Minister of Finance, they did not spend so much on Rideau Hall. But then their party was killed—killed outright.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I do not wish to complain about the expenditure on Rideau Hall. But, when hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the House, one of their number used to relive in finding fault with this expenditure. I merely wished to know if the expenditure had grown less.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. A couple of years ago I gave a statement of the expenditures on Rideau Hall.

Under Lord Dufferin the expenditure was never less than $30,000 a year. Under other Governors General we have spent a little less. The expenditure, I think, is wisely made.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I am not finding fault with it; but, as fault has been found with the expenditure under the Conservatives, I wished to know the facts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). One thing I would like to know is this—If everything about Rideau Hall is in such fine condition, why does the hon. gentleman want this $7,500 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To pay for putting it in such fine condition.

Lighting Dominion public buildings, $18,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The appropriation has been the same for a good many years, but, for the last two or three years we have had a deficit of $3,000 or $4,000 a year. We have more public buildings, as hon. gentlemen know, and we must, of course, spend more money. These accounts are paid just as they are sent to us. This question of lighting is supervised by the department. It is a work that cannot be curtailed.

Ottawa public buildings—heating, including salaries of engineers, firemen, elevator attendants and caretaker, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just explained how this item arises, we are obliged to ask for more because we have more public buildings.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought the hon. minister had an item this afternoon that covered this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said this afternoon that it would be necessary for me to ask for $24,000 because we spent $15,000 additional for the purchase of coal alone.

Ottawa public buildings—gas and electric light including light for roads and bridges, $7,300.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As my hon. friends know, we have installed a new electric lighting system. We have more public buildings to provide for under this item and the expense is greater.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How is the lighting done, by tender ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have a contract. This covers the cost of gas also, which is used in some of the departments, including the Inland Revenue and the Museum. The main reason for this increase is the installation of an electric light system for the Senate, the same as we have for this chamber.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is the light paid for by meter ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. It is a flat rate—two dollars per light per year.

Public Works—chargeable to income—public buildings—Yukon Territory—rents, heating, inclusive of fuel, lighting, water service, scavenging, janitors, watchmen, repairs, &c., $48,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have already explained this item on the main estimate. It is the last year I am to ask the House to give my department any appropriation for this purpose. As I have said, these items will be transferred to the Yukon government with the exception of the federal buildings, that is the post office, the administration building and the residence of the Governor.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Who supervises the expenditure of this money ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Up to a few weeks ago, our resident architect was Mr. Fuller, and he had full charge of that expenditure, under Mr. Ross, commissioner of the Yukon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What rents do you pay in addition to the four buildings mentioned this afternoon ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The rents include the following. Gold Commissioner's residence; residence for Judge Dugas; residence for Judge Craig; mining inspector's office; Silver Creek; mining inspector's office, Gold Run; mining inspector's office, Stewart River; mining inspector's office, Dominion Creek; mining inspector's office, Hunker.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is the total amount of rents ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total is $4,267.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These judges have an allowance of $5,000 in addition to their salary. Do we also provide them with house rent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. So far, we have paid their rent.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much do we allow for rent in addition to the $5,000 expenses ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Judge Dugas, $150 a month; Judge Craig, the same.

Mr. REID (Grenville). As I understood it, then each judge gets his salary, $5,000 living expenses and $1,800 for rent. That is, he gets $6,800 as a living allowance.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, the Department of Justice has control of this whole matter, and I only obey orders. When the Governor General in Council decides that a judge must be lodged and housed, they simply notify me, and I have to make provision.

Mr. REID (Grenville). In addition to that, there is the heating. Does the government pay for the heating of Judge Dugas' house ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the main estimates were discussed, I gave a complete statement, covering a page of foolscap, giving all these details.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The minister must know whether the judges get their heating.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I gave the information a month ago, but I do not remember it now. I am informed that they get fuel, I do not know the amount per annum. It depends upon the price of firewood.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then there is the lighting.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They get that also.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And water service ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose so, yes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And men to attend to their houses ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Then, according to that, a judge in the Yukon gets a salary of $5,000, $5,000 living expenses, $1,800 a year for rent, and his heating, fuel and water service ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and the judges are complaining very bitterly, indeed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). He gets about $14,000 or $15,000 a year. The Minister of Justice should explain that, let us understand it thoroughly.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). Under the law, he is entitled to $5,000 a year for his salary at the present time and $3,000 a year for living allowance. I am telling what the law is. I have nothing to say further than that.

Mr. WILSON. I think the Minister of Justice stated the other night that that is to be changed.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am telling you now what the law is, and I will tell you by-and-by what the law will be.

Mr. WILSON. If you will explain it now it will save the trouble of explaining it hereafter.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I am telling you what the law is. Next year, by virtue of a statute passed here, the judges will have $5,000 a year salary and $5,000 a year living expenses.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That comes right back to the point I stated. It was stated in this House that a judge in the Yukon would have $5,000 a year living expenses.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is what he will have next year after the 1st of July. What he is getting now is $3,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are just now dealing with the supplementary estimates for the coming year, when we will have to pay $5,000 a year for living allowances.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This coming year is the $5,000 to include the rental ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If the Minister of Justice tells me to pay rents I shall do so. But he has just said that for the next year the judges will have $5,000 a year for living allowance.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I think it is only fair that we should know whether the $5,000 includes rental. The Minister of Justice should state whether, out of that $5,000, the judge is to pay his own rental, lighting, fuel and living expenses.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Some days ago we had all this up in the House, we discussed the whole subject here, and when the question arose as to the additional allowance to be given to the judges next year, and I was asked how it was intended this amount should be spent, I then went over the list I had, showing how much would go for rent, how much for lighting, how much for fuel, and I gave all the details to the House to justify the increase.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not remember that this particular fact was mentioned by the Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I read from a list provided by the commissioner of the Yukon, showing the amounts to be expended, so as to justify the increase from $3,000 to $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The rental was mentioned, was it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, $150 a month. I mentioned the wood and the lighting.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What we are anxious to get at now is whether the $5,000 he is to be paid covers every one of these items the Minister of Justice has mentioned.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That certainly was the intention at the time the item was put in the estimates, that $5,000 would cover everything, and we would have no more of these outside claims. That is the intention now.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I did not understand it as the Minister of Justice has explained it now, and I think I was quite justified in getting it fairly understood.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of course you were.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Who hires those people ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) It is the department which hired them.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) By whom are they paid ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) So far, we have paid them ourselves.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Under whose control are they ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) They are under the control of the resident architect, Mr. Fuller, who is here now. As I have said before, all public buildings used for what may be called provincial purposes, will be handed over to the Yukon government in the future, and only the Dominion buildings will remain under our control, such as the government house, if it may be so called, and the post office. As to all the other provincial buildings, they will be transferred to the Yukon government, because they are used for local purposes.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Has the Department of Public Works notified Mrs. Louise Collinet that her usefulness was gone ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) We have nothing to do with that staff.

That is quite another story. We pay the sheriff and the caretakers, but those officials are not under our control. Mrs. Collinet is the matron of the court-house. There are a certain number of employees who are under the control of the Department of Justice, with whom I have nothing to do. I have no doubt but that Mrs. Collinet belongs to that class of employees, and I may say that I know nothing about her.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) The following is a copy of the correspondence relating to that woman :

Dawson, April 4, 1902.

Madame Louise Collinet :

Madame,—From this day forth, your services are no longer required at the Court House.

By order,

(Signed) C. A. DUGAS.

I hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of a letter in the hand-writing of Judge Dugas, and signed by him personally, and that I know the signature of said Mr. Justice Dugas.

(Sgd.) GEORGE BLACK,

A Notary Public in and for the Yukon Territory.

Here is Mr. Fuller's letter :

Department of Public Works, Canada.
Office of Resident Architect.
Dawson, Y.T., July 1, 1901.

Louise Collinet, Matron,
Court House,
Dawson, Y.T.

Madam,—Rations having been withdrawn from you, it has been decided to allow you therefore $30 per month, which you will receive in addition to your wages of $80 per month. You will continue therefore to be at the service of Mr. Justice Dugas, and act under his guidance for any work which you shall be required to do as matron of the court house.

You will arrange with the judge for your meals, which, under any circumstances, must not be taken within the court house.

No fire is to be made therein for the purpose of cooking, &c., nor are strangers to be received there by you unless specially authorized.

(Sgd.) T. W. FULLER,
Resident Architect,
Department of Public Works.

Now, I am going to read the letter written by Mrs. Louise Collinet to the Department of Justice :

Dawson, Y.T., April 7, 1902.

Deputy Minister of Justice :—

On August 15, 1899, I began work as matron of the court house in Dawson, and maid-servant for Mr. Justice Dugas, at $80 per month and rations. These rations I drew, and they were taken by Mr. Justice Dugas.

On the 1st of July, 1901, I received the letter, a notarial copy of which is inclosed, and after that my rations were withdrawn, and said $30 per month I was forced to pay to Mr. Justice Dugas. Up to that time I was from time to time ordered by him to take instructions from no one regarding the court house, save himself, and in good faith I refused to perform the orders of other court officials.

After the new court house was finished, I learned that I was required to be at the court house from 6 a.m. to 8 a.m., and from 9 p.m., to 11 p.m., and at all other times I was required to be in attendance as cook and maid-servant at the judge's residence. The judge's family consisted of the judge himself, his wife and son Aimé, Mr. J. A. Longpré and Mr. Pierre Leduc. The combined duties were too severe, and having expressed a wish not to work more than twelve hours per day, I, on the 4th day of April 1902, received the letter from Judge Dugas, a notarial copy of which is inclosed, and was discharged.

I ask to be reinstated and my duties defined, and that the judge be admonished not to slander me without cause as he has done since I left. I am quite willing that my services and private character hould be investigated, but think it unfair that I should be robbed of my good name, by the falsehoods of a Supreme Court judge.

Yours respectfully,

(Sgd.) LOUISE COLLINET.

That letter was sent to the Department of Justice, under date of April 7, 1902.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) To whom was it written ?

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) To the Deputy Minister of Justice. When Mrs. Louise Collinet was engaged by the department a man named Willie St. Denis was also hired at the same time. Both have been discharged on the same grounds, and on the 1st April, 1902, Willie St. Denis wrote to the Deputy Minister of Justice, as follows :

Dawson, Y.T., April 1, 1902.

To the Deputy Minister of Justice,
Ottawa, Canada.

Sir,—On September 6, 1899, I began service as caretaker of the court house, and man-servant for Mr. Justice Dugas. On the 21st day of March, 1902, I was discharged from my dual position without cause. I ask to be reinstated in my position or some reason given for my discharge. I wish my appointment made from Ottawa and my duties defined, as for the period of my service my chief duties were as man-servant in the judge's private residence, and out of the $160 per month allowed me for my services, I was forced to repay $40 per month to said Mr. Justice Dugas. Said Mr. Justice Dugas discharged me because I refused to act as chamberman in his house, wait on his tables, prepare wood, draw water and do general cleaning work in his residence in addition to my duties as caretaker of said court house. I wish to know whether such were a part of my duties and whether said judge had a right to force me to repay his said $40 per month.

Yours respectfully,
(Sgd.) WILLIE ST. DENNIS.

On the 12th April he wrote again, as follows :

Dawson, Y.T., April 12, 1902.

To the Deputy Minister of Public Works,
Ottawa, Canada.

Sir,—On April 1, 1902, I addressed a letter to the Deputy Minister of Justice, which letter ere this must have reached his destination. In that I complain of my wrongful discharge from the position of caretaker of the court house here, and persecution by Mr. Justice Dugas.

I after being discharged, obtain the position as night watchman in the post office, and gave first-class satisfaction in that position, as has been testified to by the postmaster, Mr. Hartman, and Mr. Bertrand of the Department of Public Works here.

I was on the 11th day of April, 1902, discharged from this latter position, without cause, and was to-day informed by Mr. Bertrand that he has been forced to discharge me by Judge Dugas who dislikes me, and insisted that a nephew of J. E. Girouard, Jean Marier, who arrived in Dawson Monday last, be appointed in my stead.

I ask to be reinstated in one or the other of my positions, and believe I had a right to the first, from which I was driven by the persecution of Mr. Justice Dugas.

Yours respectfully,
WILLIE ST. DENNIS.

Now, I should like to know from the hon. Minister of Public Works, whether these two persons, employed as caretakers of the court-house at Dawson City, are under the immediate control of the Minister of Public Works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Heretofore the caretakers have been under our charge, but in the future they will not be under our charge. I cannot, of course, say anything as to the people to whom my hon. friend (Mr. Léonard) has just alluded. I do not know anything about their case. The letters are all of recent date, and I have not read them. This is the first I have heard of them. I cannot believe that a judge could be repaid by people of that class. Of course, I do not know anything about it. It is all new to me. I will inquire into the case. I will write to Mr. Bertrand and ask for an explanation in regard to these people. But, until I hear more I cannot have any faith in charges of that kind. People who are dismissed are generally not in a very good humour. In fact, I do not know anything about the case. The hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) is within reach of the voice of my hon. friend (Mr. Léonard), and surely, if a judge would be guilty of such a thing it would be very extraordinary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. minister should at least know whether or not such an order was issued as purports to have been issued, dated 1st July, 1901, from the resident architect of his department to this woman Louise Collinet :

Dawson, Y. T., July 1, 1901.

Louise Collinet, Matron,
Court House,
Dawson, Y.T.

Madam,—Rations having been withdrawn from you, it has been decided to allow you therefor $30 per month, which you will receive in addition to your wages of $80 per month. You will continue therefore to be at the service of Mr. Justice Dugas and act under his guidance for any work which you will be required to do as matron of the court house.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Who writes such an order ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). T. W. Fuller, resident architect of the Department of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Fuller is here now.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Quite so. The letter continues as follows :

You will arrange with the judge for your meals, which, under any circumstances, must not be taken within the court house. No fire is to be made therein for the purpose of cooking, &c., nor are strangers to be received there by you, unless specially authorized.

(Sgd.) T. W. FULLER,
Resident Architect,
Department of Public Works.

It would be desirable, so far as the Department of Public Works is concerned, to know why the matron of the court house should be at the service of Mr. Justice Dugas and to act under his guidance for any work which she should be required to do as matron of the court house. It should be a matter for the hon. Minister of Justice to investigate why the matron of the court house should be at the service of Mr. Justice Dugas and under his guidance in any work which she shall be required to do.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot understand it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is something that the hon. minister will have to understand and the committee will have to understand. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Justice as to whether or not such a letter has been received in his department as that which has been read by my hon. friend (Mr. Léonard) ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Such a letter was received at the Department of Justice and immediately forwarded to the Department of Public Works, as we had absolutely no control over this lady who calls herself the matron of the court house not having anything to do with her appointment.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The secretary of my department, who is on the floor now, says that he received these documents to-day. I did not know anything about them until they were read on the floor of the House now. I will inquire of Mr. Fuller to-morrow and ascertain what he has done in the matter. I cannot understand it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). These statements are of a very extraordinary nature.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They are very extraordinary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And I think the item should stand until the hon. gentleman is able to explain them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no reason why the item should stand. I have promised to bring down the information to-morrow. Let us go on with the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We can take up some other item if necessary, but we must have an explanation of the matter.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I shall bring the information to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This woman alleges—I do not know with what truth—that while she was ostensibly acting as matron of the court house she was really a servant in the private residence of Mr. Justice Dugas. Further than that she states, what I can hardly believe to be true and what I would certainly very greatly regret to believe to be true, that of her allowance of $110 a month she was forced to repay a portion.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot understand that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Letters which have been received in the Department of Public Works certainly call for some inquiry. I should think not only would they require an inquiry by the Department of Public Works but also by the Department of Justice, although the hon. Minister of Justice has sent the whole of the correspondence to the hon. Minister of Public Works. It would seem to me a very improper thing that any such transaction should have taken place, and I am not disposed to believe for the present that it did take place, but there is the statement of this man Willie St. Denis that he has repaid a portion of his allowance to an official occupying a judicial position. So far as that is concerned it ought to have some inquiry, not only from the Department of Public Works, but the Department of Justice as well.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I willl wire immediately to Mr. Justice Dugas and the employee he is accused by of having received a commission, because it amounts to that. I will wire the contents of the letter and in the morning I will call Mr. Fuller in and lay the matter before him.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Would the judge be violating his position if he collected tolls from an employee of that kind ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no use asking that. It is a clear case if it is true, but I cannot believe it. It has no sense.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of course I know nothing about this. I was always under the impression, and still am under the impression, that when a judge gets $5,000 a year of salary and in addition to that $3,000 a year for living allowance, he ought to apply that living allowance to the reasonable charges of his household, and payment for all these things which men require for living should be paid out of the $3,000. With respect to this woman who made the complaint I understand the facts to be that she went up there as a matron, and as an employee of the government originally she would have been entitled to rations, but that living with the judge the rations went in the common fund. She was boarded by the judge and the rations used by the judge for the purpose of her maintenance as well. I understand there is nothing beyond that. If that is what really took place it is not a serious matter, but when you go beyond that and extend it to say that instead of rations she received $40 a month for her living allowance and that this $40 a month was paid over to the judge—well, if she lived with the judge and it was a matter of bargain between them, that they would put their allowance into a common fund there was nothing very wrong about that either. But if the judge received the money and did not supply this woman with her board, of course that is a matter that ought be investigated, and so far as I am concerned, he is going to hear about it if it is a fact.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Fuller will have to tell us to-morrow what are the facts of the case, and if I have the information before the orders of the day are called to-morrow I will give it with pleasure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not think it was a desirable thing this matron drawing rations should live with the judge, and that the judge should draw the rations instead of her. I would not consider that a desirable position for a gentleman occupying a seat on the Supreme Court of the Yukon, even if it did not go beyond that. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Justice would regard it as a very desirable condition of affairs either.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. They must be living under very abnormal conditions in that country.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend the Minister of Justice puts it very mildly to say the least when he says that. As the hon. gentleman very truly remarks, there is something beyond that in the statement, not only of this woman, but the man as well, who says he was performing the duties of manservant for Mr. Justice Dugas, and that he was making an allowance to that gentleman out of the amount which he received. I will not ask that the item should stand on this account, because I appreciate the reasons which influence the Minister of Public Works, but it must be distinctly understood that at some future occasion we shall have an opportunity of obtaining information and discussing it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If I have the information I will bring it down to-morrow morning.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Would the hon. minister also inquire on what grounds Judge Dugas discharged from his service a person hired by the month, without giving that person a day's notice ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) I know nothing about that case. I cannot understand it.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) At all events, as a member of this House, I lay before the House the fact that those employees made an allowance to Judge Dugas, out of the amount which they received, to be retained in his service. The Minister of Justice told us that those sums were paid over to the judge by those employees because they were boarded by the judge. But I should like to know since when a manservant or a maid-servant have to pay their master, to be retained in his service ? On the contrary, it is the master who pays the servants.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that in future the judge has to provide his own residence and is to receive an allowance of $5,000 for living expenses. In the report of the Auditor General I find that we have spent $4,128.67 for fitting up a residence for Mr. Justice Dugas. What arrangement is to be made about that residence in the future ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Department of Public Works has been guided in this matter by the Department of Justice. When we are asked to supply a judge's residence with light or anything of that kind we do it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Does this building belong to the Department of Public Works?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have rented it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). You pay for fitting it up and pay rent as well ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, it often happens, even in the city of Ottawa, that we have to repair buildings that we pay rent on. We will pay no more rentals in the Yukon after the 1st of July.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Judge Dugas received $5,000 as salary last year and $4,128 was paid for his rent and for fitting up his house. Judge Dugas has his house this year complete, so that actually he is getting an increase of $2,300 on his salary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have paid the amount as the hon. gentleman says, but there will not be such an expenditure after this year.

Mr. TAYLOR. Who contracted the debts ? Who authorized the payments ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not in a position to give more information, I am sorry to say.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The hon. Minister of Justice could explain that item. Two nights ago he stated that Judge Dugas was to receive last year $5,000 salary and $3,000 for living expenses, whereas $4,128 in addition was spent on these various items for living expenses.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Last year, so far as my information goes, and so far as the law goes, Judge Dugas was entitled to receive for his salary $5,000 and for his living allowance $3,000, and for next year he is entitled to receive $5,000 for his salary and $5,000 for living allowance. Of any expenses beyond that I know nothing whatever.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And for next year I shall not pay one dollar.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). So far as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is concerned, he has assumed charge of his department only recently. We are not attacking the Minister of Justice. We are making our charge upon the government. It is a mere accident, so far as we are concerned, that one minister goes out and another comes in.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Department of Justice is not responsible for this. It is not money expended by us at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thoroughly appreciate that; but it is money expended in connection with the administration of justice in this country, over which the department of my hon. friend presides. Last year this gentleman got $5,000 of salary and $3,000 of living allowance, and this sum of $4,128.67 was expended for him in addition, of which I think $900 was for rental. If you deduct $900 from $4,128.67, you have $3,228.67 expended on this rented house.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, no. We have spent $990 for fuel, $776 for lighting, and $1,800 for rent. In past days the policy of the Department of Justice was that we should pay these items in the Yukon, and I paid them. Outside of these, the expenditure is very small.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is the $3,000 living allowance for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not for me to say. We have simply been instructed to pay for the rent, the fuel and the lighting, and we have done so. It will not happen again. There is not much pleasure in the poor Minister of Public Works being sacrificed because he carries out the orders of the other departments.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am as sorry as I can be for the Minister of Public Works, and I think some of the other ministers should take a turn when any of these items prove too much for him. Let me run over some of these expenditures again. We have the Dawson Electric & Power Company, for installing 16 lights, 2 four-light fixtures, 1 two-light fixture, 2 brackets combined, into one, and 1 stand lamp $152.75 ; lighting, from October to April : 13 lamps, 192 nights, and 4 lamps, 173 nights, $776 ; F. A. Delage, repairs, $535.70; D. A. Matheson, 45 cords of firewood, $990 ; McLennan, McFeely & Company, sundry repairs $340.15; P. G. Overton, painting, $41.20; Cortland, Starnes, rent $900; Yukon Saw Mill Company, lumber, $339.87; amounting in all to $4,128.67. What I want to know is under what rental agreement is this house held from Mr. Starnes ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No man could carry all these details. I understand that we have paid $150 a month for the house since the judge occupied it.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Minister of Justice stated a few minutes ago that the amount allowed to the judge for living expenses was to include these items. If that is true, did the Justice Department in addition give an order that they were to be paid over and above that amount ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say more than I have said. The amounts have been paid, and I do not see a way of getting them back.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see a way of getting them back. If Judge Dugas was paid $3,000 for living allowance, and it was intended to include all these items, he should refund the money. I do not think that is unreasonable.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have only paid what I was instructed to pay and nothing more. If the Department of Justice wishes to inquire into this matter, it can do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Justice Dugas has been paid $3,000 for living expenses. Besides these the Department of Public Works has paid $990 for his heating, $928.75 for his lighting and installing his lights, and $1,309.92 for repairing his house, in addition to $1,800 for his rent. If his living expenses mean anything, surely they must include his heating and lighting. The Minister of Public Works tells us that he has paid these moneys by the instructions of some person. What department or person ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just said that the Minister of Justice instructed me to pay the rent for the judge's residence and fuel and light. We did that in the past. Things were in great confusion for a year or two—not much order anywhere. There were no funds available elsewhere, and we paid those sums, rightfully or wrongfully I do not know, but I suppose rightly as usual.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is not treating parliament or the country fairly to lead us to suppose that $3,000 is the entire contribution of the country to the living expenses of Mr. Justice Dugas or any other judge, and I am coming to some of the other judges. Why were these items of heat and lighting paid besides the $3,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no other explanation than the one I have given. It was the policy of the past, and Judge Dugas has complained over and over again that he could not live on his salary, in spite of all we have been paying him. I quite grant that it seems extraordinary that we should have to pay for the lighting and so on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does the item in the Auditor General's Report on page V—49, for court house and judge's quarters, Dawson, $430, mean ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That means the court house and the judge's room there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under the heading of Judge Dugas' residence, I do not observe any rental. How is his rental provided ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are paying $150 a month for his rental also.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where does that appear in the Auditor General's Report ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have got it down in my notes that we are paying that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have only such information as is found in the Auditor General's Report. On page V—49, I find under the heading of 'Judge Craig's residence, Dawson,' that we paid the Alaska Commercial Company for a stove $25; the Dawson Electric Light & Power Company $49.50 for installing lights, and $494 for lighting; and that we paid D. A. Matheson for firewood, $759, and the North-west Mounted Police for firewood $86.63. We paid also to the Yukon Saw Mill Company for 4 book cases $70. Did Mr. Justice Craig have the residence and did the country pay for it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The position is as I have described it. We have simply paid in the past for the judge's residence and lighting and fuel. I am not in a position to explain every item in the Auditor General's Report. The Public Accounts Committee would be the better place to have those explanations.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the hon. minister give us the items composing $48,000 he is asking in this vote ? If some of these go into next year, we will have to strike off the amount in next year's estimates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These are obligations that we have to pay to the 1st of July this year, and that will be all.

Mr. TAYLOR. If Judge Dugas and Judge Craig went out there on a salary of $5,000 and $3,000 living allowance, who is it that has violated the law by paying them more? It must be either the Department of Public Works or the Department of Justice. These items were paid at Dawson and the vouchers sent here, and the Auditor General passed the voucher. The accounts did not pass through the Auditor General's hands before payment at all.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman will not ask me to repudiate our obligations. We have rented those houses and must pay for them till the 1st of July.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then you can deduct what you have overpaid from the judges salaries to the 1st of July. Each judge is entitled to $5,000 salary and $3,000 living expenses and to nothing more, and if the country has paid anything more, he ought to be made to refund it. Each went out there under a stipulated bargain of $5,000 a year salary, and $3,000 a year expenses. And he could live there for $1,000 a year if he wanted to. This $3,000 living expenses was to cover house rent, fuel, light, &c. Why does the Minister of Public Works come to the rescue of this judge and say : We will pay you $4,000 more in the form of house rent, lighting, cord wood and so on ? Somebody has authorized it or it would not have been paid. Either the Minister of Justice's department is responsible, or else the Minister of Public Works' department has done it of its own accord. But it is contrary to law, and surely the hon. minister does not want to force through the House a vote that is contrary to law. We do not want to repudiate a just debt. But here is debt that we did not fairly incur. If it is paid, it should be taken from the judge's salary.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Here is a case in which the Minister of Justice should exercise the power of his office. The hon. minister states on the floor of this House that Judge Dugas was appointed with an allowance of $3,000 for living expenses. The Minister of Public Works asks us how it comes that the Auditor General would pass this item of house rent if it was not right. It was because the $3,000 living expenses was put in that way so that the Auditor General could not question it. The Minister of Public Works states that this was in addition to living allowance expenses. But the Minister of Justice tells us that this $3,000 living allowance was to include the rent. That being so, the Minister of Justice should see to it that Judge Dugas is brought to some settlement, or he is not fit to occupy the position of Minister of Justice.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Minister of Justice can only say that, so far as any expenditures in the past are concerned he will be glad to inquire into them, and when he has informed himself will be ready to come back here and talk about the matter. I can only tell what the judges were entitled to receive. And I will be responsible, for the future, to see that this $5,000 is given as a living allowance, and that the judges shall not get rent, fuel, light, and so on in addition. I will undertake that.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But is it not the hon. minister's duty to see that the wrong of the past is righted ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is my duty to ascertain the facts, and, having ascertained the facts, to consider what I will do. But my hon. friend surely will not ask me to take as facts all the statements made here to-night. They are made, of course, in good faith, and to the best of belief of those who make them.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But I am taking the hon. minister's statement that Judge Dugas was appointed with a living allowance of $3,000, which was to include these items.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have not withdrawn any statement which I made.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If the minister has made the statement that this living allowance was intended to include these items, and if, as a matter of fact, these items have been paid over and above the living allowance, is it not his duty as Minister of Justice to see that this money is refunded? And will he not do that, so that, next session, when he comes before the House, he will be able to tell us that the money has been refunded?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Next session I shall be glad to answer any questions that shall be put to me. But I am not going to say now what I will do next session.

Mr. REID (Grenville). But will not the hon. gentleman say now what he will do about an expenditure that was made wrongfully—I do not say wilfully so, but perhaps through some clerical mistake?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There has been no clerical mistake. I have been told by the late Minister of Justice that I was bound to pay for rental, fuel and light. Right or wrong, that is the way I was instructed.

Mr. REID (Grenville). That is a fair statement on the part of the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), and exonerates him from responsibility. But it makes clearer the duty of the Minister of Justice to see that this wrong is righted. I ask the Minister of Justice if he will see to it that this is made right.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The appeal to do what is right is heard, and will be dealt with accordingly.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Minister of Justice must recollect that this does not in the slightest degree depend on statements made by my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Léonard). We are depending upon the public records in the report of the Auditor General. If the living allowance of $3,000 excludes these items of rent and so on, the Minister of Justice can come next year and say that the increase of $5,000 also excludes them. Or if my hon. friend should not happen to be Minister of Justice when these items are discussed next year, the hon. gentleman who occupies the position at that time might do the same as, apparently, the late Minister of Justice—if we are to accept literally the statement of the Minister of Public Works—has done. I do think, with all respect, that it will be necessary for the Minister of Justice to investigate this matter. I do not understand him to say that he will not investigate. On the contrary, I understand that he will. And it requires a thorough investigation. Because, of course, apart from anything the Minister of Justice may say, we know that a living allowance should include rental and a number of other items that have been charged. These things are not to be dealt with according to the opinion of the Minister of Justice for the time being as to what is right or what is wrong, but according to the law and to the vote of parliament. The vote of parliament was for a living allowance, and outside of that, these gentlemen have no more right to have their houses furnished than any judge in Ontario or Nova Scotia. Would the hon. Minister of Justice say that, outside of this living allowance, a judge in the Yukon had a right to have his house furnished, to have electric light provided or to have carpenter work done at the public expense any more than a judge in any other part of the Dominion of Canada? I cannot understand on what principle he would be entitled to it. And I do not think the Minister of Justice can suggest any.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have not tried to suggest any.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I quite understand that.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. My hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) will understand the position I take. By statute the judge is entitled to receive a salary of $5,000. In addition, $3,000 yearly is placed in the estimates as a living allowance. I understood that this $3,000 was paid to these gentlemen for the purpose of placing them relatively in the same position as if they were living in one of the older provinces, an allowance being necessary on account of the increased cost of living in the Yukon. Now, I cannot deal with understandings and policies with respect to expenditures; I can only deal with facts, with the statutes and the estimates. I find that the statute provides a salary of $5,000 and the estimates contain a living allowance of $3,000. That is all I know. Next year this difficulty cannot occur, so far as I am concerned. Because when the question arose about increasing the living allowance to the judges of the Yukon, my hon. friend the leader of the opposition asked me to explain. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the 'Hansard' report of what I said, he will find that I took up the list of expenses, and said that the allowance was to be increased because of the amount of expenditure that is necessary to put a judge in the Yukon in the same relative position as one in the older provinces. Going over the list, I found the first item was $150 a month for house rent, then so much for light, so much for fuel, and so much for servants' wages. I think I even gave the price of bread and beef and other things out there. In view of that, if anything was paid to these gentlemen in addition, I do not know how I could explain it to the House—it would be impossible for me to do so. Of course, I have no control over any expenditure except that of the money placed in my charge. In this case, there is a salary and a living allowance, which is fixed at $5,000. Beyond that, my authority does not go. If my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works states in his place that he was requested to provide these gentlemen with residences and, in addition, to supply them with furniture for these residences, and further to supply light and fuel, and so on, that is a matter with which I have had nothing to do, though, of course, I accept the responsibility for what was done by my predecessor. But all I can say is that no such thing as that can occur in the future. I cannot permit it, and in view of the debate which has taken place to-night, the Minister of Public Works will not permit it either. I may say that when the matter came before council for consideration, the justification for the increase to $5,000 for living allowance was that these gentlemen should receive it directly and not indirectly, outside of their salary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let me say that not only have I been asked to pay for the rent, but that the Department of Justice has written me a dozen letters at least asking me to build residences for the judges. Not very long ago I received requisitions to build residences for those judges, and in the meantime, pending their erection, I have been requested to pay the rents, and for lighting and fuel. The Department of Justice has over and over again urged upon me the erection of residences for those two judges. Whether my hon. friend will do it in future is for him to say.

Mr. TAYLOR. I presume the Minister of Public Works has authority from the late Minister of Justice authorizing the payment of these amounts. If he will bring that down it will relieve the minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not say that I have the written authority for everything that the government has decided to do, that is not the way business is done. But I say I have many letters asking me to erect residences for the two judges there, and in the meantime it has been decided to pay for rent, fuel and lighting.

Mr. TAYLOR. Surely the Minister of Justice would not violate the law without authority.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know that I have violated the law.

Hon. Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. REID (Grenville). The Minister of Public Works of course relieves himself of the responsibility by reason of the Justice Department giving him the instructions; and the Minister of Justice relieves himself from responsibility by saying that it was done by his predecessor. However, I think that the Minister of Public Works is entitled to a little share of this responsibility.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I take it all.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Perhaps now we can find out exactly whether in this $3,000 the rental was included. We have the Minister of Finance here who will perhaps explain it, because when Judge Dugas was appointed to the Yukon this $3,000 living expenses was of course brought up in the council. Was there not a statement showing how these living expenses were made up, and whether the rental was included in that $3,000 ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am afraid I can hardly undertake to tell the hon. gentleman how every item approved by the council was made up. In regard to the Yukon affairs, we recognized there were conditions out there which differed from those in old Canada, and allowances were made upon a liberal scale regarding the officers in a way that would not be done in the older portions of the Dominion. As this regards the departments of the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Public Works, I would hesitate to express an opinion about it, but I do not hesitate to say, from the discussion that has taken place here to-night, it is quite evident that Judge Dugas received a sum of money which the present Minister of Justice did not suppose he would have received under the arrangement. Before the Minister of Justice takes any action in that matter, it is only right he should endeavour to find out the circumstances under which this order was given. But we do not divide responsibility. The government as a whole must accept the responsibility. Whatever may be said as to the liberality of this allowance in the past, the present Minister of Justice has declared that there shall not be any such allowance in the future. I agree entirely with the hon. gentlemen opposite that the payment of the allowances in this loose way is entirely objectionable. We should give a reasonable, even a liberal sum for living allowance in that country, but that should include everything of the kind, and there should not be a penny expended in the manner of these charges that appear in the Auditor General's account. I am inclined to think as respects the past that the judge has been receiving a more liberal allowance probably than he should.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the case might be put more forcibly even than the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Finance has put. I was trying to discover the vote out of which this has been paid. It has been paid apparently out of the Yukon public buildings. It would be just as right for the Minister of Public Works to pay the rent for the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice out of the vote for Dominion public buildings generally for Ontario, as for these expenditures to have been paid out of the votes from which they have been paid. I do not see the least distinction between the two. It would be just as wrong, just as unjustifiable, for the Minister of Public Works to have paid the house rent for himself or the Minister of Finance as to pay for this house rent out of this vote, whether he did that by direction of the Minister of Justice or of any one else. I would hesitate to suppose that the late Minister of Justice would have ordered these expenditures to have been paid out of a vote of that kind. It seems to me that this question demands the very closest investigation on the part of the Minister of Justice and on the part of the Minister of Finance, who is the guardian of the treasury. I appreciate the fact that they cannot give a full explanation at the moment, or say what course will be pursued without looking into the question. I think it well that the matter has been brought to their attention to-night, and I trust the investigation which they make will be thorough and complete, and one that will enable them to come down to the House with a satisfactory statement with regard to these matters at some later date.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a still more objectionable feature in regard to this vote. Here is a vote of $3,000 for living allowance and $5,000 salary, $8,000 altogether. Surely the Auditor General is aware whether the rental should be included in this $3,000. How did it pass the Auditor General's Department? That is the extraordinary part of it. Perhaps the vote was set free for public buildings in the Yukon territory, and the money was taken out of that. The Auditor General is responsible to this House, and he is under the direction of the Minister of Finance. There is no justification for his course whatever. What is the use of our voting particular items for particular purposes if they can be applied to other purposes. The Auditor General is the guardian of these votes to see that they are properly applied. He does not seem to have done so in this respect.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Will not the hon. gentleman admit that the word 'rents' cover these things? We had a vote last year under the head of 'rents' for public buildings in the Yukon. The policy of the Department of Justice from the very beginning was to erect residences for the judges, and until they were erected we have been paying rents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not think it would be fair that we should take refuge behind the Auditor General in this matter. My impression is that this money was paid out of a letter of credit, and the Auditor General probably was not aware of it until after the payment was made. If so, the most that can be said of it is that the Auditor General when he had the accounts submitted to him should have drawn attention to the matter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is the fact. There was a credit given to the department for a certain sum of money, and out of that sum this expenditure has been made. Then it was the duty of the Auditor General when he found an expenditure which was not justified by vote of parliament to draw attention of parliament to it. He should have said that here was an expenditure over and above the amount that was voted by parliament for that particular purpose.

Harbours and rivers — Nova Scotia—Ecum Secum—wharf, $3,200.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This amount of money is required for the balance of the contract to complete the work.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Where is that?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Guysborough county.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $3,950.

Mr. TAYLOR. How much was voted last year?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not the information under my hand but I will find it.

Gabarus Bay—breakwater, $3,500.

Mr. KAULBACH, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. minister if he has given any recognition to the appeals which I have made in regard to the breakwater at Petit Riviére and also the breakwater at Mill Cove in St. Margaret's Bay in the county of Lunenburg, and also the retaining wall at Battery Point at the mouth of Lunenburg Harbour. In regard to the latter I would say that a retaining wall is an absolute necessity and unless attention is given to it in the course of a very short time it will endanger the lighthouse erected on the banks as it stands on the very brink of a wall of clay and unless attended to in a very short time, will tip over the precipice. I would ask the hon. minister to give it the attention it deserves.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer tells me that he does not remember that we have any information at hand. I did not catch the first name that the hon. gentleman mentioned.

Mr. KAULBACH. The Petit Rivière breakwater.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is this a new work or is it just a case of repairs ?

Mr. KAULBACH. It is a work that has been suffering for want of repairs. A large amount of money has been spent there. I have repeated this appeal every year since the hon. gentlemen have been in power.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will give instructions to the engineer to pay a visit there and report.

Mr. KAULBACH. Suppose the hon. minister places a certain amount of money in the coming supplementary estimates for the work this session?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The supplementary estimates for this year are completed, and I would not dare to reopen them, but if the amount is small and if the work is not too extensive you can take the amount out of the general vote.

Mr. KAULBACH. No, it requires a larger amount than that.

Ingonish (North Bay) strengthening breakwater—repairs, $1,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Before the last item is carried perhaps the hon. minister has the information now with reference to the first item of $3,200 that I asked for. I understand that he asked for the full amount last year and said that the work was let by contract. Now, he comes forward and asks for $3,200 to complete the work, and he says that the contract was $3,900.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year we had $1,300 only.

Mr. TAYLOR. And the work was $3,900 and he now asks for $3,200..

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The contract was for $3,950. We are now asking for $650 for contingencies and that brings the whole amount up to $4,600. We have spent up to December, $1,399. So that we require the amount which we are asking to complete the work.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Will this vote complete it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Prince Edward Island, West Point—extension of pier, $1,550.

Mr. HACKETT. What is that money required for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to pay the balance of the contract for that work.

Hon. Mr. TARTE.

Mr. HACKETT. To pay the balance of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, to pay the balance to the contractor Mr. McDonald.

Tignish—repairs to breakwater, $600.

Mr. HACKETT. What is that for—a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is to pay for work done on that breakwater.

Mr. HACKETT. When was the work done—last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

New London—repairs to breakwater, &c., $2,200.

Mr. HACKETT. I would like to call the attention of the hon. minister to the work at Skinner's Pond. An expenditure of about $2,000 was made two years ago for this work. Nothing has been done there since. This is a very necessary work and I may say that there was a channel opened through the sand from the pond to the gulf. That channel was closed up last fall. At the time of the opening of the channel a dam was built across the old outlet from the pond and this was closed up. When the sea had closed the new channel the pond overflowed its banks, there being no outlet from the pond, and the consequence was, that the farmers found that the ground up to their doors was flooded with water. They petitioned the hon. Minister of Public Works that some action should be taken last fall. I forwarded that petition myself, and I would ask, inasmuch as this expenditure of about $2,000 was made two years ago, that he followed it up by a further expenditure to assist the farmers and fishermen living on that part of the coast where they are very much in want of this accommodation. It is very much required. There is no harbour from Tignish to Miminegash, a distance of 30 miles along the coast. These people are obliged to use small fishing boats, whereas if they had Skinner's Pond harbour kept open sufficiently to admit a larger sized craft, they could pursue their industry with greater success and perhaps the hon. gentleman will see whether we can get an amount placed in the supplementary estimates next year for this purpose.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not remember that our resident engineer has called attention to that work. I thought it was completed. I was under the impression that all the work necessary there had been done. The chief engineer will take note of it, but at the same time Mr. Hegan has not called our attention to the necessity of any further work there.

Mr. HACKETT. That may be, but the people petitioned last fall. I am aware that the hon. minister received the petition because he replied to my letter forwarding the petition. That should be sufficient notice. He said that he would consult Mr. Hegan, the engineer about the work. It is no fault of the people who have been urging upon the department the necessity for this work. Will the minister say that it will be provided for in the supplementary estimates?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say that because the supplementary estimates are closed.

Repairs, maritime provinces generally, $8,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that that item be struck out.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. HACKETT. Cannot the minister apply that amount to Skinner's Pond.

Mr. WILMOT. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the works at Oromocto on the St. John river. What amount will likely be expended there.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two plans are prepared for the work on the Oromocto river and tenders will be asked for it in a short while.

Mr. WILMOT. I am very glad to hear that. Does the minister intend to prosecute the work of clearing out the shoals.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Instructions have been given for a dredge to go there and as soon as a dredge can be got the work will be completed.

Mr. WILMOT. Under the charge of Mr. Shewan the resident engineer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. KAULBACH. I wish to call the attention of the minister to the much needed work of the dredging of La Have river, Mahone bay, and Lunenburg harbour. There is no work in all Canada that is more necessary than the dredging of these three places. There is a very extensive shipping fleet there, and accommodation is absolutely necessary for it. Last year the minister told me he had no dredge, but I find dredges going to other places of less importance. Why cannot this work be attended to during the coming season. It was promised last year and promised the year before. There was a sum in connection with this work placed in the estimates just previous to the last election, but it was not expended. Will the minister promise me that he will send a dredge there this year. This work is in the public interest and there is nothing at all political about it. I would strongly urge this work on the attention of the minister.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Wade)—

Mr. KAULBACH. From Lunenburg.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, from Annapolis, called my attention a week or two ago to this matter and because of the great importance of La Have river I fully realized that something has to be done. It is a very fine river. I was there two or three years ago and representations were made to me, but there was then no dredge available and there is not to-day. I have tried at the request of my hon. friend (Mr. Wade) and other friends to relieve the situation by ordering some rudimentary work to remove a sand bar that was formed by the flood this spring and we are trying to remove it now.

Mr. KAULBACH. This interest shown on the part of the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) is very commendable no doubt, but the minister might have referred to the hon. member for Lunenburg as having appealed repeatedly year after year for this work. If that fact were shown and credited me it would have looked a little better and more commendable on the part of the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I will have to intervene. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Kaulbach) could not very well have called attention last year to a sand bar which was created by the flood this year, although I have no doubt that my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) would have been quite ready to call attention to it this year. There is dredging urgently needed on the La Have river, Lunenburg harbour, and Mahone bay, and I must do my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) the justice to say that he has repeatedly brought it to the attention of the House. There was a special obstruction caused this year in La Have river apart from the necessary dredging. It was that which my hon. friend from Annapolis brought to the notice of the Minister of Public Works. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wade) was for many years a resident on the La Have river, and knows it perhaps better than any man in the House. Accordingly the Minister of Public Works took steps to do the little work connected with the removal of that sand bar. There is great difficulty in finding dredges. I told my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) a year ago that I would recommend the La Have river to be dredged almost before any work I was prepared to advocate in Nova Scotia. But the trouble is that the smaller class of dredges which suit in other places are not adapted to the La Have river, and so far the Minister of Public Works was unable to carry out his intention of having dredging done there. He is now having a large dredge built which will be suitable for work on the La Have river, and with the assistance of that dredge that work can be done. In the case of Lunenburg, for the last year or two, there have not been urgent works except dredging.

My hon. friend has urged us repeatedly to send dredges there, and I have been as anxious as himself to see them sent; but we really have not had the dredges to do the work.

Mr. KAULBACH. It is very kind of the minister to refer to me in the way he has done, and I appreciate it; but my reason for referring to the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Wade) was that the hon. minister drew out the hon. member for Annapolis to speak of dredging in the county which I have the honour to represent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have referred in so many kind words to the efforts of my hon. friend from Lunenburg that I thought for once my hon. friend from Annapolis might have a little credit.

Mr. WADE. If you will allow me a word, I may say that I have received communications from people who are interested in having the dredging done on the La Have river and in the removal of the bar which has been referred to by the Minister of Finance. I am free to admit that while my hon. friend (Mr. Kaulbach) represents the county of Lunenburg, the people on the La Have river have no confidence in his ability to secure dredging for them. He represented the county in the time of the late government for many years. The only dredging done in the county was in the harbour of Lunenburg, and there are people mean enough to say that his own property was benefited by it more than any other. It is only natural, therefore, that friends in Bridgewater should have written to me to urge the minister to do this work. On the very evening that I received the letter, I brought the matter to the notice of the minister, and the statement he made, I think was very satisfactory.

Mr. KAULBACH. If the hon. member for Annopolis got a letter of that kind, I think that he should in courtesy have handed it to me, and left me to make the appeal; and then he might have supported me. That would have been kindness on his part, and what I might reasonably have expected from him. With reference to the dredging in Lunenburg harbour, the hon. gentleman knows right well that no part of it benefited me in any way, and I am sorry that he should have referred to it as he did. On the contrary, I objected to the dredging being done where he refers to, because I wanted the harbour deepened for the purpose of improving it as a harbour of refuge for the fishermen; and the dredging where it was done was endangering the bank of my property, as was well known to the public.

Ste. Genevieve—protection of piers, $550.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) What kind of work is the hon. gentleman doing there?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) As the hon. gentleman is aware, there is a bridge at Ste. Geneviève that was built by the Dominion government, and under an arrangement entered into between the government and the municipal authorities at Ste. Geneviève, the government are bound to do the necessary works for the protection of the piers. Although the county is not favourable to the government, I shall see to it that those works are properly done.

Valleyfield—Dredging channel in Valleyfield Bay, $4,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is this for?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a pretty large trade at Valleyfield, and this work is being done in the harbour, not in the canal. We are dredging the channel from the lake into the bay.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Is it opposite the town or above the entrance to the canal?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is above the entrance to the canal.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Is this for the canal?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) This has nothing to do with the canal. This work is being done in the bay, at the entrance of the harbour. My hon. friend, who is familiar with that bay, knows that it is very shallow. There is only about from 6 to 7 feet of water, and a great many boats which visit that port find it very difficult to enter the harbour. We are dredging a channel from the lake to the wharf.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How deep are you making it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are dredging to 9 feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There has been 11 or 12 feet of depth there right along.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, only 5 or 6 feet.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Steamers drawing 9 or 10 feet of water have been going there for years.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not in the channel to the canal, but in the channel from the lake to the wharfs.

Mr. LOY. If I might be allowed to explain, this channel is near the entrance of the canal down towards the port of Valleyfield. This channel has been used a great many years and is now being used by coal barges, and barges laden with grain and lumber. In low water in the summer season there is only about 6 feet of water, and in consequence these barges are not able to load and unload to advantage. This is a very important work, and I am only sorry that a larger amount is not voted for it. When I state that the largest industry in Valleyfield now gets 20,000 tons of coal a year, and that many barges laden with grain and lumber come into the harbour, you can well realize the importance of deepening the channel to a sufficient depth. It should be at least 10 feet deep. I may say that in consequence of its being so shallow, and in consequence of the shoal at the entrance to the harbour, in very severe winters, the ice forms to such a depth as to shut out the water for the mills which are dependent upon it for their power. So that the deepening of the channel will be a double advantage, increasing the water for power purposes, and also enlarging the channel for navigation.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) Did the minister make all that expenditure to redeem one of the many pledges given to the electorate during the last election ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) I had no time to give pledges, as I hardly spent twenty-four hours in the county.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I was there for eight days, and I know something about it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. (Translation.) The hon. gentleman must have made pledges.

Mr. LEONARD. (Translation.) I could not afford to do so.

Point Pelee Island wharf, $1,290.

Mr. EARLE. I see that the government are spending a great deal of money for the construction of wharfs in all the older provinces. I would ask the minister if it is his intention to extend the same principle to the province of British Columbia, where we have large fishing interests, and where up to the present the government have not spent any money for wharfs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Senator Templeman called my attention to the importance of British Columbia and its claims to have wharfs built in that province, and when the supplementary estimates come down, I shall probably be criticised for having provided too large a sum for this purpose.

Mr. PRINGLE. In this item I see no allowance for a wharf at the village of Aultsville in the county of Stormont. I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman would bring down an amount of $5,500 for that purpose. I would like to ask him if it is his intention to build that wharf?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These estimates are only for the current year. When the supplementary estimates come down, my hon. friend will have to judge whether we have acted as he wishes us to do. Until then my lips are sealed.

Mr. PRINGLE. I would like to call the attention of the hon. minister to the fact that a wharf is badly required there, and that the wharf which was there has been destroyed owing to its having been used by the government contractors.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My engineer tells me that we have had an examination and a survey made there lately.

Mr. PRINGLE. I understand that.

St. Maurice district—accommodation at Grand Mere for storing and sorting logs, &c., Governor General's warrant, $63,000.

Mr. MORIN. Does the government sort the logs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the government furnishes the accommodation for sorting the logs, and the lumbermen do the sorting themselves. I explained the other day the nature of this work. If my hon. friend would like to have an idea of the work we are carrying on there, this map will explain the whole thing. We have fifty miles of work done, and those works are paying. Last year we netted about $20,000, and I wish we could net as much everywhere else.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why was the Governor General's warrant required ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Last year the lumber companies suffered great damage because our accommodation for sorting was not large enough and they could not drive all their logs during high water. They made representations to us, and we changed the location of the work at Grand Mere, so as to give more storage place. The work had to be completed by the 1st of May, because later on it would have been of no use.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What is built for this $63,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Five piers, 9,000 or 10,000 feet of booms and other works.

Slides and booms—St. Maurice district—to complete payments for timber supplied in 1900-1 for improvements made to boom works at Shawinigan, &c., to facilitiate the floating, sorting and storage of logs, $11,300.

Mr. REID (Grenville). How much has been spent on these works altogether ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About three quarters of a million—they have been in existence for fifty years.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Each year, there is some expenditure of this kind ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not every year, but as may be necessary. The booms are paying pretty well, and I hope they will pay better.

Roads and bridges—bridge over the Belly River at Pace's Crossing to complete payments to the North-west Territories government for the construction of this bridge, $959,67.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Why is that a Dominion bridge ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, the government of Canada build bridges in the North-west Territories—large bridges.

Mr. REID (Grenville). This is not the first, then ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, there are several.

Roads and bridges—Des Joachims bridge—reconstruction, the Ontario and Quebec governments contributing—to complete, including approaches, $32,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that this item be reduced to $16,000.

Motion agreed to.

Public Works—chargeable to income—miscellaneous—chief engineer's office—salaries of engineers, draftsmen and clerks, notwithtanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $10,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of this ?

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman, last year, asked for $49,700 for this office the same as the year before. And now he comes forward with a request for $10,500 for the balance of this year. What is the reason ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because, this year we have more work than we ever had—nearly twice as much, and it is impossible to carry on all this work with the same staff in the engineer's office.

Mr. TAYLOR. But surely the hon. gentleman had all this before him when he made up his estimates and put down the same sum as for the year before ? And now he asks for $10,500 more merely to complete this year. He must have employed a great many more men.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But, $10,000 is not a very large amount of money considering the work we do. We are spending about $3,000,000 in dredging, contractors, &c. We have to have a staff large enough to control our work. I am sure that I do not do an injustice to any other branch of the Public Works Department when I say that the chief engineer's branch is administered to my entire satisfaction ?

Miscellaneous—to pay the Canadian Pacific Railway interest at five per cent on sundry freight charges, the settlement of which was unavoidably delayed from 1900 to 1902, $1,514.51.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that this item be struck out

Motion agreed to.

For purchase and fitting of ss. 'Tyrian' as a cable vessel, purchase of Marconi instruments and testing of his system of wireless telegraphy (Governor General's warrant), $50,093.17.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much was paid for this vessel ?

Mr. REID (Grenville).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $20,000. In addition we have spent for fitting her up $25,000. We spent about $5,000 on the Marconi system.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who was she purchased from ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From the Nova Scotia Steamship Company. We had a cable ship which was wrecked, and we had to buy another one. The other steamship foundered on the 20th of September, 1900. Then we rented this steamer for some time, and when we were contemplating returning her to her owners we found it would be necessary to spend $5,000 or $6,000 to place her in the same position she was in when we rented her. I thought it was more advantageous to buy her. This vessel is absolutely necessary for the Department of Public Works. The vessel was in running order when we purchased her.

Mr. REID (Grenville). $25,000 was a very large amount for fitting up a vessel which was in running order when he purchased her. Has the minister any memorandum of the items that went to make up that sum ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About $6,000 was spent on repairs, and the balance was spent on fitting up the boat as a cable boat for laying cables.

Working expenses, Levis, Kingston and Esquimalt graving docks, $7,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a general law which authorizes us to pay two per cent for twenty years on moneys invested in building graving docks. Mr. Robertson has been negotiating, I understand, with the imperial government to get an Act of incorporation. I do not know as they have succeeded. I hope he will be able to give St. John a graving dock with the guarantee we have placed on the statute books. We placed on the statute book last year a law which authorized us to guarantee two per cent to any company which would build a graving dock whose plans will have been approved by the Department of Public Works and we hope that the company formed by Mr. Robertson will be able to build that dock. We have not a separate account for the three graving docks and we have been obliged to spend more than we thought we would. That is why we have to ask for a supplementary vote.

Slides and booms—St. Maurice district, working expenses, $10,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I see an item No. 88 which is for the same thing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That item is for construction of works. This is for maintenance and working expenses.

Mr. TAYLOR. I thought the hon. gentleman said last year that he would require $1,000 for working expenses.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, the more dams and slides there are the more money we are called upon to spend.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman made an estimate last year and now he says that he is short by $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We did not foresee the fact that we would have that large increase of work at Grande Mere for which I have just asked parliament to give me $63,000, and it is in view of these increased works that we have this increased expenditure for maintenance.

Ocean and river service—further amount required for maintenance and repairs of Dominion steamers, including Governor General's warrant of $26,000, $50,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Explain that please.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). Mr. Chairman, this item of $50,000 is required to pay the expenditure for the maintenance of this service for the current year. It will be noticed that in the estimates of last year only $160,000 were voted, whereas it required about $200,000 to carry on this service. I find it has been the practice in the department to carry over from one year to the other balances of accounts. I am desirous of squaring them all off and keeping within the estimate of parliament for the various services.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understand the hon. minister has now charge of the steamer 'Scout,' between Kingston and Montreal. Is that the case ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. The Railway Department has turned over that steamer to the Marine Department, and it will henceforth be in our charge.

Mr. REID (Grenville). And all the buoys between Montreal and Kingston will be looked after by the Marine Department ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

To provide for the removal of a submerged wrecked schooner in Petit de Grat harbour, Richmond county, N.S., $350.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I would like to call the attention of the hon. minister to the wreck of the steamer 'Rothesay' just beyond the town of Prescott. It is in a dangerous place and very little would remove it. I think the matter has been brought to the attention of the government before, and if it can be removed it will avoid the wreck of some other steamer. The machinery is about five or six inches below the water and small boats have run upon this and several lives have been very nearly lost. I think the department asked for tenders a short time ago. It would only cost $200 or $300 to remove this wreck. If the minister can see his way clear to have that wreck removed I believe its removal will probably save life and property.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is some question as to the responsibility in this matter. Now that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) has brought it to my attention I shall make careful inquiry. I agree with him that it is dangerous and some action must be taken to remove this obstruction.

Lighthouse and coast service, $35,000.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Who has charge of the light at the head of the Cornwall canal.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Department of Railways and Canals.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope that the minister will make this year provision to buoy the different channels of the 1000 Islands on the Canadian side. On the American side they have these channels for small excursion steamers all buoyed. I drew the attention of Sir Louis Davies last year and he promised to have it done. I think I also spoke to the present minister (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) about it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) brought the matter to my notice and I asked the engineer to report, and in the supplementary estimates next year we will have an item for it. The care of the buoys in the rivers as well as in the canals will now be in my department and I shall ask for a grant to place that service in a more satisfactory condition.

Mr. REID (Grenville). With regard to that light at the head of the Cornwall canal, an arrangement was made that the lockman should attend to it, but now that it is under the care of the Department of Marine and Fisheries the lockmen may not consider it their duty to do so, unless they are instructed to that effect. The light is a very important one.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This matter will also come under the jurisdiction of the engineer who is to be appointed especially to attend to that section of the river. I shall have a report made in regard to the light which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) has referred to.

Fisheries—Further amount required for fish breeding establishments, $30,000.

Mr. HACKETT. It was announced in a Prince Edward Island newspaper recently that the minister intended to build a combination hatchery for salmon and lobster on the island. Is that under consideration ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but I am not prepared at the present moment to definitely state what will be done. My personal opinion is that the establishment of hatcheries has proved satisfactory in other countries and also in Canada. If we find that the results have been as good as we expect I shall ask parliament for a grant for the coming year to establish more hatcheries. Of course that must depend to some extent on the information given by the experts as to the proper locality to establish a hatchery. I have no doubt it would be in the interest of the fisheries of the Dominion to establish a hatchery on the island, but I cannot say now what will be done. The estimates have not been sufficient, and it has been the practice, unfortunately I think, to carry over from year to year accounts that should have been provided for in the current year. I am anxious to stop that practice. For instance a vote of $3,500 was taken in the first instance to establish hatcheries in British Columbia, and the total cost was $10,258. The estimate for the Gaspé hatchery, was $7,000, and the cost up to the present $18,000; the Margaree hatchery estimated at $5,000, cost $8,780. This money is required to complete these works and also I trust to clear up the accounts in the department so that there will not be overdrafts. I think it is a very bad practice not to take a sufficient vote to cover the expenditure of the year, because this results in men being kept out of their money in the latter part of the year, which I do not think conduces to the good management of the department nor is satisfactory to those interested. My object is to establish a system on such a basis as to avoid that. I can understand that sometimes, in taking an appropriation for new work, it is very difficult to estimate properly the exact cost, in that case the fund should not be taken out of an appropriation for other purpose. If the department makes a mistake of that kind, I think that the matter should stand over until parliament meets and we can get a subsequent appropriation.

Mr. KAULBACH. I desire to ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, for the information of the fishermen of Nova Scotia, if a commission has been appointed, or any inquiry instituted as to the effect the wholesale slaughter of young herrings, or sardines, caught at Grand Manan, in the county of Charlotte, opposite the coast of Maine, has upon the fishermen of Nova Scotia, and the sacrifice that is occasioned by such slaughters. I understand that American sail boats visit this quarter, and take from weirs prepared for the capture of these fishes, immense quantities of these young fishes, and dispose of them to packers of sardines at Eastport, in Maine, where they are in good demand; and any quantity not cared for, and cured as sardines, is sold as a fertilizer. I am informed, and I verily believe this statement to be correct, that often in one day fifty tons of these fishes go to destruction and are disposed of or sold as a fertilizer to Americans, or to farmers of the county of Charlotte, which the fishermen of Nova Scotia complain of as the worst kind of destruction or waste, and regard without a doubt the cause as to the scarcity of herrings on the shores of Nova Scotia. I would ask what are the customs officers of the county of Charlotte doing that they cannot watch such practices and report them, or where are the vessels in the patrol service that they do not do their duty, and protect the interests of the fishermen, and the customs in a manner they are expected to do?

It is well known that Grand Manan waters is the great nursery or spawning ground for herrings, and if these fishes are caught, and in many cases ruthlessly destroyed in the manner I have described, when young and not allowed to grow, and from the shores of Bay of Fundy, and the east coast of Nova Scotia, the waters of these shores will in a short time be depleted entirely of this valuable description of fish. Herrings are a bait the deep sea fishermen of Nova Scotia mainly depend on for a catch of cod; and when they are scarce, or not to be had, the success of that industry is imperilled and very precarious, and the inshore fishermen naturally must suffer in a similar manner.

As the open season by regulation of the Marine and Fisheries Department, commences on the 10th of May—the present month—only a few days off, I would ask the hon. minister to carefully take charge of this matter, investigate these statements I have made, and have found correct, at once stop this wholesale slaughter and destruction of these fishes, and follow up the customs officers and the fishery officers of that district, that they discharge their duties with vigilance and in the most efficient manner possible. I have brought this matter to the notice of the government on a previous occasion, and now ask that it receive the attention it merits. Will the hon. minister kindly inform me if any inquiry has been made in this particular?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter referred to has been brought to the attention of the department frequently. I find that there is a great divergence of opinion as to what policy is best to adopt in regard to the herrings in that district. Some claim that there is not the slightest danger of their being depleted at all by our allowing them to be taken as they are at the present time, while others take the opposite view. However, the matter will be thoroughly looked into. I may say, in this connection that, as the committee well know, the whole fishery question between the province and the Dominion is not in a very satisfactory shape at the present time, and I decided not to take very active steps in regard to some of these matters until the various questions of jurisdiction were settled. An invitation has been sent to the various provincial governments to hold a conference here at as early a date as can be arranged, perhaps during the next two weeks, to discuss all these matters, when I hope some satisfactory arrangement may be arrived at. If not, I have intimated to them my view that it is most desirable that a stated case be prepared for submission to the courts, so that we may know once and for all the position of the Dominion and the provinces respectively with regard to these various questions. The subject of the customs regulations is receiving the attention of the Department of Customs at the present time.

Mr. EARLE. I would like to ask the minister whether the hatchery on the Cedar river is finished, and whether it is stocked ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The work is completed, and the stocking and putting in good shape is going on.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a matter which I wished to mention to the minister in connection with the lighthouse and coast service. It is the necessity of having a lightship for the Halifax harbour. I brought this matter to the attention of the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries two or three sessions ago—in fact, I think on two or three different occasions. Since then a statement has been placed in my hands on the matter, and, as it will take only a few moments to read it, I will take the liberty of reading it to the minister now. It is prepared by a gentleman who is intimately acquainted with the necessities of the harbour. I think there was a lightship at the mouth of the harbour a good many years ago; and, in the opinion of this gentleman and others who are familiar with the subject, the reason that lightship drifted and failed to be of service, and had to be abandoned, was that it was not properly moored. The statement which has been given me is these words :

A lightship is wanted off Halifax harbour because the existing lights and fog signals are all inside of the dangers to be avoided instead of outside. The dangers to be avoided are the Sambro ledge on the west and Thrum Cap shoal on the east. The latter is well inside the bay formed by Chebucto Head on the west and Devil island on the east, but the former runs a long way out, nearly two miles beyond Sambro island.

In clear weather, i.e., not foggy, the lighthouses on Devil's island, Sambro island and Chebucto Head are sufficient guides to the entrance, though even then it is worth noting that the 'Daniel Steinmann' was lost with 100 lives through mistaking the light on Sambro for that on Chebucto—the explanation given at the time being that the rain squalls blowing across the fixed light on Sambro caused the captain to mistake it for the revolving light on Chebucto. He ran in for it expecting to pick up a pilot, only to find himself among the maze of reef outside of Sambro island.

But in foggy weather the lights are useless, and the guides to the entrance are two automatic buoys, one to the south-east of Sambro and one further to the eastward, and fog bombs on Sambro island. An automatic buoy is a very imperfect guide. Unless there is considerable sea on it makes very little noise. Even when it is making a good deal, it is universal experience that it is quite uncertain whether you will hear it or not. It is not a loud noise and easily drowned by the noise on board a steamer. The sound often seems to act in a peculiar way, so as to be inaudible half a mile away, and yet perfectly plain several miles off. In a strong breeze it can seldom be heard any distance to windward of the buoy. In every way it is a poor mark to run for in the fog and if you do not hit it the penalty may be to find yourself among the ledges, just as the 'Portia' did. The bombs on Sambro island are said to be very hard to locate and misleading, and they, too, are of course inside the danger. A few years ago the ship 'John Macleod,' with a cargo of sugar wandered about for two or three days in the fog looking for something to show her a course to the harbour, but found none, and eventually was lost on the Sambro ledge.

This is the remedy he proposes :—

What is wanted is a lightship with a powerful fog horn moored well clear of the outer Sambro reefs. Such a mark could be run for in any weather day or night with perfect ease and confidence. Pilots could be kept on board.

There should be no difficulty in mooring such a vessel. The bottom is mostly sand and gravel, good holding ground. The experiment formerly tried of a lightship was bound to fail, because they tried to make the ship ride to her own anchors and two enormous chain cables, the weight of which was certain to drag her under in a seaway. What is wanted is to take weight of the cable by a large mooring and fasten the ship to the mooring. In that case a properly designed vessel would ride easily in any weather. The lightships in Great Britain and the States are mostly moored this way, I believe. Even if she could not or any accident happened, she could slip the mooring line and run up the harbour, without losing anything.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Did the hon. gentleman mention the name of the lighthouse ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will mention that in confidence to the hon. minister. The writer is a gentleman who has taken a good deal of interest in the subject, and the hon. minister can inquire as to whether the suggestions he made are valuable or not. I know nothing about the subject myself, but take a little interest in it on account of having brought the matter to the attention of the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries on several occasions. I asked this gentleman, who locally takes a great deal of interest in the subject, and is personally interested in the safety of the harbour, to give me a statement of his views in writing. He wrote this rather hurriedly, supposing no doubt that I would not read it to the House, but I thought it better to give his own language than attempt to sum up his remarks by any language of my own.

I trust that the hon. minister will consider the matter because there is a strong feeling among masters of vessels that something of the kind should be done, and it is quite easy to make the harbour perfectly safe by night and by day. The only subject for consideration by the minister is the best way to do this, and this gentleman thinks it can be done by a lightship, and that there would be no difficulty in doing this with the improved modern methods of constructing and placing lightships.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I had the great pleasure of visiting Halifax a short time ago, and was told that it was a magnificent harbour with a wide channel and that it had never suffered from fog or ice all the year round, so that I am rather surprised to hear of any application for any improvements in connection with that harbour. However, I suppose that this is a little outside the harbour, and I may say that the matter was brought up some time ago and an investigation and report made. The opinion come to was that there was no such pressing necessity for this lightship, which the informant of my hon. friend seems to think there is. However, we have always to recognize that nowadays, when vessels are so much larger and swifter than formerly, aids to navigation are required that were not thought necessary some years ago. If the hon. gentleman would be kind enough to give me the memo. he has just read, I will look into the matter and give some information concerning it, when the estimates for next year come down, and I would also promise him that it will have most careful consideration by the department at an early date.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I do not think that any person in Halifax would make the statement that we do not have occasionally a little fog along the coast, though, so far as the harbour itself is concerned, I do not think that any improvement is required, as the harbour is as open and clean and safe as any harbour in the world. But what my hon. friend the leader of the opposition is referring to is not the harbour but the coast before you reach it, some miles outside, and it must be understood that we are not making any reflections on the harbour when we speak of the coast outside. We have a little fog on the coast occasionally, but nothing compared with the Bay of Fundy and over at St. John. The harbour of Halifax is as perfect as it can be, but there is no harbour in the world where there is not a little fog outside. If it were so perfect, as to be free from fog along the coast, we would not require lighthouses or anything of the kind, but in common with all harbours some little protection is required there as elsewhere.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Fisheries—further amount required for salaries and disbursements of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians, $20,800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose the same explanation applies to this ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes; we never had a sufficient vote. I want to balance the account and take the amount that is really needed and keep within it in the year's expenditure.

Fisheries—to pay damages and costs sustained by Messrs J. & C. Noble, as awarded by the commissioner appointed by Order in Council 16th August, 1901, $18,563.

Mr. BENNETT. Persons who are at all acquainted with the circumstances in connection with this case will consider the vote a most extraordinary one. This is a most unsatisfactory matter to discuss in the House, because the minister who is in charge of the department had nothing to do with it, and those who are to blame, if there are any to blame, are not here to meet the charges. To hon. gentlemen who were in this House ten or twelve years ago, this claim of Noble Brothers is quite an old friend. This firm were engaged in business of fishing on Georgian Bay. I know very little personally of their operations, but I shall read from 'Hansard' the opinion of a gentleman in this House showing that they were not by any means persons deserving of much consideration. In a discussion on this same claim the hon. member who represents the adjoining riding to that in which Noble Brothers live, spoke of them in the following terms. I quote from page 2014 of 'Hansard' of 1895:

> I know that I have been spoken to dozens of times by fishermen with regard to the reputation of the Nobles, and I merely give this as a justification for the seeming harsh course which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries adopted in this case. When I have been endeavouring to get these men off time after time, it has been said to me : Why take the Nobles part, they are perfect outlaws ; they fish with nets that are larger than the law allows ; they fish out of season, they violate the law in every way. They say : You cannot prosecute them because they are so strong and have such powerful influence at their backs, the department is afraid to prosecute them, but they pile unto us because we are individually alone, and we cannot bring that force to bear against the department which they can.

These remarks were made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), who, I regret to see, is not in his place, but who, if he were here, I am sure, would join with me in protesting against this vote. These remarks were made when the present Hon. Senator Landerkin, then the representative of South Grey in this House endeavoured to bring the same case under the review of parliament. Let me now refer to some of the circumstances of this claim. These Noble Brothers, who were engaged, as I say, in fishing, year in and year out, season in and season out, had openly and in the most flagrant way defied the laws of the land in connection with the fisheries. This is shown by the evidence in the case laid on the Table of the House by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. That evidence shows that they supplied seine nets, trap nets and other illegal fishing gear to half-breeds and Indians, and in return, took a share of the fish caught by these illegal means. After they had been trespassers against the laws for years, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of that time, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, determined to bring them to time. They were notified that, in consequence of the flagrant outrages they had perpetrated in the past, evidence of which was before the department, they would not be granted licenses. Having a large fishing plant, consisting of tugs, fishing smacks and a large quantity of nets, they came down here in 1893 after having received notice that no consideration would be allowed them for the future. They proffered their money to the license inspector, Mr. Elliott, but finding that a license would not be issued, one of the firm came down to Ottawa. The hon. member for East Grey, knowing Mr. Noble, accompanied him to the minister and endeavoured to intervene on his behalf. And the hon. member for East Grey gives this account of the interview:

> Mr. Noble admitted himself in the presence of the minister that he knew of the change in the regulations the fall before. He admitted also that after he paid his money, that he was told before his boats went out that he was not likely to get his license. When that information came to his knowledge he came down to Ottawa to intercede with the department in hopes he might induce them to give him his license, and on the very day he was here, and when we were pleading on his behalf in the office, a telegram came from the fishery overseer saying that his boats were out fishing in the Georgian Bay.

Let hon. members get the full meaning of these facts. Here were two partners who had been officially advised that the department would refuse them a license. One of the partners comes to Ottawa to see the minister, and while he is actually laying his case before the minister, the inspector advises the department that, in open violation of the law, a license not having been issued to them, this firm were out on the lakes with their plant. I do not intend to speak personally of the operations of these men, because I do not know the facts. I can only say that, if general repute about Georgian Bay, where their operations are carried on, goes for anything, not a word that was said by the hon. member for East Grey concerning these people is too hard or too strong or too severe. The inspector, in pursuance of his instructions seized the tug and fishing plant of these men, and, it was tied up—there is no doubt about that—for a whole season. They had openly violated the law, and the minister was quite justified, as the House at that time believed, in acting as he did. And what next happened? These gentlemen employed solicitors to prosecute a claim against the department. The minister granted them a hearing before Judge Johnson—I believe it was—as commissioner. The evidence was thoroughly gone into. When the case came before the department, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of that time, Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, told these people point blank that they could have a fiat at any time to go into the courts if they thought their claim against the government was a good one. As often as this fiat was offered to these wrongdoers—for they were wrongdoers—so often was it declined. After a time Sir Charles Hibert Tupper left the department, but the gentleman who succeeded him also declined to allow the claim. Meantime, some very powerful friends of the Conservative government, relatives of these Noble Brothers used every occasion to put the pistol to the head of the department to compel it to yield. But Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper refused to recede an inch, but told them they could rest upon their rights, a fiat would be given and they could go into the courts. But, knowing the ground upon which they stood, these people, very properly, from their point of view, refused to go into courts. When the change of government came in 1896, the matter stood as it had stood for three or four years before.

But, no sooner was there a change of government than the Noble Bros., being prominent supporters of the hon. gentlemen opposite, exerted their own political leverage; and, knowing one of these gentlemen personally as I do, I saw him here session in and session out, and it was notorious what his business was. He was endeavouring to have the government take up this alleged claim and deal with it on its merits. I am glad to say for the credit of the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Sir Louis Davies, that from 1896 that gentleman resisted the payment of this claim. I do not know whether he offered them a fiat to go into the courts, I assume probably he did; had he followed the action of his predecessor in office he certainly would have done that. But there is one thing certain, and that is that Sir Louis Davies never agreed—because there was never any vote in the estimates for such a purpose—to compromise with these people in any shape or manner, so far at least as the records of the House showed by a vote of money. There was the action, first, of Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper offering them a fiat for them to go into court, and their refusal to do so. Then here is the palpable fact that for five years Sir Louis Davies would not recede from the position of the former minister and would not pay these people one dollar; at least the evidence that is open and above board as to no money grant being voted in the House would show conclusively that he agreed with the action of his predecessor in office, and did nothing in that regard. Now, I find on the 22nd of August, 1901, the then minister, Sir Louis Davies, appointed Mr. Justice Lount, one of the judges of the Superior Court in the province of Ontario, under a commission to inquire into this matter; and I will be bound to say that there never was before, and I doubt if there ever will be again, a document issued from any government in this country within the terms and under the circumstances that this one was issued. Let me read for the benefit of the committee the instructions of the Order in Council to the commissioner:

By the said commission and Order in Council the following matters are submitted to me for my opinion and finding:—

(a) Whether in my opinion on the facts proved before me the conviction, seizure and confiscation mentioned in the said Order in Council were justifiable or not; and if I find such conviction, seizure and confiscation were justifiable;

(b) Then, whether there were any and what extenuating circumstances in connection with violations by Messrs. J. & C. Noble and their fishermen of the fishery laws and regulations, and

(c) Whether in equity and good conscience, having regard to all the circumstances proved the government of Canada, should pay to the said Messrs. J. & C. Noble, any damages by reason of such conviction, seizure and consequent disposal of their tugs, boats, gear and nets, and the reason why in my opinion the government of Canada should pay any, and

(d) If I find that damage should be paid by the government of Canada in equity and good conscience on account of the conviction, seizure and subsequent disposal of such tugs, boats, gear and nets, what amount of damages and the reasons why in my opinion the government of Canada should pay the amount determined; with further authority to me to recommend to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to what disposition of all questions of costs in connection with this commission and the proceedings had and taken thereunder to me shall seem proper.

The learned judge goes on to make his findings, and he says:—

In my opinion on the facts proved before me, the conviction, seizure and confiscation mentioned in said Order in Council were justifiable for the following reasons:

I need not read the reasons in detail which he sets out. Then he goes on to say:

Under a strict interpretation of the said S.S. 3, it was the duty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to cause to be seized and confiscated all the materials, implements or appliances used in violation of the Act.

Further on he says:

I have therefore now to determine whether or not there were any and what extenuating circumstances on the facts proved before me which should be taken into consideration in connection with the violations by the said Nobles and their fishermen of the fishery laws and regulations, and whether in equity and good conscience, having regard to all the circumstances proved, the government should pay to the said Nobles any damages by reason of such conviction, seizure and subsequent disposal of their tugs, boats, gear and nets.

Now, it will be seen the commissioner found that the seizure and action were justified by reason of their violations of the Act, and that all that had been done in the premises was justifiable. Then he next puts the question, hedged in by these words that the minister had inserted to let the Nobles fall easily, 'in equity and in conscience as to what amount of damages should be paid, if any.' Now, the minister, in a case that he had refused to take up for five years, had refused to pay any damages on all the facts and evidence which was before him, because there had been a prior inquiry before Judge Johnston as commissioner, and if there was any decision to be given the then minister had all this evidence and could come to a conclusion as easily as the judge. The case was pressed strongly by the law firm with which a member of this House is connected. And here again we see that principle that is coming to the front more and more every day in this House, and is coming to be a by word and a reproach in this House, namely, the steering of cases in every department of the government by men who are members of this House, or by their partners. Why, these hon. gentlemen made the welkin ring when they were in opposition on this very question. It was notorious that for years they denounced the action of the late Mr. Dalton McCarthy in holding a brief in the St. Catharines Milling Company, although Mr. McCarthy stated time and again that he did not participate in any of the fees that came to his office through that case.

Well, Sir, the case apparently was put in good trim, a partner of an hon. member of this House is retained on behalf of the Nobles; and then, so as to make their fall easy with these words 'in equity and good conscience,' the learned judge goes into the disposition of the case. The minister this afternoon laid the papers on the Table containing the evidence; there are 800 or 900 pages which it is difficult to wade through. I have glanced over it, and I find that page after page of that evidence proves every allegation that could be made against these men. The counsel for the government, Mr. Lindsay, was acting, I think, with commendable vigour in resisting the claim on behalf of the department—and I have no fault to find from what I have seen of the evidence in that regard—and Mr. Lindsay was told by the counsel of the Noble Bros. that he need not call any more witnesses to prove that they had supplied illegal nets to half-breeds who had participated in the fish that were taken out of these nets, and the evidence was so preponderating that these men did systematically defy the law for years, that it was admitted there was no necessity for calling some eighteen of those witnesses who were standing there in court to prove that the Noble Bros., had been supplying them with these illegal fishing nets. More than that, it was shown in evidence by their own bookkeeper when the books were produced, that year in and year out they had fish caught illegally in their storehouse for sale; they made no bones about it, and one of their witnesses makes even this strong allegation, that as soon as the fishery inspector came there to make a seizure, one of the Nobles suggested to his assistant the propriety of 'fixing' Mr. Elliott the fishery inspector, evidently supposing that for a monetary consideration the inspector could be fixed, and there would be no prosecution. You can find in different parts of the evidence this fact, that when the inspector came there they bundled a large quantity, one witness states over a ton, of these illegal nets, trap nets, pound nets and seine nets into boxes, and then when the inspector came to look through their storehouse, of course nothing was to be found.

Now, I have this to say, that I am going to enter my protest, although it will not have any weight with the committee, I assume, and as far as the whole case is to be discussed it is most unsatisfactory because the hon. gentleman who is now at the head of the department had nothing to do with it beyond simply finding it when he came into office. I may say that throughout the country and particularly on the shores of Georgian Bay it will be a most startling thing when it is known that these Noble Brothers are to get $18,563 for systematically breaking the law, for telling the Fisheries Department that they did not care what power or influence they had, that they were prepared to bring influence to bear. When the Conservative party were in power they were being buttressed up by strong Conservative friends and when the change of government came I know not what they have done since then. In view of the strong language I have read from 'Hansard,' uttered by the hon. member for East Grey, I would be bound to say that the statements made by him on that occasion will be amply borne out. Here was this officer of the law doing his duty fearlessly, as I know. More than once when I was a supporter of the old government in parliament from 1891 to 1896, I had time and again to appeal to Sir Hibbert Tupper for what? Because, the men doing exactly what these men were doing, fishing with illegal nets, had their nets and boats seized, and it was proper that they should be seized. If a man wanted to take the chance there was the law set for him, and if he was found fishing illegally he had to suffer the consequences. I can recall instance after instance where fishermen who had their all invested in an equipment consisting of boats and nets, had the mortification of seeing their property burned up on the shore right under their very eyes in an endeavour to stop this illegal fishing. These men can now look back knowing what they had to suffer by reason of having contravened the law. While these Noble Brothers who were the greatest poachers and the greatest wrongdoers, the men who had been spoiling the whole fishing business on the lakes, are to be rewarded by the government with this princely grant of $18,563, of which I believe some $3,000 is to go as law costs to a firm of which a member of this House is a partner. I can only say that I enter my protest against voting this money.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I fear we will find a great deal of difficulty in enforcing the fishery regulations. I have a statement furnished me by the department in regard to this matter, and I will place it before the committee:

> In 1894, the fishing tugs, boats and gear of the Messrs. J. & C. Noble, of Killarney, were seized by the fishery overseer for the district under instructions from the department, for having been used for fishing purposes without having first obtained a license therefor as required by law, and the Messrs. Noble were, during the year, refused licenses and their tugs, boats and gear confiscated. These were eventually returned in bond in time for the fishing season of 1895.

Even during the time of the previous government, there was quite a difference of opinion as to the punishment which should be inflicted upon these people for the violation of the law that had occurred. After having these tugs, gear and boats under seizure for a long time, they were eventually returned:

> Meanwhile strong representations were made that the offence committed was mrely a technical one under the circumstances, and that the punishment received by the Nobles was far in excess of that demanded by the irregularity committed by them.
> The correspondence continued from 1894 to the fall of 1901, during which time two commissions were granted to inquire into the claim of the Messrs. Noble for damages, neither of which ever reached a conclusion, the counsel for the Messrs. Noble being unable to accept the terms of reference to the commissioners, and the commissioners' ruling on strictly legal grounds.
> In 1901 the government consented to refer the matter for a final decision to a commissioner in the person of the Hon. Justice Lount, one of the judges of the High Court of Justice of the province of Ontario, and in the terms of reference to the commissioner the element of good conscience and equity was admitted, as well as that of strict law.

I may say to my hon. friend and to the committee that we all remember that there was a great difference of opinion in regard to this question. It is true that the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) took a very extreme view, but his successor, the Hon. Mr. Costigan, took a different view to a very considerable extent, and the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) did not see his way clear——

Mr. BENNETT. May I ask the hon. minister whether the return of the property was made while Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper was minister, or while Hon. Mr. Costigan was minister? I am not sure myself.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would not like to be certain about that, but it was under the administration of either one or other of these ministers and during the time of the former government. Sir Louis Davies did not see his way clear to granting any redress except in the way of a further departmental investigation, which did not seem at all satisfactory. My hon. friend has laid some stress upon the government of the day in granting this commission, but I may say that I think all governments as well as parliament are susceptible to public opinion, and I believe there was a strong opinion not only in the locality, but throughout many portions of the province of Ontario, that these people had been harshly treated. One of the brothers, it is known, died in poverty as a result of this punishment, and there was a strong public opinion that the matter should be referred for judicial action. Sir Louis Davies resisted the applications that were made from time to time, and although I was not a member of the government at that time and do not remember the exact circumstances, I have no doubt that he gave way to public opinion and granted a hearing in this matter. The result was a finding by the commissioner awarding the Messrs. Noble as damages, sustained under the circumstances proved before him, the sum of $15,563, with a further sum for legal and other expenses in connection with the last commission of $3,000. I looked into this matter a few days ago and I wish to say that this is a very small portion of the cost to which these people have been put during all these years while the matter was in dispute. The hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) referred to the counsel in this case being a partner of an hon. member of this House. Perhaps that is hardly fair, because, I understand that from 1894 onward and during the whole progress of this case the same firm have been counsel and solicitors for the Nobles. So that, in that case it cannot be charged that there was any favouritsm, or any favour shown to a member of this House, or to the firm of which he is a partner, nor has there been any political favour shown him.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The member at that time was on the Tory side.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, but that was during the time of the Tory government.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The hon. gentleman is now on the Grit side.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The solicitor was on the Tory side, I am sorry to say. I mention that incidentally, because a wrong impression may be taken from the remarks of the hon. member for East Simcoe. Perhaps it is not intended to suggest that any extra influence has been brought to bear by the present member who happens to be a partner in that firm. The two late lamented members of the firm perhaps would have as much if not more political influence under both governments than the younger member of the firm. However that may be, I think this commission was appointed simply on account of the strong public opinion existing, and the feeling that injustice had been done.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In view of the decision in this matter, I presume the minister is prepared to pay every fisherman in the Dominion who had his property confiscated for illegal work. I have a large number of gentlemen whose loss was proportionably as great as the Nobles, but they never squealed and took their medicine like men, I presume the minister will pay their claims.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In view of the frequent violations of the regulations, the department has dealt fairly leniently with all parties. The department generally stands by its officers in carrying out their duties. I may say that it would cost us very little if we could compromise on the same percentage as this, with almost all the violaters of the Act.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). What was the original claim?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it was something over $100,000.

Mr. BENNETT. If the case was one of such extreme severity, how was it that it took five years before an inquiry was granted?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. An inquiry and some mitigation had been granted under the Conservative government, and a minister does not like to reopen a question that has been decided by his predecessor. I believe it was due to the strong public opinion that existed that a judicial inquiry should be held.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to be a rather remarkable thing that a reference should have been made in these terms, when in other departments of government it has been impossible to get fiats granted for the enforcement of claims purely on legal grounds. Three years ago twenty-four claims were presented to the Postmaster General in which the people only asked a legal enforcement of their rights, but a fiat has not yet been granted, while this claim has been referred to a special commissioner with the proviso that he is to report not only the legal rights of the parties, but also as to whether, apart from legal considerations, they have a fair claim against the government. This commissioner has found that these gentlemen pleaded guilty to the offence; that the seizure of their boats was justified in law, but notwithstanding the minister proposes to pay them $18,000 on account of certain considerations. If that favour be granted to these men, it is remarkable that twenty-four other Canadians who have claims against the government in respect to post office contracts are not allowed to enforce their legal claims in the courts of the country, simply because some minister refuses to report favourably on the granting of a fiat. Can the Minister of Marine explain why one practice prevails in his department and a practice of so remarkably a different character prevails in the department of the Postmaster General ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think I can explain the ways of the law. The members of the legal profession are very peculiar sometimes and if the Postmaster General were present he no doubt would be able to give his reasons. However, this was a departmental matter, and it could have been dealt with by the department at the time of the offence by inflicting a much smaller penalty. Personally, I always have been willing, both in the management of public affairs and my own private affairs, that a fair hearing should be given to both sides of case, with the view of arriving at a fair settlement. Speaking for myself, and not belonging to the legal profession, unless it is a question of policy on which the government and parliament takes a stand, I am inclined to think that I would be always in favour of referring these matters to a proper tribunal for hearing rather than have them stand before the department for a long period, resulting in costs both to the country and to the parties themselves.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the matters to which I have referred are just as much of a departmental character as this. The Postmaster General saw fit to cancel contracts entered into for the carriage of mails, and the persons whose contracts are cancelled are advised by counsel that the Postmaster General had no right to do so. They applied for a petition of right to assert their claims, but years have passed and they have not received a single word of satisfaction. The Noble Brothers were offered six years ago a fiat in the Court of Exchequer which they did not want because they knew they could not succeed, but these other men have been vainly trying to obtain that for three years past. After having refused a fiat these gentlemen were allowed to have their claims investigated by a special commissioner, not upon the question of legal liability but on grounds infinitely more favourable to them.

I have not had an opportunity of reading the report of the commissioner very fully. I understand that the recommendation he makes to the government is that this claim should be paid to these men, because an officer of the government acted wilfully and in bad faith, and misled the deputy minister of Marine and Fisheries at that time as to the real facts of the case, and he has no doubt that if the real facts had been communicated to the department at that time the forfeiture would not have been enforced. Well, I do not know whether or not any claim could have been made against the government in the Court of Exchequer on that ground. I should think not. I have not considered the question, but I should think that the claim, so far as there could be a legal claim, would be against the officer himself, and that the government would not be responsible for a wilfully wrong act done by this man against these people. I suppose the Crown in that case is not legally liable, even on the report of this commissioner; and it is only as a matter of grace and favour that this vote is being put before the House at the present time. But I rose merely for the purpose of contrasting the consideration granted to these men with the utter lack of consideration granted to the men of whom I have spoken, who have been for three years asking for the right to file a petition in the Exchequer Court for the purpose of obtaining only their rights, and for no favour or grace of any kind whatever.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Was there any reason why there should have been a special commissioner in this case, or why it should not have been tried in the Exchequer Court? I understand that a fiat had been offered to these gentlemen for a number of years. If they had a legal claim, I cannot see why it was not referred to the judge of the Exchequer Court, and it looks as if they were afraid to go before him, and wanted a special commissioner who might be more favourable to them. Is there any reason why it should not have gone to the Exchequer Court ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far as I have been able to form an opinion, I do not think they would have had much chance of succeeding purely on legal grounds, and I think it was a wise act on the part of the government, if the matter was to be considered at all, to refer it to a judge of the High Court to take evidence; and he has found that the department were not in possession of all the knowledge they should have had, or perhaps their decision would have been different. I think it is rather commendable than otherwise that the matter was taken away from here and referred to a judge who was altogether independent.

Mr. BENNETT. It is simply like kicking a dead cat to discuss the matter now, because the minister is not at all responsible for what has been done, and I suppose the government are bound by the finding of the judge. But I can only say that if the last Minister of Marine and Fisheries were standing here and trying to get this vote through, it would certainly be a matter of wonderment why this claim, if it was a fair and honest claim, was allowed to stand for five years without any action being taken in regard to it. It was not because the claim was not pressed, because the Nobles were haunting the corridors for weeks endeavouring to get this claim through.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the Minister of Justice considered whether the report of the commissioner discloses any legal liability on the part of the Crown?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have not looked into the matter very fully. According to the report, the whole proceedings were the result of a conspiracy started by this man Elliott. The learned judge finds that the fishery overseer deliberately plotted to bring about the ruin of the Nobles in accordance with threats which he had previously made to outside parties, and he goes on to say :

In my opinion, if the facts as they have been made to appear before me in the sworn testimony of many of the witnesses, and in the exhibts filed, had been present to the mind of the minister, such severe treatment would not have been dealt out to the Nobles. The seizure would have been abandoned.

Then he goes on to say:

The said overseer Elliott acted in bad faith, with malice and with a desire to injure and destroy the business of the said Nobles. He wilfully made false and misleading reports to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

He further goes on:

I find that the evidence given before me by the said Elliott was not given with candour or truth, and I distributed it when in conflict with the evidence of reputable witnesses.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Might I ask, is that officer Elliott still in the service of the government ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not know.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I think he is, and I wish to state that he is just as reputable as any judge who took evidence concerning him.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford).

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Then I find it stated that they pleaded guilty, and a witness who was examined before the commissioner, a man named Long, said that they pleaded guilty on an undertaking being practically given to them by a solicitor of the government at the time, that the result of a plea of guilty would be a favourable report to the Minister of Marine at Ottawa, and that this would restore them to their former standing. It seems to me, under all the circumstances, that there was something sufficiently peculiar in the whole case to justify the action of the department in referring it to the commissioner.

Mr. BENNETT. I have not gone into the evidence fully, but it will be borne out by the report that there was one conviction got against these people. Let me ask the Minister of Justice how he reconciles these facts, that there was a sweeping condemnation of the witness Elliott by the inspector, and that there was leave and license for the solicitor of the Noble Brothers to say what he liked to this man. Time and again it appears that after the witness gave his evidence frankly and candidly—and I searched all through the evidence in vain to see where the commissioners remonstrated with him for not telling the truth—Mr. Osler charged him with having stated a series of deliberate lies. The commission did not seem to have any air or dignity about it at all events. If the commissioners had the evidence of such a gross conspiracy against the unfortunate Noble Brothers, how is it that Sir Louis Davies could not find a tittle of proof to establish such a conspiracy in spite of all the efforts of so able a counsel as Mr. Osler. Take all the evidence before Judge Johnson and Mr. Wilmot, before whom Mr. Osler appeared on behalf of the Noble Brothers, and it is quite clear that Mr. Osler failed to make any proof that would justify Sir Louis Davies in concluding that there was anything savouring of conspiracy. This fact stands out strongly, that with all this evidence before him, Sir Louis Davies refrained during five years from naming any other inquiry. In every section of the country where the Noble Brothers are known, it will be agreed that it was not a question of merit or justice, but rather a question of political pull.

To pay the estate of the late Captain W. H. Smith, R.N.R., for travelling expenses incurred by him on government business while holding the position of chairman of the Board of Examiners of Masters and Mates, and Inquiries into Wrecks, between January, 1893, and December, 1900, Captain Smith having failed to render his accounts for such expenses each year, $3,691.69.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that Captain Smith was engaged holding inquiries and was not paid his travelling expenses and I think they ought to be paid.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We made a very careful investigation. The officer of the department at Halifax, Mr. Tremaine, looked into the matter, and gave his affidavit that Captain Smith never collected his travelling expenses and that the amount was legally due.

Some resolutions reported.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 12.20 a.m. Tuesday.

Bill (No. 160) to incorporate the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 158) to incorporate the Union Life Insurance Company.—Mr. Ingram.

SALARIES OF THE FRENCH TRANSLATORS OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. L. N. CHAMPAGNE (Wright) moved that the fourth report of the Select Standing Committee appointed to supervise the official report of the debates of this House during the present session, be now concurred in. He said: The report speaks for itself. It recommends:

1. That the salary, viz., $1,200, now paid to Mr. Wilfrid Larose for his services as Chief Translator of the Debates be increased to $2,000 per annum, it being understood that the said chief translator shall, as heretofore, be responsible for the management of the office and the making of the index to the French edition of the Debates.

2. That the present salary of $1,000 paid to each member of the staff of translators of the Debates, be increased to $1,500 per annum.

3. That the above mentioned increases date from the beginning of the present session.

As chairman of the Debates Committee, a few words of explanation from myself may be required in support of the action which has been taken by the committee. These employees have been petitioning the committee for a couple of years for an increase of salary. They came before the committee last year and put their claims before us. The question was fully discussed, but it was thought advisable at that time to postpone the matter. They came before the committee again this year urging that they were entitled to an increase of salary, that the salary which was allowed them was not in proportion to the salaries given to other officers of this House, and that for all the reasons set forth in their petition, they were entitled to an increase. After having fully considered the matter, the members of the committee unanimously came to the conclusion that they were entitled to some increase. The translators asked for an increase of $1,000, which would mean a salary of $2,000 a year. The committee granted them an increase of $500, which would mean a salary of $1,500 a year; this decision was unanimously arrived at by the committee, and we now come before the House and the government asking that the necessary appropriation be made. I need not remind the House, Mr. Speaker, that unless exceptional reasons of a serious character can be shown to the contrary, the report of the committee ought to be adopted. I think that rule has been laid down before the House and accepted on many occasions. This committee have thought fit to recommend to the House and to the government an increase in the salary of these employees. If the government wish to take control of these employees, well and good, I for one as chairman of the committee would not have the slightest objection; but so long as they remain under the control of the Debates Committee the suggestions of that committee with respect to their position ought be endorsed by the House and the government. I may perhaps be permitted to remind the House of the expression of opinion which was given on the subject as far back as 1884, by members of the House and members of the government, who stated at that time that these translators were deserving of more salary than they were getting. I might quote Mr. Coursol, Sir Hector Langevin and the Hon. Edward Blake, who expressed the opinion that these gentlemen were not sufficiently rewarded for their services. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the government will take steps to carry the recommendation of the committee into effect. We may be told that it is rather late in the session. But I may say that in 1900 we came before the House with a report recommending that the remuneration of these translators be increased by $250 on account of the unusual length of that session. It was not then considered too late in the session to take action. The report was adopted by the House on July 17, and prorogation took place the next day. I have no doubt, that if the government desire to be fair towards these gentlemen they will take the necessary means, either by inserting an item in the supplementary estimates or otherwise, to give them the increase to which we think they are entitled.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Mr. Speaker, this question of the indemnity which is allowed to the translators is not a new one, because I remember very well that for the last ten or twelve years, or since I have been a member of the Debates Committee, this same question has been brought to our attention. Though the committee felt they would be justified in recommending an increase of salary to these gentlemen at a time, I may say, when the work performed by some of them was not satisfactory, the committee did not take action on account of a certain element that then was on the Board of Translators, and on account of the dissatisfaction which they had created by the work they were performing. The whole board, I may say, has since been reorganized. We have now men who are perfectly qualified to do the work, who do the work and do it well. The fact of the matter is that for two or three years we have had a translation that is remarkably good and very acceptable to hon. members. The committee, having looked into the matter, have thought that now was the time to do justice to these gentlemen. What are they recommending? The committee are recommending that these gentlemen should be paid on an average the sum of $1,500, which is not beyond the maximum salary of a second class clerk. I believe that this House will be generous enough to pay these men, who are all men of high standing in literature, at least a salary equivalent to that of a second class clerk employed by the government or by this House. I believe, Sir, that though this may appear to be a pretty stiff increase, the committee has thought proper to fix at once such an indemnity to be given to these gentlemen as that they would not come back next year or the year after for a further increase. We want to settle the question for once and for all, and I think we have done so. I hope that the government and the House will approve of the work of the committee and adopt the report which is now placed before them.

Mr. FLINT. May I ask the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Champagne) if this is the unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. CHAMPAGNE. Yes.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, I can corroborate the statement made by the hon. chairman of the Debates Committee (Mr. Champagne) that it was the unanimous opinion of the committee, in view of the quality of the work that is now being done by these gentlemen, that an increase should be made in their remuneration. Those who are competent to speak upon the subject say that the work is being better done now than ever before, and more promptly as well, and in view of what has been said by the hon. gentlemen who have just spoken and of the opinion that has prevailed for many years on the part of the committee that these gentlemen are not paid an adequate remuneration for the work they perform, I think it would be very reasonable to make the increase which the committee have asked the House to make. I hope hon. gentlemen will see their way clear to support this report recommending an increase in the remuneration of these gentlemen.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which is more in the hands of the House than it is in the hands of the government. The House has thought proper, and with good reason, to keep in its own hands everything in connection with the reporting of the debates of the House. The reporting is not done under the supervision of the government; it is done directly under the supervision of the House through a committee which is appointed every year for that purpose. The government have no wish to offer any opposition to this recommendation, but the government will be bound to consider carefully the report of the House and give it the proper authority. I may say, personally for myself, as a member of this House, that the present committee which has undertaken for a number of years back to supervise the debates of the House, has done it in a manner that has reflected great credit upon itself. The translation of the debates some years ago was very inadequate, but the committee has adopted a new system altogether, by introducing the competitive system into the appointments. Appointments are not made now for political reasons. They are just made upon merit. Whenever a vacancy occurs applicants are called upon by the committee to pass an examination, and the most successful competitor gets the reward.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. This has done a great deal to improve the translation of the debates. I remember that some years ago it was an annual complaint on the part of the French members that they could not get their reports, and that when they came they were not only late but they came in a very imperfect manner. This year I have not heard a single word of complaint and not only have I not heard any complaint, but there could not be a word of complaint, because, from my own personal knowledge of the translation, it is very well done. I do not think that it could be better done in the short space of time which the staff has to do it in. They are keeping to the point and they are now doing the work in time. They are never behind. For all these considerations, for my part, I would be very glad to favour the adoption of the report. I may say, however, that I am afraid we could not give for this session the desired increase. We are, as we hope, within a few days of prorogation, the estimates are all prepared and in the hands of the printer to be introduced here at a very early date and it would be extremely awkward and perhaps would retard the blessed day of prorogation if we were to reopen them for this question. With this suggestion and with these observations, I have no objection that the report should be adopted.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 161) respecting the incorporation of Joint Stock Companies by letters patent.—Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 162) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.

Mr. BOYD. I would like the hon. gentleman to give us an explanation in regard to the changes.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The Bill is simply intended to bring the funds under the control of the department. We have had a good deal of trouble hitherto owing to there being a deficiency in the funds. Various demands have been made on the consolidated revenue fund to make good the accounts in connection with the working of the Act. I do not think that will occur again under the present regulations. The money will go into the consolidated revenue fund and be distributed in the ordinary way. That is the only provision that I have introduced, but there will be certain amendments, of which due notice will be given, of a more important character brought up when the Bill takes its second reading. At the present, I am merely introducing the Bill that is printed and of which notice is given.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

MEDICAL COUNCIL IN CANADA.

Mr. T. G. RODDICK (Montreal, St. Antoine). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called I should like to ask my right hon. friend, the First Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) whether he has any announcement to make to the House in reference to the further consideration of Bill (No. 11) for the establishment of a medical council in Canada. It will be remembered that this Bill was withheld after passing through the committee stage with the exception of one clause, at the distinct request of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. I am very anxious if possible to proceed with the Bill now, because I understand that if it does not reach the Senate to-day or at the latest to-morrow, it will be impossible to have it become law during the present session.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am most anxious to oblige my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick) and I will try to give him an opportunity of moving his Bill to-morrow, in the evening. I hope the business of the House will be such as to warrant it, and if both sides desire it of course I shall raise no objection.

THE COASTING TRADE.

House went into committee on the following resolution :—

That it is expedient to amend the law respecting the coasting trade of Canada, and to exclude a foreign-built British ship from that trade unless it has obtained a license, which the Minister of Customs may grant, upon the payment of a duty of twenty-five (25) per cent ad valorem on the fair market value of the ship.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson). This is an amendment to the law by which a foreign-built ship that is going to engage in the coasting trade of Canada shall have to make application for a license, which will be granted upon payment of 25 per cent of the value of the vessel.

Resolution reported.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 142) further to amend the General Inspecton Act (the Minister of Trade and Commerce) ; read the second time ; considered in Committee ; reported ; read the third time and passed.

PACKING AND SALE OF STAPLE COMMODITIES.

Bill (No. 141) to amend the Act respecting the sale of certain staple commodities (the Minister of Trade and Commerce), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. TAYLOR. Quite a number of dealers hold stocks of this article for two or three years, and of course the twine they have on hand cannot be stamped under the provisions of this Bill. It would be well to have a saving clause so that dealers will not be penalized under this Act for selling stock which they have on hand.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That is perhaps a good suggestion.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I agree with my hon. friend

(Mr. Taylor) that dealers who are innocent of any wrong-doing should not be punished under this Act. There should be a provision so that it would not apply to the stock of twine on hand.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It does not do to draft these amendments hurriedly, and so I will defer it until the next sitting of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. Very well.

Progress reported.

MOUNTED POLICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 147) to amend the Mounted Police Act, 1894 (the Prime Minister) read the second time, considered in committee, reported, read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Indians, British Columbia—Medical attendance and medicines (Governor General's warrant), $12,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). This was due to an outbreak of small-pox.

North-west Mounted Police, $100,000.

Mr. WILSON. There ought to be an explanation of this additional estimate.

The PRIME MINISTER. Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The appropriation last year for the North-west Mounted Police was something like $400,000 or $450,000. This is an appropriation for 500 men at $800 a year. We were not able last year to keep within the appropriation, and this was due to two causes. First, we were obliged to increase the number of stations, as we have a very much larger area than before to police. We have 86 police stations, distributed all over the territories, as compared with 83 in previous years. The largest number of stations are on the boundary between the territories and Montana and Dakota, where we have to keep a larger force on account of the increasing communications between the two sides. Then, in the Macleod district, where there are large ranches, we have a very large force, which we have not been able to decrease. There are also several Indian reserves in this district which require constant supervision. Then we had to put up a new station at the eastern boundary adjoining Manitoba, where railway construction is now going on. We have also to keep up a large number of stations north of the Saskatchewan towards the Mackenzie river. Great Slave Lake is the station furthest north, and probably we will require a new station at the mouth of the Mackenzie. We are covering the whole of the territories, which causes larger expenditure in travelling expenses, as we have to keep our men continually on the move. At Regina we have about 60 men, at some points ten men, at other five, and at the majority of stations one or two men. These men have to be kept moving all the time. If we could keep the men always at the same stations, the expenditure would be very much decreased, but in order to properly police the territories, and keep the force well disciplined, the men have to be constantly on the move. Another cause of increased expenditure is the changes in the force necessitated by the drafts on it to supply men for Africa. The force has proved the best nucleus for the different contingents that went to that country. The material of the force is not better than that obtained elsewhere, but the men have the advantage of experience, and of being accustomed to the use of horses and being able to shift for themselves under all circumstances. For the last three years we have been depleting the force on this account and taking in raw recruits, who had to be instructed, and could not give as good service as the veterans. This has obliged us to keep up a system of recruiting, and a system of moving the men about more than would otherwise have been necessary.

Department of the Interior—contingencies—printing and stationery, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The department sent its deputy to England in connection with immigration, and he found it necessary to expend $35,000 for printing and advertising. On account of the considerably larger number this year than usual of immigrants from the United States and foreign countries, we have to spend $10,000 more in various items than we did last year. It will take about $10,000 to cover the additional expenditure.

Mr. WILSON. Would the hon. Minister give the statement I asked for, showing the salaries of the immigration agents in Great Britain and Ireland, the United States, and on the continent ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The following is the list :

Mr. WILSON. Perhaps the minister would tell us on what principle he grades the salaries. He is paying men all the way from $500 to $3,000 a year, and he ought to be able to explain how he arrives at the amount in each case.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They are supposed to be paid according to their capacity and ability to do the work. If salaries are raised it is because of satisfactory and efficient service, just as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilson) would raise the salary of an efficient man who was working for him.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think that is a very satisfactory explanation. Mr. Devlin, for instance, is only an ordinary immigration agent in Ireland—at least, that is the statement made in this House and to the committee ; yet he is paid $3,000 a year. Yet, Mr. Preston, who has charge of the whole business over there, is only getting the same salary. The deputy minister, who is at the head of the whole department, only gets $200 a year more than Mr. Devlin, while the superintendant of immigration gets $500 less. It does seem to me there ought to be some explanation why a man who is given a small territory should be thus singled out. I recollect very well the minister's speech when this was up before the House on a former occasion, when he spoke of Mr. Devlin's great ability. But if this officer is such an able man, surely the minister ought to give him something else to do than to fill the place of immigration agent in a small territory, from which, as I am reminded by an hon. friend near me, he secures but few immigrants anyway. The expenditure on the service in Ireland was about $18,000, and, according to Mr. Devlin's own report, the immigrants he and his fellow agents secured from Ireland numbered only 953. I must say that the explanation is not at all satisfactory.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The hon. gentleman has several times asked me the same question, and I have given him about the same answer. It has not been satisfactory to him, apparently, in the past, so I can hardly say I am much disappointed that he is not wholly pleased now. I do not think the hon. gentleman can get a man of Mr. Devlin's ability and capacity to give his services——

Mr. WILSON. Will the minister excuse me if I interrupt him ? Why then does he not give Mr. Devlin a position where he can display his abilities, and earn the salary that he is giving him, instead of putting him in an out of the way place——

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We put him where we think he can do the best work.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. I attended the meeting of the committee, and heard the report of the deputy minister in connection with immigration. And, as a new member of the House, I was very much pleased with the arrangements made for England, Ireland and Scotland, as explained by the deputy minister. As our effort is to settle a new country, much depends upon our immigration policy, and the way it is carried out. We find that, in some cases, immigrants make a great deal of trouble, because they are not the right kind of people for us. It is an old saying that an empty house is better than a bad tenant, and I think I would rather have our land unoccupied than to have it settled by some classes of immigrants. The work of the department, as far as I can judge, is well done. There is a great deal of work ahead for the men engaged in this service, and the future of Canada depends in no small measure on the way that work is done.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Devlin is described by the minister as a very clever man and an efficient officer. It seems a little strange to me that before the deputy minister went to England to rearrange the whole system, he gave Mr. Devlin two months' leave of absence,—the result being that when the deputy minister was in England Mr. Devlin was in Canada. If Mr. Devlin is so able a man as he is represented to be, surely it would be greatly to the advantage of the service for the deputy minister to meet him, talk matters over with him, and get his help in making arrangements for the future. Strange to say, the officials of this government are very anxious to have the whole Atlantic between Mr. Devlin and themselves.

Geological Survey—To provide for the salary of a geologist to accompany the International Boundary Survey from July 1, 1901, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are surveying the boundary line between the province of British Columbia and the United States. This necessitates the sending out of an expensively equipped party. We save a good deal of money by geological examination at the same time. We send a geologist along with the boundary survey party, instead of later on sending a geologist with a party of his own. I have secured the services of a very competent man, Mr. Daly, who is a Canadian by birth, but has been connected with Harvard University.

Mr. WILSON. Has he been employed since the 1st July, 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He has been employed since last season. He was paid out of the Geological Survey vote last year.

Mr. WILSON. I have known Dr. Daly for a long time—in fact, I think he was born in our town. He has taken a very high position at college, and is a worthy man, and I have no doubt he will make a most efficient officer. I am delighted to think that our young Canadians are employed in the high places in our own government departments.

Government of the North-west Territories—additional amount required for registrars, $1,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Please explain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount of work in the registry office in the North-west Territories is increasing very rapidly, owing to the improvement in settlement and the general increase in the number of transfers, and the registration of patents. An inspection was made by an officer of the department some time ago, and it was found the work was falling behind, and we had to employ some temporary assistance. Although we shall have to increase the staff considerably, it does not involve any additional burden upon the exchequer, because there are increased profits, and in proportion as the work increases the profits increase.

Additional grant for schools, clerical assistance, printing, &c., for the half year from January 1 to June 30, 1902, $50,000.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That $50,000 is a subsidy to the North-west Territories. Hon. gentlemen will remember that we had quite a lengthy debate in Committee of Supply during this session upon the subject of the financial requirements of the North-west Territories. I think the sense of the committee generally on both sides of the House was that something further should be done than had theretofore been contemplated by the government. The information furnished us is to the effect that the North-west government, perhaps unwisely, have to a considerable extent anticipated their revenue for the present six months, and that they will be seriously embarrassed in carrying on their business if they do not get some relief for the first six months of this year. The money voted in the main estimates as a subsidy for the North-west Territories only becomes available on the 1st of July. But their fiscal year corresponds with the calendar year, and therefore the increase in the subsidies which we are voting them will not take effect practically until the middle of this year, and will not be available for the whole of this year. We have thought it well to make it effective for the whole of the calendar year by voting one-half the amount in the supplementary estimates for the current fiscal year, which will apply to the six months between the 1st of January and the 1st of July.

Mr. WILSON. Do you hand this money over to the North-west government ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, just the same as a subsidy, and they deal with it themselves.

Dominion Lands—chargeable to capital—further amount required for surveys, $80,000.

Mr. BOYD. There is a question or two I wish to discuss with the minister, and they can come under this head I think. I would like to know if it is the intention of the government to pay over certain moneys to the provincial government of Manitoba, certain accrued interests, and if it will be necessary to introduce legislation in order to do that ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I am not in a position to say positively. I know it has been decided to pay the money over, and I think the Department of Justice is considering whether legislation is required. I can see the Minister of Justice and give an answer this afternoon.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I understand a deputation waited on the minister when he was in Winnipeg, and he promised to pay this interest ; but I think he also told them that legislation would be necessary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is quite true ; I remember saying on different occasions that legislation might be necessary, and my recollection is that the question was referred to the Department of Justice.

The PRIME MINISTER. I think I can satisfy my hon. friend about this. The matter is in the hands of the Department of Justice at this moment. I understand their opinion is that it is simply a matter of book-keeping ; it is not money of this country, it is money that belongs to the province of Manitoba.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). That means that no legislation is required ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no final report, but that is my impression now. At all events, the matter has not been forgotten, we are dealing with it.

Mr. BOYD. There is another question in regard to the sale of school lands that took place some time ago in Manitoba. I would like to know if the minister could tell me how many of those sales he has cancelled ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not a question which I can answer now. But there is no difficulty about ascertaining the number of sales cancelled, the names and the parcels of land referred to, and I can give the information tomorrow.

Mr. BOYD. There is a certain sale I wish to discuss with the minister, that is the sale of the North-west quarter of section 11, 8-14 west. Has the minister any information regarding that particular sale to show whether a man named Thornbury gets that land ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I could not answer a question like that without looking at the records. I can tell the hon. gentleman this afternoon.

Mr. BOYD. We will drop that for the present. Then there is another question regarding the interest on the sales of school lands, which interest was lowered from 6 per cent to 5 per cent. Now, as we understand it in Manitoba, and as the Premier has said, the money, or the land either for that matter, does not belong to this government, they are merely acting as trustees. Well, those lands have been sold in the past, and on the last sale that took place it was advertised that the interest should be 6 per cent. By an Act passed last session that interest was lowered to 5 per cent. The Minister of the Interior, in his speech last session, said that the interest on Dominion lands should be lowered to 5 per cent. Well, the school lands are not looked upon as Dominion lands, and when the minister made that statement in the House last session it was not understood that it was to affect the sale of school lands. The effect of that arrangement is to take $25,000 a year out of the funds of the province of Manitoba ; and the effect on the last sale has been that the men who bought those lands expecting to have to pay 6 per cent find that, by the generosity of this government, they only have to pay 5 per cent. I think that the government of Manitoba and those of the people who are not benefited feel that they are losing to that extent. If those people who bought the land were aware that this was to take effect and that they were to be affected benefically by it they certainly had information that enabled them to pay higher prices for the land than others who were under the impression, that, according to the advertisement, the rate of interest was going to be 6 per cent.

The PRIME MINISTER. It is a question whether or not the Act which was passed last session applies to school lands as well as to Dominion lands. I supposed it would be applied to all lands sold by the government. In the matter of school lands we are trustees of the fund, we administer it and we are bound to pay the interest over to the provincial government. Of course, if the interest is at the rate of 5 per cent instead of 6 per cent, the provincial government will lose that much, but the settlers will gain that much. I do not think it would be conducive to any good result if one class of lands were sold at 5 per cent, and another class at 6 per cent. I think the rate ought to be equal generally. My hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) knows that the rate of interest is not like the laws of the Medes and Persians; it is not eternal, it is largely the result of the conditions of the country, and as the country improves and progresses the rate of interest decreases. I am very glad to say that that is the condition in Manitoba to-day. There is no intention of injuring anybody, no intention of doing any wrong to the government of the province of Manitoba, but my hon. friend, I think, will agree that lands ought to be sold to settlers on the most favourable conditions. I would be surprised to hear him ask us to restore the old rate of 6 per cent. I should think that he would rather have the lands sold at 5 per cent, and if possible at 4 per cent. I am quite sure that it was never the intention of the legislature, that, when it created the trust in respect to these lands in 1872, the rate of interest should remain for ever at 6 per cent. It was intended that the rate of interest should move with the times. The rate of interest is now placed at 5 per cent and I hope that the time will come in Manitoba when we shall be able to sell land, not at 5 per cent, but at 4 per cent and at 3 per cent even. I hope the condition of the country will warrant such a result and that as the country advances and progresses that it will become possible. But, as to the rate at present, there can be no discrimination between school lands and lands sold for settlers. There would be great discontent if two men went to a land agent to buy land and one man bought a pre-emption at 5 per cent while his neighbour bought school lands at 6 per cent. Such a discrimination would lead to discontent and it would not be in the public interest.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has admitted that the Dominion government are only acting as trustees for the Manitoba government so far as school lands are concerned. In that case I think it would have been only proper and fair to have consulted the provincial authorities as to the reduction in the rate of interest when they were acting as trustees. The Dominion government have reduced the rate of interest without consulting the local authorities in Manitoba. These school lands do not belong to the Dominion government, they are simply acting as trustees and I think it would only have been proper to have consulted the local legislature as to the reduction in the rate of interest. From one point of view what the right hon. gentleman says may be correct. If it is the settler who derives the benefit there would not be very much objection, but that is a disputed point, because, at any sales of school lands, speculators have been the purchasers and they have derived the benefit. If we were assured that the settlers would derive the benefit of the reduction in the rate of interest we would not object, but these speculators have purchased the lands and they have derived the benefit. We would not object so much to the reduction of interest in the interest of the settler, but so far as making the reduction was concerned, I think it was not fair to include sales that had already taken place because the purchasers bought under certain terms knowing that they would have to pay 6 per cent. We object to an Act of parliament being made to apply to past sales and we also say that the provincial authorities should have been consulted before any reduction in the rate of interest was made as this reduction entails a loss of $25,000 per annum to the province.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The statement was made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Roche), and it certainly has been made in criticising this transaction in other places, that the beneficiaries of the change in the rate of interest were the speculators who purchased the land. There is absolutely no foundation for that statement. I have at this moment figures in my possession which prove that practically all the land that was affected, almost all with the most trifling exceptions, was purchased by actual settlers, men who live either on the adjoining land or in the neighborhood of such land, so that the reduction in the rate of interest has enured, practically, almost without exception, to the benefit of actual farmers and settlers in the neighbourhood. I need only say one word as to the question of what the obligation of the government is. I have always taken the position that the province ought to benefit as largely as possible by this fund. I have always taken a strong position in that respect. I very cordially favour the province deriving the largest possible benefit from the fund. In regard to the money we were discussing a moment ago, that is the interest accruing on the deferred payments, I very cordially favour that accruing to the province to the greatest possible extent. But, it must be remembered that this government have been charged with a duty in connection with the management of this fund. The province is not responsible in any way. We are responsible for the rate of interest charged against the people who purchase the land, and for my part, I think, in view of the general reduction in the rate of interest all over the country, a reduction from 6 to 5 per cent, it would have been quite indefensible, it would have been taking a position quite impossible to satisfactorily explain or defend, if we had still required persons who are owing us in connection with these sales, to have paid 6 per cent. I am quite satisfied, speaking as the head of the department, that the result simply would have been that there would have been an interminable correspondence with persons who had purchased that land making claims for refunds on the ground that they had not been fairly treated, with the result that somebody ultimately would have had to have given way. I felt that the question should be considered. I think the change will prove a benefit to the provincial government in the long run. I believe the reduction will produce more money because the principal money will be larger by reason of increased sales and this will more than counterbalance any reduction in the rate of interest. Whether that is so or not, I think my hon. friend (Mr. Roche) will agree with me that the action of the government in reducing the rate of interest from 6 to 5 per cent has been worth a great deal of money to the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories in view of the general effect it has had in the reduction of interest, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, the amount payable in interest by the people of the west is a very heavy charge.

Allowance to L. E. Fontaine for injuries sustained in the discharge of his duty $1,654.75.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This man was accidentally shot through his tent by one of the hands in connection with a party and we have allowed him his pay for the portion of the season when he was unable to perform his duty on account of being disabled.

To provide for a gratuity to the widow and family of the late Nathan White, accidentally killed by a government employee when on duty in 1892, $750.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is a case that was brought before me four or five times and I finally came to the conclusion that it ought to be dealt with—the case of a man who was shot by an officer of the geological survey. He was sent out by the department to make collections, and he hired Nathan White to convey him from place to place, and when the officer was getting out of the rig his pistol went off and White was instantly killed. The matter was brought before me a number of times and perhaps I did not understand it as fully as I should. However, it was insisted upon and I became convinced that this amount would not be too much.

Mr. TAYLOR. Under the circumstances the amount is quite too small for the loss of a husband and father.

Relief of destitute settlers in Saskatchewan, $5,000.

Mr. WILSON. Please explain this.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A flood occurred a year ago at Isle of the Cross in the northern portion of the territory. One of our inspectors whom we sent there reported that owing to the flood the settlers had been driven from their homes, their crops destroyed, and they were in the greatest possible distress. To save them from starvation our officer made an arrangement with the Hudson Bay Company to give them such provisions as were absolutely necessary. We have not got the bill but we expect that it will be about this amount.

Mr. WILSON. What kind of settlers were they ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Half-breeds.

Mr. WILSON. I do not think that any one can object to the vote under the circumstances.

Relief of destitute miners, Dease and Liard rivers, $4,364.23.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This is the balance which we think is properly due to the Hudson Bay Company. The company claimed a good deal more and I referred their claim to Mr. Stevenson, inspector of Dominion lands, who is a good accountant, and to the deputy minister, and they reported that this sum should pay the balance due. The company was not satisfied and they have taken the matter to court.

Mr. WILSON. How much was paid ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. They claimed $10,000 more, but I could not admit it in the face of the report of my officers. If they prove it in court of course we will have to pay it.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I would like to know from the minister what quantity of swamp lands has been examined by his officers ; the number of acres that are due the provincial government, and the number of acres that have been handed over already ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will get that information in the morning.

Excise, $7,000.

Mr. BOYD. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister of Inland Revenue to the importance of doing something with reference to the weighing of grain coming from the threshing machine. This is a matter which is of much greater importance than the department seems to think, and I just wish to refer to a case which occurred in court on account of this. This clipping is from the 'North-west Farmer.'

At Nepawa the other day, John H. Howard sued T. Poole and John Ducklow, for his threshing bill. Both of them set up the usual defence that the grain was not measured in accordance with the Dominion statutes, and therefore they could get from under their obligation to pay for the work. This defence of course blocked the court from dealing with the case on its merits, and the plaintiff was nonsuited.

As I have mentioned to the House before, it is altogether impossible to deal with these threshing machines and measure the grain according to the standard prescribed by the department. You could scarcely put enough men with bushel measures around one of these threshing machines, which put out from 2,000 to 3,000 bushels in a day, to measure the grain. These machines are provided with automatic measuring appliances, and I think the government should instruct their officers to use these before the next crop is threshed, so that this injustice may be removed. It does not matter what bargain a man may make with the owner of a threshing machine, all he has to do is to fall back on the plea that the grain was not weighed according to the Dominion statutes, and refuse to pay. Here are two men who avoided payment in this way, although they understood perfectly the system and the bargain that was made with them. It is a great injustice, and it will be a great hindrance to the country if we have to go back to the primitive style of handling grain by means of the ordinary bushel measure.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Some years ago one of our inspectors was instructed to inspect one of these weighing machines, and it was found to be so imperfect that he would not certify to its results ; but recently I have received information that within a short time a proper scale will be perfected, for attachment to weighing machines, and will be ready for use next season. Some weeks ago a manufacturer of these weighing machines was in the department, and from the way he spoke, and from information which we have received from our own officers in Winnipeg, we are in a position to state that within a few months, or before next session opens, that difficulty will be remedied.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). The last time I had a conversation with the hon. minister he mentioned that an officer of his in Winnipeg was coming to Ottawa with a new machine. Has he arrived yet ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Not yet. We expect him within the next week or two. He says that the weighing machine, to the best of his belief, is perfect, and will be ready to be attached to threshing machines within a few months.

Militia—annual drill and musketry, including clothing and stores ; further amount required $200,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is the usual vote for drill for the balance of the current year. It is the custom to divide the vote into two parts—$275,000 in the main estimates and $125,000 in the supplementaries. Then, there is a supplementary vote for clothing and a supplementary vote for stores. This year I have put the three votes together in order to afford a little more elasticity, so that if a smaller amount happens to be used for annual drill, a larger amount will be available for clothing and stores, as we are endeavouring to increase our supplies of clothing and stores in order to establish a reserve. Now that we have a large store building completed in Ottawa, it is very desirable that we should have a larger reserve than we have. This vote of $200,000 is less than the amounts voted for similar purposes last year.

Mr. WILSON. Can the hon. minister state what portion of this is for clothing and what portion for drill ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. $125,000 is the usual amount for drill, and about $75,000 is for clothing and stores, but I do not wish it to be understood that all of the vote for annual drill will be used. If not, the balance may be used for clothing and stores.

Militia—salaries and wages ; further amount required, $14,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This sum is required on account of the increased wages paid. Most of the men who have been getting $1 a day now get $1.25 or $1.50. We could not retain them without increasing their pay.

Mr. WILSON. What is their business ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Taking care of the stores, rifle ranges, drill halls, &c., all over the country. During the current year we have appointed a man at London to take care of the rifle range, a man at Brockville to take care of the drill hall, a man at St. John to take care of the rifle range, a man at Springhill to take care of the armoury, and a man at Kentville to take care of the armoury.

Mr. WILSON. Do you have men employed by the year to take care of armouries ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. You do not pay officers for that ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Some retired officers have been given places of that kind, but officers in the active militia are not supposed to do work of that kind. It is generally given to a sergeant or some man who has served a long time in the militia.

Mr. WILSON. This is just taking care of the rifles.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Rifles, armouries, rifle ranges and stores.

Mr. WILSON. I thought that in our district we gave them to the captain of the company.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The old system in the country districts was to give each captain $40 for taking care of the arms, and he found a place to keep them and paid a man for cleaning them. But this is a different thing. Where there is a central armoury, a man has to be employed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it the intention to hold the camps in June this year ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I am not quite sure that all the camps will be held then. The cavalry and field artillery will be drilled this year to their full strength in June, and of course the drill in the cities will go on as before, and a considerable portion of this money will go for this purpose.

Military properties, including $25,000 for walls at Quebec—further amount required, $50,309.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The estimate I have here for the fortification walls at Quebec is $23,111, and other expenditures at Kingston, $1,650. The expenditure at Charlottetown for fitting up the garrison artillery building is $546. Repairs to the port of Annapolis, N.S., $234. Toronto annex to drill hall, $300. Alterations of drill hall, $300. Fitting up field hospital, battery corps and artillery, $200. Winnipeg, urgent plumbing, $200. Montreal drill hall, $2,000. Fitting up armoury, $2,000. To complete rifle range, $9,000. Ottawa rifle range, $2,000.

Contingencies—further amount required, $4,500.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is simply to reimburse the department for the amount paid over to the troops in connection with the Valleyfield riots. Proceedings were taken to collect that money from the town, but in the meantime the men had to be paid and were paid out of contingencies. There was no other way of paying them.

Mr. WILSON. From whom are you trying to collect the money ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. From the town.

Mr. WILSON. Pretty hard on the town.

Royal Military College—further amount required, $10,580.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is for the installation of an electric light plant which will result in a saving of $1,346. The present annual cost of lighting the college is $2,400. The light is purchased from the town. When this light is installed, the annual cost will be $1,054, considerably less than half the present cost.

Mr. WILSON. Did you try to make an arrangement with the town ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Yes, and could not succeed.

Dominion Arsenal—further amount required, $31,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is to cover the cost of repairs to batteries returned from South Africa, and of repairs to other artillery and other expenses. It includes also the cost of manufacturing one million rounds of gallery practice cartridges, $5,000, and the installation of an electric light at Quebec cartridge factory, $4,750. It was thought advisable that during alteration and repairs an independent plant should be installed.

Defence of Esquimalt—further amount required, $4,867.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is in accord with the arrangement made with the imperial government.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was it not agreed that Canada should pay a fixed sum and was not that amount asked in the last estimate ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There was some question as to whether this amount should be paid by us or not. We took the view that it should not, but after negotiations and correspondence with the War Office it was decided that we should pay this amount. This really covers the amount for two years. Two thousand four hundred dollars is the amount. There is no question of our liability to pay it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was not the understanding for a fixed amount, and did not the minister ask last year for a fixed sum ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. In addition to that there was the maintenance of works, &c., which we thought was included in the amount assured by us, but it appeared on further investigation that the cost of maintenance was not included, and this is an estimate to cover that.

Medals, $8,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. What class of medals ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. This is for the colonial auxiliary force long service medal and the long service decoration now being distributed.

Allowance of family of Major Hurdman during his services in South Africa, $779.64.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. Under the law by which the $2,000,000 were granted for the contingents in South Africa, there was a provision to pay the wives of the officers serving there half pay. Major Hurdman's wife, unfortunately, died shortly before that, and the family did not get the benefit. Under the law, the Justice Department has informed me, we could not pay the amount. It seems only fair that this should be paid.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

Militia—chargeable to income—towards the expenses of the contingent of Canadian militia attending the Coronation of His Majesty, $30,000.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The total estimated expense of this contingent is $80,000. We are asking for $30,000 to be expended in the current year ending 1st July next, and, in the supplementary estimates for next year, which are to be brought down in a day or two, there will be an item for $50,000. The estimate is made up in this way: A contract has been made with the Allans to convey the contingent from Quebec to Liverpool and back, at $50 each for the men and $120 each for the officers. There will be 580 men and 22 officers. The transportation across the ocean will cost, therefore, in round numbers, $30,000. Railway transportation to Quebec, the point at which the force will be mobilized, together with subsistence in transit, is expected to cost $15,000. Pay for 45 days is estimated at $17,000. As for clothing, of course the ordinary militia clothing will be used, but, in some cases we shall need to make alterations and also to issue new clothing. The cost of this is estimated at $10,000. Contingencies will take about $8,000. These items make a total of $80,000. I may say that the Jubilee Contingent cost $30,000. It was made up of something over 200 officers and men. In this case, there will be a little over 600 officers and men.

Mr. SPROULE. How is the contingent to be composed ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The contingent has not been made up yet, but I think I can give pretty full information on that point. In the first place, there will be 300 mounted men and 280 infantry. The mounted body will be made up of 25 men from the North-west Mounted Police, 25 from Strathcona's Horse, and the balance from the cavalry, mounted rifles and field artillery. The infantry will be made up from the different branches of infantry and the garrison artillery, the infantry being composed of guards, fusiliers, highlanders and rifles. In addition to this we shall endeavour to have every branch of the service represented. There will be a representation of the bearer companies, the field hospital corps, the engineers and the new branch of the service, the army service corps, which has recently been organized.

Mr. SPROULE. What proportion of these men will be drawn from each province, and how will they be taken ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. They will be taken from each unit. The average number from the infantry is exactly one and three-quarters from each regiment. This will mean, of course, that the larger regiments will send two men each and the smaller regiments one man each. The squadrons of cavalry will get, I think, four men each, because the number of mounted men is larger in proportion than the number of infantry.

Mr. SPROULE. Who will select the men?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The men will be selected by the district officer commanding in each district.

Mr. BELL. What officers are sent ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. There will be one lieutenant-colonel, two majors, one adjutant and also three officers for each 100 men, that is, eighteen besides the four I have mentioned, or twenty-two officers in all.

Mr. SPROULE. Where will the contingent mobilize, and how long before sailing?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The date of sailing is the 7th of June, by steamship 'Parisian,' from Quebec. The force wil be mobilized at Quebec about the 29th or 30th of May.

Mr. TAYLOR. What pay are the officers and men to receive ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The regular pay of the militia.

Mr. BELL. How do you provide horses for the mounted men ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. The War Office provides all the horses, 300, together with the artillery, guns and everything. The Militia Department provides clothing, equipment and pay.

Department of Justice—contingencies—sundries, $500.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This $500 under the head of sundries is to provide for the travelling expenses incurred by the Minister of Justice and the deputy minister who were both in England last summer in connection with the conference about the Privy Council.

Department of Customs—contingencies—to pay H. L. Wood, customs officer, for extra work on trade and navigation tables for fiscal year ended June 30, 1900, consequent on the re-arrangement of the customs statistical service (228 hours, at 50 cents) notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $114.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. William Paterson). This is in addition to the salaries of officers who were doing extra work last year in preparing the annual report and the statistical report, and this name was accidentally omitted.

Supreme Court of Canada—allowances to ad hoc judges, $800.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Do I understand that this is going to be paid ? I do not see how it can be paid unless my hon. friend goes on with the Bill which provides for the appointment of assistant judges of the Supreme Court of Canada. I call attention to the fact that there is a pressing necessity that this Bill should be passed this session. There are several cases, I understand, on the list of the Supreme Court in which two of the judges are not competent to sit. They are cases in which the government is interested and upon which these gentlemen passed when they were ministers of the Crown. I would quote a case which is a precedent in these matters. Sir Alexander Lacoste, Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals for Quebec, was appointed administrator of that province at a time when the late Lieutanant-Governor, Sir Adolphe Chapleau, was absent. An Order in Council came before him upon which were based contracts between parties and the government. When these contracts were before the courts, or some of them, and suits were taken upon them, Chief Justice Lacoste refused to sit, simply because, when he was administrator, he had signed an Order in Council upon which the contracts were based. It seems to me this is a precedent for cases of this kind in which the administrator had nothing to do but to sign his name as a ministerial act. When questions come up before the Supreme Court involving the validity or invalidity of contracts, or damages upon contracts, which were before the administration when certain gentlemen sat in the council who are now judges of the Supreme Court, these gentlemen should not sit, and I understand they are loath to sit, that they do not want to sit. On the other hand, these are important cases, and it will be delaying the business of the court if they cannot sit. As I said, I think it is very pressing that this Bill should be proceeded with. I quite understand the difficulty, and probably it is not quite proper that the Governor in Council should appoint substitutes or judges ad hoc. But I suggest that that difficulty could be got over in the province of Quebec, for instance, if the judgments under review were judgments that came from the Court of King's Bench, that the Chief Justice of the Superior Court should have the appointing power. If on the other hand, it was a case that came from the Superior Court sitting in review, then the appointing power should be the Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench. I believe the Minister of Justice appreciates the difficulty, and sees that judges of the Supreme Court and who are likely to be called upon to sit on these cases, should not sit, and that some provision should be made for their being replaced.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I quite appreciate the force of all that has been said by my learned friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain). I think it is extremely desirable that we should make provision for the difficulties that he has suggested. No doubt there may be some question arising as to whether some of the members of the Supreme Court should sit in cases before them. My hon. friend will bear in mind that this is a matter which is personal to the judges themselves; it would be for the judge to say whether, under the circumstances, he felt that he ought not to sit in the case. Far from having made up my mind not to press the Bill, on the contrary, the present intention is to press the Bill through during this session. In that view, of course, it is necessary to put this item in the estimates.

Further amount required for judges travelling allowances in Manitoba, $500.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I believe there is a vacancy at present on the bench of Manitoba caused by the elevation of Judge Prendergast to the Supreme Court bench of the North-west Territories. I think about six weeks ago the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRiviere) asked the Minister of Justice if it was the intention of the government to fill that position, and the minister replied that it was the intention to fill that position forthwith. I would ask if the vacancy has been filled, and if not, is it the intention to have it filled at once?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, it is the intention to fill it in the immediate future.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Forthwith?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Practically. I want to wait until the session is over to be able to give the matter a little more consideration.

Further amount required for miscellaneous expenditure including North-west Territories, $6,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The expenditure from the vote of this year has been unusually large during the year owing principally to the following charges:

King vs. Frogg—Keewatin case—$2,894.76; King vs. Wabey, the Indian case which was tried over here in Hull, $1,166.25. The extradition case of Rosebluff and Pariseau, $1,247.04.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was a good year for the lawyers.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. And a bad year for murderers. Increase in cost of maintenance of prisoners in the North-west Territories $2,500, and increase in witness and jury fees, $4,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is a great deal more than $6,000. Will the hon. gentleman tell me how he paid this amount with that amount of money?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The $6,000 simply implements the amount we had already at our disposal. Of course the $6,000 is only part of the amount that we spent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand that. I understand that the $6,000 has been spent already.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There has been a great deal more than $6,000 spent. This $6,000 is merely to implement the amount we have already at our disposal. The $6,000 we are now getting has not been spent.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand that perfectly. The hon. minister had a grant for this purpose last year and he has over spent it by $6,000.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No. I will have exceeded it at the end of the year by $6,000. We have to provide, in addition to the amount I have mentioned, for trials that have already taken place and we have to make provision for witness and jury fees in the North-west Territories which have been incurred to the extent of $4,000. These accounts have not yet been disposed of. Then, there is the maintenance of prisoners, $2,500. These are additional amounts to those which I have mentioned already.

Additional amount required for witness and jury fees (Governor General's warrant, $12,000), $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. In this case you have obtained money under Governor General's warrants.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Of the amount that is required, there will be taken $13,000 to cover the cost of the disbursements in the case of O'Brien, and there will be for law books, $1,500. Hon. gentlemen will remember having heard of this O'Brien case as one in which O'Brien was convicted of deliberately murdering three men on the trail between the frontier and Dawson city. He had built for himself a shack on the side of the road and he lay in wait for people passing up and down and in this way he succeeded in disposing of three men. The men disappeared in the month of December, 1900, and their bodies were not found until the spring of 1901. It took a very considerable time to get together the evidence necessary to bring the crime home and as a result the expenditures made by the officials were very great. For instance, there was paid in connection with the case for witness and jury fees, $13,233, stenographers fees, $284, and cost of the execution, $586. In addition to that the North-west mounted police were obliged to spend something like $22,000 on the case so that the case will cost the government something in the vicinity of $40,000. But, I think the money was well spent, because it goes to demonstrate the fact that within the limits of Canada, wherever a man may happen to be, life and property are safe and that murderers are invariably tracked and discovered.

Law books, $1,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Do we supply a law library for the North-west Territories ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Not for the North-west Territories. We did until this year. So far as the North-west Territories are concerned, the library at Regina was turned over by a statute passed during this session to the Law Association of the North-west Territories proper. So far as the Yukon is concerned we supply law books for the purposes of the judges.

Mr. SPROULE. How much did we vote for a library there already ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman at present.

To provide for the salary of George W. Dawson, inspector of penitentiaries, from 6th to 30th June, 1902, both inclusive, at $2,600 per annum, $180.55.

Mr. SPROULE. How do you require this item in here. Does he not get a regular salary ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. He gets a regular salary but he was appointed on the 6th June, 1901.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It must be 1901. This is a mistake in the item.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. His year of service will end on the 6th June, 1902. This is to pay for the broken period.

Mr. TAYLOR. Would the hon. Minister of Justice say when Mr. Dawson was appointed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. On the 6th June, 1901.

Mr. TAYLOR. And this is a sum which was not paid him for the first part of the month ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The statute says that :

The salary of the second inspector hereby provided for shall be for the first year of his service, $2,600, and thereafter such sum as parliament appropriates for the purpose.

We have to provide for the broken period of the year intervening between the next fiscal year and the end of the year of his appointment.

Mr. TAYLOR. What are his duties ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. His duties are to assist in looking after the penitentiaries throughout the Dominion of Canada generally with Mr. Stewart.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was not one inspector quite sufficient, or was this to provide a fillip for Mr. Dawson ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I do not think it was intended to provide a fillip for Mr. Dawson. From the year 1895 up to last year the inspector of penitentiaries had been so busily engaged here that it was not possible for him to visit the penitentiaries throughout the country. There has been no inspection for four or five years in the penitentiary in New Westminster. It is extremely desirable that the inspector should inspect ; that is to say, that they should visit the penitentiaries throughout the country.

Mr. SPROULE. I presume this is in addition to his travelling allowance ? Could the hon. gentleman tell me what his travelling allowance amounts to for the year ? There is an arrangement, I presume, for travelling allowance ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. There is an arrangement for travelling allowance, but as to the amount which he has disbursed I cannot say. I have other estimates to come down for next year and I will then be prepared to tell my hon. friend what he has disbursed.

To pay the following persons for expenses connected with the Lussier arbitration : E. R. Cameron, $110 ; Miss H. E. Stewart, $5, $115.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What arbitration was that ? I never heard of it.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This farmer lives in the vicinity of St. Vincent de Paul, and owing to a sewer which was constructed by us, his cattle were injured and killed and other damage done and he claimed $4,000. A petition of right was issued, but we thought the speediest way of disposing of the matter was to appoint an officer of the court, and Mr. Cameron, the Registrar of the Supreme Court, after making inquiry, found that Mr. Lussier was entitled to $1,922, which included witness fees, costs, damages and everything.

To pay J. E. Farewell, K.C., balance of costs as solicitor for Judge Dartnell, upon North Ontario recount, $36.91.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How did this come in ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This is in connection with the recount that took place in North Ontario in 1896. A recount was asked for before Judge Dartnell and an injunction was applied for in the High Court asking that he should not proceed with the recount. Judge Dartnell pleaded that he was acting as an officer of the House of Commons and that he could not be restrained by an injunction, which contention was upheld by Judge Robertson. The costs amounted to $66.37, and $29.46 were taxed against Judge Dartnell's side. Judge Dartnell holds that he was not obliged to pay his lawyer, because he was brought into court as an officer of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. My recollection is that there was some dispute as to which judge the recount should be before.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is it not a bad precedent to allow a judge cost for anything of this kind ? He has no right to appear by counsel.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I think it is admitted that in all proceedings of this sort an inferior judge would be entitled to counsel. I know that is the case so far as magistrates are concerned.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is the first time that I have ever heard of it in this House.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Let us hope it will be the last.

Mr. SPROULE. Judging by the history of the transaction, it would be well that it should be the last time, because this was a sort of political job throughout. The impression on the public is that it was a little smart Aleck trick for the purpose of holding a seat in this House.

Trent canal—To dredge shoals in Trent and Otonabee rivers, $3,500.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is this dredging done by contract or by the government ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are doing it with our own dredge.

Contribution towards building of road between Lindsay and Fenelon Falls, $1,500.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On what principle are you making this contribution ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The old road was flooded by the construction of the canal, and a new road has to be built above the water level, on the line of the old road. That is the recommendation of our engineers and the member representing that county was strongly of opinion that the work was necessary.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. On this item I drew the minister's attention to the Poonamalee causeway in the township of Elmsley, which is in a similar position. The principle under which the government makes these contributions is that if any government work causes a portion of a road to be overflowed, which would not be overflowed otherwise, the government makes good that portion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have come to an understanding with the municipalities in such cases as the hon. gentleman mentions, and in other cases in which the raising of the water of the canal has rendered some bridges too short or unfit for use, we make a compromise with the municipalities and agree to bear a part of the cost.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. A petition was presented by the municipalities in the township of Elmsley asking for assistance for the repair of a highway which was in existence before the Rideau canal was built. They ask, and I think very fairly, that the government should grant assistance for the repair of the highway to the extent of the damage done by the government. I understand that the officers of the government have inquired into the matter and I want to know what the government intend to do.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the papers, but I will get the information later.

Mr. KEMP. Is it the intention of the government to complete the Trent canal so as to connect the Georgian bay with Lake Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have already under contract the stretch between Lake Simcoe and Balsam lake, but we have not at present concluded that we will carry the work beyond that.

Mr. KEMP. Can the minister say what it will cost to complete the canal through ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our engineers estimate that it will cost about $6,500,000 to complete it from end to end. We have expended in round numbers about $3,500,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That gives what depth of water ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Six feet.

Mr. KEMP. Is it the policy of the government to complete the work through from the Georgian bay to Lake Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have determined to complete the canal between Lake Simcoe and Balsam lake. The rest is practically completed or under contract. When all that is completed we will have one more contract to enter into and only one, that is, the contract for the hydraulic lift which we propose to place in that section. Beyond that we have not come to any conclusion.

Mr. KEMP. It will cost $3,000,000 to complete that portion of the work.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. About that.

Mr. KEMP. And the hon. gentleman is not prepared to say whether the government will go on and complete the canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would not like to say one way or the other.

Mr. SPROULE. The work, if incomplete, must be of little value. It seems to me that it is too large an undertaking on which to go on spending money blindly, without deciding whether it is intended to finish it or not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. To what extent we will continue the work towards completion is a point not definitely passed on by the government, and it is quite impossible for me to make any precise statement on the subject. The northern division, the section from Lake Simcoe to Peterborough, will be the first to be completed. We are now working towards completion of the lock between Lake Simcoe and Lake Balsam, and I am in hopes that a moderate expenditure will give us clear navigation from Peterborough to Lake Balsam. The estimated cost of the whole section from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe is one million and a half dollars, and the engineer estimates that it will cost from Lake Simcoe to Georgian Bay $1,450,000 if the canal is extended.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I hope there is no question about that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think probably there will not, but I cannot give a definite statement on my own responsibility.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister is asking $300,000 to be expended this year. Will he apply any of that vote, if an Order in Council is passed, to pay Corry & Laverdure the $126,000 due them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If this amount is due them, they will be paid, but I cannot say whether it will be out of the appropriation for the current year or for 1902-3.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). How much is appropriated for this year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $300,000 is all the revote for the year to come.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). There is only $300,000 to be spent on the work the coming year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In other words only $300,000 is to be spent for the coming year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is all.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Will the minister please give us some explanation ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would be glad to furnish all possible information, but I can only state the fact that we do not expect in the coming year to spend more than $300,000. We would have made provision for large expenditure had we finished the hydraulic lift which we are going to place on that section and which is going to cost $350,000.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That is the one at Kirkfield.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that will be provided for another year.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems extraordinary for the government to say they are going on with that work, a work which they themselves admit will cost a total of $6,500,000 when finished, of which only about $3,500,000 has been spent, and yet that they are not able to tell us whether they intend to finish the work or not. A work so gigantic as this, one would suppose, might be taken into consideration by the government with a view to reaching some businesslike conclusion with regard to it before coming to the House to ask for more money. If they are not going to finish it they should let us know, if they are going to finish it they should be able to speak definitely of their intentions and of how they purpose to carry them out.

Mr. GERMAN. In my opinion the money spent on this work is absolutely thrown away whether the canal is finished or not.

This is a legacy from the great Conservative party, and was started by them for the purpose apparently of enabling them to control the Midland constituencies, and it has controlled them ever since. The lift locks now under construction, which will cost about one million dollars each, were begun by the late government. Contracts, I believe were let by the late government for the construction of these locks. Any person who will go up and see these locks will get the impression that they are great baronial castles that are being built up there in the wilderness. The canal appears to me absolutely useless for a route for navigation or transportation. There will be only five feet of water on the mitre sill, and the boats that will carry through there the products of the west, if they ever do, will draw five feet of water and carry 5,000 bushels of wheat. It would take forty or fifty such boats to carry one cargo of a large upper lake steamer.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Why does the hon. gentleman stop at fifty ? He might as well make himself absolutely ridiculous and say seventy.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not intend to make myself ridiculous, but I say it will take forty such boats to carry the cargo of one upper lake freighter. And if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Hughes, Victoria) will consider the matter for a moment he will see that I am correct. An upper lake freighter carries 200,000 bushels of wheat. The canal barges which will use this canal will not carry more than 5,000 bushels.

Mr. BENNETT. Nonsense.

Mr. GERMAN. All the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bennett) has to do is to make the calculation. The locks on this Trent Valley canal system have a length of 130 feet, and a width of 33 feet, and they admit vessels with a draught of five feet. A calculation will show that the capacity of these barges will not exceed five or six thousand bushels, and the average will be five thousand. So, it will take forty such barges to carry the cargo of an upper lake freighter. If any one suggests that a canal with no greater capacity than that will be a benefit to the country, it will be hard for me to avoid doubting his sincerity. This canal should never have been begun, and I think the quicker the government stop spending money on it the better it will be for the country at large.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. gentleman (Mr. German) shall promptly have his few incoherent remarks reported in the Peterborough newspapers, for, at a single blow he has knocked his friend Hon. James Stratton to pieces. Does not the hon. gentleman know that Mr. Stratton's stock in trade in Ontario politics has been nothing but this Trent navigation system, plus a campaign fund ? The hon. gentleman is talking the ordinary Ontario politics from his point of view. He has lived for years on the Welland canal and has seen, intermittently, an ordinary sized schooner drag its weary course through the canal. We, of course, do not wish to say anything about that canal, but when the hon. gentleman sees a rival to the Welland canal starting up, we hear from him as we have heard. It is not necessary for me to say anything in favour of the Trent Valley canal. It is an accepted fact and it is to be completed. The Minister of Railways and Canals has been over the route and has approved of it. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) should have been more kind to his friend the Hon. James Stratton at this intense time in his history, and should not have given him this blow below the belt.

Mr. GERMAN. Hon. James Stratton is quite well able to take care of himself regardless of any canal question. So far as the Welland canal is concerned, we have not the slightest jealousy—

Mr. KEMP. This will be a competitor, will it not ?

Mr. GERMAN. A competitor ? The ordinary mule is not the competitor of the race horse, and I think that furnishes about a fair comparison between this route and the Welland canal. The Welland canal admits boats carrying 70,000 or 80,000 bushels of grain, and it is rather amusing to find hon. gentlemen comparing with this the Trent Valley canal which will take vessels carrying not more than 6,000 bushels. I do not think any one need be at all alarmed at the competition of this route with the Welland canal.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Welland canal is such a wonderful navigation route why is the government spending half a million dollars more in trying to blast the rocks from Port Colborne harbour so that an ordinary vessel can get in there ? The House must remember that the Trent Valley system is not a series of locks like the Welland canal, but a magnificient chain of lakes and rivers where there is free navigation. But the hon. gentleman has completely upset Mr. Stratton's stock in trade, and his remarks shall be duly reported in the Peterborough newspapers.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I am surprised that the hon. member for Welland should make such an exhibition of himself. He is generally well informed on matters respecting this country, but the reference to any other navigation route than the ditch near which he lives seems to arouse his ill feeling. We do not wish to interfere with this ditch of his, we who have a magnificent chain of lakes, Lake Couchiching, Lake Simcoe, Balsam lake, Sturgeon lake and all the other great chain leading down to the Bay of Quinte. The hon. gentleman indulges in the comparison of a horse and a mule. Why, I understand that they employ boys to drag the several schooners and canoes that pass up and down through the Welland canal. Ours is not a canal, but a chain of lakes which vessels can navigate with a full head of steam. But in the ditch of which the hon. gentleman speaks, a rate of two and a half or three miles an hour is all they are allowed to go, for fear of washing in sand and filling up the ditch. The hon. gentleman speaks of the lift locks at Peterborough and Kirkfield, and says that this government was only carrying out the work of the Liberal Conservative party. It is well known that this route was designed as a great military route. But, unfortunately, people in power, even representing the Conservative party, listened to the carping opposition of some of the old Liberals who have already been relegated to oblivion. But the carpings of these people have had the effect of causing some who should know better to believe that this is not a great work.

Mr. COWAN. How deep is the canal ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Deep enough to drown a man standing on the head of the little member for South Essex (Mr. Cowan).

Mr. COWAN. How tall do you want the other fellow to be ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). The Minister of Railways and Canals, some years ago was prejudiced against this canal. But, with the energy which characterizes him in nearly everything he does, he took a trip over the route, and from that day to this he has been trying to get his disgruntled supporters to favour the early completion of this work. I do not intend to take up time by discussing it in a general way. But, the hon. member for Welland talks about only barges going on this route. Why, vessels carrying 25,000 bushels of grain can pass through it. The hon. gentleman can shake his head, but there is nothing in it, as was said once of an Irish politician. The hon. gentleman lives within sight of the city of Buffalo, which has been made what it is because it is the entrance to a canal which allowed the passage of vessels with a draught of not more than three feet six inches, and with locks only twelve feet in width. The great cities of Albany, Lockport, Rochester, Oswego and others have been built up by that canal, which, even with the recent five enlargements, admits vessels of only four and a half feet draught. And it has been of such value to the people of New York city and New York state that they are willing to pay $30,000,000 to maintain it and improve it. This is the little ditch that has built up the great city of New York and has given the people in the western States competition in freight rates against the railways that has been of such incalculable benefit to them. We have not opposed the hon. gentleman's (Mr. German's) canal. My policy is to build up all the transportation routes, and I only ask the same consideration for the Trent canal system that we are giving to that fad of my good friend the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte), the French river route, or to the old Welland canal route. We want the construction to go on; and if these gentlemen are serious in their opposition all I can say is that we will take them in hand and educate them, and, if need be, we will show up some of the weak points in their position. We want to develop all the transportation routes for there is room for all of them, and need for all of them, and for none more than for the grand Trent Valley system. I am sorry for the Minister of Railways and Canals, when we see so much being spent for docks and wharfs along the St. Lawrence river and for docks and wharfs in the maritime provinces, that the people along the Trent canal route must be delayed year after year in the completion of this work. I hope the hon. minister, with his characteristic energy, will turn down the disgruntled kickers in his party and push this work through to completion. I am sorry that there are even any signs of lack of energy in pressing forward this work.

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not intend to discuss whether this is a proper public work or not; it seems a little too late in the day to enter on that question. The hon. member for Welland (Mr. German) thought to make a point against the Conservative party by finding fault with this work, although it is endorsed and approved by the government of which he is a supporter. He said that it was during the Conservative regime that this work was commenced. I desire to draw attention to the fact that the Trent navigation work was commenced as far back as the year 1837, shortly after the completion of the Welland canal, as it was first designed. I think that after we have been going on for sixty-five years it is too late in the day to charge the responsibility for that work to either one political party or the other. I presume that there is no man alive to-day who was in power at that time and personally responsible for that work. I merely mention this fact, because the hon. gentleman seemed to have no other point in his speech than to make a reflection upon the Conservative party.

Mr. KEMP. As the canal system seems to be under review, I would like to inquire from the minister if it is the intention of the government to start another canal or series of canals between Lake Nippissing and the Georgian Bay ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not heard anything of the kind. No action has been taken by council towards the construction of a canal in any direction whatever.

Mr. CLARKE. Can the minister tell us when the work on this Trent Valley canal was commenced, and when we may hope it will be wound up ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am safe in saying it was commenced at least fifteen years ago. Construction has been continued in the way of enlargement and extension.

Mr. CLARKE. When is it to be finished down to Lake Ontario ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The question of the lower end has really not yet been considered. There are strong reasons why it is desirable to finish the upper part at an early date. There is not the same urgency in regard to the lower end. There is a strong probability of a considerable trade taking place on the canal already built, which will bring a great deal of traffic to Peterborough. I understand that there are several gentlemen who are looking forward to establishing industries at Peterborough in consequence of this canal.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I presume the minister refers to the cereal works at Peterborough. I know that the promoters are very anxious that this canal should be extended, and I can assure the minister that while this canal will assist the proprietors of the cereal works, there are hundreds of other business institutions along that line the minister is not acquainted with, but who are just as anxious to have that canal opened up. We have along the route of that canal, and tributary thereto, a population much greater than that of the city of Montreal. Some hon. gentlemen make a great noise in this House over the city of Montreal, and demand a heavy expenditure of money for the development of that place. We do not object to that, we back up a judicious expenditure for Montreal, but at the same time we ask for some consideration for the route along these waters on the Trent Valley canal.

Mr. KEMP. The minister said he knew nothing in regard to the building of a canal connecting the Georgian Bay with Lake Nippissing. I presume that if such a work was contemplated it would naturally come under the Department of Railways and Canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I fancy so. If there is going to be a canal constructed between Lake Nippissing and the Georgian Bay, in my judgment that work would devolve upon the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Mr. WARD. I would like to ask the minister if it is the intention of the government to make any further survey to ascertain the practicability of a route by way of Port Hope ? I urged that matter upon the government last session. I do not intend to discuss it now, but I would like to know if any further report of an engineer will be obtained by the department ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. When the government decides that the time has arrived to take up the construction of that canal from Peterborough south, no doubt very extended surveys will require to be made. I do not think we are yet sufficiently supplied with data to enable us to say anything on that question.

Mr. WARD. Do I understand that the surveys will include a route by Port Hope ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I should think so.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). I would direct the minister's attention to the extravagance of this firm of contractors on the Trent canal. I do not know the details of the matter so far as the minister is concerned, but I understand that the minister has endeavoured to keep down these extras. But I can tell the minister that I have been upon that work from time to time, and I can assure him that there was no time that I did not see five times as many men loafing as I saw working. I cannot understand how men having a contract, and hoping to finish it and make both ends meet, could carry on the work as those contractors seem to be doing at Peterborough. I know whereof I speak. I see the minister has endeavoured to do his best to keep these men up to the mark, and I congratulate him on what he has done. I hope that for the future he will keep a tight hand on them and see that they do their work.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister tell us how much of this canal is navigable now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell at the moment. The deputy will procure the information for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). That canal is navigable from the head of Lake Couchiching to Beaverton on the first section. Then it is navigable from Kirkfield west of Balsam Lake continuously down to Lakefield, with six feet of water on the sill all the way, a distance of sixty to eighty miles. Then it is navigable from Peterborough down to Feely's Falls near Campbellford. All the way from Peterborough to Lakefield is finished, and that section will be ready as soon as the lift lock is built. Then there will be complete navigation from Feely's Falls right up to Balsam Lake; and when the work of that lift lock is completed there will be a continuous navigation from within a few miles of the Georgian Bay right down to within a few miles of the Bay of Quinté, with exception of about ten miles at each end. It will be a canal able to carry three times the quantity of grain that the Erie canal was ever capable of carrying.

Mr. BENNETT. I would be sorry to let some remarks go unchallenged regarding the size and capacity of this canal. Let me say to the hon. gentlemen who have not been there, that to-day there are steamboats plying during the summer months that are licensed to carry four hundred passengers. As to the statement of the hon. member from Welland (Mr. German) concerning the size of the vessels, I am prepared to say that, with that depth of water, flat bottomed ordinary barges would be capable of carrying at least 20,000 bushels of grain.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). Twenty-five thousand bushels.

Mr. BENNETT. And if my hon. friend thinks over the matter he will agree with me in what I say. I know of boats with a length of 260 feet and a depth of 12 feet carrying 60,000 bushels, and beyond 60,000 bushels, and if you have a boat 135 feet long with a depth of 6 feet of carrying capacity, it is plain that you will have a capacity for carriage of 20,000 bushels. Then, in addition to that, I may say, referring to the cereal factory in the town of Peterborough, that they propose at the outset to consume 15,000 bushels of grain per day and the factory is being constructed with a consuming capacity of 30,000 bushels per day, and one of the considerations that impelled the gentlemen interested in the concern to locate there, was the fact that they would have water communication from Midland and the elevators there for the purpose of bringing their grain down to Peterborough, and also of getting their grain from along the route of the canal. It means an immense advantage to the counties of York and Simcoe that during the summer months they will be enabled to have competition with the only railway that passes through that part of the country by being able to ship their grain down through these lakes and rivers to Lake Ontario. Two or three years ago an elevator of 1,250,000 bushels capacity was erected in the town of Midland by some American gentlemen who came there in preference to locating at the city of Buffalo. I know that one of the great objects of the owners of that concern in coming to Midland was the fact that they anticipated there would be a consummation of this project in due course of time, and that they would be in a position to ship out their grain either by rail or water. If hon. gentlemen would some time during the coming summer go down over these lakes and rivers in that part of the country, they would come back with vastly different feelings than those which some hon. gentlemen have given expression to in this House.

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). In support of what the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett) has said, I would mention the fact that when the Canadian Pacific Railway were building their railway bridge at Sault Ste. Marie, the Peterborough Bridge Works Company tendered for the contract. They had to take into consideration the question of freight on their material from Peterborough to Sault Ste. Marie. The extra freight which they would have been charged for hauling their material to Sault Ste. Marie, that is, the amount by which the freight from Peterborough to Sault Ste. Marie exceeded the rate from Belgium to Sault Ste. Marie, would have been an enormous profit on their contract. It would have represented all the profit they would expect to get on their work. The freight rates from Belgium to Sault Ste. Marie were so much lower than the freight rates from Peterborough to Sault Ste. Marie, that the Peterborough Company lost the contract. If this canal had been opened it would have been an easy matter to have had that work done in our own country rather than have foreigners tendering for it and driving our people out of business. I simply mention this as one instance. Besides the town of Peterborough along the line of the canal, there are Ashburnham, Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls, Lindsay, Barrie, Orillia, and the villages of Beaverton, Campbellford, Frankford, and other towns and villages along these rivers and lakes where industries are springing up. The freight rates will be kept down by the competition between the canal and the railway companies. We know that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, having been over this route, appreciates its importance, and I am only sorry that hon. gentlemen who are not in sympathy with the carrying on of this work are not alive to their interests. They have railway passes. Why do they not take a trip over the route, so that they may see for themselves the immense advantages that would accrue to the country from the construction of this work.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand that there are 60 or 70 miles of this canal now navigable. What tonnage has passed through it ? Has any record been kept of the tonnage ?

Mr. HUGHES (Victoria). This is largely upon the lake sections. There is a navigable course from the head of Pigeon Lake down to Buckhorn and Chemong lakes, a distance of 50 miles.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) will turn up the statistics in the report of the department, he will find all the information that we have.

Carillon and Grenville canals—to rebuild guide pier, $23,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is that work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a revote. We have not been able to secure the construction of this pier during 1901-1902, and we have therefore only expended $7,000 of that vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is the work being done by contract?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Who are the contractors?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They are a Toronto firm. I cannot remember their names.

Mr. SPROULE. I see several places in these estimates, and I think it is a defect in them, where an item is stated as a revote, while in other places it is not so stated, and we are left in the dark as to how much is a revote and as to how much is an original vote.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is omitted in some cases, but where it is omitted I inform the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it should be stated in all cases in the estimates.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So it should. Where it is only partly a revote, it should be stated what portion is a revote and what portion is an original vote. I am trying to have that done.

Quebec canals—surveys for establishing boundaries, $1,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What does that mean?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It has been recommended by the officers of the department and by the chief engineer that we should have a small appropriation so that where disputes occur as to boundaries between our property and adjoining property we can make a survey. When these disputes come up we have no money that we can use for the purpose of providing for surveys.

Culbute canal—damages by flooding, $250.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to provide for damages by flooding in the town of Bryson, caused by the construction of a dam.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That dam has been down for a number of years. How can it have been caused by the construction of a dam?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman does not mean that the dam is down? There was an attempt made to blow it up which made some break in it, but the dam is still there. It must have been sufficient to have occasioned this flooding. We had the matter inquired into and there was an arrangement between the town of Bryson and ourselves to settle for $250.

Mr. SPROULE. Here is another item of the same kind. There was a vote of $265 last year and there is a vote of $250 this year. We have no information as to whether that vote of last year was spent and this is a new item or whether there was only a small portion of the vote spent last year and this is a revote of the balance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is entirely a new item. The account will show that we spent nearly the whole amount that was expropriated last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the last claim for damages?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There are quite a few still outstanding.

Mr. SPROULE. Do you adjust them by arbitration?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have our valuator, and he reports his recommendation and some have not yet accepted what we considered to be fair, but possibly they will do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Can the minister tell us how much we have paid for damages in this matter and what claims are still outstanding?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will have such a statement prepared.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What final estimates have not yet been completed on the Soulanges canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Those of Ryan and Macdonnell; Andrew Onderdonk and the Canadian Electric Company. The final estimates of the others have been prepared.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In connection with these railway items, I asked the minister the other day whether the building of the railway from Charlottetown to Murray Harbour had been let by public tender and contract, and the minister said it had. I see by the papers brought down in the other House that only 21 miles of this railway had been let by tender.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Eleven and one-half miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And that the contract for the rest of the road was given to the party who obtained the contract for the 11½ miles by a mere extension of their original contract. The minister led me to believe that the whole contract was let by public tender to the next lowest tenderer; the lowest tenderer not being able to carry out the work. I protest against such a manner of letting contracts. Where there are 40 miles of road to be built the law requires, and the Order in Council requires that all work should be let by tender.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Tenders were first asked for 11½ miles which was a distinct section of the line and the least expensive and the handiest to construct. After the work was in progress, and it became necessary in the opinion of those who were most anxious to see the work carried forward—members of parliament and members of the government—that the work should be proceeded with, an offer was made to the contractor to continue the other 31½ miles at the same price for that class of work. Some dispute between the engineer and the contractor arose which led to delay and although the prices were actually settled, I am not sure that the contract has been yet finally executed by the contractor. A number of tenders were received for the work when it was first offered, and it was thoroughly advertised in all the newspapers from the 15th of November to the 23rd of December. The prices were the schedule prices, as usual under such circumstances. When we were being hurried to get the work proceeded with we proposed to the contractor who is a very respectable man, and who had secured the first contract after open competition at prices that were fair and reasonable ; we offered to him to continue the work because for the further reason we did not wish to have two men operating together one at one end of the line and the other at the other end, and our proposition was accepted. The work will be continued by the same contractor who had the first part of the road.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, not carried for a while yet. You have a habit of crying ' carried ' when a member is on his feet. I had cause to draw your attention to it before, but I hope I will not again. The minister states the contract was let for 11½ miles, and on the pressure of members of parliament in that section of the country and others, it became a necessity to push the work forward and the 31½ miles was given to the contractor at the schedule prices which he obtained by competition for the other 11½ miles of the road. Was that contract offered to him with the consent of the council at the time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You got an Order in Council authorizing you to make the offer to him. Were there any payments made to him on the 31½ miles before the contract was entered into ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there were no payments made on other than the first 11½ miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well, all I can do is to protest against it. Here is a contract for the construction of 31½ miles of railroad given to a person who has not tendered for it, and without any open competition at all ; and the only excuse the minister has is that the man had constructed another section of the road, and that it was done at the urgent request of the members of parliament representing that section of the country. What is the use of having an Act of parliament which says all such works shall be let by contract ? What is the use of the Order in Council if the minister can override it ? We cannot do anything but protest against such extraordinary conduct as that of the minister.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is not much use of my hon. friend talking about extraordinary conduct. He does not deceive anybody, because he must recollect that it has been a very customary and usual thing. It was so under his own administration, and if he desires to be furnished with instances of it, I will supply them.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would be delighted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman may assume that what he did is not a justification, and I quite admit that it is not.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to see the hon. gentleman give a justification in a particular case ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No doubt it would not be sufficient for me to show that the same thing has frequently occurred, and properly and naturally so. We invited offers from these tenderers, and the prices at which the contracts were awarded were fair and reasonable prices, as anybody will know who has had experience in business of that kind ; and the contractor was a very responsible man who had done a large amount of work, and upon whom one could rely as able to carry on the work in accordance with the contract. When the prices were fixed by competition on a small section, we could not do a wiser thing than continue the contract in the hands of a safe and responsible man for any further mileage we had to construct ; and that is what we did after the matter had been considered in council.

Mr. BENNETT. We heard of so many extraordinary acts on the part of this government that one is hardly surprised at anything that occurs ; but this act overtops everything else.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The last is always the worst.

Mr. BENNETT. But one shudders to think of what the next may be. What are the facts? The minister wished to have constructed a certain line of railway in Prince Edward Island. Tenders were asked for 11½ miles in the open market. No one can find fault with that. The work was proceeded with. The 11½ miles were constructed, not for a lump amount, but on what is known as schedule prices, that is, so much for this part, and so much for that part. Then, the minister deliberately goes and gives the same man a contract for 31½ miles of the same road, without asking for a tender or inviting any kind of public competition. I am not going to say that there was any collusion between the minister and these contractors; but a strong inference can be drawn from this fact, that the minister knew that there was more profit to be derived from the construction of 40 miles than there was from the construction of 11 miles. The minister might have said to the contractor: 'To construct the 11 miles will entail the removal of a considerable plant to the scene of operations, and I will tell you what I will do: You tender a little higher figure for 11½ miles, and I will give you the contract for the 31½ miles afterwards.' I do not know that that happened; but the minister has placed himself in such a position that this state of affairs can fairly be inferred. But the minister did worse. Had he entered into this contract, and then gone to his colleagues and said: 'I have made this contract and we have to stand by it,' it would have been a bad enough transaction on his part. But the minister is not alone to blame, because every colleague of his assented to the deal. He says he went in the open council with it, and every one of the ministers said: 'That proposition is a proper one, and we approve of it.' Contrast the position of the Minister of Railways with that of the Postmaster General. The Postmaster General on coming into office, found that his predecessor had said to the men who had contracts for carrying the mails: 'You got the contract in the open market for carrying the mail for $120 a year, you being the lowest tenderer; and as you have invested in the equipment necessary to carry the mail, I will renew your contract at the same figure.' The Postmaster General cancelled all such contracts. That is a matter of record. He said to the contractors: 'You had a contract for three years only; and when your contract expired, the minister who preceded me in office had no right to renew it, and for that reason I cancel it.' There was scores of such cases. But here the Minister of Railways and Canals lets a contract for 11½ miles of railway, and then on his own authority, backed up afterwards by the council, gives a contract to the same man without any tender or competition for 31½ miles more. There is not a tittle of evidence before this committee to show that the other 31½ miles could not have been more cheaply constructed. On the schedule prices the work would cost as much proportionately for the 31½ miles as the 11½ miles did, while the means of access, the materials, the supplies and opportunities to engage in the work were all much more advantageous to the contractor. If there had to be blasting on the first 11½ miles, I suppose the minister did not in his first schedule provide for allowing so much for granite, so much for limestone, and so forth. It may be that on the first 11½ miles the contractor would meet with granite, whereas on the other part he would find shale or hardpan, the excavation of which would not be nearly so expensive. The Minister of Railways and Canals is certainly carrying things with a high hand. But, I do not blame him altogether for asserting himself. He has hard work to keep the job in his department. This afternoon he was asked whether the French river navigation system was to be under his control or not, and right along side him was the Minister of Public Works, and he made the statement emphatically that if anything were done it would be done by himself. Evidently the hon. minister intends to assert himself. All I can say is that if he can get his colleagues in the council to back him up in deals of this kind, he will be asserting his position, and asserting it pretty emphatically. I am surprised that there is not an hon. member on the other side who will stand up and protest against this high-handed proceeding, but so long as the present government remain in office, I suppose the country will have to grin and bear it. I can tell the hon. minister, however, that such transactions as this will not stand the light of public discussion, and when properly ventilated, they will be visited on the heads of the present government as they ought to be.

Mr. FARQUHARSON. I do not often take up the time of the House and certainly would not rise to defend anything which I knew to be wrong or a waste of public money. I happen to be in a position to know all about this road and the ground it covers, and I think I am a much better authority on the subject than the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House. The first 11½ miles were let to the lowest tenderer, and the gentleman who got the contract, Mr. Kitchen, is a very efficient contractor who belongs to New Brunswick. Those 11½ miles were let at the very best rate, being the lowest of six tenders and it must be evident that the contractor, who did the work, would be better equipped to continue it and complete the balance of the road than anybody else. It is not extraordinary therefore that he should have been given a contract for the balance without any tenders being called for. As a general rule, it is no doubt better to call for tenders, but there are exceptions, and the government has to be guided by the conditions which prevail, and certainly in this case the contractor, having taken the first 11½ miles at a lower rate than anybody else offered to do the work for, and having done the work efficiently and being equipped on the ground with all the appliances to continue it, it seems to me that it was a wise policy to give him an extension of his contract at the same rates. For the balance of the 31 miles the conditions are about the same. If anything, I should say that they are more difficult, because the country is a wilder and a rougher one to traverse and will require more excavations than did the other portion of the line. For my part, I am thoroughly convinced that the arrangement was a very good one, and I certainly would not find any fault with the Minister of Railways for having acted as he did.

Mr. SPROULE. The defence made by the hon. gentleman for West Queen's (Mr. Farquharson) may be a very good one from his standpoint, if he knows all the conditions and surroundings. But what we object to is the adoption of an unsound principle, and one which is contrary to that adopted as one of the planks of the Reform platform. The Reform party adopted as one of its planks that no public money should be expended on public works except after calling for tenders and giving the contract to the lowest tenderer, and the Minister of Railways has acted in open violation of that principle. Evidently a small contract was given to this contractor in order to afford some apology for extending that contract and giving him a larger one. The hon. member says that the cuttings are heavier in the second portion perhaps than in the first. Well, that is a reason why the contract could be taken at a cheaper rate. If the haulings are shorter and the cuttings heavier, the work could be done for less money, and if tenders have been called, in all probability it would have cost less. But the great thing against which we protest is that the principle set down in the Reform platform, as one of those on which hon. gentlemen opposite would act, if returned to power, has been deliberately violated.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister's statement does not agree with the return brought down in the Senate. He says that before this party began the work, the minister obtained the consent of his colleagues to the contract. If I remember rightly in the return brought down to the Senate, the department did not know at all that there were any such contracts entered into, and that the work had been commenced and in progress a number of months before the consent of the hon. minister's colleagues was obtained. The statement of Mr. Scott in the Senate was that the work had been in progress some time before the Order in Council was obtained authorising the contract.

Mr. FARQUHARSON.

Mr. HACKETT. I had a question on the Order paper the last few days in connection with the letting of this contract, but the minister was apparently unable to give me the information required, and the question was postponed from day to day. We are evidently now, however, getting some of the information I desired. It appears that there was no contract for the construction of this railway from Southport to Murray Harbour. There was simply a contract for 11½ miles of the work, and the balance of the work was given to the same contractor at the same schedule rate. I think that that is entirely wrong. This contract was simply for the grading of a railway, and there are numbers of contractors down there who would have been glad to have had the opportunity of bidding for the grading of this road. But the minister was evidently determined to give it to his friend Mr. Kitchen. As far as the 11½ miles are concerned, Mr. Kitchen was the lowest tenderer and entitled to the contract, but that does not warrant the minister giving him without competition the construction of the other 31½ miles to Murray harbour, and I cannot approve of that. This kind of thing leads to corruption, extravagance and waste of public money. The hon. member for West Queen's has spoken about the difficulty in the grading and the construction of this railway, but he knows as well as I that the first 11½ miles cost twice as much per mile for the grading as will the other 31½. He knows that the first section goes through the most uneven part of the country, where there are more hills and more grading and levelling to be done. Yet the minister has allowed this man for the 31½ miles, the work on which will only cost one-half of what the 11½ miles cost, the same schedule rates as he paid on the first contract. We know why all this has been done. We know that this friend of the minister, about election time, had printed blanks circulated throughout the riding of East Queen's offering work to men who would go in and promise to vote for Mr. McKinnon. Those blanks were produced in court and are now on record, and it is not to be wondered at that Mr. Kitchen, after doing all this to obtain support for the government, should have been allowed the privilege of building this further section of railway without any competition. What more is Mr. Kitchen doing? Is he only grading or is he grading and ballasting the track and building stations and doing everything to complete the railway in that part of the country?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have arranged that he shall do the track laying and the ballasting.

I have not seen all the answers or statements made in the other Chamber with regard to this matter, but I know whereof I speak when I say that the extension of this contract was made by Order in Council long before a blow was struck on the additional thirty and a half miles. I defend the extension of that contract on the ground of public interest, and I invite hon. gentlemen opposite to take the very first opportunity—it may not be available at this moment, but it will come—of entering upon the most thorough investigation of the whole proceeding. What are tenders asked for ? In order that we may make sure that the country is not paying an unreasonable price for the work that is being done. And what kind of people do you wish to tender ? People who are competent to carry out the work they undertake, people who have means, people who are responsible and can stand behind the undertakings they make. We had tenders for eleven and a half miles which was all we expected to build at that time. These tenders showed us just what competition would do as to the cost of the work. Our engineers were satisfied that the prices were reasonable. And hon. gentlemen opposite can look at them and see whether they are reasonable or not. We found that we had a competent and responsible contractor, and he was willing to take the work at the same prices for similar classes of work as those covered by his tender. Therefore, in the public interest, we did what has been done in the department over and over again, we extended this contract. I do not carry the details of these matters in my mind, but I will bring a statement of some extensions that have been made from time to time by our own and other governments, for such extensions have been made by all governments under conditions which are practically the same as these. It is a very legitimate mode of doing business for the lowest tenderers are often people who are not capable of carrying out the work, and who give the department more trouble than the saving of expense is worth. They get a contract from the government and think they are going to make a great deal of money whether they have had experience or not. But it is always better, if possible, to get a safe man. If you are paying only a reasonable price for the work and have responsible men who are capable of carrying out your contract, it is far better to extend their contracts than to call in others of whose capacity you have no knowledge.

Mr. BENNETT. If the extension had been for seventy-five miles instead of thirty-one miles, would the hon. minister have given the contract ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was no suggestion of an extension——

Mr. BENNETT. But, if it had amounted to seventy-five miles, would the hon. gentleman have acted in the same way ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can hardly be expected to say, offhand, exactly what would have been done if the circumstances had been entirely different.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I think we shall have to ask the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) to read his colleague a great moral lecture upon the duty of giving out contracts by tender only. We know how the Postmaster General has sacrificed himself in the carrying out of his principle in this respect, a principle which has been so much neglected by hon. gentlemen opposite. I expect the Postmaster General to read his colleague a severe lecture.

Mr. MURRAY. I do not rise to defend the Minister of Railways and Canals, but I like to see a discussion carried on with fairness. To my mind as a business man, the Minister of Railways and Canals gave his contract for the extension of the work in a businesslike way. He did exactly what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did in the construction of their line. The contractors who tendered for work on that road were given contracts right along as long as their work was satisfactory. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not appear to be in harmony. One of them said that the work on this eleven and a half miles was much more difficult than the remainder, while another said that the other part was more hilly and required more excavation. The question is simply, was the second contract let for more than the work was worth ? The Minister of Railways and Canals was the judge. He knew he had got the lowest tenderer for the eleven and a half miles, and that a good contractor could not do the rest of the work for less than the price at which he gave it. So, in a businesslike way, he extended the contract for the additional mileage he required at the same schedule of prices. I do not think the country has suffered, but the opposition in this matter are trying to make a mountain out of a molehill. Before the giving of this contract labour and everything else had advanced in price, and the chances are that the minister got the best of the bargain.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister of Railways and Canals is certainly to be congratulated on the fact that at least he has found one dutiful and docile supporter. The member for Pontiac (Mr. Murray) wants no more tenders asked for by the Railway Department. If the minister says it is right, the hon. member for Pontiac accepts in silent awe. This is going to be a case of hero worship with the hon. gentleman from this time out. Let any minister bring up what he chooses and the hon. member for Pontiac is ready to say that it is all right because the minister says so. But the hon. minister did not find so docile a supporter in the hon. member for West Queen's (Mr.

Farquharson). That hon. gentleman says it may have been right or it may not. I think that hon. gentleman is aggrieved—and this throws light on the story—because the contractor did not come from Prince Edward Island, but from New Brunswick.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He came from a good place.

Mr. BENNETT. He certainly came from a good place to get a contract in that department. I wonder if 'my friend Pugsley' did not intervene on this contractor's behalf? Perhaps he did. Perhaps the Prince Edward Island contractor did not secure the services of 'my friend Pugsley.' But the blissfulness of the hon. member for Pontiac is beautiful to see. If the minister gives a contract for five miles of railway, evidently he can continue it for fifty miles without further tenders, and be sure of the support of the hon. member for Pontiac. All he wishes is that the minister shall say it is right. No doubt, he will say it is right, then he is prepared to support it. Once again I have to congratulate the Minister of Railways and Canals. He has asserted his position. He came down with the Drummond County Railway deal, all signed, sealed and delivered, and threw it at his supporters and said : There it is, take it. And they did take it. He came down with the Yukon deal and threw it at his supporters without ever consulting them, although it was only a day or two before the meeting of parliament, and they said : We will take that too. Now the minister comes down with a proposition and says, I want you to understand that I am going to let railway contracts on this principle. I shall let a contract for a few miles, and if I see the prices are right, I will extend that railway indefinitely; and I shall expect you to do as you have done before, one after another, getting up like the hon. member for Pontiac (Mr. Murray) and saying amen to the proposition.

Mr. MURRAY. I wish to inform the hon. gentleman that I am not a slavish supporter of this or of any government. I think he is stretching his imagination when he says that I approve of everything the minister does, and am satisfied to let him go on and let contracts. I said nothing of the kind. I say that in this case I think the minister was justified. I do not approve of the principle. The hon. member, I think, has tried to misconstrue my statements.

Mr. HACKETT. Has the minister settled on the location of the southern terminus of this railway, whether it will be at Murray River Bridge or Murray Harbour ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not come to a final settlement with regard to that. Perhaps it would be necessary for me to go down there myself and look over the ground with some of my officers.

Mr. BENNETT.

Salaries, engineers, draftsmen, extra clerks and messengers, $26,140.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is an increase over last year of $350. We have given an increase to Mr. E. V. Johnson, the inspecting engineer, of $200, and $100 to the assistant engineer, and $50 to Mr. A. H. McKee.

Prince Edward Island Railway, $275,000.

Mr. BENNETT. I did not understand the minister to say what was the approximate cost per mile of the eleven and a half miles that were constructed under the original contract.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the information, but I can get it in the office.

Mr. BENNETT. Has that eleven and a half miles been paid for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, it is not completed yet.

Mr. SPROULE. The other day I asked about the schedule prices paid in that contract, and the minister did not give us any information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will get the information and furnish it.

Mr. BELL. I see from the government return up to the end of 1901 that the cost of working the Prince Edward Island Railroad increased by over $40,000 over the preceding year. Does the minister expect any such increase this year ? If so, he is not appropriating nearly enough money to carry on that road. If his working expenses are increased by $40,000 this year he will need over $300,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have had to add something to the operating charges. I have had from all the members representing the island a demand urging to give them two trains a day during the winter season as well as in the summer, on that portion of the line that is not so served. We cannot put on two trains without considerably augmenting the cost of operation. Many things in the way of improvements are required, which I hope to be able to take up during the year. So I could not hold out any promise of reduction in the balance against us for the current year. Our business is growing nicely, I understand it is better than in former years. But we have these urgent demands upon us, and reasonable demands too, with which I would be glad to comply.

Mr. BELL. In that case the hon. minister is making no provision for such an increased service, because he is merely taking this year $14,000 more than the working expenses last year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Mr. BELL. Is it likely that any trains will be operated on the branch we have been discussing ? Will it be completed by the end of the fiscal year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. BELL. He has not anticipated that there will be any outlay in that direction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The bridge will not be completed for probably a year and a half.

Mr. BELL. I observe the hon. minister had increased earnings of $19,000 and increased operating expenses of $40,000 which would be more than twice the amount of the increased earnings, so that, if he anticipates any increased business and he has no more revenue, it means that for every dollar he gets of revenue it will cost him $2 of expenditure and he is making no provision for such an event.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There were certain improvements on the road which had to be made, and if I had had a capital expenditure the cost would not have appeared in the working expenses at all. I feel like treating the Island road with a reasonable degree of liberality. The people there are situated very differently from us on the mainland and I think they have a strong claim to consideration. If I have any discretion to exercise I think I should exercise that discretion in a general way toward the Island railway.

Mr. HACKETT. I am pleased to hear this statement from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and I trust in doing that he will put on a second train west of Summerside. We, who live west of Summerside, believe that this is the best paying part of the road. It is true there may not be as many passengers as on other portions of the road but there is more freight and more traffic of that kind and I urge upon the hon. minister as strongly as possible the necessity of giving us this second train and I trust that he will see his way clear to comply with our wishes in this respect. We have two trains during the summer months and we are only deprived of this second train about four months in the year. I believe that if we had this second train in that part of the country it would not increase expenses but it would largely add to the revenue. I am not surprised at the increase in the working expenses for 1900. There is a very good reason for that. The hon. minister knows all about it. I need not repeat anything in that connection, but it will not occur again for some time to come. He will have two or three years at all events during which time he will not have as great a number of men working on the railway as he had in 1900. I trust the hon. minister will see his way clear to put on a second train.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will have to trust to 'Hansard' for what the hon. gentleman has said because the talking that is going on about me renders it impossible for me to hear him.

Canals—repairs and operating expenses, $668,-634.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. minister kindly give the details of the increase of $52,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The increase of $52,000 is due to the following items ; staff and repairs, $9,988. There is an item for lighting the canal and for furnishing electric power for the canal which makes up—

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Which canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The Cornwall canal. We are lighting it with electric light and the gates are being worked with electric power.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like to ask the hon. minister just here, although we have left the railway estimates a question. I see a rumour to the effect that Mr. Russell who is the head superintendent of the Intercolonial Railway is about to be retired and the report is that Mr. Tiffin is to take his place and that a Mr. Ross is to take Mr. Tiffin's place. Is there any truth in these rumours.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None whatever. There is no truth in them. No such action has been taken and at this moment no such action is contemplated.

Additional to pay persons employed permanently in the public service and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for and in connection with passing vessels through the canals of the government of Canada from mid-night on Saturday to mid-night on Sunday, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $18,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How is that increase of $3,000 to workmen for working over hours accounted for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The opening of the Soulanges canal itself would make up a good deal of difference and I am not sure but that it would absorb the whole $3,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Soulanges canal alone ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it would take a very large portion of the $3,000.

Intercolonial Railway—Improved ferry service, Strait of Canso, $247,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We want the fullest explanation of that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a balance required to complete the ferry and the approaches on both sides. The expenditure upon that work altogether including the cost of the steamer, the approaches, the hydraulic lifts, the subaqueous excavation, will amount to $610,000.

Mr. BELL. What did the steamer cost ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Two hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars.

Mr. BELL. Is the work that was done for her in Halifax included in the $610,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There was some painting and cleaning done on her there during the winter.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Was the steamer found serviceable for the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Very; we have favourable accounts of her.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why was she sent to Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. She was battered about by storms in crossing the Atlantic, and some of her machinery was injured. While they gave her ample coal for some days beyond an ordinary passage, yet she encountered such rough weather and not being able to make very good time at sea, she exhausted her coal near Newfoundland and was towed in there. When she came to Mulgrave we thought that it would be better that she should be taken to Halifax and be looked over. She is now upon the route and doing all that we expected of her.

Mr. BELL. How many cars does she carry at a time ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. She has three tracks on her deck, and is about 270 feet long. We expect her to take a full train.

Mr. BELL. Engine and all ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not expected the engine would go over.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where was delivery taken ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We took delivery on the other side. She sailed in September or the last of August and she arrived on the last of September or early in October. We were not ready for her, as we did not have the approaches finished, but at all events we thought she would not be in shape to go to work right away. We had not any precedent for this system of hydraulic lifting, and the officers had to do a certain amount of original work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What time was she put on commission on the ferry ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. 25th of April.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There has been no experience of this boat in the ice so far.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not know that we have had experience of the ice, but we have not any doubt as to her efficiency in the ice. She has been built by a firm who have built a number of vessels of various kinds for the Russian Government, and who are thoroughly familiar with what is required.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it intended to transport a whole train across the Strait—all the passenger cars, baggage cars, and everything ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. She will take a whole passenger train easily.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there any estimate in the department of what the cost of a bridge there would be ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. I have talked to some of our engineers on the subject, but there has been no careful estimate made of what a bridge would cost. I have heard it stated by gentlemen who profess to know, that it would cost five or six millions, but the opinion of some of the engineers in my department is that it would cost more than that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Outside of this boat there has been an expenditure of $350,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $350,000 or $360,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the minister make a statement as to what has been done with that ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have done a large amount of bridge construction in the form of approaches on either side. This has been largely experimental work, some of which we have had to take up again. These superstructures alone have cost us $86,000. On dredging, we have spent $93,000. On electrical work, engineering, and so forth, we have spent $22,500.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have you a search light on the boat ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, we shall have—we have alwys had—a search light on our ferry.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has there been any difficulty with the structures on either side by reason of ice during the past winter ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think not any serious trouble; but there has been some slight displacement at Point Tupper. That is where we are likely to have trouble if we are going to have any.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the work done partly or without tender?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The labour work was done by ourselves; but we invited tenders for all the materials and supplies of every kind.

Intercolonial Railway—to provide additional tools and machinery, $40,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In this there is a revote of $47,000. Last year when we took the vote in the main estimates, we are in hopes that this work would be done during the year; but every manufacturer has been overrun with work, and has been slow in delivery.

Intercolonial Railway—rolling stock, $70,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to pay for four shunting engines that have been made at the Kingston Locomotive Works. The price of these engines is $17,500 each.

Intercolonial Railway—improvement at Mulgrave, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The appropriation for the current year of $13,000 was not quite sufficient, and we require this to supplement it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are the additional tools and machinery to supply the place of those which are already worn out, or are they in addition to those which have been used in the past?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for larger and heavier machines to handle the larger and heavier engines, and I do not know of any other items in the estimate that has any connection with this.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Before the Intercolonial Railway items are through I would like to call the attention of the hon. minister to the local railway service between Lévis and the valley of the Metapedia. I have received a number of petitions from residents in the counties of Bonaventure and Rimouski, complaining about the railway running time in that district. I understand that a time table is being prepared for the spring and summer service, and I would like to ask the hon. minister if possible to comply with the wishes of the people in those localities. What the people complain of more particularly is the local service. There is only one local train per day eastward, which leaves Point Lévis at 8.15 a.m., and arrives in Campbellton at 8.45 p.m., taking 12 hours to cover 303 miles, and going west the train leaves Campbellton at 10.15 p.m., and reaches Lévis at 10.45 the following morning, taking over 12 hours to cover the same distance. Then there is a train going west which leaves Campbellton at 6 o'clock in the morning, and arrives at St. Flavie at 4 p.m. in the afternoon, taking 10 hours to cover 105 miles. The local service from Metapedia to Lévis westward is altogether at night. The train leaves Campbellton at 10.45 p.m., and goes over a large area at night, arriving at the different stations at 11 p.m., 12 a.m., 3 a.m., and 4 a.m., thus compelling the people to wait until very late at night or get up at early hours in the morning in order to catch the local train. What they want is that one train should leave Point Lévis at 7 a.m. for Campbellton and that the train which leaves Campbellton at 10.45 a.m. should leave at 7 a.m., and reach Point Lévis in the evening. I have presented a number of petitions asking for this change in the service and my colleague from Rimouski has also presented a number of petitions to the same effect, and I am sure that the hon. minister will meet the wishes of the people in that locality.

Sault Ste. Marie canal—Towards deepening and widening the entrance, $20,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. That is being expended during this year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will it require to complete the whole entrance to a 21-foot depth of navigation?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The estimated cost is $420,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will the whole of it be finished this season?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, we have not even let the contract for the upper, and the lower entrance work will not be completed this current year. We are now dealing with the supplementaries for the year we are in up to next year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. minister to his surveys on the Georgian canal and to show him how entirely useless they are. The hon. gentleman must remember that in the debate in the House it was contemplated that this would be an extension of the same system of waterways which are at present in force from Lake Superior down, which is a 20-foot navigation. But the surveys are all got out and the quantities and estimates and everything else on the basis of a 14-foot navigation. We have got that in the Welland canal, and there is no use of building a new canal with a 14-foot depth of navigation. The surveys, estimates and plans ought to have been taken out on the basis of a 20-foot navigation. If the minister has the information in his department, perhaps the engineers, on the surveys they have made, will be able to make an estimate of the cost of the 20-foot navigation, and he ought to be ready next session to supplement his report, which is entirely useless, by giving this information.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Is the hon. gentleman under the impression that we are making a survey of the Georgian Bay route for canal purposes? We are not doing that. I quite agree that the project ought to be on a 20-foot basis, and we are not making any survey at all. We did one year ask parliament to give us a small grant, not exceeding $10,000, to enable us to survey a portion of the canal, but we did not take the thing up as a project at all, and have not had any extensive surveys made. I am given to understand that the company have prepared plans and estimates on the basis of a 20-foot navigation to show what the whole enterprise would cost, but that information has not been furnished the government.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If the hon. minister will look at his own report, he will see that Mr. H. F. McLeod, civil engineer, and Mr. Kerr made a survey in 1900, of all the locks required on the whole length of the canal from the Georgian bay down, and gave the estimated cost, based on a depth of a 14-foot navigation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think that that has been abandoned for some time. We came to the conclusion that it would be idle for the company to undertake the construction of a canal with a 14-foot navigation. It must be a 20-foot or not at all.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is the first report we have had from the hon. minister, and it is the report of this year on surveys made in 1900 and 1901.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Railways and canals—chargeable to capital—Lachine canal—Towards electrical installation, $25,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We desire to make use of electricity on the canal, and are installing a plant for the purpose. The object is to light the canal, work the gates and bridges, &c. The contract is in the hands of the Canadian Electrical Company, by whom it was secured under tender. Messrs. Ahearn & Soper are the contractors for putting up the poles and wire cables, and Messrs. Grant & Co. for the work that is being done to power house. We propose to erect a power house and produce the current for ourselves.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total cost?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The total will be $90,000. We had an appropriation of $30,000 in the estimates of last year, and the probable expenditure up to the 30th June, 1902, is $50,753. We require this $25,000, therefore, to carry on the work till the end of the year. We have a round sum of $35,000 in the estimates for the year to come. In that is included the estimate for the power house, and out of that sum will be taken whatever amount is required to cover the $90,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If I understand the minister, then, he will have this sum of $25,000, which, with sums already voted, will make $55,000, and he is taking $45,000 in the estimates next year. That will make $100,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the $45,000 for this year includes the continuation of the work on the walls for next year, also some dredging and a pontoon gate.

Farran's Point canal—Enlargement, $26,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What amount will be necessary in order to finish that work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The expenditure for the current year, ending 30th June next, will exceed the appropriation by this amount, and so we require this to meet these obligations.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What amount have you in the estimates for next year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have $10,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will that finish the work?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, so I am advised.

North Channel—Forming, $50,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount expended on the north channel and does this finish it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are to get next year, under the estimates, $56,000. That, I understand, will finish the work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What will be the total cost when finished?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Something short of $1,200,000.

Galops Rapids—Deepening and widening, $50,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I propose to make a reduction in this item. When we were discussing this matter the other day, I said we were not asking any sum for continuing the work, but that there was $25,000, or very close to it, which we owed on account of work done before the 1st of July of the current year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not the current year, but the year before.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Before the 1st of July, the fiscal year in which we are now.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, the current fiscal year commences on the 1st of July. Then I say we were providing for an amount which would be sufficient to pay for the work done prior to the 1st of July of the current fiscal year. Now, I do not see that there is anything due in respect of work that was done before the 1st of July. That has not been properly estimated upon, and I have not the figures to enable me to state accurately what the amount due on work would be done prior to the commencement of the fiscal year that we are now in. Therefore, I do not propose to ask the committee to vote anything in respect to that. If we find there is anything, and I do not think there is much, we will have to ask parliament to provide for it later. But now, all I ask for is a sufficient amount to pay the drawbacks, which are between $24,000 and $25,000. I ask for one-half of this present vote, and leave the appropriation standing at $25,000. The drawback previous to the 1st of July, in the current year——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, there was no vote for the Galops Rapids last year at all. Then this work must have been done before last year; and the amount is for work, you say, done during the current year.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, I stated the very reverse. I am saying that all I am asking for is a vote which will enable me to pay what was retained by drawback for work prior to the 1st of July, in the current year, or to be more explicit, the first day of July, 1901. Not one farthing am I asking for to be paid in respect of any work subsequent to the 1st of July, 1901.

Mr. SPROULE. Why have an expenditure without an appropriation? Because it must be clear that you went on and continued the work for which you had no appropriation, about a year ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not.

Mr. SPROULE. Somebody must have done it. Surely it was done under the instructions of the engineer.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, I want to be understood explicitly by the committee. I stated at the last meeting of the committee when this item was referred to, that the contractor was notified that we were not going to continue the work.

Mr. SPROULE. About what date?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He was notified before the 1st of July, 1901; and he had no authority whatever, expressed or implied, for continuing the work after that date.

Mr. SPROULE. Why should the hon. gentleman now ask for a sum to pay him if he had no authority?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must be lacking in the faculty of explaining myself if the hon. gentleman has not understood me. I say that I am not asking for anything more than sufficient to pay the drawback that was due and retained in the department, as is usual in all contracts, for work prior to the 1st of July, 1901.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand what the hon. minister says perfectly well. Does he mean to say that the work did in 1901 amounted to $300,000? It was a daily contract, so much per day, and there could be no drawback in paying for anything before 1901, and there was a drawback for work done to the extent of $500,000 in 1902.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, the hon. gentleman knows that drawbacks are always deducted in forming estimates, and it is only when special application is made that any portion of the drawback is released.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then the minister will please tell us what is the amount of the contract, what is the amount of the drawback that is due on the contract, and how far does it extend back?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The drawback is 10 per cent on over $200,000, on all the work that was done from 1897 to 1901. Ten per cent on that has been retained and is in our hands. I do not think I can make it clearer than that. I state distinctly to the committee that I have no intention of paying one dollar for work done after the 1st of July.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then the minister must see that he is exceeding his vote of 1901 by the extent of the drawback. He expended on the Galops Rapids a certain amount of money, which is exceeded by the drawback to the extent, as he says, of $25,000. What does he want the other $25,000 for?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman cannot properly draw an inference of that kind. I ask the hon. gentleman why he says that the appropriation was exceeded, otherwise there would be no drawback retained.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think it is perfectly clear, and the minister ought to see it at a glance. There was an amount voted for the Galops canal in 1900, in the year previous, and in the year previous to that. Then the amount he says has been expended on the 1st of July, 1901.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What amount ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The $10,000 you paid him, plus the drawback for which you are asking an amount now. Was not the total amount voted paid to the Gilbert Company ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No. Of the $100,000 appropriation for 1901, the amount expended was about $90,000. Now, we would have been able, if the application had been made to us before that appropriation lapsed, to pay $10,000 out of that appropriation on account of the drawback. But it was not asked for and was not paid; and the appropriation therefore for the difference between what was paid and the amount of the drawback, has lapsed.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Then the total amount that has lapsed is $10,000 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, on that year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Don't you pay the drawback for the year previous, when he is hired by the day ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do sometimes. Sometimes the contractor comes in and makes an application, and we go to council and get authority to pay the drawback to the contractor. If he does not ask for it, he does not get it. In this case he has not asked for it, and therefore he did not get it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount of the drawback that is due them for the three years ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Between $24,000 and $25,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What are you asking the other $25,000 for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I say I am not. I am striking $25,000 out of the vote.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You are striking out $25,000 and only going to apply the drawback which is due the contractor to the first of July, 1901?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure my hon. friend that I have repeated that fifteen or twenty times.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I did not hear what the hon. gentleman said when he was striking out the $25,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That was the first thing I mentioned.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Flint) :

Hon. Mr. HAGGART.

Resolved that a sum not exceeding $25,000 be granted to His Majesty for deepening and widening the Galops Rapids.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it usual for a contractor to allow a drawback of 10 per cent to remain for a year without applying for it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recall individual instances, but I know where there have been large accumulations of drawbacks and we have very often to get the necessary authority to pay them. At certain times a contractor will allow his drawback to remain a good deal longer than he will at other times. There is no rule about it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If I understand, this is a contract by the day. His dredges are hired?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Only in part.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Only in part, I know, but the amount that is paid in on his contract is a small proportion of the total payment for the use of his dredges. And you are deducting an amount equal to 10 per cent of the whole, which you have now continued to keep for over three years without the contractor making application for the payment of the 10 per cent. It is most extraordinary.

Motion agreed to.

Soulanges canal—Construction and equipment, $100,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is that for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to enable us to clear up for the year what has been done in respect to the work on this canal.

Mr. SPROULE. This is contract work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Rapide Plat canal, enlargement, $50,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the amount to be expended for next year, and what is the total amount required to finish the work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount we have asked for next year will finish it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The amount you have now in the estimates for next year will finish the whole expenditure in connection with the Rapide Plat canal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, that is the estimate of the engineer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Well that is about the end of the St. Lawrence canal system. What is the amount the hon. minister estimates will be required to finish the whole of the St. Lawrence works from the head of the Galops Rapids down to Montreal ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought I had that statement here in my room, but I believe it is over at my office. I will have it for the supplementaries for next year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like the hon. minister to make a general statement too in reference to the Welland canal and the whole system of navigation and what will be required to finish it up and have it ready when the supplementaries are under discussion.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I intend to do that.

The gathering information and otherwise with reference to a railway commission, $1,400.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is to cover what we have paid for gathering information in respect to a railway commission.

Mr. SPROULE. That was the railway commission in regard to freight rates ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We had a commission of inquiry from one end of the country to the other. The commissioner took evidence and inquired into freight rates and such troubles as were arising in respect to railways.

Mr. SPROULE. Was the gentleman appointed on this railway commission a railway expert, or what qualifications had he for doing that work ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had very superior qualifications, as far as I could judge. I inquired to ascertain where I could get a man who had been a student of economic questions, who had studied railway questions and inter-state laws regulating railways, and I found such a man in the person of Prof. McLean.

Mr. SPROULE. What experience had he in connection with railways ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He had never operated a railway. He had never been in the employ of a railway company, but he had studied railway questions generally and he is a professor in Lafayette College, Arkansas. Any one who has taken the trouble to read the report prepared by him, I think, cannot fail to be pleased with the manner in which he has discharged the duties imposed upon him.

Mr. SPROULE. He is a professor of what branch ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Political economy and other economic questions.

Mr. SPROULE. I would hardly think that a teaching professor would have such an intimate knowledge of railway traffic and traffic arrangements between railway companies as would make him an expert in that line. He might, from the literary standpoint, and as a professor of political economy, be able to write a fine report, but I can hardly think that would make him an expert, or make him more suitable for this work than a business man who had been connected with railways.

Welland canal, to complete west docking at Port Dalhousie, $11,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for work done under the contract of Mr. John Riley. The amount appropriated last year, we thought, would suffice for the work this year, but it has not sufficed. The contractor has gone on and continued the work, as we were glad to have him do, and we want $11,000 to pay what he is likely to earn in the current year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the total amount required to finish that dock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The amount expended up to date is $19,000. This work will be finished during the current year, and $11,000 will finish it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is there anything in for next year ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This finishes it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes.

Strengthening of wall at head of locks, $5,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that old canal used by vessels ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes. There are some factories there. We have to keep it open.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It is only useful for supplying water power to the factories. What rental is the minister getting for that water power ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. New leases are granted upon very much better terms for the country than the old ones. I have endeavoured to secure for the benefit of the public not an excessive but a reasonable rate.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How much per horse power ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not less than $2 and as high as $6 annually.

To complete drainage at Port Colborne, $5,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have to do this work in consequence of the remonstrances of the board of health.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why is the government expected to do the drainage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If we obstruct the natural drainage by our canal I presume we would be bound to provide drainage.

Mr. COCHRANE. The water in the canal would not be any higher than the level of the lake, and so you cannot obstruct the drainage.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I cannot understand how it is possible that you can obstruct the drainage by building the canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We do not want the surface drainage to go into the canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It could not go anywhere else than into the canal. I cannot understand for the life of me the principle upon which the government does this work. It is unexplainable I suppose. Go on to the next item.

Lachine canal—To complete work of paving Mill street, $1,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Why do you pave Mill street.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This finishes it and we will hand it over to the city, which will relieve us from any further responsibility.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But on what principle do you pave Mill street.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It belongs to us and nobody else could do it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is a long strip on government property and it is used for traffic.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. And because a street in Montreal is alongside government property you are called upon to pave it.

To rebuild waste weir, $6,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I suppose this is about ten times the amount you ever collected in rent from the parties you supply the water to.

Mr. COCHRANE. What policy has the government adopted in reference to this. Why should the public be called upon to contribute to building weirs for gentlemen who have manufacturing establishments on the canal. I should think that if we furnish them with water they should build their own weirs. I am not disposed to grumble about doing anything for the benefit of the public as a whole, but as the representative of a rural constituency I do not feel called upon to vote public money to accommodate gentlemen in Montreal or anywhere else. You not only keep up the weirs but you build bridges across the weirs for them. Why should we do this work for private individuals ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. These weirs have been there for a great many years and they require to be rebuilt and there is no alternative.

Mr. COCHRANE. I do not accept that as an explanation at all. I do not think it is a common sense explanation that because a grievance has existed for years past even under the administration I supported, it should be continued. If we find that this is not a paying investment we should stop it. If it is a losing game for us let those who get the benefit of the weirs keep them up. What is the revenue derived from keeping up these weirs ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot say from memory nor can the chief engineer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minister, in order to protect the canal and keep it from breaking away, should see that the weirs are properly built and put in proper order; and after that any repairs upon them should be charged to the individual who is using the water.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Is there any revenue at all derived from these weirs ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I cannot tell how much revenue we get from them. These water powers are subject to rental—not as much, I am sorry to say, as they ought to be, or as much as we are getting under the new leases; but they are all subject to rental.

Mr. ROSAMOND. It seems to me that if these weirs are maintained by the government for the benefit of the mills, the government ought to derive at least enough revenue from the mills to keep them in repair. These mill-owners are given an advantage over their competitors if they have these weirs maintained for them at the public expense. It is no argument to say that the same thing has been done by previous governments.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not bringing that forward as an argument at all, although I can say with absolute truthfulness that we are repairing the weirs just as they have always been repaired, and I think it would be rather hard on the lessees of these water privileges, after the lapse of all these years during which they have used them on the same conditions, never having been asked to contribute a farthing towards their repair, if we should now ask them to repair them. How could we compel them to do it ? We have given them leases which do not contain any covenant to compel them to keep up the weirs.

Mr. COCHRANE. There is no clause which compels you to keep them up.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If we did not keep them up, the canal would be hurt more than these people, and we cannot allow anything to occur that would impair the safety of the canal.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister says that hitherto there has been no contribution by the parties who own the water powers towards the maintenance of these weirs—that they have always been maintained by the government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So I am told by the chief engineer.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I would like the minister, before the next supplementary estimates are brought, to inquire and ascertain whether that is strictly correct or not, because, if my memory serves me rightly, I obliged some of them, when the weirs got out or order, to pay, at any rate, half the cost of putting them in order.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already stated that what I am saying I am saying on the authority of the chief engineer, that we are pursuing exactly the same course that has obtained hitherto; and I can well understand that unless there is a covenant in these leases——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is a covenant for repairs, to be paid by the lessee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That I will have to look into, because I am advised that there is not.

Mr. ROSAMOND. The minister will see that every mill-owner in the country using a water power is obliged to keep up his water power at his own expense; and therefore it is, I think, unjust that the mill-owners along the canals should have these weirs kept up for them at the public expense, and without contributing any revenue whatever to the country. I do not think that should be allowed to continue. I would be glad if the minister would bring down some information later on as to what revenue is derived from these weirs.

Culbute canal—To pay damages by flooding, $1,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Here is another thousand dollars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I shall be glad to read to the committee the names of the claimants and the amounts which have been reported upon and which we are prepared to pay as full settlement: A. Sabine, $75; Y. Lamarche, $30; L. Lacroix, sr., $40; G. Gervais, $10; T. Kearney, $55; F. Wright, $20; Rev. T. V. L. Morque, $75; E. Wousseau, $15; T. Kearney, $55; M. McVeigh, $160; D. Gervais, $25; M. Griffin, $50; T. Lacroix, $30; W. Lett, $20; L. Lacroix, jr., $30; A. Caswell, $40; legal and other expenses, $270; making $1,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you take a release from them to the effect that if at any time the Culbute canal is raised up to its former height, they will claim no more damages?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not settled these yet; but I should think that would be proper.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We put the dam down, and I thought we had paid everybody who had any claim when the dam was at its full height. But now that it is down, there are more claims.

Intercolonial Railway—Operation and maintenance, $1,000,000.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What was the amount voted last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. $4,500,000, and this is to supplement it up to the 1st of July next, which will make it the same as last year.

Mr. SPROULE. Perhaps the minister could give us some information as to what the deficit is on the working expenses of the road this year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I made the statement the other day that down to the 31st of March there was a deficit of $136,000, as compared with a deficit of $500,000 and $600,000 during the corresponding period of preceding years. I expect that this deficit will be extinguished and that there will be a credit on the other side.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This would only be available for about six weeks expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, and most of it must have been spent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have not paid last months yet. There are three months not paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. Are we to understand that the employees have not been paid for three months?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We pay the working men monthly. On the 10th of May the men are paid for April, so that we have April, May and June still to pay, which makes three months.

Cornwall canal, repairs and working expense, $18,150.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How do you exceed the estimate for repairs and working expense by $8,000 in one year on a canal that was only finished a couple of years ago.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is for the lighting of the canal by electricity, which comes under the general item of repairs and working expenses.

Mr. PRINGLE. While dealing with this matter, I would like to refer to a subject which pertains to it, and that is the superannuation of a man named Shields. I desire to express my appreciation of the efforts of the Minister of Railways and Canals to see that justice was done Mr. Shields. I received a communication a short time ago to the effect that the treasury board had granted him his superannuation from the date of that letter, but I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact, that on the 12th April, 1897, Mr. Shields was notified that his services would no longer be required. A period of five years has elapsed since then, but he is entitled to the superannuation from the 12th April, 1897, and is therefore entitled to the arrears from that date to the present. I do not think that the government are treating Mr. Shields at all fairly in simply allowing his superannuation from the present day. He should have the arrears for that period of five years, and I would ask the hon. minister to take that matter into his consideration. I have received a letter from Mr. Shields—who unfortunately is very ill, and I do not know when he may get better—complaining about these arrears and asking that this should be made right. Now that the government have looked into the matter and found that there was unquestionably a mistake in depriving him of his superannuation allowance, I think that they ought to grant him his superannuation from the date his services were dispensed with.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The question of arrears did not present itself to my mind, and I have not passed upon it. I was under the impression that it would be satisfactory to Mr. Shields and his friends if the superannuation were allowed. The treasury board have not the power to make any allowance in respect of arrears. If, on consideration, it seems proper, in view of the representations made to us, to allow the arrears, we will have to ask parliament for an appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. PRINGLE. That is one of the reasons I have brought the matter up—that it may require a vote of the House in order to give the arrears. I have a letter from Mr. Shields which I shall be glad to show the minister. While Mr. Shields appreciates the course taken by the government in granting his superannuation, he is very solicitious about the arrears. I can say that the man requires them, for he has quite a family and is in ill health. He has been unable to do any work since his dismissal owing to an unfortunate accident which occurred while in the discharge of his duties.

Railways and Canals—Collection of revenue—general—Additional amount to persons employed in the public service and remuneration to any other persons for services rendered for and in connection with passing vessels through the canals of the government of Canada from midnight on Saturdays to midnight on Sundays, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary, $4,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is made necessary by new work and increases on all canals. The amount will be required before the close of the fiscal year.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This seems a large amount for one canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is for all the canals.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. But the hon. minister has increased the vote in the main estimates from $15,000 to $19,000 for the canals generally, and this amount could not be needed for the Soulanges canal alone.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is not confined to that.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The minister told us that the increase from $15,000 to $19,000 was due to the increase of work by reason of the Soulanges canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, there is naturally an increase on all the canals, the Galops, Farran's Point and all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should there be additional work to what there was before?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not just recall what increases took place. But my hon. friend knows that on account of the increased wages and one thing or other, the expense of labour on our canals is growing.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have the wages of the men been increased?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. In some instances.

Mr. TAYLOR. The increases must be very rare. I do not know of any case on the Rideau canal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not recall upon what particular canals they are.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why is this proviso 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' here?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I suppose that, perhaps, there are men employed, who, not having passed the examination, could not be paid without this proviso.

Mr. TAYLOR. But men do not have to pass an examination to work on the canals.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Some of them have to, I believe.

Post Office Department—To promote Henry Knauf to a second-class clerkship, July, 1901, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $100.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the explanation of this ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Henry Knauf is a German. He was appointed to the service in 1877. His present salary is $1,000 a year. He is at the maximum of his class having been there from the 1st of July, 1888. He is a third-class clerk, and has not passed the qualifying civil service examination. He is an expert in the Scandinavian languages, German and Italian, and is used in the translation of dead letters.

Post Office Department—Salaries—to pay E. J. Cummings, a junior second-class clerk in the Branch Dead Letter Office at Vancouver, provisional allowance from March 1 to June 30, 1902, at $180 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $60.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is a proportion of a provisional allowance, the officer being transferred to Victoria.

Post Office Department—Salaries contingencies —To pay E. L. Foley, a temporary writer of the Branch Dead Letter Office at Winnipeg, provisional allowance from January 1 to June 30, 1902, at $120 per annum, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $60.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the same kind of case as the other. The officer is in Winnipeg.

To increase the salary of D. Sagala, a temporary packer from $420 to $600, from July 1, 1901, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $180.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This is the case of a man who has been in the service since 1890, and who, for six or seven years got no increase. He brought his case to my attention the other day, and I have given him an increase of $30 a year for the six years when he was without any increase.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) is repenting of his sins.

Post Office—To increase the salary of Mr. W. W. McLeod, post office inspector at Winnipeg, from $2,400 to $2,600, from March 1, 1902, $66.67.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. This officer became intitled to his increase after ten years' service on the 1st March of this year, and this gives him an increase at the rate of $200 from the 1st March, to the 1st July.

To reinstate Mr. Joseph N. A. Gingras, formerly a 2nd class railway mail clerk in the Quebec district, at his former salary of $720, from July 1, 1901, and to restore him to his former status under the Superannuation Act of 1870 and its amendments, on payment of the deductions from salary prescribed thereby, his service to be considered as continuous, and to pay him a mileage allowance of $250.72 for the year ended June 30, 1902, making a total of $979.72, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service or Superannuation Acts to the contrary, $970.72.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Mr. Gingras was a railway mail clerk, and was accused of having purposely delayed the transmission of newspapers and having prevented them from reaching their destination. The case seemed to be made out and he was dismissed. But, after an appeal and a re-inquiry, the conclusion we reached was that the treatment he had received was rather harsh. He explained the charge away, and I have had him reinstated. This is to make up his back pay while he was in a state of suspension or dismissal.

To complete payments for post office service to June 30, 1902, $133,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Last year I was away, and the officers of the department did not take a supplementary estimate for enough to carry us through.

Mr. CLARKE. What will be the total deficit for this year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Something under $200,000.

Mr. EARLE. Before we leave the post office estimates I would like to call to the attention of the Postmaster General a defect in the mail service between Dawson and Victoria, B.C. I have just received today from the Wholesale Grocers' Exchange, Victoria, a letter which reads as follows :—

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is all over now, it is all arranged. It arose on account of our not being able to make an agreement with the White Pass Railway. That railway underwent a change, and we have a contract signed within the last week by them and instructions have gone forward.

Mr. EARLE. If the mails are made up for Vancouver as formerly some delay will occur. What the people there suggest is that the mail from Skagway and Dawson for Victoria be made up at Dawson for Victoria, so that a steamer when calling at Vancouver may bring the mails with her.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I will endeavour to do that and to see that every steamer passing between Canada and the Yukon shall take the mails, whether the steamer be American or Canadian. I have not succeeded wholly with the Americans, but I have made an arrangement that we shall have at least one service a week both ways by one of the American ships that take their own mails.

Mr. EARLE. I do not think the Postmaster General quite catches the point. The difficulty seems to be that the mails from the Yukon are made up for Vancouver, all the mails are distributed there, so that a steamer coming from Skagway for Victoria calls at Vancouver and delivers the mail there, remains half an hour or so and comes on to Victoria. Then the regular steamer, if she has left previous to that time, does not get to Victoria with the mail until the following night. So it puts us twenty-four hours behind Vancouver in receiving our mail.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We are now ready to go on with the items of the Minister of Agriculture; but as he is not present and may come in later, in the meantime, it might meet the convenience of the House to discuss the Bill respecting labour troubles. The premier promised that if possible he would allow an opportunity to discuss it on the second reading. I do not know whether any hon. gentleman desires to discuss it at this late hour; but if any one desires to do so, I will move that the committee rise.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why take up the time when it is not the intention of the government to press the labour Bill?

Mr. EARLE. There are very few representatives of labour in the House to-night, I mean of the prominent representatives.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I think a great deal of good will come from a discussion. We do not wish to pass it through until it is fully discussed.

Mr. CLARKE. I thought it was already sufficiently discussed, because the government have relegated it to the next session.

Mr. INGRAM. I do not think many members have had sufficient time to study it.

Mr. CLARKE. When was the announcement made that an opportunity would be given for further discussion?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. On the first reading. The government was asked if an opportunity would be given for a second reading, and the premier said if possible.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest to the Postmaster General, who is leading the House now, that if no other business is ready, we should take up the Bill of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick), who is very anxious to have it passed.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would not be advisable to take it up without notice.

Board of Civil Service Examiners, $200.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought it was announced that that item would be dropped.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why hold civil service examinations now when thousands of people have passed and there are no places for them?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was ever so.

Mr. GERMAN. Civil service examinations have been advertised in the papers for May and November. There are a large number of young men in the country who desire to pass the civil service examination --promotion examinations, it is true, but even civil service examinations without promotion. I think it is wisdom on the part of this government and on the part of every government to adopt the principle that no person should be placed in the civil service without having passed an examination. I am free to admit that on the recommendation of party friends gentlemen are placed in positions in the civil service who have not passed an examination; but I think the government would do well to adopt the principle that no person could be appointed to the service who had not pasesd the examination. That would be an encouragement to young men to educate themselves for positions in the service, irrespective of their party leanings. We have plenty of young men who would be glad to take positions in the service and who would qualify themselves therefor and make suitable employees, irrespective of their politics; but the trouble is that they are set aside by party interest. I think that is wrong. I am free to say that if there were two gentlemen equally competent, one being a Liberal and the other a Conservative, so far as I am concerned, I would probably be inclined to recommend the Liberal. I suppose that is natural. But I would like to impress on the government the idea that it would be wise to make it a necessary qualification for all employees that they should have passed the civil service examination.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman ought to have taken the government to task a night or two ago when they passed an item here practically doing away with the Civil Service Act altogether.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the history of the last two years ought to be enough to disabuse the hon. gentleman of the impression that young men get into the service by reason of having passed the civil service examinations. Under the Conservative government no person could get into the service unless he had passed the civil service examination. But since this government has come into power that rule is more honoured in the breach than in the observance. The fact is, that there is scarcely an item in the estimates nowadays which does not contain the proviso 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary,' showing that the appointment was made in open violation of that Act.

Charges of management—additional amount required for printing and engraving Dominion notes, $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Was there a new contract entered into with this firm for the printing and engraving of Dominion notes ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it a private contract, or was it by tender, or how was it let ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It was a renewal of the old contract made with the American Bank Note Company. There is only one other company that could tender; that is the Burland Company, and for reasons which I am sure will be satisfactory it was not deemed advisable to invite that firm to tender.

Mr. SPROULE. Why ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose the hon. gentleman is aware of the litigation pending between the government and the old contractors.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is the government's fault.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is the fault of the old government, my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) means. If he is at all familiar with the case I am sure he will not press the question, but if he desires to press for the information I will give it to him.

Mr. SPROULE. This is an expenditure involving $25,000.

Mr. CLARKE. It is a great deal more than that.

Mr. SPROULE. I mean this estimate under consideration. That is a very respectable sum. It would be natural that we would anticipate when the government were expending that large amount of money that they would endeavour to expend it in an economical way, and to do that it would be fair to let the contract after open competition.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I agree with my hon. friend, but there are only two companies on this continent—I speak subject to correction, as I am not aware of more than two companies—that do this business. There is the American Bank Note Company, that recently established here, and there is the British American Bank Note Company, which for many years had the contract. In 1897 the contract was removed from the old company and transferred to the present contractors. It was then discovered that the old company had been guilty of a breach of contract. There is no question about that. The contract required them to supply a steel engraved stamp to the Inland Revenue Department, but instead of doing so they mixed up lithographed stamps to a very large amount, and this deception was practised without the knowledge of the Department of Inland Revenue. Neither the minister nor any of his officials was aware that the stamps delivered were mere lithographs instead of being steel engraved, and for many years they continued to pay for these stamps as if they were according to contract. After the discovery was made the matter was brought into court, and the Exchequer Court has given judgment against the contractors for $100,000. The matter is now in the Supreme Court, and in view of that kind of treatment received by the Dominion of Canada the present government are not prepared to invite these former contractors to tender for the performance of such work.

Mr. CLARKE. What is the total amount involved in the contract every year ? What is the amount paid the American Bank Note Company for work done under their contract ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It is a varying sum. It is so much an item, so much for printing postage stamps, so much for printing postal notes, Inland Revenue stamps, bank bills, &c. It is a schedule contract.

Mr. CLARKE. It amounts to hundreds of thousands of dollars annually though ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think so much as that.

Mr. CLARKE. How much ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give my hon. friend the figures.

Mr. CLARKE. The contract is for five years and has been renewed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes.

Mr. CLARKE. There are many establishments in Canada which, if an opportunity had been given to put in tenders for this work, would have done so. It seems to me to be a departure from the professions which the hon. gentleman made and which his party made many years ago that great amounts of public work should be given out without public competition. It is not at all creditable to the Dominion of Canada that work of such a nature should be done by a firm which is practically a foreign firm and that a very large portion of this work—the finer portions of the work—should be done in the United States.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not correct.

Mr. CLARKE. It was correct when the contract was first made and we have no evidence that it is not correct now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman states on his own knowledge that it is not correct, of course, I will have to withdraw that statement. Does he state that none of the work of this contract in engraving is done in the United States ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not see the work done, but I believe that none is performed except in Ottawa. When the contract was taken in the first instance, until the company got into working order, a very limited portion of the work was allowed to be done in the United States, the engraving of the die and the steel rolls, but I have seen in regard to work for my department part of that work done, and I see no reason why the same should not be done in the case of bank notes. My hon. friend talks of this company engraving bank notes as if it were simply a matter of printing posters for ordinary purposes. It is a very responsible position, and many of the banks of Canada at all events show their appreciation of the standing of this company by employing them to do their work. My hon. friend talks about the company as if they were here to-day and away to-morrow. They have invested large sums of money in permanent plant in the city of Ottawa, they have erected a handsome building and they own this property in freehold. At one time this company did a great deal of engraving in New York for the Canadian banks, which work has now been transferred to Canada, and this company here is doing a great deal of bank note engraving for the banks of Canada which was formerly done in the city of New York.

Mr. CLARKE. It is an unjustifiable thing to renew a contract of this kind without ascertaining whether or not there are other firms doing similar work in Canada.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The hon. gentleman's predecessors for a generation renewed the contract with the British American Bank Note Company without a tender.

Mr. CLARKE. And the only apology that the hon. gentleman has to make is that for twenty years his predecessors in office did what he is doing now.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, we have a very much better contract.

Mr. CLARKE. What was the difference?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. $165,000.

Mr. CLARKE. Then this contract made with the new company meant a great deal where there was a difference between the two companies of $165,000.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL . For five years.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman was expending $165,000 of his own money I think he would not renew a contract without endeavouring to ascertain whether the work could be done by other firms for a less amount. When the contract was offered to the American Bank Note Company, I know a firm in Toronto which sent its representative down here to make inquiries in respect to the work, a firm that was doing the highest class of engraving that can possibly be done, and a Canadian firm, and I think before the contract for this work which will involve $1,000,000 of an expenditure was renewed, an opportunity should have been given to Canadian firms to undertake the work and do it in this country. If the government had then found that the work could not be done as well as it is being done now, or that it could not have been done for less money than is being paid now, the government might have been justified in renewing the contract, but in the absence of that the government cannot justify its action in renewing for five years without tender a contract made five years ago involving such a vast expenditure of public money. On no business principle can the government justify its action in renewing for five years without tender, a contract which involves such a vast expenditure of public money. When the Postmaster General (Hon. Mr. Mulock) was in opposition he did not hesitate to condemn loudly, and properly in my judgment, anything of that kind if it was perpetrated by his political opponents.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am glad to learn of a change of heart in the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke). We have got a most profitable contract—

Mr. CLARKE. For the firm.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. We have a most profitable contract for the Dominion of Canada, a contract which saves thousands of dollars a year as compared with the contract price paid by the late government. When the present government made this contract by which we got cheaper and better work none were louder in denouncing us because we did not continue with the old contractor without renewal than this hon. gentleman and his colleagues.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes. I sat in this House and heard it. The hon. George E. Foster denounced us because we had passed over the British American Bank Note Company which had forfeited any claim to the consideration of the government, and my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) has the coolness to stand up here and to tell us to go back to the old system of for twenty years renewing a contract at improvident prices. If the hon. Minister of Finance were present he would be able to give evidence to show that the terms of this renewal are fair and reasonable. The company about which my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) speaks so flippantly is a very solvent company, highly respectable company, and it is doing the most confidential work in Canada for those who desire it. The banks in Canada know their own business, and if they think this company is sufficiently responsible, sufficiently reliable, and sufficiently trustworthy to be given this very delicate work of engraving bank notes, we think so to. There might be other companies that would in time grow up to the situation, but it is not every even well equipped engraving house to-day that could commence manufacturing bank bills and stamps at once. In the old country the government continues for years and years with the same contractor because of the confidential relations which exist between the two.

Mr. HOLMES. I had the opportunity—as my hon. friend (Mr. Clarke) might have had the opportunity if he wished to avail himself of it—of visiting the bank note establishment the other day. If the hon. gentleman would visit that office he would find that all the work is done in Canada, the steel engraving and the printing of the bank notes, by Canadians, with the exception of possibly the manager, the assistant manager, and two of the employees, who are Americans. Otherwise all the work is done by Canadian labour. In addition to doing the work for the Dominion government and apparently doing it satisfactorily, this concern is doing work for nearly all the banks in the Dominion at the present time. I am surprised at the statement made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) in view of the fact that he is a practical printer and knows as well as any man in the House that there are only two establishments in Canada that do work of that kind. You might ask for tenders all you like, but you would only receive tenders from the two establishments that are in Ottawa. I believe that the government has given a good reason why it was not advisable for them to ask for tenders from the old firm.

Mr. CLARKE. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Holmes) for telling me how I should act and where I should go to obtain information. But, in talking the way he does he is simply beating the air. I say that in a matter involving this very large expenditure extending over a period of five years, the government should have called for tenders as the hon. gentleman would do himself if he were contracting to have such work done for him. How does he, or how does the minister know that Canadian firms would not put themselves in a position to do this work just as satisfactorily as the American firm if the Canadian firms were given the opportunity? How does he know that if tenders had been asked for Canadian firms would not have put themselves in a position to provide plant to do this work? Is it a business proposition that in a contract involving nearly a $1,000,000 the government should renew the contract to the same firm without ascertaining whether any responsible and reliable Canadian firms could do the work? Common business principles would have dictated the ordinary method of calling for tenders in such a case. I am surprised that a man like the hon. member (Mr. Holmes) should justify such action on the part of the government. I am prepared to say that if reasonable notice had been given and tenders asked for, more than two Canadian firms would have put in tenders for this contract.

Mr. HOLMES. I am not surprised to hear that the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Clarke) knows it all. No doubt, the valuable information that he has given to the House at different times has convinced the people of the country that he knows it all. However, there are certain things which even gentlemen in the city of Toronto can learn, but they require humility in order to learn it, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) who assumes a very patriotic air now is not consistent in the theory he is putting forth. I did not intend to give him information, I simply wanted to convey the idea that the information is available to any member of the House who wants to learn. Of course there are some people who are too big to seek information, and who simply make recriminations in this House for political effect, and for what they can gain by appealing to public sentiment and to things of that kind. Some of us may be sincere in the advocacy of certain principles, and some of us may be talking to the gallery as certain people from Toronto do occasionally. So far as this not being a business proposition is concerned, I assert that the government did what was perfectly right and that the people of Canada will endorse their action in renewing the contract to that firm. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) talks about beating the air, I can tell him that no body beats the air more than he does when he speaks of calling for tenders, because he knows perfectly well that there are only two firms in all Canada who would entertain a proposition involving this very large expenditure. But the trouble with our friends on the other side of the House is, that this business government was able to make a contract in this manner which saved the country $150,000 in five years, and were able to renew it on equally good terms.

Mr. HACKETT. Why should not this government give a Canadian company employing Canadians an opportunity to tender for this work.

Mr. HOLMES. This company employs Canadians.

Mr. HACKETT. Why should not the contract be given to a company having its interests in Canada, in preference to an American firm? The hon. gentleman, speaking from a patriotic standpoint, says that we saved $150,000 in five years on this contract. But how inconsistent are hon. gentlemen opposite. The Minister of Railways said the other day that he had given a contract to a Canadian company to provide steel rails at $8 a ton more than they could be purchased for outside, in order to encourage Canadian industry. What did that cost the people of this country ? $175,000 a year. And yet these hon. gentlemen say that we are not patriotic, because we would not save $30,000 a year on this bank note business, by giving the contract to an American company. If these hon. gentlemen are going to be patriotic in one way, let them be patriotic in another. If they are going to spend $175,000 a year for the purpose of producing steel rails in Canada, why not spend $30,000 a year for the purpose of producing these Dominion notes in Canada ? If the minister or his followers cannot produce any better argument than that, they are out of the race.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the hon. gentleman answer me a question ? Who is manufacturing steel rails in Canada ?

Mr. HACKETT. Clergue.

Mr. HOLMES. Well, Clergue is an American citizen who has come into Canada and is developing the industries of Canada. The American Bank Note Company have also come into Canada and are developing our industries in the same way.

Mr. HACKETT. The argument of the hon. gentleman is that Canadians are no good, and we have to depend on Americans to come in and develop our resources.

Mr. HOLMES. The argument is as good in one case as in the other.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. gentleman does not seem to realize yet the very grave injustice that is being done to Canadians, especially to Canadians in the engraving business, by the course pursued by the government. I have not made any charge that the work being done at present is not well done. I did not raise that question at all. I raised the question whether it was a good business proceeding, one that would commend itself to the approval of any business man in Canada, that a contract involving $700,000 or $800,000 or $1,000,000 should have been entered into by this government, a renewal contract too, without their asking for competitive tenders. There is not a gentleman on that side of the House who, if his own money were at stake, would not seek by public competition to get the work done lower than it is done now. But no Canadian firm has been given any opportunity to put in a tender. I do not profess to know as much as my hon. friend from West Huron (Mr. Holmes) of the number of firms in Canada which are competent to do this work; but I repeat that if an opportunity had been given to Canadian firms to compete for this work, more than two tenders would have been put in. I noticed that when this matter was up in the House in 1897, a letter was read from Mr. George R. Barber, of Georgetown. He said that he and his associates would have put in a tender, if an opportunity had been given them. I do not know whether the hon. member for West Huron can give me any information about printing of this character. On certain classes of printing I will not take any information from him, though he may speak upon other classes. But I know that there are firms in Toronto and Montreal which, if opportunities had been given them, would have been only too glad to have put in bids for this work, and would have done just as good work and given just as good satisfaction as this American firm is doing; and I know no good reason why Canadian firms should not have been given that opportunity. If a proposition of this character had been submitted to hon. gentlemen opposite for their approval when they were on this side of the House, they would have been loud in their denunciation of it. It is not a business proposition nor one that ought to be supported by the members of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. The statement has been made several times to-night that there was a very large saving effected by this contract over the previous contract. If that is so, the minister can surely tells us what the old contract amounted to and what the present contract amounts to ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot state the amount of the annual expenditure under each.

Mr. SPROULE. Could the minister get the information and give it to us at some later stage ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Certainly.

Additional amount required for clerical assistance in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, $1,150.

Mr. SPROULE. In the course of a discussion which took place in this House some time ago, a number of the members recommended the redemption of many of the notes which are in circulation. There is an opinion prevalent throughout the country that many of these old notes are not only very unclean, but tend to disseminate disease; and I am inclined to believe that there is some truth in that opinion. In fact, it is believed that small-pox has been transmitted by means of Dominion notes or bank notes sent through the mails. If that is the case, it seems to me a matter of importance that these old notes should be redeemed and replaced by new ones. Has the minister made any arrangement for that purpose, and if so to what extent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The difficulty lies, not with the government, but with the public, who have the remedy in their own hands. The government issue notes with a view to providing the public with clean notes, and if the public will ask the banks for clean notes, they will be entitled to get them. The government is not a bank of issue, but all the banks are supplied with clean bills.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there anything in the Bank Act that requires the banks to supply the public with clean notes ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No, there is not.

Mr. SPROULE. Then it would be optional with the banks whether they would do it or not ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. They will always do it, if asked.

Mr. KEMP. It seems to me that from a sanitary standpoint the time has come when the government should consider this matter seriously. I have consulted one or two medical gentlemen on the subject, and they are of opinion that the $1 and $2 Dominion notes are most effective disseminators of disease. The $5 and $10 bills of the chartered banks are not quite so objectionable from a sanitary standpoint as the bills issued by the government, and it seems to me that the government should take some steps to see that the old bills are called in and cleaner bills issued in their place. The danger is one that does not exist to the same extent in European countries, where silver and gold are used more extensively as it does in this country and in the United States, where bills are the common currency.

Mr. GERMAN. The hon. gentleman must surely understand that $1 and $2 bills are in very much more general circulation than $5 bills. Bills of $1 and $2 are very much more in circulation than those of $5. They are used continually and pass practically as change, whereas $5 bills are not used so often, and consequently are not so much defaced. As has been said by hon. gentlemen opposite, something should be done to enforce the calling in of those defaced and dilapidated bills. We have too many of them in this country. Besides it depreciates our bills in the United States. It is difficult enough to get our Canadian bills taken at par in the United States, and much more difficult when they are defaced and dilapidated. I do not know what remedy we could apply. As stated by the hon. the Postmaster General, the remedy is in the hands of the banks and the people who use the bills. If the people would return those worn-out bills and ask for gold instead, to which they are entitled, that possibly might bring about a change. It is a matter, in any case, which should receive the consideration of the government, and I hope the government will bring about a change, so that we will not have so many defaced bills in circulation as at present.

High Commissioner's Office—Further amount required for contingencies, rent, &c., $7,800.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this for additional buildings ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Either that item or another includes a sum for rental of the High Commissioner's house. I cannot say whether it is in this item or not, but I think it is. The time will come when we may have a commissioner who may not have the means to treat the country as liberally as does our present High Commissioner, and we may have to pay rent. There is no immediate prospect of that amount being used, but it might be less invidious to provide for it in case we should have to make a similar provision when a new incumbent is in the office. I hope that for many years to come our present High Commissioner will continue in that position, and so long as he does this item will not be required. When Sir Charles Tupper was High Commissioner, we purchased a residence and paid the sum of £10,000 for the leasehold, and also had certain expenses in connection therewith.

Mr. SPROULE. But this is to complete expenditure which may take place between now and the 30th June.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There has been an enlargement of the premises. We have now a much larger portion of the building on Victoria street. The department of immigration is on one side of the building on the same flat as the High Commissioner's office, and the premises have been extended in the rear as well. There is a larger staff in the High Commissioner's office and a larger proportion of the building rented.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that additional room necessary for Mr. Preston's office ? I understand that he is not using the same office as before.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Last year he had it there. I do not offer those explanations as authoritative, but I am familiar with the conditions there and I know that there have been changes, and I think that these account for the increase.

House of Commons—additional amount required for stationery, $2,500.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose this is in connection with our annual supply?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Yes, under the control of the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. We had some supplies last year, in which there were a lot of nick-nacks which were of no use. Of course, some of the stationery was valuable, but some of the things supplied were merely an expenditure of public money to very little purpose.

Additional amount for publishing the debates, $20,000.

Mr. SPROULE. That seems a very large amount to require at the end of the year.

Mr. GERMAN. That item could be considerably reduced if hon. gentlemen opposite would not talk so much.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the cause of this very large amount for one year ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I am not in a position to give the explanation, and the chairman of the Debates Committee is not present. If the hon. gentleman wishes we will let the item stand.

Item allowed to stand.

Legislation—library—To provide statutory increases for two messengers, Albert Beaudry and Thomas Lynton at $30 each, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $60.

Mr. SPROULE. Why is the provision 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act' necessary here ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I cannot give the hon. gentleman that information. The Library Committee, which is a joint committee, has made this recommendation.

Legislation — general— printing — Additional amount required, $35,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this to pay for contracts outside, or is it to meet expenses of the Printing Bureau ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. As this is for legislative printing, I take it that it would be for the Bureau.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any minister present who can tell us whether we get much printing done outside of the Bureau ? We see the statement made in the press that that is the case. If we knew the facts, we should be better able to estimate whether the Bureau is as valuable as we anticipated that it would be.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. For my own department, I have had only one item of printing done outside of the Bureau. That was a money order book, and it was done outside for the double reason of economy, and because the Printing Bureau had not the facilities and desired us to get it done elsewhere. I believe that some departmental reports, in cases of urgency, have been printed outside. The Secretary of State, who is in charge of the Printing Bureau, reports that the demand has outrun the facilities of the Printing Bureau and the premises should be enlarged. The King's Printer himself is compelled to request that some of the printing be done outside.

Mr. COCHRANE. I see it stated in the press—it may not be correct, but I think it must be nearly correct or no editor would publish it—that $75,000 was paid for printing to one newspaper company alone. It seems hardly economical to get our printing done outside when we have a Printing Bureau equipped and running, and all it needs is enlargement.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It would take a lot of money to enlarge it.

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, $75,000 is quite a sum of money to ordinary mortals.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But after you pay for the enlargement, the printing costs money even if it is done in the Bureau. I understand the printing now required exceeds the capacity of the Bureau.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, enlarge the Bureau.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. That is not so easily done.

Mr. COCHRANE. It is as easy to do that as to spend these enormous sums in getting printing done outside.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. No doubt it will come to that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Then, it would be better if it came to it when the government have the money to spend. We all know that the pendulum will swing the other way and by and by, they will have less money.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. But this is a government of economy, you know, and we do not wish to spend so much.

Mr. COCHRANE. But, if the minister would explain more, and talk less it would save time. And I hope the hon. gentleman will accept that in as good a spirit as it is given. My contention is that it would be far better to spend the money in enlarging the Printing Bureau now that the revenue is buoyant, rather than spend the money on printing outside and still have the Bureau incomplete when the revenues are lower. It would be better to spend the money in this way than in the—would it be unparliamentary, Mr. Chairman, to say in the foolish way, in which much of it is now spent ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I guess we can stand that.

Mr. COCHRANE. Here is the fact staring us in the face that the Printing Bureau needs enlargement. When the Postmaster General sat on this side of the House he used to tell us that the public buildings here were filled from garret to cellar with officials. And now, not only are these public buildings filled, but the government is spending $18,000 in rent for other buildings, and, unless they are renting buildings that they do not need, these also are filled from garret to cellar with officials. Would it not be better to provide proper accommodation in buildings owned by the government, instead of paying rent ? And, in the same way, would it not be better to enlarge the Printing Bureau than to pay these large sums for printing done outside ?

Mr. SPROULE. I think that, when we come to concurrence, information ought to be given as to what printing is done outside and what we pay for it annually, specifying the various lines of printing and giving the names of parties to whom the money is paid. The item we are now discussing is only one, and I suppose there are others in the main estimates for some other purposes. Also, we ought to know how many are employed in the Printing Bureau. Will the minister give this information on concurrence ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As far as possible, yes.

Mr. CLARKE. For many years past the departmental reports have never been issued at as early a date as were the reports for the year ending 30th June last. This was due to the fact that the copy was sent to the Bureau in reasonable time. Moreover, the copy was not sent in simultaneously so as to choke up the Printing Bureau, but was sent in in good time, and so the work was expeditiously turned out and the reports distributed much earlier than has been the practice for years. We have a very efficient and well equipped Bureau, but some additions will have to be made. Any one who knows anything about the Bureau will admit that the work can be done there as well and more cheaply than by giving it out to political friends of the government throughout the country. The Bureau was established for the very purpose of getting the work better done and more efficiently done, and the country is not getting the full advantage of the Bureau and of the large sums expended upon it if all the public printing is not done there. If it required a small additional expenditure to equip the Bureau even more efficiently than it is at the present time, the money would be well spent. An additional space is required for the work of the bindery, and an additional space for the press department. The expenditure of the small sum required to equip and complete these departments would enable a much larger amount of work to be done. It certainly can be done as efficiently and more economically than when it is given out. The Bureau ought to be employed to its full capacity in doing the public work.

Franchise Act—Additional amount required, $2,000.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is to pay for the municipal lists which are procured from the registrars.

Mr. TAYLOR. In connection with the printing and distribution of the blue books, I have been informed that there is a general complaint amongst the members of the Conservative press in respect to the giving out of these blue-books. Under the late government when a book was issued it was handed immediately to the members representing both political parties, at the same time. Now, the members of the Reform press are furnished with an advance copy a day or two before the Conservative press. That is the complaint made by the representatives in Ottawa of the Conservative press. The Reform reporters have the benefit of a day in advance. That is something that was never done under the late Conservative government.

The PRIME MINISTER. Speaking under correction, I do not believe that this reported abuse can be substantiated. It may be there is an odd case, but that was not the intention at all events. The order is that all newspapers should be treated alike.

Mr. TAYLOR. I hope the hon. gentleman will see that the order is carried out better.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to know why it is that the 'Hansard' printed in French is so late in being distributed to the members. I only see the French 'Hansard' ten or twelve days after the speeches have been delivered, and during the recess I do not receive it for four or five months. I do not see why it should not be sent to us in a couple of weeks at least. Also in regard to the Auditor General's Report; I was down there a couple of weeks ago to see if there were any printed in French, and was told that they would not be ready for four or five months. If they are not ready for four or five months it is no use to have them at all. When we come here at the beginning of the session we cannot get a French report of any kind.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend knows that so far as the debates of the House are concerned, the government has nothing to do with them. That is a matter in regard to which he should lay his complaints before the Debates Committee, and I have no doubt the committee will look into it. With regard to the Auditor General's Report, I do not believe the fault lies with the Printing Bureau. If there is any delay in the work it must be occasioned by the translators, because I am pretty sure that as soon as the copy goes into the Bureau it is quickly disposed of.

Mr. MORIN. I have been told by the translators that as soon as the House closes a good many of them are dismissed from the service. I was told so to-day. I was told that if they were kept on a few weeks longer the French report would be printed in a couple of weeks.

Gratuities for ballot designs partially adopted, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Secretary of State informs me that when the amended Franchise Act was passed we adopted to some extent the designs of some gentlemen who had submitted ballots. I do not think it would be correct to say that any one gentleman's ballot had been adopted, but there were a number of free designs, and the intention of the Secretary of State is to distribute this vote among the persons whose designs were used.

Trade and Commerce—Bounties on iron and steel—to meet expenditure in connection with the administration of the Act, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The administration of this Act, which was formerly in the Customs Department, is now transferred to Trade and Commerce.

Mr. SPROULE. This is to meet the cost of administration in connection with the bounties on iron and steel ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The business was formerly managed by the Department of Customs. It has been transferred to the Department of Trade and Commerce and this amount is necessary to enable the minister to appoint officials to make a close inspection of the work that is going on so as to check the accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know whether we can get the information in connection with this item, but I would like to know how much we are to pay this year for bounties on iron and steel. It was expected a year or two ago that the amount would run up very rapidly. That information will enable us to estimate the rate of progress that is being made in the output.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It has increased very rapidly. The amount for the current year will be very considerable, and the amount in the coming year will be very much larger. It will be far in excess of what we have yet paid. If my hon. friend desires the information I will have a statement prepared for concurrence.

Mr. TAYLOR. Or on the supplementaries.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. In any case I will see that the information is furnished to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. SPROULE. I see by to-day's paper that the Clergue syndicate has commenced to turn out steel rails. Is there any bounty on steel rails ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the bounty is paid on steel ingots and beyond that there is no bounty paid.

For expenses of reception to Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York—additional amount required to pay expenses of royal tour in September and October, 1901. (Payments out of this vote, not exceeding in all $700, may be made to any members of the Civil Service, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act), $358,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this the whole amount?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

The PRIME MINISTER. That is all.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was an amount in the main estimates last session of $120,000. This is the balance which winds up the whole thing.

To pay for steam service between Canada and France, six round trips performed in the year 1900, prior to date of contract, $16,666.66.

Mr. SPROULE. When did this contract commence ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This contract was made several years ago with the French line. In this particular year the company were not able to make the number of trips required, and the Auditor General held that unless the whole service were performed he had no power to approve of the payment of part of the subsidy. This vote is to pay them for the number of trips they actually made.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the hon. Minister of Finance could scarcely give us much information as to the amount of trade that has been carried on as a result of our subsidizing this line, or as to whether we have been able to create a trade with France in addition to that which was hitherto carried on ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I could not tell my hon. friend.

The PRIME MINISTER. Up to the present time, I am sorry to say, I do not think it has resulted in developing very much business, but I may say that I hope we will be able to do better in the future. The expectations have not been realized that were entertained at one time.

To provide for the expenses of the Prime Minister in connection with the Coronation of His Majesty, $8,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is only one item. Is there not another item in connection with this ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the next item.

To provide for the expenses of ministers in connection with the colonial conference in London, $12,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will that be enough ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is a very modest sum.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the right hon. Prime Minister be able to give us any information as to the line that will be followed at the conference ? Can he give the committee any information regarding it beyond what he has already given the House ?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) knows that upon the invitation of the Imperial government, the Prime Ministers of the self governing colonies will meet in London with the view of discussing certain subjects. We have already given our views as to the character of the discussion which will take place at the conference. I should also say that at the initiation of the Canadian government a conference is to take place between the colonies of Australia, New Zealand and Canada. It has been decided that the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) and the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) shall represent the government at that conference. As to what shall be the subjects which will be debated, I may say that the conference will be held with a view of developing trade between the self governing colonies, between Australia, New Zealand and Canada, and we hope we will be able to make arrangements with that end in view. As to that, however, we are in the dark yet. Australia has just adopted a new tariff and New Zealand has a tariff somewhat similar to our own. All their revenues are raised by customs duties. I believe from what I have been told by the hon. Postmaster General and from the report which has been placed on the Table of the House by the hon. Minister of Finance, that the prospects of our being able to do a large business in Australia looks very bright. Almost everything they require to supply themselves with, Canada can supply. New Zealand cannot perhaps afford such a large field but we hope also to do something there. We are of the opinion that if any trade can be developed we will probably have to subsidize a line of steamers, and we have thought, that possibly, by subsidizing a line of steamers between Canada and Australia, taking in South Africa, a large business might be developed. We have great hopes of South Africa. When the war is over, and the time cannot be very far off now, this country will require to be supplied with almost everything, and it is our intention to push matters in that direction as far as we can. My hon. friend asked me: What is the line I will take. I do not know that I can say much more than I have already said. The line must be general. We are there simply to offer and receive suggestions. The only thing we have in view is to develop trade by two means: By trade preferences and by subsidizing lines of steamers.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the Prime Minister will adhere to his determination that he will not discuss the defences of the empire.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not changed my mind upon that subject.

Mr. COCHRANE. You do not want preferential trade, then ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I would be very glad to have it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria). I do not know how far the Prime Minister may be able to adhere to his present opinions, because if the premiers of the other colonies begin to discuss the question of defence, perhaps that question may be forced to some extent upon the premier of Canada. That is a subject in which we are all interested. I have been studying the tariff of the Commonwealth of Australia to some extent, and in the matter of dry goods I find that in several instances it is about 10 per cent less than our own tariff. The duties on carpets and flannels are 15 per cent, while our rates are nearly double that. I believe that this is an opportune time for Canada to extend her export trade to South Africa and to Australia. It is all very well for us to expound the sentiment of Canada for Canadians, but we will never build up a large export trade if we confine ourselves to that idea. For those who are complaining of the tariff in connection with the manufacture of woollen goods, I think this is the time for them to avail of the opportunity of extending their trade to these colonies. There must be direct communication to enable them to do so—I was going to say from the St. Lawrence—to South Africa and to Australia ; because it is impossible for them to send their goods to Vancouver en route to the east, and if they send their goods to New York they would have to pay the freight, and they would be met at once by the American manufacturers, who would have the advantage to that extent. The Americans are pushing their trade in Australia with great energy, and it is therefore to our advantage to encourage this trade now, so that Canada may get hold of a large portion of it. There is scarcely anything produced in Canada but there is a market for it in Australia, provided you have the means of conveying your goods direct from our own ports.

Mr. BROCK. I was very much delighted to hear the remarks of the Prime Minister regarding his visit to England. When we speak of extending our trade to Australia and South Africa, it is of a great deal more importance for us at the present time to endeavour to do our own trade at home amongst our own people. How can we expect to export goods when we cannot even manufacture goods for our own people in Canada ? In one of our greatest industries we find our own market at the present time flooded with foreign goods and goods of British manufacture. The United States are doing a large business in Australia, but they first of all captured their own market and made their own market impregnable. Canada can never do a foreign trade while the Canadian market is being invaded in the very lines which we want to export. I read with a great deal of pleasure a letter from a gentleman in Australia—I think a son of the Hon. Mr. Ross—and that letter had many strong points in favour of our attempting to do business there, which appealed to me as a Canadian. But he forgot, as our own government are forgetting, that we have not even got our own market. The government are so afraid of offending members on that side of the House who say they have come here with a mandate from the people to advocate free trade. Well, so long as they are afraid of that element, we can do no export trade from Canada. First of all, my advice, very humbly submitted to the Prime Minister, is to take every means to protect our own markets for our own people, and when we have risen to the elevation that the manufacturers of the United States have risen to, and when we commence to overflow with our own products, then we will be able to capture other markets. The time of the most talented business man who will go to England will be wasted in attempting to advocate a foreign business unless he can first say that we are supplying our own market. Until that is done, there is no use wasting time attempting to do a foreign business. You may subsidize all the steamers you like to Australia, but we must have a return cargo. You are preventing us from doing a woollen business in this country, and one of the great staples of Australia is wool. How can we use their wool if we cannot capture our own market for woollen goods. If you are going to give a preference, as our respected premier did to the manufacturers of Yorkshire—and Canada is just as much a part of the empire as Yorkshire is—you hamper us in our own market and you afford facilities to men who already have a great advantage in all the markets of the world. In order to enable us to do a foreign trade, we must have increased duties on certain lines of goods that we can manufacture here. When we have that, the Prime Minister can go in confidence to England, and he can talk to the other colonial delegates with something like business acumen. He can say to them : We are able to supply our own market; and they will not be able to throw in his face the remark: What are you talking about exporting goods to Australia for when you cannot supply your own market. I would humbly submit that this would be a better course for the premier than making all kinds of offers of preference. Let the right hon. gentleman provide, first of all, that the Canadian market shall be for the Canadian manufacturers.

The PRIME MINISTER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) will not succeed in throwing cold water on my enthusiasm. I do not hope, and perhaps it would not be wise for me to hope, that we should take wool to Australia any more than we can carry coal to Newcastle.

Mr. BROCK. I said manufactured wool.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are other things besides wool. I do not see why we should not take cotton to Australia, as well as to China, and I understand we have had an export cotton trade to China for some time, and that a profitable business was done in that line a few years ago.

Mr. BROCK. What are Canadian cotton stocks to-day ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We are at the present time sending agricultural implements to Australia, and we are pretty successful competitors with the Americans, and I think we can even do better. But, of course, if my hon. friend (Mr. Brock) says we must have a high tariff in this country, I despair of having any preferences. I always understood, however, the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite was that if they adopt protection in England, then we might hope to have a preference, but now I understand from the hon. gentleman that he wants a high protection against England as well as against the rest of the world, and no preference with the mother country. If the views of my hon. friend should prevail I cannot see any future for this country. I am sorry to say for my hon. friend, and happy to say for myself, that I hold altogether different views from him on this matter.

Mr. BROCK. Excuse me for a moment. We are holding out very great inducements to bring in immigrants into this country, and at the present time we are succeeding in getting thousands of settlers in the North-west. Is the right hon. gentleman perfectly satisfied that we should be always hewers of wood and drawers of water ? Is he perfectly satisfied that we in the east should not supply manufactured goods to those people on whom we are spending thousands of dollars to induce to settle in the North-west ? If this country can double its population, we shall be in a far better position to make a trade arrangement with the other dependencies of the empire and with the empire itself than we can, situated as we are at the present time. I do not always take my politics from the United States, but in this matter of trade they have shown themselves wise in their day and generation. They have protected their market almost to prohibition, and they are the most successful nation on the face of the globe to-day. Weak-kneed politicians on the other side of the House disparaged a high tariff and kept on disparaging it. Fortunately they remained in opposition. Unfortunately for us, weak-kneed people are in control of the government to-day; but the right hon. leader of the government, surrounded as he is by business men, may depend upon it that sooner or later that kind of politics will come to grief in this country. The larger the influx of population, the greater is the necessity of our being able to supply them with our own goods. If we are going to maintain anything like a patriotic sentiment in this country, we must encourage our people to buy goods in the country. The hon. gentleman says we can export cotton to Australia. I happen to deal in cotton myself, and I know something about the cotton trade. It is simply ridiculous for us to suppose that we can compete with Great Britain in sending cotton to Australia. The United States invariably gains entrance to a foreign market by slaughtering goods at prices much less than they are sold at in the United States. That is the only way they capture a foreign market as against England. We must first protect and capture our own market. We might have a chance of selling woollen goods in Australia. That is one of the manufactures in this country in which we excel. Our woollen manufacturers have the best machinery in the world and the best workmen, and are to-day turning out as fine goods as are made in any part of the world. But our market is so limited that we are not able to make the goods in sufficient quantities to make the business profitable. We only ask the government to give us our own market. If they would only experiment on that one line of woollen goods, I will guarantee that in three years they would find it so successful that they would repeat the experiment in a great many other lines.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) There is a Canadian woollen factory which is exporting woollen goods to Huddersfield, the very centre of the woollen manufacture in Great Britain. There are other things that can be exported to Australia besides woollen goods, which appear to be of so much interest to some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. There is one firm in Sydney, New South Wales, which would take a shipment of 2,000 tons of rolled paper for printing yearly. But that cannot be sent from here until we have direct communication. I saw it stated in the papers that Canada is competing with Great Britain in Australia in agricultural implements, and I am sure that the Massey-Harris people are taking hold of the Australian trade very largely, and also the New Zealand trade. You will find their goods advertised in all the papers of those colonies. Then, a trade in boots and shoes, which are largely manufactured in Quebec and Montreal, could be cultivated there. You only require the steamers to carry goods backwards and forwards, and the trade will increase. When goods have to be sent via New York or via Vancouver over the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is impossible to extend our trade to that country.

Mr. SPROULE. The valuable advertisement we have had in South Africa will, I am sure, result in giving us a very important and valuable trade there, if we take time by the forelock, and push it as much as possible. There is no doubt that the quantity of goods sent from Canada to that country during the last year or two has given us an introduction which with a little care should enable us to hold and considerably extend that trade in the future. In Australia, a friend of mine is erecting saw mills which are manufactured in Brantford, Ontario; and in a letter received from him during the last few weeks he states that there is a magnificent opening there for a great trade in that line as well as in agricultural implements; and he suggests that direct steam communication between Canada and that country would enable that trade to be extended considerably. He says that people came hundreds of miles to see the band saw and the mill after it was set up, the first one in the country; and the immense timber areas there would afford an opportunity for a large trade in that line as time goes on.

For payment in connection with construction of Marconi wireless telegraph station at Glace Bay, N.S., in accordance with agreement, $70,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought we voted an amount for that already.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The contract price is $80,000, which has been divided into two parts—$70,000 in these estimates and $10,000 in the estimates for the coming year.

Mr. SPROULE. What in substance is the contract made with Marconi for establishing this station?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The papers were brought down, but I can state it briefly to my hon. friend. At the time Mr. Marconi was in Newfoundland, and in consequence of the difficulty he met with there, through the objections of the cable company, when it appeared that his experiments in America were likely to be frustrated, we thought it a wise policy to invite him to come to Canada and continue his experiments with the view of establishing a station. He came, and was very much pleased with the courtesy extended to him by the government, and that led to our making the suggestion that Canada should participate in his undertaking; and it was agreed that we should contribute this much towards constructing the station, and that he should give us an engagement that if the experiment proved successful, as we hope and believe it will, his company would carry trans-Atlantic telegraphic messages for us very much below the current cable rates. For instance, where cable rates are 25 cents a word, he gave us an engagement that he would charge us not more than 10 cents a word.

While there is a possibility that it may not prove a commercial success, we consider ourselves justified in encouraging a man of great scientific attainments in carrying out an experiment which, if successful, will be of great advantage to the whole country. If, however, it should prove a failure, we shall lose our money. On the contrary, should it turn out successful, we will have the great advantage of a trans-atlantic rate sixty per cent less than we are now paying, as well as special rates for the press and government messages. Mr. Marconi is now constructing works in Glace Bay and hopes to be able to send a message to His Majesty on the day of Coronation. I hope he will be able to do so, and that we may have the benefit of a reduction of sixty per cent on all business messages, namely, ten cents as against twenty-five cents, and a half rate or five cents on press and government messages.

To pay the Canadian Bank of Commerce for services in the Yukon Territory from 1st May, 1900, to 30th April, 1901, $26,575.65 ; and from 1st May, 1901 to 24th April, 1902, $26,593.71, $53,-169.36.

An hon. MEMBER. This is a large sum.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This represents very large transactions. It will be remembered that at the beginning of our operations in the Yukon, when there were no banking facilities in that country, we arranged with the Bank of Commerce to act as our agent, and agreed to pay it a commission, to be fixed from time to time by the Minister of Finance. The bank had to be content to accept his judgment as to what was a fair commission. The first year we had to pay a high rate, I think as much as one and a half per cent, but we have been reducing the rate from year to year. This vote represents, in the first part, a commission of three-quarters of one per cent, and in the second a commission of five-eights of one per cent, so that we have been gradually reducing the amount, as the conditions in the Yukon were brought nearer the ordinary conditions of banking in the older portions of Canada.

To pay Nelson R. Butcher, stenographer, for transcribing of evidence in Klock vs. Baring, $64.50.

The PRIME MINISTER. That was incurred at the time of the Nipissing election. A mandamus was issued to the returning officer and a law suit resulted, in consequence of which we have to pay that amount to the stenographer. The Minister of Justice could give the particulars to my hon. friend if he were here.

Mr. SPROULE. That was when the returning officer took the liberty of postponing the election after he had put up the notices.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, it was when he had a new writ sent to him and he had to do what he did.

To pay Messrs. Browning and Senkler, Klock vs. Baring, Nipissing election, $60,00.

Mr. TAYLOR. Why should the government have to pay that ?

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a very unusual item. There was a good deal of dissatisfaction over that election, and somebody ought to be able to explain why we should pay this. If the election had been contested the expenses would have had to be paid by one or the other of the parties, but we are here called on to pay a share of the expenses.

The PRIME MINISTER. As the Minister of Justice is not here, I would ask that the item be allowed to stand.

Item allowed to stand.

To pay expenses of Chinese and Japanese commission, $27,600.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there not another item in connection with that commission.

The PRIME MINISTER. No, that will cover the whole expenditure.

Mr. TAYLOR. Judging from the size of the report, it is very cheap.

Mr. MORRISON. What is the total cost of the commission ?

The PRIME MINISTER. $27,600.

To pay one half arbitrators and stenographers fee Eastern Extension Arbitration, N.S., $3,-952.62.

The PRIME MINISTER. There was an arbitration consented to between the Dominion and the provincial government with regard to the claim which the province advanced to a share of the award, on the ground that it was made in the favour of the provinces. No provision was made in the estimates for paying the cost of the arbitration, and in the meantime the provincial government paid the arbitrators and claimed one-half of the expense. It was agreed that each party should pay his own share of the expenses. This deals entirely with the expense of the arbitrators and the stenographers, and as regards the other items, each party paid his own fees.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose that this is one of these cases which we are likely to have for years to come. We are likely to have another claim of the same kind from Prince Edward Island next year. Is there any truth in the statement that they are preparing to make a large claim and expect to be compensated ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My right hon. colleague, the First Minister, made a statement the other day concerning this matter. There has been a somewhat hazy claim regarding the fishery award in the air a long time, but no understanding whatever has been arrived at between this government and the provincial government of Prince Edward Island. An intimation has been given that if, in consequence of the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as to the relative rights of the provinces and the Dominion, it is the provinces and not the Dominion which should have received the award, then the fishery bounties which we have been allowing the provinces, and by means of which we have been practically paying them the interest on the award, will have to be stopped. Therefore, so far as the finances of the Dominion are concerned, the result that may be come to will be as broad as it is long. But no understanding whatever has been come to between the Dominion and the local governments upon the subject.

Mr. SPROULE. This was supposed to be a hazy account, but still, after a time it has materialized and we have to pay the money. Is the hon. gentleman aware of any claim having been made by the province of Quebec ? I saw an announcement to that effect in the local House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There has been no time within the last ten or twelve years when some one or other of the provinces has not claimed that it was the provinces and not the Dominion which should have received the amount of the fishery award, and the claim is just in the same position as it has been at any time in the past. There will always be somebody in some provincial legislature who will raise the claim that the provinces should receive the money and not the Dominion, and of course we cannot prevent any such pretention being raised. But all I can tell the hon. gentleman is that there has not been any understanding whatever arrived at between the government and the government of Prince Edward Island or any other province on the subject. These provinces are free to follow whatever course they think best in these matters.

Unprovided items—1900-1901—to cover unprovided items, 1900-1901, as per Auditor General's report, page C—4, $211,394.12.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A similar item has been in the estimates for many years, yet, it is but natural that hon. gentlemen should ask an explanation. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the Auditor General's Report at the page cited, they will find that, in the course of the year there are cases of over expenditure, and, at the close of the year the Auditor General asks parliament to confirm these by pasing a general vote aggregating these small items—though some times they are not small. It is a confirmation of past expenditure not an appropriation of anything for the future.

Legislation—House of Commons—additional amount for publishing the debates, $20,000.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is usually a supplementary vote for the publishing of the debates. Last year, we asked $40,000. Generally the amount expended is $60,000. At the end of the session, we come to the House for a supplementary vote.

Mr. SPROULE. If the amount required is $60,000, would it not be better to put that amount in the main estimates, and then we would know. This looks as if it were a shortage, a case of emergency, and not a thing expected.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that is a good suggestion. It ought to be done.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think that will do now.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Adjourn.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would it not be better to take the census item ?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) is not here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I hope, if we sit a little longer, to be able to lay on the Table further supplementary estimates. Perhaps, we might take concurrence and so advance the business. If a desire is expressed to have any item held over, of course, there will be no objection.

Some resolutions reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Charges of management—expenses in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, $70,000.

Mr. SPROULE. We were to get some information about this item so, perhaps, it had better be left over.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. The Minister of Finance can give the information now.

Mr. SPROULE. It has been stated repeatedly that we have been paying very much less for this service than under the old contract. As the present contract has been renewed, the question arises how much we are paying now and how much we paid under the old contract; also for what length of time does this contract run.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are paying in the aggregate more than we paid before, because the volume of business is greater; but we are paying lower rates than we were paying before. The contract has been laid on the Table, and all the details are available. The contract has been renewed for five years.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the aggregate of the contract ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is not for a lump sum, but for such quantities as we may need from year to year, and these are to be supplied at rates specified. As I say, they aggregate much more because we are using a very much larger quantity, but the rates are decidedly lower.

Printing, printing paper and binding, $110,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is in connection with the Printing Bureau, and we were to get information on concurrence.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If the hon. gentleman will let it stand until it appears in the 'Hansard' in the morning, so that we may see what is required.

Mr. SPROULE. We want to find out how much printing was being done outside, what we are paying for it, what departments it is done for, and the number of hands that are employed in the Bureau.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The order of my hon. friend is a large one, but I will do my best if the information is available.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think we had better stop here as I know the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) has something to bring up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry to find that the estimates have not yet arrived, and if we were to sit a little late I am advised that we could not get them. Under these circumstances I think we had better adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. TAYLOR. What is to be the business to-morrow ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We will take up all the Bills that remain on the Order paper, then we will go into the estimates for agriculture, immigration and the interior.

Mr. TAYLOR. Was the Prime Minister to give some information in reference to the Bill of the hon. member for Montreal, Ste. Antoine (Mr. Roddick) to-night ?

The PRIME MINISTER. I told him I thought we could take it up to-morrow evening.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 11.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, May 7, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. KEMP moved :

That the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee regarding certain purchases by the government from Gaudry, be printed, and that rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 159) to incorporate the Maritime Stock Breeders' Association—The Minister of Agriculture.

Bill (No. 163) for the relief of Samuel Nelson Chipman.—Mr. Flint.

CITY OF OTTAWA.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 164) to amend the Act of 1899, respecting the city of Ottawa. He said : Mr. Speaker, I thought at one time of making a proposal with the view of consolidating the work of the Ottawa Improvement Commission and the Ottawa Parks Committee, a body under the control of the city of Ottawa, or, a body that has recently been abolished, and its powers transferred to the city of Ottawa by an Ontario Act. However, I realize that at the present stage of the session we would hardly have time to deliberate upon a measure of that kind. The amendment I propose now is merely to enlarge the number of the commission, without in any way changing its powers or responsibilities. It is proposed that there shall be added four commissioners to those already appointed. The object is to broaden the scope of the commission. It is not intended that all these gentlemen shall be from the city of Ottawa, but the design is to take some gentlemen from outside the city of Ottawa, and perhaps some hon. gentlemen sitting in parliament, who have an interest in the national capital, and who will have sufficient leisure to enable them to assist in its improvement. I do not anticipate that there will be any objection. If there is, I quite realize that any Bill at this stage will not get through.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it the Governor in Council who appoints the additional number of commissioners ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. Before this motion is carried, I would like to draw the attention of the government to the fact that on the 14th day of this session there was supposed to have been a detailed statement brought down to this House concerning the expenditure of this Improvement Commission. It does strike me that the section of the Act requiring this return has not been complied with. I have here a statement as brought down by the commission, and it is not a detailed statement at all. It is not a detailed statement, as the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) will see, by comparing it with the requirements of section 11 of the Act. This section reads :

The commission shall render to the Minister of Finance and Receiver General and to the corporation, on or before the first day of September in each year, detailed statements of all their receipts and expenditures up to the last day of June in such year ; and copies of such statements shall be laid before parliament by the Minister of Finance and Receiver General within the first fourteen days of the next following session thereof.

I have the statement here, and although it involves something like $92,000, it does not give the names of the streets that the money has been expended upon. I will read the list that it gives.

Princess Terrace, King street, printing and advertising, Concession and other streets, stationery and office supplies, telephone, rent and storage, Rideau River bridges, road machinery, Rideau canal driveway and parks, Rideau street, Keefer property, tools, implements, &c., Wellington street, Bank street, McKay and other streets.

It is due to this parliament that we should know upon what streets the money is being expended. I did take occasion, when the estimates were before this House, to make some inquiries in connection with this expenditure, and I find that I have been greatly misunderstood. The 'Journal,' of this city, which seems to take great interest in the few remarks I made on that occasion, accuses me of having been loaded up by some disgruntled Liberals of this city, but to clear the mind of the editor of the 'Journal,' let me say that I have not had any conversation with any disgruntled Liberal in this city or outside of this city regarding this question. I have had no conversation with any of them in connection with this matter, and I am not here for the purpose of cleaning the decks of hon. gentlemen opposite.

It is the duty of the members of this parliament to inquire into an expenditure involving $60,000 a year. If we desire to make this the Washington of the North, it is just as much our duty to consider a matter of this kind as it is the duty of the 'Journal' newspaper of the city of Ottawa. What I did on that occasion I believe was my duty. I for one am not opposing this expenditure, but I am opposed to this Star Chamber method of doing business. I believe this money should be expended in a business-like manner, as all public money should be expended, and it was for that reason I rose to object to certain things being done by this Improvement Commission. I have been here for a number of years, and I have watched carefully some of the improvements made in the streets of Ottawa, and I wish to say I believe this expenditure could be put to better uses. I have heard rumours going around this city in connection with this expenditure, and one would have to be deaf if he did not hear them. For my part, should I occupy a seat in the House, I intend to pay a little more attention to this expenditure in years to come. I ask that a more detailed statement of the expenditure of that money be laid before parliament, in order that we may have a chance of sizing up exactly how it is expended. We can criticise the general estimates submitted to parliament, but we have no opportunity in this case of criticising the expenditure unless an amendment is made to the Act. A detailed statement is brought down within the first fourteen days of the session, and that is the only statement upon which we can hope to give the matter fair criticism. I wish to point out that in giving the expenditure a fair criticism, I do so not for the purpose of opposing it, but in order to ensure that the money is not improperly expended.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Although it is not usual to debate the question on the introduction of a Bill, yet I wish to make a few remarks. I have heard it said on thoroughly good authority that this commission transacted business behind closed doors. I regard that as entirely wrong. If there is nothing done which is improper, then they need not be ashamed to have their proceedings open to the public. I agree with the proposition to increase the number of the commissioners, because if the information we have is anything like correct, the whole work is done by one or two individuals, and the disclosures which took place under the late mayor showed a state of things which is anything but proper. My memory is, that one of the commissioners who is largely controlling the business was furnishing the supplies himself ; that practically the money was expended where ever he desired ; that it was expended upon streets where it was in the interests of himself and others that it should be expended, and that in reality the money which parliament voted for the purpose of improving the streets of Ottawa was practically put in the pockets of the commissioners by dealing with themselves through fictitious names. The statement is made that they were enabled to do this largely because of the smallness of the commission. It is, therefore, important that the commission should be enlarged and that some one outside of the corporation should have the authority to appoint the additional commissioner that it is proposed to put on that board.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I may say that when the gentlemen upon this Ottawa Improvement Commission were appointed I did not know a single one of them personally, and I am not sure that I have known any of them since except that I have once or twice spoken to Mr. Bate and Mr. Cunningham. I have no special acquaintance with the details of their work, but I think I can say that if hon. gentlemen made an examination of it and drove over the work which has been done, they would say that it would be impossible to do better work or more work for the amount of money expended. That, after all, is the purpose that the government and parliament have in view in the constitution of the commission and its appointment. I am quite satisfied that I can safely say that the government and parliament can congratulate themselves upon the fact, that the work undertaken by the commission has been most successfully and most efficiently done. There has been no waste of any kind whatever. There was some discussion in the local press, but if my hon. friend follows that discussion I think they will find that it arose largely from the jealousy between different municipal bodies, which under the circumstances may readily be understood. A close examination of the matter will, I think, show my hon. friends that there is no doubt but that the Ottawa Improvement Commission got first-class value for every dollar of money it expended, and that it would be quite impossible for anybody however constituted to get any better value than they got.

Mr. SPROULE. May I have the consent of the House to say one or two words more. It was brought out in that examination that load after load of stones was brought around the streets of the city time after time, and the same load weighed and charged to that account and paid for. It was also brought out that materials which went on the streets belonged to one of the commissioners, was taken out of a storehouse of his own under another name, and that it was traced back that it was really sold by the commissioner himself.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not sympathize with the view that the public press should be admitted to every meeting of every public body. There are hundreds of cases where the admission of the press, even to meetings of bodies of a public character, may not be advantageous to the public, and I believe that the best journalists of the country will approve of that view. There is no use generalizing in this matter ; we must take each case as it comes up. Let me point out to the hon. member (Mr. Ingram) that if there was any exception to be taken to the details which were furnished in the statement required by the statute, if the hon. gentleman had called attention to it at an earlier stage of the session I would have been very glad to look into it and see if there was any cause for complaint.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). When we were discussing the estimates for the Maria street bridge I called the hon. gentleman's attention to it, and the hon. gentleman said : We had better allow that to stand over as I propose to amend the Bill, and when that comes up it will be the proper time to discuss this question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Certainly it is the proper time, but if the hon. gentleman wanted to complain that any information brought down was defective, the proper time to complain was at an earlier stage of the session when we could make it good, which we cannot do now. In the Act respecting the Ottawa Improvement Commission it is required that the accounts should be audited in the same manner as the accounts of any public department. Every item of the expenditure of that commission is fully set forth in the report of the Auditor-General—as fully as it could have been if it had been the direct expenditure of any department of the government. If the hon. gentleman turns to page G—31 of the Auditor General's report he will find six pages filled with all the details of the expenditure of the Ottawa Improvement Commission down to the last cent.

Mr. INGRAM. Then, I would like to point out to the hon. gentleman that the statement which he is supposed to receive from that commission is required to be laid before this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I had great pleasure in placing that statement before the House as contained within the four corners of this admirable blue-book on almost the first day of the session, and if my hon. friend has not had his attention drawn to it, it only goes to show that he does not value this book as highly as I do. I do not object to any fair criticism ; but I do regret that at this stage of the session observations are made reflecting on the good faith of the members of the commission. I have no special knowledge of the work of the commission other than that which I get from the public reports ; and, while I have a great admiration for the press, and while as an old journalist I should be the last to speak disparagingly of the press, yet I do not think my hon. friend should accept everything that appears in the press as absolutely certain. As the whole matter involved in this Bill is a mere addition to the number of the commissioners, I admit that the discussion upon it might as well take place on the first reading ; and if objection is not to be taken to the Bill itself, I hope hon. gentlemen will not too hastily assume that statements which appear in the public press reflecting on the commission are correct until we can have an opportunity of inquiring into them before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the hon. minister in favour of keeping the press excluded from the meetings of that commission ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would reserve my judgment as to that ; but I would be inclined to think I am.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa). I cannot allow this occasion to pass without expressing my regret that the hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken should on mere street rumour felt themselves called upon to repeat in this House statements which are not only very much exaggerated, but which have been shown to be without any foundation. I do not think the gentlemen who compose this commission—such men as Mr. Henry Bate, Mr. Cunningham and Mr. Riopelle—who have very generously during the last three years given their services gratuitously to the work of the commission, will thank these hon. gentlemen for having made themselves the mouthpieces of these street corner talks, which amount to nothing.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman: is it true that one of these commissioners threatened to resign unless the business was transacted in a different manner?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not know anything about that; but I know that these gentlemen have done good service and have received absolutely nothing for it. One of these commissioners, Mr. Riopelle, during the whole of the last working season personally superintended the work. He was on the ground day after day during the whole time the men were there, giving his services without any remuneration whatever. I think it is a very poor recompense to these men, who have shown such public spirit, to be treated in the way hon. gentlemen opposite have treated them. The only statement made, to which the hon. member for East Grey has referred, and which, like all other stories, gets bigger as it is repeated, is that a tender of some relative of one of the commissioners for furnishing cement has been accepted.

Mr. BENNETT. Was that not charged in one of the public newspapers in the city of Ottawa?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not know. I do not follow all that the newspapers say, and I do not attach the same importance that the hon. gentleman does to what appears in them. If that charge was made, it should have been investigated; I do not know why it was not. I do not think there is any truth in it. But I am not directing my attention to that. What I am finding fault with is that gentlemen who have given their services to the public for nothing should be treated in this way. If there is any accusation to be brought against any one of them, it is only fair and just that it should be properly made and investigated, and that mere street rumours should not be repeated in this House, and amplified and exaggerated in the way these statements have been to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to ask the hon. member if he supposes that the statement I made was exaggerated. I gave it exactly as it was given to me by a reliable and respectable citizen of Ottawa, and I gave it as nearly as I could in his own words; and, so far as I can judge, I believe the statement to be correct.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

I.C.R.—ROUND-HOUSE AT TRURO.

Mr. GOURLEY—by Mr. Lancaster—asked:

1. Does the government intend to build a round-house at Truro this summer ?

2. Is the government aware that the present turntable at Truro is in a dangerous condition and liable to break down at any time, with serious injury to life and property ?

3. Is the government aware that the present round-house is out of date, and almost useless for the purposes for which it is used ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). The hon. Minister of Railways has furnished the following reply :—

1. No, there is no appropriation for a round-house at Truro.

2. The government is not aware that the turntable is in a dangerous condition, but it is too short for the new locomotives and a longer one has been provided which will be placed in position soon. Even if the present turntable should fail, there can be no delay to trains as there is a 'Y' track convenient for turning locomotives.

3. The present round-house having been built many years ago, is not as large as is desirable for modern engines, but it will continue to be used until it is possible to increase the accommodation.

House in committee on Bill (No. 141) to amend the Act respecting the packing and sale of certain commodities.—The Minister of Trade and Commerce.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). Some hon. gentlemen have expressed the desire that stocks held by dealers should be exempt from the operation of this Act, and I agreed to provide an amendment to that effect. I propose, therefore, that a clause be added in these words :

Provided always that nothing in this Act contained shall be construed as affecting any dealer in respect of stocks actually in his possession at the date of the passing of the Act.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 162) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act of 1900. He said : It is my intention, when we go into committee on this Bill, to propose a number of amendments of some importance. I shall not ask the committee to pass upon them to-day, but what I propose is to submit these amendments to the committee, so that they may be read by the chairman, and may appear in 'Hansard' to-morrow morning. I will have the Bill printed with all possible expedition, with these amendments, so that hon. members may have time to consider them before they are discussed on Friday. That, I suppose, will answer all purposes.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House went into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The amendments proposed by Sir Richard Cartwright are as follows:

1. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression 'the said Act' means: 'The Manitoba Grain Act, 1900,' chapter 39 of the statutes of that year.

(Interpretation.)

In the said Act, unless the context otherwise requires:—(a) The expression 'operator' or the expression 'lessee' shall include any buyer of grain having allotted to him any storage or working space or bin or bins in any elevator or warehouse; (b) The expression 'commissioner' means the warehouse commissioner for the inspection district of Manitoba; and (c) The expression 'Minister of Inland Revenue' shall mean the 'Minister of Trade and Commerce.'

3. Subsection 1 of section 34 of the said Act is hereby amended by inserting between the words 'shall' and 'keep' in the second line thereof the words: 'Receive the six standard grades of wheat established and described in the General Inspection Act,' as amended by chapter twenty-five (25) of the statutes of 1889, and shall.

On a written application to the commissioner by any person or persons residing within forty miles of their nearest shipping point, he may give permission to any person or persons to erect under the provisions of this Act, a flat warehouse with power to enlarge the same should necessity require it, at such shipping point. Such flat warehouse shall be erected on the railway company's premises after getting location of a siding, and the railway company shall be compelled to give such location with siding on its premises, in some place of convenient access, to be approved of by the commissioner, at a rental not greater than that charged to standard elevators. If in the judgment of the commissioner more than one such warehouse is required at a station, one or more additional warehouses may be authorized by him, and in such case all the provisions of this section shall apply to the construction of such warehouses.'

Each loading platform shall be erected at a siding which the railway company shall provide on its premises in some place convenient of access to be approved by the commissioner, and shall be at least ten feet wide and of such other dimensions and be constructed of such materials and in such manner as the commissioner shall designate.

3. Such loading platforms may be used free of charge for the loading of grain.

4. The railway company shall construct such loading platform within thirty days after the application is made to such company by the commissioner, and shall be held liable to pay a fine of not less than twenty-five dollars for each day's delay beyond that time. The period in each year within which the commissioner may receive such applications shall be April 15 to October 15.

Progress reported.

LAND TITLES ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 149) to amend the Land Titles Act, 1894.—The Minister of the Interior.

On section 1,

Mr. SPROULE. What has been the custom in dealing with lands belonging to a second party ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The only change made in this section is to settle a question with regard to a power of attorney. Where a general power of attorney has been given there was a difference of opinion as to whether that prevented the owner from dealing with the land himself while the power of attorney was in existence. The hon. gentleman is aware that in the province of Ontario you can give a general power of attorney to John Smith to deal with your land, and you can still sign or deal with it yourself. This does not interfere with that power. Under the Torrens system, when a power of attorney was given, the land had to be specifically described in every case. Then we introduced in Manitoba, and subsequently into the territories, the idea of a general power of attorney, as under the old system. Then cases arose in which the judges expresssed the opinion that the giving of a general power of attorney excluded the right of the owner to deal with the property until the general power of attorney was cancelled. This provision is to clear up any doubt.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

LOAN FOR $15,000,000.

Bill (No. 157) to authorize the raising, by way of loan, of certain sums of money for the public service (the Minister of Finance) read the second time, and the House went into committee thereon.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I hope that the hon. Minister of Finance will be in a position to tell us how much he has authority to borrow outside of this power that he is now asking for, and what will be the amount of the loans maturing during the coming fiscal year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). Perhaps it would be convenient if the hon. gentleman would permit me to refer to this year's budget speech, and also to the public accounts, in which this statement appears. The amount outstanding at this moment of available borrowing power is something over $2,000,000, so that we have altogether including the $15,000,000 that we are now taking, $17,000,000 of borrowing powers if this Bill passes. This is the lowest amount of borrowing power that has been taken in a loan Bill for some years, and it is usual to have borrowing powers for several years ahead. We do not have a loan Bill every year.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. How much is maturing the coming fiscal year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I will have to get the public accounts and show my hon. friend.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It is hard for hon. gentlemen to remember all these details if the hon. Minister of Finance is obliged to consult his note book.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I do not profess to remember every item in the public accounts.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that it is provided in this Bill that the interest shall not be more than 3½ per cent. Is it believed that you will not be able to borrow as favourably as when the last loan was made ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No. We always fix the maximum rate of interest. We do not expect to pay 3½ per cent, but we can never say what may occur on the money market.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright). British consols have fallen 20 points since that loan was negotiated. It may be as well to remind my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) and the House, that when we borrowed the money at 2½ per cent British consols stood at 113 to 114, and that now they are at 93 to 94.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that with the additional advantage given to us by the admission of Canadian securities to the list of stocks available for the investment of trust funds in England, we would derive some benefit in the way of reduced interest.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It has kept our credit well up.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A comparison of the difference between British consols and Canadian securities shows that the difference is much less than at the time of our previous loan, so that we have got the benefit of it. Our securities are not selling at a higher price than before, but the drop has been much less than it would otherwise have been.

In answer to the question of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. LaRivière), I would say that in 1903 there will be maturing in London unguaranteed Intercolonial Railway 4 per cent loan to the amount of $7,300,000, and there will also be maturing the unguaranteed 5 per cent of loan of $2,433,000. These are the only government loans maturing in the coming year. These maturing later are fully set forth in the public accounts.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I presume this Bill will have to go through, and permission will have to be given to the hon. Minister of Finance to borrow money to pay our debts, but if these hon. gentlemen had carried out the promises they made to the country there would have been no necessity at all for borrowing. I see that the main estimates for 1901-1902 amounted on revenue account to $48,826,878.16, and on capital account to $11,097,862.71. Then, we have supplementary estimates down, amounting to $1,358,683.70, and further supplementary estimates amounting to $4,189,-245.07. These supplementary estimates provide for sums required to carry on the expenses of the country up to the 30th June this year. These sums make a grand total expenditure voted for this year to carry on the affairs of the country of $65,472,669.54. If the hon. gentlemen had kept their promises, they could have run the country as efficiently as the late Conservative government did on $38,000,000 or $39,000,000, and they should have saved this year $25,000,000 out of the revenues of the country, and had $10,000,000 to spare besides. If they had done that it would not have been necessary for the hon. Minister of Finance to borrow money. They have sunk the country in debt. I suppose that having such a buoyant revenue last year the hon. gentlemen felt justified in spending on consolidated fund and capital account nearly sixty-five and a half million dollars. They promised to carry on the affairs of the country for $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 less than the late government were carrying on the affairs of the country, when all they required to spend was from $38,000,000 to $41,000,000, including both consolidated fund and capital account. If hon. gentleman had kept their word, the revenue would have been coming in all the same, and they could have paid off our debt, and have had sufficient money to have carried on the affairs of the country, and saved $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 a year to pay off our mortgage debt. They should have done that, but in place of that, all the money has been spent. Here is this sixty-five and a half million which has been spent this year, and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot point to any permanent improvement other than those which are usually made, notwithstanding this enormous expenditure. They are spending $65,000,000, paying two or three times what they should for taking the census, and allowing the money to be frittered away, while they cannot point to any Canadian Pacific Railway or large improvement such as was carried out by the Conservative government. Yet, in the face of all this, they are coming and asking power to borrow more money, with the object of increasing our expenditure, instead of decreasing it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We have been all over this question half a dozen times during the session, and I am afraid the audience is not large enough now to justify me in making a long speech upon it. I would only say to my hon. friend (Mr. Taylor) that I think he is mistaken as to the aggregate of the estimates which he gave us. The aggregate estimates which have been brought down will be found to be something less than the aggregate brought down for the previous year. However, that is a matter which we can look into later. As to my hon. friend's figures, I think they are inaccurate. As to the question of the loan I would remind my hon. friend that we have had only one loan Bill in five years, and that we have only used a portion of it, although we have been carrying on very large operations. I think my hon. friend's surprise must be, not that we come for a loan Bill now, but that we did not require one much earlier. However, as we have been over this question several times, and as the audience is not large, I will resist the temptation to make a further reply to my hon. friend.

Mr. BELL. In these estimates I see the total is given as $5,639,000, while it ought to be $5,739,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, the consolidated fund vote is $100,000 greater than is put down there.

Mr. BELL. That will swell the total ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it will increase it by $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I remember making the statement that there was about $7,000,000 of floating borrowed capital that would be required to be provided for out of the money borrowed under this Bill. Am I correct in that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think my hon. friend unintentionally managed to count that $6,000,000—it is not $7,000,000—twice. But as to this temporary loan at present if we should issue bonds we would pay off the temporary loan, and while we increased our debt on the one hand we would decrease it on the other hand. Whether or not we shall issue bonds to pay off the temporary loan is a matter to be considered, as the condition of the money market affects the question. If we issue bonds to pay off the temporary loan we do not increase the debt, because while we increase it on the one hand, we decrease it on the other.

Mr. SPROULE. If you raise the loan you must take it out of the money you borrow under the borrowing powers given here.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If we wished to pay off the temporary loan, or we could renew it.

Mr. SPROULE. If that is done, it would practically take up the unexpired borrowing powers you have not availed yourselves of, amounting to something like $2,000,000, and the $15,000,000 provided for here, because there are $9,750,000 of obligations coming due, and this added to the $6,000,000 would make over $15,000,000, and you will then have no money for the purposes for which you desire to use these borrowing powers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is overlooking the fact that the Bill before the House and the resolution upon which it is founded also provide that there shall be from time to time general powers for refunding the debt falling due.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

THE COASTING TRADE.

Resolution respecting the coasting trade of Canada, and to exclude a foreign built British ship from that trade unless it has obtained a license, which the Minister of Customs may grant, upon the payment of a duty of twenty-five (25) per cent ad valorem on the fair market value of the ship (the Minister of Customs), read the second time, and agreed to.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Hon. Wm. Paterson) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 165) respecting the coasting trade of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—THE TRANSPORTATION QUESTION.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House again go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. A. F. MACLAREN (North Perth). Mr. Speaker, before going into Supply, I wish to make a few remarks on what I consider a very important subject, and before I take my seat I shall close with a resolution. A few weeks ago, in the city of Woodstock, Oxford county, while attending a meeting of the Dairymen's Association of Western Canada, I made a few remarks on this most important subject, a subject which I consider of the greatest and most vital importance to the welfare of the people of Canada. It is not necessary for me to tell the hon. members of this House, or the people of this Dominion, what that subject is, as we all know that the transportation problem is the greatest question which the people of Canada have to grapple with, have to solve, and have staring them in the face at the present moment. It is not my desire to take up much of the time of the House in discussing this very important question, and I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I have been compelled, on account of my health being somewhat impaired during the last few weeks, to delay bringing this matter before the House at an earlier date. But, better late than never. The subject which I intend to discuss is that of utilizing the natural waterways of this Dominion for transporting our products to the seaboard.

It is not my intention to condemn the government, neither is it my intention to abuse or condemn the great railways of the Dominion for not having given us better accommodation and better rates of freight for carrying our goods, but it is my intention to ask this House, and to ask the country, to throw politics aside and go to work to do something to place the producers and manufacturers of this country in a position whereby they can place the products of the farm, the sea, the mines and the forests on the markets of the world at as cheap a rate of freight as that of our neighbours to the south, or for that matter, of any other country in the world. Up to the present moment we have been paying very much higher rates on everything we produce than they are paying in the United States. Over there they are utilizing their waterways for all they are worth during the season of navigation. They are also utilizing immense elevators and warehouses for storing goods, holding them at their seaports or lake ports until navigation opens, knowing they can get a very much lower rate of freight, while we on this side are practically doing nothing at all along the line of utilizing our waterways from the head of lake Superior and lake Ontario, clean down to the gulf of St. Lawrence. It is my intention, in as few words as possible, to show what the possibilities of our great waterways are, and as hon. members all know, we are now and have been spending large sums of money for the purpose of educating our people how to produce the finest goods. We have our farmers' institutes, our cheese and butter associations, our fat stock shows, our fruit, honey, poultry, swine and breeders' associations, our shows and exhibitions of all kinds, our agricultural colleges, &c., all of which are receiving assistance from the government, doing everything in our power to increase the quantity and improve the quality of our goods. But not a thing but talk, talk, talk, and no action as far as improving our freight rates is concerned. What is the use in spending money in improving the quality of our products, when we are taking no action whatever in trying to solve the transportation problem, which if we could do and place our goods on the markets of the world as cheaply as those of our neighbours to the south of us, we would be receiving millions of dollars more for the producers and manufacturers of this country's goods than we are receiving to-day. We have been talking for years and years of appointing a railway commission. We have had a railway commissioner appointed, but what has been done, or what have we been told? Not a single thing but what we have known before, and nothing at all along the line of suggesting to the government what steps should be taken to make any improvement with regard to water transportation.

I do not intend to give the House rates of freight on all lines of products, but I will simply give a few figures of rates of freight charged on cheese, butter, bacons, hams, apples, and cattle.

Rates of freight for 1897 were as follows :

Cheese, Montreal to Liverpool, 21s. 9d. or $5.43 per ton.
Cheese, Boston to Liverpool, 13s. 3d. or $3.30 per ton.
Butter, Montreal to Liverpool, 26s. 9d. or $6.68 per ton.
Butter, Boston to Liverpool, 13s. 6d. or $3.37 per ton.

The House will observe that there was not very much change or difference in 1899 :

Cheese, Montreal to Liverpool, 23s. 9d. as against 21s. 9d. in 1897.
Cheese, Boston to Liverpool, 15s. as against 13s. 3d. in 1897.
Butter, Montreal to Liverpool, 25s. as compared with 26s. 9d. in 1897.
Butter, Boston to Liverpool, 15s. to 17s. 6d. as compared with 13s. 6d. in 1897.

Then we come to 1901, and find the following rates :

Cheese, Montreal to Liverpool, 20s. to 22s. 6d.
Cheese, Boston to Liverpool, 11s. 3d.

Bacon and hams, Montreal to Liverpool, going back to 1899, was 15s. to 20s., while New York to Liverpool was only 10s. to 15s.

Now, we will take the rail rates from points west of Toronto to Montreal, averaging 33 cents per hundred pounds, equal to $6.80 per ton. The following are the figures of 1899 : From Montreal we shipped to England, in round numbers, about 50,000 tons cheese, 10,000 tons butter, 50,000 tons bacon and ham, 270,000 barrels apples, 48,000 head of cattle. Nearly all of these were carried by railway from various points in Ontario ; and investigation shows that the rate of freight paid was very much higher than the rate by relative rail haul upon American lines. But I will not attempt to figure out this, nor to show what the exact difference was. However, we know that we could save all the way from 10 per cent to 25 per cent if we could utilize our natural waterways, as they are utilizing their waterways in the United States ; and you can imagine what a great saving this would be to the farmers of this country. A saving of 25 per cent on the above named articles alone would mean over $600,000. And this is not all, as a large quantity of our goods had to be shipped via New York and Boston, upon which was paid $3 per ton more for longer rail haul, which, added to excess upon the Montreal volume, will make about $1,000,000 more received for transportation upon this particular volume of our exports. Imagine what it would mean to Canada if we could save in proportion on all lines of goods shipped.

We will take the past season, for example, Mr. Speaker. The exportable volume of our cheese, butter and bacon represented about $40,000,000, upon which we have paid about $1,000,000 more freight than we would have paid provided we had facilities for shipping similar to those of our cousins over the line. Furthermore, our cheese has depreciated in value for want of proper cars on railways, and proper cool steamer accommodation ; and if the curing of cheese in cold storage will advance the price of our cheese one-half cent per pound more, we will be saving, or giving an increase in value of another $1,000,000 or more. The figures which I have given will bear me out in that statement.

Another matter which I wish to refer to is the depreciation in the value of our cheese which is shipped via Portland, caused by its getting over-heated. We have had a great many complaints on that score, as the hon. Minister of Agriculture will tell you.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to mean that there is cheese shipped via Portland during the time the port of Montreal is open ?

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). Oh, yes. Shippers have been compelled to send it via Portland to escape the high rates of insurance charge via Montreal. I may say that the insurance rates last year were almost prohibitive.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. During the summer season ?

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). Yes, and in consequence many people shipped produce via Portland.

Another point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, is that of hauling cheese from different parts of the country to be placed in cold storage at central points, such as Morrisburg, Brockville, Belleville, Ingersoll, Woodstock, London, Stratford, Listowel and other centres. The concentration rates for cheese in the district west of Toronto is based as follows :

From points west of London, and north of the main line of the Grand Trunk 20½ cents per hundred pounds have been charged, and east of London and south of the main line of the Grand Trunk, 18½ cents per hundred pounds have been charged. Upon shipping these goods out of store the shipper's rate was based on the through rate via Montreal, receiving on this basis, a rebate of 16½ cents per hundred pounds.

For comparison we will take the concentration rates on cheese at cold storage points in the United States, which are based on a much more lenient plan than is the case in Canada. There are many cold storage points in New York state where cheese is concentrated on a basis of five cents per hundred pounds, and when the buyer wants to ship his goods out, he has the option of asking the various railways for a rate of freight on his goods to the seaboard, thus getting competition where we have none, and we are obliged to pay the high rate.

I give these figures in the House in order to show to the people of Canada what immense possibilities we have if we will only throw partyism to the winds and work together, and spend a few million dollars in assisting nature to perfect the great waterways which the good Lord has provided us with. In discussing with me the waterways of Canada, a friend of mine from Chicago, who had 40 years' experience on American waterways, said that if a corporation were organized for the transportation of western products from Fort William, Port Arthur, and other Canadian points, and also from Duluth and Chicago to the seaboard of Nova Scotia, it should be as follows :

A steamship line to start with, say comprised of seven or eight 5,000 or 6,000 ton steamers from the points above named to some point on Georgian Bay, thence by rail to Toronto, thence by steamship from Toronto to the Atlantic seaboard. On the eastern division there should be employed at the beginning, or shortly after, twenty-five to thirty steel steamers, full size of the canal locks, beginning at the western end, with the number of steamers above mentioned carrying from 175,000 to 200,000 bushels of grain, equipped with all the modern appliances for the quick handling of all kinds of freight. The eastern terminal of boats, I think, should be Collingwood, where there should be erected a modern elevator ; two elevating legs which would discharge the cargo in about five hours. These two legs should have a capacity of 20,000 bushels per hour, and be similar to those used in Chicago, Buffalo and such large centres. In addition to this, freight sheds for rolling freight and merchandise should be erected, and everything modern connected with the rapid and cheap handling of freight should be installed.

From Collingwood to Toronto the railroad should be an air-line practically, laid with 100-pound rails, and equipped with 75-ton cars, and Collingwood being more than 300 feet higher than Toronto, the heavy products eastbound would meet with the downgrade the greater part of the way, excepting one short distance of five or six miles, where the slightest up-grade exists. This speed would be reinforced with an auxiliary engine, thereby enabling one engine to draw immense trains.

Having reached Toronto, a similar elevator to that at Collingwood, with the exception of the elevating legs, which are not required, should be built, and in addition, an elevated trestle should be erected so that trains can be run up this elevation and the cars dumped in the hopper, which should ride the board of the ship, without the grain passing through an elevator.

With this new system, vessels such as will go through the locks would be loaded in one and one and a half hours, loading about 70,000 bushels of wheat. They will then proceed to Montreal, where another elevator will be erected and kept full of grain. With from 30,000 to 40,000 bushels in the shipping bins, the additional lighterage should complete the cargo of the ship from Toronto, so that at any hour of the day or night when the ship arrives in Montreal, the watchmen could draw this quantity into the ship in from one to one and a half hour's time, the elevator not being required to use any machinery during the putting aboard of the lighterage, as the additional cargo would run by gravitation into the ship. Why this lighterage system would be used is that the ship can only load to 14 feet draught passing through the canal and locks from Toronto to Montreal, while they can be loaded to their full capacity when they arrive at Montreal, which means about 110,000 bushels. They will then proceed to the eastern terminal down by the sea. An elevator should also be erected there similar to the Collingwood elevator, with two elevating legs, and which would discharge the full cargo in about five hours. This done the ship would immediately pass to the coal trestles or shutes, and with a cargo of coal awaiting her would be dumped into the boat in three or four hours' time. This, with any other local, package or import freight would be put on the twin deck of the ships and carried through the Gulf, the River St. Lawrence and Lake Ontario, to Toronto or any other way port between the two points.

The Toronto terminal should be equipped with the most modern machinery for the rapid handling of coal cargoes, and with three or four of the modern fast hoists, costing about $20,000 each. The cargo of 2,000 tons would be taken out in five or six hours' time.

The unloading machinery of this plant should unload three hoists per minute of four and four and a half tons of coal each bucket for each hoist, and three or four hoists unloading will readily determine the result. Fast hoist coal docks should also be established in Montreal.

The further aim of the company should be to have large elevator storage capacity, warehouse and cold storage at the seaboard, whereby shippers of all classes of merchandise may send their goods forward, at a season when they can have suitable markets for such merchandise in Europe. It could be stored at a nominal charge at the seaboard and held there until the dealer or producer thought fit to send it forward to England. In this case it would be well to have shippers rush their goods forward to the seaboard before the close of navigation, and they could ship them across the ocean any time during the winter months. The same rule could be applied to imported goods or articles, storing them there during the winter months and forwarding them to all parts in western Canada as soon as navigation opened. My idea would be to build ships suitable to pass through the present canals and locks and to build them with a view to the enlargement of the lock chambers between Kingston and Montreal, so that the ships can be lengthened and widened without impairing their seaworthiness or appearance in any way.

Heretofore the boat-hull and cargo insurance rates have been sadly against the St. Lawrence route, causing double, and at times, three times as great a rate of insurance as those of New York and Boston, increasing materially by grounding in the St. Lawrence river between Montreal and Quebec, where ships were drawing a greater depth of water than there was in the river, or if loaded to the regulation depth the fluctuation of water frequently causing them to ground, entailing heavy average and often more than average charges; or in other words, we have been trying to force a 10,000 ton ship through a 5,000 ton channel. With the great draught of water, the channel being but three or four times the width of the ship, no room for action is left for the free movement of the ship, and grounding is the result. Here is the direct cause of the increased insurance rates, and at least it will be borne in mind that these extra rates of insurance have not only affected the ship but the cargo as well, both export and import, and in consequence import cargo has been diverted from the Canadian channel, finding its way through Boston and New York and over the Suspension bridge into Canada. The volume of this cargo, so diverted, will average 20,000 cars yearly, crossing the Niagara river for distribution in Hamilton, Toronto, London, Stratford and all western points. All through western Canada this will be overcome ; the rates of insurance will be cut in two, at least, for instead of the narrow contracted channel for deep draught ships, we have a river half a mile or more wide, where a ship drawing 18 or 19 feet can run full speed with impunity day or night, avoiding the grounding, tug bills, extra labour, and damage to the hull that the ocean ship is subject to.

In consequence of the frequent groundings in the St. Lawrence between Montreal and Quebec, the underwriters charged last year as high as $1.20 for every $100 of insurance and they figure on a loss in one case out of five.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. During what period of time do they figure losing one vessel out of five ?

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). In one season, and that would be seen to be the fact, judging by the high rate of insurance charges on the St. Lawrence route as compared with the Boston and New York routes.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. That is absurd. They may charge on that basis, but it is not the fact.

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). That may be, but we do not want to have to pay these high rates of insurance. I am not making any statement which I do not believe to be correct, and I think that I can prove pretty well any statements I make. Certainly a very large proportion of goods from the old country, intended for Canada, come via New York and Boston. I suppose that from 15,000 to 20,000 car loads annually come that way, across the Niagara river ; while nearly all these goods could be brought through the St. Lawrence route if we had our waterways properly equipped. It is a sad state of affairs to contemplate, that all this traffic has to come through foreign routes, when, by spending a little money, we could get it through our own St. Lawrence route.

The foregoing will give an idea of what my views are as to the method and manner of handling this class of freight. Now, there is another class of freight of the perishable nature, such as dairy produce, bacon and hams, and fruit and poultry, requiring faster transportation and cold storage. Special provision should be made as follows :

Ships of greater speed, at least 20 miles per hour, fitted for passenger trade, and being equipped with cold storage, should stop at leading points of shipment, or natural assembling points, or what may be termed express freight, such as butter, cheese, eggs, fruit, poultry, &c. These points should have two or three sailings each way each week. Each point above referred to would be supplied by the company with permanent cold storage facilities for the better protection of perishable freight. Warehouse receipts could be given to the dealer or producer, on which he could draw 50 to 75 per cent value of goods from the bank, and he could hold the goods in store until ready to ship, when he would get the best rail or steamship rate which could be procured. I feel safe in saying that the cost of transportation upon Canadian exports and imports would be very materially reduced by the inauguration of such a system. I also feel safe in saying that wheat from the North-west would be laid down at the seaboard, from Fort William or Port Arthur, at from 5 cents to 6 cents a bushel, and a good profit made, a distance of 1,700 miles.

By this route the distance from Chicago, Duluth, Port Arthur and Fort William to Liverpool, would be almost 800 miles shorter than between the same points via New York.

The great difficulty I see is in getting our Canadian people to see and to grasp the great opportunities we have in store for us. I do not blame our railways for making the best bargains with the people that they can, as business is business, and they are out for the profit. But I do blame our Canadian government and our Canadian people for sitting idly by, for not rising up and insisting that we should place our goods on the markets of the world at as cheap a rate as our neighbours to the south of us. I heard an American gentleman state a few days ago that nature had provided us with seventeen hundred miles of the grandest waterway in the world, from the head of Lake Superior to the seaboard. He also said that if we could only assist nature a little in perfecting and developing our waterways, that we would in a very short time be in a position to place our goods on the market at as cheap a rate as they are doing it in the United States.

I will now, for argument's sake and comparison, give you a few quotations from an address which I delivered before the Dairymen's Association in Woodstock, in January of this year. In the first case I spoke of the export wheat trade from Buffalo to Liverpool. The rate of freight from Buffalo to Liverpool was 11½ cents per hundred pounds, while the rate from points in western Ontario to Liverpool was 21 cents per hundred pounds. Cattle from Toronto to Portland, 28 cents, cattle from Chicago to Portland, a distance of over 500 miles greater, 28 cents, cattle from Chicago to Montreal, 25 cents, cattle from the counties of Perth, Bruce, Huron or Grey, to Montreal, 33 cents to Montreal, or 8 cents more than from Chicago to Montreal. A car load of cattle from Listowel, a town in the county which I have the honour to represent, will cost $1.25 per head higher rate of freight than from Chicago to Montreal, a distance of over 400 miles longer haul than from Listowel.

In 1901 the United States shipped over 500,000 head of cattle to England. If they had paid at the same rate of freight we pay in Canada it would have cost them over $500,000 more. If they had paid for freight so much per mile it would have cost them $1,000,000 more.

The American people have developed 1,000 miles of their great waterway, starting, we might say, from Duluth, Chicago, Milwaukee, &c., to Buffalo. Twenty-two years ago, in 1880, the rail rate from Chicago to New York was 19½ cents per bushel. In 1899 the rail rate from Chicago to New York was 11 cents a bushel. During the same period by water the rate was as follows, between above named points :

1880.. .. .. 13 cents per bushel.
1899.. .. .. 5¾ " "

This steady decline in rates has been the direct result of waterway improvements at the Sault and other channels.

Now, another interesting feature about these rates, Mr. Speaker, is the cost. According to undisputed authority, the great volume of tonnage which now passes through the Sault canal, and which this year exceeded 28,000,000 tons, was moved at a cost of 80-100ths of a mill per ton per mile. The average cost upon trunk lines of railway in the United States is shown to be 8 mills per ton per mile, so we have here an object lesson that the United States waterway from Duluth and Chicago to Buffalo, 1,000 miles, is carrying freight for one-tenth the rate of the railways running parallel thereto. In other words, the waterway is doing for $1.00 what the railway would get $10 for.

It has been estimated by those identified with the commerce of the great lakes, that the 40,000,000 tons moved upon the lakes last year, west of Buffalo, if carried upon the basis of our railway rates, would have cost the American nation about $200,000,000 more than it did, and it is further estimated that at least 10,000,000 tons of the commerce passing through the Sault canals, would not have moved except for the facilities of water transportation. The railway charges upon it would have more than equalled its value at the point of destination. I have pointed out to the House the activity that is to be found upon the American waterways, its marvellous development and what a tremendous force it has been in the development of that country's western resources. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I want the country to look for a moment at our own waterways, and what is the conspicuous feature ? That although we have from the head of Lake Ontario to the seaboard a waterway unsurpassed, and to which we as a province have contributed about $47,000,000 for the improvement of the canals, &c., we have not a single vessel to carry our products to the seaboard. This is my answer and my solution for the condition that exists to-day in the country and the excessive railway tax that has been levied upon the people of our province—a province in which our agricultural interest represents an investment of $1,200,000,000, with an annual output of $300,000,000 of wealth wrung from its soil by the industry and labour of one and a quarter millions of our inhabitants.

If this great problem of transportation is solved upon true commercial lines we will quadruple our exports, we will double our farm lands values, and besides utilizing our waterways in the summer time, we will more than double the freight to be handled by the railways. During the past year the rates of freight and insurance via our Montreal port have been so excessive as to be practically prohibitory. As an illustration—the rates from west of Toronto in Ontario have ruled about as follows to, say, London, England

Cheese, via Montreal, 68·90 cents per 100 pounds.

Cheese, via Portland, 55·50 per 100 pounds.

Now, then, the House will observe that the insurance rate is very high, via Montreal, it being from 40 cents per $100 to $1.20 per $100, while via Portland it was only 35 cents per $100. Why should the rate out of Montreal be 68·90 as against Portland 55·50? why should there be such a difference in the insurance? If we could reduce our freight rates in this country by utilizing our waterways as they do in the United States, the amount saved would buy a good many farms, a good many head of cattle and a good many boxes of cheese. Now, I simply give the House these few facts and figures which speak for themselves, and they are facts and figures which no one can dispute.

If the American people can utilize their waterways so as to make great reductions in their freight rate, why can we not do the same thing in this country? I, for one, think it could be done, and I would like to see the people of this country go right to work and do it. There is nothing in the world that we can do that will assist us in increasing the population of this country so much as that of reducing our freight rates. It is all right to talk about making more cheese and more butter, raising more cattle and hogs, more poultry, apples, eggs and dozens of other things which I might mention, but why should we go on in this way, spending so much time and money and doing so much hard work, when we can go to work and save so much money to the manufacturers and producers of our goods by spending a few million dollars, which will all come back to us in a few years and which will give us better rates of freight for the balance of our natural lives.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). When you left the Chair at one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I was speaking of the necessity of reducing freight rates on the various products of the farm, the field, the forest and the mine; and I was pointing out that a reduction in the freight rates would enable us, not only to make a greater profit, but to raise more butter, more cheese, more cattle, more poultry, more hogs, and so on and so on. I pointed out that our interest lay in utilizing our waterways so as to make great reductions in our freight rates. I may here say that after I concluded making the above remarks, or similar remarks, at the Woodstock Cheese Convention, Mr. Robert Ballantyne, the chairman of the meeting, who is connected with one of the largest firms of exporters of cheese and butter in Canada and England, stood up and made the following remarks:

The facts and figures presented by Mr. MacLaren are no doubt startling, and I know the rates are true, and I know the people of this district, west of Ontario, are more interested than the men of the east. I know you pay a much greater rate out of this section than the men do out of the eastern section. I know the railway companies join together and agree among themselves to get a higher rate out of you by Montreal than they get out of you by Portland, and I know your cheeses are tremendously injured by shipping by Portland. I have had a lot of experience. I believe we were the biggest shippers out of Portland this last summer, and I believe we suffered enough to pay three rates out of Montreal. In quoting cheese to our customers in England, if our quotation is sixpence higher, we cannot sell our cheese, and it is necessary to quote our cheese by the cheapest route in order to sell them. The facts of the matter are that the Canadian Pacific Railway use the St. Lawrence route and make that route by Quebec in order that they may make a competitive rate to get these goods by the Canadian Pacific Railway and haul them to Quebec instead of Montreal. In future we will have steamers with cold storage out of Montreal, and you had better ship your cheese by these cool steamers, and we want a cheap rate out of Montreal. It should not be impossible for the Canadian Pacific Railway to say to you, 'We will take them from Quebec at a rate of 13 cents a hundred cheaper than we will from Montreal,' and I feel that when it comes the time for resolutions, that there should be a resoultion on this subject.

I shall not dwell at any length upon the speech of Mr. Ballantyne, but have simply read it to the House for the purpose of showing that he is fully in accord with what I have to say on the transportation question. I will now read to the House the resolution on transportation which was endorsed by the members of the Dairymen's Association at the close of that convention:

That the Dairymen's Association express the opinion of the importance of improvement being made to the Canadian canals and waterways and to the St. Lawrence river, in order that the Canadian producer may be placed in the very best position possible for competition with the producers of other countries for the British and foreign trade, and that this resolution be transmitted to the Minister of Railways and Canals. That the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa be asked to take such steps as will ensure a sufficient supply of refrigerator cars for shipment of cheese during the coming season, and also provide icing stations at shipping centres.

The above resolution, Mr. Speaker, speaks for itself, and I trust it will have a good effect, and will be the means of bringing about more satisfactory transportation conditions.

I will now quote from a letter from a friend of mine in Chicago rates of freight during the month of March just past, on produce going from Chicago to Liverpool:

Via Portland and St. John, rate on butter was 63 cents per 100 pounds.
Via Portland and St. John, rate on cheese was 48 cents per 100 pounds.
Via Portland and St. John, rate on meat was 43 cents per 100 pounds.
Via Portland and St. John, rate on live stock, 28 cents per 100 pounds.
Via Boston and St. John, rate on butter was 65 cents per 100 pounds.
Via Boston and St. John, rate on cheese was 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Via Boston and St. John, rate on meat was 45 cents per 100 pounds.

Via Boston and St. John, rate on meat was 45 cents per 100 pounds.

The above figures are all on car load rates—and many times during the year rates are cut, so that a cut on cheese of 5 and 10 cents per 100 pounds is at times obtained, and even as much as 15 and sometimes 20 cents per 100 pounds lower rate is obtained on butter.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will ask hon. members on both sides of the House to sit down and look this matter up for themselves, and figure it out, and then stand up and do as I am doing. Tell this House and tell this country what they think of the manner in which we, the people of Canada, are slumbering and allowing our competitors to cut our business clean away from us. No wonder, Mr. Speaker, the great American railway and steamship syndicates have their eye on securing control of our railways as well as our ocean transportation. The Hill system from the west to the cities of New York and Boston is now further reaching out upon the Atlantic for the control of ocean steamers. The buying of the Canada Atlantic is but a part of that great policy, and is, in my opinion, the handwriting on the wall of a policy to pull and haul all that Canada produces into New York and Boston by the great American railways and waterways, and then ship across the ocean our goods on American steamers, while we, with our undevloped waterways and undeveloped electric railways, sit idly by and look at the Americans doing us up. Yes, Mr. Speaker, I say undeveloped electric railways, which in my opinion should be developed and running all over this country, running into our back townships, carrying into the great centres our cattle, our hogs, our wheat, our eggs, our poultry, our fruit, our cheese and butter, in fact, everything we have to ship, and we should have large elevators, sheds and storehouses in such centres as Hamilton, Toronto, Port Hope, Belleville, Kingston, Brockville, Ottawa, Ogdensburg, on the United States side, Montreal, and clean down to the sea. If goods were stored in this way a shipper could have his choice of rates by steamer, if our waterways were developed, or by the great railways which go through all these centres. We must do something of this kind in Canada, and we must do it at once.

I just wish, Mr. Speaker, to give to the House a few more quotations and a few more illustrations, and will then read my resolution and sit down. I have here a quotation from a speech delivered at a banquet a few weeks ago by my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick). When talking on the transportation problem, he used the following words :

Another fact that must be remembered is that the measure of distance is no longer the mile, but the hour. We must not only have cheap transportation but rapid transit.

I may say that I do not altogether agree with my hon. friend, as in my opinion the commercial distance is not reckoned by mileage or time, but by the cost of transportation. For example, although the province of Ontario is 1,000 miles nearer to the British market than Dakota or Minnesota, the latter named places are commercially 1,000 miles nearer to the British market by the effect of their cheaper transportation. A barrel of Minneapolis flour is carried from Duluth to Buffalo, 1,000 miles for 16 cents. A barrel of flour for the same distance along through Ontario to the seaboard costs 45 cents.

Now, then, for a few moments we will go back to the great western lakes of Canada and the United States. The principal receiving centres for the produce of the northern and western states, and the provinces and wheat-producing territories of the great Canadian North-west, are the cities of Chicago, Milwaukee, Duluth and Fort William, situated on the head waters of Lake Michigan and Superior. The staple export trade from these points consists of wheat, corn, flour and provisions. Of the vast volumes which were assembled at these ports in the season 1900, there were for export : 6,000,000 barrels of flour, 200,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn. Of this export volume 5,850,000 barrels of flour, and 170,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn were carried through Buffalo to the Atlantic seaboard, while only 150,000 barrels of flour and 30,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn went out by Montreal and the St. Lawrence route.

The figures for the past season from the port of Montreal, I have not at hand, but the volume has been very considerable less than those above quoted.

Now, for a moment, Mr. Speaker, we will tell the House something about our present export channels. You will have observed that the volume of the above named goods passed through Buffalo was carried there over a 1,000-mile waterway, in vessels of the most modern and efficient type, while the small Montreal volume was carried to that port by the Canadian Pacific Railway and Grand Trunk Railway and Canada Atlantic Railway, over a very long rail haul. As I said before, a barrel of flour is hauled from Duluth to Buffalo—1,000 miles—for 16 cents, while a barrel of flour for the same distance in Canada, from Ontario, costs 45 cents and sometimes more, for the reason that notwithstanding our unrivalled waterways, Canada has no properly organized system of inland water transportation.

No more striking example can be given of the growth and future possibilities of the great west and the value of water transportation as an economic factor in that marvellous development than the growth of the Sault canal traffic.

Growth of Sault Traffic.

Year.	Number of Vessels.	Tons of Freight.
1890..	10,557	9,041,213
1895..	17,956	15,062,580
1901..	20,041	28,403,065

Stupendous as these figures are, they only reveal a portion of the great lake commerce —the greatest in the world. The volume last year passing through the Detroit river totalled nearly 42,000,000 tons. This volume is almost four times greater than the Suez canal, which is the great artery of commerce between Europe and Asia. It exceeds the combined entrances and clearances of Liverpool and London, two of the world's greatest seaports. It almost doubles that of the port of New York, which for the twelve months ending July, 1901, was 25,085,000 tons.

In order that the House may comprehend in another way the commercial activity of the great lakes, I may say that the total fleet engaged therein amounts to the enormous number of 3,500 vessels. Let the people think seriously of this for a moment, and can they ever imagine, we Canadians, on any Canadian route, employing 500 vessels, to say nothing about the 3,500 ? On these 3,500 vessels they carry regular crews to the number of 52,000 men, and directly afford employment to 150,000 men, as clerks, coal, ore and grain shovellers, stevedores, deck hands and others. During the eight months or season of navigation for 1900 :

The total arrivals and departures from—
Chicago, 17,017 vessels, 13,834,000 tonnage.
Duluth, 11,526 vessels, 14,433,500 tonnage.

The arrival and clearances at the port of Chicago equal the cities of New York and New Orleans combined, and almost equal the combined total of the cities of Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New Orleans, which are all-year open ports.

Another item of interest is that pertaining to the value of the commerce passing the Sault canal during the season of navigation, which for the past year was 28,403,065 ; an increase of two and three-quarter million tons over the previous year. The total valuation given to this enormous volume has been $288,529,500.

Without going into detail, 18,000,000 tons of the gross volume represented iron and copper ore, leaving a balance of 10,000,000 for food stuffs and general merchandise.

The commercial advantages of a waterway route through the centre of Canada cannot be estimated. First as an export grain route, second as an export route for Ontario products ; third, as an export and import general merchandise route ; fourth, as a coal line from Nova Scotia to Ontario cities.

The economy of this route is acknowledged by experts to be pre-eminent, in view of its unquestioned geographical advantages.

2. As being the great and cheap outlet for the great North-west wheat supply.

3. Because of the local commercial possibilities which will be afforded by the province of Ontario and northern New York states supplying large volumes of high class freight, producing a very high percentage of earnings and revenue, and I think the Gulf of St. Lawrence should be the assembling ground for both import and export commerce for all parts of the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I might go on talking for hours, giving you quotations, comparisons, illustrations and arguments why the people of Canada should, in my opinion, lose not a day in sending out a company of expert engineers and expert commercial men in search of the best system of developing and utilizing our waterways so that we can place ourselves in a position to compete with Australia, South America, United States, Argentine Republic, Russia, or any of our great competitors who transport their goods by water.

I trust that even at this late hour the House shall hear from many members on both sides something with regard to this great problem, and I may again say, Mr. Speaker, that I regret very much having been compelled to wait, on account of poor health, until this late date to bring this matter up. However, I trust that my few feeble remarks may result in some good to the people of this country. I beg to move, seconded by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) :

That during the past twenty years Canada's food producing competitors in the British market have made phenominal strides in agricultural development owing largely to the favourable rates afforded them by adequate competitive transportation routes and which have enabled them practically to fix and determine the value of food products the world over ;

That the intensity of the commercial struggle of to-day imperatively demands the advancement of our national development and that every handicap existing against the transportation to the world's markets of our agricultural or industrial products shall be removed ; that our commerce shall be untrammelled ; and that conditions shall be made to subserve the interests of commerce, and not commerce that of arbitrary or artificial conditions ;

That it is in the interest of our Dominion at large—in view of the economy of water transportation—that greater use shall be made of our waterways between Lake Superior and the seaboard, thus affording cheaper and better facilities of transportation for our exports from the Western Territories and Ontario, and the development of interprovincial trade.

Therefore, in the opinion of this House, it is both expedient and indispensable that the government shall at once inaugurate such a policy in connection with our waterways and the shipbuilding industry as will speedily lead to the completion of a Canadian system of both inland and ocean transportation.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). Mr. Speaker, I regret very much indeed that neither the government nor the House had an opportunity of knowing about this amendment that has just been proposed by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. MacLaren). Hearing it read, as I have now for the first time, there does not seem to be anything very objectionable in the terms of the amendment, but under the circumstances I do not see how it is possible for the government to accept an amendment of this kind on a motion to go into Committee of Supply; an amendment that we have not had an opportunity of reading or of considering before hand. I fear, therefore, that I will have to ask the House to vote against this amendment. As regards the speech which the hon. gentleman (Mr. MacLaren) has delivered, I must say that I am very glad indeed to have the very valuable figures which he has placed before the House recorded in 'Hansard,' so that they may be thoroughly understood and known by hon. gentlemen and by the people of Canada. Many of these figures have already appeared in the public press, but not in such a form that they could be thoroughly understood and digested, and I must congratulate the hon. member upon the form in which he has put them before the House. The hon. gentleman, I am well aware, is deeply interested in all problems affecting agriculture, and especially the dairy trade of Canada, and I am quite sure that the results of his long study of these problems, as developed in the speech which has just been delivered, will be read by the members of the House and by the people of the country with a great deal of interest. My only regret is that the attendance of members was so scanty this morning, and that all who were here were not able to follow very closely my hon. friend's remarks. There are, however, one or two points which stand out particularly as the burden of his speech, to which I shall refer for a few moments.

One is that our waterways in Canada are defective and must be improved. Now, I venture to take issue with my hon. friend at once. The waterways of Canada are far superior to those of the United States. We have in the western lakes the same waterway opened to us as is opened to the United States. Whether the shipment starts from Duluth or from Fort William, that shipment can go down to the eastern end of Lake Erie just as well as to Port Colborne at the mouth of the Welland canal as it can to Buffalo, although the facilities at Port Colborne for handling the traffic are not as great as those at Buffalo. But that the government have already taken steps to remedy, and to-day there are large contracts being carried out for the improvement of Port Colborne, at the completion of which I venture to think that port will seriously rival the port of Buffalo in the facilities and advantages which it will afford for the transhipment of grain and other products from the ships plying on the great lakes to those which ply on the canals.

My hon. friend has made a comparison between Buffalo and Montreal in regard to rates; but I venture to think it is an unfair comparison, inasmuch as Montreal is a seaport, while Buffalo is separated by several hundred miles of either railway transport or very poor canal transport from the American seaboard. Therefore the comparison between Buffalo and Montreal is an entirely unfair and unwarranted comparison.

My hon. friend has spoken about the American waterways having reduced the rates on American railroads. I have not studied this subject in its entirety so as to be able to follow out that argument; but from what I do know of railroad rates in the United States, I do not think the Erie canal from Buffalo to New York has materially affected them. If these rates are lower than the rates in Canada, it is due to two things: In the first place, the enormous traffic which has enabled them to grade their roads better and to provide better accommodation; and, secondly, the keen competition which exists between the large number of railroad corporations engaged in the carrying of goods from Chicago and other points in the west to the Atlantic seaboard.

It is true, there is a very serious discrimination against our agricultural products in Ontario, when we compare the cost of laying them down in England, the great market for our agricultural products, with the cost of laying down there American agricultural products, which come from points further west. This is one of the most grave difficulties which we have to overcome in connection with the export of our agricultural products to England; and any proposition looking towards a solution of that difficulty is well worthy of the utmost consideration of parliament and the country. I venture to think that Canada has done in the immediate past and is doing to-day a good deal to overcome that discrimination. In the first place, within the last few years our canal system has been enlarged to a depth of 14 feet, so that now vessels carrying something like 60,000 bushels of grain can leave the western end of the great lakes and carry their cargoes to Montreal without breaking bulk. This fact of itself makes our waterways far superior to the waterways of the United States, where no such cargo can be carried from the interior of the continent to the seaboard without breaking bulk at Buffalo and transhipping into smaller vessels to pass through the Erie canal. Notwithstanding this fact, the rates in Canada to the seaboard are a great deal higher than the rates in the United States for the same distance.

This difference in rates, is not, however, so much a difference in railroad rates on this continent, as a difference in the rates on the Atlantic steamships.

This question is a serious one, with which this country has been face to face for many years. It is one which the government have been trying to deal with in what way they could. The fact which the hon. gentleman himself has brought forward, as to the insurance rates being so much higher on the St. Lawrence route than the insurance rates from Boston, New York and other American ports, is a very serious factor in this comparison of rates. That is a matter which has been before the government and the country for two or three years past; and so important has it been felt to be by the government that if the hon. gentleman will look at the supplementary estimates which have been laid on the Table this morning for the year 1902-3, he will find an item of $280,000 which is asked for by my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the purpose of improving the lights and buoys and the other aids to navigation on the river and gulf of St. Lawrence. These works, we believe, will have a material affect in reducing the rates of insurance on vessels using the St. Lawrence route. In fact, the insurance companies and the shipping companies have informed the government that if the improvements involved in the scheme of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries are carried out, the result will be a reduction of the rates on the St. Lawrence route. My hon. friend will therefore see that not only are the government not unmindful of this question, but they have investigated it, and are prepared, if parliament grants this money, to go to work during the coming season and carry out the improvements which those familiar with the business have recommended to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

My hon. friend spoke about the discrimination in railroad rates. I do not know what can be done to remedy this discrimination except to appoint a railway commission. A Bill to create such a commission was introduced in the House this session and thoroughly discussed, and I hope that before the session closes it will be still further ventilated, so that the whole country will be fully seized with the subject. Next session I have no doubt that this measure will be re-introduced early enough to be carried into law, and it seems to me that a railway commission, such as is provided by this Bill, will be the simplest and most effective means of providing a remedy for the evils which now undoubtedly exist with regard to railway rates and transportation. At the moment I am not prepared to say to what extent the evils complained of interfere with our traffic. That is a question which will have to be settled by the railway commission. Individual instances will have to be submitted to that commission and evidence concerning them given under oath. And I am sure that no better tribunal than a commission of this kind, specially created for that work, could be devised to thoroughly sift the evils and disadvantages complained of and apply a remedy.

My hon. friend has also spoken about the necessity for encouraging a line of vessels to carry freight from the western end of our waterway down to Montreal. I regret extremely that such a line was not established long since, but the reason it has not been is no doubt the want of enterprise on the part of Canadians and their unwillingness to take every advantage of the waterways placed at their disposal by the country. We have a splendid chance of communication from Fort William to Montreal. Our coasting laws furnish every facility and encouragement for the establishment of lines of steamers on our great lakes, and if these facilities have not been taken advantage of, it seems to me that it is because the capitalists of this country have not seen their way clear to make the investment. I do not understand my hon. friend to suggest that the government should do any more than provide these facilities. It has indeed been a matter of surprise to me that in days gone by a line of boats was not established to carry the enormous export trade of the Niagara peninsula, especially in fruit, from Hamilton and the adjoining ports down to Montreal. Instead of that, the railways have been allowed to monopolise that immense traffic. In view of the well established fact that water carriage is cheaper, especially in bulky freight, than rail carriage, I cannot understand why so small an amount of this western business has been carried in boats from the west to Montreal. That is one of the things that ought to be investigated. It is certainly astonishing that with the splendid facilities offered by our canals and lakes there has not been any improvement in the direction of supplying vessels to carry this western trade.

I venture to say that in addition there is abundant opportunity for me of enterprise to establish cold storage boats, which would run through Lake Erie and Ontario and down through the canals in summer to Montreal, where their freight would be transhipped into ocean vessels, which are all equipped with cold storage facilities. I need not dwell on the facilities provided for cold storage freight from Montreal to Europe. My hon. friend himself read an extract which showed clearly that these are far superior to the advantages provided in American ports. His own cheese trade has shown clearly that while the rates are cheaper via Portland, the cheese becomes damaged on that route, whereas, although the rates may be a little higher via Montreal, the cheese suffers no damage, but arrives in good condition, and I think he will agree that it is better to pay a little higher freight at Montreal and have the cheese arrive in good order in our cold storage vessels than ship it at a lower rate from American ports and have it arrive in a damaged condition. I shall not say anything further on this point, except to remark that when my hon. friend asks us to help him in securing better accommodation at Portland, he must not forget that Portland is a foreign port and that we have no control of the vessels leaving it.

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). My hon. friend is mistaken. I am not advocating any assistance to an American port, but simply that we should improve our Canadian waterways.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understood my hon. friend to read and endorse the views expressed by a gentleman at the Dairymen's Association, who advised that we should provide better accommodation at Portland. I am not going into the figures which my hon. friend has given. They need to be studied very carefully before attempting to deal with them, but before sitting down, I would like to say to my hon. friend—and in so doing, I wish to set aside all politics, which he seemed to think ought to be introduced into the matter, since he brought his motion as an amendment to the resolution to go into supply. Such a motion, unless previously submitted to the government, is necessarily a motion of want of confidence.

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). I did give the Minister of Public Works a copy of the resolution yesterday.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. My hon. colleague the Minister of Public Works was not here, and I did not know anything about it, nor did the other members of the government. But putting politics aside entirely, let me say that Canada as a whole, both this government and its predecessors, has devoted enormous sums of money to the solving of the transportation problem and has never shrunk from doing what the country thought necessary in order to provide transportation facilities. Our canal system is probably the greatest on the face of the earth. Our government railway, the Intercolonial Railway, and the Grand Trunk Railway and Canadian Pacific Railway, both of which have been largely assisted by this country, are probably, in proportion to our wealth and population, the greatest railroad system on the globe. Canada has borne, and is to-day bearing the burden, by paying the interest on the debt incurred for the purpose of perfecting our transportation facilities. These facilities are not at all utilized to their full extent. Our canal system is not utilized to the one-hundredth part of its capacity. If the enterprising capitalists of this country would undertake to supply the necessary vessels, there is nothing to prevent our canals being utilized in a way hitherto undreamed of, and I have no doubt that the investment would prove profitable, both for the promoters and the country.

Under these circumstances, I venture to think that neither the government nor the people of Canada can be looked upon as recreant to this part of their duty or lacking in enterprise and determination to advance along the lines of material progress. If these facilities have not been utilized to the utmost possible extent, it is because the people of Canada have been devoting themselves to other things—the farmers to the production of goods, the merchants to selling those goods to advantage. And now they are beginning to see and understand that greater facilities in the way of transport are necessary, not in the shape of canals, not in the shape of railway tracks, but in the shape of improved rolling stock for the railways, and of ships for the utilization of the canals which now exist. The people of Canada will take that up and carry it out in a way commensurate with the facilities already at their disposal and commensurate with the enterprise they have shown in providing these facilities and in the development of the country's resources thus far. I am satisfied that hon. members on both sides and the people of Canada at large are expecting that this will be done, and I venture to think that, in the near future, such work will be done to greater advantage than heretofore. As I have said, I regret that it is impossible under the circumstances to accept the motion, especially in the form in which it has been given. But I sympathize with a great deal of what has been said by the hon. member for North Perth, and I am satisfied that Canadians will take advantage of the facilities they have and will soon have a fleet upon our lakes that will rival that of the United States, and that will cause our trade to pass through our canals and ports instead of so much of it going to the south.

Mr. JABEL ROBINSON (West Elgin). The motion now before the House is, perhaps, the most interesting for the farmers of this country that has yet been discussed. As the Minister of Railways promises that next session he will introduce a Bill to regulate the traffic on the railways by establishing a railway commission, perhaps it will be well to wait and see what the government will do. The farmers are all deeply interested in getting their products to the market at as cheap a rate as possible. It has been clearly established that Canadian farmers are discriminated against by the railways. Whether the commission will have power to relieve them of that discrimination remains to be seen. We find that to-day cattle are carried from Chicago to Boston at a cheaper rate than that which is charged on cattle from a point fifty miles north of Toronto to Boston over the same lines. I hold in my hands a shipping bill from Chicago for cattle shipped from there for 28 cents per 100 pounds to Boston. I have another shipping bill from a point 80 miles north of Toronto for 33 cents per 100 pounds to Boston. And there is a rebate on the shipment from Chicago of $7.50, reducing the Chicago rate by about 3 cents further. Now, if this is a fact—and it is a fact, for I have the shipping bills here—it is a grievance which should be remedied. I have another shipping bill for cattle from Toronto to Boston for 25 cents per 100 pounds with no rebate. Now, this makes a difference of $1.14 on every beef weighing 1,400 pounds to get it on ship-board, the difference being against the Canadian farmers. I am credibly informed that, on the average, the American farmer has an advantage of $2 on every beef shipped to the old country over the farmers of Canada. What does this mean? It means that our farmers who are looking to better their condition will go and live in a land where they can get the best advantages. Is it any wonder that farm lands in Ontario and in Canada generally are depreciating in value when our railways discriminate against us in this way? The Minister of Railways cannot establish his railway commission too soon. I am not prepared to condemn the government because they have not done it yet, for these discriminations have been going on for many years. But if the government will undertake to remedy this evil, the farmers will be satisfied. In the meantime, I am not prepared to condemn the government until we see what they are going to do in the matter.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I was a little surprised at the statement of the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher), that this motion, being in amendment to a motion for Committee of Supply, must be regarded as a motion of want of confidence in the government. It is only a few days since the hon. gentleman's own friends accepted a motion in amendment to a motion for Committee of Supply from one of their own supporters, not regarding it as a motion of want of confidence. I refer to the motion of the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) regarding the embargo on Canadian cattle. And the government could, with equal propriety, accept the motion now before the House, for there is nothing in it that goes any further or is any stronger than the motion offered by one of their own friends. The excuse that the Minister of Agriculture has given why this motion should not be allowed to pass, or his excuse for calling upon his friends to vote it down, is simply an excuse, and not a very good one either. The hon. minister said that the cold storage provided from Canadian ports is far superior to that provided from American ports. No doubt it is. Why, then, is it that the freight rates are so much higher from Canadian ports? It must be due to one of two causes—either to want of competition in the vessels carrying on that trade or to the high insurance that is charged on the Canadian route. I have reason to believe that a good deal is due to the fact that the insurance on the St. Lawrence route is so very much higher than from American ports. And yet, strange to say, we have been told over and over again in this House, within the last few years by supporters of the government, that everything has been done that could be done to make the route as nearly perfect as possible—the lighting, deepening and enlarging of the channel and the affording of 14-foot navigation throughout the whole route. If everything has been done that should be done, why does the Minister of Agriculture tell us to-day that there is a large item in the supplementary estimates which have just been laid on the Table, for better lighting the St. Lawrence route? I admit quite readily that the work is necessary. But the statement of the minister is strangely contradictory of what was said by Sir Louis Davies, the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, over and over again in this House, that everything had been done that could be done to make the route perfect and to reduce the cost of insurance.

The Minister of Agriculture wonders that freight from the western part of Ontario is not carried in boats rather than in railways. Now the minister has been informing the Canadian farmer for several years past that he has introduced a system of cold storage on the railways, capable of carrying the perishable products of the farm to the seaboard, and laying them down in perfect condition; and he wonders because the farmers have taken him at his word and are availing themselves of this cold storage system. It is true that they have not found it as valuable as he declared it would be, but they have taken him at his word, and they are using it. Now I admit that if the Canadian farmer in the southwestern part of Ontario availed himself of steamers for the carriage of his fruit it might be to his advantage. But to do it successfully there would require to be better provision made for the carriage of that fruit on those steamers than exists at the present time. Why? Because transportation is much slower, and there is a possibility of the fruit spoiling in the steamers as well as in the cars. But the Minister of Agriculture has made no provision for the better carriage of these perishable products of the farm by way of these steamers between, say, Hamilton or Grimsby and Montreal. Therefore it should not be a matter of surprise to the minister that they do not take advantage of the waterways; they cannot do so on account of the inferior transportation facilities that are afforded them by these steamers. The Minister of Agriculture says that the Canadians should take advantage of the splendid waterways provided by the country. Now, does it not occur to him that there must be some defect, or otherwise they would take advantage of them? It may be in freight rates, it may be in the want of more rapid transportation, it may be in facilities for handling—there must be some reason why the people do not take advantage of it. The very fact that they do not take advantage of it ought to suggest to the hon. gentleman the necessity of inquiring into the cause and providing a remedy as early as possible. It is not enough to say that it is provided. These splendid waterways are not all they have been represented to be; the shippers of the country declare they are not what they have been represented to be. We often find Canadians shipping by way of American ports, availing themselves of the transportation facilities through American ports while leaving the waterways and railways of our own country. Then I say we cannot move one moment too soon in remedying these defects so that our shippers will take advantage of our waterways as they ought to be able to do.

The hon. minister told us a short time before that they had improved the St. Lawrence by lighting it better. Well, that is right, but they have contended for years that they have done all that was required; and the hon. gentleman's own friends have most positively assured us that everything was done that could be done. Only last session the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that navigators found no fault with the St. Lawrence, that he had asked captains what more was necessary to be done, and they told him nothing, they could suggest nothing more to be done. But to-day the Minister of Agriculture tells us that there is an item of over $280,000 in the supplementary estimates presented to this House to-day for the purpose of better lighting the St. Lawrence route. There must have been something wrong, then. My impression is now, as it always has been, that the St. Lawrence was not as well lighted as it should be, otherwise the insurance rates would not be so high. It is evident there has been some defect in that route, and the minister now acknowledges it by making better provision for lighting it. The minister says the waterways of Canada are far superior to those of the United States. He said that in justification of the contention that we could ship cheaper to foreign markets through Canada than we could through the United States. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren) said that this justifies us in adopting his resolution, namely:

> That in the opinion of this House it is both expedient and indispensable that the government should at once inaugurate such a policy in connection with our waterways and the shipbuilding industry of the country, as will speedily lead to the completion of the Canadian system by both inland and ocean transportation.

Now, the hon. minister says the waterways of Canada are far superior to the waterways of the United States, and he gives that as an answer to the allegation that shipping is carried on more cheaply through the waterways of the United States than through those of Canada. Well, I know there is a good deal in the fact that the larger country has a larger quantity to ship, that there is greater competition in vessels, and that perhaps the insurance is much lighter. Those facts may partly account for the larger quantity of shipping carried through the United States waterways. But I think there is another reason that accounts for it, and that is that we have not paid sufficient attention to our own waterways. There is no doubt of that whatever, in my judgment. I do not see any reason in the world why our railways cannot carry the produce of Canada, say from Windsor, if you like, to Montreal, as cheap as they can from Milwaukee, or St. Paul, or Minneapolis to Montreal. Why can they not do it? Does it cost less or more to carry a hundred weight of freight fifteen hundred miles than it does to carry it a thousand miles? It cost more to carry it a longer distance, and yet they are carrying it a longer distance for a cheaper price. What does that suggest? Does it not suggest that there must be an overcharge on the freight carried through Canada? Does it not suggest the necessity of a railway commission, or some other power, to control the railways in fixing their freight rates? It is not so much competiton that does that, because some railways carry freight through Canada and are taxed to their utmost capacity at times to handle it. Therefore they ought to be able to carry freight for Canadians at least as cheap, if not cheaper, than the Americans do, because sometimes they carry it a much longer distance.

Then there must be some other cause, and what is it? The Canadians do not avail themselves of our splendid waterways. Why do they not? There must be some shortage of vessels, and if there is a shortage of vessels, is not this resolution an appropriate one which suggests that the government should direct their attention to the matter: 'Inaugurate such a policy in connection with our waterways and the shipbuilding industry of the country as will speedily lead to the completion of the Canadian system by both inland and ocean transportation.' Is that an improper suggestion to make to the government? Is it improper for this House to ask the government to direct their attention to those things?

We had a deputation here a few days ago waiting on the government asking them to give a bounty on ship-building. Suppose the government acceded to that request what would be the result? It would certainly lead to the building of more ships in Canada and if we had more ships built in Canada there would be a better system of transportation. There would be a greater competition and the result would be that we would have an ample supply of vessels for our carrying trade, whereas, we have not now an ample supply. We are many times short of what the country needs. This resolution could not be out of place if the government accepted it and there is no good reason in the world why the government should not accept it and say that we desire to do what is there proposed. We are directing our attention to the subject, but if we can get a spur, or any valuable suggestion from the opposition that will help us, we are willing and desirous to avail ourselves of such assistance and at the earliest possible moment to do everything we can to improve the shipping facilities of the country. We have been told that we have a 14 foot system of waterways from Lake Superior right down to Montreal. Some shippers say we have not. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) has told us over and over again that we have. But, whether we have or have not, we do find that vessel-owners are reluctant to avail themselves of our waterways to the extent that we would desire to see them do. There seems to be some reason for this and I say that it is the duty of the government to seek out that reason and remedy any defect that may be found to exist at the earliest possible moment. The hon. member who moved this resolution gave us some statistics to show the amount of trade that is passing through the Sault canal, the improvement in that trade and the value of it. The number of vessels that passed through the Sault canal last year was 2,041. Well, it suggested one thing to my mind and it was that there is ample competition in these waterways so far as our American friends are concerned and that if we had the same competition there is no doubt whatever but that it would result in the lowering of freight rates to the Canadian people. We find that a great deal of the grain that passes through the Sault canal is taken to Buffalo. We are told that it goes there because that is a cheaper route and some people say it is a cheaper route because they have better facilities for shipping to the seaboard. Their route does not compare with ours. The Erie canal is by no means equal to the St. Lawrence route. That does not affect the question, but the real reason is that they have better competition in railways from Buffalo to New York. I believe that fact accounts for the shipment of such a large amount of grain by this route rather than that the route from Buffalo to New York is superior to ours. It is by virtue of that competition that the freight rates are lower and that is the reason why a large portion of the grain is going that way rather than by way of Montreal. It is sometimes said that if we had the Georgian Bay canal this condition of affairs would be remedied. Well, it may be to some extent. I believe so far as the carriage of the grain of the North-west Territories is concerned it would be of material advantage if we had it. The next question is whether the cost of that canal is not beyond the reach of the Canadian people at the present time, and whether we would be justified in incurring the very large expenditure which would be necessary to build that canal by the expected return from the shipping brought to the country on account of it. We do not think we would be at the present time, but we do think that the improvement of the other waterways should be proceeded with as rapidly as possible. We have heard it said over and over again in this House that since the present government came into power they have finished the St. Lawrence route, that our canal system is finished. We need only look at the estimates to satisfy ourselves that the canal system is not finished by any means, because we are spending money right along the same as we have done in years past. I do not complain of it, because I think that expenditure is absolutely necessary, but I think that the work might be hurried up a great deal faster than it has been carried on during the last four or five years. We have not made the progress we should have made. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte)—with that constant discussion going on between three or four ministers of the Crown it is difficult to proceed. I desire to get their attention, because, if I can hope to make any impression upon them it will be through them hearing what I have to say. If they will only extend to me the courtesy of listening to me I will be very much obliged. I have noticed this practice so often that I am obliged to speak of it. The hon. Minister of Public Works, in my judgment, has displayed more enterprise and energy in his efforts to carry this out than any other minister of the Crown, but I do say that during the last four or five years, although they said much about the expenditure and the work done by their predecessors, the work is going on more rapidly to-day than for many years past. This fact suggests to us the necessity of hurrying up, because as time goes on and new routes are being constructed it would be much more difficult to divert the trade of the country from these new routes when we get our own completed than to secure this trade if we had our routes ready for the carriage of the trade when the trade is offered to be carried. In going over the returns that were given to us a short time ago showing the quantity of grain going from ports on the Georgian Bay they show that a large share of that trade is being carried by railway notwithstanding all the money that we are spending on the waterways of this country. We have the Canada Atlantic Railway carrying millions and millions of bushels of grain from Parry Sound to Montreal, we have the Grand Trunk Railway carrying 11,000,- 000 or 12,000,000 bushels of grain from Midland every year to Montreal, and we have the Grand Trunk Railway carrying a large amount of wheat from Meaford, Collingwood, Goderich and Sarnia to Montreal. All these railways are carrying the grain and if facilities are given for the handling of the grain at these ports through elevators and through improved facilities for transhipment it will materially assist in carrying the grain from these ports by these routes. The more grain that is carried in this way the less will be taken to Buffalo. If we continue to improve our waterways as we are doing by providing better lighting and reducing the cost of insurance and otherwise improving them we will induce the Canadian people to avail themselves of these routes, to ship their grain by Canadian routes rather than by American routes as the hon. Minister of Agriculture told us they are doing. Our attention cannot be directed a moment too soon to the importance of this resolution and the hon. member for Perth is entitled to the thanks of this House as well as to the thanks of the shippers of the country and especially the agriculturists of the country for introducing this subject and giving the House the benefit of the large amount of information which he has collected in regard to it. The details which he has given to this House I take to be approximately correct, as correct as it was possible for him to obtain them. It is valuable information, as I have said, and the introduction of the subject draws our attention to the subject in a way that should make the government desirous at the earliest possible date of directing their attention to it more energetically than they have done in the past. That being the case why should they not accept the resolution ? If the government have nothing to fear, if they have been doing all they could this would be a justification for what they have done. Then I say that the government should accept this resolution and let us pass it unanimously as they did in reference to the resolution introduced by the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa) the other night in regard to the cattle trade of the country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Hon. J. I. Tarte). I have addressed the House so often on the transportation question, that I hesitate to speak once more; but the subject is of such vast importance that I may be pardoned for saying a few words. My hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) has rightly stated that it is perhaps the most important question that we have to deal with at the present time. The amalgamation of many lines of steamers on the Atlantic ocean has created a new interest in that question. No one can tell what the result of that may be, because it is too early yet to make any prophecy about it. There are those who believe that Mr. Morgan's plans are not only to amalgamate as many steamer lines as he can, but to work these lines in conjunction with the American railway system, and I am one of those who take that view. I believe that before we are very much older, we will find that Mr. Morgan and his syndicate who are stock holders in American railways will amalgamate both railways and steamship lines, not only on the ocean but on the lakes as well. In other words, they will be able to make a through rate from west to east. There is no doubt that we are not in a position to-day to face such a strong combination, but I do not despair of the future of the country. We live in a century of progress and activity, and ships can be built in a very short time indeed. We are not so poor that we cannot provide for our needs in that direction. We have made a great deal of progress during the last year. I do not say that boastfully because I feel in my bones and sinews that this question is far above party politics. Our predecessors have worked in that direction more especially on the land, and the Canadian Pacific Railway was built and part of the canals completed. The completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway engaged our attention for several years, and not only our attention but our money and credit. Now we have to grapple with the problem of transportation as it is presented to us to-day. My hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren) should not lose sight of the progress we have made, and it is just as well that I should make it as clear as I can. We are improving our harbours on the lakes. The hon. gentleman has asked why our Canadian canal system has not developed more trade. The reason is obvious. He has been to Buffalo and he has seen the immense organization they have there, and that they have five miles of a breakwater in Buffalo harbour. On our side at Port Colborne, we had not a shadow of a harbour. How could a big ship loaded with grain or other produce come to Port Colborne when she had no accommodation there ? Well, we are equipping Port Colborne to-day and it will be so much done. Our system of canals is about completed, and the minister will have them lighted by electricity in order to make them more available. We are making improvements at Midland, Collingwood, Owen Sound and Parry Sound, which are all reservoirs of trade. Let me call the attention of the House to the new policy of the Grand Trunk Railway. That company has been for a few years past an American road both in summer and winter, but I am glad to be able to say that Mr. Hays has fully made up his mind to take advantage of the St. Lawrence route, and the Grand Trunk Railway is going to erect a large elevator and a large warehouse in the port of Montreal to accommodate their trade. This fact alone proves that we have made a great deal of progress, because if the St. Lawrence had not been improved the Grand Trunk Railway would not have come back to Montreal. The route between Montreal and the sea is being improved as rapidly as money can improve it, and if my hon. friend (Mr. MacLaren, Perth) were in my position he could more readily appreciate the difficulty of carrying out such vast works. When I took office, for one reason or another, my department had no fleet of dredges. Dredges are not built in a day; I had to organize the whole thing, and I regret that we are going to prorogue before the dredges are at work, because I had the intention of inviting the leaders of both sides of the House to make an inspection of the works on the St. Lawrence, but that will come another season. The port of Montreal is being equipped, and the port of Quebec will be equipped also. In spite of all the money we have spent in days past in Quebec, there is scarcely any space available for large vessels. The ships that carry freight from New York, Boston and Philadelphia take a whole world of merchandise on each voyage, and with the relatively inferior ships which we had on our route in the past we could not compete with them.

Mr. SPROULE. Is it not a strange fact that the same ships sailing from Montreal and from Portland will carry freight from Portland at several shillings per hundred weight less than they will carry the same freight from Montreal.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There may be reasons for that, and one of the reasons is that most of the ships that sail from the American ports are larger than the average of those that in the past have been navigating our waters. We say in French: 'Paris n'a pas été bâti dans un jour'—Paris has not been built in a day—and energetic as we be, still a young nation like us cannot do everything in a day. I hope that before our hair is much grayer, we will have a fast line coupled with a line of freight carriers of the first magnitude, and then perhaps we will not be far from the solution of this difficult and expensive problem. We had to equip the St. Lawrence route in many ways. Our telegraph system to Belle Isle is completed; dredging is going on; the Minister of Marine is asking the House now for a sufficient sum of money to give a better service in lighting and buoying the river. Perhaps that should have been done sooner. At the same time, so far as the river between Quebec and Montreal is concerned, it might have been just as well to have waited a little, so that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could have taken advantage of the new dredging work that has been going on in the channel. I do not believe that it is necessary to say more. My hon. friend from North Perth has, in a very particular way, called the attention of the House to that important question. The manner in which he has made his motion prevents our accepting it, because it appears to be a motion of want of confidence. I would not take it in that way, and I know he does not intend it as such; but I suppose the procedure of the House makes it necessary to so regard it. I think my hon. friend, after having given us the benefit of his experience and his ability in trade matters, can very well afford to withdraw his motion. It has been accepted in a friendly spirit. He has called the attention not only of the House, but of the commercial community to the necessity of going on as speedily as possible. Speaking for myself, I am very thankful to him for having given us the great advantage of his knowledge and commercial ability in such matters.

Mr. N. BOYD (Macdonald). Mr. Speaker, the importance of this subject to the western portion of this country is my only excuse for taking a few moments of the time of the House in discussing it. There is no issue before parliament of such great importance as the carrying trade, so far as the western portion of Canada is concerned. People are to-day going in there in thousands, and, as I had occasion to point out when the House first opened, the trade of that country was practically blocked during a great portion of the winter for the reason that we were not able to get the products of the country taken to the markets. The people are going in there in vast numbers, far in excess, I fear, of the enterprise of the government or any private enterprise to meet their future requirements. I may mention to the House a conversation which I had with the superintendent of the Canadian Pacific Railway when I waited upon him with regard to the shortage of cars. The burning question all over that country is how to get this great disability removed; and every person who has any influence at all is expected to exert it in that direction. I said to Mr. Leonard: 'Provided there are no more railroads opened up and we take merely the natural increase of acreage that will be broken up, and the natural increase of the produce that will come from the people now in the country, to say nothing of the people who are coming in, what are you going to do with the produce of that country six years from to-day?' His remark was: 'Mr. Boyd, ten railroads will not take the produce of this country out in double the time you at present seem to think it should.'

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is a question which this House might well consider, and it is this: The millers of Minneapolis, recognizing the importance of this great wheat field, have made an arrangement with the authorities at Washington, whereby they are permitted to grind wheat in Minneapolis in bond; and if our government and people do not rise to the emergency of the occasion, you may be prepared to see a great volume of the trade of that country passing to Minneapolis and other American cities. The point which my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works frequently refers to is the port of Buffalo. He speaks feelingly, and I believe sincerely, when he complains of the trade of this country passing from Buffalo to New York. But shippers have told me that the cheapness of the ocean carriage from New York to the European markets is the great cause of that. The immense shipping that goes into New York enables vessels to carry grain out at a much lower rate than it can be carried at from Montreal. A man told me that he has actually had his grain carried free from Buffalo to New York, in order that it might be carried as ballast in vessels which were in a hurry to leave, when there was a great deal of shipping going on between New York and Liverpool. I fear that our Canadian ports will not be in a position to meet this competition until you are prepared to bonus vessels to come to Montreal or to whatever winter port in Canada you may decide upon. This is a very important question, and the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. MacLaren) has done a good thing in again bringing it before the people; because I fear that a great many in eastern Canada do not recognize its urgent importance. I say it will require four railroads between Fort William and Winnipeg, and two or possibly three more east of there to serve the trade that is looming up and is coming very soon in that country. It is only a short time since I went there, when we imported everything into the country—potatoes, meat, bread, everything; whereas to-day the country is supplying all the demands of the people, feeding every person there, and at the same time has 100,000,000 bushels of grain for export, produced by a very small number of people. If you take out the towns and the cities, the number of people employed on the land in Manitoba and the North-west Territories is estimated, I think, by Sir William Van Horne, to be less than 40 per cent of the population. Well, if 40 per cent of the present small population is able to produce such an enormous crop, what can we expect when that country has, as it must have in the near future, possibly 1,000,000 people? What are you going to do to meet that emergency? It is only the importance of this question to the western country that induces me to occupy the time of the House at this moment. It is so important that the government should not lose sight of it, and the country will hold them responsible for whatever the results may be.

Mr. T. MURRAY (Pontiac). Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made some reference to the Georgian Bay canal, in connection with the necessity of providing greater transportation facilities in the country. He said it was premature to consider the question just now, because the country was not prepared for it. But after the House has listened to the speech of the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd), who has given us his personal knowledge of the magnitude of the products of the country at the present time, and has referred to its still greater prospective products, I think every one will see the great necessity that exists for providing better facilities for carrying the products of the west to the seaboard.

The question of the Georgian Bay canal is one in which the people of the Ottawa valley are very much interested, and in which the people of the Dominion should likewise take a great interest, as it will no doubt be a great national waterway. There is no question but that the work is one of great necessity, and I am surprised and disappointed that the hon. Minister of Public Works has not a sum in the estimates for the construction of the French river route. I believed that he would have provided an amount for that purpose. I am disappointed also that he has not provided in the estimates for going on with the total survey, so that the country might have an idea of the probable cost. At all events, it is well understood that the cost will be in the neighbourhood of some $80,000,000, but that is a small item compared with the great advantages to be derived from the construction of this great undertaking. It is admitted to be the shortest route, and one on which freights may be transported with greater speed than on any existing route. I know that there is a sectional feeling in the west adverse to that enterprise, but it seems to me that we all ought to look at it in a national spirit. I know that some people are in favour of a company building that great work and others want the government to build it. For my part, I am in favour of the country doing the work, because I think that it will turn out a good asset. I believe that it will yield a good interest on the money expended. It would also be a great aid to colonization. Instead of the government employing immigrant agents in foreign countries to bring out immigrants, some of whom may be objectionable, their services could be dispensed with, as the construction of that work will attract a vast amount of labour, a considerable portion of which would settle, as they did when the Canadian Pacific Railway was built, on places that are now regarded as unfit for settlement. It would not only help colonization, but develop the great water powers which we now have along the Ottawa river.

I am sorry that this subject was not taken up earlier in the session, and do not feel warranted in inflicting any lengthy remarks on the House at this period, but I do trust that the hon. Minister of Public Works, who is an active man, and who has given a part of this route at least his personal inspection, will go on vigorously with the work next session, and obtain the consent of his colleagues to providing the necessary amount to start the French river route and then proceed with the whole undertaking.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat that it is very much to be regretted the discussion of this most important question did not take place at an earlier period, but in view of its vital importance to the Canadian consumer, I think that my hon. friend from North Perth was justified, even at this late hour, in drawing our attention to it. And in view of the very elaborate statement he has made and the amount of information he has given us regarding the discrimination in rates which prevail at present, he has, I consider, placed us under a great obligation to him. I was glad to notice in the speech of the hon. Minister of Agriculture that he admitted there was nothing objectionable in the resolution as presented, and I regret that, under the circumstances, the government did not consent to its being accepted and passed unanimously. It is recognized on all hands that the question of transportation is the great national question in Canada to-day—one that ought not to be discussed from a party standpoint. The figures presented by my hon. friend are of such a character as to warrant our giving the matter immediate attention, and the first place in our deliberations; and as my hon. friend gave notice yesterday to the hon. Minister of Public Works of his intention to propose this resolution, I do not think he has been treated with the courtesy which he was entitled to expect under the circumstances. It is hardly possible to take up a newspaper, no matter in what part of Canada it is published, and not find in its columns some reference to this transportation question. It is hardly possible not to find in any newspaper facts and figures showing the discrimination practised against the Canadian farmer and the advantages given the farmers of the United States to induce them to ship their products over Canadian routes to the sea. I cannot add anything to the facts and figures which have been presented by the hon. member for North Perth, but I have great pleasure in seconding the resolution, because I think the matter he has brought before the House is of vital interest to every consumer and producer in this country.

Mr. A. E. KEMP (East Toronto). As it is now so late in the session, and so much business has to be done before the adjournment, I do not propose to take up much of the time of the House in discussing this transportation question. It is a question which cannot be discussed in one day. I regret, in common with the hon. members who have spoken, that it was not brought up earlier in the session, but at the same time. I think that my hon. friend from North Perth deserves to be commended for having drawn the attention of the House and the country, as he has done, to so many matters of interest. The facts and figures he has stated, we will now have on record, and will be of great advantage to us in future debates, in arriving at a solution of this problem. The transportation problem has many features, but there are three which seem to me of paramount importance. These are the equipping of the lower St. Lawrence in a suitable manner, the providing of suitable Canadian inland marine, and the adjusting of our inland freight charges. With regard to the St. Lawrence route, no doubt every hon. member is of the opinion that we must spare no pains or money to develop that waterway, and that in it are centred the hopes of the country. We may differ as to the routes our products should take in the winter season, but during the open season of navigation it is in the interests of every province of the Dominion that the St. Lawrence route should be properly developed and equipped, so that vessels may use it under as favourable conditions as they do the competing American routes.

I would like to say a word about this question of marine insurance. If it were in the power of the government to tax vessels using the St. Lawrence route, say $5,000 each vessel on each trip, I venture to think that the shipping people in Great Britain would carefully avoid it. Yet the same thing is done, if not by the government, by the insurance companies. The discrimination against that route by the insurance companies, as compared with American ports, amounts, on an ordinary freight carrier, to $25,000. It amounts to $5,000 per trip, and a fair estimate of the excess of insurance on a cargo of such a vessel would be, in a season, about $7,500. Therefore, there is a discrimination against every vessel trading in the St. Lawrence of from $30,000 to $35,000, as compared with vessels going to Boston, New York and Philadelphia.

We have heard that it is the intention of the government to spend $280,000 on further equipping the St. Lawrence route with whistles, buoys, lighthouses, signals and all that sort of thing. I would like to know if the government have ever consulted people who are thoroughly competent to judge of what it will cost to equip the St. Lawrence route so that vessels will be able to come in and trade on as good terms as are offered them in American ports. And, if the government have learned the facts, I would like very much to know what the cost will be.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Sutherland) before placing in the estimates the amount that is there now, consulted parties who are most interested in Montreal and in the shipping trade; and I feel confident that the amount in the estimates will be enough to light the St. Lawrence route in a very perfect way.

Mr. KEMP. I am very glad to hear it. But, the point I want to make is this—that we, as members of this House of Commons should be convinced that we can make the St. Lawrence route so perfect that the rate of insurance by that route can be made as low as that of any of the American ports. For my part, I am convinced that that can be accomplished. But I am not so sure, from the discussions I have heard in this House, that the members of the government have a policy before them by which they can actually accomplish that end. It seems to me that that cannot be accomplished by this expenditure of $280,000. But what I wish is that we were convinced that we can make the St. Lawrence route as attractive to tramp vessels, in insurance rates and otherwise, as other routes. We have a number of British Canadian lines trading in the St. Lawrence, and we have captains who are accustomed to navigate that route. But I understand it is very difficult to get captains and officers who are accustomed to trade to other ports to come into the St. Lawrence. Therefore, this is a very much larger question, I think, than a great many have considered it to be. Until we can remove this discrimination on insurance rates in the St. Lawrence route, we cannot progress as we hope to do.

We have another handicap in this, that we have pilotage waters of three hundred miles. That handicap we cannot overcome but we can make the best arrangements possible.

It is not enough to talk of freight from Montreal or Quebec. It seems to me we are sending to those places as much as can be carried away with the facilities afforded. The next step, therefore, is to see about the lower St. Lawrence and how we can induce ships to come in. I doubt that we will have to bonus the vessels to come into the route; it seems to me we can so improve the route that they will come in without that.

The question of the lack of a Canadian marine on the lakes has been discussed. I do not profess to offer a solution of that problem. Many views on that question have been expressed. It may be necessary, in the future, to protect these vessels in a way that has never been done before; it may be necessary to bonus them. If the Americans have ships on the inland waters, we should have them too. Until we have Canadian bottoms on the lakes we cannot take advantage of the facilities afforded by our waterways. We do not need any new canals from Georgian bay to Montreal; we need to use those that we have. I would like very much to see made up by competent authority an estimate of the capacity of the St. Lawrence canals—how many bushels of grain could be carried over them in a season? I believe that if we had that information, we should see that we now have facilities for carrying all the grain that can be produced in Ontario and the North-west for many years to come.

Let me refer briefly to the question of freight charges. The hon. member for North Perth has placed this subject before the House in such a way that it will be very easy for us to get at the facts in the future. Some of these facts have come before the attention of hon. members from different sources in the past. In this case it is very difficult to know just what should be done. So far as the producers in this part of Canada are concerned, they are paying 20, 25 or 30 per cent more freight charges on their produce than their neighbours to the south are paying. Perhaps the difference is even greater in many cases. This will always be a grievance. So long as the people of Ontario permit to cross the line and see much more favourable conditions existing there, they will not be satisfied. It is for us to compare the conditions in the country to the south of us and in this country, and see whether we cannot place our finger upon the difficulty and furnish the remedy.

I shall not take up further time, I merely say, as I said in opening, that the hon. member for North Perth has done well, even at this late date of the session, in bringing the matter to the attention of the House, and I shall have much pleasure in supporting his resolution.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I regret very much that the hon. member for North Perth did not reach this motion, which he has had in contemplation for a long time, until so late a date that, it is impossible to deal with it in a satisfactory manner. However, I cannot let the opportunity pass without making a few remarks. The hon. gentleman dealt with a problem upon the wise solution of which depends the question whether Canada shall or shall not receive something like an adequate return for the money expended on the St. Lawrence canals. Two or three years ago, on looking into the question, I was surprised to find that, though Canada had gone on building and perfecting the St. Lawrence canals, so far as the returns of freight from Montreal showed, the amount of grain carried by that route was a diminishing quantity. Apparently, our whole outlay had been made upon a mistaken policy.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the reason, if my hon. friend will permit me to speak for a moment, is that, while we left Port Colborne unequipped, while we did not provide ourselves with proper railway facilities, our American friends were equipping Buffalo and equipping their railways in a way to make successful competition on our part difficult. That is the whole reason.

Mr. BELL. On looking into the matter further, I found the reason to be what has been pointed out in the brief remarks just made by the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). In the first place the port of Montreal was not adequately equipped; and in the second place the front door, as we may say, of the whole system, Port Colborne, was in such condition that no considerable volume of traffic could make its entrance to that route. Now, if we can, by any reasonable national expenditure, enable the people of Canada to receive from the St. Lawrence system of canals that return which I believe they can receive, the country will sustain the administration in making that expenditure. When the deepening of the canals to fourteen feet was spoken of and that result was looked forward to, and many persons interested in traffic in the lower provinces felt that the day was coming when a large inter-provincial trade would follow, when our heavy products, particularly coal and iron, would be carried in large quantities to the upper provinces, and we would receive in return, by cheap water carriage, an enormous quantity of food stuffs, manufactured goods and the imported articles of commerce from Quebec and Ontario. It has been stated to me by a person well qualified to judge that, if the St. Lawrence system were equipped with necessary facilities to use the extreme depth of fourteen feet, heavy freight, such as coal or iron ore, could be carried from the port of Pictou, or some other convenient port in Nova Scotia, to Port Arthur at the head of the lake system of navigation, at a cost not exceeding one dollar a ton. If that could be realized, it would mean an enormous market opening up for the coal mines of the lower provinces, a market which at present, those coal mines do not occupy; for it is quite evident that, at present practically the whole coal supply of the province of Ontario and of the province of Quebec almost equally, comes from the United States.

We have in the lower provinces, particularly in the province of Nova Scotia, enormous supplies of coal which we are only too anxious to supply to our fellow citizens in the upper provinces from whom we buy so largely. The improvement of the business conducted over these canals would also have a great meaning for every prospective manufacturer of the lower provinces. One of those with which I have been connected was so handicapped, so hampered and embarrassed by the high cost of freight incurred in order to send the products of that business to the upper provinces where they found almost their entire market, that in the end they had to abandon the business as unprofitable. I am sure that nothing has been brought before the House this session of so much importance as this great question of interprovincial traffic which has been opened up by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. MacLaren), and I am sorry that we have not the time to discuss it more fully. But I am glad to express my entire good-will towards any effort that may be made to improve that traffic; and I hope at a very early day to see realized a system by which some of the ports in the lower provinces will be made shipping depots from which ocean steamers will go with great cargoes abroad, while these depots will be kept filled by a large fleet of river and lake carriers coming from the ports of the upper provinces, bringing grain and other products, and will then return to the west laden with our coal and other articles for which we can find a market up above. There are so many considerations belonging to this matter that it is idle to attempt to touch them at this time, and I have only spoken in order to express the deep interest of my constituents in this question, and at the same time to express my warm approbation of the able and exhaustive manner in which this subject has been dealt with by the hon. member for Perth.

Mr. REID (Grenville). At this late hour of the session, I do not intend to make any lengthy remarks. Still, I wish to mention one or two matters to the minister. In the first place, we all realize the great growth of the North-west, and are gratified at the enormous quantity of grain that is being forwarded from that country. That is a reason for deepening the canals. But we want large vessels, large Canadian vessels, on the upper lakes; and so long as it not definitely understood that the Minister of Public Works will not give to the Americans annually the right to use American vessels in bringing grain from one Canadian port to another Canadian port, I feel that the ship-building industry of Canada will not progress as it should.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That assurance has been given, and it has been carried out.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Now, will the country understand from this time forward that there never will be another privilege of that kind given by the government to carry grain from Port Arthur to Midland?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Prime Minister has stated from his place in the House what our policy was. Now that policy in the past has been violated on one occasion, at the request of Mr. Booth, in order to allow him to carry grain from one Canadian port to another Canadian port.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If that policy can be relied on, I believe the ship-building industry will increase, and we will have Canadian vessels to carry our own grain.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are ten new boats under construction now on the lakes.

Mr. REID (Grenville). If such is the case, I have no fear of Mr. Morgan and his syndicate ever absorbing Canadian vessels. There is in my opinion another cause that seriously interferes with grain going down the St. Lawrence. When grain reaches Port Colborne, it is there met with a tax of 15 cents a ton as a canal toll for passing through the Welland canal. Grain going to Buffalo goes through the Erie canal free. That 15 cents a ton is equal to about half a cent a bushel, or nearly so. In addition, as I mentioned in a previous session, the vessels have to lighten their cargo, if full loaded, and allow the railroad that lies along the Welland canal to carry the lighterage. If the government absorb that, so that a vessel could go from Duluth to Port Colborne with 100,000 bushels of grain, which she could take right through to Montreal, it would have a tendency to bring the grain through the St. Lawrence route, as the rates are often so high it does not pay to lighten. I have heard a great many vessel captains complain about the Welland canal tolls. They claim that the tolls on the grain are much larger than they are on iron ore or products of that kind. I have been asked to draw the attention of the government to that fact. If they would remove those taxes, I believe it would have a great tendency to bring more grain through the canal. Then again at the port of Montreal I understand there are government taxes, while grain entering New York has to pay no charges of any kind.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The charges in New York are very much greater than they are in Montreal—charges of all kinds.

Mr. REID (Grenville). Well, when the grain arrives there, is there any government charge of any kind ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The charges are higher than they are in Montreal.

Mr. REID (Grenville). I understood there were no government charges whatever in New York.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There are no government charges in Montreal, but there are harbour dues.

Mr. REID (Grenville). There are harbour dues in Montreal, but there are none in New York. That, they claim, interferes with the grain going through the St. Lawrence route. But the 15 cents a ton on grain passing through the Welland canal is a very serious affair. And when we take into consideration the insurance on the grain after it reaches Montreal, you will see that everything is against us. I have simply risen on this occasion to put before the government the request which I have received from a number of vessel men to see if something cannot be done to remove these tolls, and thus place them on an equal footing with those who use the Erie canal. I am glad to support this resolution of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. MacLaren). I think it is well that he has brought it before the House, for I desire to see more grain carried through the St. Lawrence route than is now carried.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon friend from Perth will withdraw the motion, I hope.

Mr. MACLAREN (Perth). I have no intention whatever of withdrawing the motion.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to inquire of the right hon. Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) if it would be possible to get the return brought down that was moved for a month or more ago respecting the number of passes issued on the Intercolonial Railway during the past twelve months.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). I have been trying since I was reminded of this matter to complete the return, and I will have it at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire of the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in regard to the resolutions of the various boards of trade which the right hon. gentleman promised would be laid on the Table of the House.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not forgotten it.

RAILWAY COMMISSION.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention to the House that I propose to ask that Friday afternoon and evening, as far as may be necessary, be devoted to the discussion of the Bill to create a railway commission.

NORTH-WEST TOWN SITES.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I wish to bring to the attention of the government and of the House a matter, which, though not so important as most of the subjects that hon. members from the west discuss, is still of very vital importance to the inhabitants of no less than four considerable towns in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. In the year 1882 an arrangement was made between the government, represented by the Department of the Interior, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for speculation in four western towns. These were the towns of Virden, Manitoba, Qu'Appelle, in Eastern Assiniboia, represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Douglas), Regina and Moosejaw in the district which I have the honour to represent. That arrangement was in the nature of a pool, the first part of the agreement being that each party, namely the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should contribute an equal portion of the lands necessary for these town sites. The arrangement is still in force. These four town sites were put into the hands of trustees to administer their affairs in the interests alike of the Canadian Pacific Railway and of the government. The government and the Canadian Pacific Railway were to participate equally in the net proceeds. I may say that of all the policies which were adopted by the late Conservative administration for the opening up of the Canadian North-west no single item or no part of the policy which that government adopted can be cited more appropriately than this as an illustration of the insanity—I think that the term is quite justifiable—which prevailed in the ideas of the hon. gentlemen who now occupy the opposition seats in this House in connection with what would be for the well being and progress of that country. It seemed to be taken for granted at the inception of the opening up of the North-west Territories that that vast country was a vast preserve which might be made profitable to the private pockets of friends of the Conservative party. I think this particular matter of which I speak, illustrates as well as any other item of policy that notorious fact. I may mention, promising not to speak for any great length of time, some of the peculiar transactions of the trustees in whose hands the affairs of these town sites were placed. First, perhaps I had better state who the trustees were. These gentlemen were Mr. R. B. Angus, Sir Donald A. Smith, Mr. E. B. Osler, and Mr. W. B. Scarth. The affairs of these town sites are still in the hands of these gentlemen. They conducted business of various sorts. On some occasions they had transactions with the government, on other occasions they had transactions with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I may mention just a couple of instances which I may say were brought to light through the investigations made by a commission which was appointed two years ago by the government to inquire into the affairs of these town sites. I mention these instances to show the character of the transactions which the trustees thought proper to enter into. In one case they sold part of a town site to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Some time subsequent to the year 1897 the trustees sold part of the town site of Moosejaw to the Canadian Pacific Railway, 33 acres in extent, at the price of $3 per acre. When the commissioners who were appointed two years ago to make an investigation into the affairs of these town sites, took evidence at Moosejaw they received the evidence of the trustees' own agent in the town to the effect that this land which had been sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway for $3 per acre, was in reality worth $50 per acre. This was evidence tendered by the agent of the trustees. There was also a transaction in Regina in connection with a building. In the early days the trustees erected a brick veneered building in Regina at a cost of $15,000. They rented that building for a number of years to the government, and in all the government paid them a rental of $17,435. Later still the trustees sold the building to the government and the government paid them $16,000, so that in all the trustees received from the government $33,435 for the building whose first cost in the early days, at a time when building was very expensive in that country, was only $15,000. The House will at once recognize that there was a material difference in the nature of the business transacted with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the business transacted with the government. Another most peculiar item of their business which was brought to light by the investigation of the commissioners was in connection with the town site of Virden. The arrangement made between the government and the company was that an equal portion of land for each town site should be contributed by each. When the town site of Virden was located, there was a gentleman named Mr. T. M. Daly who entered for half a section of the land. Mr. Daly, as probably the House is well aware, was a very prominent member of the Conservative party, and he was later on Minister of the Interior in the Conservative government. Another quarter section of the land which afterwards formed that town site had been entered for by a lady named Mrs. Willis. The government cancelled the entry of Mrs. Willis, and thereby came into possession of her quarter section. The government also was the possessor of the fourth quarter section, and the other two quarter sections had been entered for by Mr. Daly. Mr. Daly had not commenced his homestead duties, and the records of the department show that he voluntarily abandoned his entry, but when the commissioners, two years ago made their investigation, they found that an amount of $6,400 had been paid to Mr. Daly on account of this half section of land entered for by him, but which he had subsequently abandoned as far as the records in the Interior Department disclose. A further fact disclosed was, that, notwithstanding that the government had contributed the other half of the town site, the quarter section that had been entered for by Mrs. Willis, which had been cancelled, and the quarter section which the government always owned, they were charged in the books of the town site trustees with half of this $6,400 which had been paid to Mr. Daly.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In what year was the entry made by Mr. Daly ?

Mr. SCOTT. I will give that information later. I do not bring up this matter for the purpose of entering into any personal or political recriminations, but to urge that the people of these four towns have laboured under a very serious handicap for years on account of this town site arrangement, by reason of an exemption from taxation enjoyed by the trustees. The government hold one-half interest and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company held only in reality a quarter interest. It will be necessary for me to explain that before the arrangement was actually made between the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had made a prior arrangement with a company called the North-west Land Company, and this latter company was brought in and made a party in this town site arrangement. Since 1882, when these town sites were constituted, the position has been that the government owned one-half interest in the net proceeds of these town sites, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having one-quarter interest, and the North-west Land Company the other quarter interest. The interest of the government was exempt from taxation, and under the terms of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract of 1881, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company contended that their quarter interest was also exempt from taxation. I do not think the matter went so far as a law suit, but after considerable negotiations, an arrangement was made—and the municipalities were led to believe that they were compelled to agree to the arrangement—by which only one-quarter of the taxes should be collected by the municipalities from the trustees. For nearly twenty years, on a considerable portion of each of these four town sites, the municipalities have been able to collect only one-quarter of the amount of taxes which should properly have been paid. This is the phase of the question which I have risen chiefly to bring to the attention of the government and of the House. In the year 1894 the right hon. leader of the government visited the North-west, and this town site matter was brought to his attention, and speaking at Moosejaw upon his responsibility as the leader of a great party in this country, he said :

> In his opinion it was an improper thing for the government to be holding property in this way for speculative purposes to the detriment of municipalities.

The right hon. gentleman has now been leader of the government of Canada since 1896, and the people of these towns are thinking that it is time that the pledge which in effect he gave in the town of Moosejaw in 1894, should be implemented by action. I may state that for a considerable length of time past efforts have been made by the Minister of the Interior in the direction, as we have understood it, of relieving these municipalities from the handicap which they labour under, and I believe it was the efforts which the minister was making which led to the appointment of this commission two years ago to inquire into the affairs of the town sites trust, because certain difficulties had been encountered in the way of giving the relief which is necessary. I am given to understand that within recent weeks an arrangement has been practically entered into by the government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the division of the property of these town sites, by which an equal division shall be made in each town, the Canadian Pacific Railway accepting one-half and the government assuming control and possession of the other half. I am very glad to know that the arrangement is likely to be very shortly completed, but what I want to do this afternoon is to urge upon the government to, at the earliest possible moment, dispossess themselves of this property so that the property may become liable to the ordinary taxation. I go further, and I urge that it would be only fair and reasonable, in place of putting the property up at auction and thereby tending to some extent to depreciate, for the time being at least, the value of this property itself and of all the other property in these towns; it would be only fair and reasonable for the government to hand over to these municipalities the half portion which comes to the government in the division. As a reason for this request, I would point out that the total receipts of the trustees from these town sites up to the present time have been: in the case of Regina, $254,485.92, and in the case of Moosejaw, $114,606.63. These amounts were the net proceeds to the trustees from two of the four towns. The government have received from these four town sites no less sum a than $141,200. There is still due to the government from the trustees—or at least there was when the commissioners made their report, and so far as I know this amount has not been paid since, although it may have been paid without my knowledge—there was still due to the government when the commissioners made their report a sum of $46,855.99. This was some $30,000 more than was to the credit of the government on the trustees books, but the commissioners found that some of the bookkeeping of the trustees was very peculiar, and they stated in their report that there should be paid to the government by the trustees about $30,000 more than was credited to the government on the books. In view of the fact that these municipalities have been handicapped and have been losing very considerable amounts through the peculiar position in which a great part of the property within them was placed. I think it is only fair that their request be granted now, and that the government's portion of these town sites should be handed over to the municipalities. In the case of Regina, the amount of taxes which should have been paid by the trustees in these years is $56,054.60. The amount of taxes which was actually paid is only $14,013.65, leaving a loss to the town of $42,040.95. It is therefore only reasonable and fair that the government should put these municipalities in the possession of this property, rather than to throw the whole property on the market by auction sale. But, however, the property may be disposed of, I would urge most strongly on the government and on the House the rightfulness of the government becoming dispossessed of their property in these towns at the earliest possible moment, so that the handicap against the towns which for nearly twenty years has prevailed, shall be removed at last.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, personally I have no thought one way or the other whether it would be better for the government to transfer these town sites to the municipalities or to keep them; but I must deal very shortly with some of the remarks made by the hon. member. When this question was brought up in the House two or three years ago, I thought I answered the accusation which was made against the trustees as fairly and squarely as any man could expect who asked for an explanation. I stated at that time, and I state again, that the report which the commissioners brought in was a partisan report, got up for a particular purpose, a report which the trustees absolutely contradicted; and I am rather surprised that any one should get up in this House and by implication say that Lord Strathcona, Mr. Angus, Mr. Scarth and myself had rendered false returns to the government, had cooked accounts and had been guilty of doubtful book-keeping. I do not think that statement requires a contradiction from me in this House or anywhere. With regard to these town sites or the administration of them, I make the statement that there has never been a fund in Canada administered as well, as faithfully, as honestly, in the interest of the trust and for the benefit of the country. Charges were made as to the proper distribution of certain accounts, as to the power of the trustees to expend money for building purposes, and to allot a part of the land for railway purposes or for government purposes. In that connection—I am speaking from memory, not having the figures before me—the government received in the proportion of two to one in round figures as against the railway company. The trustees acted entirely within the rights of the trust, and no action was done by the trustees except under the conditions imposed by the trust. They were empowered to expend money for the development and for the benefit of the towns. For many years past the trustees have endeavoured to get themselves freed from further participation in the matter; but the government put every check and obstacle in their way to prevent a division of these town sites. When the report of the commission, which I say was an absolutely partisan report, was brought in, making the claim that the trustees were debtors to the government to the amount of $30,000 or $40,000, because of certain expenditures they had made under the trust, the trustees at once demanded that the government should take action against them in court to recover that money. The trustees from that day to this have endeavoured to have that matter brought to an issue, but have not been able to do so, and an hon. member from the North-west now accuses these gentlemen of having maladministered the trust, although the government have refused to bring an action, and there is no possible means by which the trustees can shake themselves free of the matter, so as to be in a position to show that the report of this commission was false and partisan, and was got up for a special purpose. That commission expected to find maladministration, but they were unable to find any; and the government have failed to bring the question to an issue. The trustees of that fund handled property to the extent, if my recollection serves me rightly, of between one million and one million and a half dollars; and during the time of the sales no member of that trust, so far as I recollect, had anything to do with the government. I was not at that time a member of parliament; I was simply a private individual acting as a trustee. From the inception of the trust to this day no trustee has been paid a single dollar of commission, nor one dollar for travelling expenses or as fees for attending meetings or for any other purpose, with the exception, as I think I explained to the House two years ago, that I drew $250 or $500 for the purpose of giving bonuses to some of the clerks in the office of the trustees when they were dismissed or when the office was removed from Toronto to Winnipeg. I do not mind having these things ventilated in court if a charge is laid or a claim is made; but I do certainly object to a member getting up in this House and making statements which leave the impression on the House, whether intentionally or not, that there was wrong-doing on the part of the trustees. I say that the government, either wilfully or through absolute neglect, have refused to bring the matter to an issue in court. Each of the four trustees has done his best, both by himself and through his solicitors, to get the matter brought to an issue. I do not wish to speak any further on the subject, but I do object to statements of this sort being made in the House when the conditions should be thoroughly known, and I think it is entirely improper that any member of this House should make accusations reflecting upon the character of Lord Strathcona and Mr. R. B. Angus, when they are not here to answer for themselves. For myself, I am ready to answer anything.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The question as to whether the trustees did or did not improperly charge any money to the government is a question that cannot be settled by statements on the floor of this House, but has to be settled in the ordinary way through the courts; and the department have taken steps to have it settled in that way. The department found some time ago that it was necessary to have an investigation of the accounts of this trust, and a commission was issued for that purpose. The commission consisted of E. F. Stephenson, inspector of Dominion lands agents, and Mr. Smart, the Deputy Minister of the Interior. They made a report, as has been stated by my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott). The report showed that, in the opinion of the commissioners, a considerable sum, I think about $30,000, had been improperly charged to the government. The trustees disputed this finding of the commission. The action taken by the department has been this: Pending the settlement of the dispute, as to this alleged improper charge, we have entered into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Canada North-west Land Company, by which the town lots which are still unsold have been divided. Within the past few weeks the Land Commissioner of the government and an officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, acting for the other party, have made a division of the lots, and there only remains to be settled the question as to the final closing of the accounts between the trustees and the government. The Department of Justice has been instructed to take action for the purpose of having this matter settled in court. I presume that the action is now pending. As to the difficulties under which the corporations have laboured, I sympathize with the view of my hon. friend at least to this extent, that I do not think the towns should be left with such a considerable portion of their area not liable to taxation; and I have intimated to him that steps will be taken to bring the government's interest in the town sites to an end. Whether that will be done by disposing of the lots by auction or otherwise I am not in a position to say; but I think the government should not hold simply for speculative purposes a considerable area of a town, as it imposes an undue and unfair burden on the town population. My hon. friend has urged very strongly that this amount ought to be contributed by the government to the town corporation as a free gift in return for the exemption from taxes during the past year. I have not been able to give an affirmative answer to that proposition, and I cannot say what decision the government will arrive at, but the question will be taken up and disposed of in a very short time. The division of the town lots between the commissioner of the company and the commissioner of the government, has only taken place within the last few weeks, and at this period of the session we are unable to deal with it; but as soon as the session is over, and I have sufficient time to look into the matter, the whole transaction will be closed up.

Mr. SCOTT. In answer to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart), I may say that the payment was made Mr. Daly on February 12th, 1884. I wish just to give a word of personal explanation with regard to what the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler) has said concerning my action in bringing this matter to the attention of the House in the way I have done. Every statement I made was made upon the basis of the report of the commissioners, and so far as I have been able to judge, from what my hon. friend has said this afternoon, he has not attempted to deny a single thing I said. He made a statement at considerable length also last year, in which he complained that the report by the commissioners had been spread broadcast through the papers, but he did not attempt to deny a single fact stated by the commission.

Mr. OSLER. I denied the findings absolutely. I deny them all again to-day. They are findings that would not be affirmed by any court, but we cannot get that matter brought into court. I say that the findings are wrong. So far from the trust being indebted to the government, it will be found by any court in the land or any arbitration—and the trustees are willing to leave it to any court or arbitration—that the government is indebted to the trust for a much larger sum than they claim the trust is indebted to them. I deny every statement made in the report.

Mr. SCOTT. That is certainly a broad, wide and specific denial.

Mr. OSLER. If I could make it any broader or wider or more specific in words, I would do it.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

PRIVATE BILLS.

GEORGIAN BAY CANAL.

On the Order being called for :

Third reading, Bill (No. 107), respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—Mr. Belcourt.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I beg to move :

That the order for third reading of Bill No. 107 be discharged and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that the following clause be added to the Bill :

The company shall not exercise its power under this Act in respect to the section from Lake Nipissing to the Georgian Bay, otherwise called the French river section, until and unless an order of the Governor in Council shall pass authorizing the same.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I might say that if we were not renewing a charter I would not vote for the Bill. I feel that in granting charters we should be very careful indeed, especially when we have to deal with our rivers and waterways. The French river and Lake Nipissing can no more be called a canal than I may be called the Pope or the King of England. The French river is essentially a navigable river, a deep waterway. Again, if parliament had not granted a charter to people who have advertised that great waterway, I would not feel inclined to-day to grant this charter, but as parliament many years ago has granted the charter and as there are, to a certain extent, vested rights, I think it is only fair that the charter should be renewed. On the other hand, the promoters themselves recognize and admit that the French river is not in the same position at all as the other parts covered by the charter. The Mattawa and Ottawa rivers must be canalized in certain parts if we want to have a waterway twenty feet deep to the St. Lawrence. I would not undertake to say that that depth of water can be easily got from Lake Nipissing down to the city of Montreal. I have not the necessary information to form a correct opinion; my department has no survey of the Mattawa and of the Ottawa rivers. I have, however, a complete and careful survey of the French river. I have plans prepared, and if parliament made up its mind to grant a contract there would be very little to be done before having tenders called for. I repeat that the French river is essentially a navigable river, and that is the reason why I have asked the promoters of the Bill to consent to the amendment or addition which I have just suggested. I feel that this country must keep the control of that waterway. Of course, nothing can be done by any department of state without the consent of parliament. This clause that I am suggesting does not pledge us to anything; it gives us only more freedom. If the Governor General in Council later on believes that the company which is seeking for the renewal of their charter offers sufficient guarantees to go on with the whole work, an Order in Council will decide. If not, well, we might later on come to the House and ask for the amount necessary to improve the French river so as to make it a waterway twenty feet deep. I will not discuss the features of that work to-night, because we have discussed it already on many occasions, and I believe this would not be the time to offer any lengthy discussion of it. Before I take my seat, let me thank those who have done the very useful work of calling public attention to that magnificent waterway. I confess that I did not know anything about it before I read all the prospectuses, all the articles and pamphlets published by the Georgian Bay Canal Company. They deserve consideration at our hands, great consideration at our hands, and that is the main reason why I made up my mind—speaking for myself—to consent to the renewal of their charter. It is said that the company can find the money necessary to carry out the work they have in hand, namely, to canalize and improve the Mattawa and the Ottawa rivers, without asking any grant of public money. I hope it is the case. I am not sure about it though, but I hope it is the case. If it is the case, and if we are not called upon to give them any guarantee or any subsidy, well, I suppose, we can afford to let them go on with the work.

Mr. SPROULE. If this waterway is ever improved, so as to make it one of the great highways of commerce and to become a competing line with the other highways both in our own and the neighbouring country, it can only be successfully accomplished by having no toll gates on the route. The fact that tolls are contemplated is, to my mind, one of the very strongest objections to allowing any private company to take over that waterway and build the canal. There is no doubt that if it ever becomes half as useful as the promoters of this Bill tell the public it will become, it is desirable that the government should build it. The probability of a company building it without any guarantee or bonus or assistance from the government seems to me to be extremely problematical. So far as it goes, I think this amendment is in the right direction, namely, to hold under the control of the government at least a portion of the route, and it would be much more agreeable to my views if they held the whole of it. I confess that there is a great deal in what the Minister of Public Works has said. This company has, in a measure, some vested rights, because they have been working at it for a long time, and they have spent a good deal of money on it. However, I do not think that even that should be a justification for a private company holding any one of the great waterways of commerce.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let my hon. friend remember that if these gentlemen go on with the work, it will be always our right to take possession of the work by only paying the amount that will have been actually spent; so there is no great danger after all.

Mr. SPROULE. But we know how these accounts are usually made up when the government comes to take them over.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no immediate danger, I think.

Mr. BELCOURT. As being in charge of the Bill I wish to say that the gentlemen who asked me to place the Bill before the House have instructed me to consent to the amendment proposed by the Minister of Public Works. In doing so, I wish to say that I have heard with considerable satisfaction the opinions expressed by the Minister of Public Works. I cannot help indulging in a little self-congratulation in the matter. I look back four years to the time when our good friend, Mr. Poupore, who so ably represented the county of Pontiac and myself brought this subject to the attention of the House. But it is not so much for the purpose of congratulating Mr. Poupore and myself that I rise, as to express the great satisfaction and pleasure that I feel in seeing the progress which this project has made since 1898. I am delighted to see that those who have charge of the affairs of this country have realized the tremendous, I might almost say the vital importance and necessity of this great highway. The tremendous development which has taken place in the North-west and Canada generally has made that route an absolute necessity and one which in importance, I think, does not take second place even to the Canadian Pacific Railway—

Mr. CLARKE. Oh, oh.

Mr. BELCOURT. I know that my hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) does not agree with me, but I think the time is not far distant when that hon. gentleman himself will accept that view. I hope the government will take the matter into very serious contemplation ; and, if they are not prepared to allow this company to go on and build the canal, they will themselves, at an early day, enter upon the construction of it.

Mr. E. B. OSLER (West Toronto). I am sorry that I came in too late to hear the first part of this discussion. I understand that the object of this Bill is to give a private corporation power to make a waterway from the French river to Montreal. While I am in favour of developing our canal system and of spending public money in carrying out public works, I am opposed to granting to a private company the right of control over waterways. We have before us great problems, but none I think greater than the problem of providing means of transport for the increasing produce of the west to the seaboard. We are spending enormous sums of money—from my point of view we are throwing away enormous sums on useless works—but, while I do not approve of some of the expenditures that are being made, I do believe that the government ought to develop to the fullest extent our transportation system. If the Georgian Bay canal can be made part of our waterway system, if with any reasonable expenditure of money it can be made so successful that by it the grain of the North-west can be carried to the seaboard more cheaply than by rail or by the present waterways, I am in favour of it being made a national work. So far as I know, there is not before the country to-day information showing what that undertaking will cost.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If my hon. friend (Mr. Osler) will allow me, I would like to say that I am in a position to state that the improvement of the French river so as to make it a twenty-foot ship waterway from Georgian Bay to Lake Nipissing would not cost more than $5,000,000, and I would expect to carry it out for less. I have accurate plans of the whole work.

Mr. OSLER. And how about the other end of the work ?

Mr. BELCOURT.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not know about that.

Mr. BELL. Would that $5,000,000 complete the route to North Bay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. North Bay is on Lake Nipissing. Yes, that would build it to North Bay or to some other point on Lake Nipissing.

Mr. OSLER. As I say, I was not here at the opening of this discussion. But I understood that this was a Bill covering the whole system from Georgian Bay to the St. Lawrence at or near Montreal, and that it is proposed to hand over the control of that waterway to a company. I am against any private company controlling that waterway or any part of it. If it is to be a waterway developed in the interest of Canada the government should control it. Possibly it is an undertaking that the country should assume, but I believe we have not before us official records of the cost.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Yes we have.

Mr. OSLER. We have records of long ago.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. No, last year.

Mr. OSLER. But what I wish to say and I say it without reserve, is that the waterways of the country should not be allowed to pass into private hands. Let the railways be privately owned if you like. Railways can be built by anybody. But it is not so with waterways, they are nature's courses through the country. You can duplicate a railway but—

Mr. BELCOURT. We will bring this canal around by Toronto and then it will be all right.

Mr. OSLER. I think it is a great compliment to my hon. friends from Toronto and myself that whenever we propose anything in the public interest we are taunted with being moved by consideration for the interests of Toronto. I deny that I represent the interests of Toronto alone or that my views are influenced by any consideration but that of the public interest.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER. Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. OSLER. I deny that I have ever voted or spoken in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway in this House. I am astonished that members of this House, and even ministers of the Crown, lacking any other answer to what I have said at different times, should so often reply with the taunt : Oh, you speak as you do because you belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway company. It shows but a poor conception of their position and duties as members of this House that they cannot conceive of a man taking an independent position on this floor, that they cannot conceive of a member of this House sinking his individual interest in the interest of the country. I deny for my part, that I am not able to sink my own interests if they conflict with the interests of the country. And I defy any member of this House to point to a speech or vote, or canvass of mine—I have never canvassed a member of this House for any vote—that was in the interests of any corporation or any section. It is my right to object to this Bill or any other that comes up in this House. If I make arguments that are not convincing that is my fault or it is due to the weakness of my case. But I have the right to my opinion and the right to state it without being taunted with speaking in the interests of any corporation. The members of this House, I think unanimously recognize that the transportation question is the one question before us in Canada to-day. My colleagues from Toronto and I are taunted with selfishness and with consideration only for Toronto's interests. Has there been a voice raised from any member from Toronto against the expenditure of money in Montreal harbour or the Quebec harbour, or for the purpose of deepening the St. Lawrence channel? Every member from the west has held up both hands for the development of a seaport. I agree that the most important question before the House and the people to-day is the transportation question. So far as the west and local conditions in the west are concerned that problem will take care of itself. But, as we near the seaboard, the government must take that harbour in hand. When we reach Montreal or Quebec, or whatever port it may be, the government must take charge of this problem.

No proposition to increase the transportation facilities on the St. Lawrence will be voted down by any member from the west. But what I say in connection with this Bill and I feel it sincerely, is that no public waterway in this country should be allowed to fall into the hands of a private corporation. This waterway that is now under discussion is more than a mere waterway, it means control of perhaps the greatest electric power that we have on this continent. The private corporation who obtains control of the canal, controls by virtue of that charter the water power all along that route. Now, in view of the development of electrical power and the possibilities that are before us, who can say what that power will be worth in ten years? The cheapness of production is dependent altogether upon the cheapness of our water power. If that water power gets into the hands of private individuals they will control the cost of production in this country, and they will control the transportation problem.

I do not think that any member of the government, any member on that side of the House, will say that our waterway transportation is satisfactory to-day. It is very unsatisfactory. We complain of want of shipping; we complain of want of proper transportation facilities. I can tell this House that there is capital in abundance and to spare to build every vessel that is wanted to take control of Canadian shipping. Men are ready and willing to put their money into this business, and all that is wanted is a proper channel to transport our grain, the production of which is sure to increase enormously from year to year. Our grain production will shortly be such as we have at present no conception of. Let me give an illustration. I have a letter from a gentleman from Scotland who was in the capital a few weeks ago. He went to the North-west and travelled over the Calgary and Edmonton Railway. He writes a letter to his board of directors in Great Britain, of which he sent me a copy, and in which he says that from Calgary north to Edmonton, for thirty miles on each side of that road, there is more good agricultural land than there is in all Scotland. Now when you have a small stretch of country of which that can be said, what is going to be the production of that country in ten years? What strikes me in this House is that when important Bills like this are before us, as a rule we regard them from the point of view of to-day, we are not looking forward five years, much less ten years. We are granting charters giving control of our public waterways, in this case canal privileges the importance of which not one member of the House realizes, handing over to this company this enormous privilege, equivalent to a tax of perhaps many cents a bushel on all the grain that is grown in the North-west for twenty years. Twenty years is a very short time in the life of a nation, a nation as we are just beginning to develop our resources. I for one, Mr. Chairman, will oppose to the best of my ability the granting of charters such as this, giving into private hands the control of what must be eventually an enormously valuable public franchise.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I share to a large extent the views just expressed by my hon. friend. I have stated those views on several occasions, here and elsewhere. I have said we should not hand over our waterways and our rivers to any private corporation. This vast Dominion is wide, and there is plenty of land for railways. But there are not many Ottawa rivers, there are not many French rivers. The facts of this case have to be taken into consideration. In 1894 parliament granted a charter to the Georgian Bay Canal Company, which charter was renewed in 1898. One of the clauses of the charter granted in 1894 reads as follows:

Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, may at any time assume the possession and property of the said canals and works, and of all the rights and privileges and advantages of the company, all of which shall after such assumption be vested in Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, on giving to the company one week's notice thereof and on paying to the company the value of the same, to be fixed by three arbitrators, or the majority of them, one to be chosen by the government, another by the company and a third arbitrator by the two arbitrators.

Now, if I had not found this clause in that charter I would not for a moment have consented to any renewal of the charter. But this clause being here, the charter having been renewed twice, the company having made great efforts to advertise the project and consented to give up their rights as to the French river section, I think that, as my hon. friend as said, we are moving in the right direction.

Mr. CLARKE. How are they going to get out from the Georgian Bay ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By the clause that has been added the company has no right whatever on the French river except upon Order in Council. The French river does not form part of the Bill to-day. Now the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Osler) says we must have control of the rates, that if the Ottawa and Mattawa part of the scheme fall into the hands of a private corporation we will not have control of the rates. Let me tell him that we have control of the rates by this Bill to a certain extent, and let me remind him that the government have in their hands the French river part of the scheme. We are altogether masters of the situation. My hon. friend knows better than any one else in the House perhaps that we must not rely on waterways only. I for one have the greatest confidence in railways and waterways combined. For instance, Buffalo is the gateway of the great system of American railways leading to the American ports. Midland, North Bay, Collingwood, Owen Sound and other ports will be reservoirs of trade. I have no doubt whatever, speaking after giving the question the most careful consideration, that the very moment the government announce that the French river will be improved so as to have a depth of 20 feet, there will be at least twenty-five or thirty large lake boats built immediately. There is no doubt as to that. I may add more. The Grand Trunk Railway have fully made up their minds to settle in Midland and in Montreal. This means an immediate and large addition to their carrying capacity on the lakes. The Grand Trunk Railway will settle in Midland to a very large extent. That does not mean that they will not carry trade elsewhere. But it has been suggested that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway might perhaps use part of the road from Midland to Peterborough so that the two great railways might combine their efforts to take down to the St. Lawrence as much freight as they possibly can.

Now my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Osler), who has just taken his seat, is right when he says that we have not perhaps a right conception of the immense development in store for us. Last year our crop in the North-west Territories amounted to 100,000,000 bushels of grain. The French river and the ports of the Georgian Bay will in future not only handle the Canadian trade, but the American trade. We have the shortest route ; we have only to make it the best to get the immense quantity of trade flowing down the great St. Lawrence route. My hon. friend is annoyed, and perhaps rightly so, because he is taunted, not in a malicious manner, with being a Canadian Pacific Railway man. Let me tell him that it happens often to me to be taunted in the same way. Every time I have to stand by a waterway or a railway that is connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway I am called a Canadian Pacific Railway man. I am not ashamed of the appellation, not by any means. I was a newspaper man in the Conservative party ranks, and I may say that when that great scheme was first initiated——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am not more ashamed of that than I am of being called a Canadian Pacific Railway man. I am perfectly prepared to stand by my past here, and my past in the Conservative party, as I am prepared to stand by what I am doing now. I am often taunted with being a Canadian Pacific Railway man. I believe no greater project has ever been carried out than the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I believe that to-day we must stand by our Canadian railways and we must stand by them to the last, in the face of the organization of these great American interests. I have stated on several occasions, and I say it again, that if the hon. Minister of Finance were in a position to invest in Canadian Pacific Railway bonds at 4 per cent interest $20,000,000 or $25,000,000 of Canadian money, if we could get it for less than 3 per cent, it would be a first class investment, because it would make this country secure the control of that great national highway. I have said more than I intended. I did not expect to say so much. However, I feel that we should move in the right direction.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has not dealt with the crucial point.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is it ?

Mr. CLARKE. As to the advisability of allowing any encouragement to be given by parliament to a private company to engage in what will be a great national enterprise in connection with one of our public waterways passing right through the heart of the country. I think it would be a very great mistake.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I thought I had dealt with that.

Mr. CLARKE. No.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I believe I have. A charter was granted in 1894 by a former parliament and it was renewed in 1898 by a former parliament. Now, we except from the charter part of that scheme which is more at hand, if I may speak in that way, because, please not to forget that with an expenditure of less than $5,000,000 we will be in the position to make a deep waterway from the Georgian Bay to Lake Nipissing. As to the other part, if the company go on with their work, and if parliament should make up its mind that it is the duty of the country to take possession of the work, clause 43 of the Act gives it power to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. Minister of Public Works say how he could control the rates by having control of the French river, because this canal would only go to Lake Nipissing on the one hand and to Montreal on the other, and it would have no connection directly with the Georgian Bay.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There will be nothing easier than to have control of the rates. Suppose that we improve the French river from Georgian bay to Lake Nipissing. Then, we will make connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other railway that may be constructed there. There are only 317 nautical miles from Montreal to Lake Nipissing. People who say that the rates will be in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be mistaken. If the Canadian Pacific Railway take advantage of their position, nothing would be easier than to build another railway. I might add that the Grand Trunk Railway has also a branch line from Callander to the city of Toronto, and in my opinion no other city, except Montreal, perhaps, would benefit more by the improvement of the French river than the city of Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. minister misunderstood me. What I referred to was the control of rates on the canal, not the ordinary freight rates—the tolls that may be imposed upon tonnage passing through the canal.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. minister has not dealt with a most important feature to which reference was made by the hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Osler). Enormous power privileges would be developed by the construction of that waterway, and if they become possessed by the company, it may be necessary in a few years that they shall be acquired by the government.

Mr. FRASER. I think that when a company are ready to put $70,000,000 or $80,000,000 into the country without the government being called upon to do the work, even if it does include the water power, we ought not to say anything against it. If this country is not ready now to go into that project, and I think myself it is rather problematical, we should not discourage capitalists from undertaking the work. Even hon. members opposite, who are in favour of the development of these great waterways, as we all are, I think, would be rather staggered if it were proposed that the country should put $80,000,000 into this project. For myself, I am rather inclined to come to the conclusion that after all the railway problem in this country will discount every other question. I would not stop capitalists from coming in and making use of our waterways and water powers, and investing $70,000,000 or $80,000,000 in developing them. Is the country or is the government any the poorer because our undeveloped water powers are utilized? Is Canada any poorer because the power at Niagara Falls is being developed? I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Clarke) will not oppose a proposition which will result in the introduction of capital into the country.

Mr. CLARKE. There is no desire on my part to prevent the introduction of capital to develop the public works of this country, but this is a most important artery of communication, one of the great natural highways from Montreal to the Georgian Bay, and the question has been raised whether it is advisable in the public interest to allow a private company to get possession of privileges that it may cost an enormous sum to purchase in a few years from now. If that power can be developed with advantage to the people at large why should it not be developed in a year or two and owned by the government for the benefit of the people of Canada instead of allowing it to be developed by a private company?

Mr. BELCOURT. Does not my hon. friend know that all the water powers that he speaks of are under the control of the provincial parliament? These water powers are not under our jurisdiction at all.

Mr. CLARKE If you incorporate this canal company the project becomes a work under the control and authority of the parliament of Canada.

Mr. FRASER. You cannot take rights away from a local legislature.

Mr. CLARKE. There are no representatives in this House from any part of the Dominion of Canada who will more cordially co-operate with the government in any scheme of national transportation than the representatives from Toronto. None whatever.

An hon. MEMBER. Glad to hear it.

Mr. CLARKE. If the hon. gentleman had listened attentively to the sentiments expressed by the members for Toronto during the past five or six years, he would have been convinced of that fact long ago.

An hon. MEMBER. Let the Bill pass.

Mr. CLARKE. Before it passes, I wish to express my opinion, and it is this, that this country is big enough and wealthy enough to undertake that work and complete it as soon as necessary, if it be a national work, and no charter should be given to private capitalists for the purpose of constructing a work absolutely essential to the future prosperity of this country. It may be said that by some provision of the Bill the government may take over the work in ten or fifteen years from now. But to do so will eventually necessitate a much larger expenditure than if the work were undertaken by the government now, and carried to completion at the earliest possible moment.

Bill, as amended, reported, read the third time and passed.

MONTREAL SUBWAY COMPANY.

House in committee on Bill (No. 98) to incorporate the Montreal Subway Company. —Mr. McCarthy.

On section 8,

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Before this clause is adopted, I would like to say a word or two. We have a charter for the construction of a bridge, which has been several years on our statute-book, but the bridge never materialized. A few months ago several notices were published in the newspapers for charters for three bridges. Two of those charters are gone, and we all remember the manner in which the last charter was doomed. I have no doubt that the population of the city of Montreal and of the south shore would rather have a bridge than a subway. I was a little diffident regarding that subway, but as there is no probability of any bridge being constructed, I did not feel justified in opposing the granting of a charter for this subway. Of course, it is a new departure. Will it be feasible to carry vehicles and so on in such a subway ? The promoters of the Bill say that it will. In the committee yesterday I asked for a short delay so as to be able to consult some of the eminent financiers whose names appear on the Bill. I met one or two of them to-day, and they told me—especially Senator Mackay—that they fully expected that the scheme could be financed without the help of the government of Canada. I read to-day an interview in the Montreal papers to the same effect with Mr. Hogg, in which he says that the scheme is sure of being financed without any trouble whatever. That will be a new departure, because in the past we have been in the habit of giving pretty large subsidies to undertakings of this kind, but the moment we find capitalists prepared to take such a strong stand, who have such confidence in the development of the country, especially of the city of Montreal, as to be able to tell us that they are prepared to go on with such a work without asking anything of the government, I have not a word to say against it, but wish them success, prosperity and happiness in their undertaking.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in the understanding, from the explanation of the hon. Minister of Public Works, that this is intended to be a traffic subway as well as for railways ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There will be two subways—one for the railroads and another one for vehicles. The vehicles will be carried, I understand, on electric cars.

Mr. SPROULE. If my memory is correct, I do not recollect any provision in the Bill for control by the government of traffic rates.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will see that when the other clauses are read.

Mr. OSLER. The hon. Minister of Public Works has often objected to our accepting newspaper reports as authority. If the report to which he refers to is true, it is very important. What grounds have we for supposing that that newspaper report is more correct than others.

On section 20, subsection (b) :

If the company fails to bona fide expend upon its undertaking within nine months after the approval of said plans and specifications a sum not less than $100,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The sum of $100,000 to be expended within nine months is a very small sum for such a large undertaking.

Mr. OSLER. It was understood in the committee that that was to be expended on actual work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move that it be changed to $200,000 in six months.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is considerable objection to passing an amendment in this way after the Bill has been thoroughly considered in the Railway Committee. At first $50,000 was thought to be sufficient, then it was proposed that $100,000 should be expended in twelve months, and after considerable discussion a compromise was arrived at by making it $100,000 in nine months. The Minister of Public Works had left the committee before that. The government have adopted the principle that when a matter has been thoroughly discussed before the committee the committee's recommendation shall be adopted. Why should a different course be pursued in this instance? The minister says that he is satisfied with the financial ability of the company, and when these men are willing to deposit $50,000 and to spend $100,000 in nine months putting their own money in the enterprise without asking any subsidy from the government I submit that they should not be asked for more than is asked from any other company. It seems to me that to ask the committee at this stage to amend what the committee has reported is not in accordance with precedent or with the policy of the government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have no intention to be unfair, far from it. No doubt an enterprise of this kind should only be put in the hands of strong men, and I saw Senator Mackay this afternoon, before making up my mind as to whether I would agree to this Bill or not. He told me that he expected the whole thing would be financed without any help from the government. Under the circumstances, I did not want to be too exacting. We have been used to so much charter trafficking in Montreal, that I feel the necessity of being careful. In the committee yesterday I inquired whether some of those gentlemen, whose names were on the Bill had not lent their names, for we have found that men just as great have lent their names elsewhere. Every day during the last week or so we have been reading what has happened in New York, and we must provide against a recurrence of anything of the kind, but I do not want to compare the men whose names are on this Bill with those who have been mentioned in New York.

Mr. BALL. It is provided that $100,000 must be spent on the construction within a certain time?

Mr. OSLER. It was stated in the Railway Committee, and agreed to, that $100,000 would be spent bona fide on the construction.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is agreed to, and any words which may be inserted to that effect would be satisfactory.

Mr. OSLER. As that clause is worded, the money may be spent on fees or commissions or charges of that kind, and not on construction work at all, and you will be locking this enterprise up in the hands of these men for five years without compelling them to do a day's work on it during that time.

Mr. HENDERSON. The amendment ought to be read to the committee so that the committee may know that the words ordered to be inserted by the Railway Committee are actually inserted in the Bill. I do not know how it is, but this is not the first instance we have had of Bills reported by the Railway Committee coming before this House, and not containing all the amendments that were ordered by the committee. This is rather an important matter. The committee decided emphatically that the $100,000 should be spent on construction work and not on plans and specifications or other such work. We should see that the clause is so worded as to leave no doubt that the money is to be spent on actual construction, and I therefore ask that it be read before it passes through the committee.

Mr. WADE. As some reflections have been cast on some of the officials of the Railway Committee, I beg to say that I drafted all the amendments myself and read them twice to that committee, and they are in the Bill in exactly the same words as I used in my drafts. Before the hon. gentleman makes any charge of that sort against the Railway Committee or its officials, he should know what he is speaking about or take it back. Those amendments whether satisfactory or not, are exactly as they were drawn and read twice to the Railway Committee. The words 'actual construction' were put in the first amendment and appear there now. The hon. member for Ottawa suggested those words, and I put them in at his suggestion and they are there now.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understood that the amendment was read without those words. If they are in the amendment, then it was a mistake of the Chairman not to have read them.

Mr. BALL. As there is a doubt about the wording of this clause, I will draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that the time for private Bills has expired.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hour for private Bills has expired.

SUPPLY—COLONIAL CONFERENCE.

House resumed consideration of the motion of the Minister of Finance that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I would ask the right hon. the First Minister if he has received any further despatch or document respecting the colonial conference from the imperial government or the right hon. the Secretary of the Colonies. I would like also to bring to the attention of the hon. the Minister of the Interior——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to call the attention of the right hon. the leader of the House to the fact that there has been very bad order in this House for the past six or seven days, particularly when hon. gentlemen on this side are speaking. I am as anxious to co-operate with my right hon. friend as any one can be to prevent this House from degenerating into a bear garden, and the next time these interruptions occur, I shall move that the committee rise, as a protest against them. Or if they occur when the House is in session, I shall move the adjournment, as a like protest; and I call on you, Mr. Speaker, to see that a little better order is kept in this House in the future than has been the case during the past week. I was about to direct the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Hon. Mr. Sifton) to a telegram which I have received which possibly pertains to his department. I do not understand it myself, and I am asking the question for information. It is dated at Forty Mile, is addressed to myself, and is as follows:

Miners anxious to know decision regarding Miller Creek concession. Wire.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The only matter to which this telegram can refer, I think, is a dispute as to a number of entries for claims upon a place called Miller Creek. I know it was before me some months ago, and has been pending in the department from time to time since then. I think a decision was given some time ago and communicated to the gold commissioner. I can tell my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) more definitely to-morrow, and I can have a despatch sent to the gold commissioner to-morrow, if necessary, which will clear the matter up.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And if the hon. minister will mention also that the matter was brought up in the House, it will make it unnecessary for me to communicate with the gentlemen who sent me the telegram.

INTER-IMPERIAL CONFERENCE.

The PRIME MINISTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to repeat the question he asked of me.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wished to know whether or not the government have received from the imperial government or from the Colonial Secretary any further despatch or communication with respect to the conference to be held in London during the coming summer. The right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) will remember that one of the communications laid before the House referred to a further despatch from the Colonial Secretary, but when the matter was last mentioned in the House the right hon. gentleman stated that no further despatch had been received.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have not made any inquiries, but I think I am safe in saying that there has been no further communication. I received a communication from Lord Strathcona a few days ago, not dealing directly with conference, but on the subject of the wheat and flour duties.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

DOMINION SECURITIES COMPANY.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one other matter to which I desire to ask attention—a statement by a reporter in the New York 'Evening Post' of yesterday, relating to communications between the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Dominion Securities Company. It begins:

An officer of the Dominion Securities Company, which controls the Cape Breton Railroad, expressed astonishment to-day that Mr. Blair, the Minister of Railways and Canals, made a partial denial that the Cape Breton Railroad had been awarded a subsidy.

'We have a document,' said this officer, 'with Mr. Blair's own signature attached, vouching for the subsidy, and it is open to inspection to anybody desiring to look at it, including Mr. Blair himself. You will notice that he did not deny the thing flatly. It is a well-known fact that under the general statutes of Canada any railroad company is entitled to a subsidy of $3,200 per mile by complying with certain conditions. The Cape Breton Railroad complied with them, and it has received proper acknowledgment of the same from Mr. Blair, with the official seal of his department attached. I may also say that the railroad company was awarded a like subsidy of $3,200 a mile from the provincial government, and a part of this subsidy has already been paid to the company.

Then follow some further comments upon the position of the law on the subject of subsidies in Canada, with which I need not trouble the House at present. I would like to know whether the right hon. leader of the government is in a position to say whether or not this statement respecting the assurance given by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Blair) as to the subsidy, is correct or not. The Minister of Railways and Canals is not present, but perhaps the Prime Minister may be able to give information at present, and I would like to have a statement if the right hon. gentleman is in a position to make one.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not exactly understand the question.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I think the statement as read represented the Minister of Railways and Canals as stating that there was no arrangement or contract between this government and the Cape Breton Extension Railway. But the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals never said that. On the contrary, he said—and I said also, as having knowledge of the fact—that we had granted a subsidy for thirty-five miles of that road from the Strait of Canso to the village of St. Peters.

The PRIME MINISTER. By statute.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, and I presume that a contract was signed, because it was authorized. What the Minister of Railways and Canals said was in denial of the statement that the parties had subsidies for much larger schemes. He did not say that there was no contract. I have not seen the contract covering the subsidy for thirty-five miles, but I think I am safe in saying that such a contract was signed with the Cape Breton Extension Railway Company, and, I suppose, passed to the Dominion Securities Company. There is no contradiction between what has just been read and the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was not making any assertion with regard to the matter, but merely sought information. There is this statement on the part of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals :

> I do not hesitate to say that the statements in it are absolutely false in the main, and I base my statements on this ground, that the Dominion government has given them a certain subsidy and promised them other subsidies.

That is the statement of his which seemed not quite consistent with what has been stated by this officer of the Dominion Securities Company to the reporter.

The PRIME MINISTER. There can be no document but the statute.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The document referred to, I suppose, would be the contract for the thirty-five miles which is not disputed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was that mentioned in the debate by the Minister of Railways ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I know that I mentioned it. I was aware that the subsidy had been authorized for this thirty-five miles and the scheme approved to that extent; and I assume that the contract was signed, though I have never seen it.

Motion agreed to, and House went into Committee of Supply.

Census, $450,000.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) state how much has been expended on the census to date ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not the figures up to date. I made a statement of the expenditure up to a certain date——

Mr. TAYLOR. Up to the 1st March.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are spending about $10,000 a month in the Bureau, so, I suppose there will be a little more than $10,000 additional since that date.

Mr. TAYLOR. There were large accounts for unpaid claims at that time. Have they been settled ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We have been paying some accounts for the enumeration also, as well as what has been paid to the clerks here, but I have not a statement under my hand of what has been spent in that way lately. I am informed that we have spent about $15,000 since that date, including the amount paid for enumerators' bills that have come in since I gave the figures to the House the other day. Our monthly pay list amounts to over $10,000, and about $15,000 in all has been paid since that date, leaving about $5,000 paid for enumerators' accounts in the outlying districts.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister give us the information as to the amounts yet claimed by enumerators, and the number of accounts that are unadjusted.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The fishery enumeration has not been sent in yet—a few have been, but not many. I cannot tell exactly what that will amount to. I am informed there are accounts in that branch amounting to about $9,000. Those, however, will have to be gone over and checked, and according to our past experience, the total claims will not be paid. There are still some outstanding accounts for enumeration not settled. Claims have been put in and we have shown the enumerators how these claims cannot all be allowed. They have been arguing the case with us, and trying to show that their claims should be allowed. We do not call those accounts as absolutely settled, although in most cases I do not think there is much chance of the enumerators getting any more than has been allowed.

Mr. CLARKE. Has the minister made any inquiry from Mr. George Johnson, since these matters were being discussed here, as to the allegations made about the inaccuracy of the census returns of 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. I have not.

Mr. CLARKE. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to ask him if he can make any satisfactory explanation of those allegations ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I may do that when I get a little time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Has the minister the statements that were on the Table the other night giving the monthly pay list and all the names on the staff ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Everything that was laid upon the Table is still upon the Table, even the check books and stubs the hon. gentleman asked for the other night.

Mr. TAYLOR. I inquired about a gentleman named Drouin, from Montreal, who was working in the department at $2.25 a day. I said I was informed that he had been in Montreal for thirteen days during the election campaign, and was paid full time while he was away. The minister told me that he thought he was away for only one day. I think if the hon. gentleman will look up his registration books he will find that he was absent for thirteen days in succession during the election in Montreal, and was paid for that whole time. If the minister finds that to be the case will he deduct that amount ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. All the employees are entitled to a certain number of holidays during the year, and they take them at different times. I cannot tell whether Mr. Drouin has had his holidays or not. He is entitled to be absent a certain amount of time, and if he is absent more than that, his pay will be docked.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then why did the minister say he was only absent for one day ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I was so informed, that he was only absent for one day at that particular time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then if the minister finds he was absent for thirteen days he will admit that he misled the House to that extent ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I will admit that I was misinformed.

Mr. TAYLOR. Perhaps the minister can get the information at once from the assistant commissioner.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that Mr. Drouin was away at Christmas time taking his holidays ; I am informed that at the time of the Dominion election he was away only one day. I cannot give the date.

Mr. TAYLOR. Can the hon. minister now say whether since December these balances claimed in Lisgar have been paid or not ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cheque book is on the Table of the House and no cheques have been issued since this discussion took place the other day.

Mr. TAYLOR. No person can take this cheque book and tell anything about it, because there is no date given from January to the present time. If any business man had an accountant keeping his stub cheque books as these books are kept he would not keep him in his employment very long, because the stubs should bear a date corresponding with that on the cheque. There is not a stub that is dated that I can find. Nor does it give the particulars as to what the cheque was issued for, or anything of that kind. Here is a cheque book which starts on February 28th, and I think that from February 28th there is not a stub in the book of a cheque that has been issued since with a date on it.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must confess that I have not examined the cheque books myself. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman's statement is perfectly correct. I supplied the hon. gentleman with a list of the dates of payments in Lisgar, and that is a correct list.

Mr. TAYLOR. I cannot find it now.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Well, it was laid on the Table of the House and given to the hon. gentleman. I think he was the last man who had it. Here is a cheque book dated February 28th; I do not know whether there is any other date. I am informed that the dates at the beginning of the month are put down and then the cheques are paid out during that month. The day book of the department shows the dates of these payments, but they are not entered upon the stubs of the cheque book, as the hon. gentleman says. The list I gave him the other night, which contained a statement of the payments to the enumerators in Lisgar is a correct list with the correct dates, as made out in the department from the cheques, and it is a true and accurate list. The hon. gentleman insisted upon my bringing the cheque books with the stubs, and I brought them for him. I think I warned him at the time that the other list was much more convenient and told a great deal more than the books would. He would not take my word for it, and insisted on my bringing the cheque books.

Mr. TAYLOR. It was because my hon. friend from Macdonald says he is credibly informed that the cheques had gone out there during the time of the election to pay up the balances that were due to the enumerators. The statement which the hon. minister laid on the Table showed a large number of persons who claimed balances. Now, what I want to find out from the hon. minister is whether any of these balances have been paid.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that not one of these balances which appeared on that list has been paid. As far as that statement is concerned, I have no data to tell me at the present time whether the payments as made have been accepted by the enumerators as payments in full or whether they are still protesting. I am informed that some of the enumerators are still claiming parts of these balances, but none have been paid.

Mr. TAYLOR. The information I have received is that all the enumerators that are on that list showing the balances claimed by them were raising considerable of a row at the time the Lisgar election came on. It was decided that they must be settled with and they were settled with and my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Boyd) says that a gentleman told him that he saw the cheques.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. He could not have seen any cheques, because no cheques have been issued by the department since the date that is given there, I think it was in December. I cannot help what a gentleman may have told the hon. gentleman. I simply say that no cheques have since been issued by the department since the date given there. I have that from my accountant, and I believe it. I do not sign these cheques myself, and consequently I do not know of my own personal knowledge. But I take the full responsibility of saying that no cheques have been issued since the date on the list I put on the Table.

Mr. INGRAM. When the census were up for discussion before, I asked the hon. gentleman what additional duties were performed by the census commissioner of East Elgin. He said he would bring down that information again.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. What additional duties ?

Mr. INGRAM. Yes, after he had handed in his report.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I am informed that there were no additional duties except the proper completion and fulfilment of his work. If the schedules come in and are not in proper form they have to be sent back to be looked over, revised and checked by him. Nothing except that, if it has been done, has been done by the commissioner for East Elgin.

Mr. INGRAM. I may say that I had a conversation with the commissioner myself, and he was rather surprised to receive this extra duty, which he thought he was not entitled to perform, and he expected extra pay for doing that duty which was imposed upon him. I would like to know whether any additional salary has been given to the commissioner ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Quite a number of the commissioners have supposed that when they were required to complete this work they were going to get extra pay, but we have not paid any of them.

Mr. INGRAM. And do not intend to ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. And do not intend to. The Census Act provides that the commissioners shall finish their work and it is the intention that they shall finish their work without extra remuneration.

Mr. TAYLOR. Will the hon. minister give the cost of the census in South Leeds in 1901 and 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICLUTURE. The total cost in 1901 of taking the census in South Leeds was $3,393.53; and in 1891, $1,652.65.

Mr. TAYLOR. What was the population in 1891 and 1901 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. If the hon. gentleman will wait a moment I will look at the bulletin.

Mr. WILSON. What was the population of Lennox in 1891 and in 1901, and the cost of taking the census in each year ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Population of Lennox, 1901, 13,421; in 1891, 14,900. Cost in 1891, $1,065.89; in 1901, $2,002.21.

Mr. ROSAMOND. What are the figures for North Lanark ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Population, 1901, 18,173 ; in 1891, 19,260. Cost, 1891, $1,320.27; in 1901, $2,938.24.

Mr. TAYLOR. And in South Leeds ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Population in 1901, 24,185 and in 1891, 22,449.

Mr. BLAIN. What are the figures with regard to the county of Peel ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Population of Peel in 1901, 13,687, and 1891, 15,460.

Mr. BLAIN. What is the cost ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I gave that the other day.

Mr. BLAIN. Yes, but I want to have it on record in 'Hansard.'

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Cost for Peel, 1891, $1,102.03, and in 1901, $1,967.31.

Mr. REID (Grenville). What was the cost of taking the census in South Grenville ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In 1891, $834.25, and in 1901, $1,785.46.

Mr. EARLE. What was the cost of taking the population in the different districts of British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I must preface what I state in regard to this by saying that these are the payments so far. In some of the districts of British Columbia the cost has not been entirely worked out. Total cost for Burrard in 1901, $18,658.15 ; New Westminster, $7,275.67 ; Victoria, $3,375.25; Yale and Cariboo, $18,256.37. Vancouver is not completed.

Mr. EARLE. What was the cost in 1891 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The districts were not the same in the two periods.

Mr. EARLE. Give us the figures as they are; they include the whole of British Columbia anyway.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The cost in 1891 was: Cariboo, $5,557.94; New Westminster, $12,804; Vancouver, $4,153; Victoria, $1,621; Yale, $6,667. There was a good deal of territory included in 1901 that was not in 1891.

Mr. MORIN. What is the population of Dorchester county, and the cost of taking the census in 1891 and 1901?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Population of Dorchester in 1891, 19,017, and in 1901, 21,007. Cost, 1891, $1,502.95, and in 1901, $3,200.46.

Mr. BENNETT. In view of the large decreases in the population of the bulk of the counties of Ontario, has any officer of the Department of Agriculture made a computation as to what will be the probable exodus for the next ten years?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No. We have not gone into that.

Mr. BENNETT. Does not the hon. minister think that is a vital subject which claims his attention? The decreases have been very abnormal in the past ten years.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. In some parts they are.

Mr. BENNETT. Will the minister promise that will be done?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I cannot promise that exactly to-night.

Mr. WILSON. Do the figures given for Lennox include the accounts in full? There was a great deal of dissatisfaction among the enumerators there. They thought they had done a good deal more work than they were getting pay for. They understood that they were to get so much per day, and afterwards they were paid so much per name. I would like to know if the hon. minister has had to pay anything for extras to the enumerators for Lennox?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I understand that we have no further claims from Lennox. The accounts have all been settled.

Mr. WILSON. Were there no claims after the first accounts were put in?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I think very likely there were after the first accounts were put in, but they were put in a long time ago.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to ask the minister if he is through with all these private investigations with regard to the census of 1891?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I have not made any arrangements for any further investigations.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman has not said whether he has concluded them.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. So far as the records laid on the Table go, they are concluded.

Mr. INGRAM. Still, that is not an answer to my question. Has he concluded all the investigations that he has started?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Yes.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I notice that the population of North Lanark, according to the figures the hon. minister has given, has decreased 1,187, and the cost of taking the census is over twice as much as it was in 1891. I would like to know what is the reason for that enormous increase of over 100 per cent.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The reason is just the general reason which I stated the other night when this question came up. In 1901 the cost of everything has been greater than it was in 1891. Then, we threw a great deal more labour on the enumerators, asking in the aggregate nearly three times as many questions as were asked in 1891. The consequence was that they took more time and had to do more work, and we had to make our schedule of rates considerably higher.

Mr. ROSAMOND. I am afraid that is hardly warranted by the fact so far as my knowledge goes. My experience is that the enumerators spent very little time in taking the census, much less time than was spent in 1891.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. There is no doubt of that, because we had a great many more enumerators.

Mr. ROSAMOND. Well, they must have had very little to do as there was less population. I know that it did not take them two minutes to do the work at my house. I really do not think the explanation of the minister accounts for the increased cost.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to draw the minister's attention to the fact that the census of South Leeds in 1891 cost $1,652, while that of 1901 cost $3,393, and that the population in 1891 was 24,185 and in 1901 22,449, or a decrease in the population, according to the census returns, of 1,736. I am satisfied that the census returns for South Leeds are not correct, and that the population has not decreased. We had an enumeration of the town of Gananoque taken at the same time by the municipal assessors, and it showed 170 more than the number given by the census enumerators taken at practically the same time. According to the municipal census of the whole county the population, instead of having decreased, has increased. Therefore, I think this is a case in which the minister should send a special officer to make an enumeration of the county as a test for the whole province. I know that our county has not gone back in the last ten years, but has gone ahead. The cost of taking the census of the county in 1901 was more than double what it was in 1891, the increase being $1,741 with an apparently decreased population. The minister says the increase of the cost is due to an increased schedule of rates. The old rate to the enumerators was three cents per name, and the hon. gentleman allowed five cents, a difference of two cents. On the population of 22,449 this would give $448. Deduct that from the $1,741, the increase in the cost over 1891, and there is still an increase of $1,300. How does the hon. minister account for that?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman has stated in the first place that the municipal census of South Leeds was greater in 1901 than it was in 1891, but if the hon. gentleman will look at the correct figures he will find that that is not the case. By the municipal census the population of the district of South Leeds in 1891 was 20,191, while in 1901 it was 19,193, a decrease of about 1,000. According to the Dominion census the population in 1891 was 22,449 and in 1901, 21,185, or a decrease of about 1,300, showing that the municipal census was not so very far different from the Dominion census. It is not correct, as the hon. gentleman states, that there was a decrease according to the one and an increase according to the other. With regard to the increase in the cost, the hon. gentleman has forgotten that the schedule of rates included not only five cents per name, but deaths, all farms recorded, thirty cents per industrial establishment instead of twenty, besides $1.50 per day which was allowed to the enumerators in 1901 for team hire and not allowed in 1891.

Mr. TAYLOR. Where does the minister get the figures of the municipal statistics which he has given?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. From the Bureau of Statistics.

Mr. TAYLOR. Those I gave were got by writing to each municipal assessor. I got his figures of the assessment for 1901.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to know why it is that in taking the population of West Elgin the minister makes out that in 1901 it had 730 fewer souls than in 1891, while it cost $2,137.08 more than in 1891 to take the census.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The same explanation applies to that county which I have given for the others.

Mr. INGRAM. I did not catch the explanation. What was it?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I can repeat it, I suppose; but I do not think it is necessary for me to go over the same thing for every county in the Dominion. The explanation is simply that the schedule rates were higher in 1901 than they were in 1891, and the enumerators were paid by the schedule rates.

Some resolutions reported.

MEDICAL COUNCIL IN CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 11) to provide for the establishment of a medical council in Canada.—Mr. Roddick.

Mr. RODDICK. I beg to suggest the following amendment to subsection 3, of section 6:

No province shall be represented on the council either by appointed or elected members until the legislature of the province has enacted in effect that registration by the council shall be accepted as equivalent to registration for a like purpose under the laws of the province provided that when all the provinces of the Dominion shall have legislated in effect as aforesaid, it shall be lawful to appoint and elect in the manner aforesaid members of the council representing the provinces which have so legislated, and the universities and incorporated schools aforesaid constituted within such provinces and such members shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, constitute the council.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick) please explain his amendment?

Mr. RODDICK. The original clause provided that when any five or more provinces had legislated, this would come into effect; the amendment provides that all the provinces shall legislate before the council can be formed.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). We are anxious to know if this medical council will come into existence if one of the provinces refuses to join?

Mr. RODDICK. No, they must all join before it can come into operation.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Therefore, the hon. gentleman admits by this amendment that this parliament has not authority to pass such legislation, but he must have the authority of a provincial legislature. Why, then, should we pass this Bill? Why not leave the matter to the provincial legislatures? This is the first time I have seen such a Bill passed by this House. It is an invasion of provincial rights, and the promoter practically admits it by this amendment.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think that is a fair interpretation of the matter. The mere leaving of the right in the hands of the provinces to come in or not is not an acknowledgment that this parliament has not the power to legislate on the subject. It is acting in an agreeable way towards the provinces, when they are neither forced nor asked to come in, but allowed to come in of their own free will.

Mr. RODDICK. This arranges a piece of machinery which the provinces can make use of in order to establish a council. The provinces cannot do it themselves. This parliament simply arranges a scheme by which they can get together and establish a council which will issue licenses and allow any licentiate to practice in any part of the Dominion. Then we shall be able to have reciprocal legislation with foreign countries which is very important.

Mr. LEMIEUX. In my judgment this legislation should originate with the imperial parliament and not here. You are practically amending the British North America Act. We can understand this better by referring to a point which was explained here by my hon. friend from Hants (Mr. Russell). It is provided in the British North America Act that the different provinces of the Dominion can have legislative union, with the exception of the province of Quebec, but, before this legislative union takes place, the consent of the different legislatures must be had. This was passed by the imperial parliament in 1867. But there is nothing of that kind as to the medical profession. On the contrary, that is a civil right which belongs to the different provinces. I would be very happy to support this legislation, because I think that the motives of my hon. friend are good motives indeed, but that it is an invasion of provincial rights. By the revised statutes of the province of Quebec, clause 3975, the medical profession comes under our provincial law. There is nothing in our constitutional Act providing that this parliament can legislate in matters of that kind. I most humbly protest against this legislation. I say it is not within the purview of this parliament, and I say that if we pass such legislation, we open the door to many other Acts of the same kind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If I thought that this Bill infringed on any provincial rights, I would be as strenuously opposed to it as any hon. member of this House. As a matter of fact, I have, on various occasions during the present session raised the point with regard to measures before this House, and pointed out that these Bills should be dealt with by the provincial legislature, and I have not received any support in these matters from the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux). This does not seem to me to infringe in any way upon provincial rights. There is no provincial legislature in Canada that could enact a Bill of this kind—my hon. friend (Mr. Lemieux) would not pretend that there is. The object of the Bill, as I understand it, is, with the consent of the legislatures of the provinces, insofar as they have exclusive jurisdiction, to provide a scheme by which medical practitioners in Canada shall have, in Canada as well as in foreign countries, a Dominion status and not a merely provincial status.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) allow me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that by this amendment the promoter of the Bill admits that the provinces alone are entitled to legislate in this matter?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If my hon. friend will define what he means by 'in this matter' I can answer him with greater precision. But, so far as the scheme of this Bill is concerned, my answer to his question is an emphatic negative. The rights of the provinces in the matter of property, and civil rights are conserved by the amendment that my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick) has introduced. The creation of a council which, with the approval of the provincial legislatures shall have the right to deal with the medical profession of the various provinces is attempted by this Bill and can only be dealt with by this parliament. That is a scheme which can only be dealt with by some such Bill as this, and can only be carried out with the consent of the provincial legislatures, and in every way this Bill safeguards provincial rights by providing, as this amendment provides, that the medical profession in the provinces cannot be affected except with the consent of the legislatures of all the provinces. Further than that, this council shall not be created at all unless every province of Canada comes into the scheme. That is the idea of the amendment, as I gathered from hearing it read. Now it does not seem to me that under these circumstances there can be any objection to this Bill from the standpoint of provincial rights. If I thought there was such an objection, I would be the first to stand up and support my hon. friend, because I for one am as anxious that provincial rights and the federal constitution should be preserved intact in every respect as any hon. member on either side of the House can possibly be.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. With reference to the amendment that the committee has just adopted, would it not be advisable to provide in the Bill some way of determining whether the various legislatures have given the consent that the Bill requires before this Act can go into effect? There is no tribunal to determine whether the provincial legislation contemplated has or has not been enacted.

Mr. SPROULE. That is implied in the word 'legislation.'

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The words of the legislation are not set forth here. Whilst it says that the legislation shall be to a certain effect, yet it will be a question whether it was to that effect.

You might proceed to establish your schools and purport to grant licenses, and after all, on the matter being tested, it might be held that one or other of the supposed provincial Acts did not comply with the conditions of this measure.

Mr. RODDICK. The Governor in Council will determine whether the necessary legislation has taken place.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John). Where is it stated that this legislation shall not go into affect until it is assented to by all the provinces ?

Mr. RODDICK. That is provided for by the amendment which has just been adopted.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Then are we to understand that all the provinces must consent ?

Mr. RODDICK. Yes. I have amended the Bill so as to make it impossible for five provinces to begin this work, they must all consent before the council is formed. If one does not consent, it cannot go on.

Bill reported.

Mr. RODDICK moved the second reading of the Bill.

Mr. BOURASSA. Before the Bill is carried, I must say that I was absent when the second reading was taken, and I have only this opportunity of making some observations against the principle of the Bill. However, I do not regret to have been absent at the time, because the amendment that has just been adopted by the committee gives a special feature to the Bill which I think is an argument against the Bill itself. In taking exception to the principle of the Bill I do not do so from a professional point of view. I am not a medical man, and those medical men in my county whom I represent here are practically all in favour of the Bill, because they live on the border of the province of Ontario and they would certainly benefit by the adoption of this Bill. My objection is entirely based upon the principle of the Bill which was pointed out by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux), a few moments ago. Now I am not a lawyer any more than I am a physician ; but I think we must admit that common sense tells us that what belongs to the provinces does not belong to the federal authority, and what comes under the federal authority does not come under the provincial authority.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That may be common sense but it is not law.

Mr. BOURASSA. And gentlemen who do not belong to the noble profession of the law will admit that sometimes lawyers attempt to justify things that are not common sense.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That depends on the common sense.

Mr. BOURASSA. But it is the habit of those gentlemen to play with common sense when it suits their purpose. It is a principle admitted in law, a principle that I think the very high authority of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice will not contradict, that whatever power belongs to the provinces belongs to them by the authority of the imperial government. This parliament cannot give them one iota of authority, this parliament cannot authorize the provinces to legislate on any subject. Whatever authority the provinces have to legislate is given to them by the imperial parliament, and whatever power is given to us is given by the imperial parliament. We are imperialists in this sense, that we respect what is given to us by the imperial power. So far as that is concerned I am a sound imperialist. But if we want to have peace in this country we must leave the line of demarcation between the provinces and the Dominion authority perfectly well defined. Now I have had occasion in this House to speak against some measures of the government where I thought they were not exercising the full power given to the federal authority, and were giving to the provinces power that did not belong to them.

Mr. COCHRANE. You voted all right.

Mr. BOURASSA. No, I voted against them, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Cochrane) voted with the government at that time because his leader told him to vote with the government—I mean on the Manitoba railway legislation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) pardon me ? Is he referring to me ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am not quite sure when the authority of the hon. gentleman began.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I was merely suggesting that if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) referred to me as having directed any one to vote for the Manitoba Bill, or as having said a word about it, he is stating what he cannot know to be true and which is absolutely and wholly untrue and incorrect.

Mr. BOURASSA. I did not mean to insinuate that the hon. gentleman had given the word to the hon. member (Mr. Cochrane). I am sure that the docility of the hon. gentleman is such that he votes before the order comes from his leader. The ground that I am standing upon is that this very amendment which has been proposed by the promoter of the Bill and adopted by the committee is an acknowledgment that the provinces have the right to legislate in this matter. Now, the hon. leader of the opposition says that we do not encroach upon the authority of the provinces in this Bill. What do I read in section 4 of this Bill ?

The purposes of the council shall be to promote and effect—

(a) The establishment of a qualification in medicine, such that the holders thereof shall be acceptable and empowered to practice in all the provinces of Canada.

Whereas, it is known that the federal parliament has no right whatever to exercise control over the practice of the liberal professions in this country. Do hon. gentlemen pretend to assimilate the practice of the liberal professions with the exercise of trade? We have control of trade, but we have not control of the liberal professions. More than that, subsection (b) of this clause reads as follows :

The establishment of a register for Canada of medical practitioners and students, and the publication and revision from time to time of such register.

Thereby controlling the legal status or the discipline to be given to students. This is a matter of education. Here is subsection (c) :

(c.) The determination and fixing of the qualifications and conditions necessary for registration, including the courses of study to be pursued, the examinations to be undergone, and generally the requisites for registration ;

(d.) The establishment and maintenance of a board of examiners for the examination of such persons and for the granting of certificates of qualification.

Here are three subsections legislating immediately upon the subject of education. Perhaps it has been stated on previous occasions during the discussion of this Bill and perhaps it may be stated again, that we are simply legislating to give certain powers to a body of men to be exercised by them according to the authority of the provinces. But we are incorporating a body, which is not in existence to-day, to exercise control over the practice of medicine, to determine the courses to be followed by students, as well as the necessary qualifications and the examinations to which they must submit themselves before they can acquire the right to practice their profession. Therefore, we are incorporating a body that will exercise powers that heretofore have been regarded as belonging entirely to the provinces. This is only the beginning—I should not say it is the beginning, because I can refer to several instances of legislation on various subjects where the federal parliament has been trying to encroach upon provincial rights. I don't think the tendency of this parliament or of this government should be to encroach upon provincial rights. I remember the time when the Liberal party stood up, and rightly so, in favour of provincial rights, as far as education was concerned, and they were supported by the province of Quebec in spite of the natural sympathy which the province of Quebec had in favour of the minority in another province whose rights had been admittedly encroached upon by the provincial government. Why ? Because we believed that the rights of the provinces in educational matters were rights that were more precious to us than any special encroachment upon them. Now, we are coming here and incorporating a body that will have control of a certain part of the education of the provinces in this Dominion. We are told that this is for the purpose of giving our medical men a right to practice abroad, or rather of enabling them to make an arrangement with foreign countries for the exchange of rights in regard to the practice of medicine. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick) simply meant with other parts of the empire.

Mr. RODDICK. I may say to my hon. friend that outside of the empire arrangements may be made with other countries. Reciprocity with France is quite possible.

Mr. BOURASSA. As far as this part of the project of the hon. gentleman is concerned, I am opposed to it also. Whether the reciprocity is with England or with France, or with any other country, I say that we should not open the door to an exchange of that kind. We should not in the interests of the Canadian people encourage our medical men to go and live in other countries and be replaced by foreigners. We know that in England, as well as in France, they are overcrowded more than we are with young practitioners who would be very glad to come here and invade this country, not with the greatest benefit to this country. After all, the very argument that will be used by these gentlemen will be that we are not satisfied with the courses that are given by our universities, that we are not satisfied with the studies pursued in our universities, and that we want to have reciprocity so as to invite foreigners to come and take the places of our practitioners. I may say that this view was expressed to me by a couple of physicians from the city of Toronto. Unfortunately, I did not think that I was going to take part in this discussion, and I did not obtain permission to give their names; but they are practitioners who have lived in England as well as here and they told me they were opposed to this Bill on the very ground that is taken by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick), i.e., that it will bring about reciprocity ; because they believe that reciprocity will certainly turn against the medical profession of Canada much more than it will turn in their favour.

But apart from this objection, I say that we cannot accept the principle of this Bill without either encroaching upon provincial rights or stultifying ourselves. Without the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member, we are encroaching on provincial rights in legislating upon a matter which has been acknowledged as being the sole right of the provinces to deal with.

Under the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman, we are simply stultifying ourselves. Either this legislation is good or it is not; either it is within our right to pass it or it is not. If this legislation is good, let us have the courage to pass it. If it is our right to pass it, let us take the responsibility of it, and not say that we are passing legislation but that it is sham legislation, which will not come into force until all the provinces have adopted it. In respect to the argument used by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that it is simply a matter of politeness, I would ask if we are here to pass laws for politeness ? Let parliament take the responsibility of saying for the first time that we have the right to legislate upon the medical profession ; and next year we will be called upon to legislate upon the legal profession, and the next year after we will be called upon to legislate upon other professions, and we will be encroaching upon provincial rights.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) if there is not a provision in the British North America Act under which we might legislate in regard to the provinces and their laws, and whether this legislation might not come in under that section ?

Mr. BOURASSA. I am very glad that the hon. gentleman has raised that argument. Section 94 of the British North America Act says :

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the parliament of Canada may make provision for the uniformity of all or any of the laws relative to property and civil rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and of the procedure of all or any of the courts in those three provinces, and from and after the passing of any Act in that behalf, the power of the parliament of Canada to make laws in relation to any matter comprised in any such Act shall, notwithstanding anything in this Act, be unrestricted ; but any Act of the parliament of Canada making provision for such uniformity shall not have effect in any province unless and until it is adopted and enacted as law by the legislature thereof.

By this clause the right was given to this parliament to legislate as far as the three English speaking provinces are concerned, provided it was ratified afterwards by the parliaments of these provinces. Now, in the amendment which has been accepted by the hon. member (Mr. Roddick), the spirit of this clause, which does not touch the province of Quebec, is made applicable to legislation which invades practically the rights of Quebec out of the fundamental provinces in the Dominion. Therefore this is an abuse of this clause of the British North America Act, which was introduced for the protection of the province of Quebec, and it is used against the will of the majority of the medical men of that province. It may be said that the province of Quebec has the right to resist this legislation through its provincial parliament, but I say that we should not put any provincial parliament in that position. I presume that this amendment has been suggested by the government in order to smooth differences of opinion; in order to prevent any province from resenting this legislation. Well, either the people of the province of Quebec are in favour of this, or they are not. If they are in favour of it, why not adopt the legislation as it was ? and if they are not in favour of it, and if this amendment has been proposed in order to smooth their feelings, what will be the result ? Most probably the other provinces will ratify this legislation and you will put the legislature of the province of Quebec in the unfortunate position of forcing it to resist legislation that has been adopted, first by the federal parliament and then by the other provinces. The resentment which may be entertained in the other provinces will certainly be greater than it would be if this government had the courage to say that, we cannot adopt this legislation because it is against the spirit of the constitution. That is the view I take of this matter, and that is why I oppose the third reading of this Bill. I repeat that we should be careful to keep our legislation on the right track, so far as the autonomy of the provinces is concerned. If any of the provincial parliaments proposed to encroach on the powers of this federal parliament, I would say : Let us stand by the federal power and resist the province in spite of whatever unpopularity we may be subject to in a particular province. But, let us also stand by the provinces when they are within the constitution, and not invade their power. If we pass any such legislation as this we are opening the door to friction between the provincial and federal authorities, and we are not discharging our duty to the people of this country. Whatever may be the practical advantage of any such legislation, we must learn to make sacrifices so as to maintain the spirit of our constitution. This Bill is against the spirit of our constitution, and it is for that reason that I shall vote against it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) has told this House on former occasions, that he did not believe much in logic, and he has given us an example to-night which indicates in the strongest possible manner the truth of that assertion. The hon. gentleman says that the provincial parliaments should not be called upon to confer any rights upon a body constituted by this parliament, and that the line of division between the federal parliament and the provincial parliaments must be kept absolutely separate and distinct. I suppose that if what my hon. friend has argued is correct, exactly the converse must be true ; and yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bourassa) supported by his vote a Bill introduced by the government which appointed provincial officers as the persons who should regulate the electoral lists under which members are returned to this parliament. Does not my hon. friend see that if he supports legislation of that kind, it is just as competent for a provincial legislature to confer upon a body constituted by this parliament power to make regulations with respect to matters under provincial control. Does my hon. friend admit that or does he not ?

Mr. BOURASSA. Does the hon. gentleman refer to the Franchise Act ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do.

Mr. BOURASSA. The great difference is that by the Franchise Act we did not give the provinces the right to legislate as to our franchise. We chose out of our own free will to use the provincial lists, and if to-morrow we want to adopt a federal franchise we can do so. If a provincial government had enacted—and it would be absurd for them to do so—that certain lists should be used for federal purposes, then I would be opposed to it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not understand the distinction that the hon. gentleman has made. This parliament with the assent of the hon. gentleman conferred upon provincial officers, appointed under provincial laws, the power to select the persons who are to elect members to this parliament; a right which is absolutely possessed by this parliament in the first instance. This parliament delegated that duty to provincial officers, and it enacted it in such a way that provincial legislation regulating the electorate from time to time shall absolutely apply to the electorate who are to return members to the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman was not shocked by the delegation in that case, nor is he shocked every day in this House when we delegate power to the Governor in Council ; nor is he shocked when provincial legislatures delegate their powers to municipal councils. But he conjures up a nightmare in this case because the effect of this Bill is to enable provincial legislatures to confer upon a council constituted by this parliament, power to make regulations respecting the medical profession in the different provinces. That is my hon. friend's logic. Does he or does he not think, that this parliament has the power to delegate certain powers to the Governor in Council ?

Mr. LEMIEUX. In this case you advise the legislature.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In what way do we advise the legislature ? Even if it were so, is there anything in the British North America Act that says we should not advise the legislature ? How do we advise any more in this case than when we delegate most important powers to the Governor in Council ? Does not the hon. gentleman know that provincial legislatures confer every day upon the Lieutenant Governor in Council and upon municipal councils, power to make certain regulations which when once made have the force of law. All that this Bill amounts to is, that with the consent of the provincial legislatures, and by their enactment, a council shall be constituted which when it is once constituted shall have the power to make certain regulations with regard to the practice of the medical profession in the provinces. How can it be said that there is the slightest interference with provincial rights in this ? If you want an illustration of the carrying out of this very principle, look at the Canada Temperance Act, which is an example of the delegation of power of the most extraordinary character. We pass a law here and we say that it shall not go into effect until voted upon by the people of a particular locality. Examples of legislation of this character are so frequent that if my hon. friend (Mr. Bourassa) had only stopped to think for five minutes before he made his speech——

Mr. BOURASSA. Will the hon. gentleman pardon me. The hon. gentleman is now arguing about the delegation of powers which we have the right to recall. But in the present case it is a power that we are taking from the provinces. The hon. gentleman has just stated that the provinces cannot legislate on such matters as we legislate upon. Suppose this Bill is passed by this House and is afterwards adopted by the provincial legislatures, does he say that the provincial legislatures afterwards could amend this Bill in any way, or repeal any part of the power we are taking in passing it ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think that the studies of my hon. friend in constitutional law would have taught him that any legislature which has power to pass an Act has power also to repeal it.

Mr. BOURASSA. Exactly. We have the power to repeal this Act, the provinces have not.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The provinces have the right to repeal any Act they have once passed, and no provision passed by this parliament could take away from any provincial legislature that power for a single instant. If my hon. friend possessed the most elementary knowledge, as I am sure he does possess a very great knowledge of constitutional law, he would understand that that is the case. If we desired by the most emphatic words in the world to override the right of a provincial legislature to repeal an Act it once passed, we could not do it. A moment's reflection would have shown my hon. friend that that is an elementary principle of constitutional law. In the face of that, how can it be contended that this Bill is an invasion of the rights of the provincial legislatures ? If I thought it was, I would be the first to oppose it. The scheme, in a few words, is that this parliament, being the only legislative body that has the power to do so, shall create a council to regulate the medical profession in Canada. Under the amendment proposed by the mover of the Bill to-night, that council can only be constituted by the assent of every province of Canada. Therefore every province of Canada has the most absolute and complete control over this council, because any province can prevent it being constituted, or can make any regulations or qualifications with regard to it that it desires. It can do that just as freely after this Bill passes as it could before. My hon. friend hinted at some dark scheme on the part of the mover of the Bill to begin an invasion of provincial rights, or spoke as if the Bill might be a mere cover for some attempt to invade provincial rights in the future. The scheme is one which I would have thought would have provoked the support of a gentleman of the independence and broad-mindedness of my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. He has told us himself that he is very independent in all these matters, and we are bound to believe him. In fact, I think he sometimes hints vaguely that he is the only really independent gentleman in this House, with possibly one or two exceptions—that every other member of the House is more or less bound up by some ties or mysterious influences which prevent him following the dictates of his conscience; but my hon. friend always claims for himself that he is wholly independent of all such influences. That being the case, I would have supposed that my hon. friend would have looked at this Bill from this standpoint, that it was right that medical men in Canada—those of the great province from which he comes as well as those of the province of which I come—should have something more than a provincial status; that they should stand before the world as men qualified to practice all over Canada; that, having that status, they should have rights conceded to them all over the world, which, in some instances at least, they do not possess at the present time. Looking at the question from that standpoint, will not my hon. friend, who is fair in regard to all these matters, come to the conclusion that it is in the interest of the medical men of his own province as well as the medical men of every other province of Canada, that this object should be attained, and that the medical profession should not in the future have a mere provincial status, but that, while preserving to their own province the rights I have mentioned, they should have the status of Canadian medical men rather than the status of mere provincial practitioners, having no rights outside of their own province? If my hon. friend looks at the matter with his usual fairness, and excludes from his mind this bogy of an attack on provincial rights, he will really come to the conclusion that this Bill merits his support. I trust that my hon. friend will on reconsideration give it his support, and that it will pass unanimously.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I took occasion of the second reading of this Bill, some time ago, to formulate a few objections against this Bill, and I deem it my duty to enter once more my protest against this measure being passed into law.

It is agreed on all hands that, under our constitution, provincial legislatures are not given very extensive powers. Among the students of constitutional law, there is a consensus of opinion that the provinces should have wider powers. That is one of the reasons why all those who belong to the minority in this country, all those in favour of whom, after all, this constitution was framed and established, should make it a point to oppose any encroachment on the rights of the provinces by this parliament. I may be told, and we have heard it stated on the floor of this House, that this parliament has the power to incorporate companies for the Dominion at large. I quite agree that parliament has such a power, but what I cannot admit is that parliament, as is contended by some hon. gentlemen, has the right to control medical education. Still, I am free to say that if the object of this Bill were to incorporate the medical bodies of the Dominion with a view to keeping up the standard of medical education, or for purposes of mutual assistance, I would be the first man in this House to vote in favour of this legislation. But what is the object aimed at by the promoter of this Bill? This object is clearly set forth in section 4, which reads as follows:

(a) The establishment of a qualification in medicine, such that the holders thereof shall be acceptable and empowered to practice in all the provinces of Canada;

(b) The establishment of a register for Canada of medical practitioners and students, and the publication and revision from time to time of such register;

(c) The determination and fixing of the qualifications and conditions necessary for registration, including the courses of study to be pursued, the examinations to be undergone, and generally the requisites for registration;

(d) The establishment and maintenance of a board of examiners for the examination of such persons and for the granting of certificates of qualification;

(e) The establishment of such a status of the medical profession in Canada as shall ensure recognition thereof in the United Kingdom and enable Canadian practitioners to acquire the right of registration under the Acts of the Imperial Parliament known as the 'Medical Acts.'

The object referred to in the last subsection seems reasonable enough. But if you take the trouble to examine subsection 10, you will find that the council is empowered to inquire into:

(i) The qualifications to be required from all persons desirous of being registered, either as practitioners or students, under the authority of this Act, including the establishment, maintenance and effective conduct of examinations for ascertaining whether such persons possess the qualifications required ; the number, nature, times and modes of such examinations.

What would the practical result of this legislation be, were it passed into law ? When this Bill is once passed and accepted by the provincial legislatures, the medical profession will come under the control of the Dominion parliament. When the provinces have adopted this Bill, they will be dispossessed of the exercise of a right which they are now enjoying. As I said a little while ago, the subject-matter of this Bill is not within the purview of the powers of this parliament. The provincial legislatures having primary jurisdiction over educational matters and civil rights, we have no right to legislate here on these matters.

That the right to practice medicine is a civil right, and not a political right, is beyond dispute. Now, that is a subject-matter which is clearly beyond the jurisdiction of this parliament. And I say without any hesitation that, when the hon. gentlemen from the province of Quebec have an opportunity to oppose such a legislation, they would prove false to their duty should they remain silent and fail to resist any encroachment on provincial autonomy.

This Bill, we are told, shall have no force, shall not become operative, until all the provinces have concurred, that is to say, until all the provinces of the Dominion, acting through their legislatures, shall have ratified this legislation. But we all know what a pressure will be brought to bear upon such provinces as may decline to adopt this legislation ; and it will be urged that the other provinces have taken it up and made it their own. They know that the province of Quebec is large-hearted ; that it was not like to lag in the rear ; and who would venture to say that one day it will not accept and ratify that legislation ? It is on record that parliaments have sold their country ; and it would be no matter of surprise that the Quebec legislature should surrender one of its rights.

Were I satisfied that this parliament is dealing with a subject-matter which properly comes within its jurisdiction, I would be quite ready to accept it.

It is urged that the medical profession is going to benefit by this Bill. I quite agree that it would be conducive to the good of the medical bodies, were graduates in medicine to receive a qualification to practice in more than one of the provinces. But the present state of things may be remedied by other means than the one suggested here. It has not been shown that such a remedy as the one I am going to suggest would not apply to the medical profession. For instance, what has been done for the legal profession would also apply to the medical profession. There exists between the provinces of Ontario and Quebec an understanding under which barristers from one or the other province are allowed to practice their profession in those provinces, upon payment of the usual fee. Such a reciprocity has been brought about without any interference from the Dominion parliament. The conditions, however, were quite different. But the bars of Quebec and Ontario have come to an understanding, after having satisfied themselves that such reciprocity would be conducive to their mutual interests. For instance, not long ago the solicitor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was admitted to the bar of the province of Quebec, without having had to pass any examination, and upon payment of the customary fee. The members of the legal profession did not come before this parliament to ask for the passage of such a legislation as is now under discussion.

Should the medical practitioners in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec come to a similar understanding, it could certainly be brought about without being sanctioned by this parliament.

On these several grounds, I move that this Bill be not read now, but this day six months.

Mr. FLINT. It must be very gratifying to the promoter of this Bill to realize that so far the argument against the adoption of this measure has only been of a constitutional or legal character. I do not see that any argument has been made with regard to this Bill that is detrimental to the practice of the profession. Some hon. gentlemen seem to fear that the medical profession will suffer if this Bill should come into operation. Legal difficulties have operated upon their minds and created the fear that the measure could not be satisfactorily put into force. They have raised the question of provincial rights, I think, with perhaps rather undue warmth, considering the amendment proposed, and which appears to be favourably received by the House. Certainly, while we all agree that provincial rights are of great importance and that we should be very careful not to infringe upon these rights by any legislation, such as might perhaps require the intervention of the courts to decide as to whether the law we might pass were ultra or intra vires, it does seem to me that there may be almost too much of a fetish made of provincial rights. The amendment does away with the last vestage of complaint on that ground. There surely can be no objection to the provinces willingly giving up any vestige of a right they may have for the general benefit of the whole community. This was recognized by the British North America Act in one particular, though not as fully perhaps as would be desirable. But at any rate the reasonableness of such a course has been recognized by the British North America Act. The medical profession is in many ways the most liberal of all the professions. It is one, the practice of which is not at all bounded by provincial lines. The practice of medicine involves the whole science of life in all its most minute ramifications, and is therefore not of a provincial or even of a Dominion character, but rather of an international nature, and if by any wise legislation this parliament can assist in raising the medical profession beyond provincial limits and even introduce international features into medical education and practice, I believe that we will be advancing along the lines of modern progress. The idea that a certain amount of protection should be thrown around the medical profession of each province will not stand, I think, careful examination. This Bill, if passed by this House, will not go into full operation for quite a period of time, because it must be considered and adopted by the various provincial legislatures before it can become effective, and there must consequently be negotiations between the promoters of the Bill and the various provincial medical bodies in order to bring about such provincial action. But I believe that once this Bill is adopted by this parliament the time will no doubt come when the practice and study of the medical profession will be placed upon a much higher basis than at present. It is not at all probable that the Dominion government will ever be called on to contribute financially towards medical instruction, but when this council is once established and the different provinces give up their provincial privileges in the matter of medical education and practice, it is quite possible that some great scientists and philanthropists in the future will be induced to contribute largely of their means to the promotion of medical and scientific education, and the council incorporated by this Bill will be in a position to receive gifts from such sources and utilize them for the promotion of higher scientific instruction. We know what is taking place in the neighbouring republic, owing to the munificence of Mr. Carnegie, who has devoted $10,000,000 for the benefit of science, and has established, with the aid of Congress, a board of trustees to supervise the expenditure of that fund. No doubt there were some timid souls in the American Congress who feared that state rights might possibly be violated by congress incorporating a board of trustees to administer this fund, but I have no doubt that such advocates of state rights have by this time discovered that their fears were groundless. It is possible that this measure will lead to something of that kind being done in Canada in the future. At any rate I believe that this amendment, approved, if not introduced, by the mover of the Bill, will remove all objections of this kind, and that this measure, when carried into operation, will be a means of placing the medical profession of this country upon a higher and broader basis than it has hitherto occupied. It must be a matter of regret always to the able physicians of the various provinces who have made their mark in the profession, that they cannot move from one province to another to practice their art when circumstances require them to do so, and I believe that this Bill when adopted will be a powerful lever towards raising the medical profession as high as a Dominion institution as it stands to-day as a provincial institution. I think I may say, without fear of contradiction, that no body of men stands higher in the various provinces than the medical men. They are devoted to their profession and all their ambitions are for the advancement of that profession, and when the distinguished medical men of the various provinces are called to this council, I have no doubt that the rising medical men of the country will be induced to take a higher course and prosecute their studies in Europe where they can enjoy all the advantages given by the highest universities in the world, and the result will be a higher standard for the medical profession of the Dominion as a whole, which will place it on a par with that same profession in such countries as Germany, England and France. Let me add that the promoter of the Bill deserves well of the body to which he belongs and of which he is so distinguished an ornament, for the persistence he has shown in pressing this measure forward to its present stage.

The PRIME MINISTER. In view of certain remarks made a moment ago by my hon. friend from Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), I think I ought to say to the House that he is labouring under a false impression when he thinks that the government have adopted this Bill. The government have done nothing of the kind. It is a public Bill, introduced by a private member, and the government have no policy with regard to it. But I may say that after having given a good deal of study to the matter, I have come to the conclusion that this is a measure which ought to be adopted. When its second reading was moved I noticed an objection made by my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers), to the effect that it was an infringement of provincial rights and therefore unconstitutional. I gave that point some attention and it appears to me that, to remove this objection, I need only refer to section three which provides

3. The persons from time to time appointed or elected, or otherwise being, under the provisions of this Act, members of the Medical Council of Canada, are hereby constituted a corporation under the name of 'The Medical Council of Canada,' hereinafter called 'the council.'

This suffices to show that we have jurisdiction in the matter and can pass the Bill.

Therefore, the technical objection made by several of my hon. friends behind me that this measure is beyond the power of this parliament and belongs exclusively to the provinces, cannot stand. But the real objection, which was not expressed but ought to have been taken, and which to some extent has been advanced by hon. members, is that it deals with a class of subjects which come exclusively within the jurisdiction of the local legislature. The question therefore resolves itself into whether it is expedient for us or not to pass this proposed legislation, which certainly we have the technical right to do. My hon. friend says the whole question is not whether we have the technical right or not, but whether it is expedient to pass a Bill of this kind, even though we should have the power to do so, since it deals with a class of subjects which properly come within the powers of the provincial legislature.

I noticed the argument, the very strong argument, of my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers). He said that we were removing the medical students from the control of the provinces and bringing them under the control of a corporation created by this parliament. This is a very fair question for debate. But, after all the only question is whether it is wise or unwise to pass such a measure as this. When the Bill was introduced, the point raised by my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville might properly have been taken; and, if the Bill had remained as it was when introduced, I would have supported the argument of my hon. friend and would have said that we should not interfere with the status of the medical students and with the rights properly belonging to the provinces. But, with the Bill as it is now, with the amendments which have been made declaring in so many words that this Bill, shall not come into effect until it has been ratified by all the provinces, how can that contention be maintained? I am a staunch supporter of provincial rights, as is my hon. friend from Labelle. But I would be safe in saying that the provinces would never be interfered with if the Bills passed by this parliament had a rider attached to them that they must be ratified by the provinces. The hon. member for Labelle says that we are stultifying ourselves by passing a measure of this kind, by passing a law and leaving it inoperative until it is ratified by the provinces. In my estimation —and surely it must be clear to my hon. friend—there is no stultification of ourselves whatever. We have power to do a certain thing, but we say: We will not use that power absolutely, we will enact a law which we think ought to be passed, but will leave it to the provinces themselves to say whether they will be bound by it or not. But my hon. friend from Labelle evidently went further. Evidently he has something in his mind, which, knowing him as I do, did not surprise me. He says: This is the first step in the invasion of provincial rights in a more or less disguised way; suppose that next year legislation of this kind is introduced to incorporate lawyers of the Dominion. If any one were to introduce legislation of that kind, I would vote against it. I virtually gave the reason for that a moment ago when I said the question was whether it was wise or unwise to pass this Bill. I think it would be unwise to pass such a Bill relating to the bars of the several provinces. And the reason is obvious. The laws of the different provinces are different. There are no two provinces with the same laws. Therefore, it would not conduce to any good object to unite the bars which are to administer the laws. But the laws of the medical profession are the same everywhere. There is no difference in the teaching of medicine and the practice of the profession—and a noble profession it is—between one province and another. Therefore, I think it is conducive to the interest of mankind to have as few as possible of these corporate bodies which have laws against one another. Leaving the technical and theoretical question aside, my hon. friend knows that in this very city of Ottawa there is a rivalry between the practitioner in Hull and the practitioner in Ottawa. The man having a certificate from Ontario would not dare to go to the assistance of a man in Quebec, nor would one having a certificate from Quebec give advice to an unfortunate invalid in Ontario. If argument is needed to justify such a measure as this, I think it can be furnished by the contemplation of such a case—a case that is not merely hypothetical, but a matter of everyday reality. I am moved in this matter by considerations of the expediency of the Bill. But I would not support it without the amendment that has been made providing that the Bill shall come into effect only with the concurrence of the provinces. If even one province does not give its concurrence, then my hon. friend the promoter of the Bill says, the law shall remain inoperative. Under the circumstances, it appears to me that the danger which some of my hon. friends think they see does not really exist.

Moreover, I am influenced by another consideration, which I give to my friends and to the House at large. Aside from other considerations, I do not hesitate to say, as a member from the province of Quebec, that, in my opinion, we would be warranted in supporting the Bill by the fact that there is no province that would profit so much by this measure as the province of Quebec. In my province we furnish a larger proportion of professional men than other provinces. There are French groups in all the provinces of the Dominion, and young men educated in the province of Quebec would be able, if this measure were in force to practice their profession amongst those groups. I do not care very much—and in this I share the view of my hon. friend from Labelle—for reciprocity with other countries, but I care a great deal for reciprocity among the provinces of the Dominion. This argument, apart from all others, in my opinion, would be enough to warrant members of the House, and especially those from the province of Quebec, in supporting this Bill.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It would not be necessary for me to add anything to what the right hon. gentleman (Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has said, were it not for one statement made by my hon. friend from Labelle. The hon. gentleman said : If we wish to have peace in this country, let us respect each others rights. Well, I might add : If we wish to have peace in this country, for God's sake let us try to know each other better. I do not see what harm can come from scientific meetings among the members of the medical profession in this country. We do not take anything from the provinces by the Bill now under consideration, but simply provide machinery by which the provinces can, if they wish, form a body of medical men. If all the provinces do not agree, this body cannot be formed. My own opinion is that the province of Quebec will cheerfully agree to the Bill. I have reason to know that medical men of the highest standing in the city of Monreal—I speak of men of my own race—are in favour of this Bill, I am for the rights of the provinces, but I am also for the broader rights of this Dominion. There is no reason why Canadians should not work together wherever they can do so without invading each other's rights; and in this case, I do not think there is any invasion of rights or any danger of it. We must not exaggerate the rights of the provinces. My hon. friend from Labelle, who is a student of history, does not forget, I am sure, that it was the exaggeration of state rights in the United States which created their trouble. We must not exaggerate provincial rights. We are bound, after all, to live together here ; let us not be afraid, then, to meet each other face to face, especially on the ground of science. A French Canadian physician is quite able to hold his own against any physician of any other race. I, for one, am not afraid of this Bill, far from it. As the Prime Minister has remarked, when this Bill has gone into force, you will see French Canadian doctors practising their profession in the other provinces more freely than they are doing now.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This Bill is being opposed by a certain number of gentlemen on this side of the House on the ground that it constitutes an infringement of what they call provincial rights. Now, I am one of those who do not believe in the cry of wolf, that provincial rights are being invaded. I think we ought to resist any attempt to invade them; but I certainly do not think that we ought to cry wolf when the wolf is not in sight. I think that remark applies to the present case. There is absolutely no attempt to invade provincial rights by this Bill; and I am sure if my hon. friends, instead of reading only one clause of the Bill had read it in its entirety and had construed each clause by the others, they would have perceived that this Bill is nothing more or less than an enactment by this parliament that constitutes an invitation to the provincial legislatures to co-operate with us fully to occupy a ground that neither alone can occupy completely. Now, my hon. friends talk of provincial legislatures having exclusive rights. The provincial legislatures and the federal parliament have exclusive rights, but there is a common ground that both can occupy. There is no question better settled in this country by those who have studied law, than that any provincial legislature may occupy a ground of legislation until such time as the Dominion parliament steps in and takes the place of the provincial legislature. Take the case of insolvency legislation, for instance. The point was settled beyond dispute by the Imperial Privy Council that the Ontario legislature had the right to legislate with respect to bankruptcy; but the Privy Council said : You have right to legislate with respect to bankruptcy until such times as the ground is taken up by the federal parliament ; only until then. So there is a common ground that both the legislature and the parliament may occupy.

Something was said about legislation by delegation. Now, about the time that the case of the Queen and Hodges was decided it is undoubted that there was some difference of opinion among the judges of this country as to whether a body could legislate by delegation. But there never was a time when there was any doubt that you could legislate by reference. Take a case that comes up here every day, a case well known to all, the jury system in a province. You have in the Criminal Code a clause which declares that the provincial jury system shall be applicable to criminal cases. If there is one thing we have a right to do, it is to legislate here with respect to criminal procedure. But we adopt provincial legislation with respect to the jury system and we make it our own. That is what is called legislation by reference, that is not legislation by delegation. Legislation by delegation is that which the leader of the opposition spoke of a moment ago, for instance, that with respect to municipalities. However, I do not propose to discuss this at great length, because it is a very easy matter to make a cheap display of knowledge in a matter of this sort.

When this Bill first came up the Department of Justice examined it closely to see whether there was any attempt to encroach upon provincial rights, or whether the Bill was inter vires of the power of this parliament. As this is a matter of importance, and as no doubt an attempt will be made to create the impression that we are endeavouring to encroach on provincial rights, if the House will bear with me, I will state the conclusion I formed at the time the Bill came to the Department of Justice. If you will look at it carefully you will see that the whole scheme of the Bill is after all a scheme to incorporate a medical council for Canada, composed of representatives of the several provinces and universities, with power to issue certificates of medical qualification. Now, that is a general scheme. No effect is attached to these certificates by the Bill, but the object of the council is to have these qualifications recognized by the provinces to as to establish ultimately uniformity of qualification, and a general status for the profession. The attainment of this object is one of the purposes expressly stated in section 4. I draw attention to that section, it is one of the most important in the whole Bill. It is stated to be :

> The enactment, with the consent and at the instance of the medical councils of the various provinces of Canada, of such provincial legislation as is necessary to supplement the provisions of this Act, and to effect the foregoing purposes.

So you see this Bill has no effect at all until such times as this medical council—which you undoubtedly have a right to create—gets the powers that have to be conferred upon it by the provincial legislatures. It must be borne in mind that the provincial medical council continues to exist, and continues to issue certificates, as it does to-day, and it is only those who are looking for a broader ideal for that profession that will come under the operation of this medical council and get a certificate.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Permit me to suggest, what I forgot to mention a moment ago, that in my own province, at least the legislature confers upon the medical council of the province the right to legislate, an illustration of the very thing which is attempted by this Bill, that is, legislation by reference.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. In addition to that, you have the provision in the section that has been amended to-night, which practically declares that this Bill shall have no force, shall not become operative, until such times as all the provinces of the Dominion have concurred, that is to say, until all the provinces of the Dominion, acting through their legislatures, shall have adopted this legislation, taken it up and adopted it and made it their own. Now, if we make this legislation dependent upon the action of the provincial legislatures, where is the encroachment on provincial rights ?

An attempt was made a moment ago to make a comparison between this legislation and the provision of the British North America Act, which has reference to uniformity of laws; and my hon. friend confused the matter by saying that the British North America Act provided for the unification of the bar. There is no reference of that sort in the British North America Act, there is no reference to the bar. But in this section 94, which is a special section, provision is made for a departure from the whole scheme of the British North America Act. The whole scheme of the British North America Act is that the legislature shall have exclusive control over laws affecting property and civil rights in the province. But section 94, which is a departure from that, provides that with respect to some of the provinces there can be uniformity of law. But that is not what we are attempting to do here at all. Now, to conclude what I said a moment ago, I will read the opinion I gave at the time the Bill came to the department for examination :

> The Bill is in effect a proposal carefully thought out constituting nothing more than an invitation to the provinces to legislate to adopt the qualifications to be established by the Dominion council. It is quite optional with each of the provinces whether it will accept this invitation or not, so long as any province does not legislate in the manner necessary to supplement the provisions of this Bill it cannot be in any wise affected by the Bill. It is certain that the proposal, in order to have any effective result as to any province requires joint legislation by the Dominion and the province. The Bill is an attempt perfectly constitutional and legal, I think, to give effect to a scheme which owing to what may be termed the defects of the federal system cannot come into operation except by joint action.

Mr. BELCOURT. I hope the House will pardon me if I trespass at this late hour by taking up a few moments in discussing one aspect of the Bill which has not been referred to at any great length before. Whilst I am prepared to support the Bill on the general and broad grounds so well given to the House by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and other hon. gentlemen who followed him, and whilst I agree entirely with those grounds as well as with the ground that this Bill is absolutely constitutional and within the power of this House to enact, I want to point out to some of my hon. friends from the province of Quebec that in looking at this question they are doing it exclusively from the point of view of some of the French Canadians of that province. I want to look at it from the point of view of the French Canadians in the province of Ontario, for whom I think I have some warrant to speak, as I am one of the two representatives of the French Canadians in the province of Ontario. I think I voice the feeling of the 250,000 French Canadians in the province of Ontario, when I say that they are desirous of having medical men of their own tongue to minister to their wants in case of illness, and that this Bill is going to confer a great boon upon them. Much difficulty has been experienced in the past on many occasions in securing the aid of such medical men in the city of Ottawa, and the difficulty has not been confined to the city of Ottawa. It has been experienced all along the Ottawa river, and all along the boundary line between the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario. People living on either side of the boundary line have not been able to secure the services of medical gentlemen living on the opposite side. To my own knowledge for several years past a number of medical men have come to Ottawa from the province of Quebec with the intention of practising their profession. Because they were not sufficiently familiar with the English language they have found difficulty in passing the examination necessary before they are permitted to practice in this province, and these gentlemen after one or two unsuccessful attempts to pass this examination have gone back to the province of Quebec.

Mr. LEMIEUX. That is not a compliment. All the members of the medical profession in the province of Quebec speak both languages.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux). I may say that there are many who are able to speak both languages who would find difficulty in undergoing a technical examination in English. I do not think that in saying that I cast any reflection upon the medical gentlemen of the province of Quebec; or upon their scientific or literary attainments. The number of French Canadian doctors in the province of Ontario is altogether inadequate to the wants of the French Canadians who live in this province. In view of that fact, I hope that this Bill will be adopted

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Mr. Speaker, I wish to explain why I am compelled, as I am compelled, to vote in favour of the amendment. I regret exceedingly if the vote which I feel obliged to give on this occasion should be interpreted as being in any way hostile to any well-directed movement made in this country in favour of broadening our Canadianism. I appreciated very much the remarks made by the right hon. leader of the government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and by his colleagues, and I appreciate the motive of the hon. member for Montreal, St. Antoine (Mr. Roddick). Referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) who spoke for the inhabitants of one end of the province of Quebec and also of the adjoining portion of the province of Ontario, I may say that I represent a constituency situated at the other end of the province of Quebec, which occupies towards the province of New Brunswick the same position that this portion of the province of Quebec occupies towards Ontario. I have come to the conclusion that under the circumstances we have not had produced either in this House, or before the special committee that was charged with the consideration of this Bill, an expression of opinion from the medical profession of the province of Quebec. I hold in my hand a memoir which was addressed to parliament by La Société Médicale de Quebec in which they raise very serious objections to this Bill, and in which they state that through a misunderstanding they were unable to have their views placed before the committee. They very reasonably ask that this Bill be deferred until next session for further consideration. If the object to be attained is one to bring together all the medical men from the various provinces, I think that nothing should be done which would be of a nature to cause any friction between the various provinces. I have no difficulty in understanding that the English provinces of the Dominion will immediately accept this Bill, but the position of the province of Quebec is very different from that of the English provinces. Quebec has an educational system of its own. Its universities guide its classical studies. This medical council will, should this Act go into force and be ratified as it may be by the provincial legislature, have the power to control the curriculum of studies in the various educational institutions in Quebec.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Absolutely none.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). I understand the Minister of Justice (Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick) to say absolutely none; but subsection (c) , clause 4, says that one of the purposes of the council is :

> The determination and fixing of the qualifications and conditions necessary for registration, including the courses of studies to be pursued, the examinations to be undergone, and generally the requisites for registration.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Registration, where ?

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Under the authority of this medical council.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Exactly.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). But here is the position in which this matter will stand twelve months hence if this Bill shall go through the House unopposed to-night and which the English provinces will accept : Will the province of Quebec be placed at the bar of public opinion in this Dominion, because, in trying to protect its own educational interests, it refuses to accept this law ? I do not say it will, but I do not think it is fair to the French province of this Dominion to put it in that position. Like every other member of this House, I would like to see science make more rapid progress even than the wonderful strides it has made lately, but I do not wish this to be done at the expense of the good understanding and good feeling which should prevail between the various provinces of this Dominion. We have the example of the neighbouring states. In the neigbouring states no federal authority has attempted to legislate in the matter of medical diplomas. That power rests exclusively with each state which is one of the rights now enjoyed by the provinces.

Mr. RODDICK. They are about arranging a scheme similar to ours, providing for a national council.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Well, the Americans are a very progressive people. If they have reached an arrangement of that kind in the United States, I do not say that it will not be reached in Canada, but my sincere conviction is that the immense majority of the medical practitioners in the province of Quebec are at this moment, and until they are convinced to the contrary, opposed to this Bill for the reason that the promoters have gone about it in the wrong way. They are trying to deal by federal authority with the question of education which is one of the sacred rights of the provinces, and for that reason, I consider it is my duty to vote in favour of the amendment.

House divided on the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Main motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 166) to incorporate the Securities Bank of Canada.—Mr. Calvert.

On motion of the Prime Minister, House adjourned at 12.10 a.m. Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, May 9, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved :

That the provisions of rule 60 requiring twenty-four hours' notice of private Bills originating in the Senate before being considered by the committee of this House to which they are referred, be suspended for the remainder of the session.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax) What is the particular reason for this ?

Mr. FLINT. A number of Bills usually come from the Senate at a late stage of the session, and if such a motion as this is not adopted, they cannot be considered at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The difficulty is that persons who may desire to be heard with regard to these Bills will have no opportunity of presenting their views before the committee. A case of that kind was brought to my notice this morning. A Bill is on the Order paper for the second reading to-night, and if this motion be adopted, it will go to the committee to-morrow morning, and it would be impossible to arrange that persons who wish to be heard with regard to that Bill should be present. However great may be the desire to close the session on a particular day, that must not be carried so far as to prevent those who are interested in these matters from being heard. I am as much desirous as any other gentleman to have our labours terminated at an early date, but we cannot do that at the expense of denying these people the right to be heard. I can only assent to the motion on the understanding that sufficient time will be given to parties interested to place their views before the committee.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). I do not think that any injustice will be done to any person if this motion passes. If representations were made that the parties interested in a Bill desired to be heard, no committee would think of pressing that Bill forward under this rule if injustice were to be done. We sometimes forget in dealing with business of a public nature that these Bills of incorporation and other private Bills are of the utmost importance to those interested in them, and that every opportunity should be given to have them passed before prorogation. This is an ordinary motion which is made near the end of each session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not much in favour of suspending the rules of the House, except for very urgent reasons. This motion seems to have been usual in the past, and I shall not object to it at present, provided it is distinctly understood that it shall only apply to Bills which are not opposed, and that Bills which are opposed shall be suspended for a sufficient length of time to give reasonable facilities to those who desire to be heard in opposition.

Mr. FLINT. There can be no objection to that understanding.

Motion was agreed to.

THE MILLER CREEK CONCESSION.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to inform the government, particularly the hon. Minister of the Interior, that I have received a further communication from the miners whose telegram I read in the House the other day, asking for a reply to the message which was then sent, respecting the Miller Creek concession. I would like the hon. minister to state whether any answer has been sent, and generally what the position of the matter is.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I cannot say now. As the hon. gentleman knows, yesterday was a holiday, and it was impossible to get the records, the clerks being all away. I will have the matter looked up, and I shall be able to state to the hon. member this afternoon just how it stands.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to mention to the hon. Prime Minister that I have received a communication from the hon. member for South Wentworth (Mr. Smith), inquiring as to two returns which he states had not been brought down when he left the House a few day ago. One was an order for copies of all tenders for the carrying of the mail from Hamilton to Guelph. He states further, that early in the session he moved for copies of the contracts with steamship companies receiving subsidies from the government, and that these had not been brought down when he left the House. He is anxious to have them brought down as soon as possible.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I now lay on the Table a return to the order which the hon. gentleman is asking for.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 134) respecting the representation of the Yukon Territory in the House of Commons.—The Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). I wish to move a few small changes in the Bill. There are two slight changes in section 8, to improve the wording, and to make the meaning clear. I have been furnished with a copy of the amendments suggested by my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster). The most of these amendments I see no objection to, but there is one which involves a radical change in the principle of appointment, and which we would have to debate. I would suggest that we first go through the Act and make the clerical amendments I suggest, after having carefully examined and revised the clauses. Then we will go back and take up my hon. friend's amendments one after the other.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That will be all right, it being understood that we have the same rights exactly as if we had not gone through the Bill.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved that section 18 be amended by inserting after the word 'Canada' in the forty-fifth line, 'or a cheque for that amount accepted by such bank.' This is to make the Act accord with the change in the law by which a certified cheque may be accepted as deposit.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The sections 40, 41 and 42 provide for a man being placed on the list on polling day after he has taken the oath. I may say that that principle was not in the North-west Territories Representation Act, but an amendment was subsequently passed providing that that might be done. I do not think that it will work satisfactorily in the territories. Hon. gentlemen will agree with me that in a place like the Yukon, where there is a large floating population, it is desirable that the list should be final, and that upon election day an election should not be capable of being influenced by a large number of persons who might come to the poll and simply take the oath. The original North-west Territories Representation Act did not make any such provision, but provided that the lists should be final.

In 1899 an amendment was passed, at whose instance I do not know, authorizing persons to vote on taking the oath upon election day. I know that at the last general election that was found to be unsatisfactory. Persons were unaware whether they had the right to vote or not and where they could vote, and, generally there was a lack of certainty about what the rights of the voters are which always arises when the list is not final. Parliament has decided many times that whatever disadvantages there may be about having a voters' list, one of the great advantages is that when it is made up and fairly revised, it is final.

Mr. INGRAM. How long before election day would the voters' list be considered to be final ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The list is made up pending the election, after the proclamation is issued; and, when the voters' list is completed as provided in the Act, it is final.

Mr. INGRAM. How many days before the election does the final revision take place ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No change can be made later than two days before the election, according to the present Bill as it is drawn. In that it follows the provisions of the old North-west Territories Act. That is not a matter to which I am wedded. If it is desired to make it longer, I would have no objection. But I am quite clear in my mind that it is not at all desirable that after the list is made up, and on election day, persons would have the right to vote simply on taking an affidavit. For, in that case, you might as well have no voters' list at all. I regret to say that we cannot always depend, as much as we would like to do, upon the indisposition of persons whom we should be able to trust, to take an oath that is not true. So I will ask the committee to amend these sections. I furnished my hon. friend the leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax), with a copy of the amendment to section 41, but, as it did not seem to be very well drawn I have changed it slightly. It is as follows :—

In case any person whose name is on the list refuses to take either of the said oaths, erasing lines shall be drawn through his name on the voters' list and the words 'refused to be sworn' written thereafter, and such person whose name is so erased shall not be permitted to vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It would be better to say 'shall not be permitted to vote at said election,' to make it perfectly clear that it does not apply to any subsequent election.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All right.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that section 42 be amended to read as follows :—

Every voter shall be entitled to vote whose name is on the voters' list and has not been erased therefrom in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Act.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) The territory covered by this Bill is a very large one. How is it possible for the returning officer to get correct lists if the final corrections in the list are made only two days before the election ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The system was worked out in the North-west Territories with especial reference to the fact that there is an enumerator for each polling division. The list is not necessarily sent back to the returning officer for the whole constituency and by him returned to the deputy returning officer, but is made up by the enumerator for each polling subdivision.

Amendments agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I move to amend section 15, by adding the following subsection :

At least fifty copies of the said notice shall also be published by proclamation at least two weeks before the nomination posted up in conspicuous places throughout the territory at sufficient distances from each other to ensure notice to all parts of the said electoral district.

I do not know whether the hon. minister is willing to agree to the proposed amendment. If he is, I shall not waste the time of the House in discussing it, but if not, I will say a few words.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no objection to the principle at all. I would just say in reference to this amendment, that the Bill was carefully gone through by Mr. Ross, the commissioner, when he was here, and there were a number of changes made to suit the local circumstances of the case. Mr. Ross assured me that he was perfectly satisfied with it after he had revised it. The question of the publication of the notice, I think, was sufficiently considered, and he was satisfied that the provision was all right. The hon. gentleman will notice that there is a change made in the usual method, by providing that notice shall be published in the newspapers, and I presume that Mr. Ross thought that would be quite sufficient. I have not the least objection to the hon. gentleman's suggestion if he thinks it will be safer to have fifty notices posted up.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think it would be necessary, for the reason that without this amendment nobody in the district would have any chance of knowing anything about the election going on, unless he saw the notice in one of the daily newspapers published at Dawson, or in the daily newspaper published at White Horse. If he did not see it in the newspaper published at White Horse or Dawson, he would have no opportunity of knowing that an election was about to be held, and I am inclined to think, in view of what the hon. minister has said, that he did not think of that fact, and as the hon. minister sees no objection to the amendment, I think it ought to be adopted.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think it is hardly safe to put in the words 'in all parts,' because the electoral district is the whole Yukon district. It would be absolutely impossible to get these notices into all parts, because there are inaccessible parts, but, the hon. gentleman might make it more general, and use these words : 'to ensure notice generally throughout the said electoral district.'

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). That would be better, because it would be a hard matter to have these notices distributed throughout that country.

Mr. LANCASTER. It might be a very hard matter, as the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Ross) suggests, but it would also be a very hard matter if the voters in these districts should not get notice. They are the people who elect the representatives. Of course, I do not think you would be bound to post notices in the wilderness.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Suppose you say : 'to ensure notice generally through the said electoral district'?

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). How would it do to say that these notices should be put up at the post offices ? Surely there would be a post office wherever there would be any number of people to vote. Suppose they were sent to the postmasters, and the postmasters were ordered to put them up.

Mr. LANCASTER. The objection to that would be that the postmasters might not do it. This is a distribution of responsibility which is very unsafe. I think that the hon. minister will agree with me that we are right in keeping the responsibility confined to as few people as possible, because the moment we distribute the responsibility we lose the benefit of the provision. The postmasters might not put them up, or they might not put them up in sufficient time to give the necessary notice. If the hon. minister thinks the language I propose a little too strong, I would suggest that we use these words : 'to ensure notice to all parts of the said electoral district where there are voters.' Wherever there are voters they should have a chance to know that an election is about to be held.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That will do ; but I want to make sure that we are not putting in a provision that would be impracticable. Suppose there were ten or twenty voters who had gone on an expedition 500 miles away to an inaccessible part, you would then run the risk of having the election declared void if it were brought before the court. What we should do is to use words that the court will give a construction to that we want it to give. We want the court, if this comes up for construction, to say that the notice must have been put up bona fide, so as to give what we all consider to be proper notice. We ought not to use any words which will compel the court to hold something which will be contrary to common sense. Suppose we say : 'At sufficient distance from each other to ensure general and sufficient notice throughout the said electoral district.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that would do.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. With that, I will agree to the amendment. Perhaps we had better go through the amendments and discuss them before changing the Bill.

Mr. LANCASTER. Perhaps I had better insert these words suggested by the hon. minister : 'To ensure general and sufficient notice throughout the said electoral district.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think before changing the Bill we had better discuss the various amendments, and we can then come back and change the sections that we decide to amend.

Mr. LANCASTER. And I also propose to amend section 16, by adding the following words : 'and shall give the same notice on the day fixed for such later nomination in the newspapers, and by proclamation, as is required by section 15 of this Act.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no objection to that ; but I am doubtful about the next one.

Mr. LANCASTER. I propose that section 17 shall be amended by striking out the word 'four,' in the third line of said section, and inserting instead thereof the word 'twenty-five.'

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think that it would be well to make it twenty-five. Twenty-five is the number provided for in the general Act. The hon. gentleman has not lived in a sparsely settled district. I have seen cases, for instance in Manitoba, where a candidate came very nearly not getting his nomination paper in because he had very great difficulty getting a sufficient number of voters to sign it on the last day. I remember once being very nearly not being able to get my own nomination paper signed. It was left until the last two or three days. I was away, and my agent was away, and it was very difficult. It was a rural district ; there were no towns in the district, and a man had to drive from one farmer's house to another getting their signatures. It was a tremendous job, and took two days, and we just barely got the nomination paper signed in time. In a sparsely settled district the number should not be placed too high. I have no objection to having it placed at fifteen.

Mr. LANCASTER. We had better say 15. Four is so few that it is hardly a proper nomination.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Make it 15.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I move to amend section 25 by adding at the end thereof :

Each polling division shall contain not less than 100 and not more than 200 qualified voters.

There is nothing in the Bill which says what shall be the number of voters in each polling place, and while I do not pretend to say that the number in the amendment is the most desirable number, yet I think a maximum and a minimum should be provided.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The idea is quite right, but I think that the minimum limit mentioned by the hon. gentleman is too high. There may be groups of miners at a distance where it would be necessary to have a polling place, and perhaps if the minimum were fixed at 25 it would meet the case. Of course in a closely settled place like Dawson city, the maximum might be put at 200 or even 300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax) What is the minimum in the General Election Act ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. 200, but 400 or 500 could vote quite easily in a day in a polling place.

Mr. LANCASTER. Probably the minister has not been scrutineer so often as I have, and I know that it takes a good while to count 200 votes. If there is any delay because of objection to the voters, or because of swearing them, there is difficulty in polling even 200 in the one booth.

Mr. INGRAM. On general principles I am in favour of the maximum being 400 or 500 instead of 200, because it saves expense, and under the present law we have too many polling booths throughout the country. In Dawson city the maximum might be 300, but in other districts in such a country as that you might not have more than 15 who could vote at the one polling place, and I would certainly not be in favour of disfranchising them. Perhaps a provision could be made that in sparsely settled districts the minimum would be so much, and in thickly populated districts so much.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It would be hardly desirable to hold a poll unless you have at least 25 voters. I have not been a scrutineer perhaps so often as my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster), but I have been around polling booths since I was 15 years old, and I have never yet seen a case where a voter could not vote if he was there to vote.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. It must be remembered that if there are 300 voters' names on the list, probably not more than 220 will vote.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will make the minimum 25, and the maximum 200.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I beg to move to amend section 26 by adding the following subsection.

The proclamation of the granting of such poll shall be published for at least two weeks preceding the taking of such poll, in the newspapers and by posting up as provided by section 15 of this Act.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is all right.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. I beg to move to amend section 27 :

By inserting after the word 'election' in the third line, the words 'and in twelve other of the most conspicuous polling places in each polling division.'

There should be a posting up at some other places than at the polling booth.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Say four places instead of twelve.

Mr. LANCASTER. Very well.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. The amendments which I propose to move now, more or less stand or fall together. The principle of the Act without the amendment which I shall move is that the returning officer shall appoint the enumerator, and that enumerator shall make out the voters' list. I submit that we ought to try to get more in accordance with what has been found to work very well in the rest of the Dominion, and to have a more responsible person in charge of these lists. The returning officer in any other part of Canada takes the poll. He begins at the beginning of an election and his work is done at the end of the election, and he returns a certain person as elected. Here he is entrusted with a much wider duty, one that is performed in the rest of Canada by a judge ; that is, the duty of deciding who shall be qualified to vote at an election. I submit that we ought not to depart in the Yukon from the practice which we have found to be very satisfactory in the rest of Canada, of entrusting to a person like a judge, having the responsibility, the ability and the legal knowledge necessary, the control of the voters' lists. Therefore, I am moving to strike out section 28, which provides that the Governor in Council may appoint enumerators to make lists of the electors, and to enact the following :

The Chief Justice of the said Territory shall each year before the first day of August appoint under his hand a competent and reliable person or persons to be enumerator or enumerators for all polling divisions of such electoral district, and such Chief Justice shall see that no polling division is omitted to be included in some one of such appointments.

I presume that the Chief Justice would select as enumerators municipal officers or people whom he would know to be competent and reliable. I do not suppose that the Governor in Council is the only body that can properly select the enumerators. On the contrary, I would think that the resident Chief Justice of the territory would be the most satisfactory person to everybody concerned. In Ontario, and I presume in Quebec and the other provinces, we have municipal clerks to perform this duty as a matter of course. As there are not yet municipal clerks in the Yukon, I cannot suggest them ; but I think that the Chief Justice of the Territory, for the reasons I have stated, would be the best person to have control of the selection of the enumerators and the making-up of the voters' lists. The other amendments, as I have said, will not be necessary if this amendment is not made, and therefore I need not discuss them until it is decided upon, unless the hon. minister prefers that I should do so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The government have no objection at all to the principle that the Chief Justice or the senior Judge of the Territory shall appoint the enumerators. We do not desire to retain that power in our hands. Therefore, so far as the principle of the amendment is concerned, we concede it at once. But I do not think my hon. friend is correct in saying that his other amendments depend on this one. I think it is the other way. My hon. friend wants this change made so that the making-up of the list shall be taken out of the hands of the government and put into the hands of an independent tribunal. That being the case, he does not require the same precautions respecting the making-up of the list. In the old North-west Territories Act, which my hon. friend will remember was passed by his friends, and under which we laboured at some disadvantage for a number of years, the Governor in Council appointed the enumerator to make the lists, and he required no affidavit, no evidence, and there was no appeal of any kind whatever from his decisions.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is as this Bill is without this amendment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That was the most remarkable Act ever passed in Canada.

Mr. INGRAM. We have that in Ontario.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No, you have a revising officer, and you have a right of appeal.

Mr. INGRAM. Not for a list of this character. The hon. minister is referring to the old form of municipal lists ; but we also have a registration of voters, largely on this line, in cities and towns.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under the old North-west Territories Act, which in a general way we are following in this Bill, the Governor in Council appointed the enumerators, and there was no revision. I admit that that is not a fair position for any political party to occupy ; and for that reason I do not think my hon. friend is unreasonable in asking that a judicial officer like the Chief Justice or the senior Judge of the Territory should appoint the enumerators. But I wish to point out to my hon. friend that in the clause he has drawn he has followed the idea that the lists are to be made up every year, while the scheme of the Act is that the lists should only be made up for an election and I do not want to depart from that. I am content to accept my hon. friend's suggestion ; but I would not be satisfied that we had the provisions in a satisfactory, workable shape, by just drawing them here hurriedly.

Mr. INGRAM. Let me make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman. In the Ontario Registration Act, it is provided that seven days after the dissolution of parliament the registrars shall be called for the purpose of preparing a list of those entitled to register. In this Bill it could be provided that the registration should take place within seven days after the issue of the writ or at some other specified time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is exactly what the scheme of the Act is at present. This section provides that the lists shall be made up immediately after the issue of the writ.

I will accept my hon. friend's suggestion that the Chief Justice or senior judge should designate the enumerators, but I think we should retain the scheme of this Act and provide that he should designate the enumerators within a certain number of days, and be notified to do so at the same time that the writ is sent to the returning officer.

Mr. INGRAM. I am satisfied to accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion. His idea is that the Chief Justice or senior judge should be appointed to designate the enumerators instead of the Governor in Council.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If we agree on that, I presume my hon. friend will not insist on the subsequent amendment requiring an affidavit for qualification.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think I ought to insist on that because the Chief Justice ought to have some rule on which he is to proceed. We should define what sort of evidence he must take. In other provinces there must be a declaration or personal attendance and swearing. There should be some rule of evidence to guide the Chief Justice and the enumerators in the matter. There is one thing I do not understand. How is the hon.

minister going to fix the day for doing this? If you wait until the writ is issued, you will never have time enough to properly register these people. There is this difference between my proposition and the hon. minister's. He begins to count from a date unknown. He begins to count back from the election, while I am trying to fix some day before the election and do everything from that time forward, and if there should be a little time between the completion of the lists and polling day that will not do any harm. But if you begin so many days from the day of polling, and should not be able to get through with the work by polling day you will have chaos and trouble. I am glad the hon. minister accepts my suggestion that the Chief Justice should appoint the enumerators, but I would like to know when the Chief Justice will begin to do that. Would it not be well for him to do it on the first of August this year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We cannot work that.

Mr. LANCASTER. The Chief Justice should know when he has to appoint these enumerators, and unless we fix a special time, how is he to know it ?

Mr. GOURLEY. How would it do to send a notice to the senior judge, immediately on sending the writs to the returning officer, and provide that he should immediately commence having the lists made up, and have them completed within say three months of the receipt of such notice. That would be fixing a definite date at which the list would be completed. In your writ you could say that the nomination would take place a fortnight or a month after the completion of the lists. That would give ample opportunity for the lists to be properly completed. You could provide that the Chief Justice, say three months from the time he gets his notice, shall have the list completed, and then in the writ fix the date of nomination one month after the lists are completed.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We have to do one of two things. We have to decide on an annual list or a list for the election. There is no middle course. We must have the one thing or the other. I think the committee will admit that it would be quite unnecessary and useless to have an annual list. The hon. gentleman knows from experience under the late Dominion Franchise Act that when people did not think there was going to be an election they did not register, and some times the elections came on when the lists were very imperfect. The proper principle is to have the lists made up for the election. The one thing we have to decide is what shall be the period when the judge shall appoint enumerators who will set to work and make up the lists.

Mr. INGRAM. Is it the intention of the government to have the elections in the Yukon on the same day as the general elections throughout the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The general elections, certainly.

Mr. INGRAM. I was going to suggest a way out of the difficulty if the government did not intend doing that. If the general elections in the Yukon would take place at a certain time after the general elections in the Dominion, the lists could then be prepared, because every one would know that the elections would take place three, or six months after the general elections in the Dominion. That would do away with the expense of the annual lists and give ample time for making up the list before the elections, and no advantage would accrue to either party other than that which of course falls, especially in a district like the Yukon, to the party elected to power.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The trouble is that that does not get over the difficulty. The Election Act should provide for the different contingencies that may arise. We wish to provide machinery for holding the first election; and, in case the member who is elected should unfortunately die, we want it in such shape that we can hold another election. We want to get back to the same point and decide what should initiate proceedings, and I think the initiation of proceedings must be the issue of the writ. The Governor in Council must decide when the writ shall issue, and we can work out the rest of it very simply by providing that when the writ is issued, notice shall be sent to the Chief Justice and he shall order that the lists shall be made up.

Mr. LANCASTER. If the minister will say that they will issue the writ in time for these things to be done, that is a good way to fix the date. But you will have to issue the writ a good while before the election.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will submit the draft to my hon. friend. We cannot make the amendment this morning, because I must have the law clerk examine the draft and see that the duties dovetail in correctly.

Mr. LANCASTER. In the next section, No. 29, I move in amendment that the word 'immediately' be struck out. And the words 'within thirty days' be inserted instead thereof. The word 'immediately' seemed to me too wide; it is construed in all kinds of ways by judges and others. The enumerator, to do his work properly, should be limited to a certain time. He can do it the next day, if he wishes, but this provides a limit of thirty days. He might think that 'immediately' in the Yukon would mean two or three months.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR I do not see any objection to the amendment.

Mr. LANCASTER. I move that this section, No. 29, be amended by adding the following subsection :

(a) In the compilation of such list the enumerator may only enter therein the names of such person or persons as appear upon the last revised list or shall by statutory declaration filed with him be declared, by such person or some agent having a personal knowledge of the facts declared to, to possess the qualifications necessary to entitle him to vote under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. GERMAN. I do not think that 'the last revised list' should have anything to do with it. In a constituency such as this, where the people are shifting continually, the last revised list will have the names of a great many people who have left the district; and, in order to get their names off it will be necessary to prove that they have left. There should be an absolutely new list for each election.

Mr. LANCASTER. I might explain that I intend to propose amendments later on which will allow striking names off the list. The reason I have worded it in the way I have is this—if a man knows that he was on the list last year, and is still a resident, he would not unnaturally suppose that he is still on the list. And so, even in the absence of his own declaration or in the absence of some agent, it would not be wrong for the officer to leave his name there. I propose to make provision that if his name should be struck off, it can be done on application to the Chief Justice.

Mr. GERMAN. I have had a good deal to do with the revision of the voters' list, and my experience is that it is a good deal more difficult to get names off than to get them on. If we had a system of registration, we could do as they do throughout the whole of the United States. There, when an election is to be held, everybody has to register irrespective of whether his name was on the voters' list or not. And no matter who a man may be, even if he is the greatest millionaire in the country, if he is a congressman or senator, he must register if he wishes to vote. In the Yukon, we should adopt a system similar to that, and the voters' list should be made up absolutely new.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to suggest to the minister and my hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara (Mr. Lancaster) that, perhaps, it would be better to word that section in some such way as this : 'Such enumerator, upon his appointment, and having first taken the oath of office shall, immediately thereafter proceed to compile and within thirty days shall complete'—and so on. To leave the word 'compile' alone might possibly create a little uncertainty.

Mr. LANCASTER. I have no objection.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is what my hon. friend (Mr. Lancaster) intended, I think.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But, perhaps it expresses it a little more distinctly.

Mr. GOURLEY. I think that thirty days is too short. In a big district like the Yukon, it should be at least ninety days. Let the compilation begin immediately, and be finished within ninety days.

Mr. INGRAM. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gourley) must not forget that the intention of that Act is that each polling subdivision shall have an enumerator whose duty it shall be to prepare the list for the polling subdivision.

Mr. GOURLEY. But some of the residents may be two hundred miles away.

Mr. INGRAM. It does not make any differenc if they are two thousand miles away. A polling division is to contain not less than twenty-five or more than two hundred electors. The enumerator has thirty days within which to make the list, and it does not make any difference if the constituency stretches for ten thousand miles beyond the limits of the polling subdivisions—the enumerator has only to do with his own part of it. We must avoid the mistake we are making in Ontario where we have the registration system in our cities and county towns. We have not sufficient time in Ontario for the registration, and that is the curse of the system. We want to have the lists in the Yukon completed a sufficiently long time before the election for the people to know who have votes and who have not. That, I take it, is the object desired by the leader of the opposition and the member for Lancaster and Niagara.

Mr. GOURLEY. The objection I raise had nothing to do with the size of the constituency, but with the size of the polling division. Have a clause, providing, that not less than thirty or sixty days after your lists are completed, the writs are to be issued and the election take place. But I would say two months. What my learned friend says is very just, that in a town or small district in Ontario, thirty days would be enough. But no matter whether there is an enumerator appointed for every electoral district in the Yukon or not, I fancy many electoral districts will be more than 200 miles in extent. I have lived in the North-west, and I know that electors may be 50 or 100 miles apart; and how is an enumerator to make up his list and give people an opportunity, in thirty days to come to the court ? Half of them would never know there was an enumerator appointed, and half of them would never know it was their duty to go to that enumerator within thirty days. You want sixty or ninety days.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is quite immaterial whether we send the writs to the returning officer and at the same time send a notice to the judge, or whether you send a notice to the judge and two months after send the writs to the returning officer.

Mr. GOURLEY. It ought to be 60 days anyhow.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not see how we can work these other amendments respecting an appeal.

Mr. LANCASTER. The minister means that there would not be time for the appeals.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR There would not be time, it would be wholly impossible. We give you all the protection we can ; we give you the appointment of the enumerator by the chief justice, and then we give the protection that nobody can go on the list unless there is an affidavit filed.

Mr. LANCASTER. In section 30, the amendment I propose would be all right. It does not deal with the appeal, but it makes the chief justice the custodian of the lists. My amendment to section 30 requires the enumerator to have ten days after completing such list instead of retaining them to deliver them to the chief justice. So the chief justice is the custodian.

Mr. INGRAM. As it is now, the list must be completed eight days before polling day. The hon. gentleman thinks that is not long enough, and that the time should be longer between the completion of the list and the polling. I think so to.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. How many days would you suggest ?

Mr. INGRAM. I should think 30 days at least would be best in that country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. You are not going to get much by that unless you have a general revision.

Mr. INGRAM. Only this. If you crowd the work of completing the list, if the time is too short, then you are working at a disadvantage. But if you would have ample time, 30 days will be long enough. In Ontario we have not ample time, the work is crowded. There is much time devoted to the preparation of the lists that both parties would rather use in some other way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have no objection to the period between the completion of the list and the election being made longer than two days. I think perhaps it might be desirable that the lists should be completed and everybody should know who had a right to vote, for a longer period than two days. But it is to be remembered that the enumerator appointed by the chief justice shall both make up and revise the list. So there is no object in having a longer period of time. The object in having a longer period of time in other places is to permit that revision to take place. But in this case it is the enumerator appointed by the chief justice who revises the lists as well as makes them up ; and for that purpose six days or ten days would be just as good as a hundred days. But we will say ten days.

Mr. GOURLEY. No matter whether the enumerator makes up the list or not, every man in the electoral district wants to know of it, and wants to have time to get there. The elector must come before the enumerator and show that he has a right to vote. Surely the enumerator would not be permitted to sit down in 24 hours and write out the names of those that he thinks ought to be on. People residing in that electoral district must know that that man has power to make up the list, and they must have ample time to go there and give information that they are within the district and entitled to vote. Supposing the enumerator was appoined at Ottawa to make up the lists, you do not propose that he should sit down and write out the names, and sign the list, and say that is enough. People who are interested must have time to go to the enumerator and show that they have a right to be on that list. There should be at least 30 days allowed, from the time of the appointment of the enumerator in any electoral district before he proceeds to make up his list.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman explain section 29 ? That is the point of difference. It says that the enumerator, upon his appointment, having first taken the oath of office, should immediately after compile the list of persons qualified as electors to vote. It does not say whether he shall have one day, or two days, or how many days.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think perhaps the list ought to be completed not less than a week before the election. I would say six days, if we can agree on that. I am not sure whether what my hon. friend suggests is in the Act or not, but I think provision should be made for a notice to be issued by the enumerator.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman speaks of a week ; but section 30 provides for eight days, that the list shall be completed eight days before polling day.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is the preliminary list. Under section 31 the enumerator has but two days before the election to revise and add to. I would agree that the list should be finally revised at least six days before the election.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Would it not be necessary then to amend section 30 as well, and say fifteen days there, and seven days in section 31 ? If there is any appeal, I should think that ought to be a fair length of time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All right.

Mr. GOURLEY. Do I understand the minister to say he thinks it is right that when an enumerator is appointed by judicial authority some notice should be posted by him in the district showing when the revision took place ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We provide that upon the receipt of his instructions the enumerator shall publish the notice.

Mr. GOURLEY. Then, further, I think there ought to be a time from the publication of that notice to the time when the list shall be finally completed in order that he will know. I think there should be twenty or thirty days.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That will be required to be published at a certain time. We can now insert the amendments which have now been made up to that proposed to be made to section 28, which will have to be redrawn.

Mr. LANCASTER. We agreed to the amendments up to section 29, but not to the amendment to 28.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario). I want to ask the hon. minister whether we are likely to have representatives from the Yukon at the next session of this House ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, certainly, that is the intention. I will have an amendment drawn to cover the spirit and intention of the hon. gentleman's amendment to section 28. I will have the law clerk go through the Bill and draw a provision to cover the notice to be issued by the enumerator. I will have the changes typewritten and show them to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lancaster), and we will take the Bill back into committee at a later time to-day. We want to get the Bill through and send it to the Senate if possible.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 15 be amended by adding the following subsection (e):

(e) At least fifty copies of the said notice shall also be published by proclamation at least two weeks before the nomination posted up in conspicuous places throughout the territory at sufficient distances from each other to ensure general and sufficient notice throughout the said electoral district.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 16 be amended by adding the following words ' and shall give the same notice on the day fixed for such later nomination in the newspapers and by proclamation as is required by section 15 of this Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 17 be amended by striking out the word ' four ' in the third line of such section and inserting instead thereof the words ' fifteen.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 25 be amended by adding at the end thereof the words ' each such polling division shall include not more than two hundred and not less than twenty-five qualified voters.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 26 be amended by adding the following subsection thereto :

(a) A proclamation of the granting of such poll shall be published for at least two weeks immediately preceding the taking of such poll in the newspapers and by posting up as provided in section 15 of this Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 27 be amended by inserting after the word ' election ' in the third line of such section ' and in four other of the most conspicuous places in each polling division.'

Motion agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER moved :

That section 29 be amended by striking out the word ' compile ' in the third line thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the words ' proceed to compile and within thirty days shall complete ' and by adding the following subsection :

(a) In the compilation of such list the enumerator may only enter therein the names of such person or persons as appear upon the last revised list or shall by statutory declaration file with him be declared, by such person or some agent having a personal knowledge of the facts declared to, to possess the qualifications necessary to entitle him to vote under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. GERMAN. I understand that part of the amendment suggests that those names which appear on the last revised list can, pro forma, go on the new list. It is a decidedly bad clause to have there.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It does not say that.

Mr. GERMAN. It says that in making the list the names found on the last revised list may be put on.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is a restrictive clause on the powers of the enumerator. It says that he cannot put anybody there who is not on the last revised list.

Mr. GERMAN. The returning officer, if he has any right to look to the last revised list at all, will take the names of the last revised list and put them on the new list. The enumerator will take a list four years old, and while probably there will not be a man in the locality whose name is on the list, he will take the names on the last revised list and put them on the new list. It will have a most disastrous result to the people in the locality. In appeals it would take not only thirty days, but it would take three months to go through the list of appeals that would be put in against a list made up in that way. If the enumerator is permitted to take this list, the result which I have pointed out will follow. Let him make an absolutely new list without any reference to the old list at all. Let every man who is entitled to vote go in and register under the provisions of the Act. Then you will have an up-to-date list. But if the enumerator has the right to look at the old list you will have innumerable difficulties arising, which will be almost insurmountable in a sparsely settled country.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is something in what the hon. gentleman (Mr. German) has said so far as the practical aspect of the question is concerned.

Mr. GERMAN. You would find a large number of names on the last revised rolls which would have the right to go on the new revised rolls. I would impress on the minister and the House that if you do this you will find an exceedingly large number of names on the last revised roll who have no right to go on the new roll, and the officer can and likely will put them on the new roll, and some one has got to go to the trouble of getting them struck off. My hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) has been like myself, through the mill endeavouring to get names struck off, and he knows that it is a difficult thing to do. Give every facility for registering and let every man register without any reference to the old list.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a good deal in what my hon. friend (Mr. German) has said, but there are two sides to the question. I appreciate the difficulties that may arise if you leave this clause in, but if you have to face the situation that as a great many of these men will live in parts of the country that are remote from any enumerator—unless you should appoint a whole army of enumerators—then if you do not have a clause of this kind a considerable number of persons will be disfranchised. Would it be possible to so frame the clause that the enumerator can use the old list in some way as a basis and exercise his own judgment with regard to it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. He can do that under this clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Possibly he can. Perhaps the best course would be for the minister to consider all the suggestions and give us his own views later on in the day.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I would feel disposed to leave out the words 'last revised assessment roll.' I would not in any other part of the country, but I think the number disqualified from the last revised assessment roll will be very small here. The tendency of the enumerator as the simplest way to discharge his duty would be to put on nearly every one who was on the old list, which would be very unsatisfactory. We will let the matter stand until the Bill comes up again.

NATURALIZATION ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 154) to amend the Naturalization Act (the Prime Minister) read the second time and House went into committee thereon.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The only object of this Bill is to provide that a record shall be kept in the Department of the Secretary of State at Ottawa of all naturalization papers which are granted in Canada. As a rule, naturalization papers are easily obtained and easily lost, and no list is kept of them. Certificates are granted by the courts of the different provinces which are authorized to grant naturalization papers, and the Bill provides that the clerks of those courts shall be required to send lists of all these papers to the Department of the Secretary of State, where access may be had to them at all times.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As the preparation of some of these lists extending back over a considerable number of years would involve considerable labour to the officers of the courts whose duty it is to prepare them, would it not be advisable to provide what fees shall be paid to these officers ?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have thought of that. It would not be possible at present to form an accurate idea of what it would cost; but if there is money to be disbursed, we think it can be taken from the fund provided for the purposes of the Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand it is a matter which is to be taken into consideration ?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT.

House in committee on Bill (No. 119) further to amend the Yukon Territory Act.—The Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The leader of the opposition has given notice of a couple of amendments. The first is that ordinances passed by the Governor in Council should not remain in force longer than the end of the next ensuing session unless approved by resolution of both Houses of parliament. I can see no special objection to the principle of that amendment, and am quite prepared to accept it.

My hon. friend has also given notice of another amendment, but which is really an amendment to the Dominion Lands Act. I presume what he desires is practically to limit the operation of the regulations and ordinances relating to mining under the Dominion Lands Act in the same way as the amendment I have just referred to limits ordinances applicable to the Yukon passed by the Governor in Council. We might insert a clause which would have the effect of operating this restriction as regards the Yukon Territory, but could hardly pass it in this Bill as of general application. If the hon. gentleman will accept my suggestion, I am satisfied.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What the hon. gentleman suggests is perfectly relevant as regards this Bill, though we have ample precedents in the past, even under this administration, for introducing sections of somewhat general application in measures of more limited application. As the territory of the Yukon is altogether the subject of this Bill, I would be disposed to accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman and have the second amendment limited in its operation to the Yukon Territory.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Then, we will accept the first as drawn. The best way, I think, to reach the object of the second amendment would be to insert a new section as section 5 of this Bill, and I beg to submit one which I have rather hurriedly drawn :

Every regulation made by the Governor in Council, under section 5 of the Dominion Lands Act, chapter 54 of the revised statutes of Canada as amended, applicable to the Yukon Territory, shall remain in force until the day immediately succeeding the day of prorogation.

Then we may continue with the rest of the amendment as proposed by my hon. friend. With regard to section 3, considered in connection with the typewritten amendments, of which I furnished the hon. gentleman a copy, in line 38 of the Bill, section 3, it will be seen that the words 'or commissioners in council' are found. Those words were put in when the original Bill was drawn by the late Minister of Justice, because under this section there was a restriction of the power to make ordinances, preventing the commissioner in council imposing taxes. This was done because the commissioners in council were not a body representing the people, but an appointed body. Now, however, they are a representative body, to the extent that half their members are representatives, and under section 2 they have the same powers as the assembly of the North-west Territories. I think, therefore, it would be well to strike out the latter part of the amendment at first proposed. This section will apply only to Acts by the Governor in Council ; and leave off the last section of the typewritten amendment which relates to the power of the commissioner in council. So, I will ask my hon. friend to follow me as I read the section as it would be :

Section 8 of the said Act, as that section is enacted by section 2 of chapter 11 of the statutes of 1899, is repealed and the following is substituted therefor :

'8. Subject to the provisions of this Act, the Governor in Council may make ordinances for the peace, order, and good government of the territory, and of His Majesty's subjects and others therein ; but no ordinance made by the Governor in Council shall—

'(a.) for the enforcement of any ordinance, impose any penalty exceeding five hundred dollars ;

'(b) alter or repeal the punishment provided in any Act of the parliament of Canada in force in the territory for any offence ;

'(c.) appropriate any public land or other property of Canada without authority of parliament, or impose any duty of customs or any excise.'

Nor shall any tax be imposed except as under this Act provided.

Provided always that the Governor in Council may make ordinances.

(a) Imposing a tax or royalty upon gold and silver the output of the mines in the territory.

(b) Prescribing and regulating the place and manner of collection of such tax or royalty and the method of securing and enforcing the payment thereof.

(c) Provide for the confiscation and forfeiture of gold and silver upon which such tax or royalty has not been paid, as well as for the confiscation and forfeiture of any vessel, vehicle, car or other receptacle containing the same or used or intended to be used for the transportation thereof ; and,

(d) Giving to any officer of the Crown, in respect of searches, examinations and other proceedings for the enforcement of the provisions of any such ordinances, such powers, rights, privileges and protection as the Governor in Council, may think necessary or desirable in that behalf.

Thus, the commissioner in council's authority will come under section 2, exclusively, while the Governor in Council's authority will come under section 3, exclusively, and there will be no chance of confusion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am disposed to think that I would not suggest any further amendment, but I would like time for consideration. I would ask the hon. gentleman to let the matter stand over until this evening. Meantime, I will look the amendment over, and if I have any suggestion to offer, I will have it ready then.

Progress reported.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 162) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.

On section 1,

Mr. BOYD. Before that clause is adopted, I have a few remarks which I wish to make and some amendments to the Bill to suggest, which amendments I may explain now, and they can be dealt with more particularly as we take up the sections to which they relate. But the first complaint that we have to make with regard to this Bill is that the very important amendments proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce come before us so late in the session that it is almost impossible properly to discuss them. Within a few days of the beginning of the session, I drew the attention of the government to this very important measure. Yet it is not until now, within four or five days of the close of this session, that this measure, which is the most important on the statute-book in its effects upon the interests of the farmers of the Northwest, really comes before us for discussion. Now, as to amendments to the Bill, I would first draw attention to a complaint which is made in Manitoba owing to the fact that under the present law interior elevators, that is the elevator at Winnipeg and the elvator at Emerson, are permitted to mix the different grades of wheat for the purpose of raising the standard of the wheat they happen to have on hand. Under the old law, as I understand it, mixing was permitted at Fort William, but the law was amended in 1890 so as to permit mixing at Emerson and Winnipeg. It is claimed by many engaged in the grain business that this results detrimentally to the quality and grade of the wheat that is being exported, as it permits those engaged in that business to use scoured wheat in the mixing, and pass it off for a higher grade. This is said to be a disadvantage to those from whom the wheat is bought. I have some correspondence here with regard to the matter, which I shall probably lay before the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), as I see that under this Act the administration of the law is put in charge of his department—and I may say in passing, that I am pleased with that change. There is another question with regard to what are known as the small warehouses. It is claimed that men who wish to have these small warehouses are practically debarred from doing so by that provision of the law which compels them to keep these warehouses open and keep men to look after them. Owing to the small quantity of grain that can be put through these warehouses, the expense is prohibitory.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I would like to ask him a question. I suppose that what he refers to as 'small warehouses' are what are termed 'flat warehouses' in the Bill?

This has been the experience in the past regarding those warehouses. It has been claimed that while the amended Act of 1890 permitted those warehouses, it was impossible to use them, owing to the fact that they could not be made profitable.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Does my hon. friend mean that the Act prevents the buyer from owning flat warehouses and storing his own grain? The Act requires that flat warehouses should only be used for storing purposes.

Mr. BOYD. The objection is that a man who owns one of those small flat warehouses is compelled to keep a man there to operate it, and that it is impossible for him to make it profitable. Another amendment I propose to move is that the price of wheat at Fort William should be posted once or twice a day at the stations where there is an agent and where the grain is shipped. In that way the public is made aware of the price of grain in Fort William. I may say for the benefit of the minister that in the state of Dakota and part of Minnesota a rule such as this, I understand, has been in existence for some years, and has given great satisfaction, namely, that the price of wheat at Fort William, the grades of wheat as under this Act, is telegraphed once or twice a day over the lines and posted on the blackboards or in some conspicuous place in the stations along the line.

There is another matter I will mention. It has been suggested to me by people who are deeply interested in regard to this Act, that sub-inspectors should be appointed throughout Manitoba and the territories at the large shipping points. It is claimed that men could be found who would be capable and qualified to inspect wheat at shipping points. Of course their inspection would be subject to revision at Fort William or Winnipeg if that was thought proper. But many do not approve of having their wheat subject to inspection at Winnipeg. in view of the enormous amount of wheat that has to be inspected at Winnipeg. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to read a letter from a gentleman who may perhaps be considered as opposed to the present Act, and as one of the agitators. I want to place it on 'Hansard' so that the Minister of Trade and Commerce may be able at any time to refer to it. It is rather lengthy, and it may be tiresome to some hon. gentlemen who are not interested in the matter, but I think it important that it should be published so that the minister may be able to refer to it. The gentleman who writes this letter is not known to me, the letter is addressed to myself:

Winnipeg, April 9, 1902.

N. Boyd, Esq., M.P.,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,—At a meeting some time ago of the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange, a resolution was pased asking the Dominion parliament to change the Inspection Act so as to do away with the dual inspection at Fort William and make Winnipeg inspection final.

Such an action would be very injurious to the quality of Manitoba grain and would make it in worse repute than it is at the present time and every one knows it is bad enough now, to prove this all I have to do is to quote an interview one of the newspaper reporters had with Mr. G. R. Crowe, manager of the Northern Elevator Company, in which he said, 'Manitoba No. 1 Northern is selling at three cents per bushel lower than Duluth No. 1 Northern in New York.' What Mr. Crowe said was true, but why should it be when the requirements as to weight, quality, &c., are the same for Manitoba No. 1 Northern as for Duluth No. 1 Northern? The reason for the difference is that 'The Manitoba Inspection Act' has been formed and manipulated to suit the tastes of the monopolistic elevator companies who own the mixing elevators and whose members have ruled the grain exchange and consequently had resolutions passed which the government acted on, and the outcome is that the quality of our graded wheat has deteriorated to such an extent that it will not command the same price that Duluth wheat of the same grade will in the worlds markets, the reason of the deterioration is that the most vicious and illegal mixing of scoured, dried and low grade wheat has taken place in the high grades by the interior mixing elevators, and the Act (which was framed at the dictates of Mr. C. N. Bell, secretary of the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange), practically ties the hands of the inspectors so that they cannot stop it. True, the Act gives the inspectors instructions re mixing elevators but gives them no protection in any way when appeals are made to the Survey Board, the duty of the Survey Board is to grade wheat according to the Act, and if the inspector has lowered the grade out of the mixing elevators on account of it not being up to the average, he loses every time. Manitoba wheat should command a premium over Duluth wheat instead of selling at three cents lower, The reason for this is that Manitoba No. 1 Northern is comprised of practically all 'Red Fyfe' wheat while Duluth No. 1 Northern contains a great deal of 'Blue Stem' wheat, Red Fyfe' is a much stronger and better wheat than 'Blue Stem.'

About three years ago the Grain Exchange passed a resolution asking the Dominion parliament to stop the mixing of Manitoba wheat and also asking that the inspection be done at Winnipeg with inspectors at Fort William to check and correct mistakes. In June, 1899, I attended a meeting of the agricultural committee in reference to the Inspection Act, and at that meeting the present Inspection Act was keenly opposed by the following:—Messrs. McFee, McBean & Quintal, of Montreal; Cummings, of Lyn; Richardson, of Kingston; Meldrum of Peterboro, Flavelle, of Lindsay; Kemp, McLaughlin, Spink & Watts, of Toronto, and Bailey of Hamilton, all protested against having the inspection done at Winnipeg which was over 400 miles from Fort William (the storage point) and all demanded that if the mixing was stopped at Fort William, &c., that it should also be stopped in the interior mixing elevators at Winnipeg and Emerson. Mr. C. N. Bell demanded that the interior mixing be allowed and stated that he was acting under instructions from the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, the Dominion parliament shut their ears to all but Mr. Bell, shut their eyes as to what would be in the best interests of the Manitoba agriculturists and at the dictation of Mr. Bell (not on the resolution of the Grain Exchange which asked that all mixing be stopped) had the present obnoxious Inspection Act passed. After returning home, the president of the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange told me that Mr. C. N. Bell's instructions were to have the mixing stopped everywhere and that he had no instructions whatever to ask to have it allowed at interior mixing elevators, this proves that Mr. Bell was wrong when he said he was acting for the Grain Exchange, instead of acting according to the Grain Exchanges instructions he acted the very opposite and his fighting for the mixing at Winnipeg and Emerson proves that he was working in the interests of the elevator monopolists.

The present Inspection Act has been in effect for over two years and a half and has proven itself to be very injurious to the farmers. It has allowed the elevator monopolists to illegally and viciously mix and ruin the quality of graded wheat and thus allows the elevator owners to buy at under value (they have done so to an unreasonable extent for several months past).

We need a change in the Inspection Act, but not in the way the Grain Exchange ask. Who ever heard of any civilized country allowing wheat to be graded at over 400 miles from the storage point, yet this is what has been done in Winnipeg for over two years, any one who knows anything about wheat knows that the condition of wheat often changes while a car is going less than 100 miles, during the month of September a great many farmers thresh direct from the stook and load at once into cars, as wheat does not sweat in the stook. I have several times seen cars pass Winnipeg in which the wheat was sweating and which the inspector graded 'tough,' but which on its arrival at Fort William was past the sweating stage and quite dry, consequently graded straight. Again during hot weather in summer I have seen wheat which was in good condition and graded straight in Winnipeg arrive in Fort William very much heated and the inspector refused to grade it straight. This proves the inspection should be done at Fort William instead of at Winnipeg.

The Canadian Pacific Railway refuse to hold cars in Winnipeg so that they can be sampled in daylight, and in some cases a train will come in and leave again in such a short time that the samplers have not time to thoroughly examine the cars they are sampling, as every one knows not even the most expert grainman can tell the grade of wheat by lamplight, so how can the samplers tell whether the cars are plugged with low grade wheat or not when they are forced to rush through and sample at night. Under the old Inspection Act all cars were held on track at Fort William for daylight sampling so that the samplers could find almost without exception all cars that were plugged and the inspector punished the dishonest shipper by lowering the grade down to the poorest quality that could be found in the car. Under the present Inspection Act plugged cars cannot help but pass the samplers very often as they are forced to sample at night. The consequence of this is to further lower the quality of our wheat and again proves the inspection should be done at Fort William intead of at Winnipeg.

Another proof and the most forcible one is that I have known of a lot of cases where the inspector at Fort William refused to allow the cars to be unloaded at Fort William on the inspection certificate that had been issued at Winnipeg and the inspector at Winnipeg was forced to ask for the return of the certificate and replace it with a new one, sometimes the grade was raised but very often it was lowered. This again proves that Winnipeg is not the right place at which to inspect grain but that it should be inspected at Fort William.

In face of all the rankness of the Inspection Act, the Grain Exchange or rather the elevator monopolists who rule the exchange and use it as a blind, again have the nerve to ask the Dominion parliament to change the Act and make things worse than they are now. Why do they do it? Simply to further their own ends and get the farmers more under their control (if such a thing were possible).

Certainly change the Inspection Act, by all means, do away with Winnipeg inspection and have it done at Fort William, either allow mixing at Fort William or do away with it at Winnipeg, Emerson, &c. What is the difference between mixing at Winnipeg or Emerson and Fort William? Only this, at Fort William it is impossible for shippers to mix illegally, as the inspector knows the composition of the mixture, while at Winnipeg or Emerson I have known of scoured wheat being illegally mixed into No. 1 Hard. If it is injurious to mix at Fort William, it is more so at Winnipeg or Emerson. It is wonderful how the members of the Northern Elevator Company can change their views. On August 20, 1892, a letter was written to the Commissioner of Inland Revenue in which the signers stated as follows:—'We hold it would be a very great injustice to the great bulk of the shippers and practically all of the producers of grain in this province and territories, to confine the cleaning, mixing, &c., of grain to a few parties now having such elevator facilities in the interior, and who can concentrate their grain at inland points and ships to terminal elevators,' this letter was signed by N. Bawlf, H. Crowe & Co., S. P. Clark & Co., and others, members of the three firms mentioned are now members of the Northern Elevator Company, in 1892, they claimed it was injurious to the farmers to stop mixing, but in 1899 when they owned their own mixing and scouring elevators they thought it was all right seeing they were going to get the profit out of the mixing and hinder others, in other words nothing could suit them better as it gave them the monopoly of the mixing, what they said in 1892 was quite true and at the present time it is also true but in a greater degree as crops are much larger. Either stop the vicious mixing at Winnipeg, &c., or allow it at Fort William, &c.

Another vicious thing in the Inspection Act was the doing away with the No. 2 Hard grade at the request and manipulations of the monopolists who have ruled the Grain Exchange. This was a crime which has cost the farmers of Manitoba an enormous sum of money. Under the old Act, No. 2 Hard always sold as high as No. 1 Northern, and at most times one cent higher than No. 1 Northern. In order to further bleed the farmer and allow more profitable mixing it was done away with, the owners of the interior mixing elevators are the very heavy gainers and the farmers are the very heavy losers. The consequence of doing away with the No. 2 Hard grade means that a large quantity of wheat that would grade No. 2 Hard (if there was such a grade) now grades No. 2 Northern and instead of getting No. 1 Northern price or one cent per bushel higher they are now forced to take four cents per bushel lower than No. 1 Northern price. Under the old Act, No. 2 Hard had to weigh 58 pounds to the measured bushel and No. 1 Northern 60 pounds, but under the rottenness of the present Act No. 2 Hard is cut out and No. 1 Northern must still weigh the 60 pounds, the consequence is that any No. 2 Hard that does not quite weigh 60 pounds cannot get into the No. 1 Northern grade and must go into the No. 2 Northern. To show what enormous profits the interior mixing elevators can make out of this part of the Act would say that No. 2 Northern (would be No. 2 Hard if there was such a grade) weighing 59¾ pounds, can be mixed with No. 1 Northern weighing 60¼ pounds, equal quantities of each and the mixture will grade No. 1 Northern, this is 'pie' for the mixers but 'dirt' for the farmers, as it injures the quality of our graded wheat and forces values lower than they should be. This shows that it is a great mistake of the government to follow the advice of the Grain Exchange. I hope they will soon commence to legislate for the people instead of the Grain Exchange which is run by monopolists. The parliament should at once reinstate the No. 2 Hard grade.

How long does the Dominion parliament intend to legislate for the monopolists at the expense of the people? When will they awake and find out they are injuring our country? Surely they do not think people are blind when they legislate at the request of the elevator monopolists through the name of the Grain Exchange? Can they not read the Winnipeg papers and see that the 'Inspection Act' and 'Grain Act' are driving people away from Manitoba and have made the farmers slaves to the elevator monopolists?

I hope you will succeed in getting the people of Manitoba justice at this session of parliament.

Truly yours,

THOS. COULTER.

P.S.—Mostly all the elevator owners of Manitoba pay the same price at nearly, if not all places where the same rate of freight covers, according to this arrangement at most places in Manitoba and the territories, the farmers have been bled of from 7 to 10 cents per bushel for a greater part of this season. The Inspection Act and Grain Act have aided the 'gang' in this nefarious work. Is this a 'combine' in the legal sense of the word? If not, please let me know what a 'combine' is.

C.

That letter is signed by Mr. Coulter. As I say, I am not here to support or to verify this letter. I am merely placing it on 'Hansard' so that the Minister of Trade and Commerce may have before him the views of those who are opposed to the present Act. I think the minister will agree with me that it is a very difficult thing for a fair and proper inspection to be made of some hundreds of cars passing Winnipeg at night, under the system of samplers going on board and bringing the samples of wheat up to the inspector to be inspected. If that practice is to be continued the men who take these samples out of these cars are equally as responsible—and I do not know but that they are even more responsible—as the man who is inspecting the wheat, because the matter rests entirely with these men as to how this grading might be done. Let me give you an instance of what occurred in the town of Carberry. Several hundred cars of wheat had been shipped in the early part of the season, and I think there was not one car of No. 1 hard, and only a very few cars of No. 1 Northern, which had passed out of that town during that time. We thought it very strange and after considerable effort three cars were procured in the one day, and of these first three cars that were shipped out by the farmers themselves, two went No. 1 hard, and one went No. 1 Northern; proving as we believed very conclusively that there was some mixing or something going on either by the dealers at Carberry or at Winnipeg. In the case of these three cars which seemed a very peculiar thing, all of the dealers concluded that one particular car would go No. 1 hard and that the other two cars would go No. 1 Northern, but strange to say the car that they supposed would go No. 1 hard, went No. 1 Northern, and the other two cars went No. 1 hard. When the return came back from Winnipeg the grainmen said : There you see our position ; it is impossible for us to inspect this wheat for the reasons that when we decide on what we think is No. 1 hard we invariably get upset by the inspector in Winnipeg. That is one of the reasons why I think that we should have sub-inspectors at those larger interior points. I think a sub-inspector could inspect at a point where there would be 100,000 bushels of wheat or 200,000 bushels, and that he could pass along to one or two other stations and do the inspecting there. That would stop a great deal of this scheming and sharp practice that has been perpetrated for some time past. I shall give another practical instance of what has occurred this last season. Take the town of Douglas, where there was a Mr. Greenwood, who is outside of the present grain exchange, buying wheat. On a certain day there was a difference of 10 cents a bushel on wheat, paid by the same firm at the town of Douglas and at the town of Sydney, which is 40 or 50 miles nearer the market. At Sydney the firm that was there opposing Mr. Greenwood was paying 10 cents less per bushel for wheat for the same grade of No. 1 Northern than they were paying at Douglas. There is something wrong when people can be treated like that. I am not here for the purpose of trying to gain the slightest political advantage in this matter. I am simply here to offer suggestions which I believe will enable the government at the present time, or as soon as possible to make that Grain Act as perfect as it can be made. There is another matter which I would like to mention with regard to this question and it is this : In the existing Act there is a certain dockage allowed. Those who buy wheat seem to have the privilege under the present Act, of taxing the wheat to a certain extent.

I will give an experience that I myself had. I shipped one car of wheat to Fort William and had something over 600 bushels of wheat in it. The dockage by the government weigher was, I think, 46 pounds; that is about three quarters of one bushel. I sold 800 bushels of wheat to a merchant in Carberry and he took out 32 bushels, or 4 bushels to the hundred weight, and this was the same wheat. Well, if he had given back the dockage it would not have amounted to so much, but he gave back only 14 bushels and kept 18. I said: If you take this wheat out, you should give it back. He said: No, under the Act, we keep it for dockage. If they take anything from you in the way of dockage, they should give it back to you. If you take any other produce to market, such as cheese or butter, and there is anything wrong with it which results in them taking dockage, they do not keep a certain amount from you. I do not think it was the intention of the framers of this Act that this should take place, and I propose to move an amendment in regard to it. I think I have said sufficient at present to show the way I feel in regard to it. I believe that if cars were given to the farmers, and if loading platforms were erected, the trouble would be overcome, because those engaged in the grain business would understand that they cannot force us to pass our grain through their elevators, and that while we are prepared to do business with them as long as they act fairly, if they do not treat us properly we can ship our own grain by our own cars. I see in the Act these words: 'without undue delay.' It is not my wish to be harsh or unfair with the railway companies, but I would like some of the lawyers in the House to tell me exactly what those words mean. I suppose they would mean a reasonable time, and if so, I am not going to raise any very serious objection.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Mr. Chairman, I very much regret that this Bill was not placed in the hands of hon. gentlemen earlier. I may say that I placed it before the House as soon as I, myself, was fully in possession of the amendments which I have been led to believe were desired by a large majority of the members of this House who are more intimately acquainted with this matter than I myself am. I would suggest to the hon. member (Mr. Boyd), that, if I followed him correctly, a great many of the remarks that he has just made, and in particular the letter which he has just read to the committee, do not apply to the Manitoba Grain Act, but to the Inspection Act. Am I correct in that ?

Mr. BOYD. I do not know.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. We are now dealing with the question of amendments of the Grain Act, and I think a great deal of what he said refers to the Inspection Act, which is a different Act. Is that not so ?

Mr. BOYD. I do not so understand it. It may be possible in regard to the letter, but, perhaps the writer is finding fault with both Acts.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is more particularly the Inspection Act of which he complains, which is a separate Act, and which we are not proposing to deal with in this Bill at all. Of course, I am aware that in bringing down anything of this kind at this stage of the session it is practically impossible to consider more than is now before us with any degree of profit. An immense number of suggestions may be made, many of them very proper and very desirable, but ones that we can hardly consider now. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that we take up each particular amendment that is proposed, and if the committee considers that that particular amendment is likely to be useful, we can pass that and I will take careful note of what my hon. friends on either side of the House suggest as to future improvements, but I would be rather chary about making any material alterations in the Act without due consideration. Of course, the Grain Inspection Act and Grain Act have only been very recently put under the charge of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and I have not yet been able to acquaint myself as well as I could wish with the practical working of these Acts. We have a commissioner engaged in dealing with these questions. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Boyd) himself knows that the circumstances which occurred last autumn were very exceptional. There was not only a vastly larger crop than ever before, but owing to certain climatic conditions, I believe that the time for moving the crop was very much shortened. I think I am correct in saying that there was scarcely more than half the time to handle double the crop, and I think under those circumstances there was much greater difficulty on the part of the railway company in meeting the demands of the inhabitants than would have occurred under ordinary conditions. But, I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that the best we can do at present is to consider each one of these amendments that is proposed on its merits and by itself. I, myself, have a perfectly open mind. All I desire is, as far as we can, to improve the Act for the benefit of all concerned, and I can assure the hon. gentleman and all other hon. gentlemen who are specially concerned in the matter that I will take very careful note of any suggestions that they may have to offer. I am not in a position to say that I can accept at an hour's notice important amendments even if they appear to me to be very desirable. These things require to be very carefully considered before we can put them on the statute-book, but I will be glad if we should confine ourselves, as much as may be, to the particular subject of the Grain Act, leaving the Inspection Act to be considered hereafter, and if we should confine ourselves to the special questions which are brought up in the amendments which I have now the honour of submitting to the committee.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). In the early part of the session there were a number of petitions presented to the House from municipal councils in the province of Manitoba praying for amendments to the Grain Act. I think the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. McCreary) presented some of them. I know I had the pleasure of presenting a number. Are any of these amendments proposed by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) adopting the line of the amendments suggested by these memorials presented to the government ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. As I understand, these amendments are the result of a comparison with, and compilation of the various petitions and letters sent to us suggesting amendments.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, he is put in the position of having to consider a subject which until lately was in charge of the Department of Inland Revenue, and it is, as hon. gentlemen from the North-west Territories will all agree, almost impossible for a person who is not personally acquainted with the conditions of the grain trade to familiarize himself with the complicated working of the Inspection Act and the Grain Act. In fact, it is difficult to get two persons who are well acquainted with the workings of the grain trade to agree to what the law should be. There are two Acts which cover the transaction of the business—the Inspection Act and the Grain Act. The functions of the two Acts are very different. The Inspection Act provides the way in which the grades of wheat shall be fixed. The Grain Act consists of a series of regulations affecting the handling of the wheat by the buyer and the seller ; the storage of the wheat; the conduct of warehousemen, and a variety of regulations for the purpose of protecting the producers and enabling them to get the fair value of their grain. Hon. members who were here in 1899, when the Inspection Act was revised, will remember that it was referred to a special committee, and no piece of legislation which has been passed by this House since I have been a member of it, received more thorough and more anxious consideration in every clause and every line than that Act. Sir Henry Joly was then Minister of Inland Revenue, and besides having the departmental duty of looking specially after the matter, he took a very warm personal interest in it. He attended the sittings of the committee; nearly all the North-west members also attended; persons interested in the matter on both sides, men in favour of independent buying, persons representing the farming interest, the millers, and the grain dealers, were all at different times before the committee; and every provision in that Bill was worked out with as great care as any committee of this House is capable of giving to any Bill. I do not mean by that to suggest that the Bill is perfect—far from it; but I venture to say that it has worked as well as could possibly be expected, after all the difficult and changing circumstances which it has had to meet.

There are two special matters to which my hon. friend has referred, which require a moment's attention at least. One is the objection which I have not heard to-day for the first time. I presume it has come to my hon. friend in the same way that it has come to me. It is that in elevators that are known in the North-west—not as public elevators, but storing elevators, there is an amount of mixing done which is detrimental to the reputation of the North-west wheat. That, I understand, is the objection of my hon. friend. Am I correct?

Mr. BOYD. Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The general principle of the Inspection Act is that a man in his own elevator in the interior of the country may mix as he likes, but that when he puts his wheat into what is called the terminal or public elevator, it is graded, and it cannot be mixed, nor can the grading be deteriorated by any mixing that takes place after it passes into the hands of the inspector. It was suggested at the time the Act was passed, that possibly there might be elevators used for storing purposes in the interior of the country, and that in these storing elevators, where the wheat does not pass through the hands of an inspector, and therefore is not graded at all in the sense understood in the Inspection Act, that might possibly take place which my hon. friend and other people say to some extent does take place. I have heard, as my hon. friend has, that it does take place, and section 13 of the Inspection Act of 1899 was adopted for the purpose of correcting that. If what my hon. friend states and what I have heard from other quarters is true, it simply means that this clause has not been acted upon. I cannot myself imagine any method which the hon. gentleman could now suggest which would be any more effective than this clause. If you are going to provide a remedy by legislation, you must put it into the hands of somebody to decide whether the complaint is founded on fact or not; because it is a question of fact. You have the right under the Act to bring the matter to the attention of the inspector, and he is required to make an investigation; and if he does not do so in a satisfactory manner, you can take the complaint before the minister himself, and have it fairly and fully investigated. I do not think the committee which had this subject under consideration could have devised any better plan than the plan provided in the Act; and if that weapon is not being employed, I think the fault lies with those who have knowledge of the fact, and who do not take the necessary steps to remedy the evil complained of. I may say, however, that in as much as the matter is now drawn to the attention of the minister, the facts might justify him in having a careful examination made as to whether the elevator in Winnipeg has been guilty of the violation of the principle of the Act.

Then, my hon. friend referred to a desire on the part of some people that there should be a change in the system of inspection so as to provide for the appointment of sub-inspectors throughout the country, instead of allowing the inspection to take place in Winnipeg, by having all the wheat pass through the hands of the chief inspector. That subject was also considered in 1899 at the time the Act was passed, and a good many statements and opinions in regard to it have been brought before me from time to time; but I am bound to say that up to the present time I have never known a case to be made out showing that the producer would derive any special benefit from a change in the system. I do not say that he would not, but I cannot declare myself positively as convinced either one way or the other. There has not been any sufficiently strong case made out to convince me that any substantial benefit would result from such a change. At present the wheat goes to the yard. A sample is taken from the car to the office of the chief inspector, and by that sample the grade is determined. My hon. friend refers to a case in which, when the dealers shipped the wheat, it went as one grade, and when the farmer shipped it, it went as a lower grade. I do not know how this particular fact is established, but I do not think that there has been any deliberate fraud on the part of the chief inspector. If there be a suggestion of any fraud or dishonesty on his part, it would be the immediate duty of the government to take every possible means of having a most thorough investigation. I have never, during the time I have to do with the question, in one way or another, heard the slightest suggestion made by any one that there was any doubt whatever of the complete integrity of the chief inspector, Mr. Horne. I have not the honour of his personal acquaintance, but have never heard any but the highest opinions expressed regarding him, and I have not the slightest doubt that his integrity is above suspicion. It is possible, however, that in the handling of a thousand cars of wheat, a number of the cars might be transposed by mistake and mixed up together, but that would not be the only possible way in which I think such a mistake could occur, as to have wheat of the same quality shipped by two different parties graded differently.

I think that on the whole my hon. friend will agree that, considering all the difficulties attending the inspection of wheat, there is not very much fault to find with the result of the inspection system. But the result of the inspection system and the result of the shipping system, are two different things altogether. My hon. friend says that at Douglas last year, where there was an independent buyer, he was able to pay 10 cents a bushel more than did the buyers who represented the elevator people. I have heard a similar statement made with regard to other places, and I am free to say that the facts show distinctly that there was a most remarkable difference in the prices, to say the least, which were offered those representing the elevator owners and the independent buyers who have no connection with that combine.

The amendments which my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce is proposing, are intended to meet that difficulty. If I have any understanding at all of the difficulty, it consists of two main things. First, there is the shortage of cars, and legislation of this character will not increase the supply of cars, but we have succeeded in another way in making it certain that there will be a very largely augmented supply during next year. A very large sum is being devoted by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the procuring of rolling stock for their operations during next year, and we may look with some degree of confidence to a great deal of relief in that respect. But the position of the farmers, which we are trying to remedy by this Bill, is this. The disadvantage under which the farmer suffered was that the elevator people knew that the farmer was not in a position to handle his grain except through them. The shortage of cars largely prevented the farmers from being able to ship independently. That was the result of a combination of circumstances. It is alleged that the wheat buyer would not pay what the wheat was worth. The wheat buyers, of course, do not admit this, and it is not necessary for us to say what we think about it. But we all deplore the fact that, for a considerable portion of the season at least, the men who raised the wheat did not get its full value, and what we are really trying to do in this Bill is to put the farmer in as independent a position as possible, so far as the wheat buyer is concerned. We give him the right to put up a flat warehouse if he chooses, and a loaded platform, or to ship from the track, and make the company furnish him with cars if he wants them. That is about all that this House, with the information it has, can do to put the farmers in a position to say to the grain buyers: We are independent and we can deal with you on equal terms; if you will not give us the full value of the wheat, we will deal with it ourselves. If my hon. friend will look through the amendments, he will find that they are carefully drawn for the purpose of bringing about that result.

In so far as the suggestions respecting the amendments to the Inspection Act are concerned, every member of the committee will agree that a radical change in the system of inspecting wheat could not be made in any other way than by bringing in a measure at the very beginning of the session, getting the very best committee that could be appointed to deal with it, and giving the matter the most careful and protracted consideration.

I am quite confident that as we go through the clauses, it will be seen that they have been carefully drawn for the purpose of bringing about the results we all have in view. There was a suggestion made by my hon. friend respecting the posting of the prices of wheat. I do not know that any objection can be raised to that. I do not know to what extent it would be an advantage. It might in many ways be an advantage to the farmers to know what wheat was worth at Fort William; and if that suggestion would work to the advantage to the producer of wheat, I see no reason why it should not be adopted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is to pay the expense of getting the quotations and posting them two or three times a week all over the territories? It will be quite a heavy expense to get those telegrams from all the stations along the different lines of railway, and I do not think it is necessary. The farmers get the daily papers and mail and know pretty well the prices of grain in Winnipeg, and why should we put the dealers to the heavy expense of getting these telegrams and posting them up?

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Do not the local dealers already every day have the prices telegraphed them by their head firms, and could they not be compelled to have them posted up publicly?

Mr. CAMPBELL. At some of the principal points, no doubt they do, but I do not suppose that in all the points they get those telegrams daily. I do not see how you could force the dealers to put up information which they get for their own private use.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that, if the assertion is true, that a difference of as much as 10 cents a bushel in the price of wheat exists between stations where there is competition and stations where there is no competition, then, in the interest of the great public of the North-west Territories, in the interest of the men who have gone into that country to indure its hardships and open it up to industry, the government would be quite justified in incurring whatever expense is necessary to carry out a plan that would afford them protection. And it seems to me that the suggestion that at all the stations where wheat is bought the prices ruling at Winnipeg shall be posted is one that is in the public interest. It might not serve the interest of buyers who wish to buy wheat 10 cents cheaper at one station than at another, but it would be in the interest of the farmer. We are trying to induce settlers to go into the country, and the men who go there at our instance are, in a sense, our wards, and we are their guardians. If these men are liable to be made a prey of by monopolists, and if giving them information will enable them to judge whether they are being dealt fairly with or not and whether they are receiving day by day the prices they ought to receive, I think that information ought to be afforded them.

Mr. BOYD. In reply to some of the remarks of the Minister of the Interior, I may say that, as is known to hon. members, I was not in the House when these Acts were passed. Before I returned, the present Grain Act and the Inspection Act so far as it relates to grain, were passed. If, as has been stated by the Minister of the Interior, I have confused the two Acts or misunderstood them, it is a misunderstanding or confusion that prevails generally among the farmers throughout the country. This is one of the reasons that makes it all the more unfortunate that this Bill should be brought before us so late in the session. Had it been brought forward earlier, we could have proposed such amendments to the Inspection Act as would have removed the disability under which we labour. My hon. friend from West York seems to feel keenly the question of expense, and asks who is to pay for procuring and disseminating the information as to the prices of wheat. I think the hon. gentleman need not worry; for, if the fees now charged under the Inspection Act are not sufficient for this purpose, a few cents added to these fees will fully cover the outlay, and the farmers, upon whom the burden will rest, will not object to the additional expense for such a purpose. The information will enable us to show these people what they are actually taking out of the farmers. If we know what the different grades of wheat are bringing at Fort William, and the freight, it is easy to know what price the grain men can afford to pay.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would suggest that it would be better to take up each clause in turn and not go into a general discussion at this stage of the session, of the Inspection Act, with which the Grain Act has nothing at all to do. I have taken careful note of the hon. gentleman's suggestion as to telegraphing the prices of wheat and would like to make some further inquiry about it.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As my hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) will admit, the only way in which that could be worked out would be by a section requiring the railway station agent to post up the prices.

Mr. BOYD. I may say that I intended to propose an amendment to clause 8 of section 42, in the second line, between the words 'agent' and 'and,' by inserting the following words :

At each station where there is a railway agent and where grain is shipped under such agent a suitable black board shall be kept, on which the prices of the several grades of wheat offered for sale under this Act shall be plainly written daily at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Hon. Mr. ROSS. I may say that we have an arrangement under which daily reports from the three fishing stations in the three maritime provinces are received daily and are published in Halifax at the expense of the government. Something to the same effect might be done in this instance.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would suggest that, following the ordinary rules of the Committee of the Whole, we should take up one clause and consider it. We shall make no progress if we traverse the whole Grain Act and Inspection Act. But there will be every opportunity to consider amendments if we take up one section at a time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) was merely giving the Minister of Trade and Commerce notice of what was to come.

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I wish to move an amendment to this by inserting the word 'first' after the word 'six,' making it read 'the six first standard grades of wheat.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Referring for a moment to the first section of the Act, it seems to be an unusual mode of legislation to say that the expression 'Minister of Inland Revenue' should mean 'Minister of Trade and Commerce.' I do not see the object of it.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. In the Manitoba Grain Act the Minister of Inland Revenue had charge of this matter, and within a few months it has been transferred by special statute to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I would like to suggest another amendment. The Agricultural Committee of the Manitoba legislature had an investigation into this Act at the last session of parliament and were going to memorialize this parliament in reference to certain amendments. But unfortunately those amendments were brought down on the last day of the session and they were talked out, and I presume the memorial never reached the government. One of the proposed amendments was to subsection 3, to make it more definite. It was to insert after the word 'forward' in the second line thereof, the words 'to the order of the owner thereof when requested to do so by him.' Also to strike out the words 'without delay' from the fourteenth line of the same subsection and to substitute therefor the words 'within twenty-four hours.' 'Without delay' seemed to them a rather indefinite term.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I am sorry that this matter was delayed to the present time. If the hon. gentleman will write out his amendments and forward them to me I will have them examined. But I am rather reluctant, unless for very strong cause, and because it would probably imperil the passage of the Bill to embark on a discussion of more than the amendments that are now suggested. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the proposals that are made are to the general advantage I would suggest to him that it would be better to confine ourselves to these than to run the risk of losing them all. We all know that there is considerable risk in taking up absolutely new questions and inserting them in sections which are not now before us without an opportunity to compare them with the other portions of the Bill. I do not say that his suggestions are not all right, but I would like to have a little time to consider them.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I explained to the committee that the changes proposed to be made are chiefly these: At present ten farmers are required to apply, the present amendment reduces the ten to one. It strikes out the last clause which provides that in the case of each additional warehouse the applicants desirous of erecting it should be liable to pay rental of 6 per cent interest on the value of the land taken, such land to be determined and fixed by commissioners, and should be liable to pay the cost of constructing the necessary sidings. That portion is struck out. Now I observe that an addition has been made here. In the original clause of the Act of 1900 a flat warehouse covered with metal is provided. The words 'covered with metal' are omitted. Those words I think ought to be inserted again, and I move that they be inserted.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would like to remark that in the Bill of 1900 the erection of a flat warehouse was surrounded with so many restrictions that it was found that people were not ready to build them. It was thought better simply to state that they might build a flat warehouse and that all those details in connection with it should be left to the discretion of the warehouse commissioner; that it was quite unnecessary to define what the building should be, inasmuch as it was largely in the hands of the warehouse commissioner and the railway committee. I do not suppose that at this date and age they would think of anything else but a metal roof, even in view of the insurance. We considered it was not necessary to enter into any minute description of the building.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Strong objection was taken to the omission of those words, and I think the objection was well taken.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I have no objection to their being replaced, I do not suppose it matters much.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The railway companies object very strongly to the omission of the words 'covered with metal' on the ground that it affects the insurance on everything surrounding.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. SCOTT. I would point out that the railway companies do not cover with metal all the buildings which they place on their own property. It is perfectly true that in most cases, where these flat warehouses are erected in proximity to other buildings, it would be no doubt wise to have a provision in the Act that they should be covered with metal, but I think this may be safely left in the hands of the commissioner. There will doubtless be cases where warehouses will be located hundreds of yards away from any other building, and in such cases it would not be necessary to enforce the provision that the buildings should be covered with metal. I think it may be safely left to the discretion of the commissioner.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I sympathize to some extent with what my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) says, but it must be remembered that we are practically letting down the bars and giving the greatest possible facility for the construction of flat warehouses. We are not providing in this Bill that a flat warehouse shall be of any particular capacity. A warehouse may only have a capacity of 1,000 bushels. Even if a warehouse should be put up 300 or 600 feet away from another elevator, next day a man might come along and apply for a site near the same place for the erection of an elevator that will cost $10,000 or $15,000. If you have two or three little flat warehouses, frame, and not covered with metal, you raise a difficulty at once. You raise a dispute, you have reference to the commissioner and there is a question as to whether this man shall be compelled to cover his warehouse with metal or not. It seems to me that the simplest way is to provide that the flat warehouse must be covered with metal, and there will be no difficulty about it. If it were going to cost sufficient to impose any restriction on the erection of flat warehouses I would not suggest it, but it is a trifling matter in the case of a small warehouse, and it is well understood to be in the general interest that it should be done.

Mr. BOYD. I do not see any objection to that provision and I believe that on the whole it possibly will be in the interest of the farmers that a flat warehouse should be so covered as it affects the rate of insurance and other matters. I would like to have the hon. minister's interpretation of the Act as to this question: Must a man who owns one of these small warehouses keep it open for the use of the public?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not very familiar with the working of the Act, but if my hon. friend (Sir Richard Cartwright) will look at subsections 4, 5 and 6 of section 41, he will see that it rather looks as if the owner will require to keep his warehouse open.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not see anything making it absolutely imperative in this clause.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). No, it does not say so in so many words.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. And I think if the hon. gentleman will look at section 8 he will see that we are removing a restriction on the buying and selling of grain which will probably obviate any practical difficulty.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That, of course, permits the use of it for his own grain, but is not the effect of subsections 4, 5, 6, that he must keep it open for business by other persons ? I do not know whether it is the best policy that he should be obliged to keep it open or not ; I am not speaking of the question of policy but merely as to the effect of this section.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. On the question of construction. That, of course, is more a legal question, but, reading it cursorily, I should hardly think that he could be compelled to keep a man there all the time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Subsection 4 of section 41 of the Act says :

> The owner of any such warehouse shall on the application of any farmer undertaking to ship a car load of grain, allot such farmer a binn in such warehouse as soon as one is available.

He is bound to permit his warehouse to be used for the purpose of shipping, but there is nothing in the Act that compels him to keep a man there. It is an obligation which could not be placed upon anybody by implication. It would have to be clear and specific.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should think that is right, but if the farmer goes to him at his house he will be obliged to go down to the warehouse and allow him to put his grain in.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The elevator man will have to take the consequences.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The elevator man will have to go and open up his warehouse and let the farmer put his grain in, because the statute says so.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I remember that when the first Act was passed the commissioner reported upon the question, and after investigating it he was imbued with the idea that the warehouse should not be used by a buyer ; that is to say, that the owner should not buy wheat himself and therefore the principle was embodied in the Act that flat warehouses should simply be a means of shipping, but the experience of the community there is against it. They seem to require that you should allow a small independent buyer to have a flat warehouse to buy grain and increase the competition on the market.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I take it that practically these warehouses would not be in use for more than two months or thereabouts. Would not that be the practical result ? It is in the autumn when the grain is threshed and prior to the close of navigation that these things will be of real use to the farmers. As matters now stand I think by removing the restrictions on the purchase and sale of grain we will make it very much to the interest of the proprietor of the flat warehouse to be anxious to receive anything he can get.

Mr. BOYD. I know that it was frequently said by those interested in building these small warehouses that that was one of the reasons why they did not take advantage of the Act.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. The objection was, that, not being able to buy grain, they could not get the profit of buying. They could only make a storage charge for the wheat which they received and the small quantity which a flat warehouse held did not pay. But now, the owner is enabled to make a profit by buying grain and I do not think there is any difficulty about that.

Mr. BOYD. I am prepared to let it pass on the strength of the legal interpretation we have had and to take our chance of the future interpretation of the court if necessity demands it.

Mr. DAVIS. There is a suggestion which I would like to make. I see by this Act that you are confined to building nothing but a flat warehouse. I do not see why there should not be a provision which would enable a person to build either a flat warehouse, or an elevator. Last year we wanted to build an elevator in place of a flat warehouse, and we found a provision in the law under which we could build a flat warehouse, but there was no provision for us to build an elevator, and we could not get the right of way from the company. It is in the interest of the country that elevators should be built in place of flat warehouses, and I do not see why we should not have the privilege of building them. If the farmers have enough money to build an elevator they ought to be allowed to build it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is the expression 'flat warehouse' defined by statute or is it merely a term known to the trade.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. So far as I am aware it is not defined by statute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There does not seem to be any restriction on the height of a flat warehouse.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. An elevator is a warehouse, but a warehouse is not necessarily an elevator. An elevator is a warehouse which has machinery for lifting the grain.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I understand that, but there does not seem to be any restriction in this statute on making a flat warehouse as high as one likes, and there is nothing in the Act to prevent you from having machinery in it. Why does it not authorize the building of an elevator ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I do not say that it does not, but these are questions which are often required to be determined by the court.

Mr. DAVIS. I want to have the word 'elevator' inserted because we do not want to have any trouble about it. We got a lawyer last year and he advised us that we could not build an elevator under the provisions of the Act.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not disputing that. I was merely seeking information from the minister as to the meaning of the statute.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I took the expression 'flat warehouse' as I found it in the Manitoba Grain Act of 1900. I am willing to consider all these amendments together.

On section 5, subsection 2,

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I wish to add the words 'within the limits of the station yard' so as to make it read 'each loading platform shall be erected within the limits of the station yard.'

Mr. DAVIS. Where there is no station yard, and the farmers want the platform, where do you provide it shall be erected ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It will have to be provisionally erected where the commissioner directs.

On section 5, subsection 4,

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I wish to introduce the words here 'unless prevented by strikes or other unforeseen causes.' That will make it read that they shall erect the platform within 30 days unless prevented by strikes and so on.

Mr. McCREARY. 30 days is too long. I think the Minnesota State Act only gives them 10 days within which to erect a loading platform, and if you give them 30 days there should be no exception with regard to strikes. There might be a strike for instance, on some portion of the railway, but not among carpenters at all, and the company might use that as an excuse for not putting up a platform.

Mr. SCOTT. I draw the attention of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to the fact that the government have announced their intention of introducing legislation next year absolutely to prevent strikes on railways.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. If they succeed in doing that all the better.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is just one suggestion with regard to the second clause, that is, that in the amendment which the minister has proposed, there is no obligation to construct a platform except at a station. It was somewhat broader before.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I would suggest adding the words, 'and where there is no station yard, at such place as the commissioner may prescribe.'

Mr. BOYD. I would like to have a legal interpretation of the meaning of the words 'undue delay,' in the clause requiring railway companies to furnish cars to farmers without undue delay. Do they mean forty-eight hours, a week, or how long ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think I can answer that question by asking my hon. friend to try to express the idea better. I think he would then realize the difficulty of trying to regulate business by an Act of parliament. The only thing we can do is to employ general terms which are to be understood in their ordinary and common sense. You cannot say in an Act of parliament that if a man asks a railway company for a car for a certain purpose the company shall furnish it to him within a certain time, because unforeseen circumstances might render it impossible to do so. I think my hon. friend will see that we have gone just as far as we could go in a legislative enactment by declaring what the duty of the company shall be. Undue delay means unreasonable delay. If you covered pages of the statute-book with explanations I do not believe you could make the provision any more effective.

Mr. DAVIS. The real difficulty is this. The railway companies bring a certain number of cars to every shipping point, and what we want to provide is that the farmers shall get a fair proportion of these cars.

Mr. SCOTT. This particular clause has no reference to the distribution of cars so much as it is to make provision that the cars shall be furnished to farmers at all points—not only where there are loading platforms, but at other points.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. This clause lays down the principle that the farmer is entitled to get his share of cars. The company cannot say, 'we are only bound to furnish cars where there is a warehouse or an elevator.' We settled that question by this clause.

Mr. BOYD. I have no desire to hamper the railway companies in doing business. But the minister has asked me if I would suggest something that would be more effective. I could very soon do it, but it is a question whether it would be exactly fair to the railway companies. For instance, if a farmer keeps a car for a certain time and does not load it he has to pay for the car. If, on the other hand, you provide that when the farmer demands a car within a certain time the company shall pay if they do not furnish it within that time, you will get over the difficulty. But for my part, I suppose we may be satisfied in the meantime to see how the railway companies are prepared to meet the provisions of the Act so far as we have gone and deal with them later on if they do not do so.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I think that would be the wiser course. This Act will, I think, be up for revision next year, and in the meantime we shall have an opportunity of seeing how it will work.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You are proposing to extend the power of the commissioner to put up loading platforms wherever he chooses. He should not have that power at all. I would suggest that they be put either at a station or at a siding.

Mr. DAVIS. I think that should be left in the hands of the commissioner who is on the ground and knows the conditions. There are places where there is plenty of grain, but where there is not a siding for a distance of twenty miles.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I move the addition to section 2 of the words 'and where there is no station yard at such siding as the commissioner may prescribe.'

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 8,

Mr. BOYD. I beg to submit the following amendment: On the second line between the words 'agent' and 'and' that the following words be inserted. 'There shall be a suitable blackboard, upon which the prices of all grains offered for sale under this Act shall be plainly written daily at 9 a.m. and 1 p.m.'

Mr. DAVIS. Who will do this work—the railway company or the government?

Mr. BOYD. Take it out of the inspection commission.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Provision is made in the Act to provide papers giving the prices in Liverpool and other points, and also Chicago and Minneapolis, to be seen every day in Winnipeg, so that the suggestion of the hon. member for Macdonald is simply to carry this forward from Winnipeg to outlying stations.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. There are nearly a thousand such stations, and this might be a very considerable tax on the Inspection Act, which is hardly equal to the requirements made on it, as it stands. I would like a little time to consider that amendment, and I hope, when we come to the third reading, to be able to give an answer. There is no limit to the time in the amendment, and to supply for several months prices twice a day to a thousand stations might involve much greater expense than the hon. gentleman contemplates. I suppose his intention is that these prices shall be supplied by the Canadian Pacific Telegraph Company, which is the only company that has communication with all these stations. From my own experience, I should say that to supply twice a day to a thousand places by telegraph the prices of all kinds of wheat offered for sale under this Act, might involve a very considerable charge. Judging from my own experience, I should say that to supply, twice a day, telegraphic statements to a thousand places of the price of all the grades of wheat offered for sale under this Act might involve a very considerable charge. It might run into a great many thousand dollars.

Mr. DAVIS. And what about the case of places where they load from the platform?

Mr. BOYD. Of course, where there is no telegraph, it cannot be done.

Mr. DAVIS. Then, one portion of the community would be protected and the other not.

Mr. BOYD. It is better to have some protected than none.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. While it is, without doubt, important and desirable that the farmers selling wheat should know what that wheat is worth at Port Arthur afloat, as a matter of fact, the only way in which that could be brought about is by making some kind of amicable arrangement with the railway companies who have the telegraph lines, to furnish it.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). That is the way the Agricultural Committee of the legislature decided to do it—to make the request of the railway companies.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Without warning, or notice, or discussion, to put a statutory obligation on the railway companies would not be so advantageous, I should think, as for the department to try to make an amicable arrangement with the companies. My impression is that there would be no great difficulty about it, but, of course, I cannot speak with certainty. But my hon. friend will see that it would be much better to make the attempt, because if the railway companies desire to do it, they have the facilities, having both the means of communication and a staff of officers to post up the information. But, if you make it obligatory by statute, you do two things. In the first place, you are to a certain extent, making yourself responsible for the correctness of the prices quoted, which is not altogether a satisfactory thing to do. The hon. gentleman knows that, on the street in Winnipeg you may meet a man who will say: I will give you so much for wheat, and five minutes after he might be willing to give you two cents more. Under such circumstances, who is to say what the price really is at Port Arthur. The only thing you can do is to give it as nearly as possible, and it will be much more satisfactory if that were done under an amicable arrangement with all parties than under a statute which, the railway companies would naturally feel, imposed upon them a duty which it was difficult to perform. I think it would be better for the department first to attempt to work out the arrangement with the railway companies than to make it statutory.

Mr. BOYD. For my part, I can see no difficulty about this being carried into effect. At the present time in many places in Manitoba—and for that matter, throughout Canada—we get market quotations hourly. And, as I say, if it is necessary to make a charge on the farmers, a very small charge on the millions of bushels of wheat going to Port Arthur would meet all the extra expense, and the farmers would be well remunerated by the service that would be rendered them in posting up these prices.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I quite agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. BOYD. If the hon. minister agrees, there need be no great difficulty in working out the details. I have offered the suggestion and am satisfied to leave it with the minister until the third reading of the Bill. In the meantime, he can confer with his officers and devise a means of carrying out an improvement which, in my opinion, is absolutely necessary. And I think that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who represent the grain sellers of this country will support me.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. I will accept my hon. friend's (Mr. Boyd's) suggestion. We will take this into consideration and will announce our conclusion on the third reading of the Bill. I wish to make a further amendment in this clause. It has been represented that there are a number of shipping stations in the same agency, and that it would be desirable to amend the section so as to include the various shipping points where there is no agent permanently resident. Also I propose to strike out the words 'forty-eight hours.' The first part of the section then would read:

> At each station where there is a railway agent and where grain is shipped under such agent, an order book for cars shall be kept open to the public for each shipping point under such agent in which applicants for cars shall make order. Applicants shall make order according to their requirements; cars so ordered shall be awarded to applicants according to the order in time in which such orders appear on the Order book.

And so on.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This clause seems to me the most curious piece of legislation I ever read. I do not see how it is possible to carry it out. Suppose a party who has ordered a car, and after a delay of 48 hours, if he does not take it, it is awarded to the next person. If the next person does not take it within 48 hours, when there are a couple of hundred applicants, it may be, how long will it be before some one will appear who will take it? It is impossible to work out anything of the kind.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the individual does not appear the railway company can come upon him for demurrage, if he does not use the car within 48 hours. Under the common Railway Act an individual has 48 hours within which to use the car, and it would be only just that the railway company should charge demurrage for the detention of the car.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is no provision for demurrage. Suppose there are fifty applicants for a car. The first man forfeits his right in 48 hours. The next man may live five miles or ten miles from the station. Notice is to be sent to him. who is to send the notice, or who is to pay for sending it? Even if he lives convenient to the station, he has 48 hours more to wait, and so it runs on, and the railroad company has to keep the cars there all the time. I do not see how you can make any practical use of this kind of legislation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend's imagination may suggest a great many difficulties which are not likely to occur in the practical working out of this clause. There will be no attempt to send a word to anybody that there is a car there waiting for him. Cars are coming in every hour of the day, and no station agent will keep a car 48 hours if the applicant is not there to take it. If a man has ordered a car and is there he will get it, if he is not there, he won't get it, and it will be given to the next man who is there. The real effect of this clause is to give an individual the right to order a car and to get a car, the railway company are compelled to furnish him a car. I am not disposed to be unreasonable with the railway company. I recognize the fact that it is a very difficult business for any station agent to handle the business at a point where there is an immense amount of wheat, and perhaps a shortage of cars. But at the same time there are substantial grievances on the part of the farmers. Every member of the House who represents a wheat growing constituency in the North-west will know of cases where cars have gone by day after day, where there are people at an elevator or warehouse who are entitled to cars and cannot get them. What we desire is a law which shall give to each man fair play and no discrimination. There may be practical difficulty in working out the clause, but I do not think any better way can be suggested of attaining the object we have in view. The clause has received very careful consideration.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. minister says that it practically will accomplish what is required. Fancy thirty applicants where there is a forfeiture and every one waiting his turn. The station master has absolute control over the matter and if the first one forfeits his right he passes over him and goes on with the rest.

Mr. SCOTT. If we have conditions in future in any way approaching what we had last year there will be no danger of forfeiture. I know of a case last year at a station ten miles north of Regina where three or four cars were placed on a siding on Sunday night. Before daylight on Monday these cars were all filled. The farmers left home with their loads at midnight and loaded the cars.

Mr. BOYD. I am not dreading very much the fear that the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) has suggested in regard to this. I desire to mention the amendment which I propose to move to clause 54 and which I will hand to the minister. It is in regard to dockage. I propose to add to section 54 the words 'and shall be given the full amount of dockage from their grain if they desire the same.' I explained that merchants who buy grain are in the habit of docking the grain very heavily and then keeping over half of it. It is to prevent this practice that I suggest the amendment.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would remind my hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) that the legislation of the North-west Territories effectually stands in the way of this amendment. This matter was discussed at very great length in connection with the Bill with persons well acquainted with the condition of things in the west. The Noxious Weeds Act of the North-west Territories stands in the way of what may be taken as dockage being given back to the individual who owns the grain.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. What are the general provisions of the Noxious Weeds Act ?

Mr. DOUGLAS. That the individual shall not be allowed to take the stuff which has been cleaned out of his grain, put it in his conveyance and take it home, because he would scatter the weed seeds all the way.

Mr. SCOTT. If there are noxious weed seeds in the refuse or small wheat.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is to prevent the spread of noxious weeds ?

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, that is the difficulty which is in the way, and I call the hon. gentleman's attention to it. We certainly have no objection to the provision which he suggests but this is the difficulty in the way of its adoption.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the advantage of having the dockage in the hands of the merchant more than in the hands of the farmer ? Is it not just as liable to be spread in the country in the one case as in the other ?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is usually burned.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you have a provision requiring it to be burned that is all right.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not know what the provisions of the Noxious Weeds Act of the North-west Territories are, but my recollection of the Manitoba Act is that it is made an offence to allow the tailings to be taken away from the elevator and they are required to be burned.

Mr. BOYD. So far as that is concerned the elevators of Manitoba have been selling them right along, and I know of cases last winter where they shipped them out of the country. They have been shipping them to Minneapolis.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. As long as they ship them to Minneapolis it is all right.

Mr. BOYD. It is a fact that the elevator men are making an undue profit out of these screenings and I do not think the Act of the territorial legislation should stand in the way of this amendment. If the territorial assembly feels disposed to pass an Act that will prohibit this being done, well and good ; but I do not think it applies to the province of Manitoba under the present statute.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I would ask the hon. minister a question in reference to the form of storage receipt in schedule as to the charges for receiving, cleaning, insurance against loss by fire, handling, storing, and so on. I see it says :

It is provided by law that this charge shall not exceed. . . . . dollars of a cent per bushel.

Is there a stipulated amount for charges mentioned in the Act ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The amount which the elevator man can charge by this Act is under the regulation of the Governor in Council.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). Is it a stipulated amount ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is under the control of the Governor in Council.

Mr. ROCHE (Marquette). I know that the farmers consider that this is an excessive charge, although I am not aware what it is. The resolution passed by this investigating committee suggested that the Act should be amended so as to read that the charges shall not exceed one and three-quarter cents per bushel and that they shall be only one and a quarter cents per bushel where the cleaning is not done.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That would be a proper matter to have to consider. I could not very well put in any fixed rate without inquiring, but I can have the attention of the grain commissioner called to the matter.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Section 33 of the Manitoba Grain Act provides:

> The Governor in Council may, before the 1st of September, in each year, and as often as he deems proper, make and promulgate all suitable and necessary rules and regulations for the government and control of public country elevators and warehouses, including flat warehouses, and the receipt, storage, insurance, handling and shipment of grain therein and therefrom, and the maximum rates of charges therefor, and so on.

The Governor in Council has power now, under the Act, to regulate the charges.

Mr. BOYD. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce if he would be so kind as to send me a copy of the amendments that he decides upon.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. That you have just submitted?

Mr. BOYD. The amendments that you propose to enact.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What my hon. friend (Mr. Boyd) means is that if the hon. minister takes into favourable consideration any of the suggestions which have been made he would like to have a copy of the amendments which the hon. minister proposes in accordance with these suggestions.

Bill reported.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MONTREAL SUBWAY COMPANY.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 98) to incorporate the Montreal Subway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

On section 20, subsection (b),

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I have an amendment to suggest. I am sorry the promoter of the Bill is not here, but I wish to say that I have had a consultation with some of the promoters of the Bill and they have agreed to this amendment with a view of stopping any further opposition, so that the Bill may be able to go through both Houses this session. The amendment reads:

> The company shall, within seven months of the passing of this Act, expend on construction work of said subway the sum of $200,000; otherwise the charter will be considered null and void.

The men at the back of this Bill are some of the best men we have in Canada; the Hon. Senator Mackay and others who could build the subway themselves without any outside assistance, but if any accident should happen, so that during the next seven months they do not desire to go on, then it would give some other company an opportunity of advertising a Bill for the next session of parliament, either for a bridge or a tunnel. I am speaking now entirely in the interest of the city of Montreal. We have got to get a bridge or a tunnel at once. I am glad to see some of the members from Montreal here, and I am sure they will back me up in what I say in this regard. We have been waiting for communication between Montreal and the South Shore year after year, and if these people are willing to build this tunnel as they say, without asking the country to assist them in any way, why, of course, we should let them do so, and we should let the bridge people do the same thing under similar conditions. If they are going to build bridges and tunnels to connect Montreal with the South Shore, and not ask the country for subsidies; by all means let them build them, and if possible immediately.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When the Bill was being considered in committee last time, I suggested an amendment similar to this, but one of the promoters of the Bill objected to it. They would not agree then to spend even $100,000 on construction, and declined to accept the amendment I offered. I did not want to appear as being opposed to the Bill, and so I let it go, but I am very glad to hear from my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike) that he has seen some of the promoters in Montreal and that they have agreed that a clause should be inserted to the effect that they would spend $200,000 on construction work within seven months after this Bill had been sanctioned. I think that is a proper amendment, and I, for one, am ready to accept it. While I am on my feet, perhaps it might be just as well to know how we stand on this matter. These people from other parts of the country, from Quebec and from Toronto, have extended their unbounded generosity to us in Montreal. They want to build a tunnel for which we are very thankful indeed, but those who are a little old in this parliament and outside of it do not always take for granted what they see on the face of a Bill. For instance, when names are on a Bill like this we do not take it for granted that those who allow their names to be put on will subscribe to the stock themselves. There is not a man in this House who has any experience, who does not know that behind every Bill there are schemes and wheels within wheels; there are contractors and things like that. We all know that. It is a very old story indeed. Therefore, I think we should know exactly where we stand. A tunnel for railway purposes alone would not suit the interests of the city of Montreal and of the South Shore. There is not a single member from the district of Montreal who would say that a tunnel for railway purposes would suit us, and therefore the two tunnels, the one for vehicles and the one for railways have to go on together. I have no hesitation in saying that the whole population of Montreal is in favour of a bridge instead of a tunnel, but I hope that the tunnel will be successful. That, however, has to be proved. It is not very attractive for the farmers to travel with their produce and their families and so on in a tunnel.

Mr. BELCOURT. It is not intended as a pleasure road.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is not a pleasure road no doubt, but I can tell my hon. friend that the farmers on the South Shore are most prosperous; they come every day to the city, and there is a strong feeling in favour of some new communication between the South Shore and the city. That feeling has arisen because they believe the Grand Trunk Railway has not used them liberally enough. They believe that the rates on the Grand Trunk Railway bridge are too high, and so they insist on having a new means of communication. Before this Bill goes through the House, I shall, therefore, insist that the two tunnels will go on together, and I am sure I will be supported in that by all the members from the district of Montreal. Speaking of the amendment just proposed by my hon. friend (Mr. Bickerdike), I may say that I am very glad that he has taken the trouble to consult the promoters of the Bill in Montreal, and I fully agree with him.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. This question was fully discussed in the Railway Committee, which came to the conclusion that it would exact from these parties a deposit of $50,000 for their good faith when they would submit their plans to the Governor in Council, and also that $100,000 would be spent by them within nine months. I believe that guarantee is amply sufficient unless you want to kill the project. For my part, I am rather inclined in favour of a bridge, and I have been in favour of a bridge for 20 or 25 years. I know that the citizens of Montreal are in favour of a bridge, but in what position are we at the present time? We are in the position that we are not likely to have any bridge Bill passed during the present session of parliament. The only bridge Bill that was submitted to the committee seriously was withdrawn, but there remains another Bill which is on the Order paper for the second reading. If the hon. gentleman who occupies the important position of Minister of Public Works in the government of Canada; if he will undertake to support the other Bill which is the second Order of the day, and if he will undertake to give to the citizens of Montreal and to the people on the South Shore some help as regards improved means of communication with the city, I do not know what I would do myself under the existing conditions. But I do not think that it is possible to have the other Bill passed during this session. If prorogation is going to take place next Tuesday or Wednesday, this other Bill cannot go before the committee until Monday, and there is no knowing when it would come back to the House. Although, as I have said, I am not quite favourable to the tunnel scheme, yet as a representative of Montreal for the past twenty-five years, and knowing the sentiments of the people there, I know that they want that the promoters of any scheme which will give them communication between the two sides of the river, shall have a chance to go on with the execution of the work which they contemplate.

Not a word has been said against the promoters of this enterprise. There are two or three of them who are certainly in a position to build and to carry to a success this enterprise with their own resources. If they are not serious, or if they discover within the next three months, after having put engineers to work to ascertain what is to be done, that it is impossible, with the amount of capital at their disposal, to carry on the work, there will be nothing lost, and there will be opportunity for any serious company to give the necessary notices and come before parliament next session and ask for the necessary legislation to give them the right to build either a tunnel or a bridge. I repeat that all we want is communication between the two shores of the St. Lawrence; and as a citizen of the city of Montreal, interested in the welfare of the city, and knowing the sentiments of the people, I think we should give every possible chance to this company to become incorporated and to start the necessary works. If you impose upon the company conditions which are impossible, you might as well kill the Bill at once, and tell the people of Montreal to wait until it pleases us to have this communication between the two shores provided. I say this without any hesitation, knowing, as I have said, exactly the sentiments of the citizens of Montreal. The amount required to be deposited, $50,000, as a guarantee of good faith, is a better provision than the one suggested by the hon. member for the St. Lawrence division; because if these people are not serious, they will not risk having the $50,000 forfeited, whereas people who are not serious might say, 'We will go on and get the plans prepared and submit these plans to the government, and after we have done that, we will spend part of the $200,000, and then try to get an extension of time from parliament.' Then they would come here and say to parliament: 'We have had plans prepared at a cost of, say $50,000, and we have spent $30,000 in making soundings and experiments, and we want an extension of time.' Parliament, being always well disposed, would grant the extension of time for another year; and the result would be that the citizens of Montreal and the people on the south shore of the St. Lawrence would be deprived of the incorporation of a serious company, which would have been in a position to go on with the undertaking. I speak feelingly on this matter, not only as a representative of the city of Montreal, but as one interested in the welfare of the people on the south shore; for I may say that the door of political life was opened to me by the people of my native county of Chambly, and I have a great deal of sympathy for them. I know what the farmers of the south shore have been suffering for years; I know the sentiment they have towards an enterprise of this kind. When it was decided by this parliament that half a million should be granted to the Grand Trunk Railway Company to enable it to enlarge the Victoria bridge and to make it a general traffic bridge, as was stated at the time, the project was hailed with rejoicing on both sides of the St. Lawrence; but when it was discovered that instead of it being a traffic bridge, it only gave one-fourth the advantages which were expected, the people of the south shore were only pacified by the friends of the government telling them that whenever a serious company would undertake to build a bridge or to carry out some other scheme to provide communication between the two shores, it would be given the power to do so. If you now refuse this opportunity to this company, and impose upon it conditions which are impossible, and which will prevent people even thinking of undertaking such a work, you will do an injustice to fifteen or twenty counties on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, as well as to the city of Montreal. I have no hesitation in saying that if the hon. member for the St. Lawrence division were not actuated by good motives, and really thought that his amendment would block the enterprise, I do not think he would persist in it; because the clause as it stands in the Bill before the House affords all the necessary safeguards to the public; and next session, if these people prove not to be serious in what they undertake, the field will be perfectly open to another company to come before this House and get another charter.

Mr. PREFONTAINE.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Surely my hon. friend can have no objection to accept the amendment which has been accepted in Montreal by the most influential promoters of the Bill.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I did not know that before.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend from the St. Lawrence division met to-day the hon. Senator Mackay and Mr. Ross——

Mr. BICKERDIKE. Mr. Miles.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I beg pardon—Senator Mackay and Mr. Miles, and both of them have authorized him to move this amendment. Here is the amendment:

The company shall within seven months of the passing of this Act expend on construction works of said subway the sum of $200,000, otherwise the charter shall be considered null and void.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does that strike out the necessity of the deposit of $50,000?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. The deposit remains as it is; but instead of $100,000, which is specified in section 21 of the Bill, the amendment provides that $200,000 shall be spent on construction work. Surely the people of Montreal cannot have any objection to taking every security that it is possible to give. I know that my hon. friend (Mr. Préfontaine) is deeply interested in the welfare of the city of Montreal and the ridings on the south shore; but it has not been by granting charters imprudently that we have served those large interests in the past. We have had on the statute-book for the last ten or twelve years a charter to build a bridge, but it is not built yet. The promoters of the undertaking, being substantial men, have approved of the amendment, and under the circumstances, I think it should be accepted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is the sum of $200,000 substituted for the sum of $100,000, which was inserted in the Bill by the Railway Committee?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Public Works is entirely mistaken. According to the amendment, the sum of $200,000 is to be spent within seven months after the passage of the Bill, whereas, if I remember rightly, the Railway Committee decided that the sum of $100,000 should be spent within nine months after the approval of the plans and specifications by the Governor in Council. The two provisions are entirely different.

I am sorry to see the opposition of the hon. Minister of Public Works, for I think it is the duty of the government to sustain the action of the Railway Committee. As the hon. minister says, most respectable men are the incorporators in this Bill. After full discussion, the committee decided that, as an evidence of their bonâ fides, $50,000 should be deposited by the parties who were applying—that is by the incorporators—which, in the event of their not going on with the undertaking, will be forfeited to the Crown, and further, that, on the expiry of nine months after the acceptance or approval of the plans by the Governor in Council, $1,000,000 shall have been expended on the undertaking.

Mr. McCARTHY. Make it $200,000 if you like.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Make it $200,000 and then I suppose there will be no objection to the Bill. I draw the attention of the hon. member from St. Lawrence (Mr. Bickerdike) to the fact that this amendment is completely irregular. He has not given notice of it, and canont move it except with the unanimous consent of the House.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I know that.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I came here to-night to try and get the Bill through, because if we do not get it through to-night it will not go through at all. This is a compromise, which was arrived at yesterday in Montreal, and I ask hon. members to accept it now.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We will do it unanimously, if the hon. member will agree to substitute $200,000 for the $100,000.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I am quite willing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And provide that it be expended on construction work.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If after the passing of the Bill, when the borings are made, it is found that the company cannot go on, I want to give other parties an opportunity to advertise in time to have a Bill introduced next session.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. You can advertise whether you are going on or not.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. No reasonable men would come in unless they be given the time I ask.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Will not the hon. member for St. Lawrence accept the amendment proposed by the promoters of the Bill to have $200,000 substituted for $100,000 ? The hon. gentleman must understand that the promoters cannot commence the work until the plans are approved by the government, and they are only given nine months after the approval of the plans for the expenditure of $200,000. There is a forfeiture of $50,000, to which they are subject, and they have besides to expend $200,000 within nine months after the approval of the plans, under penalty of forfeiture of their charter.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. If the hon. gentleman will accept seven months instead of nine months——

Mr. COWAN. There are a lot of Bills behind this, and let us get through with it.

Mr. BICKERDIKE. I want this to go through.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. What the hon. member asks is fairly reasonable.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the committee to substitute $200,000 for the $100,000 provided in the Bill ?

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that this is too important a Bill to railroad through the committee at the rapid rate at which it is attempted to put it through. We had considerable discussion in the committee over this Bill and a great deal of impatience was shown and a very strong disposition to force it through, whether, in the judgment of many, it was right or wrong. It is a very important undertaking, far reaching in its consequences, and it seems to me that a little delay would be more in keeping with the best interests of the city of Montreal and the people of that part of the country than to hurry the measure through too rapidly. When this Bill was before the Railway Committee, one of the strongest reasons given in its behalf was the respectability and financial strength of the men whose names appear as its incorporators. But members of parliament, who have been in this House any length of time, have learned to estimate at its proper value this parading of prominent names. We have learned over and over again that these names are simply used for the specific purpose of influencing the House and the committee to get a scheme through, and find out afterwards that the owners of these names had indeed very little to do with it, and very often the charter passes shortly afterwards into the hands of men who are little better than men of straw. Older members do not lay as much stress, as do some of the younger ones, on the importance of these prominent financial names, which are too often lent for the purpose of carrying the Bill through the House. I am not underestimating the financial ability of these men as financiers of Montreal or the Dominion. There is no doubt they command a very large amount of capital. And if their financial wealth were at stake, that would give us a guarantee that they intended to carry the enterprise through and do not intend to let it pass into other hands. But it is because we know from experience that such is not always the case and that too often these prominent names are used for the purpose of getting a Bill through the House, and for that purpose alone, that we do not attach to them the value we otherwise would. It is proposed to make a tunnel under the St. Lawrence, and that suggests the questions whether the scheme is feasible, how much it will cost, when it can be completed, and of what utility it will be when completed. These are the questions we naturally consider in seeking to determine whether it will be wise or otherwise to assist them in putting through this scheme. If we consider what other tunnels have cost and compare them with the proposal in this Bill, we can come to but one conclusion—that the gentlemen who have lent their names to this scheme have taken but little trouble to collect the data which they ought to have for their own guidance and for the use of parliament and of the committee in the discussion of a scheme of this kind. I have a few facts with regard to the cost of the St. Clair tunnel, and this proposed St. Lawrence tunnel, I believe, will be a great deal more expensive. The St. Clair tunnel cost $3,324,000——

Mr. BELCOURT. I rise to a point of order. Are we going to have a dissertation on the cost of every tunnel in America as part of the discussion of this Bill, when there are twenty Bills on the Order paper awaiting the attention of the committee ?

Mr. SPROULE. That makes no difference.

Mr. BELCOURT. It surely is not germane to the question to discuss the cost of tunnels elsewhere.

Mr. CASGRAIN. On the question of order, I venture to submit that the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Sproule's) remarks are quite pertinent to the question. It is most important to consider whether this tunnel really will be built, and the information the hon. gentleman is giving is relevant to the question and important in consideration of it. I do not think the point of order is well taken.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) is quite within his rights.

Mr. SPROULE. I was sure you would make such a ruling, Mr. Speaker, for it would be unprecedented to deny the right to present legitimate arguments such as I am presenting in connection with this matter. It must not be forgotten that this can only pass this House by unanimous consent. Any member has a right to object to the amendment if he desires to do so. The fact that we do not act upon that right shows the indulgence we are inclined to exercise towards the hon. gentleman's scheme.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question ?

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. If the promoters accept the condition of the expenditure of $200,000 within nine months and the deposit of $50,000, does not the hon. gentleman think that a sufficient guarantee that these people are in earnest ?

Mr. SPROULE. I would consider it better than the $50,000 alone. But it is not enough to satisfy me that they——

Mr. PREFONTAINE. How much do you want ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am opposed to the principle of a tunnel, for the reasons that I propose to give to the House. In the first place, I say the cost is very much greater than the promoters of this Bill have estimated it to be, and that would be one of the strongest deterrents to the fruition of the scheme. I was about to say that the St. Clair tunnel, which is a single tunnel with a single track and which is only twenty feet in diameter, which is through clay thirty feet below the water at the lowest point, the approach grade being only two per cent on one side—while this St. Lawrence tunnel is two per cent one side and steeper on the other—cost $3,234,857. Now, if this St. Lawrence tunnel is to give the accommodation to the public the promoters profess a desire to give, it would require not one tunnel but two or three——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Two tunnels.

Mr. SPROULE. This would make the cost at least twice as great as the St. Clair tunnel, that is to say, the cost would run up to about $7,000,000, even if it were no greater in length than the St. Clair tunnel.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What is the length of the St. Clair tunnel ?

Mr. SPROULE. The open cut on the Canadian side is 3,270 feet ; tunnel on the Canadian side, 1,160 feet ; tunnel under the river, 2,310 feet ; on the American side, 1,810 feet ; open cut on the American side, 2,820 feet—total, 11,370 feet, or 2·23-100 miles. The proposed St. Lawrence tunnel is 4·11-100 miles in length. Thus, besides requiring two tubes, this tunnel is nearly twice as long as the St. Clair tunnel. I think we have every reason to believe that it will be proportionately as costly, and, on that basis, the expense involved will be about $15,000,000. We must take this item of cost into consideration, in deciding whether it is wise or not to give the promoters the right to build this tunnel. For, the existence of this charter, even if the work were not carried out, would have the effect of preventing the building of a bridge which, to my mind, would be much better. Now I have the figures here concerning the Washington tunnel in Chicago. That is a dry tunnel. It was built in 1867 for general traffic. But it was very unpopular and was never used to any great extent. We are told by the promoters of this Bill that this St. Lawrence tunnel would be as useful for traffic as a bridge. Any one who knows anything about tunnels knows that that is perfect moonshine. What benefit would it be to the farmers of the south shore if they have the tunnel built? Practically none at all, for they could not use it for general traffic to any great extent. The Washington tunnel was turned over to the street railway in 1890. It consists of two arches with centre walls, approach grade seven to eight per cent, with a length of open cut of 570 feet and tunnel 930 feet, a total of 1,500 feet. It was very costly, but I need not go into the figures, as that part of it does not bear any relation to this. Now, what is proposed for this St. Lawrence tunnel? They propose to build a tunnel open at the north side for 2,500 feet, against 3,370 feet for the St. Clair tunnel. There will be a land tunnel of 6,800 feet. The river tunnel will be 5,500 feet, whereas the river tunnel under the St. Clair is only 2,310 feet. I give these figures to show how much more expensive this one will be and how much more imporant this enterprise will be, than even the St. Clair tunnel which took such a long time to put through. The land on the south side would be 2,630 feet, the open cut would be 4,220 feet; in all the total cut with the tunnel would be 21,700 feet, while the St. Clair tunnel had only 11,370 feet. Now, when these figures are remembered one can understand what it means to build a tunnel under the St. Lawrence down at Montreal. But they are going to double track this tunnel, it is going to be 26 feet wide and 23 feet high. The estimated cost, without the land damages, will be $3,500,000. The cost of the St. Clair tunnel for a single tube was over $3,234,000. You see the enormous disparity between the sizes of the tunnels, and yet the one is to cost about the same as the other. It shows how little time has been spent in making up the estimate, on what slight data a conclusion has been based of the cost of this tunnel. This tunnel would cost at least $13,500,000, and it is to require three years to build it. If we may judge from the rapidity with which these tunnels have been built in the past it is more likely to take four or five years to build it than three years.

Now, it will not give the same accommodation as a bridge would give, and in my judgment a bridge is the only feasible scheme there in the interests of the people, because we want the common people to be able to use it as well as the railway companies. The railway companies can use a tunnel all right but the ordinary foot passenger cannot use it, and the man with a horse and vehicle cannot use it. I asked the question in the Railway Committee, how is the man going there with his produce to get through the tunnel? It has to be put on a car, horse and all, and carried through. When you consider the amount of traffic from one side of the river to the other you can understand how many will use it. It will require three tunnels similar to this one to give the same convenience to the people as a bridge would give, and three tunnels at the estimated cost given by the hon. gentleman for this one would cost $10,500,000. And what I have given you with reference to the actual facts of building the St. Clair tunnel justifies the conclusion that instead of its costing $15,000,000 it would cost nearer $20,000,000 or $30,000,000, and I have no doubt it will when it comes to be built.

Now, the time they require to build it in is three years, as against two years for a bridge. We are told, and I think we are justified in believing that a bridge could easily be built inside of two years. But it would be utterly impossible to push on a tunnel at the ordinary progress usually made in building tunnels in anything like that time. For these reasons I am opposed to a tunnel entirely. But if we must have a tunnel, then I want to say, in view of these prominent names that are paraded with their financial strength as a justification for us to give them this charter, that we want the very strongest binding clauses that can possibly be put in to satisfy us that these men are prepared to put their own money into it, to go on at once and build this tunnel and not keep it for speculative purposes and sell out to the first man that comes along. I am opposed to it in the next place because, considering the gigantic nature of the undertaking, I do not think it is likely to be carried through. I am opposed to it because I do not think we have sufficient data to enable us to determine whether it would be wise for us to pass this Bill. Has there been a boring made in the St. Lawrence river to show what the sub soil is like? Has there been any engineering investigation; anything more than an ordinary estimate? Nothing, so far as I know, nothing that was before the committee; so we are really going it blind. I am opposed to it, as I said, because it involves an immense expenditure of money which is not likely to be made inside the next four or five years.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But these gentlemen do not ask us for any money. I want that fact to be kept in mind. The promoters of the Bill told us the other day that they do not ask us for a subsidy.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not taking that into account at all. I am discussing the feasibility of the scheme, the probability of its being carried out, and the importance of it after it is built; and I am drawing a comparison between the value of that scheme to the people both on the north shore and the south shore, and the value of a bridge, and I reach the conclusion in my own mind that if this tunnel is undertaken it will destroy the probability of a bridge ever being built for a long time to come. These are the points of view from which I am discussing the scheme at the present time. Now, the expenditure on the tunnel is to be very large, and these names are put forward as a reason why it is going to be built. I do not wish to underestimate the value and the financial importance of these names, because I believe they are all respectable men, all men of wealth and men who can control a great deal of money with their influence, if they desire to do so. Therefore if they are bona fide and going to invest their own capital and are not asking parliament to give them any subsidy why, they should have, it is said, an opportunity to build it. But it is because I believe they do not intend to build it that I am speaking against this Bill.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you know ?

Mr. SPROULE. I am giving reasons why I come to that conclusion. I do not say I know, but I say I am justified in coming to that conclusion for the reasons that I have given. Then again I say, in conclusion, that the tunnel is of no use for ordinary traffic purposes. What are the chief requirements for the ordinary farmer on the south shore ? It is to get over the river cheaply and readily to reach that great and valuable market. Are they going to get there through the tunnel ? Farmers do not use the St. Clair tunnel, they do not use any other tunnel for that purpose that I know of. Why ? Because they cannot use it with safety, they cannot use it with convenience, they cannot use it without very great danger, and they are not likely to use it at all. We are told that these tunnels, filled as they are with trains passing back and forth, with smoke, gas and foul air, not lighted, not properly ventilated, that they cannot be used by the ordinary travelling public at all. What benefit will it be to the farmer ? I am talking on behalf of the poor farmer that wishes to get to this market. I spoke on exactly the same lines when the Victoria bridge was being widened and I did my level best then to get a clause put in that Bill that would protect the travelling public against exorbitant charges I was fought on that line by members who advocated the scheme. And what was the result after the bridge was built ? Why we had the representatives of the people coming back and saying that the charges were most exorbitant. It is in view of that experience that I desire to take time by the forelock and not allow the poor habitants to be bound up for all time to come without being able to take advantage of the convenience which they desire for the purpose of getting to that important market. I say if that tunnel is built it will be of no value to the farmer on the south shore, but if a bridge is built it will be of immense value. I wish the government to keep in their hands the right to reduce the tolls, and to say they shall not be so onerous that the ordinary habitant cannot take advantage of the tunnel. For these reasons I am opposed to the tunnel in toto. But if this House must pass this Bill, then I want to see it passed with the most stringent provisions that will guarantee the building of it at an early day, because as long as this Bill remains it will prevent the possibility of any corporation taking up the scheme of building a bridge across that river, which would be by all means the most valuable communication for the poor people who require it the most.

Mr. BALL. Before this Bill is carried I would like to make a few remarks as representing one of the south shore counties, the county of Nicolet.

I live in the town of Nicolet. The Quebec Southern road is going to pass through Longueuil and then try to get across, and as one interested, I would like if something else should be built there besides a tunnel. I am getting a little old and I would like to cross over either by a tunnel or a bridge before I die. Why is it that there is a discussion to-day about a tunnel ? There was no talk of a tunnel a few months ago. There was only talk of building the Montreal bridge. Everything was prepared for the building of a bridge ; soundings were made, plans drawn and capitalists were ready to undertake the work. I am told that the owner of the charter had an offer for the sale of that charter. There were capitalists from the United States who desired to purchase it but they could not succeed in the negotiation. I will tell hon. gentlemen why. I was surprised the other night to hear my hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) say that he was in favour of a bridge, but after making a close investigation he found that a man by the name of Armstrong, was interested in the scheme. Well, it was not the case. He was playing upon the word. There was an Armstrong interested but it was not Mr. C. N. Armstrong, as he wanted to make hon. gentlemen think it was. Mr. Préfontaine——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BALL. The hon. member for Terrebonne and the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Préfontaine). As he was not acting as a member, I have a right to name him. I name him as a partner in this project. Have I a right, Mr. Chairman, to name a man when he is a partner and when I am speaking about his affairs and not speaking about him as a member of this House ?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You can suit yourself.

Mr. BALL. Mr. Préfontaine——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BALL. I will not mind you while I am with the Chairman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Carried.

Mr. BALL. Don't carry it yet. I have five minutes more.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Time, time.

Mr. BALL. No time. Mr. Préfontaine——

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BALL. I intended to say that as the Chairman permits me to say that. He had shares in this project. He had no shares as a member of this House, but he had shares as an individual in the bridge. Mr. Armstrong had shares individually in that bridge some years ago. But four years ago he transferred these shares to his son, Mr. Edgar N. Armstrong. They look a little like each other, but they are not the same individuals. Mr. Armstrong had indorsed notes for the Baie des Chaleur Railway Company. He was the endorser for about $60,000 of notes at the Banque Ville Marie. Everyone knows, I suppose, the former Banque Ville Marie. These notes were sold at auction and they went at one cent on the dollar, and Mr. Préfontaine bought the notes for $600.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. BALL. The hon. member for Maisonneuve bought the notes. They went at a cent on the dollar, and the hon. member for Terrebonne sued Mr. C. N. Armstrong and got judgment against him. Later on he sued his son to nullify the transfer and to retain the shares in the hands of Mr. C. N. Armstrong. The court dismissed his case; he could not seize the shares, so he relinquished the whole thing and made an arrangement with other parties—I do not know if I can name that word—schemer—who made application for a tunnel and for a bridge so as to kill that charter that had only to be revived and in regard to which all the preliminary work was done. They tried and with success to kill the charter that only required reviving.

The hour for private Bills having expired, the committee rose and reported progress.

YUKON TERRITORY ACT AMENDMENT.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 119), further to amend the Yukon Territory Act.—The Minister of the Interior.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton). The hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) furnished me with a draft of some amendments to the clause which I read when we were in the committee on the Bill before. I see no objection to the draft which was given me by my hon. friend except one. Inadvertently the words 'commissioner in council' are inserted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Subsection (e) reads as follows:

> Provided always, however, that no ordinance made under this Act imposing a tax or royalty or any matter relating thereto shall be, or be deemed to be retroactive, &c.

My hon. friend will see that that clause is not practicable, because it will apply to all the grants which are already made, and so will be retroactive. At present we have, under the Dominion Lands Act, imposed a royalty of 5 per cent, and we intend to abolish that royalty and impose a general tax of 2½ per cent. We are asking for this legislation because we intend to collect in another way, and we do not think we have power to make provision for the collection without legislative authority. If we abolish the present royalty and undertake to fix a royalty under this Act, subject to the provision that it shall not be retroactive, I am afraid they will be able to say that they have escaped from the royalty which had been levied on them before, and that under this Act we could not impose a royalty upon them. We cannot retroactively apply anything which would be any higher than 5 per cent, and that, no doubt, will meet the object which my hon. friend has in view. It would not affect the rights of any person who has acquired rights under contract from the government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not think the word 'retroactive' would have the meaning the hon. gentleman suggests.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It might not, but it would be very unfortunate if it were so held.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There have been some questions pending.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The last section is quite sufficient to protect any questions pending, which are all in the shape of suits in the court. It is in respect to past transactions that the questions have arisen, and the royalty of 2½ per cent would be a new transaction. There is absolutely nothing in the questions between the government and any person in respect to the royalty, except a few suits that were brought on the ground that we had collected royalty in 1897 when we were not supposed to do so; that our officers commenced too soon to collect royalty. That is the only question pending, and that is before the Exchequer Court.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it not a very usual principle that no provision of this kind should be made retroactive?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. But if we abolish the 5 per cent tax and put another tax in place of it, we might be in the position that there was a limitation in this clause, and it might be held that we could only apply the tax subsequently.

That might not be the case, but I do not think that the government should take any chances.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would not wish to leave the legislation in any uncertainty that might make the future collection of taxes doubtful. I am as anxious to avoid that as the hon. gentleman. But is not that matter made perfectly plain under the provisions of the Interpretation Act, which I presume would apply to ordinances made under the provisions of a statute. The hon. gentleman is aware that under the provisions of the Interpretation Act, when we repeal a statute the new provisions shall take effect, and every matter and thing shall be carried on just as if the amending Act had originally been in force instead of the repealed Act. Would not that prevent any such difficulty as the minister suggests?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why could it not be made perfectly plain by adding a proviso to the effect that this shall not in any way affect the substitution of the new tax for the old tax?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. All we get power to do is to levy a royalty. That is going to affect all, whether the leases are issued at the present time or any past leases or subsequent leases. We intend as soon as this legislation becomes law to pass an ordinance levying a royalty on the gold output of the Yukon Territory, and we intend immediately before doing so to repeal the present Orders in Council, under which the royalty of 5 per cent is collected. We want the legislation to put us in such a position that there can be absolutely no question about it. There is no mine at present in the Yukon which claims in any way to be exempt from royalty except under the exemptions which the royalty Orders in Council provide at the present time. What we have decided to do is that instead of the exemption and a royalty of 5 per cent, there shall be a general tax of 2½ per cent. We do not want any doubt to exist as to our right to do that. I can assure my hon. friend that there is no question at the present time except with respect to certain claims which arise out of the Act of 1897. We desire to have the legislation in such a position that there cannot be any possible ground for litigation after the Order in Council has passed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The new tax will take effect from the date of the new Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is not the government perfectly protected by providing in the new Order in Council that the old tax shall continue in force until a particular day, after which the new tax shall take effect?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I do not think so. The very fact that there is doubt about it is the reason we are asking for legislation. We unquestionably have power to impose a royalty under the Dominion Lands Act; but I doubt if we have power to impose it in the form in which we desire to do it, that is, as a royalty to be collected at the boundary line instead of at the mine. We have to take certain proceedings in order to collect the royalty in that way, which we have not the power to do by Order in Council without special legislation, and that is the reason why we are asking for this legislative power. If we could justify it under the old law, this Act would not be necessary. There is a question of some hundreds of thousands of dollars of revenue involved, and if we lost even half a million dollars, we could not go back on our legislation if we made a mistake or took any chances. The rest of the clause, as my hon. friend has drawn it, I am quite agreeable to accept; and I think I can suggest what would perhaps meet my hon. friend's wishes and not incur any danger, that is, to add to subsection 'a' a clause like this: Imposing a tax or royalty not exceeding 5 per cent thereof on gold and silver the output of the mines of the territory, to be levied from and after the date of the ordinance. That could not be the subject of any doubt. It could not be retroactive.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that would assist.

Mr. LANCASTER. I would like to point out to the hon. minister that the last subsection of the amendment only applies to suits now pending. If it is to have the effect he thinks it ought to have, it should have words added which would include any cause of action which has not yet begun.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We will make it read: 'Any cause of action now accrued or any matter or suit now pending in any court.'

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one other matter I would like to mention. Under section 2 of this Bill, the commissioner in council has the same powers of legislation with respect to the Yukon territory, which the government of the North-west Territories have with respect to the North-west Territories. Then under another clause the Governor in Council has the power to make certain ordinances respecting the Yukon Territory, and I would like to know whether or not these powers conflict in any way.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. A clause has been drawn by the Department of Justice providing that in case of conflict the ordinances of the Governor in Council will prevail. As matters are at present, there will be very little necessity for the Governor in Council taking action. That would only happen in some special emergency, and in case of conflict, in order to avoid unnecessary litigation, we provide that the ordinances of the Governor in Council shall prevail. Of course we have the power of vetoing any ordinances, and the effect of the clause will be simply to avoid any unnecessary litigation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is to say there is a power of veto which can be exercised. I have one more suggestion ; would the hon. gentleman have any objection to qualifying clause 6 by adding some such provision as we have added to clause 3 ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. We are not giving them anything which they have not at present practically. The only thing we could add would be a clause similar to what they use in the American States, providing that there shall be no interference with vested rights, but we are simply following the legislation in connection with the North-west Territories, and no difficulty has arisen there. They simply deal with questions of property and civil rights of a local kind.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am inclined to think that there is a clause which covers that objection.

Bill, as amended, reported; read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House in Committee of Supply.

Charges of management—Additional sum required for clerical assistance in connection with the issue and redemption of Dominion notes, $1,000.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We had to take a supplementary vote for the current year, making our appropriation for this year $7,300. We are asking now an appropriation which will make the vote for next year $8,000. This is owing to the fact that the increase of circulation makes necessary additions to the clerical staff.

Mr. WILSON. You are saving that much interest.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought these Dominion notes were issued by the American Bank Note Company.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend is confusing this with the item of printing. The notes are printed and supplied to us by the American Bank Note Company, the contractors. But, however great may be our confidence in that company, we would hardly entrust them with the signing and issuing of these notes. This money is to pay for clerical assistance in countersigning the notes and superintending the issue. This is work largely performed by young ladies who receive, I am sorry to say, not very large salaries—from $400 to $600.

Civil government—Department of Railways and Canals—To provide for the promotion of F. A. Dixon to the rank of chief clerk, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $1,800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I suppose that in the amount already voted for salaries, the salary of this gentleman is included. You are voting it again, except that there is here, I suppose, an increase. What becomes of the amount already voted ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. While there are two votes, they represent but one salary. Perhaps it would be sufficient to vote only the increase. The Minister of Railways and Canals has placed it in this form. Of course care would be taken that there is only one salary.

Mr. GOURLEY. Could not the word be added that would make it clear ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The point is that this salary has already been provided for. But the object here is to promote this officer.

Mr. GOURLEY. But could not you add some words such as 'this sum to be in full of salary,' or something like that ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The other could be dropped on concurrence. I suppose ; at the same time there is a little difficulty in that. I can give the House the assurance that it is not the intention to pay more than one salary. But I would not like to change the vote in the absence of the minister. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden, Halifax) wishes to have the item stand, there will be no objection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think this is a very good way of putting the appropriation. Perhaps it would be better to let it stand.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Very well, let it stand until the Minister of Railways arrives.

Item allowed to stand.

Civil government—Department of Trade and Commerce—To provide for one senior second-class clerk, $1,100.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this an additional clerk, and if so, what is the occasion for the increase ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is made necessary by the fact that the Department of Trade and Commerce is taking over work from the Department of Inland Revenue, such as the inspection of staples and the grain inspection.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have not observed any corresponding decrease in the Inland Revenue Department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. But, without this change, there might have been an increase in the Department of Inland Revenue.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But I suppose there would have been an explanation of that. Otherwise, the reason for increasing one department seems a good reason for decreasing the other.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If any of those items is objected to it must stand until the minister to whose department it relates is present.

Auditor General's office—To provide for the salary of a junior second-class clerk, contingencies, clerical and other assistance; printing and stationery, $3,600.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Auditor General requires extra assistance, and we are glad to give it to him. He has been rather sharply criticised for not doing enough; I think he is disposed to do a little more and make his book a little larger.

Mr. GOURLEY. Is this additional clerk intended to keep a record of the numerous times in which the Treasury Board overrules the Auditor General ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Perhaps that may be included among his duties.

Department of Public Works—To provide for the salary of one first-slass clerk, R. C. Desrochers, assistant secretary, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $100.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. Desrochers is an old and valuable employee whom I have just promoted.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But $100 a year is a very small salary.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, but this is an increase.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The way it reads in the resolution, it is to provide a salary. I thought he was only getting $100 a year.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. He has been promoted. The balance of his salary is paid in some other way.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) is right in his criticism. The item should read 'to provide for increasing his salary.'

To provide for an increase of salary for S. E. O'Brien, notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act, $100.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Mr. O'Brien has just been promoted to the position of first-class clerk, and he is at the same time secretary of the Ottawa Improvement Commission. In view of the large amount of work he is doing the government has thought it only fair to give him this increase of salary. He has been 12 or 15 years in the service. We have asked him to act as secretary of the commission; he does that work at night.

Hon. Mr. FIELDING.

Yukon public buildings, $36,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I move to reduce that item to $34,000.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The details of this work are as follows: Administration building, filling up swamp and making sidewalk, $6,000; post office, filling swamp and grading, $5,000; furniture, $1,000; government house, filling in and fencing sidewalk, $3,000; court house, $2,000; mining inspectors' offices in four places, $15,000; furniture. This will be all. I pledge myself not to ask for any more money for this purpose. All these items have been discussed with Mr. Commissioner Ross and have been carefully considered. They will complete the erection and equipment of public buildings out there.

Mr. WILSON. Will the revenue from the Yukon pay all this money we are spending this year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes. Without reference to a particular year, the expenditures in the Yukon have been less than our revenue up to the present date. I am not quite sure as to any particular year, but the aggregate expenditure is less than the aggregate of our receipts in the Yukon up to the present. The Minister of the Interior has announced that he is going to make a reduction in the royalty. We are hopeful that even with the reduced rate, we shall continue to receive enough to pay all the expenses. The very fact that we have received already a larger sum than we have expended is fair ground why we should reduce the royalty; because, while we are anxious to make the Yukon pay for the Yukon, we are not desirous of making a profit out of it. We are hopeful that under the new system for the collection of the royalty at the reduced rate, it will still yield us a liberal revenue, enough to meet all the expenses.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. While I am on my feet, perhaps the committee would like to have some explanation on a subject which we discussed the other day concerning an employee of Mr. Justice Dugas. Here is a report that has been sent to me, or rather to the chief architect, by Mr. Fuller, who until recently was our resident architect at Dawson. Here is a report that has been addressed to me re William St. Denis and Louise Collinet :

Department of Public Works,
Ottawa, May 6, 1902.

Memo to the Hon. the Minister :

Re William St. Denis, caretaker, and Louise Collinet, matron, Court House, Dawson.

Both were employed by the government previous to the assuming by the Department of Public Works of the maintenance, &c., of the public buildings in Dawson, in the winter of 1900.

Rations were issued to them by the North-west mounted police, and their wages were $80 and $60 per month respectively.

Their duties were the care of the court house and the quarters of Hon. Justice Dugas, which were then in the same buildings.

Notice in the fall of 1900 was given our department that no further rations could be issued to them by the North-west mounted police, and on the recommendation of hon. the Commissioner of the Yukon, they were given $30 per month in lieu of the same, and were still provided with rooms, heat and light.

The court house above referred to is the old one.

Upon erection of the new court house, St. Denis and Collinet were transferred to it, and as the old police court was used as a police court, and Hon. Justice Dugas' quarters were removed therefrom, they were deprived of the rooms, heat and light, and were placed on the same footing as other charwomen and caretakers, namely: Louise Collinet received $150 per month without board, rooms, heat or light, and William St. Denis received $160 per month, and on the further condition that he attended to the fires in the court house, and guard the building during night, he was given a room in the court house.

While the quarters of Hon. Justice Dugas were in the old building, they attended to them as well as to the maintenance of the court proper.

When the judge's apartments were moved to another building, they still continued to look after them the same as before.

No change has been made in the original duties of these two parties from what they were required to perform previous to the assuming of the maintenance of the court house by the Department of Public Works, the only change being that Louise Collinet receives the same pay as other charwomen, namely: $150 per month without board, rooms, heat or light, with liberty to make any such arrangement for the same as she might see fit, and William St. Denis receives $160 per month, the same wages as other caretakers without board, and for his services (nightman of court house) is given a room in that building.

This is all as far as the Department of Public Works is concerned.

If William St. Denis has been dismissed from his position as caretaker of the court house, said dismissal must have occurred after I left Dawson in March, therefore, I cannot say what has been the cause for the same.

The ordinary wages for men in the Yukon are $7 to $8 per day.

The ordinary wages for women in the Yukon are $5 to $6 per day.

I have the honour to be, hon. sir,

Your obedient servant,

T. W. FULLER.

I telegraphed Mr. Bertrand and he replied saying that Louise Collinet and her husband had been dismissed because they had declined to obey orders. That is all I know about the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know what explanation the resident architect offers of his letter in which he says :

You will continue therefore, to be at the service of Mr. Justice Dugas, and act under his guidance for any work which you shall be required to do as matron of the court house.

You will arrange with the judge for your meals, which, under any circumstances, must not be taken within the court house.

What had these people to do with Judge Dugas in regard to their meals ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. They were transferred from the Department of the Interior to the Department of Public Works, and up to that date they had been paid only, respectively, $80 and $60 per month. Later on, they were given additional salary, but they were supplied with lodgings and rations. Later on again they did not get lodgings or rations. Then they were placed on the same footing as other charwomen and caretakers, the wife receiving $150 a month and being free to arrange for her meals anywhere she liked. I apprehend that she made an arrangement with Mr. Justice Dugas to board at his place, and it looks very much as if she had paid her board to Mr. Justice Dugas. I am not here to defend the judge. It is not my business. I state the facts as I understand them. It is not my business to defend that arrangement. I have nothing to do with that. All I want to state is that my department followed towards these people the ordinary course. As to the arrangement with Judge Dugas, it is for him to say whether it is proper or not. I have nothing to do with that.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not see an explanation of the order given by the chief architect to this matron that she should be at the service of Mr. Justice Dugas. He does not explain that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, he explains that in his report. The mounted police had arranged that the caretaker and charwoman would take care of Mr. Justice Dugas' lodging rooms. He was in the mounted police apartments then. When he went to other quarters, the same arrangement continued. Rightly or wrongly, it continued. But, it won't happen again, because, thank God, I am getting rid of the whole thing. The commissioner of the Yukon will settle that himself. I took good care when I found out that there was a Yukon government, to wash my hands of the whole thing.

Mr. BELCOURT. I suppose that this report of Mr. Fuller simply means that Judge Dugas for two years, or until the new court house was built, lived in the old court house. Louise Collinet and her husband were, the one caretaker and the other charwoman in the court house, their duties being to keep the court house clean and attend to the various duties of caretaker and matron, at the same time attending to Judge Dugas, who was an inmate of the court house. They lived in the court house, and so long as they were allowed to do that, they received salary and their rations. When the new court house was built, new quarters were found for the judge, and these people were given, instead of salary and rations, a salary of $150 and $160, respectively, a month, and they had to provide for meals wherever they could get them. It seems to me that is as plain as anything could be, and I do not see where the wrong is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That would be an explanation to a certain extent. The hon. gentleman is full of information on this subject, and perhaps he would explain the statement: you will arrange with the judge for your meals.

Mr. BELCOURT. I cannot speak of an arrangement of which I know nothing, but I can understand the report which I have heard read.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I can only say that that order does not stand good now; it is all over.

Mr. SPROULE. We look with considerable suspicion on these items because every expenditure made there is enormously high and we are told that wages are dear.

Mr. BELCOURT. Five times what it is here.

Mr. SPROULE. When we asked for information we were told that the government was obliged to pay $20 a cord for wood, but I have a Dawson newspaper here which declares that the wood which was furnished to the government at $20 a cord was being bought by private parties at $6. That is enough to excite suspicion. We were told last year that all the buildings were completely furnished, but now we have $24,000 for odds and ends to complete the furnishing of these buildings.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That covers the building of four mining offices, levelling the ground, fencing and so on.

Mr. SPROULE. We are always told that everything is dear there, but letters from friends and the local newspapers give us contrary information. It is declared that the supplies are bought at exorbitant prices by the government, or there is a heavy rake-off for the middle man.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Public tenders were called for the supply of that wood, and the lowest tenderer was $11 per cord, and then it had to be cut. That cost $4 per cord. I have in my hand the same paper that the hon. gentleman has and the price of wood quoted there at $6, is for wood in the bush without cutting. However, public tenders were called for this wood and the lowest was accepted.

Mr. SPROULE. I have here a Dawson paper of April 5th.

Mr. BELCOURT.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have the same paper here.

Mr. SPROULE. This paper says:

> The government paid $20 per cord for wood. The contract was not let out by tender because very few here could supply it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is not true.

Mr. SPROULE—(reading):

> Why isn't some official decent and honest enough to tell the Minister of Public Works that all the wood was bought by a middleman for from $6 to $10 per cord; that the wood merchants have delivered it all winter by the cord for from $10 to $12 retail; that there is a divvy of from $6 to $10 per cord—that has to be paid. There are very few here who supply the wood? White & Eaton will supply all the government wood at $8 per cord. Alex. Prudhomme, Jeff Davidson, Dan Matheson or a half dozen other responsible men will fill the contract for even less. Will the man who supplied this wood to the government tell us his name and what price he received and how much he 'cut up' to get the contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That man Prudhomme, whose name is mentioned, tendered at $13 a cord not cut.

Mr. SPROULE. I may say that I have a letter from a gentleman whom I believe to be reliable and truthful and he corroborates this information. In face of that we are justified in believing that either a very high price was paid for that wood or that there was a rake-off to some person. At all events the government seems to be paying enormously higher prices than are paid by private individuals for the same article.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have not one word to add except that I hold in my hand a report from Mr. Fuller, giving me the names of the tenderers—public tenders having been asked for.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the minister state how many tenders were received, from whom received, and the amount of the tenders?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. With the greatest pleasure. The report is as follows:

> Memo.
> Purchase of 600 cords of fire wood for the public buildings, Dawson City, Y.T., maintained by the Department of Public Works (not including any of the North-west mounted police buildings) for the season of 1901-1902.
> Public tenders were called for on the 9th July—all tenders to be in by 1 o'clock on the 20th July, 1901.
>
> Specifications called for sawn wood, spruce or birch not cotton wood.
> Wood to be in 16 foot lengths delivered on government reserve, Dawson city, not later than 10th September, 1901.
> Following list of tenders received.

Contract was awarded to lowest tenders, Canadian Yukon Lumber Company, $11 per cord.

Sawing, Splitting and Piling.

Two tenders received.

Joseph Morgan, $4 per cord. Mr. Foley, to cut only, $3.50 per cord. To cut, split and pile, $5 per cord. The lowest tender was taken, viz., Joseph Morgan.

Then there was the delivery, which was done by ourselves, and that cost $2.50 per cord.

Mr. SPROULE. How much does this bring up the price to, all told ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $17.50—$11 per cord ; cutting, splitting and piling, $4 ; delivery at various places, $2.50 ; making $17.50 at public tender.

Mr. SPROULE. What was the first price for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For the wood 16 feet long. Then it had to be cut and split and delivered at different places on the government reserve.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister told us the wood was good value at $20 a cord. If we believe this statement, there is certainly a wonderful difference in the price the government are paying and the price private individuals are paying.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. What else could I do ? Public tenders were asked !

Mr. SPROULE. I want the hon. minister to allow me to say this, that in the face of the information given here, the denial that the contract was let by public tender, and the statement that wood was being sold at $6 a cord and upwards, we are justified in making the inquiry ; and after the minister has made the explanation he has, that the contract was given by public tender, and that the wood cost so much, I am not saying that he did more or less than he should have done ; but it is well to have that information, because it relieves our mind of the suspicion that there was a job somewhere.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be more than surprised if there was anything dishonest in this transaction, because the architect is a most honourable young man.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). In looking over the expenditure in connection with Yukon public buildings for the past year, I observe that some of the practices which have prevailed in regard to Mr. Justice Dugas have not by any means been confined to him. For example, we find that for the residence of Mr. Justice Craig $494 has been paid for electric lighting, $759 for fire wood and $49.50 for installing the electric light. These charges are as open to criticism and objection as similar charges with regard to Mr. Justice Dugas, and I desire to repeat the statement I made the other night that it would be just as right for the Minister of Public Works to provide at the public expense residences for himself and the Minister of Finance.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am responsible, of course ; but I want to state again that this was not my own personal policy ; but the government decided for a time to erect residences for the judges. We found it was too expensive, and in the meantime we paid for their rentals and the maintenance of their houses. Whether it was right or wrong, of course I am fully responsible, but let it be understood that it is not my personal responsibility alone.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am not criticising the hon. gentleman ; I am criticising the government, and I am under-stating the matter. Suppose the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Finance, in addition to the salaries they enjoy as servants of this government, were allowed $3,000 or $5,000 for living expenses, and in addition took money voted for public buildings in Ontario and with it provided themselves with residences here in Ottawa, furnished those residences, and paid for coal and electric lights for themselves : they would be in exactly the same position as the two judges, the Gold Commissioner and the Commissioner of the Yukon. I think I am correct in saying that the Gold Commissioner had an allowance for living expenses. That is correct, is it not ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think it is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I find that $3,826.15 was expended on his residence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that some of our officers were for a time lodged over a public building. That may have been the case in this instance, though I do not know positively that it was.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If they were lodged over a public building, I do not see that that necessarily implies that the country should pay for their fuel and lighting. We find the same condition of things with regard to the Commissioner of the Yukon. If I am not mistaken, he had an allowance for living expenses, and yet no less than $6,209.89 was charged in conection with his residence.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am sure my hon. friend will agree with me that it is just as right for this government to lodge the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory as it is to lodge the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-west Territories. We have just completed the erection of a residence for the Commissioner, and it is only right that we should furnish it. He represents Canada there. He occupies a high position.

Mr. GOURLEY. You do not furnish the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia with living expenses. You give him a salary of $9,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. But my hon. friend must not lose sight of the fact that the provinces supply their own Lieutenant-Governors with all the furniture they require.

Mr. GOURLEY. I venture to say that the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia does more entertaining in a day than the Commissioner of the Yukon is called on to do in a year; and this is the purpose for which living expenses are given. When we give a man a salary in this country that is supposed to cover what his services are worth. We are not supposed to give him in addition, in a hap-hazard manner, a living allowance and furnish besides a residence and light it and heat it. We furnish a residence and its lighting and heating to each of our lieutenant-governors, and we might be expected to do the same in the case of the Commissioner of the Yukon Territory, as holding a somewhat similar representative position, but we do not besides give them living allowances. What does this judge do with his salary? Does he pocket it?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend must not lose sight of the fact that for a time the judge in the Yukon Territory had not a residence supplied by the government. We have just completed his residence, and it was before that was completed, I suppose, that we were giving him that allowance.

Mr. GOURLEY. It seems to me a very inequitable proceeding to give a judge of the Yukon such extraordinary emoluments, which are denied judges in the older provinces, who have no doubt to maintain larger establishments. In Nova Scotia you limit a judge to a salary of about $4,000 or $5,000, and I am bound to say that the man whom you sent out to the Yukon is not equal in education, training or social position to the judges in the older provinces. Yet you make a pet of this man, you give him a larger salary, you give besides a living allowance of $3,000, and you furnish him with a residence and its lighting and heating. You furnish him also with men servants and maid servants, and treat him as if he were a prince. That seems to me extraordinarily unjust, especially in view of the fact that you have refused to increase the salaries of the judges in Nova Scotia a mere $1,000. Surely this thing never grew up by hap-hazard, but must be based on some principle. Upon what principle are these large extras based? I do not want to fancy that this country is run on the boodle principle, but it is very hard to account for this state of affairs. Here is a man who, I do not imagine, was selected for the position he holds—for after all he is merely a magistrate out there—because of any exceptional ability or training, who is no doubt an ordinary man, and yet he is treated in a manner in which no judge is treated in this country, no matter how eminent in the profession he may be. That certainly requires some explanation. Here is an item for Judge Dugas' residence $4,000, salary $5,000, living allowance $3,000, some $12,000, which would probably pay the salaries of half the bench in Nova Scotia. There must be something very wrong in this state of affairs, and the hon. minister should explain on what principle these items were allowed. It has been pleaded that the opposition are blameable for not having vigorously protested against these items. We are told that we should not have allowed them to pass. No doubt I am to blame myself for not having investigated the matter, but the hon. minister can hardly hope to escape responsibility by any plea of that kind. It is the government, and not the opposition, who are responsible for every dollar of public expenditure. We are told that the living expenses in the Yukon are extraordinarily high. Well, I would undertake to say that they are not much heavier in Dawson City than in Victoria or Vancouver. Why should they be? You can reach Dawson City in four days' travel from Victoria or Vancouver. There is a line of railway completed, besides a line of boats well equipped, over which you can get all the provisions you require, and you can buy them in eastern Canada at the same prices as can the people of Victoria or Vancouver. The only difference in price between Dawson City and Victoria or Vancouver is the cost of transportation from the latter ports to the Yukon. And if you have a telegraphic service and a boat service, and a railway service, all so perfect, the additional cost of transportation must be very low. I would venture to say that this whole excuse of the extra cost of living will not bear investigation. I am quite convinced that if we were to telegraph to Dawson City for the quotations there of sugar and flour and the other necessaries of life, you would not find them much higher than in the east. Why, here are members of parliament getting their little indemnity of $1,500 per session, and ministers of the Crown having to put up with a salary of $8,000 per year. I pity the hon. Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. You are right there.

Mr. GOURLEY. That hon. minister occupies a most inferior position compared with Judge Dugas. He only gets a tuppenny-ha'penny salary of $8,000, while the judge out in the Yukon draws some $13,000. It seems to me that the minister should resign as a protest against the gross injustice of his treatment.

Mr. McEWEN. He ought to go out there as judge.

Mr. MORIN. He should discharge the judge and take his position.

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not think that the hon. Minister of Public Works could have known what a soft snap there was out in the Yukon, or he would not have remained here in the position he now holds. I am going to find out all about this story of the extra cost of living in Dawson City. I do not believe that to-day there is very much difference between the cost of living there and elsewhere. My opinion is borne out by this letter, in which it appears that this judge is keeping a boarding house, and a very cheap kind of boarding house at that. I have a notion to go out there this summer for a little trip and learn how he runs this boarding house. Forty dollars a month, he wanted to charge his caretaker, for board The cost of living cannot be very great when he can board a man for $40 per month. I have been paying three times that all winter myself, and have not lived in any great luxury. It seems to me, therefore, that according to the judge's own estimate, this whole story about the cost of living in the Yukon is unfounded. What we want to do is to scale his salary down to that we give other judges, and cut off all this nonsense. All these extras must have been given for some reason other than that disclosed in these items. There must be some other principle that governs this expenditure. Why load this man down with such extraordinary favours and be so penurious with judges in the older provinces, who are called on to do infinitely more work, and work that requires considerably more knowledge. and ability What does he do with his $3,000 living allowance ? Does he found a school or give it to charity ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The only explanation I can give is that I am asking $34,000 for the Yukon public buildings and not a dollar for the judge. My hon. friend is quoting items that are paid and on which we cannot go back. We cannot get the money back. I am not asking anything for the Department of Justice. I do not belong to the legal profession, and do not want to be responsible for the misdeeds of lawyers. Let them defend themselves here. Judge Dugas is not under me, and I am not asking for any item to be paid to him. My hon. friend, in talking about our salaries, thinks that the ministers of the Crown are not well enough paid. Well, if he and his friends desire that our salaries should be raised, I would not object. We are not in it at all, and if Mr. Dugas is not better paid than we are, I pity him. My hon. friend is unfair, no doubt unwittingly and unknowingly, in his remarks about the salary and living expenses of Justice Dugas and Justice Craig. I am sure that living expenses there are very high to-day. And I have asked my secretary to telegraph to Dawson City for the prices of the necessaries out there just now.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) If my hon. friend from Colchester goes out to that country, I hope he will call upon that judge and ascertain from him personally the treatment he has given to his housekeeper.

Mr. BELCOURT. I hope my hon. friend from Colchester (Mr. Gourley) will not feel offended if I say that the only really sensible thing he has said is that he is going out there to find out. I think it would have been better if he had found out first and then had spoken.

An hon. MEMBER. You did not do that.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is exactly what I did do. I am speaking because I did find out. I was in the Yukon, and I learned enough to convince me that a good many of the statements that my hon. friends have made are absolutely wrong. As I understand it, and I think every hon. gentleman understands it in the same way, Judge Dugas, the commissioner of the Yukon, the gold commissioner, and a number of other officers, went out with the understanding that the government would provide them with lodging, living allowance, and salary, I think every hon. gentleman who was in the last parliament, understood that. The hon. member for Colchester has told us that a salary of $10,000 or $12,000 in the Yukon is something that ought to be scaled down to the level of what is paid to an ordinary magistrate in Ottawa or Nova Scotia. I do not mean anything offensive when I say that that is nonsense of the worst kind. I had personal experience of two months out there, and I know that living is five times what it is here in the east. If we pay a judge a salary, living allowance and lodging, making a total of $12,000, he is getting what would amount here to about $2,400 in the east. I am prepared to give the House my assurance from personal investigation and personal experience that the cost of living in the Yukon is five times what it is here. I was sorry, when I was in Dawson last summer, to see that Judge Dugas and Judge Craig were lodged in houses that I do not think would be acceptable to men here who are earning $1,000 a year.

Mr. GOURLEY. They are saving their money.

Mr. BELCOURT. No, they are not saving their money. The house in which Judge Dugas lived had two bedrooms besides his own, and cost him $1,800 a year. I know also that a law office ten feet by twelve in a small wooden building in the city of Dawson actually cost $200 a month. If my hon. friend from Colchester accepts these statements on my assurance, I do not think he will consider these salaries exorbitant. My hon. friend says he can go to Dawson in three or four days. If the accuracy of his other statements is to be measured by that, it will be plain that the hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about. Under the most favourable conditions, making close connections at every point, you cannot go to Dawson within eleven or twelve days.

Mr. GOURLEY. You mean from here. I was speaking of going from Victoria.

Mr. BELCOURT. You cannot go from Victoria in less than seven or eight days. Why, it takes three or four days between Victoria and Skagway and then three or four from Skagway to Dawson. I am glad my hon. friend from Colchester is going out there to find out about these matters.

Mr. LANCASTER. I think the hon. gentleman who knows and does not tell us is about as bad as the one who does not know. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has assured us that he knows about the cost of living in the Yukon and gives in proof of it the cost of renting a law office. That, I suppose, is what the judge is supposed to keep his table on. The hon. gentleman having had an experience, he is evidently anxious the House should know about it, but if he is to discuss the question, he should tell us something about the cost of living in Dawson. He should tell us what flour, beef, bacon, tea and some of the other articles of every day diet cost out there, and we, being fair mathematicians, can calculate the matter for ourselves. I am inclined to think there is not so much exaggeration in what the hon. member for Colchester has said, particularly when we find that the hon. member for Ottawa when he attempts an answer, confines himself to saying that the hon. member for Colchester is talking nonsense, that he does not know what he is talking about, and that the cost of living is five times greater than here, but does not attempt to say what the cost of anything really is.

Mr. BELCOURT.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to put against what the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has said, quotations from this paper of the prices of staple articles on the 13th February. Beef cost 30 cents a pound. The hon. gentleman says that living there costs five times as much as it does here. Can he buy beef here at one-fifth of that price, or 6 cents a pound? Veal is 40 cents a pound. Can he buy veal here for 8 cents a pound? Pork costs 45 cents a pound. Then take some of the other lines. Sugar per 100 pounds costs $12.50. One-fifth of that would be 2½ cents a pound. Can the hon. gentleman buy sugar for that here? Beans in Dawson cost $8 per 100 pounds. It is not very likely the hon. gentleman can buy them for one-fifth of that here. Rolled oats cost $10 per 100 pounds. One-fifth of that would be 2 cents per pound, and you cannot buy rolled oats for that here. Rabbits cost 50 cents each. Can the hon. gentleman buy them at 10 cents a piece here? Poultry costs 40 cents per pound. Does the hon. gentleman think he can buy poultry for 8 cents per pound here? Going over the whole list, the prices do not bear out the statements of the hon. member.

Mr. BELCOURT. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is not the rate of wages a pretty fair standard by which to judge the cost of living?

Mr. SPROULE. I am talking about the prices of articles that go to make up the cost of living.

Mr. BELCOURT. Does the hon. gentleman know that the ordinary rate of wages there is $10 a day?

Mr. SPROULE. No, I see by this newspaper that the ordinary rate of wages there is $5 per day. The government may give what they like, but according to the newspaper, that is what the ordinary employer pays. But that is not the way to judge the cost of living; the best way is to take the prices of articles of food on which the party lives. The prices of articles of food in Dawson must be the closest criterion by which to judge the living there, and those prices do not bear out the contention of the hon. member for Ottawa.

Mr. HENDERSON. As to the hon. member for Ottawa's (Mr. Belcourt's) proposition that the rate of wages is a fair criterion of the cost of living, a judge of the Superior Court gets a salary of $7,000, yet he would not eat more than the labouring man receiving $1.25 a day. The rate of wages affords no basis of comparison.

Mr. GOURLEY. I do not object to the personalities of the hon. member for Ottawa, but I think he would not have taken the position he did, had he recognized the obvious fact, that the price of an article in the Yukon is the price in Toronto or Montreal plus the cost of transportation. Had the hon. gentleman based his statements on that proposition, I would have listened to him with the greatest respect. We have heard this kind of talk before, we have been lulled to sleep on many occasions by it. Every year when these extraordinary sums are proposed to us we are told, Oh, the cost of living in the Yukon is very great. I must say that I do not think the hon. gentleman has inquired into the matter of the cost of living at all. He went up there, probably, with some large retainer in his pocket, and he did not care whether the cost of living was $100 a day or 10 cents. I fancy, notwithstanding anything he has said to-night, that the cost of living in the Yukon to-day is not very much more than it is in Victoria or Vancouver; it is probably increased by the cost of transportation only.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Pork is 45 cents a pound.

Mr. GOURLEY. Why should you not supply a judge in Victoria, as well as in the Yukon with his living expenses, and all these extras ? I think that the explanations put forth by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Belcourt) has weakened the position of the Minister of Public Works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then I want those words to be struck out.

Quebec harbour improvements, $100,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose the House will expect some explanation of this item. A good deal of money has been spent on the Quebec harbour in the past, much of it, I am sorry to say, has not been spent to the public advantage. I have no desire to go back to ancient history. Let by-gones be by-gones, and let us look to the future. We shall have in a short time, I hope, a fast line of steamers. I am confident this country will not stand much more delay in the solution of that important question.

Mr. SPROULE. I would remind the minister that we have heard that hope expressed for the last five years.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Good things do not lose anything by being repeated. It is better to go slow and safe. If we had attempted a fast line two or three years ago it would have cost a much larger amount of money than it will cost now. In point of fact, up to within a couple of years, it would have been impossible, except at an extravagant price, to secure the building of large ships fitted for that purpose. However, Quebec has practically no harbour equipment. There is only one berth for large ships in the whole harbour of Quebec. A ship loading or unloading there has either to anchor in the middle of the river, or to be loaded and unloaded with lighters. Now, we think the time has come when the port of Quebec will have to be equipped. I have here a plan of the improvement, which I invite hon. gentlemen to examine with me. It shows the famous Louise Basin, of which we heard so much years ago. We propose to construct four berths for the largest ships. They will have 40 feet of water at high tide. Of course, we will build the cribs deeper than the existing walls of the old cribs, so as to give them greater solidity. These works that I intend to carry out gradually will cost about $1,000,000. I do not wish to conceal from the committee the fact that we cannot equip a harbour like Quebec without spending a good deal of money. This plan has been recommended to me by my officers, but there is another plan proposed, that is, to use the existing walls in another part of the harbour. I point out to the hon. gentlemen where all the railways are centering. I wish hon. members would take more interest in the transportation question, and compare what we are spending with the vast sums spent by our American friends for the same purpose. I may mention that these plans I now propose have been approved by the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec, and their able engineer. I hope that before many years are gone we will have completed the equipment of our harbour so as to allow the largest ships to enter. It is a great pity that the plans have been prepared in the past by foreign engineers. They know nothing about our country.

Mr. SPROULE. There is one thing at least about the hon. minister's explanation which I admire. It reminds me of the story of an ancient maiden lady who gave her age for eleven years in succession as eighteen. When reminded by the assessor that she had given the same age eleven times she replied : I am not the kind of person who will tell one story to-day and another to-morrow. The hon. minister thinks that he cannot repeat a good thing too often. He has told us for the last five or six years that we will soon have the fast Atlantic service and he will not tell one story to-day and another to-morrow. All I can say is that I hope we are nearer to the fruition of that project than we were five years ago.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The amalgamation of the American lines makes it imperative that we shall not lose any more time and let the opposition do their duty and push us on more vigorously than they have done in the past.

Mr. SPROULE. I do think that the ocean port must ultimately be at Quebec. I believe this is as clear as anything can be and with the prospect of a fast Atlantic service we cannot start to work too soon to complete the harbour there. Whether the plan outlined by the hon. minister is the best one that can be devised or not, I am not prepared to say, but it does seem to me that we cannot commence a moment too soon, because, at the rate of progress we have been making for some pears past, it will be a good many years before we are prepared to accommodate a fast Atlantic service in this country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In two years these works will be completed.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. minister is asking for $100,000. Is that for new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I assume that the data furnished is by some competent engineer who has taken the trouble to examine the whole question and to give more than an ordinary estimate.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Every possible care has been taken on this occasion. My best engineers have been at work on this plan. Soundings have been made and every possible precaution taken.

Mr. SPROULE. How will the shipping interests be accommodated by the elevators already built there; because, if I remember they are on the other side of the dock ? They will not be near the new harbour as it is proposed to be made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be an easy thing to have conveyers from one side of the basin to the other. In the city of Montreal we intend to accommodate the three wharfs that are built with one elevator. We have devised a plan by which we will have 800 or 1,000 feet of conveyers, I do not know whether there will be a great grain trade at Quebec. I think we will have some trade there but I do not share all the expectations of those who believe that grain will be shipped in large quantities from Quebec. I expect a great deal more from the fast line for perishable fruit and so on. I do not see any reason why barges loaded with grain should not pass down from Montreal where these carriers of freight will be able to go. In discussing that very question with Mr. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, and one of the ablest railway managers in the world, he expressed the same view that I hold myself. We had never discussed the question as fully before as we did on that occasion There will be trade for all of the St. Lawrence boats. I expect a great deal from the maritime province boats when we are fully equipped. When we have enough carriers on the lakes and when we have enough elevating capacity to accumulate the grain, that grain will have to reach the seaboard in some way. When the Canadian Pacific Railway will have completed the improvement of the short road to St. John, I have no doubt a large quantity of grain will be taken to that port in the winter months. In fact during the last winter the Canadian Pacific Railway took two or three million bushels of wheat over their line to St. John direct from the west.

Mr. SPROULE. Where are they taking it to ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. To the port of St. John. They are not making much money out of it but let us not forget that grain is only an incident. A railway which is well equipped has good connections enabling it to carry all sorts of merchandise and other goods. If the Canadian Pacific Railway are able to carry grain, perhaps with not much profit, they make it up, I suppose, in carrying perishable goods. They have important connections in the American west and they carry large quantities of canned meats and other perishable goods. That makes the trade of the railway and I hope in future will help to build up our Canadian ports. I anticipate that in connection with this fast Atlantic line we will have a line of freight carriers. The two things will go together. There is no doubt that if the company which operate the fast line of steamers were not in a position to have freight liners they would be taken by the throat and other companies would refuse to help them in handling the traffic. So that this country must look to the establishment of a fast line and at the same time to the establishment of a line of carriers. The sooner we in Canada realize that we must stand on our own bottom the better.

Mr. SPROULE. I have noticed in the press of late an intimation that there are some important negotiations going on in England by Lord Strathcona in regard to this fast Atlantic service, and the plan which the hon. minister has outlined would indicate that he imagines there is some possibility of the project being realized at an early date. Has he any information to give the House in regard to what is being done in view of the fact that there appears to be a combine of the carrying trade of the Atlantic at the present time, and can he tell us what steps the government are taking to prevent the possibility of any line that is established being absorbed by the combine ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not see that the government can do much to prevent the shareholders in any existing company selling their shares if they see fit. That is the great trouble. We have nothing to say, we can do nothing.

Mr. SPROULE. If you subsidize a line of steamers, can you not attach conditions to that subsidy ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am speaking of the past and as to the future the Prime Minister could speak if he were here. I have no doubt we will take good care that our subsidies are not lost.

I have the greatest hopes that at the imperial conference this question will be discussed and solved in the interest of the empire and the colonies. I expect the greatest results from that conference.

Mr. SPROULE. What will be the length and depth of that wall ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. 1,200 feet on one side and 410 feet on the other.

Mr. SPROULE. What will it be built of ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Concrete and cement, and crib-work under structure. I believe we have made a great mistake in using crib-work in the past. Its average life out of water is between seven and eight years and the outside life ten years.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the life of it below water ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Eternity, unless there is some accident or unless worms eat the timber, and in future we will creosote all timber where there are worms. I am taking a vote for a creosoting plant.

Mr. MORIN. The Minister of Public Works admits himself that there was a great mistake made in placing this basin at Quebec. I am surprised, however, that the minister has not learned something from the mistakes made in the past. I believe that if he carries out the project he has now in view he will commit a bigger sin than has been committed by his predecessors in office. The hon. gentleman has the bad example of others right before his eyes, but yet he has learned nothing from experience and he proposes to follow out that bad example. He is going to build a little crib-work there and he will have two or three small boats in the harbour and to do that he will have to dredge in the river and blast the rocks, and he may spend $1,000,000 or $2,000,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is no rock there at all.

Mr. MORIN. I know there are no floating rocks but there are rocks down below. If the minister intends to make a decent port at Quebec, why does he not go right below the St. Charles river and build a straight wall to the asylum at Beauport ? If the minister does that he will have one of the best ports in Canada and there will be all the facilities for shipping that can be required. If the minister of Public Works commences at the St. Charles river, he can build his wall or wharf and go clear down to the insane asylum if he wishes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MORIN. There is an insane asylum about two miles below, and I am perfectly right in saying that he can extend down to the asylum. There is no joke about that matter at all. If the minister would adopt the suggestion that I am making, he could accommodate thirty vessels at a time and he would have a port which would last for ever, and which would not cost him so much as this patch work which he now proposes and which is always very expensive. The present basin at Quebec cost $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, and it is practically of no use whatever. Vessels can only go in and out when the tide is high, so that they have to wait seven hours a day, which is a great delay in view of the expedition which our trade requires at the present day. If you build a wall down from the St. Charles river you can accommodate all the vessels you like and you can build all the railway tracks that are necessary. Clear down to the Montmorency falls, at the mouth of the Beauport river, there is a splendid bottom, and the water is quite deep, and you could build the wall along there, and you would not have to dredge much. You could establish a port there that you and your children and the whole country could be proud of. You would not be wasting money patching here and there, but you would be spending money to good advantage. The wall we have built has moved about three feet and sunk in the basin. It is a dangerous place.

Mr. BOYD. Before that item passes, I think it is well that the minister should give us some explanation in regard to it. I supposed, when the hon. gentleman was making his explanations, that at last we had got part of some well defined scheme of transportation to meet the present emergency, especially in the western portion of the country; but after listening to the practical remarks of the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Morin), we find that, instead of any well-defined scheme, we have what he describes as a tumble-down portion of what is impracticable. I am tired of this little patching of wharfs and the indiscriminate expenditure of money all over this country in the manner in which it has been done by this government for some time past; and it is time that the government realized a sense of the duty they owe to the country, and arranged some well-defined and well-matured plan to meet the emergency of that western country that is staring us in the face.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have great confidence in the judgment of my hon. friend from Dorchester. He is a practical man, whose experience seems to have convinced my hon. friend from the west that we do not know much about carrying out these works. But let me say to my hon. friend that the carrying out of his plan might come later on, when trade developes more, and when the building of these long piers might become a necessity. But they would cost a vast amount of money.

Mr. MORIN. Not much.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let my hon. friend have some confidence in those who have given great attention to such matters. It is not the first time I have heard of that project. I was in Quebec for 18 years, and I know about that wharf. Beyond a doubt it would cost a large amount of money; and I think in the meantime the country will be contented with the moderate expenditure we are making to provide accommodation for four or five steamers. At the same time, my hon. friend from the west should not speak in that wild way, if I may be allowed to say so, accusing us of giving no attention to the west.

Mr. BOYD. I did not say that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad to hear that he did not. I think we are providing to-day a pretty general plan of transportation. Let my hon. friend look at what is taking place. The two great railway companies, the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific Railway, are adding five or six million bushels capacity to their elevators. There are elevators being built or in sight in nearly every harbour on the Georgian Bay; in Montreal the Harbour Commissioners are building a large elevator; the Grand Trunk Railway is applying for space to build an elevator of 1,000,000 bushels capacity. There are elevators springing up everywhere. We have to-day passed a Bill which would not have been passed if the House were not kind to the west. It was a pretty hard Bill to swallow.

Mr. SCOTT. Will it do any harm to the east ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I think it will do good to the east. But every member of parliament will admit that it is an exceptional Bill. I am strongly in favour of it.

Mr. BOYD. What Bill is it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The Grain Bill. It is a very important Bill. We are doing what we can, and we think that by completing our St. Lawrence route, and deepening and equipping our canals, we are going to secure for the west cheap transportation. When we have on the Atlantic ocean the large carriers that I expect to see, and the fast line established, which may be before many years, our equipment will be complete. We are doing now the work that any progressive government would do. We are equipping all our harbours on the St. Lawrence; we are helping the equipment of our harbours on the Georgian Bay; we are deepening the Kaministiquia river; we are deepening Port Arthur; the Canadian Pacific Railway is going to add greatly to its rolling stock and its tracks; the Canadian Northern is also adding to its equipment. We think we are going as fast as we can be expected to go. I know that my views are not shared by everybody ; but I am confident that within two years our Canadian system of railways and waterways will be in such a position that we shall be able to give cheaper rates to the west than the Americans can. We have the shortest route; we have only to make it the best in order to give cheap rates to our friends in the North-west; and this will help us to establish a Canadian marine, which will employ a large number of men and help to build up our cities, as Buffalo and other American ports have been built up.

Mr. MORIN. I would like to give my advice to the minister, who can, of course, take it or not as he pleases. The minister said he would patch up that basin at Quebec, and then probably go on and build a wall or wharf towards the insane asylum; but he said that at present he did not wish to spend too much money. Well, I will tell him just about what will happen in a year or two if he does not go on with this wharf now. If he occupies the position he does, he will feel afraid to commence it. If somebody else occupies his place he will want to wait a year or two before going on. But the way to do is to make a beginning, and keep on year after year until the work is finished. If you keep patching here and there, all the time afraid to commence the work, you will never build it. The minister also said it would be expensive. That is correct; but what will the wharf be worth when it is built ? You will not be sinking money uselessly, but you will be building a wharf and getting value for your expenditure.

Mr. BOYD. I think the hon. Minister of Public Works cannot say that he has received any strenuous or factious opposition from me towards any of the schemes he has propounded in this House. As regards the opinion he may have of myself or other members from the west, or of our breezy manner of putting things, that is immaterial.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a very good opinion.

Mr. BOYD. Well, the opinion of the minister is reciprocated by myself. The other evening the hon. minister was having a discussion in regard to matters of this kind with the hon. member for Saskatchewan. And he waxed rather warm in regard to what this government had done and was doing for the people of the west. Now, I do not know what the Liberal members of the House think of what has been done by this government for the west in the way of any large expenditure, but I fail to see where any great efforts have been put forth which has caused this country any expense. The Canadian Pacific Railway and all connected with it are no part of the administration of this government. The Canadian Northern got a slight bonus from this government on its Ontario division some two years ago. Apart from that, I do not know of anything that the hon. gentleman can accuse us of having received.

During all that time we from the west have been sitting here voting millions of dollars upon the waterways of this country.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. For our common benefit.

Mr. BOYD. Perhaps, but the discussions in this House on many of these public works would not bear out that assumption. We may be accused of being somewhat aggressive and enthusiastic about our country, but it is estimated that at present only one-seventieth of that great country is being cultivated. When we recognize that fact and recognize also that people are pouring in there at present by the thousand, it behooves this government to be on the alert for the future. I was under the impression that at last we were going to receive some of the benefits of the many suggestions thrown out from this side of the House, and that some well considered plan of transportation, to prepare for the great emergency that is awaiting the people of eastern Canada, would have been submitted for our approval. Hon. members speak of the great crop in the west last year, but I have known of three or four better crops in Manitoba. Our average in that province last year was about 22 bushels to the acre. I myself have grown 28, and we have had a better average on two or three previous occasions. There was a better average in the North-west Territories, but we need not look to last year's crop as something exceptional. We are liable to have a greater crop at any time, and with increased cultivation and our enormous acreage, it behooves the government to prepare for a much larger export from that country than we have hitherto had.

Port Colborne—Harbour improvements, $100,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What progress is being made at Port Colborne ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are about 1,200 feet of breakwater built out of 5,000 feet, but I may say that this amount is not adequate for the completion of the work we have been authorized to carry out. If hon. gentlemen will follow me, I will explain on this map what is being done. When the plans for the breakwater were prepared, my engineers were of the opinion that it was necessary to have a breakwater 40 feet wide. I was away on the other side of the ocean when the plans were finally adopted. My hon. friend and colleague, the Postmaster General was acting for me. After mature consideration, he made up his mind that 25 feet wide was sufficient. Well, the waves of Lake Erie are just as heavy as those on the Atlantic ocean, and during a gale in the month of February the breakwater moved a couple of inches. I am now asking for $100,000 to add 25 feet width to the breakwater, so as to make the width 50 feet. About 10 or 15 days ago, in another gale, the breakwater was moved about 2 feet, and it is imperative to complete that work. Of course, it will not cost more now than it would have had the original plans prepared by my engineers been adopted. When this breakwater is completed 5,000 feet long, it will give all this area which is marked on the map to the large ships that will come to load and unload in the canal. The Minister of Railways and Canals is dredging the entrance of the canal. We shall not be as well equipped as Buffalo, for they have 5 miles of breakwater, and 50 elevators. We have already received application for sites for elevators from private corporations. I do not know what our policy will be, but, in the meantime we are preparing the ground. This year, Mr. Woolvin, who is undertaking to carry grain to Quebec, will use a part of the breakwater. He will have a floating elevator to tranship his grain from large carriers on the lake to small craft that will go to Quebec.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the addition to be built of ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Timber, with a concrete top.

Mr. SPROULE. Above the water ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, about seven feet above the water.

Mr. SPROULE. How long does the minister expect it will take to complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I must give the contract without an hour's delay, because our breakwater is exposed and I am afraid of another storm. One thing that has helped to save it is that Messrs. Hogan & Macdonald, the contractors, have wintered a large quantity of stone inside the breakwater.

Mr. GERMAN. The breakwater ought to be completed next year. It was reasonably light, but the minister says he will strengthen it by putting a concrete wall inside that will make it pretty strong. The whole breakwater should be completed next year ; it must be completed by that time.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It will be, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. GERMAN. There are some other matters in connection with the inside harbour that must be discussed later. But, so far as the breakwater is concerned this will be all right.

Mr. SPROULE. That means it will be completed in two years ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, completed for next season. The contractors have large quantities of material on hand and a good organization. I was there about the time of the opening of parliament, three months ago and saw what they were doing.

Mr. SPROULE. Is the contract let ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, I speak of the first contract.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that part built of crib-work with a concrete top ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unfortunately no. I believe that in that we made a mistake, and that it should have been built in concrete. Of course, it costs a little more money. But, in future, I will ask parliament, in all these large public works, to allow me to use the best materials, because they are the cheapest in the end. As I have said, the outside life of the wooden structure above water is ten years and the ordinary life is between seven and eight years. In Buffalo they made the same mistake that we have made. But now, they are building with large blocks of stone.

Mr. SPROULE. The minister, no doubt, is proceeding upon information which he regards as justifying his course. But it does not appear to me that the best plan is to build with cement on top of crib-work. There must be the same liability of the wood decaying.

Mr. GERMAN. Wood never will decay under water.

Mr. SPROULE. How many hundred years has the hon. gentleman lived to be able to determine that ?

Mr. GERMAN. I do not need to live five years to determine that. If the cribs are absolutely under water they are safe from decay for all time to come. That is the testimony of all engineers, and you can only proceed in these matters on what you are told by the best engineers in the country. They will tell you that cribs sunk under water with a concrete top make the best breakwater or dam that you can put in—the cheapest and the best.

Mr. SPROULE. That may be very valuable, but the hon. member (Mr. German) will hardly expect us to take it upon his experience.

Mr. GERMAN. Let the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) ask any engineer.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a fact—if my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will allow me to interrupt him. Wood under water, instead of decaying becomes harder and harder.

Mr. SPROULE. All kinds of wood ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All kinds of wood—that is the teaching of experience.

Mr. SPROULE. The contract is to be let at once, and the hon. gentleman expects to have the work done at the end of the present season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the entrance to the canal be deepened and widened so that navigation can be carried on successfully there ? And what provision will be made at the end of that time for the traffic ? Is the hon. gentleman building elevators for the grain ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. SPROULE. Will any provision be made this season ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is a question of policy which I would not like to discuss to-night, as we are not providing for it in the estimates. My own personal opinion is the same as that I expressed three years ago—that the government should provide elevators in harbours that we build ourselves. Take Port Colborne, for instance; or let us take Montreal. In Montreal we are to have a public elevator, because the harbour commissioners are trustees for the government and for the commercial community. My own opinion is that an elevator should be a public work as much as a pier or a breakwater. I know my views are not shared by everybody. So far, we have not built elevators ourselves except at St. John and Halifax in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. Private enterprise has supplied elevators on the lakes, for instance, at Collingwood, Meaford, Owen Sound, Midland. But in respect of canals, they are our national property, and the question is whether we ought to build elevators on the canals. Time will tell. If private enterprise can do it, well and good. Speaking for myself alone—because I have no authority from my colleagues to say this—I believe it would be better for the government to own the terminal facilities where they own the works; in other words, at Port Colborne I think it would be better for us to own the elevators so as to be able to control the rates. My own opinion is that when we are fully equipped in Montreal, Quebec and St. John—I speak of the main points—our system of canals will be more largely used than it is at present. New ships are being built, there are two new ships under construction on the lakes to-day. Our canals will be used on a larger scale than they are now, and then if we have the control of our own routes we can control the rates. If we want to secure lower rates so as to compete successfully with our American friends we will be in a better position to do that. At the next session of parliament, if private enterprise has not solved the question, we shall have to do it ourselves. Although we have only part of the breakwater built, there are large ships going there now. We will see during the recess what will turn up.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is like Micawber, waiting for something to turn up. It seems that the government have not thought out any plan for solving this great question of transportation. It is just as important for successful transportation to have elevators as to have harbours. There is no analogy between Port Colborne and Collingwood, Meaford, Goderich and Owen Sound, because in these places the railway companies have an interest in private elevators, and the towns have each of them given substantial bonuses for that purpose. Consequently, they are more likely to get elevators there than at Port Colborne. My fear is that after this very large expenditure, we will only have half the benefits resulting from it which we would naturally expect, provided the harbour was equipped with proper facilities for storing and handling grain when this dock, or wharf, or breakwater, is finished.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I share the views of my hon. friend. But when he becomes Minister of Public Works he will find out that influential as he may be, he will not be able to do everything that he wants to do. A successful public man must learn that the first virtue is patience and persistence.

Mr. GERMAN. Mr. Chairman,——

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let us get through, let the item be carried.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I wish to remind the committee that if we are going to discuss the entire question of transportation upon every item that refers to a harbour, or a bridge, or an elevator, we shall not get through in a month. I hope the committee will confine themselves as near as possible to the question before the Chair.

Mr. GERMAN. I suppose a member of this House has a right to speak on a question that pertains to matters in his own constituency. I am not sure that the Chairman of this committee has a right to suggest that I should not make a remark in answer to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Do not misunderstand me. I am not suggesting that a member should do anything but speak to the point.

Mr. GERMAN. As I have not spoken at all, it is very questionable whether you knew whether I was going to speak to the point or not.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I had taken the point of order before you commenced, because the last half hour has been spent in speaking upon questions outside the question before the Chair. All I ask is that hon. members would be kind enough to confine their remarks as nearly as possible to the question under discussion.

Mr. GERMAN. I intend to speak to the question under discussion, and I do not need any suggestions from you as to how I should speak.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. member is out of order. The hon. member has a right to address the Chair, but he has no right to lecture the Chair.

Mr. GERMAN. I was just suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that I intend to speak to the question under discussion if I am allowed to do so. If you suggest that I have no right to speak to this question, I will certainly sit down.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I have not so decided.

Mr. GERMAN. Well, the hon. member for East Grey made a suggestion that the government was building a breakwater at Port Colborne and expending a large amount of money there without any idea of bringing about a culmination of that expenditure in the interest of the country. Now, the situation is this: A breakwater is being built there to construct a harbour. The difficulty so far as transportation is concerned between the west and the east of Canada is that there has been no harbour at Port Colborne in which vessels could go to tranship their cargoes for our canal system. The government of Canada has spent about $100,000,000 on the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. It has been absolutely useless and it will remain useless for all time to come unless you have a satisfactory harbour at Port Colborne into which vessels can go and tranship their cargoes. So soon as you have a sufficient harbour at Port Colborne and elevators built there is not a question about it that not only the bulk of the grain but all the grain products of the North-west Territories will come to Port Colborne to be transhipped into canal sized boats and go to Montreal or Quebec. This is the cheapest transportation route to Europe on this continent by two or three cents—by two cents at least. Grain can be carried from Port Arthur to Montreal by the Welland canal and St. Lawrence route as cheaply as it is being carried from Buffalo to New York. The ship-owners of Canada and the United States appreciate that fact. They so thoroughly appreciate it that Mr. Wolvin, of Duluth, one of the largest ship-owners in America, is putting on a line of boats to carry grain from Buffalo to Quebec through the Welland canal. If this government will complete these harbour facilities at Port Colborne and will build elevators, and my own opinion is that the proper policy for the government to pursue would be to build elevators at Port Colborne and control the rates, the trade will certainly pass through the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. There are certain companies, or individuals, at the present time who are looking to get the concession of building the elevators at Port Colborne and of putting on a line of boats between Port Colborne and Montreal. My suggestion is that the government should build the elevators at Montreal and Port Colborne, control the rates and put the canals in a safe and proper condition and that if they do so the products of the North-west, so far as the capabilities of that line of transportation are concerned, will go in that way. When these facilities for transportation are exhausted let us build other lines of transportation. We need, in this country, more than one transcontinental line. We cannot in Canada, in the future, carry all the products of the great North-west to the ocean by means of the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. The North-west of Canada is destined to be the greatest wheat-growing country on earth. It will produce more grain and better grain possibly than any other country in the world. It is not one-quarter, not one-tenth explored. The Peace river district will, within the next twenty years, produce more wheat than any person at present conceives to be possible and it is our duty to look to the future. The engineers of our canal system in the past have been looking too much to the immediate present. They built the Welland canal fifteen years ago for the navigation of fifteen years ago without looking to the future. They looked at the St. Lawrence canals on the same principle without looking to the future. Let us look to the future and have confidence in the development of the country that we own irrespective of our political feelings and it will be better for us and better for the country. We want at Port Colborne the proper harbour facilities which the country demands. We want proper navigation through the Welland canal which, I believe, the people of the country will approve of and we should, so far as we can, in a legitimate, economical way, develop the resources which we have in our country.

River Kaministiquia—dredging, $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that work to be done at the mouth of the river or up the river ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. From the mouth of the river up to the Canadian Pacific Railway elevators.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the hon. minister if the government are going to do this work with their own dredge or are they going to do it by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have made arrangements for a certain time for fifteen cents a yard.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that a contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a contract for fifteen cents a yard.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the best way of making a contract. I made the inquiry because I was not aware whether the government had any dredges on Lake Superior that are available for doing this work. I wish to say that I had a letter from a gentleman in Duluth some time ago saying that he had one or two very fine dredges and he understood that the hon. minister required dredges very badly and that he would be glad if he could make an arrangement with him to do some dredging anywhere on the upper lakes.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We were obliged to employ an American dredge at that very spot last year. We were paying fifteen and one-half cents a yard then, but this year we are giving 15 cents a yard. There were large shipments of grain being made, there was not enough water for the vessels to get up to the elevators, and I made the arrangements which I have mentioned a week or so ago.

Mr. SPROULE. I will let my hon. friend have the letter so that if he should desire to communicate with the gentleman that I have referred to he can do so.

St. Hyacinthe public building, $12,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The building there has become too small, and it is necessary to make that addition.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these works to be done by tender ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not speak of the small works, but this one will.

Montreal Branch Post Office, $30,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Are you branching out with another post office in Montreal the same as in Toronto ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have either to enlarge the main building or to branch out. The Postmaster General has made up his mind that he can give a better service with these branches.

Mr. SPROULE. And you will not have to buy automobiles ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will get along without them in Montreal.

Valleyfield public building, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Valleyfield is a thriving city with a population of 12,000, and in a couple of years it will have over 15,000. It is one of the most thriving little towns in the province of Quebec. It has no public building now at all. Last year parliament was good enough to allow me to have a sum in the estimates which I did not employ, but next year I intend to go on with the work. I have another vote for $10,000 for this in the main estimates.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you put $10,000 in the main estimates and $10,000 in the supplementary estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It might have been better if I had put the two together, but I did not do it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know the hon. gentleman did not do it, but what I want to know is why he did not do it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. If it had been in the estimates a month ago it would not have helped me at all.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is very convincing, but I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman did much canvassing on this building in the late election in Beauharnois ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I used just the ordinary convincing argument that public men use on such occasions. The $10,000 were in the estimates and the people knew I would build it. I did not make any promises. Now that the election is over I want to go on with the work.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose the hon. gentleman drew their attention to the fact that they needed it very badly, and of course by implication gave them to understand that if they elected his candidate he would go on and build it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Joking apart, this building is very much needed.

Toronto post office—building for branch office in west end of city, $20,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there not an item already in the estimates for this building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have $15,000 in the main estimates ; but since then we have bought a site. We will spend about $35,000. The work is under way now.

Mr. SPROULE. Will that complete the building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Ottawa post office and custom house, $20,500.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When these alterations are completed, we will save a rental of $1,000 a year, which we are now paying for the Customs Department on Sparks street.

Ottawa public buildings—Repairs to masonry wall, $6,500.

Mr. BORDEN Halifax). What building is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is to repair the wall of the eastern block, which is falling, just as a wall in the western block threatened to do three years ago. I was very much surprised to see how light the walls of these buildings are.

Mr. SPROULE. How is this work done—by contract or by day labour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. These repairs cannot be done by contract. They are carried on under the chief architect.

Rideau Hall, Ottawa—Drain from Government House to city sewer, $7,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was there never a drain there before ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, the old drain is choked. We are going to change the whole system and have the drainage of Rideau Hall and grounds carried to the main sewer which has been built by the Ottawa Improvement Commission.

Toronto post office—alterations and additions, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The post office in Toronto is in a dilapidated condition.

Mr. SPROULE. If the minister decided that certain repairs were necessary, why did he not have votes for them all put in the main estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The policy of the Public Works Department in the past has been to have all new works and repairs which are not begun placed in the supplementary estimates. Whether that is a good policy or not I do not know. I would rather have my main estimates include everything.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. One reason for this is that the main estimates are prepared in December or January, and three or four months later we are in a better position to determine how much money we can allow for these expenditures.

Mr. SPROULE. Am I correct in believing that there are new works in the main estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not one.

Toronto Junction public building—additional amount, $5,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will that complete it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say. The contract is not yet awarded. The previous amount voted was $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the site likely to cost?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not expect to pay more than $3,000 or $4,000 for the site.

Mr. SPROULE. I suppose this is to carry out the understanding between the hon. gentleman and the electors at the time he was helping Mr. Campbell ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend attributes to me motives which never came to my mind. That amount was in the estimates when Mr. Clarke Wallace was in his seat.

Hamilton—Examining warehouse extension, $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why this expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The public building has become too small, and the business cannot be carried on longer in it. I am obliged to give an extension.

St. Catharines drill hall, $10,000.

Mr. LANCASTER. What is the cost going to be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not expect to be obliged to spend more than $40,000. The site has been given to us, and all parties are agreed that the site chosen lately is satisfactory. I cannot say positively what the cost will be as there may be heating or something like that to be done, but we will try to do the right thing.

Mr. LANCASTER. I suppose it will be between $40,000 and $50,000 ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Some resolutions reported.

ADJOURNMENT—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). In moving the adjournment I wish to say that there has been some conversation among members as to the desirability of our giving some time to-morrow to private Bills. I think that that can be arranged. I had a conversation with the hon. leader of the opposition, who is equally desirous that some time should be given, but I prefer not making any definite arrangement until the right hon. the Prime Minister is in his seat. We can arrange to give some time to private Bills either to-morrow or Monday.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is a very large number of Bills on the Order paper—something like twenty. It would seem undesirable that the expense incurred should be lost to the parties simply for lack of time this session to pass the Bills. When the government took Monday, some time ago, I mentioned that I thought a longer time would be necessary for private Bills, but they did not share that opinion. They were not sufficiently impressed with the number that would probably come before the House. A portion of to-morrow or Monday should be taken, and I would support a proposition to that effect. I should suppose, in view of the necessary work to be done on a number of Bills, in the committee, that it would be desirable to assign a portion of to-morrow rather than Monday, but that is a matter of arrangement. Apart from the private Bills, what government business are we likely to have to-morrow ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We shall proceed in Supply with the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

Motion agreed to, and House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. Saturday.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, May 10, 1902.

The Speaker took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 167) respecting the Royal Marine Insurance Company.—Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I have been appealed to by members on both sides of the House to have the order for private Bills called up now. I therefore move that the House do forthwith proceed with the Orders of the Day for private Bills.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is very desirable that these Bills be given an opportunity of being passed, and possibly it might be expedient to take first the Bills which stand for a second reading, upon which there is not likely to be any controversy. There are twenty-six private Bills on the Order paper, of which eight stand for a second reading ; and if these are allowed to pass their second reading, they can go at once to Committee.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is a Bill on the Order paper in which I am interested, and to which I gave notice that I would move some amendments when the motion was made to refer the Bill to the Committee of the Whole House ; and if private Bills are taken up now, it will of course be on the understanding that I am allowed to move these amendments now.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection personally, but it may be that these amendments are material ; and as the object of this motion is to enable parties who may have adverse interests to any of these Bills to receive notice of them, I think it would be more prudent to allow any Bill to which amendments are to be moved to stand over until Monday.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MONTREAL SUBWAY COMPANY.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 98) to incorporate the Montreal Subway Company.—Mr. McCarthy.

On section 20, subsection b,

Mr. HENDERSON. When this Bill was up for discussion before, I took occasion to refer to the fact that the words 'for actual construction' were not read by the Chairman, and in that way I was led to the misapprehension that these words had not been included in the amendment. I desire to say that I did not intend to cast any reflection upon the examiner of private Bills or to hold him responsible for the omission.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. This is the first time they appeared.

Mr. HENDERSON. In the Railway Committee it was understood that those words should be inserted, and when you read the clause and the words did not appear, that was the cause of my remarks.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

On section 21,

Mr. SPEAKER. Notice of motion has been given by my hon. friend Mr. Geoffrion to provide that the two subways shall be constructed simultaneously; and therefore I move that the following words be added to subsection a :

And both the said subways for railway and highway purposes shall be laid out and constructed simultaneously.

Amendment agreed to, and section as amended agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE SOUTH SHORE RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill (No. 85) respecting the South Shore Railway Company.—Mr. Geoffrion.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the same Bill we had up last year ? It seems to be practically of the same nature.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Hon. M. E. Bernier). It is the same Bill, except that the last part of it to which objection was taken last year, has been dropped. It gives an extension of time to construct the line of railway.

Bill reported ; read the third time, and passed.

THE GASPE AND WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GAUVREAU moved that the House go again into Committee on Bill (No. 102) to incorporate the Gaspé and Western Railway Company.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It was agreed that this Bill should go over until Monday. I have given notice of several amendments which I wish to move. That was the understanding.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. No, there was no such understanding.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Certainly, the premier was here and consented, and I appeal to the House.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. It goes over till Monday if there is any objection.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Let it stand.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. I know nothing about any such arrangement.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have no objection that the Bill should be taken up this morning if the promoters and all the parties concerned are agreed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The objection comes from me. I have amendments of which I gave notice for Monday.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. Let us take them now.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is an important matter, and these notices are given for Monday.

The PRIME MINISTER. If the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) insists we cannot go on.

Mr. PREFONTAINE. The amendments could be discussed now, they are not of great importance.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There are certain parties who wish to take part in the discussion of these amendments, and who are not here this morning because the notices are given for Monday. That was the understanding when we came to an agreement to take these Bills up this morning.

Mr. SPEAKER. Stand.

Progress reported.

YUKON PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

The House proceeded to consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 65) to incorporate the Yukon Pacific Railway Company.—Mr. McCreary.

Mr. FLINT. This amendment, as I understand it, prevents this company from building to the boundary line. That matter was fully discussed in the Railway Committee, and it was decided that this company should have this power. I will therefore move that the Bill be referred back to the Railway Committee for further consideration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This amendment does not refer to building to the international boundary line, but to the boundary line of British Columbia. The Senate amendment is that the company shall not build within five miles of the boundary line of British Columbia.

Mr. FLINT. In that case I misunderstood the amendment.

Mr. McCREARY. I consented to have the line go to the boundary of British Columbia, but the Senate amendment is that it shall not go within five miles of the boundary of British Columbia. I have not consented to that so far, but I suppose I will have to do so to-day, as I do not wish to put any obstacle in the way of the Bill passing.

Amendments read the second time, and agreed to.

Mr. SPROULE. I wish to point out that we are getting into a very loose way of passing these Senate amendments. Some one should explain what they are in each case, so that we may know what is going on.

DOMINION ASSOCIATION OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS.

Mr. N. A. BELCOURT (Ottawa) moved second reading of Bill (No. 160) to incorporate the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I understand that this Bill has already been inscribed on the orders of the Private Bills Committee, under the impression that it is to reach them to-day, which rather indicates that it is to be railroaded through the House. I have no special knowledge of the Bill, but I have received a telegram from the president and the secretary of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Nova Scotia, which reads as follows :

> Institute Chartered Accountants here object to Dominion Bill. Our interests require its rejection.
>
> S. S. SCOTT, President.
> W. E. LEVERMAN, Secretary.

Of course, I offer no objection to the Bill going to the committee, but it should be with the usual understanding that opportunity shall be afforded in the committee for all parties interested to be heard.

Mr. E. A. LANCASTER (Lincoln and Niagara). In corroboration of what the hon. the Minister of Finance says, I have received a telegram from Toronto, which reads as follows :

> Eighty chartered accountants oppose Accountant's Bill. Name and other features objectionable. Kindly vote against it and get others.
> A. T. KERNAHAN.

So that from both ends of the Dominion opposition is being manifested to this Bill.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Hon. James Sutherland). This Bill has been before parliament ever since the opening of the session, and it has been discussed probably as much as any other private bill before parliament. In the Senate both those in favour of the Bill and those opposed to it were represented, and active canvassing has been going on ; and the sending of these telegrams at this time, in view of the fact that the Bill has been discussed openly and fully, is to my mind simply unfair. I have no objection to find with the manner in which they have been brought before the House ; but I am sure that if my hon. friends will reconsider the circumstances, they will not think of objecting to the Bill being considered by the Private Bills Committee. Any person or persons who want to be heard before the committee will have an opportunity of being represented by counsel when the committee meets at three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. My hon. friend rather misses the point of my observation. I do not object to the Bill going to the committee, but I say that if it does go, it should go under the same conditions and limitations as any other Bill—that the committee should afford an opportunity to all parties interested to be heard.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am in charge of this Bill, and I wish to say that I do not think there is any attempt to railroad it through. This Bill has been before parliament since the opening of the session, it has been thrashed out in the other House, and if it is to be passed this session, it must be dealt with by the Private Bills Committee to-day.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I do not see any objection to the Bill going to the committee, provided there is an opportunity for all parties to be heard.

Mr. BELCOURT. They are all here.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is speaking without warrant, because I know that parties from Toronto who intended to be here are not here.

Mr. A. JOHNSTON (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, a resolution has been placed in my hands by the Institute of Chartered Accountants in Halifax, which I propose to read to the House, this being the first opportunity I have had of protesting against this Bill. The resolution is as follows :

> Whereas it has been brought to the notice of this institute that W. H. Cross, Henry Barber and others have applied at Ottawa for an Act incorporating them an Institute of Chartered Accountants,
>
> And whereas, it is the opinion of this Council that in view of work being done by existing provincial associations, that the time has not arrived for the creation of a corporate body by Dominion legislation to interfere with and against the wishes of existing bodies, therefore,
> Resolved : That the Council of the Institute of Nova Scotia declare itself opposed to the passage of the said bill at the present time, on the following grounds :
>
> First : Because it is an interference with the names and rights of the existing provincial charters.
>
> Second : Because existing chartered bodies are opposed to it until such time as they and the promoters of the proposed legislation can agree upon suitable legislation in the interests of the profession as a whole.
>
> Third : Because the promoters did not consult or seek the co-operation of our Institute, which should have been done if the promoters were acting in the interests of the general profession.
> We therefore respectfully recommend that the proposed legislation be deferred until such time as the existing bodies can determine upon suitable legislation for all Canada.

That is the resolution which has been passed at a meeting of the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Nova Scotia, and I propose to bring the matter up in the Private Bills Committee when the Bill comes before it.

Mr. G. O. ALCORN (Prince Edward). I desire to say that I also am in receipt of requests to oppose this Bill. As it has been stated that all parties interested have had an opportunity to be heard, I beg to say that that is a mistake, and this morning I telegraphed to Toronto for counsel to come down. They cannot possibly be here until Monday, and therefore I think it would be unfair to press this Bill before the committee to-day. The very fact that the Bill has been before the Senate for such a length of time is excellent reason why it should not now be railroaded through the Commons without careful consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I believe there was an understanding that any Bills which were opposed should stand over until Monday. I do not want to obstruct this Bill, but if it receives its second reading to-day I wish it to be on the understanding that the committee shall let it stand until Monday. If the parties interested in it do not then appear or send any one to represent them, that is another question. Otherwise I think we have a right to object to this motion. I understand that the Private Bills Committee is now sitting upstairs waiting to receive the Bill.

Mr. BELCOURT. I understand that the House has already passed a resolution to the effect that the posting of private Bills after their second reading shall be dispensed with. That I understand is a general motion applicable to all private Bills, and this Bill, if it is now read the second time, will follow this rule. The committee is not sitting now, but is to sit this afternoon at three o'clock, and I think the Bill ought to go to the committee to be dealt with this afternoon with other Bills.

Mr. SPROULE. Was it not the understanding that Bills which are opposed should not be taken up to-day ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not think there was any understanding as to what Bills should be taken up to-day. The committee only adjourned ten minutes ago, and they are to meet again at three o'clock.

Mr. SPROULE. I object to the Bill going to the committee this afternoon. There is no possibility of forcing it through now and sending it to that committee at once. The hon. leader of the Opposition expressly declared that when a Bill was opposed it must be held over.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It is claimed that it was agreed yesterday that if a Bill was objected to to-day, it might stand over until Monday. If that be the case, all we have to do is to object to the Bill, but if the House will agree to pass the Bill now and not have it go before the Private Bills Committee until Monday, I think that would meet the views of all concerned.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). I think it should be kept in mind that this Bill has already been thoroughly discussed in the committee of the Senate. Every opportunity was there given to parties interested to be heard. These parties were present and amendments were made to meet their wishes, and they expressed themselves perfectly satisfied and undertook to withdraw any opposition. Now it seems to me as if this action taken so hurriedly is intended to destroy any chance of the Bill passing. It cannot be argued that the Bill has not been thoroughly discussed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would like to suggest to the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill that in view of the position now being taken, he should agree to its being here referred to the Private Bills Committee, and considered by that committee on Monday. No one can say that he has not had due notice of this Bill. We have been flooded with resolutions passed weeks ago by the association in Halifax, and with literature during the past two months from other sources opposed to the Bill, so that it cannot be said that at least advantage is taken of any person in the Dominion regarding this legislation, but if objections are made to our dealing with the measure now, I think it would only be fair to refer it to the committee on Monday, and no good can come of pressing it through at present.

Mr. BELCOURT. I am very loath to accept that suggestion because I feel that the result will be the killing of the Bill.

Mr. SPROULE. No.

Mr. BELCOURT. The display of temper in the House this morning leads me to believe that it is the intention of certain hon. members to kill the Bill. I submit to the sense of justice of the House whether any good reason has been given why this Bill should not be considered in committee this afternoon. If, when the Bill is called in committee, some of the interested parties are not present, and it be claimed that they have been taken by surprise, that is a matter for the committee to deal with. If the committee finds that some parties should be present who are not here, the committee could let the Bill stand over until Monday, but to refuse to consider the measure now, for no reason except that some people are opposed to it, is not fair. That is a matter for the committee to decide, and which this House is not in a position to decide. If it be not considered in committee this afternoon at three o'clock it is going to be defeated. But let it be defeated on its merits and not on mere obstruction.

Mr. W. F. McCREARY (Selkirk). Some two or three weeks ago I received a letter from Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, the solicitor for the Chartered Association of Accountants of Manitoba, asking me to oppose the Bill. I always supposed, with a large number of other hon. members, that I would have an opportunity to oppose it in the committee, but so far I have not seen it in any Private Bills committee. The association of Manitoba have employed a solicitor to oppose the Bill. He was here yesterday and went home on the understanding that it could not possibly come before the House to-day, and before it goes through the parties opposed to it should be given a hearing. There are also some members of this House not now in their seats who intend opposing this Bill, but did not expect that we would get to it to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have been appealed to by parties in favour of and against this Bill. I think, in view of the position in which it stands to-day that the Bill might be allowed to go to the committee for this reason. Eminent counsel have been brought from Montreal and Toronto in support of and against it, and if the Bill be not allowed to go to the committee to-day these counsel will have to remain over at great inconvenience. If it should go to the committee to-day it can be discussed there, and there will then be ample opportunity for discussing it again before the House, and if it be found that parties should have been heard who had not the opportunity of being present, the rules of the House are ample to prevent the Bill going through without full consideration being given everybody interested to be heard. The parties who want to be heard must be heard or otherwise the Bill could not pass, and under the circumstances it seems to me that we should allow the second reading to take place and refer the Bill to the Private Bills committee.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say that I telegraphed to the parties interested that the Bill would not be before the committee until Monday. Of course I did this on my own responsibility, but I thought it was a fair view to take of the case, as the Bill had not passed its second reading. If the committee would take up the Bill this afternoon on the understanding that the promoters of the Bill will give us the assurance that they will not attempt to take the final judgment of the committee, but allow the measure to stand over for final consideration until Monday, I think that would remove all objections.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I told a gentleman who spoke to me that I did not think the Bill could come up in committee to-day, and it was not necessary for him to be here to-day. Further than that, when there was a motion made last night to dispense with the necessity of forty-eight hours' notice before Bills would be taken up in committee, after getting the second reading, I had a most distinct understanding which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister will remember, with regard to all the Bills, that they should not be taken up until those interested had an opportunity of being heard before the committee. My hon. friend will remember that as far as this Bill is concerned, I should object—not that I have any interest in it—from the standpoint I took last night, to it being proceeded with to-day.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would you be satisfied to have it taken up Monday ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes, perfectly satisfied, but I object to its being gone on with to-day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Counsel have been brought here from Toronto who are anxious to be heard, and I would be glad to have the committee hear them. The suggestion of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, seems to me a very reasonable one. We could allow the Bill to go to the committee this afternoon and counsel could be heard, but with the understanding that the committee will not close the matter, but will continue it until Monday, so that the clients of my hon. friend could be heard.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the inconvenience is that there would be nobody on the other side, and it is a little difficult to answer counsel if there is nobody——

Mr. BELCOURT. As having charge of the Bill, I will undertake not to have it put through until Monday, but I would very much like to have it considered to-day.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But is it not a little inconvenient to have counsel addressing the committee with nobody on the other side ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Could they not do all the better if they were unopposed ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I think counsel are pretty well aware of the arguments pro and con on this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I object to this if it is regarded as carrying out the understanding upon which the motion of my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) passed last night. I do not consider that the parties would be in exactly the same position if they are not here when counsel are addressing the committee in favour of the Bill. If counsel are here in the absence of one side the parties are not in the position in which they should be placed. I would not have permitted the motion to pass last night without further discussion, if I had not distinctly understood that the people interested would have an opportunity of coming before the committee. Under the arrangements proposed, the Bill would be heard partly in the absence of those interested in opposing it. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries seems to think that is all right, but his colleague (Hon. Mr. Sifton) sitting alongside of him, will tell him that if anything of that kind were proposed in a court of law, it would be laughed at. This inquiry before the committee is really a judicial inquiry, and, as in other judicial inquiries, you must have the parties before you.

The PRIME MINISTER. If my hon. friend (Mr. Borden, Halifax) thinks that the understanding was that the matter should not be taken up until Monday, then, let the Bill stand until Monday.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think that would be better.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I think that this measure is opposed by some members on very strong grounds. If you refer to clause 2 of the Bill, you will find what its object is :

2. The objects and powers of the association shall be to promote by all lawful means the practice of accountancy, and for the said purposes :

(a) To hold such examinations as may be found expedient ;

(b) To grant certificates of efficiency to its members ;

(c) To establish classes of membership ;

(d) To determine the rights, privileges, terms and conditions of said classes.

As I understand it, this Bill is of an educational character, and as such, it is not within the purview of the powers of parliament, as the subject if education is relegated to provincial authorities.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and referred to the Committee on Private Bills, to be considered on Monday.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright) moved the third reading of Bill (No. 162) to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Were not some suggested amendments to be dealt with ?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. Yes, I was looking over the amendments proposed by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Boyd). Though I shall endeavour to induce the railway companies to comply with the suggestions as to the posting of prices of grain at railway stations, I have come to the conclusion that it would imperil the whole progress of the Bill if we put in any more amendments at this moment. I am anxious to get the measure to the Senate and have it considered there. They have had full notice of the amendments I proposed, but not of those proposed yesterday. However, I have made note of them and will endeavour to meet the views of the hon. gentleman later on.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time, and passed.

REPRESENTATION OF THE YUKON.

House again in committee on Bill (No. 134) respecting the representation of the Yukon Territory in the House of Commons.—The Minister of the Interior.

Mr. LANCASTER. I move to add as subsection (a) to section 29 the following, which will not interfere with the numbering of the other sections of the Bill :

In the compilation of such list the enumerator may only enter therein the names of such person or persons as shall, by statutory declaration filed with him, be declared by such person or persons, or some agent having personal knowledge of the facts declared therein, be entitled to vote under the provisions of this Act.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 30,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I move that the word 'eight,' the second word in the third line, be changed to 'fifteen,' in accordance with the understanding arrived at yesterday.

Mr. LANCASTER. That is all right.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 31,

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved:

That the word 'two' in the second line of section 31 be struck out and that the word 'seven' be inserted in lieu thereof.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Mr. LANCASTER. Has the hon. minister considered who should have custody of these lists after they are revised by the enumerator? The hon. minister objects to the amendment which I was proposing to make providing for an appeal to the Chief Justice.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Under section 33 it is provided that the lists shall be sent to the deputy returning officers.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 139) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.—The Minister of Justice.

REMISSION OF PENALTIES.

Bill (No. 151) respecting the Remission of Penalties (the Minister of Justice), read the second time and House went into Committee thereon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick), to explain the object of this Bill if he has not done so already. I have had some communication concerning it in regard to actions against companies for exhorbitant tolls.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). We are making an exception as to that.

On section 3,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved:

That after the word 'of' in the second line the words 'sections 298 to 305 of' be inserted.

He said: This will exempt the case in question.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This does not include extortionate tolls?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Extortionate tolls would come under section 290.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 155) to amend the Railway Act, (the Minister of Railways and Canals), read the second time, and House went into Committee thereon.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Chairman, I explained when I introduced the Bill that this is a very small trifling amendment to the Act and is intended to make clear what, I think, anybody would have thought to have been the meaning and intention of parliament in the enactment of the clause originally, had it not been for a decision which has been reached lately in one of our provincial courts. To briefly explain to the committee what the difficulty is, I may say that a spur line was thrown out from a railway in order to reach a ballast pit. The ballast pit was at one side of a stretch of water and the spur line struck the water at a point opposite the ballast pit. The court decided that the company could not exercise the powers contained in the Act because the spur line did not actually touch the ballast pit itself. The point is to enable the line to be constructed and the necessary powers to be exercised in its construction under the circumstances which I have stated.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do you give them the power to expropriate under this?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We are making clear that they have the power to expropriate to a point which would not actually touch the ballast pit which is in connection with it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I see in one of the sections: 'All the provisions of this Act, except such as relate to the filing of plans, shall apply.' Why should you not file a plan, and give notice to the proprietor?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So we do usually.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of this language then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not notice that part of the section. I had not given any instructions with regard to that, but I presume it has been inserted by the law branch of the department with some idea in view that it was desirable. I would not strike out that clause at present, but I would ask to have it stand until I make inquiry.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You give them the power to expropriate the user of the land for only a short period, but the Railway Act only gives the power of absolute expropriation.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I remember that some years ago we tried to get power from parliament to expropriate a less interest in the land than the ordinary power, and there was such a strong feeling against it that I did not feel like proposing it generally again.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

Committee resumed at three o'clock.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have taken occasion to look at the original Act, and the sections are identical in all respects, except in making a provision that they may lay down their tracks and expropriate under the Railway Act to the water's edge, so as to be in connection with the ballast pit from which it is proposed to take ballast for the purposes of construction. It is limited to that in this section, but it is not limited in the original Act.

Mr. SCOTT. If hon. gentlemen will turn to the Votes and Proceedings of the 5th of May, they will find that I have given notice of an amendment to this Bill ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. What is the amendment ?

Mr. SCOTT. The amendment is as follows :

1. Every railway company owning or operating a railway in the North-west Territories shall, on or before the thirty-first day of July in each year, provide a fire guard on each side of the line of railway upon any uncultivated or unoccupied land not covered each side by timber adjoining such railway, consisting of ploughed land at least eight feet in width which shall at all times thereafter during the year be kept free from grass and other inflammable matter.

2. The fire guard shall be distant at least three hundred feet from the centre line of the railway, and the company shall cause the grass to be burned off between it and such centre line not later than the first day of August in each year.

3. The company shall, when causing such grass to be burned, have present sufficient persons and appliances to prevent the fire from spreading.

2. Any company neglecting or failing to comply with any of the provisions of the foregoing section, and the officers and directors thereof, shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty of $1,000 for each day of such neglect.

3. For the purpose of complying with the provisions of section 1 hereof the company may enter upon any land not owned by it, and no claim for damages shall be maintained against the company for any act done in compliance with the provisions of the said section 1.

4. This Act shall be read and construed as if it formed part of The Railway Act, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1888.

As is very clearly and plainly set out in that amendment, it is intended to compel railway companies operating lines in the North-west Territories to construct such fire guards as will prevent the spread of fires and the starting of what are known as prairie fires. To show the necessity for such action by parliament, I may state that within the last year there have been a number of very serious fires started from railway engines in the ranching country. Last fall one fire was started from the Calgary and Edmonton line, some distance north from Calgary, which burned what are known as the Nose creek and Beaver dam ranges That fire destroyed some 10,000 tons of hay and burned the houses and holdings of two settlers. East of Calgary last fall there were two very bad fires which burned over a large portion of the range country. East of Medicine Hat, too, there was a serious fire started from the railway which burned over the larger portion of the Cypress Hills country, and destroyed a very large quantity of hay which was put up for winter feed by the ranchers. South of the Bow river, south of Calgary, the most serious fires of the year occurred. Besides destroying the grass on a large area of the range, and burning a quantity of hay, it destroyed no less than 500 head of stock. We have spent a considerable time this session in discussing the want of cattle guards which seems to be a grievance in Ontario ; but I would venture to say that one single prairie fire in the range country will do as much damage as is done in four or five years through the lack of cattle guards. Within the past month there has been a series of serious fires started from the railway line, and I will take the liberty of reading a portion of a letter which came to me a few days ago from Medicine Hat, and which will give some information on this subject. It is dated April 13th, and the writer says :

Since the 5th instant this country has been nearly ruined by prairie fires. On Saturday, the 5th instant, a train leaving Medicine Hat set fire to the country on the west side of the river, and completely burnt over all the country north of the railway to the Red Deer river. The Canada Land and Ranch Company's farm at Stair, eight miles from Medicine Hat, is completely burnt over, not an acre left, and three fine Clyde mares are lying dead in their pasture burnt, and their fine herd of Galloway cattle are scattered all over the burnt country. On Tuesday a fire started on the railway somewhere near Dunmore, east of Medicine Hat, and has burnt the whole country clear to Swift Current. The Drowning Ford Ranch Company lost 300 tons of hay, and Charles Strong, rancher, of Walsh, lost all his hay, buildings, wagons and machinery, hay press, &c., and the loss to the stock industry will be very severe. The hay grounds are all burnt over and will be no good for a couple of years. There have also been great fires in Alberta.

I may say to the committee that this matter was discussed in this House ten or eleven years ago. My late predecessor from Western Assiniboia brought the subject up in 1890 by way of resolution, very nearly in the terms of the amendment which I propose to-day. The resolution was discussed at length, and the government of that day accepted the spirit of it. The next year the same gentleman brought in a Bill in almost the identical terms of the present amendment. The principle of the measure was endorsed, and the Bill was read a second time; but I understand that at that time the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which was then the only railway company affected, agreed with the government that they recognized the need of action, and agreed that they would take action, and from that time to this the railway company have been doing considerable and expending considerable money in the way of fire-guarding their line. But the truth that they have not been attending to the matter completely is shown in the fact that this large number of serious fires have occurred and are occurring yearly. I may tell the committee, too, that if the railway company were subject to the control of the North-west assembly, there would be no need of action by this parliament. Every person in the North-west who is subject to the control of the assembly is liable to severe penalties for doing anything which may cause injury to the public by prairie fires. I may read the section of the prairie fire ordinance of the North-west assembly :

No person shall directly or indirectly, personally or by any servant, agent, or employee kindle on any land a fire for the purpose of guarding property, burning stubble or brush or clearing land unless the land on which the fire is started is at the time it is started, completely surrounded by a fire guard not less than twenty feet in width consisting of land covered with snow or water or so worn, graded, ploughed, burned over or covered with water as to be free of inflammable matter, and any person kindling a fire for such purpose shall during the whole period of its continuance cause it to be guarded by three adult persons provided with proper appliances for extinguishing prairie fire.

I think it is only right that a railway corporation should be subject to the same law in respect to this matter as are private individuals in that country. I think it is not right to allow a railway company or any corporation or any individual to carry an engine which results in destruction to property without having proper provision made to guard against the destruction. I beg, therefore, to move the adoption of this amendment.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I think the committee can hardly exaggerate the importance of the matter which my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) has brought to our attention. It is a subject which has engaged my attention at different times and in different ways, and I can, without any qualification, corroborate the statements he has made as to the very great damage which arises from these fires and as to the grievous consequences which follow, in some cases, to individuals who are wholly unable to bear the losses which they are called upon to bear. I have not followed the legal decisions on this subject within the last two or three years, but when last my attention was drawn to the details of the matter, my recollection is that, as the law stood, the railway company was not liable for a loss by fire caused to an individual unless the person claiming damages could show that the railway company had been guilty of negligence. If the railway company could show that it had used the latest and best appliances known to science for the purpose of preventing the spread of fire, the best kind of spark arrester known, then it was held that the railway company was not guilty of negligence, and the person whose property was destroyed had no redress. I myself have known grievous cases in which fires caused by passing railway trains have burned wheat stacks, hay stacks, barns and houses of men who had absolutely nothing in the world besides what had been destroyed, and who could obtain no redress. If it were necessary to decide the point. I would not hesitate to say that if the state of knowledge in regard to the management of locomotives is such at the present time that it is not possible to prevent an occasional fire, which results in the destruction of a large amount of private property, the House could well decide that the railway company could better afford to bear the loss, or a considerable portion of it, than the individual who has no means of protecting himself, who has not been guilty of any contributory negligence, but who, conducting his farming operations legally and properly on his own property, has his property wiped out and destroyed.

My hon. friend has not however made any proposition which would tend to change the liability of a railway company in respect of the loss or destruction of property by fire, but has made a proposition which seems eminently reasonable and proper. It is that the railway companies, in that district of country, which is peculiarly liable to prairie fires, which run in such a way that once they get started they are almost inextinguishable, should take the necessary precautions for the purpose of preventing, as far as human foresight can do so, the spreading of these fires. When my hon. friend first spoke to me, in the early part of the session, about the proposition he now makes, I ventured the opinion that in all probability the cost would be enormous and almost prohibitory. But my hon. friend has made inquiries on that point, and he now informs me that the calculation which has been made, as the result of negotiations with the North-west Territorial government, results in the conclusion that the total expenditure by the Canadian Pacific Railway would be something in the neighbourhood of $20,000. So far as I am personally concerned, I have not the least hesitation in saying that if over several hundred miles of railway running through such a country, by an expenditure of $20,000, life and property can be protected from danger of fire, it is the duty of the committee to impose on that company the obligation of providing that protection. But I think that my hon. friend will require to include the whole prairie country in his amendment, both Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. I think also that some of the latter portion of the amendment might well be left out, because it is probably covered by the general provisions of the Railway Act. Probably my hon. friend the Minister of Railways can speak on that point. But in so far as the general principle is concerned, I am entirely in favour of the amendment, though I am not as a rule disposed to place any undue restrictions or obligations on any transportation company, which could have no practical result, simply for the furtherance of an idea. Having lived in that country since the Canadian Pacific Railway was incorporated, and before the first mile was constructed, I know that it is impossible to exaggerate the importance of the question which my hon. friend has brought to our attention. It has reference to a real and substantial grievance which this House ought to remedy.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) I do not think the amendment moved by the hon. member for West Assiniboia goes far enough. By the clause which he wishes to embody in this Bill, the promoter deals only with the interests of the west, whereas the Bill under discussion concerns the country at large.

In the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company vs. Roy, the Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council has decided that a railway company which, in running its railway, complies with all the requirements of its charter, is not liable for damages ensuing from fire arising from the sparks emitted from any locomotive engine, in the normal use of its line. That you should use your own property so as not to injure your neighbour's property, is a principle of Roman law embodied in the legislation of every civilized country.

A company has the right to the normal use of its property, but it cannot go beyond that. When a company, in running its railway, sets fire to the neighbouring property, it goes beyond the lawful and normal use of its property, and it trespasses upon foreign ground. The Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council did not hold that it was not fair and just that a railway company should not be liable for damages resulting from the use of its line; on the contrary, the law lords held that it was common law, but they decided that a railway company was above common law, under the power conferred upon it by its federal charter. When the question was threshed out on the floor of the Quebec legislature, M. Duffy drew attention to that fact and spoke as follows:

> It is admitted that it is unjust that Roy should have had his property damaged by the railway company, even when that company was without fault. What is the remedy?
> The remedy does not consist in abolishing all appeals to the Privy Council and of doing away with that learned body so far as this province is concerned. The privilege consists in calling upon the Dominion parliament not to pass legislation where it has the jurisdiction which will permit such an injustice. A simple amendment to the Railway Act, providing that railways would be liable for damage caused in the manner mentioned in this case would of course do away with the evil.

There is no doubt that a railway company cannot trespass upon private property. If in the course of its operations, a railway company sets fire to a property of a farmer, upon whom shall the loss fall? It must fall either upon the railway company or the farmer who is the victim. But it stands to reason that the railway company has no right to the use of a property that does not belong to it. I beg therefore to move the following amendment:

> Whenever damage is caused to crops, lands, fences, plantations, or buildings, and their contents, by fires started by a railway locomotive, the company making use of such locomotive shall, notwithstanding any provision in any general or special Act of the parliament of Canada, be responsible for such damage, and may be sued for the recovery of the amount of such damage in any court of ordinary jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What the hon. gentleman proposes to do is to engraft an entirely new principle, so far as the larger portion of the Dominion of Canada is concerned, upon the liabilities of railway companies. He asks that parliament should affirm, irrespective of whether or not a railway company is guilty of negligence, and although the company may have conformed in every particular with the requirements of the law, although it may have adopted the most recent up to date method for the protection of property along its tracks, that if damage should ensue to property through the necessary and ordinary use of the railway, the railway company shall be liable to make good to the person suffering such damage, any amount necessary for such purpose. That possibly may be a wise provision to adopt as part of the general law of the land, but I think my hon. friend would hardly expect that in the dying hours of the session, when we can scarcely give the subject the attention and consideration it demands, we should subscribe to the adoption of a new principle and an entire change in the doctrines and principles of common law, as they now regulate the question of negligence. I would not like at this moment to say that the committee ought to adopt this amendment, and I think perhaps the effect would be to complicate and injuriously affect whatever element there may be of merit in the amendment which the hon. member for West Assiniboia is asking us to consider. The question which arises under the amendment of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia is one which must largely depend upon existing circumstances and upon the possibility of an adequate and sufficient remedy lying in the hands of the railway company, and a remedy which would not necessarily entail extraordinary and unreasonable cost to the company. I am not going to say that a railway company should not, even at great expense, be required to protect properties in the district it traverses, but I do think it would have been better if we had been able to hear, before coming to a conclusion, the other parties who are interested. for instance, the railway companies, who might wish to have something to say on the subject. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has moved this amendment and the hon. minister who has supported it, that a very strong case possibly can be made out, but is it wise, though the grievance is a serious one, though enormous damage has resulted to the people by reason of sufficient safeguards not having been provided heretofore, for us, in this form and at this moment, to say that this is the only and proper way in which the needed protection shall be provided.

Personally, I would gladly respond to any appeal which might be made by the hon. gentleman for legislative action in the matter. But I would not like to commit myself to this method, unless I had an opportunity to inform myself upon the subject, and should conclude that this was the best mode by which the remedy could be provided. I should imagine that, possibly, the meaning of this first clause would be that not only would the company have to plough the land on either side of the track, but they might be obliged to continue ploughing it—two or three different ploughings might be required. The company might be obliged to keep constantly ploughing on either side of the track from the last of July for the rest of the season. Is that a necessary thing to do? And, if so, can it reasonably be done? I would go as far as any hon. gentleman in pressing upon the railway company the duty of providing a sufficient safeguard. The existing condition is a very serious one, no doubt, one for which a remedy should be found. But is this the only remedy, and are we providing for it in a proper way? I feel some uncertainty about the matter myself, and therefore would not like very ardently to accept the motion. But I would not oppose it without hearing the opinions of others. There is a section which provides a penalty of $1,000 for each day of neglect of this ploughing. That would mean, I presume, that this penalty would be enforcible against the railway company for neglect at any point over its entire line. If that is a correct interpretation, still, if the first clause is one which meets with favour from the committee, I would not feel that the penalty was unduly severe. The third section provides:

> For the purpose of complying with the provisions of section 1 hereof the company may enter upon any land not owned by it, and no claim for damages shall be maintained against the company for any act done in compliance with the provisions of the said section 1.

Perhaps it is not necessary to regard that as a very serious question, though I mention it to call the attention of the committee to it. I confess to feeling a good deal of difficulty with regard to the proposed amendment. I would like to see something done. My hon. friend (Mr. Scott) has not had—it is no fault of his—the opportunity of having the matter presented and considered earlier. The fact that my hon. friend had given notice of this amendment was not brought to my attention until just before my motion for second reading of the Bill was made. Therefore, I have not had—and perhaps other gentlemen are in the same position—the opportunity to consider the matter and reach a satisfactory conclusion in my own mind. But, if the sense of the committee it not averse to the proposition, I would not offer any objection.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The fact that the hon. gentleman proposed the second amendment, the purpose of which is to deal with the points to which I adverted when I was on my feet a few moments ago, viz.: the liability of the company, shows that this is a question which has given rise to serious difficulty and serious consideration long before the present time, and not only so, but that the different methods of meeting the difficulty have been very carefully considered. Now, I submit that in so far as the method of meeting the difficulty with respect to the prairie country to which my hon. friend from West Assiniboia's motion refers, is concerned, no simpler or less expensive method could possibly be devised than that suggested. We are simply acting on the maxim that prevention is better than cure—that preventing a fire is better than paying damages for the results of fire. And, if we are in a position to estimate the expense approximately, as my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott) is satisfied we are, I do not think that the committee will regard $20,000 or even $50,000 as an excessive amount to call upon a railway company to expend in order to protect a vast territory of that kind against the destruction which comes yearly by the starting of prairie fires. In this proposal, then, we have it appears to me, a simple, practicable, and not oppressivley expensive, method of meeting the difficulty. I would urge upon the committee that the usual indisposition to deal with such matters at a late period of the session should not influence us in this case. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia has been diligent enough in getting this matter before the House, and the fact that he has not succeeded in bringing it before the House at an earlier time is due to no fault of his, but to circumstances over which he has had no control. But if the matter were considered for six months, though the committee might have greater knowledge of the details, yet I doubt if it would be in a better position to deal with the matter than at the present time. As my hon. friend (Mr. Scott) has stated, this is a subject which has been discussed between the railway company and the North-west government, and the fact that it is practicable to carry out this plan, and that it is, to all intents and purposes effective, is practically admitted by all parties concerned. All that is necessary is for this parliament to place upon the railway company the obligation, which, I think, every hon. member here will admit should be placed upon them, of taking reasonable precautions to protect the public from the loss which has hitherto been suffered. Let the railway companies understand that parliament has placed this obligation upon them, and we shall have no more difficulty about prairie fires starting from locomotives. The railway companies would do what they have done in other cases, they would take the necessary steps to comply with the conditions, and parliament might feel that at least it had prevented very serious losses such as have taken place during the past years. To my own knowledge railway companies themselves have very fully appreciated the difficulties of this question, and, as long ago as seven or eight years, I remember, the Canadian Pacific Railway made prolonged efforts to provide an inexpensive and effective means of clearing the fire-guard along its track. A complicated piece of machinery for that purpose was devised, but I believe it did not turn out successful in operation. As to the necessity of ploughing the fire-guards a second time, I think I can state to the Minister of Railways (Hon. Mr. Blair) that such a difficulty would not arise. If in the case of the virgin prairie, land is ploughed once between the 1st and the 31st of July, seed will not germinate in such a way as to make it necessary to plough that land again—there will be nothing inflammable there except what is blown upon it. If the provisions of the amendment are carried out, the fire-guard might be ploughed anywhere between the 1st of July and the 31st of July; then, the ground between the fire-guard and the track being cleared, it will form an effective fire-guard for the rest of that season. So that difficulty as a matter of actual practice will not apply. The same thing might be said of a fire-guard being applied where the land had been cultivated before. Seeds will not germinate in such a way as to place any inflammable matter upon the ground which is ploughed after the 1st of July of any season. So we may, I think, feel satisfied that the amendment is an effective one, that it will accomplish the purpose for which it is designed, that it is not unreasonably oppressive, and that it is actually necessary for the purpose of removing a substantial grievance.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. In my opinion the the amendment moved by the hon. member for St. John's (Mr. Demers) will have the effect of changing the law altogether as it at present exists in Canada and in Great Britain. The law, I think, was very properly laid down by the Minister of the Interior when he said that a railroad company receiving a charter or a right to run through a country, when it exercises due precaution in running and is not guilty of negligence, is not liable to these incidental damages. The hon. member for St. John's would make the companies liable for the incidence, even the damage resulted after the use of the utmost diligence on the part of the company, and the utmost precaution in running the road. That is contrary to the principle of the law of this country, it is contrary to the law laid down in Great Britain; and it is contrary, if I understand properly the decision of the Privy Council of England the other day, to the code in Quebec. Notwithstanding the decision of the courts in Quebec on the matter, the Privy Council in England found that their interpretation of the code was wrong, and that the law was similar to what it is in our section of the country. It would be an entire reversal of the law as at present applied to railroads both in this country, in Great Britain and in the United States. However, I do not suppose there is any chance of it becoming law at this session, as I am glad to hear from the remarks of the Minister of the Interior that it was not his intention to press the amendment in reference to fire guards at the present session.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. My hon. friend must have misunderstood me. What I said was that I would press the committee to adopt it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman advocated it, and complimented his hon. friend on the introduction of the amendment, but the inference I drew from the remarks of the Minister of the Interior was that on account of the late period of the session it could not be fully discussed and considered at the present time. However, I state my objection to the section. I think the railroad companies in the North-west already try to protect, not only their own property by running ploughed tracks along their line, but also the property of the farmers in the neighbourhood. I do not know whether they are compelled to do it, or whether the territories have power to compel them to do it; I do not know whether it is in accordance with the North-west Act. But the question I want to present to this House is whether we have power to legislate in this direction? Is it an incidence to railroad travelling or railroad chartering?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think so.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I have a different opinion. We may make anything an incidence that we like in reference to railroads, we may say that they shall not run a railway unless they do so and so. But surely we have no power to pass a clause like this for the purpose of making them comply with all the provisions of section 1, which reads :

> The company may enter upon any land not owned by it, and no claim for damages shall be maintained against the company for any act done in compliance with the provisions of said section.

What is the object of the hon. gentleman in introducing his amendment ? It is to protect the farms in the neighbourhood of the railways from damage done by fire. It is not an incidence to the running of the road that they should exercise due precaution ; it is not within our power to give them the right to enter on private property and take possession of it for the purpose of doing or preventing a damage by fire to farms in the neighbourhood.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Would we not require them to keep their track in a certain condition ?

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. We could require them to keep their track in a good condition, we could require them to exercise due precaution against fire ; but we could not give them power to enter upon private property and take possession of it, without compensation, for the purpose of preventing fire spreading to neighbouring farms.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The question of compensation is a question for parliament. It is within our discretion. We can authorize the railway companies to do anything we consider necessary for the due protection of the public, either in regard to travelling upon the railway or in regard to traffic. Anything in the judgment of this parliament that is necessary for the protection of the public we can enact, and we can place that obligation upon the railway company.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is not for the protection of the public, this is not for the protection of traffic. It is not an incidence to the exercise by a railway corporation of its rights and powers. This is for the protection of farmers in the neighbourhood of a railway from damage done, though not through the negligence of the company.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We require the railway company to do a particular thing, and when they do not do it, then they become negligent, and being negligent, they are liable for damages when that negligence is established.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. You may put any obligation on a railway company that you like. You may define what is an incidence to it, and what is negligence ; but can you give them power to exercise the right of going on to the property of a private individual without compensation, and doing what you wish them to do ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If it is necessary for the purpose of the Act.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Not at all. The clause reads :

> For the purpose of complying with the provisions of section 1, hereinafter, the company may enter upon any land not owned by it, and no claim for damages shall be maintained against the company for any act done in compliance with the provisions of said section.

You may say that the company may be negligent in doing anything, you may make any condition that you like in giving them their charter ; but you cannot interfere with provincial rights, you cannot say they shall enter upon any man's property for the purpose of doing something which is not an incidence to railroad traffic. But there is another objection still more serious which I wish to mention. The railway companies ought to have a right to state their case, either before parliament or a committee of parliament. Who is to determine whether the protection is proper, or whether a certain act is necessary to afford protection? Therefore I think the hon. gentleman who introduced this section will perform his duty to his constituents if he lets the amendment stand as a notice, and let the railway companies be heard in reference to these amendments. Amendments like this affect large amounts of capital which have been invested in this country. The parties should be heard before a committee of the House. It is unfair to the railway companies to enact legislation of this kind without their being heard before some authority appointed by this House for the purpose.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any desire on the part of the hon. member (Mr. Scott) to be unfair to the railway companies, or to take the House unawares in any way. I understand that the hon. member has made every effort to get his Bill before the House, and that he did make every effort to get his Bill before the House at an earlier date in the session. Owing to circumstances he was not able to do so, and it is now for the House to say whether it considers it has received sufficient information on the subject to warrant it in coming to a conclusion or postponing that conclusion to some future occasion.

I would like to say, however, in reply to the contention set up by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Hon. Mr. Haggart), that parliament is here for the purpose of discussing and deciding these questions on its own responsibility, and it is not absolutely necessary to the decision of the question that the private parties to the case shall be heard by parliament. Parliament is responsible for the decision, parliament can arrive at the decision by any means its sees fit, and it is not compelled to wait for such evidence as would be given before a court of law before reaching its conclusion.

In regard to the general question, there seems to be a very grave misapprehension on the part of hon. members as to what is attempted to be done. It is essentially not a question of protecting the farmers or farming property. It is an absolutely and entirely different question from the question brought forward by the hon. member for St. John and Iberville (Mr. Demers). It is a question rather of protecting public property than of protecting private property. The country owns the land, the country owns the grass, the country derives a benefit from the use of that grass by reason of it being pastured by cattle and turned into valuable beef. It is in regard to the range country rather than in regard to the farming country that these amendments are suggested, and in regard to which the question chiefly arises. We have a condition of affairs that is absolutely different from that prevailing in any other part of the Dominion, and hon. members may be forgiven for not accurately understanding that position. It is because the condition is so radically different there from the condition elsewhere in the Dominion that we are asking for such radically different legislation. It is a different case, and therefore, we are asking for different legislation.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask the hon. gentleman a question ?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. In the western states they have very much the same conditions as we have on this side. Is the hon. gentleman aware of what means they take to check the spread of fires on the ranges ?

Mr. OLIVER. I have not the faintest idea, but there is another piece of information which I will give to the hon. gentleman, and it is that in the range country of the western states the grass is not as rank, it is not as good as it is in the Northwest, and therefore it is not as subject to the spread of prairie fires. The grass, being longer in our country, when it becomes dry, the fire is much more easily and much more certainly spreads upon it.

The grass, as I say, belongs to the country. The country derives benefit from that grass, either directly by rental, or indirectly by the production of wealth in the growth of beef, and it is with the view of protecting the public interest, or the national interest, in that property, rather than protecting the private interest of the individual, that this amendment is proposed. Because, in the vast areas of country which have been burned over year after year by fires started by Canadian Pacific Railway locomotives, a very small proportion of the country has become private property, while a very large proportion of it is producing actual wealth for the country. The greater part of the area affected is not private property, it is public property, and parliament has a perfect right to direct that any action shall be taken in regard to that property that parliament desires. But, of course, a large part of the range country is also private property. It is owned, and in some cases, it is fenced. But there is no distinction in appearance, or in use, there is not even a boundary set up in many cases between what is private property and what is public property, and I can assure the committee that the fire does not recognize any difference between private and public property, between land that is owned and land that is not owned. If a fire starts on private property it spreads to the public domain, and if it starts on the public domain it overwhelms private property. It is a case in which the private and the public interest is the same. They are identical, the one has to be protected with the other, and the one cannot be protected without the other. There is no use requiring a railway company to go on public property and plough fire-guards and not require them to go on private property and plough fire-guards.

As to the constitutional question, or the question of law that has been raised, I will say nothing, but I will ask the committee if it seems good to allow this vast interest that exists in our country, that is increasing in value from year to year, to be jeopardized because of a constitutional point, because of some question in law, because of a ruling made by a judge on a question that does not appertain in any shape or manner to the condition of affairs which exists in these territories at the present time. What I ask the committee to do is to take into consideration the fact that the conditions are as they are, that they are absolutely and entirely different from any conditions existing in any of the eastern provinces, that it is the public interest that requires protection, that it cannot be protected separately from the private interest, that common cause has to be made against the common enemy, that is fire, that the local legislature has no authority in the matter, that this Dominion parliament is the only authority, and that, as far as our judgment goes—I speak of the western members—we have not been able to suggest any better remedy for meeting what is a tremendous and a growing evil than the suggestion made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Scott).

Mr. SCOTT. It would probably be well for me to give the committee the fullest information I can as to how this provision would work out in practice if it is enacted. The only company, which, to-day, would be affected, is the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. And the Canadian Northern.

Mr. SCOTT. The Canadian Northern has only a few miles of road in the territories, and the class of country in which they are at present is such that they would not require to observe this provision. I will give the committee the total mileage of the Canadian Pacific Railway which would be affected. On the main line guarding would be necessary between Qu'Appelle and Morley, 558 miles. There would be a mileage of 160 miles on the Soo branch, 160 miles on the Prince Albert branch, 165 miles on the Calgary and Edmonton branch and 211 miles on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway, making a total mileage of 1,254 miles. That mileage, of course, has to be doubled for guarding is necessary on both sides of the line, so that it makes practically 2,500 miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Do they not do something in that direction now ?

Mr. SCOTT. They do a very considerable amount.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Are the railway company complying as far as possible with the territorial law in this particular ?

Mr. SCOTT. The territorial legislature are not competent to control the company in this matter. If the legislature were competent to do so I can assure my hon. friend that no action would need to be suggested in this parliament. I have the figures which have been prepared by I believe the most competent authority in the North-west Territories, the most competent person in Canada, with respect to this matter and he calculates that the cost of the first construction of such a guard would be about $10 per mile, amounting to $25,000 over the whole system. That would be in the first year, and he also calculates that the cost of maintenance in subsequent years would be $5 a mile for the back setting or re-breaking of the ploughed guard and about $3 a mile for the burning between the ploughed guard and the railway track. I may say to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals that the ploughed guard is not the chief thing, the burning between the guards and the track is the chief thing, and if that is done completely once a year it will be entirely sufficient. The total cost of maintenance therefore would be about $8 per mile, or as the Minister of the Interior has already said, a total of $20,000 per year. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) has suggested that the company is already doing considerable in this direction, and that being the case we will not by this amendment be imposing a burden of $20,000 a year upon this company. I have no doubt that the company is already expending possibly $10,000 or $12,000 a year, so that this amendment would not impose a very great additional burden upon them. The fact that the company is not completely fire-guarding its system is proven by the very many and very serious fires which have occurred last fall and this spring.

Now, as to the feasibility of the particular plan which is suggested, I may say that the Public Works Department of the North-west government and the railway company have been negotiating with respect to this matter for two or three years, and the plan which they have decided on as being the best is exactly this plan which I have now proposed. The North-west government deemed the matter so very important in the public interest that, although they did not believe the government should be saddled with any portion of the cost, yet they went the length of suggesting that they would bear a portion of the cost if the railway company would undertake to complete the fire-guarding of their system. The company and the government are entirely agreed that this plan which is here suggested is the best plan, is a good plan, but they did not arrive at an agreement as to the terms. I understand that the government went the length of suggesting that they would be willing to bear half of the whole cost of first construction and maintenance, but so far as I have been informed the railway company did not see fit to agree to even that proposition.

Respecting the sub-clause which would give the company power to go upon other people's property without compensation, I may say that in practice I do not think any difficulty will be found. When the railway company were willing to agree with the North-west government to carry out this particular plan, they did not think evidently that there would be any serious difficulty encountered in that respect. In the portion of the country which is a farming country this fire-guard is not necessary, and it is only in the ranching country where people live far apart that it will have to be constructed. The people living in such a section are not likely to object to the company going upon their property, but as it would seem unreasonable to make a law compelling the company to do certain things and not relieve them from liability for damage for so doing, we have inserted this clause in the amendment. I draw the attention of the House to the fact that the proposition which we make with respect to prairie fires in the North-west is entirely on all fours with the proposition which was agreed to by a majority of the members of this House and by the government on the cattle-guard question. It was decided in that case that it would be better to find out what is the best cattle-guard and then to compel the railway companies to use that cattle-guard subject to a penalty for neglecting the use of it. I claim that I am suggesting to-day what is the best fire-guard, and I ask parliament to compel the railway companies to use that fire-guard subject to a penalty for failing to do so.

Mr. SPROULE. This is a very important question, and although I think it would be fair that the railway company should have an opportunity of presenting their view, yet that cannot be done during this session at least. I have some knowledge of the injury that has been done not only in the Northwest but in Ontario because of fires started by railway engines, and I confess that I would be inclined to go the length of saying that the railway company should not only be obliged to take precautions to prevent fires starting, but that they should be held responsible as well for damages done in this connection. In my own locality I have seen a farmer burned out three or four times over by reason of fire starting from railway engines, and yet he was unable to get a dollar of compensation. That is not justice. If a farmer lights a fire to clean his land after the 1st of June, and damage results from that fire, the law provides that he shall be responsible. Why should you impose such liability upon a private individual and exempt a great railway corporation. That is something that I cannot understand. If the information which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) gives us is correct, then the adoption of this amendment would not impose any very great expense upon the railway companies. He tells us that they would have to plough a section of the country sixteen feet wide and 1,272 miles long. That would be in all 3,544 acres, and assuming that it would cost $1.50 an acre—it would only have to be ploughed once in a season, although perhaps there might be localities where it would be necessary to plow more than once—but if done once in the season it would give fairly good protection and it would cost the railway company only $5,316. It happens very frequently that one farmer sustains a loss from these railway fires more than three times that amount, not considering the thousands of acres of pasture which are burned and the consequent heavy loss to cattle owners whose feed for their cattle has been destroyed.

Comparatively speaking it would be a very small expense to a rich corporation; but when you take into account the loss sustained by individuals and their helplessness under the circumstances, our sympathy should go to the individual rather than to the rich corporation. For this reason I would be inclined to support the amendment. I am not sufficiently versed in law to be able to say whether there is anything in the constitutional point raised by the hon. member for South Lanark; but assuming that we have the authority to legislate, the question is, should we put that obligation upon the railway companies? In my judgment we should. We give these corporations great powers and privileges. We give them franchises out of which they are able to earn immense amounts of money from the people. We give them rights which they exercise over the people, very often to the detriment and loss of private individuals. In almost every instance in which the interests of individuals are concerned, these suffer instead of the railway. In consideration of these things, I do not think it is too much to put upon the railways the obligation to bear the consequences of the damage they do. While I admit that the railway companies ought to be heard, I do not admit that we are not justified in passing this amendment, because I think we are. I, for one, would be inclined to go further, and say that we should hold them responsible for all the damage done by their locomotives, not only in Manitoba, but in every other part of the country. In carrying on ordinary business, if we do damage to another, we must pay for that damage; and I do not see why a railway company should not be compelled to do that which a private individual must do.

Mr. BELCOURT. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has preceded me as to the importance of this question. I regret that I am not in a position to speak to the House very intelligently upon it, because I did not see or hear of the amendment until it was read this afternoon; but I may say that I have for some time made up my mind on this question. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down that the legislation aimed at in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for St. Johns and Iberville (Mr. Demers) is right, and expedient for this parliament to enact. Until the Privy Council decided recently the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway vs. Roy, I had thought that the provision of section 288 of the Railway Act (1888) had consecrated the principle embodied in this amendment; but the Privy Council has declared the principle to be non-existent in Canada. With the permission of the House I will read section 288:

> No inspection had under this Act, and nothing in this Act contained, and nothing done or ordered or omitted to be done or ordered, under or by virtue of the provisions of this Act, shall relieve, or be construed to relieve, any company, of or from any liability or responsibility resting upon it by law, either towards Her Majesty or towards any person, or the wife or husband, parent or child, executor or administrator, tutor or curator, heir or personal representative of any person, for anything done or omitted to be done by such company, or for any wrongful act, neglect or default, misfeasance, malfeasance or nonfeasance, of such company or in any manner or way to lessen such liability or responsibility, or in any way to weaken or diminish the liability or responsibility of any such company, under the laws in force in the province in which such liability or responsibility arises.

I had always been under the impression that this section preserved and sanctioned the principle that corporations or individuals who exercise an occupation or carry on a trade or occupation which is of a dangerous or obnoxious character, when that is done for gain or profit, do so at their own risk, and if in doing so they cause damage to any person, whatever precautions they take, they are liable for that damage. I have always thought that section 288 consecrated that principle ; but it is evident that I was wrong if the recent decision of the Privy Council is the true interpretation of the law. I would not venture to say, whatever my opinion is, that the decision of the Privy Council is wrong. But, I think, I may say that it has been guided more by the principles of English law than by the principle I have mentioned is recognized by the French law, and runs all through French jurisprudence. It may be that it has not received full sanction in regard to the railways of France ; but that is explained by the fact that the railways of France are mostly owned and managed by the state, and that the state has thought it well to protect itself from damages arising from fire on the ground that it does not operate the railways for profit or gain. Therefore the principle which permeates the whole of French legislation, has not received in France with regard to railways the sanction that it has received with regard to other subjects. I think the amendment of my hon. friend all the more expedient because of the interpretation which section 288 has been given by the Privy Council. It seems to me the amendment is not only expedient, but right and just. What are the facts ? A company is created by parliament for the purpose of carrying on the business of a public carrier. It is given certain powers which it can exercise, but if in the exercise of those powers it causes any damage to the people along its line, it seems to me the company ought to pay that damage. It is well enough to say that this parliament is supreme, and that it can enact any law. Of course it can; it can pass an unjust or iniquitous law. I am not discussing what this parliament can do ; I am discussing what it ought to do in a case of this sort. It is said that the course of legislation in England has been different from what is proposed here. I do not say that it has ; but assuming that it has, it does not follow that we must go on for ever bound by legislation which perpetrates an injustice. When this country was new and the means of communication were difficult, it was probably just that every facility should be given to railway companies to carry on their business ; but that time is past, and we have to-day railways passing through very thickly populated sections of the country, among hundreds of thousands of people whose property is daily and hourly subject to fire. The principle for which I contend has been sanctioned in the matter of expropriation. It is true, this parliament has given power to railway companies to expropriate property from individuals for the purposes of the railway ; but parliament has imposed restrictions and a procedure under which that must be done, and has also taken care to provide that in giving compensation to the people whose property is expropriated, the railway company must take certain matters into account.

It seems to me that this proposed legislation is eminently proper and just. Here is a railway company, which operates a dangerous undertaking for its own profit and advantage. Why should the people who live along the line of that railway be subject, not only to the noise, smoke and vibration and other inconvenience arising from it, but also to damages caused by fire. The principle for which I contend has been admitted in almost every other case where a dangerous or obnoxious trade or business is carried on. Our courts have frequently decided that persons operating a saw mill in a city should pay damages caused by the vibration of its machinery or by the smoke emanating from it. In a recent case in the city of Montreal, a livery stable keeper was condemned to pay the damages caused his neighbour's property by the bad smell emanating from his stable. The principle is not a new one, and I see no reason why railway companies should not be subjected to it as well as every other kind of business. The argument that the time has come for a change in our legislation in this regard is not a new one. In the imperial parliament in 1900, a Bill was introduced which is substantially to the same effect as the proposed amendment. That Bill provided as follows :

> Where damages caused to crops, hedges, or plantations by fire arising from sparks emitted from any locomotive engine on railways, the railway company owning such engine shall, notwithstanding their statutory powers and rights to the contrary, or the provisions of any special or general Act relating thereto, be liable to pay to the person whose crops, hedges, or plantations have been so damaged, the amount of such damage to be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. SPROULE. That is both law and justice.

Mr. BELCOURT. That Bill did not pass, but there was a majority of practically four to one in its favour, the vote on second reading, I am told, standing 330 for and 84 against.

Similar legislation exists also in many states of the American Union. It seems to me that the time has come when we should compel railway companies to pay the damages they cause. The argument that these companies are operating pro bono publico is altogether exploded. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway and the other railway companies are not carrying on their business for the benefit of the public, but for the dollars and cents they can make out of it, and I cannot see why a poor farmer, whose lands are often cut in two by these railway lines, should, besides having to run the danger of crossing the railway track in the operations of his farm, be also subjected, besides many other inconveniences and annoyances, to loss by fire caused by the sparks from locomotives. I do not delude myself into the belief that the House will adopt this resolution to-day when parliament is on the eve of prorogation, for I am afraid that a number of hon. members are not quite so zealous in the matter as are my hon. friend from St. Jean d'Iberville (Mr. Demers) and myself, and many others, but I believe that those who are in favour of this proposed legislation should put themselves on record and thus create a public opinion that will eventually bring about its adoption.

The PRIME MINISTER. Personally I am in sympathy with both amendments, especially that introduced by my hon. friend from St. Jean d'Iberville (Mr. Demers). If that amendment were adopted, we would have legislation on our statute books, which would not only be law but also equity. I cannot conceive of any reasonable argument against such a law. A company is authorized to carry on a certain enterprise, and at present, if it makes use of the latest inventions for protection against damage, it is not responsible. That may be law, but it is not equity. If in the course of its operations, a railway company sets fire to a poor man's crop, as often happens, the company pleads that as it has taken all the precautions possible, it is not responsible for any loss. The company pleads that the loss occurred through no fault of its own. That may be, but neither was it the fault of the poor man whose property was destroyed. A loss has to be borne; upon whom shall it fall. It must fall either upon the railway company or the settler, who is the victim, and under the circumstances certainly equity demands that the victim should not suffer the damage, but the party who caused it, even though that party be free of blame. For my part I am in favour of the amendment of my hon. friend from St. Jean d'Iberville, and I am also much in sympathy with that of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia, although the latter amendment is not free from doubt. There is a good deal to be said in favour of the argument of the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart). I do not know that we have the power at this moment, though we might have had it when granting the charter, to provide that a company shall be authorized to go on private property and there put up any construction it may deem necessary. I would ask both my hon. friends not to press their amendments, not because I am not in favour of them, but because I think it would be wiser to follow the usual method of dealing with such matters. My hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has said that parliament should deal with these questions as it pleases. That is no doubt true, but parliament has thought fit to adopt certain rules, and it is always better to follow these rules, even when we have made up our minds that there is no other side to the question. But there are two sides to every question, and it is only right that we should give the railway companies an opportunity of presenting their views before enacting any legislation of the kind proposed. The rule hitherto followed is that legislation of this kind should be referred to the Railway Committee, where opportunity is given to all parties to bring witnesses and have the whole question properly threshed out. I would suggest that that rule be followed in this case, and I would say to my hon. friends from West Assiniboia and St. Jean D'Iberville, that the government pledges itself to give them an opportunity early next session to have this matter referred to the Railway Committee in order that it may be discussed there in all its phases, and proper legislation drafted. With this assurance, I hope that my hon. friends will agree to follow the course I have suggested.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is one thing I would like to say, and that is that while this evil may be greater in the Northwest than in other parts of Canada, it is by no means confined to that particular part of the country. In the eastern provinces we have had many cases in which property has been destroyed by fire from locomotive engines, and the parties interested have been unable to recover because they could not show negligence on the part of the railway company. In other words, a railway company is not liable so long as it is shown that it has employed the latest and most improved methods known to science for the purpose of preventing fire being communicated to the adjoining property. When this question comes to be discussed next year, as the right hon. gentleman says it will be, there is one subject which the government should consider in that connection, and that is the liability of the Crown by reason of its operation of the Intercolonial Railway. There is no special reason why the Intercolonial Railway should not be subject to the same rules as other railways in that regard. It runs through a large portion of Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, and at present I do not see what remedy there is, in case of damage, even if negligence were established. I know that there is a statute which says that the Crown is liable for negligence committed by any of its servants on public works, but whether or not that would apply to the case of the user by the Crown of a locomotive not in conformity with the latest improvements, is a question I have not looked into.

When the government come to deal with this question in the North-west, I think they will perhaps be obliged to deal with it on different lines from those on which it should be dealt with in the other provinces. I suppose that a provision of the character suggested by the hon. member for West Assiniboia would not be of very much use in the older provinces. Therefore, I think that when the question presents itself to the government next year it will probably present itself in the somewhat broader aspect than that in which it is presented in the amendments of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia—more in the light of the amendment introduced by my hon. friend from St. John and Iberville. It is a pretty large question. Railway companies have been exempt from liability in the past by reason of the fact that they operate their railways under laws which empower them to do so, and which, for the most part, provide that their lines shall be located in certain places. This was the cause of exemption in the first place, the reason why they were exempt from being treated as a public nuisance. They were authorized by statute, or by ordinance having the force of law, to operate their lines in particular places. But that does not apply to all corporations carrying on business. A great deal depends on the terms of the particular statutes. It is a great question in this country, particularly in view of the fact that great industrial enterprises are being advanced at the present time. You must consider not only the liabilities of railway companies carrying on enterprises of that character, but you must consider the liability that should attach to other corporations, such as the great manufacturing concerns. It is a subject that is by no means free from difficulty and will involve a great deal of debate. The question with which we are more immediately concerned is the liability of the railway companies. As far as they are concerned, there seems a great deal of force in what has been urged from both sides that persons who, through no fault of their own, have property destroyed through the causes we have been discussing, should have some remedy pointed out to them, or, at all events, those exposed to such danger should have, possibly some better safeguard employed than is at present provided. But I entirely agree with what has been said by the right hon. leader of the House as to the unwisdom of dealing with this question without giving the railway companies an opportunity to put the other side of the question. It may be that there is no other side to the question—the Minister of the Interior says that there is not. That is all very well, but the railway companies should be heard from, and, after hearing we can judge better whether there is another side to the question or not. It is true that in questions of this kind this parliament is paramount. I believe that parliament has power to pass this legislation. But parliament should not, without hearing the other side, always exercise the power it possesses. Otherwise a local legislature, having jurisdiction over property and civil rights, could pass one man's property over to any other without giving the man whose property was being sacrificed the opportunity of saying a word in his own defence. That might be the result of the argument presented by my hon. friend from Alberta (Mr. Oliver) if carried out to its legitimate conclusion. I think it is quite right to postpone this legislation to another session, and, when it comes up again it should be discussed from all standpoints, and after hearing all parties interested.

Mr. SCOTT. So far as concerns the amendment that I proposed, I desire to say that it is with very extreme regret I feel impelled by the remarks which have been made by the right hon. leader of the House (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) to ask permission to withdraw it.

Amendment, (Mr. Scott), withdrawn.

Mr. DEMERS. I also beg leave to withdraw the amendment I offered.

Amendment, (Mr. Demers), withdrawn.

Bill reported.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Before the Bill is read the third time, I would ask the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) what is the explanation of the words to which I called attention this morning. Is the effect of the section this—that the person whose land is taken for this temporary purpose shall have notice of what land is taken, and will he have compensation, and will he have the usual remedy ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He is entitled to compensation, and he will have the usual remedy provided in the original statute.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the third time, and passed.

CITY OF OTTAWA.

Bill (No. 164) to amend the Act of 1899 respecting the city of Ottawa (the Minister of Finance) was read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1,

Mr. CHARLTON. Do the commissioners receive a salary ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, the compensation is entirely honorary.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many of these commissioners are appointed by the government, and how many by the city ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. As the law stands now there are four commissioners, of whom three are appointed by the Governor in Council during pleasure, and one is appointed from time to time by the corporation of the city of Ottawa. This proposal is to add four, all of whom will be appointed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is to say, seven will be appointed by the Governor in Council and one by the city.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it found desirable to have an even number of commissioners rather than an odd number? Or would there be any objection to having another representative for the city? You are doubling the number, but you are altering the proportion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I may say when the matter was first broached I had contemplated a larger measure which would include an additional representative for the city of Ottawa, but owing to the late period of the session I concluded it was better not to do that at present. I do not think the city has any reason to complain or are complaining. Whatever is done is done entirely for the city of Ottawa. If this were a case of a joint expenditure, part of which was to be spent in Ottawa and a part somewhere else, it would be important to have the city proportionately represented. But as the whole expenditure is in Ottawa and for the benefit of Ottawa, I think the ordinary rules of proportion are not necessary to be maintained. I do not think there is any difficulty on the part of the city, and I hope next year we will be able to enlarge the scope of the Bill and give the city further representation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the city acquiesces I have not a word to say. But it occurred to me that the proportion fixed last year must have been based on some principle, and that if you doubled the number of commissioners it would be only fair to do it in the same proportion.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would not be justified in saying the city has acquiesced, because there has been no formal correspondence on the subject. But I have found no objection on the part of the city, and do not anticipate any.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose the money is furnished entirely by the government?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The city does not contribute directly. But there was an understanding between the city and the government as respects the sum of $15,000 per annum which the government were paying into the city funds for certain purposes, and it was agreed that that sum, instead of being paid into the city funds, should be diverted into the fund of this commission, and in that sense it may be said they are contributing. But the whole of the money is paid by the Dominion government.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the chairman have the same rights on this commission as he had on the old? He had two votes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There will be no change in that respect, we have not touched that point at all. I anticipate that with the large number of the commission there will be no difficulty of that nature.

Mr. SPROULE. What proportion is made in the original Bill for changing the commissioners? Do they hold office during pleasure?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The commissioners appointed by the Governor in Council hold office during pleasure, but the commissioner of the city of Ottawa is appointed by the corporation for a term not exceeding three years.

Mr. SPROULE. I expected to be able to verify a statement I made the other night because I have reason to believe it is correct, but the party from whom I expected to get information is not in the city, and therefore I could not see him so as to be able to verify the statement I made, otherwise I would probably do so on this occasion. I think this arrangement will help to tide over the difficulty the commission has experienced in the past. It can be readily seen that were there only four commissioners, one of whom was chairman, and another of the commissioners did not wish to act, or could not act, only two commissioners were really left to do the work. Now, the chairman had two votes, or in case of a tie the chairman had one additional vote and he could give it to either one side or the other, he had a double voting power. At different times it was found the commission was unworkable as constituted under the old law. By the enlargement of the number it may be that difficulty will be largely avoided. But it seems to me that unless that commission do their work more creditably in the future than they have been doing it in the past we ought to take an early opportunity of exercising more supervision over them than we have done up to the present time.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I have heard the suggestion from some source that it would be better to have an odd number of commissioners for reasons which have been mentioned. Possibly the difficulty of a tie may be removed by the increased number, owing to the improbability that all will attend. I do not know about that. But I have heard that suggestion made and I bring it to the attention of the hon. gentleman.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the point may be worthy of consideration another year. I quite anticipate that another session we will have still further legislation on this subject, but at present I have no reason to doubt that the matter will be improved to some extent by the larger number of the commission. In saying that I do not wish to be understood as assenting to all the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has said regarding the work of the commission. I think he has been misinformed—of course he received his information in good faith. My information is that the work of the commission on the whole has been very well done indeed. These gentlemen have given a great deal of time and have rendered very valuable service to the city.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

THE COASTING TRADE OF CANADA.

House in committee on Bill (No. 165) respecting the coasting trade of Canada.—The Minister of Justice.

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). This is a re-enactment of the law as it is now, except that the second paragraph contains a definition of the words 'coasting trade.'

On section 2,

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I desire to move an amendment to this clause, adding the following words after the word 'ship' in the second paragraph :

Provided, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to any foreign-built British ship that has been registered as a British ship prior to the 1st day of December, 1902.

Mr. CHARLTON. I want to ask the hon. minister who has charge of this Bill in regard to the provisions imposing restrictions upon British-built vessels engaging in the coasting trade whether any corresponding restrictions exist in the British navigation laws in regard to Canadian-built vessels.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Why should we introduce this discrimination against ships of British register engaging in the Canadian coasting business when we have for our own tonnage the free use of the British coasting trade in all parts of the Britsh Empire ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. This Bill is applicable not to a British-built ship but to a foreign-built ship registered in England.

Mr. CHARLTON. A British-built vessel is not excluded by it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. Then, in regard to subsection 2 or section 2, I desire to ask the hon. minister whether that does not make a change in the rate of duty hitherto imposed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The rate of duty heretofore imposed was 10 per cent ad valorem on the hull of the vessel, and 25 per cent ad valorem on the hull, rigging, machinery, boiler, furniture and appurtenances of the ship.

Mr. CHARLTON. Having in view the desirability of encouraging the increase of the Canadian marine, I should question very much whether an increase of duty from 10 to 25 per cent on foreign-built vessels that sought admission to Canadian register is a course to be pursued which is likely to be in the interests of the country. It strikes me that 10 per cent on the hull of a vessel for duty is high enough.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The first section contains a definition of the coasting laws, and it is not very important. It is in respect to section 2 that there is a departure. That requires that a foreign-built British ship, to engage in the coasting trade of Canada, shall be obliged to take out a license for which 25 per cent ad valorem of the vessel will be charged.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This will not have an ex post facto effect will it ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, not in regard to any vessel in Canada.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I understand you have an action now going on in the court in which the contention of your department is that a vessel bought in the United States which had got British register and came over here had no right to engage in the coasting business ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That was not quite the question. The question was whether or not a vessel which went to the United States and came in here under the operation of the British Consul's certificate at Chicago was entered to engage in the coasting trade. It was held in the lower court and in the Exchequer Court that our contention was wrong, but fortunately there is such a thing as a Supreme Court in this country, and we succeeded a few days ago in getting a judgment reversing the judgment of the Exchequer Court.

Mr. CHARLTON. The judgment is that foreign-built vessels taking out a consul's certificate for the purpose of being admitted to Canadian register cannot obtain that register without paying.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No. That is the law which we have now without this amendment.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The judgment of the Exchequer Court is reversed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The judgment of the Exchequer Court is reversed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. minister whether there is any imperial sanction required in regard to these proposed changes ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is provided that this Bill shall not come into force until such time as it receives the imperial sanction. The ninth paragraph says :

This Act shall not come into force until His Majesty's pleasure thereon has been signified.

That is in connection with the Merchants' Shipping Act of 1894, section 736.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is His Majesty's pleasure signified through an imperial Act, or would it mean His Majesty's pleasure signified through a Canadian Act of parliament ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The Merchants' Shipping Act of 1894 provides that:

The legislature of a British possession, may, by any Act or ordinance, regulate the coasting trade of that British possession, subject in every case to the following conditions :

(a) The Act or ordinance shall contain a suspending clause providing that the Act or ordinance shall not come into operation until Her Majesty's pleasure thereon has been publicly signified in the British possession in which it has been passed.

It is to meet the provision of the imperial Act that we have inserted section 9 of this Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The question which occurred to me was whether the language used here might mean His Majesty's pleasure signified on the advice of the government of Canada. It is a very proper provision, but I want to be sure that we are expressing it in the way that the hon. minister intended.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. We are adopting the terms of the British Act. I would suggest that we might put the Bill through this stage, and I will consider the matter further before the third reading.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would suggest that it might be made to read that it shall be signified in the manner provided by the imperial statute.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We want to make it plain that it is His Majesty's pleasure as indicated by the imperial government, and not the pleasure of His Majesty's representative.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If I understand the hon. Minister of Justice properly the clause empowers provincial or other governments to impose conditions as to registration ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. No, the legislature of a British possession may, by any Act or ordinance, regulate the coasting trade of that British possession, subject to the condition of the Bill being reserved for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure. That is the English Act. That would not apply to a province. That would only apply to a legislature that has power to deal with maritime matters. The provinces would not have any right to deal with this matter at all—only the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Only the Dominion ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Only the Dominion. When the imperial Act speaks of the legislature of a British province it means a legislature having authority to deal with matters of this sort.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 3,

Mr. CHARLTON. In regard to section 3 provision is made for the confiscation of cargoes the same as if goods were smuggled in the case of a vessel engaged in the coasting trade contrary to the provisions of this Act. The section reads:

3. No goods or passengers shall be carried by water, from one port of Canada to another, except in British ships ; and if any goods or passengers are so carried, as aforesaid, contrary to this Act, the master of the ship or vessel so carrying them shall incur a penalty of four hundred dollars ; and any goods so carried shall be forfeited, as smuggled ; and such ship or vessel may be detained by the collector of customs, at any port or place to which such goods or passengers are brought, until such penalty is paid, or security for the payment thereof given to his satisfaction, and until such goods are delivered up to him, to be dealt with as goods forfeited under the provisions of the Customs Act.

I would like to inquire of the hon. minister as to what the limitation would be as to what would be considered to be the cargo of a vessel. A large part of the commerce of the lakes is carried by means of vessels that are towed by steam barges, and there is also a great deal of commerce in the form of the towing of rafts. I would like to know whether a raft or vessel in tow would be liable to the provisions of this Act and the property confiscated ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I really could not answer off-hand an inquiry of that sort.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is very important to have that matter defined.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). (Translation.) I deem it my duty to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to the difference existing between our legislation respecting the coasting trade and the legislation in force in the United States. Prior to 1898, we had no passenger steamboats at St. John. At that time excursions from Canada to the United States were organized by American companies, and steamboats used to call at St. John and Iberville, at Sabrevois and l'Ile aux Noix and carried passengers to Burlington or Platsburg, without the government having ever interfered. The American coasting laws were then similar to the Canadian laws; but in 1898, a statute was passed by the American Congress, which reads as follows :—

No goods or passengers shall be carried by water, from one port of the United States to another, except in American ships, 'either directly or via a foreign port,' or for any part of the voyage.

About 1900, the people of St. John organized a transportation company, the Richelieu Navigation Company, which undertook to carry passengers and excursionists from the United States to Canada and from Canada to the United States, as had been done so far by American vessels. But the United States government soon interfered, and in the course of the last season a steamboat of the company, the 'Majestic' was seized by the American authorities. The American government claimed the sum of twenty thousand dollars, because the navigation laws in the United States are much more drastic than ours are, the penalty being $20 for each passenger, whereas, under our legislation, the penalty amounts only to $400 in all. As the 'Majestic' was not worth $20,000, the American authorities felt inclined to enter into negotiations, and owing to the good offices of Mr. Myers, of Rouse's Point, the company succeeded in making an arrangement through which it got out of trouble by paying a fine of $200. I think it desirable that our legislation should be amended in the direction of the American law.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Has the Minister of Justice considered whether you have the right to say that one kind of British ship shall enjoy an exclusive privilege and another shall not ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is a very serious question and it was canvassed and discussed before this Bill was submitted. We launched the Bill on the assumption that we were dealing with this matter constitutionally.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is also another consideration about it, which is, that apparently even if a foreign-built ship desired to engage in the coasting trade for only a limited period, nevertheless it would have to pay the full amount of duties.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. It is really a tax on foreign ships coming in.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It is really the imposition of a duty on foreign-built ships brought into Canada for the purpose of doing a coasting trade, even if they should be employed in that trade for only a very limited period.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We impose a tax if they come in as foreign-built ships, but if they go out and get a British register and come back again they defeat the provisions of our customs law.

Bill reported.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Bill is read a third time I desire to move :

That the Bill be referred back to committee with a view of making the following amendment to section 3.

That the provisions of the said clause as reguards the forfeiture of goods shall not apply to rafts or cargoes of vessels in tow of such ships or vessels engaged in coasting in contravention of this Act.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Minister of Justice left the Chamber under the impression that the Bill would get its third reading, but as this is a very important amendment, I would ask that the Bill should stand over until Monday.

Mr. CHARLTON. I spoke to the Minister of Justice and he suggested the amendment, but it is a matter that he would naturally like to look into. Unless that provision is made I think serious injustice will be done by the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

MARITIME STOCK BREEDER'S ASSOCIATION.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 159) to incorporate the Maritime Stock Breeder's Association. He said : This Bill is simply to incorporate a voluntary association which has been in existence for some time in the maritime provinces, and as it covers the three provinces, it could not be incorporated by the legislature of any one province.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any special provision in this Bill beyond the incorporation of these gentlemen ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. No, it is simply to incorporate the association, which heretofore has been purely a voluntary association, and which could not do certain things they wish to do.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Have you a copy of the by-laws of the association ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The by-laws are in existence, and accompanied the Bill when it passed through the Senate. I have not a copy of them here. You can see by the Bill that they can be changed at any time.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again in Committee of Supply.

Winnipeg immigration buildings — isolation hospital (revote), $8,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that we have just received tenders for that building, the lowest being $10,800 in round numbers. In addition to that there will be about $1,000 expended for other purposes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the hon. minister any idea of what the total expenditure is for immigration buildings throughout Canada ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot say off-hand.

Mr. WILSON. I presume that this building will be chiefly for the accommodation of immigrants from Europe ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose so.

Mr. WILSON. If there was a little more attention given to inspecting the immigrants at the frontier, we would not require so much hospital accommodation at Winnipeg. I hope the Act introduced by the Minister of the Interior will be made stronger in the Senate, because I am afraid that as it passed this House it was too weak to do much good.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Of course, this building was asked for by the Department of the Interior. I am only the builder.

Red Deer court house, lock-up, and land office (revote), $5,700.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this whole building expected to cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $8,000—by contract, of course.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How large a town is Red Deer ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. About 400 population. It has three churches and nine stores. Of course this vote has been asked by the Department of Justice. The late Minister of Justice insisted very strongly on every court house in my estimates.

Mr. SPROULE. This building will be used for a land office as well ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is a public building generally, but a court house specially.

Yorkton court house and jail, $4,400.

Mr. SPROULE. Are these all for new works ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, we have $4,000 in the main estimates, and this will finish the work.

Saskatoon immigration building, $1,200.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why do you want a building there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a kind of small shed. Saskatoon is in the Saskatchewan district. There are a great many immigrants, I understand, and before they settle on their farms they have to be lodged for some time. The Department of the Interior has asked for the building.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this located upon a railway line ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it is on the Canadian Pacific Railway line.

Williams Head quarantine station—improvements, repairs, furnishings and fittings, $15,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I thought that what we voted last year was to complete the improvements. There seems to be no end to the expenditure at Williams Head.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have a list of the items on which this money is to be expended. There is electric lighting plant, $5,000; new bath house, $1,000; quarters for saloon passengers, $1,000 ; reshingling, $1,000, and a number of other smaller items. The total cost of that quarantine station is between $60,000 and $70,000, exclusive of the wharf.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this more especially for immigrants ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, there are a great many Japanese and Chinese coming from the Pacific ocean on the Canadian Pacific Railway boats, and they have to be attended to pretty carefully. However, I am only carrying out the instructions of the Department of Agriculture, which has charge of quarantine. I am a builder pure and simple, and do my best to build well.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems pretty elaborate for what is required. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture can explain the reasons for this large expenditure.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. We are constantly obliged to accommodate larger numbers of people. The vessels that come in from the Orient have to be overhauled, and whenever there is any disease found, the whole passenger list has to be put ashore. We have to provide for first and second class and steerage passengers, so that when brought ashore they will be properly accommodated. The requirements have been greater lately in consequence of the fear of the bubonic plague, which has come up within the last year or two.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has there been any trace of bubonic plague in any of the immigrants landing ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. Not so far.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will this finish the expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Quite sure.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite sure for this time. But seriously speaking, this is to complete it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And next year there will be repairs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There will be the ordinary repairs, as there are in my hon. friend's house. The best built houses need some little touching up.

Parliament and departmental buildings, Ottawa, elevator attendants, $9,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the past we had a item in the main estimates of $57,000 for heating and attendants and caretakers. I thought it was better not to mix things as they were. I am taking out this item of $9,000 for attendants from the heating item, with which it has no relation whatever. I am making it a special item. It does not increase the expenditure, but only divides the item.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does this item mean, $9,000 for elevator attendance ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will give the list if my hon. friend wants it. In the parliamentary building there are four elevator attendants at $45 per month, $2,160. East and West blocks, three elevator attendants, $1,694.88. Langevin block, one engineer and firemen, $1,260; six elevator attendants at $45 per month, $3,240. Census building, one elevator attendant, $540. Oil, &c., $105.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How many elevators altogether ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Eleven.

Lighting Dominion public buildings (additional amount), $5,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is rendered necessary by the increased number of buildings. We have to provide the lighting of 226 buildings all over this country.

Rents—Dominion public buildings, $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why is this additional amount necessary ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Because of the number of buildings for which we are obliged to pay rent. This just covers the expenditure. This is for all over Canada.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the total amount paid for rent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The total is $33,500.

Hon. Mr. FISHER.

Gas and electric light, public buildings, Ottawa, including lighting of road and bridges, $3,900.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a permanent addition made necessary especially by the increase of lighting in the Senate Chamber, together with some other items.

Port Colborne public buildings—new heating aparatus, $950.

Mr. BLAIN. What public building have we at Port Colborne ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have a building which is used for both canal and post office purposes.

Winnipeg immigration building—New hot air furnaces with connections, &c., $800.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). You had a vote a few minutes ago for the Winnipeg immigration building ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That was for the office. This is for the immigration building. They are two different things, but together they occupy one piece of land.

Dominion immigrant buildings—repairs, furniture, &c., $500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What buildings are these ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to pay for small repairs and furnishings for buildings all over the country.

Public works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—Nova Scotia—Amagandus Pond—wharf (revote), $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have here a map of Nova Scotia which I will lay on the Table, upon which all the works for which I am asking money are marked.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is Amagandus Pond ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Cape Breton riding.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is any harbour or inlet in Nova Scotia that has escaped the attention of the minister I think he should mark that on his map.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the province of Nova Scotia there are many fishermen who need these works in connection with their calling, a very difficult trade indeed. The visit I paid three years ago convinced me that we could not do too much for these fishermen.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is there any wharf there now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will this work cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have no information upon which to base an exact estimate, but the expenditure will be small.

Mr. JOHNSON (Cape Breton). If the hon. minister will allow me I can give the committee some information as to this place. There is a stretch of coast on the Bras d'Or lakes about fifteen miles in extent, which is thickly populated all along. This wharf will be about the centre, and it is designed to accommodate people all through that district. The people are mainly farmers, but they also do a little fishing.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this for the purpose of enabling them to send their produce to market, or is it in connection with their fishing operations ?

Mr. JOHNSON (Cape Breton). It will serve both purposes. It is a very necessary wharf for landing coal and other supplies that these people require.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. This is on Bras d'Or lake, on East bay ?

Mr. JOHNSON (Cape Breton). Yes.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How far is it from the other new wharf you are getting built ?

Mr. JOHNSON (Cape Breton). Twelve miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. How broad is East bay at that point ?

Mr. JOHNSON (Cape Breton). About ten miles.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. There is another wharf being built right opposite on East bay and one within four miles of the other point.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that the same method is being followed in the supplementary estimates this session as was followed last session—a principle that I regard as very pernicious—the commencement of large numbers of new works that must mean almost unlimited expenditure before they are completed. Take, for example, the items for Nova Scotia in the supplementary estimates. We are told that items for new works are usually put in the supplementary estimates, therefore, I am bound to conclude that a large percentage of these are for the commencement of new works. We have no less than one hundred items for one hundred different works in the province of Nova Scotia, where we propose to spend money to the extent of $182,700. It is true that the individual amounts are not large; but what we complain of is the commencement of so many works without any knowledge of what we shall have to add to them in the future. We do not know to what we are committing ourselves in the commencement of these works. I think we ought to have fuller information to justify us in voting these items. It is not sufficient to say that they will accommodate a few fishermen. We can go all over this country and find cases like that. We want to be sure that this money will accommodate a large number of people in some place where the expenditure will be warranted.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are asking in these estimates for a little over $180,000 for public works. I ask my hon. friend to remember that in Ontario and in Quebec we are proposing to spend a great deal more money on single works than for the whole of Nova Scotia. Each province has its peculiar requirements. The province of Quebec will require large and expensive works. Only yesterday I asked the House for $1,000,000 for that province. On Port Colborne, in Ontario, we are spending nearly half a million dollars. These are large amounts of money. In the maritime provinces there are special requirements. My hon. friend speaks of a few fishermen being accommodated. But I ask him to remember that those few fishermen are carrying on an industry that brings a large amount of benefit to this whole country. There are not only fishermen in the maritime provinces whom we must look after, but there are many other classes of people who deserve recognition and who are doing much to develop trade. My hon. friend is an old parliamentarian and a man of experience; he knows well that often by a small and judicious expenditure of money in a small town you do a great deal to benefit.

Mr. SPROULE. The comparison the hon. gentleman made is not a fair one. He speaks of large expenditures on these large ports. But these ports are the great highways of commerce and accommodate hundreds of thousands of people. These expenditures are made on great arteries of trade where the ports must be made, and where the expenditure is necessarily very large. There is no comparison at all between such expenditures and those in these small places. I do not say we would not be justified in making small expenditures for the purpose of accommodating even a few people; but what I complain of is that we are commencing works and expenditures when we do not know what the end will be.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There are very few places where we have not exact information, though there may be some small places where our information may not be entirely accurate. But we have resident engineers in all the provinces. In Nova Scotia we have Mr. Dodwell and Mr. Milledge, old and able engineers. Those two gentlemen give us all the information we can gather, and it is on their information that we base our estimates.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The number of new works on this list is exceedingly small. In three or four cases out of five these items are for repairs and improvements to existing works, not new works at all. There are also very few cases in which the works are at all expensive. So we are not committing ourselves to any large outlay at all.

Mr. SPROULE. From the statement made by the Minister of Public Works that the items in the supplementary estimates were usually for the commencement of new works, I concluded that the large percentage of these items were for new works.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I said that all new works are in the supplementary estimates, but that does not mean that the supplementary estimates may not contain many items for other than new works.

Mr. SPROULE. I speak from our experience of last year when we endeavoured to get information as to what new works were likely to cost, and we found it very difficult to get any information. What I complain of especially is that we are committing ourselves to commencing a number of new works without any information at all of what it is likely to cost to complete them. The minister says that he is making a small expenditure here and there to accommodate a few fishermen or a few farmers. If the same principle was applied in the province of Ontario you would have four or five public works where you now have only one. But we have never considered it the proper thing to advocate the commencement of such small works for the purpose of accommodating a small number of people in different localities. We have endeavoured to make expenditures on large harbours and large ports where a great deal of trade is done and where large portions of the country are benefited. But in the maritime provinces, whether it is that your trade is not directed in large arteries or whether your bays and creeks and inlets are more numerous, you seem to have a larger number of works down there that although they do not appear to be expensive individually, still in the aggregate it amounts to considerable.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In this case the expenditure, to complete the work, from the information which I have from my officers, will not be over $3,000. In 1895, even before we took office, representations were made to the department by the people there that their fire wood supply had given out, that they were obliged to buy coal, and that they had no wharf. We could not do the work until this day, as there were so many other demands upon us. It seems to me to be a very reasonable expenditure.

Mr. McISAAC. I wish to remind the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that while he is condemning many of these items for repairs, he is criticising the administration of his own friends when they were in power. I venture to say that 75 per cent of the items for public works in Nova Scotia are for repairs to works commenced by the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SPROULE. I made no reference to works of repairs, but I did make reference to cases in which new works were commenced without knowing what the total cost would be.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We know in every case.

Mr. McISAAC. I know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sproule) wants to qualify his utterances. He has spoken half a dozen times within the last hour and it is necessary for him to qualify what he has said. He has made a general onslaught upon all of these items. I would say to him that in my own county there are some five items for the repair of old works, and there is not one item for a new work, and that the friends of hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for these old works, as they were initiated during their administration. Every item in the estimates for the county of Antigonish has been put in on the recommendation of the resident engineer, Mr. Milledge. The hon. gentleman is condemning his own friends while he is condemning these expenditures and trying to make capital out of the effort to create the impression in the country that this government are spending money recklessly in the province of Nova Scotia, for the convenience, as he says, of a few fishermen in the remote parts of the province. If he pursues that line of policy in regard to Nova Scotia, as he has for several years, he simply provokes us to call to mind the fact that if there is anything wrong in it at all it is in most cases in repairing works undertaken by the hon. gentleman's own friends while they were in power. I do not condemn any of these expenditures, because I think they were right, but if the hon. gentleman forces us to institute a comparison between the works undertaken by the government of the present time and those undertaken in the past by his own friends, I am quite willing to make that comparison and to show that the works undertaken since the present government came into power have been more useful than those undertaken when the party of the hon. gentleman were in power.

Mr. SPROULE. I am very sorry that I have ruffled the even temper of my hon. friend (Mr. McIsaac) in discharging my duty, but I may tell him that I will endeavour to discharge my duty in the future, notwithstanding the fact that he may get a little out of humour.

Bailey's Brook—breakwater wharf, $2,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a new work, the cost of which will be about $5,000. Tenders will be called for the work. It is in Pictou county.

Bear river—Removal of obstructions and renewals and repairs to dropping piers, $1,700.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What piers are these ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is a pier that is sometimes known as the mooring pier. It is a pier at the entrance to the river, and ships have to moor to it before they can get up the river.

Big pond—wharf (revote, $2,500), $3,100.

Mr. SPROULE. Will the hon. minister, when we reach an item for new work, let us know, and also say how much the work will cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is one of the new works. The total cost of the work is estimated to be $3,100.

Cape Cove—restoration of breakwater, $3,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is Cape Cove ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Digby county.

Charlesville—breakwater, $2,700.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. A new work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is this place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Shelburne and Queen's.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Near the boundary of Yarmouth county.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $2,700 is the whole cost of the work.

Cheverie—breakwater extension (revote), $3,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is an old work.

Church Point—repairs to breakwater, $1,800.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An old work.

Comeaus Hill breakwater—repairs, &c., $600.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An old work.

Cribbon's Point—repairs to wharf, &c., $1,350.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is Cribbon's Point ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Antigonish.

At six o'clock, committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Drum Head breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. BELL. What county is that in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete. The total cost is $7,000.

Mr. BELL. What county is it in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Guysborough.

Glace Bay—harbour improvements, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. How much will that cost ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was formerly a coal mine at Glace Bay, but after it was purchased by the new company they ceased shipping owing to lack of water. Since then quite a large town has grown around that place and they are now desirous of having wharf accommodation.

Mr. SPROULE. What will it cost to complete ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is one of these works on which we may spend much or may spend little. I suppose that for $15,000 or $20,000 we can give them fair accommodation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the nature of the improvement ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a breakwater.

Mr. SPROULE. What will the length of this breakwater be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will build about 250 feet of breakwater for this amount.

Mr. SPROULE. Will it be let by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Grand river—To open channel, $2,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Richmond.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is this open channel ?

Mr. MATHESON. The present entrance is in a rocky place and it is not straight, and we want to have it opened where there is deep water outside so that the fishermen can go in and out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. And for lumber trade, I understand.

Lunenburg—dredging, $5,000.

Mr. KAULBACH. I hope the hon. minister will expend that sum this year.

Mr. FRASER. Strike it out.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, no, no, no.

Harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia—Porter's lake—completion of outlet, $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the position of that work at present ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is now going on. It has been going on for the last two years, and this is to complete it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, I have not been on the spot, but I have never heard of much being done at Porter's lake except just before an election.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That was the old way.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It seems to be the new way. I think that the work was commenced by the present administration. How much is the total appropriation for it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The amount that will have been spent when this additional amount is expended will be $16,700.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much has been expended already ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $14,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Was that expended by tender or otherwise ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By day labour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Why was the work not done by tender ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have had to spend only a small amount at a time. The work is being carried out very successfully.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I know that at one time, in the latter part of the year 1900, the condition precedent to getting any work at Porter's lake was a promise that votes would be cast for the Liberal candidate, as I was informed in many quarters. Is that what the hon. gentleman refers to, when he says that the work is being carried out very successfully ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As the hon. gentleman is here, it is evident that the work was not carried out successfully in every direction. However, I do not complain.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under the circumstances, I suppose I ought not to complain either.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Then, let us have the vote.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). When does the hon. gentleman expect the work will be completed ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This fall.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The object of the work, as I recollect, was to preserve the public highway. That was one of the incidental objects, was it not ?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer explains that it was to open a channel into a kind of harbour of refuge for fishermen.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Porter's lake is a navigable water, and by opening this channel, you enable small vessels to go into the lake. It will also have the effect of preventing a flooding of the whole district. The protection of the highway will be only an incident of the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What size of vessels will the channel admit ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think boats drawing about 7 feet.

Harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia—Port La-Tour—addition to breakwater, $4,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the position of that work ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This work was the subject of a discussion on a previous day. It is a work on which $4,000 or $5,000 has been expended thus far. This vote will extend the breakwater a considerable distance. I think the engineers estimate that it will take $15,000 or $17,000 to carry it out to its full length.

Harbours and rivers, Nova Scotia—Round Bay—beach protection, $2,500.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What does this beach protection mean ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This is a case in which a small amount was expended on a work and storms destroyed it. The engineer is now proposing a different treatment, costing a little more money. The beach being damaged and broken away, the inside water, which is a harbour for small boats, is destroyed ; and the beach has to be protected from storms.

Windsor harbour—Shear Dams training dykes, and deepening river Avon, $700.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the object of this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is intended to empty the harbour of large quantities of mud which accumulate in the harbour. In the Avon river the tide runs as high as fifty feet and carries a large quantity of mud, and we have built these shear dams to carry off the mud.

Mr. BELL. How is it doing.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Perhaps not as well as the engineer anticipates, but I am not at all much disappointed as the engineer. I was there when the work was on and never thought it would clear the harbour, but it has had a good effect.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When the new Avon bridge was constructed, it is claimed that owing to the different method of construction the currents were changed, and deposits of mud were thrown towards the wharfs, and the engineers are trying to send these deposits out by shear dams and training dykes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Before leaving the Nova Scotia estimates I would draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the fact that there is nothing for New Harbour. I am not complaining about that, but I desire to apologize to the hon. member for Guysborough. On the last occasion on which this harbour was referred to, I made the statement that not even the hon. member knew where the harbour was. My hon. friend from Guysborough drew my attention to the fact that he actually did know where it was, and I desire to withdraw the statement I made.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. New Harbour has been found and improved and is now happy.

Mr. FRASER. I thank the hon. gentleman for admitting that he made the statement without knowledge and consenting to withdraw it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On the particular occasion referred to when we could not find New Harbour we could not find the hon. member for Guysborough either. Messengers were vainly sent out to bring him in for the purpose of locating the harbour, and at eleven o'clock at night he was discovered and the harbour was located.

Mr. FRASER. The hon. member for Halifax was under the delusion that there was no such place, and I regret that he had not attended better to his geography or he would not have made the mistake he did.

Mr. HENDERSON. My hon. friend was in good company for there were four other members from that province besides himself who could not find the spot.

Brae breakwater, Prince Edward Island—strengthening and repairing works, $500.

Mr. HACKETT. What work is being done there ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that we are strengthening and repairing the work. There are a few piles to be driven so as to make the work more solid and secure.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. gentleman intend extending it. It is of no great value unless extended out further.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not intend to extend it now.

Chapel Point pier, Prince Edward Island—repairs, $1,100.

Mr. HACKETT. Where is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In King's county.

Lower Montague, Prince Edward Island—Atkins wharf, $3,200.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This was a work that formerly belonged to the provincial government. Petitions were sent in asking us to build a new wharf and the department made up their minds to acquire it.

Tignish harbour, Prince Edward Island—rebuilding northern breakwater, $1,450.

Mr. HACKETT. Is this for new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to build the northern part of the breakwater.

Mr. HACKETT. How do you propose strengthening the pier.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The old rotten timber will have to be removed and new timber put in its place.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. minister intend calling for tenders.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. decidedly not, we will do it by days work.

Public works—chargeable to income—harbours and rivers—New Brunswick—Anderson's Hollow—improvements and repairs to wharf, $6,500.

Mr. FOWLER. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do at this place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This vote is applied for to make provision for repairing the present pier, the estimated cost of which is $2,500, and also putting in a groin to overcome an accumulation of sand and gravel, estimated to cost $4,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the work be done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The repairs cannot be done by contract.

Mr. FOWLER. But the extension can be.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot make any pledge, if Mr. Shewen, the local engineer, tells me that it is better to do it by contract, it will be done in that way.

Campbelltown wharf (revote), $8,500.

Mr. FOWLER. This is a revote—no money has been spent, I suppose ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No money has been spent so far.

Campobello (Wilson's beach)—repairs to and part reconstruction of breakwater, $4,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Was any money expended on this last year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, $7,400, in round figures, was spent last year. This is the work for which we asked for tenders, but, receiving none, had to proceed to do the work by days' labour.

Mr. FOWLER. How much is it supposed to cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This item will complete the work.

Cape Tormentine—creosoted timber cribwork, $10,000.

Mr. HACKETT. Will that work be done this summer ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The work is going on now.

Mr. HACKETT. Does the hon. minister intend to do the dredging there that he spoke about ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I think the dredge is there now; if not, it will be there in a short time. I have instructed the dredge to go there as soon as the work at Digby is done, it will then go to Tormentine.

Mr. HACKETT. Is this under contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it cannot be done by contract, as the work is in the form of repairs.

Mr. WILMOT. Where is the creosoting done ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is done in the United States, but in the supplementary estimates I have a vote for the establishing of a plant.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the cost of this work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is one of the works on which we can spend much or we can spend less. The cribwork was first built with native timber, not creosoted. The wood there is very bad, and it was eaten away in three or four years. In fact, the chief engineer tells me the work was not finished before it was eaten away.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will this $10,000 cover the cost of the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). How much will the cost be ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. As I say, we can spend much or we can spend less. If we were to undertake to repair the whole work, it would cost in the neighbourhood of $100,000. This is a very large work and cost, if my memory serves me, in the neighbourhood of $500,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do I understand that the timber, not having been creosoted, has been eaten by the worms ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, it was eaten away by the worms before the work was completed.

Mr. WILMOT. The hon. minister says he intends to have a creosoting plant. Where will it be located ?

Mr. FOWLER.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot tell at present—somewhere in the maritime provinces.

Great Salmon river—Groin and breakwater combined, $4,300.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that Great Salmon river on the Bay of Fundy coast ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it to be built by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Has the contract been let ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not yet.

Little Salmon river beach protection works, $800.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that Little Salmon river on the Bay of Fundy coast also ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Partridge Island—repairs to eastern pier, $1,200.

Mr. WILMOT. Is it proposed by the government to go on with the dredging works at the entrance to the harbour ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have no dredge available for that large work. We might find a dredge, but the cost of the work with the dredges now available is so high that the government has decided to postpone the dredging of St. John harbour until the new dredge, which is now under construction, is completed.

Mr. WILMOT. Where is it being built ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the government shipyard at Sorel.

Mr. FOWLER. Would not the latest-built dredge, the one turned out at Toronto, do the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That would not be available as a sea-going dredge; it is for the St. Lawrence channel.

River St. John—wharf at Oromocto, $5,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Is that a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. WILMOT. Has the minister secured a site for the wharf ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have not a site yet, but we are preparing to buy one. The plans are ready for the work, and tenders will be asked for as soon as we have a site.

Mr. WILMOT. I believe it was stated some time ago that $6,500 would be appropriated for the work.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have $1,500 in the main estimates.

Wharfs on tidal waters on the St. John river and tributaries, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Could the hon. gentleman tell me what wharfs there are in King's county ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Jenkin's wharf, Oak Point wharf, Belyea's Cove wharf and Rothesay wharf.

Mr. WILMOT. When will tenders be called for Oromocto ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There will be no delay.

Mr. WILMOT. When will a dredge suitable for St. John harbour be sent ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By the opening of next season, I hope.

Batiscan river—To continue the dredging of a channel at outlet of river, $10,000.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been spent on that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This will complete the work, which will have amounted to $20,000. We have no dredge of our own suitable for that work, and have had to hire a dredge, for which we pay $8 an hour.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Has the minister called for any offers from different people to do this work, or does he make a contract with some individual ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We do not always call for tenders. We give $8 an hour in this case, provided the dredge does 600 yards a day, and when the dredge does not do that much, we deduct the difference. The dredging costs us 30½ cents a yard. It is the cheapest way we can do the work. Next year I think we will be able to dispense with all these outside dredges.

Mr. SPROULE. How is this work supervised ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Not only have we got local inspectors, but we have district engineers who oversee the work.

Mr. SPROULE. I have been told that there are places where the overseer goes around town while the dredging is going on. Who keeps account of what work is being done ? I am credibly informed that there are many instances where there is no overseer at all, and the account is kept by the owner of the dredge himself.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I would be surprised to get evidence of that state of affairs. As a rule, I am prepared to say that our overseers are well chosen.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the local inspector in charge of this work a man of experience ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer informs me that this man has been with us two years and is a very able man.

Crane Island, south side, heavy repairs to wharf, $3,500.

Mr. FOWLER. Where is Crane Island ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the St. Lawrence, below Quebec.

Cross Point—isolated landing pier (revote), $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this contract work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the meaning of an isolated landing pier ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. An isolated pier means a block constructed which is not connected with the shore.

Mr. SPROULE. It stands out from the shore ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so. When we find that it will be too expensive to build from the shore we build an isolated block.

Maria—isolated block, $12,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). As this is a pretty large item the hon. minister had better explain it.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We had $12,000 in the estimates last year. We asked for tenders and the lowest tender that came in was $24,000. Maria is one of the most important parishes on the Baie de Chaleur. There was no wharf at that place. The nearest wharf was Carleton on one side and New Carlisle on the other. It was found to be too expensive to build a wharf on the shore. Then, we made up our minds to prepare plans for an isolated block. There are regular lines of steamers navigating in those waters. It is to enable these steamers and the schooners which call there to load and unload that we are building that block. This will complete the work, and it is being done by tender and contract.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not quite understand what you mean by an isolated block. It means, I presume, that the wharf stands away from the shore ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Quite so.

Mr. FOWLER. Then how do you get to the shore—by small boats ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By boat. We have several of these in the St. Lawrence.

Magdalen Island—breakwaters, additional, $14,300.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the total expenditure ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That will complete the work. The total expenditure, this item included, will be $32,000. Plans were prepared for a more expensive work. I visited the work, myself, with the chief engineer, and we reduced the plans to a moderate sum, three years ago.

Pointe Fortune—wharf, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is a new work in this way, that there is an old work and we will include a new work in it.

Mr. FOWLER. Does this complete it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it will be a kind of repair work.

Point St. Pierre—breakwater, $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. Is this new ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, by contract. We have already a vote of $5,000.

Mr. FOWLER. That will be $10,000 altogether ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Will that complete it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What will be the total cost ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. $14,000 is the estimate.

Mr. FOWLER. Is the work let by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In the county of Gaspé. There are about 200 fishing schooners visiting that place. It is one of the most important points in the county of Gaspé from the fisherman's standpoint, and there is also considerable local trade. They have no railway in that part of the country.

Riviere aux Renards—pier, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. By contract.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. In Gaspé also, on the north shore.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this a new work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is the continuation of an old work.

Mr. FOWLER. How much has been expended already ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Six thousand dollars has been spent already and this will complete the work; by contract.

Mr. GAUVREAU. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, as a section of the county which I represent here is concerned in this vote, I think it my duty to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to the harbour of Rivière du Loup, which is daily increasing in importance. The Fraser firm, of New Brunswick, have been building shanties and saw-mills on the shores of Lake Temiscouata, and they are exporting annually to Great Britain large quantities of lumber. That lumber has to be shipped from Rivière du Loup. But unfortunately, there is no accommodation on the wharf and their ships have to load and unload by small boats away from the shore. Of course that entails a considerable loss of time, which would be remedied if we had, at Rivière du Loup, a wharf in deep water. I know that surveys and plans have been made by the engineer, Mr. Auclair. I should be very glad if the hon. minister would kindly communicate those plans to the Chamber of Commerce of Fraserville, as also the report of Mr. Fraser, the engineer of the Public Works Department, with all the plans, maps, specifications and cost of the works, in connection with the building of a wharf at Rivière du Loup.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). (Translation.) My hon. friend has just called attention to conditions which are not peculiar to Rivière du Loup, but which exist in all the places along the St. Lawrence where lumber cargoes are handled. The ships have to load and unload by means of small boats. I should feel most happy were I able to build wharfs everywhere, but my hon. friend will easily understand that such works involve a large expenditure of money. I cannot commit myself to any such policy for the future, until I have all the desirable data and information before me.

I shall be very happy to communicate to the Chamber of Commerce of Fraserville the report of the engineer who has made the survey referred to.

St. Francois—breakwater, wharf on the south shore of the Island of Orleans, $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will this complete the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I do not think it will cost more than that. The work will be of great local importance, and it is necessary also in view of the dredging operations we will carry on opposite Crane Island.

Mr. MORIN. What use will the minister have for a wharf on the south side of the island ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I have just said that St. Francois is a very important parish and we are going to dredge at Crane Island, which is a very stormy place, and our dredges and scows will be obliged to find shelter there.

Mr. MORIN. On the north shore there has been a wharf for a great many years and you never see any kind of boat stop there, and on the south shore there is no line of steamers at all. I have passed that place time and again and there is no traffic there. Did I understand the minister to say that Crane Island was opposite that place ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No. At Crane Island there is no shelter, and our dredges and scows would be obliged to come here in a storm.

Mr. MORIN. I do not find any fault with building wharfs where they are necessary, but it is not necessary here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has not given this question his best attention. He must know that there is no line of steamers on the north side of the island, and the fact is that the wharf built there by the Conservative government was badly located and was of no use at all. There is a line of steamers visiting St. Laurent and St. Jean, and when this wharf is completed these steamers will call at St. Francois.

Mr. MORIN. I cannot agree with the minister on that point, because the Richelieu and Ontario Company's steamer that leaves Quebec goes to Bay St. Paul on the north shore.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Always on the south shore. The hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MORIN. He is not.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is well known that a steamer never goes by the north channel.

Mr. MORIN. The Richelieu boats go by the north channel.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Never.

Mr. MORIN. Well, that just shows you don't know what you are talking about neither. There is a time to joke, but there is no time to say things that are not so. When I took the boat at Quebec for the Saguenay, I knew where I was going.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The hon. gentleman went by the south channel and not by the north channel.

Mr. MORIN. I said that the Richelieu Navigation boats go by the south channel, and the minister said that this was not the case. I say it is the case. I also went from Quebec to Bay St. Paul on the north channel, on a boat called 'The Brother.'

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, that is a small boat.

Mr. MORIN. It makes no difference how big it is or how little. I say I went on the north channel and the south channel too, and you cannot fool me on that. I am not here to brag like the Minister of Justice, who thinks that he knows better than I do things I have seen myself. Well, it is for him to say it and for me not to believe him.

St. Irénée wharf—construction of head block, $10,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the necessity for this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. St. Irenee is one of those places which is developing a large summer trade indeed, and this is to accommodate that trade.

Mr. FOWLER. Will it be done by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will this complete ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

St. John de Chaillons—improvement of harbour, $2,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the minister explain this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That is a mistake. We have dredged there to the solid rock bottom, and now that we have reached the hard material it would require a much larger sum to go on with the work. This item cannot be used this year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Then why leave it in ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It cannot be used this year, and I move that it be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

St. Laurent wharf—Island of Orleans, $4,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is this for ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. St. Laurent is one of the most important parishes on the Island of Orleans, and this is to extend the work already there.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With respect to all these wharfs in the maritime provinces, as well as in Quebec and Ontario, is there any system of wharfages, or is the use of these wharfs given free to the public ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. When we have completed a wharf we transfer it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and it then becomes subject to the general law. We have nothing more to do with it.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the general law ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I really cannot explain it as it is not in my department.

Mr. SPROULE. The general law, as I understand it, is simply this, that the town or municipality in which the wharf is situated passes a by-law regulating the wharfage dues, and that is ratified here. I ought to know this because I have had two or three Bills for that purpose put through the House. Where private individuals build wharfs they usually charge such wharfage dues as they see fit, and these are sometimes rather onerous on shipping. I think there should be some kind of supervision over all these charges by the government.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I only referred to wharfs built by us. The owners of private wharfs generally exact what charges they like, but there is a general tariff that applies everywhere to wharfs built out of the public exchequer.

Mr. SPROULE. Take the wharf at Thornbury. That was built out of the public exchequer aided by the municipality, but the municipality passed a by-law regulating the wharfage dues and this was ratified and made legal here.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I understand that the wharf at Thornbury has been constructed by the municipality and the federal government jointly. It is an exceptional case, but I speak of wharfs which are constructed altogether out of the public exchequer. When they are completed we transfer them to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SPROULE. There is scarcely one completed entirely out of the public exchequer. At Collingwood, Meaford and Owen Sound there are wharfs constructed in the same way, the municipality giving a portion of the cost and the government the rest.

Mr. FOWLER. Are there charges on all these wharfs ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Do these charges go in to the public exchequer ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What amount of wharfage charges was collected during the past year ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. That I cannot say. The Department of Marine and Fisheries has charge of that part of the work.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Where is the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I suppose he is busy somewhere in the public interest.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Can the Minister of Finance tell us ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was between $10,000 and $11,000 received last year from all over the Dominion. They vary. Some of the wharfs yield quite a respectable sum.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Are they collected with regularity.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am not prepared to answer that question. The Department of Marine looks after the collections.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The wharfingers get 25 per cent on what they collect and have to make the small repairs, between $10 and $15 a year.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The reason I inquire is because I have received communications now and then, stating that the people in charge of these wharfs have not remitted to the government anything on account of the wharfage dues they have received for a long time. I prefer to ask for that information in this general way rather than to take up the time of the government by moving for a special return, but we ought to have some information as to the system adopted, and find out whether or not these statements I have referred to are really founded in fact.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If my hon. friend will send me the names of the wharfs, I will have an inquiry made. He need not necessarily give the names of the complainants.

Mr. SPROULE. The wharfs to which the government appoint wharfingers only represent very few of the total number. As a general thing the municipalities receive assistance from the government to build the wharfs and then get the revenue themselves, and are supposed to keep them in repair, but may put the revenue into the municipal exchequer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In my short experience, I have come across some cases of the kind referred to by the hon. member for Halifax, and we are making a general review of the whole situation. Twenty-five per cent is allowed the wharfingers, and in some cases where the revenues are very small, they are allowed as high as 50 per cent. In others where the revenue is large, they are paid a salary. I am having the whole matter looked into and will be able to give the House full information next session.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Considering the enormous expenditure on these wharfs, the sum of $10,000 or $12,000 seems to be a very small amount to be received from them in the shape of revenue. Some general system should be devised for the collection of the wharfage dues. A rigid system should be applied to all wharfs alike, because otherwise one part of the country may be getting the benefit of these wharfs for nothing, while in another part the wharfage dues may be exacted regularly and systematically. This is a matter which demands the immediate attention of the hon. Minister of Marine in order that a thorough system be applied all over the country without any discrimination in favour of any particular locality.

Amherstburg, Ontario—dredging (revote), $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this by contract or day's work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We will try to do it with our own dredge. There are boulders to be removed there also.

Big Bay, Ontario (North Keppel), wharf—repairs, $500.

Mr. SPROULE. What wharf is that ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is in North Grey. It is to replank the wharf, and this sum is applied for by the resident engineer.

Mr. SPROULE. That is not the one struck out in the main estimates ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, it is not the same work at all.

Burke's Falls' Magnetawan river—wharf, $4,500.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will this be let by contract ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Burlington channel—repairs to piers—To complete works under contracts (additional revote, $20,000), $50,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this intended to complete it ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, this will complete the work now under contract.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the work ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. My hon. friend knows that the port of Hamilton is becoming more and more important on account of the large smelting operations there. The port is composed of a large bay, the entrance to which has been made by two long jetties. Unfortunately, they were built in wood and have to be repaired without delay. We are simply rebuilding the principal structure.

Mr. SPROULE. In wood again ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, I was afraid to ask parliament for concrete. When I started the work years ago, I was younger than now, and was afraid to ask parliament for the larger amount which would have been required if the work had been done with concrete. Moreover, the foundations of most of those works in Ontario have been laid in the quicksand and without the care that we take now. They have foundations only twelve feet deep. In other words, we can not dredge near the jetty without endangering it. We are obliged to make a tunnel in the middle of the stream.

Mr. SPROULE. Is this contract let ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes, and the work is going on.

Callendar—repairs to wharf, $1,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Where is this ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. On Lake Nipissing, at the terminus of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Cobourg—repairs to piers and dredging, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is to complete the work.

Collingwood—dredging, $45,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What condition is Collingwood harbour in now ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I gave an explanation on the main estimates, but I do not mind stating the case again. The channel we have dredged into the harbour is now 110 feet wide and 20 feet deep. We are deepening it to 200 feet, so as to allow the large ships that are seeking that harbour to come in and out without danger.

Mr. SPROULE. Will you make the channel 200 feet wide for the whole length ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, only the entrance where there is danger of the waves throwing the boats against the sides of the dredged channel.

Mr. SPROULE. When does the hon. minister expect this money to be used up ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We expect this to be spent during the next fiscal year. I may say that Mr. Boone, who is carrying on that work, is well equipped. It has been carried on with great success, and the result, my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) will agree, is very satisfactory. Large shipyards are being built at Collingwood, new lumbering operations, and so on. That little town is growing up pretty fast.

Mr. SPROULE. The work is a very important one, as the place is going to be a very important place. Because, as the hon. minister says, new works are springing up. The largest meat curing establishment in the Dominion is there, and shipyards, saw mills, iron works and other large establishments are being provided. The place is growing very rapidly, and the work carried on by the government has been much needed. Has the hon. minister taken into consideration the application of the people of Collingwood with regard to their dry dock? Their dry dock was built many years ago, but it is now too short and there is not enough depth of water to accommodate the large ships that use the harbour. I understand that the government give two per cent on the cost of dry docks built, but the people of Collingwood feel that more is required. Dry docks are very costly, and they are not a very paying property. I think the government should give more assistance to provide a dry dock at Collingwood. Has the minister considered the question, and has he decided to do anything?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. There is a law on the statute-book to the effect that when any private corporation is desirous of building a graving dock they may submit their plans to the government, and when these plans are approved they may enter into a contract with the government, and then they become entitled to a guarantee of two per cent for twenty years. Mr. Long, from Collingwood, or rather the Northern Navigation Company, applied for that subsidy, which, after I had examined the plans, I recommended my colleagues to grant. That is the present position of the question. I am confident that with the two per cent subsidy the company will be able to go on, although I am not quite sure of it. I fully recognize the great importance of it or rather the great necessity of having a grain dock on the lakes capable of accommodating the large boats navigating those waters. So far as I am concerned, and if there is a hitch in the matter, I shall be glad to do all I can to overcome it.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the government would not be doing too much if they double the guarantee and made it four per cent, for it is very difficult to get men who have money to put it into such enterprise. Therefore, a great many boats are now compelled to go away for repairs, because they cannot get into the dry dock we have. With regard to the channel that has been made, I am told that it is answering the purpose very well, and the people feel extremely grateful for it. Towards the close of navigation last year they began to get in with large boats, loaded with grain, and I have no doubt that there will be an important trade in that line to Collingwood and also to Meaford—Meaford especially because of the important work done there, and because they have a good elevator at Meaford. They have an elevator at Collingwood also, but not quite so good as that at Meaford. In both places they have been able to take advantage of their harbour during the last year owing to the expenditure made—a wise expenditure, I quite believe. There will be a very important trade done there, not only during the present season but for the future also we hope.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The sooner the people of this country realize the great benefits to be derived from the improvements and equipment of their harbour the better. Unfortunately, perhaps, there are not enough public men who give their attention to that important question. I think that every harbour on Georgian Bay should be fully equipped, and I have no doubt that when that is done there will be trade for them all.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sure there will.

Georgian bay—Pointe au Baril route—improvement of the Devil's Elbow channel between Parry Sound and Killarney, $3,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. What is the nature of the work to be done there? Is it to be cribwork, blasting or dredging?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Blasting and the removal of shoals. I do not think it is necessary to have any cribwork there. This is a most dangerous part, and I am carrying out the work at the request of the Navigation Company.

Goderich harbour works, $6,000.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the hon. minister doing there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are completing the repairs to the jetties in the inside of the harbour. Goderich is also getting a large traffic, I am glad to say, and the money spent there for repairs has been well invested.

Mr. SPROULE. With Dan McGillicuddy as superintendent.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Well, he was the lowest tenderer.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not objecting.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I am glad that the hon. gentleman is satisfied.

Hilton, St. Joseph's island—wharf repairs, $1,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that a private dock?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. No, a public dock.

Huntsville—new wharf, $3,500.

Mr. McCORMICK. Does the hon. gentleman intend to do that work by contract?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Midland harbour—wharf, $10,000.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. This is a work to accommodate the public generally. The citizens without distinction of party have applied to me and I could not resist their request. Midland is a thriving town and the corporation is going to give us the site. There is only one site on which to build the wharf now and the town has bought it and offered it to us.

Orillia—new wharf, $3,000.

Mr. SPROULE. This is where the ladies attacked the hon. gentleman with their seductive smiles and he succumbed to them.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I stand ready to be captured again.

Mr. McCORMICK. I would like the minister to come up to Parry Sound, a town which he has neglected very badly. Perhaps the ladies there will be able to induce him to build a dock.

Mr. SPROULE. What is the new work to be done at Orillia?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. It is an ordinary wharf, costing $5,000 or $6,000. The work is let by contract.

Penetanguishene—dredging, $10,000.

Mr. SPROULE. Have you any dredges on Georgian Bay?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Unfortunately we have no dredges there.

Mr. SPROULE. I spoke last night with reference to a gentleman who is writing to me that he has a splendid suction dredge that he would be glad to bring out any time the Minister of Public Works required it. It is only in the case of the government having no dredges of their own available that I would recommend bringing in American dredges. Rather than have these places suffer for want of such a work, I think the minister would be quite justified in hiring a dredge from any source.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may say that a suction dredge would not do in this place. They can only work in soft material and at Penetanguishene it is hard material.

Port Elgin—repairs to landing pier, extension of breakwater and dredging, $5,000.

Mr. SPROULE. $5,000 will not go far here. What kind of work are you doing there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. The chief engineer is afraid that this amount of money will not be sufficient to accomplish the objects both of completing the pier and doing the dredging. It will complete the pier, and we will have to draw on our general vote to carry out the dredging. It is intended to let the contract to build the pier.

South Nation river—improvements at the pitch off, $1,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I understand this is for the purpose of preventing the flooding of the land. The question has been raised whether, if the government adopts the principle of doing this kind of work here, other places in the country will not apply for the same assistance. I think the government will have other applications.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I grant it is a bad place in which to do this kind of work. There are one or two items that are remnants of past days. I admit that the principle is wrong. But this river is navigable, at least I was drawn into this work on the representation that it is a navigable river. But this will not appear again.

Lake St. Francis outlet—construction of guide pier and dredging (revote, $1,200), $6,500.

Mr. SPROULE. Is that where the St. Francis river empties into the lake?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Winnipegosis—dredging channel at mouth of the Mossy river, $4,500.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not see any item here, but I would like to ask the hon. minister what he is doing now with the St. Andrews' rapids. Is the work going on there?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have an item in the main estimates, but I am sorry to say that the contractors are not going on very speedily with the work. I instructed my officers a few days ago to give notice to the Messrs. Kelly Bros. that they would have to go on with the work or the contract would be taken off their hands.

British Columbia — Anderson and Kennedy lakes—clearing outlets, $3,500.

Mr. EARLE. How much of this is being spent at the outlet of Kennedy lake?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We have spent, up to 31st December last year, $5,000 in round numbers.

Mr. EARLE. Will that complete the work?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Mr. EARLE. On both lakes?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Yes.

Hardy bay—wharf, $2,000.

Mr. EARLE. Is this the amount that the hon. minister said would surprise me when I would see the supplementary estimates for British Columbia ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I hope I did not say that this would surprise the hon. gentleman.

Mr. EARLE. I am surprised at the smallness of the amount, because on the west coast of Vancouver island there are no wharfs and there should be some expenditures on that part of the coast. The steamers running on the west coast of Vancouver island have, with one or two exceptions, where there are private wharfs, to land their passengers by small boats. More money can be spent with a greater advantage to the settlers at various points on the west coast of Vancouver island.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. All I can say is that this is only a beginning. My hon. friend (Mr. Earle) has been a long time in parliament. If he had applied in past days, I have no doubt he would have received more than has been spent there. This is the first demand for wharfs that has come to me. It is a beginning. I do not want to encourage anybody to come, but if there are legitimate requests from British Columbia they will be treated just as liberally as I always endeavour to treat legitimate demands that come to me.

Mr. EARLE. Would the hon. minister consider a request coming from me as a legitimate request ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I will be only too glad to consider in the most friendly and favourable manner any demand that may come from my hon. friend who is an old and respected member of this House.

Mr. EARLE. We will see another session. There are several places where the hon. minister can spend money to good advantage.

Some resolutions reported.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What business on Monday ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There are one or two Bills yet standing on the Order paper ; we will take these and then proceed with Supply.

On motion of the Minister of Finance, House adjourned at 10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, May 12, 1902.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. T. B. FLINT (Yarmouth) moved that the fourth report of the Joint Committee on the Printing of Parliament be concurred in.

Mr. CHARLES MARCIL (Bonaventure) moved in amendment :

That after the words 'Civil Service Act' at the close of the third paragraph of the report, the following words be added : 'And that the salaries of the said officials be continued as at present, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the aforesaid Act.'

He said : I am requested by the chairman of the Printing Committee, who is unavoidably absent, to explain that the object of this amendment is to cover the case of three clerks who are at present employed in the Printing Bureau, in the distribution office, and who have been up to this time under the control of the committee. By the report of the committee, they are to be placed under the control of the Secretary of State, and to come within the purview of the Civil Service Act. The amendment is to meet any objections which may be raised by the Auditor General to the payment of their salaries.

Mr. A. A. C. LaRIVIERE (Provencher). Do I understand that by this resolution these officers will be debarred from any increase if they were held to be otherwise entitled to it ? I can understand the object or the motion in providing that the salaries shall not be decreased, but I do not think the officers should be deprived of their title to an increase if the committee should recommend it and the government grant it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding). I think the object of this resolution is to assure these officers of their present salaries in the transfer from one branch to the other. I do not think it would have the effect of preventing an increase, but that will have to be looked into. Of course, there can be no intention of interfering with these officers getting any reasonable and proper increase that they would otherwise receive.

Amendment agreed to ; and motion, as amended, agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. WALTER SCOTT (West Assiniboia). In moving the adoption of the second report of the Joint Committee on the Library of Parliament, I am desired by the committee to bring to the particular attention of the House one feature of that report, which is the following : It was ordered, in the interest of the library, and for the greater convenience of the members, that rule 118 of the House be strictly carried out. That rule provides :

> At the first meeting of the Joint Library Committee at every session of parliament the librarian shall report a list of the books absent at the commencement of the session, specifying the names of any persons who have retained the same in contravention of either of the foregoing rules.

As a matter of fact, this particular rule, as well as other rules framed for the government of the library, in the past, have been more honoured in the breach than the observance. The committee have discovered that irregularities on the part of members of parliament in relation to the library are not at all infrequent. The chief irregularities may be stated as follows : Want of promptness in returning new books during the session of the House ; keeping useful books that are not new for an undue period ; taking out books by members for strangers, and mailing the same all over the country ; and retaining of books of reference during many weeks of the session, this being directly contrary to the specific rule. The fact is, that at the present time, a very large number of books which should be in the library are not there, and a very considerable number of books that were owned by the library, and that should be there, have been lost, and a considerable expenditure has to be entailed in buying again these particular books. But the most serious phase of the matter is that books which are required during the session by members are not to be found in the library. Just to show the House the extent to which some of these irregularities have been carried, let me give a list of the number of books not returned by ex-members of parliament and present members. I may say that this is by no means a complete list. The committee were informed that one ex-member of the House had twelve books away from the library, contrary to rules ; another had 17, another 6, another 20, another 11, another 9, another 11, another 39, another 13, another 14, and still another 39, making an average of 19 books to each of this list of twelve ex-members. All of these books have been out of the library for years and are in reality lost to the library. Taking the present members of parliament, one has 7 books out, another 11, another 13, another 10, another 5, another 7, another 22, another 20, another 18, another 7, and still another 7. Thus twelve members have an aggregate of 135 books out, or an average of 11 each. These books have been out of the library in each case more than a year. The Library Committee have thought proper to bring this matter directly to the attention of the House, and to give the House specific and distinct notice that the rule which I have read, and which is to be found in the rules of the House of Commons, shall next year be strictly enforced. The librarian will be required to furnish a list at the first meeting of the committee next session, and steps will be taken to give the list of delinquents such publication as may then be deemed to be, in the interests of the library and the members of this House, necessary and advisable.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). I am not going to say anything in opposition to the report or the suggestions contained in it, because I think they are in the right direction. I want to refer to what has been the experience of some members in the past, which may result in an injustice being done them. Sometimes reports are sent out from the library that books are held by members although these books were returned during the session. Either through accident or carelessness these books when returned were not credited to the members against whom they were charged. I know that that has been my own case several times. I know of cases in which the books were never taken out of the House of Commons but simply used in the House and then sent back and not credited. Then sometimes the books may be mislaid in the library and it is not known to the members who returned them whether they were credited to them or not. In many instances there are mistakes of that character, which do a great injustice to members who remain charged with books which were returned.

Motion agreed to.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to inquire of the government whether a report that a detachment of troops will be called out on the 24th of May for drill and march into the country on the Sabbath, 25th of May, some five miles from the city and camp there, is correct or not ? I heard this matter alluded to yesterday in some of the Sunday pulpits. If any intention of that kind exists, I beg to bring the matter to the attention of the government and ask the reconsideration of the order, if it has been made. Such a step would antagonize the sentiment of a very large portion of the inhabitants of Canada, and as this is a Christian nation and we profess some regard for Sabbath observance, I rise to request that consideration be given to the question.

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Unfortunately, my hon. colleague the Minister of Militia is not here at the moment and I cannot answer for him as I know nothing about the matter, but I will call the attention of my hon. colleague to it when he comes.

CORONATION CONTINGENT.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). There is a matter I wish to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia and I take this opportunity of doing so, although he is not here at present, in order that it may be brought to his notice when here. I believe that the House understood, from the explanation given by that hon. Minister, some weeks ago, that the Coronation contingent was to be thoroughly representative of the active militia, mounted police and the various contingents which have served in South Africa. Recently I have been given to understand that the representation would be confined to the members of the active militia and mounted police force and Strathcona Horse. If that report is correct it leaves out the members of the second contingent, the first mounted rifles, the Royal Canadian Dragoons, and the Canadian Artillery. In case the rumour is correct, I would like to say that the second contingent was certainly the most thoroughly representative contingent that went to the front. It was drawn from all parts of Canada and it was the only one that was so drawn. The first contingent did not include any representatives from the North-west. The Strathcona Horse came entirely from the west, but the second contingent was drafted from all parts of Canada, and I should think that that contingent is entitled to representation at the Coronation as well as the others mentioned.

GASPE WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. C. A. GAUVREAU (Temiscouata) moved that the House go into committee on Bill (No. 102) to incorporate the Gaspé and Western Railway Company.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I have a few observations to make on this Bill. I have given notice of some amendments, which I will move at the end of my remarks, to certain clauses. This does not at all do away with the general objections I have to the Bill. The interests affected by the Bill are great. I have already explained at some length that the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company have been in possession of this line of railway since July 1st, and are the owners and trustees of the railway under the deed of trust passed in 1894 and also under the Railway Act. These people have advanced about £100,000 sterling and are entitled to a pledge and lien on the railway and to all the privileges which the Railway Act and their deeds give them at present. The principal reason for which I still oppose the passage of the measure is this, that I have no confidence in the possibility of the promoters of this Bill carrying the enterprise to any satisfactory result. Although there may be political differences between three of the promoters, who are members of this House, and myself, I venture to say that personally we are very friendly, and I would have nothing to say against them as members of the House or individuals, but on the other hand, when I look at the list of promoters, and find that it includes names of Mr. Guité, of Maria, Mr. Michael Connolly, Mr. Carter, of Gaspé, I cannot see how it is possible for a company organized as this is to carry to any practical solution the objects for which this incorporation is asked . We are told that the country for which this railway is to be an outlet contains about 15,000 inhabitants. It is quite evident that unless very large subsidies are voted towards this undertaking, the company will not be able to get from that section of the country the material aid necessary to carry its enterprise to a successful issue. The consequence will be that the enterprise will be tied up in the hands of a company which has not the financial standing necessary to carry it through successfully, and this will practically prevent the formation of any real bona fide company able to carry out this project and build the railway from Paspebiac to Gaspé Basin.

The railway is needed, everybody admits that; it is a crying necessity that this railway should be built. The bondholders are interested in seeing the railway carried out and built, because the railway as it exists now, running from Metapedia on the Intercolonial railway to Paspebiac, cannot have that earning capacity it would have if a railway were built between Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin. If a good solid company were formed there is no doubt the railway would be built, and therefore the lien, privilege and rights of the bondholders would be protected. Now I would call the attention of the House to the fact that there is a charter already existing under the statutes of Quebec for a railway from Gaspé Basin to some point on the Intercolonial railway, to Causapscal or some other point. This railway was incorporated by I. Edward VII., in the last preceding session of the Quebec legislature. Since this company was incorporated nothing whatever has been done, but there is the charter. Now the House is going to give a charter to another company, there will be two charters; this will prevent any substantial men from going into another company without getting these two companies out of the way. Therefore the lien, or rights, and the hypotheque of the bondholders will be practically of no avail until some good, solid and substantial company is formed. It is true that the Bill as it comes before the House now from the Railway Committee has been amended and improved to a certain extent. But there are still, as I have pointed out, grave objections to its passing. However, in case the Bill is referred to the committee, I wish to move the following amendment, of which I have given notice :

That the said Bill be referred back to the Standing Committee of Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, with instructions to amend the Bill as follows : 1. By inserting after the word 'shareholders' in section 9, line 22, the following, 'of the company interested and of the bondholders thereof.' 2. After the word 'stock' in the 24th line, the following, 'and bondholders holding at least two-thirds of the bonds.'

Hon. gentlemen will see at a glance the object of this amendment, and I believe the House will concur with me in saying that this amendment is rendered necessary by the position in which the bondholders are placed. The ninth clause of the Bill reads as follows :

The company may enter into an agreement with the Bay des Chaleurs Railway Company and the Atlantic and Superior Railway Company, or either of them, for the lease or purchase of their lines of railway, or of either of them, as also the franchises, surveys, plans, work, plant, material, machinery and other property belonging to the said companies or either of them, or for an amalgamation with such company or companies, on such terms and conditions as are agreed upon, and subject to such restrictions as to the directors may seem fit; provided that such agreement has been first approved by two-thirds of the votes at a special general meeting of the shareholders duly called.

Now, under the deed of trust the bondholders have also the right to vote in ordinary meetings, they supersede the shareholders ; and I propose to put these words after the word 'shareholders' in this line :

Of the company interested——

Because there are two companies, it must be specific :

Of the company interested and of the bondholders thereof.

Now again it goes on and says :

At which meeting shareholders representing at least two-thirds in value of the stock are present or represented by proxy.

I propose to add after the word 'shareholders' 'of the company interested and of the bondholders thereof' holding at least two-thirds of the bonds. I think the House will see this is a fair proposition, and that there can be no serious objection to putting this in so as to protect the bondholders if the Bill is to pass, to protect them effectively against anything that may be done against their interests, either by the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company or by the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, or the directors thereof. Also :

3. By erasing the words 'and no prescription or statute of limitation should be urged against the payment of said claims by the company, and no valid title shall pass to the company until said claims have been paid to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council.

Now, as to the first part of this amendment, I want to draw attention to the fact that the Bill as amended provides not only for a voluntary sale or lease of the railway, but also for the sale by authority of justice, by sheriff's sale. In the latter case prescription has been running against a great many of these claims—which it has been stated amount to about $70,000 or more. The prescription has been running under the law of Quebec, under the Civil Code of Quebec ; and this law practically amends the Civil Code of Quebec to the extent that it does away with the prescription, which, under our code, in these cases of wage earners and of boarding housekeepers and hotelkeepers, is acquired by two years. This is done away with, this law amends the civil law of the province of Quebec to that extent. I point out to the House that I do not think any private railway company coming before this House with such an amendment to the civil law of Quebec, can expect their request to be adopted. I call the attention of those who are responsible for the legislation in this House to that very serious question. If it can be done upon this private Bill, upon this measure which is to incorporate a private company for the building of a railway, it can be done on any other measure that comes before this House. It is a bad precedent to which I call the attention of the law officers of the Crown. As to the second part of the amendment, it is explained by the amendment which I will move in a short time, that is, as to the payment of the claims. I have provided for that by another section. The section as it stands now simply provides that the company shall pay the claims, and that no title shall vest in the company until the claims have been paid to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council. I have substituted another clause, which I think will meet with the approval of the promoters of the Bill, and particularly of those who are interested in the payment of the claims which are provided for by this Bill. To subsection 4 there were added the following words :

But nothing in this section shall in any way affect the rights of the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company and of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company.

I propose to substitute for that the following saving clause :

Provided that nothing in this Act shall in any way affect the rights of the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company and of the Baie Des Chaleurs Railway Company.

The House will see that I have substituted for the word 'section' in this saving clause, the word 'Act.' Now, it may be said that the rights of the bondholders are sufficiently protected. I do not see it in that light. When the credit of the country is involved all due regard should be given to the rights of the creditors, and every precaution taken to save their rights would be a saving also of the credit of the country. If it can be said that by legislation the rights of the bondholders who have advanced their money for a railway enterprise such as this can be wiped out, if the security which this country generally offers for such advances in money, can be wiped out, the credit of the country will be diminished to that extent. Then I also propose that the following should be added to section 9 of the Bill :

No valid title shall pass to the company until the said company shall have deposited in the hands of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals the sum of $100,000 in cash, to be used and employed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to pay the overdue balances in settlement of the claims mentioned in subsection 4 of the next preceding section. Upon and after the depositing by the company of the said sum, the Minister of Railways and Canals shall appoint a commissioner, who, after investigation, shall pay to the creditors and claimants the said claims, or so much thereof as may be due, and the remuneration or salary of the said commissioner shall be paid out of the said deposit ; the balance of which, if any after deducting the amount paid out, and the said remuneration or salary, shall be refunded to the company.

The Bill provides for the payment of outstanding balances due for labour, board and materials supplied and furnished for the construction and operation of the railway. These bondholders took possession of the railway in July, 1900, and no claims are now outstanding for the operation and maintenance of the railway against the bondholders ; and a thing which has been unheard of in connection with this railway is that ever since the bondholders have been in possession the railway has been operated to the general satisfaction of the community, and there is not one farthing due for anything in connection with the railway, for supplies, work or board bills, or anything like that. I hold in my hand a copy of a certificate given by the controller of the Post Office Department, in which he says that the mail service has been carried on entirely since July, 1900. This shows that the bondholders are acting in good faith, that they are doing what they are bound to do in carrying out their obligations towards the country. The Bill as passed by the Railway Committee provides, as I have said, for the payment of the outstanding balances due by company before the bondholders took possession of the road. It is said that no title shall pass to the company until these balances have been paid to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, but I will call the attention of the House to the fact that it will be in the interest and to the advantage of the company to get these claims settled for as littlte money as possible, and that this has already been done in connection with this very same railway. They were forced under the law of Quebec to pay these outstanding balances and claims, and people have been fleeced because the company, naturally, has every interest in paying as little as possible of these outstanding balances, and in getting rid of them for as little money as they can take out of their pockets. I call the attention of the government and of hon. members who are specially interested, and particularly the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil), that if the amendment which I propose is adopted, then there can be no such dealing with these people ; they will be paid every cent which is due them. I propose that a deposit shall be made with the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that a commissioner shall be appointed by him to pay these claims, and that it is only on his report, after he has made an investigation, that these claims have been paid by the company, that the title shall pass. It seems to me that this is an amendment which should commend itself to those who are interested in the payment of these claims before the company takes possession of the road. I have a precedent for this. Some time in 1889, or 1890, a certain part of a subsidy which had been voted by the provincial House, amounting to $28,000, which was due in claims, was to be paid by the government of the province of Quebec, and a commissioner was appointed by the then government, who went up there, paid all the claims, or paid part of the claims to the extent of $28,000 which were outstanding at that time. It seems to me that this is an amendment which should fairly commend itself to those who are really interested in seeing that these people shall be paid. I would ask that when this Bill is sent back to the Railway Committee, these amendments be made to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair). Mr. Speaker, when this Bill was under consideration by the Railway Committee the disposition of the committee, as I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casgrain) will allow, was to see that in every respect the rights of the existing bondholders, and of every existing creditor having claims upon it, were recognized and protected in the fullest degree. It was the endeavour of the committee to attain that end, and when the amendments had been made the hon. gentleman who has now given notice of some amendments to the Bill as reported was asked if they were satisfactory to him, or if he had any suggestions to make, in order to still further secure and protect the rights of the people he represents. The hon. gentleman, at that time, was not able to offer any further proposition, and the Bill therefore went through.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I said then that I could not, at the moment, on an important Bill of this kind, say that these amendments were satisfactory. When the Bill was passed, I said that I reserved my right to offer any other amendment, which after due consideration I thought should be made. That was the understanding.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite so. I do not think I have misstated the hon. gentleman's position. I say the hon. gentleman was not then able to make any further suggestion. I do not say that it is not proper for him to make the suggestion which he has made now, but I want to dispel any impression that the hon. gentleman's remarks may have left upon the House, that the committee were in the slightest degree indisposed to adopt any amendment necessary to secure the rights of the parties he represents. That was the feeling and desire on the part of the committee. I think myself that the hon. gentleman is quite within his right and is quite free, notwithstanding anything that occurred before the committee, to suggest whatever he may regard as important in further protection to these rights. It may well be that he might fairly expect that some of his clauses should be adopted by the House. In the first place he wants to have inserted the word 'bondholders,' meaning that the bondholders should be consulted as well as the shareholders of the company in order that the concurrence of a proper proportion of them should be had before any agreement should take effect for the transfer of this company to the present company. That is not an unreasonable proposition. It may be that it would be a little cumbrous to give to the shareholders who, the hon. gentleman says, have been superseded by the bondholders the same voting power, but I do not see at the moment how you could very well set aside the shareholders, and as I am at present advised I would be disposed to think that it would be proper to add the bondholders, leaving the shareholders their present rights in that respect. As one member of the committee, I would vote for that, so that the bondholders may be able to protect themselves in as much as they have superseded the shareholders, and in as much by legislation of this parliament they have been placed practically in control of one of the railways at least.

I do not think that the third clause is as clear as the hon. gentleman assumes it to be. He would urge that no prescription or statutory limitation should be urged against the payment of claims by the company. He thinks it improper to insert that clause in the Bill, and he further contends that it is beyond our constitutional powers, because in his opinion we would thereby be amending the Civil Code of the province of Quebec. I may be wrong in the hasty conclusion I have arrived at on that point, but I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. We are simply providing here as respects certain claims which are mentioned in this section ; which are not the claims of the bondholders or of those who hold securities and have priority on the property of the company, but which are claims enumerated in the Bill and which are mentioned as claims for labour, the boarding house claims, material and supplies furnished for the construction and operation of the railway. Those claims are being dealt with not as a matter of legal right, but we are simply recognizing that it would be proper to attach as a condition of the transfer of these railway properties, after the prior securities have been dealt with and before this company shall take over this railway property either at judicial sale or by agreement, that the particular claimants named here shall be paid in full disregarding any prescription which might militate against their recovery in law. We attach that as a condition to the transfer of the property. We are not interfering at all with anybody's legal rights, and we do not profess to interfere with the Civil Code of Quebec. We simply impose a condition upon the transfer of this property and if that condition is too onerous the company need not comply with it. If they are willing to take the transfer under this condition, they can do so, but if they are not willing they need not do so. I cannot agree that my hon. friend is right in asking that we should say that the company which takes over this property, shall only be asked to pay what claims are not barred. That would be the effect of his amendment if we adopted it. I would therefore think that clause 3 of the amendment should not pass.

I see no objection to clause 4 of the amendment, but I think it unnecessary, because the only section of the whole Bill which attempts to deal with the rights of creditors, mortgagees, or others is the ninth section. However, if the hon. gentleman thinks that his position and that of this clients would be any stronger. I would not hesitate to change the word 'section' into the word 'act.'

The 5th clause of the amendment is :

> That no valid title shall pass to the company until the said company shall have deposited in the hands of the Minister of Railways the sum of $100,000 in cash.

I think that is unnecessary. My hon. friend has no concern at all with regard to the claimants who are referred to in the last section ; he is particularly concerned on behalf of the bondholders, and if there is any conflict of interest, that conflict would be between the bondholders whom he represents and these claimants whom he does not represent.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon ; I am here to legislate and make good law.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not at all wish to make any disagreeable reference to my hon. friend in the matter, but I rather understood him before the committee to say, that he was speaking for the bondholders and acting for them, which I thought he might properly do. Did I not correctly understand that ?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Certainly, but that does not preclude me from amending the Bill in any proper interest when it comes before the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I perfectly understand that, but I rather drew the inference that as the hon. gentleman was representing the interests of the bondholders in a professional way outside of his being a member of parliament—and perhaps before he was a member of parliament—I could not help thinking that his interest as representing the bondholders would be rather in conflict with the interest of the other claimants. However, I do not know that is germane to the question, and I shall not dwell on it. If those who are anxious for the right of these claimants referred to in the latter portion of the section, have thought it necessary to seek this provision. They are content that it should be left with the Governor in Council, the Minister of Railways or the Railway Committee to ascertain just what claims there are outstanding. By the usual methods—public advertisement, I presume, they would invite anybody and everybody who had such claims to send them to the department. Then the department would examine into them, and endeavour to adjust them, and having ascertained the gross amount of claims, the duty would necessarily devolve upon one or other branch of the government to see that the claims were fully paid before a declaration should be made to the effect that they had been paid, and before a valid title could pass to this company. Therefore, I do not think it would be necessary to adopt the fifth clause of my hon. friend's amendment. My hon. friend from Terrebonne (Mr. Préfontaine) has an amendment which he thinks of proposing to my hon. friend's fourth amending clause, and which is a little more specific than anything contained in the Bill, and to which he (Mr. Casgrain) might perhaps give his assent. But, with the exception of the third and fifth clauses, I can see no objection to my hon. friend's amendment being adopted by the House. Do I understand the motion of my hon. friend to be to refer the Bill back to the Railway Committee?—because he has given notice to refer it to the committee of the whole House. We cannot refer it back to the Railway Committee now; but if he will accept the suggestion I make, we might refer it to the committee of the whole House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In view of the statement of the hon. minister, I will not insist on that portion of the motion, to refer the Bill back to the Railway Committee. I understand that the hon. minister does not object to three of the amendments I propose. Of course, when the Bill goes to the Committee of the Whole, I presume these amendments will be adopted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has asked the House to send the Bill to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to do certain things. He cannot expect those of us who do not agree with some of his propositions to agree to the whole of them; and if he would consent to eliminate the 3rd and 5th clauses, and instruct the committee to adopt the others, there might not be any objection to his motion.

Mr. CASGRAIN. For the purposes of this motion I will agree to that.

Mr. SPEAKER. I call the attention of the House to the fact that the only motion in order now is to refer the Bill back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. We cannot now pass a motion giving instructions to the Committee of the Whole House. That would not be regular.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Of course, we could not give instructions to the Committee of the Whole House to do certain things which they are perfectly competent to do. I had to make this motion, which is the only one that is in order at this stage.

Mr. SPEAKER. The regular procedure will be, if the hon. minister does not want the Bill referred to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, to withdraw the motion before the Chair.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I cannot withdraw my motion. I am right.

The PRIME MINISTER. The motion is out of order. The order of the House is for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion in my hands is a motion to refer the Bill back to the Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines. That motion is in order.

Mr. C. MARCIL (Bonaventure). Before that amendment is disposed of, I wish to explain how this matter stands in so far as the county of Bonaventure is concerned. It is needless for me to say that the chapter of railway history connected with what is known as the Baie des Chaleurs Railway is one of the dark chapters of railway history in Canada, and is well known not only to the members of this House, but to all those who have followed the trend of public events during the last 15 or 20 years. In 1874 the Hon. Pierre Fortin, who then represented Gaspé in this House, and one of the best men the province of Quebec has produced, invited this parliament to consider the advisability of building a railway along the Gaspesian peninsula, along the north shore of the Baie des Chaleurs, to connect with the Intercolonial Railway at Metapedia. After some years of consideration the government of Canada acceded to the proposition, considering it only proper that the 40,000 or 50,000 people who inhabited Gaspé and Bonaventure should have communication with the Intercolonial Railway. In 1883 or 1884 the policy of the government was changed, and instead of the government itself building this railway, the task was handed over to a private corporation. That private corporation started building the road in 1885, and up to this day, in the year 1902, only 98 miles have been built, some 28 miles of the latter portion having been built by a new company formed some four years ago by a gentleman well known to the members of this House, Mr. C. N. Armstrong. The position in which the county of Bonaventure is now placed is this. Both of these portions of the railway have been built, but large sums of money are owing to labourers along the line, and to various people for right of way, supplies, materials and boarding house claims. The county of Gaspé, and the county of Bonaventure as well are anxious that this railway undertaking be completed, in order that, like the rest of the Dominion of Canada, they may have the benefit of railway facilities they being the only two counties in the whole Dominion deprived of railway communication. In 1890 this Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, of which Mr. C. N. Armstrong was the guiding star, unable to meet its obligations, handed over the road to the trustees for the bondholders, who took possession on the 3rd July, 1900. Since then these trustees have kept the road in operation and paid their men as they went along, but they have shown no disposition to extend the road towards Gaspé Basin, and have not paid one cent of the overdue debts for labour and boarding the men and materials furnished. My position and that of the hon. member for Gaspé is this: We want this enterprise to go on and the people to be paid. I am not a promoter of this Bill. I knew nothing about it until the notices appeared in the 'Canada Gazette.' I knew nothing of the object of this company until the Bill was submitted to this House. As the Bill was originally drafted, I was certainly opposed to it, and so was my hon. friend from Gaspé, because no provision was made in it for an extension of the road to Gaspé Basin, for the payment of overdue claims, and because power was given the company to build a parallel line to that running along the shore of the Baie des Chaleurs. I received instructions from the county of Bonaventure, represented by its county council, in the shape of a series of resolutions adopted the 12th March last. I may say that that county council is composed of the mayors of all the municipalities, the leading men of the county, recruited from both political parties. These are the instructions given me as the the representative of that county, and these I have endeavoured to have followed out carefully and minutely in the two sittings which the Railway Committee held to consider this Bill as well as before the sub-committee of railways. These resolutions are as follows:

That whereas, many notices of Bills for charters to construct railways in Gaspesia have been published,

Whereas the interior of Gaspesia is quite improper for agricultural and lumbering purposes,

Whereas the railway on the coast of Gaspesia has many times been acknowledged by both governments to be of public interest.

Whereas this shore railway, the only one necessary and even useful to our region, though begun 25 years ago does not even extend further east than New Carlisle,

Whereas, that shore line from Paspebiac to Gaspé and even from Gaspé to Matane on the coast would pass through already flourishing parishes, the inhabitants of which are in great need of railway communication for the sale and exportation of the products of the farm and fisheries.

Whereas, at last session the trustees of the bondholders of the Atlantic & Lake Superior Railway were empowered to construct three miles of railway to extend the railway to Paspebiac,

Whereas, the same trustees are petitioning the government for an extension of time, though they have till the last day of December, 1902 to construct three miles of railway,

Whereas, the Government Engineer in Chief, has reported that the share of the subsidy which, according to the last budget, was to be paid to the labourers, had been earned and an Order in Council been passed authorizing that payment,

Therefore, be it resolved, that this council pray both the federal and local governments,

1. Not to subsidize any company for the construction of railways through the interior of Gaspesia,

2. To bind the Gaspé and Western Company to commence work on its line at Paspebiac toward Gaspé and not at Fraserville, in the year following the sanction of its Bill, otherwise that the Bill be declared lapsed for that portion of its line,

3. If that company be empowered to buy the Baie des Chaleurs and the Atlantic & Lake Superior Railways, to insert into its Bill a clause binding it to pay the debts due by the Baie des Chaleurs and the Atlantic & Lake Superior Railway Companies, and their contractors and subcontractors to the labourers and local merchants for work, material and bonds supplied for the construction and operation of their lines, as it had been done at the federal session of 1900, for the Bill of the short line to Gaspé, and be it,

Resolved, that this council pray the federal government:

1. Not to grant an extension of time for the completion of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway to Paspebiac; two years should be considered long enough to construct three miles of railway even in Gaspesia,

2. To complete that piece of road as government work, by the day or otherwise, if the trustees do not construct it within the time specified in their Bill.

3. To appoint a commissioner to make a payment to the labourers and others of the subsidy already earned.

These were my instructions and in what position did I find myself at the opening of this session? Last session, after a great deal of trouble on my part and that of members of the government, to whom I am very thankful, we succeeded in getting parliament to adopt a Bill reviving the powers of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway and vesting those powers in the trustees of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway. The subsidy which had lapsed for the last thirty miles of road was also revived on three conditions of payment :

1. To the Hamilton Bridge Works Company in payment for bridge superstructures on the said section of railway, when furnished and erected by that company, not to exceed $35,000 ;

2. For the completion of the road-bed and works incidental thereto ;

3. Towards payment of overdue balances, pro rata, in settlement of claims for labour, boarding-house claims, and material and supplies furnished in connection with the construction of the said section of railway ; in all not exceeding 30 miles.

What was my great surprise at the opening of the present session to see what I considered an absolute breach of faith on the part of the trustees of the Atlantic and Lake Superior ? I learned that a Bill had been introduce in the Senate by which the Act of last session was entirely done away with. They were relieved of the obligation of building three miles of the road, and they ask an extension of time for five years. As there was some doubt raised concerning the nature of the Bill introduced in the Senate and adopted by that body, I shall read it :—

1. The trustees of the bondholders of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, appointed by virtue of a deed of trust vesting in them the property of the company, shall, notwithstanding any limitation of time contained in any Act, have all the powers for construction, completion and operation of the undertaking of the company as were conferred originally on the company by the Acts relating to the company and by the Railway Act ; but the said powers shall not continue beyond the thirty-first day of December, one thousand nine hundred and seven, when they shall cease as regards any portion of the undertaking not then completed.

The county was placed in this position. It wants this road to go ahead and the arrears paid. The present company are not paying these arrears and do not wish to proceed with the extension of the road. I asked to have a clause inserted in that Bill providing that if the Gaspé and Western Railway should be incorporated, it should have no rights whatever in the county of Bonaventure until it acquired the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, either by judicial sale or otherwise. That clause was inserted.

My second instructions were to have a provision inserted requiring the work to be commenced at Paspebiac within twelve months and that section extended to Port Daniel, the last parish in the county of Bonaventure, within those twelve months. That condition was inserted. My hon. friend from Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) also had a clause put in the Bill providing that the work in Gaspé Basin must be completed in three years.

What possible objection can the Atlantic and Lake Superior Company have to the Gaspé and Western Railway undertaking to pay those claims, if it chooses to do so. If the Gaspé and Western Railway undertake to pay these claims let it do so. My hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), in opposing this Bill tooth and nail before the Railway Committee and defending the rights of the bondholders, completely overlooked the rights of the poor people, the rights of the labourers to be paid the claims due them in the county of Bonaventure. I would not have this Bill go through under any circumstances unless these claims due in Bonaventure are paid, and I may say that these claims are largely owing to Conservatives who were employed in the construction of that railway by Mr. C. N. Armstrong. I am not standing up to-day for claims held by Liberals only in the county of Bonaventure, but claims held by Conservatives as well. It is a matter of justice and fair play that these claims should be met, and these conditions having been inserted in this Bill under the instructions I have in my hand, my duty is to ask parliament to allow the Bill to go through. But the hon. member for Montmorency, after having been worsted in the Railway Committee, after having stood up in that committee solely for the rights of the bondholders, comes up now and asks us to insert a clause requiring this new company to deposit $100,000 before it can proceed with this undertaking.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if we were dealing with the Bank of Montreal or with the Canadian Pacific Railway or with the Grand Trunk Railway, or some other great concern of that nature, such a clause would be very reasonable. But is not the primary object of my hon. friend from Montmorency, having failed to have killed in the Railway Committee, to burden this new company with such conditions, that it will be unable to take over this work and construct the line ? We provide in this Bill that the road must be extended to Port Daniel within twelve months. The people of the eastern part of Bonaventure insist on having that portion of the road built. My hon. friend from Montmorency has a number of very warm friends in that portion of Bonaventure. There are parishes there in which a majority of votes were cast against me, but I am standing up here for the rights of those parishes, as I am standing up for those of the parishes that gave Liberal majorities. I ask the hon. member (Mr. Casgrain) to declare before this House whether he is looking first after the interests of the people of Bonaventure or is merely seeking to defeat this Bill in the interest of the bondholders. I do not object to the rights of the bondholders being secured. I want them to be protected. But they are in possesion of the road at the present moment, they have the first lien upon it, and the laws of the country protect them. But the unfortunate people who, for fifteen long years were exploited by the railway ring which did such injury to the counties of Bonaventure and Gaspé have no protection, and it is to this parliament and to this government that they look for the protection of their interests. I hope, therefore, that hon. members on both sides, taking this into consideration, will see to it that nothing is inserted in this Bill which will in any way jeopardize the claims of the unfortunate people who have been so badly treated for the last fifteen years.

Mr. RODOLPHE LEMIEUX (Gaspé). I shall not detain the House long, as I wish to say only a few words in explanation of the position I have taken on this question since its inception. Early in the session, I received from my electors in the county of Gaspé the same instructions that my hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) received. I received a petition, and also resolutions which had been adopted by the county council and the different local councils asking me to oppose the two Bills which had been surreptitiously introduced in the Senate by the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company. I had to oppose the two Bills, and I am glad to hear that the company has decided not to press for the adoption of these measures this year. Had the Bill been pressed by them, they would have been defeated in this House. As to the present Bill, the Gaspé and Western, I occupy the same position as does my hon. friend from Bonaventure. The county of Gaspé is the only county in the Dominion, with the exception of Charlevoix, deprived of railway communication. The Bill which is now before us, the Gaspé and Western, contained as at first presented, a clause which, if it had remained there, would perhaps have caused the defeat of the measure. Under that clause, the promoters would have been empowered to locate this railway in the interior of the peninsula of Gaspé. My instructions were to oppose the Bill on account of that clause. The people want the railway along the shore, and the promoters having agreed to build the railway along the shore, as near as possible the parishes situated along the Baie des Chaleurs, and the Gulf of St. Lawrence, my electors are now perfectly satisfied. They have also joined with the electors of Bonaventure in asking the promoters that a clause be inserted by which the labourers in the county of Bonaventure should be paid. And I may say that many of these labourers are now residing in the county of Gsapé. This amendment having been accepted by the promoters, together with other changes introduced by my hon. friend from Bonaventure and myself, the Bill is acceptable to both counties. I may say also that, in order to protect ourselves, we have asked the promoters to add to the board of provisional directors the names of Mr. Guite, ex-M.P., and Mr. A. T. Carter, warden of the county of Gaspé. With such a guarantee, this Bill is perfectly acceptable to my county, and I give it my fullest support and hope that the proposed amendments of my hon. friend from Montmorency will not be seriously discussed, because, if the promoters of this railway, besides the obligation imposed upon them by the amendments, were bound to deposit $100,000, they would be quite unable to go on with the work. I say that the obligations we have placed upon the company to pay the debts due by Mr. Armstrong and his associates, to build the section between Paspebiac and Gaspé Basin along the shore, to begin the work within one year and finish it within four, are as much as the company can undertake. To add a deposit of $100,000 can only be a means of defeating the object of the Bill.

Mr. BALL (Nicolet). As I am compelled to be absent, later on, I present now an amendment to this motion :

That the said Bill be not referred to Committee of the Whole House, but that it be referred to said committee this day six months.

The reason why I ask the House to give this Bill the six months' hoist is that the measure originated in a curious manner, as I am going to explain to the House. In 1897 a company was formed to build a railway from the Atlantic to Lake Superior, and that was the name of the company. The directors of this company were : Hon. J. J. Thibaudeau, Hon. Wm. Owens, Henry Hogan, of the St. Lawrence Hall, R. Audette, president of the Quebec National Bank—the man who applied some days ago for $50,000—R. Préfontaine, Geo. Ball, L. H. Fraser, London, and R. E. D. Fleming, London. At that time there was a contract made between the late government of Mr. Flynn and the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, whose board of directors was composed of the gentleman I have just named. Then the government asked the company to add three directors to be named by the government, which directors were : Wm. Baker, Cape Town, on the Baie des Chaleurs, Charles Chaput, Montreal, and Hon. J. W. Larue, Quebec. It was stipulated in this contract that the government would hold the company liable for the interest on the $8,000,000 arising from the bonds of the company, the government assuming the responsibility for the payment of this interest for a period of 20 years. The road was to be built from one end to the other according to the charter. Unfortunately, not long afterwards the Flynn government was defeated, and replaced by the government of the Hon. Mr. Marchand. Mr. Marchand took with him as two of his colleagues, Mr. Duffy, as Minister of Railways and Public Works, and Mr. Archambault, as Attorney General. So when the company wanted to compel the government to fulfil the contract the latter pretended that the contract was illegal. They waited some time, and at last, forced more by their own friends than by the company, the government decided to refer the question to the Court of Appeals. During that session I had the honour to represent my county in the legislature of Quebec. As I say, the government at that time referred this question to the Court of Appeals to decide. Mr. Flynn, the chief of the opposition, was named by the company to defend their case, while Mr. Archambault and Mr. Duffy represented the government. Now, Mr. Speaker, when you compose a cabinet you generally take the most able and educated men for Minister of Railways and Attorney General—something like what we see in this Dominion government. The premier of the Dominion government always chooses a wise man to be Minister of Justice. Well, these two able and educated men, Mr. Flynn and Mr. Archambault, pleaded the case of the government as well as they could, but their case was so weak that the Court of Appeals unanimously compelled them to fulfil their engagement towards the company. I say unanimously, but not quite, because on one point, though not an important point, there was one dissident. Mr. Justice Ouimet did not agree with the five or six other judges on one point; and the Hon. Mr. Duffy told me personally that Judge Ouimet had more brains than all the other judges together. Well, I think he is wrong. Anyway, when we saw the necessity of going on with the enterprise we presented a petition of right to get the consent of the government to sue them and compel them to fulfil their engagement. But we never succeeded in getting that permission from the government. During that time the company was so confident that they would get justice from the government that they undertook to build 20 miles of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway.

I may say that the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company previously bought the Baie des Chaleurs and Great Eastern Railways. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) asks me to be short. If it were in French I might put it in a very few words. I want the House to understand my position. I think I have a right to speak here. I do not speak often, and I think I have a right to have my say without any lesson either from my friends or any one. To build twenty miles of this road the Banque Nationale put up $50,000 and the directors agreed to endorse notes to try and build that road. When we found that the government would not do anything to help finish the road, or to pay for the labour, or for anything else, we decided to sell part of the Great Eastern Railway from Montreal to Quebec and put everything on the Baie de Chaleur Railway. We decided to sell part of that road. I think I said something last session about this. I suppose it would not be out of place to refresh the memory of hon. gentlemen. As the mayor of Montreal then, who was a director of our road, had great influence with this government, and being looked upon as a future minister, we thought we would take him to approach the government and obtain subsidies for the South Shore Railway, the road whose Bill was before the House the day before yesterday and whose line runs from Sorel to Lotbinière or Lévis. He was to get also subsidies for the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway from Caplin to Gaspé Basin, not from Caplin to Paspébiac. At that time this company's charter had not lapsed nor had the subsidies. There was 100 miles of road from Caplin to Gaspé Basin for which subsidies had been granted by the local government: $4,000 per mile. But what occurred then? We sold the road to the South Shore Railway Company as you know. Subsidies were granted from Sorel to Lotbinière for the South Shore Railway—$60,000 or $70,000 was to come out of these subsidies to pay the company the price of the road. Subsidies were granted, as I say, but instead of granting subsidies for the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway to Gaspé, parliament granted subsidies to Paspébiac and they granted the rest of the subsidies to a road without naming that road.

They applied for a charter for this road in 1890, but it was not granted. I have a copy of the Bill in which the road is named the 'Gaspé Short Line.' This Bill seems to be for the same purpose, but the same names do not appear in the preamble. I am informed that when the previous charter was put through parliament the names which appeared upon it were obtained as a result of asking the permission of the parties. I cannot say the same as to the names that appear in the Bill under discussion—the Gaspé Western, because I remember that the other day at the committee the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Lemieux) asked permission to withdraw one name because the person whose name appeared did not want to go into the project. He said: I put his name in the Bill and I thought it would be all right but he did not want to go into it. I must suppose that quite a number of the names appearing in this Bill were inserted in the same way. When Mr. Mullarkey, who is a railway man and follows government business, found out that his name had been inserted in the Bill without his permission he protested, and this shows that other names have been used without the permission of the parties. They put the names in for the purpose of carrying the Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Speaker, with your permission. The hon. gentleman refers to one of the promoters—Mr. Mullarkey of Montreal. The facts are as follows: When the Bill was introduced I was opposed to it; I wanted some amendments inserted, and I wanted to get some names added to the names of the promoters, so I took it upon myself to put in the name of Mr. Carter, warden of Gaspé, and the name of Mr.

Mullarkey, a prominent railway man of Montreal.

Mr. BALL. That is not a question Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order.

Mr. BALL. What question does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Lemieux) want to ask me ? That shows that these fellows are all alike. They stole our road and now they would steal the floor from me.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman referred to me as being one of those fellows, and as having stolen his railway. I do not know what he means by this, and I think it is not parliamentary language.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ball) will have to withdraw these expressions.

Mr. BALL. I am not a parliamentarian, and I may very often contravene the rules of the House, because I do not know them. I am at an age where we learn with difficulty. But I am always ready to be shown the proper course in discussion, and withdraw any remark that should not have been made. I now wish to refer to the sale of the Great Eastern Railway. The product of that sale was to go to pay the creditors.

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that we are now discussing the Gaspé and Western Bill, and I do not see that it has any connection with the sale of the Great Eastern.

Mr. BALL. Well I don't know the rules well, and so I have to try and get around them some way. I want to show the House that these gentlemen are not working altogether for the labouring men.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must confine himself to the discussion of the question before the House.

Mr. BALL. Ce que je veux dire, c'est que ce bill a originé dans l'iniquité; I wish I could say it in English, but I cannot. The proceeds of the sale of the Great Eastern went to the ex-mayor of Montreal (Mr. Préfontaine) and he was to distribute it to the labourers and creditors. Well, I may say that no labourer and no creditor got anything. The ex-mayor of Montreal took all the money and put it in his pocket, and gave nothing to anybody, and he resigned as director of the Atlantic and Lake Superior Railway Company, and said Armstrong was a rascal. He could not be in the same place with Armstrong, because Armstrong was such a rascal. He got the subsidies to go as far as Paspebiac, with the prospect of a future charter and that is why we had the Bill of 1890. They thought they would succeed better by calling it the Gaspé short line running over the hills. Numerous petitions from the electors of Gaspé and Percé district came here asking that the railway should pass along the shore, and so this year they changed their minds and decided to run the lines along the shore, and so this year they changed their minds and decided to run the lines along the rivers so as to make the people believe that they were going to build the road and that the company was very rich and going to buy out a syndicate and pay all the merchants and the labourers. They feel very bad about the poor people and they are crying all the time that they are out of their money. During the whole session they have been sympathizing with the poor people down there, but you will find that they will never pay these poor people. I do not know whether I have permission to say it or not, but I want to state that they seem to be very much afraid of Armstrong. I will make a parallel with him and another gentleman who is here in this House, the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Raymond Prefontaine), and when there are some Bills to be passed this gentleman goes around and says : 'Don't you pass that Bill, because Armstrong is in it ; or, help me with this Bill because Armstrong is opposing it.' That is the way some Bills are carried here, and some Bills are killed. I was at the funeral of three of them yesterday ; the Atlantic and Lake Superior, the Great Eastern and the Montreal Bridge. It was said that Armstrong had something to do with these Bills, and so they were sent to the Cimetiere des Innocents. Well, I think this present Bill should also be killed, but should not be placed with the innocents, as it is too guilty. I do not say that all the Liberals, but generally speaking the Liberal party is against Armstrong. If Armstrong passes on one side of the street they pass on the other, and if Armstrong is in town they say : 'There is some bad scheme going on because Armstrong is at the Russell.' Would you know the reason why they are so down on him ? I will tell you : It is because Mr. C. N. Armstrong once had a contract for the building of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway and he had some subsidies coming to him from the Quebec government. He obtained $100,000 from the government. $100,000 was a big cheque, but what did he do ? Did he put it in his pocket and give nobody else anything ? No, he did not. What did he do with it ? He gave about three-quarters of it to a man of the name of Pacaud, in Quebec, whom every one knows. And for what purpose ? To help the Liberal party in their election against the Conservative party. That is where the $100,000 or nearly all of it went to.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Is that so ?

Mr. BALL. Yes, it is so. Part of it went to pay friends notes and the balance went that way. That is the pure truth.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is not in order. The discussion of that question is not germane to the debate.

Mr. BALL. I want to make a parallel. I am tired of that man saying Armstrong here and Armstrong there. I say Armstrong is a great deal more honest than the fellow who decries him. I regret that the hon. member for Terrebonne (Mr. Raymond Prefontaine) is not present, because I would say more. In order that you may not think that I wish to speak until the time expires, I shall resume my seat.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have been appealed to, to withdraw the amendment, and I do so on the understanding that if the amendments which I proposed are not adopted in Committee of the Whole, then I will move them on the third reading.

Amendment withdrawn.

Main motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

On section 9,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I propose to amend this clause by inserting after the word 'shareholder' in line 22 the following: 'Of the company interested and the bondholders thereof;' and also after the word 'stock' in the 24th line: 'And bondholders holding at least two-thirds of the bonds.'

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

At one o'clock, House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

ORTHODOX RUSSO-GREEK CATHOLIC CHURCH.

House went into committee on Bill (No. 140) An Act to incorporate the Bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church for North America and Aleutian Islands, and each of the parishes and missions of the said church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. When this Bill came before the House on different occasions I raised some objections on several grounds. First of all, we are asked to incorporate in Manitoba and the North-west Territories a church body whose members have never petitioned this parliament for incorporation. I can readily understand that such a community may need incorporation in order to organize and maintain their respective parishes in connection with their church work, but at the same time I think that the roundabout way in which this Bill has been introduced in this House is not at all regular. We had a petition presented to this House by the Right Rev. Mr. Tikhon, of San Francisco, California, claiming to be a bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church for North America and the Aleutian Islands, asking to be incorporated as a corporator sole, that is to say, as a corporation having the absolute privilege of controlling, not only the spiritual church matters, but the temporal matters as well in connection with this church. By the Bill subsequently introduced, the prayer of that petition is fully granted, and the most reverend gentleman—as he is called in the Bill—is incorporated a corporation sole, with powers as defined in the Bill:

> 2. The corporation sole may receive and hold property of any kind for the uses and purposes of the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, including the uses and purposes of any parish and mission, institution, college, school or hospital now or hereafter connected with the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church, and it may receive any devise by will, gift, deed, conveyance of land or any estate or interest therein, and sell, alienate, mortgage or lease any lands, tenements and hereditaments held by it.

Now, we have on different occasions, and even during the present session, incorporated bishops with similar powers. We incorporated, for instance, the bishop of Moosonee, by a Bill passed last week, but we knew that he was a bishop of the Church of England, we knew his status, as set forth in the recital of the Bill for his incorporation, and we knew he was a British subject, a resident in one of the dioceses, that his diocese was a missionary one entirely, in the northern part of the territory of Keewatin, and that he could not have around him a personnel or a council capable of administering the affairs of his church. We therefore very properly granted the prayer of his petition. But in this case we are granting the privilege of a corporation sole to a gentleman who is living in the city of San Francisco, who has no connection whatever with the people of the North-west except that he happens to be the chief official of the Greek Church, appointed by the Czar of Russia over that church. I said on a former occasion that I had no objection at all to providing machinery whereby the members of that church could go on with their own church work, and organize their missions and parishes, so long as the people themselves would have the administration of those missions and those parishes in their own hands and themselves asked for such privileges. But though the Bill was discussed in the Standing Orders Committee at great length and in the Private Bills Committee, we have never had any petition or information whatever with regard to the wish of the people most interested in this measure. No one came to represent those people and their views, and let us know their wishes and their wants. But in spite of all that, we have the Bill which is now before this committee and one which is not at all the Bill which was first introduced, owing to the multitude and variety of the amendments made to it in the Private Bills Committee.

In fact, Sir, I am surprised that such an important Bill should have been so amended without it being reprinted and put in the hands of members of the House, so that they might be in a position to study the case. This Bill provides that this Rt. Rev. Bishop of San Francisco, shall be, as I have said, a corporation sole. But when I drew the attention of the Committee on Private Bills to the danger of granting such extensive powers to the gentleman who was a non-resident and who lived so far away from the parties interested in this measure, an amendment was introduced providing that any act, deed or conveyance affecting the properties of the church or any of the parishes in connection with the church—that is affecting their temporal affairs—should be countersigned by no less a gentleman than the Consul General of Russia, who lives in the city of Montreal. And, later on, a clause was added to the Bill providing that the corporation sole shall have and maintain a head office in the town of Edmonton, in the district of Alberta, in the North-west Territories.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. For what purpose is the office ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. In order to receive service of any process of court that may require to be served on the church in general. So, Sir, you will see that, for the sake of establishing parishes and missions in the North-west, and having such an organization as this, it is proposed by the Bill to incorporate a bishop living in San Francisco and having a Canadian office in the town of Edmonton, with the obligation upon him of getting all the instruments in connection with temporal affairs countersigned by the Consul General of Russia, in Montreal. It is the most absurd piece of legislation ever introduced in this parliament. And, as I said before, it is introduced without the knowledge of the people directly interested in this legislation—they do not know the first thing about it. We are going to impose a very extensive, I may say absurd, piece of machinery upon them for the control of the temporal affairs in connection of their church, and without their having asked for it. I am sure that if hon. members would consider this matter in an unbiased and impartial way, they would see that I was right in opposing the introduction of such legislation without first consulting the parties who were directly interested.

Now, what is the position of this clerical gentleman to whom we are giving control of matters in connection with the Greek Church ? The Galicians belonging to that faith who live in Manitoba and the North-west are people from Austria. So far as nationality goes they were Austrians in their own country. And, now, we are to put them under the control of a bishop living in San Francisco, who has been appointed by the Czar of Russia Bishop of North America and the Aleutian Islands for the State Church of Russia. And, on the other hand, we are exacting the signature of the Russian Consul General in Montreal to legalize any instrument that may be executed by this bishop—a Consul General who has nothing in common with these people, as they do not belong to his nationality, except merely that they happen to profess the same religion as he does. This, if it were carried out, would be a very bad piece of legislation, to my thinking. I have no objection to recognize the Russian-Greek Church or any other Greek Church, and to give people belonging to that faith the privilege of having their churches, their parishes and their missions. But what I object to is the machinery whereby these temporal affairs of the church will be administered. We do not know what troubles may follow. Orders may come from St. Petersburgh to these people, on some conscientious pretext to do this or do that, or refrain from doing this or that. We already have enough trouble with the Doukhobors, who, under conscientious pretext, are not willing to abide by the local laws of our country. They do not want to register their lands, they do not want to register their marriages, they do not want to do many things that are obligatory upon good citizens in this country. Who is to tell us that, later on, orders will not come from the church officials of the Greek Church in St. Petersburgh to their adherents, imposing duties upon them which will compel them to choose between their church membership and their citizenship ? But, apart from that altogether, I say that we ought to be very careful. There is more importance in this measure than appears. We are told: This is only a private Bill and we can amend it next year. Well, Sir, if there is such a feeling that we may require to amend it next year, I believe it will be far better to put the Bill off until next year, and then prepare and pass a measure that will be satisfactory to the people concerned and satisfactory to the country to which they have come to live. Perhaps I may be taxed with partiality in dealing with this matter. Sir, I have on every occasion endorsed and approved measures concerning other faiths than my own; because I, for one, recognize the fact that we live in a free country, that we ought to be liberal to others, even if we cannot think as they do. But, in this case, it is not a question of faith—it is a question of business, a question of property, yes, even a question of justice. I say that this parliament has no right to impose on a class of the community legislation for which they have not asked, and which we have no proof that they will accept.

Now, there is something very peculiar in the action of this right reverend gentleman in regard to this matter. In the petition that was presented before this parliament, and in the Bill as passed by the Private Bills Committee, he represents himself as the bishop of the Orthodox Russo-Creek Catholic Church for North America and the Aleutian

Islands. Since this Bill passed the committee, a book has come into my hands called the catechism of the Orthodox church; and in opening this little catechism—which I do not intend to read to this House—I find that this official book of the church is distributed with the blessing of the most Reverend Tikhon—the very same reverend gentleman who is asking for an Act of incorporation in this Bill—the most Reverend Tikhon, Bishop of the Orthodox Greek-Russian Church of North America. Now, Sir, if I go to the States, I find that in California the name of the church there is the Greek-Russian Slavonian Orthodox Eastern Church and Benevolent Society. That is the church over which this right reverend gentleman is presiding. If I go to Seattle, in the state of Washington, I find there that the church is known as the Greco-Russian Orthodox Church of St. Spiridomus. Well, when we come to Manitoba and the North-west Territories we find there are two classes of Galicians, the one calling themselves Orthodox-Greeks, and the other commonly styling themselves Greek Catholics. The Greek Catholics are a branch of the Roman Catholic Church, they call themselves Greek Catholics because their rite is the Greek rite; they do not follow the Latin rite. The others styling themselves Orthodox Greek, belong to the Greek rite also, but in connection with the Church of Russia.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. One part of them inclines to the church of Russia, and to what church does the other half incline ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The church of Rome.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. Let them call themselves what they like, that makes no difference to us.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. What I object to is that this reverend gentleman introduces the word 'Catholic' into this Bill, and asks us to acknowledge him under a designation that he does not use in any other country.

Mr. BELCOURT. Nobody has a monopoly of that name.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Well you have not, I am sure of that.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is all right. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question, all jokes aside ? Do not the Episcopalians call themselves Catholics ? Answer that, yes or no.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Well, the Episcopolians call themselves Catholics, but they do not ask me to admit that they are Catholics. I call myself a Catholic, but I do not compel any one else to call me a Catholic. At the same time, while Episcopolians call themselves Catholics—and I believe that they are using that privilege—they never asked this parliament to confirm them in their right thus to call themselves. They are liberal, they allow others to call themselves whatever they choose ; and we, with the same liberality, allow them to call themselves whatever they choose.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Supposing the Episcopalians did ask parliament to give them that name, would you object to it ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Well, yes.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I do not object to them calling themselves whatever they choose, I grant them the privilege of calling themselves Catholic if they believe that they are so. Mr. Chairman, I see that I am treading on very delicate ground, and I regret it, because I wanted to object to this Bill at first on its general merits ; I did not want to go into these questions of theology or orthodoxy, on the contrary I wished to avoid them, and heretofore I have never mentioned them. But here this right reverend gentleman is known under a different name in San Francisco, and he goes to the North-west, where there is a mixed community, and asks us to acknowledge him a a Catholic. Well, as a Catholic I object to that.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. We are Roman Catholics, they may be Catholics.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This gentleman may be a Russo-Greek Catholic.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am a Presbyterian Catholic.

Mr. SPROULE. The argument used by the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the committee (Mr. Lariviere) might be turned against himself and applied with equal propriety against the church which he represents. He objects that this church is controlled by a foreign power. So is the church of the hon. gentleman controlled by a foreign power, but does he object to that. We had something to say on that subject in connection with the Jesuits Estates Bill. But the arguments used by the hon. gentleman apply with equal propriety, with equal force in every instance, to the church to which the hon. gentleman belongs himself. With reference to the statement that the notice was not given, I think the usual notice was given ; everybody had notice that desired to have notice. With reference to the question whether any other church should call themselves Roman or Roman Catholic, except the one church, I think there is more than one church calling themselves Catholic.

An hon. MEMBER. Only one.

Mr. SPROULE. I admit that hon. gentlemen may think that they alone have a right to the name, but that does not prevent others from using the name, as they certainly do. In my judgment therefore that is no serious objection to the Bill, and I do not think the argument which the hon. gentleman addressed to the House has any great force in it.

Hon. Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not propose to go into a discussion of this question on its merits. But the question was asked from my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) what objections there were to the use of the word Catholic in the title of this Act of incorporation. Well, I do not know that there is any serious objection, there does not appear to be in the House at any rate, and no Catholic ought to object to that word in any Act of incorporation when he sees the great popularity of that name to-day. It appears to me there is a good parallel between this case and a Bill I accidentally heard discussed in the legislature of my own province some three years ago. We have in the province of New Brunswick and in the maritime provinces, and all over Canada, a very prominent body of christians called Baptists. They were known as the Baptist Church. Some years ago they divided and formed two churches, Baptists still, but two distinct bodies. One portion, dissenting from the older body, took the name of the Free Christian Baptist Church and sought and obtained an Act of incorporation under that title. That new body divided again. A clergyman by the name of Osser, I think, differed in opinion from the majority, or, perhaps, as he claimed the minority of that body—I am not discussing that point—and he and his followers applied to the legislature of New Brunswick for an Act of incorporation. In asking for that Act of incorporation they wished to be designated by the name of the Free Baptist Church. While there was not much in the matter as they were Baptists too and no one could object that they should call themselves Baptists, when they came to the legislature for an Act of incorporation it was not the Catholic members that interfered but it was the Protestant members of the House. There was a very small number of Catholic members in the House and the whole debate was taken up by the Protestant members. They took the ground that while they were quite willing to give them an Act of incorporation, the use of the words 'Free Baptist' in the Bill would create confusion, and it was something that they had no right to use because the word 'Free' was in the Act of incorporation of both other branches of that same church. While they gave them their Act of incorporation, they would not consent to the use of the word 'Free' as proposed in the Bill. Therefore, I think my hon. friend can very well say that so far as the Galicians are concerned, being two distinct bodies so far as their religious belief is concerned, with this body applying for a charter to be incorporated into the Orthodox-Russo-Greek Catholic church for North America and the Aleutian Islands. I do not see why this House should add anything to its title in giving the charter that is sought for now, I think it would be very simple to leave the word 'Catholic' out.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only objection which was taken to the Bill in the New Brunswick legislature was that this new church proposed to call itself the Free Baptist and in so doing was in reality calling itself by a name which was used by one of the other branches of the Baptist Church. This division of the church was called the Free Baptist and the fact that it was using the word 'free' was objected to. It was the prefix that caused the trouble. In this case the name of the church is the Russo-Greek Catholic Church. There is no danger of any other body being confounded with that. I do not know whether our good friends the Episcopalians would call themselves the holy Catholic Church or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. They do it in the church service.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is the prefix that they used that caused the trouble.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The word 'free,' of course, was in the Bill which was before the House under consideration at that time, but the denomination that complained was not called the Free Baptist Church but it was called the Free Christian Baptist Church. They did not take the whole name, they used one word which was used in the title of the other church. In this case they are simply using a word here which does not belong to them.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. As to that point I have the catechism of the reverend gentleman who is asking to be incorporated under the name that he is known by, and there is no word 'Catholic' there, and in the United States where he has a legal status there is no word 'Catholic' in his title. Here he is known as the Most Reverend Tikhon, Bishop of the Orthodox Greek-Russian Church in North America. Why should he assume the name of Catholic because he crosses over the boundary and why should he ask to be called a Catholic.

Mr. L. P. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville. (Translation) Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word or two in connection with the Bill introduced by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver). From a mere perusal of this Bill, I think that two objections may be raised against this measure. And first of all, what strikes me is that it deals entirely with provincial matters. I do not see any reason why the right reverend bishop should not have petitioned the Manitoba legislature or the legislature of the Northwest Territories. The powers he is asking for are under the control and jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. As a matter of fact, what the Bill deals with is as to whether that Greek bishop may possess property in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. That is a question of civil law which is within the purview of the powers of the provincial legislatures; and from the fact that this Bill originates from the west, and is promoted by an hon. gentleman from the North-west Territories, I fail to see why this parliament should be more competent to deal with it than if we were called upon to deal with a petition coming from any bishop from the province of Quebec or Ontario. No bishop from Ontario or Quebec would ever think of coming before us and petitioning this parliament to obtain such powers, but would go before the provincial legislatures, which have adequate powers and jurisdiction to deal with this class of subjects. As I said, I do not see that there is anything in this Bill which warrants the promoters of it coming before this parliament, as it is a matter of property and civil law, which is relegated to the provinces.

Another objection which may be opposed to the passage of this Bill is this, that this reverend bishop is asking to be incorporated as a corporation sole. That is the most serious objection which can be urged against this Bill. We are asked to confer upon a stranger, who is a non-resident, who is not a British subject, all the powers and rights of a public corporation. Does it not strike you that such a demand is contrary to the whole scheme of our legislation? When we have to deal with a company incorporated by letters patent, are not the directors of that company, or at least a majority of them, required to be British subjects? Under this legislation, a stranger, who is living in San Francisco, is to be given the powers of a public corporation. I have no hesitation in saying that such a provision is at variance with the whole scheme of our legislation, and that we are creating a very bad precedent.

Let us take, for instance, the corporations which we have in the province of Quebec: Is not the government entitled to know what use they are making of their funds? Is it not a fact that the imperial government went to the length of inquiring as to the way in which the property of the Sulpicians was disposed of, and whether a portion of their revenues was sent over to Paris? Under this Bill, you are going to incorporate as a corporation sole, a gentleman who is living in San Francisco, and you are going to allow that stranger, who is a non-resident, because he is called upon to govern a church, to enjoy all the powers of a corporate body. I say again that such a Bill is contrary to the whole scheme and spirit of our legislation, and that, if we were to pass it into law, we should be encroaching upon the rights of the provinces.

Mr. CHARLTON. I rise for the purpose of calling attention to the definition of the word 'Catholic' as contained in Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, an authority in the United States and an authority universally received wherever the English language is spoken:

> Catholic—Universal or general.
> This epithet, which is applicable to the whole Christian church, or its faith.
> Not narrow minded, partial or bigoted; liberal; as, catholic tastes.
> Catholic epistles, the epistles of the apostles which are addressed to all the faithful, and not to a particular church; being those of James, Peter, Jude and John.
> Catholic. A person who accepts the creeds which are received in common by all parts of the orthodox Christian church.
> An adherent of the Roman Catholic Church; a Roman Catholic.

So we see by this, that this epithet or designation is applicable in the broadest sense to all churches; to all Christian believers, and indeed to all broad liberal tastes, and the argument raised by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) is one which I think he need not have troubled the committee with to such an extent. I do not think that any particular significance attaches to the use of this word 'Catholic' in connection with this Bill. It is merely a claim on the part of this church which applies for incorporation here that they are a Catholic, broad, liberal, true Christian church. That is their opinion, and whether we dissent from that opinion or not I do not know that we are debarred from allowing them the use of that title, which under this definition is so general in its character.

Mr. OLIVER. I did not expect to meet with opposition to this Bill at its present stage, and I am more than astonished at the character of the opposition. I take exception to the innuendo of the member for Provencher, that there was something remarkable or underhand in the introduction of this Bill. The House well knows that whatever might have been the intention of the promotors, certainly owing to the vigilance of the member for Provencher, there was no such thing as getting the Bill through its various stages without every one being thoroughly aware of all its provisions. Not only so, but it will surprise the House to know that the very objections that the hon. member has just urged: as to the introduction of the name of the Russian consul; as to the provision for accepting service of notice at Edmonton; in fact every one of these provisions which he alluded to as peculiar and upon which he asked the House to throw the Bill out, were introduced to meet the objections raised by the hon. gentleman himself in the Private Bills Committee. He was a member of the sub-committee which drafted these amendments, and it was fully expected by myself that when he had become a party to the amendments made by that subcommittee he would be content to allow the Bill to pass through this House. I am unable to characterize the position taken by the hon. member. I am sure I would be ruled out of order if I attempted to characterize it as I submit it deserves. In regard to the objection that the bishop is a non-resident, I may state that when the hon. member raised that objection in the committee, I said : 'Well if the dropping of the provisions regarding the incorporation of the bishop will remove your objections, we will incorporate only the parishes and missions.' It is an absolute necessity to the religious welfare of these people, as they understand it, to have the privilege of holding property in these parishes and missions. There can be no reasonable objection to that. The hon. member then objected to the name of the church. The committee was of opinion that they could meet his objection on that point, and also as to the incorporation of the bishop, and I fully understood they had met it. Allow me to point out that the Bill as introduced was an exact copy, so far as it would apply, of the Bill incorporating the Church of England bishop of Keewatin. In the original Bill, the church was referred to as the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church. The hon. gentleman objected to that name being used, and so we inserted in the Bill the words: 'The body commonly known as.' That was done in order to remove any possibility of parliament declaring that these people were either Catholic or Orthodox, It seems to me that once we assumed the position of merely giving them the name they ask for and carefully guard ourselves against any responsibility as to endorsing the rightful use of that name, we surely met all reasonable objection. We certainly met the objection which the hon. member raised at the time. As to the hon. gentleman asserting that as a Catholic he would refuse to accept that name in the title; let me state that I have here something that may ease his conscience. We often hear it said that certain people are more loyal than the King, and the hon. gentleman is more loyal to his church than the legislature of the Catholic province of Quebec ; for I find that in the statutes of Quebec 1868, chapter 55, there is an Act to authorize the ministers of the church 'calling themselves the Catholic Apostolic Church in the province of Quebec to solemnize marriages, &c.' Now, if the legislature of the province of Quebec finds no objection to the use of that title just as we are using it here by inserting the words, 'The people calling themselves'; surely there can be no objection to our doing so, and certainly we are not violating any man's conscientious scruples in doing so. So far as I am concerned, I would be the last man in this House to interfere with any one's conscientious convictions, and I have spoken for the purpose of relieving myself and relieving other members of the House from the imputation which the hon. member (Mr. LaRivière) so unjustly cast upon those who are advocating a measure of the simplest justice to a strange people who are in our country at the present time.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Two nice questions seem to have arisen under this Bill. One has been raised by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Demers) as to the power of this parliament to make a corporation sole of an entirely foreign body. Here is a bishop living in San Francisco, and we constitute him a corporate sole in Canada. Have we the power to do that ? The next question is that we are creating two corporations—a corporation aggregate and a corporation sole for the one purpose of exercising rights in Manitoba and the Northwest which come under the definition of 'civil rights and property' and so appertain to the provinces. The hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver) has missed altogether the point of the objection of my hon. friend (Mr. LaRiviere). He does not seem to see that this Russo-Greek Church which seeks incorporation has two leanings—one to the old Greek Church of Constantinople, and the other to the Latin Church of Rome. My hon. friend from Provencher wants to protect those who have a leaning towards the Church of Rome from the sole control of the Greek bishop of San Francisco and the Czar.

Mr. OLIVER. I take the liberty of saying that the hon. gentleman has entirely misapprehended the point of the hon. member from Provencher, and I call on the hon. member for Provencher to put him right.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. You had better explain your objection. I do not see it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. member for Alberta understands the point well enough. I asked the hon. member when he was on his feet what leaning the other half of the church had. He said towards the Latin Church of Rome. The moment the hon. gentleman said that I saw at once the object he had in this Bill. My hon. friend from Provencher did not want to give the control over the parishes and churches of this portion of them in Manitoba and the North-west Territories to any foreign potentate, like the Czar or the Bishop of the Greek Church. He wanted, if any powers were given at all, to give to his bishop at least equal powers to those claimed by the parties seeking incorporation. I would like to have the opinion of the Minister of Justice as to the power of this parliament to create a corporation sole of any person who is altogether a foreigner in this country, especially one whose sole object is the interference with civil rights and the possession of property in the provinces.

Mr. OLIVER. Before the Minister of Justice replies, I would like to point out that in the nature of things there is no such purpose in this proposed incorporation as has been indicated by the hon. member who has just sat down. The words which are used are used for the purpose of defining that this bishop and church shall not have any control whatever over any person who has even a leaning towards the Latin Church, the Church of Rome. The words 'Orthodox Russo-Greek' are used so that there shall be no question or mistake on that point. I decline to be understood as attempting to be a party to any transaction whereby an advantage would be taken——

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I do not accuse the hon. gentleman ; far from it.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. gentleman accuses me of doing it without knowing that I am doing it.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. I accuse the hon. member of not understanding what the ground of my hon. friend's opposition to the Bill is.

Mr. OLIVER. I must admit that I do not understand my hon. friend's opposition to the Bill ; but I point out that there is no such ground of opposition as that stated by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I will explain it to my hon. friend. There is a matter which I did not want to bring before the House ; but as I am compelled to do it, I will do it. Not far from the hon. gentleman's residence, near Edmonton, there was a concession of lands granted to a section of Catholic Galicians to build a church, and they did build a church, three trustees being appointed for the purpose, and the money being supplied by the Roman Catholics. Since then the three trustees have been induced to join the Greek Church, and have transferred the church to the so called Orthodox Greek Church. They have stolen the property of the Roman Catholics, and the matter is now sub judice. The very people who have prepared this Bill, and who want this parliament to recognize these Orthodox Greek Church people as Catholics, in order that they may retain this property which belonged to the Roman Catholics, are the solicitors against the Greek Catholics.

Mr. OLIVER. The hon. member is making a very broad statement. There has been a dispute between the two parties following the Greek rite in that part of the country. It is a case of Greek versus Greek. They both follow the same rite, but the one acknowledges the jurisdiction of the Pope and the other acknowledges the jurisdiction of the Czar. The circumstances are very much as stated by the hon. member for Provencher, except this, that it is the lack of such definite name and standing as is provided by this Bill applied to one or other of these bodies that makes the confusion that has occurred there possible. If the one body is incorporated under one specific and definite name——

Mr. CASGRAIN. It will get the church.

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. It will be possible then for those who object to that body to prove that they do not belong to it ; but it is very difficult for them to do so now, because neither of them have any name or standing in law, or the right to own property in this country.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Do you mean to say that those under the jurisdiction of the Roman Catholic Church have no legal right at all ?

Mr. OLIVER. They certainly have no recognized legal right given to them by statute in this country.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. It is not a different church at all. It is the Roman Catholic Church, and the Roman Catholic Church has rights, and can exercise them at any time.

Mr. OLIVER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. That is just where he is not very well informed. These people are not members of the Roman Catholic Church. They are members of the Greek Church united with the Church of Rome. They have their own ecclesiastical organization separate from the Church of Rome, under the headship of the Pope.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Might I ask who appoints the bishops of the people of whom the hon. gentleman has just spoken ?

Mr. OLIVER. I take it that they are appointed by the Pope. But allow me to point out that there is in Galicia a Roman Catholic organization distinct from the organization of the united Greek Church, although occupying exactly the same territory.

Mr. LEMIEUX. Is it not a fact that in the notices given by the bishop, before coming to this House, a different title was given to him from the one he assumes in the Bill ? I was present in the Standing Orders Committee when that question was discussed.

Mr. OLIVER. Certainly not. The title in the Bill is the title asked for in the notices.

Mr. BELCOURT. It seems to me that a great deal more trouble and fuss is made over this Bill than it really warrants. It is a matter of business, not of religion at all. I am not going to follow the example given by the hon. member from Provencher and indulge in religious dissertations. Not being very well informed, I might fall into some such egregious blunders as he has. Parliament does not recognize this particular church any more than it does any other religious body which has come here in the past asking for incorporation. The objection made here was made in the committee by my hon. friend ; and in order to meet his objection, these words were put in the Bill : 'The bishop of the religious community commonly known as the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church for North America.' In passing this Bill parliament does not in any way recognize that this is an Orthodox church or a Russian church or a Greek church. We simply recognize these people by the title they claim for themselves. The defining words in this Bill are 'Orthodox Russo-Greek.' There are people who call themselves Catholics, qualified by another adjective. The Roman Catholics cannot complain if the word 'Catholic' is used, but they can complain if the words 'Roman Catholic' are used. In order to meet the objection which is made by the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that this is an alien seeking incorporation in this country, the committee took great pains to limit the purposes for which this incorporation was granted. Looking at sections 2, 5 and 3 the House will at once see that the bishop himself, though he is constituted a corporation sole, is constituted for certain purposes only, which are well defined in section 2:

> For the uses and purposes of any parish and mission institution, college, school or hospital, now or after connected with the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church.

These are the powers he gets and no other. He cannot engage in business or do anything beyond what is mentioned in the four corners of the Bill.

In order to prevent this bishop from abusing his powers, in order to prevent his doing what the three trustees, of whom the hon. member for Provencher has spoken, have done, in order to prevent his taking over the property with him to another church, say the Catholic Church or any other church or disposing of the same for purposes other than those mentioned in the Bill, the committee required that whenever he shall convey property belonging to his church, he must do so in conjunction with the other trustees mentioned in the Bill. He has no other powers than those defined in the Bill, and they are clearly limited to the purposes mentioned in section 2.

I am not prepared to say that the objection made that this is properly a subject for provincial legislation is not a good one.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. Does this Bill invest this corporation sole with any property at present owned by the church.

Mr. BELCOURT. Not at all. I am glad the hon. gentleman reminds me of that, because the matter to which the hon. member for Provencher has made reference, namely, the disposition of the property by these three trustees. That matter is now sub judice, and the passage of this Bill would not affect it in the slightest degree. If any one can show me that it does, I will support the Bill. That matter to which the hon. member for Provencher refers is now in the courts, and this Bill has nothing to do with it.

I was saying that the subject is perhaps one which should more properly be dealt with by a provincial legislature. It is one which concerns exclusively property and civil rights. But I do not suppose that this society, which is asking for incorporation, should be treated differently from others. We have incorporated the Synod of the Diocese of Saskatchewan.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. When?

Mr. BELCOURT. In 1884. We also have incorporated the Roman Catholic Diocese of Ottawa.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is an exceptional case. It has jurisdiction in more than one province.

Mr. BELCOURT. Also the Episcopal corporation of Pontiac.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. That is likewise an exceptional case.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The first case mentioned by the hon. gentleman, the Diocese of Saskatchewan, we have jurisdiction over entirely, because it is in the Northwest Territories.

Mr. BELCOURT. We incorporated the Union of the Methodist churches.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. The bishop of Pembroke is in the unorganized territory over which we have jurisdiction.

Mr. BELCOURT. That may be. I am not dissenting from that view. I think that the powers of the Dominion parliament are brought into requisition in some cases when resort should have been had to a provincial legislature, but I thought at first sight that the cases I mentioned were cases in point. There is the Union of the Methodist churches, also incorporated in 1884. The present Bill may properly be a matter for provincial legislation, but we have created precedents to the contrary, and it seems to me that we ought not to make an exception in this case. As regards the name, the question for us to decide is whether the one chosen is likely to lead to confusion. If not, I cannot see any objection to it, and I propose to deal with this Bill as I would with that of any ordinary corporation seeking incorporation for business purposes. No one in the committee pointed out that there was any danger of any confusion. As far as I am concerned, being a Catholic, and a good one, notwithstanding the doubts expressed by the hon. member for Provencher, I cannot see why a Roman Catholic should have the slightest objection to this name. How anybody is going to confound the Orthodox Russo-Greek Catholic Church with the Roman Catholic Church is something beyond my comprehension.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. My hon. friend introduced into this House a Divorce Bill, and since then I have some doubts about his orthodoxy.

Mr. MARCIL (Bonaventure). This Bill, if I understand its title, refers more especially to Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Why was this legislation not sought for in the legislatures of Manitoba and the Territories ?

Mr. OLIVER. For the same reason that legislation is now on the statute-book for the incorporation of the bishop of Ottawa, because this diocese covers two provinces. He could have secured incorporation in each province. In this case the Bill covers Manitoba and the Territories, two different provincial organizations, and therefore we come here for incorporation.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. I have been appealed to in connection with this measure. I do not intend to discuss it from an ecclesiastical standpoint, because I recognize my limitations in that direction. It is proper for us to consider what this Bill is likely to lead us to before we vote in favour of it. When it first came up in the House, I thought that perhaps the proper course would have been to refer it to a select committee in order to ascertain whether or not we have any precedents in this country for a Bill of the sort. The right of a foreigner, an alien, to petition parliament is not recognized in the English system. My hon. friends will all remember the Cretan and the Boulogne cases. But in this country the practice has grown up of receiving petitions from aliens. As far as I can judge, that practice dates from 1878. On March 11th of that year, the attention of Mr. Speaker Anglin was called to a petition from some United States citizens interested in the Connecticut Mutual Insurance Company, praying for amendments to the Insurance Law, and after a very brief statement by Mr. Mackenzie, and without any discussion at all, Mr. Speaker Anglin decided that the petition would be received. It would appear from the brief debate, as reported in 'Hansard,' that those who spoke were under the impression that that was the English practice. I can state most emphatically that it is not. However, that practice, which was then initiated, has continued down to the present, and I suppose it would not lie in my mouth to claim that it should not be carried out in this instance.

But here is what I wish to direct the attention of the House to—that the petitioner here is not a foreigner who comes in here with certain British subjects to ask for incorporation. This is not a corporation aggregate at all, but a foreigner residing in San Francisco who will continue to reside there, and who asks you to create him a corporation sole with all the privileges of a corporation sole, he continuing to reside beyond your jurisdiction. That is the position you are placing yourselves in by adopting this Bill. Now, it is said the property is in your jurisdiction. But let us realize what the corporation is. A corporation aggregate is a person distinct and separate from the persons who compose the corporation. When the corporation is formed it is not merely the individuals who form it but a definite body that results from the bringing together of these persons. And if a corporation of that sort is formed in our country it resides here and is dealt with under our law. But here you have a corporation which is a fictitious person and distinct and separate from the individual incorporated ; but where that individual is the corporation remains. Now, what is this going to lead us to ? Here is this person residing in San Francisco, who would not have the right to be elected as a municipal councillor in this country, and whom you could not clothe with that right unless you amend the Naturalization Act ; and yet you are going to make him a corporation enjoying all the privileges in this country that are thus conferred.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Any set of foreigners could be made a corporation.

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. Yes, a set of foreigners can be made a corporation since 1878, in consequence of the ruling of that time. But the foreigners could not be created a corporation in England; and under the Joint Stock Companies' Act a set of foreigners cannot be created a corporation, the majority of the directors must be residents of this country. But I state these facts, and it is for the committee to consider them. My own view is that the Bill might have been more carefully considered by the Special Committee chosen for the purpose of dealing with it. I have not given the matter sufficient consideration to justify me in saying I have a fixed opinion on the subject, and to advise the committee either to adopt or to reject the Bill. This is a matter which ought to be carefully considered, and more careful consideration should have been given to it than I have been able to give to it. But these are my impressions, and, for what they are worth, I communicate to the committee.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The ingenuity of the gentleman who is opposing the passing of this Bill is certainly very remarkable. My hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. LaRivière) is known in the province from which he comes as a very able and ingenious man——

Mr. LaRIVIERE. Thanks.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. ——and he has given sufficient proof of his claim to that reputation in connection with this Bill; because, on every occasion when we have had this Bill before us, he has had an objection, and always a bran new one, and very plausible and very arguable objection. To-day he has brought forward an entirely new objection. And the proof of my hon. friend's ingenuity is still further seen in the fact that no two members of the House, apparently, agree as to what his objection really is. As to the point raised by the Minister of Justice, I desire to say a word. When the statement is made that the House is asked to incorporate a foreigner residing in San Francisco and give him power to hold property, he still residing outside our jurisdiction, that statement, naturally, is likely to startle the House. But, if the words 'outside the jurisdiction' be technically correct, substantially, I submit to my hon. friend, and in the sense in which the House would naturally understand it, they are not correct. For, as I understand it, provision is made in this Bill—my hon. friend will correct me if I am wrong—for service upon the corporation in the North-west Territories. Thus, the only object of having a resident in the North-west Territories is served by the fact that the Bill provides for the service of process in the North-west Territories, and, to all intents and purposes, with this provision inserted, the courts have jurisdiction to the same extent, in the same way and quite as effectively over this corporation, and in relation to any property that the church may hold, as if the bishop resided in Calgary or Edmonton. So there can be no substantial objection to incorporation on that ground. Now, so far as the suggestion is concerned that this ought to be reconsidered or sent again to a special committee, I submit that that is an unfair point to present at the present stage. When this Bill first came before the House, it was suggested by the hon. member for Provencher that the petitioner for incorporation was an alien, and that he resided in San Francisco. Thus, the House was then seized of that fact. Later on, the Bill came before the Committee on Private Bills, which is the proper committee to consider these questions. That committee discussed the objections raised by the hon. member for Provencher, dealt with them as has been stated by the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Oliver), met the objections one after another, provided for service upon the corporations within the North-west Territories, and reported the Bill to us so that it might receive the sanction of the House. And I submit that no person could listen to the discussion that has taken place upon this Bill without being satisfied that an unfair attempt is being made against these parties. I do not mean unfair in the sense of being outside the rights of members of parliament, but as being in the direction of depriving these people of the right of incorporation in such a way as to treat them differently from others who come here seeking a similar right. I submit that these people have the same right as others to assume a corporate name. And it makes no difference whether we personally approve of that name or not. If the hon. gentleman and others split off from the church to which he belongs, and desired to assume another name, no one would object to that; and if they asked parliament for the incorporation of the ecclesiastical body thus created no objection would be taken. It has been done scores of times in legislatures all over the British dominions. I submit that this will be the first time where any unfair and invidious distinction has been shown, and where people who simply come asking the right to hold property in accordance with the law have been denied that right by the law-making body. For, let it be understood that all that these people ask is the right to hold property in a corporate capacity. As was said by the hon. member for Alberta, who promoted the Bill before the Private Bills Committee, he was willing that the name of the bishop should be struck out and that the right to hold property should be given to the parishes or to a local organization. The committee did not accept that, but thought fit to report the Bill in its present form. Therefore, if the House or the committee refuses the Bill at the present time it will be taking the ground practically that it will refuse these people the right to hold property in a corporate capacity, a right which has not been refused to others and which should not be refused to those who are associated as a religious body under any name they choose to assume.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I cannot oppose this Bill, for the excellent reason that all the heads of the Roman Catholic orders reside outside this country. First, the head of our church does not live in this country, but in Rome. The heads of the Jesuit order live outside of this country, the heads of the Sulpician order live outside of this country—the heads of nearly all Roman Catholic orders live beyond our jurisdiction. The head of the Russo-Greek Catholic Church lives in San Francisco. I do not see any difference whatever between the Roman Catholic orders and this Russo-Catholic Church so far as the residences of the heads are concerned. I for one, as a Roman Catholic, do not see any objection to the Bill. As to the name, my hon. friend, on second thought, will admit there is nothing in that. There are many other churches who call themselves Catholic, and I do not see any objection to that. We are Roman Catholics, let us call ourselves Roman Catholics, and let us be proud of it, if we wish to. But let other people call themselves what they like. It is no shame to us if these people call themselves Catholics.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. The Minister of the Interior has charged me with opposing this Bill at almost every stage. Well, I did not oppose it merely for the sake of opposition. The fact that this Bill has been amended in almost every clause to meet my objections, is a proof that I was right in opposing it when it first came before the House. If I had wished to kill the Bill, to prevent its passage, I could have done so on the second reading, because the Bill was read the second time under a suspension of the rules. Though I knew my privilege, though I knew I could have stopped the second reading, I did not avail myself of that privilege nor prevent the legislation going through the House. My opposition to the Bill was not with a view of preventing its passage, because when I could have prevented its passage I did not do so. Now, in answer to the Minister of Public Works, let me say that my contention is this : This right reverend gentleman, Bishop Tikhon, who is living in San Francisco, is known under the name of the Bishop of the Orthodox Greek Russian Church in North America. This is his title in the catechism he has published, and that he sends to the flock with his blessing.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. Read it.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I will send it over to the hon. gentleman. Now while this church is known under the name of the Orthodox Greek Russian Church in San Francisco, in Seattle, and in fact everywhere else where it has parishes in the United States, why, after it crosses the boundary, should it assume that subtitle of Catholic in addition ? Why should it change its name when it comes across into Canada ? It must have been done for a purpose. I say if that is the official name of the bishop in the United States, I do not see why he should come here and ask to be incorporated under some other name. Evidently there must be some reason for it, he must have an object, and I think, I put my finger on it when I said a little while ago that there were two branches of the Greek Church in Manitoba and the North-west Territories. It was only to avoid a conflict between the two that I asked that this word ' Catholic,' which he does not bear in the United States and elsewhere, should be left out of the Bill, and that he should be acknowledged under the same title as he gives himself in one of his official books, the catechism published in San Francisco in 1901.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Under what name is it known in Russia ?

Mr. OLIVER. When the hon. gentleman said his name was so and so in San Francisco, he said it was something else in the state of California. Now what name is it in the state of California ?

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I said the church was incorporated in San Francisco under a different name.

On section 7,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There is an eighth clause. With regard to the eighth clause it is quite true, as the Minister of the Interior has said, that you could give this corporation a domicile in this country, although the person constituting the corporation may live outside the country. But it does not seem to me that the eighth clause does that very effectually.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I had not time to read the amendments, as they were just handed to me when I was speaking. I was told the provision had been made by the committee. It may be it is not effectually done.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not think it is very effectual. It says :

> The corporation sole shall have and maintain a head office at the town of Edmonton in the district of Alberta, and service of legal process at such head office shall be good and sufficient service of such process upon the corporation sole.

Well, the corporation sole may maintain a head office—that is an expression I never before heard of in connection with an ecclesiastical corporation—the ecclesiastical corporation is to have a head office in the town of Edmonton. However, passing by that curious word, suppose the ecclesiastical corporation does not happen to have a head office at Edmonton, where are you under this Bill ? The clause has not been drafted with sufficient care. It should go further and provide that in the event of the corporation sole not opening a head office in the town of Edmonton, service upon the corporation could be effected by service of process upon a priest or some person connected with the corporation in that particular district ; otherwise this clause 8 is of no service whatever. Or service might be effected by letter addressed to it, or by publication. The clause in its present shape is absolutely ineffectual, it seems to me ; and I would suggest it should be amended by stating that the domicile of the corporation shall be at such and such a place in this country, and that the head office—call it that—should be opened in that particular place, and that in default of such head office being opened, service on the corporation can be effected by service upon some priest, or by posting up the service in the town hall, or something of that kind.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Or that it shall have a registered address.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But it may not have a registered address.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. It may be required to have.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If you do require it, it may not observe that provision. You must have a provision that the service of the process may be made by posting it up, or by advertising it in the newspapers, or something of that kind.

Mr. BELCOURT. That is a matter of procedure.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But it must be dealt with by this Bill.

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not think it is necessary, because if the head office is stated to be at Edmonton, it will be for the provincial court to determine the manner of making a service.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman's argument is sound that the provincial courts can deal with the matter, it is perfectly clear that this parliament should have nothing to do with it. I do not know whether there is any procedure in the province of Manitoba or in the North-west Territories to cover a case of this kind. So far as the province of Nova Scotia is concerned I can say that there is no procedure that I am aware of to cover a case of this kind, and I suppose we are not to pass this Bill with an understanding that this provision is ineffectual unless we know something about the procedure of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. I do not think we should leave it to provincial enactment. We are doing a somewhat extraordinary thing when we incorporate a person who not only lives but proposes to live outside of the jurisdiction. It may be all right, but let us provide that he shall have his domicile inside the jurisdiction, and also provide some effectual mode of service upon him within the jurisdiction.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As a member of the committee which suggested this amendment to the Bill I may say that perhaps the wording may yet be somewhat improved. I think if the hon. member who has made this suggestion would agree to an amendment providing that a registered letter addressed to this corporation at the town or city where they happen to have their head office under this Bill would be a sufficient service the objections would be removed. Personally, I feel, that as long as this country recognizes the right to grant incorporation to these religious and semi-religious bodies, entitling them to hold property, I do not see why it should refuse to do so in this case. As there is a considerable number of these people in the North-west Territories, I think they should have the same privileges as all other people in this country and that an Act of incorporation should be given to them so that their religious bodies may be entitled to hold property for their own purposes. I agree with the suggestion made by the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) that it should be made clear that the only power we give under this Bill is the right of these people to hold property, and that carries with it the right to sue and be sued. This ought to be perfectly clear as the hon. leader of the opposition has pointed out. If any person has a claim against this church it must be perfectly clear that nothing in the Bill shall allow them to evade the laws of the country. The desire of the committee was that they should receive this Act of incorporation without doing an injustice to any other person, and that they should be held amenable to the laws of the country the same as any other person or corporation.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want the hon. gentleman (Hon. Mr. Sutherland) to understand me as objecting to the incorporation of any religious association. I thought at first that possibly there might be some objection to this Bill, because it would, as far as property is concerned at least, confer jurisdiction upon this bishop over persons who, though, perhaps of that particular church, nevertheless were under the jurisdiction of bishops appointed from Rome. I thought there might be something in that but I am not so familiar with these subjects as some hon. gentlemen who have spoken, and therefore, there seems to be nothing in the suggestion which has been made.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). Mr. Chairman, I think this discussion has shown that we should not go farther with the Bill, and therefore, I move, Sir, that you leave the chair.

Motion negatived.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR moved :

That section 8 be amended by adding the following words : 'Service of any writ, bill, legal process, notice or document whatsoever may be effectively made by mailing a copy thereof, duly registered, to the corporation by its name, as set forth in the first section of this Bill at the town of Edmonton, and by posting a copy thereof in the office of the Territorial Court in the said town of Edmonton.

He said : The mailing of a copy is not regarded by the legal profession as a very effective service, but the posting of a copy in the office of a clerk of the court is regarded as an effective service, because it will give notice to the clerk of the court and to lawyers doing business in the place where the notice is posted.

Mr. HYMAN. Mr. Chirman, I think I can make a suggestion which will cover the objection of the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax). I suggest that the usual clause be put in that if the construction of the diocese is not commenced within two years and completed within five years and 15 per cent of the capital expended the charter shall lapse.

Section, as amended, agreed to, and Bill reported.

Mr. OLIVER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LaRIVIERE. I beg to move, if I can get a seconder :

That this Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. DEMERS (St. John and Iberville). I will second that amendment.

House divided on the amendment (Mr. LaRivière).

Mr. LaRIVIERE.

BILL WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 127) to confer on the Commissioner of Patents certain powers for the relief of George M. Depew.

RELIEF OF SAMUEL NELSON CHIPMAN.

Bill (No. 163) for the relief of Samuel Nelson Chipman (Mr. Flint), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On the preamble.

Mr. CHARLTON. This Bill which I have in my hand entitled 'An Act for the relief of Samuel Nelson Chipman' calls upon me as a member of the House to act in a judicial capacity. I was not present at the trial of this case; I heard none of the testimony; I do not know whether that testimony was properly presented and duly weighed or not. I do not suppose that there is a member of this House who is called upon to act in a co-ordinate capacity with the Senate in this matter who is in a position to exercise judicial functions in this case properly. Of course I shall not move that this Bill shall not pass, but I protest as I have often protested against the method of granting divorces in this country. I say that we are not in a position to act judicially in this matter and that it is a scandalous thing—I use the word advisedly—it is a scandalous thing that this practice is adhered to in this Dominion of Canada. If a divorce is to be granted at all, of course the law must define what is the cause and what is the offence that will warrant the granting of that decree. If a divorce is granted because the provisions and requirements of the law have been transgressed, it is a question of evidence as to whether the party applying for the divorce is entitled to that divorce. I repeat that I know nothing about this evidence; I am in no position to act on this evidence as a judge ought act. The evidence comes to me in a sense in a hearsay way; I have not heard the evidence; I have not seen these parties arraigned ; I have not heard these parties questioned; I do not know what the method of carrying on this trial was, and I again repeat that if a divorce under any circumstances is proper to be granted; it should be granted by a legal tribunal. The whole system we have been pursuing in the Dominion since confederation is on a false basis, and I shall avail of the privilege, if I am spared another session, to bring a resolution before this House affirming the principle that the method of granting divorces in Canada is not a well-founded and proper method, and that if divorces are to be granted at all the law should define clearly what is the offence that will warrant the granting of the divorce, and that the case shall be referred to a proper legal tribunal.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 158) to incorporate the Union Life Assurance Company.—Mr. Ingram.

Bill (No. 144) to incorporate the Metropolitan Bank.—Mr. Belcourt.

Bill (No. 166) to incorporate the Securities Bank of Canada.—Mr. Calvert.

Bill (No. 167) respecting the Royal Marine Insurance Company.—Mr. Marcil (Bonaventure.)

THE DOMINION ASSOCIATION OF CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS.

Mr. GALLIHER. I would ask leave to present the 10th report of the Select Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills regarding the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants, and move that it be received.

Mr. CLARKE. I do not desire to offer any opposition to the Bill. I was present a short time at the meeting of the committee this morning. There was a discussion going on between parties interested on each side and there seemed to be a desire to arrive at a satisfactory compromise. Was such a compromise reached ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I think so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I know that there is a great deal of opposition to the Bill. I have had a number of telegrams and communications with reference to it. It is claimed that there are already companies chartered under this same title, and objection is made to any other company being chartered under that name. I was not able to attend the meeting this morning, and I do not know what decision was arrived at, but if no satisfactory decision was reached between those who are opposing and those who are promoting the Bill, it should stand over for further consideration.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question before the House is whether the report be received or not.

Mr. BELCOURT. As being in charge of the Bill and present at the committee, I may say that the subject was fully considered in committee, and so far as I understood, all the objections which any of those interested had to make were withdrawn.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Were there any amendments made ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Victoria, N.S.) I was present at the meeting this morning. I had been undecided how I should vote on this Bill, but when I saw such eminent counsel as Mr. Blake and Mr. Thomson, of Toronto, and many others, who appeared before the committee, come to an agreement among themselves and allow the Bill to pass harmoniously without an objection at all, I made up my mind to support the Bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the hon. member have leave to present the report.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BELCOURT moved that Bill (No. 160) to incorporate the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants be placed on the Order paper for immediate consideration, and that the House go into committee on the said Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I thought there were some amendments to be made to satisfy those who were opposed to the Bill.

Mr. GALLIHER. As chairman of the committee, allow me to inform the hon. gentleman that in the committee this morning the suggestion was made that certain names be added from the province of Ontario, but after due consideration, the parties on both sides practically came to an understanding, and the Bill passed without any amendment whatever except some amendment of a clerical kind in the punctuation. The Bill went through without opposition, and the parties who were present to suggest amendments, said everything was perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Did those who were representing associations, incorporated under provincial laws, assent to the Bill in its present shape ?

Mr. GALLIHER. Yes.

Motion agreed to, and House went into committee on the Bill.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I would like to repeat the question put by the hon. the leader of the opposition. Is it understood that the parties objecting to the Bill have withdrawn their objections ?

Mr. BELCOURT. I understand so.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If it is clearly understood that those who appeared before the committee have withdrawn their objections, I have no more to say.

Mr. CLARKE. I may say to the hon. Finance Minister that I have seen the gentleman who acted for the parties opposed to the Bill, and he says that all the objections have been withdrawn on the understanding that clause 3 is amended by making some changes in the punctuation as it appeared in the original Bill.

On section 3,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This clause appeared to have been subjected to some amendment in the punctuation. I do not know that there is very much use in changing the punctuation. I would suggest that the words 'such others' be struck out on the fourth line and in place thereof be substituted the words 'any other persons.' This makes better English and the meaning clearer.

Amendment agreed to.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

QUESTIONS.

SHIPMENTS OF MUTTON.

Mr. HACKETT asked:

1. Is the government aware that Ebenezer Wheatley, of Charlottetown, P.E.I., made two shipments of mutton in November, 1898, from Halifax to London, in cold storage, by ss. 'Halifax' and ss. 'City of St. John,' of the Furness-Withy Company's line?

2. Is the government further aware that both of these shipments reached their destinations in bad order, the meat being rotten, and was ordered to be burned by the health authorities of London, at the expense of the shipper?

3. Were the boats of this company subsidized by the government, and required to provide cold storage; and if so, under whose supervision was it done, and what guarantee was held by the government that such cold storage would be efficient?

4. Is it the intention of the government to see that Mr. Wheatley is indemnified for his loss on those shipments?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher):

1. No.

2. No.

3. Yes. The subsidy was granted under the supervision of the Department of Agriculture.

4. A clause in the steamship companies agreements states that neither the government nor the steamship owners shall be responsible for the cargo in cold storage from any cause whatever, but that every reasonable precaution shall be taken by the steamship companies to protect the cargo. The report with regard to this contract made to the department was that the Furness-Withy Company were not providing the accommodations as agreed, and they were required to refund a portion of the amount.

P.E.I. RAILWAY—SOUTHPORT TO MURRAY HARBOUR.

Mr. HACKETT asked:

1. Were tenders, by public advertisement, invited for the construction of the railway from Southport to Murray Harbour in the province of Prince Edward Island?

2. If so, was it by notice in the public press or by posters?

3. If by notice in the press, in how many papers was it inserted? What were the names of the papers, number of times inserted, and dates of issue?

4. How many tenders were received, the names of tenderers, and the amount of their offers, respectively?

5. To whom was the contract awarded?

6. Does the contract include the entire cost of grading, bridge building, track laying, ballasting, erecting station buildings, and all other expenses incidental to completing the line?

7. When will said railway be complete, according to contract?

8. Has the government decided as to whether the southern terminus of the railway will be at Murray River Bridge or Murray Harbour south?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Hon. A. G. Blair):

1. Yes, tenders were invited for about 11½ miles of the branch railway on the Prince Edward Island Railway from Mutch's Point towards Murray harbour, on the 15th of December, 1899.

2. By newspaper advertisement.

3. It was inserted in five newspapers in New Brunswick and five in Prince Edward Island. The names of the newspapers are as follows: New Brunswick, 'Telegraph,' St. John; 'Globe,' St. John; 'Gazette,' St. John; 'Railway News,' St. John; 'Transcript,' Moncton. Prince Edward Island, 'Patriot,' Charlottetown; 'Examiner,' Charlottetown; 'Guardian,' Charlottetown; 'Pioneer Journal,' Summerside; 'Islander,' Charlottetown.

Number of times advertisement was inserted is as follows: St. John 'Telegraph,' seven insertions; St. John 'Globe,' seven insertions; St. John 'Gazette,' seven insertions; St. John 'Railway News,' one insertion; Moncton 'Transcript,' eight insertions.

Advertisements sent out from Moncton on 15th December, 1899, up to and including 23rd December.

In Prince Edward Island newspapers, advertisements inserted from 15th November, to 18th December, 1899, as follows: 'Patriot,' Charlottetown; 'Examiner,' Charlottetown; 'Guardian,' Charlottetown; every other day or fourteen insertions each. 'Pioneer Journal,' Summerside; 'Islander,' Charlottetown; weekly, or four insertions each. The 'Transcript' published the advertisement on the following dates: December, 1899; 15th, 16th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd and 23rd. In the information received from Moncton, there is nothing to show the dates of insertion in other papers.

4. Five tenders were received as follows: From George E. Full, Willard Kitchen, John W. McManus, J. B. McManus, Thomas Campbell. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman what any of the offers would be. There was a schedule of prices, which have not been made up, or which I have not been able to procure from Moncton.

5. To John W. McManus, but on account of severe illness and consequent inability to conduct the work, the contract was cancelled, by Order in Council, and was awarded to the next lowest tenderer, W. Kitchen.

6. The contract does not include tracklaying, ballasting, nor erecting station buildings, but it covers the cost of grading, bridgebuilding and all other expenses incidental to completing the line to subgrade.

7. The date for completion named in the contract is December 31st, 1900, for the 11½ mile section, but it has been extended to July, 1902.

8. No, the government has not fully decided where the southern terminus of the railway will be.

Hon. Mr. HAGGART. If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I would like, in order that I may understand the answer, to ask the minister whether he said that the prices were not made up yet in these contracts ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said they had not yet been received from Moncton, though I had called for them. I put off answering the question hoping to receive them, but have not received them yet. I presume that they would be made up in order to decide the tender, but I have not the information from Moncton.

NEWCASTLE POST OFFICE—RESIGNATION OF MR. RICKARD.

Mr. WARD asked :

1. Has William Rickard resigned the position of postmaster at Newcastle, Ontario ?
2. If so, when was such resignation received ?
3. Has his resignation been accepted ?
4. If so, when ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). Mr. William Rickard, postmaster of Newcastle, Ontario, tendered his resignation of that office on the 3rd of March last. He wrote again on the 29th April, urging the acceptance of his resignation, and it was accepted on the 2nd instant.

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA, 1902.

Mr. ROSS (Ontario)—by Mr. Schell—asked :

1. How many immigrants have come to Canada from January 1st to May 1st, 1902 ?
2. How many arrived each month since January 1st, 1902 ?
3. What is their nationality ?
4. In what part of Canada did they settle ?
5. Has the government any knowledge of the amount of money brought into the country by said immigrants ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Hon. Clifford Sifton).

1. 24,122.

2. January, 1373 ; February, 1,997 ; March, 7,583 ; April, 13,169.

3. British, 5,164 ; Continent of Europe, 7,478 ; American, 11,480.

4. Returns to the first of May are not complete. Up to the first of April the proportion is approximately as follows :—Maritime provinces, 4 per cent ; Quebec, 9 per cent ; Ontario, 12 per cent ; Manitoba, British Columbia and the Territories, 75 per cent.

5. The value of settlers effects entered at customs ports during the first four months of the present calendar year is $1,261,289, which, according to the records, are almost entirely those of immigrants from the United States. Thus the average per head, including men, women and children, is over $109. The amount of money in the possession of immigrants from the United States is not of record, but correspondence in the department shows the amount is considerable.

Regarding the amount of money possessed by immigrants coming from the British Isles and the Continent, the department has no means of ascertaining definitely the amount possessed by them. In connection with bonuses paid, the only class regarding whom there is a restriction as to money are those who come from a portion of Austria and with respect to them it is found that for the past two years the amount possessed by them, as shown by the returns of moneys exchanged at the seaport from which they sailed, averages from $50 to $200 each. If all Continental and British immigrants are possessed of a similar average, which is a reasonable conclusion as many of those who come from England as well as other countries are possessed of a very large amount of money, the total amount possessed by those who have arrived during the past four months at Canadian seaports and who were destined for points in Canada, would be not less than $1,264,200.

POSTMASTER, BATHURST TOWN, N.B.

Mr. EMMERSON—by Mr. Campbell—asked :

1. Is the Postmaster General aware that the postmaster at Bathurst Town, N.B., Mr. Henry Bishop, allows persons outside the government employ to use the post office as a place of business ?

2. Does the Postmaster General know that the post office at Bathurst Town is kept closed from 12.30 until 2 o'clock every day, to the inconvenience of the public ?

3. Does the Postmaster General know that the postmaster at Bathurst Town frequently permits outsiders to lounge for hours inside the delivery and assorting room, and in touch with mail matter to and from the office ?

4. Does the Postmaster General know that the postmaster, as agent for American club men, frequently absents himself from his office without leave, and leaves the same in charge of a young girl or boy, who are incompetent ?

5. Is the Postmaster General aware that, as a result of the postmaster of Bathurst being agent for American fishing clubs, the post office has been the scene of several unseemly broils between the postmaster, the river guides, and American anglers ?

6. Should these charges be formulated, will an investigation be granted ; and if proved, will Postmaster Bishop be dismissed ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock).

1, 2, 3, 4 and 5. No.

JUNIOR JUDGE FOR LEEDS AND GRENVILLE.

1. Has a junior judge been appointed for the united counties of Leeds and Grenville ? If so, who ?

2. If no appointment has been made, is it the intention of the government to make an early appointment there, and whom ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). No one has been appointed to the vacant judgeship. An appointment will in all probability be made in the early future.

THE COASTING TRADE OF CANADA.

On the order for :

Resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Fitzpatrick that Bill (No. 165) repecting the coasting trade of Canada be now read a third time, and the proposed motion of Mr. Charlton in amendment thereto, Amendment negatived, and main motion agreed to.

Bill read the third time and passed.

HALIFAX INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL, AND ST. PATRICK'S HOME, HALIFAX.

Bill (No. 152) further to amend the provisions of chapter 183 of the Revised Statutes with respect to the Halifax Industrial School and St. Patrick's Home at Halifax, (The Minister of Justice), read the second time, and House went into committee thereon.

On section 1.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What change was made in respect to the age of offenders ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE (Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick). The only change made is to increase from sixteen to eighteen years the age at which a boy may be incarcerated. and to decrease the period of incarceration from two years to one. At present the period may be not exceeding five years and not less than two. The change makes it not less than one year.

On section 2,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). What is the effect of the section repealed ?

The MINISTER OF JUSTICE. The original statute, section 62, of chapter 183, was amended by section 35, of chapter 37, of the statutes of 1890. Section 35, chapter 37, of the statutes of 1890 provides :

Section 62 of the said Act is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor :. 'No such sentence shall be pronounced unless or until provision has been made by the municipality, within which such conviction is had, out of its funds, for the support of boys so sentenced, at the rate of not less than sixty dollars per annum for each boy.'

The legislature of Nova Scotia has provided that the maintenance of these boys or girls, as the case may be, shall be contributed half by the municipality and half by the province.

Bill reported; read the third time, and passed.

FRUIT MARKS ACT AMENDMENT.

House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 136) to amend the Fruit Marks Act, 1901.—The Minister of Agriculture.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I may say that I am quite willing to move that these amendments be agreed to, but, in consequence of these amendments, I think some verbal alterations will have to be made in section 10. The first amendment is to section 2 of the Bill, which was passed by this House. In addition to the words 'No. 1' the senators want to put in 'or XXX' which I think is quite right. That comes in the fourth line of section 6 of the original Act. Then, the senators, move in amendment to section 10 to strike out the word 'inspectors.' Section 10 of the Act says:

Every person who wilfully alters, effaces or obliterates wholly or partially, or causes to be altered, effaced or obliterated, any inspector's marks on any package which has undergone inspection, shall incur a penalty of forty dollars.

I have no objection at all to that, but I wish to insert, after 'who' in the first line of section 10, the words 'not being an inspector,' so as to provide that an inspector may efface certain marks when he finds that they have been wrongfully placed upon a package. Otherwise this amendment would interfere with section 9 of the same Act. I therefore move :

That these amendments be concurred in, but that in section 10 of the said Act, in the first line, after the word 'who,' the words 'not being an inspector' be inserted.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—STRIKE AT KINGSTON LOCOMOTIVE WORKS.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Hon. W. S. Fielding) moved that the House go again into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I would like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Mulock) to the dispatches which appeared in the morning papers as to the continuation of the strike amongst the employees of the locomotive works at Kingston. I notice a dispatch in the Montreal 'Gazette' to-day dealing with the matter, and it is as follows :

Ottawa, May 11—(Special).—A report which comes from Kingston is to the effect that aliens are being imported into that town to take the place of striking machinists in the locomotive works. It is said that these aliens are employed on the locomotives which are being constructed there for the Intercolonial Railway. The attention of the government will probably be called to the report to-morrow.

In this morning's 'Citizen' there is a more lengthy despatch, as follows :

Kingston, May 11—(Special).—No settlement has yet been arrived at between the striking machinists and the Kingston locomotive works. The company, contrary to the provisions of the alien labour law, is importing foreigners to take the place of the strikers to do work on government contract locomotives. Ralph Smith, M.P., president of the Dominion Trades and Labour Congress, was agreed upon as arbitrator of the conflicting interests, but the company refused to be bound by his decision; therefore, Mr. Smith refused to act further.

Mr. Robert Glockling, of the Ontario Labour Bureau, has been here at the instance of Hon. Frank Latchford, Minister of Public Works, to endeavour to bring about a settlement, but has been unsuccessful. Mr. Glockling, it is said, has reported to his minister that the company is entirely to blame, and if a speedy settlement is not made, the chances of the Liberal candidate, Mr. E. J. B. Pease, for re-election, are decidedly slim.

Mr. Arthur W. Holmes, organizer of the International machinists' union, is still here looking after the interests of the strikers.

It is understood that the Minister of Labour, Hon. Wm. Mulock, will step into the breach at the solicitation of the machinists and depute Mr. Mackenzie King, Deputy Minister of Labour, to visit the city to enforce the alien labour law, and also strive to effect an immediate settlement of the differences.

I would like to ask the right hon. leader of the government or the hon. Minister of Labour what special effort has been made to prevent the importation of aliens into Kingston to do work in connection with these locomotives, and if their attention has been drawn to the fact that aliens are coming in, and also to know if the hon. Minister of Labour has moved in the direction of sending his deputy up to try and bring about a settlement of the dispute which so unhappily exists between the machinists and their employers. It seems to me, that, in view of the fact that the government gave a contract for twenty locomotives, without tender, to the locomotive works at Kingston, they are specially called upon to see that in carrying out a contract of this kind, union wages are paid to the men engaged in the work. If the statements made in both of these papers are true, I submit respectfully that it is a duty incumbent upon the government to see to it that the men who are out on strike for a fair wage shall not be handicapped by aliens being permitted to take their places in contravention of the Alien Labour Act. I would like to have a statement from the First Minister, or from the Minister of Labour, as to what has been done already and as to what the government intend to do in the future in reference to the matter.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Hon. Wm. Mulock). The government has received no information from any source that there is any infraction of the Alien Labour Act, at Kingston or that such infraction is intended. Neither the government nor any member of it, nor the Department of Labour, has beeen asked to intevene by either party for the settlement of the dispute, and until invited it would not be likely to produce any good results should the department intervene.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

THE COMING INTERCOLONIAL CONFERENCE.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Speaker. Before you leave the Chair I would like to refer to the subject of the approaching conference in London at which all the representatives of the self-governing colonies are to meet in conference with His Majesty's government. The correspondence which has taken place between the Canadian government and His Majesty's government has already been brought down, and it has been referred to in parliament on one or two occasions. I think it well to refer to the terms of that correspondence, and to point out certain facts in connection with the attitude which the Prime Minister has taken with respect to the subjects which are to be discussed. The first document which appears on the file brought down to the House, is a letter from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor General and is as follows :

My Lord,—It has become my duty to inform you that the Coronation of His Most Gracious Majesty King Edward VII. has been fixed to take place on the 26th of June, 1902. It is His Majesty's desire that the great self-governing colonies of the empire should be represented on this occasion by their leading statesmen, and I have accordingly to request you to be so good as to convey to the Premier of Canada our invitation, on the part of His Majesty's government, to visit this country in June next. It is not anticipated that the duration of the actual ceremonies in connection with the Coronation will extend beyond a few days, but it would probably be convenient to Sir Wilfrid Laurier to arrive in England a few days beforehand, and His Majesty's government hope therefore that he will consider himself their guest for a fortnight from the date of his arrival. It would be an additional satisfaction to them if Sir Wilfrid Laurier should be accompanied by some lady member of his family. It will be readily understood that on an occasion like this it is necessary that all arrangements should be made some months in advance, and without therefore desiring to press for an immediate answer, His Majesty's government would be glad to learn at Sir Wilfrid Laurier's early convenience whether it will be in his power to accept their invitation. The question of representative detachments of troops from the various colonies is also under the consideration of His Majesty's government, and whenever a decision has been arrived at on this subject I shall address you in a further despatch.

The next document is a cablegram from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to His Excellency the Governor General, dated London, Jan. 23, 1902, and is as follows :

Mr. Chamberlain to Lord Minto.

London, January 23, 1902.

It is proposed by His Majesty's government to take advantage of the presence of the premiers at Coronation to discuss with them the questions of political relations between the mother country and the colonies, Imperial defence, commercial relations of the empire and other matters of general interest.

Should your ministers desire to submit definite proposals or resolutions on any of the above questions or should they wish to suggest any further subject for discussion, I should be glad to be informed of purport by cable in order that the other governments can be communicated with.

With view to proposed conference, hope your premier will be able to remain for a short time, say three weeks, after ceremony, as the guest of His Majesty's government.

Please telegraph reply. Despatch follows.

(Signed) CHAMBERLAIN.

To that the following answer was sent by His Excellency the Governor General, on February 3, 1902.

Lord Minto to Mr. Chamberlain.

Ottawa, February 3, 1902.

Referring to your despatch of the 27th December, my government accepts invitation extended to Prime Minister to attend Coronation. He expects to sail about 10th of June, accompanied by Lady Laurier, but exact date cannot yet be fixed.

Referring to the several questions mentioned in your despatch of 23rd January, the only one which in the opinion of my ministers, gives promise of useful discussion is that of the commercial relations between the various sections of the empire. The political relations now existing between the mother country and the great self-governing colonies, and particularly Canada, are regarded by my ministers as entirely satisfactory, with the exception of a few minor details, and they do not anticipate that in the varying conditions of the colonies, there can be any scheme of defence applicable to all.

In the opinion of my ministers, there is thus but a limited range of subjects upon which the contemplated conference can be productive of useful action. Nevertheless my ministers realize the desirability of taking advantage of every opportunity for the discussion by the public men of the mother country and the colonies of questions of Imperial interest, and Canada's representative will be prepared to give respectful consideration to any proposals that may be submitted by His Majesty's government or by the representatives of other colonies.

It is to be noted that the despatch promised by the communication from the Secretary of State for the Colonies of the 23rd January, 1902, has not yet arrived in Ottawa so far as I understand the situation. I made inquiry in regard to that only a few days ago, and I was informed by the right hon. Prime Minister that no further communication had been received from the imperial government up to that time. Now, the government of Canada have laid it down in their answer to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, that there is practically only one subject on which any useful discussion can take place, and they state that that subject is the question of the commercial relations between the various sections of the empire. I do not know whether or not the answer which has been sent by the government has had the effect of breaking off the correspondence with the imperial authorities on this subject. One would be inclined to take that view, inasmuch as the despatch promised in the cable message of the Secretary of State for the colonies has not yet arrived.

With regard to the various subjects mentioned by the Colonial Secretary as suitable subjects for discussion, I wish to say, so far as the question of imperial defence is concerned, that there seems to be no reason why this government should not discuss that question with the imperial authorities. As I have pointed out before in this House and in other places, I am ready to uphold as strongly as any one, the necessity of the control by Canada of the expenditure of our public moneys and of the question of imperial defence relating to Canada. But holding this view, I see no reason why we should not be open to discuss that question with the imperial authorities. There are three possible futures before this country. One is existence as an independent nation ; another is absorption in or annexation to the United States of America ; the third is a continuance of the relations which at present exist between Canada to the mother country. The last is the future condition of this country to which I for one look forward as likely to be permanent ; and so long as the tie which binds us to the mother country continues to exist, it seems to me that we must take into consideration the question of the defence of this country ; and in connection with that, there is no reason why we should not at least discuss with the mother country, when invited in a courteous way to do so, the question of imperial defence.

We must not shut our eyes to the fact that we participate in all the benefits and advantages resulting from the existence of the British army and navy and the influence which they make felt throughout all the world. We, as British subjects, hold ourselves entitled to the protection of the British flag in every corner of the world. While that condition of affairs continues, while we enjoy these rights, while we have the advantages which the British consular system gives us, there seems no good reason why we should not at a conference of this kind say to the mother country in a courteous way that we are prepared, while reserving to ourselves all possible liberty of action, to discuss that subject or any other subject which the mother country suggests for consideration.

Coming more particularly to the subject which this government say they do propose to discuss at the conference, that is, the question of the commercial relations between the different portions of the empire, I wish to take the time of the House for a few moments in reviewing the position which the two great political parties in this country have taken during the past five or six years with regard to that question.

In the first place, I take it that all public men in this country have conceded that it would be a great advantage to Canada to enjoy a preference in the markets of the mother country. I could weary the House, if I desired to do so, with very voluminous extracts from the speeches of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House with regard to that subject; but I will content myself by referring merely to one or two which I have under my hand. In the campaign of 1896, the Prime Minister, in speaking of preferential trade, said:

> Just see what a great advantage it would be to Canada if the wheat, cheese and butter, which we would send to England should be met in England with a preference over similar products of other nations. The possibilities are immense.

The present Minister of Customs, on the 27th of April, 1897, in this House said:

> Every one will admit if Canada can obtain a preference in the markets of Great Britain, Canada would be very glad to receive it, and every legitimate means put forward to secure that would be hailed with pleasure by both sides.

The hon. gentleman who sits for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said in this House on the 23rd of March, 1896:

> If we could have preferential treatment in the English market for our breadstuffs, a preferential treatment sufficiently pronounced to amount to a substantial advantage, it would be a dream that would go a long way towards reconciling the people of this country to such an arrangement.

That is an arrangement, as I understand it, for preferential trade within the empire. Then, the present Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) has more than once, I think, expressed his view that a system of preferential trade would be of advantage to this country; and the present premier of Ontario, the Hon. George W. Ross, has in very strong terms on more than one occasion dwelt at great length upon the considerable advantages that would accrue to this country from a preference in the markets of the mother country.

Now, granting that such a preference would be of advantage to this country, the next question that presents itself to our minds is as to the practicability of procuring such a preference as part of a scheme of mutual preferential trade within the empire. The record of the hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches is not a very consistent record with regard to that particular branch of the subject. Up to a recent period the right hon. leader of the House, speaking for the party he leads, expressed the belief that this was an entirely practicable scheme. For example, on the 17th of March, 1896, shortly previous to the election at which his party came into power, he used the following language:

> My hope is—nay, my conviction is—that on the 23rd June, the Liberal party will be at the head of the polls, and that it will be the Liberal party with its policy of a revenue tariff that will send commissioners to London to arrange for a basis of preferential trade.

It is quite clear that the right hon. gentleman, having these views and making that pledge to the country on behalf of his party, thought it was perfectly practicable to secure and carry out a scheme of preferential trade within the empire. He entertained the same opinion even at a later date, because on the 19th of July, 1899, in this House, he used the following language:

> I say at once it is the duty of the government of Canada by all means in its power and as soon as it is possible to do so, to get preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain.

The Minister of Finance and the hon. member for North Norfolk, in 1896 and 1897, expressed their belief that the obtaining of such a preference was impossible, but they were not in a position to speak for the Liberal party in the same way in which the Prime Minister spoke; and therefore we must assume that up to 1899, at least the Prime Minister regarded the proposition as a practicable one.

The next question is to what extent and in what way has the government carried out the pledge which was made by the leader of the House in the campaign of 1896, immediately before the election at which his party came into power? Let us run very briefly over the legislation which has taken place with regard to mutual preferential trade since that date.

In 1897, the government introduced legislation by which a preference was offered to 'all countries throughout the world which admitted the products of Canada on terms which on the whole are as favourable to Canada as the terms of the Canadian reciprocal tariff are to the countries to which it may apply.' This legislation was put forward in debate by some members of the government as not being a preference to the mother country at all, but as a step towards free trade and nothing more. For example, the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, speaking on the 26th of April, 1897, said :

> But I say with respect to the offer we now make that it is not a preferential offer at all in the true legal sense of the word. That offer is open to all the world. The Americans may avail themselves of it and so may the Germans and the Belgians. The whole world are welcome to avail themselves of it.

Afterwards in the same debate, he said :

> I tell the hon. gentleman (Mr. McNeill) that this is an offer of preferential trade to all countries that are qualified to come in.

His whole argument went to show that this really was not an offer of preferential trade to the mother country, but a step towards the accomplishment of a policy of free trade in this country.

Sir Louis Davies, then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, took the same ground. He said :

> The premier took that stand which the Finance Minister took, which every member of the cabinet took and holds to-day, that these treaties did not apply and did not bind Canada. The premier took the stand, which is now carried out in every customs-house in Canada, that these treaties do not bind Canada, and that German and Belgium goods are not entitled to preferential treatment because of these treaties. You cannot read anything of that kind into this proposal, and it is a violently forced construction to say that the resolution does. . . . . It attaches no terms which are not common to Great Britain and to all countries.

The view which the right hon. gentleman himself put forward in the debate did not quite agree with that which his colleagues expressed and which I have just quoted. The right hon. gentleman said on the 28th of May, 1897 :

> We had to look around in the world as to see what countries would be admitted under this preferential tariff, and having looked over the world, from the one pole to the other, we saw only one nation in a position to take advantage of that tariff, and that was Great Britain and possibly New South Wales

In this connection, I may say, that it was pointed out to the government on that occasion that the German and Belgium treaties prevented this government from passing that legislation in such a way as to exclude those countries from the preference. The right hon. gentleman admitted that this legislation was intended practically as a preference to the mother country, but the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding), the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) and other members of the government stoutly insisted this was not the case, and, therefore, that the German and Belgium treaties offered no obstacle whatever, and as a proof of the soundness of their views they pointed to the fact that the custom houses in this country were then granting the preference to goods from Great Britain and were denying it to goods from Germany and Belgium. It is needless to reply that the view of these hon. gentlemen proved to be entirely unfounded, and this government was finally compelled to refund to the importers of goods from Germany and Belgium, imported before the German and Belgium treaties were denounced, every dollar of additional duty which had been collected on these goods over and above those collected on imports from Great Britain. In short the law officers of the Crown pronounced against the view put forward by this government, and the goods imported from Germany and Belgium became, until the treaties were denounced, entitled to the benefit of the preferential tariff. The German and Belgium treaties were denounced by the imperial government, and in the following year, 1898, as a result of that action, the preference was put in a shape, which the government in 1897 said they did not intend it to assume. It was put in the form of a preference to certain named portions of the British Empire and such other portions of the empire as should enact tariffs which, on the whole, were as favourable to Canada as was the tariff of Canada to the products and manufactures of these particular countries. In that position the tariff stands at present.

Having thus granted a preference to the mother country, let us look at the results both as regards the mother country and our trade relations with Germany and Belgium, more particularly Germany. In the first place, the German government has continued to extend to all portions of the British Empire, except Canada, the most-favoured nation treatment, which admits the products of those portions of the empire under the minimum German tariff, while the products of Canada are subjected to the maximum tariff of that country. So far as we know from any documents ever laid on the Table of this House, this course has practically been assented to by our government. In fact the hon. Minister of Finance, in reply to the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Bell) last year, almost justified the action of Germany in excluding Canada from the more favoured nation treatment. I wish to point, if it has not already been brought to the attention of this government, to what was said by Lord Salisbury when he caused these treaties to be denounced. In the language of Lord Salisbury, those treaties were denounced in the general interests of the empire—a fact to which the attention of this government does not seem to have been directed—but the result of the denunciation of those treaties, in the general interests of the empire, has been to exclude Canada from the benefit of the most-favoured nation treatment, which to every other portion of the empire has since been granted by Germany. There can be no doubt about that, and it is a remarkable thing in this connection that we are obliged to go to the papers laid before the parliament of Australia for the purpose of getting information on this point. We have asked this government in vain on more than one occasion to lay the papers relating to this matter on the Table, and it is only by going to the papers laid on the table of the Australian Senate, as far back as November, 1901, that we are able to understand the situation with regard to this particular subject and other cognate matters which directly affect the interests of this country. To get the necessary and proper information, which will enable us to understand whether or not the action of this government has been in the public interest, we are obliged to go to other colonies or to the imperial parliament itself. And this information which we are thus obliged to seek ought to have been laid on the Table of this House long ago. What do we find ? We find that Lord Salisbury—I am quoting from documents laid on the table of the Australia Senate in November, 1901—in his despatch instructing the minister at Berlin to denounce this treaty, uses the following language :

Beyond this the provisions of article 7 of the treaty of 1865 quoted above constitute a barrier against the internal fiscal arrangements of the British Empire, which is inconsistent with the close ties of commercial purposes which subsist and should be consolidated between the mother country and her colonies. Under these circumstances Her Majesty's government find themselves compelled to abrogate the treaty which is no longer compatible with the general interests of the empire.

That makes it clear if words can do so that the imperial government, in denouncing this treaty, took the ground that they did so, not especially in the interests of Canada, but in the general interests of the empire. Further than that, he says in the same despatch referring to the same article :

No such article is contained in the treaty of 1865 between Great Britain and the Zollverein, and the consequence is that certain of the British colonies which are all comprised within its operations find themselves committed by treaty to a commercial policy which is not in accordance with the views of the responsible colonial ministers or adequate to the requirements of the people.

In the despatch to the minister at Brussels, the same language is used. He says :

And thus the provisions of article 15 of the treaty of 1862 quoted above constituted a barrier against the fiscal arrangements of the British Empire, which is inconsistent with the close ties of commercial intercourse which subsist and should be consolidated between Great Britain and her colonies. Under the circumstanstances Her Majesty's government find themselves compelled to terminate a treaty which is no longer consistent with the interests of the British Empire.

So it is plain from these documents, laid on the Table of the Australian Senate, that the treaty was denounced, not specially in the interests of Canada, but in the general interests of the British Empire. Further than that, we find a statement in the despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Governor General of the Australian Commonwealth, which is significant, perhaps, in this connection. On the 25th February, 1901, Mr. Barton presented a memorandum to His Excellency the Governor General of the Commonwealth and asked him to communicate that memorandum to the Secretary of State for the Colonies. I will not read the memorandum, but I may say, in a few words, it was for the purpose of ascertaining what would be the probable result if the Commonwealth of Australia should enact a tariff granting a preference to the mother country. The inquiry was whether or not it would result in the Commonwealth of Australia being excluded from the most favoured nation treatment by the German Empire. And the Secretary of State for the Colonies, in dealing with that question in the despatch to the Governor General of the Commonwealth of Australia, uses these words :

A copy of the correspondence will be forwarded to the Governor General of Canada with the request that he will ask his ministers for a report as to the consequences of the action taken by them not merely as regards their trade with Germany, but also as regards their trade generally with the rest of the world.

And I suppose that a communication of that kind has been received by this government, and that an answer has been sent to that communication. But we can only know the fact of such communication having been received and an answer having probably been sent by referring to documents that, three months ago were laid on the Table of the Australian Commonwealth, and which, at the commencement of this session, should have been laid on the Table of this House. It would be interesting to know what the answer of the government is with respect to this question. I presume that this government has received the request of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and has sent some answer, but this House, up to the present time, is absolutely ignorant on the subject.

Now, let us see on what grounds the action of Germany has been based in excluding Canada from the treatment that Germany extends to the rest of the British Empire. The despatches are not upon the Table of this House, but upon the Table of the Senate of Australia. I will not trouble the House with reading the despatches in full, but may quote a line or two from them which indicates as distinctly as possible that the denunciation of these treaties and the consequent result that the preference of 1897 extends to Great Britain and other portions of the empire and not to Germany and Belgium are solely responsible for the circumstance that Canada, at the present time, is excluded from the advantages of the most favoured nation treatment by Germany. Since the denunciation of the treaty of 1865 between Great Britain and Germany, the latter country has granted to the United Kingdom and to other British colonies the same advantages as are granted to the most favoured nations, but has excluded Canada by name from such advantages, and has assigned as the reason that Canada—and now I quote the language of the German Chancellor—

> Has accorded to imports from Great Britain customs advantages which she is not prepared to extend to imports from Germany.

Now, what does that amount to? It amounts to this—that Canada is excluded from the favoured treatment accorded by Germany to other British colonies. Yet that has been occasioned by the denunciation of these treaties, which denunciation was carried out, as Lord Salisbury stated twice in his despatches, not in the interests of Canada but in the general interests of the empire. Would you not suppose, Mr. Speaker, that a fact such as that would have justified this government in making the strongest possible protest in being thus excluded by Germany from the treatment which she affords to the other portions of the empire? Would you not suppose that not only this government but the imperial government as well, would have taken the strongest and most vigorous measures to assert that a policy of this kind adopted in the general interests of the empire, should not be made occasion for excluding one portion of the empire from the benefits that other portions receive? These treaties may have been denounced at the instance of Canada, but not of Canada alone, for, if I remember the facts correctly, Canada had the support of other portions of the empire in the position she took. As a result of the denunciation of these treaties and of the legislation proposed by this government in 1898, Canada is excluded from the most favoured nation treatment, and remains excluded until this day—and remains excluded, so far as any information before the House shows, without a single word of protest by this government, without a line of which we have knowledge from any official document, making the vigorous remonstrance which should have been made as soon as these facts came to the attention of the government.

But this is not the worst of this matter. The government so framed their tariff of 1898, following in that respect the lines of the tariff of 1897, that Germany, while holding up this Canadian preference to imports from Great Britain as a reason for excluding us from her markets, has practically enjoyed a great measure of the advantages of the very preference of which she complains. We are excluded by Germany from the advantages of the most favoured nation treatment and are subjected to the effects of the maximum tariff of Germany. Yet Germany, at the same time, is sending her goods to Great Britain in large quantities, and these goods, after receiving in the mother country the addition of a small percentage of work and some trifling additions of material, are coming into Canada by hundreds of thousands of dollars worth every year under the advantages of the preferential tariff. It seems to me that this is a very serious condition of affairs. It is one result of the policy of this government with regard to preferential trade, but it is not the only result, as I am about to point out. The next result of the making of this preferential tariff in 1897 was this:

The right hon. gentleman who leads this government went to London in 1897, and he delivered a number of speeches in various cities of Great Britain, more particularly in London, Liverpool, Manchester and Glasgow, and also at Birmingham, I think. He went to England after having been elected upon his pledge to this country that he would send commissioners to the mother country for the purpose of securing preferential trade wthin the empire. Yet, while in Great Britain he took the ground there that we did not desire preferential trade at all, that we had no desire whatever for any preference in the markets of the mother country. Now the language of the right hon. gentleman in Great Britain, which has been often quoted, is as follows:—

> I claim for the present government of Canada that they have passed a resolution by which the products of Great Britain are admitted on the rate of their tariff, at 12½ per cent, and next year at 25 per cent reduction. This we have done, not asking any compensation.
> There is a class of our fellow citizens who ask that all such concessions should be made for 'quid pro quo.'

And that was an expression which the hon. gentleman used in a great many speeches on the other side, I am only quoting one.

> The Canadian government has ignored all such sentiments.
> We have done it because we owe a debt of gratitude to Great Britain. We have done it because it is no intention of ours to disturb in any way the system of free trade which has done so much for England.

I could quote from a great many speeches of the hon. gentleman on the other side, if there should be any denial on the subject, in which he said that free trade was to be upheld in Great Britain at all possible hazards, that Canada did not desire anything in the world which would in any way affect the stability of free trade in the mother country, and that Canada generally speaking did not desire any return whatever for the preference which we had given to the mother country. Well, the right hon. gentleman continued:

> What we give you by our tariff we give you in gratitude for the splendid freedom under which we have prospered. It is a free gift. We ask no compensation. Protection has been the curse of Canada. We would not see you come under its baneful influence—for what weakens you must weaken us.

I am sure that when my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works realizes the full force of that language he will experience a shock which will incapacitate him from any further work in this House for two or three weeks at least. The right hon. gentleman thus deliberately renounced the intention he had expressed to the people of this country that he would do his utmost to procure a system of mutual preferential trade within the empire, and as a part of that system, a preference for Canada in the markets of the mother country. He did that without any mandate from parliament. Parliament had not passed upon the subject at all. He did that coming fresh from the people in a campaign in which he had given his pledge that he would do his utmost to secure this preference. And so far as we were able to judge at the time, he even did this without any mandate from his colleagues; because, if report is to be believed, some of his colleagues were not particularly pleased at the very extreme way in which he expressed himself on that occasion with regard to this matter. The hon. gentleman, on his return to Canada, took an entirely different position. You will notice, Mr. Speaker, that in England he said he did not desire any preference in the markets of the mother country, he did not desire any return for the preference we had given her, that we had done this as a free gift. The right hon. gentleman came back to Canada and went to Toronto, and what did he say there? He told the people of Toronto that the reason he did not make any attempt in the mother country to obtain a preference, was, not because he did not want it, but because he knew he could not obtain it—a very different reason altogether. His language at Toronto was reported as follows:

> If I had thought I could have obtained for the products of Canada preferential treatment in the markets of Great Britain, not only would I have been wanting in patriotism, but I would have been wanting in reason, I would have been simply an idiot if I had not obtained such preference for the products of Canada.
> The treaties have been denounced, there is nothing in the way now, the coast is clear, the ground is ready for discussion.

While the hon. gentleman's position as expressed by him in Great Britain was that Canada did not want any preference, his position as stated in Toronto was that he did want a preference very much, but that he did not make any attempt to obtain it because he knew that he could not get it.

Now apparently the expression of opinion which he gave in Great Britain during 1897, is that which is entertained by some members of his cabinet up to the present time, because I notice that the Minister of Agriculture, on two or three occasions during the past year—I am quoting from newspapers sent out under his own frank to members of parliament, and I assume they contain a correct statement of his utterances—the Minister of Agriculture has taken upon himself in Great Britain during the past year, to tell the people that we wanted in return for this preference no preference in the markets of the mother country. 'Canada asks for no preference,' was what the hon. gentleman stated in Liverpool on one occassion. He repeated the same thing in Manchester: 'He was not going to ask for any advantage in their markets' and so on. So the view which the right hon. gentleman expressed in 1897 seems to be the view of some of his colleagues at least even as late as 1900, because we have the Minister of Agriculture expressing that view to the people and the statesmen of the mother country during that year. Now would it not have been worth while for the hon. gentleman to have made some effort at least in the line of obtaining this preference in 1897? What have we been told with regard to the disposition of the mother country towards us at that time? Why, we have heard the statement over and over again in this House and in this country, that the granting of this preference to the mother country caused the people and statesmen of that country to be very well disposed to us, to such an extent that we had practically a preference in the British market by reason of the fact that British consumers looked for Canadian goods instead of goods from other countries. Well, some figures which have been given to the House during the present session on the budget debate indicate that there was really nothing whatever in that idea. As a matter of fact, while imports to Great Britain from other countries have increased during the past years, imports from Canada in exactly the same articles have decreased during the past years. If the people and statesmen of the mother country had that favourable sentiment towards Canada in 1897, was it worth while for my right hon. friend to take the ground that he did, and to mislead the people in the mother country by telling them that Canada did not want any preference? The right hon. gentleman surely might have stopped short of that; he might at least have told the people of the mother country that he was elected upon a pledge to do his utmost to obtain a preference for Canada in the markets of the mother country, and that, provided the people of the mother country were willing, he was ready to discuss that question with them, and to do everything in his power to obtain that great boon for Canada. The hon. gentleman was very generous in giving away something which really did not belong to him. He was bound to protect Canada's rights in that respect, but he had no mandate from this country he had no mandate from this House, and I venture to think he had no mandate from his colleagues to give away the rights of Canada in that respect by making the statement which he did in the mother country.

Now, since the right hon. gentleman took that course, the Liberal-Conservative party in this House have on various occasions affirmed its belief in the advantages of mutual preferential trade. On the 30th day of March, 1900, Sir Charles Tupper moved the following resolution in this House :

> This House is of opinion that a system of mutual trade preference between Great Britain and Ireland and the colonies would greatly stimulate increased production in and commerce between these countries and would thus promote and maintain the unity of the empire ; and that no measure of preference which falls short of the complete realization of such a policy should be considered as final or satisfactory.

The government did not accept that resolution and it was defeated. In 1901 I moved the following resolution in this House :

> That in the opinion of this House the adoption of a policy of mutual trade preference within the empire would prove of great benefit to the mother country and to the colonies and would greatly promote the prosperity, unity and progress of the empire as a whole, and that the present time when the Commonwealth of Australia is laying the foundation of its fiscal system, is particularly opportune for taking prompt and energetic steps towards the furtherance of this object.
> This House is further of opinion that equivalent or adequate duties should be imposed by Canada upon the products and manufactures of countries not within the empire in all cases where such countries fail to admit Canadian products and manufactures upon fair terms and that the government should take for this purpose all such available measures as may be found necessary.

This resolution was not accepted by the government and was voted down. The main grounds which the government and their supporters took in voting down this resolution were twofold. In the first place, they put forward the absolute hopelessness of expecting the mother country to impose duties on foodstuffs. I will not weary the House by going over the debate and pointing out, in the language of almost every one of these hon. gentlemen, the argument which was based upon that supposed aspect of the question. But, I will quote from the Minister of Finance (Hon. Mr. Fielding) who said in his speech in 1897 :

> All the advocates of preferential trade, at all events all who have taken an active part in that movement, have assumed that, as the first step, England must consent to put a duty on corn. We know that England does not view that project with favour. We know that no more unpopular project can be offered the English people than to ask them to put a duty on breadstuffs.

In 1900 the hon. gentleman, in an interview in Montreal, I think, said :

> There are three points which Sir Charles Tupper would like to make, but in not one of them is there any foundation for his efforts. He continues to talk about the Conservative party obtaining a tariff preference for Canadian products in England ; that is to say, that Great Britain would impose duties on foreign foodstuffs while admitting those of Canada free. This is an old cry with Sir Charles Tupper, but no one knows better than he does that it is arrant humbug.
> Everybody who has had a correct view of English public opinion has been and is still aware that such tariff legislation in Great Britain for the present or the early future is impossible.

Well, our position in regard to this matter was that the policy of Canada should be a policy of action and not a policy of inaction. We did not believe it as impossible as hon. gentlemen argued on the other side that Great Britain would be disposed to impose a tax upon foodstuffs and upon corn. At all events, we said, it is in the interests of Canada that efforts should be made for the purpose of inducing Great Britain to grant us a preference in her markets. It may be true, we said, that the project does not meet with favour in Great Britain at the present time, but what we read in the press of Great Britain, and of the utterances of statesmen in Great Britain at the present time leads us to suppose that a change in public sentiment in regard to that particular matter is rapidly coming about in the mother country. And it is the duty of this government, we said, having regard to that probable change, not to sit supinely in a state of inaction and say it is impossible, but to make some effort in the matter, because Canada will be none the worse off if you do make some effort and take some action, while on the other hand it may result in some very material advantage to this country.

Even more significant is the language which the right hon. leader of the government used in this House in the debate of 1901 in which debate he put forward the other argument which has been used against this proposition—the other argument which is that unless Canada is prepared not only to give up her policy of protection, but her customs tariff also, it is absolutely hopeless to suppose that you can ever obtain a preference of this kind or any system of mutual preferential trade within the empire. I was surprised on looking over the debate to find the extent to which the right hon. gentleman had gone in making an assertion of that character and I find that the position he took, as the leader of his party, supported by many statements of hon. gentlemen who followed him in that debate, was this. In the debate upon a resolution introduced by me in 1901, the right hon. gentleman used this language :

> Allusion has been made very often to my trip to England and to the position I took there. The position I took there was this : I acted like a reasonable man, I saw at once that it could not be possible, so great is the free trade sentiment in England, to have a mutuality of preference so long as we continue to levy customs duties upon English goods. But the moment we are ready—it may take a long time, but I hope some day it shall come—to discard our tariff, the moment we come to the doctrine of free trade, then it is possible to have a commercial mutual preference based upon free trade in the empire.

The right hon. gentleman continues even more strongly. Referring to the Conservatives' quid pro quo argument, the premier said :

Such a policy would not be received in Great Britain, it is not to be taken seriously. It is not a thing to be discussed seriously. . . . . If we are at any time to obtain mutual preferential trade between Great Britain and Canada —and more than once I have stated that for my part, I think it would be a great advantage for Canada, but if we are to obtain it, upon what condition can we have it ?

I would like to call the attention of the House to what the right hon. gentleman stated to be the condition :

We can have it perhaps upon one condition, but we cannot discuss it unless we have that condition.

Mark you, we cannot discuss it even unless we have that condition.

We cannot even discuss it as long as we have a protective tariff or a customs tariff in Canada. That is the position which I have taken again and again.

That is the right hon. gentleman's language used only last year. He says that we are pointing in the direction of free trade. We have not absolutely got free trade but we are pointing in the direction of free trade. I believe that the Minister of Public Works (Hon. Mr. Tarte) is pulling back in the traces upon that particular question, as hard as he can, but the right hon. gentleman who leads him tells us that we are pointing in the direction of free trade. We are not even in a position to discuss mutual preferential trade with the mother country unless we give up, not only our protective tariff, but even our customs tariff as well. The right hon. gentleman has told the right hon. Secretary of State for the Colonies that he wants to discuss the question of commercial relations within the empire. That is the only subject mentioned by the Secretary of State for the Colonies which he thinks it will be useful or profitable to discuss. What does he mean by commercial relations within the empire ? If he means anything surely he is alluding to a mutual preferential trade within the empire. If he was alluding to anything else, when he used the expression 'commercial relations within the empire' as a subject for discussion perhaps he will be good enough to tell us what it was, and until he does so I shall assume that he had reference to that subject. But, he has told us that we cannot even discuss it at the present time unless we are ready to give up, not only our protective tariff, but our customs tariff. These were not light words which the right hon. gentleman used in the debate last year. These were well-matured views. These words were considered, no doubt, and these are words that were reiterated over and over again in the speech—that unless we were prepared to give up, not only our protective tariff, but our customs tariff as well, we were not even in a position to discuss the question of mutual preferential trade within the empire. My right hon. friend will not discuss political relations; he says that except in a few minor points they are all right. He will not discuss the question of imperial defence, and he cannot discuss the question of commercial relations within the empire. It then follows, necessarily, that the right hon. gentleman must go there, sit in the conference and never open his mouth and it will not be necessary for him, in so far as any useful or practical result is concerned, to delay any holiday trip he may have in view after attending the Coronation ceremonies as he has precluded himself from saying anything useful upon this subject. After he had told the people of the mother country in 1897 that we did not want a preference, he sent his Minister of Agriculture (Hon. Mr. Fisher) over there during the past year to reiterate that statement and he did so. He has told the people of the mother country that he will not discuss the question of political relations, that he will not discuss the question of imperial defence and he told the people in a well considered speech last year that we were not in a position to discuss the question of mutual preferential trade at all unless we were prepared to give up not only the protective system in Canada, but our customs tariff as well.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman is going to the conference, and if he proposes to enter into any discussion upon the subjects which have been mentioned : we are entitled to know what the policy of the government is with regard to these different subjects. The right hon. gentleman's conduct did not commend itself to this side of the House at least, when he told the people of the mother country in 1897, that Canada did not want a preference. We are entitled to know what the attitude of the government is now, and we are entitled to know even what steps the government have taken with regard to mutual preferential trade within the empire during the past few months.

In the months of January and February ; nay, as far back as the months of November and December of last year, it was in the air, it was in the press, it was all over England and all over Canada, that duties were likely to be imposed on foodstuffs by the mother country. What steps have the government of Canada taken for the purpose of securing complete or partial exemption from these duties ? Have they lifted their finger for that purpose ? In view of the preference of 33⅓ per cent which we have given the mother country, have we made any presentation pointing out that my right hon. friend did not correctly inform the mother country in 1897, when he stated that we want no preference. Have the Canadian government taken any steps to withdraw that declaration? Have they taken any steps to point out that Canada at the present time is very desirous that there should be an exemption of Canadian products from this tax, either in whole or in part. If the government of Canada have not done that, they have not done their duty. I have examined to some extent what has taken place in the English parliament, because it would seem to be hopeless to obtain information from this government on the subject; and I find that a member of the imperial parliament was informed by the government that a letter from Lord Strathcona had been received by the imperial government upon this subject. Well, a letter from Lord Strathcona is not exactly the way in which we would expect a communication of this kind to go to the imperial government. We would suppose that there would be a memorandum and a communication from the Governor General to the Colonial Secretary, and we would expect that a communication of that kind would within a reasonable delay, and particularly during the session of parliament, be laid upon the Table of this House. There can be no excuse whatever for the Canadian government taking no steps in this matter, because their attention was very often directed to it through the public press, and many commercial bodies passed resolutions on the subject asking the Canadian government to bring the matter to the attention of the British government. On the 21st of April last the right hon. gentleman stated that copies of these documents which had been forwarded to this government would be laid upon the Table of the House. Although a considerable delay has elapsed they have not yet been laid on the Table, but I happen to have a copy of one of them which I shall read. I suppose there must have been so many of these that the great volume of the correspondence between the Boards of Trade and the government has caused delay in the copying. However, the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto, on the 10th of February, 1902, passed a resolution which is in the following words:

THE BOARD OF TRADE OF THE CITY OF TORONTO.

Report of Committee 're duty on Wheat.'

To the President of the Board of Trade.

Your committee having fully considered the question referred to them, beg leave to report the following resolution for submission to a general meeting of the board:—

Whereas, according to the press despatches it is the intention at the present session of the imperial parliament to levy additional taxes in order to meet the heavy expenditure caused by the war in South Africa, and the large additions to the British navy, and amongst other products which may be taxed wheat has been especially mentioned.

In view of the position so strongly urged by this board for many years, for a preferential treatment of the different products of the empire exchanged therein, and Canada having granted a tariff preference on the products of Great Britain when imported into this country, one of the results being that Germany has discriminated in her tariff against us by imposing practically prohibitory duties on our cereals, thus closing a valuable market to our farmers;

Therefore, be it resolved, that in the opinion of this board, any tax placed by Great Britain upon products similar to those produced in this country should be so levied as to grant a preference to the products produced within the empire.

That if Great Britain should see her way clear to adopt such a policy, it would result in the knitting together still closer the various parts of the empire, and thus materially strenghen our position by diverting to the colonies a large portion of the emigration from the United Kingdom now going elsewhere, with the result that ere long the wheat and other food products required could be entirely supplied within the empire.

And that copies of this resolution be sent to the premier of Canada, and he be requested to cable the same to the Honorable Joseph Chamberlain, Colonial Secretary, Lord Curzon, Viceroy of India, and the premiers of Australia and New Zealand, and to forward them the full text of the resolution by mail.

Further, that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the different boards of trade and commercial bodies in Canada, and that they be requested to pass similar resolutions and forward them to the proper authorities.

(Sgd.) C. B. WATTS,
Chairman.

Toronto, February 10, 1902.

Adopted as the report of the board at a general meeting held on February 12th, 1902.

This was adopted at a general meeting of the Toronto Board of Trade on February 12, 1902, and as I am informed a copy was immediately sent thereafter to this government. Therefore this government had ample notice that these duties were likely to be imposed and had ample opportunity to take energetic and active steps in good time for the purpose of impressing on the British government the desirability that the products of Canada should be exempt in whole or in part from these duties imposed by the mother country.

Now, I did propose, Mr. Speaker, to move a resolution, setting out some of these facts which I have mentioned in a succinct form, as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply; but I do not wish to take any step which instead of being an assistance might rather be a detriment so far as any action by this government may be taken at the present time. Therefore, I prefer to say to the government and to the right hon. gentleman who leads the government: That on this side of the House we are prepared to support a resolution assuring our belief in the advantages of a system of mutual trade preference with the empire, and so far as we are concerned, to have that resolution passed in the House unanimously for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the government at the approaching conference. I think that is a fairer way to deal with the question than to move an amendment setting out the various matters which I have dealt with in my speech to-night. I thought it well to review these matters as I have done, and I say that so far as assisting the government in its endeavour—if it proposes to make any endeavour to procure a preference for Canada in the markets of the mother country—we, on this side of the House, place the interest of the country, above the interests of the party if they ever differ, and we are prepared to acquiesce in a resolution of that kind and to assist the government in having it passed this House unanimously.

Now, Sir, I wish to say before sitting down that the country expects from the government some declaration as to the course which will be pursued by the Prime Minister and his colleagues at this conference. It is only fair to the House and to the country that some full and explicit statement should be made by the right hon. gentleman with regard to his course. I think we should know what policy he proposes as the policy of the government with regard to all the subjects which have been mentioned by the Secretary of State for the Colonies as proper subjects for discussion at this conference. We want to know whether the government, while retaining for Canada the full control of all her public moneys and her system of defence, is prepared to discuss with the imperial authorities a sysetem of imperial defence. We want to know whether the Prime Minister proposes, as he did in 1897, and as the Minister of Agriculture did in 1901, to tell the government and the people of the mother country that Canada desires no preference in the British markets. We want to know whether the government are yet fully seized of the fact that the British government have adopted a policy with regard to duties on breadstuffs which the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues have repeatedly declared during the past 5 or 6 years was absolutely impossible of adoption by the mother country in the near future. We want to know whether, having regard to that changed condition of affairs, the government are still impressed with the opinion expressed by the Prime Minister repeatedly in the debate of 1901, that Canada cannot obtain any preference in the British market nor any system of preferential trade with the mother country unless Canada is prepared to give up not only her protective tariff, but her customs tariff. Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, in closing, it is not an unreasonable thing which we on this side of the House are asking the right hon. leader of the government on this occasion. We desire to be informed as to the course he proposes to take with regard to these great and important subjects; and I trust that the right hon. gentleman, before he sits down, will give us such clear and explicit information on that point, as will enable us to judge accurately, and if necessary to criticise the attitude which he proposes to take on behalf of this country at the conference to be held in June next.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax)

The PRIME MINISTER (Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I might regret that my hon. friend has waited until we are in the dying hours of the session to bring to the attention of the House a question of such great importance, but for the fact that my hon. friend, in the long and evidently well-prepared speech which he has delivered, has brought nothing very new to our attention. He has covered ground with which we are already familiar; he has brought forth notions and arguments and facts which we have heard over and over again during the last 4 or 5 years. I may, perhaps, be permitted to compliment my hon. friend on the fact that he has evidently developed a good deal of capacity as a scrap-book man. I must admit that he has not reached the eminence of some of his predecessors in that line; but for a first effort he has not done badly. On the whole, however, I have no fault to find with the tone of the speech of my hon. friend. On the contrary, making allowance for the views he entertains, and for his natural desire to have a dig at the ribs of the government, I think that on the whole he has treated this subject in a very fair manner. I will endeavour to follow him in the same tone and spirit, and give him the information which he asks from me. My hon. friend bases his whole argument on the despatches which have been exchanged between the imperial government and the Canadian government upon the subject of the conference which is to sit next summer in London. Perhaps in order to make the matter still more clear than it may be in the memories of the members present, I may be pardoned if I recall the tenor of that correspondence. It will be sufficient for the time being to refer to the despatch of the 23rd of January last from Mr. Chamberlain to the Governor General, which was in the following terms :

> It is proposed by His Majesty's government to take advantage of the presence of the premiers at Coronation to discuss with them the questions of political relations between the mother country and the colonies, imperial defence, commercial relations of the empire and other matters of general interest.
> Should your ministers desire to submit definite proposal or resolutions on any of the above questions or should they wish to suggest any further subject for discussion, I should be glad to be informed of purport by cable in order that the other governments can be communicated with.
>
> With view to proposed conference, hope your premier will be able to remain for a short time.

To this about a week afterwards we sent the following answer :

> Referring to the several questions mentioned in your despatch of 23rd January, the only one which in the opinion of my ministers, gives promise of useful discussion is that of the commercial relations between the various sections of the empire. The political relations now existing between the mother country and the great self-governing colonies, and particularly Canada, are regarded by my ministers as entirely satisfactory, with the exception of a few minor details, and they do not anticipate that in the varying conditions of the colonies, there can be any scheme of defence applicable to all.

In the opinion of my ministers, there is thus but a limited range of subjects upon which the contemplated conference can be productive of useful action. Nevertheless my ministers realize the desirability of taking advantage of every opportunity for the discussion by the public men of the mother country and the colonies, of questions of imperial interest, and Canada's representative will be prepared to give respectful consideration to any proposals that may be submitted by His Majesty's government or by the representatives of other colonies.

I may remark here that my hon. friend commented this evening, as he did once before, upon this answer of ours as being wanting in courtesy to the imperial authorities. Sir, I would like to know, and I pause here to ask the House, what is the word in this despatch which I have just read, which can be said to be in any way wanting in courtesy? What is the expression as to which exception can be taken, either by the mother country or by this parliament, which would go to show that we did not treat the imperial authorities with the consideration and respect to which they are entitled? Certainly there is nothing in the despatch which I have just read to which any such exception can be taken. If there is anything that is wanting in courtesy, in the opinion of my hon. friend, it is not to be found in the language of the despatch, but in its substance.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My right hon. friend will pardon me. I do not remember using any such expression as that which he attributes to me.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am very glad that my hon. friend takes exception to my observation; but if I were permitted to refer to a past debate, I could quote expressions which have been used in this House and repeated over and over again by the press which supports the hon. gentleman, with reference to this despatch as wanting in courtesy.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think my right hon. friend is referring to some observations made by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean).

The PRIME MINISTER. It is sufficient, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend disclaims that intention, and I will not pursue that matter any further. I now come to the substance of the answer. My hon. friend says we ought to be prepared to discuss the subject of imperial defence. I think I am correctly stating the position he has taken this evening. I may observe to my hon. friend upon this subject that the conference will be composed of representatives of the imperial government and the self-governing colonies. It will include representatives from Canada, Australia, New Zeland, Newfoundland, Natal, and Cape Colony, and perhaps a few others. It will be open to all members of this conference to bring to its consideration any subject he may please. We all know that the First Minister of New Zealand, Mr. Seddon, proposes to bring to its attention the subject of imperial defence, and if we are to credit the newspaper reports which have appeared recently, the Premier of Australia, Mr. Barton, has rather taken the same course we have and deprecated the introduction of any such subject. At all events, we shall be there, at the invitation of the imperial government, to discuss all the subjects mentioned in the despatch I have read, and we propose to discuss them in the spirit of the reply we have given. That is to say, while we are prepared to discuss this question of imperial defence, neither my colleagues nor myself believe that any useful purpose can be served by such discussion. It is no use whatever, at this stage of the proceeding, on the floor of this Canadian parliament, to try to deceive ourselves as to what is intended by this subject of imperial defence. If it be intended simply to discuss what part Canada is prepared to take in her own defence, what share of the burden must fall upon us as being responsible for the safety of the land in which we were born and to which we owe our allegiance, in which all our hopes and affections are centered, certainly we are always prepared to discuss that subject. Nor do I believe that we need any prompting on that subject or that our attention should be specially called to it. Even this very session the government has given its pledge to the House that it is prepared to consider and to the fullest extent to carry out its duty on this score, and in that declaration the government received the support of both sides. But there is a school abroad, there is a school in England and in Canada, a school which is perhaps represented on the floor of this parliament, which wants to bring Canada into the vortex of militarism which is now the curse and the blight of Europe. I am not prepared to endorse any such policy. But the Canadian delegates will give a respectful hearing to all the propositions that may be made, and it is in this spirit I speak, and speak with candour. My hon. friend asked me to give expression to our intentions. Well, I can assure him that I intend to perform the duties which will devolve upon me when in England. I am speaking my full mind and have given my answer as to the position we hold on this question, an answer which I think should satisfy him. My hon. friend has not mentioned the political relations which we are invited to discuss in the despatch of Mr. Chamberlain, and since he has thought fit to leave that matter aside I shall follow his example.

But he has come to the commercial relations and prefaced his remarks on this subject by expressing the hope that we are all one in desiring a mutual preference between Canada and Great Britain. He expressed the hope that all parties were as one on that subject, but I must say that I am sufficiently incredulous to doubt my hon. friends sincerity. I have heard a good many expressions on this subject from my hon. friend and his friends behind him. I have heard them state more than once that they were in favour of a mutual preference, but notwithstanding all declarations I have heard on the subject from these gentlemen, notwithstanding the many eloquent speeches from the other side on this topic, I am yet in doubt whether or not it is the sincere wish of hon. gentlemen opposite to have a mutual preference. I will not go over the speeches they have made. I shall not follow my hon. friend in quoting from scrap books, but shall content myself with the single declaration just spoken by my hon. friend himself and to which he invited and received the full concurrence of his followers. I refer to the resolution, moved and voted on this session, and which reads in this way :

> This House, regarding the operation of the present tariff as unsatisfactory, is of opinion that this country requires a declared policy of such adequate protection to its labour, agricultural products and manufacturing industries, as will at all times insure the Canadian market for the Canadians.

Now, Sir, if the Canadian market is to be secured for Canadians, where is the preference to come for British goods? What place is to be left in the Canadian market for the British ? What is the preference these hon. gentlemen are going to give Great Britain if we are to have protection ? Protection against whom ? Against the United States ? Of course. Against Germany ? Of course. Against France ? As a matter of course. And against England ? As a matter of course also. If that is the policy of these hon. gentlemen, if they have nailed protection to the mast of the ship they intend to sail, if their policy is protection against the world, Canada for the Canadians, I want to know what is the preference we are to give British goods. My hon. friend told me a moment ago that he was ready to vote in favour of a resolution of which I shall speak in a few moments, and I want him to supplement his resolution by instructing me as to what goods of Canadian manufacture, our manufacturers are willing to sacrifice at the colonial conference next summer. I would ask him if, in his opinion, Canada should give a preference to British woollens. I see the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Brock) before me. He wants a preference given Great Britain, I know, but I would like to know if he is prepared to give the British manufacturer a preference on woollen goods.

Mr. BROCK. Yes, if we have a preference in return in the English market.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am glad to hear that my hon. friend from Toronto is prepared to sacrifice his woollens. I have heard him more than once complain that the preference we had given had killed the manufacture of woollens here.

Mr. BROCK. We get no preference in return.

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friends opposite are in favour of a preference to Great Britain in words. Let us hope that they are in fact also.

Mr. BROCK. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. More than once, on the floor of this House, reference has been made to a speech which I delivered in London in the campaign of 1896. My hon. friend referred to it this evening. It was referred to last year and the year before and the year previous. I have heard it again and again. But there is one thing which I said on that occasion to which I have not heard any reference up to this moment. I stated that if returned to power we would take steps to obtain a mutual preference in Great Britain. That is one thing which has never been quoted from that speech, and if somebody will send to the library for the report of that speech he will find that in it I referred to the speeches delivered in that campaign by Sir Charles Tupper, in which he declared that Great Britain was ready and willing to give us a preference. Sir Charles Tupper made that statement again and again in 1896. He made it, not by innuendo alone, but directly, that Great Britain, if approached by Canada, would be willing to give us a preference, provided Canada was prepared to do the same. The position I took was this, that if Great Britain is to give us a preference, the Conservative party is not the party to obtain it, but the Liberal party, because the Conservative party believes in protection.

That was the cardinal principle on which they appealed to the country. Whereas, our policy is a system of extended free trade. Therefore, we are in a better position to make concessions to Great Britain than the Conservative party are. But we found, as soon as we obtained power, that Sir Charles Tupper had been too sanguine, and that the British government were not prepared to depart from their fiscal system. Therefore, we had to take the position we did. As we could not obtain an imperial preference we thought we would give a preference ourselves. Why did we do that ? Because it was our best measure of tariff reform. And it has served its purpose well. It may not have accomplished all that we had hoped; nevertheless the results are there and show for themselves, one of them being that our trade with Great Britain has almost doubled within five years.

Again this evening my hon. friend has attacked the British preference. But, while he has attacked it he has done what everybody on his side has done—while attacking this preference in words they have never dared to attack it in action. Not one of them has been able to screw his courage to the sticking-place. They have been willing to wound, but afraid to strike. If the preference has been what they represent it, if it has been so injurious to the country why, in the name of all that is courageous, have they not attacked it long ago? Why have they not attacked it this evening? When we adopted the preference to Great Britain, we achieved something. We forced the British government to denounce the German and Belgian treaties. My hon. friend has attacked us for the policy we have adopted on this point. But what is the result? I am almost ashamed to be obliged to refer to the fact again, it has been so often stated. But, as the attack has been made, I must recall attention to the fact that the Conservative party, again and again, pressed the government of Great Britain to denounce the treaties with Germany and Belgium. They failed, but we succeeded. And now they attack us because we succeeded. Sir, we could not remove the shackles that held us bound to Germany and Belgium unless these treaties were denounced. And, having gained the denunciation of these treaties, it will not do to attack us because we have brought about the existing state of affairs between Canada and Germany. We have moved in the matter. Our efforts may succeed or not. If they succeed, we shall be vindicated; if not we will have to say what position we shall take as to our relations with Germany.

Now, a word with regard to the different questions that have been put to me by my hon. friend as to our attitude at the coming conference. My hon. friend wants an explicit answer to these questions. He was a little jocose upon this point. He says: The Prime Minister is going to London, but he will have no reason to take part in this conference, as he will have nothing to say—he will not discuss imperial defence and he cannot discuss commercial relations. I do not think the hon. gentleman has read attentively and with his usual acumen the despatch that has come to us from Mr. Chamberlain. But, as it has escaped his attention let me read it to him:

> It is proposed by His Majesty's government to take advantage of the presence of the premiers at the Coronation to discuss with them the questions of political relations between the mother country and the colonies, imperial defence, commercial relations of the empire——

Now, what am I going to England for? I am going to England to discuss the commercial relations of the empire. I am going to England at the instance and invitation of the imperial government. The imperial government has something to propose to us, therefore, upon the subject of imperial relations. I cannot conceive that Mr. Chamberlain, the Colonial Secretary, would invite the representatives of the colonies to come to England to discuss commercial relations unless the British government has something to propose on the subject of commercial relation. Has my hon. friend any other interpretation to put upon this invitation? Does my hon. friend believe, when the Colonial Secretary invites us to discuss commercial relations, that it is simply pro forma? Has not this invitation been given because something has taken place, or will take place which will make the discussion of commercial relations possible? My hon. friend is aware, as I am and as everybody is, that there has been a change in the economic conditions of Great Britain. What was not proposed in 1897 may possibly be proposed in 1902. In 1897 the fiscal policy which exists to-day did not exist. In 1897 there were no duties upon flour and wheat, but in 1902, there is a duty upon flour and wheat. Therefore, there is a new condition of things in England whose very existence makes possible in 1902 what was not possible in 1897. But my hon. friend says: What have you been doing all this time, have you been bestirring yourselves? What we have been doing is shown in this invitation. We have been preparing all this time in order to meet the Colonial Secretary and to meet our fellow subjects from other parts of the world to discuss the very commercial situation which is now possible through events which have recently taken place in England. We are in a position to make offers to the imperial government which we could not make in 1897. In 1897 we met to discuss certain things and we passed certain resolutions. I hope they have been productive of good. Certainly they have done no harm, and I am honest in believing that they have been productive of some good. In 1902, I go there prepared to listen to the propositions to be made to us upon colonial matters. The first step has been taken which makes it possible now to obtain a preference for the goods of Canada which could not be obtained in 1897. It is possible now that we may open a market. I said in 1897 that we would not disturb the economic conditions of England. We did not want to do anything which would make a violent change in Britain. We realized that the relations must be friendly between Britain and Canada, that it was important that the subject should be discussed free from the prejudices that exist in every country. We raise revenue by a customs tariff; in England, they raise a revenue under a free trade tariff. No man can go to England and achieve anything, if he thinks he will be able to force his views upon them. We must find a common ground upon which both the people of Britain and the people of the colonies can stand, each side giving up some thing, and so bring Britain and the colonies to an agreement acceptable to all. My hon. friend says : What are you going to propose ? We will first listen to the propositions made to us by the British authorities. I assume, from the statements I have in hand that the government of Great Britain has propositions to make to the colonies, upon this matter of commercial relations; for, if not, it would be worse than folly to ask us to discuss the matter. After we have listened to the propositions made to us by the imperial government we can see whether we can accept them; and whether we can or can not accept them, we go there with the intention of trying, if possible, to secure preferential treatment for the goods of Canada in the British market. That is the object we have in view.

Now, Sir, my hon. friend told us a moment ago that he would be pleased if this House could pass a resolution unanimously. I am quite prepared to say that I should be glad to confer upon that subject with my hon. friend. Since he has offered me this olive branch I am ready to meet him and to discuss a resolution or a proposition which we can put into such a shape that it can be adopted unanimously. That is the only answer which at this moment I am ready to make to my hon. friend. He wanted to have a candid answer from me upon the question that he has put to me. I think I am able to say that I have answered his question candidly in every point ; I have answered candidly upon the military question, I have answered candidly upon the commercial question ; and if my hon. friend is disposed to continue to be conciliatory he will find that I should be only too glad to meet him half way in anything that he has to propose.

Mr. W. R. BROCK (Centre Toronto). The right hon. gentleman the Prime Minister, in commencing his reply, if it can be called a reply, to the address that was delivered by the leader of the opposition, stated that it was to be regretted that the leader of the opposition had left this very important question, probably the most important question that could come before this House or this country, to be discussed so near the end of the session. I think, Sir, it was a great reflection upon the Prime Minister himself that he should have left, not only this House, but this whole country in positive ignorance and darkness as to the position he was going to take when going to England to discuss this question. I can say that at the present time, not only the eyes of this House and of this country, but I think the eyes of the whole empire are upon the Canadian government, wondering what position they will take at this critical time. The fact that the Prime Minister and his government have neglected to indicate what position they are going to take is a reflection upon the political acumen which the Prime Minister prides himself upon. The national, the political and the business position of this country at the present time is an object lesson as well as an object to the whole civilized world. This parliament representing the Dominion of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a land that is now being pointed to all over the world as a good land and a desirable land to occupy, this parliament has been here for nearly three months and we still have no indication of a definite and well defined policy—for no government is worthy of the name that has not a policy and a well defined policy. This country wants to know, and the British Empire wants to know what that defined policy is. This House has listened as usual with delight to the eloquent words of the leader of the government, and I defy any hon. gentleman to stand up in his place and say what is the policy that the government intend to carry out when they go to England. The Prime Minister says they are going to listen to what is being said by others. I contend that this government, with a Prime Minister with a reputation such as our Prime Minister has got, should go there to do something more than listen, they should go there to lead. We are constantly told by the English parliament and statesmen that they look to us for guidance in matters of commerce.

But I think if we look into this matter we will find that some of the difficulties of the Prime Minister come from his own colleagues. They are hampered by the wild statements some of them made when they went before the people in 1896. The Prime Minister asks : If we protect Canada for Canadian goods, what have we to give to England ? I ask him to look across the border. The United States have protected up to the hilt everything they can manufacture in that country, and yet they are one of the largest importers of British goods on the face of the globe. They collect a very large amount of duty on British goods. Is this not an example for us ? Can we not protect our own industries and at the same time import an immense amount of English goods ? And we give English goods a preference over all the rest of the world. While we are importing at the present time German goods and paying full duty upon them, we are importing a much larger quantity of German goods surreptitiously into this country through England, through the supineness and weakness of the policy adopted when the Prime Minister was in England. After having secured the denunciation of the German and Belgium treaties, the Prime Minister asks what more can we do ? Germany and Belgium have placed us on the black list. Could we not have asked Great Britain to intercede for us, to avail herself of the great ability of her statesmen and her great reputation, to ask Germany to recede from the position she has taken in consideration of Great Britain receiving German goods free ? I contend that when Lord Salisbury stated that he was doing this for the benefit of the empire he meant what he said. We know what the empire includes. Could he not, then, in the interest of the empire, have said to Germany, either give Canada the same duties you give the rest of the empire, or the empire will put a duty upon your goods coming into Great Britain. Are you aware, Mr. Speaker, what that would mean ?. It would mean that one-third of the whole business of the German empire would be cut off. London is one of the greatest distributors of German goods and continental goods on the face of the earth. The Germans have their samples there, they have their market there, it is their greatest market. German goods come into England and are sold in England, and in many cases are carried in British bottoms to foreign countries. Therefore, I contend that Lord Salisbury meant what he said, and we know a British statesman always means what he says. We have some doubt in our own country as to what our statesmen mean when they speak, but we have no doubt about the word of British statesmen. When Lord Salisbury said that he meant this for the benefit of the empire, it was for the benefit of the British empire, and not for the detriment of this particular part of it. Therefore I contend that the position taken by the Prime Minister in England was one of the most unfortunate things that ever happened to the empire. He says that we want no return, that we did this out of good feeling and good will. These are very good sentiments, they would be good sentiments if we were a wealthy country and were able to give something for nothing. But we are inviting British immigrants, and immigrants from all parts of the world, to come into Canada, and I contend that the present is the time above all others when this matter should be settled. I desire to endorse the statement of my leader that the Prime Minister will not be hampered from this side of the House if he goes with a business proposition to the old country and not a sentimental one.

When the Prime Minister goes to England he will go, I have not the slightest doubt, with the very best intention in his heart to do what is best for Canada. I am proud to say that of him as a Canadian statesman. But he will go to England hampered by divided opinions, prompted on one side by a free trade wing and on another side by a protection wing. Even in his own cabinet he finds a difficulty in getting unanimity of opinion ; therefore it does not lie in his mouth to throw any reflections on this side of the House.

We are a united party ; we are where we have stood for the last quarter of a century for the ascendancy of the British Empire, but Canada for the Canadians always. The Right Hon. Prime Minister cannot see where we can have Canada for the Canadians and go to England and ask for a preference in the English market. Is it not better for Great Britain to have a strong and vigorous dependency in Canada than to have a weakling ? Anything which Great Britain can do to increase the strength of her dependencies she will do as she has done in the past. We have been invited to go to England and to discuss questions for the improvement of the whole empire. We may not be able to agree, but I cannot see why that is any reason why the right hon. gentleman should not be willing to discuss any suggestions which may be made for the improvement of the defences of the empire. Is the defence of the empire of no consequence to Canada ? We have manfully undertaken to defend the empire in the past and we will do our best to defend the empire whenever we are called upon to do so. I know the difficulties which surround the right hon. gentleman. I know the great political strength he has in his own province of Quebec and I can see the difficulties arising day by day. We find now that one of the right hon. gentleman's strongest supporters during the last two or three elections, a gentleman with whom he has some difficulty at the present time, has acquired a newspaper. We find that Mr. Bourassa has acquired possession of a paper called, I think, the Pioneer. That is a menace to the right hon. gentleman because the right hon. gentleman wishes to get all the support he can from that hon. gentleman and from those people who endorse his opinions—I will not say disloyal opinions, but who support these opinions in the province of Quebec very strongly, so that the party that sits on the other side of the House must not and cannot despise this hon. gentleman. These opinions carry great weight in the province of Quebec, because they are in accord with the opinions, probably, not of the majority, but of a very respectable minority of the people in that province. These are the difficulties that the right hon. gentleman has and we sympathise with him under those circumstances. They are causing him great difficulty every day. As to discussing with Great Britain the political relations of the empire I do not think there is any difficulty about that. The right hon. gentleman can go to England and discuss these political relations, he can hold his own opinions, and we can trust him to hold his own opinions in an argument with very great ability. But, he seems to express some doubt and difficulty ; when he arrives there he may find that his opinions are not in accord with those of the representatives of the rest of the empire. Have we not found that out before ? When the right hon. gentleman meets the representatives of the other parts of the empire he should be very candid in expressing the opinion of this country and the opinion of this country is decidedly in the direction of protection to our own industries. This is one thing upon which the country can stand as a unit and he can assert that fact with absolute confidence. We have had some remarkable conversions in this House. Coming from North Norfolk, we have an hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) who has warned the right hon. the Prime Minister that the opinions of the people of this country are not changing but rather that the politicians who advocated free trade are changing. We will have to change, the Prime Minister will have to change before we get from the empire that which we think is our due. Therefore, I would urge upon the right hon. gentleman before going to Great Britain upon this occasion to take counsel with the leader of the Opposition as he has asked him to do. I think it is necessary that he should do so and if he will be guided by this side of the House on this occasion it will cause him to be more successful than when visiting England last.

Mr. JOHN CHARLTON (North Norfolk). My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) who has just taken his seat speaks very truly when he says that the coming conference at London will be an event of very great importance indeed. I can sympathise with the regret which the hon. gentleman expressed that this important question has not been made the subject of discussion in this House at an earlier stage of the session for it certainly deserves an exhaustive discussion and I apprehend that the government will be pleased to hear a general expression of opinion from members of this House upon both sides of your Chair. The criticisms in regard to the conduct of the government and of the statements of the government in the despatch to the Secretary of State for the Colonies as regards the subject of imperial defence are criticisms that I cannot fully accord with. I believe that the interests of Canada should be a paramount consideration for every citizen of Canada, and I believe that Canada is guided by a spirit of loyalty, is prepared to do its duty by the mother country, has done it heretofore and will do it in the future, but I am not prepared to say, Sir, that bonds should be laid on the country, that enactment should be agreed to and that we should be subjected to hard and fast conditions as to the character of the support that we shall give to the mother country, as to the amount of our contribution, as to the number of men that we should furnish, but, I believe, on the contrary that all these matters should be left to the voluntary choice of the people of this Dominion. We have been developing as a country for 140 years and there has been during all that time a constant and regular tendency and progress towards self control. We had disturbances in 1837 which resulted in giving this country responsible government; we entered upon confederation in 1867 and we assumed and acquired a nationality then. We became the possessers of a national autonomy; we became the possessors of the blessing of self-government in 1867 and since then we have made great progress as a nationality. Our first step was to acquire Prince Edward Island. We then acquired the vast country known as Rupert's Land and then we acquired British Columbia. We have inaugurated a continental system and we inaugurated a national policy in 1878, a national policy which was continued, in point of fact, by the government that succeeded the party that enacted this policy, and in all these things we have been, to the best of our ability and according to the best light that we possessed, advancing the interests of our own native country. Our aid to England in South Africa was rendered voluntarily. Our action in that matter has been greatly to our own credit, it has brought Canada into prominence, it has taught the world that we are possessed of great resources, that we are possessed of gallant men, that we are an important factor in the affairs of the world and I hold that the state of things which now exists is preferable to any arrangement that can be made as the result of a discussion of imperial defence that leads up to the passage of an enactment that will bind Canada down to certain line of action. I believe that the result of such action would beget discontent in this country, and that it is in the interest of England and in the interest of Canada to leave this as it is now—a matter of pure choice and selection on the part of this Dominion as to the course we shall take in connection with imperial defence. If we were bound by enactment as to what we should do and what we should not do; what quota of troops we should furnish and what amount of money we should raise; Britain might engage in a war which would be of no interest to us. She might engage in a war that would not be of the remotest advantage to us, and under circumstances in which we might have a reluctance to act that might result in lamentable consequences because of our being forced to take part in a war of that kind. And, Sir, the only war; the only probable war in the future that will be of prime interest to Canada, will be a war with our great neighbour to the south of us. If such a calamity should ever befall this country, we will not be called upon to give grudgingly or sparingly of our resources, but we shall be obliged to put up the last man and the last dollar in a death struggle for our existence. Apart from such a calamity as this, I cannot imagine what belligerent attitude can arise involving England in difficulties with foreign countries that would be of particular consequence to us. Our participation in the South African war was not because we had interests at stake. Our commerce with that country was of the most insignificant character. It was purely a matter of sentiment; purely a sacrifice made on our part, because we desired to maintain British prestige; because we desired to maintain British authority in that land; because we realized that it would be a disaster in which we would participate if England lost South Africa, and in losing South Africa, lost her high position among the nations. Other nations may attack Canada, but I apprehend that the great nation to the south of us would not permit an assault on this country that threatened to divert it from the British Crown, and force it under the dominion of any other power. I think we rest perfectly safe in that respect. I repeat that the only war that would seriously threaten our existence will be a war between Great Britain and the United States. It has been asserted that our contributions to the defence of the empire have been paltry. Why, we have made great contributions to the empire ! We have built a road across this continent that has almost doubled our national debt, and this road adds to the prestige and adds to the efficiency, and adds to the power of Great Britain. It is a military highway for the motherland between Europe and Asia. We have in various ways contributed our full quota to the establishment of British authority, to the increase of British power, to the building up of the empire. Canada has great internal problems before her ; problems that require money which would be diverted from its proper use if it were expended in furthering British interests in China or in the Eastern Archipelago or in some remote part of the earth where our own direct interest did not reach. We have our great North-west to look after, and into that country we are just about to receive a deluge of population—200,000 are going in this year; 300,000 perhaps next year, and population will flow into that country as a great human river. We lacked transportation facilities to get the crop out of that country last year, and there are yet 18,-000,000 bushels of grain left in it. What is to be done when the present population of the country is doubled, trebled, quadrupled ? Why, we have to put forth our utmost exertions to give to that country the bare means of getting its productions to market. In my opinion it would be good policy for this government to construct the trans-Canada road from Quebec to Fort Simpson, passing through the Peace river valley with branches running to the valley of the Saskatchewan and other portions of the North-west, for the purpose of affording that great country an outlet, also for the purpose of regulating the rates charged upon other roads. Works of this nature are those that imperiously demand the expenditure of our resources and our money. I repeat that the interests of this country—this half of the continent which is to grow into a great nation—the interests of this country do not demand that we should place ourselves in a position where we would be required to do more in the interest of the empire than our own judgment at the time dictated to us as proper. For that reason I approve of the policy that the Prime Minister has enunciated here with regard to this matter.

There is another consideration that is worthy of being taken into account. If we were to unite with Great Britain in a hard and fast arrangement by which we became a party to conditions as to the amount of money we should pay each year for Imperial defence, by which we should become parties to an arrangement that would dictate to us the number of men we should furnish each year for such purpose; we might be held by the nation to the south of us to have joined in a military national armament of European standing, and we would perhaps bring upon ourselves the interference of the United States.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Rot.

Mr. CHARLTON—It might be rot, but it would be rot backed up by 80,000,000 people with all their prejudices and antipathies and animosities, and it would be the kind of rot we do not want to call down on our heads. Although it might be a most unjust and unreasonable position for the United States to take, yet I can foresee that such a position might be taken, and I do not believe that under the circumstances it is worth while inviting the condition of things that would follow so far as that branch of the subject is concerned, we want to retain our autonomy. We want to retain our perfect self control. We want to give as we feel we should give and we will give as we ought to on every occasion. I do not believe we need anything more than the conditions as they exist to-day.

And now, Sir, with regard to the trade question. I declare myself to-night as I always have done, in favour of a preference for our natural products in the English market. I hope it will be obtained. I have said before, and I say to-night, that I do not believe that the preference that we gave to Great Britain of 33⅓ per cent was a judicious act, although it had the effect of reducing duties. It was a tariff reform in that sense and probably was adopted for that reason. Yet as a mere preference it was more than sentiment required. And when Great Britain imposed duties upon corn—a modified form of the corn laws— a few weeks ago, I looked for a preference to the extent of that duty in favour of Canada, which would have amounted to less than 5 per cent against the 33⅓ per cent we gave. We did not get it, and I do not believe that the idea of getting a preference in the British market rests upon a very good foundation—that is a substantial, tangible preference—and if we cannot get a preference of at least 10 per cent the preference would not be a tangible and desirable one. We could offer to give a preference of 33⅓ per cent as we do now, for a 10 per cent preference. It would be a very good arrangement, but I doubt if we could ever get it.

I notice in the news of to-night the very significant fact that the riding of Bury in England, in which a by-election has just been held, and which gave a Conservative majority of 849 at the last general election, has returned a Liberal by 414, which is a reverse of 1,263 votes; and the issue in that election was the bread tax pure and simple. This election is an indication to my mind that it is not unlikely that upon this very policy which the present Imperial government have adopted, they will go down to defeat at the next general election. It is by no means certain that the policy adopted by the Conservative government indicates that we are to have a return of the corn laws in England, or that the policy of duties on natural products will be continued. I do not believe it will. I do not believe that we need build our hopes on a policy of that kind being accepted as a permanent one in England.

When we look at the trade returns of England, we cannot fail to be struck with the comparative insignificance of the trade of Canada as compared with the trade of the British possessions at large, and more especially as compared with the foreign trade of England. Last year England's total imports were $2,600,000,000. Of this amount $547,000,000 were from British possessions, $108,000,00 from the Dominion of Canada. The total percentage of imports from Canada was 4·2 per cent, the proportion of imports from Canada as compared with foreign imports was 5¼ per cent, and the total percentage of the imports from British possessions was 20 per cent, while the foreign imports were 80 per cent. Now, is England likely to adopt a course which will imperil that 80 per cent of her import trade for the purpose of fostering a trade which now amounts to only 4 per cent? I think it is very doubtful. And when we turn to England's exports, we find that the total amounted last year to $1,771,000,000. Of this amount $1,261,000,000 went to foreign countries, $510,000,000 to British possessions, $45,293,000 to the Dominion of Canada. These figures are taken from the British returns, the pound being converted into dollars by multiplying by five. The total exports from England to Canada amounted to 2½ per cent of the whole, and their proportion to the exports to foreign countries was 3½ per cent, while the proportion of the exports which England sent to foreign countries to the total amount of her exports was 71 per cent. Here is 71 per cent to foreign countries against 2½ per cent to Canada. These figures suggest to me that we are building upon a very narrow foundation indeed when we expect to induce the authorities in that country to adopt a policy which will imperil an import trade of 80 per cent and an export trade of 71 per cent of her total trade. I do not believe it will be done; and consequently I believe now—and I advanced the same view one year ago in a review of this question—that we are building our hopes in regard to preferential trade on a foundation which is narrow and insecure, and that these hopes will not be realized. That is my belief; but if they can be realized, I shall be very glad to see it done, and I agree with my hon. friend from Toronto that we can give England a preference without abandoning protection, or without abandoning a revenue tariff. We can give it by the adoption of a resolution which I had the honour of moving in this House on the 23rd of February, of this year—a resolution by which we would give to all countries that admitted Canadian natural products free of duty a preference of 40 per cent. We would put up our tariff so that with the preference of 40 per cent deducted from the nominal rates of the tariff, we would still have a decent degree of protection, and with the 40 per cent deducted we would still have a decent degree of protection, and with the 40 per cent added we would have a degree of protection that would be quite satisfactory as against any country which refused to admit our natural products free of duty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not know that we are under any very great obligation to England. I would be glad to be informed of any privilege we have in the English market that is not enjoyed by Russia and the United States and Germany and every other country in the world. We go to that market on a common level of free trade with all nations. We enjoy exactly the same treatment as other countries enjoy, even in the matter of the importation of our cattle. We give to England to-day a preference of 33⅓ per cent, and when England puts on corn duties of 5 per cent, we do not get a cent of advantage. I think that when the premier goes to Great Britain, he will naturally take these things into consideration.

We had better deal with this matter as a business question and dismiss to a certain extent sentiment. While I agree fully with the premier on the question of defence, while I do not believe that we need put that matter on a different basis from what it stands on at present, while I believe that Canada will do its full duty to the empire without entering into stipulations as to what it shall or shall not do, I believe our trade relations with Great Britain can be improved. If we cannot secure preferential trade, we can adopt a policy which will give to the country that admits our natural products free of duty an advantage that is not enjoyed by those countries which do not admit our natural products free of duty. Whatever course events may take, we want to deal with this question in a candid, businesslike, careful manner. It is not necessary to attempt to make party capital out of this question. I fully agree with my hon. friend from Toronto in his expression of the belief that the premier will go to England as a Canadian sincerely desirous of advancing Canadian interests, and that he will do that to the utmost of his ability; and while we may criticise and properly criticise perhaps in this House, the courses that have been taken and the results that may ensue from the deliberations yet to come, yet it will be regretted if we deal with this matter from the low standpoint of mere party politics. Let us wish the premier and his associates in their mission to England abundant success, firmness to stand by Canadian rights, ability to resist the blandishments that will surround them there, and hope that they will come back from their mission with results of great advantage to their country.

Hon. JOHN HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Speaker, I intend to make only a few remarks on the important question which is at present engaging the attention of the House. We received some time ago a communication from the Colonial Secretary asking us to send delegates to the Coronation to discuss certain questions. First of all he refers to the political relations between the empire and the colonies. That, I think, is the most important question likely to be discussed at that conference. Then next comes the defence of the empire. It is all very well for the right hon. gentleman to talk about what we would do in defence of this British colony, if called upon. It is all very well for him to declare that we will spend our last dollar and drop of blood defending Canada against any aggression. That is all talk. That is not intelligent fighting, as it is considered in the present day. We are part and parcel of the greatest empire on the face of the globe, and as a celebrated statesman said in England to Mr. Barton, who advocated the same views with regard to Australia, the other day as the right hon. gentleman holds with regard to Canada—who considered that the Australian fleet should be stationed in Australia and the defence of Australia be left entirely to Australian vessels and troops—why, was the reply, the defence or the retaining of Australia as part and portion of the British Empire might not be fought in Australian waters at all, but in the Mediterranean sea. Our defence of this colony, as part and portion of the British Empire to which we are so proud to belong, is not the defence we may make in Canada. The issue may be decided on the Atlantic or Pacific ocean. The nation which has the preponderance of fleet in both these oceans, may at any time, although this country should be overrun from one end to the other by hostile troops, make it a condition of settlement, when peace comes, that Canada shall remain a part and portion of the British Empire. On these two questions, the most important for us Anglo-Saxons who inhabit Canada, the right hon. gentleman has no definite policy. Why are we here in this portion of North America? Why did our forefathers who left the British Isles settle on this part of the continent? They might have gone to portions where there were better lands, easier cultivated, and a milder climate, but they chose to come to this portion of America, because it is under British laws and because they intended doing something for the betterance of the empire. And we, I believe, are actuated by the same sentiments and prepared to do what we can to build up still greater that empire which our forefathers made the mightiest on the face of the globe. The first object and hope of every British settler in the North American continent is that the defence of the empire shall be secured and that Canada shall remain a part and portion of that empire. Yet the right hon. gentleman tells us that our statesmen who go over to the Coronation, are not going in any way to discuss this question of Imperial defence, but that their discussion is to be restricted to the mere mercenary one of the commercial relations between this colony and the empire. Well, I maintain that the first question to be discussed at the colonial conference should be the political relations between the different colonies and the empire, and the second the question of Imperial defence. What policy has the right hon. gentleman or his colleagues in the cabinet on those questions? The right hon. gentleman tells us that the Imperial ministers, when they summoned the colonial premiers of this continent, must have formulated a policy of some kind or other. Why does he not get that policy from them? Surely he has a right to discuss it with his colleagues before going over and making any declaration on the other side. And as to the question of defence of the empire, and the different colonies, surely, as the right hon. gentleman has told us, there must be a policy formulated by the Imperial authorities, and the right hon. gentleman has the right to have that communicated to him now in order that he may discuss it with his colleagues before going across. He is equally entitled to have the Imperial views on the subject of our commercial relations. What is the policy of the government on all these matters? They have no policy at all. They are not going to discuss the political relations between the empire and the different colonies, and as regards the question of defence their position is this. They say: We will be bound by nothing, we will consider nothing, but we will spend our last dollar and our last drop of blood in the defence of Canada. That is not what we expected from the right hon. gentleman.

The hon. leader of the opposition and many of his supporters have taken the position that we should not be bound by any fixed hard-bound policy. In that I agree. We have a right to consider from time to time, as the necessity arises, what should be our future relations with the empire and the different portions of the empire, and our contribution to the defence of the empire. We should not part in any particular with our autonomy, but that is entirely different from the position taken by the Prime Minister of not considering at all the subject of political relations or the subject of Imperial defence. Just look at the position in which the right hon. gentleman will be in when he goes over. The only thing we have got from him is this : That he will consider the question of a preferential arrangement of trade with the empire and the colonies. At the same time he qualifies that declaration. He asks : In what can we give a preference to Great Britain ? The hon. member for Toronto, he says, is opposed to our reducing the duty on woollen goods, and so on. That is mere childishness. There are thousands of articles in this country, which we do not produce or manufacture, and which it is not necessary we should manufacture, and on which we might give a preference to England over other countries. But the hon. Finance Minister, who introduced the resolution giving a preference to English goods and the right hon. gentleman who supported it, both declared that we do not want anything in return. Again and again they made that declaration. What position did we on this side take ? We said it was not to be expected that a poor colony like Canada, compared with the mother country, should give a preference without getting any return. No statesmen in England ask it. The people of Great Britain would never expect us to do anything of the kind. The position which my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brock) takes is a proper one. The empire will be proud to see Canada prosper in any manner which is best for the prosperity of the country. Canada prosperous will be of great assistance to the empire, and the people of the old country want to see us prosper in our own way. We would be of greater benefit to the empire if we were in a prosperous condition under protection than in the condition in which we would be if we had free trade, as advocated by the right hon. gentleman and his friends. Here is parliament in session; here is a free country governed by parliament ; here is the greatest opportunity ever given a colony for making an arrangement between the empire and the colonies, and what statement have we from the right hon. gentleman or his ministers, as to what they propose to do. Instead of taking parliament into their confidence, we have simply the bald statement that they will consider the question of preference when they go across. Well, the condition of affairs in 1902 is different from what it was in 1896. In 1896, when I was stumping the country, it was not considered possible that England would ever impose a duty on corn and grain. But every man who has studied political economy as it affects nations knows that whenever free trade has a detrimental effect upon a nation indulging in it, especially an intelligent country like Great Britain, that nation will be governed by interests and not by sentiments and will drop free trade and adopt protection. Whenever it is in the interest of the people of Great Britain to adopt a protective tariff, they will adopt it, as we did here when it became necessary. We, of necessity, must have a protective policy in this country. As the Conservative party have stated again and again, to leave us a purely agricultural country would leave us poor and contemptible in comparison with countries that are protected, including the country to the south of us. We must have diversity of occupations; we must have employment for all the people of the country; we must have the mechanics here as well as the farmers; and the only way to do that is by protecting our industries. Therefore, I say that the right hon. gentleman when he goes to England, must state to the Imperial authorities that we must have a tariff to protect our own industries. He must say also that we have a large commercial trade with the rest of the world. We will give a preference to Great Britain, but we ask a preference in return. The only possible way to build up the empire, the only possible way to improve the political relations between the empire and the different colonies, is to adopt a system of mutual defence and to establish different commercial relations between the colonies and the mother country from those which now exist.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Hon. Sydney Fisher). I do not think I would have said anything with regard to this matter this evening had it not been that the hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Borden, Halifax) was good enough to quote my utterances in England on various occasions upon this question of the preference. I accept his quotations fully, and I accept the responsibility for my utterances. I did, on several occasions in England, declare that we in Canada gave them a preference in our markets without asking any preference in return. That was the policy laid down by this government in 1897, which has been maintained until this time. And I venture to think that what we did has borne good fruit, and that we have been justified in the action which we took. I say emphatically that, though we made no demand for a preference, we have actually had a preference in the English market for all our food products. I have been in England on two occasions since that time, and I have seen, over and over again, in shops and retail stores Canadian products marked as Canadian and the people appealed to by the dealers to buy these goods because they were Canadian. And they did that on the ground that Canada had given a preference to Great Britain in her markets and it was only fair that the people of Britain should give the first choice to Canadian goods.

Mr. BROCK. Oh, no.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brock) denies this. But I can assure him that I have seen it with my own eyes. And I had the assurance of those who had placed the notices in their shop windows that that was the reason for appealing to the people—that the people had a kindly feeling towards Canada because of the preference. But supposing that we had obtained that preference which hon. gentlemen opposite think we ought to have obtained—supposing that owing to the representations of the Canadian government and people, Great Britain had imposed a tax upon the food of her working people—is it conceivable that these working people would have been favourably disposed towards those who had been the means of imposing that tax upon them? Is it conceivable that the breadwinners in the cities of Great Britain would have been disposed to buy the articles sent to them by the people who were the cause of increasing the price of their loaf? I do not think it is conceivable. I believe that, on the contrary, the working people of the large industrial centres in England would have cursed the name of Canada, and would have tried their best to injure Canadian trade in Great Britain, instead of supporting and encouraging it. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) a few moments ago, referred to a supposed change of public opinion in England in favour of protection, and quoted the imposition of these taxes as evidence. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has given the first result of the imposition of bread taxes upon the English electors by showing that in the city of Bury, one of the very centres in which Canadian products are received with favour, the electors, who, a few years ago, elected a supporter of the present government by a large majority, had rejected another supporter of that government by an almost equally large majority; and the battle was entirely fought out on the question of bread taxes, and the change amongst the electors was entirely due to the adoption of that policy by the government. Now, that is an expression of the feeling that exists amongst those people. Had we in Canada been responsible for the imposition of that bread tax, we should have antagonized the great industrial class of the mother country. I venture to say that not only would that be a great detriment to the trade in our food products, but it would have been one of the greatest hindrances to that movement for Imperial unity, one of the first steps in which was the preference that we granted to Great Britain. Had we adopted that plan, and had we obtained that result—which I do not for a moment think we could have obtained as a matter of fact—we would have brought about this condition of affairs—that the breadwinners of England would have felt aggrieved against the colony and would have felt that the colonies had asked them to tax themselves for the benefit of colonial producers. Instead of having the people almost unanimously in favour of the colonies, we would have had them divided into two great camps, one opposed to everything colonial because of the sense of grievance against the colony, and the other the feeling that they were helped a little by the fact that the products of their farms had been increased in price by the imposition of these taxes. But to-day we are in an entirely different position. When we adopted the preference we reduced the taxes upon our own people. That is a point that hon. gentlemen opposite do not consider. It is not part of their policy to think of reducing the burden upon the taxpayer. All they want to do is to pile on taxes for the purpose of protection. When we gave the preference, we relieved our people of a burden. When we wish to secure a preference in Great Britain, we wish also to remove a part of the burden of taxation resting upon those people. The condition to-day is such that we can do that. My right hon. friend can go and ask for the remission by Great Britain, so far as the colonies are concerned of the tax on breadstuffs in part or altogether. When we do that—we shall have the sympathy of the breadwinners of the old land, and they will feel that the colonies are acting in their favour. We shall have the support of these people, instead of their direct antagonism. It seems to me, therefore, that we are in a much better position to-day than we should have been had we tried in 1897 to make a bargain and had succeeded. We can make a bargain to-day, but we could not make one then without injuring a portion of our fellow subjects in the old land. I do not wish Canada to occupy that position.

Now, Sir, I will say one word more in regard to the question in England. I am not going to say for one moment what should be the policy of Great Britain. That is for them to decide, just as it is for the people of Canada to decide our policy. It would be unfortunate if we were to be hampered in the exercise of our independent right in deciding upon our own policy, and I wish to give the same freedom to the people of the old land, to the people of Australia, and to the people of all the other colonies. But I do believe that we can do it off our own bat, if I may use the expression, in the interest of the rest of the empire, just as in 1897, we gave a preference to the people of Great Britain in our own markets without asking anything in return. Speaking for myself I venture to think that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach the other day when he introduced his corn duties, missed a great opportunity. If he had then, without any consultation with the colonies, given them immediately a preference in that imposition of the corn duties. I believe he would have done a great stroke of statesmanship in the interest of the empire, and in strengthening the bonds uniting the various portions of the empire. But if he did not desire to do that then, I believe he is still in a position to give a preference to colonial products which will help the situation, and do a great deal to strengthen the ties between the motherland and her colonies.

I want one thing to be noticed, that in all the discussions in the parliament of Great Britain, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach himself, Mr. Balfour, the leader of the House, and all the other speakers in support of the government, distinctly declared that this imposition of a bread tax, is in no sense a reversion to protection. So emphatically have they declared this that as a matter of fact in Great Britain to-day this tax is not looked upon as involving the issue between free trade and protection, although the Liberal party are rather disposed to bring it forward as a line of cleavage between the two parties on the issue of free trade and protection. But the accepted opinion in Great Britain is that this tax is not a protectionist tax but a revenue tax.

Mr. GOURLEY. Did you not say that the election in Bury was run entirely on the question of free trade ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE. I said it was run on the question of the corn tax. But it does not matter to my argument whether it is a question between free trade and protection, it would be a question of the antagonism of the people who suffer from the imposition of a bread duty if the colonies were the instrument of the imposition of that duty. It is not a question between free trade and protection, it is a question of whether the people who feel the incidence of the tax, think it has been brought about by the colonies or by the voluntary act of their own government. I do not wish them to think it was brought about by the colonies. I would be sorry to have them think that any preference had been given to Canada which would hurt the people of Great Britain to such an extent that they would feel aggrieved towards us. On the contrary, I wish, when any preference is given to Canada by Great Britain, that it shall come from the people of Great Britain just as freely as the preference which we gave to Great Britain, without any bargaining and without asking anything in return. That is the feeling I have always had in regard to this preference. I stated over and over again in Great Britain that Canada gave that preference freely without asking anything in return ; and I hope the time will come that Great Britain, now that she has put a food tax upon her people, will give a preference to the colonies and relieve her own people without imposing a duty upon them. I believe that such a preference would do more than any act looking towards military defence or affecting political relations, to strengthen the ties that bind the different parts of the empire together, and make the empire stronger to face the world when it becomes necessary for her to face the world.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). The hon. gentleman (Mr. Fisher) feels himself in an awkward situation in view of what England has done lately. He said : When he was over there we did not want any preference, that what we had done we had done freely, generously and liberally. He said also that although we had made no demands for a preference we have practically a preference in the markets of the mother country. He did not offer any proof of his statement, nor did he show that our preference to the mother country had resulted in any advantage to us in the English market over what we have in the market of the United States or of other countries. If he looks up the trade returns since this preference was given, he will find that the whole argument is against his contention, for they show that we have not benefited in any material respect on account of that preference. He says the working people of England would look with disfavour upon Canada if a tax was put upon their bread for the benefit of Canada. But it has been put on. If the hon. gentleman desires to get into the good graces of the working people of England the first thing he should do would be to try to relieve them of that tax by letting our wheat in free, by letting the grain of the colonies in free, and by that means supplying the nation with their breadstuffs. The colonies could readily supply all the breadstuffs of the English people in a short time. So if his argument is worth anything it can be turned against himself. The policy of the present government, he says, has not been to pile on the taxes. Who takes $10,000,000 of taxes more out of the people than their predecessors ? Is it not the present government ? Who raises a larger revenue if it is not the present government ? Who makes a larger expenditure if it is not the present government ? So I say that instead of not piling on more taxes the whole history of this administration is an argument to the contrary.

The hon. gentleman for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) said that the result of an election in England adverse to the government was due to the bread tax imposed. He said that shows the sentiment of the British people. Then I say if he desires to have the sentiment of the British people in his favour let us tell the English labouring men that we desire to take off that bread tax and supply them with their bread free. That is one of the strongest arguments that could be addressed to the British people. The hon. member for North Norfolk goes on to say that we should not do this for fear of offending our friends to the south. I have heard that argument addressed to this House for 24 years in succession, and it seems to me the most humiliating, the most debasing argument that could ever be addressed to a free people. Are we not here an independent and integral part of the British Empire with rights of our own, with duties of our own to perform ? Have we not to look after the interest of our own people, and can we not do it without fear of offending any other nation in the world ? Why, we would be little better than slaves if we cringed before any other nation. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves as British freemen to say that because of the fear of offending the nation to the south of us we are afraid of doing what it is our duty to do as members of the Canadian parliament.
